Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Last week we saw the Minister of Communications lose control of her Department—it was taken over by the back-bench—and the all-news network was cancelled. This week we hear that the Tory right-wing group calling themselves the Dinosaur Club, has taken over the Departments of the Secretary of State and Justice and is now telling the Government how to operate the House.

Could the Minister tell us in response to this article whereby we find two dozen back-bench Members calling themselves the Back-Benchers Club, the BBC, which stands for dinosaurs, whether they are running the show? They killed the all-news network. Are they going to kill the Official Languages Act or is the Government still calling the shots? Is the Government still in charge or has it given up to the back-bench Tories?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has been around the House a long time. I know that he does not always believe everything he reads in the newspaper. I think this is one case where he should heed that advice.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION CONCERNING BILL C-72

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): But I do believe this Mr. Speaker, and I have known for the past few weeks that there are a few odd Tories who are running around in this caucus and preventing the Government from taking action. I therefore ask the Minister clearly and precisely: Is he prepared to call Bill C-72 for second reading tomorrow?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if the Liberals and the NDP would stop filibustering Bill C-84 and other pieces of legislation, we may get on with that job.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

PRESENCE OF CONVICTED TERRORIST IN CANADA

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Mahmoud Muhammad Issa Mohammad is a convicted terrorist now living in Canada who was allowed into Canada under this Government. It appears not only did Mr. Mohammad misrepresent himself to Canadian authorities to get landed immigrant status, but last week he misrepresented himself to the Canadian people when he said he allowed passengers of the Israeli airliner to get off before shooting the plane.

It is clear from 1968 news reporting that no one was allowed to leave the plane and that the plane was shot containing passengers and crew.

In view of the extreme nature of this case why is it that he and the Solicitor General did not resort to the security certificate procedure contained in the Immigration Act which would have allowed for a hearing but for a much speedier removal from Canada, if the case developed properly, than the procedure which the Government, in fact, chose to follow?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the Mohammad case is now before an adjudicator. His case has been adjourned to February the 16th, when the hearings will continue, and I do not think any interpretation of this case would be appropriate at this time. I suggest it would be preferable if things developed as expected.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF PROCEDURE CHOSEN BY GOVERNMENT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, this has nothing to do with the case, but with the procedure chosen by the Government. A few means are available in such a case, and it seems the Government took one of the slowest. Again I ask the question: Why did they choose this case instead of a court which would produce results much more quickly?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the deportation process is extremely complicated and, particularly in the case of a landed immigrant, it involves a series of steps which department officials must take. My colleague is referring to a faster procedure. In this case both the Solicitor General and particularly the Minister of Immigration have considered that the safest and most effective way was to proceed as they did. I repeat that a landed immigrant has appeal rights which must be respected. Contrary to what my colleague is suggesting, I do not claim or I do not think that we could have completed the deportation procedure in two, three or four days. Rights do exist and, regardless of the statements we have heard over the past two weeks, I think such rights must be respected on the basis of the decision made concerning the status.

* * *

[English]

FISHERIES

ISSUANCE OF LOBSTER FISHING LICENCES IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans concerning the granting of four lobster licences in Nova Scotia and the contradiction between the Minister's statements and those of the Ministry of Fisheries for Nova Scotia regarding Nova Scotia's objections.

How is it that Mr. Leith has stated that the Nova Scotia Government has long opposed the licences and wants them revoked yet the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans says that Nova Scotia did not even object?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, had the Hon. Member been at the standing committee when I gave a complete account of the scientific justification and the objective selection procedure, which was set up by my officials for establishing this new fishery, the Member would have received the answer to his question.

I said at the standing committee last Thursday that my office was in consultation with the office of the Minister of Fisheries of Nova Scotia on this question. I was advised that the Province of Nova Scotia and the Minister would not oppose the issuing of these licences. That which I said at committee is exactly what I repeat today.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONSULTATION

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, what kind of consultation is it when the provincial Minister of Fisheries himself has long stated that they would object and they did object to these licences being granted?

This is not the first time there has been contradiction about advice given to the federal Government by the Minister of Fisheries in Nova Scotia.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has also said that even if he had had the advice it would not have made any difference. Doesn't this really make a mockery of consultations between federal and provincial counterparts on what the Minister should have known is the most controversial issue in Nova Scotia? The Minister does not know what the Minister of Fisheries for Nova Scotia wants, and it does not make any difference anyway.

• (1500)

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as I have already indicated, had the Hon. Member been able to attend committee last Thursday he would have received a complete and full account of the basis on which this important economic initiative was taken in Nova Scotia, including the discussions which occurred with my provincial colleague and his office.

It is quite possible that Ministers change their opinions from time to time. But I say again what I said before, this consultation did occur.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard in relation to the amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, and on the amendment of Mr. Marchi (p. 12340).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at 1 p.m. there were seven minutes left in the question and comment period of the speech of the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). If there are no questions or comments then we will proceed with debate. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) on debate.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I listened with some interest to the debate on Bill C-84 this morning. I heard the usual over-cooked rhetoric from Members on the government side, according to whom those of us who are attempting to bring some reason, perhaps some humanity to this legislation, are filibustering. I suppose that they would make the same accusation of the Senate or of the large number of organizations which presented their points of view to the Senate.

Some 400 individuals and organizations in some manner let the Senate know their objections to this legislation. Some 37 organizations made direct representations before the Senate committee. I suppose all of these people are people who are engaged in a filibuster. They could have no other motive except to somehow make it difficult for the Government to do good things.

Of course, you, Mr. Speaker, I am sure, as well as we, understand that there are some serious defects in this piece of legislation which is justified on the basis that there have been thousands who have abused our immigration procedures and our refugee determination processes to undermine Canadian law, to jump queues and God knows what all. What in fact has been the issue is that this legislation in its Draconian way threatens to place Canada in a position in which not only will it be in contravention of the UN Convention on Refugees but our own Charter of Rights. We have to regard these as serious questions.

The Senate listened carefully to the interventions of many Canadians, most of whom have a long established interest and concern about refugees. Many of these people have been involved in giving access to the humanitarian care that Canada provides to refugees for which we have been characterized as giving in the past. Thus we have regarded the Senate amendments as being constructively framed, not to make it difficult for the Government but to reflect the true heart of Canada.

In looking at all of the rhetoric that has issued from the other side of the House, particularly in the wake of the arrival of two boatloads of people which occasioned the introduction of this legislation, I must confess that there have been times when we have been ashamed of what we have heard from that side. Some of it has contained only slightly veiled elements of, if not racism then certainly of xenophobia which I think can do nothing but embarrass us all.

I suppose it has to be said that the events which transpired after that and the consideration of the very rapidly introduced Bill C-55 and Bill C-84, as well as the Senate's rather slower deliberations, are an object lesson in saying to a democratic institution such as our own that we should not react in a crisis situation with the first thought that comes into our heads. That has been the record of the Government in respect to its response to those episodes which has been, in effect, to come up with legislation that is essentially thoughtless and that has not given sufficiently due attention to those principles that I think most Canadians have long since accepted as being essential to the Canadian outlook upon the world, upon Canada itself and its citizens.

The Senate introduced a number of amendments. The first of the amendments is an interesting one. It is interesting from the point of view of the criticism of the original framing of Bill C-84 and alludes to the kind of motives and outlook which impelled this Bill into the House. That is to say the suggestion by the Senate that the wording "the assistance of clandestine entry" replace the word "smuggling" in the description of the purpose of the legislation. What the Senate noted is that "smuggling" is a word more appropriately applied to merchandise, goods or commodities. That the Government chose to describe the infraction in that term smuggling is an allusion to the kind of depersonalization which has occurred on the government benches and in the mind of the Minister in considering the way in which the Government might properly address the problem. This is a problem that we all recognize in terms of dealing with the massive numbers of illegal immigrants who come to Canada, but which in the approach the Government has used confuses illegal immigrant with refugees.

In the fourth amendment the Senate suggests that those who have been issued security certificates not be rejected from the refugee determination system. That is to say that the Senate recognizes that because someone has been characterized as a security risk, that person does not necessarily present a serious threat to the safety of Canada or to Canadians.

Security risks may be characterized in a number of ways. For example, they may be people who, as defined in the Immigration Act, advocate the overthrow by violent means of some government or another. This is interesting because the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) not too very long ago suggested that the Government might be willing to accept some Contra refugees into Canada in the wake of the culmination of the peace proposal that is now going on with respect to Nicaragua. Surely that simple fact demonstrates what should have been done by the Minister; that there are circumstances in which those who might be characterized as security risks, particularly on the evidence of another Government, may indeed be people who should have some access to refugee status and the ability to seek santuary somewhere.

• (1510)

If Nelson Mandela, Winnie Mandela, Bishop Tutu, or any number of Haitian dissidents were to seek refugee status under this legislation, they would find themselves in great difficulty if the refugee determination process or the effects of this legislation were to end up with such applicants being given a security certificate, that is, classified as security risks.

The United Nations recognizes the fact that such may be the case; that those who may be classified as security risks may well require a safe haven somewhere, and require that such people have access to the refugee determination process before they are deported, and that an opportunity be provided for them to seek safe haven in a safe country.

In response to the presentations and representations of a number of organizations, almost unanimous, the Senate made a suggestion for amendment to Bill C-84 which would have provided that those who have security certificates be granted access to the refugee determination system. Therefore, we find that in rejecting this amendment, the Government has again made a decision which flies in the face of consensus among those whom this Party, and I know the Official Opposition, respect as people who are presenting a case that has reason, merit, and which on the basis of the Senate amendment should have been considered a reasonable inclusion in this legislation. Indeed, we place ourselves in a rather unique category. We would join only Belgium in this provision which excludes those classified as security risks from the refugee determination system.

If we look at Senate amendment 5, which the government also rejects, which has to do with turning ships around, we find another area where the Senate has presented an amendment that this Party sees unobjectionable, indeed, which it supports, an amendment that is again supported by any number of organizations which consider that the refugee process should be a fair one.

If one looks in the legislation as it is presently written, one finds the proposed Section:

> 91.1(1) Where the Minister believes on reasonable grounds that a vehicle within
>
> (a) the internal waters of Canada, (b) the territorial sea of Canada, or (c) twelve nautical miles of the outer limit of the territorial sea of Canada is bringing any person into Canada in contravention of this Act or the regulations, the Minister may, after having due regard to the safety of the vehicle and its passengers and to the convention, direct the vehicle to leave or not to enter the internal waters of Canada or the territorial sea of Canada, as the case may be, and any such direction may be enforced by such force as is reasonable in the circumstances.

The Senate rejects that proposed section. We favour the Senate position in this respect. What we are doing is creating a situation in which the Minister in some fashion determines that there are no refugees on those ships. I do not know how the Minister intends to do that. One fundamental principle of the refugee determination process is that there should be due process, that a refugee claimant should have an opportunity to have his or her claim heard.

The legislation as presently written would have the ship turned around, to what fate no one knows. Is it to be turned around in the direction of a safe country? How are we supposed to know whether it is a safe country? Indeed, is there any expectation that the ship that is turned around will go to any country? Of course, there is a very great fear that a ship's captain faced with the prospect of having to sail to God knows where with a boatload of people may indeed decided to dump them at sea. I do not know if the Government or any Canadian wants to be in the position of being responsible, as this legislation would have us responsible in the circumstances, for having boatloads of people dumped at sea. This is something to which Canadians have previously objected.

In fact, we recall the situation in 1939 when the St. Louis tried to approach Canadian waters to land some Jewish refugees. Other nations had also rejected them, and their fate was that they had no place to go and death was their refuge. There have been other examples in which Canada has more recently condemned the Philippines and Malaysia for having turned boats around. Now we have before us legislation which would have Canada do the same thing.

In respect to the refugee determination process, it is expected that such applicants or potential refugees will have access to a reasonable process. It is required by international convention, and it is required by Section 7 of the Charter. I know that the Minister states that as long as they do not land in a port they are not in Canada. Nevertheless, on the other hand they will be subject to Canadian law that will determine whether those boats will be turned around on the opinion of the Minister. The Government cannot have it both ways. It cannot argue that it is not subject to Section 7 of the Charter because they are not in Canada, and at the same time apply legislation to them which could lead to a fateful end of those who have sought Canada as a place of refuge.

If it is our intention to deter such effort to bring illegal immigrants, even if not refugees to Canada, surely the appropriate thing is to escort such ships into port. If the captain is guilty of breaking Canadian law, then that captain can be put in jail, fined, and have his boat forfeited. At the same time, we would have an opportunity for any legitimate refugees to have their cases heard.

It would seem to me, and to any sound thinking Canadian, that the amendment suggested by the Senate is the most appropriate. It is clear. Without too much difficulty we can apply this amendment in the practical case and bring about the appropriate solution sought by the Government. The amendment as suggested by the Senate is as follows:

> 91.1 Where the Minister believes on reasonable grounds that a vehicle within
>
> (a) the internal waters of Canada, or (b) the territorial sea of Canada is bringing any person into Canada in contravention of this Act or the regulations, the Minister may direct that the vehicle be escorted to the nearest port of disembarkation and any such direction may be enforced by such force as is reasonably necessary.

What more could be desired? What could be more fitting? Bring the ship into port; try the captain and if he is found guilty, jail him. If there are illegal immigrants, deal with them in the appropriate fashion. On the other hand, if there are refugees then let them have access to the refugee determination system which is appropriate under not only the Canadian Charter of Rights but the international convention.

Finally, we have to deal with the question of aiding and abetting.

• (1520)

I am sure you have heard repeatedly, Mr. Speaker, that the legislation as presently written would cause any number of humanitarian people devoted to the cause of refugees to be jailed. Among the reasons they might be jailed is that refugees do not have the appropriate papers. I do not have to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the vast majority of those who have come to this country did not come by boat in the first place. They came by airplane and had documentation of some kind or other.

It is rare for humanitarian groups devoted to the aiding of refugees to bring in such refugees in a clandestine fashion, which is something that was recognized by the Senate and ought to be recognized by the Government. I do not understand why it is not possible for anyone who thinks logically to accept the amendment as proposed by the Senate.

The following people would be guilty of a crime: every person who knowingly organizes, induces, aids or abets, or knowingly attempts to organize, induce, aid or abet a person to make a manifestly unfounded or fraudulent refugee claim, or knowingly brings or attempts to bring or otherwise knowingly organizes, induces, aids or abets, or knowingly attempts to organize, induce, aid or abet any person to come into Canada in a clandestine fashion or manner. That is what should be sought, and what would be satisfactory. That would preclude the imprisonment and prosecution of people who are trying by their sincere efforts to help those threatened in their homeland with death or torture or persecution. That amendment should have been accepted by the Government. Why it was not I do not know. It may have been pigheadedness, it may have been stubborness, it may have been stupidity, or it may have been inhumanity. However, it certainly does not reflect the views of Canadians.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Member feel that someone who assisted a refugee or someone to come into Canada and organized the fraud and misrepresentation to make that entry into Canada possible should in his view be subject to prosecution for aiding and abetting a breach of our Immigration Act?

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seemed to have difficulty framing the question in an appropriate way, but let me simply say this. The amendment as suggested by the Senate would certainly deal with the case that he mentioned.

Mr. Blenkarn: But you would have to do it clandestinely?

Mr. McCurdy: No. Let me read it to the Hon. Member: "Every person who knowingly organizes, induces, aids or abets", et cetera, "to make a manifestly unfounded or fraudulent refugee claim" would be covered in the Senate amendment.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I guess we have two kinds of filibuster in this Chamber—an intelligent filibuster based on information which Hon. Members should hear and a rhetorical filibuster based on attempt to incite, and I think we are dealing with the latter.

This is the fifth day of debate on Senate amendments. We are approaching an historic milestone in the life of Parliament. Meanwhile many other problems exist in the country. We have debated the Bill since August. However, perhaps just to emphasize the fact that the Hon. Member opposite is dealing with rhetoric rather than with intelligent comment, the situation he abhors, of being able to charge church leaders and others for organizing people, is the situation that exists in Canada right now. Until the day we change this legislation those people can be charged, can be convicted, and can suffer the penalties of that conviction. That is the legal situation today which the Government is trying to correct.

Let us come to the second part of the issue. Do we correct it? We have to look at Bill C-84 and Bill C-55 as a package.

For the first time in Canadian history Bill C-55 says clearly that anybody who breaks Canadian immigration law in any way, shape, or fashion, fraudulently or otherwise, and makes the claim to be a refugee will not be chargeable until that claim is determined. If they are found to be a refugee, they will never be charged and never be convicted. Today refugee claimants do not have that kind of protection. Without this Bill they will not have it tomorrow either. With this package of changes they will have it.

If we listen to criminal law experts on the particular clause in Bill C-84 which seems to bother the Hon. Member, we must ask ourselves whether any provincial Attorney-General will ever be able to get a conviction of somebody who organizes an activity which in itself is not illegal. Bill C-55 indicates clearly that engaging in those kinds of activities, if one is a refugee, is not to be illegal any longer. However, those who organize manifestly unfounded claimants—the 3,000 people who came from Portugal and the 1,800 who came from Brazil where there was no basis for the claim—will be chargeable under the new legislation, and they should be chargeable under the new legislation. This is why the Act is being amended.

If they want to complain, let them complain about the present legal situation. Let us get off this filibuster and let us vote. They have a right to an opinion different from that of government Members. We happen to believe that our view is the best view for refugee claimants and the best view for the country. They happen to have a different one. Let us go to a vote and move along. Let us get to some other important pieces of legislation such as that copyright. In the meantime, having come back for an emergency session in August, surely we have passed the point of rhetoric. We should be dealing with the matter in a substantive, factual, and informed way.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, the repeated characterization of the debate by the Opposition as a filibuster is nothing short of despicably anti-democratic, and the people of Canada should understand it. That representative of the Government says that what I have said is rhetoric. What I say is an expression of the passion with which I reject the Government's position on this legislation.

The Hon. Member says that what a refugee may do in order to gain admission into this country after the determination of refugee status will not be construed as illegal. Once again he says that I am using rhetoric, but he refers to the Portugese and so on who came into the country with documents. Yet it is his legislation which would jail those who knowingly organize, induce, aid or abet, or attempt to organize, induce, aid or abet the entry into Canada of a person who is not in possession of a valid and subsisting visa. What refugee is going to come into this country with a ready-made passport and visa unless he or she is going to do it at the risk of his or her life? This is not rhetoric. This is truth. The Senate recognized the truth, as did 400 organizations which made their case to the Senate. This is not a filibuster. It is an attempt to get the Government to listen to the people who have a more sympathetic chord in their heart in respect of refugees in the world.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I too want to comment on the interjections of the Parliamentary Secretary who seems to feel that by poking a stick into a cage with a grizzly bear that somehow you will get co-operation from the grizzly bear or that somehow the bear will start treating you nicer.

It is an odd way to get co-operation on the floor of the House of Commons, to be hurling insults and making accusations and then asking, "Will you co-operate?" We are the grizzly bears and they are the ones who are poking sticks. Quite frankly it is an odd approach.

Repeatedly the Parliamentary Secretary rises and says that this is a good and thoughtful piece of legislation. He says that this is a useful initiative. Of course, there are useful components of this legislation. Every single clause is not a horror show.

• (1530)

The point in a debate in the House of Commons on a motion is for those of us who are in Her Majesty's opposition Parties to try to identify whatever flaws may exist in legislation. As my Hon. friend for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) so eloquently stated, dozens and dozens of groups with expertise and experience in this matter, people who have dedicated their lives and raison d'être to this issue, have said repeatedly that there are serious flaws in this legislation. Various members of the Liberal and New Democratic Parties have pointed them out.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, we are simply doing our job. We are trying to convince the Parliamentary Secretary that he should not have the attitude that because his Party has a large majority of Members, it can ignore democratic traditions and the parliamentary system and just use jackboot techniques to jam any legislation through. Our parliamentary system does not withstand that kind of arrogance. I urge the Parliamentary Secretary to be thoughtful when making comments. As we attempt to improve this legislation, and hopefully not for much longer, we should be given that recognition and not be accused of filibustering legislation when that is not taking place at all.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reiterate what the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) said. The Government, of course—

Mr. Andre: That still doesn't make it true.

Mr. MacLellan: It makes it a lot truer than it was before.

The allegations made by government Members that opposition Members are filibustering this Bill are completely ridiculous. If there is any reason for the delay in this Bill, it is because the Government introduced a Bill which was completely inadequate and unsatisfactory for the purposes supposedly intended by the Government when it brought it forward.

Hon. Members will recall that this legislation was brought forward in a great hurry after a boatload of people were brought ashore in Nova Scotia this past summer. It was perceived at that time that a Bill of this kind would be popular with the people of Canada. The bringing forth of this Bill in such haste was an unfortunate response to the situation.

As has been said this afternoon, not all of this Bill is ridiculous or unnecessary. There are some very good parts to this Bill, but there are parts that need to be corrected. As long as these gaping inequities exist, it is the role of Parliament to examine them.

Such a strong supporter of the Senate as the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) would, I am sure, realize and admit that the Senate has provided a very good service, though none of its major recommendations have been accepted by the Government. Some of the minor ones have been accepted and I think that these minor recommendations do help to strengthen the Bill and give it a great deal more credibility. I think it is unfortunate that there are some amendments that the Government has refused to acknowledge.

It has been stated already that those who knowingly aid refugees or would-be refugees to come to Canada are open to prosecution under this legislation. The way that clause is worded is unfortunate. There are people who want to bring refugees into this country who are taking a chance. They will now have to say to themselves: "We will bring these people to Canada to protect them from the danger they are facing in their own countries and we will risk prosecution in order to do so. There is a bad law and we must ask ourselves if we will aid these people and be subject to the bad law or, on the other hand, if we will not aid these people and play it safe".

These people who have the benefit of their fellow men at heart will take the risk of being prosecuted because they are helping refugees. These people who want to help their fellow men are not criminals. They are not people who will falsify documents or lie, but they will help people in need.

To say that refugees must have passports or visas when they arrive in Canada is completely ludicrous. Refugees who are in difficulty and fear for their lives in their own countries have to leave very quickly and do not have a chance to obtain proper documentation before leaving.

It is important to ask what kind of image we want to portray as a country. Of course, we do not want to portray Canada as being a place where anyone who wants to leave his own country for whatever reason can come. That is not the point, but it is important that Canada maintain its image of being a country that helps those people who are in genuine difficulty in their own land and who were trying to make their own country a better place and therefore fear for their own safety.

What is the Government doing about all this? Of course, the Government is taking a very stand-pat position on this Bill. It is saying that even though it was brought in in haste and without proper thought, the Government will not make any changes to it because it does not want to tip its hand any more than it already has by acknowledging that it brought this Bill forward without proper thought. Of course, the Government is hoping that Canadians do not see the inadequacies, inconsistencies and inequities in this legislation.

One particular clause of this Bill typifies the problems that exist with this legislation. It is the clause which gives the Government the right to turn back vessels that are possibly bringing people into Canada illegally. The Bill provides that this must be done with the approval of the Minister and talks about possibilities that are very slim and probably will not happen. A very real possibility exists that this will happen, but this cannot be tolerated in our society.

We are not only talking about refugees or people who come into Canada illegally, we are talking about the rights of individuals. I do not think it is right for the Government of Canada to take a position of us and them. The Government is saying that those who are Canadian citizens are one type and those who are not Canadians are another type and are not of the same status and do not have rights. I believe that that is wrong.

If we go along with that, we are saying that we agree with the Government's position. If we agree with the Government's position, we will start the downward slide in our high standards of human rights. No sooner will we have agreed with the Government's position on reducing the rights of these people who would come into Canada legally or illegally than we would be saying that human rights abuses in other countries can go on. We will start turning a blind eye to these abuses. Then we will start saying that no one is a refugee because if a person is a citizen of another country, that person has a responsibility to that other country. Gradually, we will become more callous in our thinking toward our fellow man. To me, that is the real threat in this piece of legislation. Then we come back inside our own borders and start eating away at the rights of Canadians. Soon the very people who have agreed to the whittling away of rights of people from other countries begin to see their own rights whittled away. That is the inevitable consequence of treating some more fairly than others.

• (1540)

Turning a vessel away in this situation is not fair treatment of our fellow man. Second, it is not the answer the Government says it is. The people who have organized this sailing for profit will be allowed to get away, only to turn around and do it again with another boatload of people. Third, to set those people adrift outside Canadian waters in goodness knows what kind of conditions and in what kind of vessel would be a travesty.

I ask you, what happens to those people then? Do we allow them to bob around the ocean in an unsafe vessel? Do we allow them to just stay there, men, women and children? Undoubtedly, over the course of time, they will reach the shore anyway, the fortunate ones. The unfortunate ones will perish at sea. Is that what the Government wants?

That is completely unsatisfactory. It is no answer at all. It does not deal with those who break the law and profit from the misery of these people. The better solution would be to bring the vessel into port and charge the person in control. Make sure that person is penalized to the full extent of the law. More important, we would make sure those people, whether they are true refugees or not, at least have a safe haven while their case is being decided.

What is wrong with giving them the benefit of the doubt? What is wrong with bringing them ashore and applying Canadian law? The law is here, why push them away? Why devise laws for these people and then drive them from Canadian waters and not apply the law? It makes no sense whatsoever.

We have to give some real thought to this. We have to reflect on it once again. To say that this Bill is being filibustered is not adequate. What kind of alternative do we get? We have heard two or three cases during the life of this Government involving people who had the money to get into Canada even though they did not have the proper qualifications. They did not have the proper background or had committed acts in their country which, under ordinary circumstances, would not make them eligible for Canadian visas or landed immigrant status. There seems to be a double standard.

We have to look at the true situation. The true situation is that all the people who land in Canada deserve to have Canadian law applied to them. You cannot say that because they come here by boat their right to Canadian law is any less important than that of someone who lands by plane or who comes across a bridge from the U.S. The law applies to people who come to Canada regardless of the method. It is here to help them. It is here to strengthen the fabric of this country.

There is no need to try and to belittle the Opposition who feels there are inconsistencies in this Bill and provisions which whittle away at the fabric of this country. We feel there is something to be said for Canada's role in the international forum and this is what we want to bring forward. That is very important, along with the rights of humanity.

I congratulate the Senate for its reflection on this Bill and the amendments agreed to by the Senate committee. They were agreed to not just by Liberal members of that committee but by all members. I think that is very important. It says a great deal about the workings of the committee. They dealt with it in an unbiased and unpartisan manner. To allege political partisanship does not do justice to the role of Parliament in dealing with this very important piece of legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I am a little surprised that someone who is usually so thoughtful, and who comes from a province with ocean borders, would so easily buy the prepared notes which have probably been done by someone who is landlocked using testimony that comes out of Toronto. Reading time after time in this House from that same set of notes is an attempt to give them credibility and contribute to what I have characterized as a rhetorical filibuster. It is not an informed filibuster but a rhetorical filibuster.

The Hon. Member spent a lot of time talking about the boats. I would like to spend a minute or two talking about the boats.

Maritime law, as he should know, currently allows ships to be taken into custody within your territorial limits and escorted to port. Nothing has changed. That power exists today, it will exist tomorrow, and nothing we are debating in this Chamber changes that. What did that law standing alone produce? It produced peddlers in human flesh who put people on unsafe boats in the North Atlantic. It produced another group of peddlers of flesh who brought an unsafe vessel, not a passenger vessel but an unsafe vessel crammed with people, with inadequate sanitation, health care and food, and so on, not to a port but to a rocky shore. Those who say, "Leave them all alone" are inviting a continuation of profit for peddlers in human flesh who put desperate people's lives at risk. This is really what they are arguing for time after time. They are saying that the law should not be changed because it provides the opportunity to peddle in flesh and put people's lives and health at risk.

• (1550)

Through changing the law we seek an additional power rather than a replacement power. We want the Minister to have the power, when satisfied as to health, safety, and refugee convention, to turn a boat back. If the penalty for ships' owners when caught is confiscation and imprisonment, are they more likely to put people in lifeboats outside our limit? Operating on the assumption that humanity does exist in those ships' captains, those peddlars, if you give the Minister the power simply to turn the boat around rather than putting the captain in prison and confiscating the boat, are they more or less likely to put people in lifeboats on the North Atlantic?

Surely the option produces the best results for the people about whom the Opposition continually says it cares. The present law put the Tamils in the lifeboats. The present law put the people in the boat on the rocky shore. It is time to be reflective. It is time to end this nonsensical filibuster.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious the debate has not gone on long enough because the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Hawkes) has said that even though he has heard it many times it still has not penetrated. I hope that if we say it a few more times it will penetrate.

The Bill does go further than the existing law. To say that the Bill is only intended to give another avenue to the Minister is just not correct. This legislation would blatantly put the welfare of the people who would be the cargo in these vessels out of the window without any regard for them whatsoever. To turn a vessel around it would have to be in Canadian waters.

The fact is that it is much better to seize the vessel in order that the cargo will at least be in your protection. You will have boarding rights which will enable you to learn the condition of the people. You will at least have a chance to help them. If the people are in desperately bad health and on the verge of succumbing to the rigours of the voyage, you can do something for them. You could airlift them and give them immediate treatment. If you turn them around, they are sentenced to certain death.

In the interests of human beings there is no choice. You must do what you can. You do not put people in prison and starve them to death simply because they are illegal. You do not subject them to inhumane treatment just because they are criminals. Even if these people are criminals and are coming into Canada illegally they are entitled to humane treatment. That is what we ask for—humane treatment.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, the point which the Hon. Member has made is covered in the legislation. The Minister will have authority to stop a vessel, examine it, and direct it elsewhere subject to due care for the interests of the people aboard and due respect for the convention. The concern which the Hon. Member is expressing is within the ambit of the proposed legislation. We have here some fearmongering.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, we do not want the option of due care but the certainty of due care. We do not want the Minister to decide whether he or she will give due care. We want to be able to assure these people that they will get due care.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I appreciated very much the response which the Member made to the last question and I agree with him completely. I would like to ask him a question which has been bothering me for some time.

The Member will recall the days after the Vietnamese War when people from Southeast Asia were in boats at sea and their lives were in danger. Many of them had paid people for their passage and were what the Member referred to as the human cargo on these little boats.

The ASEAN countries; Thailand, Indonesia, and Malaysia, took them in and were the countries of first refuge. If we apply what Canada is trying to do with this legislation to the situation there, those ASEAN countries would have applied all those prohibitions and those people would have been left at sea.

Is that a fair analogy? Would the Member like to comment on that? It is wonderful that those countries, which are so poor themselves, took in those refugee claimants. They still have many of them in camps and Canada refuses to take them.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased to reply to that. That is a lesson we learned which the Government has obviously not remembered. This country took in thousands of Vietnamese boat people, as they were called at that time, even though they were not floating in Canadian waters. Canada's record has been tremendous in that regard because of our concern for the lives and welfare of these people. They were in camps in Southeast Asian countries in the best conditions which those countries could provide.

The Government of Canada moved quickly and instituted a fifty-fifty policy with private groups. Areas of this country which were not as economically strong as others participated. Groups in Newfoundland, Cape Breton, and from coast to coast sponsored these people to come to Canada. That shows that regardless of their own economic conditions Canadians are very concerned with the welfare of their fellow man.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is over. The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) has the floor on debate.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, this Bill has been reported from the other place and the amendments suggested there were unanimously passed by the members of that place. They felt so strongly about it that they endorsed the recommendations to humanize this Bill. That is the key to this extra opportunity which the Government has to deal with this issue. The Senate has given the Government an opportunity to deal with the Bill once more.

Good legislation goes through without too much debate. Bad legislation keeps turning up. The Senate has given the Government an opportunity to improve this Bill in a humanitarian way. This legislation is bad in a number of ways. It turns away boats as they enter Canadian waters. That has been recognized by many people on both sides of the House as a dangerous situation. This may turn away legitimate refugees in the process, without giving them the opportunity for a hearing in Canada. That runs against the traditions and practice of Canadian immigration policy for many years.

• (1600)

Canada is a country of immigrants. We come from a background of people who left their homes to come to Canada in search of a better life with greater opportunities. We have had a tradition of accepting refugees who wanted to take advantage of the greater opportunities that our parents had. If this Bill adopted, we may turn away legitimate refugees without the benefit of a hearing.

Second, those who profit from the plight of refugees by transporting them by boat would be forced to drop potential refugees outside the 200-mile boundary, leaving it up to them to make it to shore. Would it not be more useful to seize the ship, and put out of commission these rip-off artists and unscrupulous agencies who profit from refugees? Would it not be more useful to confiscate their vessels so they can no longer carry on such practices?

The Senate has done the Government a service by giving it another opportunity to correct the legislation. It had the opportunity to make this a more humanitarian Bill when it was first introduced to the House. Humanitarianism is the key element forgotten in this Bill. There is ample opportunity in Canada for everyone to have the kind of full and productive life that refugees want. Canada has great wealth, with many opportunities for an almost limitless number of people. It is wrong to prevent such an opportunity by ignoring the basics of humanitarian treatment.

There are two key elements of the Bill to which we object. The Government has refused to address the question of authority to detain identified refugee claimants for long period without review. It has also retained the right to turn back ships at sea, thereby preventing humanitarian treatment of people attempting to get into Canada.

The amendments with which we are dealing today suggest that as much opportunity as possible be given to these people to have access to a legal process which allows them the right to a hearing in Canada. Such a provision would allow us to live up to the reputation we have built over many years. It will fulfil the traditions on which this country was built.

Another area of concern is the treatment of people who help refugees get into this country. The Government has another opportunity to deal with this issue in a much more meaningful way. I think it is important that the Government use this opportunity to take the proper steps as suggested by our Party and others and reinforced by the Senate. It should change the Bill so that it is more acceptable to the people of Canada.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, we are in a filibuster—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): We are in a debate, not a filibuster.

Mr. Hawkes: We are into a filibuster, if you listen to the repetitive nature of the speeches and comments.

We have been debating this legislation since August. I would like the Hon. Member opposite to provide some clarity. Current maritime law allows Canada to escort a vessel to port and charge the captain for an alleged crime and seize the vessel. That law clearly led to the Tamils being put into lifeboats and made a ship's captain decide not to go to port but to go to the rocks in the near shore in the middle of the night. This put the lives of passengers at risk in both cases.

Is it the position of the New Democratic Party that we should continue with this law? If so, how can they rationalize that continuing with that law is safer for passengers? The only two experiences in recent Canadian history have shown that the existence of that law encourages ships' captains not to get caught but to dump their passengers in lifeboats or sneak in the middle of the night into rocky shores, in view of the risk of their vessel being seized. Vessels are worth millions of dollars. They run the the risk of ending up in jail. It is that law which is currently on the books, with no other outlet, that produced the risks which the Tamils the summer before last and the group in Nova Scotia last summer experienced.

• (1610)

What train of logic leads the Opposition to believe that upon reflection we should leave the country stuck with that law if the Opposition cares about safety?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, the filibustering of which the Hon. Member speaks is not filibustering. It is an opportunity for himself and other members of his Government to recognize that this Bill would be better if the Member accepted the recommendations put before this House by the Senate.

Mr. Belsher: All of them?

Mr. Hovdebo: The Member speaks about the law which causes, he says, opportunities for people to be dropped offshore. There will be no change in what happens as a result of that law. The chances are that instead of dumping people a few miles off the coast, people will be dumped 200 miles off the coast saying, "Take it on your own. Accept the money and go", if you go with that sort of logic. If people do come into our waters, why not seize them, and why not make them adhere to the established Canadian law? Does the Conservative Government think that, by putting in place a law which could turn away ships, it would increase the ability of refugees to come to Canada?

I understand the Member had an opportunity to see the most recent ships that came here. Had those ships been turned away it would have meant the death of many people because the conditions which they had to endure were unacceptable slave conditions of the past century. If those are the kinds of suggestions the Government is making, the Government is condemning people to death who are picked up as refugees trying to come to Canada rather than giving them an opportunity for a legal and rightful hearing.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I have a further question for the Hon. Member. He was asked by the Parliamentary Secretary questions that relate a lot to the legalese of the situation. I think the Hon. Member should be given the opportunity to talk a bit about the tradition that is violated by this legislation.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, we have had a tradition in Canada of accepting people and giving them an opportunity. I thank the Hon. Member for his question.

We also have had a shameful experience in that area because on a couple of occasions, one in Vancouver and one off the East Coast, we turned away legitimate refugees because we did not give them an opportunity to be heard. Let us not have that kind of situation recurring in Canada. Our tradition is to accept people into Canada and to give them a fair hearing.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) for the concern that he has shown over the years for the plight of the downtrodden and the oppressed.

I would like to follow up on the questions that were asked by the Parliamentary Secretary as well as the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) with respect to turning ships around. The Member from Prince Albert made reference to this issue. I note in the report from the other place there is background reference to this issue. Of course, the Senate, in making recommendations for changes in this area, looked at a couple of important arguments. The Senators looked at the questions of our international obligations and how they impact of the Charter of Rights.

In that light, the Senate is saying that it is difficult to imagine how Canada could, in fact, be seen to be adhering to its international obligations in turning a ship away, although Bill C-84 does state that the convention relating to the status of refugees is to be taken into account.

In the few minutes remaining, I would like to ask the Member to comment on the importance that the Member attaches to Canada adhering to its international obligations and also to the importance of adhering to our obligations under Section 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. By turning a ship around without allowing the basic due process to refugee claimants on board, the Senate suggests that it is quite possible that we would be in breach of the provisions of Section 7 of the Charter of Rights.

The argument made by departmental officials is that the rights under the Charter apply to people at a port of entry and not at sea. As the Hon. Member for Prince Albert knows, and he has spoken on this on a number of occasions, this matter is not at all resolved. I believe the Hon. Member has made reference in the past to the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in the case of Singh v. the Minister of Employment and Immigration in which the Supreme Court of Canada held that the protection of the Charter extends to every human being who is physically present in Canada and by virtue of such presence amenable to Canadian law. Thus, of course, refugee claimants can invoke the Charter.

The issue as to whether a claimant who has not yet landed in Canada but is in Canadian waters was not specifically before the court in the Singh case. The Hon. Member will be aware that Canada has played a positive and constructive role in the past in this area, and this particular legislation is a significant step backwards.

The Member knows, for example, that Canada set a positive example for the rest of the world in 1979 and 1980 when we urged the countries of Southeast Asia not to turn away the boatloads of refugees fleeing from those countries. I might say as well that the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) played a truly outstanding role of leadership in the community here in Ottawa in helping to resettle those particular individuals.

Would the Hon. Member for Prince Albert in the short time remaining care to comment on the importance of Canada adhering not only to our international obligations but as well to our obligations under the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, most Canadians have been able in the past to point with pride to the fact that we do recognize the rights of human beings all over the world. We recognize our international obligations in accepting legitimate refugees from all parts of the world to the extent where we accepted an award for our understanding in accepting refugees when they came to our shores. If we abrogate those traditions, the Charter and our international obligations, we are stepping backwards. We are going back to the time when many parts of the world felt that they had the right to say no to refugees who had a legitimate reason for entering a country.

The tradition of refugee status is a longtime tradition which international law has accepted for many, many years. It behooves us to take care that we are not one of the nations which breaks that international obligation and the opportunity to show ourselves as believing in the Charter of Rights which we have accepted in our Constitution.

---

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood—Acid Rain—Government's strategy vis-à-vis United States/Government intentions/Request that Canada break off negotiations with United States; the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry)—Government Appointments—Request for committee scrutiny/Request for native representation on Board.

---

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard in relation to the amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, and the amendment of Mr. Marchi (p. 12340).

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing here with the Senate amendments to Bill C-84, a Bill dealing in the area of immigration with the restriction and entry into Canada and accelerated removal of refugees claimants. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) has risen throughout the debate in the last few hours to try to characterize what we are doing here in the House as a filibuster, to say that all the points have been made and that it is now time to put the question. Far from it. In this debate I submit that every Member has a duty to speak. Each of us has to stand up to tell the country why we feel that the oppressive majority which the Conservatives represent in the House should not be allowed to prevail on this Bill.

• (1620)

Is it not interesting that in the Senate not only do the Liberal Senators find this Bill oppressive and unacceptable but the Conservative Senators have joined them to urge on the important government amendments to Bill C-84 which is now before the House? I think that we would be derelict in our duty as Members if we did not all stand up and loudly and clearly repeat the message that has come virtually unanimously from the Senate that this Bill with the oppressive features which it contains, which I will refer to in a moment, has no place in the law books of Canada. No matter how right-wing the Government is or how motivated it is by the back-bench club which has stood up against some of the most progressive institutions in our country, there is a Charter of Rights and Freedoms and a voice in the country that will not let this Bill pass.

I want to say something about the context of the legislation, and to talk about our history for a moment. I would also like to talk about some of the other legislation on the books that, in my view, covers adequately in most respects the situation of illegal immigrants and those whom for proper reasons, the Government may wish to remove from Canada. For the sake of history I would like to point out that probably more than any other country in the world Canada is a country of refugees. It is more a country of refugees than the United States, Vietnam, China or the frontier countries of first reception where refugees flee from unsatisfactory situations within their own borders.

Recently, I saw some statistics with respect to this point. They show that in 1985 one out of every 329 Canadians is in Canada as a refugee. That does not refer to their parents or to their grandparents but to each one of 329 individuals. If we look at the 1920s and the 1930s when Ukrainians came to Canada in such large numbers to seek refuge, and to the post-Second World War years when so many others came from Europe, and to the Vietnamese refugees, it is clear that the voice of the refugee and the descendant of the refugee is a strong part of our national heritage.

When I hear the Hon. Member for Calgary West challenge us to find another country in which refugees are treated better, I do not think that is good enough. I know that it can be done. However, I think that the challenge is to ensure that our best humanitarian tradition is preserved in our law.

At the same time as I say that, there is another feeling in the country which is very important and which deserves respect, too. That is to say that no one in Canada likes to see us made suckers of, or likes to see the country used by people who are not refugees and who have no legitimate claim to come or to remain here but who come and look through our laws and at the humanitarian impulses of Canadians to try to find some basis to stay here. Part of our history, too, is openness and fairness toward refugees. At the same time this is not wanting to be abused or to be taken advantage of.

I would like to turn for a moment to some of the other legislation which is available under our present laws for dealing with those who claim to be refugees. It is an interesting day for me to do so because earlier today in Question Period I asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) a question about the claim to remain in Canada of Mahmoud Issa Mohammad who has been taken by the Government to court in a deportation process. An adjournment was granted until February 16 in this case. Mr. Mahmoud Issa Mohammad is by his own admission the individual who, with accomplices back in 1968 fired on an El Al aircraft. In front of me I have a clipping from The Globe and Mail of December 27, 1968, which reports on this incident. He is the individual who fired in a terrorist attack on an El Al airliner in Greece. According to the clipping there were 47 passengers on board and a crew.

Mr. Mahmoud Issa Mohammad was arrested, charged and convicted for that incident. Events revealed show that he was released subsequently on an exchange made to release hostages who were being held in another country. It seems pretty clear that he did not serve the sentence that was imposed upon him. When he came to Canada he admits that he concealed his record and lied about his background in order to be allowed to enter Canada as a landed immigrant.

The Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) rose to say that our country would not become a haven for terrorists when he was asked about this matter a few days ago. He suggested that very strong measures would be taken because there are strong measures under the laws of Canada to do everything the Government can do to have Mr. Mohammad removed.

One can imagine how Canadians feel when they see a story such as that unfolding and how they would want to be certain that the laws were effective and that something could be done to remove an individual such as Mr. Mohammad who, by misrepresentation, obtained landed immigrant status. When they learn from the Minister that it will take months and years—and a departmental official, unnamed, said in the media that it could take five years to remove him—it is no wonder that some Canadians think that we need a law such as Bill C-84 on the books to give us the ammunition needed for dealing with people who come in and try to take advantage of our lax immigration laws.

That brings me to the question that I asked in the House today. All of this is very relevant because it goes to show that a tough Bill such as Bill C-84 is not really needed. In my question I referred to another part of a law of Canada, that is, to Sections 39 and 40 of the Immigration Act, as amended in 1984. I will not read the statute although I will refer interested Members to Section 39 of the Act, wherein there is a summary procedure for dealing with an individual found in the country other than a Canadian citizen who is in violation of the important parts of Section 19 of the Immigration Act.

When the Minister of Immigration and the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) are of the opinion that such an individual has been found in Canada, and I suggest that Mr. Mohammad would certainly fit within that definition, a certificate can be issued. A summary procedure would have been available under the present legislation, which, in due course, depending on the evidence, could have led to the deportation of an individual like the one I have been describing.

• (1630)

This procedure does not deny natural justice to the individual. There is provision for a hearing. An individual can be represented by counsel. He has the right of appeal if he is dissatisfied with the result of this procedure. Yet the Government has chosen not to use this procedure, but to rely on a procedure involving the Immigration Appeal Board, involving the possibility of appeal to the Federal Court for review, and as one of the Minister's own officials stated, to a procedure that could permit an individual to remain in our country for five years.

I assure Hon. Members that I am not going to attribute improper motives to the Government. But I wish to ask the simple question, why not use a summary procedure rather than a long drawn out procedure? Does that have anything to do with Bill C-84, which the Government is trying to convince the House that it needs now? The Minister of Immigration answered me by stating that they had looked at the procedures available and decided to take the slower, more studied and deliberate procedure which they chose, rather than the one that is provided in Sections 39 and 40 of the Act.

I want to put it to the Government to use the procedures that we have now rather than coming forward with the very controversial measures contained in Bill C-84, measures which are dubious at best and which are inconsistent with our tradition as a country that is receptive to refugees, but at the same time respectful of the rule of law in not wanting to provide asylum, as some other countries do, to just anyone. We want to be certain that those to whom we provide asylum are basically law-abiding and do not violate the clauses contained in Section 19 of the Immigration Act.

My colleagues have put forward some of the difficulties that we have with this legislation. They are highlighted by the treatment given to the legislation in the Senate. I find it totally unacceptable that the Government seeks to arrogate to itself the authority to turn back a vessel. Turning back a vessel on the high seas takes a very great deal for granted. It takes for granted the fact that the people on the boat are not legitimate refugees. That should not be taken for granted. They should be entitled to a hearing. A summary procedure can certainly be applied to it. But there may be individuals on that vessel who deserve to be considered as refugees and who are refugees. They can come to Canada and make a useful contribution. If returned to their country of origin, or even to the place where they embarked on the vessel, which could be a different place from their country of origin, they may find their lives in danger.

I tell the Government, the Liberal members of the Senate and the Conservative members of the Senate tell the Government, that as Canadians we do not want to take that risk. We do not want to place individuals, who come under our responsibility as they approach Canadian shores, in that type of jeopardy. We object to the procedure which permits the boat to be turned back. We insist that there are summary procedures that are available for dealing with individuals, for giving them a right to be heard by an independent tribunal and a very summary right of appeal once they land in Canada.

A person might argue that that means that people will take shots on Canada, and that those who are not entitled to come into Canada as refugees will come anyway knowing that the boat has to land. I challenge that. If one looks at the situations in the past with the boats that have landed, the Prime Minister indicated that everyone on board was going to be allowed to stay. If that is the policy, then people will want to come. Boats will want to risk coming to Canada in the hope that they will receive that type of treatment by the Government of the day. But if they know that if they are not qualified there is a very summary procedure which will result in their being returned to the place from which they came within a short compass of days or weeks, not months or years, then they will not come in the first place. They do not come free. They have to pay to come. They have to make arrangements to come. They take a certain risk when they come and put themselves in a boat not knowing as much as they might like to about the safety record of the boat and about the intentions of the captain. It is a risky business to come in a boat. If people know that unless they are a bona fide refugees they will only be able to stay in Canada for a very short period of time, then they will not take those risks. There is no good argument for turning back the boat, which the Government proposes to take for itself in this legislation.

There is another reason why turning back the boat is unacceptable. There may be terrible hardships on the passengers on the return voyage. There is no assurance that the captain would not have needed to land for water or food. Whether or not the individuals are refugees by their original definition, by passing this Bill we can put them in a terrible situation where they could actually be in a life threatening situation as a result of being turned back.

The Senate is correct. In his opening statement my colleague, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), was correct. The Government is wrong to insist that it needs this type of power.

It is unacceptable to criminalize the non-profit humanitarian activities of individuals and groups, including religious groups, for example, churches, ashrams, mosques and synagogues, that, on a benevolent basis, might come forward and offer to try to assist strangers among them without necessarily knowing the character of their arrival and the character of their claims. It is quite wrong and unworthy of a Canadian Government, and it is out of keeping with our heritage to characterize and criminalize that type of humanitarian activity and intervention by those groups.

Having had a rebuke from the Senators of their own Party, as well as from the Liberal Senators and from the Opposition united on this Bill, I urge the Government to reconsider its rejection of that portion of the Bill. Let us not criminalize those humanitarian groups among us which come forward and want to help. Let us not put them in a position where they have to go and see their lawyer, or check out with the police whether it is possible to help this group that has come on shore, for example, in the situation of the Tamils a few months back.

I wish to conclude by reminding the Government about the reaction that this Bill has engendered across the country. Perhaps the Government thought that it was on to something good. Certainly, the BBC, the Back-Benchers' Club, with a strict right-wing agenda, would have been happy to see harsh measures for wrongdoers. But this Bill goes much further than imposing harsh measures to deal with wrongdoers. It is an insensitive Bill that establishes a wall which is bound to trap deserving refugees. This country resonates with refugees and with the sense of the cause of the refugee. This Bill should not pass.

• (1640)

Mr. Oostrom: Mr. Speaker, indeed we are on to something very good. As the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) mentioned, Bill C-84 will prevent terrorists and those who are a security threat to our country from claiming refugee status.

Does the Hon. Member agree that the Senate filibuster and the filibuster which is taking place here today are just delaying actions? Does he not agree that Mr. Mohammad is ever so close, without Bill C-84 being passed, to claiming refugee status and delaying the whole process for another five years or six years? I think Canadians will not stand for it. If the Bill were passed, Mr. Mohammad would not have the right to claim refugee status, and after a seven-day period we could ship him back to where he came from.

We must not forget that Bill C-84 is also in conformity with Article 33 of the United Nations convention. Does the Hon. Member agree with that?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I agree that the Bill, if passed in its present form, would certainly prevent some terrorists from getting into the country if they came in pretending to be refugees. I must say—and I say it with respect to the Hon. Member—that that is the kind of thick-headed thinking that results in using a hammer to deal with a problem which does not require that kind of heavy-handed treatment.

We have a very good tool for dealing with the case of Mahmoud Issa Mohammad. I do not know why the Government has chosen, instead of using that tool, Sections 39 and 40 of the Immigration Act to fall back on a more general provision that calls for a hearing before the Immigration Appeal Board and reviews by the Federal Court of Appeal which could go all the way to the Supreme Court of Canada. I do not know why the Government has chosen that procedure to deal with the case raised by the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom).

However, Mr. Mahmoud Issa Mohammad is not claiming to be a refugee. He is here with landed immigrant status obtained, as he himself indicated, by lying to the officials at the port of entry. This is something which he admitted.

The Bill will not help with people who sneak in and obtain landed immigrant status. The risk we run is that genuine refugees will be on those boats that get turned back. There are boat people living in my riding which borders on the riding of the Hon. Member for Willowdale, and there are boat people in his riding. I presume to speak on their behalf. Let us not resort to this kind of heavy-handed tactic and present it to the Canadian people as if it were the only way of dealing with the problem. It does not even deal with the problem. It deals much more broadly and much more insensitively with a variety of human situations, many of which will have merit in every single situation. I urge the Hon. Member to reflect on the position he has taken and to join with us in opposing the harsh provisions of the Bill.

As to the International Convention on Refugees, I do not want Canada to be following the lead of the United Nations in matters of humanitarian treatment. I would like Canada to be setting the example.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the Government has consistently, as had the previous Government in 1979, set the lead. I think the legislation would be viewed by international legal scholars as taking another giant step forward for the protection of refugees.

However, I think the Hon. Member had a little courage. He deviated from the script that was prepared for the filibuster and provided something new and different, and for that I commend him. He also has courage and perhaps some gall to try to defend the laws which currently exist.

If anything should be clear to all Hon. Members of the House, it is that the current law is inadequate. It was forced through the House in its basic form under closure by the previous Government which the Hon. Member served. He brought to our attention some 1984 revisions which he says can be used with Mr. Mohammad. Perhaps that assertion by the Hon. Member speaks to the difficulty engendered by this debate.

The Hon. Member is absolutely correct that there is a faster way of determining whether Mr. Mohammad has indeed broken Canadian law and is indeed a terrorist. Because of the state of the law today, once that is done, once the Security Intelligence Review Committee and all such procedures have been followed, and Cabinet has considered it—and we must remember that there are six cases before that group right now going back to 1986—we are still stuck with a system that begins with an inquiry for removal where the refugee claim can be made. What he has proposed to the House is that by using a different section of the law we take the five years and make it seven years. That is the sum total of all bits and pieces of immigration law, the basic reason the Government has tried to go for the fastest method. There is nothing under current law that will even come close to matching the speed with which the country can protect itself in the future if the Opposition will cease filibustering and let us get on with changing what is demonstrably such a very bad law.

The Hon. Member has Quorum for today which contains a little piece from The Toronto Sun. He may not understand its total significance, but it says that 163 people out of the administrative review are in detention today because of security considerations. It also says that they have opened another 762 files on inadmissibles on similar suspicion. What that is is 4 per cent of the backlog that existed in the country prior to May 22, 1986 about whom we have serious security concerns. We have over 40,000 in the backlog that has grown since that date. If 4 per cent is consistent—and it has not grown—we are looking at another 1,600 people inside the country today, along with that 900, who are a serious security concern.

When the House was called back last August, the Speaker said that it was on an emergency basis. The emergency still exists. Perhaps I feel it more keenly because the Winter Olympics are coming to my city. Perhaps the people of Toronto should feel it more keenly because international Ministers are coming to Toronto and they are targets of terrorists.

Mr. Rodriguez: Scare politics.

Mr. Hawkes: Scare politics. We are getting nothing but ill-considered and ill-informed political rhetoric from the other side in an attempt to stall the House on something that it was decided a long time ago needed to be dealt with with speed and dispatch.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I stretched my ears to hear a question in the comments of the Hon. Member. I do not want to characterize his intervention as a filibuster, and I do not want to take a great deal of time to answer it.

He has a point. I am not standing up to say that the procedures in the present immigration law for expelling those who should be expelled are adequate or that they cannot be improved in that they are working well. In fact, I would have been prepared to welcome some legislation to make them work better.

Our own spokesman, the Hon. Member for York West had some pretty good ideas, I thought, on the kinds of things we would have liked to see in a law to improve that type of procedure. As I indicated, nobody wants to be made a sucker. We do not want invalid claims to succeed in letting individuals who should not be allowed to come to Canada, let alone remain here, stay here for unduly long periods of time. However, the Government has a right-wing agenda and is sticking to features of this Bill which I think violate the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and which certainly violate the sense Canadians have that genuine refugees should be able to come and stay in Canada.

• (1650)

The Government should relent and take our advice and the advice of Conservative Members of the other place who agreed, in their criticism of these features of the Act, that the Government is cutting off its nose to spite its face. I know that there is a serious administrative problem in dealing with the backlog. This Bill has some features that would help clear up that backlog. Let us get on with it. However, by insisting that it have the whole cake including the portions of it that are poisoned, the Government is forcing us to resist. All Canadians want us to do so.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to share a few thoughts with my colleagues. We are dealing here with legislation which is of profound importance to the kind of country we as Canadians want to have. We are dealing with legislation that in many ways is a direct repudiation of a long and honourable tradition of recognizing that those who are fleeing from oppressive regimes should not be turned away from Canadian shores. That tradition was recognized by the United Nations in 1985 when Canada received the highest possible award, the Nansen Medal, in recognition of our tradition of compassion and understanding. Since that time, the actions of the Conservative Government in response to a boatload of 174 refugee claimants who arrived in Nova Scotia in the summer of 1987 have put a black mark on that international reputation.

In his continuation of his attempt to filibuster discussion of the Bill, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) suggested that there was a crisis that had to be responded to quickly. It was some two years ago that a committee chaired by that Hon. Member, the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration, made unanimous, all-Party, recommendations of a mechanism for ensuring far speedier access to the refugee determination process.

Yes, Canadians are concerned about queue-jumping. Canadians are concerned about abuse of the system. However, Canadians also want to ensure that in rejecting the abuses and those who would abuse the system and exploit individuals, we do not turn our backs on a tradition of concern for those who are genuine refugees fleeing from persecution.

It was on August 11 that Parliament was recalled to deal with what we were told was a national crisis. Canada was being invaded and the Government intended to take speedy action to deal with that invasion. The action it took, Bill C-84, has been condemned by virtually every group that appeared before both the House of Commons committee which studied the Bill and the Senate committee.

The business before the House now is the report of the Senate back to the House. The Senate heard from some 37 witnesses who gave a very comprehensive review of the issues involved in this important piece of legislation.

[Translation]

The Senate, for instance, heard testimony from representatives of religious communities and humanitarian groups, from people from all regions in this country, from the Canadian Bar Association, Immigration Law Section, from professors of constitutional international law, from civil liberties experts and private citizens. Mr. Speaker, the Senate has proposed a number of amendments to ensure that the Bill does not violate our obligations, not just our international obligations but also our obligations to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The witnesses who appeared before the Senate committee shared the view that the Bill was contrary to the principles of international conventions on refugees and probably also to the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The courts and court decisions support this view. In fact, the Senate's report suggests this position is supported by several decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, Conservatives on the Committee signed this report, and one would have hoped Conservative Members here in the House would have responded to this appeal from their Senate colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, the Government has accepted several amendments proposed by the Senate, but it insists on rejecting other, essential amendments. For instance, it still refuses to accept amendments to Section 6, concerning men and women who work, for instance, with churches and humanitarian groups to help refugees.

Mr. Speaker, these amendments are aimed at protecting these people who want to continue to work in the best traditions of this country. Unfortunately, the Government has refused to accept these amendments. The Government suggests that the amendments will make it impossible to prosecute successfully those persons who make money by organizing clandestine migrations and by advising individuals on how to make a fraudulent refugee claim. Mr. Speaker, that is not what the Senate says. In fact, it said that the Bill was a threat to Canadians who were not breaking the law at all! I am thinking of Paragraph 48 of the Senate's report, and I quote: "Bill C-84 would create offences with heavy penalties for knowingly organizing, inducing, aiding or abetting people to come into Canada without proper documents".

Mr. Speaker, many witnesses have strongly criticized the provisions concerning aiding and abetting, provisions that have also disturbed a great many Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hour of five o'clock is rapidly approaching. If there were a predisposition on the opposition benches to conclude this item by not seeing the clock for a few minutes, the Government would certainly be willing to support that. I wonder if you could seek such unanimous consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there such unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no unanimous consent. Of course, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) will be able to continue his speech whenever this matter is brought up in the House again.

[Translation]

It being 5 o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

---

PRIVATE MEMBERS BUSINESS--MOTIONS

[Translation]

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE PROPERTY RIGHTS

The House resumed from December 4, 1987, consideration of the motion of Mr. Reimer:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Constitution Act, 1982 should be amended in order to include property rights and, that the Governor General issue a proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada to amend Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms so that it reads as follows:
>
> "7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice."
>
> and this House urges that the Legislative Assemblies of all provinces and the Senate pass similar resolutions.

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, that issue of property rights has been a personal concern of mine for at least a decade.

In 1979, when I ran for the first time as a Conservative, a group of Quebec candidates adopted as their basic political position, almost as a prerequisite to running for the Conservative Party, that property rights become part of any Progressive Conservative elections platform. As for my Party itself, it has had that concern for decades. We are all aware of the efforts made by the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker on the matter of property rights.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is involved is not simply a matter of lofty principles, but rather practical matters. We know very well for instance that property rights are part of the balance between community and individual rights. Let me explain. The community of course has a right, as a society, to a healthy, positive development, but the individual also has the right to basically protect the principles inherited along with citizenship.

In 1981, during the Constitutional debate, Hon. David Crombie, now a Minister but then a backbencher, although not backward because he had very progressive ideas, stated on February 18, 1981: "Secondly, the Charter of Rights does not include property, as I mentioned earlier. The right to enjoy property is essential to people understanding not only of their rights but of their freedom and security. We put a motion to include property as a right; and it was voted down". The Hon. Member then to criticized the approach taken by the New Democratic Leader when he suggested the Charter of Rights had to be enacted as put forward because of the need for change. And the Hon. Member went on to say: "The Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) said it is time for a decision, time for change. We have to act decisively in history".

As you see, Mr. Speaker, this principle was of major concern to many responsible members of our party.

I also want to quote the comments made by the Speaker of this House, the Hon. John A. Fraser, who was then Member for Vancouver South. He was asking the then Prime Minister, Mr. Pierre Elliot Trudeau, why, knowing that it would be useless to attempt negotiating to incorporate property rights in the Constitution, the Sollicitor General, acting as Justice Minister, had made such a commitment. He also asked: "Is the Prime Minister really trying to make us believe that it was put forward to broaden consensus which the Prime Minister knew perfectly well did not exist?" I should add that the major issue of the day was to broaden consensus among the Opposition Parties. The Right Hon. Pierre Elliot Trudeau had replied: "Madam Speaker, the federal Conservative party seems to attach such importance to this matter" At which point someone had interjected: "You're damned right we do". To which Mr. Trudeau had replied: "The hon. member says, "You're damned right we do". I say that if they want that amendment so badly in the constitution, and they want it so badly that it should bind all the provinces as well as the federal government, then let them come and support us and maybe I will give up the support of the NDP." He was therefore willing to trade on a basic principle.

Mr. Fraser had then replied: "Madam Speaker, I remind the Prime Minister that the Conservative proposal is to put these provisions that we have been suggesting and working on to the provinces." In other words, we wanted the support of the provinces for a very basic principle because our party believed in the rights of the provinces as it believes in the rights of the individual.

As for Mr. Hamilton, who was then Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose-Mountain, he said the following in his speech on February 23, 1981: "The third point I wanted to mention was the right to enjoy property, which is the first item in the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights. Why any Liberal or NDPer would deliberately, in full public glare of television, radio and newspaper, stand up and declare that they did not want this entrenched in the Constitution is beyond me. Anyone who knows the history of the new world, South America, North America, Australia and New Zealand knows why people came to these lands. They came to enjoy the ownership of land. To the working man, that means his home."

Vince Dantzer, who was representing the Okanagan North riding at the time, stated on March the 2nd, 1981: "There are other flaws in this document, flaws due to the process and haste which has characterized the passage of this resolution. Where are property rights?

During the committee hearings the hon. member for Provencher proposed the following amendment: Freedom from unreasonable interference with privacy, family, home, correspondence and enjoyment of property. These basic rights have been accepted in our tradition for hundres of years. They appear in the Magna Carta. They were present in John Diefenbaker's bill of rights. Yet, the Liberal majority at the direction of the New Democratic Party retreated from the position of acceptance to one of rejection and refused to allow the charter to guarantee the right of Canadians to own and enjoy property. "A man's home is his castle", but not in Canada under a Liberal and NDP government." It is rather ironic, Mr. Speaker, because these days, the idea of a Canada under a Liberal and NPD Government is again fashionable.

Canadians could then remember that at that time, such a government prevented them from enjoying the right of property which is a very basic right, not only as a principle, but also as an economic right.

Everybody knows that the citizen who owns his own house, who has the joy and pride of possessing assets, will respect them, respect himself and his neighbour much more.

On the other hand, we often realize, when watching TV or reading the papers and magazines, the great many social and basic problems faced by people forced to live in the tenement sections of ghettos, such as those found in the major American cities, where a great many individuals, because they do not own any property or their own house, feel dehumanized and show the most complete disrespect for themselves, their neighbours and the premises they live in.

Personally, Mr. Speaker, I feel that this old principle should be enshrined in the Constitution, but it is also something quite practical for us Canadians, because, as I said, it ensures the balance between the rights of the community and the rights of individual Canadian men and women.

[English]

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, Canadians should not be concerned in any way about the fact that property rights are not enshrined in the Charter of Rights. We have lived and now live under jurisprudence which has established an unwritten basis in law for property rights. Anglo-Canadian jurisprudence has traditionally recognized as a fundamental freedom the right of an individual to own and enjoy property, and the right not to be deprived of that property. This was established without being written into the Constitution.

• (1710)

Therefore, Canadians should not be concerned that property rights are not enshrined in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Their rights of property remain sound regardless of whether or not they are in the Charter. In fact, many countries believe that countries such as Canada, which have developed their law structure from the British parliamentary system and the British law structure and have established recognized rights, are in a better position than those which have them written into a charter such as is suggested here. When you include such rights in a charter, because it is sometimes necessary to abrogate those rights in some way, you have to make exceptions to them. As those exceptions develop the rights become less free than they would be if they were not written.

The Anglo-Canadian right to property has been confirmed by a Supreme Court decision. The Supreme Court came down firmly on the side of property rights. While they are not enshrined in the Constitution they are definitely the rights of the country.

Section 26 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms states:

> The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed as denying the existence of any other rights and freedoms that exist in Canada.

The Charter of Rights and Freedoms specifically set out that the fact that the rights of property are not included in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms does not mean that they do not exist. There is nothing in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms which says that these rights do not exist. That is the basis upon which we in Canada live with the security that the property we own is there for our enjoyment.

This therefore seems like a little bit of overkill. Perhaps it is playing a little bit on the fears which people have of government and of what they see across the border where property rights are a little more subservient to the Government. Countries around the world look upon our situation with envy because we feel secure in our property rights and can fight them in the courts without any suggestion that they are not secure.

In the process of discussing property rights we should also look at the history of Canada. We are in a rather unique situation in that when we brought our Constitution back we had the opportunity to decide what would be in it and what would be in the Bill of Rights. In the process of looking at what had happened over a period of 100 years the Parliament of the day accepted a Charter of Rights which did not include the right to enjoy property because it appeared to that Parliament, as it appeared to many people across the country, not to be necessary. In fact, the two strongest advocates of not including property rights in the Constitution were the then Premier of Alberta, Lougheed, and the then Premier of Prince Edward Island, MacLean—one a Conservative, one a Liberal. The third Premier who came down against the inclusion of property rights was Premier Blakeney of Saskatchewan. In the discussions regarding property rights in the Constitution the position of not including property rights was supported by a Conservative Premier, a Liberal Premier, and a New Democratic Premier, and by the parliamentarians at that time.

Parliament spent many months discussing the Constitution and finally accepted the position which was acceptable to the majority of people in the House of Commons at that time. Consequently, property rights were not included in the Charter of Rights.

I want to confirm that Canadians should not be concerned in any way about the fact that property rights are not enshrined in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Property rights have existed for 100 years in Canada and for several hundred years in the British tradition around the world. They have been challenged in courts and have never failed to be upheld. Consequently, I do not believe it is necessary to put property rights in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour for me to have the opportunity to speak in support of the motion of my hon. colleague from Kitchener to amend the Constitution Act, 1982, to include property rights.

One of the two reasons I did not vote for the Constitution Act in 1982 was the fact that property rights were not included. The other reason was that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms gave no protection to unborn human beings. Many of us in the House at that time were very upset by those omissions in the Charter. We can see today, as a result of the decision brought down by the Supreme Court of Canada on Thursday, January 28, that unborn human beings are more and more discriminated against by not being included in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Government of the day had no intention at any time to include unborn human beings in the Charter.

However, with regard to property rights, the Government of the day did in fact originally include property rights in the Constitution but later rescinded them. We later learned that the Government bowed to the wishes and pressures of the New Democratic Party to remove property rights from the final text of the Constitution. We know why the NDP took this action, Mr. Speaker. Members of the New Democratic Party were being true to their belief that all property should be owned by the state. The NDP believes that the state knows what is best and that the people of Canada should follow their lead with no questions asked. God help us if by some accident of fate the NDP ever came to national power. It would be a disaster of the greatest magnitude.

Denying the right to private property to Canadians certainly makes a mockery of the existing rights to life, liberty, and security of person as depicted in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The member of the New Democratic Party said that the definition of property is very complicated. I agree with that. We have real property which relates to land and we have personal property that deals with everything from cars to negotiable instruments. Just because the definition of property is very broad and it will, of necessity, have to be interpreted by the courts, is no reason not to embark on that course to have property rights included within the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

• (1720)

At the outset, I would like to emphasize that in my view property rights have played a central role in the evolution of our society. Indeed, property rights are an essential part of British parliamentary democracy. These rights can be traced back to King John, the year 1215, with the signing of the Magna Carta.

Today, the right to own, use and enjoy property is fundamental to the economic life of our country and of other western democracies. For these reasons I believe property rights should be enshrined in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The role of property in the economy of our country, the right to own, to use and to enjoy property, is fundamental to the basic feature of democracy, which is individual freedom. The Progressive Conservative Party has had a long and honourable association with this idea.

It was a Conservative Government under the late Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker who, in 1960, introduced the Canadian Bill of Rights which included protection for the enjoyment of property. In the recent process leading to the patriation of the Constitution, it was the Progressive Conservative Party again that wanted the inclusion of property rights.

Unfortunately, that process was not included in the end and I am very pleased that the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) has come forward through his motion in an attempt to correct the situation.

The motion before us would add the enjoyment of property to Section 7 of the Charter, thereby guaranteeing the right not to be deprived of the enjoyment of property, except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice. In conjunction with that, it is reasonable, I believe, to say that what we are talking about is the unreasonable deprivation of an individual when it comes to property rights.

I suggest that some of the fears I have heard enumerated in the House, that people's rights will be trampled on by the rights of Governments to conduct the business of either the province or the federal Government, are really misplaced. I do not think that is what we are talking about at all. We want to strike a reasonable balance between the property rights of the individual and the legitimate concerns of the state. I would not feel so strongly about this if I had not seen examples in Canadian history where property rights of the individual had been trampled upon.

The House will be aware of all the problems surrounding the expropriation of land for Mirabel Airport. The facts are this: Much more land than necessary was expropriated for the airport. Everybody knew it and acknowledged it. The people whose farms and homes were expropriated fought the issue for years, indeed decades, to do something about it.

I became a believer in this resolution just on that issue alone because I always thought that if property rights had been enshrined in the Constitution, people would have had a legal access and would have been able to take a legal route to show and demonstrate to a court of law that their rights had been unnecessarily deprived. It was a very moving moment for all of us when the then Minister of Public Works spoke to all the farmers who had been deprived of their property and acknowledged that a terrible mistake had been made. All the suffering during those years by those individuals was proved unnecessary.

There is no question that if this motion had been passed and been part of the Constitution, concerned individuals would have had remedy in law. I think that is what we all want. Therefore, I ask all Members to begin the process of enshrining property rights in the Constitution. It is a long and difficult process and I know it will need the support of the provinces. It is long overdue and we should begin the process now.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is an odd historical event occurring now as I sit opposite my friend, the Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie). He may remember a former incarnation in his busy life when he served on the Constitution Committee which, prior to 1982, considered the patriation package, including a Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

He and other colleagues of his in the Conservative Party were strongly advocating that the Constitution should entrench property rights. The Conservative Members of the committee were enthusiastic about including property rights but were unwilling at that point to indicate that if property rights were put in the Charter they would support it. In other words, it was a negotiating freebie.

I hope the Minister will rise and tell the events from his point of view, but my recollection as I was sitting close to the negotiators was that the Official Opposition, the present Government, was opposing the patriation and the Charter, and were wanting changes to it.

I do not mind saying that we needed friends at that time and were quite alone in the country at that point on the patriation package. Most of the provinces were dead against it. The Official Opposition was opposed to it.

Whenever a good idea came along—and I think the inclusion of property rights was a good idea—we always hoped to use that piece of bait to further the small support that the constitutional package had at that particular time. I know the Member will correct me if I am wrong, but my recollection is that they were interested in it. The Member for Rosedale might have said on the record that this would make the package more attractive and easier for them to support, but they never said that if we put it in they would support it.

Mr. Crombie: But we did support it.

Mr. Kaplan: Now the Member for Rosedale wants me to get ahead of myself.

My colleague Jean Chrétien, the former Member for Shawinigan, was negotiating with the committee, hoping to get the support of the Official Opposition. He took ill at approximately four o'clock of an afternoon and was supposed to appear before committee in the evening. I was in Barrie, Ontario, speaking to the Kiwanis Club when I received a telephone call. I had to return to replace my colleague that night in Ottawa because we were working to international deadlines. There were other reasons why that meeting had to be held that night.

I had in my bag of tricks the approval of the negotiating committee to agree to the particular amendment that the Member for Rosedale and others were asking, which, in substance, is essentially the amendment that is before us tonight.

I was very pleased to be able to say that we would amend the package accordingly.

Mr. Waddell: That was Friday night.

Mr. Kaplan: A funny thing happened over the weekend. Other Members can speak to their side and perspective, but when next Monday morning came, it turned out that the negotiating committee had to take that back off the table. I say this to the Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) and hope that he will have some sympathy for the situation we were in at the time. Not only did we fail to pick up any additional supporters as a result of making this part of the package, it looked as if we might lose the New Democratic Party, who had already agreed to support the package the way it was. Their company was an important element to the success of the package.

Now that that is behind us and patriation has occurred, everybody turns out to have been in favour of it all along in spite of the various political positions we were taking. I want to indicate for the record that this amendment does enhance the Charter. It recognizes property rights, not in the absolute—even the right to liberty is not absolute in the Charter—but recognizes it as one of the important values in Canadian society. This is not something to be tossed aside lightly by the Government of the day, by Parliament or by a legislature without having a good, sound justification for doing so in a free and democratic society. That is all this provision would do.

• (1730)

Concerning a grand scheme, the Member who just spoke before me said that the nationalization of all private property is the grand scheme. I hope it is not, and I do not think it is. But even if there were a grand scheme, and even if that grand scheme were adopted by some future Government of Canada, I think that the balance which the Charter provides would respect both interests. The Canadians would be more comfortable in the enjoyment of their property as they are more comfortable in the enjoyment of their liberty and their right of security of the person in a wonderful Charter of Rights and Freedoms which truly makes a difference in our life.

I have another minute or two and I have a comment to make about the notwithstanding clause. The notwithstanding clause in Section 33 of our Constitution permits any legislature or parliament to override the Charter and, in effect, to act as if these rights were not vested in the Canadian people. I think that the notwithstanding clause is incompatible with the Charter. The story of how it came to appear in the document is too long to put before the House now. As everyone knows, it was not the idea of the Government of the day. It certainly was not Mr. Trudeau who wanted his proposals for a Charter of Rights and Freedoms to be suspendable. It was a condition with which we had to agree if we wanted to get that basis of support which the Supreme Court of Canada held that we needed to have to go back to Britain for the last time to get permission and Britain's legislative blessing on the patriation and the establishment of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

What I do not understand, and perhaps some members of the government Party could help me with that—

[Translation]

I should like to conclude in French by saying that I do not understand why the Government is now so reluctant to take this initiative. It has recorded a success with the Meech Lake Accord and has greatly helped our Constitution to progress. I do not agree 100 per cent with what it has achieved, but nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, it has obtained the unanimous support of all Canadian governments. Why did it not enshrine the rights of property at that time? I feel it was because the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had no agenda, he had not "advanced" the interest of all Canadians to have their national perspective in the Charter. That is a major flaw which will be remedied, I hope, following the forthcoming election which will "build" the Government of today.

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about the motion of the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) to amend the Constitution Act, 1982, as follows:

> "7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice."

The purpose of this amendment is quite simple: It would protect the houses, buildings and lands owned by Canadians from any arbitrary Government interference. These provisions could have been included in the Constitution Act, 1982, which repatriated our Constitution without the support of the 27 per cent of the Canadian population residing in Quebec, in spite of the fact that there were then 74 Liberal Members from Quebec in this House. Yet, they agreed to a new Constitution for Canadians without the official participation of Quebec.

I would also like to refer to a comment made by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) who said that, when we negotiated the Meech Lake Accord, we decided to limit the discussions to the integration of Quebec into the Canadian Constitution. Indeed, this is why we had a specific agenda. This agenda was quite well-known, notwithstanding what the Hon. Member for York Centre may have said. We were well aware of the wishes of the premiers generally and especially of the Quebec Premier, Mr. Bourassa, to have my province rejoin the Constitution, as you had not taken care of it yourselves.

I shall now come back to property rights, Mr. Speaker. These rights exist, and they scare many people, especially the socialists. Property rights terrify them. What they would like is a community of the instruments of production and especially a community of the means to spend and distribute wealth. They are afraid that, if we keep the existing legislation, they will be unable in the future to nationalize banks and oil companies and to allow state interference in the private sector. This is what the socialist party fears the most about the liberal-socialist coalition already referred to by the Liberal Leader and which would mean a movement to the left by our representatives in the House of Commons. With such a coalition, the Socialists will be in a position to demand more from the Government, to nationalize everything and surrender the future of Canada to technocrats who are not accountable for the use of our resources.

These people, who promote the ideas of Karl Marx, should look towards Russia and China and realize that these countries are starting to privatize some means of production.

Some Hon. Members: Come on!

Mr. Fontaine: They can yell as much as they please, but the fact remains that the Communist system in Russia is moving a little towards capitalism. The same thing is happening in China. They recognize to a certain extent the failure of the Communist system and the collective property.

If we do not want the same thing to happen here, the Government, instead of moving towards collectivism and developing state property to protect—

Mr. McCurdy: Quebec's own little Fascist!

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, could we ask the few Socialists who are present here to show a little more respect for the Chair and the House of Commons and allow me to continue? Could we ask them at least that, Mr. Speaker? I know that they are complainers, that they are drop-outs and intellectual failures in our society, but they should respect those who have been elected here and are addressing the Chair.

I want all Canadians to understand that we want to give back the greatest possible benefit to the taxpayers who own and are accountable for their property. We want to make it possible for Canadians to acquire wealth. Strangely, Mr. Speaker, if it were not for us who are aware of the importance of private property, of capital and private initiative, the Socalists could not survive in this system because they are essentially parasites of a rich system which is capable to support even extremists in our society. They are people who tag along private enterprise, because private enterprise is rich. If these people were really serious, Mr. Speaker, they would move to another country. They would move to a country with a system compatible with their philosophy.

Indeed that would bring some relief to our country and to our House of Commons because the greatest frustration I have in this House, Mr. Speaker, the greatest frustration imposed by democracy, which is very useful to me, but the worst enemy of democracy is to see before me these intellectual beggars who aggravate us and try to aggravate Canadians all year round in this House. It is important for Canadians to know these people are like that. It is important for Canadians to know that these people could not care less about Canadians who produce and Canadians who want to develop their country through the private sector and with full respect for personal initiative.

I see they are smiling, but you are smiling because our country can support you, otherwise you would be beggars.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, this is just the kind of situation where I would like to be able to speak French.

• (1740)

[English]

But I will have to reply in English to my friend opposite. I always enjoy his speeches. I hope that he will be happy when we return him to the private sector where he can be productive after the next election.

Mr. Mitges: Have you got a job?

An Hon. Member: Come on over.

Mr. Waddell: Members opposite suggest that I run against them. I would be pleased to do that.

The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) and the other Conservative Member who spoke, whose riding escapes me at the moment although I believe he is from Ontario, rant and rave about the NDP being for all property owned by the state. They rant and rave and accuse us of being, first, Russian communists and, then, Chinese communists. It is as if they had never heard of democratic socialism. They do not know the difference.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: It is a case of desperate, pitiful, hopeless people who have to resort to Red baiting. That is what they are doing rather than debating the topic of private property.

The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), our speaker on this debate, tried to deal with the issue of private property and property rights. He made the point that during the constitutional debate the Premiers of Prince Edward Island, Saskatchewan and Alberta, who were in fact a Liberal, an NDPer and a Conservative, were against putting property rights in the Constitution. Yet no one in this debate has asked why. I think there are reasons why.

Prince Edward Island was afraid of putting property rights in the Constitution because it wanted to retain the right to enact legislation to protect its farmland and its waterfront from being taken over by Americans especically, and by other people. The people of that province were concerned about that problem. If property rights had been in the Constitution they may not have been able to enact that type of legislation.

The Premier of Saskatchewan had taken over the potash industry for public services. He had taken some resource corporations under public ownership for the great benefit of the people of Saskatchewan, as, indeed, other provinces have done with respect to hydro power and so on. He was afraid that if a property rights provision were in the Constitution, it would be struck down by the courts.

The Premier of Alberta had his own reasons. I suspect they were that he wanted to be able to tax the oil industry, which was the biggest industry in his province. He wanted to get some of the revenues and to control the development, so far as that was possible, of the oil industry within his own province. For public policy reasons these Premiers were suspicious and, indeed, were against having property rights included in the Constitution.

"Property rights" is a buzz word. What the Conservatives really mean by property rights is that they want something in the Constitution that will stop Governments from doing things that would enact the collective public good, that would stop some economic planning, for example, or that would stop the takeover of a particular company. They do not say that they want this without compensation. There would be compensation and so on. In fact, they want this right included in the Constitution so that government will be severely restricted. They do so because they do not believe in government. I am not talking about every Conservative. There are a group of them who do believe in the John A. Macdonald tradition, something that others seems to be forgetting. It is the mainstream Canadian tradition that there is a partnership in Canada between government action and private industry action.

We have a mixed system in Canada. That is one of the things that makes Canada different from the United States. The Conservative Party is determined to make Canada more and more like the United States until we eventually become the fifty-first state. To say that the NDP does not believe in private property is nonsense. We accept that there is a mixed system of private and public enterprise in Canada.

What the motion before us would do is to load the dice so that there could not be public enterprise in the future. That is what the real agenda is here. That is what the Conservatives want.

The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) gave an interesting speech on this subject, especially with respect to what happened during the constitutional committee hearings. I was there and I remember the day to which he referred. I might tell him that, quite frankly, I was astounded by his speech. He said that property rights, and I use his words, were a piece of bait to get Tory support. It is lucky that his mother-in-law or his father-in-law were not there because he would have traded them off as well for Tory support. He said that property rights were part of his bag of tricks. That is an indication, if I might say to the Hon. Member for York Centre, of the Liberal frame of mind.

I think what happened on that Friday night when the Hon. Member for York Centre agreed to put property rights in the Constitution is that Mr. Trudeau and Mr. Chrétien identified over the weekend what was happening. The proposal was promptly withdrawn on the Monday when good sense prevailed.

While the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) is in the House I want to say this. I will never forget the look on his face at that committee meeting. I remember when the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) was trying to talk out the clock, quite frankly, and there were but a few minutes to go until 6 p.m. Finally, the Hon. Member for Burnaby, if one can believe it, was running out of words. He could not think of anything else to say. However, it finally hit him and he said, "Mr. Chairman, the family farm. We have to protect the family farm".

I will never forget the look on the face of the Hon. Member for Rosedale as well as the looks on the faces of the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and some other Ministers who thought that that was really something. Of course, the clock struck 6 p.m. and Serge Joyal, who was then the Chairman, declared the meeting adjourned until Monday.

What was placed in the Constitution was a provision with respect to native rights and not property rights. That is the most radical part of the Constitution. If some were astounded by the Supreme Court decision on abortion, I think they will be astounded by some future Supreme Court decisions on aboriginal rights. They will shake up a great many people in Canada.

In conclusion, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert was quite right. Property rights are included in Canadian law now. An Englishman's home is his castle. We have the notion that there is a right to property. Property cannot be taken away under Canadian common law without compensation. If such a provision is placed in the Constitution, then the Governmment's hands will be tied. No one is in favour of outrageous expropriations and, in that regard, I refer to Mirabel. Yet the Government cannot be stopped from expropriating land to build an airport since that is in the public good. A balance must be struck.

The experience in the United States in the early 20th century with the American Supreme Court was that it struck down government laws because there was something equivalent to property rights in the American Constitution.

"Property rights" is nothing but a buzz word. The Hon. Member can keep her hot tub in the Gatineau. The NDP will not steal that from her. Property rights are included in the common law and we do not need them included in the Constitution or in the Charter of Rights. The only reason that some Conservative Members want it in there is that they want to restrict the Government from enacting laws that are in the general public interest in the Canadian tradition. They want to take us to a right-wing American tradition, which is not Canadian. That is why this should be rejected.

• (1750)

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak in support of the motion introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer), to amend the Constitution of Canada in order that Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms reads as follows:

> 7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

The Hon. Member for Kitchener has rightly pointed out that the addition of the words "the enjoyment of property" to Section 7 of the Charter of Rights is a natural adjunct, a given, to those principles that we as Canadians hold dear.

However, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) is on record as saying that "Canadians should not be concerned in any way about the fact that property rights are not enshrined in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms". Yet in a Gallup poll commissioned by the Canadian Real Estate Association 81 per cent of Canadians said "yes", Canadians do feel that it is "fairly" or "very" important to amend the Constitution in order that property rights be protected.

The right to enjoy property was left out of Section 7 of the Charter of Rights when it was proclaimed in 1982. As a result, Governments are able to pass legislation or make regulations that may violate property rights. The exclusion of property rights is a grave oversight, in my opinion.

Protected property rights go back to 1215 with the signing of the Magna Carta. The right to own is similarly recognized in the English Bill of Rights in 1627, in the United Nations Universal Declaration of Rights which Canada signed in 1948, and finally in the 1960 Canadian Bill of Rights. But now in 1988 we do not have that protection.

The entrenchment of property rights is recognized in many democratic countries, such as the United States, Australia, Italy, Finland, Sweden, and West Germany. In Canada, however, it is not.

The simple acknowledgement of the principle of property rights and the understanding that there is an inherent belief that what one owns or possesses is his right to keep, is a tremendously reassuring principle that has evolved through time. We take a degree of satisfaction and pleasure, perhaps even refuge in our possessions, our reward for hard work.

I take pleasure in sitting in the backyard, working in the flower bed, mowing the lawn, or just puttering around because it affords me a certain degree of peace of mind, contentment, and enjoyment.

But what if my little Shangri-La were taken away from me, for some reason or another? What if my property rights were not recognized? This very real event has happened to many Canadians. Many Canadians were persecuted in their mother country because of government upheavals, changing ideologies, war, or religious persecution. Not only were their human rights violated, but as I argued earlier, property rights, being a direct adjunct, were violated without any form of compensation.

While it is not likely that this occurrence will happen in Canada, the entrenchment of property rights in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms would prove to be a safeguard, guaranteeing the rights of property owners against abusive or threatening measures taken against them.

I fully appreciate the difficulties that Hon. Members are encountering in defining the term "property". I believe that all Members from all sides of the House have stated that property encompasses not only property as in real estate, but intellectual property, passive property, and government largesse, which includes welfare payments, old age benefits, unemployment insurance compensation, and so on.

I am in agreement with the Hon. Member for Kitchener who argued that, although it may be difficult to define and interpret "enjoyment of property", it should not detract from the central principle of recognizing and entrenching property rights in the Charter.

During the last election campaign, the Progressive Conservative Party took the position that it supported the entrenchment of property rights in the Charter. Since that time, as a result of the Meech Lake Accord, the Province of Quebec has become a constitutional member. Provincial authorities are presently investigating their concerns in regard to property rights.

I believe that we will do an injustice to the Canadian people if the House does not support the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Kitchener. It is an injustice because the entrenchment of property rights in our Charter is clearly what Canadians want, and it is fundamentally the correct course of action for us to take as parliamentarians.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (LaSalle): Mr. Speaker, I think we still have four minutes to debate this motion today, but we were unprepared for this. Still I think I will echo some of the comments of my colleagues.

[English]

I wish to speak a little in English to ensure that all the folks from LaSalle are listening to me.

I am pleased to have this opportunity today to speak on this motion for a resolution to amend the Constitution to add property rights to Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This is a matter of constitutional reform with no significant potential implications. It is a matter that has stimulated debate and discussions in the House of Commons and in other forums, and that has not yet been resolved. This is because while the premise of this amendment is simple, the actual amendment proposed raises rather complex questions. The premise is that the houses and homes, and lands and property of Canadians deserve protection against arbitrary government action. However, the actual amendment raises questions that go beyond the concerns expressed for having such a constitutional provision. This is clear from previous debates and discussions. Therefore, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak to some of those matters today in the hope of adding some clarity to this debate.

The first thing I would note is the text of the proposed amendment before us.

[Translation]

Has my time expired, Mr. Speaker? Too bad, I had a good text to read but unfortunately I ran out of time. Thank you for your attention.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2) the order is dropped to the bottom of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

Adjournment debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

ACID RAIN—GOVERNMENT'S STRATEGY VIS-À-VIS UNITED STATES/GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS/REQUEST THAT CANADA BREAK OFF NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, recently I raised the question of acid rain and the negotiations with the Americans on an accord, and the fact that the negotiations are not moving ahead at all. We are not anywhere near to having an agreement that would actually reduce the emissions that cause acid rain. In the United States, emissions come largely from the midwest. We need emission reduction in the United States parallel to what Canada has done.

• (1800)

Ontario and Quebec have done a remarkable job at reducing sulphur dioxide emissions. We have an understanding that they will be reduced by 50 per cent by 1994. We would very much want to see the Americans making a similar commitment, and I regret to say that we do not have that. I do not see that the federal Government is working strenuously to that end, yet every day we hear new news about the effects of acid rain. Today the Presbyterian Church in Hamilton, on James South, is nearly falling down as a result of acid rain. Damage to monuments and buildings is part of the bill which must be paid on acid rain.

[Translation]

The withering of the maple groves, especially in Quebec, is another problem. The Union des producteurs agricoles taxes Ottawa of weaknesses and spinelessness in the face of the serious problems caused by acid rain from the United States.

An international forum on acid rain will be held soon in Quebec. Experts from the United States and from Europe will be attending. The Quebec provincial Government will be represented, the environmentalists will be there, but not the federal Government.

Now, the withering of the maple groves is caused by the acid rain, especially from the United States. And the European expertise may be usefull to us in Canada, since the withering of European forests is well advanced and the remedies are also well advanced over there.

[English]

I regret that the Canadian Government is not going to be there, nor will it provide financial aid for this important conference which is coming up shortly.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) has called acid rain the litmus test regarding the competence of the Government in dealing with environmental questions with the United States. I regret to say that that litmus test has been failed. We have a Government which has been actively pursuing a free trade agreement with the Americans. All the while that this has been going on, acid rain has been relegated to a question of lesser importance. In order to get that free trade agreement, that Mulroney-Reagan trade deal, acid rain has been neglected.

I say this with great regret and knowing that the Government has in principle endorsed the Brundtland report, the World Commission on the Environment and Development, which indicates that all economic decisions should have an environmental component. Here we have the major decision for the economy which Canada is facing with the trade deal and the environment was not even considered. The effects of acid rain, the effects of toxic wastes, and the effects of any number of environmental questions, were totally ignored by this Government concerned to move ahead on a trade deal for the wrong reasons.

President Reagan said while he was in Canada that he would consider an agreement with Canada. We have negotiations going on, but they have not been successful. So far the Americans are not willing to specify any actual reductions or specify any timetable. This is essential.

Let us talk about money. Supposedly $5 billion is committed in the United States. Only half of that or $2.5 billion would come from the Government. The rest would come from industry sources. Of that $2.5 billion, $300 million had already been committed to research on acid rain. The Government's commitment, far from being $5 billion, is down to $2.2 billion which in fact has not been appropriated by Congress.

Why not? Our friends in Congress do not see the point in putting more money into research, especially research which will not necessarily reduce the causes of acid rain. Unless we have a real plan with a timetable and with actual remission reductions specified, we are not going to get anywhere.

We need to have two million tonnes of emission reductions from certain areas to improve the situation in Canada. That means 10 million tonnes over all to get the qualitative reductions we need. We are far from it.

Let me close by saying that I think it is absolutely essential that the Government begin to take seriously Canada's number one environmental question, acid rain, and give it a high priority. The first thing it must do is call off the negotiations. We have to send a message to Congress and the administration saying that this kind of negotiation that is going nowhere is not acceptable. Let us begin to prepare the way for a new Congress and a new President. Let us show them that we take the problem very seriously indeed. Let us work on the things that we can work on here at home, especially the effects on human health which we can share with the Americans. Let us not continue this farce of believing that the negotiations we are having with the Americans now will do any good. They will not. Let us look to the future.

• (1805)

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond tonight to the Hon. Member's question on the negotiations of the Canada-U.S. acid rain Accord, an issue that is of concern to all Hon. Members. I am pleased that the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) continues to have this interest.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, Canada has established an acid rain abatement program that will reduce its acid rain emissions to 50 per cent of 1980 levels by 1994. Six of the seven federal-provincial agreements required to fully implement the Canadian program are now in place. The federal Government expects to sign the agreement with Nova Scotia very soon. However, since approximately 50 per cent of the acid rain in eastern Canada originates in the United States, without similar action on the part of our American neighbours, our abatement program cannot be effective in protecting Canada's environment.

Last April, President Reagan agreed to consider Canada's proposal to negotiate a bilateral agreement including targets and schedules to reduce the U.S. trans-boundary flow of acid rain emissions to acceptable levels. Our officials subsequently provided their American counterparts with an outline of the elements Canada feels are essential in an effective Accord.

Publicly, we have stated that we want the U.S. trans-boundary flow of SO2 into eastern Canada to be reduced to two million tonnes by 1994, equivalent to the percentage reduction targets in our own abatement program. This proposal is based on sound scientific information and on existing principles and obligations under international law which provide that countries must ensure that activities within their jurisdictions do not damage the environment of other nations.

Canadian officials met with American counterparts in Ottawa last November 30 but the Americans were not prepared to provide Canada with a formal response to its concept paper at that time. The American negotiating team stated that a decision regarding the American position would be made by the President's domestic policy council at its mid-January meeting and that they would provide Canada with a substantive response to the proposal on January 25.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) has indicated that the American response received in Washington on January 25 was sorely inadequate. The main components of an Accord which the Americans were prepared to negotiate with Canada include: one, a heavy emphasis on joint research, emission monitoring and further problem definition; two, recognition by Canada that market-force-driven implementation of new technologies and deregulation will significantly reduce future U.S. emissions; and three, the most disturbing element for Canada, the position that any Accord could not include scientific emission targets and schedules.

This counterproposal indeed falls far short of the key elements needed to protect Canada's environment. As the Minister of the Environment stated in the House on January 26, he, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) are currently reviewing every available option that will enable Canada to obtain the reduction it requires in the U.S. trans-boundary flow of acid rain. A decision on how the Government intends to proceed will be announced shortly, but Hon. Members may rest assured that the federal Government will continue to pursue this vital environmental issue with the United States, with the administration, with the Congress and with the American public.

• (1810)

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS—REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE SCRUTINY/REQUEST FOR NATIVE REPRESENTATION ON BOARD

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my appearance on the Adjournment Debate this evening arises from the unsatisfactory answers given by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. de Cotret) on November 23, 1987. He was responding to my question concerning the composition and representation of membership of the board of the FEDNOR agency, as the acronym has it, or the Advisory Committee on Development for Northern Ontario, as I believe the official title is. I asked the Minister if the Government would be appointing more members to the board. Having initially said there were seven more vacancies, in his reply to my supplementary question he said:

> There are 12 members on the board. There are still four vacancies to be filled.

That was well over two months ago and those vacancies have not yet been filled. I believe the Parliamentary Secretary should account for that omission.

I would like to point out that three nights ago the Standing Committee on Regional Industrial Expansion had the eight present nominees to the board come before it for their confirmation hearings. It rapidly became evident, under very probing and perceptive questioning by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), that seven of the appointees owed their appointments to their connections with the Progressive Conservative Party. That is really not the gravamen of my complaint in this matter. We expect the Government to appoint Tories to the board. This certainly is not going to be one of the most financially lucrative boards to which a supporter of the Government could possibly aspire. I might say incidentally that the eighth appointee appeared to be a partisan of the Liberal Party. Indeed, one of the seven left some doubt as to where his current loyalties lay, although it was clear as to how his appointment was arranged.

Those four vacancies have to be used to get some balance on the board. I am sure that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is not going to tell me that a board made up completely or almost completely of people who have a firm allegiance to the Progressive Conservative Party is going to be a board that will be capable of rendering fully objective decisions no matter how strong their background in business, how strong their understanding of regional development, or how strong their understanding of financing programs might be.

It was obvious from those who came before us on I believe it was Thursday night that the native element of northern Ontario, a very significant element numerically and even more so if we consider the lack of employment and underdevelopment of the 100 odd reserves in northern Ontario, was not represented on this board. Yet the chairman of the board acknowledge with some pride, I am glad to say, that the board would be having an active interaction, an active role, in regard to the economic development of native communities. If that be so, and I trust it is, there should be representation that reflects and is conversant with the realities of the economic situation of native communities.

Another obvious component that was not represented among the eight who appeared before us was that of labour. Organized labour is very strong in northern Ontario with its resource industries of mining and forestry in particular. Organized labour of course has many representatives who have very well-developed ideas on the nature of regional development, on regional development needs, and could contribute a great deal to this board.

Finally, I think it is proper to point out that the resource and processing industries, which are the raison d'être, if you like, for the economy of northern Ontario in very large measure, were significantly under-represented on this board. Indeed, the board members collectively could only claim, I would say, a passing familiarity with resource industries.

• (1815)

Mining, the forest industry, and the forest resource processing industries such as sawmills and pulp and paper mills need to be represented on this board if we are to have a balanced composition.

I was glad to see that the matter of potential conflict of interest has been taken care of. Let it not be said that I will not compliment the Government when such a compliment is earned.

We did, of course, highlight in our questioning the over-all inadequacy of the funding allowed for the FEDNOR agency. There is $40 million available for grant distribution plus $60 million in loan guarantees. Not to criticize, contrast that with the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agencies which has something like five times the per capita available funding.

The basic question which I would like to hear the Parliamentary Secretary answer this evening is when appointments will be made to those four open positions and whether they will be made in such a way as to ensure that we end up with a balanced board, not only in terms of ideology but in terms of the community of interest of northern Ontario they represent.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would like to remind the distinguished Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) that ACOA deals with four provinces while FEDNOR deals with northern Ontario.

Were the Minister here this evening, I am sure he would welcome the opportunity to bring to the attention of Members in the Chamber again the very important and very major thrusts which the Government is making toward the economic rehabilitation of northern Ontario. As you know, Mr. Speaker, FEDNOR is the recently announced federal economic development initiative for northern Ontario. A key component is a $55 million fund, and there are different ways to explain the levels of the funding. Its intention is to fill the gaps which exist in federal programming with respect to that region. I think that is particularly fair to say with regard to new native economic thrust for the future.

The Northern Ontario Development Advisory Board was established to provide an important source of advice to the Government on federal economic policies, programs, and services, particularly as they relate to FEDNOR and economic redevelopment.

The eight board members, announced on October 9 last by the Member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Kelleher), the Hon. Solicitor General, on behalf of the Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret), are all northerners and represent the region's geographic districts. They bring with them a wide variety of expertise and experience together with a very deep and personal commitment to the economic redevelopment of northern Ontario.

There has been some suggestion here this evening that all such nominations by the Governor in Council are subject to the approval of the appropriate committee of the House. These eight, as the Member has just indicated, were all, if I am correct, before the committee only last week.

The Order in Council establishing the board does provide for 12 members and eight of them have been appointed. There are four appointments yet to be made and these vacancies will be filled with the assistance of suggestions coming not only from the Member for Kenora—Rainy River but all those interested in the orderly economic development of that part of Ontario. Suggestions will come from native people, labour, and the resource based industries, which, as the Hon. Member has mentioned, are so important.

Since the announcement last fall the board has been meeting regularly. Planning and discussion of appropriate programs are ongoing. There will be a secretariat established in Sault Ste. Marie. I think the Member will be pleased to join with all of us in applauding this first step. The board will be rounded and fleshed out to its full membership. I know it will do an excellent job for that part of the country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.21 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, February 2, 1988

The House met at 11 a.m.

Prayers

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to Petition No. 332-3518.

* * *

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-278, an Act to amend the Criminal Code.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have to leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, at present, Section 173 of the Criminal Code deals with criminal intrusions at night. It has been mostly used in relation to peeping Toms. The law at present is totally ineffective in daylight hours. The proposed change would extend the offence to acts of voyeurism committed in the daytime as well as night.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour, on behalf of a number of people in western Canada, to present a petition on the subject of the trade deal the Government negotiated with the United States.

These people are very concerned about the future of Canadian sovereignty, and believe it has been compromised through this agreement. They are afraid that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has threatened the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, and to equalize opportunities between the regions. They also believe that the agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future, and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

For those and other reasons the petitioners humbly call upon Parliament to dissolve and let the people of Canada have the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade arrangement through a national general election.

OPPOSITION TO TRANSPORT OF PLUTONIUM OVER NORTHERN CANADA

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present petitions signed by resident of the Yukon who are concerned that the U.S. and Japan propose to fly plutonium over the Canadian North. As that represents both an environmental and nuclear proliferation risk, they call upon the Parliament of Canada to recognize the dangers of such flights and to say no to the transport of plutonium over northern Canadian territory.

• (1110)

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to rise, pursuant to Standing Order 106, to present a petition on behalf of a number of people from Gull Lake, Saskatchewan, who are very concerned about the trade deal which has been signed.

They believe that the Conservative Government does not have a mandate to conclude a trade agreement with the United States. They believe that these negotiations have compromised Canada's sovereignty. They believe that the government trade deal threatens the very fabric of our political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership in Canada.

There are a number of other points about which they are concerned which I will not bother to read. By and large, they call upon Parliament to dissolve now to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade deal during a national general election.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and pleasure, in accordance with Standing Order 106, to present a petition from a number of residents of Spadina as approved by the Clerk of Petitions.

The petitioners have said that considering that the trade deal arranged between the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States would have a fundamental impact on Canada's economic, cultural, and political independence, and considering that such an agreement implies the loss of jobs in many sectors and regions, the undersigned request that the Parliament of Canada obtain a clear mandate from the Canadian people through a national debate on the alternatives available to Canada and that this debate result in a national election prior to the signing of such an agreement.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a number of residents of my constituency of Ottawa Centre and other people who were visiting in my constituency from Kingston and other parts of eastern Ontario who are opposed to the trade agreement which has been entered into by the Government with the Government of the United States.

They believe that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude this trade agreement. They recall that during the course of the negotiations the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised. They call upon the Government to dissolve so that Canadians can have a general election so that the people of Canada can make a decision on the trade negotiations.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition which has to do, as you would know, with the free trade issue and the recently signed Mulroney-Reagan agreement. Your petitioners wish to present a common grievance which reads as follows:

Considering that the Mulroney Government has sold out Canada and received nothing in return, whereas Canadian industries are still not protected from U.S. trade laws, whereas the United States obtained everything it wanted in all key sectors, especially agriculture, energy, the auto trade, financial services and investment, whereas thousands of Canadian jobs are threatened and the Conservative Government has not provided for any adjustment assistance for Canadian workers.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to denounce the Government for signing the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

---

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed from Monday, February 1, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House agrees with amendments 8 and 13(e) made by the Senate to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, but disagrees with amendments 4, 5(a), (b) and (c), 6(a) and (b), 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13(a) because this House believes they contradict the principles of the Bill for the following reasons:

Amendment 4 would exclude only criminals and war criminals from the refugee determination process, but would allow terrorists, spies and subversives to pursue a claim to refugee status, notwithstanding the fact that Article 33 of the UN Convention would permit the removal of these latter individuals to their countries of nationality or permanent residence, even if they were determined to be Convention refugees.

Amendment 5(a) would eliminate the authority of the Minister to direct a ship to leave or not to enter Canadian waters. This amendment would reopen a significant gap in Canada's ability to control its borders.

Amendments 5(b) and (c) arise out of Senate amendment 5(a), which is not acceptable, and are therefore inappropriate.

Amendments 6(a) and (b) would reverse the policy on which the Immigration Act, 1976 was based, which policy was not changed in the Bill as passed by this House. The amendments jeopardize the possibility of successfully prosecuting persons who profit from organizing illegal migration and from counselling fraud among refugee claimants.

Amendments 9 and 10 would restrict the ability of peace officers and immigration officers to act quickly to search for evidence of major offences under the Immigration Act, 1976, in exigent circumstances, where lives are at risk or where evidence with respect to those offences may be lost or destroyed.

Amendments 11 and 12 would restrict the ability of peace officers and immigration officers to execute search warrants which have been duly authorized by a justice of the peace, by denying explicit authority to break open containers where it is reasonably believed evidence will be found and by limiting the authority to execute these warrants at night.

Amendment 13(a) would reduce the initial period of detention without review from seven days to forty-eight hours, which would allow insufficient time for the gathering of information to substantiate allegations or to identify the individual, particularly when large groups of undocumented persons arrive at one time.

And that this House agrees with the principles set out in amendments 1, 2(a), 3, 7 and 13(b), (c) and (d), but would propose the following amendments:

Amendment 1 be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 22 and 23 on page 1, and substitute the following:

(c) to deter those who assist in the illegal entry of persons into Canada and thereby minimize the"

Amendment 2(a) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 29 to 39, on page 4, and substitute the following:

(a) examine within seven days, in camera, the security or criminal intelligence reports considered by the Minister and the Solicitor General and hear any other evidence or information that may be presented by or on behalf of those Ministers and may, on the request of the Minister or the Solicitor General, hear all or part of such evidence or information in the absence of the person named in the certificate and any counsel representing the person where, in the opinion of the Chief Justice or the designated judge, as the case may be, the evidence or information should not be disclosed on the grounds that such disclosure would be injurious to national security or to the safety of persons;"

Amendment 3 be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 7 to 12, on page 5, and substitute the following:

(d) determine whether the certificate filed by the Minister and the Solicitor General is reasonable on the basis of the evidence and information available to the Chief Justice or the designated judge, as the case may be, and, if found not to be reasonable, quash the certificate; and"

Amendment 7 be amended to read as follows:

"Add, and immediately after line 6, on page 10, the following:

95.21 No proceedings for an offence under Section 95.1 or Section 95.2 shall be instituted except by or with the personal consent in writing of the Attorney General of Canada or Deputy Attorney General of Canada."

Amendment 13(b) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 1 to 22, on page 21, and substitute the following:

(2) Where, with respect to a person detained under subsection (1), the Minister certifies in writing

(a) that

(i) the person's identity has not been established, or

(ii) the Minister has reason to suspect that the person may be a member of an inadmissible class described in paragraph 19(1)(e), (f) or (g), and

(b) that an additional period of detention is required to investigate the matter referred to in subparagraph (a)(i) or (ii), the person shall be brought before an adjudicator forthwith and at least once during every seven-day period thereafter, at which times the adjudicator shall review the reasons for the person's continued detention."

Amendment 13(c) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 23 to 47, on page 21, and substitute the following:

(2.1) Where the Minister has issued a certificate under subsection (2), the Minister may amend the certificate to which the detention relates to include any matter referred to in subparagraph (2)(a)(i) or (ii), following which the person shall be brought before an adjudicator forthwith and at least once during every seven-day period thereafter, at which times the adjudicator shall review the reasons for the person's continued detention.

(3) Where a person is detained under subsection (1) and the Minister has not issued a certificate under subsection (2), the person shall be brought before an adjudicator forthwith after the expiration of the period during which the person is being detained and that person shall be brought before an adjudicator at least once during every seven-day period thereafter, at which times the reasons for continued detention shall be reviewed."

Amendment 13(d) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 48 to 50, on page 21, and lines 1 to 18, on page 22, and substitute the following:

(4) Where an adjudicator who conducts a review under subsection (2) or (2.1) is satisfied that reasonable efforts are being made by the Minister to investigate the matter referred to in subparagraph (2)(a)(i) or (ii), the adjudicator shall continue the person's detention.

(4.1) Every review under subsection (2) or (2.1) of the detention of a person suspected of being a member of an inadmissible class described in paragraph 19(1)(e), (f) or (g) shall be conducted in camera.

(4.2) Where (a) the Minister is of the opinion that any evidence or information to be presented by or on behalf of the Minister at any review under subsection (2) or (2.1) of the detention of a person referred to in subsection (4.1) should not be disclosed on the grounds that its disclosure would be injurious to national security or to the safety of persons, and (b) a request therefore is made by the minister, the adjudicator shall order that the review or any part thereof be conducted in the absence of the person and any counsel representing the person.

(4.3) Any person excluded by an order under subsection (4.2) from the whole or any part of the review under subsection (2) or (2.1) may apply to the Chief Justice of the Federal Court or to a judge of that Court designated by the Chief Justice for the purposes of this subsection to have the order quashed and sections 36.1 and 36.2 of the Canada Evidence Act shall apply, with such modifications as the circumstances may require, to such applications.

(4.4) Unless quashed, an order under subsection (4.2) shall, with respect to the person to whom the order relates, apply to every review under subsection (2) or (2.1), or part thereof, at which the Minister is of the opinion that any evidence or information to be presented by or on behalf of the Minister at the review, or part thereof, should not be disclosed on the grounds that its disclosure would be injurious to national security or to the safety of persons.

(5) Where the adjudicator who conducts a review under subsection (2) or (2.1) does not continue a person's detention under subsection (4), the adjudicator shall make the appropriate order under subsection 104(3).

(6) An adjudicator who conducts a review under subsection (3) shall make the appropriate order under subsection 104(3)."

And the amendment of Mr. Marchi:

That the message of the House of Commons to the Senate be amended by:

a) deleting, in paragraph one, the reference to Senate amendment 4;

b) deleting paragraph two;

c) adding to paragraph nine a reference to Senate amendment 4; and

d) adding after amendment 3 the following:

"That amendment 4 of the Senate be amended by deleting the said amendment and by striking out line 16 on page 7 of the Bill and substituting the following therefor:

"(2)(c) and against whom a deportation order has been upheld by the Board; or""

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) had the floor. He is not in the House and, therefore, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) on debate.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate being recognized this morning to make some comments on Bill C-84. We have had a good debate on this Bill. We are discussing, of course, the Government's motion in response to the Senate's reaction to this Bill. My hon. friend from Spadina very eloquently presented my Party's position on this government initiative. I thought he had done the job so well, as had a number of my colleagues, that this round of debate would be ended after another two or three interjections. However, a number of things encouraged me to change my mind earlier this morning and I have decided to say a few words.

Earlier today I was handed a telegram from the Council of Christian Reform Churches. It brought to my attention that the government motion on Bill C-84 is very inadequate and unacceptable. They believe it is unacceptable in the way it relates to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and in how it refers to the United Nations Convention for Refugees, about which I will have more to say in a moment. When the Christian Reform Churches brought to my attention that there were some real problems with this government initiative I decided to explore it a bit further.

This morning I was also handed a lengthy telegram from the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees. The Inter-Church Committee for Refugees said that the government response to the Senate refugee Bill report is unacceptable. They said:

> The Senate undertook a serious study of Bill C-84 and made minimal changes to make it constitutional and thus workable. There was no room for compromise.
>
> The government response denies persons their right to have a refugee claim heard by insisting on calling them a security risk or turning away boats. That is an unacceptable and unnecessary denial of individual rights.

That phrase, "turning away boats", reminded me of an incident which happened many years ago in our country. I received a number of phone calls over the weekend from constituents of mine who are of the Sikh religion. They reminded me of the Kamagata Maru incident which occurred on our West Coast.

At that time a number of people from India wished to come to Canada to make Canada their home. They chartered a boat, certainly not a liner or a passenger ship, but a regular freighter which was their home for many weeks as they journeyed from Bombay and other parts of India, primarily the Punjab region. They arrived on the coast of British Columbia in the Port of Vancouver and wanted to make Canada their home.

The Canadian officials with the Port Authority in Vancouver, and I regret to say with the support of the federal Government of the day, held that boat in the port day after day as the Government of the day tried to find ways of stopping these people from landing and becoming Canadian citizens. One of the saddest days in our history was when the federal Government decided to use our naval gunboats to force that ship to return to a port in India. Those Sikh immigrants were forced to return to their homeland against their wishes and their will.

The Kamagata Maru incident, as it is now referred to, is a very dark mark on our history. There are others. As an example, a ship carrying Jewish refugees fleeing persecution in Nazi Germany and other parts of Europe came to Canada and the Canadian Government forced it to return to Europe. We did not want to welcome those refugees at the time. The federal government of the day thought this was inappropriate and forced the boat to return to Europe. I am afraid to say that sources tell us that virtually all of those people eventually met death at the hands of the Nazi war machine.

• (1120)

Most of us are well aware of those two incidents. We now find that this legislation includes a clause that would give the federal authorities the right to intercept a ship coming into Canadian waters with alleged illegal refugees onboard and the right to force that ship to turn about and return to its port of origin or some other port. In other words, someone would determine that the people onboard were illegal refugees, but I do not know how that could be determined by flying over the ship or quickly visiting it without allowing due process to hear those people claiming to be refugees. Quite frankly, it makes me shiver because it conjures up images of the Kamagata Maru incident or the incident when we forced the ship with people of Jewish faith to return to Europe.

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees has repeatedly made it clear that a denial of access actually violates the intent of the U.N. Convention on Refugees. As a matter of fact, a United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees spokesperson who testified before the legislative committee examining Bill C-84 said that, "According to the provisions of the convention, it is necessary to determine if the person is a refugee or not." He went on to say, "During the refugee determination procedure it is always possible to discover whether the person committed a serious crime of a non-political nature, but it is necessary first to proceed to a determination of refugee status."

There are many concerns about this legislation, but I am reminded by my constituents of the Kamagata Maru incident. The Government still insists on maintaining a clause in Bill C-84 by which the Kamagata Maru incident could occur again. That is something of which I and my Party want no part, and we identify this as a dark day in Canadian history. We describe this as a very racist act of a past government and something that ought to have no place in Canada in the past, present or future.

I cannot imagine that anyone in the House would want to accept the fact that this Bill enshrines this kind of behaviour as part of Government legislation. Personally, I welcome the amendments that were adopted unanimously in the Senate. While I do not agree with that particular institution, their amendments to Bill C-84 are good. They follow very closely the amendments which my Party moved when this matter was debated in the House. They would correct the main flaws of this Bill and, therefore, I regret that the Government has rejected the majority of the Senate amendments, including amendments which the Government accepted in principle but then whittled away most of their meaning.

I regret that the Government has chosen to rush this Bill in after months of delay, with so little time for Members to read it before debate is completed. I want to congratulate Members of the New Democratic Party and those in the Liberal Party who have spoken out about the major shortcomings that still exist in Bill C-84. The Government has failed to listen to virtually every individual and group with experience in the area of refugees. I believe there were dozens and dozens of qualified groups with great experience in matters dealing with immigration and refugees that universally condemned this Bill. All pointed out major shortcomings in Bill C-84, yet their voice was ignored by the Government. I find that rather arrogant and I question whether the Government is serious in its intention to bring forth legislation that is consistent with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and with the United Nations Charter dealing with refugees. This Bill fails on these two counts. On that note I will conclude my remarks to allow others an opportunity to raise their concerns.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's comments are ones that we have heard many times before, not only from the Hon. Member but other Members of his Party and the Liberal Opposition. The remarks really repeat what has been said during a very lengthy debate on Bill C-84, when it was first before the House for debate on second reading, then at third reading, report stage and at committee stage.

We are now into what I believe can be reasonably described as the longest filibuster of any matter coming back from the Senate that has occurred during the course of this Parliament. The Hon. Member indicated that he was in support of all the amendments that came from the Senate.

The Government has specifically rejected amendment No. 4. In fact, the Liberal Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) has moved an amendment to these proceedings which would put the Senate amendment No. 4 into place. The effect of that, of course, would be that refugee claimants who are criminals, and war criminals, would be excluded from the refugee determination process but the terrorists, spies and subversives would be allowed to continue through the process.

It is my understanding that Article 33 of the U.N. Convention provides that where there are reasonable grounds for regarding a refugee claimant as a danger to the security of the country in which he or she is, that article would permit the removal of the individual from Canada even if it were determined that such person was a convention refugee. Does the Hon. Member agree with the amendment put forward by the Liberal Member for York West that would allow terrorists, spies and subversives to make a claim for refugee status in this country?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question put by my colleague. At the beginning of my presentation I indicated that I welcomed the amendments that were adopted unanimously by the Senate and that they followed very closely the amendments which my Party moved regarding this matter. While I certainly agree with the intent of all the amendments, there were nuances about which my colleagues previously indicated we had concerns. I think that would clarify for my hon. friend that we do agree with the general principle, but we certainly do have some concerns about the fine points.

• (1130)

I would like to use this opportunity as my hon. colleague would like me to do, to say something about the right of the Government to turn back ships. Some of my constituents, and particularly those who come from countries with many citizens that have become Canadians, feel that the Government might now wish to turn away people alleging to be refugees if they come from countries where the people are of the wrong colour of skin or perhaps countries where there are the wrong politics. There is some concern that if there were biased sentiments on the part of certain officials on colour, race, religion or politics, that could be used to determine whether or not a ship would be turned back. Some of my constituents who are of the Sikh faith have concerns about how that could be used against their kin who would be forced to return to a problematic situation in India.

Many Sikhs fled persecution in India and sought refuge with their families here in Canada. They are very concerned about just what future government policy may be. I believe we want to do everything possible to send a clear message, through this legislation and perhaps by other means as well, that in no way would any Canadian citizen or landed immigrant be required to return to India or to any other country where his or her life would be put in danger. I hope that covers the issue raised by my hon. friend.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment and possibly follow it up with a question. I would like to respond to the comment made by government Members to the effect that this is a filibuster on the Senate amendments to Bill C-84. Nothing could be further from the truth. As a matter of fact, I asked this morning and received statistics concerning the debate. Hon. Members will be interested to know that we have debated the amendments proposed by the Senate for 13 hours and 25 minutes. That is far from being a filibuster. Over five days—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member who has been here for many years knows that under the new rules we only comment during questions and comments on the speech made by the Hon. Member, not on the words of another individual who has questioned the Hon. Member who has spoken. I would hope that the Hon. Member would realize what he is doing.

Mr. Gauthier: I fully appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. I just thought that I would come to the defence of my good friend from the NDP who spoke for 20 minutes, as the rules allow. I take exception to other Members saying that he is filibustering.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member what he feels about Government Members telling him that he is part of the filibuster designed to prevent the amendments from the Senate to Bill C-84 from going through. Does he not feel that 13 hours and 25 minutes of debate is not sufficient time to get the Government to understand good common sense?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Ottawa—Vanier asked if 13 hours and some minutes would be adequate time for the Government to assume some sense. I do not think we could be here for enough weeks for that to occur. While that might sound like a rather casual comment, it is a thoughtful comment.

Hon. Members will recall that the Senate held hearings on Bill C-84, a Bill which strikes at the very essence of what this country is all about and whether we welcome people who face oppression in other countries. Dozens of witnesses appeared at those committee hearings, and every single witness opposed this legislation.

We must admit that when every single witness opposes a piece of legislation and points out major flaws in it, it is not surprising, since the Government has ignored all of that advice, that members of the Opposition feel more than ever an obligation and responsibility and indeed a duty to attempt to bring some sense to the Government by pointing out what these experts have said. I think that this is probably one of the more important debates this House has ever had.

We as members of the Opposition are trying, in thoughtful and positive speeches which offer suggestions and point out weaknesses and flaws in this legislation, to make our points. To call that a filibuster is to make the kind of comment that can only be described as unparliamentary and, quite frankly, undemocratic.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the refugee question and on Bill C-84. I am particularly concerned about this issue. While there was a real problem which needed addressing, the Government has handled it in the wrong way. I believe that a large part of the responsibility for the problems we face with the backlog of refugees seeking determination under the present process must fall upon the present Government.

I do not want to deal with this at length, but I would remind Hon. Members that it has now been some two and half to three years since we received the report of Rabbi Plaut on refugees and it has been something over two years since we received the report of the employment and immigration committee. That report represented a consensus on a workable means for putting into place a more effective refugee determination process.

If the Government had been prepared to listen to the recommendations that had been made at that time and if it had been prepared to go along with them, we would now have an effective determination system working. After a couple of years, if contentions made by refugee-aid groups, by opposition Parties, by the churches, by Amnesty International and by a whole range of people involved in the refugee question were that the procedure did not prove to be workable, perhaps some further amendments to the process might then have been needed. Instead of that, the Government continues to reject the bulk of the amendments which came back from the Senate.

I am normally not an advocate of the Senate of Canada. I believe it is an outdated body and I do not think that having an appointed body as one of the Chambers of this Parliament makes a great deal of sense. I believe that the Senate should be abolished. However, it exists now. It has a Constitutional role and, for once, it is trying to redeem a pretty tawdry record by doing its constitutional job of being a Chamber of sober second thought.

I find it interesting that a Chamber of this House, which has traditionally been known as a defender of the privileged and wealthy and as a body which ignores the needs of average Canadians, should have been so convinced by the evidence presented to its committee which laboured long and hard on Bill C-84 that it came back to the House with 13 amendments. These amendments would turn this Bill which is unworkable, unfair, unconstitutional and would sully Canada's international reputation, into a piece of legislation which my Party and most people concerned with refugees would be able to support. It does not make it perfect.

• (1140)

We recognize that some difficult compromises may need to be made, but there is the wherewithal for reasonable compromise in this particular area in the amendments put forward by the Senate. However, rather than going along with that and rather than trying to build a certain amount of consensus and support from the people concerned with the refugee process, the Government continues to bull ahead, accepting only two or three of the recommendations from the Senate. It then put forward a motion which essentially would reject most of those amendments.

If the Government still believes that the Senate should exist, then it should be prepared to accept that the Senate does function and that its constitutional mandate is to function as a chamber of sober second thought. We are not talking here about the Senate trying to undo a major tax Bill, or about the Senate trying to reverse economic policy being made by the Government of Canada. Those functions properly belong in the House of Commons. We are talking about sober second thought after detailed consideration of a difficult topic.

Under those circumstances I have to say that until we get rid of the Senate or until the Government says that it does not acknowledge any validity in terms of the Senate's operations and it will get rid of it as soon as it can, then the Government should be prepared to listen to the suggestions that the Senate has made and to give them positive consideration. It does not necessarily mean that the Government should adopt all 13 recommendations. It does mean that it should be prepared to give enough consideration so that the bulk of the 13 representations will be accepted. Of course, that has not occurred. The consequence is that we are back to where we began in this affair. We are back to a situation in which we have an unacceptable response from the Government.

[Translation]

The refugee issue will remain a controversial one and will continue to generate appeals to our courts of law, all the way up to the Supreme Court. Last week after the decision on the Morgentaler case, we saw how the Supreme Court was prepared to apply the Charter of Rights and Freedoms to every jurisdiction of the Government of Canada. If before last Thursday, the Government was unwilling to respond to the constitutional concerns of the Senate with respect to Bill C-84, it should be willing to do so now.

Mr. Speaker, I am personally very disturbed about two questions. First, the matter of precluding from the refugee system people found to be security risks, without further specification, instead of specifying only those refugees who are indeed a threat to Canada's security. Second, I am concerned about the fact that the Government has rejected the Senate's remarks about assistance given to refugees by various groups here in Canada, by priests, religious communities and volunteer groups who simply want to help these unfortunate people.

Mr. Speaker, I am also concerned that the Government remains determined to restrict access to the refugee claims process to the wealthy and to those who have direct access to Canada, and I am referring to people coming from Eastern Europe, of whom it could be said that their need to seek refugee status is certainly becoming less urgent then it is for people from Central and South America, Africa, and other parts of the world. The Government is effectively saying that if you have spent two or three months or perhaps two or three years of your life seeking refugee status and fleeing from one country to another, if you are in that kind of a situation, your chances of entering Canada as a refugee are nil.

Mr. Speaker, I was in Montreal yesterday, and I had the privilege of meeting Canadians originally from Zaire, in Africa. As you know, Zaire is a country that has been rather unlucky. It was formerly the Belgian Congo and has now been under the dictatorship of General Mobutu for nearly twenty years. There was a brief period of parliamentary democracy in Zaire, but now they have a situation where it seems General Mobutu, the country's dictator, has actually extracted a fortune of $5 billion from his people and put it in Swiss banks.

Mr. Speaker, attempts were made to found a new political party in Zaire. I am referring to the Democratic Union for Social Progress. In January, leading members of the new party, Mr. Tshisekedi and Mr. Kanana, went back to Zaire in response to a declaration by Mobutu that other political groups would now be permitted and would have freedom of expression and be free to participate in political life in Zaire. Unfortunately, during demonstrations in Zaire there was an attack by armed police. Ten citizens were killed, many others were injured and the two leaders of the new political party were arrested. This is a tragic situation, but it is not the first time this has happened in an African country. However, if a member of the Democratic Union for Social Progress were to come to Canada seeking refugee status on the grounds of the events in Zaire, what would happen under the proposed legislation, now that the Government has rejected the amendments proposed by the Senate? There is no direct access. Travel is very difficult, and besides, the average annual income is about the same as in Haiti, which is between $60 and $100 per year in U.S. funds. Even if there were direct flights from Zaire, how could a citizen of this opposition movement pay for a flight which might cost as much as ten or twenty times the annual income of the average citizen in this country of 32 million inhabitants? For all intents and purposes, therefore, it is impossible.

Mr. Speaker, assuming that a religious organization in Montreal with contacts and even missions or schools in Zaire had helped someone seeking refugee status in Canada, what would be its situation under the Act? With so few changes in the Government's remarks, this person or religious organization would be liable to the full penalties of the Act and to the same ordeal as the travel counselors who had organized trips for Portuguese and Brazilian nationals seeking refugee status in Canada in a way which was clearly and definitely illegitimate.

[English]

That is the kind of situation which the Government is creating in the current situation because of its refusal to accept changes in the law.

[Translation]

Perhaps I might quote a paragraph of the report from the Senate committee which dealt with this legislation. I should like to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that of the thirty-seven groups of witnesses which appeared before the Senate committee which dealt with Bill C-84, only one supported the Bill as proposed by the Minister. And this group was made up of witnesses from the Department of Immigration.

[English]

I am reminded of just how in certain cases the bureaucracy of the Government of Canada, for which I normally have a good deal of respect, has in fact had an agenda and has refused to recognize the democratic process. In a democratic process it is ultimately parliamentarians who make decisions and not officials. The officials may disagree privately with what parliamentarians ask them to do, but it is their constitutional duty to go along with the Government.

Instead, we see here a case in which the Department of Immigration has kept on pushing. It has terrorized, or at least convinced Ministers that they have to have this broad and sweeping legislation. As a consequence we have legislation which in my view is likely to get struck down when it gets into the courts because of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

• (1150)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it dealts with security risks. And now I am looking for the section of the report . . . because in this section, it is clear that . . . here it is: "The Committee is also concerned that much of the security intelligence that would underlie the exclusion decision might be unreliable and possibly even fabricated because it would originate in the country of the person's origin and might be designed to discredit dissidents . . . "

If a member of an organization seeking to promote democracy and social changes in Zaire came to Canada seeking refugee status, would the Government of dictator Mobutu say that this person is not a security risk? Quite the contrary, it would say that this person is indeed a security risk and should not be accepted in Canada. This is the situation with which we will end up if Bill C-84 is adopted.

"Witnesses argued that sometimes this kind of "evidence" actually helps to prove the person is a bona fide refugee." The fact that Mobutu has designated a person as a security risk in his country clearly demonstrates that he or she is a threat to the security of that country for trying to establish a democracy, a democractic process, the creation of a new political party through means different from those of the army.

Mr. Speaker, as some of my colleagues have already asked, in the case of a Government such as that of South Africa, which uses all kinds of acts of violence against black Africans, is the Canadian Government saying that any refugee claimant who has not renounced to violence as a tool for the liberation of his own country would be a threat to Canadian security? In such a case, any member of the African National Congress, which is the only truly viable group representing black South Africans would in effect be viewed as unacceptable as a refugee in Canada since the ANC has not renounced to violence to the extent that the South African Government has not renounced to its own acts of violence against the Black population of South Africa.

Mr. Speaker, I quote again from the Committee report:

> The Chairman of the Refugee Status Advisory Committee (RSAC) also pointed out that some of the security grounds for exclusion are highly subjective and could exclude some surprising people:

This is also important, Mr. Speaker. I continue:

> When we talk about protecting our borders and protecting our citizens, I think most of us are thinking of terrorist attacks or of people who come here to commit acts of violence, criminal attacks against individuals or subversion against the state.
>
> However, this clause also includes a category of people in Canada who are working to—as the language says—"engage in or instigate the subversion by force of any government."

As I have just said, any Member of the African National Congress would be viewed as someone who engages in or instigates the subversion by force of a Government, in this case, the South African Government. Our own Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is now at the meeting of External Affairs Ministers of Commonwealth countries in Lusaka, South Africa, to find a way to change the opinions of his counterparts about a basic policy of the South African Government.

Mr. Speaker, during his Victoria Falls meeting with Mr. Kaunda and the other South African heads of state, who did not all appeal to violence, even the Prime Minister admitted that it is not up to us in Canada to make the decision, if only because we are not directly involved in that situation. Our Prime Minister said that if under the circumstances people are urged to resort to violence because there is no other way to throw out such an antidemocratic regime, then it is not up to us in Canada to render a favourable or unfavourable judgment.

However, Mr. Speaker, our immigration officials will indeed have to render that judgment.

The chairman of the advisory committee went on to say:

> That is a very subjective provision of the law. We are talking about people who have not been convicted of a crime and who are not necessarily terrorists.

We do not want terrorists in Canada, with that I agree.

But, Mr. Speaker, I can no longer agree when our Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) considers the possibility of Canada opening its doors to Nicaragua Contras, while at the same time his colleague the Minister of Immigration is intent on pushing through a piece of legislation which will put an end to refugee arrivals from Central America because such individuals just might threaten the security of the state which forced them to become refugees in the first place.

Since my time has expired, Mr. Speaker, I conclude by again telling the government: Think about your constitutional responsibilities. The Senate exists, and it now has a constitutional role. Fair enough, let us abolish the Senate. But for the time being it can still give sober second thought to various measures and bills. That being so, heed the sound advice from the Senate, take it and give us effective legislation which all Canadians can endorse, not extreme right measures.

The Acting Speaker (M. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine).

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I have a few questions I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). I think a note of caution is in order, because last week, the Hon. Member told Quebecers that if his Party were to form the Government, it would come down very harshly on the Maritimes. Apparently, his Leader did not appreciate that statement.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member first of all whether he had his Leader's permission to speak this morning. Was there an understanding on the amount of information he could give the House? I say that because we know he often speaks and afterwards has to be disciplined by the Socialist Leader.

I would like to ask him more specifically about Bill C-84 and whether he thinks Canada should continue to be considered internationally as a target for traders in phony refugees, for people who abuse the good faith of individuals in far-off countries and charge exorbitant fees for bringing them to Canada illegally. Does he support those people? That is what Bill C-84 is all about. He should have adressed this issue instead of talking up a storm and going around the world in 20 minutes.

I also want to ask him how he can reconcile the position taken by his Leader, who last week was ready to crucify Mr. Mahmoud Mahommad. He wanted to put him out of the country immediately, but for the last six days, he has been part of the Liberal-Socialist coalition. I think he should ask his Leader and perhaps the Leader of the Liberal Party as well what he should do. Why does he want to crucify this terrorist or put him out of the country when at the same time he refuses to approve a Bill that would help us deal quickly with such cases?

In concluding, he referred to the Senate. Mr. Speaker, this Party has been against the Senate from the very beginning. However, when it suits them, for political purposes or out of solidarity with the Liberal Caucus because a coalition is in the offing, they support the Senate.

What is so genuine, so transparent, so clear about their position? That is my question, Mr. Speaker, and I hope some day they will understand they should stop wasting the time of the House—today is day six—and taxpayers' money to repeat over and over again what the coalition and its members have been saying and give us a world tour.

I wish you would remember your constituencies are in Canada and not all over the world. So start representing those constituencies and stop going around the world ten times in twenty minutes.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased the Hon. Member rose. I further noted he did nothing to calm his constituents. In fact, the Hon. Member unfortunately is leaving the House, Mr. Speaker. But I am referring to the fact that he made great promises to his constituents over the last six or eight months, and indeed he completely forgot those promises.

Promises also were made by the Minister responsible for the area as far as shipbuilding is concerned. And they did unfortunately try to convince the people everything was normal, altough it was not. I personally made an error. I was corrected by my Leader who stated that, and I accept it, we would not reopen a contract that was awarded, such as the contract ... even though we criticize from time to time the manner in which decisions are made.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to refer to the matter of Mr. Mohammad. This is someone who had been living in Spain for a number of years and clearly it was indicated on the refugee's passport. And there were a lot of errors made under the Conservatives, which allowed that individual to enter. So it is our role as an Opposition Party to criticize. We did this vigorously. This Government's mismanagement is not only a matter of the Immigration official in Spain making a mistake—the Government must assume their political responsibilities for having allowed the situation to arise.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking me if I accept that Canada should be a destination for bogus refugees? The answer is no. And I know for a fact the amendment to clause 9 of the Bill as proposed by the Senate, which is now before us, states in fact that:

"Every person who knowingly organizes a person or a group of persons to make a manifestly unfounded or fraudulent refugee claim is guilty of an offence and liable ..."

So there we have it, Mr. Speaker. It is clear that under the Senate amendments, if someone organizes a plane load of peasants from Portugal or citizens from another country such as Brazil to come to Canada, stating they are Jehovah's Witnesses or something else in order to claim refugee status, it is clearly unacceptable that the persons, the group of persons that organized that be guilty of an offence and liable to a penalty. So there is no problem with that, Mr. Speaker. But at the same time, let us hear the matter of the 36 witnesses who opposed the Bill before the Senate Committee because it is going much too far.

• (1200)

[English]

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member indicated in his comments that he was in support of all Senate proposals in connection with Bill C-84. One of those Senate proposals, proposal No. 4, would allow terrorists, spies, and subversives to make a refugee claim.

Article 33 of the United Nations Convention provides, if there are reasonable grounds for regarding a refugee claimant as a danger to the security of the country in which he is, for the removal of this type of individual from Canada even if he were determined to be a convention refugee. The proposal of the Senate in that respect has been rejected by the Government, but the Liberal Opposition has moved an amendment to reinstate it.

Is the Hon. Member personally in support of the amendment? Will he vote for it? Is that also the position of his Party?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, this is a difficult question. We will oppose the amendment coming from the Liberal critic. On the general question I cannot say that I have been as heavily involved with it as the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). However, certainly the testimony from the spokesperson of the UN High Commission for Refugees indicated that in fact the way the Government was proceeding was in violation, as I understand it, of the way the UN procedure was anticipated.

I do not want to take it further than that, but I believe that is the case.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Having looked around, I do not know if there is a quorum in the House of Commons. There may be.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe there is a quorum. Does the Hon. Member have a further question or comment?

Mr. Riis: Yes, I have a question. Indeed there is a quorum now that people have regrouped. My question—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired. Questions and comments are now terminated. On debate, the Hon. Member for Yukon.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to speak on this Bill; I have not spoken on it before. I feel that it is an extremely important Bill. Certainly in my riding of Yukon we have a number of refugees who have made a significant contribution to the community and to the territory as a whole. They are certainly well respected by the other people in the community and territory.

It was interesting for me during the break to have the opportunity to travel to a number of communities in my riding and to speak with students in January when the schools were reopened. This issue was raised by many students. They were very confused about what were immigrants and what were refugees. I guess they reflected the gambit of opinion which one often sees throughout Canada.

I am pleased to speak to the matter today because it is an area which is still somewhat confusing to many people in Canada. I am also pleased to support many of the Senate amendments. Like many of my colleagues, I do so with some difficulty since I have some problem with the authority of that body. However, in this particular case the Senate has listened to the comments from across Canada. It has heard many of the same people who were heard by the legislative committee, and it has responded in a very reasoned way by proposing a number of quite useful amendments.

The issue is not really one of taking too much time for debate; it is an extremely serious issue in Canada. We see that in the general public on the one hand there are remarks which seem to reflect an attitude that somehow Canada is being taken advantage of, that somehow someone is doing something to us over which we do not have control, and that we must have better control. I think other groups of people who have worked with refugees, have assisted refugees, and have travelled abroad, more clearly understand the very pathos and tragedy of people who become refugees. We see a debate which sometimes does not just dwell on the facts of the case but on the impressions of people.

The impression of one group that the refugees about whom we are talking are somehow taking advantage of us in Canada and are misrepresenting themselves is perhaps true in some cases. Certainly it does not describe, by far, the majority of refugees. Therefore, my Party and I say that there must be some improved ways to ensure that people who come to Canada presenting themselves as refugees are truly in need of protection.

On the other hand Canada cannot abrogate its role and its well deserved reputation for responding in a humanitarian way to the needs of those who are in situations in their own countries which put their lives, their families, and their well-being in jeopardy.

A further point which the Senate amendments have addressed is that of the constitutionality of Bill C-84. When we hear Members speak of the high cost of this debate, taking up taxpayers' funds, we have to see if we can bring some reason into this debate for the Government to support some of the reasoned amendments which will save taxpayers' money, otherwise there will be many charter challenges and a lot of money will be spent in the courts.

• (1210)

I would like to return to the issue that I addressed early. There is great confusion between what is an immigrant and what is a refugee, and why a refugee and an immigrant come to this country. Many witnesses at committee hearings and many commentators have pointed out that because of the many problems in our immigration system this has led to a backlog of people awaiting entry to Canada. Our inability to deal with that backlog has exacerbated the problem of access to this country by legitimate refugees. People who, in other circumstances, would be immigrants as opposed to refugees, are representing themselves as refugees. This is a serious problem that needs to be addressed. The Government felt it was so serious that it recalled Parliament on an emergency basis to deal with it.

The issue is fundamental; the two systems are not working well together, namely, our immigration system and the rules relating to refugees. I want to say a few words about what it means to be a refugee. For those of us who have been fortunate to have lived in Canada all our lives and have not been faced with threats to our lives or well-being because of our views, it is often very difficult to imagine what it would be like if that were not the case. That is why we have so much public debate on the issue. Most of us who have lived in security find this difficult to understand.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Bill really deals with the whole business of fraud in refugee transactions. The Member, no doubt, has some valid points of view on refugees and what it is like to be a refugee, but would it be too much to ask that she confine her remarks to the principles of this Bill, namely, how Canada will deal with fraud artists and how we keep out people who are undesirable.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe the Hon. Member will be coming to that point. I thank the Hon.

Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen) for bringing that to my attention. The Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) has the floor.

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, I quite understand what the Bill is about and we are trying to deal with those people who are misrepresenting themselves as refugees. I am attempting to say, perhaps not articulately enough for the Member across the floor, that often there is a misunderstanding about what a refugee is and what a refugee can do. I think this Bill reflects some of that misunderstanding.

For example, to suggest that a refugee can go to a country's local immigration office, receive all the proper documentation then leave that country with the blessing of the officials and blithely come here to present the proper documentation, is incorrect. If that were the case, we would not be discussing the question of fraud and misrepresentation. Refugees do not have that option. They are often in a situation, as the Member well knows, where their lives are in danger if they speak out and they cannot go to the local office, get all the proper documentation and blithely leave their country. If we limit access to those seeking asylum to those travelling by airlines, legislating that the airlines must require and control documentation; if we insist on proper forms of visas and transit visas, and forcibly return people from border points, the only right that people would have would be to stay in their countries, be tortured, detained or killed. That is what we are talking about.

To counteract that, we are suggesting that every person who comes here has the right to be heard as to the legitimacy of whether or not that individual is a refugee. We are not suggesting that every person who says he or she is a refugee should automatically be accepted on that word. But we have to accept the reality that a person may not be able to get the kind of documentation this Bill suggests should be obtained. That is not an appropriate or realistic, but rather a punitive and unrealistic form of control.

What is being suggested by the amendments and by my Party is that we should have a process in place where a person can state his or her case in a full hearing about whether or not that person is a refugee. It is at that point that those who may misrepresent themselves will be identified and not accepted as refugees.

I want to say again that we cannot categorize all people as misrepresenting themselves in order to ensure that the few people who do will not be accepted. There is a compromise position presented in these amendments. It is a position which I believe, and which many others believe, will address the problem and ensure that we carry out our humanitarian obligations, not contravening the very constitutional base of this country. We must also make sure that we do not allow in people who are not genuine refugees, who can apply through the other immigration process.

I feel very strongly that we must as a country keep our deserved humanitarian reputation, while at the same time we must have appropriate systems and mechanisms in place to ensure fairness for immigrants and refugees. I believe these amendments would go a long way toward addressing that.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member in her comments indicated that she and her Party are supporting the amendments from the Senate on the basis that they would be helpful to genuine refugees.

As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, one of those amendments being put forward by the Senate would allow terrorists, spies and subversives to make a claim for refugee status in this country, even though Article 33 of the U.N. convention indicates quite clearly that where there are reasonable grounds for believing anyone making a refugee claim can be regarded as a danger to the security of Canada or any other country, such person can be excluded from the system. It is quite obvious that the Hon. Member by joining in the filibuster of the New Democratic Party is in this case in support of that position of allowing terrorist, spies and subversives to make refugee claims.

Does the Hon. Member seriously support that position? Will she be voting for that portion of the Senate's proposals, recommendations and amendments? Will the New Democratic Party be voting for that portion of the Senate's proposals, amendments and recommendations?

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. colleague's comments illustrate the level of debate that sometimes occurs and why the public wonders what we do here. Of course no one is supporting terrorists and spies coming into the country. We are saying that everyone deserves a fair hearing. Everyone deserves an opportunity to present his or her case and not be prejudged. Certainly a person should be deported if a person's status as a legitimate refugee, as we understand it, is not accepted. To frame the argument in terms of supporting terrorists and spies is clearly a factious argument. It is not being supported by anyone, as the Hon. Member, I am sure, well knows.

• (1220)

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, in her response to my question the Hon. Member did not indicate whether she and her Party would be supporting this particular Senate amendment. She made it quite clear that she feels the thrust of all these amendments would be for the better. She also indicated she and her Party do not support terrorists staying in this country.

I would like a clear answer, yes or no, on whether she and her Party are going to be supporting amendment No. 4 put forward by the Senate?

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, I would just reiterate what I said. If the Hon. Member is asking about the subamendment—

Mr. Redway: No, I am asking about the original proposals from the Senate which have been rejected, and you indicated you are supporting all of them.

Ms. McLaughlin: I did not indicate that.

Mr. Redway: Then let us make it clear.

Ms. McLaughlin: I think what I said is clear. I said we support many of the amendments brought forward by the Senate.

Mr. Redway: Which ones?

Ms. McLaughlin: The Hon. Member had a chance to ask a question.

There are a number of amendments that we support. To make it clear for the Hon. Member, we support amendments 2 and 3 to restore the right of a person accused of being a security risk to hear the case against him or her, as I said before. It is important that those persons be given a full hearing and have the opportunity to present their case before an appropriate committee. It is important that there be no prejudging of what may or may not be done. We are suggesting that the people who hear that person will be the judges of whether national security is in danger, or the safety of persons is endangered.

I believe the Hon. Member is trying to frame this in an inflammatory way. What we are simply trying to support is the right to claim refugee status. Amendment No. 4 that he speaks to restores the right of a person accused of being a security risk to have his refugee claim determined. Simply put, that person has the right to present their case to the persons who judge that case and determine whether that person is or is not a refugee. Surely this is a right anyone should have, to present their own case and not have it framed by someone else. This right of claim to refugee status follows our own Constitution and Charter of Rights which apply to any person in this country. This would maintain Canada's obligation under the UN Convention on the Status of Refugees and enable the person concerned, if deported, to have UN assistance in finding a safe country other than the one they fled.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, having heard all of the debates this morning and I think most of the critical clauses referring to the amendment have been covered. I just want to say on behalf of my Party that we are prepared to vote at any moment. As soon as the Conservatives are ready, we are.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is the sixth day of a filibuster on the Senate amendments. Certainly the Government is ready to vote on the amendment, but I would like some clarity from my hon. friend. Does the same willingness exist, without further debate, to deal with the two technical amendments put forward by the Government as well as the main motion, or are we just simply talking about voting on the amendment moved by the Liberal Party Member?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Maybe if I just put the question we will find out what happens. How would that be?

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the motion of Mr. Marchi.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Marchi) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 307)

YEAS

Members

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Allmand | Garneau | Nicholson |
| Baker | Gauthier | (Trinity) |
| Boudria | Gray | Nunziata |
| Caccia | (Windsor West) | Penner |
| Copps | Guilbault | Pépin |
| de Corneille | (Saint-Jacques) | Prud'homme |
| Dingwall | Henderson | Robichaud |
| Finestone | Isabelle | Tobin—27 |
| Foster | Kaplan | |
| Frith | Lapierre | |
| Gagliano | Malépart | |

NAYS

Members

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Althouse | Blackburn | Blouin |
| Andre | (Brant) | Bouchard |
| Angus | Blackburn | Bourgault |
| Belsher | (Jonquière) | Boyer |
| Bernier | Blaikie | Bradley |
| Binns | Blais | Brightwell |
| | Blenkarn | Broadbent |

Browes
Caldwell
Cassidy
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Clinch
Cochrane
Cooper
Cossitt
Crofton
Crombie
Crouse
Darling
Daubney
Della Noce
Desjardins
Desrosiers
Dewar
Duplessis
Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Friesen
Gagnon
Gérin
Girard
Gormley
Gottselig
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Halliday
Hamilton
Hardey
Harris
Hawkes
Heap
Hicks
Hockin
Holtmann
Hovdebo
Howie
Hudon
James
Jardine
Jelinek
Jepson
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Kempling
Ladouceur
Landry
Langdon
Lanthier
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
MacDougall
(Timiskaming)
MacKay
Malone
Marin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCrossan
McCuish
McCurdy
McDermid
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
McDougall
(St. Paul's)
McKinnon
McKnight
McLaughlin
Minaker
Mitchell
Mitges
Murphy
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Nystrom
Oberle
O'Neil
Oostrom
Orlikow
Parry
Pennock
Peterson
Pietz
Plamondon
Porter
Price
Redway
Reid
Riis
Robinson
St-Julien
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Schellenberger
(Wetaskiwin)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scowen
Stackhouse
Stewart
Tardif
(Charlesbourg)
Taylor
Thacker
Towers
Tremblay
(Québec-Est)
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vézina
Vincent
Waddell
Weiner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Wilson
(Etobicoke Centre)
Winegard
Witer—143

• (1300)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the amendment lost.

Is the House ready for the next question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being after 1 p.m., I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1.06 p.m. the House took recess.

---

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

S. O. 21

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[Translation]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

MONTREAL POPULATION'S EXPECTATIONS—GOVERNMENT PERFORMANCE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, Quebecers, Montrealers are really disappointed in the Prime Minister of Canada. They expected him to unveil programs to promote the economic renewal of Montreal East. We expected him to announce, when he was in Montreal, that in co-operation with the provincial Government he would inject $25 million to establish a business modernization and restructuring office, that he would commit considerable amounts of money toward training programs, the employability of Montreal East workers and the eligibility under the Program for Older Worker Adjustment.

We also expected the Prime Minister of Canada to select Montreal as the site of the Space Agency, to offer a $130 million expansion of the old harbour and money for the development of the Montreal harbour, but the people of Quebec also expected the Prime Minister to announce redress for the Lauzon, Sorel and Montreal shipyards that have been unjustly treated.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, all the Prime Minister did when he came to Montreal, to City Hall and the Chamber of commerce was clown about. Nothing concrete was announced for the people of Montreal and Quebec.

* * *

[English]

IMMIGRATION

BILL C-84—TIME SPENT ON DEBATE

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, this is an historical day in the House of Commons. We are now in the sixth day of a Liberal/NDP coalition filibuster on Bill C-84, a Bill which is extremely important to Canada's future. This Bill is aimed at preventing the abuse of Canada's generosity and humanitarianism by getting control of our borders. The measures in this Bill are aimed at those who jeopardize the safety of legitimate refugees and imperil the security of Canadian citizens.

This filibuster is costing Canadians almost half a million dollars per day. Is this the style of low-handed dealings that Canadians could expect if we were ever unfortunate enough to experience a coalition of those two Parties? Rather than continuing to stall a Bill which is supported by the majority of Canadians, those two Parties should let Parliament get on with the business of passing Bills for the betterment of our citizens.

It is time that we asked the Canadian people if they want an opportunistic coalition or a common-sense Government. Let's call an election!

* * *

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the United Nations has proclaimed 1988 the year of CBC bashing, but this Conservative Government certainly has. The onslaught began last week when the Communications Minister succumbed to the petty and vindictive whinings of many of her caucus colleagues and put on hold indefinitely a CBC all-news channel. Conservatives believe that if you control the messenger you can control the message. The Minister's decision was a blatant, thinly veiled effort to muzzle the CBC.

Today we learn of yet another attack on the corporation. Now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Secretary of State are getting into the act. They are working with real estate friends in Toronto to scuttle plans for a much needed national broadcast centre. Public broadcasting is under attack, and this foolhardy Conservative Government is leading the charge. It must be stopped. Let's have an election!

* * *

IMMIGRATION

BILL C-84—TIME SPENT ON DEBATE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Government was elected with a large majority by the people of Canada to govern the country, and the Opposition and the Senate are thwarting the will of the people.

For weeks the Liberals and the NDP coalition, along with their friends in the Senate, have stalled the passing of immigration laws desired by the majority of Canadians. These bleeding hearts want every boatload of illegal so-called refugees, and every person who tears up their papers arriving at our airports, accorded the same treatment set out for true refugees, even if they are deemed to be terrorists and security risks. "Don't turn the boats back, let them land", the Senate and the Liberal-socialist coalition cry.

For several weeks the stalling of legislation has been going on and already it has cost the Canadian people more than $3 million. The Senate and the Liberals and the NDP talk democracy but act like totalitarians. Let's call an election and get rid of these obstructionists, these bleeding hearts!

[Translation]

CANADA POST CORPORATIONS

LAVAL POSTAL EMPLOYEES—FUTURE OUTLOOK—NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO FURNISH INFORMATION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, last Friday the Minister responsible for Canada Post answered a question from my colleague from Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) concerning the closure of Laval's postal processing plant saying, I quote:

[English]

"I understand that Canada Post did brief Members of Parliament from that area with respect to its plans".

[Translation]

As briefings go, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that I first heard about the closure of Laval's postal processing plant in a telephone call from the mayor of Laval who wanted to know if I was aware of it. I also learned that the local Conservative Members had not been consulted either. Later my office got a phone call from Canada Post officials promising that I would be sent information and releases. Mr. Speaker, these documents reached me only late yesterday afternoon.

I want to take exception to the attitude of the Mulroney Government and the Minister responsible, disrespectful as they are of our representative duties as Members of the House. Laval happens to be the second largest city in Quebec. Astonishing though it may be, the Conservatives consider this city as a negligible factor, a city with over 300,000 residents which apparently does not even deserve to have a postal processing plant.

We have been told that the employees will be transferred to the Montreal downtown plant. But what will happen after that? Will they be included in the lay-offs announced in the rationalization plan to which my colleague from Saint-Léonard—Anjou referred last Friday in this House?

Mr. Speaker, the Laval postal employees have the right to know.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

NEED FOR MINISTERIAL POWER TO EXPEL SHIPS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Senate is seeking to deprive the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) of his authority to turn around ships which have been chartered by racketeers to bring people to Canada.

It has been argued that the best deterrent would be to bring the ships into port and confiscate them. The Minister does not share this view. He feels that it would be only a hay rake attempt which would allow many more groups of people to enter Canada illegally.

By maintaining his power to turn ships around, even if he exercised this power on rare occasions, we would take away from the racketeers who organize illegal trips their main argument of a guaranteed access to Canada.

If the people concerned start having serious misgivings about the success of the various schemes, they might be less tempted to pay the high prices demanded by the racketeers, and the attractiveness of these organized trips would no longer be so great.

Mr. Speaker, all Hon. Members of this House will have to unite to support the amendment moved by the Minister of Employment and Immigration to turn the ships around and stop these racketeers who are organizing illegal trips to Canada.

* * *

• (1405)

[English]

WILDLIFE

IMPORTANCE OF PORCUPINE CARIBOU HERD TO ABORIGINAL PEOPLE

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak today on the release of a publication entitled "The Caribou are our Life", which outlines the importance of the Porcupine caribou herd, one of America's most unique natural resources and essential to the subsistence activities of the aboriginal people of Alaska, the Yukon, and Northwest Territories.

Today this booklet is being distributed to all Members of Parliament. I am happy to say that the Department of External Affairs has shared in the costs and supported the voices of the Yukon and Northwest Territories in speaking out against the opening of caribou calving grounds to oil and gas development.

What this means is that the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in Alaska must be protected from oil and gas development. We were alarmed when the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources appeared to support development in this area, a stance not previously taken by the Government.

However, clearly we now stand together in attempting to persuade the United States Government of the importance of the wise use of this land. Northerners are not opposed to development, but we know that we must respect our wilderness heritage and the aboriginal people who depend on it.

I call upon all Members of the House to support the pressure for the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

S. O. 21

IMMIGRATION

BILL C-84—TIME SPENT ON DEBATE

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, this minute has six days. Canadians have witnessed, for the first time in history, six days of phoney debate on Senate amendments to Bill C-84. The Conservative Government of Canada, by this Bill, will put an end to illegal and undesirable aliens from entering Canada.

Six days of stalling this Bill by a nonsensical filibuster could presently allow legal entry of terrorists into Canada. If another "Munich" occurs in Calgary or Toronto, it could very easily be blamed on the Opposition's irresponsible tactics in the House.

Higher drug prices would easily have been avoided by the new drug price review board, had the Opposition not used the same tactics when stalling Bill C-22.

If the Opposition plans to continue this filibuster in the House in such an irresponsible manner, perhaps it is time to call an election so that voters can throw them out and put mature people in their place.

* * *

POLITICAL PARTIES

AWARD OF FRIGATE CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT TO NEW BRUNSWICK SHIPYARD—POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, the NDP is having a great deal of difficulty deciding whether or not to support the awarding of the second batch of frigates to Saint John Shipbuilding Limited.

First it was the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Centre (Mr. Cassidy) stating in Quebec that his Party would reopen the contract and give Quebec half the frigates. Then the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) stated in the House that such decisions should be made after an open and honest tendering system regardless of where you live, for which I applauded him. That position was backed by his Leader who, later in the day, indicated that his Party would not re-open the contract. However, last Thursday, the NDP Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) was saying in the House:

• (1410)

> —I want to express my astonishment at the Government's decision—to award the second half dozen frigates entirely to the Saint John shipyards—
>
> It is particularly repugnant to Quebecers to see one particular enterprise, the Irving interests in Saint John receiving this very large contract to the detriment of the provincially owned Marine Industries—

It is time the New Democratic Party got its act together on this issue. The NDP is pitting region against region, similar to the way the Tories did with regard to the CF-18 decision. This attempt to sway the voters of the Province of Quebec is unacceptable. Such behaviour is not in the national interest.

S. O. 21

[Translation]

IMMIGRATION

BOGUS REFUGEES—POSITION OF ALLEGED LIBERAL-SOCIALIST COALITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the House has been faced for the past six days with a fillibuster from the Liberal-Socialist coalition which opposes our bill aimed at stopping illegal refugees.

Does the Liberal-Socialist coalition want Canada to continue to be considered as a privileged target country by all those involved in the illegal refugee trade throughout the world?

Does the Liberal-Socialist coalition continue to support these international smugglers?

Last week, the Socialist leader wanted the Government to crucify Terrorist Mahmoud Mohammad and send him away immediately; yet, together with his party, he still refuses to adopt the necessary legislation to settle quickly the case of this terrorist.

The Liberal-Socialist coalition should make up its mind quickly, unless it wants to receive a clear message from Canadians during a general election, Mr. Speaker!

* * *

HEALTH

NECESSITY FOR GOVERNMENT TO GIVE INFORMATION ON SUBJECT OF THERAPEUTIC ABORTIONS

Mrs. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, Canadian women are confused since last Thursday about the procedures to be followed to obtain a therapeutic abortion. Unfortunately, they cannot turn to the federal Government for guidance, because it has not yet responded to the decision delivered by the Supreme Court. On the other hand, the provinces interpret that decision quite differently.

It is essential, Mr. Speaker, that the Tory Government clearly indicate to Canadian women, physicians and provincial governments that Section 251 of the Criminal Code can no longer set the procedure through which therapeutic abortion services are made available.

After having done that, the Government could perhaps take up the real challenge underlying the entire matter. A broad range of health services should be made available to Canadian women. For that purpose, the federal Government should finance the search for safe and effective contraceptive methods as well as the educational programs of responsible organizations such as the Planned parenthood Federation.

[English]

IMMIGRATION

BILL C-84—TIME SPENT ON DEBATE

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, we have witnessed a record six-day filibuster in this House by the Liberal-Socialist coalition supporting the Liberal dominated Senate amendments to Bill C-84.

The Minister, in a spirit of co-operation and openness, has accepted several of the 18 Senate amendments. This unecessary filibuster has cost Canadians $3 million to date, all for the political advantage of the Socialist-Liberal coalition.

Let us stop this silliness and political grandstanding and let the democratically elected voice of Parliament get on with its job. Once again we are seeing the unelected Senate thwarting the will of the duly elected Members of Parliament from passing a progressive piece of legislation, very much needed for the protection of Canadians, and giving a fair process for all who would seek refuge in Canada.

* * *

EXTERNAL AID

ETHIOPIA—FOOD SHORTAGES—PLEA FOR CANADIAN DONATIONS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, there is an emergency in Ethiopia. Last November the Government of Ethiopia issued an urgent international appeal for 1.05 million tonnes of food. This appeal was subsequently increased to 1.3 million tonnes, virtually the same amount as during the 1984-85 famine which claimed the lives of approximately one million people.

Very few of us will forget the tragic scenes of starvation and death three years ago. Today, Ethiopia faces an equally urgent situation. Drought and locusts are now threatening the meagre existence of seven million Ethiopians. If we act quickly and decisively, lives can be saved. Government aid is significant but more can be done. Canadian farmers have been exceptionally generous but various fund-raising appeals to average Canadians have reported a poor response.

• (1415)

Do we as Canadians have to see the bloated bellies of children before we are jarred out of our complacency? I call upon our Government to provide more assistance, and at the same time urge all Canadians to help avert this famine by sending their donations to Oxfam Canada, the Canadian Red Cross, or Canadian Physicians for Aid and Relief.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

MASSE AFFAIR—PRIME MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as far as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is concerned, the Prime Minister maintains that he did not discuss Mr. Gorman's letter nor the matter generally with the Minister.

Yet, Mr. Gorman's letter states that the Minister has taken part in an offence under Section 62.6 of the Canada Elections Act.

How can the Prime Minister still maintain that he does not have the duty to ask the Minister whether the facts mentioned in the letter are true or not, especially as these facts affect the credibility of his Minister as a politician and a member of his Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already replied to this question. The Leader of the Official Opposition refers to a private letter apparently sent by the Commissioner to the Hon. Member for Frontenac. As for me, I referred to a public statement made on November 28, 1985, in which the Federal Elections Commissioner, Mr. Joseph Gorman, said, and I quote: "And I have decided that no charge would be laid against the Hon. Marcel Masse." Following this decision of the investigating Commissioner, I decided to have the Minister rejoin Cabinet.

There has already been some reference to the letter which the Leader of the Official Opposition himself described as ambiguous or remarkable. It is certainly unusual.

As for the official statement dealing with the findings of the investigating Commissioner, it was made public and I quoted it myself and acted accordingly.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister describes Mr. Gorman's letter as a private letter addressed to a Minister. Such a letter is never private and it concerns the public duties of the Minister.

[English]

KNOWLEDGE OF CONTENTS OF LETTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources resigned in 1985 he did so because there was suspicion that he might have violated the Canada Elections Act. At that time there were mixed signals about who knew what and when they knew it. As the Prime Minister himself has suggested, the Minister remains under suspicion as a result of Mr. Gorman's letter. The Prime Minister stated he did not know of the existence of this letter until he saw it in the press.

Can the Prime Minister assure this House that neither the Secretary to the Cabinet, Mr. Tellier, nor his own principal secretary, Bernard Roy, nor their staff, knew of the contents of this letter during the relevant period? If they were aware, why did they not tell him?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition says that the Hon. Minister remains under suspicion because of the ambiguous nature of the letter from Mr. Gorman. I think that is quite accurate. That is why the House has decided to take cognizance of this matter officially at 3.30 this afternoon. I am satisfied that at that time all appropriate questions can and will be asked and answered.

• (1420)

REQUEST THAT OFFICIALS APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the House has not yet taken a decision on the matter and the committee has not been seized of the matter. The Prime Minister says that it will be referred to the committee. We will wait until that happens.

However, as we have said to him before in this House, that does not absolve the Prime Minister of his duties as Prime Minister to ensure the probity, credibility, and comportment of his Ministers. That is his responsibility and no committee of the House can absolve him of that responsibility.

Since the Prime Minister has refused to deal with these questions on the floor of the House, will he authorize the Secretary to the Cabinet and his own principal secretary to appear before that committee when it sits?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the committee is master of its own destiny. The committee can take whatever decisions it deems appropriate.

My hon. friend refers to the Prime Minister being responsible for the probity and credibility of Members and said that what transpired does not absolve the Prime Minister. I am not seeking absolution. That which transpired was straightforward.

My hon. friend was advised of the fact that subpoenas might issue in regard to an investigation undertaken under the Elections Act. Immediately upon being apprised of that, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stepped aside in the finest traditions of British parliamentary practice.

During the two months that the investigation and interrogations went on, he was outside the Cabinet. There was then a public statement issued by the gentleman conducting the investigation that no charges pursuant to that investigation would be laid.

It seems to me, in terms of reasonableness and fairness, that surely the hon. gentleman, not being charged, is entitled to all the presumptions of innocence which exist for all the citizens of Canada.

[Translation]

MASSE AFFAIR—QUERY WHETHER MINISTER INTENDS TO GIVE HIS VERSION OF FACTS TO COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS, PRIVILEGES AND PROCEDURE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister said in the House yesterday that the Government supported the proposal for a parliamentary investigation on election expenses. He went even further and said the Government was prepared to co-operate with the investigation. I now want to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether he intends to take advantage of the committee hearings and come and state his opinion, his views and his version of the facts in this case.

Mr. Speaker: I think the question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and in that case it is out of order.

OPPORTUNITY FOR MINISTER TO PRESENT HIS POINT OF VIEW TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE—POSITION OF COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, in that case I would like to direct my question to the Chairman of the Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. I want to ask the Chairman of the Committee whether he is prepared to recommend that this afternoon, Committee members give the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources an opportunity to come and state his point of view before the Committee.

[English]

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it has been the practice in this House that negotiating of committee work is done in committee. The Member can certainly bring that information to the committee at 3.30 and we will be pleased to deal with it.

[Translation]

PRESENTATION OF REPORT TO HOUSE—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last Thursday I asked the Prime Minister about the contradiction, reported in an article in the Globe and Mail, between what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said two years ago and what his lawyer said at the time. The Prime Minister answered last Thursday that he intended to look at certain transcripts. He would then present a report to the House of Commons. My question is quite simple: Does the Prime Minister have this report today?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

• (1425)

[English]

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION—DISCHARGE OF RESPONSIBILITIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is more than a little disturbing. Since last Thursday the Prime Minister has not taken the time to examine a matter of serious contradiction that goes to the root of the integrity of one of his Ministers. Since then there was another article in the paper yesterday that alludes to an affidavit signed by a member of the RCMP, accusing the Minister of action that, if grounded, constitutes a violation of the Elections Act. When will the Prime Minister start doing the job for which he was elected as Prime Minister of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the NDP says that he is referring, in terms of the discussion between the lawyer and the Member, to a serious contradiction that goes to the root of the integrity of the Member. That is clearly the view of the Hon Member. That is not at all a fact. It is simply an opinion and surmise, such as many put forward by the Member, in much the same way as he says the affidavit to which he refers accuses the Minister of dishonesty—

Mr. Broadbent: I did not say that.

Mr. Mulroney: —or a violation of the law. It does no such thing.

It is my understanding that it is an affidavit that initiates proceedings pursuant to which an investigation took place, and the investigation by the investigating commissioner cleared the Member in terms of charges not being laid.

I just invite my hon. friend, inasmuch as he is dealing with the reputations of people, to give people the presumption of innocence and be very prudent and careful in any accusations he makes without any justification.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I will give the Prime Minister the benefit of the doubt that he did not hear the question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER EXAMINE ALLEGATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am quite serious. On both contentions about the Minister I did not presume guilt. I said if the contradiction—

Some Hon. Members: If!

Mr. Broadbent: —that was cited in The Globe and Mail turned out to be true, then the integrity of the Minister is on the line. I said if the allegation—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the New Democratic Party is stating that he has placed a question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. In restating it, that question seems to the Chair to be a hypothetical question and may well be out of order. However, perhaps the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party would want to phrase his question in such a way that there is no doubt that it can be accepted.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, all I wish is that the Prime Minister would not distort the meaning and substance of the question.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that it is not appropriate to impugn the motives of any Member. I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Broadbent: The contradictions that were alleged in the press a week ago impinge on the integrity of one of his Ministers and the Prime Minister promised to examine the transcripts and report back to the House. Considering that yesterday there was a report which says there is an affidavit signed by an RCMP corporal, the substance of which, if it turned out to be accurate, would mean the Minister in question violated the law, why is the Prime Minister not concerned about the integrity of his Government and examining these allegations and reporting to the House? That is the issue.

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, by raising the decibel tone it does not—

Mr. Broadbent: Deal with the truth just for once.

Mr. Mulroney: All right, my hon. friend has made a great hobby-horse of saying that he, and presumably he alone, stands for the truth. In his third question he indicates: "No, I didn't say that in my second question, I said if, if there is a contradiction".

I submit that I did not hear my hon. friend use the word "if" at all. He made a flat accusation against the Minister which proves that in the third question the Leader of the NDP was misleading the House. He was not using the subjective at all.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Let's check the "blues".

Mr. Mulroney: He was not using it, and start telling the truth in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISPATCH OF PARLIAMENTARY MISSION TO HAITI—CONDITIONS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): The Secretary of State for External Affairs being absent, Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to his Parliamentary Secretary. A week ago, the Minister announced in the House his willingness to send a mission of Canadian Parliamentarians to Haiti. Is the Parliamentary Secretary now in a position to confirm first, that such a mission of Canadian Parliamentarians would be welcome in Haiti, second, that its security will be assured, and above all that its members will be entirely free to meet the main leaders of the Comité d'entente démocratique?

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer this question. It is clear that, before its departure, the security of the mission will be assured. And as one of the conditions which I listed publicly at the time, the quality of the report will depend on the quality of the people we are able to meet. That is the reason why meetings will take place soon to try and identify, together with Committee members, the people we want to meet, in order to establish advance contact with them in Haiti. Mr. Speaker, everything possible will be done for the Committee to publish its report by March the 31st, in the best interest of all Canadians and the whole community which is watching us.

QUERY WHETHER ARRANGEMENTS MADE TO HOLD TRULY DEMOCRATIC ELECTIONS IN HAITI

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): In other words, Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary has just confirmed that there has been no contact with the Haitian authorities, with general Namphy, and that there is no certainty as to a visit of Parliamentarians.

I now ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether the Government of Canada, this Tory Government which has refused to recognize the elections of January the 17th, has since demanded from the general or the Haitian authorities to re-establish the former Conseil électoral provisoire to hold in Haiti a truly democratic election?

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my honourable friend is presuming much from the work of the Parliamentary Committee. I must advise him that yesterday, we established contacts with the Embassy over there in order to ensure that the Committee will work in the most serene climate.

As to drawing conclusions about the possible recommendation my honourable friend has in mind, we will have to operate within the Comittee and draw our own conclusions.

[English]

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON—REQUEST FOR PROTECTION BY FRENCH NAVY

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. We have a report today of a request from St. Pierre and Miquelon for the Government of France to send the French navy to protect the French in their overfishing off the south coast of Newfoundland. Has the Government warned France that such action would not be tolerated by this country and that it would be a serious act of belligerence in view of France's declared intention to violate Canadian fish quotas?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be a very serious error for Canada to react in the way the Hon. Member appears to react to reports of statements by local politicians from St. Pierre and Miquelon on the occasion of their visit to France. There is no indication that the sentiments expressed by Mr. Marc Plantegenest and Senator Pen are in any way indicative of the views of the Government of France.

I would conclude by indicating the Government's desire to see France return to the table so that an appropriate and lasting solution might be negotiated to the problems of the boundary of St. Pierre and Miquelon and the ongoing quotas accorded to France as a result therefrom.

REQUEST FOR INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION OF BOUNDARY DISPUTE

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the last time the same individual asked France to send a warship, which was in 1985, the French sent one and it was there for two months patrolling around St. Pierre and Miquelon.

Why does the Government not show some capacity to act and do something to tell the Government of France that its uncivilized attitude about this boundary dispute will not be tolerated, and that its good relations with this country will be spoiled if it does not do the civilized thing and bring the boundary dispute to international arbitration?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to uncivilized attitudes. I would suggest that the attitude he brings to this House will in no way enable us to reach in a civilized fashion a solution which will bring lasting benefits to the people of Newfoundland, the people he represents, and the fishermen in particular.

This Government has taken firm but fair and even-handed measures over the past year to attempt to secure a negotiated solution to this problem as we continue to seek such a solution while standing vigilant for the interests of our fishermen, and while ensuring that fishing conducted within Canadian waters is conducted according to our regulations.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON ONTARIO HORTICULTURAL INDUSTRY

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Government just released the Ontario Free Trade Agriculture Study in which it is claimed that free trade with the United States would not be in the interests of the farming communities, and in which special reference is made to the horticultural industry which is of great concern to my riding, the largest apple producing area in Ontario. Has the Minister had a chance to see this report? If he has, what is his reaction to such a statement?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question and his interest in this subject. I must indicate that I have not had an opportunity to read the report or to study it in detail. However, I have been advised that the Ontario report is a report about which one should not be all that surprised, coming from the Province of Ontario which has always looked negatively upon the Canada-U.S. trade agreement.

Indeed, I am advised that the Ontario report is an overreaction and is extremely negative. It is filled with gloom and doom, and indeed is outdated. We of course will be issuing a report ourselves. It will be up to date, it will be realistic and, naturally, it will reflect the very positive aspects the trade agreement carries to agriculture.

I think what is important is what farmers are saying about the trade agreement. One hundred thousand grain farmers are supportive of the agreement, 80,000 beef farmers are supportive of the agreement, and 60,000 hog farmers are supportive of the agreement. It is important to find out what the producer groups are saying. The bottom line is that they accept this agreement and look upon it very positively.

* * *

[Translation]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

OLDER WORKERS—ENTITLEMENT TO BENEFITS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

In 1987, the Unemployment Insurance Commission recorded a surplus of $1.5 billion, and the Department expects to have a surplus of almost $2 billion in 1988.

The Minister knows perfectly well that a large part of these surpluses is the result of a legislation that discriminates against older workers. In 1986, 42,000 older workers lost the equivalent of $260 million.

Considering the surplus situation, is the Minister willing to eliminate this discriminatory practice by reinstating the right of older workers to receive full unemployment insurance benefits when they are looking for work?

[English]

Will the Minister tell the senior workers of Canada why they cannot benefit from unemployment insurance when they are looking for new jobs?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the purpose of Bill C-50 was quite clear: to prohibit the drawing of unemployment insurance benefits when an individual is simultaneously drawing income from a pension fund. I feel the Government's position has been very clear in this respect, and I do not think it would be either useful or necessary to change the legislation again, since it is eminently fair and meets the objectives we were trying to achieve in adopting Bill C-50.

POSSIBILITY OF AMENDING ACT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, older workers in Canada who heard the Minister's reply must be disappointed.

Two weeks ago, 450 workers were laid off at Vickers, 200 at Hygrade, another 200 at Canadian Steel Wheel and CIP, and 1,000 at Firestone. Plants are closing throughout the country. Two hundred workers were laid off this morning at Weston. Fifty per cent are older workers, who are not entitled to full unemployment insurance benefits while they are looking for work.

Considering the principles of social justice, could the Minister inform the House whether he would at least amend the legislation so that all older workers who lose their jobs as a result of a plant shutdown or lay-offs would be entitled to full unemployment insurance benefits? It is not their fault if they lose their jobs. This is not early retirement. The plant has closed down. Does the Minister have enough compassion to help these people?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member does not understand the principle of unemployment insurance. In his enumeration of a number of lay-offs—just the same, we have a surplus of $1.5 billion—the Hon. Member demonstrated the difference between the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party. Under the Liberal Government, people received unemployment insurance benefits and did not enter the labour market. Under this Government, we have one million jobs and 220,000 more people on the labour market and several hundred thousand fewer people unemployed. That is the difference between the two Governments.

• (1440)

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—OCCUPIED TERRITORIES—PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL PEACE CONFERENCE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. There have been two more deaths in Israeli-occupied territory and the violence continues to escalate. The situation cries out for a long-term solution. I understand that the Prime Minister has indicated his sympathy for an international peace conference on the Middle East.

My question to the Prime Minister is as follows. Is the Prime Minister willing to use his good offices to expedite the holding of such a peace conference on the Middle East?

Hon. Pat Carney (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicated to the House on January 22 that the Government is willing to explore ways in which Canada might contribute to some kind of solution acceptable to all parties. The forthcoming visits to the region by the seven members of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade will have that purpose in mind. I believe that will respond to the concern expressed by the Hon. Member.

MEASURES TO EXPEDITE HOLDING CONFERENCE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister indicate to the House what additional steps have been taken and what additional consultations have been entered into for the purpose of expediting, as I described it earlier, the holding of an international peace conference on the Middle East?

Hon. Pat Carney (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I point out to the Hon. Member that we already participate in the region through our peace-keeping forces and through development assistance. So we are already contributing to a climate conducive to peaceful negotiations. That is the type of role that Canada has played in the past and is willing to play in the future.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

GRANTING OF PARENTAL LEAVE TO FATHERS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Almost three years ago the all-Party committee on equality determined that it was sexist and discriminatory to have parental leave provisions accessible only to a mother and not to a father. Yesterday in the House we saw the Minister try to dodge the issue of parental leave by suggesting that it was a single-issue situation that he had to study.

Can the Minister explain why he has failed miserably in his responsibilities as the Minister of Employment? Why did he not remove the discriminatory conditions attached to parental leave when the suggestion came from the all-Party committee?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am not used to waiting for the Hon. Member for Hamilton East to make a decision. She will see today that that is true.

I met Mr. McInnis yesterday. It was a very good meeting. I said yesterday that all the questions referring to parental rights and the Charter of Rights have to be dealt with very carefully. It is my intention to bring to the House some amendments to the legislation to deal with that. I said, and I repeat, it is a very delicate operation.

In the meantime, I looked very carefully at the case of Mr. McInnis. I am delighted to tell all my colleagues here today, and I hope that I will have the collaboration of Members on the other side of the House, that I will soon introduce some amendments to the legislation which will permit Mr. McInnis, and any other person in similar circumstances, to obtain the money he deserves to have.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Hon. Member will agree with me that it is a complex issue. When we had to deal with the issue we dealt with it quickly. We only had the first question yesterday.

AMENDING LEGISLATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact yesterday was not the first time that there was a question on the issue. As a matter of fact I introduced and put into motion a Private Member's Bill. As a matter of fact my Party, when the committee on equality was travelling across the country, made such a recommendation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: Your Party did nothing.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member for Hamilton East please put her question?

Ms. Copps: I think it is terrific that in fact a truck driver who came to Parliament was able to effect that kind of a change. I think that we should all congratulate Mr. McInnis, specifically when we are dealing with a situation in which a woman dies in childbirth.

I would like to ask the Minister whether at the same time he will commit to change a law that is discriminatory by its very nature. It does not take a woman dying in childbirth to permit both parents to participate in the process of nurturing a child. Is the Minister prepared to move an amendment similar to the Private Member's Bill which I have already drafted which would permit either parent to take advantage of parental—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Speaker: In rising to restore order I may have cut off the last part of the Hon. Member's question which, to the Chair certainly seemed to be a serious one. I invite the Minister to reply.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is very interesting to be lectured by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. I would be very happy if, as the New Democratic Party did yesterday, she would offer the collaboration of her Party to go through the legislation quickly.

Ms. Copps: Absolutely.

Mr. Bouchard: It is interesting to note that that Party, which was in power for 20 years, did nothing when there were fathers who needed money 20 years ago and 10 years ago.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who will be well aware that the economy of Metro Toronto is booming but outside Metro Toronto the economy is anything but booming.

An Hon. Member: Ask about Oshawa.

Mr. Riis: He will also know that on March 16 the Prime Minister said that we are in the process of building two Canadas, one which is rich and promising, and one which is underdeveloped and underemployed.

Knowing that a drop in interest rates would reap a considerable amount of benefits in the regions of the country will the Minister explain why he is following the advice of the central banker who is concerned about inflation and who says that he cannot reduce those interest rates? Why does the Minister of Finance not step in to take steps to reduce those interest rates to bring some prosperity to the regions of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member must acknowledge the fact that last year the unemployment rate dropped in each and every province of the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1450)

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): While there are parts of the country where the unemployment rate is too high, we have seen a good deal of progress, and that is witnessed by the over-all creation of jobs, in excess of 1.1 million since we have been in office, so we are making good progress. The Hon. Member also has to acknowledge that the over-all record is what is important here. The over-all record of the economic policy of the Government has been a good one.

The point that I would make to the Hon. Member is that regional development is a fiscal measure. It is not a monetary measure. This Government has introduced a number of initiatives in regional development policy, for example, the Western Diversification Initiative, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, and in northern Ontario. We are in the process of consulting the Province of Quebec. We have maintained the regional investment tax credits. There have been many other initiatives that we have taken to address the very point that he is talking about.

UNEMPLOYMENT STATISTICS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind the Minister of Finance that the latest unemployment figures from Statistics Canada tell us that unemployment has increased in Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, British Columbia, Quebec, Saskatchewan, and Alberta. That is the reality in the regions of the country. The situation is getting worse in 1988. That is why I repeat my question to the Minister of Finance.

Why is it that he refuses to take a major step, have interest rates reduced, in order that some of the prosperity that we see in Metropolitan Toronto can be experienced in the regions of the country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is very easy to use selective statistics. I want to go through not just month over month statistics, which is what the Hon. Member has just used, and look at what has happened since September, 1984.

In Newfoundland the unemployment rate is down 5.8 percentage points; in Nova Scotia, 2.8 per cent; Prince Edward Island, .5 per cent; New Brunswick, 3.7 per cent; Quebec, 3.2 per cent; Ontario, 4.1 per cent; Manitoba, 1.9 per cent; Saskatchewan, 1.5 per cent; Alberta, 3.4 per cent; and in British Columbia, the Hon. Member's own province, 4.6 per cent. That is progress.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MINISTER OF LABOUR OF DENMARK

Mr. Speaker: I wish to bring to the attention of Hon. Members the presence in the gallery of Mr. Henning Dyremose, Minister of Labour of Denmark.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

ENERGY

LOW SULPHUR WESTERN COAL—PROPOSED USE BY ONTARIO HYDRO

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Deputy Prime Minister heads an action committee aimed at increasing the use of low sulphur western coal in eastern Canada.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister advise the House what progress, if any, the action committee has made in convincing Ontario Hydro, which is the greatest source of acid rain in Ontario, and the owner of Ontario Hydro, the Ontario Government itself, to reduce their acid rain emissions by increasing the use of low sulphur Canadian western coal rather than using the American coal with the high sulphur content that Ontario Hydro is presently using?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to respond to that intelligent and thoughtful question. Considerable progress has been made. As the Hon. Member has indicated, there is an action force composed of myself, the Premiers of Ontario, British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan, and a secretariat has been formed to look at ways and means in which we might be able to bring western coal into Ontario at a reduced price.

The result of the secretariat's report is that there is a recommendation for some $10 million to $15 million in research and development activities, plus $70 million to $80 million worth of pilot projects which we could undertake to bring down the cost of coal thereby making it more competitive with the supply from the United States.

The Province of Ontario has indicated its willingness to comply with the reduced emission standards, bearing in mind that there would have to be some changes made in the furnaces and in the burning process, and all of these things are very actively under consideration.

Oral Questions

PUBLIC WORKS

CONTRACT RECIPIENTS—ALLEGED APPROACH BY CONSERVATIVE PARTY FUND RAISERS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, and it concerns yet another report in the media of questionable fund raising by Conservative organizers aimed at Public Works contract recipients.

In an article dated December 7, 1987, in the Edmonton Sun, one contract recipient stated about these fund raising efforts, "The letters were not too subtle in suggesting that because I had received a government contract I should be contributing to the federal Conservative Party".

An Hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I am having some difficulty understanding how that question is in order. It is clearly not something for which the Ministry is responsible. Perhaps the Hon. Member could rephrase his question.

Mr. Boudria: Did the Minister of Public Works inform the Prime Minister of these serious allegations, as he should have? What concrete measures does the Prime Minister intend to take to end this kind of intimidating practice?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I thought it would have been appropriate for the Hon. Member to give notice of this particular question. It is very narrow. I know nothing of it. But I will give my undertaking to report back to him.

REQUEST FOR RCMP INVESTIGATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): My supplementary question is directed to the Solicitor General. Given that in the past the RCMP have investigated similar situations, will the RCMP launch an investigation into these very serious charges that go right to the integrity of this Government once more?

Mr. Speaker: I am having considerable trouble accepting that as being a question which is in order.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway.

* * *

FISHERIES

CAPSIZED OIL BARGE IN ROSARIO STRAIT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries, who must be aware that there has been an oil spill from a capsized barge in Rosario Strait just south of British Columbia.

Is the Minister in a position to tell the House what action, if any, the Government of Canada has taken with respect to this serious spill?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, indeed there has been a sinking of an American owned barge carrying Bunker C fuel, some 12 compartments, and I believe 1.6 million litres of heavy Bunker C oil. This occurred some 50 kilometres east of Victoria, well south of the Canadian boundary.

The Canadian Coast Guard, Fisheries, and Department of the Environment people have been in contact with their U.S. counterparts. The salvage operation is under way.

I can indicate to the Hon. Member that the Environment Canada oil spill tracing model has been applied, and it has determined that any leakage from this barge would not enter Canadian waters nor pose any problem at this time to our Canadian fisheries resource.

POSSIBLE EFFECT ON FISHERY—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Would the Minister not agree that even if the oil does not reach the Fraser River that it could get into the food chain, and therefore affect Canadians through fish and shellfish?

Could the Minister indicate to the House what, if anything, the Government is doing with the support of the American Government to stop these types of spills in the future?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member might know that there is a joint Canada-U.S. marine pollution contingency plan involving appropriate agencies of both Governments to deal with any sinking of this type.

I repeat that the sunken barge is located well within U.S. territorial waters. We are working closely with U.S. officials to see that this barge is raised as quickly as possible. The salvage team is on site. At the present time there is no evidence of any potential risk to Canadian fisheries resources. All but one of the compartments on this barge are sealed and the contents are not being released into the environment.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question in Question Period. A single question from the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent.

* * *

[Translation]

AIR SAFETY

MEASURES GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO TAKE TO REDUCE COLLISION RISKS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Transport). According to a Canadian Aviation Safety Board report released over the weekend, incidents involving loss of separation or near misses increased by 100 per cent in 1987—54 incidents in 1986 against 109 in 1987. Is this increase in collision risks not the result of the Government's cut-backs which led to a considerable reduction in the number of air traffic controllers? So my question is this: What measures does the Government intend to take to reduce such collision risks before it is too late?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of greater awareness of a job well done, and of consciousness to be able to report incidents which may occur en route.

---

• (1500)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard in relation to the amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Hon. Members will recall that we disposed of the Liberal amendment to the motion on Bill C-84 just prior to the luncheon break. Some time ago there were discussion among all three Parties about the need for two technical amendments to the Bill.

I know that the procedure would be unusual, but I think Your Honour might find unanimous consent to deal with those two amendments at this point before we return to the main motion. I wonder whether Your Honour would seek such consent.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, to get the ball rolling, or just to clear the air, we will be having a House Leaders' meeting in a matter of minutes. Perhaps this is something we ought to discuss there and come back to it later.

At the moment I will say that we are not prepared to give unanimous consent.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary who just raised this matter said that there had been consultations among the Parties. I have yet to be informed of these consultations, and I will have to come back to the Hon. Member on this matter in due course.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to deal today with Bill C-84. First of all, if I may, I should like to repeat what many of my colleagues have already said. We are not debating this Bill simply as a fillibuster to paralyze the Government, but rather to make sure that the Canadian immigration policy is worthy of us.

Unfortunately, instead of educating Canadian men and women on this issue and eliminating the abuses of our immigration system, the Tory Government is going to the extreme. Last summer, the Government got scared and recalled the House to deal with an emergency situation. It was just an excuse, as we very well know, because Bill-84 has never been a priority of this Government. Since then, apparently, it has survived this wave of panic.

Mr. Speaker, the Government seems to be a little more flexible now concerning this Bill since a number of amendments proposed by the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs have been accepted by the Minister.

On the other hand, I should like to congratulate the Standing Committee for an excellent job and the unanimity which its members have demonstrated in their recommendations.

Although a number of amendments from the Senate Committee have been accepted by the Minister, other priority elements have not. Those are the points I should like to deal with today.

The first recommendation which was turned down by the Minister deals with the provisions of the Bill which would make it possible for a Minister or the Government to turn refugee ships around. Mr. Speaker, I feel it would be unfair to treat people arriving by ships differently from those arriving by planes. For one thing, they would receive a better welcome. How could a Government decide the future of people on the basis of their means of transportation? Contrary to the Bill, the Senate proposes to lead the ships into port rather than turning them around. This would make it possible for Canadian authorities to help genuine refugees on board while the captain would be liable to a fine or prison term for his criminal acts. This certainly would be a stronger deterrent. Indeed, I do not believe that simply turning a boat away will prevent traffickers and smugglers from trying their luck later. We therefore believe the Government should accept that recommendation. They could thus penalize the culprits and extend to people on board the legal safeguards provided by the Act, because actually, turning the boat away without looking at and assessing the condition of people on board is utterly inexcusable.

A second recommendation made by the Senate Committee was that we should not make it a new offence to aid or abet genuine refugees who do not hold valid visas. It is unacceptable in my view that we try to punish those who help people in need. Church people, priests or nuns for instance could be charged with civil disobedience for helping people who are fleeing torture, threat and assassination in their home country. I would never have believed, Mr. Speaker, that this Parliament could enact a clause that is so offensive and backward. Canadians stated publicly they were ready to break the law if necessary to help those people who need such help. Such legislation is unworthy of us Canadians—people in Canada are much too fair and equitable to do that.

There is another problem in the area of security. Although the Minister stated a person is deemed to be innocent until proved guilty in our system of law, the Minister seems to take the opposite view when refugees are involved. The Government want to ensure that anyone who is suspect of being a security risk should be entitled neither to the refugee status determination system nor refugee provisions. I believe Mr. Speaker it is important to base ourselves on something more than mere suspicions under that system. We should not detain or turn back people on that kind of suspicions. Solid evidence is needed.

I would like to address another sensitive aspect of Bill C-84, that of search and seizure. The Minister stated he would like to have search warrants both in daytime and at night. He implies Senators opposed warrants being issued after 4 p.m. on the grounds that it was night time. But the Senate said nothing of the kind. It merely suggested it would be better if search warrants were issued during the day. Therefore the Senate recommendations will not prevent the Government from enforcing a warrant at night if conditions called for it.

Once again, the Government is going too far. Why provide for powers which could lead to abuses when our laws already show moderation, tolerance and intelligence? We do not want to take away from the Government the tools it needs to protect our boundaries. We want to improve existing mechanisms, but we do not want provisions which might violate the rights of Canadians.

It is important for everyone to realize that we really wish to achieve the stated objective which is to reduce abuses. We have never said that all those who claim refugee status are legitimate refugees. There have always been and always will be abuses. However, is that a good enough reason to punish the great majority of refugees who have legitimate claims? Why punish innocent people who have nothing to do with the ones who abuse our system? We have to try to be fair.

Canadians have always been proud of their refugee system, and it has evolved over a long period. Moreoever, our system is admired by many countries, even though there is room for improvement in our legislation. Our welcoming attitude to refugees can be cited as an example internationally. Why should we relax our efforts? Too many people are suffering hardship and need our assistance. Why should we close our doors to them, Mr. Speaker?

We know that Canada accepted over 60,000 Vietnamese some time ago, but that did not provoke a campaign against refugees and immigrants. However, it now seems that a single ship bringing in perhaps 200 refugees created a panic in Canada. I have to ask myself some serious questions about how the Government reacted to this incident.

I am quite willing for us to adjust the existing system, but let us do so logically and fairly. Canadians should be informed about the issue. They should be informed fairly and told how refugees contribute to make this a better country. We all know that most of those who come here as refugees do not take jobs away from Canadians. On the contrary, many of them do the work that most of us refuse to do.

The recommendations of the Senate Committee provide the means to make our system fairer and more equitable. We should consider these recommendations and accept them.

• (1510)

[English]

Mr. Marchi: Speaker, I listened attentively to the words of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Outrement (Mrs. Pépin) on a subject about which she cares and knows a lot. She pointed out a number of different things, including security, provisions for turning back a boat and the very onerous clause creating a new offence for those Canadians and organizations who wish, as they have in the past, to aid refugees and provide them with assistance.

On the whole question of the constitutional and charter challenge that will probably come from a number of lawyers across the country, one aspect that we in the House and the Senate experienced before our committees was that most legal experts, if not every single one, who appeared before the committee said that a number of provisions are unconstitutional and there will be court challenges based on the Charter as soon as the Bill is proclaimed law.

If the Government is now proposing that this is the answer, that this Bill is a cure for all problems concerning refugee determination, and if the courts will place a judgment on this legislation, what are the thoughts of the Hon. Member on the very likely possibility that this matter will be struck down by the courts, because a number of provisions, for example, the turning back of a boat and the security aspect, will be deemed unconstitutional? If this legislation is struck down by the courts it will, in effect, paralyze the whole policy. Rather than bettering a policy which needs reform, the situation will be even more chaotic. What then will happen to the confidence of Canadians who thought that the Government and Parliament were taking care of this very urgent problem?

[Translation]

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be better to improve the Bill at this point. If the legislation is challenged in the courts, it will be up to a judge to decide, and then we often depend on their interpretation of the legislation.

I think we should spend a little more time on improving the legislation here in the House, in order to prevent situations similar to what happened last June, with the refugees who arrived by ship.

I have more than twenty-three ethnic groups and a number of refugees in my riding and am in touch with them regularly. I can assure you that the way the Government reacted last summer created a panic situation, and it also completely changed Canada's image abroad. People were coming here to a host country, where they knew their rights and freedoms were respected. Now most of them are wondering what kind of country we will have once this legislation is passed.

[English]

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Outrement also correctly pointed out and compared the situation of the two past summers, when 300 refugees came by boat to our shores, to a situation only a few short years ago in 1979 when the then Prime Minister of the day, Mr. Clark, followed by the Government of Pierre Elliott Trudeau in 1980, took what was probably the most significant initiative that created the most pride in Canadians, by accepting almost 106,000 Vietnamese boat people. The Member referred to that leadership, integrity and education program under which 50,000 refugees from Vietnam were sponsored by communities, including churches, organizations and individual Canadians, and approximately 50,000 people were sponsored by the Government. That was a classic example of a true partnership that worked.

Given that past governments have reacted in a noble and progressive manner, what are the Member's thoughts about why the Government did react by creating, suggesting and fabricating an emergency situation and a crisis? How does the Member view the situation where you have one government accepting 106,000 people in a two year period and another Government creating a crisis because 300 individuals entered our refugee determination system?

[Translation]

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, the fact that the arrival of a hundred refugees was perceived as an emergency and even created a panic situation is rather difficult to explain when, as my hon. colleague pointed out, we realize that Canada has already received more than 60,000 Vietnamese.

If we take a closer look at the situation and analyse it carefully, the impression we get is that the Conservative Government wants to change its policy and have a big stick like the legislation before the House today.

The perception of our country as a host country and as a compassionate country has changed. As I said earlier, the refugees and immigrants in my riding feel the situation has become most disturbing. Most of them are worried, especially since the Government is playing a game with words. It says there are genuine refugees and phony refugees. The word refugee implies that the person is at risk. There are no genuine refugees and phony refugees.

So all this did the rounds across the country. In many cases, the media tended to make matters worse, so that 200 new arrivals created a true panic in a country that is simply huge. We could have easily taken these people in with a lot less ruckus then we did. And I think this has tarnished Canada's image. The Government must adopt legislation that is far more humanitarian, in order to change the perception of Canada now held by other countries, including Europe, and especially in those countries where human rights are threatened. The Government must change this perception because I must admit, I was not very proud to be a Canadian.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) a question concerning those who help refugees.

• (1520)

[English]

What I am concerned about are the 23 refugee aid groups that she spoke about in Montreal with whom she is in touch. If a refugee came here from El Salvador, did not try to evade immigration officers but simply reported in as a refugee claimant, and was helped in doing that by a Canadian, there has been great concern that those Canadians would be quite unjustly subject to punishment for doing something that is considered a good thing to do now, and in fact was part of the reason why Nancy Pocock received the Pearson Medal for Peace a few weeks ago. I would like to ask the Hon. Member what those refugee aid groups in Montreal think of the Government's assurances that they will not be prosecuted?

[Translation]

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, they are not very reassured now, I can tell you, since they know that Canadian men and women who would help refugees to come to Canada would be held criminally responsible.

I think that many have said publicly that anyway they are willing to break the law if that piece of legislation is accepted; that would not stop them from helping the refugees. And I think it would certainly be a shame for our country if the Government were to enforce such a legislation.

I believe our refugees feel threatened and are very much concerned and I think that is going to change our image as a friendly and humanitarian country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal briefly with this very important piece of legislation which is now before the Parliament of Canada, Bill C-84.

Mr. Speaker, you are certainly aware that our Party is against this Bill which was introduced last summer by this Tory Government as a response to a tragic situation.

There was in this Bill a violation of human rights, a violation of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It was also a violation of the United Nations Charter. In fact, it is a very discriminatory and reactionary measure.

M. Speaker, we have before us now a few amendments which have been proposed by the Senate of Canada. I support these amendments because they would make of this Bill something better and more efficient for Canada.

It may seem unusual for NDP members to speak positively of the Senate of Canada. The Senate is certainly not a democratic institution. Its members have been appointed by several Prime Ministers such as Mr. Trudeau, Mr. Pearson, Mr. Clark and the current prime minister (Mr. Mulroney). As I said, this is not a democratic institution. In spite of that, the many senators who are clever and well intentioned have put together a Bill which is better than that of the federal Government.

[English]

I think more than any other Member of this House of Commons, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) has led a campaign against this very regressive and oppressive legislation introduced by the Conservative Government. Starting last August, at a time when I and others were on the special committee studying the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord, the Hon. Member was leading the fight against this repressive piece of legislation. It is very unfair to both legitimate refugees from many undemocratic countries, and to Canadians who help refugees. It violates the Canadian Charter of Rights and the UN convention on refugees.

I have not taken part in this debate before today. I was not part of the committee as I was tied up in other work of this House, like yourself. However, I understand that when the committee held hearings most of the witnesses were opposed to the sweeping nature of this legislation. I also understand that when the Senate held hearings, it heard some 37 different witnesses and all of them except the immigration staff criticized and opposed the Bill. After those hearings, the Senate committee made 13 different recommendations and those recommendations are what we are talking about today.

Like yourself, Mr. Speaker, my family came from other parts of the world to settle in Canada. In my case, my ancestors came from enlightened and very democratic countries; on my father's side, from Sweden, on my mother's side, from Great Britain. They, along with many other people, created this great country. One reason they came here was that Canada was very tolerant of different ways of life, different languages and different

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we have two official languages in Canada. We have several cultures. On both sides, it is a society which is quite tolerant. It is a true mosaic of people from the four corners of the world. Now, we have a mixture, a truly distinctive Canadian society.

[English]

I do not think it is in the traditions of Canada to have this kind of repressive legislation before us today. When the Senate made its recommendations, it talked about a number of changes which should be made and I want to commend those changes to the House.

Amendment No. 1 would clarify the purposes of the Bill as opposing clandestine entry rather than smuggling. This amendment goes in the right direction. It more clearly defines what the purpose of this Bill should be so that fewer legitimate refugees are caught in a trap, through no fault of their own.

Amendment No. 2 and amendment No. 3 restore the right of a person being accused of being a security risk to hear the case against him or her, except where the judge decides that that would endanger national security or the safety of persons. This is a very important amendment with respect to civil rights or civil liberties. A person accused of being a security risk will have the right to hear the case being made against him or her. Without that right we are almost living in a police state. You can be accused of something and you do not have the right to hear what it is of which you are being accused. Innocent people can be caught in that net and be denied refugee status where they would normally qualify as legitimate refugees.

• (1530)

Amendment 4, which talks about the right of claim to refugee status, restores the right of a person accused of being a security risk to have his or her refugee claim determined nevertheless. This would live up to Canada's obligation under the U.N. convention relating to the status of refugees and entitle the person, if deported, to United Nations assistance in finding a safe country other than the one which he or she had fled.

While on this particular topic, I remember stories of a shipload of Jewish people coming to Canada from Germany in the late 1930s before I was born. They were to land in Montreal but were turned back by Canadian officials. That was a different time and perhaps a slightly different issue, but I think it indicates the consequence of lack of tolerance, the consequence of people being unable to explain their case, and the consequence for people who did not have a fair hearing in this country. They were sent back and many of them met their death in Nazi Germany.

It is very important that the legislation before the House today be drafted in such a way as to ensure that people coming to this country as refugees are not sent back to certain death in the countries from which they have come en route to Canada.

Amendment 5 deals with ships which are turned around. It requires that a ship suspected of bringing in illegal refugees be brought to port in Canada and that the occupants be dealt with in accordance with Canadian law. It is very important that they be dealt with in accordance with Canadian law. It is my understanding that amendments to this effect were moved in the committee by the spokesperson for our Party, the Member for Spadina. There are violations of the Canadian Charter of Rights, of some pretty fundamental justices and liberties, in the Bill presented before the House.

Amendments 6 and 7 deal with aiding and abetting. They restrict these clauses by targeting only those who intentionally encourage false refugee claims or who assist clandestine entry into this country. This ensures compliance with Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This is an effort to target more effectively those people who intentionally encourage false refugee claims. This is an effort to target people who intentionally abuse, corrupt, and destroy the system for people who legitimately come to this country because they face persecution in their own country.

Amendments 9, 10, 11, and 12 deal with search and seizure and forfeiture. They ensure that search and seizure and forfeiture are allowed only on reasonable grounds and with reasonable procedures in keeping with Section 8 of the Charter of Rights. This is a very important series of amendments which would harmonize this legislation with the Canadian Charter of Rights and the Canadian Constitution as they affect those who live in this country. I do not think that is asking too much in terms of the amendments which the folks in the other place are suggesting to the House of Commons.

Finally, Amendment 13 would provide for independent review of the detention of persons held for identification or security purposes. This would ensure compliance with Sections 7, 9, and 10 of the Charter of Rights.

That is a very quick summary of the 13 amendments being suggested by the other place. I argue that those amendments are not radical but very reasonable. The ladies and gentlemen of the other place are not usually known as radical or revolutionary people. They are usually considered fairly moderate and sometimes rather conservative. They are noted for their sober second thought. Usually when they recommend something to this House their recommendation is made after a great deal of consideration and usually with tremendous moderation. If the Senate, after hearing witness after witness, church group after church group, and civil libertarian after civil libertarian, can make these kinds of recommendations, then surely to goodness the House of Commons and, in particular, members of the government Party can accept these recommendations from the Senate of Canada to improve Bill C-84 which is before the House today.

I would like to remind us all that this country has a very tolerant past. This country has been very generous and benevolent. This country was built by people of many lands coming to Canada and working together to build a tremendous society and a tremendous country. We have two great languages and many great cultures. These people together have built a great country along with the indigenous aboriginal people who were here before peoples from other parts of the world arrived.

This piece of legislation would turn back the clock. It is the kind of legislation you would expect from President Reagan in the United States or Margaret Thatcher in Great Britain, but it is not the kind of legislation you would expect from the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada with the history which it has had.

Throughout its history of leaders, from Sir John A. Macdonald to John Diefenbaker, the Progressive Conservative Party has been very progressive with regard to refugees, immigrants, or building a society based on tolerance. It is only the most recent Conservative Party members who have tried to turn back the clock on the progressive tradition of that Party which now forms the Government of Canada.

I am sure that if John Diefenbaker were in the House today he would be making speech after speech about how regressive, conservative, reactionary, and restrictive this Bill is. Mr. Diefenbaker was from my home Province of Saskatchewan. He built his reputation on defending the underdog, on standing up and fighting for the rights of ordinary people who were being discriminated against, on fighting for ordinary Indian people and for the right to vote, for decent lives, and decent services. John Diefenbaker would not tolerate for a minute this kind of reactionary Bill.

I also suspect that many in the Cabinet, if they were Prime Minister, would not tolerate such a Bill as is before the House today. I am sure that if the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) were the Prime Minister of this country or the Minister in charge of immigration he would not be introducing this Bill in the House today. I noted that he is not returning to Manitoba to seek the leadership of that political Party there. Therefore, we will not have to grant refugee status to Mr. Filmon. That aside, I am sure that if the Minister of National Health and Welfare were the Leader of the Party or the Minister in charge we would not have this regressive Bill because he is more in the tradition of John Diefenbaker and progressive prairie populism.

I ask the members of the Conservative Party to join with us, the Liberal Party, the Senators, the people of Canada, and the churches of all faiths, all of whom have said that this Bill is much too regressive. This is not the Canadian tradition, it is not the Canadian heritage. If we had this kind of philosophy many years ago we would not have in Canada many of the Canadians we have today.

I want to conclude by reminding people that over the years we have taken in people from many very regressive regimes.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I know there is a great deal of oppression in the world. There is a lot of that going on in Africa, for instance, and one example is the present situation in Zaire, a political dictatorship where human rights are violated. Zaire is the former Belgian Congo. It is one of the great countries of Africa, where there is now a lot of discrimination against a large number of people.

There is also discrimination in Haiti. President Duvalier was a dictator as his father was before him, but now, although he is no longer in Haiti, the situation is such that human and civil rights are non-existent. There was a phony election in Haiti where the principal candidate was not even part of the process.

There is repression in Haiti and there is also the situation in Central America, where in many countries, people who were strongly in favour of a democratic system and freedom of expression, association and rest, are now confronted with a repressive situation. There is also the situation in South America, in Chile. Several years ago, I remember we had a meeting here in the parliamentary restaurant with Mrs. Allende. Her husband was the President of Chile and had been democratically elected, and after only a few years, he was assassinated. Now we have a repressive regime in Chile, Mr. Speaker. We often meet men and women who want to come to Canada to live under a democratic system and start a new life. We are not the only country with a humanitarian tradition in this respect. There are many others. Nevertheless, I hope Canada will remain open and maintain its traditions and heritage. I hope it will maintain its humanitarian system for all refugees throughout the world.

• (1540)

[English]

I urge my friends in the Conservative Party to remain true to the traditions of John Diefenbaker and many other "progressive" Conservatives, to stand up for civil rights and civil liberty and make sure that the Bill that is passed by the House of Commons respects the Charter of Rights in this country and respects the United Nations High Commission for Refugees.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, first I want to correct a statement made by the Member who just spoke and point out that the United Nations Commission for Refugees has not opposed this legislation.

Second, I want to point out, as reported on page 12001 of Hansard, that the Hon. Member's leader said on that day, speaking of the terrorist who had come to Canada:

> Why has no action been taken to ensure that this person is removed from Canada?

I want to tell him that press reports today state that this terrorist has now claimed refugee status in Canada. I remind the Member that when the boat landed in Nova Scotia last summer his leader said that if they are not refugees, send them back. As a matter of fact, the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) said: "If they are not refugees send them back".

This legislation is dealing not with refugees but with fraud artists. I would invite the Member to correct the misstatements he has made in the House so that the Canadian people who have watched this debate will understand that we are dealing with detention and those people who are an affront to the law. I hope he would agree that these people ought to be dealt with in terms that this legislation has outlined. His Party cannot have it both ways. On the one hand they cannot say "send him back" and at the same time deny us the legislation that would allow us to send them back. They cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, we are not asking to have it both ways. We are saying that we want to respect the great traditions of this country in treating refugees and immigrants fairly. We want to respect the tradition of the Conservative Party of Canada. I mentioned Mr. John Diefenbaker.

The legislation before us today is very repressive. We feel it is a violation of the Charter of Rights and a violation of the United Nations Convention on Refugees.

Mr. Friesen: Not true.

Mr. Nystrom: The Member says it is not true. I suggest that that is his opinion, not mine. It is not the opinion of most groups that appeared before the committee.

I remind the Hon. Member that most churches in this country that appeared before the committee of the House or the other place opposed this particular legislation as going too far and being too restrictive.

I know that I am dealing with a man who is very active in the Christian community. I am sure he realizes the role of the churches in terms of refugees and the position the churches, including the United Church, the Catholic Church and many others have taken in promoting the amendments to this legislation.

Many of them also took the position that Bill C-84 is a violation of the U.N. Convention on Refugees. I think we should be reflecting in the legislation the position of the churches and many of the civil libertarians as well as the position that has been basically the tradition of all three Parties in this country.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I have a question further to the question that was asked by the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen). I have heard him make that very misleading statement many times in which he very carefully—and he is skillful—isolates the fact that the United Nations representative for the High Commission for Refugees in fact did not say that Canada was violating the convention.

What the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta knows, of course, is that the UNHCR always has to deal in a friendly way with every Government because it has no power to enforce that convention. Therefore, it never uses such blunt language as to say, "You are violating it". But what the Hon. Member knows is that the U.N. did ask the Government to allow refugee status hearings even for somebody accused of crimes such as war crimes, subversion and so on, so that if the person were found to be a refugee he could be given time to find a third country rather than be deported to the one that persecuted him.

What I want to ask the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) is, does he consider that in the case of somebody who perhaps in fact has committed some crime in his previous country but asks for refugee status in Canada, that person should be allowed to have his refugee status examined? If he is found not to be a refugee, then of course the action proceeds on the charges against him, and if he is found to be a refugee does the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville consider that it would be fair that the charges against him would be tried, whether he is a criminal or subversive, but that if he is found to be criminal or subversive he should be allowed a reasonable chance with the help of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees to find a third country to which he could go rather than the country that persecuted him? That is what the UNHCR asked. I would like to know whether the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville thinks that that would be fair.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I certainly believe it would be fair. I agree with what the United Nations is saying.

While I am on my feet, I want to finish my answer to the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen). My seat mate from Winnipeg just handed me a letter from the Anglican Church of Canada. It is a letter written to all Members of Parliament from Archbishop Michael Peers who is Primate of the Anglican Church of Canada. He is recommending a resolution to the Parliament of Canada, which I want to read in response to a question put to me a few minutes ago. It says:

• (1550)

"That this National Executive Council requests the Primate to express to the Government and the people of Canada its deep concern that significant sections of Bills C-55 and C-84 as presently drafted:

a) do not satisfy our international obligations to protect refugees and uphold procedural safeguards;

b) violate sections of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms;

c) do not meet the stated objectives of our immigration policy 'to fulfill Canada's international legal obligations with respect to refugees and to uphold its humanitarian tradition with respect to the displaced and persecuted'."

This letter is from the Primate of the Anglican Church of Canada to all Members of Parliament. It lobbies for the amendment suggested by the Senate of Canada and it lobbies in a very diplomatic way against the regressive and reactionary Bill presented by the Conservative Government, a Bill that violates the Canadian Charter of Rights and the UN convention.

I recommend this letter to the House. I am sure that is why you are jumping to your feet now, Mr. Speaker. It is to say: "Yes, this is a good letter and we should accept it".

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order and I will be very brief. There have been discussions among the Parties, and I appreciate the co-operation of my colleagues. We propose to move two further amendments to the Bill amending Clauses 11 and 16. I would seek your consent to move and have the House vote immediately on the following motion: I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen):

That clause 11 of Bill C-84 be amended by striking out line 2 on page 13 and substituting the following:

"exigent circumstances" mean circum-"

I also move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta:

That clause 16 of Bill C-84 be amended by striking out line 16 on page 24 and substituting the following:

"82.1(2), 83(1) and 91.1(1), and any such power,"

And that a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours thereof.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Hon. Members have heard the suggestion of the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis). Is there such unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, we might want to clarify this for the House. It is my understanding that we have given unanimous consent to the introduction of those two amendments which will perhaps be debated by Members if they so desire. Is that the ruling of the Chair?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I thought we agreed to a motion to add these two amendments to the motion moved by the Government with respect to Bill C-84 so that the two amendments the Minister of State has just offered would be dealt with in the same way as the other amendments contained in the Government's motion which we are currently debating. In other words, it is as if the two amendments the Minister just moved were a part of the motion of the Government in the first place.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we are content to add those two amendments to the message if the Table finds that to be in order, yes.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I agree that consultations have taken place and in the spirit of co-operation and in an effort to advance the processing of this Bill, we have agreed to introduce these. I would like to think that the Government would show its appreciation by not moving the previous question.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a further point of order. I do not want to be difficult, I am just interested in the procedure. The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) will soon be taking the floor. Is it the case that the Hon. Member for Davenport will be speaking to the main motion and that after that debate is completed, we will then be able, if Hon. Members so desire, to speak to the two new amendments?

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I just want to point out to the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) that one of these amendments for which we have asked unanimous consent was an amendment the Senate had wanted to be included. Through some oversight, it got lost in the message that was sent to us in the House. We are accommodating the Members of the other place by including it. The other amendment restricts the Bill even further, something which I think has the approval of Members opposite. I take the words of the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) to mean that this is part of the main motion and it will not be debated separately.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it so agreed then? Is it part of the same package that the message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours thereof?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I had proposed a way of treating these amendments, but I was just informed by my hon. colleague, our critic on this issue, that he has already spoken on the main motion and he therefore would not otherwise have the opportunity to speak briefly on why he thinks these amendments are worthwhile. I wonder if there would be unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member from our Party as well as the New Democratic Party critic a few minutes to explain why they are willing to accept these amendments. We do not want to take away the turn of the Hon. Member for Davenport. He is next, but I wonder if the House would agree to allow the two critics for the opposition Parties a few minutes to explain their acceptance of these amendments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is that so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, what you have just witnessed is an interesting exercise on the part of the Government to improve this piece of legislation six months after it was introduced as an absolutely urgent matter which required the recall of Parliament on August 11. We are now dealing with what would seem to be the final stages of the debate on this Bill in the fourth year of the Government.

Six months after the Bill was introduced, the Government still finds it necessary to rush in on a Tuesday afternoon to present amendments that it deems to be necessary through a delayed acceptance of suggestions that had been made to the Government both by the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) on behalf of the Official Opposition and by the Senate. Perhaps this is an indication that at this rate, in another six months, we might have a piece of legislation that will be acceptable to Canada and in accordance with the the basic principles contained in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

It is a sign of immense incompetence on the part of the Government that we are here, six months later, struggling along with a piece of legislation which could have been passed in a matter of weeks if it had been introduced with measures that would not be, in most legal opinions and in the judgment of refugee communities, repugnant or could not be eventually challenged in the higher courts. That would have made this whole exercise unnecessary and even a farce. That is the basic point.

• (1600)

I imagine it really upsets most Canadians to hear back-benchers of the Tory Party rising during the period preceding Question Period to lament the fact that this Bill is still being debated in the House. That is the highest level of hypocrisy accompanied by incompetence that has been witnessed in the House for a long, long time.

A few minutes ago the Minister of State rushed into the House to introduce two technical amendments, at least what he thinks are two technical amendments. But he admitted in his own words that they are in part a reply to the suggestions made by the Senate. That is an admission that the Bill is still far from being the type of Bill that ought to be leaving the House in order to command the respect of the Canadian people and the respect of our courts.

What we have here is an exercise in incompetence for which only the Government can be held responsible, not the members of the Opposition for debating it. We are not compulsory speakers in the House of Commons. We do not come here just to speak in order to see our name in print the next day in Hansard. We come here when we are hot under the collar, as we were in August of 1987 and as we are six months later today because we still find that some measures in this Bill are offensive.

The Senate has performed an outstanding role in examining Bill C-84 in its traditional and thorough manner. It has come to the conclusion to which Senators of all Parties, which in this case means Liberals and Conservatives, have agreed upon. Not one Conservative Senator disagreed on the package that has been sent to us here today for debate—not one. That is the reality.

The Senate is unanimous in saying that this Bill still needs to be amended. Yet some back-benchers of the Government, which is so-called Progressive Conservative, have the nerve to get up to complain that we are still debating it. We have to debate it because of its contents. What the Senate is saying is that this law must be improved on a number of fronts. Other speakers before me have already outlined them. I am not able to say something that is new on how the recommendations of the Senate run. They cover a wide range of clauses, and others have done better than I have done. The fact remains that there is here a principle to make laws that are good and that cannot and should not be challenged in higher courts. The Hon.

Member for York West made this point, as have others. It is an important point.

We want to make a contribution to the debate on this Bill in a manner that will achieve two things. One principle is that we want to ensure that our immigration laws are not abused. There is unanimous consent to that. The second principle is that we want to pass a law that will not be challenged in the higher courts and that will not therefore slow down, almost impede or bring to a grinding halt the whole legislative implementation of the laws that the House is debating right now. We are trying to improve the quality of it now so that it will work later on. That is the point.

The nature of the amendments is quite clear in the submission of the Senate. In his intervention a few days ago the Hon. Member for York West dealt with them in a very clear manner. He put on the record his thoughts with respect to turning back a boat, something which the Government wants in the present legislation as proposed.

The alternative we are advancing is that, instead, the law be such that it permit the Minister to escort these boats into port. That is a sound and convincing argument. I recommend that Hon. Members read page 12303 of Hansard for January 26. At that page Hon. Members will find the intervention of the Hon. Member for York West who said that the Senate articulated the recommendation that rather than turning back a boat it be escorted into port. We think that there are some very basic good and solid reasons for doing that.

If we want to punish the smugglers of human misery, as the Hon. Member for York West pointed out, then we should bring the boat into Canadian harbours and confiscate it, sell it and punish the captain by imposing a fine upon him or by placing him in prison. Why does he say that? Because this is a lesson which will not be forgotten for a long, long time. That is the reason. In doing so the word will spread on the international circuits among potential captains and boat owners that when one comes close to Canadian waters or touches them then they are in for a rough time and that one may lose one's shirt. Is that not the point? Is that not the reason we want to do it?

For the life of us it is very hard to understand why the Minister of Immigration cannot see the merits of this measure that was proposed, expounded and advanced by the Opposition back in August and again put forward and advanced by the Senate as a whole. It is extremely difficult to understand why this is not being accepted.

On January 26 the Hon. Member for York West concluded with this observation. He said that the discouragement is greater if we bring the boat in and then punish the culprits. He pointed out that we would be more wise since we would be able to question the captains. He also pointed out that we could try to break down the rings and the networks that are operating throughout the world. These are three solid and good reasons which the Hon. Member put forward. Why turn back the boat? This is something that escapes our ability to understand.

Another point made by the Senators, which deserves our attention, has to do with the question of punishment of those who aid and abet refugees. You have heard it I suppose, Mr. Speaker, more than you would like to, and I do not envy you. It is your task to hear at times things over and over again. Your Honour has heard some pretty solid arguments in the House and in the Senate about the notion that the law should not punish organizations and individuals who help refugees.

It is more than individuals and organizations with whom we have to be concerned. I say that because in the offices of Members of Parliament in many cities in the exercise of our daily duties we inevitably come into contact with people who are here as potential refugees. They come to our offices seeking advice. If we were to deal with them, we could be in breach of the law as proposed now. There must be a dozen Members of Parliament in the House now who, over the years, have spoken or been spoken to by individuals who would like to be considered and accepted as refugees and who have been helped with information and advice. All of a sudden when this law is implemented anyone who in the future comes in touch with and offers advice or answers to a person who would like to declare himself or herself as a refugee in Canada might be in trouble with respect to the law.

• (1610)

That is not a fair measure, and it is not a measure that can be considered lightly. I notice that on the same day the Hon. Member for York West made a reference to Nancy Pocock from the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees in dealing with this issue. The present Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) says that he has to reject the notion that this particular clause be deleted from the Bill, and in his release he states that this amendment would constitute a reversal of the policy upon which the Immigration Act of 1976 was based. That is incorrect. It is not so. The Immigration Act of 1976 does not advance the notion in this forceful and authoritative manner that it does now that anyone who is involved in assisting and in dealing with refugees is in breach of the law. Otherwise, I think many of us would have been in trouble a long time ago.

Instead, what we do support on this side of the House is the amendment by the Senate which would limit criminal prosecution to those who intentionally encourage false claims, and to those people who assist clandestine entry. That is a line that has been drawn by the Senate, which is a very fine line and a very important one. It deals with false claims, and it deals with the matter of clandestine entry. I think that that would be safe ground and also fairer ground on which to base the spirit and the operative part of the proposed legislation.

On those two grounds alone there is reason enough to rise in the House and to speak out. There is still time for the Government to accept these interventions on our part. At the rate that the Government is doing so, it may be some time before this will happen. Until then, Mr. Speaker, all I can say to you is that it is not right for the Government to blame us for the fact that a Bill introduced in August is still here. There are Bills which travel through the House fairly quickly and with a lot of co-operation. If this Bill is still here after six months the only one that can be blamed and ought to be blamed is the Government and those who propose it.

Mr. Marchi: I would like to commend the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) for his reassuring words, words that we heard from him only a few short months ago when this debate was present before this very Chamber in the hot days of summer. His interest perhaps was not only derived from the two boatloads that arrived on our shores, but certainly that interest and passion emanates from long and hard work during the 1970s and early 1980s when he was a very active member of the standing committee on immigration at that time.

The Hon. Member for Davenport correctly pointed out that there is a certain amount of hypocrisy when members of the Government rise during Statements Pursuant to S.O. 21 prior to Question Period and suggest that somehow the Opposition is delaying and filibustering this legislation, and that this emergency Bill is still very much alive in our Chamber as of February, 1988.

As was pointed out in part by the Member, the truth is that this question and the report from the other place that we are debating today did not come exclusively from Liberal Senators, but it was endorsed unanimously by all Senators. In fact, some of the Senators from the government side were more passionate and emotional in the disdain in which they held this piece of legislation, and that triggered a number of discussions, perhaps behind the scenes as well as in front of the committee with the Minister, that helped this report and allowed the Government to recognize that it did go too far.

At no time did the Government push the Senate committee to deal with it more quickly. At no time did the Government ask its Senators on the government side to expedite matters, as they did in the committee. Therefore, there was not the political will or the political necessity for that to happen. Now that we have had the time to reflect over the several months that have elapsed since the summer, I think the Government got the message that it had erred, that this Bill was overkill, and that Canadians were looking at this in a progressive and moderate manner, something that the Government was not doing.

In addition, Members of Parliament from the government side have also been debating this Bill. Government Members have also been standing up and asking questions. This is a debate. It is a discussion. If we are not to discuss and debate in this Chamber, and if it is not for the Opposition together with members of the Senate, including government Senators, to try to push this Government a little more close to some degree of progressivity, then who should do so?

On that note, I wish to ask the Member for Davenport what are his thoughts, in terms of the whole question of leadership and being at the leading edge of educating and coming to grips with this very emotional yet significant issue, rather than simply waving hands and calling those people illegal migrants and suggesting that somehow Parliament has to come together because there is an emergency and impending crisis. The Hon. Member was a member of this Chamber and a member of a preceding Government that had the example of the Vietnamese boat people and partnership between community and Government at its best, but in addition to that there were other programs that complemented that particular exercise. What does the Hon. Member think of a Government that can and is able and wishes to lead and create a country in a direction that is better for humankind and for the international phenomenon of refugees, as opposed to a Government that runs from the issue, looks at the polls, and has the knee-jerk reaction that we saw in the summer months?

Mr. Caccia: The example of the boat people is a very good one. On the over-all question of leadership, this afternoon, February 2, six months after the introduction of this Bill, we were treated to the spectacle of the Government rushing in and asking that this Bill be given two additional amendments. After this Bill had been introduced in August of last year, debated on second reading, sent to committee, having heard all the witnesses, having heard the views of the Opposition, having it reported back to the House of Commons, having debated additional amendments, having a debate on third reading, a discussion in the Senate, hearings in committee of the Senate, receiving it back from the Senate, the Government is still thinking over and wondering what to do to improve this Bill after six months.

• (1620)

Can you imagine that, Mr. Speaker? What an immense sign of incompetence. It is not even a question of leadership. It is a question of not knowing how to run the business of the nation. That is what it tells me, if on February 2 the Government has to rush into the House with two amendments to a Bill which was introduced six months before and after all the phases of hearings and debates on the amendments.

It would be nice to be able to discuss leadership. The Government does not have the faintest idea. We find incompetence in the way it managed the trade negotiations with the United States. We find incompetence in the way that it dealt with the United States on acid rain. It is an empty cupboard. We also find incompetence with regard to toxic chemicals in the Niagara River. The Government is in the fourth year of its mandate. If its Members were to think back to 1983, they would find that if they managed to do anything in this Parliament it was because we prepared the ground for action in a number of fields.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Caccia: Otherwise, they would not even know how to move the wheel ahead. However, when it comes to new measures or new programs, what do they do? They rush into the House of Commons, as they did today, saying: "Just a moment. Please allow us a few minutes to introduce two further amendments".

Is that a sign of competence in the Government? The Hon. Member for York West was trying to tell the Government something about leadership. For heaven's sake, there is no question that if the Government is leading us anywhere, it is leading us to disaster. It is leading us to economic union with the United States. It is leading us to a weaker federal Government so that eventually we will have 10 republics trying to rule the country. It is leading to devolution whereby Ottawa will have less and less power than the provinces, and we will have in a way a checkerboard Canada as we see already in the environmental protection legislation.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Which you were not able to get through Cabinet.

Mr. Caccia: For weeks the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has postponed his appearance before our committee. I want to tell him that what we are witnessing there is the emergence of the Meech Lake virus whereby each province will have different standards of environmental protection. We will see the same situation with other measures.

If you ask me, Mr. Speaker, what kind of leadership the Government is giving or where it is trying to lead us, I would say that it is leading us in the wrong direction, and that is why we want to call an election pretty soon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to indicate that the period provided for questions and comments has now terminated.

---

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Hazardous substances—Dioxin in paper products—Chlorine bleaching process; the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris)—Fisheries—Canada-France dispute—Position of Newfoundland Government/Request that Government halt talks/Statement made by Minister of fisheries; the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall)—Cape Breton Development Corporation—Industrial development division/Query concerning consultations.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard in relation to the amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, and the motion of Mr. Lewis:

That Bill C-84 be further amended in Clause 11 by striking out line 2 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

""exigent circumstances" mean circum-"

And

That the Bill be further amended in Clause 16 by striking out line 16 at page 24 and substituting the following therefor:

"82.1(2), 83(11) and 91.1(1), and any such power,"

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock—North Delta.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) has said a number of times this afternoon that if the Government wanted it could have passed this legislation. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp):

That the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of considering the motion of the Minister of Employment and Immigration in relation to the amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, and the motion of Mr. Lewis, seconded by Mr. Friesen, in relation to further amendments proposed to the said Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Will those Members who object to the motion please rise in their places?

And fewer than 15 Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Fewer than 15 Members having risen, the motion is adopted.

Motion (Mr. Friesen) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On debate, the Hon. Member for Regina East.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to participate in the debate on the government motion in relation to Bill C-84.

As all Hon. Members surely remember, in the middle of our summer break we were summoned back to Parliament to deal with a national emergency. The national emergency at that time was that a boatload of people were entering Canadian waters and in fact had arrived at our shores seeking refugee status. This became quite a topic during the summer months, and the Government immediately called Parliament back to deal with the matter. It stated at that time that a real national emergency existed and that it required proper legislation right away to deal with the perceived threat of waves of would-be refugees coming to Canada.

Here we are well into the new year, 1988, and we are still debating a Bill dealing with that so-called grave national emergency.

Part of the reason we are still dealing with the debate at this stage, and why the Opposition has been so concerned about it, is that the legislation the Government introduced at that time was so seriously flawed that every group in the country which dealt with questions regarding refugees was opposed to what the Government was doing. Amnesty International, the Canadian Bar Association, church groups, and humanitarian groups from coast to coast were raising serious concerns about the legislation. The Canadian Bar Association raised legal concerns. It felt—and it still feels it today—that despite some of the amendments which the Government has now allowed to its original legislation, the legislation is so seriously flawed that the courts will have to throw it out. It contravenes our Constitution and its Charter of Rights.

• (1630)

The Canadian Bar Association claims that in numerous instances in this piece of legislation proper due process will not be provided to people who come to our shores and attempt to land as refugees. The church groups also point out that what this legislation does is to destroy the tradition we have been trying to build as a haven for those who seek to escape political, religious and racial persecution in their home countries. While we as Canadians take some pride in our image of being decent, caring people, it is certainly true that in the past we have committed what I would call acts that besmirch that image. Members, particularly colleagues of mine in the New Democratic Party, have raised during this debate the case of the group of Indian refugees who came to Canada around 1914 and who were sent back to India. Some died at the hands of the Government of India of the day. We all know of the case of the ship St. Louis which, with around 900 European Jews trying to escape what they knew was coming in Europe, set forth to find a safe haven across the Atlantic. They were turned back by numerous countries, including Canada. They returned to Europe and very few of those 900 European Jews survived. They were caught in the Holocaust and died in Nazi concentration camps. That situation was something that we as Canadians could have prevented, except that our political prejudices and fears at the time entered into the picture and we denied people access to Canada.

It is not with total pride that we as Canadians can look at our record. We have to recognize that we have made mistakes in the past, mistakes that have cost people's lives, people who otherwise would have made a tremendous contribution to our country and the well-being of it. Instead, our own prejudices at the time made them face certain death. Let history ensure that we do not make the same mistakes again, that people who seek entrance to our land, many of whom are not white Anglo-Saxons but Hindus, Pakistanis, blacks from Africa or people trying to escape from the insanity of the Middle East, are welcomed into our country. Let us make certain of that because history will also judge us as we judged the Liberal Government of the day which turned back the boatload of European Jews.

The Government called us back last summer in order to deal with Bill C-84 and this great national emergency as the Government described the situation. The Bill has too many overtones of what the Government did in 1938 when it turned back the boatload of European Jews. There are too many overtones of racial and political prejudices here.

What we are debating today is the Government's response to the Senate. I know you are aware, Mr. Speaker, that I have no great love for that institution called the Senate. I think a non-elected body of essentially politically motivated people, a body consisting of political appointees, should not have the power to prevent legislation from passing. Unelected people, while they definitely play a role in a legislative process, should not have the final say in things. They do have a role to play and I think the Senate has played its role in its report on Bill C-84. I would never stand here in my place and describe the other place as being filled with men and women who are wild-eyed radicals seeking to undermine the security and the well-being of the Canadian state. I do not think I would ever describe hon. Senators in those terms. That is why I think the recommendations which the Senators have made through amendments to the Bill surely must be seriously considered. These are recommendations made by men and women in the other place who are concerned about the security and well-being of the Canadian state but who are also concerned that proper due process is followed, that we maintain our international commitments signed with the United Nations, and above all, that we live up to our commitments found in The Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Hon. Senators have pointed out, as members of the Canadian Bar Association and various other legal experts have, that Bill C-84 is seriously flawed. It contravenes our commitments to the Charter of Rights. It contravenes our commitment as a society to due process of law, and it contravenes our international commitment to the treatment of refugees. As such, it is sad indeed that the Government on the whole has rejected these well thought out amendments which the Senate in a unanimous report has passed back to this House. Not even Conservative Senators in the other place rose and objected, argued or voted against these recommendations, not one Conservative Senator.

We come back to the questions of where is the crisis, where are the solutions. This Bill is certainly not an acceptable solution. Most probably the courts will strike down the Bill. What are we doing here debating this Bill? Is it the concern of the Government to push this Bill through? I suspect that first and foremost the decision made last summer was for political reasons. The Government now would just like to pass this Bill, make it into law and have the courts overturn it, and that some future government can set about enacting a law that is workable, reasonable and compassionate. The Bill we have today will not do that. I suspect the Government is not very much interested in this matter anymore. Hopefully, in its own thinking, the Government has fulfilled its political objectives last summer when it tried to appear tough. A political knee-jerk reaction existed last summer. I do not think that speaks well of the Government. The Government lost faith and credibility at that point, and today we are cleaning up the mess.

I can stand here and read into the record various quotes from individuals. I could put on the record the words of the executive secretary of the Council of Christian Reformed Churches. I am certain that the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen) would be aware of that gentleman because many of his constituents belong to the Christian Reformed Church. In a telegram dated January 27, 1988, that gentleman said this:

• (1640)

> Government motion on C-84 inadequate and unacceptable relative to Canadian Charter and UN Convention. Senate amendments apply. Please enact these.

We see the limitations of this legislation. We see the incompetence with which the Government has handled the situation. We saw the political knee-jerk reaction last summer which brought us back here, and seven or eight months later we are still debating the issue. We will end up with a mess which I suspect will make us a laughing-stock the world over.

It is not that Members of Parliament have failed to point this out to the Government. The Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, the majority of which is made up of Conservative Members, reported to the Government, but that report has not been acted on. In fact, the Government has done the unprecedented and refused to respond to the report. Government Members themselves are not happy with this legislation and recognize its faults. Yet the Government is still insistent on continuing with it.

The Senate made several important amendments and I wish to touch on those briefly in the few remaining moments of my time. One of the important amendments in essence ensures that in the process to determine who is a security risk, those who are found to be a security risk cannot be precluded from making a refugee claim. This is important because the original legislation does just that. Without that opportunity, many of these people will be sent back to their place of origin where they could very well lose their lives.

Another important amendment deals with turning ships around. Under this legislation when the Government and its agents suspect there is a boatload of would-be refugees in international waters, it can send the Navy out there and turn that boat around and prevent them from landing. That notion has some serious flaws. First, there might be some genuine refugees on board. Their only means of getting to this country is through this kind of exercise.

Second, if we are concerned about trying to stop the unscrupulous from exploiting immigrants, let us say in Europe or other places, by selling them tickets on an old boat to come to Canada illegally and sneak into the country, you want to get them into port so you can seize the ship and arrest the crew. That is how you stop those illegal enterprises which exploit immigrants and would-be refugees. You do not just turn them around somewhere on the high seas. That does not make sense.

Third, most illegal immigrants come here not via boat but via air. Certainly we are not going to turn airplanes around in mid-air.

Another amendment which I think we should support deals with the question of aiding and abetting refugees. This is a silly part of the legislation. The Government is making it a criminal offence for anyone to help a refugee who does not possess proper papers, a visa, and so forth. For heaven's sake, in most cases people who are genuine refugees are escaping from their countries because they face physical threats from the established authority. They are not going to get exit visas. Yet we would make church and other humanitarian groups liable to criminal prosecution if they aid refugees. Surely that is crazy. There are many other parts of Bill C-84 that just do not make sense, and I suspect the courts will strike them down.

You are indicating that my time has expired, Mr. Speaker. I hope I have been able to enunciate some of the areas of concern I have about C-84, and I certainly wish to entertain questions at this time.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member finished his well thought out speech with a prediction which matches the evidence that both the House and Senate committees studying the Bill received from expert legal testimony, that this Bill will be struck down by the courts. We are not talking about one clause which is more or less controversial. We are talking about a variety of clauses which are very questionable from a constitutional standpoint and that of the Charter of Rights.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member what he predicts will be the response from the Canadian public to this situation. We have to keep in mind that the Government is trying to promote this legislation as a cure-all, the answer to the problems in the refugee determination system. However, if it is struck down by our courts, not only will we be unable to see a resolution of the problems, the situation will become worse than it is now. We will have a paralysis of policy. What does the Member see as the problem for the Government, which basically will have misled Canadians and ushered Parliament to pass legislation which contravenes the number one law in this country—our Constitution?

• (1650)

Mr. de Jong: Exactly, Mr. Speaker. I think the reaction of the Canadian people will be plain, downright anger that they have seen the Government bungle it again, that it said it had the answer to hold back the waves of would-be immigrants who would invade the country and swamp us all.

The first time this piece of legislation comes before the courts the courts will shoot it down. Our whole immigration and refugee determination system will be thrown into more massive confusion. There will be more bungling, more uncertainty, and there will be more anger expressed by the Canadian public. I think Canadians will learn that the Government cannot organize itself out of a wet paper bag.

Certainly the Government's performance on Bill C-84 strongly suggests that the incompetence which led to this piece of legislation and the pig-headedness of the Government in insisting on going through with it despite the best legal warnings in this country show that the Government does not know what it is doing and the Canadian people will hold it accountable for that.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I was not surprised when the Member put on the record the fact that not a single Conservative Senator spoke in support of the Government's position because had three Conservative Senators from Manitoba whom I know very well, Senators Roblin, Nurgitz and Spivak, supported the Government's proposal I would have believed that they had deserted the principles for which they stood for many years.

The Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen) has suggested on a number of occasions that the churches which have expressed their opposition to this Bill did so before they understood all the details of it and that some of them have changed their minds. I would like to ask the Hon. Member for his views on a letter which every Member of Parliament received from the Primate of the Anglican Church, Archbishop Michael Peers, dated January 15, 1988, in which he said in part:

> I am writing to you and every Member of Parliament to urge your support of the amendments to Bill C-84 which have been put forward in December, 1987 by the Senate of Canada. As the Primate of the Anglican Church of Canada I ask your serious consideration in light of policy positions and special resolutions of the National Executive Council of the Anglican Church of Canada that have urged corrections to the hastily drafted "emergency" legislation.

He goes on:

> Many other church and humanitarian organizations have also urged corrections.

I point out that among the many churches is the Mennonite Central Committee.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That's not a church.

Mr. Orlikow: The Minister says that the Mennonite Central Committee is not a church. I am sure he is right, but I am also certain that it has a very close association with many of the Mennonite churches.

The Archbishop attaches to his letter, which went to every Member of Parliament, a resolution passed by the National Executive Council of the Anglican Church in October, 1987, which says in part:

> That this National Executive Council requests the Primate to express to the Government and the people of Canada its deep concern that significant sections of Bill C-55 and C-84 as presently drafted:
>
> a) do not satisfy our international obligations to protect refugees and uphold procedural safeguards;
>
> b) violate sections of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms;
>
> c) do not meet the stated objectives of our immigration policy to fulfill Canada's international legal obligations with respect to refugees . . . .

Would the Hon. Member care to comment on that very clear statement by the Primate of the Anglican Church?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member has a minute and a half to answer that question.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my colleague for that question. First, I am not surprised that the Primate, Archbishop Peers, made that statement. I knew the Archbishop when he was a constituent in Regina East before being named Primate. I have had numerous discussions with him and know him to be a very decent human being who is genuinely concerned about the well-being of the community as a whole. It is not surprising to me that the Christian churches, through the Inter-Church Committee, have expressed themselves so strongly and publicly on this issue.

The Inter-Church Committee and many other Christian organizations attempt to create in this country a Christian society that has compassion, a society which opens its arms to those who are persecuted throughout the world. They strive to see the very basic and strong Christian principles embedded in our society. They view this piece of legislation as going against the image of the type of society which they would like to see Canada become. They look with horror at the attempts to destroy the basic principles found in our Constitution, our Charter of Rights, and our international commitments. That is why I am not surprised that the comments of the Primate are strong.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Is the House ready for the question? The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) will have the floor.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Member for York East (Mr. Redway) is sitting down there.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi).

Mr. Marchi: However, the Hon. Member for York East has been agitating and dying to ask a question. I will yield the floor to the Member for York East to give him the opportunity to pose his question if so instructed by the Speaker. If there are no other Members who wish to speak on the main motion, I would like to have a few minutes in order to address the motion which the Government brought before the Chamber.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would Members rather that I not see the clock and go ahead with comments by the Member for York West and the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) who will have equal time?

Mr. Marchi: I do not want to undermine Private Members' Hour between five o'clock and six o'clock. I would be pleased to make my comments on the two new government amendments following the debate in Private Members' Hour.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be better to do this after Private Members' Hour.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, just to correct the record, these are not government amendments. I want the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) to understand that. These are amendments that were brought forward from the Senate which they inadvertently left out of the message which they sent to the House of Commons. We are accommodating the Members from the other place and I want the Member for York West to understand that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--BILLS

[English]

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, December 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Nickerson that Bill C-211, an Act to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

• (1700)

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this Private Members' Bill, I understand that it is an issue in which my northern colleague has had some interest for a number of years. Having read all the background debate and considering what the Hon. Member is proposing, I must say first that while I appreciate that the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation may not serve the interests of some northern fisheries as well as he would like, I find it difficult to support this particular Private Members' Bill. Let me explain why.

One of the problems is that this corporation deals with a vast geographic area including Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Northwest Territories. Therefore, there it probably has some difficulty in working as effectively for all regions as it might. However, I cannot agree that a Bill which would do away with the essence of that corporation would indeed solve the problem. That opinion was obviously shared by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Binns) who also felt that while there might be some serious issues that could be redressed by the corporation, this Bill would not serve to do so. He felt that eliminating the mandate of the corporation would not serve the interests of any of the regions with which it dealt.

Unless there has been a change since the beginning of 1988, neither the provinces involved nor the Governments of the Territories have requested a change to this Act. Therefore, support for this Bill would be unilateral, without having the concurrence or involvement of the other jurisdictions in drafting changes they would like.

As someone from the northern territories, it seems we are always raising the issue about being consulted and playing a part in the drafting of legislation which affects us. Therefore, certainly the consultative procedure that should take place in any changes to this corporation is very important.

While the Bill attempts to address certain problems, I am not sure they concern the corporation. In my view, the problems relate more to such issues as the distances from markets in many cases, which result in great difficulty in selling products that originate a long way from the market. I suggest that changing the corporation process does not mean it will change the price that buyers will pay for the product. Since the markets now utilized by the corporation would be exactly the same as those of the independent fisheries, I fail to see how changing that will necessarily make for a better system for the fishers. The primary concern is how we can sustain the industry and make it better.

A very interesting edition of Northern Perspectives of November, 1987, dedicates an entire issue to Arctic fisheries and the need for some new approaches to Arctic fisheries. I want to mention a couple of points made in some of the articles. For example, one article informs us that in the northern territories particularly there is a large supply of fish which are underutilized in the inland fishery and that it is the high cost of production relative to the market-place that limits the development potential. I know from my own region that there are many production problems. More processing on site would effectively increase the marketing potential. A fishmarketing corporation does not necessarily impinge on that.

Another article which addresses Arctic fisheries points out that many of the limitations on the development of Arctic fisheries has not been with respect to supply or the availability of markets, but on the investors' estimates of profitability. In other words, if the investors do not think it will make money they will not invest, which is understandable. We want to develop those markets and we believe that there is a potential for them, but we suggest that this will not be accomplished by doing away with the essence of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation.

Several recommendations have been made by the Senate committee. Indeed, I believe that one major initiative is now taking place, which will hopefully address some of the problems at least for the northern and Arctic areas. These are problems which the Member for Western Arctic (Mr.

Nickerson) knows firsthand, some of which he knows better than I.

The draft fisheries policy now being prepared by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the Arctic marine conservation strategy which is being disseminated now by the Government for discussion, really provide the kind of framework for the study of this issue and for the utilization of fisheries products in consort with development, conservation issues and economic development aspects.

I believe this would be one of the most effective ways to address some of the issues of northern fisheries in particular, without taking the more heavy handed method, as I see it, of attempting to change the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act which may have a negative effect for those other sectors that the corporation serves under that Act.

I believe there are consultative processes now in place that may very effectively address some of the problems which the Member has attempted to address with this Bill. For that reason, I do not support the Bill. I believe there are many more effective ways to address the problems in this area.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). Before doing so, however, it is incumbent upon the Chair, pursuant to Standing Order 61(3), to inform the House that the reply of the mover of the original motion closes the debate.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, during this debate I have been accused many times of persistency. Some people have even gone so far as to describe that as obstinacy. For that I make no apology because it has been my observation over many years in this place that persistency pays off, especially when you have right on your side, and know that what you are doing is right and will benefit the people of Canada. In those circumstances I have found that persistency pays off in the end. I am sure it will in this case.

Since this Bill has been under debate we have heard the voices of reaction raise up. We just heard one from the other side. The Hon. Member who just spoke did not let her lack of knowledge of the fishing business interfere with her ideology.

The Freshwater Fish Marketing Board has been doing quite a lobbying job because it has a lot to fare in this issue. It has a rather cushy deal going for itself. The fishermen must sell to the FFMC at its prices. It has no competition and is beholden to no one. It has been trying to protect that rather cushy deal and has been doing much lobbying. It has even got some fishermen to sign papers saying that they are not in favour of this Bill, can you believe that? The people who did that were on the fishermen's advisory committee. They are put there by FFMC people themselves. We know what side their bread is buttered on.

• (1710)

I have not heard any real argument against this Bill. Everyone on the other side of the House has said that if this goes through, it will gut the FFMC. It will not. The FFMC will still continue to exist, but this will make it competitive.

If we can agree with a Crown corporation like Petro-Canada, and some of us do and some of us do not, we can agree with having a Crown corporation in competition with other companies in the petroleum business. There is nothing really wrong with that. It keeps Petro-Canada relatively honest—not entirely honest but relatively honest. In this case, though, there is no competition whatsoever. There is nothing by which to judge the FFMC in this area. There is in the other part of Canada that is not under government monopolistic control, the Great Lakes area where there is free enterprise and business is just a-boomin'.

I would like to say a few things that are of special interest to fishermen in the Northwest Territories. First, I would like to read into the record a telex sent by Mr. D. R. Stewart, the President of the Northwest Territories Federation of Fishermen. It was addressed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) here in Ottawa. The text reads as follows:

> This is to inform you that our N.W.T. Federation of Fishermen strongly support Dave Nickerson, our M.P., concerning his Bill C-211.

There, Sir, you can see that the fishermen of the Northwest Territories support this issue in its entirety.

In the Northwest Territories, there are special concerns. there is no inter-territorial market to speak of. We cannot sell fish locally in any quantity. It has to be exported.

There is a speciality product in the Northwest Territories. The quality of the fish, especially for smokers, is far superior to that found in southern lakes, and it should be marketed as such. It should be marketed at the premium prices that premium quality fish should command.

We have to get our fish directly to market. The way it is now, it is first caught on the lake, hauled in fresh to the plant, frozen, shipped to Winnipeg and kept in a warehouse in Winnipeg for six months or a year. Then we try to sell it to someone, but no one wants to buy that kind of fish. That fish ought to be on a table in a restaurant in Los Angeles, Chicago or New York the day after it is caught. The Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation cannot see that. However, there are people who are willing to make the investment in this business so that that can happen, but they cannot do so because the FFMC is blocking their way.

We suspect that northern fish is used to subsidize southern fish. The argument goes like this: The FFMC says, "You want some of that good quality northern fish? Before you get that, you will have to take some of the inferior stuff". I have every suspicion that that accusation is correct.

To give credit where credit is due, some of these things have been recognized by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. He has promised to consider the possibility of exempting the Northwest Territories from the monopoly. It only provides about 10 per cent of over-all sales of FFMC, so when this Bill gets into committee after second reading, that is something that can be looked at.

I would like to look at the principles involved in this matter. The principle contained in the present Act is that the freedoms of individuals, whether they be fishermen, dealers in fish or retail or wholesale merchants, are restricted. We should not do that, but we have in the case of these people. Their freedom and liberty has been restricted by an Act of Parliament.

I know that in the North and in many provinces, we can have a viable fishery. It is something that can be commercially operated at a profit and everyone can do well from it, just as they do on the Great Lakes. However, there is the Government's view that it is some kind of social scheme. People are administering grants, but we do not need to give grants or subsidies. We need to open up the markets and let the fishermen sell the fish to those new markets for the high prices it will command.

In this country, people should be free to take up the profession of fish dealing if that is what they want to do. It is unthinkable to me that we should restrict anyone from going into that profession.

Finally, I want to bring to your attention, Sir, the great debate that is occurring throughout Canada on liberalizing trade. There is a big debate about the elimination of unnecessary restrictions to interprovincial trade, whether it be in beer, wine or any other commodity. We have entered into a free trade agreement with the United States. We are looking at removing restrictions under the GATT. Let us do the same thing for freshwater fish. Let us have liberalized trade in fish. Let a fisherman have the opportunity to sell his fish to whomever he wants. Let us pass this Bill at second reading stage so that it may have the further consideration in committee that it deserves.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

I do not see five Members rising. Therefore, the motion is negatived on division.

Motion (Mr. Nickerson) negatived.

---

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard in relation to the amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, and on the motion of Mr. Lewis:

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to enter this debate again on the basis of the motion the Government tabled earlier this afternoon. The first part of the motion deals with the technical definition of the term "exigent" when a warrant does not have to be obtained by immigration officials in their search of any records, documents or premises.

The Government has now amended the clause so that the word "include" reads "mean". That obviously makes more precise the definition of the word "exigent" so that it clearly means circumstances in which the delay necessary to obtain a warrant under subsection (1) would result in danger to human life, safety or the loss or destruction of anything liable to seizure.

I think it should be pointed out that our Party's position has been to suggest that warrants ought to be obtained in the same way they are obtained under other aspects of Canadian law. As we stated during the debate, we believe that the Government tried to go too far. It has tried to make Immigration officers into Rambo-like creatures who would go across the country and on mere hunches and suspicions enter and ransack any premise to confiscate any document without good cause. It was our position therefore to try to bring some moderation and some clarity to the situation and to have the Government recognize that the provisions by which individuals obtain the necessary search warrants is a system that is working and working effectively. At the same time it protects those rights and privileges that we have as citizens.

• (1720)

We accept this part of the motion in so far as it defines more precisely the circumstances under which a warrant would not be authorized or asked for, that is to say, in the case of life and death and perhaps lots of important materials. This part of the motion grew from discussions in the other place when it was deliberating this Bill in committee. It began as a point raised by Liberal and government Senators alike. Perhaps it is the fruition of the sober second thought which some Members of the Government have called into question. This is a clear example, as is the report of the Senate, from which we will derive benefit. It is a by-product of democracy at work.

The second part of the motion introduced by the Government only a few short hours ago is the more important of the two. Under the legislation which is before us a Minister would have not only the power to turn back the boat, something with which we disagree vehemently, but he would have this power as well as being able to delegate it to his officials and other immigration officers. Our position throughout the debate has been that to turn back the boat is incorrect. It is incorrect on a number of grounds.

The Government must recognize that any boat coming in would not have on board a cargo of wheat or a cargo of steel. We are talking about boats coming into our waters carrying human cargo. There are human beings on board these boats. Obviously and logically there should be some procedure by which we can ascertain who is on board and how many people there are. We should be able to ascertain what are the ages of the people on board and the condition of their health. We should know from where they are coming and if they want to make an application in the process that is offered.

One of the reasons we have argued that the boat should be brought into port is that it is a human response to human beings who deserve at the very least our attention and due process. In this way there will not be a double standard by which people coming in by boat will be refused access into the refugee system and those arriving through our airports will have full access to that system. What we have suggested is that turning back the boat would not only disallow due process to human beings but it would also create the unfortunate situation whereby the mode of transportation will dictate the treatment which a potential refugee will receive.

That is simply unacceptable. If we have one way of proceeding with one refugee application, then the response to all applications should be consistent. It should be uniform. We cannot allow a piece of legislation to say, in effect, to one applicant, "You came in by plane. You are allowed to make a refugee application. Here is the paper and there is the office". We cannot then say to another would-be applicant in the same breath, "You have come in by boat, therefore you do not have the opportunity to make an application". However, it is most likely that that person will not even see the Canadian shores. Thus it is wrong from a human perspective. It is wrong from a procedural perspective as well. It is also wrong from the point of view maintained by this Party that such a provision will not realize the premise or the objective of the legislation which, in the Government's words, is to discourage abuse and to stop manipulators trafficking in human flesh.

We have argued that if we really want to discourage these traffickers then one does not do so by very weakly turning back the boat. Any captain smuggling human beings would obviously have cash on delivery. He would have the money even before his passengers were on board. Therefore, any captain will say to himself, "Well, I have a 50/50 chance. There is a 50 per cent chance that I will get into the country and a 50 per cent chance that I will not. Therefore I will simply go out a little further, dump my cargo overboard or bring it to another part of the Canadian coastline, perhaps undetected, or even deposit these human beings on someone else's shore in another country". It really does not make any difference to the captain because he will have collected his profit already.

We have suggested, as has every single witness who came before the legislative committee of the House of Commons as well as those who appeared before the Senate committee, that if we want to discourage these kinds of traffickers, then for goodness' sakes let us escort them into port. Let the Coast Guard officials bring them into a port of our country. Let us discourage any would-be smuggler from ever coming into Canada again by making a clear example of the captain and the crew that we have under supervision. Once we have them in port we will be able to prosecute such individuals under the law. If they are found guilty, then they can be fined or imprisoned. We can also confiscate the boat and sell it if the individual is found guilty.

We have said that that would send the clearest and strongest message to any other captain who might be loading a boat to make a similar run. If the news were to get back to a port that a captain was fined or he and his crew were imprisoned, that his ship was confiscated, then I believe that that would discourage others from leaving for Canada. Yet if the captain of a second boat heard that the worst thing that happened to the first crew was that they were simply turned around, then I think that that captain would proceed.

We have suggested that if the Government wants to convince Canadians that it wants to stop abuse, then it must follow up with procedures that will allow one to realize that goal rather than playing and indulging in public relations gimmickry which does nothing to discourage people. It somehow satisfies the appetite of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who can say to Canadians, "We are turning back a boat," as if that would really buy him the popularity which he seeks.

• (1730)

On the strength of the testimony received in committee, we in the Liberal Party believe that Canadians are much wiser than the Government gives them credit for Canadians will understand, as I have understood, that there are ways of discouraging abuse and further trafficking, and that turning back a boat does not in fact do that.

By having the crew and the captain in our port, we will be able to interrogate those people. We will ask them, "How much money did you charge? How was it organized? Who else is involved? How extensive is the ring? Where else does the network plan to hit? When? How many people?"

Therefore, as a country we would be much wiser and have at our fingertips more information with which to combat and stop the disgusting network of human beings taking advantage of serious situations in the world, and trying to strangle the individual into coughing up their last dollar saved in order to give them misleading information about the promised land.

If we were able to bring the boat in, as a country we would be one step closer to breaking down this illegal, immoral human trade. Yet the Government wants to wash its hands of the whole matter and turn the boat around, as if that would allow us as a country to protect ourselves better. If the boat is turned around, who is to know that the next day another boat will not dock in Vancouver, or the day after in Toronto?

If we send a concerted message that we will deal with those people in the harshest manner possible under due process of the law, and if we send a message that we want to break down this network and get at the epicentre and paralyze it in order that this business would come to an end, then we will be respected. People will say that Canada is taking serious action to stop this type of business. They will be looking for other markets but not Canada.

This would also send a message to other countries and our allies that this is the answer. If Canada imposed this type of tough response, and if that was complemented by other countries doing likewise, then we would be able to overcome this problem on a world-wide basis, rather than having countries turning back boats only to see different boats landing at different times in their country.

How many times can the Government recall Parliament in the middle of the summer and get away with it? How many times can the Government create a crisis? How many times can a progressive and important policy such as the immigration policy afford to be undermined by a Government that is not serious about stopping the problem that it talks about?

Therefore, we are saying that now is our window of opportunity. Now, when the public has focused its attention, because there are many competing issues, is the time for Parliament to deal with it swiftly and correctly rather than in a number of years having Canadians say, "I thought you took care of that. Parliament was recalled on an emergency. You passed legislation that you told us would solve the problem". What is the Government going to tell those Canadians, and why it did not pass the legislation that it should have? In a sense, we are trying to avoid a problem that I envision if this legislation goes through.

The specific motion before us again came from deliberations in the other place. It came from discussions with the Minister and with his staff at committee and after committee. In the report, Senators, including Senators from the government side, vehemently opposed the concept of turning back the boat. But they said that if the Government is to persist with this clause, if the Minister is inflexible, as he was during the summer months, at the very least the power of turning back a boat should be vested solely in the Minister and/or his Deputy Minister.

As the legislation presently stands, it would allow the Minister to delegate this very regressive power to various deputies and officials of the Immigration Department. In its wisdom, the Senate decided that, if this clause is not removed from the Bill, which it hoped the Government would do, then at least the authority under which this can happen should be restricted.

I believe that that amendment proposed by the Senate and introduced today is the lesser of two evils. We hope that in the dying days of discussion here in the forum of the House of Commons before this Bill gets sent back to the Senate, the Minister and the Government can reach out for the consensus that exists in the House and across the country to change this clause. I am hopeful still that the Minister will extend the flexibility that he has shown in recognition that they have erred in a number of important clauses, in order that when it goes to the other place they will have one less thing to worry about.

In the likelihood that they do not, I believe that the House should approve the idea suggested by the Senate that the power to turn back a boat only be vested in the Minister and his Deputy Minister. First, because it is a power that should not be taken lightly. We should not have an immigration official in Nova Scotia, Victoria, or Toronto making that decision. The Minister might not be there. He might be in Cabinet or have other pressing matters to deal with. Immigration officials should not be allowed to make a decision that can affect human beings.

We are suggesting that, if anyone, the Minister should at least be the one to say yes or no to turning back a boat, not only because he is the most important official of the entire Department, but also because he would be politically accountable for what would be a very important decision. Any official out there could be lost in the woodwork, could state that he or she is not politically responsible to the House of Commons, they were doing their job, or there was a communication breakdown. We do not want those excuses when we might have human blood on our hands. At least let us make this decision politically accountable to the electors of this country, as it should be.

From the vantage point that the decision would be very important, we believe that this amendment would be worthy of the support of this Chamber. In closing, I hope that this will not be made necessary if we change the clause regarding turning back the boat, as suggested by the Senate report.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to explain what has not been dealt with until now by the Government's motion and by the comments of the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi). I fully agree with the comments made by the Hon. Member. I would like to add a couple of comments of my own on each point.

The first part of the motion is:

That of Bill C-84 be further amended in Clause II by striking out line 2 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

""exigent circumstances" mean circum-"

• (1740)

In other words, on page 13 we have this section: "For the purposes of subsection (5)", which is the one going before, "'exigent circumstances' include circumstances in which the delay necessary to obtain a warrant under subsection (1) would result in danger to human life or safety or the loss or destruction of anything liable to seizure". What they are talking about is subsection (5) in Section 103.02. This is a general section which allows officers to seize a boat or to seize anything, and subsection (5) says that an immigration officer or a peace office may exercise any of the powers referred to in subsection (1) without a warrant, if the conditions for obtaining the warrant exist but by reason of exigent circumstances it would not be practical to obtain the warrant.

My Party and I do not agree with this section. We think it is excessive, and therefore we do not agree with this subsection. However, since our objections have been overridden by the Government and Parliament, and the objections of the other place have been overridden by the Government, there is this one very small change to which the Government has agreed and with which my Party and I agree. In other words, it is a question of limiting the scope of this subsection which says that they can take the action without a warrant if there are exigent circumstances that would not make it practical to get a warrant.

The way they had written it first was broad enough to drive a herd of elephants through. They said that exigent circumstances include circumstances in which the delay necessary to obtain a warrant would result in danger to life or safety or destruction of anything liable to seizure. Now they limit it to say that exigent circumstances mean those circumstances. They cannot use any other circumstances. If they cannot prove that delay to get a warrant would result in danger to human life, or that it would result in danger to human safety, or that it would result in the loss or destruction of anything liable to seizure, anything that they have a right to seize; if they cannot prove one of those three points, then of course they cannot act without that warrant.

It seems like a very reasonable point, and I am glad that the other place pointed out the utter folly of opening it wide open by saying: "Well, it just includes those reasons, but of course a judge would have to say, if the question came up, that it could go far beyond those reasons". This is a small improvement on an otherwise bad clause, but the clause is going through, so I am glad to have the damage limited a little bit in that sense.

The other part of the motion is more important. It reads:

That the Bill be further amended in Clause 16 by striking out line 16 at page 24 and substituting the following therefor:

"82.1(2), 83(1) and 91.1(1), and any such power,".

Standing by itself of course that does not mean anything to anybody. However, when we look at page 24, we find that this is the section which gives the Minister or the Deputy Minister the authority to delegate their power to officials of the Department and, in the middle of a long paragraph that delegates that power, there are certain exceptions made, certain actions for which the Minister or Deputy Minister are not permitted to delegate their power. Only the Minister or the Deputy Minister may do the things listed here. There is a number of them, but in the line we are dealing with it is 82.1(2), 83(1), and now they are adding 91.1(1). In other words, this limits the authority of the Minister to leave an important decision to a lower official.

When we turn to 91.1 we find that it is in fact a very important decision. This decision, 91.1, is the decision to turn back the ship. I think all the people who have spoken against this Bill, either when it was in the House or when it was in the other place, would agree that this is a good amendment.

The clause itself is an outrageous one, as has been said by everybody who has spoken to this during the past-half year and more, except of course for the Minister and his officials. They are the only ones who defended it. The clause says that the Minister has the power to turn back a ship at sea.

I won't repeat what I have said in the House, what many others have said in the House, or what the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) has just said. I won't repeat how bad that clause is, but bad as it is to have the danger to the passengers, bad as it is to have the failure to punish the captain, this amendment can limit the damage that would be done because only the Minister or his Deputy can do it.

Pardon me, I have been mistaken. It is not the Minister's Deputy. Only the Minister can do it. If the Minister believes on reasonable grounds that a vehicle within our territorial waters is bringing any person into Canada in contravention of the Act, and so on, he may, after having regard to the safety of the vehicle and the convention and the vehicle's contents, direct the vehicle to leave, and so on.

If that were left as it had been and any minor official could have that power delegated to him, and if there were disaster because of it, or if the law were made ineffective because people were turned away and slipped back again the next night, and if that were done by a minor official, the Minister could escape responsibility; perhaps fire the official but the Minister would escape responsibility and the public would have no real recourse, legal or political.

However, with this amendment nobody in the land except the Minister will be able to order a ship to be turned back. If the Minister does that, he knows that he will be subject to very close public scrutiny for what he has done. He knows that if the law is mocked because the captain just goes away and tries again, or he knows that if there is evidence that passengers have been harmed as a result of that turning away of the ship, then he pays the political price for it as a Minister. He is publicly accountable for what he has done either to the passengers or to the law in that case.

Therefore, I am sure that the Minister will be very careful about what he does. It is even quite possible that he may not use that power. Unfortunately, that still does not deal with the point that we have been making, that it will be better to arrest the ship or whatever is the naval term, or seize the ship at sea by the power of our Coast Guard or whatever we need, and the captain and the passengers, and bring them into port. If the captain is believed to have done wrong, charge him and try him according to the law, and the passengers should be dealt with according to our law as those who have come to the country. Perhaps some of them will have come without proper visas and so on. Perhaps some will claim refugee status.

• (1750)

That would have been a much better way of dealing with it, but the Government has consistently refused to carry out effectively what it said last summer was absolutely urgent and necessary. It could have had that law passed through both Houses and proclaimed law last August if the Government had seriously carried out what it said it intended to do so, which was to enact a measure to discourage this kind of dishonest action by a captain. It did not seriously intend to do that. The public begged and urged the Government to do that, but it would not. That chance is now being lost by the action of the Government. Nevertheless, the folly and the potential active harm is limited because the Minister will know that he and no one else is answerable to the public.

There is one further piece of harm though, which even this amendment will not prevent. This law has already sent a contrary signal to many other countries and Governments in the world. There were Governments, especially in the southwestern Pacific, which had been turning ships away. The Vietnamese boat people ships, in particular, were turned away, let go adrift at sea, and they were pushed off the beach. Canada was in the lead of the western countries which rebuked them for that and said the action was inhuman. Civilized people do not treat boat people like that. We urged them to stop the practice. We even offered at that time to take the burden of some of those refugees. The United Nations High Commission for Refugees was very thankful for Canada's strong voice saying it is wrong to turn ships away at sea.

Now Canada has said, according to the Government, that it has changed its mind. Canadian people, to whom the Nansen Medal was awarded, have not said that. Every public delegation and every non-departmental delegation which spoke on this spoke against turning away the ships. But the action of the Canadian Government now sends a message, whether to the Philippines, Thailand, Malaysia, to Singapore, on to whoever it is in the southwestern Pacific, saying that Canada has reversed its position. It is now decided that civilized nations like Canada can and will turn ships away at sea.

The misfortune is that even if the Minister, or perhaps another Minister who follows him or has more sense than this Minister, never applies that clause and never turns a ship away at sea, the example is set by that clause, by its adoption in this House last year and by the motion that the Government wishes to have adopted now. It is a very destructive one and will seriously damage the whole work of refugee protection throughout the world, not just in Canada.

I regret very much that the Government has been so hard-hearted and willing to contradict the stand that Canada took as recently as two years ago over the wrongness of turning away ships. But at least, as I say, the potential damage is now to be restricted by this amendment. I would assume that the House will be adopting the last motion unanimously.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, both the Hon. Member for the Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) and I were trying to get the floor.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I already asked whether the House was ready for the question. The Hon. Member for Regina West—

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, maybe it is easy to miss me, but the Hon. Member for the Yukon was on her feet.

An Hon. Member: She was not.

An Hon. Member: The question was called several times.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe that there was some sort of agreement among House Leaders prior to the Hon. Member coming into the Chamber that both the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) and the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) would be heard on the motion of the Minister of State and that we would then put the question. If there is unanimous consent to hear the Hon. Member, fine. We have all evening.

Mr. Benjamin: I was on my House Leader's list.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Government does very much want to proceed with this legislation and we would like to see a vote right now. But I was not in my place to hear the suggestion that there had been an agreement. To the best of my knowledge I must tell the Chair there has been no agreement that the list would be finished.

There was general agreement that the list was petering out, but by no means was there an agreement that the number of speakers would be curtailed. We have to so advise the Chair.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry there appears to be some misunderstanding with respect to the agreement we reached earlier this afternoon. That agreement was simply to allow the critics for the two opposition Parties to speak on the last motion, which we did not have to allow but we did. If we had not made that agreement, the critics would not have been able to speak on that motion since they had already spoken on the main motion. We agreed to treat the motion as if it had been part of the main motion in the first place.

Mr. Lewis: That is correct.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I must say that we did not have to deal with this motion, and one would have thought that there would have been some forbearance on the part of the Government with respect to a motion to extend the hours of sitting. If that was not the case, we will remember it for another occasion.

I do want to say that there has been some misunderstanding with respect to the agreement reached earlier. I respectfully say to you that if your reason for not recognizing the Hon. Member from Saskatchewan, who is seeking the floor, was that there was an agreement to stop the debate after the two opposition critics have spoken, then I respectfully submit that the grounds for your decision are not accurate. I ask you to take my comments into account.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have no problem with that.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I want to confirm what my two colleagues have indicated. The agreement was to allow the two critics to have an opportunity to make some remarks on the main motion and that we would then follow the normal procedures of this House in terms of Members speaking.

Mr. Lewis: That is right.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House will recognize the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe I have spoken yet on the main motion. I do have some matters that I want to raise as a result of my own experience and what I have learned from Canadian history on this issue.

A little study of Canadian history shows that Canadians for about the last 200 years have aided and abetted people on numerous occasions getting into this country who claim to be and turn out to be refugees. There were a few—there will always be some who get through the net for a while—who turned out not to be refugees. Our history tells us that Canadians without or in spite of the federal authorities' approval have helped refugees. That has occurred on countless occasions in our history even before Confederation.

• (1800)

People who came to this country in its earliest days were escaping from dictatorship, privation, starvation, imprisonment, and constant fear for their lives. I suppose what we call a refugee today would not be the same in the terminology used then. However, they were refugees of some kind from regimes under which they could not live in peace and with some degree of security and opportunity. Over the years hundreds of thousands of Canadians have gone to extraordinary lengths to help those people without the support or approval of federal authorities. I think about the underground railroad from about 1850 to the middle 1860s when churches and individuals aided and abetted the smuggling into this country of blacks from anywhere and everywhere in the U.S. It was smuggling, in many instances, at great peril to both the smuggler and the person being smuggled. In those days they did not suffer the approbation of the federal authority or what passed for any kind of immigration appeal board. No one in this House would now denigrate or decry the efforts made by those people in that operation.

Let us come to later years. I remember as a youngster in what was then and is still called today a white Anglo-Saxon Protestant family, hearing the grown-ups talk about all those bohunks who got into this country during and following World War I right up to the beginning of World War II. Those people came here from many parts of Europe in the 1920s and 1930s. Thank goodness! Some of the children and grandchildren of those so-called bohunks occupy this Chamber. Had we a law in place such as is proposed by the Government, they would not have made it.

We were called back here on August 18 for a so-called national emergency. Some 157 people showed up in a boat off the coast of Nova Scotia. Did the people of that province rise up in arms and say "You cannot let these people in"? No, they welcomed them, made them peanut butter sandwiches and tea and coffee and gave them shelter. That seems to me to be the state of mind and attitude of the people of this country. Yet the Government reacted with the typical 19th century mindless, inconsiderate attitude which has existed among many previous federal Governments in this country going back well over 100 years, to our everlasting shame. I suppose it is because of that everlasting shame that so many Canadians remember and do not want to repeat the same errors of omission and commission.

A boatload of Sikhs arrived off the shores of this country about 80 years ago. It caused an uproar. Our national authorities said those people could not be admitted. They had been escaping oppression, some of it under British colonial rule, and of course some 80 years ago we were still something of a British colony. There was much official approbation about allowing these Sikh refugees in, and refugees are what they would be under today's terms given the conditions under which they were living 80 years ago. About 30 years later a boat carrying over 900 Jewish refugees arrived off Canada's shores. We turned them away.

There are some very old teachings in Christianity about sanctuary. It applies even to our actual physical church buildings in which one can seek sanctuary. Sanctuary can take a variety of forms for a variety of reasons. I think this country was victimized by what could at best be called panic button pushing last August because 157 Tamils arrived off our shores from Sri Lanka, via West Germany, or anywhere else. The response of the Government with this legislation flies in the face of the activities of hundreds of thousands of Canadians for something over 150 years, the provision of sanctuary. They provided succour in aiding and abetting those people to enter Canada. Three or four generations later many of their great grandchildren and great great grandchildren are honoured citizens of this nation. To bring in a law in this day and age that makes people who are active in helping refugees from many nations guilty of aiding and abetting the entry of those poor souls into our nation flies in the face of our history and I strongly and profoundly believe flies in the face of how most Canadians sincerely and strongly feel about this matter.

Of course, there will be a few, a very small few, who will abuse and misuse our generosity, our humanitarian instincts, our traditions, and our history. There will be some, no doubt about it, but I would rather take a chance on the few who would abuse our hospitality and sanctuary and err than penalize the vast majority who are entitled, under all the international agreements to which we are party and under our own history and activities as Canadians for over a century and a half, to the fullest consideration under our law.

• (1810)

Our law has gradually become more generous as time has passed. For many years we have been generally in concert with the United Nations Declaration on Refugees and Human Rights. We have been ahead of most countries, even with some, and behind a few others. However, generally speaking we have a reasonably good record. I think that is mainly because the overwhelming majority of Canadians do not want to repeat the terrible acts of omission and commission carried out by governments of the day in previous times in our country.

I do not think any Hon. Member of this House wants to be a party to retrogressing to the attitudes and states of mind which prevailed on earlier occasions. Surely we can do no less than to extend the fullest process to anyone and everyone who comes to our shores claiming refugee status. Our laws must provide to the fullest extent for complete hearings, even when there is doubt, just as we treat our veterans of four wars.

If there is any doubt, the benefit of the doubt goes to the veteran. If there is any doubt with regard to those who want sanctuary in our nation but we cannot prove differently under the rule of law, the benefit of doubt must go to the person to whom we are giving sanctuary until they themselves, by their actions and deeds, prove otherwise. Surely that is the least we can do in a society which claims to be civilized and humanitarian, which claims to adhere to international agreements and treaties.

I am endeavouring to be non-partisan because I think there are many people of all political stripes in this nation who feel as do you and I, Sir, about the people who seek sanctuary, who are escaping from things about which our forefathers knew but which we do not comprehend. Our forefathers were able to get here by one means or another, and I like to think that the generations in this Chamber and the generations out there younger than us will remember that because they learned of it from their parents, grandparents, and great-grandparents.

Everyone who came to this country since 1982 could, I suppose, in the vernacular of the day when I was a child, be called bohunks regardless of from which country they came. My grandfather came out of the pits and mines in Wales. He was poor and ended up working on the CPR tracks in the interior of British Columbia in 1902. I suppose you could call him a white Anglo-Saxon bohunk, the terminology which we used in reference to people who came from central and eastern Europe in the twenties and thirties and the fifties and sixties. It is interesting to study history and consider who the people are who make up this nation, from where they came, and what they contributed.

In the name of humanity, in the name of Christian ethics, in the name of mankind, even if we err and let some slip through the net who could be terrorists, I would rather err on that side than take a chance of excluding 156 of 157 Tamils who are not terrorists and do not have a criminal record. I would rather take a chance on a handful slipping through and taking advantage of our system than condemn thousands and thousands by withholding from them a Christian, civilized, and democratic right to sanctuary, decent treatment, and the fullest benefit of our laws and society.

The Government has risen to temporary and so-called public opinion against people who would abuse our system to get ahead in the line-up. There are ways of correcting getting ahead in the line-up. You do not stop the whole darn line-up just to satisfy a small minority in this nation who have some ancient, archaic, and out-moded idea about the purity of the Canadian system. If it were not for the contribution to this country by people of every race and religion known to mankind, our nation would not be as good as it is.

I ask that the Government go back to the drawing board and reconsider what it is doing. I am the last one in this Chamber to express any sympathy for the other place. I have been one of those, since I was much younger, who believe it should be abolished, that it is an anachronism of the 19th century. However, I will give members of that place credit, along with many Members in this Chamber, for standing up against a bad piece of legislation and for trying to make a bad piece of legislation better. I hope the Government will accept that and accept many of these amendments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize Members for questions and comments or further debate I would like to recognize the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) on a point of order.

• (1820)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among the House Leaders and I think you will find general agreement to the following proposition:

That the vote on the business before the House be deferred until 6 p.m. Wednesday, tomorrow;

That it has been agreed that there will be no quorum calls by Members of the House during the process of the rest of debate;

That there will be no need to force a recorded division;

That it has been understood that that recorded division will be at 6 p.m., Wednesday, and;

That when no other speaker seeks the floor the House will be adjourned until 2 p.m. Wednesday next.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, what the Deputy Government House Leader said does reflect the understanding we reached in the discussions a few minutes ago. However, I want to add one suggestion. If the business before the House tomorrow afternoon, that is report stage of Bill C-60, concludes before six o'clock, such that there is a vote on that report stage before six o'clock, then the vote on this measure be taken immediately after the vote or votes on report stage of Bill C-60 so that there will be no hiatus between the end of report stage of Bill C-60 and six o'clock.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am amenable to that suggestion. In order that we do not keep anyone else on tenter hooks during that period, I suggest that if there is a time gap the Government would not intend to call any more business other than Bill C-60 and we could agree to postpone that vote until six o'clock as well.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to lend our support for this request for unanimous consent to enable the vote to be deferred. However, I feel moved to indicate that earlier today we also agreed to provide unanimous consent for the Government to introduce two motions that it felt appropriate. We all agreed to do that.

I want to say that it is unfortunate that we are debating this tonight as a result of a Government initiative, going against the traditions of this House as we normally do business. It is unfortunate that the Government decided to move in this way, in terms of encouraging more co-operation from the Opposition in the future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is my first opportunity to debate the main import of the motion that has been proposed by the Government. I want to support the comments made by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) in expressing regret at the fact the Government has decided to prolong the sitting of the House tonight rather than carry on as normal.

I am concerned about that because I think this is bad legislation. Rather than listening to what the Senate and people from this Party and the Official Opposition have been trying to tell the Government, it is determined to barrel through. While I do not know its agenda, it seems to want to barrel through with a proposal that will prove unworkable, unconstitutional, that will ultimately sour relations with many countries in the world and certainly offend many well-meaning Canadians who are concerned about Canada's role as a safe haven for victims of oppression in different parts of the world.

Let me remind the House that the kind of efforts that have been made to scare Canadians and make them paranoid about refugees coming to this country are entirely unjustified. There has been absolutely no evidence that people who have claimed refugee status to come into Canada have turned out to be threats to the national security of this country. In fact, it is remarkable the degree to which refugees who, having found a safe haven, have settled down to become productive members of our society, often under difficult circumstances because of the difference between their homeland from which they were forced to flee and this country.

This legislation is reprehensible because of the degree to which it will make Canadians criminals. Even if the Deputy Attorney General is required to sign a process against people who are deemed to have been assisting in the illegal entry into Canada of people claiming to be refugees, most refugees apart from those who are well heeled financially are probably breaking some law. They arrive here without papers from their home country because of an oppressive Government that will not give them travel documents or permit them to leave the country legally. If they do not have travel documents they cannot get a Canadian visa.

If they went to a Canadian high commission or embassy in their home country they would immediately be marked by the secret police of a dictatorial government in their homeland as someone trying to buck the regime by leaving. We saw the example of a person in El Salvador who sought a visa and was subsequently killed by the death squads before she was able to leave and come to Canada with the Canadian permit she was able to get. The act of seeking the paper was enough for her to become a marked woman and, as a consequence, she was killed.

Canadians who respond to that kind of situation will be subject to prosecution. Whether or not that prosecution takes place, nevertheless it will have a chilling effect on those Canadians who may wish to reach out and seek to give sanctuary to people coming in.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have had some experience in these matters, because during the sixties I was directly involved in a program to help Americans who were refugees because they were dodging the draft in their country during the war in Vietnam.

Mr. Speaker, some of these Americans were risking very severe penalties, because they were already enrolled in the Armed Forces and subsequently deserted to come to Canada. Fortunately, the Secretary of State for External Affairs at the time, Mr. Mitchell Sharp—in fact, I discussed the matter with him recently—had established at the beginning of the two World Wars, when Canada was at war with Germany and the United States had not yet entered the war . . . What did the Americans do about Canadians who left Canada to go to the United States, after breaking the law in this country and deserting from the Canadian Army? The United Stares took them in. Mr. Sharp decided that in this case the Government would do likewise.

Nevertheless, when I was helping these people who challenged U.S. policy, I was uneasy, even if I was not breaking the law. When I went to the border to help someone cross the Canadian border to enter Canada legally, after they had first entered Canada illegally as visitors intending to stay in Canada, I was worried. It was a scary experience.

Now suppose we tell priests and members of religious communities and all those people who want to help: You will be subject to severe penalties. You will be committing a crime by helping refugees. In that case, the safe haven now afforded by Canada will disappear.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote the Senate Committee's report where it says, in summarizing the testimony given by the vast majority of witnesses who appeared before the Committee, and I quote:

> All of the witnesses before the Committee agreed that abuse of our immigration laws must stop. However, they pointed out that the drastic measures in this bill will not affect only those who would come to abuse our refugee system. For example, any person approaching our borders without proper documents—whether, engaged in a fraudulent scheme or fleeing from persecution and danger—would be subject to the same measures.

So here is the problem, Mr. Speaker. A Canadian who helps and provides a safe haven for one of these refugees may incur sanctions under the Criminal Code of Canada, no matter whether the individual has gained fraudulent entry into Canada or whether he will simply not flee from persecution and danger.

> This individual might be detained for a month without his case being the object of impartial review . . .

Now it would be seven days.

> If he was engaged in resistance against the government of the country from which he fled, he might be detained longer and described as being a security threat.

No change, Mr. Speaker, and the Canadian Security Intelligence Service might decide that this individual who claims refugee status is indeed a threat against the security of a government. Then one of the reasons why this individual fled from his native country is that his security was threatened and the government of his country treated him as if he was a threat to the security of the country. Had the individual been engaged in resistance against the government of the country from which he escaped, he could be detained much longer and considered as being a security threat here in Canada, never mind the fact that there is no proof that these refugees—as a class—who came to Canada, and we did welcome hundreds of thousands of refugees over the past forty years, are a threat to Canadian security.

Again I quote the Senate committee:

> Canadians who assist people arriving in Canada without the necessary documents would be subject to prosecution, including those doing humanitarian work by looking after refugees, the very field of activity where Canada has gained international recognition.

Mr. Speaker, our international reputation will be tarnished as a result of Bill C-84.

• (1830)

[English]

As well, I am worried that a lot of what we are talking about is not necessary. Earlier today, I pointed out that there was a consensus that had emerged about how Canada's refugee determination process could be tightened up and accelerated so that false refugee claimants would very quickly find themselves sent back to their homelands at great cost. They would have paid refugee or immigration counsellors, they would have paid for their flights, they might have sold their farms or businesses but then found themselves a month or two later on their way back to their homelands, much the poorer for the experience of having tried to enter Canada by declaring themselves refugees and having their claims determined to be unfounded.

Word gets out pretty quickly. There would be articles in the press and electronic media in those counties indicating that 200 or so refugee claimants were returned from Canada. The message would pass through the village market-places, the cities and towns, the clubs and sporting events, "Do not try to come to Canada if you do not have a case". We would very quickly see that particular source of refugee claimants dry up. People would no longer try to avoid the rules or jump the queue in that way.

In addition, I think we need to be talking quite seriously about the whole question of immigration levels. We know that Canada is one of the most desirable countries in the world. In many ways, it is even more desirable than the United States because Canada has a much better network of social security and because people see that this country does not have the negative downside which is the underside of the American dream.

Could I ask for order, Mr. Speaker, from my hon. colleagues?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. If Hon. Members wish to have conversations, could they please have them behind the curtain? I am referring to both the Hon. Member's colleague and the other colleague. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has the floor for debate and cannot seem to hear himself speak in the Chamber. If the Hon. Member does have something to say, could he say it behind the curtain?

Mr. Lesick: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Of course, I always respect opposition Members whenever they do speak, but whenever one of their Members comes to speak to me regarding an important matter, I would hope that he would remove his earplugs so that he could hear himself better than he hears us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would appreciate some decorum. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has the floor.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I was saying that I am very concerned about the whole question of levels of immigration. One of the reasons people have tried to use the refugee process rather than normal immigration channels is because those normal immigration channels have been plugged. Levels of immigration are far below the targets set every year. The targets themselves are inadequate. Net immigration for Canada is far below what we need for the potential we have in this country. Frankly, with the potential Canada offers, I believe that we ourselves are in danger of giving offence by not bearing our share of those persons who wish to come here.

The immigration policy is now putting so much emphasis and person power on encouraging entrepreneurial immigrants that the brothers, sisters and friends of the people who live in my constituency who do not happen to have those advantages cannot get into Canada. Some of them wind up saying they are refugees because that is a way they have found to get into Canada when they cannot come in the front door. I am afraid that that is one of the realities of the situation now.

If we could just take some of the resources that go into the refugee process and use them to encourage, in a way that is fair and open, the necessary increases in immigration and in services to immigrants once they have arrived here, we might be in a healthier situation than the one we are in right now. Unfortunately, the Government has not been prepared to do that. As a consequence, we have instead Bill C-84.

I must ask myself what in fact is the agenda the Government is pursuing. It is trying to make Canadians believe that there is an absolute fleet of boats waiting to come to Canada, so they will cut it off. The total number of boatloads of people seeking to come to Canada in the life of this Government has been two.

Whether it is Sikhs from India or Tamils from Sri Lanka, there certainly is a case for considering that those persons may in fact have some legitimate claims as refugees. Those claims can and should be determined quickly so that if people are eligible to stay, they may stay, and if they are not eligible to stay, they will be sent back to their homelands.

It is worth noting that Punjab in India which I visited last March is in a state of governor's rule, rule by the central government, and there are some dreadful atrocities taking place there. It is a very unhappy place. We know that the Indian Army has been involved in Sri Lanka and as well there have been acts in Sri Lanka which appear to be violations of human rights directed against the Tamil population. There is a war-like state in portions of that country because of the situation between the Tamils and the majority population. It is not necessarily easy for any of us to reach a snap judgment and say, "Well, anybody who is a Tamil coming into Canada is obviously not a refugee, or anybody who is a Sikh coming into Canada is obviously not a refugee". To some extent that depends on the rules and on their interpretation which is why we have a refugee determination process.

• (1840)

It is clear that situations change over time. For example, a Palestinian who sought to come into Canada as a refugee six months ago might not have been acceptable at that time. It might be that under the refugee determination rules which are in force now Palestinians seeking to enter Canada today would be considered eligible since conditions have changed in a regrettable way in the West Bank and in the Gaza Strip. I do not know. I think we need to have some kind of flexibility about all of this. If it is felt that the level of refugees coming into the country is totally excessive, then I believe we have to consider that. But that is not the case now. We are talking about perhaps 10 per cent at the most of the total number of immigrants coming into Canada. I believe that is a tolerable level for a country which has been as open hearted as Canada has been.

I just had some new cards printed up for use in my constituency. They state, "Member of Parliament, député, deputato", which represents three of the linguistic groups in my riding. They are also in Vietnamese, Chinese and Arabic. We know the situation in Lebanon which is from where most of the population of Arab origin in my riding come. We know the situation in Vietnam and that so many people fled that country to come to Canada as refugees. It is worth noting that a significant number of the Chinese who are now here in Canada were also refugees either from Vietnam or in certain cases from the People's Republic. This is the ethnic mix in just one central city constituency.

My forebear back in the 1820s was subject to oppression by the British who brought Protestants into Ireland to take the best land. They sucked the country dry at the time of the Great Famine. In the 1840s Ireland was actually a net exporter of food. Yet the people were starving to the point where the population fell by 1 million or more in the course of 10 or 15 years. Eventually, my ancestor had a fight with his landlord and came to Canada the next day. The rest of the family followed. They made a great contribution to Canada.

When I was a young boy growing up in Toronto in the 1940s there was talk that I deplore about what were called displaced persons, DPs, refugees. The Reichmanns might have been considered DPs or refugees. Frank Stronach, the owner of Magna International, might have been considered that as well. I asked myself if someone had helped Frank Stronach into the country, would he or she now be subject to the penalties that are to be found in Bill C-84? The answer is quite probably yes.

If someone like Frank Stronach came today from Africa or from Asia and could not obtain direct transit to come into the country or could not afford it, then could he come into Canada as a refugee under this Bill? The answer is no. That is why when the vote is taken tomorrow my colleagues and I will oppose the Government's rejection of the Senate amendments on Bill C-84. I plead with the Government to review the situation to try to make a decision on the basis of consensus rather than on the basis of confrontation.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), who has a great deal of experience in his constituency and in some of his previous work in the matter of immigration. I think his comments are quite relevant to the basic problem that is before us.

One of the points that he made is that this Bill is likely to offend many other nations. I can think of various ways that it might offend either the nation from which refugees come, the nation to which a ship is returned, the nation owning the ship or other nations which are concerned with helping refugees.

I am wondering if the Hon. Member will explain a little further. I know that he is actively concerned with matters concerning the external affairs of Canada. He has been on parliamentary delegations and visited places such as India. Can he tell us what he thinks will be the offensive impact of Bill C-84 on some of the other nations with which we have to deal, whether they are nations in the western hemisphere, Europe, Africa or Asia?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) for his question. I would say that we are talking about two groups of nations. One group will be delighted at this legislation, or will at least tend to support it. The other group will be offended.

Which are the countries which will be delighted by this legislation? I think that General Pinochet will be delighted by it. I think that General Mobutu will be delighted that Canada will not serve as a haven for refugees from his oppressive regime in Zaire. I think that President Botha of South Africa will be pleased with the legislation which, among other things, may make it harder for members of the African National Congress to come to Canada. I could go on and on in terms of citing repressive and oppressive regimes around the world which, if they notice what Canada is doing, will note that for once Canada is lining up with their views of the world and not with the view that has been traditionally taken by Canada.

Who will be offended by this legislation? I think that groups such as the Red Cross in Geneva and world-wide will be offended by it. I think that Amnesty International, which has been fighting for human liberties and rights around the world, will be offended by it. I think that the various Helsinki watch groups, remnants of which still survive in parts of the Soviet Union and some of the eastern European countries, will be offended by it. I think that those countries at the United Nations which have looked to Canada to provide leadership in the field of international human rights will be deeply offended by this legislation. They will see that far from adding to the solution of human rights problems that Canada is in a small way becoming a part of the problem.

One of the most dangerous features of this legislation is the following. Canada, through Bill C-84, is setting a precedent which will reinforce certain countries in western Europe which have been unduly tightening their refugee legislation and which may encourage other countries that have not done so to do so in the future. In other words, legislation such as this feeds on itself. In other countries there are immigration bureaucrats who will say to their ministers or legislators, "Look, Canada saw that it had to bring in Draconian legislation, we had better do the same thing. Canada is turning people away. If we do not do something then all of the people that Canada turns away will come to us". We will feed paranoia rather than aid generosity.

There are a great many countries around the world which traditionally have been generous and looked to Canada for leadership. They will be offended by this Bill.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, there are 102 countries that are signators to the United Nations Charter on Human Rights. Since the Hon. Member feels that the Canadian legislation is so terrible, can he tell us what other countries in the world are more generous in their refugee policies than is Canada?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member might have asked his question of one of the specialists in this particular area, such as my colleague from Spadina. I do not pretend to know the answer to that question. What I do know is this. If the Hon. Member is suggesting that his adherence and allegiance to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms somehow stops at the ocean's edge and does not apply to persons who come here seeking the protection of Canada as refugees and does not receive the protection of Canadian laws and of our Constitution because one happens to be the wrong colour, comes from the wrong place or does not have enough money to take a direct flight into Canada, then I find that a very reprehensible kind of situation. I believe that Canada has to make laws concerning refugees open and generous. We can afford to do that.

Traditionally, we have provided leadership in this area to other countries. We should continue to do so. I believe that our Charter of Rights should be respected in legislation. We should not leave it to the Supreme Court to tell Parliament that we erred on Bill C-84 against rights and liberties that are guaranteed in the Constitution.

• (1850)

Mr. Lesick: I have listened to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) and he has mentioned many things that I question. He stated that the western European nations are listening to their bureaucrats. He has not offered any proof of that, he has offered only a comment. I ask him to offer proof that the bureaucrats of western European nations are throwing true refugees out of their countries, and that the members of their Parliaments are listening to the bureaucrats.

I am wondering what all Canadians are feeling, not what the world is thinking about Canada, and about how the countries of the world are asking if Canadians are doing the best for true refugees. Of course, we are. We are known for that. But we have to put a stop to those who are coming in here illegally, and those who are sneaking into this country. They have to bear the price of their follies, whether it is the fact that they paid too much money to get someone to sneak them into this country illegally, or whether it is the fact that they were stopped and asked, "Do we know if you are a criminal? Do we know if you are a person of good moral stature who should be living in this country?" We are a sovereign nation.

I would like to ask the Member for Ottawa Centre to comment on this, not from his point of view, but to sit back and answer truthfully as to whether he feels that the majority of the people of Canada are willing to let everyone in and hopefully no one will be a criminal, and hopefully no one will kill or do any harm to anyone in this country, but let us accept all of them, and hopefully we will eventually eliminate those who should not have been here in the first place.

Mr. Cassidy: I remind the Hon. Member that in my comments I pointed out that there is absolutely no evidence that people who have come into Canada as refugees and stayed here are security risks or criminals. There is absolutely no evidence of that at all. I would point out to the Hon. Member that the question of coming in as false refugees is a question on which there was agreement on all sides of the House. We do not think that thousands of people should come in from Portugal or Brazil because immigration counsellors have led them on and told them that there is a way that they can get into Canada.

We have suggested, together with the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, and Rabbi Plaut in his report, means by which those people could be quickly turned around and discouraged. The word would get back and very quickly that flow would be choked off. I do not believe there was a problem with that, except that the Government refused to listen to those particular questions.

When the Hon. Member asks whether I think that people who come illegally into this country should be turned back, he does not realize how far he is going over the line. It is impossible for a person who is oppressed in Central America or in Chile to come to Canada with a visa and with all of the legal requirements. The bulk of legitimate refugees who are in transit around the world are guilty of some illegality or another because they could not move if they sought to act legally.

Therefore, the Hon. Member is saying, and with Bill C-84 the Government is saying, that all of those legitimate refugees will effectively be forced to endure oppression in their homeland because they will not be able to come to Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie.

• (1900)

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in the debate on Bill C-84 and the amendments put forward by the Senate. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) had an opportunity to correct some inequities in Bill C-84. For the benefit of those who are following the debate, Bill C-84 is the refugee legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the Bill now before us reflects the hard-nosed attitude of the Minister of Employment and Immigration who put it forward—it reflects his heartless character. And I will tell you how the legislation led to a couple of further actions by the Minister of Employment and Immigration that clearly prove his lack of understanding and his lack of a humane approach to problems.

It will be remembered that the same Minister of Employment and Immigration put a tragic end to the Katimavik program for the young. The Minister could have said: I am curtailing the program, but I am replacing it by something just as significant. But with his obstinacy, his whip-wielding, headmaster attitude, he turned a deaf ear on representations made by the young, Members in this House, even senators, and Canadians generally—he refused to do anything, with the definite purpose of showing who was the headmaster. He clearly showed that although he has an angel face and the outward look of St. Peter, he actually has a heart of stone.

The second remark deals with the second legislation and the Minister's behaviour toward workers, middle-aged workers hurt by unemployment insurance cuts. And no later than noon today, Mr. Speaker, in answer to my questions the Minister said he did not mind if a middle-aged worker that lost his job, for example with Weston and Hygrade, was not entitled to UI benefits because he was getting a pension—that it was all the same to him, there was nothing he could do. His mind is set, he gives nothing.

And today, on the refugee legislation he has the same attitude, the same rigid approach, a basic lack of humane approach to and understanding of individuals.

Mr. Speaker, it must be mentioned that we have been recalled in August by the Minister. The Government recalled Parliament in August because it believed a boat load of refugees was coming. It requested guns, planes, F-18's that went hunting over the sea for a ship that would be coming with ten people aboard. All they found was a way to spend taxpayers' money, to have us sit here in August, but he is no better off than before he put the legislation foward. This is nothing but a scenario for prodding the people so they would oppose and fear refugees.

Mr. Speaker, the people in Quebec and Canada are humane people. People in Quebec and Canada are generous. They proved it in the past, and they still are proving it today. Just as the Canadian and Quebec people, Members of the Opposition feel that we should try to stop the illegitimate refugees who are abusing the system. But we should make sure we deal with the real culprit. I suggest that the amendments proposed by the Senate made that possible. The approach of the Minister is, whenever he believes a ship has illegitimate refugees on board, he should order the ship to leave or not enter Canadian waters; according to the Senate's proposal, which is similar to that put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), who is doing a fantastic job on this issue, the Minister should say simply: Well, let us take this ship into port. Let us arrest and punish the culprit who has exploited these people. But because of his attitude, the Minister is jeopardizing the lives of the passenger by turning the ships around; the Government is waiting for someone to die in Canada or abroad to become sensible and change the legislation, as it did in the case of paternity leaves.

Mr. Speaker, it seemed to me that this logical, sensible and humane approach sought to discourage those who were taking advantage of people's kindness. Concerning the bill as introduced, my colleague, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) was right to mention Nelson Mandela, a South African individual who is fighting to promote equality, eradicate Apartheid, a sort of racism based on colour . . . As recently as this morning, during Jean Cournoyer's radio program heard in Quebec, someone mentioned that a person was treated like an animal because of the black colour of his skin. This individual would like to flee his homeland to come to Canada because his life is at risk. Well, the Minister of Employment and Immigration—not with the support, I am sure, of a great many Conservative Members who are people of conscience—would return this individual who does not meet the criteria. As a terrorist, he is unacceptable. Yet, it is only someone who wants to fight for his rights. If the Minister of Employment and Immigration had been faced with such a situation, he might have reacted more violently than Mr. Mandela did in his own country. Mr. Speaker, the problem with this Bill is that it does not make any distinctions in dealing with those who abuse the system and illegitimate refugees. It is like taking a canon to kill a fly in a room where there are 100 people. Everyone will be killed because of one fly, because of one little problem.

There is another aspect. I believe that the Minister is determined to show that he is a proud man who does not give in to pressure, but in fact, he is gaining nothing. In real life, there is nothing to gain by thinking that you are right and everyone else is wrong, because the Official Opposition is not alone in denouncing the Bill introduced by the Conservative Government, and the Senate is not alone either. I believe that everyone knows that I do not hold the Senate in such a high esteem, but the Senators have played an important role in this issue and they are earning their pay. They are paid to study the Bills passed by the House of Commons and to return them to us. The Minister has to recognize that the Senators have done a good job because he was forced to accept amendments on points he had not noticed before. This shows that the Senate did a good job. Then, there are all the groups concerned, all the church groups, whether they are Catholic, Protestant or Orthodox, all the pressure groups, all the people who work closely with refugees, because a refugee is not someone who has just won $100,000 in a lottery. He does not behave the same way as other people. He is fleeing his country because he is being threatened. He might have suffered for years. He might have seen his father and mother getting killed, he might have children, brothers and sisters, but he was able to escape.

We are not talking about someone who happens to teach the children of the Prime Minister. If someone else than Mulroney had been elected, that teacher would not be here. But as he teaches the Prime Minister's children, he has his papers. However, he was not being threatened in France. A refugee is someone who has to use desperate means and rely on other people who want to help him. I read in the speech made by my colleague that if such people succeed in escaping by boat, they will be refused and returned to their country of origin. However, if they succeed in finding a plane, it is a different matter and their claim will be considered. Have you ever seen such stupidity or such a double standard? "If you are a good refugee, you will come by plane, but if you are a bad refugee, you will come by boat."

Before pushing this Bill through, I believe that the Minister of Employment and Immigration should reconsider in view of the three major blunders he has already made, first, as concerns young people by cancelling the Katimavik program, then in the case of older workers by cutting back unemployment insurance benefits, and now in the case of refugees. With respect to immigration and refugees, I think that he should heed to the advice and listen to the suggestions and comments of my colleague for York West (Mr. Marchi). I think that in his comments, recommendations and claims my colleague is advocating control measures. Of course, he is suggesting an approval, but also some assistance and more humane measures instead of shooting or striking the first ones to arrive on the spot. The Senate has proposed or recommended that those who are really guilty should be punished and those who deserve help should obtain it.

Mr. Speaker, before concluding, I hope that some Tory members are compassionate and not merely interested in financial matters. I know that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is only interested in financial matters, that the dollar and not the human being is essential for him. I call on the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) who is the member for Roberval and was a school principal. Perhaps as a school principal he had to be tough. He belongs to a generation where the strap was still in use. Nowadays, things have changed. We now communicate and exchange. The most brilliant children in school are perhaps the most boisterous ones. They used to be those who worked hardest, but things have changed.

Today, some people will make their mark, will innovate, because they wanted to do so and went ahead. They did not fall in line and stick to the rules. And I think that if we consider history, there were many refugees in Canada who were troublemakers. The past is a warrant for the future. Something happens all of a sudden because the Minister of Employment and Immigration thinks all refugees coming to Canada are bad people. That is false. If the Minister is heartless, insensitive, I dare hope that some of the 210 Conservative Members will prove to be humane. I am sure Conservative Members have one or two refugees in their ridings; we all have some. Before voting against the amendments and passing the Bill, they should sit down with those refugees and ask them: "Now, tell me how it was. What did you go through in your country and why did you not stay there? Why did you choose to come in as refugees and not follow the normal immigration procedures?"

After hearing the story of those people, perhaps Conservative Members will see things differently and ask the Minister to change his position and accept my colleague's amendments. Mr. Speaker, I hope this will happen in the next few days.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I have listened to what my colleague the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) had to say. He gave a very capable and emotional speech on the refugee Bill. In the course of that speech, he stated the case very clearly and he based his argumentation on proposals which have not only been made by numerous groups across the country but which also meet the recommendations of our party as well as those of Liberal and Conservative senators alike who have urged the Minister to change the Bill, to make those changes which the Senate has recommended in order that the Bill comply with the Canadian tradition, the Canadian Constitution and the Charter.

[English]

On that note, quite a number of significant and outstanding legal experts have suggested that this piece of legislation is seriously flawed from the point of view of the Constitution and the Charter. They have advanced the notion that if this were to go ahead on the day of proclamation, there would be a number of court challenges the very next day. They even went so far as to predict that certain clauses of Bill C-84 would be struck down by the courts. One can just imagine the situation that that will create for a Government which is proposing this as the answer to all the ills of our refugee determination system. Paralysis will take place and our refugee policy will be thrown into chaos.

• (1910)

Perhaps the Hon. Member for Montreal—Saint-Marie (Mr. Malépart) could share his thoughts not on the here and now, but what this law will do, if it is struck down by the courts, to the confidence of Canadians in the system. Does the Hon. Member not believe that there is also an international component that Canada, rather than being the leader in this field, will now be a follower and an instigator for other countries to pass the same law? Does the Hon. Member not agree by pushing this Bill through that he will be undermining the international strength and resolve needed to try to have an international solution to what is essentially an international problem?

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, my colleague is absolutely right about the consequences of this Bill not only on boat people but also on Canadian men and women and on the officers who will have to enforce this Act with such harshness and distrust. We see more and more examples of that in Quebec. Hon. Members know that in my province, ordinary citizens are now suing police officers who show brutality or treat people too harshly. The officers who will enforce this Act will have to abide by what the Minister is telling them: "All the people who pretend to be refugees are suspect. You don't need any warrant, you don't have to see any judge, just arrest them now, interrogate them, use force to intimidate them and make them talk."

One day, it will be too much and we will have to change things. The Government does not understand this message.

On the international scene, Canada is recognized everywhere. In every place we go, as members of parliamentary groups, we are welcomed as peace-loving, generous and open people. They know in other countries that despite differences of opinion between Canadians who speak French, English or other languages, people here love to live together, whatever their origin or their race and whether they were born in Canada or come from other places.

I think that the Winter Games and the sharing of the flame all over Canada by people of all origins and all provinces are proof of our pride and our sense of belonging. And that represents an asset the world over where other countries, perhaps owing to their history, are inclined to act more harshly with one another. Perhaps such a behaviour, such an attitude on the part of Canada might encourage certain individuals who are like our Minister of Employment and Immigration, a man who is wont to take a hard position with respect to these people. We will end up by pushing them back, we will force human beings throughout the world to suffer in their own country instead of letting some of them come here, not to mention others who have managed to make changes.

I should think that the two questions asked by my colleague . . . but I have hope and I have confidence in Quebecers and in Canadians. At the next election they will know what to do with these people. Because at first blush, the way the Minister of Employment and Immigration brought in his Bill he had Canadians and Quebecers believe that those people were coming here to steal their jobs. Well, you can fool Quebecers only once. Lie to them once and it is over! But they could see right from the outset that the Conservatives were taking a false approach. They will have their say at the next election. Once a Liberal Government is back in office I am sure we will restore justice with respect to these pieces of legislation, we will eliminate that aspect, and Canadians will again be known as generous, warm-hearted and peace-loving people.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. The Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris).

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I very much regret that I have to speak on this Bill today because it is the first Bill that was brought before the House of Commons since my election on July 20, 1987.

This Bill was brought before the House as a result of the calling together of the House in an emergency session last summer. Unfortunately for me it was my first experience with the parliamentary process. I found it to be a most cynical approach and attitude by the Government toward a situation which occurred involving people coming ashore in the Province of Nova Scotia. The Government thought that it had on its plate an issue through which it could fan some flames in favour of itself and its own purported attempt to take action on what the Government said was a very serious problem.

We were called back and presented with this legislation. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) spent a fair amount of time during that period trying to convince the people of Canada that this was a most serious problem and in his greatest attempt at sincerity he talked about how his Government would take action in this national emergency. It is now almost six months later and we are still debating this so-called emergency legislation.

It is of great sadness to me as a Canadian to have a Government with the kind of majority which this one has abusing that majority in the face of widespread, virtually unanimous, disagreement and opposition to the kinds of measures that it has taken under this legislation.

Within a matter of days after the legislation had been tabled in the House groups and individuals in Canada who understand international affairs and understand the situation in which people from other countries flee to Canada spoke out against it. There are also groups which support international citizens in their efforts to seek refuge from countries, regimes and governments which do not respect human rights.

Soon after the introduction of this legislation we saw a remarkable thing in this House and I was proud to be a part of it in this respect. I saw principled men and women in this House, men like the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) who took it upon himself the challenge of fighting against the Government, of meeting with groups and individuals who were interested and concerned with what the Government was doing. He spoke out fearlessly on this issue and has tried, unfortunately, without success to convince the Government that it had done the wrong thing. We have seen since then a Government determined in its cynicism to bluff its way to the bitter end on this debate.

• (1920)

We have seen committees of this House and the other place listen to witnesses for many long days on this issue. If there was some sort of national debate about it, if it was a matter of controversy on which men and women of conscience disagreed, we would have had a very different debate and a very different set of hearings than we had.

What did we have? Almost unanimous opposition to the measures taken by the Government and its willingness to ignore the human rights of international citizens. I say almost unanimous because there were some people who spoke at these hearings in support of the legislation. They were the very senior civil servants in the Department of Employment and Immigration. They were doing what their political masters on the other side of the House told them to do. Not one citizen of this country came forward in support of this legislation. Not one, except those who were forced to do so because of the political opportunism of the Government last summer.

As a Canadian I am ashamed to see that the Government has chosen to ignore those citizens and organizations of this country who seek to hold out their hand to these international citizens seeking refuge. My riding does not have very many immigrants, certainly not very many refugees, but I have not had one phone call or letter urging me to support the Government's position on Bill C-84. I have not had a group or individual visiting me on Parliament Hill to suggest that I should support this legislation. Even though there are not pressure groups composed of immigrants or former refugees who are urging me to oppose it, we do have in my riding citizens and organizations who are concerned about what the Government is doing and have urged me to speak out against the legislation and in support of the Senate amendments.

These groups consist of the Roman Catholic Office of Social Action, the Newfoundland and Labrador Human Rights Association, the St. John's Oxfam Committee, the Latin American Support Group, the Institute of Social and Economic Research, Amnesty International Group Sixty and others. You will find those groups repeated in every city across this country, not to mention the towns and villages where such groups exist who are concerned about human rights and about Canada's reputation in the world for recognition of the international human rights of refugees.

I have also received from the Primate of the Anglican Church of Canada a representation on the measures proposed by the Senate to amend Bill C-84. That church has a history of involving itself in refugee and other international issues. The concerns expressed by the national Executive Council of the Anglican Church of Canada are that the Bill does not satisfy the international obligations of Canada to protect refugees and uphold procedural safeguards. They are concerned that this legislation violates sections of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. They are concerned that it does not meet the stated objectives of our immigration policy, which is to fulfil Canada's international legal obligations with respect to refugees and uphold its humanitarian traditions with respect to the displaced and persecuted.

Why is it that the United Church of Canada and the other organizations I mentioned have spoken out with one voice against the Government's action, but the Government has not listened? It persists in putting to this House legislation unacceptable to the people of Canada who have studied and understand the issue, who have a concern for Canada's role in international affairs and its obligations to those seeking refuge. The Government persists in its desire to have the power to turn ships around at sea. The Government persists in denying those who claim refugee status the opportunity of a hearing if it has decided that they may be or are accused of being a security risk.

Many people can be abused in very strange circumstances involving international intrigue. Governments of other countries can very easily put forward evidence for the purpose of attempting to get another Government to deny someone entrance or even a hearing to determine whether or not the status of refugee ought to be considered. The Government has insisted on maintaining its stance that criminal prosecutions be maintained for those who encourage or assist people who are attempting entry into this country without the right kind of papers.

The Government's response to the Senate amendments is totally unacceptable. It fails to take into account the concerns raised by the witnesses before the hearings and in this place on many occasions, and is sending us down a road which can only lead to the deterioration of our regard for human rights.

I will end where I started by saying that it is a very sad occasion for me to have to speak on this legislation. It is the first Bill I encountered in this Parliament, brought in in a very cynical way, and it will go out in the same way. The Government will persist in the face of reasoned, impassioned and caring opposition and concern for the human rights of Canadians and those seeking refuge from other countries.

• (1930)

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) for his compassionate comments on this subject. I am glad that he has taken note of the response of the people in his riding. Last summer we heard some rather excited comments from across the way about how people were insisting that we should do something quickly, get rid of those people quickly and so on. They claimed they were acting for the strong expression of the will of the people in putting forward this Bill.

When the committee held its hearings on this Bill in August, and when the other place held its hearings in the fall, those great crowds of people demanding harsh action did not show up at the hearings. The Hon. Member has said that no one in his constituency has asked him to support the Bill but people have asked him to oppose it.

He mentioned that there are not many immigrants in Newfoundland. However, can he tell us whether any of the people of Newfoundland have had experience in helping refugees, whether they came by ship or plane, whether they came by direct and official means or unofficially? I know there was the case of the boatload of Tamils a year ago last summer, but I am wondering whether his fellow residents in St. John's East have actually met refugees and helped them and whether their experience has been favourable or unfavourable.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. Other than the aboriginal people of Newfoundland, the Innu and the Inuit, we have all been immigrants to Newfoundland over the centuries. In the last number of years we have received a large number of refugees coming off airplanes in Gander. These are individuals from the East Bloc countries, some Cubans, some Poles, Rumanians, and East Germans who, with increasing frequency, deplane in Gander and seek refugee status. As the Hon. Member mentioned, we also had the experience of the Tamils who were found floating in Placenta Bay two years ago.

There are also some people who sought refugee status in Canada and ended up in Newfoundland. I met a young man several months ago who had been in a refugee camp in China. He came from Vietnam many years ago and was doing very well in St. John's. He had learned to speak English very quickly. He was a young boy of 17 or 18.

I have a constituent who is working very hard to bring other refugees to Canada because of his conviction about the need for Canadians to share with others some of the wealth that they have obtained from our standard of living and to help individuals from other parts of the world seek refuge in this country.

Although my experience in this area has been limited, it has been very positive. People who are here seeking refuge expect that Canada will recognize their rights, and I hope that the Government will not discourage individuals who look to Canada for leadership. I hope the Government will not indicate to these people that Canada and Canadians are not able to recognize their international obligations. However, to conclude, my experience in this has been positive.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has just quoted from the letter which the Anglican Primate has sent out. Other members of his caucus have quoted from the same letter, expressing concerns about the provisions in this legislation which would empower the Minister to turn ships away.

The fact is that nine years ago when the crisis with the boat people from Vietnam existed, which crisis lasted a year or a year and a half, the Anglican Church did nothing to help. As a matter of fact, it opposed sponsorship during that period of time and did nothing to help in a tangible way in that large movement of refugees which turned out to be a very legitimate cause for concern by the people of Canada. As a matter of fact, last year the Anglican Church sponsored only 300 refugees in spite of what the Primate said in his letter expressing great concern.

How does the Member account for the fact that when the Vietnamese crisis existed, the Anglican Church did nothing to help tangibly and last year sponsored only 300 refugees, and is now all of a sudden expressing great concern about this particular legislation? Can he tell me how he accounts for that?

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to defend the Anglican Church as an institution. However, if the Hon. Member is right, and I have to assume for the moment that he is, then it must be obvious to him that the Anglican Church has listened to its people and is now doing what its people wanted to do as opposed to the Government which has had an opportunity in the last six months to learn what the people of Canada think about this legislation and is still persisting in doing what it is doing now. If the Anglican Church has listened to the cry of humanity and learned, why does the Government not do the same?

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I, too, am disappointed to have to participate in this debate in this way. By "this way" of course I mean that this is the last speech I will be able to make on this legislation. The Government has decided once again to use the strength of its majority to curtail the voice of parliamentarians on this issue. It has used its strength to muzzle Parliament on this issue.

I believe that that is unfortunate for us all because this legislation with regard to immigration and refugees is fundamentally flawed, fundamentally unfair, and fundamentally unjust. I believe that this issue should be taken to the people of Canada in the form of a referendum or plebiscite to learn how they feel about this legislation. I suspect that the reaction in my constituency is similar to that in every constituency across the country. It is overwhelmingly against this legislation.

One might legitimately ask why I say that, what evidence I have to make those comments. I read the transcripts and studied the reports of witnesses who appeared before both the House of Commons committee and the Senate regarding this Bill on immigrants and refugees. I noted an interesting theme. All of those individuals or organizations with considerable experience and expertise on immigration and refugee matters advised the Government not to proceed with the Bill in its present form. The only exception was the witnesses who came on behalf of the Government.

• (1940)

Dozens of individuals and groups, representing hundreds of thousands of Canadians, spoke against this legislation but the Government chose to ignore their suggestions and pleas.

Some of these groups include the Bar Association of Canada, which represents the entire legal profession, the Inter-Church Committee on Refugees, which is made up of some nine major denominations of Canada's largest churches, the Canadian Congress of Catholic Bishops, the Canadian Ethnocultural Council, the Civil Liberties Association of Canada, the famous Rabbi Gunther Plaut, the Canadian Jewish Congress, the B'Nai Brith group, the Coalition for a Just Refugee and Immigration Policy. They included the Primate of the Anglican Church of Canada.

It is also interesting to point out that among these groups was the employment and immigration union representing those men and women who worked for the immigration office. They spoke against this Bill in many cases, saying that as practitioners in the field who would have to administer this Act, they are against some of its major clauses.

One must ask who favours this legislation. As I look about the country, other than a handful of members of the Conservative Party who are represented by Members in the House, I have not found anyone who supports the legislation. That in itself is condemnation of the Bill, without going into the specifics, as we have.

It is important that we as parliamentarians recognize that the Bill in its present form violates the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in Canada's Constitution. To make matters worse, the Bill violates the United Nations convention on the treatment of refugees. Why would parliamentarians pass legislation that violates our own Constitution and a convention of the United Nations? I have yet to hear why the Government would be encouraged to do that.

I recall a number of occasions when you, Mr. Speaker, spoke of your origins, and, I suspect, reminded me that at the turn of the century when Canada was settled by hundreds of thousands of people from western and central Europe, many of them were fleeing persecution of one kind or another. That is a theme that western Canadians in particular know very well. We know the history of the Mennonites, Hutterites and Doukhobors. We know the more recent history of the Hungarians, Czechoslovakians, Iranians, Afghans, the boat people and Chileans.

What would have happened if the native people of Canada had a similar immigration policy as this after they came to North America via the land bridge tens of thousands of years ago? I suspect that many of us would not be here today.

I vividly recall two events in our recent past. In 1939, Jewish refugees fleeing Nazi persecution in Europe came to Montreal on the ship St. Louis, where the immigration authorities of the day, with the support of the Government of the day, turned the ship back to Europe. Evidence indicates that most of those people on that ship died at the hands of the Nazis. That was a black day in our history which we never want to repeat.

The House will know the story of the Kamagata Maru in 1914. At that time we had a very racist immigration policy which was not entirely above board.

At that time the Government used subtle ways to have a racist immigration policy. The Government of the day did not want East Indians to come to Canada as settlers and therefore had a policy which only allowed people to come to Canada on a steamship that sailed directly from one port to Canada. The Government knew that no steamships came from India.

However, an enterprising individual from Hong Kong obtained a Japanese freighter in 1914, and 376 Punjabs, mostly Sikhs, sailed aboard that ship for Canada and entered the Port of Vancouver. Their entry was essentially legal, which frustrated the immigration authorities. Rather than allow those Sikhs to enter Canada to become citizens, the ship was held in the harbour for two months. The Royal Canadian Navy cruiser Rainbow was brought into the harbour on July 20 and encouraged the Kamagata Maru to sail back to India where many of those people were killed because of rumours about their political and religious beliefs. Again, it was one of the darkest days in our history.

This Bill contains a clause that provides that someone who believes that a ship may contain illegal refugees can order that ship to be turned about. How does one determine whether the people on board such a ship are legal or illegal refugees, whether they are fleeing persecution, or people with no homeland? Yet we are being asked to pass legislation that contains such a vague clause giving that kind of authority to immigration officials.

That is why the men and women of the Employment and Immigration Union came to the committee. They wanted to know whether they will be expected to carry arms on board a ship where someone may have the impression that refugees are on board, to seize the ship, search it and turn it about? They did not receive an acceptable response to those legitimate questions. My colleagues and I want no part of legislation that will do what we did to the Kamagata Maru and the St. Louis. We want no part of legislation that has tinges of racism attached to it. I do not think there is any overt racism, but many people in my constituency have wondered about it.

• (1950)

When I last visited the immigrant centre in my constituency, a number of people wondered if the same concern on the part of the federal Government would have been there if the Tamils who arrived on our East Coast unexpectedly had not been of a visible minority, if they had been people from Poland, from the Soviet Union or from other countries—

Mr. Friesen: How about Portugal?

Mr. Riis: My hon. friend asks about Portugal. I have heard him say that we should deport those people, that they are here illegally and that thousands of them should be deported back to Portugal because they are Jehovah's Witnesses. I resent that type of intervention. Quite frankly, I believe—

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order just to keep the record accurate. The Hon. Member has never heard me say that the Portuguese should be deported, but he has been quoted in the Vancouver media as saying that if the people who came last summer were not refugees, we should send them back.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order, that is debate. If the Hon. Member would like to be recognized during the question and comment period after the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has finished his remarks, I would be delighted to recognize him.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, thank you for your wise, as usual, intervention. It was not a point of order, but as my hon. friend has indicated, the case has been made by many of his colleagues that all of these thousands of refugees who are in Canada illegally should be deported. He himself may not have stated that, and if that is the case, I take it back.

I do not think that there is any question that if a person who claims to be a refugee with no homeland enters Canada and is found not to be a refugee, that person should not be permitted to stay. However we want to give people a fair hearing. We want to treat people fairly. This Bill does not do that.

Under this Bill, if a ship were seen approaching the shores of Canada, someone would determine that that ship has illegal refugees on board and then presumably naval gunboats would force that ship to turn back. That is not the kind of country Canada has become.

When one looks at our history as a nation, one finds that our tradition has always been one of welcoming people who experience persecution in their homelands. Many various groups have made up the Canadian mosaic. In fact, many of those groups originally fled their countries of origin because of religious, political or ethnic persecution. I, along with most if not all Members of Parliament, are proud of that tradition. We want to maintain it.

We want to send a very clear signal to people around the world that if they are legal refugees and face persecution at home, whether they are from the Punjab or from Iran, they are welcome in Canada. It is for that reason that all of these knowledgeable organizations have opposed this legislation. That is why I am proud to be associated with the New Democratic Party, a Party that also opposes this legislation.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, as usual, the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party has raised the spectre of racism. We are accustomed to that here since his colleagues do that periodically, particularly the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

I must admit that when my constituents call me on the subject of refugees, it is sometimes worrying that those calls might be inspired by racism. However, I am glad to say that I think there is some very empirical evidence to show that they were not.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) will know that one of the concerns on the West Coast has been the influx of visitors from Fiji who are of the same racial origin as the people who have come to British Columbia from other parts of the Third World and are good citizens of British Columbia. However, I do not think that I received one single call to my office complaining about the influx of so-called visitors from Fiji. Why was that? It was because there had been a military coup in Fiji. The people of B.C. understood that when a coup takes place, there are refugees.

The Hon. Member wants to imply that racism is behind the legislation. I hope he would give serious thought to the fact that it has nothing to do with racism. It has everything to do with maintaining the integrity of the system.

As the Hon. Member's colleague from Ottawa Centre said just an hour ago, there are people who have used the refugee system to bypass the immigration system. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre alleged that this was because the immigration system was plugged up. I believe that was the word he used. In effect, he gave credence to the term "jumping the queue".

I hope my friend from Kamloops—Shuswap would think very carefully before he imputes motives of racism to this legislation or to any other legislation this Government puts before the House.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to respond at any length to this intervention, but I am not particularly pleased to have to say that I too received many phone calls during the time of the emergency recall of Parliament to deal with these Tamils. I spoke with one of my constituency assistants who was on the receiving end of those calls, a young woman of the Sikh faith. I am afraid that what that young woman heard from a variety of people was not the most pleasant of experiences.

My friend says that there is not a certain element of racism attached to the views that are being expressed in the House by certain Hon. Members. I do not think he is right. I noticed that he used the phrase "influx of Asians". I believe that is what he said. He said that we on the West Coast are faced with an influx of visitors of Asian origin.

That reminds me of the reports we heard when those people landed on the East Coast of Canada. The reports indicated that they were herded into buses. We do not herd people into anything, we herd cattle into cars, trains and trucks.

Mr. Friesen: With respect, I did not use any of those inflexions, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Riis: Let me finish, Mr. Speaker. With our choice of words, we often betray what we are really saying. Journalists do not use the word "herd" to talk about other people getting into buses.

I do not want to suggest any motives on the part of my hon. friend, but I think we must be careful in the way we use words. When we talk about the influx of visitors from Asia, we could talk about the entry of visitors from Asia or the immigration of visitors from Asia. I think we have to be very careful that the use of certain terminology does not suggest to sensitive people something that we do not intend. That is the only point I wanted to make.

This is a very, very serious matter. I do not think we want to discuss whether or not this legislation is racist. I simply want to say that our past immigration policies have been racist. Our past policies in terms of refugees have been racist. Let us hope that we have erased that type of legislation from our books now and forever.

• (2000)

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, there was a large influx of people at Expo 86. I suppose that had overtones, too.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) has a question or comment.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has talked about some of the immediate encounters within his constituency relating to some of the refugees. I am wondering whether he has any general comment on how people of his constituency receive refugees. Do they have refugees in his constituency? How do they respond to them? Are they friendly to the refugees or unfriendly? Do they find that the refugees are good people or undesirable people?

I heard comments from many other places in the country, almost always favourable, about refugees, by people who had done a great deal for them. These were in places such as Fort Erie in southern Ontario, the towns of southern Quebec, places in Alberta, Winnipeg and even nearer to the American border than Winnipeg. I am wondering if the Hon. Member can tell me about his constituency, having in mind particularly that part of the Bill that we are opposing that makes it a crime to help a person come into Canada even as a refugee without a visa.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to reply to that question. I am pleased to say that the generosity expressed by individuals and groups, associations and agencies from the area of Kamloops—Shuswap welcoming refugees has been quite outstanding. The community welcomed large numbers of refugees, particularly during the period when the boat people were welcomed to Canada.

I am particularly thankful for the role that the churches have played. Most of the churches played a significant role and went to great lengths not only to welcome the refugees but to ensure that their lives in Canada, particularly in the beginning years, were meaningful and positive.

I am pleased to say that with very few exceptions all of the people that were welcomed as refugees over the last eight years that I am familiar with, and since I have been a Member of Parliament for that length of time, have all become integral and very positive citizens of the community.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are over.

Pursuant to order made earlier this day, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 8.04 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, February 3, 1988

The House met at 2 p.m.

---

Prayers

---

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ANNIVERSARY OF 1916 FIRE—SIGNIFICANCE OF MACE—UNVEILING OF PLAQUE COMMEMORATING VICTIMS OF FIRE

Mr. Speaker: Prior to calling Statements by Members, may I make the traditional announcement to the House that, in recognition of the seventy-second anniversary of the fire which destroyed the Centre Block on this date in 1916, the wooden replica of the mace has been placed on the Clerk's table. This mace was used for many years as a replacement for the original one destroyed by fire.

[Translation]

I should also mention that a few minutes ago, a plaque commemorating those individuals who lost their lives in the fire was unveiled in the Hall of Honour.

---

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[Translation]

PARLIAMENT

1916 FIRE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): On this February 3, Mr. Speaker, all Canadians will recall the fire which destroyed the Centre Block of Parliament in 1916.

Not only did the blaze destroy a beautiful architectural structure, but seven Canadians also lost their lives, including a Member of Parliament. A new building was erected a few years later in which there was a plaque to honour the late Bowman Brown Law, the Hon. Member for Yarmouth. Regrettably there was no reference to the six other individuals who lost their lives in this fire.

This anomaly of history has lasted for 72 years. Earlier today, thanks to you, Mr. Speaker, the omission was finally corrected and a fitting tribute was paid to the six Parliament employees who died in the 1916 blaze.

* * *

[English]

LABOUR RELATIONS

ARBITRATION OF RAILWAY DISPUTE—CALL FOR PROMPT SETTLEMENT

Mr. Sid Fraleigh (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of 400 railway employees in my riding and the Sarnia area I would like to appeal to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) not to extend the time limit allowed to the arbitrator in the labour dispute between the railway companies and the unions.

Although we commend the arbitrator for the interim wage increases granted today, these workers have been without a contract for over 18 months and are getting increasingly impatient with the process. The arbitration has already gone far beyond the 60 days originally intended and still the workers have received no indication of when a final settlement will be reached.

• (1405)

All the relevant information has been in the hands of the arbitrator for some time now, and the workers feel that any further delays will result in renegotiation, not arbitration. The railway workers want a settlement to be reached so that they can return to being concerned about railway services rather than contract disputes.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NEW BRUNSWICK DOMTAR PLANT—PRESENCE OF DIOXINS IN NEIGHBOURING SEDIMENT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, dioxins are probably the most toxic substance ever unleashed on our planet. Thus it is extremely troubling to learn of the 20 years of complacency of federal authorities and New Brunswick provincial authorities with respect to dioxins found in the waters and sediment around the Domtar plant in the Miramichi Basin.

S. O. 21

Fact: In 1970, the Fisheries and Forest Department wrote to Domtar to say that the waters affected were exceedingly toxic.

Fact: In 1981, Environment Canada published a report based on years of tests on dioxins in the sediment.

Fact: In 1987, Environment Canada wrote the province with further test results showing particularly dangerous toxins at 650 times the level of background concentrations.

Fact: Fisheries Canada considered charges but never followed through.

Fact: Agriculture Canada has never conducted a study on the effects on cattle which graze in the area and on the meat which is used locally.

Fact: The Domtar plant now wants to reopen although there is stored wood on the premises yet unprotected.

When will the federal Government take its responsibility for human health, agriculture, and fisheries seriously? When will it stop ignoring its own studies, and act?

* * *

[Translation]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

ALLOWANCES AVAILABLE TO INHABITANTS OF ISOLATED REGIONS

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, as of December 17, the community of Joutel has been designated according to the rules for deductions applying to residents of isolated areas. The residents of Joutel will be eligible for special deductions with respect to housing and travel benefits.

It took team work to get a fair deal for the community of Joutel, and I would like to draw your attention to the energy and enthusiasm shown by the Mayor of Joutel, Jean-Jacques Bouillon, by Robert C. Bryce of Selbaie Mines, Gilles Forgues of Agnico Eagle Mines, Bernard Le Régent of the Commission scolaire du Nouveau-Québec, Angèle Pelletier, Paul Poudrier and Gilles Joly of the United Metal Workers of America, France Langlois, representing the Labour Relations Committee of Selbaie Mines, the economic development community of Matagami-Joutel and Jacques Tremblay, President of the Lions Club.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the working people of Joutel, I wish to thank the officials and Ministers of this Government and our Prime Minister, Brian Mulroney, who responded so favourably to the demands of this community.

[English]

INDUSTRY

FUTURE OF HAWKER-SIDDELEY PLANT AT TRENTON, N.S.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, last March Hawker-Siddeley, the British owned multinational, announced it was going to sell or close its Trenton plant in central Nova Scotia. Closing this plant would virtually shut down the town and throw hundreds of workers onto the unemployment lines.

Shortly thereafter, Lavalin, the large multinational company from Montreal, came forward with a proposal to take over the plant. At that time federal officials gave the Lavalin proposal top marks. That was in mid 1987. Last fall the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) and the then President of the Treasury Board went to Trenton to announce that no buyer could be found and Ottawa would take on the job of finding one. They signed a contract with Hawker-Siddeley agreeing to act as the company's agent and sell the plant by April 2.

Over that period the plant would be kept open with Ottawa paying for any losses the company occurred. As part of the deal for Ottawa acting as a middleman, Hawker—Siddeley insisted and Ottawa agreed that any new owner not be allowed for a period of three years to lease railcars that it produces. According to the union officials, if the plant is only allowed to make railcars for sales, it would almost certainly fail again.

There is a glut of railcars on the market at the present time due to overproduction in the United States. Why has the Government agreed to such a deal? Why is it agreeing to the eventual shut-down of the Trenton industry?

Last November the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) visited Trenton and Pictou County. He told the workers his Government was working hard to find a buyer. Where is the action by this Government?

* * *

• (1410)

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AFGHANISTAN—CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF SOVIET TROOPS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, Afghans throughout the world have been horrified and appalled to see their homeland torn apart, their families and friends killed, and their children maimed, in the course of eight years of brutal occupation of Afghanistan by Soviet troops. There are estimates that over 163,000 children between the ages of eight and 14 years have been kidnapped and sent to the Soviet Union for indoctrination. Despite all this, the Afghanistan fighting spirit has survived and will ultimately result in victory.

The Afghanistan Association of Ontario has demanded an immediate withdrawal of all Soviet troops in Afghanistan and the return of the kidnapped children to their grieving mothers. They ask the Government of Canada to officially recognize the Afghan Mujahadeen, to send humanitarian aid to the liberated areas of Afghanistan, and to apply effective political and economic pressures on the Soviet Union.

I call upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to use these and all other means available to him to obtain an immediate withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan.

* * *

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

NATIVE LANGUAGE PROGRAMS—FEDERAL FUNDING ADVOCATED

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, native people and native organizations across Canada are struggling to develop their cultural identities and achieve self-reliance and self-determination. A crucial component of this process is the ability to communicate effectively in their own languages.

Native language programs are being developed by bands across Canada as a major step towards native cultural development, yet the federal Government refuses to support such programs in a satisfactory way and to a sufficient degree.

I therefore urge the Government to fund fully language and cultural programs such as that of the Shuswap Nation Tribal Council which includes the bands of Kamloops, Little Shuswap, Neskainlith, North Thompson, Pavilion, Shuswap, Spallumcheen and Skeetchestn, Adams Lake and Bonaparte, and other native groups as well, so that native people both young and old can achieve the cultural goals they have set to meet their desire for self-determination and self-government.

* * *

POLITICAL PARTIES

UNEMPLOYMENT FORECASTS MADE BY MEMBERS OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, for the past number of months various polls have told us that the Opposition has followed the strategy of questioning the Government's credibility rather than its record or policies.

With the next budget statement one week away, it might be worth while to recall what some opposition Members said after the Economic Statement of November, 1984. The Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) said: "They will destroy thousands of jobs. The effect of this program would be a net increase in unemployment". The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) said: "As many as 100,000 people could lose their jobs". The former Member for Hamilton Mountain said: "Fifty thousand will become unemployed". The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) said after the May, 1985, Budget: "There is a lack of job creation".

Here are the facts, Mr. Speaker. Over a million jobs have been created since that first statement. It is the credibility of the Opposition that Canadians should question.

* * *

[Translation]

PUBLIC SERVICE

LANGUAGE TEACHERS—DEMAND THAT GOVERNMENT RETURN TO BARGAINING TABLE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, language teachers working for the Department of National Defence put up picket lines yesterday to protest against the federal Government's refusal to negotiate. To summarize the situation, here are a few passages from a letter I received from a language teacher in Saint-Jean, Quebec, and I quote:

> The Government's refusal to negotiate is a clear indication of bad faith, is unacceptable in a democracy like ours and reflects the government's negative and cavalier attitude to bilingualism in the Public Service and at the Department of National Defence. For three years we have seen our teaching environment deteriorate. At the Department of National Defence, bilingualism has been put on the back burner. The last report of the Commissioner for Official Languages pointed out that the Department of National Defence was lagging far behind in its implemention of the Official Languages Act.

Mr. Speaker, in light of this statement, I hope the Hon. Member from Saint-Jean will find time to represent his constituents and put pressure on the Government in order to obtain justice, so that the union's demand that Treasury Board return to the bargaining table can be met—that would seem to be entirely elementary—and government policy on official languages observed at the Department of National Defence.

* * *

[English]

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—RIGHTS OF UNBORN CHILDREN

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, public opinion on the issue of abortion is often emotionally charged, strongly held, and divisive. The recent Supreme Court of Canada decision striking down Section 251 of the Criminal Code is disappointing to those of us who have spoken in support of the unborn.

The court has ruled that the procedures in the law which prevent abortions violate a constitutional guarantee of life, liberty and security of the person. This court decision has left many health care and legal concerns about abortion in limbo. Clearly the Justices of the court have now defined a woman's right of liberty and security. While doing this the court has indicated that Parliament has a legitimate role in defining and protecting the rights of the unborn child. It is clearly reasonable that there must exist a mutual balance of rights between individuals, the mother and the unborn child.

We should have in place a law to protect the rights of the unborn. The Parliament of Canada must face this issue. I urge we do it quickly.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

THE CABINET

GOVERNMENT'S INTEGRITY—DISMISSAL OF MINISTER—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister heads the most dishonest government in human memory. Scandal after scandal—

• (1415)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I would ask all Hon. Members when they are putting their questions to lay the facts that are necessary for a preamble and not to use unnecessarily provocative language.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I am talking about scandal after scandal, resignation after resignation. There is something rotten here, Mr. Speaker.

The Prime Minister intervenes to restore order, but not until he has his back against the wall.

How can the Prime Minister justify his Government's incredible lack of integrity and what are the full circumstances . . .

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but I would ask the Leader of the Official Opposition to use the kind of language that is appropriate to a preamble.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, your advice is always well taken, but this is a sad day for Canada, and I have the right to ask the question.

What are the full circumstances of the Minister's firing? What actually happened? Are there other facts that have not been revealed? And why was this Minister fired, while for some strange reason, another Minister who behaved in a reprehensible fashion is still sitting in Cabinet? What made the Prime Minister decide he could dispense with this Minister? And why only him?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition said that the Prime Minister acts, and I quote: "only when he has his back against the wall." As far as I know, no reports on these events had been published yesterday afternoon. Once I received the information, brief though it was, I gave the necessary instructions. An investigation was carried out, and upon confirmation of these facts, I communicated with the Minister and immediately asked him for his resignation.

It seems to me that this is how a Prime Minister should act, with the severity and celerity dictated by the circumstances.

* * *

[English]

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES—REQUEST FOR EXAMINATION BY COMMITTEE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I listened through the media to the Prime Minister's remarks this morning before and after his caucus. I want to say to him that no one will be fooled by his election year commitment to ethics. A leopard does not change its spots.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Why does one Minister who may have violated the conflict of interest guidelines get the boot and yet another Minister who violated the Canada Elections Act, and who covered up that fact and covered up that letter—

Mr. Masse: Not true!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —for two years is still in Cabinet?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows that language which impugns the honour of another Member is not appropriate in a preamble. If one wants to lay a charge then there are other places to do it.

I would ask the right hon. gentleman to co-operate with the Chair and to put his question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I cite the letter which has been publicly discussed on the floor of this House from the Electoral Officer that, in light of that letter, this Minister violated or participated in an infraction of the Elections Act. That is in the letter.

I say to the Prime Minister that he has run out of scapegoats for failure to do his job. The Government he leads has no moral tone.

• (1420)

Day after day the Prime Minister has promised the House that a parliamentary committee will have the opportunity to question the Minister of Energy. Yet a Conservative majority on that committee has blocked an inquiry.

I ask the Prime Minister, if that committee is not relevant, will he authorize his House Leader to set up a committee in order that we can examine the Minister of Energy? Does he think that acting on one scandal allows him to cover up another?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the conflict of interest guidelines are, as I have acknowledged many times, the responsibility of the Prime Minister; and the integrity of the Government and all of its Members is also the responsibility of the Prime Minister.

I am as saddened, as I am sure any Member of the House is, or any Leader of any political Party, when any Member of his political Party, or any Member of the House, fails to comply, not only with the conflict of interest guidelines, but with any rules and regulations that govern our conduct. It is a serious problem in the 1980s, particularly conflict of interest, not only in this jurisdiction but in all jurisdictions.

I said this morning, and I have said in other circumstances, that I view the conflict of interest guidelines with the utmost of importance, and their enforcement will be with the utmost of severity.

I deeply regret, obviously, any breach, inadvertent or otherwise, of the guidelines, because the Canadian people are entitled to the observance of the highest standards. When those standards are lessened in any way, clearly this is unacceptable to me, and unacceptable to all Members of the House.

With regard to the conflict of interest guidelines, therefore, which are under my direct responsibility, when I was apprised, not of a violation, but of the possibility of a violation, which was not public knowledge in any way, I immediately instructed the officials of the Government to seek confirmation, and if confirmation was forthcoming, to provide it to me. When that was done, I immediately acted to seek the resignation of a Minister. It seems to me that that is in keeping with the most genuine spirit of parliamentary accountability and responsibility.

In regard to a separate matter, the administration of which law does not come under me but comes under an independent officer of Parliament, a parliamentary committee is presently considering this. The Minister of Energy has publicly stated that it would be his intention, at an appropriate time, to go before that committee and provide whatever testimony is required.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL BY HOUSE TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, it is now clear that the Elections, Privileges and Procedure Committee will not be able to summon the Minister to appear, will not be able to ask questions about specific violations of the Canada Elections Act, yet the Prime Minister had made a commitment in the House of Commons on January 28 that the Minister would appear when he stated:

> The suggestion is that it be considered by a parliamentary committee. When the Minister returns the Hon. Member may want to interrogate him—

In answering the Leader of the NDP, who stated that he would not be able to question the Minister in committee, the Prime Minister stated:

> The Member says that he cannot under the rules. He can in the committee. If the matter is referred to a committee—

I wish to ask the Prime Minister if he will live up to his commitment and cause a motion to pass this House that will define the terms of reference that would allow the committee to inquire fully into the election expenses violations, that would give the committee the power to summon the Minister and other relevant witnesses, and to obtain relevant documents.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps my hon. friend was not listening to the answer that I just gave to his Leader in respect of summoning the Minister. I have already indicated that the Minister will voluntarily appear before the committee and respond to whatever questions the Hon. Member cares to ask him.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The committee says it can't hear him.

Mr. Mulroney: The Minister will be there. If the committee want to hear him, they will hear him, and I suppose they will.

[Translation]

DEFINITION OF MANDATE PERMITTING COMMITTEE TO MAKE COMPLETE INVESTIGATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): It is obvious that the Prime Minister was not informed about the terms of reference which have been established for the committee as they will not allow the members of the committee to request the presence of the Minister, nor to ask questions about specific infractions committed by specific individuals. The House must therefore adopt a motion that will clearly define the terms of reference and will allow a full investigation. I want to ask the Prime Minister whether he would undertake, on behalf of his party, to support such a motion which will give the committee sufficiently wide terms of reference to allow the Committee to fully inquire into this affair rather than this travesty we are witnessing now.

• (1425)

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is acting like a bit of a cry-baby. He was sitting on that committee and he was involved in establishing the terms of reference.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Oh, come on!

Mr. Mazankowski: I have the terms of reference—

Mr. Gauthier: One vote.

Mr. Mazankowski: I have the terms of reference in my hand. They state as follows: "That the committee request Mr. Gorman and Mr. Hamel to appear before this committee at the soonest possible time, preferably 3.30 o'clock p.m. tomorrow," which is today, "to discuss procedures and practices relating to alleged violations of elections expenses"—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, they do not even want to hear the terms of reference which are very pertinent to this case.

An Hon. Member: What about Mr. Masse?

Mr. Speaker: Questions have been put to the Government with respect to the committee and what the committee did. What the committee did, of course, is its own business. However, the question has been put that if the committee does not have the power that somebody thinks it should have, what is the Government's response? The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister is trying to give that response, and I would ask that Hon. Members give him the courtesy to hear it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members across the way have forgotten the meaning of the word "courtesy" in this place.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Mazankowski: The terms of reference that were decided upon yesterday are, and I quote: "That the committee request Mr. Gorman and Mr. Hamel to appear before this committee at the soonest possible time, preferably 3.30 o'clock p.m. tomorrow," which is today, "to discuss the procedures and practices relating to alleged violations of election expenses, and the committee commits itself in principle to call on any other person or persons who may have relevant information regarding the administration of the Elections Act".

The Prime Minister just indicated that the Minister will in all probability want to volunteer—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Probably!

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, wants to, will volunteer to appear before the committee. What more do Members want?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): We will not be able to ask him questions.

Mr. Mazankowski: If he is prepared to appear before the committee, will you be prepared to be there to ask the questions? That is the point.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Don't worry about that.

[Translation]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, this is a sad day for Canada and for the politics in this country. That is a fact.

[English]

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF HOUSE ORDER STIPULATING TERMS OF REFERENCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to pursue what the Deputy Prime Minister has just said, and either he can answer it or the Prime Minister, because once again I think they are just trying to cover up the whole situation and I regret that.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Speaker: There are, of course, different ways to say "cover up", but I think it is quite clear that that is an allegation which is not appropriate under the circumstances. The Hon. Member knows that the Chair, as has been the case in the past, has been more than prepared to accept and support an inquiry and questions.

I am asking Hon. Members to put those questions in appropriate wording.

Mr. Broadbent: My question is for the Prime Minister. Considering that the Deputy Prime Minister has just said that the committee is going to hear witnesses who are strictly pertinent to the situation at hand involving the Hon. Member for Frontenac, namely Mr. Gorman and certain others; considering that the Prime Minister has indicated the Hon. Member for Frontenac has indicated that he would appear as well; and considering that the terms of reference under which the committee is operating do not permit it to discuss with these witnesses the specific case involving the Hon. Member for Frontenac, will the Government do the right thing and bring in a House order, change the terms of reference, have the Member go as a witness and discuss the whole situation fully and frankly? That is the issue here.

• (1430)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is really never satisfied with what he gets. Originally Members opposite wanted this matter referred to a committee.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): It has not been referred.

Mr. Mazankowski: The issue has been referred to a committee.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Broadbent: It has not.

Mr. Mazankowski: The committee is seized with it.

Mr. Tobin: It is seized up.

Mr. Mazankowski: Terms of reference have been established. An investigation is going on. Hon. Members wanted the assurance that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources would appear before the committee. That assurance is being given.

Today two very important witnesses are going to testify before that committee. I am sure that if, during the course of that testimony today it gives rise to the requirement for further witnesses to appear, the committee can then seize itself of that opportunity and explore any questions that may arise out of the testimony that is presented today.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, we have two very important witnesses, officers of Parliament, who are charged with the responsibility of the administration of the Act. It would seem to me that it would be natural for Members opposite to want to hear what they have to say because they are, in effect, responsible for the administration of the Act.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): These answers, Mr. Speaker, I say to the Deputy Prime Minister, are truly incredible.

The Chair of that committee has already said that the witnesses who are going to appear cannot deal with the specific case involving the Member for Frontenac. They cannot deal with the specific allegation. The committee has already made that ruling, the Chair has announced that. Is this anything other than a serious cover-up, an avoidance of the truth, instead of getting on—

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party that I do not want to hear the words "cover up" used with dishonest connotations again. The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to want to engage in grandstanding again.

Mr. Broadbent: We want the truth.

Mr. Mazankowski: What he is really trying to do here—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party may have erred in putting his question, but the question still is there. I want the Deputy Prime Minister to answer the question.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the Members opposite went into this case with their eyes wide open. Quite frankly, there were discussions between House Leaders as to how this matter might be dealt with. My colleague, the Deputy House Leader, on January 28, said, in response to a question by the Leader of the Opposition, as found on page 12380 of Hansard:

> The Hon. Member will know that there are two ways of sending this to committee. One is by specific reference and one is by the committee deciding how it wants to handle it.
>
> We are up for discussions.

The discussions took place. The agreement took place. Now Members opposite want something else. They are never satisfied.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE MOTION FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I will try to put the question to the Prime Minister in the most perfect straightforward terms.

Since it is necessary for the committee to have a specific motion accepted by this House that would enable it to look into the allegations made about the Member for Frontenac, since it is required to have a motion from the House for it to do that, since the Prime Minister is on the record as saying he wants a full discussion, will the Government do the right thing now and announce its intention to bring that kind of motion before the House today so we can all agree with it and get on to the serious discussion which the Prime Minister said he wanted?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I take it from the Leader of the New Democratic Party that the New Democrats are changing their minds. They want to superimpose the NDP's wish on the committee. The committee has made a decision. There have been discussions between the two House Leaders. If that is something—

Mr. Broadbent: You are finished with this.

Mr. Nystrom: Be honest and open.

An Hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York Centre.

Oral Questions

THE ADMINISTRATION

RESIGNATION OF FORMER MINISTER OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES—INVESTIGATION CARRIED OUT BY CABINET OFFICIAL

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It is about the former Minister of Supply and Services.

On December 4 when I was asking the Prime Minister about other scandals affecting his Government he said, as reported at page 11491 of Hansard, that he had:

> —instructed the Associate Secretary of the Cabinet, Mr. J. L. Manion, to review personally with each Minister his or her situation under the code very carefully, and advise me in regard to that interrogation.

I want to ask the Prime Minister whether this was done in the case of the Minister whose resignation he sought yesterday, and did he receive a satisfactory report following the investigation?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Yes, it was done, Mr. Speaker. The report that came back from the Associate Secretary of the Cabinet, having met with the Minister and having received his response to appropriate documents and questions, was that, on the information that had been given to the Associate Secretary of the Cabinet, all was in order.

PROTECTION OF PUBLIC INTEREST

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, let me ask the Prime Minister the following question. In light of the decision he made to seek and receive the resignation of that Minister, has he taken any other measures, within the responsibilities of the Minister that he discharged since he became a member of the Cabinet, to assure that the public interest was not compromised by that Minister while he held that office in his Cabinet?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Yes, I have, Mr. Speaker. But I should point out to my hon. friend that pursuant to the exhaustive report, and it was an exhaustive meeting that Mr. Manion had with each one of the Ministers, which was followed up with a very exacting series of questionnaires and interrogations by Mr. Manion of each of the Ministers to ensure full and complete compliance with all of the conflict of interest guidelines, that further to receiving a complete report from the Associate Secretary of Cabinet it indicated that there was compliance by the then Minister of Supply and Services.

Clearly it was not until yesterday when the matter was brought to my attention that there might be a violation, an infringement or a degree of non-compliance, this was new information that was imparted to me, upon which I acted immediately. I have since, of course, given instructions to ensure that all necessary follow-ups that my hon. friend would approve of have been done.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

PROCEEDINGS IN COMMITTEE—REQUEST THAT ALLEGED INFRACTIONS BE SUBJECT OF QUESTIONING

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, the Hon. Member for Timiskaming. I want to ask the Member specifically to confirm to this House that, in fact, yesterday afternoon following the adoption of the motion by the committee as read by the Deputy Prime Minister, he ruled that no specific questions could be asked with respect to the Member for Frontenac.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the Hon. Member that I appreciate very much the good tone of his question but I think that that question is out of order.

Would the Hon. Member seek his information in another way? What the Hon. Member is doing is asking about something that happened or something that was said as differentiated from expected procedures or plans of the committee.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Will the Chairman of the committee consider questions from committee members that deal specifically with the Member for Frontenac's alleged infractions of the Canada Elections Act?

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, in answer to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, may I first congratulate him on an amendment to our main motion in committee yesterday supporting the bringing in of both Mr. Hamel and Mr. Gorman. It certainly shows that the New Democrats and the Conservatives can support this motion.

Under the guidelines of our committee, we will deal with the process and the procedures under that mandate. We will be prepared, with a reference to the House; if this is given, we will investigate the individual.

• (1440)

REQUEST THAT HOUSE BE PRESENTED WITH MOTION FOR REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. In light of the answer we have just been given by the Chairman of the Standing Committee, will the Prime Minister indeed get such a reference presented to the House so we can do the things he had been promising us we should be doing with respect to the Hon. Member for Frontenac?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member wishes to negotiate terms of reference on the floor of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: There are usual procedures for that. The Deputy House Leader offered two alternatives last week as to how we might proceed. I understand that there was a process established. If the Hon. Member wants his House Leader to discuss this matter with our House Leader, I am sure we can discuss it and hopefully arrive at a satisfactory conclusion.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PRESIDENT OF INTERNATIONAL OLYMPIC COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: I know Hon. Members would want me to draw to their attention the presence in the gallery of His Excellency, Mr. Juan Antonio Samaranch, President of the International Olympic Committee.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

[Translation]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

THREE DEMANDS OF MONTREAL EAST END—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, I shall address my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

For the last two years Eastern Montreal social, economic and political groups have been asking the federal Government to take action to promote the economic recovery of their regions. The Committee for the Economic Recovery of Eastern Montreal, presided by Mr. Pichette, submitted a report to the Government last September recommending that the Government contribute $25 million for their Business Restructuring and Modernization Assistance Office, create a special fund to train workers and implement a pre-retirement adjustment program. My question to the Prime Minister is this: Can he tell us when his Government will respond to these three requests to promote economic recovery in Eastern Montreal? Are we going to receive favorable replies to these requests, and if so, when?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, in addition to the $38 million injected by this Government in Eastern Montreal since 1984, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion has indicated that he will be able to give his response to the report mentioned by the Hon. Member in the near future. I expect that the Minister will announce the response of the Government to this report reasonably soon after his return to Canada.

DEVELOPMENT OF OLD PORT—INFUSION OF $30 MILLION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the people of Quebec are fed up. They realize that Ministers from Quebec are always involved in scandals and are busy taking care of their own interests instead of defending the interests of Quebecers.

My question is this: The Picard Report, the Pichette Report, the people of Montreal . . . My supplementary question is for the Minister of Public Works. The City of Montreal has been waiting for two years for this Government to inject $130 million in the development of the Montreal Old Port. All other municipalities have received it. Can the Minister tell us why Montreal has had nothing? Is it because the Ministers from Quebec are too busy promoting their own interests through shady affairs instead of defending the people of Montreal?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, there are consultations ongoing with provincial and municipal Governments and a report should be filed shortly.

* * *

[Translation]

THE CABINET

MINISTER'S RESIGNATION—QUERY WHETHER INVESTIGATION CONDUCTED

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister of Canada. I think the Prime Minister realizes that the Canadian people must have a Government that is frank and open in its dealings with the nation.

I would like to know whether the Prime Minister could expand on the reasons why the Minister was fired. Could the Prime Minister inform the House whether there was an investigation, and if so, what kind? And finally, Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister inform the House, whether the investigation only concerned a possible conflict of interest or whether other aspects were being investigated as well?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the former Minister will make a statement in the House at three o'clock. I expect he will be in a position to respond to some of my hon. friend's questions and concerns.

The Hon. Member referred to the need for a Government to be frank and open. Well, yesterday at 1 p.m. was the first time

I heard that the possibility of a conflict of interest existed. I immediately asked officials to arrange for a meeting with the Minister. Once certain facts had been checked, I took immediate action, that is, I got in touch with the Minister and asked him for his resignation, and I did so well before there had been any reports or rumours of any kind in the media.

I think that is an example of the celerity and decisiveness that should be the rule in such cases.

My hon. friend knows perfectly well, and it is of course most unfortunate, that in the course of this decade, conflict of interest has been and remains a serious problem for all politicians. We have had that problem here, Manitoba has had its problems, and I am told that three Ministers in the Ontario Government had to resign in a matter of weeks or months. And quite recently, Quebec's Solicitor General had to resign because of a conflict of interest. This is a new and difficult problem, a problem of our times, and I believe we will have to act severely in all cases, as I have done. However, the problem is not peculiar to this Government. It is a national problem and we have to deal with it very seriously.

[English]

CONDUCT OF INVESTIGATION—PROTECTION OF PUBLIC INTEREST

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, in a serious vein as well, I wonder if the Prime Minister could explain to the House who is doing the investigation. Is it being done entirely by the Prime Minister's Office and is it limited to the possibility of a conflict of interest? Finally, can he assure the House that this possible conflict of interest did not influence the duties of the Minister in a negative way when he was fulfilling the responsibilities assigned to him by the Prime Minister of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already responded to that question. I believe it has been answered. I can tell my hon. friend in regard to the allegation raised that, without this matter having appeared anywhere in newspapers or ever having been raised in the House of Commons, when the first suggestion of the existence of a conflict was brought to my attention, I immediately, yesterday afternoon, asked if confirmation of this might exist. When it appeared that it did exist, I acted immediately, as I think a Prime Minister should.

I would think my hon. friend would perhaps agree as a parliamentarian that, as regrettable as conflicts of interest are, conflicts which exist in every jurisdiction of Canada, this is the swift manner in which they ought to be dealt with.

WAR CRIMINALS

TAKING EVIDENCE IN SOVIET BLOC COUNTRIES—PROTECTION OF INNOCENT CANADIANS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. The Minister will know that officials from his Department are currently negotiating agreements in Soviet Bloc countries for the taking and use of evidence from the Soviet Bloc in Canadian trials for crimes against humanity and war crimes. The Minister will also know that all elements of Soviet bureaucracy, including the judiciary, are controlled by the Communist Party which has a long record of falsifying documents to achieve its political goals.

Will the Minister tell the House what precautions his officials are taking to protect innocent Canadians from fabricated Soviet evidence?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question of the Hon. Member who has had a substantial interest in this issue. Hon. Members will recall that one of the important conclusions of the Deschênes Commission, in light of the fact that it was not in a position to travel and hold hearings overseas or behind the Iron Curtain, was that there should be established safeguards with respect to the taking of evidence and the terms of investigations of alleged crimes. We as a Government, and I on behalf of the Government, accepted the recommendations of the Deschênes Commission.

• (1450)

We are in fact now negotiating with a variety of countries on both sides of the Iron Curtain to make sure that the Deschênes conditions are met, namely, the protection of reputations through confidentiality, the use of independent interpreters, access to original documents, access to witnesses' previous statements, freedom of examination of witnesses in agreement with Canadian rules of evidence, and the videotaping of such evidence.

We intend to make sure that Canadian standards of justice prevail with respect to prosecutions undertaken.

* * *

THE ADMINISTRATION

RESIGNATION OF FORMER MINISTER OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES—INFORMATION PROVIDED TO PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister with regard to the resignation of the Minister of Supply and Services. The Prime Minister has said that he has made himself personally responsible for the administration of his conflict of interest guidelines, and he is certainly responsible for his choice of Ministers for his Cabinet.

Will the Prime Minister tell us right now exactly what information was given to him and exactly why he decided, on the basis of that information, to obtain the resignation of the Minister of Supply and Services? The Canadian people have a right to know exactly what led the Prime Minister to get this resignation.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I indicated that in the statement yesterday and I have said in the House that what led me to secure the resignation of the Minister was the fact that a personal loan to the Minister had not been disclosed, which I believe to be in violation of the conflict of interest guidelines.

NON-DISCLOSURE OF PERSONAL LOAN

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, why will the Prime Minister not give us the details of this personal loan and give us his judgment as to why that personal loan and the failure to disclose it contravened his conflict of interest guidelines? Why is he attempting to evade his responsibility to keep the Canadian public informed about the way in which he is carrying out or not carrying out his responsibilities?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am more than willing, obviously, to let the Canadian public decide, at an appropriate time, how I am carrying out my responsibilities in this and other areas. I think that most Canadians would agree that this matter was dealt with swiftly and appropriately.

With regard to any questions my hon. friend has with regard to details, he may care to wait for a statement by the Minister which I have indicated will be made here in the House in a few minutes.

* * *

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

ALLEGATIONS OF INFRACTION—REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Will he confirm, on behalf of the Government, that he will agree in principle to make a reference to the committee with regard to the specific allegations against the Member for Frontenac and guarantee that that committee will have the power to call all necessary witnesses? Will he give us that guarantee?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I thought I made myself quite clear when I said that the House Leaders could meet and discuss the appropriate terms of reference which they may want to consider since the NDP has changed its mind about this issue. That can happen sometime later today or tomorrow. I am sure the Deputy House Leader would be very prepared to sit down with his counterparts on the other side and try to work out a satisfactory arrangement.

Mr. Murphy: The Deputy Prime Minister keeps saying that the New Democratic Party has changed its mind. It has not. We have always wanted to get at the truth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murphy: The only way we can get at the truth is if we have a specific reference from this House and the Deputy Prime Minister has so far refused to promise that he will make a commitment to doing that.

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEE ON TERMS OF REFERENCE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it is important that the Deputy Prime Minister give his commitment, now that we will have the two witnesses before the committee in one-half hour. Let us not waste our time. Let us have a guarantee now that the Minister agrees, on behalf of the Government, to the principle of having a specific reference giving us all the powers that we need.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister has refused nothing of the sort. I will point out again that on January 28 my colleague, the Deputy House Leader, reminded the Members opposite that:

> —there are two ways of sending this to committee. One is by specific reference and one is by the committee deciding how it wants to handle it. We are up for discussions.

As we were then, we are today.

The Hon. Member is making a suggestion. He knows very well that these are the kinds of things which are negotiated among the House Leaders. They now want to break a tradition and practice which have served this House very usefully over the past number of years.

* * *

THE ADMINISTRATION

DISMISSAL OF FORMER MINISTER OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES—INFORMATION GIVEN TO PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last night, through a spokesman, the Prime Minister's Office issued a version of the facts with respect to the firing of the Minister of Supply and Services. The people of Canada have a right to know all the facts.

Will the Prime Minister tell the House when and from what source his office first learned of the potential conflict of interest by the Minister of Supply and Services? Can he tell the House as well whether or not there is any official investigation as a result of this firing of the Minister of Supply and Services?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have answered all of those questions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has not answered the questions. We will hear from the Minister at three o'clock.

TIME INFORMATION GIVEN TO PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister again, when did the Prime Minister's Office or people in government first hear of a potential conflict of interest, from where did they get that information, and is there a police investigation today or has there been one into all the circumstances regarding this potential conflict of interest and the firing of the Minister of Supply and Services? Please answer the question.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The same answer, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

FARM IMPROVEMENT MARKETING CO-OPERATIVES LOANS ACT

IMPLEMENTATION OF PROVISIONS

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. On Monday of this week the agriculture critic for the NDP stated that there would be a delay in the implementation of the new Farm Improvement Marketing Co-operatives Loans Act.

Given the importance of this new program for farmers in financial difficulty, could the Minister clarify for all farmer applicants across Canada when the program will be in effect?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I certainly welcome the Hon. Member's question because it provides me with yet another opportunity, on behalf of the Prime Minister and the Government, to deliver more good news to Canadian farmers.

The Act has been proclaimed on time. The regulations have been completed on time. Consultation has taken place, and as early as last Monday we were in the process of utilizing that new financial instrument and we are in the process of making loans to Canadian farmers.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CENTRAL AMERICA—UNITED STATES' FUNDING OF NICARAGUAN CONTRA FORCES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will know that today could turn out to be either a very positive day or a very negative day for the peace process in Central America, depending on how the United States Congress responds to President Reagan's most recent request for funding for the Contras. The Prime Minister will also know of the profound disapproval of most Canadians for the approach of the United States Government in Central America.

Would the Prime Minister not take this opportunity, as the Prime Minister of Canada, on behalf of all Canadians, to say something today to the United States Congress about how much Canada would like it if the Congress turned down the President's proposal for further funding?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, is the Member of the NDP actually suggesting that we as a Parliament insinuate ourselves into the deliberative rights of another sovereign parliamentary body? The Parliament of Canada would react very strongly if anybody tried to tell us what to do. I am offended by the suggestion of the NDP that we impose our will, or seek to, on the Congress of the United States.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows full well, as does everyone in this House, that from time to time we do express ourselves about what other Governments do, whether it is the Government of South Africa, the Government of the Soviet Union, or any other Government which, in our judgment, is imperilling the peace of the world.

POSITION OF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister not to attack the United States but simply to offer a legitimate criticism on behalf of the Canadian people that now is the time for the United States to do what all five Governments in Central America are saying that it should do, that is, to discontinue funding for the Contras.

• (1500)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the American parliamentarians are considering an important vote today. That is entirely their right, as it is for Members of Parliament to vote moneys as we deem fit in the national interest. I presume that is what all American parliamentarians will do.

In regard to the position of the Government of Canada, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who is presently in southern Africa, was most recently in Central America setting out with some success and influence, I believe, an appropriate and independent statement of foreign policy which reflects the views of the Government and people of Canada as to the manner in which peace can best emerge in Central America. That is the right and obligation of the Government of Canada, a sovereign nation. That is what we have done and that is what we will continue to do.

The Speaker: I wish to advise the House that I have received notice from the Hon. Member for Langelier (Mr. Côté) who wishes to make a statement to this place on a question of personal privilege.

* * *

[Translation]

PRIVILEGE

FORMER MINISTER'S STATEMENT RESPECTING RESIGNATION

Hon. Michel Côté (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, at the request of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), I handed in my resignation as Minister of Supply and Services. Today, I would like to explain here in the House the circumstances that led me to do so. The demands of political life in recent years, both on my family and on me personally, led me to ask an old friend for a personal loan, and he agreed.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear before the House that this circumstance never in any way placed me in a position where my interests conflicted with the ministerial duties that were mine in this Government. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I can assure my colleagues in the House that the friend in question never received any favours or privileges in return.

However, I involuntarily neglected to declare this situation as required by the conflict of interest directives, thus contravening the spirit of the Ministers' code of conduct.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that I sincerely regret this serious error of omission.

Mr. Prime Minister, obviously I sincerely regret the embarrassment I have caused the Government and you yourself, Prime Minister.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that it has been an honour and a privilege to serve as a Member of Cabinet, and I would like to thank my colleagues and all Members of this House who gave me their support when I was exercising my ministerial duties.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I also wish to thank my constituents in Langelier for their constant support, and I can assure them that I will continue to be a faithful defender of their interests, both here and in my riding.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ABORTION

TABLING OF MINISTER'S LETTER TO PROVINCIAL COUNTERPARTS

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) requested that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) table a letter which he had sent to his provincial counterparts regarding the Supreme Court decision on abortion.

I am pleased to table copies of these letters today on behalf of the Minister of National Health and Welfare who is unable to be here at this time.

* * *

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, ATLANTIC CANADA, 1987

PRESENTATION OF FIRST REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York— Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the legislative committee on Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, I have the honour to present the committee's first report in both official languages.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

PETITIONS

PROPOSED FREE TRADE—CALL FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and privilege to rise pursuant to Standing Order 106 to present a petition on behalf of a number of constituents who are concerned because the Conservative Government does not have a mandate from the people of Canada to conclude the trade deal with the United States.

They believe that this trade deal would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and thereby undermine Canada's ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States. They believe that the trade deal denies Canada secure access to the U.S. market which was, of course, the key objective in the trade negotiations, and threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs in this country. Therefore, they call upon Parliament to dissolve now in order to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the trade deal during a national general election.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty pursuant to Standing Order 106 to present a petition from residents of Canada who are concerned about the trade agreement between Canada and the United States and feel that it will have a fundamental impact on Canada's economic, cultural and political independence. Therefore, the petitioners request that the Parliament of Canada obtain a clear mandate from the Canadian people by calling a general election.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which deals with the same subject. It is signed by hundreds of people from my constituency and parts of southwestern Ontario. It indicates their serious concern with the plans of the Conservative Government to proceed with signing a trade agreement with the United States despite the lack of a mandate from the Canadian people.

These people feel that this trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States. The undersigned therefore humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and permit the Canadian people to make a choice with respect to this issue before it is too late.

• (1510)

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I also have petitions from the City of Vancouver, Port Coquitlam and Port Moody, British Columbia, all three very illustrious and important areas in British Columbia.

The petitions deal with the trade agreement originally signed with the United States. The petitioners state that the agreement removes the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership effectively and, more important to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, and to equalize opportunities between the regions. The petitioners humbly pray that before the Government completes this deal and enacts it into legislation, it will call a national general election on the issue.

[Translation]

HOUSING THE HOMELESS-REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, the two petitions I am tabling today were signed by residents of St. John's, Newfoundland; London, Ontario; Montreal, Quebec; Douglastown, New Brunswick; and Niagara Falls, Ontario.

The undersigned deplore the fact that last year, over 100,000 persons were homeless in Canada; that the number of homeless young people, women and entire families is increasing steadily; that the number of affordable housing units is still dropping; and that the Government has yet to take action to deal with these problems.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray Parliament to take immediate action to provide all Canadians with acceptable and satisfactory accommodation and to establish social reintegration programs to help these needy Canadians become part of our society again.

[English]

PROPOSED FREE TRADE—CALL FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, it is my honour and duty to present a petition from citizens from across Ontario. Considering that the present Government trade agreement between Canada and the United States would have a fundamental impact on Canada's economic, cultural and political independence, and considering that such an agreement implies the loss of jobs in many sectors and regions, the undersigned request that the Parliament of Canada obtain a clear mandate from the Canadian people through a national debate on the alternatives available to Canada, and that this debate result in a national election prior to the signing of any such agreement.

AID TO GUATEMALA

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions from residents of my constituency of Sarnia—Lambton. These good residents are dismayed that, in their opinion, the fundamental issues of social and economic justice remain inadequately addressed in Guatemala. They humbly pray and call upon the Parliament to reject any proposed renewal of unilateral aid to the Guatemalan Government. Instead, they ask that aid be administered by Canadian NGOs through their Guatemalan counterparts.

PORNOGRAPHY—SUPPORT FOR BILL C-54

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions. The first petition is from a number of residents of Swift Current, Saskatchewan, in respect of Bill C-54, which creates new laws against the production, sale, rental and distribution of pornography. Whereas the petitioners are concerned that the pressures exerted by various permissive minority groups may cause the Government to water down and weaken this legislation, the petitioners call upon the Government to pass Bill C-54 without dilution in the belief that this Bill gives recognition to the inherent dignity of individuals, particularly women and young people who are the most vulnerable to exploitation in this area.

INCOME BLOCK AVERAGING FOR FARMERS AND FISHERMEN

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a second petition from a number of residents of the Cabri district in Saskatchewan. The petitioners note that whereas farmers and fishermen for many years have enjoyed the right to block average their incomes, and that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on December 16, 1987, indicated his intention to eliminate block averaging, the petitioners call upon Parliament to take the necessary steps to retain block averaging for farmers and fishermen as recommended by the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs in its report on the White Paper on tax reform, stage one.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE—CALL FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour and privilege to present a petition signed by constituents in the riding of Thunder Bay—Atikokan, the neighbourhoods of Westfort and Northwood and from the riding of Thunder Bay—Nipigon, from Jumbo Gardens in the west end area. The petitioners reject the Mulroney—Reagan trade deal and call upon this Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the trade agreement during a national general election.

USE OF KNIVES IN COMMISSION OF CRIMES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have three petitions from Vancouver, Surrey, New Westminster and Burnaby, British Columbia, with respect to the increasing crimes, including murder, robbery and sexual assaults, which have been committed with knives. This trend is on the increase in all major cities across Canada. Whereas the law through the federal Criminal Code allows citizens to carry knives for self-defence, and these knives, used by persons in public places, are often directly responsible for a variety of crimes, therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to amend the federal Criminal Code to prohibit the carrying of knives by citizens in public places, with the exception from this ban being those who use knives for legitimate work or who wear them for religious reasons.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE—CALL FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition, duly certified by the Clerk, from residents of Toronto, St. Catharines and Brockville, Ontario. These citizens are concerned that the trade deal negotiated between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of Canada and the President of the United States would have a fundamental impact on Canada's economic, cultural and political independence. They also feel that it will lead to a loss of jobs in many regions.

Therefore, the petitioners request the Parliament of Canada to obtain a clear mandate from the Canadian people through a national debate on the alternatives available to Canada and that this debate result in a national election prior to the signing of any such agreement.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour and privilege pursuant to Standing Order 106 to present a petition signed by residents of my riding, particularly the communities of Fort Frances, Pine Wood and Stratton. These petitioners call upon Parliament to dissolve in order that a national general election may be held so that the people of Canada can be heard on the proposed trade agreement with the United States of America.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition which has been certified as correct under Standing Order 106. These petitioners, citizens of Canada, state that the trade agreement between Canada and the United States would have a fundamental impact on Canada's economic, cultural and political independence and that such an agreement implies a loss of jobs in many sectors and regions. The undersigned request that the Parliament of Canada obtain a clear mandate from the Canadian people through a national debate on the alternatives available to Canada, and that this debate result in a national election prior to the signing of any such agreement.

OPPOSITION TO CLOSURE OF EMBASSY IN ECUADOR

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present to the House today a petition on behalf of Toronto residents stating their opposition to the closure of the Canadian embassy in Ecuador and the hardship that is imposed on individuals seeking to apply for immigration to Canada and to obtain visitors' visas. The petitioners urge Parliament and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to reverse the decision and reopen the Canadian embassy in Ecuador.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all notices of motions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1520)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

COPYRIGHT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-60, an Act to amend the Copyright Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to report to the House and rule with respect to the report stage of Bill C-60, an Act to amend the Copyright Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof. There are six motions on amendment on the Order Paper standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone).

[Translation]

Motion No. 1 was moved in committee, debated at length and finally defeated. Therefore, pursuant to Standing Order 114(10), the motion will not be selected.

[English]

Motion No. 2 causes the Chair some difficulty. That part of Motion No. 2 which is lettered "e" was moved, debated and then withdrawn in committee. In addition, the Chair is of the opinion that the whole motion goes beyond the scope of the clause and the Bill which it attempts to improve upon. This is not in order. May I refer the Hon. Member to Beauchesne's, Fifth Edition, Citation 773, and to May, Twentieth Edition, page 555.

I would also like to refer the Hon. Member to page 308 of the Selected Decisions of Speaker Lamoureux where it is clearly stated that a "—proposed amendment must be relevant—(and) can amplify aspects of a motion but cannot expand its scope." Thus I will not put Motion No. 2 to the House.

[Translation]

Motion Nos. 3 and 4 are acceptable and will be debated and voted on separately.

[English]

Motions No. 5 and 6 are somewhat similar. A motion exactly the same as Motion No. 6 was moved, debated and voted on in the negative in committee. Thus Motion No. 6 will not be selected.

Motion No. 5, while similar, is varied enough for the Chair to give the Hon. Member the benefit of the doubt. Thus Motion No. 5 will be debated and voted on separately.

[Translation]

The House will now proceed to the consideration of Motion No. 3.

[English]

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Obviously, I accept your ruling. I hope that, notwithstanding, Your Honour will relax the rules of relevance, allowing me in my remarks to address what I consider to be the serious deficiencies in this Bill that my motion on ephemeral recordings for broadcasters and spontaneous rights for educators would have alleviated. This view is held by many Canadians. I would appreciate Your Honour's consideration in that regard.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mount Royal raises a matter which, of course, is in the discretion of the Chair. I hope that her request will be given reasonable and sympathetic attention.

I want to say to all Hon. Members how much the Chair appreciates the co-operation of the Hon. Member with respect to these motions. There was some considerable difficulty in choosing the motions that are the subject of the ruling of the Chair. I know that the Hon. Member felt very strongly and does feel very strongly about this entire issue. However, the Hon. Member has very graciously co-operated with the Chair and the Table Officers in the best tradition that we are establishing here. I want to express my personal appreciation to the Hon. Member for Mount Royal for that.

Mr. Clinch: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I assume that the same latitude will be afforded the Parliamentary Secretary in response to some of the motions proposed by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Speaker: When the House is in an amiable mood, of course, all Hon. Members are treated the same way.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal) moved:

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-60, be amended in Clause 13 by striking out lines 39 to 48 at page 14 and lines 1 to 19 at page 15 and substituting the following therefor:

"13. Subsections 50(1) to (10) of the said Act are repealed."

She said: Mr. Speaker, with respect to my amendment which addresses Clause 13, Section 50(7), I would point out that this is an obsolete measure. It has never worked. Those who use the music in a public place or in a retail outlet are essentially commercial users who are accruing benefits, income, and in a sense depriving the creators of those lovely sounds coming across the airwaves of their just and due economic rights. That is what this Bill is all about. It deals with copyright which would affect and bring economic rights to creators in our society.

If the intention of Bill C-60 is to provide economic benefit to creators, the retention of Section 50(7) in the Act is inconsistent with the goals of the Bill. Therefore it should be removed. It is also very inconsistent when the Chair has had to rule that my amendments are beyond the scope of the Bill. I suggest that while the Government and, obviously, Ministers have the right, which I willingly accept and argued vigorously about with the Table Officers, they have avoided addressing some very serious matters. At the same time they have shown incredible inconsistency by retaining an issue that is an exemption. After wiping out the entire Section 50(1) through (10) they have decided to keep one single clause, which is the exemption clause. That makes absolutely no sense.

The section has been judicially interpreted to exempt also public performances by means of juke boxes or similar devices where the user pays a fee to obtain the performance. The exemption does not include wired music systems where the music originates with a phonograph in one location and is distributed by wire or other means to speakers placed in another location or locations. Since the section refers to "gramophone" and "radio receiving set" it presently may not extend to performances produced by tape recorders or television.

The Liberal Government White Paper entitled From Gutenberg to Telidon in 1984, which was a consultation paper, and the Conservative Government's subcommittee study on the revision of copyright entitled The Charter of Rights For Creators in 1985, and the Conservative Government's response, recommended that this exemption be abolished. How can the Government say that it is not dealing with exemptions and not dealing with fair dealing in this Bill and then move to retain an exemption with regard to fair dealing and abolish the rest of that particular article? It makes no logic or sense.

The other aspect of this is that it is an obsolete clause. It is one that has never been used. The advocacy for its abolition has been constant and continuous. I am not allowed to talk about ephemeral recordings which relate to an act that takes place on a daily basis in this country through broadcasters having to tape in order that they can show the recording at a different hour in another part of the country. This is going to be found to be illegal and they might well have court sanctions. Playing a record outside or on a tape recorder in a discothèque where youths come to be entertained will be kept as an exception that does not have to be paid for. It is so illogical as to blow the mind.

• (1530)

The legislative committee when studying Bill C-60 heard strong advocacy for the abolition of this section from PROCAN and CAPAC. They expressed their absolute astonishment over the retention of this exemption, and stressed that there should be no exceptions to the public performance right for musical works, not even for educational or religious purposes.

In this regard, I think that they have spoken strongly. From my perspective the exemption is totally out of context with what we are dealing with. Here we are talking about a small, fairly insignificant article that no one has asked to be kept. Because it is outside of the parameters of this Bill, users of the service have been refused spontaneous rights in order that our children can have up-to-date information. We would not deprive any creator from proper remuneration for their work. But we wish to enable our children to have the latest and most up-to-date information, whether it is by photocopying an article or an editorial from the paper yesterday, and then collecting later and negotiating with the copyright board, or whether the teacher has decided that the issues on free trade, or the issues on apartheid, or what is happening in the Middle East are so current and important that the teacher cannot wait for that information to be listed with the collective in order to negotiate a fair price. The whole approach is ludicrous, and I cannot make head or tail out of the Government's approach.

I would like very much to recommend that Bill C-60 be amended in Clause 13 by striking out lines 39 to 48 at page 14 and lines 1 to 19 at page 15 and substituting the following therefor: "13. Subsections 50(1) to (10) of the said Act are repealed."

It is inconsistent with the supposed philosophy of the Government. It does not meet with the Government's phase one and phase two which were supposed to come in together in order that we could see the impact after we had dealt with fair dealings and exemptions, and here we keep an exemption. Either we want to deal with exemptions, or we do not want to deal with exemptions. If we are not going to deal with exemptions and fair dealings, then let us take them out. If we are going to allow fair dealings and exemptions, then for goodness' sakes let us at least allow spontaneous work used by teachers and ephemeral recordings used by the CBC in order that the CRTC regulations are met, and a proper tape kept of music so that we can have the finest sound and not ruin the intent of the artist when presented to the public. We are totally inconsistent. It is a poor Bill. It has been badly thought through, and the Minister has been very poorly advised.

I would call for a movement to accept this particular amendment.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my Party I am pleased to be able to respond to Motion No. 3. While I seconded the motion put forward by my hon. friend, I must say that I did it to enable us to debate this particular amendment. At this point our plan is to oppose the amendment, and I wish to explain why.

As my hon. friend has indicated, this amendment is designed to repeal an existing exemption. The exemption is commonly known as the "gramophone" or "juke-box" amendment. This exemption frees the users of record players and juke boxes from paying royalties to the owners of the copyright in works that are publicly performed.

If one took the extreme position that, if the exemption is removed as has been proposed, some small users, for example, a corner store owner, who incidentally may be playing the radio during business hours, would technically be in breach of the law. For that reason, we find this to be a peculiar amendment.

I wish to remind Members that the publication entitled The Charter of Rights for Creators, published in October, 1985, contained the following recommendation:

> 44. The revised law should contain an exception from copyright liability for performances of protected works by means of radios, television sets and playback machines that incidentally take place in public.

The Charter of Rights for Creators acknowledged this problem when it stated:

> Clearly it would be an improper extension of copyright law if these essentially private uses were, even in theory, considered copyright infringements.

While the subcommittee called for the removal of the existing exemption, it also recommended that the revised law should contain an exemption from copyright liability for performances of protected works by means of radios, television sets, and playback machines that incidentally take place in public. I realize that I am reiterating that point to make it clear that it is obvious that this motion ought not to be supported. I believe that this is a reasonable approach which, quite frankly, would make the revised law workable.

I would like to suggest to my hon. colleague that exemptions will be considered in phase two of the revision of this Act. During the committee hearings, the Minister made a rather vague commitment that phase two would be addressed in the spring. At that time Members of my Party pressed the Minister to expedite that process. I am optimistic that the need for it is so obvious that at phase two the Minister will bring forward the appropriate initiative.

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), and the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). The points that have been discussed here today were discussed at length in the legislative committee.

I think it is important to look at proposed Section 50.7 in respect of the totality of the Bill. If it is looked at in that context, Bill C-60 repeals Sections 50.1 to 50.10 of the present Copyright Act which deal with the copyright appeal board. However, proposed Section 50.7 is being reintroduced slightly modified to reflect the wording of the Bill. Proposed Section 50.7 deals with the copyright appeal board's power over the fees, charges, or royalties collectible from the owner of a radio receiving set or gramophone. Basically, proposed subsection 50.7 provides that the board cannot establish fees where there is a public performance by means of any radio receiving set or gramophone in any place other than the theatre that is ordinarily and regularly used for entertainment and to which there is an admission charge. Thus proposed subsection 50.7 is an exception, an exception from the payment of copyright royalties.

As I mentioned earlier, the intention of Bill C-60 is to deal with certain issues, as has been mentioned. It does not deal with exceptions. All exceptions will be dealt with together in the next phase of the copyright revision.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, I would submit that this amendment is not appropriate for Bill C-60.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 3 (Mrs. Finestone) negatived.

• (1540)

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal) moved:

Motion No. 4

> That Bill C-60 be amended in Clause 24 by striking out line 34 at page 22 and substituting the following therefor:
>
> "of copyright occurring on or after".

She said: Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) for seconding my motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. May I change the name of the seconder from the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), with his consent, to the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mrs. Finestone: Clause 24 of the Bill reads:

> Subsection 46(1) and section 46.1 of the Copyright Act, as enacted by section 11, apply in respect of any alleged infringement of copyright occurring prior to, on or after the day on which section 11 comes into force.

Clause 11 of the Bill amends the section which deals with utilitarian or functional items. They will no longer be considered eligible for copyright protection. The section would have a retroactive effect by virtue of Clause 24.

I do not know what advice the Minister obtained, but I am sure that she, her Government, and her Party would not particularly care to be perceived as stripping businessmen of their acquired right, for the Government is prejudicing its case, or stripping them of a cause of action under existing law. The Minister should have known—and if she did not know, her advisers should have told her—that it is a basic tenet of the law that they cannot retroactively make what was legal illegal. I think this is fundamental to democracy and fundamental to fairness. Attention should be paid to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, probably Section 7. We have already had one surprise, a delightful, well reasoned, and very welcomed decision by the Supreme Court of Canada. I would hope that we would not have to go that same route in order for businessmen to have justice of the day.

What we have here is a potential for criminal sanctions as well as civil sanctions, starting at $25,000 and running up to $1 million. One could go to jail for six months or up to five years. We are not playing Monopoly—"Go to jail, do not pass Go, do not collect $200". This is a serious infringement. It is a very serious matter. I just wonder how carefully they looked at the whole issue, because they wanted to do it in two phases.

I will read into the record the very enlightening remarks of major corporations in the country which appeared before us. They showed us what a very badly conceived Bill it was, how poorly written it was, and how full of errors, both linguistic and content-wise, it was. I started to count the number of changes and found that it was in the hundreds. It was a very sloppily drafted Bill. I cannot say that it was hurried, because they had three years in which they thought about it. I do not think careful thought was given to this section.

My amendment would ensure that we are not prejudicing the cause of businessmen. It becomes prospective, not retroactive, because a cause of action should receive a clear judgment in the courts.

If we really want to be fair in this matter, there will be little damage if the amendment is accepted because there is a limitation on copyright. I do not suggest that I am an expert in this field, but I have certainly tried to become informed. What I know is that copyright infringement falls after three years. Therefore, in accepting this amendment we would be protecting those who were in litigation, those who are presently in litigation, and those who just might go to litigation because they are unaware of what is happening with Bill C-60. They might choose to go to litigation over the next three years. We would really be grandfathering the rights of these people under the existing law. The courts should decide and legal counsel should argue. We would pay a very small price so that people in business, those who have worked painstakingly at their designs, will not have unfair competition, pirating of their works, or counterfeiting of their designs.

I urge the Minister to consider this motion very seriously, not to turn it down strictly because it has come from the Opposition. A basic tenet of the law—and this is fundamental to democracy and fairness—should not be subject to retroactivity.

Let me read into the record what the bar associations have said. I think it is vital to know what is the thinking out there. First, Ogilvy, Renault indicates the following:

> The retroactivity—that is created under this clause is without precedent and unconscionable. It is clear under the current law that a cause of action for infringement exists in relation to the copying of a functional article, and in many instances parties have relied on the existing law to commence proceedings. To abolish Clause 11 retroactively will unfairly expose these persons to damages and costs. This clause must be deleted.

Second, Riches indicates:

> It is inappropriate for proposed section 46.1 to apply retroactively. Persons have governed their affairs on the basis of the law as it now stands. To change retroactively existing rights and liabilities by means of legislation is objectionable. Proposed subsections 46(2) and (3) are not subject to retroactive application; nor should proposed section 46.1.

Further to that, Balmer indicates:

> Clause 11 should not operate retrospectively so as to deprive copyright holders of claims to copyright which existed prior to the Bill's coming into force.

The last one is from Cassels, and I should like to read it into the record to show the Government how unfairly and inappropriately it is treating businessmen. It reads:

> Our clients, 554072 Ontario Inc. and Wheel Tronic Inc., commenced an action for copyright infringement in 1985 against the defendants who through a process of "reverse engineering" copied our clients' unique design for an automotive hoist and jack beam. If Clause 24 is adopted, our clients may be deprived of the cause of action which they have been pursuing at great expense, both in terms of money and time, for the past two and one half years.

It is now three years. It continues:

> On their behalf, we urge that Clause 11 be made prospective only, or, alternatively, that a provision be added to avoid the prejudice which would otherwise be caused to our clients and to others who may be involved in similar proceedings.

I suggest that under the Charter of Rights this is illegal. It will make money for lawyers and result in misery and costs for businessmen. It is not consistent with the philosophy of law, and I think that the Minister should withdraw it.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to respond to Motion No. 4. I do not know whether I seconded the motion in the end, but certainly it was my intention because I support the motion very enthusiastically on behalf of the New Democratic Party.

As the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) indicated, this amendment is designed to remove the retroactivity clause. I cannot imagine a Member of this House who would support a retroactivity clause. I remember debates vividly especially when the National Energy Program was introduced which had an element of retroactivity. I recall day after day, nay, week after week, when Members would be rising indicating how abhorrent this type of an initiative was and how, as Members of Parliament, we ought not to be introducing retroactive legislation. We certainly supported that notion in many respects.

• (1550)

When a firm, a business, a corporation or an individual makes plans and commits itself financially, not only in capital but in human resources, to carry out a particular plan, be it a business plan or some other type of plan, so much depends upon their ability to carry that out step by step. When Bill C-60 was being considered actively by the legislative committee, various companies made it very clear that retroactivity would cause them very serious problems. The problematic nature of the retroactivity clause was something that they brought to our attention because of the very negative impact that would accrue to them and on the enterprises they represented.

There is another side to this matter worth sharing, namely, the legal opinion. I know that you, Mr. Speaker, have always been concerned about the legality of various pieces of legislation to ensure that they not only follow the spirit of the law but the law itself. I want to say that the retroactivity of Clause 11 created under this clause is without precedent and is certainly highly unconscionable. It is clear under current law that a cause of action for infringement exists in relation to the copying of a functional article and, in many instances, parties have relied on the existing law to commence proceedings. To abolish Clause 11 retroactively will unfairly expose those persons to damages and to costs. Therefore, I believe this clause ought to be deleted.

I might add that I believe it is inappropriate for proposed Section 46(1) to apply retroactively. Persons have governed their affairs on the basis of the law as it now stands. The point I was attempting to make earlier and to change retroactively existing rights and liabilities by means of legislation is something that I think most people would find to be objectionable. Proposed subsections 26(2) and 26(3) are not subject to retroactive application, nor should proposed Section 46(1).

Clause 11 should not operate retroactively so as to deprive copyright holders of claims to copyright which existed prior to this Bill coming into force.

It is also useful to point out that as currently worded this clause does not refer to Section 46(2). I think that is something you would have noted in your examination. There is no reference to Section 46(2), Mr. Speaker. Therefore, we are in total support of this exclusion. In no event should Section 46(2) be made retroactive as this could possibly affect certain ongoing litigation.

What I have said is perfectly obvious in terms of what must be done and what must not be done. Therefore, on behalf of my Party, may I say that we plan to support this amendment.

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to make the industrial design section in Bill C-60 apply only in the future and not retroactively.

Until two or three years ago no one thought copyright extended to purely functional articles, such as tailpipes. But court cases decided that copyright could apply to functional articles. This created a legal authority for other court cases which argued that copyright was being infringed by copying purely functional articles, like the hull of a boat. This legal result was never intended.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Canadian Bar Association agreed that copyright should not extend to functional articles like boats and tailpipes. Bill C-60 reflects this view. Bill C-60 says that copyright does not and never did extend to functional articles. Bill C-60 clarifies the law not only for the future but also for the past. Copyright was never intended and did not apply to functional articles.

Bill C-60 sets out the division between what is protected by copyright and what is protected by industrial design. One of the ways this is done is by providing that copyright never did apply to purely functional articles. This is what Clause 24 says. If Clause 24 is amended as suggested by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) then Bill C-60 would say that in future copyright will not apply to functional articles. However, the state of the law before Bill C-60 will be based on the recent court cases which extended copyright to functional articles, and that is a result which was never intended.

To avoid this unintended result, Clause 24 of Bill C-60 states what the law was always intended to say, that copyright does not extend to purely functional articles. For that reason, the Government cannot accept the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 4 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the amendment lost.

Motion No. 4 (Mrs. Finestone) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Concerning the Speaker's ruling, may I read into the record exactly what has happened here.

Motion Nos. 5 and 6 are somewhat similar. A motion exactly the same as Motion No. 6 was moved, debated and voted on in the negative in committee. Thus Motion No. 6 will not be selected. Motion No. 5, while similar, is varied enough for the Chair to give the Hon. Member the benefit of the doubt. Thus Motion No. 5 will be debated and voted on separately.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal) moved:

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-60 be amended by adding, immediately after line 46 at page 22, the following:

"26. (1) Five years after the coming into force of this Act, and at the end of every three-year period thereafter, a comprehensive review of the provisions and operation of this Act, including the effect of such provisions, shall be undertaken by such joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons, as may be designated or established for that purpose.

(2) Within six months after the completion of the review referred to in subsection (1), the joint committee so designated or established for that purpose shall submit a report to Parliament on its findings, including any changes the committee would recommend."

She said: Mr. Speaker, it is really a sad day when we are looking at a very serious Bill which obviously has not captivated the enthusiastic understanding or involvement of many Members of this House. Quite rightly so because it is an extraordinarily complex Bill. It is one that I found difficult to work with and I think most Members were not exactly enthralled with the many, many hundreds of hours that we spent trying to find some rational and fair answers that would meet the needs of the users as well as the creators.

In trying to arrive at some kind of fairness in our system and in trying to accord economic rights, which are due to the creators, we have embarked on some new and exciting undertakings. From the time of the White Paper, which was called From Gutenberg to Telidon, through to the study undertaken in 1985, which resulted in The Charter of Rights for Creators, that balance, that tenuous balance between the user and the creator resulted in the initiation of some very new and avant garde ideas to improve the economic opportunities of the creators to revamp this very old Bill, a Bill designed for other uses. In so doing, we must be able to ensure that all this innovation that is being brought in in a patchwork way between phases one and two of the Bill is reviewed. It is in that light that I wish to include a sunset clause in Bill C-60. We would then be in a position to review legislation that has been highly controversial. If we review the legislation in five years, we will have had five years of experience with a variety of its clauses. We would be able to assess the impact of public exhibition rights on curators.

• (1600)

To our knowledge, no other country has public exhibition rights. I think they might be exciting but might create serious problems. I would like to have that assessed and I would like to assess the efficiency of the new thrust. I would like to be able to assess the potential problems which might arise as a result of the fair dealings or exemptions which we still have not seen and will come forward in phase two in which I hope a similar provision will be included.

How can we assess what is happening with collectives if they have not yet been implemented? Many of the provincial Governments have serious reservations about these collectives. The Minister received a letter from the Minister of Culture and Communications of Ontario who expressed some of her serious reservations, as have two other provincial Ministers. Collectives and negotiations are not in place yet and there are serious concerns as to how this will actually operate.

How will we know if, under its newly constituted mandate, a copyright board is large enough to meet the demands and will be efficient and able to fulfil its mandate under the law? As collectives are a fairly new concept, particularly in some areas of jurisdiction, will the board be able to work effectively with the collectives? Will negotiations be undertaken in a way that will meet the goals of this Bill?

All Hon. Members, and certainly the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) should be well aware that technology requires upgrading. We do not want to leave this Bill alone for another 60 years. We want to be able to ensure that the Bill is working in balance with the interests of the curators and the users, not just to the benefit of the legal profession, causing it to create unnecessary legislation and tie-ups in the courts.

The Minister of Culture and Communications of Ontario, Lily Munro, wrote the Minister of Communications and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) about Bill C-60. She indicates in a letter that her colleagues and she are carefully reviewing the proposals and would want to provide some comments in the future. Referring to the public exhibition rights, she said in the third paragraph of her letter, the following:

—we feel that the possible implications of this amendment have not been fully assessed and may be too far reaching. Art galleries and museums not only have a role in providing public access to creative works but also, in many cases, have educational objectives to which they must adhere.

Interpretation of collections is an essential part of the curatorial responsibility of such institutions and provides an educational experience for the viewer, particularly in a historical context. The introduction of an exhibition right as stated in Bill C-60, would alter this historically established balance between creators and the institution.

She went on to say:

I am very supportive of initiatives that improve the economic situation of artists and I believe that galleries and museums in Ontario share this objective.

Certainly we heard that they did so throughout the course of our hearings. She went on:

The exhibition right as currently drafted may act, however, as a disincentive not only to museums and galleries, but also to corporations and other individuals to purchase, lend or donate contemporary art.

The Minister went on to say:

—there has not been sufficient analysis and discussion among the affected parties to clarify the real intention of this section and the practical implementation of those intentions.

She concluded by saying:

I strongly recommend that the addition of an "exhibition right" be reserved pending much fuller investigation and consultation on the issues, options and effects it may have on indigenous contemporary art and the public exhibition community. I urge you to review this amendment—

There seems to be much glasnost between the federal and provincial Governments. We are all so happy and Meech Lake is a marvellous undertaking. Everyone is cosy and lovey-dovey. If everyone is so happy, then the Minister should have taken into consideration the need for much more careful and considered communications and consultations before bringing in a brand new right of this kind. She should also have assured herself that mechanisms were in place for the collectives and were ready to roll. Neither of these things was done.

I would like to bring one last point to the attention of the House. The Minister, in answering my concerns, told me that we could not bind future Parliaments. When I introduced a similar amendment, the Minister answered, I suppose because she was not well informed, in the the following way:

Could I just perhaps comment before Mrs. Finestone leaves. The difficulty that I think anyone would have with this particular proposal, even though I agree wholeheartedly with the need to be able to force governments to move on issues like this, is it really is not acceptable for one Parliament to try to bind another Parliament.

I went on to advise the Minister that we had done so in other instances. The Minister then said:

The Parliament, regardless of the government—but for one Parliament to try to say this is what you must do . . . Now there may be ways that we can see that reviews are carried out, but it is not feasible to do that, and that is why—

I interrupted and brought to her attention that she herself had brought an amendment like this before the House and that there were two other instances of it in the last couple of years. One such instance was the access to information legislation and the other was under a workplace hazardous materials information Act.

I would like to remind the Minister that when she was the Minister of Employment and Immigration and brought Bill C-62 before the House, she moved the adoption of a very similar amendment. In that Bill, she wanted the following clause adopted:

Five years after the coming into force of this Act, and at the end of every three-year period thereafter, a comprehensive review of the provisions and operation of this Act, including the effect of such provisions, shall be undertaken by such joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons, as may be designated or established for that purpose.

(2) Within six months after the completion of the review referred to in subsection (1), the joint committee so designated or established for that purpose shall submit a report to Parliament on its findings, including any changes the committee would recommend."

I did not even think of putting in my motion the part about a review at the end of every three-year period thereafter. I suppose when the Minister responded to me in committee and caused the rejection of this proposal, she forgot that she had done it herself. She forgot that her colleagues had done it in two other Bills. I would like to remind the Hon. Minister and her advisers that they did do this and suggest that they accept this amendment. I believe the sunset clause is well suited to this particular Bill.

• (1610)

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate having a chance to make some comments following those of my hon. friend, the Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), who has once again presented a most convincing case for the introduction of a sunset clause into the process as a result of Motion No. 5. The New Democratic Party will be supporting this initiative. I think it is very appropriate.

The Member has made the case that incorporating a sunset clause into the legislation is not a new idea. A number of precedents for this exist. I recall that with regard to the Access to Information Act the feeling was that a regular review would be appropriate to ensure that Members of Parliament and the public have access to appropriate information in order to keep the Government on the straight and narrow.

The Member for Mount Royal indicated as well that the workplace hazardous materials information Act has a built in review process as does the employment equity Bill and the very famous Bank Act. There are other cases in which a regular review is considered to be not only appropriate but absolutely necessary. This has become necessary largely due to the technological changes which are occurring in so many fields today, particularly in the arts, which require a periodic review of this type of copyright legislation. The sunset clause allows for that.

If we want meaningful and responsive copyright legislation the need for periodic review becomes obvious. We do not want to have the previous situation repeated. In the past, present members of the Government called for changes to the Copyright Act time after time and the Government of the day kept dragging its feet. Nevertheless, we have today made a whole set of extremely complex changes.

I must admit that I do not understand the implications of them all. I have studied them adequately to be aware of most of them, but it is an extremely complex area with dramatic changes taking place in technology, production, and marketing. It is, therefore, very appropriate that we are now revising this copyright legislation. It has been nearly 60 years since this legislation has received the examination which it has during the last number of months. This review was certainly long overdue.

The Keyes-Brunet report of 1977 recommended that provision be made for the periodic revision of copyright law. It may be useful to remind Members of one of the critical recommendations of that report. The title of that report was Copyright in Canada: Proposals for Revision of the Law. It made four recommendations, the first being:

That continuous evaluation be maintained of the impact of existing and emerging intellectual property systems.

The need for that recommendation is perfectly clear. The second recommendation was:

That provision be made for a means to conduct and maintain a continuing review and study of copyright law and practice, and of technological and other developments in the field, with a view to encouraging the initiation and development of policy recommendations.

This seminal report on the need to change the Copyright Act pointed out the necessity for an ongoing periodic review of any legislation dealing with copyright. The third recommendation was:

That provision be made for the periodic revision of copyright law.

That is straightforward enough. The fourth recommendation was:

That a mechanism be provided to initiate and conduct regular liaison, consultation and discussion with private and public copyright interests in Canada, and with foreign copyright offices and international organizations.

It is most important that in addition to a review process being automatically triggered as a result of the sunset clause appropriate extensive and intensive consultations take place with all organizations interested and involved in a direct way in copyright legislation, whether they be users or creators. We support this, Mr. Speaker.

The past Chairman of the Standing Committee on Communications, who is from Edmonton, expressed sympathy for the notion of sunset clauses during the legislative hearings. He said "Philosophically I rather favour sunsets". I suppose that he was not necessarily referring to Alberta sunsets which are, of course, magnificent, but to sunset clauses. That was the context of his comment.

With regard to identifying critical persons who have indicated their support for sunset clauses, as the Member for Mount Royal so adequately pointed out, the Minister herself indicated some time ago the need for a periodic review. This motion now makes that possible.

I know that the Parliamentary Secretary will likely be standing in a moment to express his views on Motion No. 5. I would like to put a query to him to which he may respond when he gets to his feet. I am sure that he has, as have most of us, received letters and visits from constituents, most of whom tend to be teachers, students, and librarians, who express concerns about various aspects of this copyright legislation.

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Clinch) will use this opportunity to clarify what this means to those people in the learning and instructional fields who occasionally make use of copyright material to assist in demonstrating various points. If the Parliamentary Secretary would explain this, it would alleviate a lot of the concerns which I know from previous discussions are unnecessary and would enable Members to send to those making inquiries the actual words of the Hon. Member on this issue.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand that considerable progress is being made on report stage of Bill C-60. I would like to reiterate what I said in the House yesterday. There was a House order which calls for a recorded division on the Government's response to the Senate's amendments to Bill C-84 at 6 p.m. this evening.

I went on to say, although it was not part of the House order, that in the event that report stage of Bill C-60—and I would add now any other proceedings on Bill C-60—were to be completed today, any division could be deferred until 6 p.m. and it would be the intention of the Government to suspend the sitting until six o'clock at which time the bells could ring for 15 minutes for the vote.

I just wanted to reassure the House that it is still the Government's intention, if Bill C-60 goes smoothly as I understand it is, to suspend the sitting immediately, and a recorded division on whatever stage of Bill C-60 is reached would be taken at six o'clock.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. We would be quite amenable to that suggestion in the usual spirit of co-operation of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that we are making the progress which we are on report stage of Bill C-60 and I am anxious to move on to third reading and try to finish that today if at all possible.

If we were to complete deliberations on Bill C-60 prior to the time for the vote on Bill C-84, is there any reason why, rather than having an interval, we could not call the vote at the end of the deliberations?

Mr. Lewis: Hon. Members of the House will have arranged their day around a 6 p.m. vote. I would be loath, having given notice of a 6 p.m. vote, to move it forward. I would not consent to that because we have given Hon. Members notice that the vote would be at six. I would prefer not to tamper with that previous notice.

• (1620)

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, while I was not prepared to respond to the request of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) with regard to questions from teachers and librarians, I would be more than willing to give a personal view of that in my position as a former teacher and member of the teaching community in Bathurst, New Brunswick for many years. I am sure there are many teachers and librarians there who are interested in the effects of the Bill.

The clauses in Motions Nos. 5 and 6 require mandatory review of legislation. Such clauses have been referred to as sunset clauses by members of the Opposition. Their inclusion suggest that some difficulties or unforeseen consequences are anticipated in the operation of a new piece of legislation. The purpose of a sunset clause is to guarantee a forum in which a public review must take place periodically.

In legislative committee, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) proposed a sunset clause for Bill C-60, stating that the new Hazardous Products Act and the Access to Information Act contained such clauses and that they set precedents for introducing one in the Copyright Act.

I suggest that each statute must be examined on its own merit. The provision of a statute in one case cannot be looked at in isolation. It must be examined within the context of the entire Act.

Take, for example, the new Hazardous Products Act, which comes into force in October of this year.

The Act provides for mandatory review two years after the coming into force of its Section 12, which refers to certain hazardous products, explosives, atomic materials, hazardous wastes and tobacco products.

Because of a feeling of urgency, the Bill was passed eight days after its introduction on June 22, 1987. Not all hazardous products were included or adequately defined. For example, the term "hazardous wastes" is not defined consistently in different statutes which deal with them.

It is clear that in this case the function of the review clause is not really to review the Bill but to complete it. This is not the case for the new copyright legislation. It will be completed in phase two, making a review clause unnecessary.

Another example of a sunset clause is in the Access to Information Act. Section 75 of the Act provides for its review within three years of its coming into force. This was introduced for a basic reason; access to information is a new concept, quite different from other statutes.

The first review of that Act took place last year. In its report, the committee suggested another review. The committee's report stated that a major reason for scheduling another review is that it is relatively new legislation. The report states that there has not been enough experience yet in a number of areas to determine satisfactorily whether both the structure and the provisions of the Act are adequate.

This is not the case with copyright legislation. Copyright legislation is not new, either on the domestic or on the international scene. The present law has been in force for 64 years, since 1924. Indeed, most countries in the world now have copyright legislation. There are two international copyright conventions to which most countries in the world belong. Many studies have preceded the preparation of the new Canadian copyright law, and international precedent was taken into full consideration.

Let me respond to the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap with regard to copyright in the teaching profession. In my opinion, the present copyright law, which has been in effect since 1924 prevents most of that which may happen in a classroom where teachers utilize materials and copy them without receiving permission. This law proposes to allow the creators and writers to receive some remuneration for their works. No one in the teaching profession disagrees with that.

There are two ways for this to work practically. One is to use the collective system, which is very familiar to Members from Quebec where that system is now in place. Assuming that we are talking about education, the department of education of a province would belong to a collective and any artist or creator who belongs to that collective would be listed with the department. The department of education would pay a fee in order that anyone in the classroom could use the works of those artists or creators.

The other alternative in the discussion of exemptions or exceptions to the Copyright Act is to deal with these exceptions, and they will be dealt with in phase two of the Bill. Those groups who have expressed a concern are asking to be considered in the exceptions or exemptions to the Copyright Act. Those are the possibilities with respect to the practical implementation of the Bill. I hope I have answered my hon. friend's question adequately, as well as that of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Motion No. 5 in the name of my distinguished colleague, the Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). I want to congratulate her for her participation in this issue and for the immense contribution she has made to the debate.

This motion which she has proposed is not only in order but quite logical. The Parliamentary Secretary indicated to us that one of the rationales for a sunset clause is to take into account legislation that is brand new, innovative or unprecedented.

The Hon. Member said that the copyright legislation does not fit into that category. I disagree with him. It is quite true that we have had copyright legislation in this country for a long time, but we should remember that it has not been reviewed for many years. Therefore, any new legislation introduced is a brand new concept.

Second, there are portions of the Bill which are clearly unprecedented not only in this country but everywhere that I can imagine. For example, the issue of exhibition rights is a brand new concept. I understand that it does not exist in the United States and has not existed here.

I know that my colleague from Mount Royal has expressed reservations about this particular clause because we simply do not know what will happen in a few years' time. Therefore, why not have a sunset clause by which we can review the exhibition rights and other pertinent issues that did not exist before the introduction of Bill C-60?

It is not only the Official Opposition that expresses this view. The Minister of Culture and Communications for Ontario, Lily Munro, stated in a letter dated December 11, 1987:

> After consultation with many of the groups that would be affected by the introduction of an exhibition right, we feel that the possible implications of this amendment have not been fully assessed and may be too far reaching. Art galleries and museums not only have a role in providing public access to creative works but also, in many cases, have educational objectives to which they must adhere.
>
> Interpretation of collections is an essential part of the curatorial responsibility of such institutions and provides an educational experience for the viewer, particularly in a historical context. The introduction of an exhibition right as stated in Bill C-60, would alter this historically established balance between creators and the institution.

Of course, there is the whole issue of whether there would be a reluctance on the part of certain potential acquirers of art to obtain a particular piece of art if they knew, for instance, that the exhibition rights were not relinquished at the time of purchase. We do not know the answer to all these questions, and they are very important. That is why the suggestion made by the Hon. Member to include a sunset clause in this Bill is indeed quite appropriate.

• (1630)

There is also the question of the exhibition rights in the Bill as they pertain to another issue which is very close and dear to the hearts of certain Conservative Members of Parliament. That is the issue—and it is not my issue, I must say—of the so-called property rights that Conservatives like to bring to our attention every now and then, the firm belief of some Members of this House that once you purchase property it is yours and that is the end of it. I refer, for instance, to the debates of the House of Commons on October 15, 1987, in which the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) spoke. He talked about the lack of property rights as a regrettable omission and that the principle of freedom to pursue the gaining of a livelihood with respect to the Charter is diminished if one's freedom to simply keep, sell or buy is not secure. He said: "All this is simple common sense". How could the Hon. Member for Kitchener accept that this new concept of exhibition rights would be in legislation without a review process so that he could assure himself that there is no interference with that sacred principle he feels is so important, namely, the acquisition of property rights for Canadians?

Those are all very important issues to Conservative backbenchers who are bent upon this property rights thing, for Members of Parliament generally, and even for our provincial Governments. I know the Parliamentary Secretary is paying close attention to my remarks as I look across the floor. I know he will want to respond to this question in a very positive manner.

On December 4, 1987, with respect to the property rights issue which is so important to some Conservative Members-and I am sure because of this they will want to support the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal—the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher) stated at page 11514 of Hansard:

> Ownership is conducive to an individual's independence, freedom, and happiness. A man's house is his castle. However, what happens when he does not have the right to own that castle? From earliest times property has been defended. Aristotle expressed a strong defence of property and advanced the idea that private property is ordained by natural law and that ownership is conducive to progress.
>
> According to this famous philosopher, ownership of property promotes the growth of character because two important virtues result from it—self control and liberty.

You can see, Mr. Speaker, that not only opposition Members have concerns about the Bill. Indeed, Conservative Members have expressed the point that it is important to have a review mechanism such as the one offered to us by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it. I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 5 (Mrs. Finestone) negatived.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions between the Parties. We are now about to complete report stage and I think you will find that there is unanimous consent to move to third reading stage of this particular Bill. The critic for the New Democratic Party is unfortunately absent as a result of other duties, and rather than stop the proceedings now from continuing, I am sure you will find unanimous consent to allow the Member speaking on behalf of the Government to introduce the speech at third reading stage, followed by the critic for the Liberal Party. After the completion of her remarks, the proceedings will stop at that point and, if necessary, be terminated until the vote, with the understanding that third reading will continue some other day.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Miss Carney (for the Minister of Communications) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Miss Carney (for the Minister of Communications) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak at third reading of this Bill, and its amendments. I am very dissatisfied that two of my amendments did not receive Government understanding, which I think is highly regrettable in the present circumstances. I think the Government will rue the day it caused business people very serious financial loss. However, that is the Government's problem, not ours.

Copyright law is the legal expression of the rights granted to a creator to protect his or her work against a variety of unauthorized uses. That protection arises when a work is created by our artists and provides the legal foundation for the publishing, broadcasting, film, sound recording and other copyright based industries. Essentially, copyright law sets the rules under which market forces determine what music is heard, what records are made, what films are seen, what books are published and what programs are viewed on television, all here in Canada. Copyright law dates back to 1832 in a statute of the Legislature of Lower Canada. The British North America Act of 1867 placed exclusive jurisdiction concerning copyright with the federal Government. Several Acts were subsequently passed, culminating in the present 1924 Act which repealed all prior legislation—and, please note, all prior legislation. It did not do a patchwork job.

The 1924 Act provides that no person is entitled to copyright, or any similar right in respect of protected material except in accordance with the Act. It should be noted that this 1924 legislation was written during a period when there were no television sets. Can any Members remember when there were no television sets, no tape recorders, no VCRs and, Mr. Speaker, when adding machines were considered computers? As a result of these technological changes, copyright has changed considerably from being only the right to copy. Today works acquire value not only by means of reproduction of copies but through public performance and broadcasting.

• (1640)

Copyright law attempts to strike a balance between the competing interests of creators in exploiting their works and of the public interest in having access to those works. These things enrich our lives in many ways. Therefore the law grants creators important moral and economic rights.

The law also recognizes uses of works that are permitted without the authorization of the creator or the payment of royalties. Therefore copyright must concern itself with first providing creators' rights and then with the limiting of those rights. I would suggest that the quality of our cultural rights is dependent upon copyright. The subcommittee which looked at the revision of copyright in 1985 was told:

> The quality of cultural life depends upon a country's intellectual and artistic creations and, to some extent, is a reflection of the encouragement and protection provided to creators. Copyright legislation can be regarded as a means of encouraging creative and intellectual activity in providing adequate protection to creators, entrepreneurs, and the cultural industries, in the creation, development and exploitation of the products of creativity, and the arts in general.

I do not know of anyone in the House who would debate that point. However, I do not believe that it is the saviour of our cultural life to the extent that the Government would like Canadians and our creators to believe. The Government needs to take another concrete measure to provide for these creators. It requires the collective will of a number of different Ministers around the cabinet table. It takes directing the Ministers to be responsive to the needs of creators who enrich our lives and define us as Canadians, particularly in the following areas.

I refer to the definition of professional artist or professional artistic activity in the Income Tax Act; the erosion of Interpretation Bulletin IT-504; the establishment of a charitable or similar registered tax status of arts service organizations; specific aspects of the capital cost allowance deduction for the cost of musical instruments; and erosion of the capital cost allowance for investment in certified Canadian films. These are the kinds of additional measures that we need to ensure artistic creativity as an economic right in Canada.

Since the 1924 Copyright Act was passed there have been amendments. But, this is the first time that substantial revision has taken place. Every time the topic of copyright is opened up, a bell sounds and sides seem to be drawn. The Government thought that it had arrived at the perfect solution of having the copyright revision passed by introducing the amendments in two phases.

On May 28, the Government introduced this Bill, Bill C-60, supposedly the non-controversial part. It was to be the part that would be easy, acceptable and have an easy run through the House. Initially, the Bill received positive acclaim. I ask Hon. Members to remember the headlines. They read: "New Changes Would Give Copyright Laws More Teeth"; "Canada's Beefing Up Its Copyright and Royalty laws"; "Copyright Changes Applauded;" and "Copyright Bill—Good First Step". There certainly had been enough consultation. I refer to the White Paper entitled Gutenberg to Telidon; the 1985 subcommittee report entitled The Charter of Rights for Creators; and the 1986 Government response.

However, when Bill C-60 in its legislative form received second reading in this Chamber in June some minor technical changes were suggested, but that was all. It then went off to a legislative committee for hearings and quick passage into law. It was even suggested by government Members and my colleague from the New Democratic Party that hearings would not be necessary since all the issues had been covered.

Then came the lazy, hazy, crazy days of summer. Creators, users and copyright lawyers, instead of lolling on the beach or swimming, had to look much more closely at this Bill, for it is a very complex law. There is a great deal of legal jurisprudence through court decisions which had to be taken into consideration. They examined not only the changes in the Bill clause by clause, line by line, but word by word. They began writing letters and briefs, making phone calls and requesting meetings with Members to express their very serious concerns. They made constructive criticisms for improvement.

Letters and briefs to my office alone must have been very close to 300. Never before on a piece of legislation have I had to deal with such concerned feedback. It is feedback for which we should all be very grateful.

By October, when the legislative committee began its hearings, witnesses came before us. Some came with briefs requesting as many as 50 amendments. We were told by one witness that there were 75 places where there appeared to be differences from the drafting of the English and the French texts. It was sloppy work.

The Canadian Bar Association and the Patent and Trademark Institute of Canada appeared before us with a delegation of 12 lawyers and a 50-page brief. Some 50 concerns were examined. Their efforts represented the work of thousands of person hours. I was trying to calculate the amount of dollars that represented, but I gave up. This work was of tremendous value to the Minister, the Ministry, to the Opposition Parties, the people of Canada and to the whole legislative process. The comments presented by many of the witnesses and through the briefs were contradictory nonetheless. There was great division of opinion. As a matter of fact, it made for a very difficult hearing session.

During those hearings I began to wonder if the committee should not send the Bill back for a complete redrafting. However, I was convinced and hopeful that we would find the kinds of changes that would make this a fair, even and balanced Bill.

We were of the view that, through amendments, the concerns could be addressed. Thus we pressed and we did get substantial amendments made to Bill C-60. We should all be aware that that did take place. For that reason I would like to take this opportunity to thank all those who took the time to write letters and briefs, to phone and to appear as witnesses before the committee, answering countless questions, writing back, meeting with the Minister and both the Ministries of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Communications.

These people were very patient. All of us are indebted to them. I am also indebted personally, as I think the committee as a whole is, to the Library of Parliament staff whose members spent so many hours combing through the submissions to provide us with up-to-date analyses of the briefs, as well as preparing a comparative study of copyright laws in other countries, which proved very useful. It did not change the Minister's mind, but it was certainly a very useful exercise.

It was originally thought that this Bill would be the ideal solution and that copyright being divided into these two phases would be fine. We have now learned that there will probably be three phases.

Bill C-60 has been properly described as a creators' Bill, which has caused unease among the consumers of copyright such as libraries, schools and broadcasters, just to name a few. They had the right to express their points of view. They had the right to get together and to send in thousands of letters to all the Members of the House. I do not think that they should be criticized. They should be complimented for undertaking concrete concerned action in the interests of their constituencies. It was our responsibility to respond to those concerns, not to criticize them, as was done in a number of instances.

They have been told repeatedly that the exemptions will be in the next phase, which was their major area of concern. They want to know when the second phase will be. Will it be next week, next month or next year? The Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) introduced this Bill on May 27. She said that the second phase would follow quickly in the fall. In December she said, "Come this spring". The spring has almost sprung and the grass has almost ris' and we still do not have hide nor hair of this Bill. The uncertainty causes concern and fear for the users. The representations brought me to the conclusion that the rights of users are inseparable from creators' rights. Many of their concerns are legitimate, for there is a lack of clarity and bridging has not been put into place. They are not sure about what they are going to find when the next part of this Bill comes in.

Copyright protection must be sufficient to stimulate and promote cultural and intellectual creation in Canada. The Social Science Federation pointed out in its brief "This cannot be achieved if the law fails to recognize the interests of cultural consumers who are equally vital to our cultural industries".

• (1650)

A real risk exists that new and powerful rights will be entrenched, and are being entrenched, without offsetting recognition and protection of legitimate concerns of the users of copyright material. After all, one would not buy a house without seeing all the rooms. Therefore, how would one expect users to be happy, satisfied, and support this legislation without seeing all the provisions? The Government has created unnecessary and undue concern which could have been avoided by having dealt with total revisions, or having released the second phase as draft legislation for both the users and the creators to be able to see the total picture.

The Communications Minister should have heeded the words of her colleague, or ex-colleague, the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who stated:

> Copyright first of all protects creators, but consumers of their works are equally affected in their day-to-day life by the Copyright Act. Our legislation must ensure a balance between the interests of the copyright owner and the user.

I wish to address the education aspect, because we did hear from a large number of educators. There was much discussion during the legislative committee hearings on reprographic rights. The term "reprography" refers to the reproduction of a work specifically by photocopying. In today's society, we all take this act pretty much for granted.

Bill C-60 makes no substantive changes to the existing law insofar as photocopying practices are concerned. In the 1924

Copyright Act, under Section 3(1), the copyright owner has the sole right to reproduce the work or any substantial part thereof in any material form whatever. Accordingly, unless the reproduction is authorized by the creator or the copyright holder, and unless it is insubstantial or excused on the basis of any of the statutory exemptions under the current Act, the reproductions of a work by photocopying will be deemed to constitute a copyright infringement.

As for existing statutory exemptions that apply to photocopying practices, there are limited exemptions under Section 17(2)(h) of the 1924 Act for the reproduction of certain categories of protected works for their deposit under the Cultural Property Export and Import Act. It is too bad that we did not see fit to do that for the CRTC regulatory Act.

More important, there is the fair dealing limitation under Section 17(2)(a) which, by excusing "any fair dealing with any work for the purposes of private study, research, criticism, review, or newspaper summary;" may exonerate those who make photocopies, who are generally students, researchers, and many of us here in the House of Commons. They are exempted provided that they qualify under this limitation.

When the Canadian Teachers Federation representatives appeared before the legislative committee, they stated that they wanted the right to use material "spontaneously" in order to capture "the teachable moment". By this they meant the right to use new, timely, newsworthy copyrighted materials in a reasonable manner without the consent of the author. It would take too long and it would no longer be timely or of the moment. This, they define as "fair use". I think that that is fair play. This concept was accepted and incorporated in the 1976 revision of the United States copyright law. The American law provides recognition that fair use includes teaching, including multiple copies for classroom use; and a valid consideration as to "the purpose and character of the use".

For Canadian teachers the making of multiple copies, and particularly of current magazine articles, poems selected from books, and newspaper articles, has become a nearly entrenched practice. We were told by school boards that this situation has become even more important for teachers because of the cutbacks in educational funding that have occurred throughout Canada.

The educational community does not take the position that creators should not be recognized for the important contributions that they make in the creation of cultural works, and that creators are entitled to a reasonable return by way of royalties. There is no argument about that, and that is not the issue. Educators are concerned about having access to current materials when teaching such current topics as Meech Lake or free trade, materials that have not yet found their way into collectives; or that access to copyrighted materials will not be hamstrung in administrative procedures; and that costs will not be overbearing, making materials inaccessible.

Under Bill C-60, a legal foundation for the formation of "licensing bodies" has been established. Under licence agreements negotiated on behalf of their members, the copyright owners, those organizations or collectives will be in a position to authorize the users to exercise the rights reserved exclusively to the copyright owners under the Act, such as the reproduction rights, thus providing the means by which otherwise infringing acts of photocopying can be legitimized.

In the background materials provided with Bill C-60, the Government uses the example of how collectives, creators, and schools operate in Quebec.

[Translation]

It is my "belle province", and I think it has shown real leadership in this respect.

[English]

In that province, the Quebec Ministry of Education signed agreements with l'Union des écrivains du Québec and the Society for the Advancement of Rights in Audiovisuals. Under those agreements, this enlightened procedure allows access to exactly the type of spontaneously used materials that we are referring to. The schools of Quebec have an immediate access repertory of literary and audio-visual works in exchange for $1.5 million a year which is negotiated with the Ministry of Education. As a result, creators are receiving payment while users have the immediate access that they need.

I would suggest that the Quebec example works well, and it is what the Government envisioned happening in the rest of the country. But it would appear that the Government failed in encouraging the relationship between the province and the collectives. As a result, educators and their students might well be the losers. I do not think that we want that. I am told that the provincial education ministries do not wish to proceed until they know what the exemptions are. Therefore, we are in a hang-up, not understanding the conundrum as to what this Bill really means. Teachers are worried, because teachers like to obey the laws of this land.

Bill C-60 does not assure that collectives will become a reality, nor does it mention the existence of "blanket licences". Quite to the contrary, it provides for individual bargaining between the user and the collective with only the limited jurisdiction of the copyright board.

It was out of those concerns that I proposed at report stage on Bill C-60 that the copyright board be able to make regulations governing "the spontaneous use for non-profit instructional purposes of works not included in a licensed repertoire". I included it in a section where they would be forced to consult with the Governor in Council in order that there would be no contradiction and we would be able to bridge phase one and phase two and make teachers comfortable that they were within the parameters of the law.

This amendment, if it had been accepted, would have allowed owners of copyright materials to rely on their rights to obtain compensation for the use of their works. It would have provided a mechanism for the resolution of disputes on the spontaneous use of copyright works. The copyright board, with this amendment in place, would have had the authority that it needed, together with Governor in Council advice, to regulate the terms and conditions of spontaneous use and to fix any royalties associated with this use. The amendment would have referred to the board only those disputes pertaining to the use of material not included in the repertoire of the collectives.

I wish to look at broadcasters concerns. During the committee study of Bill C-60 we heard from broadcasters. They expressed concern that the area of ephemeral recordings had not been addressed by the Government. For the information of the House, an "ephemeral" recording refers to the practice of broadcasters of recording copyright material prior to transmission. It is an ongoing practice of all broadcasters, whether it is in the public or in the private sector. We are told that it is done for technical reasons. The recordings are often disposed of after being broadcast. Material is recorded because there is frequently a lag between the time that the program is produced and broadcast. Prerecordings allow broadcast at the desired date, time, and schedule. In a country with six time zones, it is necessary to meet time zone needs in various parts of the country. As you know, Mr. Speaker, they cannot exactly pull in an orchestra and do a live recording. They must have the right to record it and then rebroadcast it. The prerecording procedure allows networks to service various regions on a variable time schedule, which is normal practice.

• (1700)

It should be noted that the right to make an ephemeral recording does not itself create a right to broadcast the work that is recorded. It would still be necessary to obtain the authorization of the copyright owner to rebroadcast the work regardless of how long the ephemeral recording would be kept.

The current 1924 Copyright Act is totally silent on this exemption to allow such recordings in order to perform music which is already licensed by CAPAC and by PROCAN. Radio and TV broadcasters have been making convenience tapes for decades.

What will be the result for broadcasters of the Government ignoring the issue and not accepting my amendment? There are potential fines from $25,000 to $1 million, imprisonment for six months to five years, or both fines and imprisonment. The crime is the act of taping, without negotiating a mechanical fee with the publisher, music which they have been licensed to broadcast by CAPAC and PROCAN.

To add insult to injury, the situation only exists in Canada. It does not exist in the United States, Australia, or the United Kingdom. In their Copyright Acts they have an ephemeral right. To wait until the second phase is no excuse. It should have been in place, even on a temporary basis. If they put people outside the law, they cannot have much respect for government and laws.

In 1977 the Keyes-Brunet study on copyright in Canada recommended that ephemeral rights be included in new copyright legislation. They have certainly had enough notice. This is 1988 and that was 11 years ago.

A brief by the Canadian Music Publishers Association to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in 1979 recommended that ephemeral recordings should be dealt with in new legislation. In 1984 the Liberal Government released its White Paper and indicated its intention to provide an ephemeral exception in upcoming legislation. There were to be restrictions placed upon these exemptions, and those could have been addressed too. There was plenty of time to do that. The exemptions were the following: first, that the use of the copy was to be limited to the broadcasting organization for which it was intended; second, that all organizations concerned with broadcasting or the preparation of programs for broadcasting were to have the right to record agreed upon material for their own purposes, as long as the material was to be used solely for the agreed broadcasts; and, third, that the exemptions would also have applied when a broadcaster commissioned an independent producer to prepare a program.

In the charter of rights for creators it was also recommended that exemptions should be provided for the making of ephemeral recordings by broadcasters pursuant to existing CRTC regulations. They are in a position of jeopardy. They do not know whether they should agree and conform with the CRTC, go along with copyright, or face fines. It is a real dilemma. The second condition indicated in the charter would permit the broadcast of the program in a different time zone, provided that the recording is erased after eight days.

The Government agreed to the subcommittee's recommendations regarding ephemeral recording, but the Bill does not provide the necessary measures, leaving broadcasters in the same category as people who pirate and distribute records. I think that is reprehensible.

I have been advised that if the Government allows the present situation to stand, Canadian broadcasters will be faced with their greatest problem since 1929, when the Aird Commission recommended the abolishment of private broadcasting.

In respect of exhibition rights, Bill C-60 introduces those rights for the first time. The entrenchment of these rights into law was intended to provide much needed financial compensation for Canada's artists, but instead it has brought much unnecessary controversy and has created unfortunate tension between artists and museums.

The controversy began when the subcommittee on the revision of copyright not only recommended that a new copyright law should include exhibition rights but said:

> —that a consensus has emerged in the artistic community on the recognition of this new right.

Yet, no representatives from galleries or museums appeared before the subcommittee, while at least three associations on behalf of artists appeared. I do not think that is fairness or justice, and I do not think we were in a position to make the wisest decision, not having had the benefit of these consultations.

I have said in the past that just because something is new is not a good enough reason not to accept it. Let us face the challenge of something new. I am not afraid of anything new, particularly if it has a potential to enable our artists to live more comfortably, if it has been subjected to some kind of testing or experience by which to evaluate such a right, and if there is consensus within the visual arts community about it.

Because I did not know very much about exhibition rights, I did some research. I found that no such right existed in Great Britain, Australia, or France. I also found a most intriguing situation in the United States which has the opposite effect to the proposed Canadian right. Under United States legislation copyright owners are vested with an exclusive right to display publicly a number of works, namely, literary, musical, dramatic and choreographic works, pantomimes, pictoral, graphic and sculptural works, and individual images of motion pictures and other audio-visual works.

However, a number of limitations are prescribed, the foremost of which is the one arising by virtue of the transfer of ownership of the work. Under this limitation, known as the first-sale doctrine, a person who lawfully acquires ownership of the work is entitled to display it publicly or authorize the public display of such a work without the copyright owner's consent.

If one buys such a work here but forgets to buy the exhibition rights, one can own it but never display it unless the artist agrees. One has to go back for permission time and again, and it is absolutely ludicrous. We must find a way to overcome that problem.

Accordingly, the owner of an original work of art in the United States is able to display it publicly in galleries, museums, shop windows, et cetera, without infringing copyright. In other words, he or she is permitted to do precisely what he or she will be prohibited from doing under the public exhibition right in Bill C-60 unless the copyright owner's consent is obtained.

I spoke earlier about division existing on exhibition rights in the artistic community. This division is not only between artists and museums but also among artists. Among the many letters I have received on exhibition rights, one artist wrote saying that exhibition rights "will not make my life worth living". She went on to say:

> Although great for my ego, it does not match what happens in the marketplace. The Conservatives must come up with a more profitable solution, or be more imaginative, to help my economics.

She went on to ask why should those who buy her pictures be restricted to where and when they show them, "for, after all, do you pay the dress designer every time you wear the dress?"

Museums and art galleries were concerned about the cost this new right might have, especially for smaller institutions which the Canadian Museums Association said "are ill-equipped to bear the financial burden this will impose".

I think we may well find a modus operandi, but we should have had dialogue to stop the potential conflict and incredible tension from building to this point.

The Government has implied that the placing of exhibit rights into law is only enshrining present practice. However, this is only partially correct. It is done by private contract. Most major public art galleries and museums voluntarily follow the exhibition fee schedule established by CARFAC, but the fee is applied only to temporary exhibitions which include loans from sources outside the permanent collection of the institution.

• (1710)

At the present time, institutions do not pay to exhibit works in their permanent collections which will not be the case after the passage of this Bill. That will place financial pressure on even major institutions. It was for these reasons that I suggested the Government would be better able to improve the status of the artist in Canada through the introduction of an exhibition right fund, as suggested by the Canadian Museums Association and the Professional Art Dealers Association of Canada. Such a fund would be similar to the Public Lending Rights Commission, a federally established fund administered through the Canada Council to compensate authors for the use of their books in public libraries. PADAC in its presentation to the committee said:

> Such a fund would help to underscore the financial commitment of the Government to support the arts in Canada, as well as provide a mechanism that would relieve exhibiting institutions of the financial burden to pay these fees.

These are the people who were involved in the whole issue both on the user and the consumer side. Instead, I think this right may have had the reverse effect of its intention. That is why I so dearly wanted us to have a review clause, in case there was a counter indication and we could then change or amend that provision.

Let us look at computer programs, Mr. Speaker. Bill C-60 will give computer software the same protection against illegal copying as has already been accorded to books. The Canadian software industry is worth about $1.5 billion and the industry estimates that illegal copying costs it close to $400 million a year, a lot of money. The legislation will give software copyright protection to authors for lifetime plus 50 years.

Bill C-60 as well increases the current $200 maximum penalty to $1 million or a five year prison term. Thus the Bill recommends penalties which will be effective deterrents. The legislative committee also amended the section dealing with computer programs to allow for the making of only one back-up copy of a computer program. It was interesting that that exemption was allowed. It will not put computer companies into difficulty, but that exemption was not allowed for the broadcasting industry or the educators of this land.

I am, however, still disappointed that the Government has not taken action regarding semi-conductor chip protection. The United States has a Semi-Conduction Chip Protection Act which extends protection to chips created by Canadian nationals only if Canada enacts comparable legislation protecting chip originators. Canada has now been granted interim protection by the Americans. We should have done it for ourselves. The Bill was open, but we had to go to the Americans to get interim protection. I believe the Government would be best advised to give immediate and serious consideration to this issue. Since we do not have comparable legislation, the Canadian Government by its failure to act is placing Canadian semi-conductor chip originators at a serious disadvantage.

Let us take a moment and look at the mechanical royalty rate for composers. There exists, in the 1924 Copyright Act, a provision for compulsory licensing of mechanical reproductions which is a 2 cent rate for composers and music publishers of recorded music. It was intended for piano rolls—I do not know if you remember piano rolls, Mr. Speaker, I don't—and shellacked 78 RPM breakable recordings, those I do remember.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Finestone: The law was passed in the heyday of silent pictures and three years before the first national radio broadcast. A year ago I called for the abolition of this section and, therefore, I am pleased to see the repeal of Section 19 for it has been 2 cents for too long.

During committee hearings we learned that under another clause compulsory licensing had been re-introduced. The legislative committee, however, I am pleased to say, deleted the objectionable clause. I greatly appreciate the Minister's move in that regard.

I am very worried about the retroactivity in the Bill. I think it is unconscionable and it goes against all the natural, normal democratic freedoms and rights that one would expect in a country of this kind. I am most disappointed that the Government chose not to accept my amendment calling for review of copyright on a continuing basis.

When Bill C-60 was introduced last June it was considered uncontroversial. It was even suggested that it would be the perfect Bill. However, as I have outlined, it is certainly not that. This Bill contains those new provisions about which I have spoken, exhibit rights, the introduction of collectives into new areas other than performing rights, the expansion of moral rights and the defining of computer programs as literary works. Because there is no experience, because of the interrelationship or interfacing with the Industrial Design Act, I believe that we should have a five year review. We would be in a better position to know whether the concerns expressed before our committee in 1987 are still concerns and remedial action need be taken. We do not wish to get into a situation of not attending to a Bill for 60 years.

I spoke about retroactivity and I have referred to many other aspects of this Bill. I would suggest that there is clear reason for concern. I think it has been unwise of the Minister not to react, particularly to that section. I believe it to be grossly unfair.

In closing my remarks, I am, nonetheless, pleased that the copyright Bill is in the process of amendment. I am hopeful that phase two will be in very quickly so that we can answer to the ongoing concerns of the users as well as the creators and find that Canadian way, that fairness, that balance that makes Canada such a special country, which should make this Act one of the most modern around the world. At this particular moment the revisions are not revisions of which we can be most proud.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to congratulate my friend, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) for her presentations today and the tremendous amount of work that she has done on this legislation. I want to recognize also the work done by my friend, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), as well as our critic, the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong).

It is time for this Bill because we have waited many years for it. I might say that we have waited since 1924 for legislation to be updated and passed. I suppose a bit of recognition ought to go to the Government for bringing this Bill forward and taking the initiative, a compliment that I sometimes find difficult to give.

Earlier today it appeared to me for a variety of reasons that it might be difficult to conclude third reading today, but that is not the case. I think sufficient discussions have taken place to complete third reading stage of this Bill.

Right from the beginning Members of the New Democratic Party have said that we want to expedite the passage of this legislation. It was long overdue. Creators have waited for a long time to see this Bill introduced and passed. It has been a disappointment for so many of our creators that they had to work with legislation passed some 60 years ago, especially when you consider the technological changes that have taken place in the cultural market-place so to speak.

At the time when this legislation was first passed there were no computers, no software or hardware for the computers, no television sets, no video cassettes only things like piano rolls and so on which my friend from Mount Royal indicated earlier with which some of us are familiar even to this day. The major changes that have taken place in artistic expression, dance and choreography obviously were necessary. Choreography used to mean the explanation of a theme or a story whereas today there is form choreography without a story. The legislation must be amended to include this new type of expression.

• (1720)

The new legislation provides for many, many other changes as well. I think we have heard enough of the details of them. I simply want to make some general comments at this final stage of debate.

This Bill provides us with two kinds of protection for creators, those people who express themselves artistically and make Canada the kind of unique place it is. The cultural community enables us to express ourselves as Canadians in a whole variety of forms using a whole variety of different media. That is what enables us to get a sense of ourselves, to create a Canadian personality and a regional personality.

The first protection Bill C-60 provides is related to economic rights. These are the rights that allow an artist to make a living and provide the creators of Canada with the legal authority to negotiate a royalty payment in return for permission to do any of the things only the creator of the work has the legal right to do. An example of this is the right to reproduce a work. This work may be sold to those who want to make copies of the work, and in this way, the Copyright Act provides the creator with the legal right to exploit his or her work in the market-place.

We have all heard different representations on the real meaning of giving creators their right to have their works recognized in the Copyright Act. I recall hearing an inquiry made by the trustees' association claiming that teachers would be breaking the law if they were to copy materials for spontaneous use in the classroom. I want to go on record as saying that the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) made it perfectly clear that these fears were unfounded. She insisted at the legislative hearing that Bill C-60 does not change the existing right regarding copying by students, teachers and librarians for spontaneous instructional purposes. I believe we can clearly set aside that concern of so many people.

A second right of protection as provided by this Act relates to moral rights. The purpose of these rights is to protect the honour and reputation of the creators themselves. These rights therefore are personal. They are exercised by creators and may not be sold like economic rights. They may be exercised even with respect to a work whose economic rights have been sold and thus they add an extra layer of protection to a work a creator has already sold.

Bill C-60 also seeks to enhance the legal protection of visual artists for both moral and economic rights. A new economic right governing the exhibition of artistic works is provided in Bill C-60. On the moral rights front, the need to prove prejudice to honour and reputation has been removed and the remedies available for moral rights infringement have been expanded. This must be excellent news for those we generally refer to as the creators.

When Bill C-60 was first tabled in the House, my hon. friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood indicated that we welcomed this legislation and that we as a Party were keen to get it through the legislative committee because artists deserve this piece of legislation. She indicated at that time that our Party would co-operate by seeing that this Bill gets rapid passage. In that spirit, I would like to conclude my remarks. There is so much more I would like to say, but considering the need to pass this legislation and get on with things, I think it is only appropriate that I conclude now.

I would like to indicate an appreciation for the opportunity to say a few words on this. I look forward to hearing some comforting remarks from the Parliamentary Secretary aimed particularly at those who are students, teachers and librarians and use copyrighted material for spontaneous instructional purposes.

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, at the outset, let me congratulate the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) and the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) for their keen interest and hard work on the legislative committee which dealt with Bill C-60. The number of hours we have worked at this Bill is substantial. Their input has been greatly appreciated by the Government.

I would also like to thank the House Leader of the New Democratic Party for his intervention, understanding that he has some concerns about the Bill. I know that these concerns have been responded to.

I think all Hon. Members recognize how necessary it is to revise the existing law and how urgent it is to Canada's sense of cultural and intellectual independence to underline and affirm the legal, moral and economic rights of Canada's creative community. After more than 60 years of increasing social, economic and technological change, the watchdog over these rights, our original Copyright Act, had become an animal with little bark and even less bite. This has been made clear to all Parliamentarians and to the Canadian public throught the excellent work some two years ago of the subcommittee on the revision of copyright.

There is no question that the subcommittee's work and findings gave Government the impetus to undertake the revision we now debate. However, it did more than that. The subcommittee also gave encouragement to the creative community that this time those revisions would indeed become a reality. In 1985, the subcommittee's work was as thorough as it was extensive. In 1987, the legislative committee's work has been no less.

I believe that in the course of the last few months, the committee has heard or accepted some 100 briefs from individuals and organizations concerned or affected by the changes proposed in Bill C-60. I know that the Minister would want me to congratulate the members of the committee for both the time and the dedicated study they have given to these submissions. As a result of that work, a number of necessary amendments to the legislation have been adopted, amendments which I believe strengthen the principles of the Bill even further.

In this regard, I should like to note first the amendment to exhibition rights designed to exclude the display of certain works such as maps, plans and charts from this category. This material may have artistic as well as technical merit, but these works are not works of fine art for which the exhibition right was intended.

The second amendment I would like to mention is the one which more clearly defines what is and what is not a collective. Concern was expressed that the term "licensing body" as used in the Bill would apply to such organizations as film distributors and music publishers. Clearly, it was never the intention to consider such bodies as collectives. The definition of licensing body has been reworked, therefore, so that it does indeed encompass only true collectives.

There is one other amendment I should like to mention today, perhaps the most important one from the point of view of creators' rights. As Bill C-60 was originally drafted, there was a provision which in essence could have prevented a creator from withdrawing his or her work from public access on the expiration of a particular licence. It is certainly not the intention of Bill C-60 to impose arbitrary or compulsory restrictions on the creators' rights. It is the exact opposite. We have, therefore, amended the Bill to correct this anomaly.

I would like to add a word or two about exceptions. Some would have liked to see exceptions dealt with through amendments to Bill C-60. I know the Hon. Member for Mount Royal has expressed this view. It has been explained to members of the committee and the House why this issue must wait until phase two of copyright revision.

• (1730)

However, I must assure the House that the Minister is not unreceptive to the argument that there should be some exceptions, possibly for the disabled, for archives, or for music during religious services to name a few. The Government will, of course, look closely at every claim for exception. Until phase two is implemented, existing exceptions under current law will be maintained.

However, there will have to be public policy incentives to justify an exception to a creator's exclusive rights to the use of his or her other works. Mere inconvenience or desire to save time or money do not provide such incentive.

Now that we have concluded report stage, it is the Government's hope that final passage of the Bill into law will be swiftly achieved.

[Translation]

It is becoming increasingly urgent to adopt Bill C-60. If this legislation is not passed, innovative high-tech industries will be denied the kind of protection that would encourage their growth and development here in Canada.

[English]

We simply cannot afford to lose our best and most enterprising minds in the field of computer software, to take but the most obvious example, because they cannot be assured adequate protection of their work in their own country.

It is no less important to protect our artistic and cultural creators whose work is, in a very real sense, the soul of this great country. They must have the right to control and protect that which they themselves have created, whether the written word, a painting, a musical composition, a choreographed sequence of dance, or any of the other arts covered within the Bill. For example, abolition of the compulsory licence for the making of sound recordings will permit composers to control subsequent recordings of their music. They must be adequately compensated for use of their creations. This is no more, no less, than simple justice.

As the Minister has said to the legislative committee, we acknowledge that the Bill cannot satisfy everyone's demands. Some creators still believe it does not go far enough in enshrining into law the rights which should go with creation. Some users still believe it will place upon them excessive demands, both in administration and cost, which will only serve to limit public access to these works.

However, in reviewing the principles and mechanisms proposed within the Bill I do believe we have before us a workable and affordable system which will meet the major demands for copyright protection and compensation while at the same time ensuring affordable public access. Indeed, that access may even be enhanced.

Bill C-60 is also about incentive—incentive, in the case of software producers, to remain and create here in Canada; incentive, in the case of artists, writers, publishers, perhaps our academic institutions, our public libraries and galleries as well, to join in creating new works and new means of distributing them. This can only bring benefit and reward to all those who share the Government's belief that Canada's national identity, our sovereignty itself, depends upon our continuing cultural development.

[Translation]

It is because of our faith in this development that we have decided to proceed with copyright reform. In some cases, we have followed the example of others and taken advantage of their experience. In other cases, we are setting an example for others.

[English]

In all cases we have endeavoured to respond to Canadian needs with provisions tailored to meet those needs. To the degree that Bill C-60 has received broad and continuing support from members of all Parties, I believe we have succeeded.

On a personal note, Mr. Speaker, this is my first experience in the legislative process as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications. It has been a great learning experience if one measures it in hours. This Bill has required a great many hours of work and much intervention.

In closing I would like to thank the House Leader for the New Democratic Party and the Hon. Member for Mount Royal for her interventions today and throughout the process. She has worked many hours as well, as has her research staff. I would also like to thank the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood who, at the initial stages, was involved very heavily, as was the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong). We thank those people and congratulate them for their interventions.

I ask that our colleagues join myself, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal, the House Leader of the NDP, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood, and the Member for Regina East, to ensure the swift passage and speedy adoption of Bill C-60 into law.

The Hon. House Leader has indicated that we are now ready to proceed with the vote on third reading. This has been a very profitable experience and I thank all those who were involved. I understood there may be a question and I am prepared to answer any questions.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a point to which the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has not alluded. We have heard of the concerns of educators with regard to spontaneous copying such as writing poems on the blackboard.

I have received representation on an area which is of great concern to some librarians in this country, particularly those from academic and research libraries, who wish to make material available to other libraries in order to provide equal access to all academic resources for which there are numerous requests every day. Some very expensive books are available only in large libraries.

Would the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary advise whether the rather stiff penalties in the legislation before us would affect the existing practice of photocopying single copies of articles of an academic or scientific nature for inter-library loans? Will this Bill affect that?

Mr. Clinch: Mr. Speaker, the best way to answer the question of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) would be to refer him to the Minister's own words in the legislative committee. In order to make the issue quite clear she indicated that the fines and penalties apply only to commercial dealings in infringing copies, dealings about which the Act is very specific; selling, hiring, exposing for sale or hire and so forth.

I think the Minister's statement in the legislative committee answers the first part of the question. Nevertheless, people must remember that unlicensed copying is illegal. That is the law as it stands in the Act of 1924. Unlicensed copying is illegal. This does not change with Bill C-60. However, as I have pointed out from the words of the Minister in the legislative committee, fines and penalties apply only to commercial dealings in infringing copies.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I understand that through legislation many other countries including Great Britain and the United States exempt single copies of academic and scientific papers for inter-library loan purposes from the copyright legislation. Could the Parliamentary Secretary indicate whether the Government is actively considering such an exemption?

Mr. Clinch: Mr. Speaker, again I thank the Member for his question. The first objective of the Government was to establish the rights of creators in law. That is the process we have gone through. I am sure the Hon. Member has received the concerns he has just expressed from his constituents. We propose to deal with those concerns in phase two of the Bill which will allow for certain exemptions.

• (1740)

I think it is fair to say that the creators are not asking for the moon but simply for a certain respect for their talents, their skills, their efforts and respect for the right to have a say in and compensation from the use of their works. I do not think anyone would disagree or say that that is unreasonable.

I believe we are making an investment through Bill C-60. It is a modest investment when we consider the examples of those who have preceded us in that regard. The return will be an increase in creativity.

I believe the concerns about exemptions and exceptions will be dealt with fairly. The Minister indicated at the legislative committee that she is prepared to proceed as expeditiously as possible with phase two so that there will not be another wait of 60 years. She made the commitment at legislative committee to do this as quickly as possible and hopefully see phase two introduced in the House of Commons before the end of June.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary is knowledgeable in the area. What will happen to our public and private broadcasters between phase one and phase two? Are they subject to fines and jail sentences because they will be following normal practice and complying with the CRTC regulations?

Mr. Clinch: Mr. Speaker, there are two points to which the Hon. Member alludes. One is the timing and what will happen in the interim. I think I must refer to the second point first, concerning some of the cases that are pending with regard to other parts of the legislation, such as design. Currently, there are cases on design before the court. Clearly, if it infringes upon the rights of the creators as expressed in this law, they will be in contravention of the law as I understand it.

I repeat that it would be selling, hiring, exposing for sale or hire and so forth in that area. I think that answers her question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

SITTING SUSPENDED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Accordingly, I will leave the chair and suspend the sitting until six o'clock p.m., at which time the bells will begin to ring for 15 minutes to call Members in to vote on Bill C-84.

At 5.44 p.m., the sitting of the House was suspended.

---

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 6 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed from Tuesday, February 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House agrees with amendments 8 and 13(e) made by the Senate to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, but disagrees with amendments 4, 5(a), (b) and (c), 6(a) and (b), 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13(a) because this House believes they contradict the principles of the Bill for the following reasons:

Amendment 4 would exclude only criminals and war criminals from the refugee determination process, but would allow terrorists, spies and subversives to pursue a claim to refugee status, notwithstanding the fact that Article 33 of the UN Convention would permit the removal of these latter individuals to their countries of nationality or permanent residence, even if they were determined to be Convention refugees.

Amendment 5(a) would eliminate the authority of the Minister to direct a ship to leave or not to enter Canadian waters. This amendment would reopen a significant gap in Canada's ability to control its borders.

Amendments 5(b) and (c) arise out of Senate amendment 5(a), which is not acceptable, and are therefore inappropriate.

Amendments 6(a) and (b) would reverse the policy on which the Immigration Act, 1976 was based, which policy was not changed in the Bill as passed by this House. The amendments jeopardize the possibility of successfully prosecuting persons who profit from organizing illegal migration and from counselling fraud among refugee claimants.

Amendments 9 and 10 would restrict the ability of peace officers and immigration officers to act quickly to search for evidence of major offences under the Immigration Act, 1976, in exigent circumstances, where lives are at risk or where evidence with respect to those offences may be lost or destroyed.

Amendments 11 and 12 would restrict the ability of peace officers and immigration officers to execute search warrants which have been duly authorized by a justice of the peace, by denying explicit authority to break open containers where it is reasonably believed evidence will be found and by limiting the authority to execute these warrants at night.

Amendment 13(a) would reduce the initial period of detention without review from seven days to forty-eight hours, which would allow insufficient time for the gathering of information to substantiate allegations or to identify the individual, particularly when large groups of undocumented persons arrive at one time.

And that this House agrees with the principles set out in amendments 1, 2(a), 3, 7 and 13(b), (c) and (d), but would propose the following amendments:

Amendment 1 be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 22 and 23 on page 1, and substitute the following:

(c) to deter those who assist in the illegal entry of persons into Canada and thereby minimize the"

Amendment 2(a) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 29 to 39, on page 4, and substitute the following:

(a) examine within seven days, in camera, the security or criminal intelligence reports considered by the Minister and the Solicitor General and hear any other evidence or information that may be presented by or on behalf of those Ministers and may, on the request of the Minister or the Solicitor General, hear all or part of such evidence or information in the absence of the person named in the certificate and any counsel representing the person where, in the opinion of the Chief Justice or the designated judge, as the case may be, the evidence or information should not be disclosed on the grounds that such disclosure would be injurious to national security or to the safety of persons;"

Amendment 3 be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 7 to 12, on page 5, and substitute the following:

(d) determine whether the certificate filed by the Minister and the Solicitor General is reasonable on the basis of the evidence and information available to the Chief Justice or the designated judge, as the case may be, and, if found not to be reasonable, quash the certificate; and"

Amendment 7 be amended to read as follows:

"Add, and immediately after line 6, on page 10, the following:

95.21 No proceedings for an offence under Section 95.1 or Section 95.2 shall be instituted except by or with the personal consent in writing of the Attorney General of Canada or Deputy Attorney General of Canada."

Amendment 13(b) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 1 to 22, on page 21, and substitute the following:

(2) Where, with respect to a person detained under subsection (1), the Minister certifies in writing

(a) that

(i) the person's identity has not been established, or

(ii) the Minister has reason to suspect that the person may be a member of an inadmissible class described in paragraph 19(1)(e), (f) or (g), and

(b) that an additional period of detention is required to investigate the matter referred to in subparagraph (a)(i) or (ii), the person shall be brought before an adjudicator forthwith and at least once during every seven-day period thereafter, at which times the adjudicator shall review the reasons for the person's continued detention."

Amendment 13(c) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 23 to 47, on page 21, and substitute the following:

(2.1) Where the Minister has issued a certificate under subsection (2), the Minister may amend the certificate to which the detention relates to include any matter referred to in subparagraph (2)(a)(i) or (ii), following which the person shall be brought before an adjudicator forthwith and at least once during every seven-day period thereafter, at which times the adjudicator shall review the reasons for the person's continued detention.

(3) Where a person is detained under subsection (1) and the Minister has not issued a certificate under subsection (2), the person shall be brought before an adjudicator forthwith after the expiration of the period during which the person is being detained and that person shall be brought before an adjudicator at least once during every seven-day period thereafter, at which times the reasons for continued detention shall be reviewed."

Amendment 13(d) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 48 to 50, on page 21, and lines 1 to 18, on page 22, and substitute the following:

(4) Where an adjudicator who conducts a review under subsection (2) or (2.1) is satisfied that reasonable efforts are being made by the Minister to investigate the matter referred to in subparagraph (2)(a)(i) or (ii), the adjudicator shall continue the person's detention.

(4.1) Every review under subsection (2) or (2.1) of the detention of a person suspected of being a member of an inadmissible class described in paragraph 19(1)(e), (f) or (g) shall be conducted in camera.

(4.2) Where (a) the Minister is of the opinion that any evidence or information to be presented by or on behalf of the Minister at any review under subsection (2) or (2.1) of the detention of a person referred to in subsection (4.1) should not be disclosed on the grounds that its disclosure would be injurious to national security or to the safety of persons, and (b) a request therefore is made by the minister, the adjudicator shall order that the review or any part thereof be conducted in the absence of the person and any counsel representing the person.

(4.3) Any person excluded by an order under subsection (4.2) from the whole or any part of the review under subsection (2) or (2.1) may apply to the Chief Justice of the Federal Court or to a judge of that Court designated by the Chief Justice for the purposes of this subsection to have the order quashed and sections 36.1 and 36.2 of the Canada Evidence Act shall apply, with such modifications as the circumstances may require, to such applications.

(4.4) Unless quashed, an order under subsection (4.2) shall, with respect to the person to whom the order relates, apply to every review under subsection (2) or (2.1), or part thereof, at which the Minister is of the opinion that any evidence or information to be presented by or on behalf of the Minister at the review, or part thereof, should not be disclosed on the grounds that its disclosure would be injurious to national security or to the safety of persons.

(5) Where the adjudicator who conducts a review under subsection (2) or (2.1) does not continue a person's detention under subsection (4), the adjudicator shall make the appropriate order under subsection 104(3).

(6) An adjudicator who conducts a review under subsection (3) shall make the appropriate order under subsection 104(3)."

And the motion of Mr. Lewis:

That Bill C-84 be further amended in Clause 11 by striking out line 2 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

""exigent circumstances" mean circum-"

And

That the Bill be further amended in Clause 16 by striking out line 16 at page 24 and substituting the following therefor:

"82.1(2), 83(1) and 91.1(1), and any such power,"

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 6 p.m., pursuant to Order made Tuesday, February 2, the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the motion of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), and on the motion of the Minister of State (Treasury Board) (Mr. Lewis) in relation to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof.

Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Bouchard) which was agreed to on the following division:

● (1810)

(Division No. 308)

YEAS

Members

Andre
Bernier
Bertrand
Binns
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blais
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bouchard
Boyer
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Caldwell
Cardiff
Carney
Champagne (Champlain)
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Clifford
Clinch
Collins
Cossitt
Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Crofton
Crosby (Halifax West)
Crouse
Daubney
Della Noce
Desjardins
Dick
Domm
Ellis
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Friesen
Gagnon
Gass
Gérin
Gormley
Gottselig
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Guilbault (Drummond)
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Jelinek
Jepson
Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kempling
Lawrence
Layton
Leblanc
Lesick
Lewis
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
MacKay
Mailly
Mantha
Marin
Martin
Mayer
McCain
McCuish
McDermid
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Nicholson (Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Nowlan
Oberle
O'Neil
Pennock

Pietz
Plamondon
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Reid
Reimer
Roman
St-Julien
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Schellenberger
(Wetaskiwin)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Shields
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Tardif
(Charlesbourg)
Taylor
Thacker
Towers
Tremblay
(Québec-Est)
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Van De Walle
Vincent
Warner
Weiner
Wenman
White
Wilson
(Swift Current —Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—126

NAYS

Members

Allmand
Angus
Axworthy
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
(Brant)
Boudria
Caccia
de Corneille
Dewar
Dingwall
Finestone
Foster
Frith
Fulton
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Grondin
Guilbault
(Saint-Jacques)
Harris
Heap
Henderson
Hovdebo
Kaplan
Killens
Langdon
MacLellan
Marchi
McCurdy
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
McLaughlin
Mitchell
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nunziata
Nystrom
Orlikow
Parry
Penner
Pépin
Prud'homme
Riis
Robichaud
Robinson
Rossi
Skelly
Tardif
(Richmond—Wolfe)
Waddell
Young—50

● (1820)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion adopted.

The next question is on the motion of Mr. Lewis.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I think there is disposition on all sides to dispense with the roll-call on the vote and to apply the vote just taken in reverse.

Mr. Lewis: No, the same way.

Mr. Gauthier: I withdraw.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lewis), which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 309)

YEAS

Members

Allmand
Andre
Angus
Axworthy
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Bernier
Bertrand
Binns
Blackburn
(Brant)
Blackburn
(Jonquière)
Blais
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bouchard
Boudria
Boyer
Brightwell
Browes
Caccia
Cadieux
Caldwell
Cardiff
Carney
Champagne
(Champlain)
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Clifford
Clinch
Collins
Cossitt
Côté
(Lac-Saint-Jean)
Crofton
Crosby
(Halifax West)
Crouse
Daubney
de Corneille
Della Noce
Desjardins
Dewar
Dick
Dingwall
Domm
Ellis
Fennell
Ferland
Finestone
Fontaine
Forrestall
Foster
Fraleigh
Friesen
Frith
Fulton
Gagnon
Gass
Gauthier
Gérin
Gormley
Gottselig
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-dela-Madeleine)
Gray
(Windsor West)
Greenaway
Grisé
Grondin
Guilbault
(Saint-Jacques)
Guilbault
(Drummond)
Hardey
Harris
Hawkes
Heap
Henderson
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Horner
Hovdebo
Hudon
James
Jardine
Jelinek
Jepson
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kaplan
Kempling
Killens
Langdon
Lawrence
Layton
Leblanc
Lesick
Lewis
MacDougall
(Timiskaming)
MacKay
MacLellan
Mailly
Mantha
Marchi
Marin
Martin
Mayer
McCain
McCuish
McCurdy
McDermid
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
McKinnon
McKnight
McLaughlin
McMillan
Minaker
Mitchell
Mitges
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Nowlan
Nunziata
Nystrom
Oberle
O'Neil
Orlikow
Parry
Penner
Pennock
Pépin
Pietz
Plamondon
Plourde
Price
Prud'homme
Ravis
Redway
Reid
Reimer
Riis
Robichaud
Robinson
Roman
Rossi
St-Julien
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Schellenberger
(Wetaskiwin)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Shields
Siddon
Skelly
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Tardif
(Richmond—Wolfe)
Tardif
(Charlesbourg)
Taylor
Thacker
Towers
Tremblay
(Québec-Est)
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Van De Walle
Vincent
Waddell
Warner
Weiner
Wenman
White
Wilson
(Swift Current —Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer
Young—176

● (1830)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion adopted.

It being 6.36 p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

At 6.36 p.m. the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, February 4, 1988

The House met a 11 a.m.

Prayers

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

AGRICULTURE—FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour, as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, to present the fifth report on Bill C-92, an Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, without amendment.

BILL C-51—REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take a moment to thank everyone involved in the legislative committee on Bill C-51, including members of that committee and the support staff. The hours were long and at times emotions ran high. In spite of this, the committee pulled together to ensure that the study of this Bill was complete.

The committee heard from 100 witnesses and received hundreds of written briefs. A complete and thorough analysis of this Bill was accomplished by the committee. The interest and dedication of all committee members was greatly appreciated and I thank them for the assistance and advice they provided to the chair.

It is my belief that the Bill as reported to the House this day accurately reflects the intent of the Government as well as being responsive to the concerns of many witnesses.

Bill C-51 is a very important piece of legislation and it is indeed an honour to have been involved in the legislative committee on this Bill.

Bill C-51 comes from the committee as a fair and equitable piece of legislation. We not only heard from many witnesses, the committee also listened very intently. It is my privilege to table this report today in both official languages.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

PETITIONS

PROPOSED FREE TRADE—CALL FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and privilege to present a petition that has been certified correct according to Standing Order 106. Yet again, my petition is on the subject of the Government's trade arrangement with the United States.

The people who have signed this petition believe that it will have a fundamental impact on Canada's economic, cultural and political independence. They also believe the agreement implies the loss of jobs in many sectors and regions of this country.

Therefore they request that the Parliament of Canada obtain a clear mandate from the people of Canada through a national debate on the alternatives available to this country and that this debate result in a national election prior to the implementation of any such agreement.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to table a petition that meets the requirements of Standing Order 106 and expresses a grievance that dozens of Canadians wish to bring to the attention of the House.

Whereas the Mulroney Government has sold out Canada without getting anything in return; Canadian industries have yet to be protected against U.S. trade laws; the United States has obtained everything it wanted in major sectors including agriculture, energy, the automobile industry, financial services and investment; the jobs of thousands of Canadians are threatened; the Conservative Government has made no provision for adjustment assistance for Canadian workers;

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray Parliament to condemn this Government for having signed the Mulroney-Reagan Trade Agreement.

• (1110)

[English]

USE OF KNIVES IN COMMISSION OF CRIMES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to present a petition from a number of citizens from Vancouver, Delta, Langley, Surrey and White Rock, British Columbia, on the question of the high incidence of crime, including murder, robbery and sexual assault, committed with knives. The petitioners believe this is on the increase not only in Vancouver but in other major cities across Canada.

Whereas the law, through the federal Criminal Code, allows citizens to carry knives for self-defence and this, in turn, creates a high incidence of murders, accidents, and so on, the petitioners call upon Parliament to amend the Criminal Code to prohibit the carrying of knives by citizens in public places except where it concerns knives used for an occupation or where knives are worn for religious reasons.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE—CALL FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and honour to present two petitions. The first is signed by citizens of Consul, Saskatchewan and the second is signed by citizens of Gull Lake, Saskatchewan. The petitioners state that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from the United States. The undersigned, your petitioners, pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, It is also my honour to present petitions pursuant to Standing Order 106 from residents of Thunder Bay, Ontario, Taber, Alberta, Swift Current, Hodgeville, Chaplin, Prince Albert, Stewart Valley, Moose Jaw and Regina, Saskatchewan. All of these petitioners believe that the Government has no mandate from the people of Canada to conclude a trade deal with the United States. They believe this trade deal would deny Canada the freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine Canada's ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States of America.

The petitioners therefore call upon Parliament to dissolve now in order to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the free trade agreement during a national general election.

[Translation]

INSTALLATION OF SUPPLEMENTARY SAFETY DEVICES IN AUTOMOBILES

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the privilege of tabling petitions signed by residents of Sherbrooke; l'Ascension, Quebec; Winnipeg; Normandin, Quebec; Roberval, Quebec; and Ceylon, Saskatchewan. Today's 114 signatures are in addition to 31,760 signatures I tabled previously. The undersigned are aware that since 1974, federal regulations on automobile safety allow the use of self-inflating bags by drivers of private vehicles, and that this device would reduce the number of deaths and serious injuries.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray Parliament to make the installation of self-inflating bags on the front seat and of adjustable shoulder seat belts on the back seat of automobiles compulsory.

[English]

RAILWAY DISPUTE IN SARNIA—LAMBTON—CALL FOR PROMPT SETTLEMENT

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and honour, pursuant to Standing Order 106, to present a petition from a good number of railway workers in the Sarnia—Lambton area. They are concerned that the arbitrator in the dispute act in an efficient and expeditious manner in connection with their agreement. They are concerned about salary increases that have been delayed for over a year and a half and also with job security.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are Indicted by an asterisk.)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 215 and 216.

[Text]

GOVERNMENT GRANTS—AUTOPRO INC.

Question No. 215—Mrs. Sparrow:

1. Did the company known as Auto Pro Inc. of St. Rémi, Quebec, receive government funding prior to its bankruptcy?

2. Who were the principals of Auto Pro Inc.?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): 1. AutoPro Inc. had specialized since 1974 in the manufacture of stators for the automotive market. The company was acquired in September, 1983, by its management team at the time. It became 123051 Canada Inc. and continued to operate under the name Autopro.

The following lists offers accepted by AutoPro Inc. and 123051 Canada Inc. (Autopro) under programs administered by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion:

(a) File 236403—Montreal Special Area Program Offer accepted February 15, 1979 for project involving the expansion of a plant in Saint-Rémi. Payments: $75,750.

(b) File 223975—Enterprise Development Program Offer accepted December 20, 1979 for a productivity study. Payments: $15,240.

(c) File 270770—Export Market Development Program Offer accepted April 30, 1981. Payments: $1,303.

(d) File 258431—Export Market Development Program Offer accepted April 30, 1981. Payments: $1,415.

(e) File 209700—Export Market Development Program Offer accepted February 16, 1984. Payments: $1,822.

(f) File 210154—Export Market Development Program Offer accepted May 30, 1984. Payments: $1,597.

2. The president of 123051 Canada Inc. (Autopro) was Mr. Alain Plouffe.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT FUNDING FOR STATCOM LTD.

Question No. 216—Mrs. Sparrow:

1. Has the firm of Statcom Ltd. of Montreal received regional development funding?

2. Who are the principals of Statcom Ltd.?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion is concerned, the answer is no.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

RAILWAY SAFETY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. David Crombie (for the Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-105, an Act to ensure the safe operation of railways and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to rise and present the first address on Bill C-105, the Railway Safety Act. I would like to express my appreciation to the Government House Leader for making earnest efforts to have this Bill called yesterday, but given the fluid nature of this House, that was impossible. I would much rather be in the Crow's Nest Pass handing our Olympic coins to people in the Crow's Nest, Cowley, Pincher Creek, Fort MacLeod and Brocket, but that was impossible. However, I will complete the rest of the circuit in my riding this evening.

The Railway Safety Act is part of the total transport modernization of air, marine and railways. This Parliament has already passed Bill C-18, the National Transportation Act. It has passed Bill C-19, the Motor Vehicle Transport Act. It has passed Bill C-21, the Shipping Conferences Act. It has passed Bill C-75 dealing with the Canada Shipping Act, and Bill C-52 respecting the coasting trade is at a legislative committee right at this moment. Bill C-105, after two or three days, will go to the standing committee, and there is yet to come legislation respecting the transportation accident investigation board. Therefore, you can see, Mr. Speaker, that this Parliament has been active in the field of transportation. I believe this Parliament has acted wisely in those Bills because it is an area in which there has not been much legislative activity for quite some time.

In broad terms, the new transportation agency will look after economic regulation of all modes of transport in this country. The Ministry of Transport will be responsible for safety regulation. The next Bill, establishing the Transportation Accident Investigation Board, for the information of Members, will set up a quasi-judicial, totally independent accident investigation board, similar to the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, but will cover air, railway and marine. In terms of broad principles, I think it is a wise principle to have a separation of those three interests.

• (1120)

In general terms, this railway safety legislation includes all the legislative recommendations of Mr. Justice Foisy after the tragic Hinton accident. It brings safety into the Ministry of Transport. It streamlines many of the processes in the Bill, as I will set forth. It stresses inspection of operating and maintenance rather than what is contained in the existing legislation with its emphasis on construction. It sets up a consultative railway safety committee. It imposes the existing criminal law that applies to everyone in cars, trucks, airplanes and boats to people operating trains. It has a five year review, which I think Hon. Members who are knowledgeable in the area know is in the statute, although other Members might not be aware of it.

The next major point is that in spite of the fact that we have had some tragic accidents—and even one accident is too many—in relative terms Canada is a safe place. The railways are responsible for only some 3 per cent of transportation accidents. CP has been the safest railway in all of North America in seven of the last eleven years. CN is consistently within the top six.

It is fair to say that the introduction of this Bill is confirmation of the Government's political commitment to ensure that safety has first priority in the Canadian transportation system. As Members know, amendments to the Aeronautics Act were passed in 1985 which addressed the safety of Canadian aviation. This was followed up with action to strengthen security at Canadian airports.

In 1987 the House passed amendments to the Canada Shipping Act which dealt primarily with safety. Further steps have been taken to improve navigational safety through measures for vessel traffic control and new safety requirements for offshore drilling rigs.

Of greatest interest to all Canadians is road safety. We have taken the lead in promoting the use of seatbelts. Of course, we have established a requirement for daytime running lights on new vehicles sold in this country, starting later this year. Our commitment to safety in transportation was established as a central tenet of government policy in Section 3 of the National Transportation Act, 1987, Bill C-18. This statement clearly set forth safety as the first objective of transportation legislation by requiring that "the transportation system meet the highest practicable safety standards".

The Bill now before the House has been prepared to implement this policy for the railways of Canada. The Railway Safety Act will be followed in the near future by a Bill to create a transportation accident investigation board. This independent board will be empowered to investigate all accidents in all federally-regulated modes of transportation, drawing upon expert staff to determine causes and to recommend means to prevent any recurrence.

By way of background, Hon. Members will know that for many years the safety of Canada's railways has been regulated under the Railway Act. This Act originated at the turn of the century, at a time when the railway system was rapidly expanding. This growth brought with it an increasing need for safety regulation.

At that time much of Canada's railway system was under construction to open up new territory and to encourage settlement. Lines were often speculative, built into new territory where revenue potential was very low. Some smaller companies lacked cash and were tempted to cut corners on construction and operation. Trains were short, slow, few and far between. Then, and for many years, trains were controlled by instructions sent by telegraph to wayside stations with handwritten messages "hooped-up" to the crew of a passing train on the end of a bamboo stick.

The environment has changed. Canada's railways are moving huge volumes of freight, be it containers from Montreal to southern Ontario, automobiles from Toronto to the Prairies, or bulk commodities: grain, sulphur, potash and coal from the West to the export terminals. Along the way the trains themselves have grown enormously—15,000 tonne trains are now commonplace compared to the 200 tonne or 300 tonne trains that were the norm when the Railway Act was first conceived.

Today's large trains move faster and over longer distances without stopping than ever before. More and more dangerous commodities have been added, often moving through busy urban corridors. Large scale movement of dangerous goods was unheard of when the Railway Act was first written. I notice in the House again today the presence of the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) who has spoken so often in Question Period and who is vitally concerned about the railway safety in the Toronto metropolitan areas.

Today, railways are in the midst of a technological revolution. Sophisticated communications equipment and computer systems are being developed to control the movement of trains. A major new development will soon transmit train movement instructions directly by radio to computers on board locomotives.

Recently, the Minister announced that the Government is providing funding to encourage this development known as the advanced train control system. The railways are making large investments in high technology with much more to come. It is a matter of survival, for the industry is under strong competitive pressure.

The changing environment was reflected in the report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Hinton Train Collision. Justice Foisy stated his concern that Government is not keeping apace with the need to modernize rules and regulations. The railways have simply changed but not the legislation. It is becoming more and more difficult for the railway safety regulator to respond to the changing environment while working under the existing Railway Act.

As I said earlier, the Railway Act was created to cover all aspects of railway regulation. It combines in a confusing mélange safety regulation, economic regulation and accident investigation, along with an assortment of sections governing telegraph systems and railway corporate affairs. The combination of safety and economic regulations and accident investigation in one agency of Government is now recognized not to be in the public interest. There is a potential for conflict among these responsibilities. While I hasten to add that no such conflict was evident in the performance of the Canadian Transport Commission it is a possibility, and thus the policy of the Government, to separate these responsibilities.

The existing legislation is riddled with anachronisms. For instance, the Railway Act legislates the weight of bells for steam locomotives. The railway of the last century was in many respects a dangerous workplace. Legislative protection for employees was created in areas that would cause surprise today, such as in a specific Railway Act provision prohibiting the oiling of steam locomotive valves while the engine is moving. This questionable practice, not to mention the steam locomotive itself, disappeared many years ago.

Railway construction a century ago was often a hit and miss affair with public and employee safety sometimes taking second place. What the industry could not or would not do, the Government of the day had to undertake. The result was a legislated requirement for the regulator to become directly involved in the details of railway construction. This placed a burden of evaluation and approval of routine construction projects on the Government. Now, with universally-accepted standards of engineering, more protective labour legislation and a stable and mature railway industry, many of these regulatory activities are unproductive.

A review of railway accidents over the past 10 years to 20 years or more shows that the construction of railway track and structures is not the source of safety problems on the railways today. Resources, which now must be committed to approval and inspection of construction projects, could be used to far greater safety effect elsewhere. Performance of these duties by the regulator can even be interpreted as removing some of the responsibility for compliance with safety standards from railway management, which is where it really belongs.

The existing legislation imposes on railway rule making the review of publication procedures for government regulations. These procedures were designed to protect the rights and privacy of individuals. They were not intended to deal with technical aspects of railway operations. The Government regulator and the industry face serious delays when making needed changes to operating rules, simply because the Railway Act requires it. Mr. Justice Foisy was sufficiently concerned about these delays to specifically recommend that the Government "take immediate steps to make the uniform code of operating rules current, and to maintain it in that condition". It is difficult, if not impossible, to do so under the provisions of the existing Railway Act.

• (1130)

Today our safety concerns focus on how the railways operate and maintain heavy density main lines involving the movement of 15,000 tonne freight trains, and passenger trains carrying hundreds of people. Yet the Railway Act only created powers of inspection for engineers.

The penalties found in the Railway Act make interesting reading. An engineer can be fined $8 for failing to blow his whistle at a crossing, while a multimillion dollar corporation may face a fine of $100. The Railway Act also contains the somewhat quaint threat of punishment by hard labour.

The message is obvious. Railway transportation and the transportation environment have changed in the past, and are changing rapidly today. The legislation must meet the challenge.

When the Minister tabled the railway safety Bill, he also released a report on drug and alcohol abuse in the railway industry. The Minister has asked for comments from the public on recommendations in that report dealing with mandatory drug testing before proposing any government action to Cabinet. Nevertheless, he indicated that this was an issue that should also be discussed by members of the standing committee when they are hearing evidence on the Bill.

Members should be aware that this Bill does not include any provisions for mandatory drug testing in the railway industry. However, it does include amendments to the Criminal Code with respect to the operation of railway equipment while impaired, as well as dangerous operation; the same rules that apply to us all in our cars, trucks, and boats.

Every one of us knows that it is a criminal offence to drink and drive, or to drive dangerously. The public has a right to expect that these prohibitions apply to the operation of trucks, airplanes, ships, and trains. While this true of the first three, many would be surprised and dismayed to know that criminal prosecution for those offences does not apply to persons responsible for the movement of railway equipment.

This curious situation probably arose because railway companies own and control the railway equipment and the tracks over which it moves, employ the persons who operate the equipment, and even have their own police forces. A combination of railway operating rules and internal enforcement may have been the justification for an otherwise unacceptable omission.

The best known and long established rule in the railway industry is "Rule G" which states:

> The use of intoxicants or narcotics by employees subject to duty, or their possession or use while on duty, is prohibited.

This actual prohibition is more restrictive than that of the Criminal Code, which is only triggered after a threshold level of alcohol has been exceeded. "Rule G" has clearly been an effective measure in ensuring that alcohol or drugs do not constitute a hazard to safety. The record shows that few railway accidents have been attributed to the use of these substances. Nevertheless, railway operating employees work difficult hours and spend much of their time away from home. Research into use of alcohol and the increasing problem of drugs indicate that these working conditions create a high risk of substance abuse. Therefore, in developing the concepts for the railway safety Bill, it was clear that more was needed than only a company rule, albeit a largely effective one, to prevent the possible operation of trains while impaired.

Train crews are routinely responsible for the safety of several hundred passengers. They control the movement of freight trains valued at many millions of dollars which, to an increasing extent, include a wide variety of dangerous commodities. The public is exposed to the operation of trains throughout the country, not only as passengers or motorists at grade crossings, but as individuals living and working near railway lines. It is essential that train crews be alert on the job and that their vigilance be not in any way impaired by alcohol or drugs. For this reason, the Criminal Code provisions that apply to truck drivers, ships' captains, aircraft pilots, and to every motorist, should also apply to railway employees.

There are certain fundamental principles on which the regulation of railway safety in Canada must be based. As I stated earlier, safety regulation must be separated from responsibility for economic regulation, and further separated from accident investigation. The roles and responsibilities of the regulator and railway management must be clearly defined. The regulator must have the power to protect public and employee safety. Management must be responsible and accountable for the safety of operations. Consultation is essential, including full public inquiries on important issues. Regulation must be flexible and responsive in an environment of rapidly changing services and technology. Unnecessary and unproductive regulations should be eliminated, and penalties for offences must be meaningful.

The Bill before us has been drafted to deal with these many concerns. I will highlight the major aspects of the Bill which correct the deficiencies of the existing legislation and create a better legislative framework for the regulation of the railway industry.

This Bill provides a clear focus on safety by placing in a single Act all the federal Government's powers for the regulation of railway safety. Unlike the existing Railway Act, decision making under this Bill is concerned only with questions of safe rail operation which, by definition, includes the safety of the general public. By allocating those powers to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and leaving economic regulation of railways with the National Transportation Agency, the Bill will achieve that needed separation of responsibilities. The same separation will be achieved for accident investigation by the Transportation Accident Investigation Bill, soon to be tabled.

The Railway Safety Act will give the Government all the powers necessary to ensure safety on the railways. For the construction, maintenance, and operation of the system, the railways must satisfy the Minister that each element has been planned, executed, and controlled in a manner that is consistent with regulations and rules. The Act clearly makes the railways responsible for developing and implementing these measures and does not place the Minister, or government officials, in the position of making management decisions. The Minister will have the essential power to accept or reject management's proposals.

The Governor in Council will establish the basic regulations for the safety of the system, without limitation of the power to determine the content of those regulations. The Minister will have the power to impose rules of operation where railway companies have failed, for whatever reason, to develop rules which are acceptable and where these rules are essential for safe operation. The Minister will also the power to order companies to cease using, and to remove, structures whose existence pose a threat to safety.

These are extensive powers. In order to ensure that they are used effectively, the Bill provides for regular consultation by the creation of a railway safety consultative committee. The committee will comprise representation from the railways, railway unions and shippers, as well as persons having special interest or expertise in railway safety matters. This will create a forum for exchange of ideas and views, and a means to anticipate and solve problems in order that the proposed regulatory changes be carefully thought through. In this manner, the Minister can use consultation to avoid confrontation.

The anachronisms that exist in the Railway Act are the result of including detailed technical subjects in legislation. The railway safety Bill establishes the basis for effective regulation, leaving the determination of technical details to regulations and rules. It will not rapidly become outdated.

The vast majority of engineering work on Canada's railways is routine and repetitive. The new Bill will allow the regulator to designate those items of construction and alteration which cannot be undertaken without the express approval of the Minister. By limiting procedures for other routine projects to selective filing of affidavits which attest to the safety of the completed work, a significant burden of unproductive regulation will be lifted from the Government. But the responsibility of railway management for safe operation will remain undiminished, while the powers of inspection under the Railway Safety Act will enable the Government to monitor the safety of any of these projects at any time.

• (1140)

Mr. Justice Foisy recommended that the government take steps to keep railway operating rules up to date. This Bill provides a streamlined rule change process which permits regulations and rules to incorporate other material by reference, including automatic update of that reference, and establishes time limits to encourage prompt decision making by the regulator. These provisions, along with the exemption of railway rules from review and publishing requirements of the Statutory Instrument Act will provide for the timely updating of the rules under which the railways operate.

The Foisy Commission also called for separation of rule making and accident investigation and for prosecution for breach of rules, both of which have been provided for in this Bill.

Finally, Mr. Justice Foisy recommended that railway legislation require the reporting of employee medical conditions which may jeopardize railway safety. Hon. Members will find this provision in Clause 35 of the Bill.

By dropping unnecessary and unproductive regulatory activities, and by simplifying and speeding up the evaluation and approval process, the Railway Safety Act will permit the redirection of existing resources into more productive areas.

Clearly, in today's environment, the emphasis must be on inspection for compliance, with the powers of inspection broadened to cover all disciplines, not just engineering. Regulatory staff can be placed anywhere on the system where they are needed. Inspectors appointed under the Railway Safety Act will have the full power to order railways to stop any operation that may prejudice safety.

Since this power could cause serious interruptions in railway operations, railway companies and shippers have concerns about the potential for unnecessary or, indeed, improper use. There will be no compromise on the ability of inspectors to issue these orders.

At the same time, however, the Bill requires the inspectors to do so through railway supervisory staff, unless this is impossible, and to notify the Minister when an order of this nature has been issued. The Minister will then be in a position to judge if these powers are being exercised as intended and will be able to rescind any order which is inappropriate.

I should like to bring to the attention of Hon. Members the penalty provisions of this Bill. Fines of up to $50,000 for corporations and up to $10,000 or imprisonment for up to one year for individuals are created, along with the power to treat continued violations as separate punishable offences for each day incurred. These constitute meaningful penalties to any organization or individual. The railway safety Bill fills the gap that exists in the current legislation.

We have taken the opportunity presented by this Bill to create new powers for Government to protect the security of the system. Sadly, threats to security are an increasing problem world-wide, often with transportation systems as the target. Provisions were made in the Aeronautics Act to deal with security in the air. The railway safety Bill includes similar powers which will help the Government to react to such threats on the ground. While we hope that it will never be necessary to use these powers, it is essential that we create them now to protect the system in the future.

Finally, the railway safety Bill introduces a number of amendments to related legislation. Of particular importance are the amendments to the Criminal Code. As I noted earlier, these amendments will add railways to the list of modes which are subject to prohibitions against dangerous operation and operation while impaired. The Bill also repeals the Railway Relocation and Crossing Act, but retains and expands the essential powers of that legislation which allow the Government to promote improvements to safety.

The Bill before us was prepared after thorough consultation with provinces, municipalities, railways, railway unions, shippers, shippers of dangerous commodities, owners of private railway equipment, and of course public interest groups.

We received excellent co-operation and major contributions from all participants. While we believe that the provisions of the Bill have widespread support among the persons consulted, obviously not everyone got everything they wanted. I expect that we will have the opportunity to discuss any such concerns as the standing committee reviews the Bill.

As the Minister of Transport has said on every Bill which has been referred to a legislative or standing committee, if the committee after hearing the evidence has any amendments which can help the Bill and they are within any reasonable possibility, he is more than happy to accept them. Indeed, he has a history of accepting them. I think, in my experience here, that he has accepted more amendments to more Bills than any Minister with whom I have worked in this Government as well as in the previous Government.

Public perception of railway safety is conditioned overwhelmingly by the accidents in Mississauga, Hinton, and the train collisions of last month. These accidents have sensitized all of us to the potential dangers of any railway accident.

In his press conference after tabling the Bill, the Minister took the opportunity to reassure Canadians that our railways are basically safe. Moreover, progressively over the recent past, they have become safer. As I said earlier, in seven of the last eleven years, CP Rail has been the safest class one railway in North America. Over the same period, CN Rail has been consistently within the top six. This is a good record, which extends to include the smaller railway companies as well. It has been achieved and maintained at a time when the safety performance of all major North American railways has been improving.

The Government keeps a close watch on how the industry performs. As examples, over the period from 1979 to 1986, the total number of train accidents decreased by some 38 per cent, while fatalities decreased by 23 per cent and injuries by 16 per cent. What is more, the statistics for 1986 include the tragic number of deaths and injuries at Hinton. The latest results show no deterioration in this performance during 1987, even though railway freight traffic increased dramatically over levels in 1986.

While there have been major improvements in safety performance in 1986, still 116 persons died and 3,523 persons were injured in railway accidents. These numbers are unacceptably high, and we must act to reduce them. To do so requires an understanding of what is happening. Of the total fatalities, over 40 per cent are due to accidents at grade crossings and, almost without exception, these could have been prevented by the motor vehicle driver. Another 40 per cent of the fatalities include trespassers struck by moving train equipment. That was a figure which was much higher than I would have thought in my capacity as a layperson. Excluding 1986 and the Hinton collision, from 1979 to 1985 fatalities from train collisions and derailments have averaged two per year. In terms of injuries, 75 per cent of these involved employees, the vast majority being minor injuries sustained in performing duties and not related to accidents involving trains.

To place railway statistics in perspective, Hon. Members should be aware that while 116 persons lost their lives in railway related accidents during 1986, 90 people were fatally injured in aviation related accidents, 35 lost their lives in commercial shipping and fishing accidents, some 200 persons were killed in pleasure craft accidents on our waterways, and some 4,071 persons died on our roads. There is no room for complacency in respect of any mode of transportation. Any life lost is one too many. The message is that while railway safety can and will be improved, we are dealing with a controllable situation, not an industry in crisis.

While all Canadians are aware of major railway accidents, they are seldom as well informed about the follow-up. Our record is good. The Government established the Toronto area dangerous goods task force and the task force on the shipment of dangerous goods through the B.C. Lower Mainland. Both these groups have involved provincial and municipal Governments and have consulted widely throughout the areas under study. The task forces will be reporting to the Minister later this year on major questions surrounding the movement of dangerous goods through urban areas. The work has already provided insight into the risks and alternatives for transporting hazardous materials, and the results should be relevant for all communities throughout the country.

• (1150)

As mentioned earlier, the Government quickly commissioned Mr. Justice Foisy to carry out a full investigation into the tragedy at Hinton. You will recall that the Minister released Mr. Justice Foisy's very thorough report to the public and also made public the progress on implementing his recommendations. Members will be delighted to know that the railway safety Bill includes all of the legislative recommendations of Mr. Justice Foisy.

Significant changes have been made to rules governing areas of rest for trained crews. The unsatisfactory "deadman pedal" is now a thing of the past in mainline operations and will soon disappear from all locomotives, having been replaced by the more reliable and tamper proof reset safety control device.

Wherever possible, the recommendations of the Foisy report have already been implemented. Other longer term proposals are under active consideration. One example is Mr. Justice Foisy's conclusion that the advanced train control system holds great promise for improved railway safety. The Government agrees and, as I noted earlier, the Minister recently announced on behalf of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret), a $15 million program to support the development of this technology by the Canadian railway supply industry.

I have spoken of the terrible toll taken at our grade crossings. Members are probably aware of the Government's long-term program to assist provinces and municipalities in reducing these accidents. Funding has been made available for improving the safety of grade crossings by installation of warning lights, bells, and automatic barriers or by physical changes which will improve the safety of crossings.

A companion program has provided financial assistance for the construction of grade separations. It is encouraging to note that grade crossing injuries and fatalities have decreased radically in recent years. The federal Government's funding programs have played an important role in maintaining this trend.

Of equal importance is the joint federal-provincial Government and railway industry program called Operation Lifesaver. Operation Lifesaver is devoted to educating the public about the dangers associated with railway lines and railway operations. Originally targeted at making drivers aware of the hazards of grade crossings, the program also has shown great promise in teaching school children that trespassing on railway property can lead to tragic results, as we have too often seen. The Minister is enthusiastic about the results of Operation Lifesafer and hopes to increase this essential educational activity.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, there are many areas in which the Government has acted to improve safety on our railways. While great progress has been made, much more remains to be done. The introduction of this Bill into the House is an important step in continuing and accelerating this work. While the safety performance of our railways is good, there is a need for improvement and we are committed to seeing that changes are made. The Railway Safety Act is the means to achieve that objective, and I am sure that all Members of the House will assist by giving this Bill speedy passage.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in my place today to participate in debate on the Railway Safety Act. In making my comments today I cast my mind back to another transportation Bill, one of those listed by the Parliamentary Secretary as being marks of achievement by this Government and Ministers of Transport in the last two or three years, that is, Bill C-75, the Canada Shipping Act.

I recall that when that Bill was undertaken, circumstances were very similar. The Parliamentary Secretary has told the House about some of the current archaic provisions in legislation with respect to regulation of the railway; the minimal fines which are available under the current Act, and the fact that there are not provisions, for example, for someone operating equipment under the influence of alcohol because the Bill is literally many decades old. Any Bill has to be an improvement on something that was drafted in the 1940s.

I will, therefore, begin by acknowledging that any Bill which brings us into the 1980s and lifts us decades beyond the forties when the current legislation was drafted must be an improvement. However, having acknowledged that this is an improvement, I must say that I hope the Government will approach the Railway Safety Act with an attitude similar to that which was displayed during the course of debate and, in particular, in committee hearings on Bill C-75, the Canada Shipping Act. That Bill as well replaced a very old piece of legislation. It brought the Canada Shipping Act into the 1980s. It took account of modern technology and modern means of managing and operating shipping equipment.

When we dealt with that Bill the Government was open to amendments which would improve the first draft of the legislation. In fact, as I recall, there were 11 or 12 amendments made to Bill C-75 which I believe were substantive and important amendments. There was one very dramatic change made to Bill C-75 in that Clause 4 was dropped.

I hope that with regard to the Railway Safety Act the Government will show the same degree of interest in having the strongest possible Bill passed by Parliament and will not merely be satisfied with pointing to improvements made only because we are replacing a Bill which is decades old. It is very easy to give the appearance of making improvements when replacing a Model T with a 1980 Cadillac. We want to put forward the best legislation possible.

In examining the legislation we must ask ourselves why we are here today discussing the Railway Safety Act. What was the catalyst which brought us to this point? It is true that this legislation ought to be have been dealt with a long time ago. As a Liberal and a supporter of the former Government I can say that it should have been dealt with by the former administration. That is an honest comment. However, now that we are dealing with the Bill, let us cast our mind back to the catalyst which seized the Government and the House of this issue.

More than anything it was the train derailment in Hinton, Alberta, on February 8, 1986, which took 23 lives that focused Parliament and the Ministry on the issue of railway safety. That derailment, coupled with the new transportation environment in Canada, namely, deregulation, is what focused this House on the issue of railway safety.

Two days after the Hinton derailment and the tragic loss of 23 lives the Ministry appointed the Foisy Commission to look into all aspects of railway safety and operations. We applauded the Minister for that then as we do now. Indeed, I think all Members of Parliament would agree that Judge Foisy produced an excellent piece of work, a thorough review of the operations of the railways in this country with particular emphasis on the regulations necessary for the safe operation of railways.

Upon looking at the Bill before us today one would have to agree that the vast majority of the recommendations of the Foisy Commission report, with a few exceptions, can be found in whole or in part within the provisions of Bill C-105. I say "in whole or in part" because there are a couple of areas which I believe are exceedingly important in which I believe the recommendations have not been implemented in the spirit in which they were intended by Judge Foisy. The primary concern of the Liberal Party with Bill C-105—and I would hope the Parliamentary Secretary would pay attention because he might want to consider amendments—is the whole notion proposed by the Government that there is finally to be a split between the economic regulation of the railways and the safety regulation of the railways. The Parliamentary Secretary has very clearly said today that a prime consideration for the Government, and in fact a prime recommendation of the Foisy Commission report, is that there be a split between those who are in charge of economic regulation of the railways and those who are in charge of the safety regulation of the railways, for obvious reasons.

• (1200)

If both responsibilities are contained within one agency, the NTA, there is a clear conflict of interest. There is a conflict between those concerned with the economics, the commercial aspect of railway operations, and those concerned with safety. The Government, quite rightly, and Mr. Justice Foisy, quite rightly, said that there must be a split of those responsibilities.

The Government is telling us that we have accomplished that split in this Bill because those responsible for safety regulation will be transferred from the NTA to the Ministry of Transport under the responsibility of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and there will no longer be a conflict of interest. That move takes a step in the right direction, but it does not fulfil the purpose the Parliamentary Secretary outlined when introducing this Bill today.

How can we possibly conceive of the notion that putting those responsible for safety regulation under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport will solve the conflict of interest problem? After all, it is the Minister of Transport, as a matter of political policy, who has introduced deregulation in Canada. In the last year and a half, this is the Minister who has introduced the concept of deregulation in all modes of transport. He has abolished the independent nature of the CTC and has set up the NTA which takes directives from the Minister.

If there was a conflict of interest within the NTA because people making economic regulations and people making safety regulations were sitting in the same room, then surely to goodness there must be a conflict of interest when the Minister of Transport, who himself is the author of deregulation, is also the person responsible for safety. It is our belief that we have avoided one conflict of interest and have created another.

The Minister must now wear two hats. The primary proponent of and cheerleader for deregulation who is telling the railways to get lean and mean and to be competitive will, because of the provisions of this Bill, be the same gentleman who has responsibility for those people who will enact and enforce safety regulations. That is a conflict of interest for the Minister of Transport himself. I submit that it is perhaps a worse conflict than that which currently exists within the NTA.

I have raised this with the Parliamentary Secretary because I believe that when this goes to committee, we can develop amendments to the Bill that will ensure that the regulatory arm that operates under the jurisdiction of the Minister operates in some kind of quasi-independent manner. That is not specifically spelled out or clear in the Bill as it reads now. We do not know if a group of employees will be given a suite of offices down the hall from the Minister. We do not know if they will operate under the directive of the Minister on a daily, weekly and monthly basis. It is not clear, and as long as it remains unclear, the Minister of Transport, perhaps unwittingly, has been put into a terrible conflict by those who have drafted this piece of legislation.

On the one hand, the Minister will be telling the railways to compete, to cut costs, to make the operations lean and competitive, to be on an even footing with our friends south of the border in hauling traffic east and west, and on the other hand that they have to be safe. It is a difficult role for one single individual to play. That is why we recognized it as a conflict within the NTA. It is puzzling, then, why we would put the Minister in exactly the same conflict we wanted to avoid in the NTA itself.

That is one area of major concern to the Liberal Party. I say that with the knowledge that according to CTC figures, both CN Rail and CP Rail have cut their strength from a joint total of 88,478 employees in 1981 to 78,249 in 1985. If we had more recent figures, we would see that the cuts are even deeper. More than 10,000 people have been cut. The railways ascribe these cuts to technological change, and to some extent, I suppose that could be substantiated. However, the unions charge that many of these cut-backs have reduced safety by lowering inspection and maintenance standards.

We are living in an age of deregulation. One need only look South of the border where there has been 10 years of experience with deregulation, particularly on the air side, since 1978 and at what has happened to safety standards there to appreciate the enormous new pressures that will be on operators to function.

Bearing in mind this new conflict for the Minister and the Minister's ability to wear two hats, one as cheerleader for modernization and streamlining and the other as cheerleader for safety, I would like to bring to the attention of the House Clause 41 of the Bill, the offences clause. This clause provides that on indictment, in the case of a corporation like CN or CP, a fine of not exceeding $50,000 is payable. In the case of an individual, the fine is not to exceed $10,000 or imprisonment of one year. On summary conviction, the fine is $25,000 for the corporation and $5,000 for the individual.

When the Parliamentary Secretary introduced the Bill, he talked about existing regulations and said how silly they were. The maximum fine for a company was $100 and for an individual it was $8. He said that that needed to be upgraded. Well, this is the upgrade on the fines.

The maximum fine for an individual employee making $25,000 or $35,000 a year is $10,000 and the maximum fine for a billion-dollar corporation is $50,000. At a time when we expect these companies to cut their costs and to be mean, lean and competitive, the temptation to scrimp on safety expenditures and to cheat is stronger than ever. However, the maximum fine for a billion-dollar corporation is $50,000 and for an individual is $10,000. The fines and offences contained in Clause 41 are out of whack. We had exactly the same problem under the Canada Shipping Act which provided for fines which were ridiculously low.

I suggest to the Parliamentary Secretary that this is another area we ought to explore in committee. We may be able jointly to come to some agreement on amendments. I say frankly to the Parliamentary Secretary that we cannot always assume the goodwill of individuals or corporations. That is why we provide for offences in law.

Frankly, when faced with the possibility of a maximum fine of $50,000—but it could be $5 or $50,000—for a safety offence or with a million-dollar cost for fixing a problem, some companies might decide that it would be cheaper to take a chance on a $50,000 fine than it would be to spend the funds necessary to solve the safety problems. I think this $50,000 fine, given the scheme of things—

• (1210)

Mr. Thacker: Per day.

Mr. Tobin: It only takes one day to lose 23 lives, such as on February 8, 1986. In just one day many people can be killed. The fact it is $50,000 a day does not assure me that there is a satisfactory deterrent to the people operating our railways to try to cheat the system. I would like to see that number increased dramatically. I hope we can discuss this in committee and come to a mutually agreed upon sum and have this amended. We were able to do that with respect to a number of offences under the Canada Shipping Act by all-Party agreement. I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to take a note of that and give consideration to it.

There is another part of this Bill which I have some trouble with the way it is drafted. It concerns the railway safety consultative committee and Clause 44 of the Bill. There are five positions on the committee guaranteed for business, the railways and shippers. Four positions are at the discretion of the Minister. There is one position for labour. It seems to me that that committee is awfully heavily loaded in favour of the railways. Yes, they should be substantially represented, but not, I submit, overwhelmingly represented. I do not think one labour representative is an adequate voice to balance the competing and sometimes different views of the railways themselves.

Neither do I see a position on this committee for the public. What do I mean by the public? Many Members will remember the Mississauga spectacle of 1979 when 250,000 people had to evacuate their homes. No Party has a monopoly on virtue in its desire to prevent a repeat of that kind of incident. In fact, I see a member of the government Party who is frequently on his feet with respect to the transportation of dangerous and hazardous materials through populated centres. Yet it seems to me there has to be a provision for a public group on the committee, someone with a non-vested interest. There should be an opportunity for the public's voice to be heard; those who live in communities where dangerous and hazardous materials are shipped on a regular basis should have a direct say in this committee. I submit to the Parliamentary Secretary that this is an oversight which I hope can be corrected when we get to committee stage.

There is an organization in Toronto which arose out of the Mississauga derailment of 1979 called M-Track. That group has played the role of a public advocate on a regular basis, dealing with the speed of trains, the kind of material being moved, the way the material is secured. That kind of voice needs to be heard on the committee. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will agree that this is an amendment we must make. I hope as well he will give consideration to the weighting of the committee. Surely, as presently constituted, it will not lead to an effective and well-functioning committee.

There were a couple of recommendations made by Mr. Justice Foisy in his excellent report which are not found in this Bill. One of those is the notion that there ought to be, in addition to the technology now in place, an oral notification of train meets by radio. I understand there has been consultation between the unions, the companies, the regulators, and a general agreement that the recommendation, while made with Mr. Justice Foisy's best judgment, is not one that would contribute to safety. We accept that that recommendation is not found in the Bill. However, there is a second recommendation covering hours of work scheduling. Again, we understand the Government is in a difficult position because in talking about work scheduling, you are talking about the collective bargaining process. Until some of those issues have been resolved at the bargaining table, it is difficult for Government to impose, in essence, part of the contract through legislation. However, I would note that recommendation and hope that the Government intends, when it is appropriate and the parties have come to some resolution of the question, to come back and amend the legislation at a later date.

I have tried in these remarks to raise a number of areas where I believe the Bill can be improved. These are matters to which members of all Parties should be able to lend their support. I now want to come back to the primary concern I have about the Bill, and its primary motivation which, as the Parliamentary Secretary rightly says, is the notion of setting up a separate, independent safety organization within the Department of Transport.

Currently the economic and safety regulators are in the same offices. That gives rise to at least a potential of a conflict of interest. The Government says it is going to solve that by moving the safety regulators away from the economic regulators. Yet they have been put in the office of the Minister of Transport, and that puts the Minister in an even worse situation of conflict of interest. On the one hand he is the proponent of the regulation, and on the other he is responsible for safety because there is no quasi independent agency.

It was very illuminating that in the Standing Committee on Transport a few days ago we had Mr. Barbeau, the Assistant Deputy Minister for Surface Transportation in the Department of Transport, and we asked him questions about the Foisy report and this Bill. We were concerned specifically with the question of whether or not we were splitting economic regulation from safety regulation. Here is what he said:

> A second element was recommended by Justice Foisy, and that is the split between accident investigation and safety regulation. Again, the new Bill will do this in part. What is happening with the new Bill is that we are splitting off safety regulation from economic regulation, which now remains with the National Transportation Agency, and then in a Bill that will be introduced in the House some time soon, we hope, there will be further split between regulation and accident investigation.

● (1220)

Introducing a multimodal accident investigation board through a new Bill, after the fact, will not permanently resolve the problem of safety regulation in this country.

While this Bill generally enjoys the support in principle of the Liberal Official Opposition, until amendments are made to the railway safety consultative committee, until amendments are made to reflect proper fines for offences by corporations, and until there is a proper separation of economic regulation and safety regulation so the Minister is out of the conflict of interest in which this Bill would place the Minister, we cannot endorse it as now drafted.

We have had experience with transportation matters in the past of seeing the House work as a cohesive unit, putting aside partisanship, and delivering good legislation. If the Minister and his Parliamentary Secretary accept my remarks in the spirit in which they have been given, I hope that we will produce a good Bill at the end of a proper and thorough investigative process at the committee stage.

I equally say to the Parliamentary Secretary that without some of these fundamental matters being addressed, the Bill will not get the kind of timely passage that at least in concept and principle it deserves.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, we are finally seeing some movement on legislation which has been called for at least since the mid 1940s. During the years that my colleagues and I have been here, and prior to that when former colleagues in the CCF and NDP were here, our Party annually called for this kind of legislation.

I recall being with the railway between the mid 1940s and early 1960s, and going to union meetings where this matter was discussed every time we met. Union officers would recite how they made repeated efforts with the railroads and the Government of the day to get a national railway safety Act. It is unfortunate that it has taken so long for Governments to see the light.

The NDP recognizes the urgent need for railway safety legislation. We will do all we can to assist in passing the legislation, hopefully in an amended way to make it even stronger.

I believe the motives of all Members from all Parties in the House will be above suspicion when it comes to dealing with safety, about which we all say there should be no compromise.

Bill C-105 represents the first opportunity Parliament has had to consider legislation responding not only to the Foisy report, which was released over a year ago, but responding to many other demands in this area. We are all aware of the rash of rail accidents in recent weeks, in which lives were lost. Of course, it is these types of accidents that make national headlines even though many more people are killed at railway crossings and in highway mishaps. Highway mishaps and railway crossing accidents do not attract as much attention as train wrecks or plane crashes, and I suspect that has made the public and the legislators complacent about other areas of safety.

I agree with some of the remarks of my colleague from the Official Opposition. We are in a type of vacuum at the moment. The Government's headlong rush into deregulation before the implementation of all these other measures has left us a situation in which the CTC and the Rail Transport Committee of the CTC have ceased to exist as of December 31, while the new National Transportation Agency is still be reorganized after coming into place January 1. Many of the employees of the CTC are going to the new National Transportation Agency and the Department of Transport, and others are probably retiring early. In the meantime, the regulating authority for the devising of regulations, enforcing of regulations and the investigation of mishaps is spread throughout the NTA and the Department.

Over two years ago we pleaded with the Government not to implement Bill C-18 and Bill C-19 until all the accident and investigation boards were in place and the highway, railway, marine and air safety codes with their respective agencies were established. Even the Canadian Truckers Association pleaded with the Government, both privately and in appearances before the Transport Committee, to delay the implementation of Bill C-19 for at least a year, preferably two years, until the new national highway safety codes were in place with the jurisdictions that have control over highway traffic. The Government refused to listen.

Officials of the Department were present at a committee hearing on January 16. I asked: "With the National Transportation Agency being responsible for the devising and promulgating of regulations, until such time as a national accident investigation board is set up that covers rail, air, marine, whatever, who will be responsible?" I went on to say: "This may take another year or two before all this happens. In the meantime, who is responsible for the regulatory regime for investigations, inspections, enforcement and all the things that go with the regulations that will be in place?"

The answer I received was: "There are really three things going on with the creation of the National Transportation Agency with the Bill. The whole question of rail safety, including both the regulation of rail safety and accident investigation function has been left with the National Transportation Agency as it presently stands". The answer goes on: "The reason is there is no way the responsibility for railway safety can be transferred, for example, to Transport Canada without a piece of legislation". He went on to say that this brings into play the proposed Railway Safety Act. As soon as it is proclaimed, then the responsibility for railway safety will come over to Transport Canada with the function of accident investigation. It is all a matter of timing. As soon as the National Transportation Accident Investigation Act is proclaimed, the responsibility for action and investigation will then be split off from Transport Canada into the new agency. He ended up by saying: "It is a matter of things falling into place one after the other".

• (1230)

That sort of proves what I said two years ago, and several times since then, with respect to the Government's headlong rush into deregulation before having these three things in place. Now the scramble is on. The best I can say for the Government is that it is better late than never. However, the Government could have avoided a lot of the difficulties that have been there, presently are there, and will continue to be there for at least another number of months, if not a year or two. In fact, on January 19 the Atlantic district director of the National Transportation Agency, Rail Safety Branch, who chaired a meeting in Halifax, admitted that there is at present no agency empowered to investigate accidents or make other inquiries into matters related to railway safety. He said that rail safety in this country is in a state of flux. He is sure right about that.

I suppose we could give the Government some credit for trying to clean up the mess it made. People should have to clean up their own mess. Bill C-105 is an attempt to allow some sort of regulation to be put in place to deal with what is quickly becoming a critical situation.

We have to look at this Bill to see what it does for rail safety and we find that by itself it does not do very much. The most important provision in this Bill gives the Government the power to pass regulations having to do with the safe operations of railways, but by itself this Bill does not provide for high standards of safe railway operating practice. There are no specifications for adequate frequency of inspections. There are no specifications for maintenance of track and equipment. Therefore, by itself the Bill does little for safety. It just legislatively allows someone else to do it.

Much will depend on what regulations the Government passes following the passing of this legislation. I feel that the legislation should contain some general and specific principles in each area of maintenance, inspection, investigation and enforcement so that there are some firm legislative requirements put upon those who draft regulations and enforce them and those who carry out inspections and investigations and enforce their findings.

I hope the Government will at some point present to the House a draft of its proposed safety regulations pertaining to Bill C-105. If it does not, perhaps it would consider—and I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to raise this matter with the Minister—to at least give a draft of the proposed regulations to the standing committee so that we can look at it while dealing with the Bill and while we are hearing from witnesses. In fact, I have been on the Standing Committee on Transport for 20 years next June and I believe the standing committee could be very helpful to the Minister and to the industry in drafting those regulations. My advice is to make available to the Standing Committee on Transport, if not to all Members of the House, the substance of the Government's proposed regulations so that the committee can make its recommendations as well.

Some amendments to this Bill are necessary. The Bill as it is tabled is vague in a number of instances. I depicted the Bill as very nebulous. I do not know whether the Minister is out in space or spaced out with the nebuli. For example, Section 4 defines a number of terms introduced in the Act. One troublesome definition is for relevant associations or organizations of persons employed by a railway company. The Act says the Minister must declare by order that a particular union is a relevant association or organization. I thought that was something that the Canada Labour Relations Board did. All the railway brotherhoods, as far as I know, are certified as railway employees by the Canada Labour Relations Board. I do not know why the Minister needs to have an additional authority to pick and choose which union he things is a relevant association or organization. We already know who they are.

The wording of this section of the Act could lead to some very interesting confrontations if it is left as it is now written. The Minister could leave some railway unions out of the consultation provided for in the Bill. If that is not asking for trouble, I do not know what is.

The Government does not seem to have considered employees very carefully when it drafted the Bill. That is why the railway safety consultative committee the Bill creates is structured so unfairly. We are just fed up with the unfairness of this Government in so many ways since September 4, 1984, and it continues to perpetuate unfairness in its legislation. The proposed make-up of the Bill betrays the Government's intention to allow railways to regulate themselves with minimal interference from the Government. The Minister will be represented on the committee by as many as five members. The railways will be represented by five members. The railway employees will be represented by only one. It specifies the Canadian Railway Labour Association in the Act. What if the railway brotherhoods do not want a representative from the Canadian Railway Labour Association? What is the Minister going to do then? Will he just barrel ahead anyway? That is no way to treat the 50,000 or 60,000 people engaged in the operation of railways in Canada.

This kind of set-up effectively stacks the deck against labour in any dispute that might arise in the committee. Perhaps that is what the Government wants. That is not the only example in this Bill of the Government trying to make life easier for the railway companies. Clause 11, for example, takes the responsibility to ensure that some railway works are safe from government regulators and gives the responsibility to the companies. This will no doubt make life easier for the companies, but what it does for safety is a mystery to me.

Perhaps the Government has good reasons to want to help the rail companies through some pretty rough times since both CN an CP are in a much weaker competitive position, thanks to deregulation. However, safety has to be a primary concern. It cannot be sacrificed or compromised. When a company is victimized by the bottom line syndrome under deregulation, and is faced with competing modes of transportation, and when American railroads have a licence to raid up to $2 billion of the revenues of CN or CP in any year, otherwise honest and reputable corporations are forced into a position where they have to cheat. They have to cut corners. They have to save every nickel they can find.

• (1240)

The Bill is too soft on the rail companies. It comes down hard on employees in some ways, especially in terms of the setting out of offences and the establishment of penalties for contravening the legislation. There is a relatively small difference between the penalties faced by corporations and those faced by individuals. Ten thousand dollars is a great deal of money to an individual who, as my colleague said earlier, might be making $25,000, $30,000 or $50,000 per year. A $50,000 penalty placed on a corporation which has revenues of anywhere from $1 billion to $3 billion per year, depending on how good a year it is, amounts to nothing more than a licence fee to be unsafe. I submit that the fine and the penalty should be severe enough that they are equal to or exceed the cost of the safe practices which should have been carried out before a penalty was imposed.

This type of unfairness cannot be tolerated. The penalties on the railroads should be at least 10 times as high, up to $500,000. Safety costs money. A company which has been unsafe or which has carried out an unsafe practice should be required to pay more money than it would have cost to implement a safety measure. If that were in the legislation, then the railroads would be not only more mindful but they would know that this is one area in which they cannot and do not dare cut corners or slow down especially in matters concerning maintenance and inspections. We hope that the Government will agree to accept changes in this area as well.

The fact that an individual not only can be fined but can go to prison for neglecting to tell his or her physician that he or she holds a certain kind of job with the railroad while a corporation found guilty of a flagrant violation of the Bill causing loss of life and damage to property has to pay only what amounts to small change is an imbalance of some proportion.

Clause 35 of the Bill threatens the confidentiality between patient and physician. Physicians are required to provide confidential medical information to railway employers rather than to the Minister or to the regulatory agency. How can the employer be prevented from abusing this information?

Drug and alcohol testing are not specifically mentioned in Bill C-105, but it allows for regulations governing the control or prohibition of the consumption of alcoholic beverages and the use of drugs. In other words, the Minister will be able to allow companies to administer drug and alcohol tests to its employees. There are a few points about that issue which need to be remembered.

First, drug testing will not prevent accidents or abuse. The Bill is silent on preventive and non-punitive approaches to alleged problems of drugs and alcohol in the workplace. The Bill could have included, and I hope it will, provisions to improve employee assistance programs.

I want to recommend to all Members an article that was in this morning's issue of The Globe and Mail. It appeared on the editorial page and is written by Professor Brian Tucker of the University of Saskatchewan. It is entitled: "Stress rides the rails". It is not only those who ride the rails, locomotive engineers, brakemen and conductors, but those who hold a number of other high stress positions which exist in railway operations. I think particularly of train dispatchers in this regard.

I can recall a senior life insurance executive telling me a number of years ago that insurance companies would rather insure the fellow who paints the Lions Gate Bridge or washes windows on a 50 storey building than insure a train dispatcher or an air traffic controller. The difference in mortality rates and disability rates was remarkable. I have seen people in those occupations who are faced with stomach ulcers, nervous breakdowns and heart attacks when they are at the age of 40, 45 or 50. These people a number of years ago had an average life expectancy of 56 compared to the national average a number of years ago of about 72.

The whole area of stress includes as well other personal, mental and physical problems. A person in these sensitive positions has to be vigilant. They are highly trained, competent and conscientious people. It is not just alcohol or drug use or abuse that causes stress. In fact, it is my view that the rate of alcohol use or abuse or drug use or abuse among employees in those types of jobs on the railroads and the airlines is far less than among the public generally in most other occupations.

If there is any one thing that one is conscious of when one is working on a railroad, for example, is "Rule G". An employee to whom this rule applies does not consume alcohol when on duty or subject to duty. That is drilled into one's head from the first day on the job. One is reminded of it continually not only by supervisors but by fellow employees. They know that the lives and property of thousands of other people are in their hands.

I recommend this article by Professor Tucker and other studies that have been done to Hon. Members. The legislation should provide for, and require, sufficient funding for employee assistance plans. I am confident that in this respect the full co-operation of the employees and of their unions will be obtained. The federal Government and the railroads should share in the funding of these types of programs.

It is unsafe to send a man to work to run a locomotive or dispatch trains when he is having severe difficulties at home. Those problems are on his mind when he should be concentrating on his work. Dealing with this is called risk management. Without those types of programs being carried out and a requirement in the law there is not sufficient risk management.

I wish to point out a regrettable omission in the Bill. In Bill C-105 there is no protection given to railway employees who report unsafe practices or conditions to the Minister or to a regulatory agency. The Bill can be improved by adding a provision which states that an employee cannot be dismissed because of disclosures of unsafe practices and conditions to authorities outside of railway management. It is called whistle blowing, if Hon. Members will pardon the expression, on the railway.

I remember a train wreck near the station where I was working in Saskatchewan. The section foreman had won the prize for the best section in the whole Medicine Hat Division. He had received merit marks, awards, certificates on several occasions and even a handshake from the General Manager of Western Lines on several occasions. He was a man from Czechoslovakia who escaped that country in 1939. All his life in Canada he worked on the CPR rails, on the tracks. He became a section foreman, a very good one. The investigation showed that that mishap was due to a broken rail. Who received 35 demerit marks and was taken out of service for two weeks? That section foreman. Several times a year, year in and year out, that section foreman would plead with the roadmaster, the division engineer, and write to the superintendent of the division, pleading and asking for some more rails, or some newer rails, if not new ones. He knew the track and he knew what the rails were like. He could not get them; it cost too much money. Because he was doing a conscientious job, even though he had the best section in the whole Medicine Hat Division, he is the one who was made the scapegoat. The railway management did not even receive a slap on the wrist from the Canadian Transport Commission.

• (1250)

We have had reports given to us of a carman "bad ordering" a car, and his supervisor takes the "bad order" tag off and says to leave it on the train. If the carman objects, he is considered to be insubordinate and a trouble-maker, so he keeps his mouth shut. But there is an unsafe practice going on. Trying to document something like that is next to impossible.

The regulations have to include some procedures that protect the employee on the ground on the job, and protect the employee in his employment if and when he blows the whistle on unsafe practices by railway management. That is a must. It is not that the employee wants to get even with the company or get even with some foreman or superintendent; it is because the safety regulations require them, as well as him, to operate safely and carry out their duties in order that the railway operation be more safe.

I wish to say to the Parliamentary Secretary through you, Mr. Speaker, that it will require the help and the maximum co-operation of 50,000 to 60,000 railway employees for this to work to its maximum best. To pay so little attention to their conditions, and to have some unfair provisions in there, will not generate their co-operation and assistance. It will only worsen morale further and make bad attitudes worse.

I hope that the consultative committee is given a little muscle. The employees' representation on it should at least be equal to—I submit that it should be larger—than the representation by the railroads. The railroads continually have the ear of the Minister. They continually have the ear of the National Transportation Agency. The employees do not. When they did, they did not get very far.

There are a couple of other things that are or will lead to further unsafe conditions. I have mentioned stress and fatigue, and physical and mental problems of an employee and the help that they need and deserve. That should be funded jointly by the railroads and the federal authority. But there are a couple of other things. The Parliamentary Secretary stated that the Railway Crossing Act is repealed and will be covered in this Bill, if I heard him correctly. I do not know the figures, but over the years thousands of people have been killed at railway crossings. Our country runs approximately 30 years behind European countries in the situation that we have with railway crossings, compared to them.

To maximize railway safety and safety to the public, something has to be done about level crossings. It will cost money. I estimate a minimum cost of $100 million a year for six to ten years to really do something about level crossings. There are thousands of locations where flashing red lights and the arms across the track are not sufficient. There will have to be an overpass or an underpass. The last one that was done in Regina cost $11 million, but it is a beautiful job. Six lanes of traffic move under the double track main railway line. It was jointly funded by the federal, provincial, and municipal Governments. That has to continue, and it has to be substantially increased. The funds are woefully inadequate. It is a disgrace.

There are more than 100,000 level crossings in this country, some of which could be completely done away with. For example, there are areas on the Prairies where a crossing every mile is not needed. In many areas one every two miles would be fine. But it would mean that a road would have to be built parallel to the track for that extra mile in order to do away with one crossing. There is an area where rail safety can be substantially enhanced when we start removing tens of thousands of level crossings and replacing them with overpasses or underpasses, grade separations as they are called.

I want you to visualize, Mr. Speaker, an 80-car freight train of grain moving from Moose Jaw to Assiniboia. On the Prairies there are thousands of farm fuel trucks owned by oil companies or contractors delivering fuel to farmers all over the three prairie provinces. In every location each truck makes a dozen or two dozen trips a day. They cross railway tracks a dozen or two dozen times a day. Visualize this, Mr. Speaker. It is still dark or it is getting dark, and that 80-car train of grain from Assiniboia to Moose Jaw—I will bring it the other way around in the right direction—ploughs into that farm fuel truck. The locomotive bursts into flames. The consist of the train is on the locomotive. The only communication that the train has beyond that locomotive is in the locomotive. Who is going to phone whom about what? If there are any carloads of dangerous goods on the train, who knows where they are? The locomotive is in flames, and it is miles from nowhere. Do you know why, Mr. Speaker, there is no one to do anything? The cabooses are going to be taken off. There will be no cabooses.

I find that the most incredible decision of the Canadian Transport Commission that I have ever seen, and they have made some dandy messes that contribute to unsafe practices. No matter what the railroads say about saving money—Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a few extra minutes, if I may have permission of the House after three o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has two minutes left in his speech. Would the Hon. Member prefer to complete it now, if the House wishes?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1300)

Mr. Benjamin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank my colleagues. I will wind up quickly by referring to some things the Bill should do but does not do. It is nebulous. It is too vague. It is not strong enough in terms of what it requires of the railroads. It is unfair in terms of what it does with, for and to employees. Too many things are not in it that should be in it.

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary meant what he said about the Minister being willing and amenable to changes and improvements to the legislation. I hope that he is right and that he will forgive me for being a little bit doubtful, since of the 130 amendments moved to Bill C-18 and Bill C-19 I think the Government accepted 7 or 8 of them. Big deal. They were mostly ones dealing with minor details, but on the ones that really meant something, government Members sat there like sheep. Some of them even agreed with some of my amendments, but they sat there like sheep and followed their marching orders. So much for the independence of the committee.

My Party supports the railway safety Bill in principle, for we have been calling for such legislation for many years. We are sad that the Bill is so deficient, but we appreciate that it is a long overdue first try.

We will all be groping around in terms of what more we can do, but I think we could make that effort in committee. I plead with the Parliamentary Secretary to prevail upon the Minister to make available to us a draft, no matter how rough or incomplete, of regulations they are envisioning bringing in. The committee can be very helpful. We can hear the views of witnesses as well, which will make it even more useful in the finalizing of the new regulations.

Again I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the extra time. I hope the Bill will receive the many more improvements it so badly needs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 1.04 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. later this day.

At 1.04 p.m. the House took recess.

---

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[English]

REFUGEES

PRE-SCREENING OF CLAIMANTS—NEWSPAPER REPORT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday The Globe and Mail reported on a confidential government memorandum which, unfortunately, outlined the Government's true agenda on refugee applications, namely, to utilize the pre-screening stage Bill C-55 to eliminate nearly two-thirds of all claimants. In doing so the Government is revealing a very diabolical and despicable streak.

For months the two Ministers of Immigration have stated that the Bill contains no pre-screening at all. Yet, at the very same time, they are designing, in secret, a strategy that is based purely on the opposite, on pre-judging applications. The Government's intent is to maximize the efficiency of the system by indiscriminately keeping people from ever accessing the system. This is paramount to a hospital turfing out needy patients in the name of achieving greater efficiency.

I call upon the Government to abandon its deceitful calculations and to end its wishful role of trying to play both judge and jury. It should instead establish an independent process to judge these claims fairly and honestly, and provide Canadians with policies which they can respect and trust.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

REDUCTIONS IN GOVERNMENT DEFICIT

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, the Government is leading the Canadian economy into the 21st century despite the incredible debt left by the Liberals. In the four years prior to 1984 spending grew by 15 per cent per year, effectively mortgaging the next generation. The interest payments on this debt amount to 30 cents of every dollar of federal revenue.

The Government has reduced the annual deficit from a high of $38 billion in 1984 to an estimated $29 billion this year, which represents the first consecutive three-year decline in 30 years. Yet the Opposition continually calls for increased public spending, not caring about the long-term damage this will cause.

The Government has responded to Canadian needs with initiatives like the Special Grains Program and the National Day Care Strategy in a responsible manner, while the Opposition asks Canadian taxpayers to spend even more. Just think, Mr. Speaker, how huge the deficit would be if either opposition Party were allowed to implement its irresponsible spending plans.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

BILL C-92—PROCEEDINGS IN STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and his Cabinet take every opportunity to protest the independence of standing and legislative committees. Too often, however, these protestations simply hide reality. We have just had another example of this in the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

As you know, Bill C-92 was referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture instead of to a legislative committee. There is a serious flaw in Bill C-92, a Bill to amend the Wheat Board Act, which flaw government members on the committee recognized. Despite this recognition, the majority members of the committee were unwilling to recommend any changes to the Bill without the approval of the Minister. You have guessed it, Mr. Speaker, the Minister gave the government members their marching orders—there are no amendments.

The Bill will be reported to the House to allow producer car rebates without recognition of the cost of those cars to the grain moving system. This, Mr. Speaker, is not the way parliamentary reform was supposed to operate.

* * *

[Translation]

THE MEDIA

JOURNALISTS—MEETING DESIRED IN ORDER TO AVOID CERTAIN INCIDENTS

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, there is a lot of competition among the various tv stations in Ottawa. We had a very good example of this yesterday when the Hon. Michel Côté left the House after his statement.

Well before Question Period, we had trouble getting into the House. I had to ask Officer Desforges to let me through, and I had to do the same thing after Question Period.

Yesterday, members of the press who are in Ottawa on a regular basis did not stand in Mr. Côté's way, but there were journalists and cameramen who only come here once a year and would not let us through. Mr. Speaker, no Member from Quebec is going to leave this House by the back door.

To prevent any recurrence of incidents of this kind, it would be useful to meet with representatives of the media and the cameramen, to find a solution.

Mr. Speaker, I may add that if I were a hockey coach today, I would immediately recruit some of the reporters and cameramen who were here yesterday, considering their muscle and the incredible speed with which they were able to move.

* * *

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES—CONGRESSIONAL VOTE AGAINST FURTHER FUNDING FOR CONTRA FORCES IN NICARAGUA

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the American House of Representatives for giving peace a chance in Central America. Yesterday, the United States House, by a vote of 219 to 211, turned down the President's request to provide further military funds to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua.

• (1405)

The President's paranoic policy with respect to Nicaragua is totally wrong. It is an unwarranted, illegal interference by a superpower in the internal affairs of a small, poor country. It is a failure to recognize the principle of self-determination and it is a distortion of the real situation in that country. Nicaragua is not and never was a threat to the United States.

Finally, the President's policy was contrary to and undermined the peace plan agreed to by all Central American countries on the initiative of President Arias of Costa Rica, an initiative for which he won the Nobel Peace Prize. This is a good day for Central America and a good day for peace.

* * *

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

OMISSION OF RIGHTS OF UNBORN BABIES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, where is our country heading? For many generations Canadians endeavoured to make laws in harmony with Holy Writ, but now our laws have to conform to the Charter of Rights, a document in which we had to fight to even get the name of God mentioned, a document that leaves out property rights and, even worse, makes no mention at all of the rights of unborn babies.

We lost the Sabbath Day as we knew it for many years because it did not conform to the Charter. Now we have abortion on request and unborn babies can be butchered in the womb simply as a birth-control measure. To our shame, we now let the convicted murderers live and permit the murder of unborn babies. It is enough to bring tears to the eyes of the Statue of Justice that stands silently in front of the Supreme Court of Canada.

* * *

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—MINING EXPLORATION ACTIVITIES IN STRATHCONA PARK

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the House to a proposal of the B.C. Government to expand mining in Strathcona Park. The Government has changed provincial park boundaries to allow extended mining and exploration activity in the park.

Exploration activities by Cream Silver Mines Ltd. will lead to further mining in the park. Serious danger of contamination and destruction of major salmonid enhancement projects in the Great Central Lake and the Oyster River systems are a definite potential.

We in the NDP demand that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) use their powers under the Fisheries Act to suspend any further exploration and mining in Strathcona Park, to launch an in-depth investigation of the potential damage to fisheries systems in that park, and to hold public hearings to ascertain the wishes of the public in this matter.

* * *

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

LACK OF AFFORDABLE HOUSING IN TORONTO—GREATER USE OF SCARBOROUGH LAND BANK SUGGESTED

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation announced that 1,808 non-profit housing units have been approved for Metropolitan Toronto in 1988. One of the projects approved at St. Mark's Presbyterian Church in my riding will provide 62 family units and 14 special-purpose units.

That is good news, until we recall that there are at least 17,000 families, seniors and single people, now on waiting lists for affordable housing in the greater Metro area. That makes us realize that 1,808 new units will help but certainly will not solve the problem.

It is time for CMHC to use more of its Scarborough land bank for housing, to redevelop its own Toronto branch-office lands on Lawrence Avenue for housing, and to explore the housing potential of other federal lands in Metro as recommended by the McLaughlin report.

* * *

RAILWAYS

NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY—REPORTED NEGOTIATIONS ON ABANDONMENT

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, it now seems that the federal Government is renegotiating with the Province of Newfoundland for the abandonment of the Newfoundland Railway. This was negotiated before, but the parties could not reach an agreement that the Province of Newfoundland would accept.

Now it seems the province will accept an agreement. If the province is satisfied with it, I wish it well. However, I wish this agreement had been negotiated in public and not behind closed doors.

When the Terms of Confederation were brought forward in 1949, Newfoundlanders were promised a link with the mainland which would extend from North Sydney to Port aux Basques. I assume the people of Port aux Basques will be looked after by the Province of Newfoundland in the settlement with the federal Government. However, I do not want the federal Government to forget the obligation it took upon itself in the negotiations for the town of North Sydney and for the workers of Marine Atlantic. I would suggest to the federal Government that it treat the people of North Sydney fairly.

* * *

[Translation]

PUBLIC DEBT

HERITAGE FROM THE PAST

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, in yesterday's editorial, the Globe and Mail reported the most shocking scandal we have known in the past 25 years, one that has an impact on Canadians today and will go on affecting us for the next 25 years. During the lengthy Liberal reign over this country, when the Liberals were unfortunately often supported by members of the Socialist Party, this country was spending money left and right, getting involved in frivolous expenditures and then having to borrow to buy the groceries.

That is why today, Canada has the largest per capita debt in the world. Canada ranks second after the United States in terms of absolute figures. We owe $172 billion abroad, that is, half the U.S. debt, for a country with one-tenth the population of the U.S. Mr. Speaker, that is a legacy we received from the Liberal big spenders. Lest we forget, the present Liberal Leader was there at the time, with his present team, and they were there thanks to the Socialist Leader's support.

Something to think about for Canadians, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

• (1410)

[English]

EXTERNAL AID

ETHIOPIA—THREATENED FAMINE—NEED FOR UNIMPEDED ACCESS TO HUNGRY POPULATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin on behalf of all my colleagues in the NDP caucus by joining with the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) in celebrating the vote in Congress last night on funding for the Contras. I would like to express my regret that the Canadian Government could not show as much distance from the policy of President Reagan as obviously a majority of U.S. Congressmen were willing to do; I suppose they are anti-American, too.

Let us turn our attention to another country torn not only by war but by famine, the country of Ethiopia. Many of us are disturbed by persistent reports that indicate food relief is being used as a political weapon by the Ethiopian Government. The problem of safe passage for emergency food supplies is of increasing concern. In that respect I draw attention to an all-Party motion passed in the West German Bundestag calling for safe passage of those supplies. It specified that the impending famine must not be misused for political or military objectives; that the international humanitarian aid agencies must be guaranteed free and unhindered access to the needy population in all parts of Ethiopia; that relief convoys must be identifiable as such and it must be possible to check that they are not being misused for military purposes; and that food assistance and logistic support must not be misapplied for forced resettlement and villagization programs, nor misappropriated for the Ethiopian Army.

Those are the kinds of concerns on which we need a response from the Government. I hope the Minister in charge of this program will soon make a statement with respect to these charges and the effect they have on Canadian policy in that area.

* * *

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

MEECH LAKE AGREEMENT—ONTARIO PREMIER'S REFERENCE TO NEW CO-OPERATIVE SPIRIT

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, it is not very often that a Progressive Conservative Member of Parliament from Ontario has an opportunity to applaud a statement made by Premier David Peterson. However, being one who gives credit where credit is due, I am delighted to have such an opportunity today.

The Ottawa Citizen reported that during a speech in London, England, to the Canada-United Kingdom Chamber of Commerce, the Premier praised Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and applauded what he referred to as a new co-operative spirit in Canada. He called the Meech Lake Agreement an example of the new co-operation taking over federal-provincial relations. He stated in his comments: "I don't believe our Confederation has been stronger in the last 20 years."

It is my hope that such expressions of praise and good will by the Premier of Ontario will continue upon his return to Canada.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

PARENTS' SPONSORSHIP OF UNMARRIED CHILDREN OVER 21 YEARS OF AGE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, on August 11, in this House, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) announced that he proposed to change regulations so that parents could sponsor unmarried children over 21. Last week he issued a release which was not only disappointing but patronizing in its tone. It chided those who have been making inquiries and said that he would issue a release when he was ready to move on the regulations.

I find it absolutely heartless that the Minister would raise expectations in August and then, six months later, the best he can say is: "Don't call us, we'll call you."

* * *

• (1415)

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—OPPORTUNITY TO ENACT NEW HUMAN LIFE ACT

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, seen in positive terms, the Supreme Court decision on abortion now gives Parliament an historic opportunity to enact a comprehensive new statute, one that we might call the Human Life Act.

A Human Life Act would deal not only with abortion, genetic engineering, surrogate motherhood, and new forms of reproductive technology, but also euthanasia, suicide, and similar instances of intentional intervention in the human life cycle.

The Human Life Act should provide a legal framework within which particular decisions can then be reached by the individuals concerned and their medical doctor.

The sanctity of human life makes it appropriate to deal with all these questions as variations on a single theme, even though the medical procedures and individual circumstances vary dramatically.

My hope is that we can move beyond the current level of debate and analysis of this subject by placing the abortion issue in this broader context of a full-field concern for human life.

---

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ADMINISTRATION

RESIGNATION OF FORMER MINISTER OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES—AWARDING OF GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Yesterday the Prime Minister characterized the offence of the Minister he fired as technical, the failure to report his true financial situation, and a matter that, if reported, would have been acceptable.

Today it seems that the Prime Minister has not told the Canadian people everything he should have. Will the Acting Prime Minister confirm that the fired Minister obtained substantial benefits from an individual who was awarded contracts and did work on a government project?

Was the undisclosed loan for approximately $250,000? What was the interest rate charged on that loan to the Minister, and how much interest did the Minister pay to the lender? Was the lender the individual whose companies did substantial work on Crown land development at the Port of Quebec?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite right. The Minister was dismissed for failing to comply with the disclosure as is required under the conflict of interest guidelines outlined by the Prime Minister, namely, the failure to disclose the existence of a personal loan. When it was confirmed that the loan was in existence, the Prime Minister took the necessary steps consistent with the spirit of the guidelines.

With respect to the individual with whom the former Minister made the loan, whether there are in fact any government contracts or whether he or his subsidiaries do any work for the Government, I am not completely aware, but that is a matter that is being looked into. Quite frankly, if the Hon. Member is suggesting that there is some sense of wrongdoing here—and I suspect that is what he is doing when raising the question—I would appreciate if he came forth with that information.

[Translation]

QUERY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER KNEW CERTAIN FACTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, yesterday when the Prime Minister himself talked about a minister who neglected to report a loan, was he aware of the facts that I mentioned in my previous question?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge, when the existence of the loan came to the attention of the Prime Minister, and the fact that it had not been disclosed and filed with the Deputy Registrar General in accordance with the guidelines, that indeed was a breach of the spirit of the Code. It was on that basis that the action was taken.

QUERY WHY MINISTER WAS DISMISSED

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Is the Government prepared to come clean with the House and the Canadian people, and tell us all the reasons why that Minister was fired, not just a superficial, if valid, reason?

• (1420)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what reasons the Hon. Member has in mind. If he has some pertinent or specific allegations or reasons, for instance, I wish he would bring them to the attention of the House. What I am telling the Hon. Member is the information we have and upon which the Prime Minister acted. If the Hon. Member has other information, I would certainly invite him to impart it to the House.

* * *

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

APPEARANCE OF FORMER COMMISSIONER OF ELECTIONS BEFORE COMMITTEE—REASON FOR NOT LAYING CHARGES AGAINST MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister told us to wait for Mr. Gorman's appearance before pursuing further explanations about the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Mr. Gorman has stated he was in the position to lay charges under the Criminal Code but that he did not want to do that because of the Minister's last election victory, and also because he was reluctant to use the Criminal Code to deal with an infraction under the Elections Act.

I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, because it certainly throws the ball back into his court, how he can still keep the Minister in his Cabinet in view of Mr. Gorman's evidence that he was in a position to lay charges against the Minister under the Criminal Code.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Gorman can say before the committee or outside the committee whatever he chooses to say. I suppose the Member can distort and put any interpretation he so wishes on that.

Mr. Gauthier: That is a lot of nonsense!

Mr. Mazankowski: The fact is, as the Prime Minister indicated yesterday, and as I indicated, today the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources wrote to the chairman of the committee requesting—requesting—that he appear before the committee so he can set the record straight and respond to some of the false allegations that are emanating from Members across the way.

[Translation]

QUERY WHY PRIME MINISTER IS HESITANT TO DISMISS MINISTER

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, lately the Government has asked us to direct our questions to Mr. Gorman, and that is what we have done. He told us he had all the information to lay criminal charges against the Minister. He said he did not do so because of the Minister's big majority in the last election, and especially because he was reluctant to use the Criminal Code in the case of a violation of the Canada Elections Act. I therefore want to ask the Prime Minister, now that the ball is in his court, why he was so reluctant to fire the Minister, considering the statements we heard by the Commissioner of Elections, to the effect that he had the requisite information to lay criminal charges against the Minister.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was at the committee, I was not, but my interpretation of the evidence presented by Mr. Gorman is that he did not find the Minister guilty of an offence under the Elections Act. In fact, I understand he said that, with the benefit of hindsight, it would have been a letter he should have never written.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: So, quite frankly, there are these kinds of bits and pieces of testimony that are picked up in the committee that are selectively chosen to form the basis of questions on the floor of the House. It makes it very difficult, not having had the benefit of being in the committee, to determine what in fact is going on there. This makes it very difficult, with due respect, Mr. Speaker, to respond to these questions when some Members have the advantage of being in the committee while others have not.

[Translation]

THE CABINET

MICHEL CÔTÉ AFFAIR—REQUEST THAT ALL DETAILS BE DISCLOSED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Prime Minister's press release concerning the resignation of the Hon. Member for Langelier was very brief. The Prime Minister did not mention the name of the person who made the loan. He did not mention the amount. He did not give a list of the contracts this person received from the federal Government. These questions are very important to Canadians and to the Members of this House. My question is just this: Can the Deputy Prime Minister guarantee that the Government will provide all this information and, more specifically, information concerning any contracts Mr. Laberge has received in the past from the federal Government?

• (1425)

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that I am not aware of all the details of any contractual arrangements or any work the individual in question may be conducting with the Government of Canada. That is being looked into. I will certainly report to the Hon. Member in due course.

REASON FOR DEMANDING MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister this. Considering that it was the Prime Minister who alluded to possible conflict of interest in the guidelines, and he said specifically that there was a neglect to report the loan in question, will the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House in response to this question, in a way that he did not to an earlier question, was the sole ground for demanding the resignation of the Hon. Member for Langelier that he had failed to report the loan? Or was there any other possible view about a potential conflict of interest of a different kind?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat to the Leader of the New Democratic Party, and for the benefit of the House, that what we are dealing with here is a breach of the Code and not necessarily a conflict of interest. It was on the basis that the personal loan that was arranged for by the former Minister was not disclosed, as is required under the Code.

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister knew about the information which he used to ask for the former Minister's resignation approximately two days ago, is the Deputy Prime Minister telling the House that in the intervening 48 hours the federal Government has not yet obtained information about all the contracts that the person who issued the loan had with the federal Government? The basic point is that the Government has not obtained that information in the past 48 hours. If it has not done so, which we find a little bizarre, when will the Government have this information?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think I said that the Government was in the process of compiling that. I repeat again, there is no evidence on the basis of information that we have that there was a conflict of interest.

If the Hon. Member has some suggestions of impropriety or wrongdoing I hope that he will raise them. I sense that his question is presented in the best of tenor, and I want to respond to it in the same manner.

[Translation]

MICHEL CÔTÉ AFFAIR—QUERY WHY GOVERNMENT REFUSED TO DISCLOSE ALL FACTS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Does he expect the public to believe that the Government has waited for the resignation of the Hon. Member for Langelier before investigating the facts? Mr. Speaker, this is incredible. I therefore ask the Deputy Prime Minister why he and the Prime Minister are refusing to give the House and the public all the facts on which they based their request for the resignation of the Hon. Member for Langelier. Why the urge to hide the whole truth about this matter?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there is no desire to conceal or hide the truth as the Hon. Member is suggesting. I want to remind him again that what we are dealing with here is a breach in the compliance with the guidelines rather than the assumption that there has been a bona fide breach in terms of conflict of interest.

On the basis of the failure of the former Minister to comply with the Code, by not disclosing the details of a personal loan, he was in violation of the Code. It was for that reason that he was dismissed.

• (1430)

GOVERNMENT INVESTIGATION—AWARDING OF CONTRACTS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin my supplementary question by asking the Deputy Prime Minister, if he and the Prime Minister are certain that we are dealing only with a technical breach of the guidelines and not a conflict of interest, why is it necessary for the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister to carry out further inquiries?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): This certainly suggests that there is some reason why they are not willing to tell the whole story about this matter to the Canadian public.

I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister specifically, will he tell us today whether or not René Laberge of Quebec, or any company in which he has an interest, received any government contracts, loans, or grants from this Government since it took office? Can he at least answer that specific question linked with this matter?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I want to be as fair as I can. The Hon. Member wants to know why we are carrying out inquiries, and then he asks a question as to whether in fact there was any business done by this individual. That is precisely why there is further examination in this case. That is what I responded to his seat mate, and that is precisely the response that I gave to the Leader of the New Democratic Party. We have undertaken to do that.

* * *

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

EVIDENCE GIVEN BY FORMER COMMISSIONER OF ELECTIONS—REASON FOR NOT LAYING CHARGES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. All Members of Parliament, and I suspect that all Canadians were flabbergasted when Mr. Gorman indicated in testimony yesterday that he made his recommendations regarding the alleged violations of the Canada Elections Act and the Criminal Code because the Minister had such a huge majority. It seems that if someone has a huge majority, and in that sense is very popular, no charges would be laid; but if someone was narrowly a winner, charges would be laid.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister do the right thing and indicate on behalf of the Government, and on behalf of the Parliament of Canada, that this type of decision is wrong, that this type of justice is inappropriate, and that the Government of Canada will not stand for any type of decision of this nature?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I thought that that is what the work of the committee was seized with. This individual is an officer of Parliament, and if he has conducted his mandate—

Mr. Gauthier: You are wrong.

Mr. Mazankowski: I'm sorry, he was.

If in fact he did conduct the mandate of his office in an improper manner, in the opinion of the committee, or if he exercised bad judgment or used his discretionary powers in too broad or in an improper fashion, I think that that is clearly something for the committee to report on. Perhaps in the course of that, there may very well be ways and means in which the legislation could be changed to ensure that this type of thing does not happen again.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): I think it is very important that the Deputy Prime Minister send a very clear signal right at this moment that, in no way, is this type of justice tolerated. Surely the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada does not have to wait for a committee to examine this type of statement, that if you win by a huge majority you can presumably break the law.

I wish the Deputy Prime Minister to stand up now and state that this type of decision and this type of justice are unacceptable and will not happen again.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): I may very well share the views of the Hon. Member. But the fact of the matter is that this individual was authorized to carry out a job as sanctioned by the Parliament of Canada. I certainly would not want to usurp the role of individual Members of Parliament who may want to render a decision or a judgment on the basis on which Mr. Gorman conducted his stewardship.

* * *

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

SUPERVISION OF PAROLEES IN METROPOLITAN TORONTO—REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question involves another scandal, this one involving the negligence of the Solicitor General. Four months ago on October 2, 1987, here in the House I brought to the attention of the Government a series of leaked memos on parole supervision in Toronto which described the system as being at the breaking point. I warned the Government that the situation was a powderkeg ready to explode and that the safety of Metro residents was at risk.

The response of the Government was that "The situation is well in hand". The situation was not well in hand. A young woman was murdered in Metropolitan Toronto last week. My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is the following.

In view of the gross negligence of the Solicitor General, will he immediately ask for his resignation?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not aware of any gross negligence on my part or those in my Department. I believe that the Hon. Member is referring to the Stanton case in Toronto. I am certainly relieved that he has been recaptured and is back in custody.

As Hon. Members will know, there is an ongoing police investigation into this matter, charges have been laid, and I cannot comment on that aspect of it as it is before the courts.

With respect to what responsibility, if any, Correctional Services and the National Parole Board have, as the Hon. Member well knows, I have directed that there be an inquiry into the circumstances surrounding that under Section 12 of the Penitentiary Act. That has already commenced.

RELEASE OF CONVICTED RAPIST ON UNESCORTED PASS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): On October 2, 1987, I brought to the attention of the Government the memorandum from Mr. Max Stienburg, who is a senior member of the National Parole Board, to Mr. Olé Ingstrup, the Chairman of the National Parole Board. In the first paragraph he states:

> It is becoming very apparent that major problems exist in the area of supervision in Toronto and vicinity. We continue to lose jurisdiction in cases . . . due to late reporting to see evidence of very shoddy work and to see signs of impending major problems.

The Solicitor General was warned about the serious nature of parole supervision in Metropolitan Toronto. Can he explain to the House how it was possible for a convicted rapist to be given an unescorted pass from a federal penitentiary, and how it was possible for that individual to escape from a half-way house, and for it to take the half-way house eight hours to notify the police?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I have already advised the Hon. Member, there is a police investigation under way. Therefore, I cannot comment on that.

I can tell the Hon. Member that there will be a public inquest into this matter, and that I have already initiated an inquiry under Section 12 of the Penitentiary Act into all aspects surrounding the involvement of the National Parole Board, Correctional Services of Canada, and the half-way house itself, in this particular incident.

* * *

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

EFFECT OF DECISION ON WINE INDUSTRY AND GRAPE GROWERS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for International Trade. The Minister knows the impact of the free trade agreement with the United States upon the grape and wine industry of both the Niagara region and the Okanagan Valley. More serious than that, and of greater concern, is the recent GATT trade panel report. This report is under discussion in Brussels.

Would the Minister be good enough to advise the House of the status of those discussions that are going on, or have been going on, whether there is any opportunity for a compromise agreement, and what might be done as an alternative to save the Niagara region and the fruit growing belts of Canada?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for St. Catharines for his question and for his efforts on behalf of the wine industry and the grape growers in his region.

I do want to point out that this is a provincial matter in the sense that the procedures in question are provincial pricing practices. I want to assure the Member that every effort was made by our federal negotiators to secure as long a period of adjustment as possible. Unfortunately, in these negotiations with the European Community the Europeans were not prepared to take into account the need to have a satisfactory period of adjustment time, and they set unacceptable conditions as a basis for continuing to negotiate.

We are involving the provinces in this discussion. We are involving the industry. We will continue to do so while we evolve our response to the GATT panel decision.

* * *

[Translation]

THE CABINET

MICHEL CÔTÉ AFFAIR—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF ALLEGED LAND SALES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Mr. Marc Lefrançois, Conservative Party organizer, told the media this morning that Mr. René Laberge purchased property from the federal Government for $1,008,000 about two years or eighteen months ago. Could the Deputy Prime Minister confirm to the House today that Mr. Laberge purchased federal land from the federal Government, and could he release all the details of this transaction? Finally, Mr. Speaker, could he give the House the assurance that the usual bidding process was followed? Mr. Speaker, it is time to be open and honest with the Canadian people.

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am able to confirm that Mr. Laberge had an interest in a company or companies which has purchased lands from the federal Government, in particular in the old Port of Quebec.

• (1440)

I do not have all the particulars today. I can confirm that the purchases were further to calls for proposals which were done according to a tendering system. There was an adjudication process involving not only directors of the Old Port of Quebec but also representatives from the community, universities, and business, to determine who should be awarded the contracts.

I do not have all those particulars, but I can confirm, in general, that the general thrust is that Mr. Laberge was involved.

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS—REQUEST FOR FULL DISCLOSURE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, in light of that, I go back to the Deputy Prime Minister and ask him whether or not the inquiry that he is talking about will be broad enough in scope to deal not only with some contracts that Mr. Laberge may or may not have had with the federal Government but also details about the land. Will he make public what Mr. Laberge paid for the land? Will he also make public all details that are relevant vis-à-vis this particular transaction?

Can he say to the House whether or not the inquiry is an inquiry of the Government internally, or whether or not the police are also doing an investigation?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, once again may I simply reiterate that there is no evidence of a conflict of interest here. There are allegations and suggestions being raised such as the one the Hon. Member raised earlier.

I indicated to the House earlier that we were compiling any relationship the individual may have, or his subsidiaries may have, with the Government in terms of doing business. As soon as that is available, I will certainly provide it to the House.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST CODE—ACCEPTANCE OF GIFTS OR OTHER BENEFITS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Prime Minister said in the House that the Minister of Supply and Services was kicked out of Cabinet because of a technical breach, namely, the failure to report a loan.

In view of the fact that Section 33 of the Conflict of Interest Code, tabled in the House by the Prime Minister on September 9, 1985, says that public office holders in their judgment and performance of duties shall decline gifts or other benefits, could the Deputy Prime Minister admit to the House that it is not only the failure to report the loan that is at stake here? It is the fact that the benefit or the loan in question was accepted at all. It is far more than a technical breach.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think that that has been adequately answered by the Prime Minister. I really have nothing further to add other than the fact that I should point out to the House that on January 29, 1987, as the Prime Minister indicated, I instructed the Associate Secretary to Cabinet to review with each Minister the arrangements made to ensure his or her compliance with the Conflict of Interest Code. As a result, a very detailed questionnaire, some 19 pages in length, was submitted to each Minister. It was on that basis that the Associate Secretary to Cabinet did a complete and thorough review and analysis of all cabinet Ministers.

Unfortunately, in this particular case there was a breach of the Code, which we discovered this week and on which the Prime Minister acted immediately.

Mr. Boudria: The Deputy Prime Minister still has not told us what section of the Code has been breached.

[Translation]

CONFLICTS OF INTEREST—PRIME MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Deputy Prime Minister.

Yesterday, the Prime Minister claimed he found it very difficult to get his Ministers to observe the code of conduct on conflicts of interests, because, as he said, he had inherited this code from the previous Liberal Government.

Considering the fact that the present code was tabled in the House by the present Prime Minister on September 9, 1985, why doesn't the Prime Minister take the responsibility instead of trying to sell Canadians a bill of goods? And when is the Prime Minister finally going to stop blaming others for the Conservative Government's improprieties?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I do not think any Government has to take any lecture from this particular individual. The fact of the matter is that the guidelines which are in existence today are much, much more stringent than those of any other previous administration, any previous Government. The fact of the matter is that the guidelines are working.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: We have proof positive as a result of what happened this week.

MEDICAL CARE

MANAGEMENT OF HEALTH CARE SERVICES—EFFECT OF CANADA—UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I am wondering how the implementation of the free trade agreement with regard to the specific area of health care facilities management services affects the already widely diverse method of health care management found throughout the country.

Specifically, could it have any effect on the principle of universal access to health care services?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member, this matter has come up before in respect of the discussion on the free trade agreement. Hon. Members of the House will recall that I very specifically referred to hospital management at that time, and I am referring to it again.

Private sector management of health facilities is not inconsistent with the medicare tradition in Canada. It has been supported and promoted by various provinces to various degrees. The Canada Health Act, while requiring provincial plans to be administered on a non-profit basis, does not close the door on private sector management.

The free trade agreement, therefore, is simply a recognition of the current way of doing things in Canada and has not changed anything from present practice or the future.

* * *

[Translation]

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PRESENCE OF DIOXINS IN MIRAMICHI RIVER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment and concerns the level of dioxins in the Miramichi River near the Domtar plant. Is the Minister aware that in the past 20 years, studies have shown levels of very toxic dioxins in the water near Domtar? What is his Department doing to protect the environment, public health and the fisheries industry in this area?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have been working with the company, hand in glove, on a clean-up. I am advised that Domtar itself is launching a major excavation and that a clean-up is under way with the full backing of the Government of Canada through my Department.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE ADEQUATE MEASURES WILL BE TAKEN

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly welcome to hear that a clean-up is under way. Could we have some more details about it? Can we understand what his responsibility is and what checking there has been with Agriculture, for example, with the possible presence of dioxins in cattle in the area and with the evidence of dioxin in fish?

Can we be assured that comprehensive attention will be paid to the matter and that the clean-up will be adequate for all these problems?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, if I had for my own answer alone the remaining time in Question Period, I probably could not do justice to all the questions that were asked. However, suffice it to say, the plant in question has been closed. A clean-up is under way. The Government of Canada is providing every technical back-up possible. We are monitoring it as an issue of first importance. As for the detailed information the Hon. Member has requested, I would be glad to provide it to her either directly or in response to any question she might wish to put on the Order Paper.

* * *

THE ADMINISTRATION

FORMER MINISTER OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES—PERSONAL LOAN—REQUEST FOR DETAILS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. I say to him that there is absolutely nothing wrong with the guidelines. It is the people who administer the guidelines, that is the problem with this particular Government.

Yesterday there was no information forthcoming from the Prime Minister regarding the details surrounding the firing of his Minister. Today, on the floor of the House, the Deputy Prime Minister was not prepared to give any details and in fact only said "we are compiling information", only to have, 15 minutes later, the Minister of Public Works admit, on the floor of the House of Commons, the relationship of Mr. Laberge and the Government of Canada in certain contracts.

I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, on the basis of honesty and integrity, will he not now tell the House the amount of the loan, the interest rate which was charged, and all details which are in his possession in the aide-mémoire which lies in his briefing book?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member asks a specific question he will get a specific answer, as did the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville. It was a very specific question and he got an answer.

• (1450)

I can confirm that the loan is in the order of $250,000. The identity of the lender is Adelard Laberge Incorporated and I understand the owner is René Laberge. I am not aware of the interest rate. I do not have that information available at this time.

INTEREST RATE CHARGED ON LOAN

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of knowledge and the impact which it has on the whole discussion of this issue, will the Deputy Prime Minister now give an undertaking to the House that no later than tomorrow at Question Period he will have, for the benefit of all Members, the precise information as it relates to the interest on this particular loan?

In addition to that, will he not now give a clear and unequivocal undertaking that he will stand in his place and give a detailed description of all of the information which is in his possession and the possession of the Prime Minister relating to the dismissal of the former Minister of Supply and Services? Will he not now do that?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to conceal any information on the facts that I have at my disposal. That which I am giving to the Hon. Member today is the information which was provided to me. I have absolutely no desire to withhold such information, as he would suggest.

I will provide any pertinent information as it becomes available to me. I want to assure the Hon. Member that I would not want to give him an undertaking and not be able to fulfil that undertaking. As I have indicated to other Members of the House, as the information becomes available I will be prepared to provide it.

* * *

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MEMORANDUM ON ACCELERATING LAY-OFFS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister as well. He knows that Mr. Fletcher, senior Vice-President of CN, has indicated through a memo that he wants lay-offs to continue at an accelerated rate because during a federal election that may not be possible.

The Deputy Prime Minister knows that as a result of Bill C-85 which was passed six months ago workers cannot negotiate job security or anything else. Since there is no arbitration ongoing even now after almost six months, how will those workers be able to protect their jobs in light of the CN memo?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, as I have said before, Canadian National is a Crown corporation that competes on the open market, and the Government cannot interfere with its corporate plan. As a member of this Government, I regret that a rationalization program is having an impact on the workers themselves, but the Government as such cannot intervene.

[English]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PROTECT JOBS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It does not relate only to transport but to the back-to-work legislation introduced by the Minister of Labour and passed by this House.

That legislation prevents the shop craft workers from exercising their right to strike. They cannot get an arbitration at the present time because the other group is in arbitration. They are losing their jobs because of legislation passed by this House. What is the Government going to do to protect those workers?

Mr. Joe Price (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I want to inform the Hon. Member that the arbitration proceedings are proceeding quite well with respect to these unions. Among the outstanding issues, the issue of job security is front and foremost in the arbitration proceedings. Three of the six issues which were put before the arbitrator have now been resolved by an interim award made by the arbitrator. The three outstanding issues will indeed be resolved in very short order as a result of the excellent arbitration process.

* * *

THE ADMINISTRATION

ALLEGED ROLE OF FORMER MINISTER IN FUNDRAISING ACTIVITY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. According to an article in today's Ottawa Citizen the former Minister of Supply and Services was also the chief fundraiser for the Conservative Party in the Province of Quebec. Notwithstanding the circumstances surrounding the Minister's departure from Cabinet in the last two days, does the Deputy Prime Minister deem it appropriate that a Minister of Supply and Services in charge of administering government contracts would also be given the responsibility by the Prime Minister of being the chief fundraiser in the Province of Quebec?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, says that the allegation is totally false.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's question has been answered in a way. I must advise that the Hon. Member, who is a skillful debater in this place, has probably asked a question which is, on strict interpretation of procedure, out of order. Before the Hon. Member rises to ask a supplementary question I would ask him to keep that in mind. The question seems to be directed at an area of activity outside the responsibilities of the Ministry.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Member is trying to understand the way in which the ethical standards of the Government are being enforced. We are trying to determine how the Government determines a benefit.

CIRCUMSTANCES SURROUNDING MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, how is it that the Deputy Prime Minister has no information at the beginning of the day and the Minister of Public Works has a great deal of information in the middle of the day? The Minister subsequently told the House that "if you ask specific questions you will get specific answers".

What kind of cat and mouse game is he playing with the people of Canada and the Parliament of Canada? When will he make a full statement disclosing all the information the Government has with respect to all of the circumstances surrounding the resignation of the former Minister of Supply and Services and, we are told, the chief fundraiser for the Conservative Party in the Province of Quebec?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have already responded to that question.

* * *

[Translation]

IMMIGRATION

REUNIFICATION OF FAMILIES—REQUEST THAT MINISTER KEEP HIS PROMISE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Immigration). Considering that on August 11, 1987, the Minister of Employment and Immigration promised that single sons and daughters, whatever their age, would be able to immigrate to Canada as relatives of permanent residents, when does the Minister intend to keep his promise and allow Canadian citizens to reunite their families?

[English]

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I thought for a moment that the Member was rising to compliment us on the 148,000 immigrants and refugees this country welcomed in 1987.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Weiner: That is 60,000 more than the 88,000 that were admitted by the previous administration. That is our commitment to keep increasing immigration levels to this country and to continue to allow immigration to contribute to the economic, social, and humanitarian growth of the country.

BACKLOG IN PROCESSING APPLICATIONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question concerned the Minister's promise made last summer for which he says the regulations are not yet ready. My supplementary question concerns the fact that normal immigration applications have so surged that there is a heavy backlog, not in refugee matters, but in immigration matters.

Therefore, when will the Minister apply sufficient staff to carry out the obligations he already has and the promises he has made to the people of Canada?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, when we came forward with the planning figures for 1987—which we indicated, were targets and not quotas—Members of the Opposition said we would not meet those figures. Well, we did, and we will meet the planning figures again this year.

There is a productivity review under way by a small internal committee comprised of ourselves, the Solicitor General, Health and Welfare, and External Affairs, to learn whether there are more expeditious ways of processing. We are improving our procedures in terms of advancing new technology. An example is the new technology in Hong Kong where we have quadrupled the number of visas we are issuing on a monthly basis.

• (1500)

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question of Question Period. I would ask the Hon. Member for York West to make his preamble short.

* * *

REFUGEES

PRESCREENING OF CLAIMANTS—GOVERNMENT MEMORANDUM

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of State for Immigration and it relates to Bill C-55. The Minister said, as reported at page 7330 of Hansard of June 18, the following:

> Every claimant will have an opportunity to argue why his or her claim should be heard. It is not correct that the initial hearing before an immigration adjudicator and a refugee board member is a prescreening.

Business of the House

Yesterday, The Globe and Mail quoted a confidential government memorandum which unfortunately outlines the true government agenda which is to use prescreening to eliminate nearly two-thirds of all applicants.

How can the Minister justify earlier statements to the House and to Canadians that there will be no prescreening and at the same time use a secret strategy that is based on prescreening and prejudging? Why is the Minister using a systematic prejudging approach rather than allowing the system to be independent, fair and honest?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is certainly not quoting from a secret document. The letter he has referred to was sent to officials around the country. It was one hypothesis. There are some planning and resources that have to take place. It is hypothetical because we do not know what the flow of claimants may be in the future.

We said clearly that we will protect those who do not have a safe haven. There will of course be eligibility criteria that might render some ineligible for access to the system, but of course there will be subjective criteria, and an individual, on a credibility basis, will be given access to the board.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ESTABLISH NEW PROCESS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, what the Minister is saying now and what he said before in public are not the same as what that memorandum is suggesting. He should be ashamed of employing that double standard.

Given that the Government, in this memorandum, is clearly planning to prejudge, eliminate and discourage claimants without the facts, will he not reassure the House that he will abandon this Machiavellian strategy and will establish a process that can fairly and objectively judge claimants without him trying to be both judge and jury?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that we brought forward a process that will identify and welcome real refugees in an expeditious fashion. Today we do not have such a process. With the complicated, unfunctioning system the Hon. Member's Party left to us, individuals do not know when they can be protected in our system.

My advice is that at least 70 per cent of those people coming now are making what might be inappropriate refugee claims. They may be very good immigrants, but they should be applying in that stream. In a recent survey we took, 80 per cent came from a country which was not the country from which they fled out of fear of persecution.

Canada alone cannot solve the refugee problems of the world. We will do it in concert with our allies. Yes, we will return some to the safe havens they have had, to the homes in which they have lived or to the places from where they could have sought protection.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of State to give a statement of the government business for the coming week.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I will try to outline the agenda for government business from now through until next Friday in view of the fact that we will then be breaking for a week.

We intend today to continue with Bill C-105, the Railway Safety Act. If Bill C-105 is not completed, we will call it again on Friday. Once that is completed, we will continue debate on Bill C-54.

On Monday, February 8, we will commence debate on Bill C-72, the Official Languages Act. We will debate that Monday and probably Tuesday.

As Hon. Members know, Wednesday is the day of the Budget presentation by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) which will take place at 4.30 in the afternoon. After the presentation by the Minister of Finance, we will on Thursday deal with what is normally known as the Opposition's reply to the Budget and have a full debate on Thursday on the Budget.

What we will do on Friday has not been determined at this time. We may do some housekeeping legislation at that time.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question also relates to House business. Yesterday in Question Period, it was brought up that the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure was looking into the Canada Elections Act with regard to the Hon. Member for Frontenac (Mr. Masse). In response to many questions, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) said that one route for resolving the impasse was to have a House order.

The Minister of State recognizes that the only reason the committee is conducting its business at the present time is that the majority of the committee overruled the Chair and decided to proceed despite the Chair's ruling. That is not a great way to do business. I wonder if the Government would reaffirm its commitment to allow the committee to call all witnesses and to ask all necessary questions on this matter and confirm that there will be a House order forthcoming to allow that to happen.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I have here the committee reference. Just to refresh the memory of Hon. Members, after the Speaker's ruling with respect to this matter on a question of privilege last week, we indicated that the Government was content to have this matter discussed in committee and that there were two ways of doing this, either by a House reference or by having the committee decide on its own just exactly what it wanted to do. We felt, quite frankly, that we would be better advised to allow the committee to form its own reference, which it did.

The committee is now in the process of examining witnesses in the process of deciding whether or not it ought to proceed under the Elections Act with a formal charge. It is my understanding that the committee has seen Mr. Hamel and Mr. Gorman and that their testimony will continue at 3.30 this afternoon.

The point made yesterday was a question of the Minister of Energy (Mr. Masse) attending committee to answer questions put by the committee. I have not read the committee transcripts, I must admit. I am getting my information from the print and electronic media. As I understand it, there was some question about whether or not the committee could compel the Minister of Energy to attend. It is my understanding also, and I have seen a copy of the letter, that the Minister of Energy has cleared up that problem and has offered to attend in order that he may give testimony. That will happen, I believe, some time next week.

I think the House should let the committee do its work and follow its reference. I believe we are meeting all of the tests required. The Minister will be there of his own volition, and that is the best way to get a witness to answer any questions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would like to remind Hon. Members that Question Period has ended. We are on the Business of the House question.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, we are on Business of the House, certainly, because we are discussing a House order to determine the terms of reference of the committee. The Minister cannot hide behind the fact that the committee is now operating under very narrow terms of reference.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have just said that Question Period had ended.

[Translation]

If the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) has a question about the business of the House as it relates to the Government's plans, we could perhaps dispense with further comment, except for the specific question to the Hon. Minister about the business of the House.

The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques.

[English]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, let me put a straight question by asking whether the Minister is now ready to cause a motion to come before the House to determine the terms of reference to be used by the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure to look into the election expenses in a proper way. That would allow for all persons concerned to be summoned and for all documents to be obtained so that the committee would not have to operate in the narrow fashion in which it is forced to operate at this time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has a question on House business. If the Minister of State would like to comment, of course he may do so, but I think it would probably be better if there were to be a House Leaders' meeting to settle this matter. It would be easier, I believe.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to conclude this discussion by indicating that there have been discussions between the House Leaders. I simply want to seek clarification from my hon. friend.

• (1510)

The discussions were to the effect that we would see how things proceeded with the committee on the assumption that a complete and thorough investigation would occur. There was the caveat that if there were problems, for whatever reason, I believe the Deputy House Leader indicated it would be his intention to consider seriously a reference from the House to clarify the terms of reference in order to allow a thorough investigation to occur.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am reluctant to negotiate on the floor of the House on something like this. We made it very clear that we want the procedures of the commissioner in investigating these charges to be fully investigated by the committee. We have no intention of standing in the way of a thorough examination of the procedure involved in investigating charges. I want that to be very clear to everyone.

The committee is seized of this issue. It is not House business. However, I want to make it perfectly clear that the Minister has agreed to go and answer questions. That clears up that problem. The Government has done everything possible to make sure that the committee can do its work.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, last week the Government projected Bill C-33 on the Order Paper as a substitute Bill. I think it was on Monday or Tuesday last. We heard thereafter that the Government was not going to present that Bill because it wanted to amend it. We know that the scope of the Bill does not allow for amendments. Can the Minister tell the House whether the Government is going to bring in a new Bill? That is, is it going to withdraw Bill C-33 as it stands now and amend it as it wishes, and can we expect the Government to bring this legislation forward soon or not?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-33 is on the Order Paper. I have advised my hon. friend of the government business from now until the break. If my hon. friend wishes to ask a question in Question Period about Bill C-33, we are open for answers.

Mr. Gauthier: I will accept that invitation.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

RAILWAY SAFETY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-105, an Act to ensure the safe operation of railways and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Darryl L. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, in resuming debate on Bill C-105 I would like to say, having listened to the debate that has taken place, that the important thing to note is that we are in complete agreement. It is an essential Bill and important to Canadians. In the debate so far much information has been given, and in my brief remarks I want to touch on two main areas of the Bill because I believe all Canadians should know what is included in the Bill.

With respect to railway construction, Part I of the Bill establishes the Government's powers and procedures related to construction and alteration of railway works. Under this part of the Bill the Governor in Council will have unlimited power to make regulations which establish standards for these activities. Equally important is the fact that through this provision the Bill makes it possible for the Government to select which construction and alteration projects it wishes to evaluate in detail. As a result, for the first time the regulator can focus on projects which may affect the safety of railway operations or may cause concern to the general public. There will no longer be a requirement to process a multitude of project approvals which have little or no bearing on safety.

The Governor in Council will also be empowered to designate kinds of railways works which cannot be undertaken without the proposer, in most cases a railway company, giving prior notice to persons who may be affected. The Bill makes full provision for any objections to be considered before a decision is made to allow the work to proceed. By putting the onus on the railways to notify potential objectors, the Bill removes the burden of ensuring public input which is now placed on Government by the existing Railway Act.

Bill C-105 creates three categories of construction and alteration projects for regulatory purposes. I would like to comment on those. First, projects which must have ministerial approval before work can begin. Second, works which may be undertaken without ministerial approval provided no objections are received but for which an affidavit certifying the safety of the completed work must be filed with the Minister. Third, projects which may be carried out without reference to the regulator.

The first category of works includes projects for which engineering standards have been prescribed and which depart from those standards or those which meet standards but are objected to by other persons on the grounds of safety. Section 10 of the Bill sets forth the procedures to be followed in seeking authority to proceed. The Minister may seek advice, hold an inquiry into the proposal, and must consider legitimate objections before rendering a decision. The bottom line is that the Minister has the necessary power to deny authority to proceed if he or she, as the case may be, is not satisfied with the proposal on the grounds of safety.

The Minister will not be placed in the position of ordering the proposing party to proceed with the project or to carry out the project in a certain manner. It is up to the proposer and, as usual, the railway company concerned, to come up with a plan that satisfies the Minister's requirements. If a railway company uses the rejection of a proposed work by the Minister as a reason to abandon the service, appeals for restoration or service may be made to the National Transportation Agency on the grounds of public convenience.

I should add, with the introduction in this House of Bill C-18 and Bill C-19, steps the Government has taken we are continuing with Bill C-105 to complete and complement the work already done.

Members should note that the Bill creates an assessment period of 60 days within which the Minister must advise the proposing party that their request is approved, rejected, or that more information is required. The Minister may extend the assessment period indicating the length of time of the extension and the reasons for doing so. Also, the 60-day period excludes any time taken for an inquiry. In this manner the Bill establishes a normal term for rendering decisions but provides flexibility in the event that the proposal is particularly complex or controversial.

For the person proposing the project there is assurance in the legislation that applications will be handled expeditiously and that the time limit for decisions will be known. This has been the subject of considerable criticism in the past with proponents often facing difficulties in scheduling work in the absence of any indication of anything to the contrary. The new procedures may place pressure on the regulator to make decisions quickly, but this will provide a more equitable system for everyone concerned.

As regards the Railway Safety Act, for any project requiring ministerial approval, and for certain other types designated in the regulations, the completed works may not be placed in operation until an affidavit has been filed with the Minister. This affidavit must testify to the safety of the works and be signed by the professional engineer in charge of the works. This provision requires the proposing party to confirm in writing that works have been carried out in accordance with applicable standards or are otherwise consistent with safe railway operations. The onus to operate safely is placed squarely on the management of the railway companies or any person who undertakes railway work.

• (1520)

There remains a third category of work which may be carried out without reference to the regulator. These would include minor construction or alteration projects which do not have a significant impact on railway safety and which do not have potential to raise objections from other persons on the grounds of safety. The objective in creating these options is to eliminate the processing of routine applications for approval which do not yield benefits in terms of improved safety.

However, Members should note that even in the case of this third category of projects which can be carried out without reference to the regulator, there remain full powers of inspection under the Bill and the power for either the railway safety inspector or the Minister to stop or put restrictions on any operation if a threat to railway safety should rise.

Furthermore, the Minister would have powers to order modification or removal of railway work which is not in accordance with the requirements of the Act.

In providing for the establishment of standards, the Bill states that these may include physical specifications or they may be performance related. This reference to performance standards is intended to encourage a departure from the use of physical specifications, which are usually highly detailed and tend to lock the regulator and the industry into a particular technology. Standards based on performance establish what the railways must achieve in the interest of safety, but do not dictate the method for achieving it.

For example, the existing standards for train brakes are expressed in detailed specifications which are based on the conventional air brake system. In fact, the concern of the safety regulator should only be that a braking system is provided that is capable of stopping moving trains within certain limits. Whether that system be based on air brakes, electric brakes or any other means of stopping a train, depends only on whether the technology does the job safely. The railway safety Bill encourages the regulator to accommodate technological changes which enhance safety without having to change regulations.

Part II of the Bill gives the Governor in Council broad powers to make regulations governing the operation and maintenance of railways. These powers include controls over the safety of railway equipment and the standards to be met by persons employed in positions designated as being critical to the safety of railway operations.

Under these regulations, the Minister will have control over the essential area of operating rules. These rules, which control every facet of the safe operation of railways, include how trains are dispatched and operated by train crews, how equipment is designed and manufactured, and how equipment and track is inspected and maintained.

Members are aware that railway accidents are sometimes ascribed to human error. These almost always involve a violation of the rules which will be covered under Part II of the Railway Safety Act. By simplifying the procedures and removing these rules from the requirements of the Statutory Instruments Act, this Bill will enable the Minister to implement changes rapidly in the interest of safety and to keep the rules up to date. This was a point of great concern to Mr. Justice Foisy after the collision at Hinton. I am pleased to note on behalf of the Government and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) that Bill C-105 will make it possible for the Minister to respond to Mr. Justice Foisy's recommendation.

The railway safety bill provides flexibility in rule making so that the Minister can tailor rules to special requirements of individual companies. This is particularly desirable in the case of the smaller railways under federal jurisdiction which have no need for many of the rules which have been written with the large main line railways in mind. Nevertheless, the Bill seeks retention of uniformity in rules wherever it is reasonable and practical to do so.

Bill C-105 also allows exemptions from regulations to be granted for specific reasons. This flexible approach will be of particular benefit for carrying out research projects of short duration. The exemption process also could be used to relax certain rules to allow a demonstration of new technology, such as a trial operation of a new rail bus. These exemptions would only be permitted under controlled circumstances which would ensure that there is no threat to safety.

I had the honour of serving as Vice-Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and having worked with the Minister of Transport and the Minister of State. I have had the pleasure of working with the transport critics of the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party and listened with great interest to their debate on Bill C-105 this morning. New Members of Parliament sometimes lack experience and can learn from those more experienced Members. Bill C-18 and Bill C-19 are a reflection of the complexity of our country.

[Translation]

—whether we come from Quebec or from out West, the key to promoting regional development, and this is important, is transportation. For years, we have seen that in some areas, there is a definite lack of transportation. Whether we are looking at a Crown corporation—whether it calls itself CN or VIA Rail—or at a private company, and in the past we had CP and I think we still do, but the important thing is that we must keep our priorities straight for developing this country from east to west, and we should be sensible, both about safety and the way we spend the funds available.

Mr. Speaker, being on the Transport Committee, I had an opportunity to make the trip between Paris and Lyon on the TGV super express.

Mr. Speaker, it was fantastic. But don't misunderstand me. I am not asking for a train like this for the regions, whether we are talking about the Gaspé, Bonaventure or the Magdelen Islands. We don't need one, but we do need transportation across this country because that is the secret of our success, and it is vital for investment.

• (1530)

[English]

There were a couple of points made in the debate which raised questions in my mind but we must realize that transportation is not political. It is an essential service for Canadians. For myself as a Member of Parliament, the transportation system between Charlo, New Brunswick, and the Gaspé is important because there is not a direct line from Ottawa to my office in Carleton. The fact that I do not have direct transportation is not important. What is important is to increase communication and investment in our areas.

We always hear doom and gloom from the Opposition Parties. But there are no politics, as I said, in transportation. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and all members of the Conservative Party will listen to recommendations made by the Opposition with respect to the Railway Safety Act. There is no Conservative, no Liberal, no New Democrat, in fact no one in this country who would want another accident such as the one in Hinton, Alberta. Politics must be put aside. We must hone the Bill. We must respect the recommendations of Mr. Foisy, and we must give the Minister flexibility in the Bill, under special circumstances, so that he can react and react directly. We cannot produce legislation that will cover every possible accident, which is why the Minister will have these powers.

I cannot respond to all the points made in the time I have left. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) this morning mentioned whistleblowers and unions. He talked about fines, accidents and U.S. deregulation. I believe Hon. Members should know that with deregulation in the United States the accident rate went down, according to the figures I have here, for the year 1984. The percentage of accidents has gone down as it concerns railway activities in the United States. In closing I will say I am proud that we have a new Railway Safety Act in Canada for freight and passengers and I am sure that with the co-operation of all Parties, Bill C-105 will be developed into a great Bill.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my hon. friend and colleague on the committee if he would care to express his views as to the adequacy of the Bill in terms of the amount of representation on the consultative committee, which is, one from the union, five from the Government and five from the railroads. Does the Hon. Member consider that fair? Also, would he agree that employee representation should be substantially increased and made at least equal to that of the railroads? Will the Hon. Member also tell us his views as to the disproportionate size of the penalties; $10,000 for an individual and $50,000 for a large railroad? Does he consider that a fair proportion?

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): I thank my hon. colleague for the question. I am sure he realizes that in terms of railway safety we must ensure that we have equal representation, whatever that might imply. Railway safety, be it on the union side, the railway side or with respect to public input, is very important, and I am sure the Minister has taken that into account in drafting the Bill. At the same time I believe it is very important to note that during the travels of the Standing Committee on Transport to Europe, we found there is more and more an ongoing process there where the employees become part shareholders in the company, which I think would be a very interesting proposition to look at. I do not presume to go beyond what the Minister might say at a later date. Safety cannot be regulated in a sense that we will work 10 per cent of our time on safety and the rest of the time will be spent on other parts of productivity. I believe it is very important that the consultative body be there and be representative of all Canadians who use the service, be it cargo or passenger.

I would like to say at the same time that because of my interest in transport I had the opportunity, as did the Hon. Member for Regina West, to work for several years in the railway business. My father worked for CN for 33 years. So we take this subject very seriously. We want an ideal system for all Canadians so that we can all be happy with our transportation system.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Act to ensure the safe operation of our railways is one which commands attention and is of an importance that goes well beyond the title of this Bill. What struck me in reading the first few pages of the Bill is the fact that the Bill does not contain a very important aspect that surrounds the operations of a railway, that is, the environment through which it travels. On not one page was I able to find a reference to the environment, any words with respect to our natural resources, nor any words to show that in drafting the Bill the Government was not only sensitive but receptive to environmental issues.

The Bill makes reference in Clause 5 to compliance with the Navigable Waters Protection Act almost as an afterthought or as an add on. For that one can be grateful. However, as we examine the Bill, over some 75 pages, we have to come to the conclusion that the environment has been forgotten. One wonders where the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) was when this Bill was drafted. Was he consulted? Did he ask to be drawn into the discussions to ensure that environmental concerns were included in Bill C-105? For that matter, where were Members of the Progressive Conservative Party from British Columbia when this Bill was drafted?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think it is absolutely offensive that on the first day we are debating railway safety legislation there is not a person, not a body, not a soul, not even a mirror image on the Government side. There is a completely empty panorama there. I call for a quorum count. It is disgusting.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We shall proceed with a count of Members present.

And the count having been taken:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We do not have a quorum. Ring the bells.

• (1540)

[English]

And the bells having rung:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We do now have a quorum. The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) has the floor on debate.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the powers of the bell are remarkable. Indeed, we are glad to resume this debate.

Mr. Blaikie: It is such a good speech, we want others to hear it.

Mr. Caccia: I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Winnipeg— Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) for ensuring that there be an audience on this intervention on the environment.

The fact is that in Bill C-105 the environment has been forgotten. One can legitimately ask in the Chamber as to where the Minister of the Environment was when this Bill was drafted, considering the fact that railway transportation does affect the environment in a number of ways. One can also ask where the British Columbia members of the Tory caucus were when this Bill was drafted, considering the experience that they had directly in British Columbia when it came to the twin-tracking of Canadian National in the Fraser River Valley. As a matter of fact, there are two of us in this Chamber now who travelled to British Columbia in 1985, together with a considerable number of Tory Members from B.C., to investigate first-hand that very situation because of the environmental impact imposed by the proposed twin-tracking of CN in a certain section along the Fraser River.

On page 5 of the Bill, where Clauses 7 and 8 are found, which clauses relate to regulations and to the notice in particular of proposed railway works, there is not one reference to the desirability—indeed I should say necessity—of initiating an environmental impact study or an environmental impact assessment in relation to works coming under this particular legislation and related, of course, to railway works. The environment and the experience made thus far in the environment has been forgotten by the drafters of this Bill. The Government has to carry that responsibility for having ignored this very important aspect.

Every year tracks are widened, as are bridges, and railway works are undertaken. It is high time that when works of this type are proposed, before they are initiated and even considered for approval, environment impact be considered as an essential part in the legislation that covers these types of works. It is therefore not too late, since I think it would be unacceptable to see this Bill go through the House at third reading, to make amendments in committee to Clause 8 in particular to the effect that environmental impact studies and assessments be made mandatory when it comes to railway works that have an impact on the environment.

In reading through the Bill one comes across some other environmental impacts that deserve attention in this day and age since Bills of this type do not receive approval and passage every year. Usually it is every 10 years that a measure such as this is put forward. Therefore I draw Your Honour's attention to Clause 24 of the Bill which is headed "Regulations" as they affect the removal of trees, brush and weeds along railway lines. A subclause here is desirable which would indicate the Government's readiness to consider the use of alternatives to pesticides when it comes to the clearing of weeds, brush, trees and the like along railway lines.

It is a well established fact that jobs can be created by way of manual clearing as an alternative to the removal by pesticides with chemical substances. The reason that manual removal is preferable is due to the fact that conventional pesticides eventually find their way into water and contaminate our water supply. Over the years we have gradually come to the conclusion that the fewer pesticides we use and the more we reduce our dependence on them the better it is for the quality of our waters. I am sure that that conclusion is one that the Minister of the Environment is aware of and one that he should advance in Cabinet when considering amendments to this Bill, as they will inevitably have to be considered in the not too distant future.

If we move to Clause 44(1) of the Bill, which I am sure has been discussed by previous speakers, Hon. Members will see that there is a description of the consultative committee to be established by the Minister. The public affected by rail transportation is not represented in Clause 44(1). In the clause is the provision for a representative of the Minister, of the Canadian National Railway Company, Canadian Pacific Limited, VIA Rail, one to represent the other railway companies to which this Bill will apply, one member to represent the shippers of rail freight and, finally, one member to represent the Canadian Railway Labour Association. However, the public affected by railway transportation, be it VIA Rail, the transportation of goods in general and, in particular, when it comes to the transportation of dangerous goods, is completely missing. One wonders why it is that there is such an oversight. This clause has to be modified in committee. The consultative group to the Minister, as envisaged in Clause 44, must be expanded to ensure the presence of the public affected by, I would say, at least two members to make any sense. We see that in the Bill there is a provision for representatives of various sectors and for specific interests representing what amounts to seven people.

What I would urge you to do, Mr. Speaker, at this stage is to ensure that an amendment to Clause 44 is carried to make this consultative committee representative of the public interest, the very public that is affected by the operation of railways. In too much of this Bill do we find the mind-set of the railway companies which seem to be operating in a vacuum, not aware that whatever they do in the end affects the public. They are there to serve the public. Therefore, if it comes to a consultative committee, I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the public has to be represented.

• (1550)

In looking at Clause 50, and this is the time to do so because we are at second reading debate, again in this clause the citizens or non-governmental organizations that are interested in transportation matters have to be included in this specific clause for the reasons I stated when discussing Clause 44.

Let me briefly comment on a matter that concerns the city I come from, Metropolitan Toronto, where for some time now the citizenry has been increasingly worried about the safety of neighbourhoods should an accident take place as a result of a derailment or an explosion in a train that is moving dangerous goods.

Over the past four or five years since the Mississauga accident of 1979, an organization called M-TRAC has done a remarkable job of sensitizing public opinion and governments to the potential dangers that do exist, in virtually every large metropolitan urban area across the country.

The Government has appointed a special task force on the Toronto area dangerous goods railway matters. Public hearings have taken place and submissions have been made to that task force. In essence, the issues at stake are the following.

It is desirable to start planning and putting aside the funds necessary to relocate rails that go through densely populated areas. This is a costly operation, but it must be done. It is in the interests of large numbers of the population, particularly in downtown Toronto, because the railway line travels through areas where the number of schools is incredibly high. Apart from that fact, over the decades apartment buildings and low-rise residential areas have developed both north and south and east and west of the downtown railway lines. Hence the necessity for beginning to plan the removal of those railway lines to outside the densely populated areas, and specific alternative routes have been recommended to the task force. Therefore, we hope that the very clear and specific recommendations that have been made to the task force will soon reach the Government for its consideration.

There is also the question of the maximum allowable speed. When it comes to the movement of dangerous commodities through densely populated areas, it is important that the speed does not exceed 40 kilometres per hour. This should apply not only to cars that are full, but also to those that are marked empty. Very often with certain commodities cars that are marked empty are not completely or truly empty, and therefore potentially explosive and dangerous.

We have to respect what could be called a vital function of human observers. Here what stands out as an offensive item of neglect is the recent decision of the CTC to abolish the caboose. We are convinced that, for the basic elements of safety, a train that is hauling dangerous goods and is perhaps half a mile long does require a caboose in order to facilitate signalling to the front in case something goes wrong and can be seen at the end of that moving train. The decision made in December, 1987 by the CTC to remove the caboose must be revisited and reversed.

It is important that funds are available to the railway lines to perform the maintenance and the quality repairs that are needed, particularly in relation to hot boxes, the maintenance of rolling stock, the inspection of tracks and switches and, of course, last but not least, the training of employees.

Submissions have been made to the task force in relation to the transportation of dangerous goods. It is just completing its public hearing in Toronto, and it is in a well advanced stage.

I recognize the fact that Bill C-105 may not be intended to cover the transportation of dangerous goods. But at the same time it contains clauses of consultations with the Minister and the composition of committees for the purpose of consultations, which need to be expanded to include the public, particularly those organizations that are interested in dangerous goods. We welcome the idea of a consultative committee to the Minister, but we are saying that that concept has to be expanded to include interested and competent citizens.

Also, in a Bill like Bill C-105 which deals so intimately with the safe operation of railways, the environment must be included and taken into account, particularly in those clauses of the Bill that deal with railway works, alterations, and changes which are a matter of grave concern to neighbourhoods, farmers, native people, and to other activities that directly or indirectly impinge on the environment. For that reason, it is important that the discussion in committee include considerations that are of an environmental nature, and particularly in light of the experience in recent years, considerations that will permit the inclusion of environmental impact studies and environmental assessments.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, it is particularly timely, or perhaps even ironic, that we are debating this legislation today. Earlier the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) spoke about the relationship between stress and safety. He referred to an article entitled, "Stress rides the rails" by Professor Tucker who teaches organizational behaviour at the University of Saskatchewan's College of Commerce.

I mention this at the outset because at this point in time there are other things going on within the railway industry which are adding to the stress to which Professor Tucker relates so well in his article. I am referring to the prolonged period of arbitration which has followed the back to work legislation of August 27, 1987.

• (1600)

I am also referring to the fact that there is another group of railway unions in limbo at this point to the extent that the railway has now refused to negotiate with them, has taken the position that the second group will receive whatever is awarded to the first group, and is therefore, no longer willing to bargain, relying instead on the willingness of the Government to play the railway's game. The minute the second group, the railway shopcraftsmen, go on strike, if they were to exercise that option, the railway is confident that the Government would proclaim the sections of the Act that would make the strike illegal. They would have to return to work, with binding arbitrations and eventually have imposed on them the settlement which is being imposed on the ARU, or Associated Railway Unions, the group that precipitated the strike in August 1987.

Mr. Benjamin: It is a stacked deck.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, it is what the Hon. Member for Regina West has called a stacked deck. Rail workers know that.

As I told Hon. Members of the House on August 27—and it is even worse now—the morale within the railway industry and on the part of rail workers is at an all-time low for very good reason. It is no wonder when we see the time it has taken the current arbitrator, Mr. Larson, plus the effect of rumours about the extension of the arbitrator's period to as late as even September 1988. In the meantime, while things such as job security are being arbitrated by Mr. Larson for the ARU and are not being arbitrated or negotiated at all for the Shopcraft Unions, the railway is proceeding with what it calls "downsizing". Jobs are disappearing all over the place before any arrangements, contract, or agreement can be reached in respect of job security.

On the front page of The Globe and Mail today we see a story about a memo by senior Vice-President of CNR, Doug Fletcher, indicating to his subordinates that they had better get on with the downsizing of each and every aspect of the railway, anything targeted for downsizing, because of the fear that as we get closer and closer to a pre-election political context it would become more and more difficult for the railway to do so.

On the one hand we see accelerated downsizing while at the same time the hands of the rail unions are tied either by extended arbitration or refusal to negotiate on the part of the companies, depending upon which group of unions we are talking about. It is no bloody wonder that these people are angry and frustrated and talk about taking job action.

Mr. Benjamin: It is a marked deck.

Mr. Blaikie: It is a stacked deck. It is a marked deck. Rail workers have just about had it with the attitude of the Government toward them as working people. All the Bill does is reinforce that impression. What else could such a Bill do except to reinforce that impression when it talks about setting up a consultative committee of nine to eleven members and only one of them is to be a representative of rail workers themselves? The rest are to be representatives of the Government or of the railways.

One would have thought that the Government would have had the common decency to have at least a five, five, and five arrangement or something like it. It is an insult. It is just like kicking rail workers in the face to say: "Look, guys, we have a good idea. We will have a consultative committee of 11 people. You can have one of them and the rest will be government and railway people. The committee will be giving advice, giving the railways advice, and you will have a big say in the matter". One would have to be an idiot to think that the proposal of the Government in respect of the consultative committee was anything but an insult to railway workers.

The Bill, whatever good may come of it in the sense that it at least establishes the notion of the Railway Safety Act, which is something the NDP and the CCF before it advocated for years, is greatly overridden by the fact that it is stacked against the employee. I have already mentioned the consultative committee. However, let us consider the question of fines. If an individual is found to be in violation of the Act, he or she can be dinged for $10,000. If the CPR is found to be in violation, it can be fined for $50,000. Wow, a $50,000 fine to the CPR! As the Hon. Member for Regina West and others indicated earlier, this is no more than merely a licence fee to be unsafe. Individuals are to take the rap. Employees are to take the rap. The companies not only get light fines, but they have, along with the Government, majority representation on the consultative committee.

Employees have the dubious privilege of being compelled to tell on themselves when it comes to the relationship with their doctors. They have to tell their doctor what is their job, if they are a locomotive engineer or whatever the case may be. Presumably the doctors also have some responsibility pursuant to the legislation. However, rail workers still have no freedom, no protection, no incentive, and no provision whatsoever within the Bill to tell on the railways when they are practising in an unsafe way.

What has been the case for years, and what has actually worsened, will continue. Railway employees will be in a position where, if they are asked to do something unsafe and report it, or if they are compelled to do something unsafe and report it, they will be subject to harassment by management and persecution by management. It goes on believe me. In fact, over time they are liable to lose their job because they are marked and people are out for them. Or, if they go ahead and do the unsafe thing they were asked to do and an accident happens, then they are really in trouble. Then it is the employee who has to take the rap and the company gets away with murder, literally in some cases. This kind of bind that employees are in, where they are damned if they do and damned if they don't, is completely beyond the scope of the Bill. It does not try to address that very difficult situation in which railway employees find themselves whatsoever.

For that reason I predict that many rail workers will simply see the Bill not as the golden opportunity it could have been for the Government to have done something substantial in the area of railway safety but as more evidence of the fact that in some strange and cruel way they have been targeted by the Government as scapegoats in one series of decisions after another, going back to decisions like the one allowed by the Government in respect of the running of cabooseless trains, to the whole deregulation policy of the Government that has created a situation in which railways will be cutting corners and trying to do everything they can to save a few dollars here and there. In the long run it will cost Canadian taxpayers even more in respect of the cost of derailments and of social and other consequences of this short-sightedness.

I would have liked to have had the opportunity to rise today to debate a set of comprehensive safety measures put before Parliament. We do not have either a set of comprehensive measures or the regulations. We do not even have a set of principles that we could debate on rail safety and its relationship to other things like economic criteria, et cetera. We have nothing laid out. It would have been nice, in the Railway Safety Act, to have had a preamble which stated clearly the supremacy of safety over economic consideration. Is it only oversight that we do not have that, or is it further evidence that the railways, along with a lot of other organizations unfortunately, are being instructed basically to adopt this uncritical, excessive, I would say extremist, bottom-line view of how companies ought to operate, that is, in such a way as to make their employees feel that they are disposable commodities which will be eliminated at the first opportunity?

• (1610)

It is pretty hard to work for a company which is constantly sending out messages that it is nice to have one as an employee but if we could figure out a way to get rid of you tomorrow, we would. That is basically the message which CN and CP have been sending to rail workers for four or five years. The story in The Globe and Mail today reinforces that.

It is no wonder that people are as angry as they are and I can tell you that they will be angrier and that we will have more trouble. The Government will have sat idly by doing the bidding of the railways and the bidding of their own ideological fantasies about deregulations, bottom line, and competition while a very good transportation system went down the drain before their very eyes. I was very glad to see the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) raise the matter of the environment. I see that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is here. The fact that there is no reference to the environment in this Bill is evidence of the fact that in spite of all the rhetoric the notion that environmental considerations, pursuant to the Bruntland report, the national task force on the environment and the economy, and all the other fancy documents to which the Government has affixed its name, should work themselves into all aspects of government policy has not been absorbed by the Government.

If I were the Minister of the Environment I would be somewhat embarrassed to sit there today knowing that there is no reference to the environment in this major piece of railway legislation. That is not something I would like my counterpart in other countries to know about given some of the things I might have said at international fora with regard to how the Canadian Government was moving ahead to incorporate environmental considerations into all its legislative actions.

Mr. Cassidy: They had an option.

Mr. Blaikie: The Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) said that they had an option. They could have done it otherwise. They could have done it better but they did not. They left out the considerations which were mentioned by the Hon. Member for Davenport.

I have received complaints in my riding. The railways think they are a law unto themselves. It has been tough enough trying to regulate the railways without having a Government which is committed to the view that they can do whatever they like and that it is somehow good for everyone if the railways do whatever they like. Without regard for public safety or the environment, in clearing rights of ways beside tracks through residential areas the railways spray whatever herbicide they got the best deal on. All hell would break loose if municipal governments tried to do that without hearings to find out who was allergic, et cetera. The railways just do whatever they like.

The Government has basically said that that is okay, that it will not even cover such things in this legislation. The Government says that if anything comes up there will be a consultative committee to deal with it made up of representatives of the railway, the Government, and one member from labour.

This Bill will do very little indeed unless it is accompanied by very strong regulations. I am sorry, but I have absolutely no confidence that that will be the case. I believe that these regulations will be drawn up by the railways for the railways and, according to this legislation, will even basically be enforced by the railways. Rather than an improvement in rail safety, in the sense that this legislation reinforces all the stress and low moral-related problems on the railway, one could even argue, although only time will tell, that this will actually contribute to lack of safety rather than advance the cause of safety. The Government is to be roundly condemned for that.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I cannot let some of the comments of the Hon. Member go by without response. He has a way, without having really looked at the Bill or knowing some of the factual background, of making excessive statements which are simply not factually correct.

This Bill has needed amendment for many decades. The Member was not in Parliament at the time, but his Party was virtually the Government of the day from 1972 to 1974 and it did not put forth any bills for railway safety, railway workers, or anything like that, and they cannot get around that.

Mr. Cassidy: That's the most ridiculous thing I've ever heard.

Mr. Thacker: The fact is that the Liberals were right under the thumb of the NDP as they always have been.

With regard to the consultative committee, I indicated in my speech this morning, which I guess the Member did not hear, that the Minister is prepared to expand that committee. The fact is that the Bill was put together after broad consultations by officials with provinces, municipalities, and all sorts of other organizations and they came up with the proposals. We have studied it and have signalled to the opposition Parties that we would be happy to hear views on how the committee should be structured. The Minister can appoint four members of that committee and maybe they can be more clearly specified. However, I have already indicated that.

With regard to whistleblowers, there are all sorts of cases of individual workers reporting anonymously to the CTC, which has followed up on the matter and kept the names of the workers anonymous. On occasion workers have reported to the Department and the Department has kept names anonymous. In my speech this morning I indicated that we are prepared to consider a clause which will give better coverage in this area. I cited the example of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board. Why is the Member standing up and making these outrageous statements? It is an exaggeration which goes beyond even that which is fair in terms of debate. I do not understand him saying that.

The Member is also leaving the impression that increased costs with regard to deregulation will make it less safe. In fact, as a result of deregulation in the United States the air is still becoming more safe and more people are using it. There is more rail traffic in Canada than ever, yet the number of accidents, the number of people injured, and the number of fatalities is dropping. That is factual. We have all the data yet the Member implies quite the opposite.

In terms of the environment, he is saying it is not included in the Bill. In fact, Bill C-74, the Environmental Protection Act, is in committee right now. Things are being done and we, as a nation, are becoming more and more conscious of the environment, as we should. It is not only the New Democratic Party which is concerned about the environment. All sorts of people are concerned, including members of the government Party. As a result, there is a Bill in committee today. Why was that not done between 1972 and 1974? When the NDP was controlling the Liberals during that period of time, I do not remember hearing it proposing a Bill on the environment. I do not think it did.

• (1620)

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, some things are very hard to take seriously. Sometimes replies from the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) are hard to take seriously as well.

I am complimented by the great expectations the Hon. Member had of the Parliament in which the NDP held the balance of power for a year and a half. We were expected to do all kinds of things that the Conservatives feel that they should not be criticized for not doing now that they have been in Government for twice that long. They are still in the habit of asking why the Liberals did not do the kinds of things people are asking the Conservatives to do.

Between 1972 and 1974, a Railway Safety Act was one of the commitments the NDP had extracted from the Liberals just prior to the calling of an election. Unfortunately, Liberals being what they are, once they had a majority in the House in 1974, they went on to abandon that commitment. That is unfortunate—

Mr. Thacker: In 1979, you put them back in.

Mr. Blaikie: The Hon. Member is talking about 1979. The Conservatives still have not accepted the fact, and I think they need therapy on this, that they defeated themselves in 1979. No one else defeated them. It is only human nature for them to blame others for it and they continue to do so. They continue to be psychologically damaged by that event and that is not something we can do anything about.

The Parliamentary Secretary has said that the Minister might be open to amendments regarding the consultative committee. That is good, but we will believe it when we see it. In the mean time, it is outrageous that the draft of the Bill, if that is what it is, appeared in the way it did. I make no apologies for being downright angry about the fact that it is only at this stage that the Parliamentary Secretary has said that. If we have been waiting for this legislation for so long, why would the Parliamentary Secretary say at this time on the floor of the House of Commons that the Minister might be open to it? Why could that consideration not have been in the legislation?

The same is true with respect to whistleblowing. The Parliamentary Secretary said that the Minister might be open to some of those amendments. Surely to God government Members have been thinking about this long enough. The fact that it is not in the draft tells us something about the mind-set of this Government.

The fact is that rail workers look back on the period of 1972 to 1974 fondly. When there was a rail strike in August of 1973, instead of bringing in back-to-work legislation to send them back to work without any increase or settlement and with an arbitrator who is taking forever and ever to do his job, Parliament, led by a New Democratic minority, sent those people back to work with an agreement that even we could vote for because it was just. It was a just settlement both for workers and the railways, and there are plenty of rail workers who look back on that time with a great deal of fondness. When the NDP had anything to say about it, rail workers were not treated in the callous manner that they were treated by this Government in August of 1987.

Concerning safety in deregulation, all the evidence points to just the contrary of what the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary said. The experience with deregulation in the United States has not been increased safety. I do not know where the Parliamentary Secretary gets the nerve to say that.

The Parliamentary Secretary says that government Members are all concerned about the environment. If they are so concerned about the environment, why is the environment not in the Bill? We were only asking for a little evidence that some of the rhetoric we have heard from the Minister of the Environment and the Parliamentary Secretary would have legislative reality and would translate into government policy. We do not have that.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing the House that the Senate has passed Bill C-108, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1988.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Government House
Ottawa

February 4, 1988

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Gerald Eric Le Dain, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as the Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 4th day of February, 1988, at 4.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

Yours sincerely,
Anthony P. Smyth
Deputy Secretary,
Policy and Program

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Farm Credit Corporation—Lack of financial resources/Farm foreclosures; the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Hazardous substances—Dioxin in paper products—Chlorine bleaching process; The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—Richmond East (Mr. Dingwall)—Pharmaceutical industry—Drug price increases/Bill C-22—Minister's position.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

RAILWAY SAFETY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crombie (for the Minister of Transport) that Bill C-105, an Act to ensure the safe operation of railways and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to have this opportunity to participate in the debate on the Railway Safety Act, Bill C-105. I do not think it comes as much of a surprise or shock to Hon. Members that I have an interest in this area which dates back to the time I served in municipal Government, the time of the Mississauga train derailment.

On November 10, 1979, a freight train which was bound from London, Ontario, to the Agincourt marshalling yards in Metropolitan Toronto derailed in Mississauga. Of the some 106 cars on that train, some 19 cars were filled with dangerous materials. Three of those 19 cars were tankers that were loaded with propane and at the time of the derailment, they exploded, shooting great balls of fire into the sky. Another car was filled with chlorine and was ripped apart. The chlorine gas seeped out and spread throughout the entire community.

As a result of that derailment which caused the three cars of propane to explode and the one car of chlorine to be ripped open, some 250,000 people had to be evacuated from their homes and businesses for up to five days. In addition, there were substantial economic losses in connection with that derailment. In fact, when the total bill was in and all of the costs added up, losses were estimated at something in excess of $68 million.

That derailment occurred in an area of Mississauga which, in 1979, was a relatively undeveloped area. Notwithstanding that, a quarter of a million people had to be evacuated from their homes and almost $70-million worth of damage was done. If the train had stayed on its tracks for another 20 minutes or so, the derailment would have occurred right in the heart of the City of Toronto, obviously an area of much denser development. One can imagine the economic losses that would have resulted if that had happened and the number of people who, if evacuation was possible in an area of that density, would have had to have been evacuated.

If the train had stayed on its tracks for slightly longer than 20 minutes, perhaps for half an hour, the accident would have occurred right in the heart of my own constituency. As I have indicated in the House on a number of occasions, the main lines of both the CPR and the CNR run right through the heart of my constituency.

That accident occurred some eight years ago now. That seems like a long time ago and some of us are starting to forget it and think perhaps it did not happen or, if it did, the whole problem has been dealt with and solved.

• (1630)

Much to the credit of the Government of the day, led by the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), who was then Prime Minister, a royal commission was appointed to investigate that derailment and see what could be done to ensure that nothing like that would happen again. The commission was headed by Mr. Justice Samuel Grange. It investigated the matter thoroughly, made recommendations, all but two, I believe, of which were implemented. One would think that the problem was solved and we would not have any more problems of that sort. The Grange Commission had apparently discovered what went wrong, made its recommendations, and there should not be any more problems.

In spite of that, approximately two rail accidents occur each year in Metropolitan Toronto involving trains carrying dangerous goods. It has become particularly evident to me that this problem has not been solved because, as I brought to the attention of the House last summer, on July 14, just six or eight months ago, another derailment occurred in my own constituency, very near to the densely populated intersection of Don Mills Road and Wynford Drive. At that time 31 cars of a 103-car train derailed. Fortunately, only one car was carrying dangerous goods, car number 87. Also fortunately, although it was carrying a load of vinyl acetate, it did not derail. If it had, the fire chief for the City of North York indicated he would have ordered an evacuation of people within 2,500 feet of the accident site.

I do not know whether you are familiar with that site or its nature and the number of people and businesses located there, but I can tell you it is very substantial. The apartment communities of Wynford Heights have perhaps upwards of 10,000 residents. The apartment community immediately to the south, Flemingdon Park, has somewhere in the neighbourhood of 20,000 residents. There are numerous businesses in the area, including a number of major oil companies such as Esso, Shell and Texaco. They all have major facilities there. IBM has its major Canadian plant with about 2,000 employees in that area. All of this, to name just a few. We were looking at a very substantial evacuation and very substantial damage if that one car had been part of the derailment.

That made the whole issue quite clear to me. In spite of the fact that we had a royal commission investigate the Mississauga derailment, in spite of the recommendations which had been made and accepted, in spite of all the new procedures instituted, new technology, and efforts to make sure that a Mississauga derailment could not happen again, in 1987 a derailment of a similar nature occurred again.

One factor that was pinpointed at that time was the speed of the train, which was approximately 40 miles per hour. Immediately to the south of that location by just a few kilometres, there is a voluntary speed limit, self-imposed by CPR, of 25 miles per hour. That voluntary speed limit does not apply where this derailment occurred.

At present about 2,000 hazardous commodities used by Canadian industry are transported by rail every day of the week. They include propane, sulphuric acid, butane, and chlorine. I could go on with a long list. Every day of the week about 25 freight trains carrying those hazardous goods pass through my constituency and Metropolitan Toronto. If a derailment occurs today or tomorrow or the next day, what sort of risks would we be running?

It has been estimated that people within one-quarter kilometre of the line would be at the greatest risk. It has been estimated as well that those within one kilometre on either side of the accident site would have to be evacuated because of the problems of escaping gases. In the Mississauga derailment you may be aware that people within 10 kilometres of the track in either direction were evacuated and that damage was experienced within a half a kilometre of the track on either side. We are looking at a very substantial area of potential damage and potential evacuation, especially when you are talking about a heavily built-up area such as in my constituency and in the bulk of Metropolitan Toronto.

What can be done about this situation other than what has been done to date as a result of the Grange Commission? Another Member of this House referred to the fact that in March of 1986 the then Minister of Transport, now the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), created a task force to look into the problems of the transportation of dangerous commodities in the greater Toronto area. I think that is to the credit of this Government and to the particular credit of the Deputy Prime Minister. That task force has been gathering information, done a number of studies, 12 or more, on the problem, and has been holding public hearings. I had an opportunity during the Christmas break of appearing before it to make representations, as did a great many other people.

That task force is looking at things like the potential rerouting of dangerous goods, potential relocation of the rail route itself, and other things like imposing a speed limit on trains carrying dangerous goods.

It is not an easy matter to solve that problem because there are a number of different points of view. There are those who believe that a relocation of the railroad tracks would in fact be shifting the burden from one part of the country to another. However, there is evolving a consensus which I believe will go to Metropolitan Toronto City Council for its endorsement tomorrow. That includes the relocation of the tracks to an area north of the city relatively free from development at this time.

• (1640)

There would be the creation of a buffer zone around the track in conjunction with that, similar to the one they have in the City of Regina. That is a 1,000-foot buffer zone. It could be similar to the one in Edmonton which is an even greater buffer zone of approximately 3,000 feet around the main railroad line that carries dangerous goods. That is the kind of long term solution being considered and around which a consensus is developing.

It is being suggested that in the interim period before such a policy can be implemented, a 25-mile per hour speed limit be imposed on all trains carrying dangerous goods through the Greater Metropolitan Toronto area. That is one way we can deal with this kind of problem. But the other obvious solution is through the Bill before us today.

Bill C-105 specifically deals with railway safety. I believe it gives us another opportunity, as the Parliament of Canada, to address the issue of railway safety and ensure that we are doing everything possible to ensure that there are no accidents of the kind that occurred in the Mississauga derailment.

I was pleased to see and learn that in developing the Bill that is before us today there was a consultative process as with Bill C-74, the Environmental Protection Act. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is in the House at the moment. He followed a consultative process with industry, environmental groups and labour in developing the Environmental Protection Act. That is a great credit to the Minister. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has followed exactly the same procedure in developing this legislation. He also consulted with a wide number and variety of groups.

During his remarks, an Hon. Member mentioned a citizen group in the Metropolitan Toronto area which he commended to the Minister of Transport as a citizens group which should be involved in this process. In fact, it was involved in the process. It is the M-TRAC group which stands for Metro Toronto Residents Action Committee. They formed as a citizens action group after the Mississauga derailment and have been actively involved in promoting rail safety, particularly as it applies to the transportation of hazardous goods, since 1979.

I would like to point out that there are some people in the M-TRAC group who have given of their time and effort on a constant basis to promote rail safety for close to nine years. The group include people like Harold Morrison, Harry Behrend, Rose Dyson, Norm Dyson, Phil Wade and Ying Hope. They are shining examples of citizens who are prepared to give their time and effort on behalf of their fellow citizens, on a voluntary basis, to see that there is safety in our society, our community and our country. They were part of the consultative process and I think we can congratulate them on the effort that they and others have made in helping develop this Bill.

I understand that the Bill implements virtually all the recommendations of the Foisy Commission that looked into the derailment in Hinton, Alberta. I believe that is a major step in the right direction.

Other Members have pointed out their concerns about different parts of the Bill, including the question of the consultative committee and the representation on that committee. I certainly endorse the comments that there should be citizen participation. I would urge the Minister to either amend the Bill or, within the confines of the Bill itself, since he has the right to appoint other people, ensure that there is adequate citizen representation on this consultative committee. I recommend to the Minister that representatives of the M-TRAC organization be included in that.

I know that the Bill is not perfect, and that while it goes a long way there will be criticism. I understand that the Federation of Canadian Municipalities believes there could be improvements, as do the unions. As well, M-TRAC believes there could be improvements.

I am sure that when the Bill goes to committee improvements will be made. I know from past experience that the Minister of Transport has been most willing to see legislation he has put forth improved.

I am convinced that this will be another major step forward in rail safety in this country. I am very pleased with the initiative taken by the Minister of Transport and compliment him for it. I look forward to seeing him strengthen the Bill in committee before it receives third reading.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, first I want to compliment the Member on what I believe is a very effective and hopefully influential speech on this issue.

I have three questions which arise from my discussions with rail workers and others in the Windsor area who have been very concerned about the question of rail safety there. Many of them have suggested that there will be a great increase in north-south traffic if the trade deal which has been signed goes through. They suggest that this will result in a considerable increase in run-through traffic from the United States, especially if trains, due to lax standards in many states, are not up to safety standards that we hope to have operating in our rail systems here. In fact, various people have given me some examples of the terrible state of some run-through trains.

Does the Hon. Member believe that this Bill needs to be strengthened so that it is clear that control over the safety conditions of run-through trains from the United States into Canada will be very closely regulated, with teeth to back up those regulations?

Second, reports I have had from people in my constituency and my part of Ontario suggest that there have been lay-offs of inspectors. For example, according to reports I have received, an extra seven inspectors have been laid off in Sania. Does the Member feel that reducing the number of inspectors is the way to achieve greater safety, or does it not obviously make sense that an increase in inspectors is a crucial part of establishing greater rail safety in this country?

Finally, what is the Member's opinion about the points which have been raised about the role of the whistleblower? For instance, I have a letter that was sent to the chairperson of the negotiating committee in the Windsor area, dealing with points that he raised with respect to rail safety in Windsor during the lead-up to the recent strike. There is a letter from the company which employs him. Among other things the letter states: "I want to inform you at this time that similar irresponsible conduct will not be tolerated in the future and will prompt a more formal complete investigation".

• (1650)

Is this effort on the part of railway workers to back up safety, to give it publicity, to fight for it publicly, not in fact something that is crucial to assuring safety on the railways and something that should be guaranteed in the Bill itself?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his comments and also for his questions. Dealing with the questions in the order they were asked, he indicated he felt, and that some of his constituents also feel, there will be a substantial increase in north-south traffic as a result of the Canada-U.S. trade agreement. I certainly would hope that would be the case because obviously one of the intentions is to try to open up the American market to Canadian businesses and ensure that we increase the number of jobs in this country. I would see this as a vehicle for doing that. I expect there would be more traffic on the part of Canadian railways going south than there would be on the part of American railways coming north. However, I certainly agree that regardless of what railways these might be, we must insist on safety, and the highest level and degree of safety.

As the Hon. Member knows, there are a number of American railways which operate in our country at the moment. As far as I am aware they have to comply with all of our safety regulations.

With respect to the number of inspectors, that is a matter that has been raised with me as well from time to time in the Metropolitan Toronto area. Certainly, on the surface I would have to agree that it would seem that more inspectors rather than less mean better safety. I would have to be convinced by the railroads in their representations that there was another way of providing for railroad safety other than with more inspectors before I would be prepared to agree that we should have a reduction rather than maintaining the ones we have or in fact increasing the ones we have.

With respect to the whistleblower legislation, the Member may be aware, and I hope he is aware, that I in fact introduced a motion on whistleblowing into this House in Private Members' Hour. I wish I had been able to have the support of the Hon. Member and his Party, and the support of other Members of the House at that time. Perhaps we would now have whistleblower legislation on a general basis. My particular proposition applied not only to federal Departments and agencies but also applied to all businesses that were federally regulated, which would include the railroads, and it applied to businesses contracting to the Government as well. So I do hope that when I bring forward the proposition again, the Hon. Member will be here to speak in its support.

---

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[Translation]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

And being returned.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate Chamber, the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following bills:

> Bill C-104, an Act to correct certain anomalies, inconsistencies, archaisms and errors and to deal with other matters of a non-controversial and uncomplicated nature in the Statutes of Canada—Chapter No. 2, 1988.
>
> Bill C-108, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1988—Chapter No. 3, 1988.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Member's Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

• (1700)

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

PARLIAMENT HILL

PROPOSED ERECTION OF STATUE OF QUEEN ELIZABETH

The House resumed from Tuesday, December 15, 1987, consideration of the motion of Mr. Tupper:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of commissioning the structure of a statue of Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, to be placed on Parliament Hill in commemoration of the thirty-fifth anniversary of Her ascension to the Throne.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, on the last day that Motion 135 in the name of the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper) was debated, I was indicating my support and the support of others in the House with respect to this measure. I had been saying that after this length of time we should commission the building of a statue of Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II.

I was telling of the visit, as was my friend from Welland, of Her Majesty to the Niagara area in 1973. I remember that it was a rainy day. She buckled her coat around her against the rain and wind. She walked through puddles of water to shake the hands of many a senior citizen, Girl Guide and ordinary citizen of our community, to win the hearts of the thousands that were there gathered. All the while she was doing that, the Duke of Edinburgh was paying his respects to the veterans and the Legions gathered there as well.

Her Majesty has won the respect of many peoples. She has a reputation among senior statespersons as a well informed resource person. Even such distinguished people as Churchill and Charles De Gaulle greatly respected her as a leader and as a person.

General De Gaulle once said that in his time Her Majesty was the most effective statesperson in Europe. The Queen and her family have very frequently been visitors to Canada. Officially, she is the one person who is a non-political person and in a non-partisan way she has travelled from coast to coast. As she travelled from one end of this country to the other, she gained the respect of the people who therein lived; a tradition of democracy in action, a democratic monarchy. She had the support of all democratic peoples wherever they lived and whatever their political or party affiliation might be. Hers was a sympathetic ear, and even in just the telling there was some ease and comfort given to many.

• (1710)

Her Majesty the Queen has built up a rapport with the peoples of Canada. It started with a visit by Her father and Her mother in 1939 when daily that telephone call went home to Princess Elizabeth and Princess Margaret telling them of Canada, its changing climate, and how each day the tour took them to a different region or different part, and those stories were told to those daughters of the then sovereigns of this country.

Then as now, in troubled times royalty gave us strength, encouragement, and unity to face the challenges that confronted us. Later as Queen, she made her first television broadcast in 1957. "Industry and commerce may bring wealth to a country", she told Canadians, "but the character of a nation is formed by other factors. Race, language, religion, culture and tradition all have some contribution to make. I feel proud and happy to be Queen of such a nation".

I wish to join those who think it appropriate to commemorate the thirty-fifth anniversary of the reign of Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II by erecting a statue here on Parliament Hill. To those Members who have reservations about erecting a statue to someone who is still alive, it should be pointed out that the statue of Queen Victoria which now adorns the Hill was proposed and agreed to in 1897 to mark that sovereign's diamond jubilee.

To those Members who feel that such a gesture could be construed as a slight to Canadians of French culture, it should be pointed out that both the man who sculpted the statue of Queen Victoria, the famous Louis-Philippe Hébert, and the Prime Minister of the day, Sir Wilfred Laurier, wanted the monument in an even more conspicuous place than it now is. They wished it to be located on the prestigious site that marked half way between where the Centennial Flame presently is and the entrance to the House of Commons.

Both those French Canadians understood that the British monarchy has nothing to do with ethnicity, race, or language, but everything to do with the constitutional liberty that is ours, and the very words inscribed on the scroll that the Queen extends before her for all to read.

I am pleased and proud to join in support of this motion to commission the erection of a statue to commemorate our great sovereign, the Queen.

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in the debate this afternoon on Motion M-135 brought forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper). I wish to begin by congratulating my colleague for the work that he has done in bringing forward this motion before the House. It is an important one, and it is important to all Canadians. I am pleased to take part in the debate and lend my support to the motion.

I do not have to remind anyone in the House that, when the Fathers of Confederation set about framing our Constitution, they chose to make the new nation a constitutional monarchy. That means we have a Queen of Canada. By an Act of our own Parliament in 1953, and our own deliberate decision in this Chamber, Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II is officially the Queen of Canada.

The motion we are discussing today is of special interest to me. I am only the second generation of my family who was born in Canada. My grandfather immigrated to Canada early in the 20th century. I learned a great deal from my grandfather about Her Majesty, the Queen. Perhaps it means a little extra to me, although it is important to all Canadians.

Her Majesty is much more than a symbol. she brings a unique perspective to public life. The Queen has a reputation among senior statesmen as one of the best informed and most sensible public servants at that level in the world. As well as being a very charming person Her Majesty inspires affection, along with the respect that she carries throughout the world.

The assets of Her Majesty are non-partisan. she provides knowledge, advice, and encouragement to Ministers of the Crown, as well a being an official patron of the Opposition. Her Majesty's influence in Canada is exercised in two ways, the first being through the activities of the Governor General and the provincial Lieutenant Governors, and secondly Her Majesty's personal visits and participation in special Canadian events.

I can go back to 1970 when my home Province of Manitoba celebrated its one hundredth anniversary of being part of Canada. Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II visited my home town of Swan River, which is located in west central Manitoba. That was quite an event. For the entire town of approximately 4,500 people it was something that we looked forward to for many months. she arrived in Swan River on the train and spent the better part of an afternoon with us. We are well known in Swan River for having one of the largest rodeos in western Canada. she spent two or three hours viewing some special events put on for her at that time. Virtually everyone from the town and the area came to visit Her Majesty. It was something that the people of the Swan River Valley still talk about.

Again in 1984, shortly after I was elected to the House of Commons, I had the special opportunity of greeting Her Majesty when she paid a visit to Canada's National Ukrainian Festival in Dauphin, Manitoba, also in my constituency. That occasion was the second time I was able to meet Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II. Also at that time thousands of people came out and met and saw Her Majesty as she spent two or three hours with us that afternoon. On that particular occasion, she attended Canada's National Ukrainian Festival, and was part of the grandstand audience for approximately one hour that afternoon. It made the event that much more special.

There are thousands of other Canadians from every province and territory in Canada who can tell a similar story, and who can say with full sincerity what the presence of Her Majesty means to events like this. It adds that special majesty and makes the occasion that much more memorable in the minds of Canadians across the country.

Earlier this week I read an article in a local newspaper. The article was based on the Super Bowl last weekend, but some of the comments contained in the article had a lot of truth. The gentleman who wrote the article compared Canadians and Americans. He described Americans as being a confident, energetic people, and how when they are in trouble or when they need something they depend on each other to solve their problems.

• (1720)

In his opinion Canadians are much more cautious, much more conservative, and tend to depend not so much on each other but more on government to solve their problems. Another point he made with which I tend to agree was that we sometimes tend to take ourselves a little too seriously. Sometimes we lose sight of our sense of humour and our sense of pride. In many cases we have become much too critical of ourselves, of our political system, and even of the monarchy at times. I believe these institutions deserve much more respect than we tend to give them as Canadians.

The visits of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth to Canada should inspire and invoke celebration, happiness, and pride in our country, rather than the criticism which quite often happens.

As I mentioned, from personal experience—and I know that other Canadians have had similar experiences—with the visits of Her Majesty, Her very presence adds so much to occasions that are special in themselves. Because of her presence, they are that much better.

By passing Motion M-135, the House could send a clear message to all Canadians that indeed we have great pride in the fact that we are a constitutional monarchy. We could give Canadians no better message than passing a motion which indicates that we will commission the structure of a statue of Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II.

I lend my full and complete support to the motion. I hope that at the appropriate time the Chamber will lend its total support. Once again I congratulate the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton for bringing the matter to our attention.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, indeed I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak in support of Motion M-135 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper). I should like to congratulate him on bringing forward the motion which reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of commissioning the structure of a statue of Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, to be placed on Parliament Hill in commemoration of the thirty-fifth anniversary of Her ascension to the Throne.

As I was thinking about my remarks this evening and what I might say in connection with the motion, my thoughts went back to my recollections of the Queen and the occasions throughout my life in which I have heard about the Queen, seen the Queen, or listened to the Queen.

I am sure that is the same with you, Mr. Speaker, as you have listened to debate on this subject for over three hours

now. I am sure that you have had thoughts running through your mind about the occasions you have experienced and the recollections you have in connection with the Queen. Mr. Speaker, you are a younger man than I am, so my recollections probably go back a little ways longer than yours do. However, interestingly enough, as I reflected on this subject, the first thing I thought about was a record that I have in my record library. I have to admit that it is an older record. These days we have tapes and we have 33 1/3 recordings; my kids have some 45s. In any event, this record is a 78. It goes back to the olden days, but it is a recording called "I Can Hear it Now". It was done by a well-known American broadcaster, the late Edward R. Murrow, who turned out three sets of records called "I Can Hear it Now" in which he extracted bits of history and put them into the form of a recording.

The very first of these recordings was of the years which encompassed the Second World War. On that recording he has an excerpt of the two little princesses, as he refers to them, Princess Elizabeth and Princess Margaret. As one listens to the recording, one can picture them standing in the rubble of London with fires and destruction all around them. They were there, little Princess Elizabeth and little Princess Margaret, to broadcast a message to the children of England, to the children of Britain, to the children of the world, from the blitz in London, England during the Second World War. Just as the name of Edward R. Murrow's records were "I Can Hear it Now", I can hear it now in my mind—Princess Elizabeth saying "Good night, Margaret" and Princess Margaret saying "Good night, children", and Princess Elizabeth saying "Good night and good luck to you all". That is really the first thing that I thought about in terms of my recollections of our Queen and the things I was to mention tonight.

Another wartime experience comes to mind in connection with the Queen. It relates to a story that was told me shortly after I came to Ottawa by a really outstanding Canadian by the name of General Shnuk.

General Shnuk was a Polish officer in the Second World War. He commanded the Polish Air Force. He took them out of Poland, escaping from the advancing German and Russian forces. They fought under his command and direction in the Battle of France. Again escaping after the Battle of France, he took them to Britain to fight with the RAF as the Polish Air Force. General Shnuk told me a story of his experiences in England during the Battle of Britain. At that time the RAF was very short of pilots and was looking for replacement pilots. They saw in the Polish Air Force a great potential source of pilots. A great number of negotiations went on between the RAF and General Shnuk on behalf of the Polish Air Force about freeing up Polish pilots to fly for the RAF. Finally, under certain conditions, the Polish Air Force agreed to lend pilots to the RAF. General Shnuk told me that he was picked up one morning and taken to RAF headquarters to sign the agreement whereby Polish fliers would fly in the RAF. About that occasion he said: "Who do you think it was that drove the Jeep which took me over to sign that agreement? It was Queen Elizabeth". That is another story which comes to my mind when I think of our Queen.

Many other stories come to mind. I remember back in 1947, I guess it was, that the then Princess Elizabeth married Prince Philip. I remember getting up in the middle of the night to listen to the crackling of the radio and the service from Westminster Abbey. That is another memory that I have.

I remember as well the newsreel shots of the time when King George VI died. Queen Elizabeth, then Princess Elizabeth, was visiting in a place in Kenya called "Treetops" with Prince Philip. People went to that resort in Kenya to watch wild animals and it was there that she received the news that her father had died and she had become Queen. I remember those scenes on the newsreels quite vividly. I remember as well her coronation in 1952. By that time our family had a television set and I can remember getting up early again to watch the coronation of the Queen at Westminster Abbey.

• (1730)

I have other much more recent memories of several of the royal tours here in Canada. On one of the last ones her route was to take her past my house. The streets were lined with people for hours in advance and for some reason they changed the route. Everyone was most disappointed, as you will appreciate. However, I have that lasting memory of a time the Queen did not show.

I have many other memories, of course, including the birth of the Queen's children; Charles, Anne, Andrew and Edward. More recent are my memories of her Christmas broadcasts. One of the highlights of Christmas Day for my family is that we listen to the message from the Queen, formerly on radio, now on television.

What sort of messages do these memories of the Queen send to me? I guess the message is that to my mind the Queen personifies everything that is good about human beings. That is the theoretic role that she plays, but in actual fact as a person she seems to do exactly that. She fulfils that role very well. She fulfils the role of a good woman, a good mother, and a good person. If there is anyone who personifies the ideal of family life in this world today I think it is Queen Elizabeth. If she is a role model for all the people of Canada, all the people of the Commonwealth, and all the people of the world, it is the role of how one should live a good life.

In support of this motion I believe that we should have something to symbolize the role model which she has been to us all. I commend this motion to Members of the House.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few words to say in support of this motion today. I think it is certainly a good idea that if we are to have statues of royalty on Parliament Hill we have statues of members of the royalty who mean something in a contemporary context to a lot of Canadians, particularly young Canadians. I say that as someone who has never really known a reigning monarch other than Queen Elizabeth. Having been born in 1951 the reigning monarch as far back as I can remember has always been Queen Elizabeth.

It is only appropriate that rather than having only statues of Queen Victoria and other people who have long since passed from contemporary Canadian life, a statue to commemorate the thirty-fifth anniversary of Queen Elizabeth II accession to the Throne is something which the Government should consider the advisability of. That is why I rise to speak in favour of this motion.

It was only a few days ago, on January 25, that I rose in this House on Robbie Burns Day to point out the traditional tension which exists between Scotland and England. In speaking to this motion today I have to put aside my inherited Scottish nationalist feelings, as did my grandfather when he came to this country, and say that in spite of that the British constitutional monarchy and the democratic parliamentary system which attends that is something to be valued. One can at least take some solace from the fact that through some of the marriages of the Queen's children, Scottish blood is working its way back into the British monarchy.

My own first memory of the Royal Family, although not of the Queen herself was of the Pan American Games in Winnipeg in 1967. As a member of the Lord Selkirk and District Boy Scout Pipe Band I stood for three hours in the rain waiting for His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh to arrive. We spent some hours after that drying our uniforms.

I had a similar opportunity, also as a member of a pipe band, to wait for hours on end for Princess Anne to arrive at Lower Fort Garry in Manitoba. Finally, I had the opportunity to meet the Queen herself on the occasion of the patriation of the Canadian Constitution being a Member of Parliament at that time and being present for the walkabout in the rotunda of the House of Commons and in the Railway Committee Room.

Given the fact that there are so many Canadians, and that there will come to be more, whose only experience of the British monarchy is Queen Elizabeth II, the motion put forward by the Hon. Member is one which the Government should consider.

While on the subject of statues and women, we ought to be more creative in our use of statues in the parliamentary precincts. We should use them to tell the story of Canadian history. One of the women to whom the Government might also consider the advisability of erecting a statue would be the first woman ever elected to Parliament, Agnes McPhail.

It is certainly the case that the story of women, both in Canada and in the world, is undertold. At the same time as I rise to speak in favour of the motion for the Government to consider erecting a statue of Queen Elizabeth II, I would like to suggest to the House that we consider commissioning other statues to commemorate the roles which other women have played in Canadian political and social life.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member who moved this motion to think about that. It is not that he has deliberately excluded anyone—his motion has to do with Queen Elizabeth II and that is perfectly fair—but there are certainly others whom we could consider and they do not necessarily have to be Prime Ministers or monarchs. Consider, for example, the late J. S. Woodsworth who had a profound impact on Canadian political life but never became Prime Minister. I make a plea not only for the motion but also for recognition of others to the extent that it is possible. We do not want to have the parliamentary precinct cluttered with statues. However, those who are responsible for the commissioning of statues ought to try to think of ways to demonstrate that it is not just in queens, prime ministers and princes that we find human worth and what is to be valued. As Burns himself said, princes and lords are but the breath of kings, an honest man is the noblest work of God.

• (1740)

We should take into consideration in our statue policy that many of the finest achievements of Canadian men and women are achievements that, by their very nature, have put them beyond the pale of those who have come to occupy the positions to which the statues are customarily commissioned. I hope some day that that political reality will be reflected in our policy on the parliamentary precincts.

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour and a privilege for me to take part in this debate this afternoon on the motion of my friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper), a Member whose riding is the neighbouring riding of mine of Ottawa West. I congratulate the Hon. Member for presenting this motion. I believe it is a motion indicative of his fealty to the Crown and of his devotion to Canada. It is indicative also, I would suggest, of his appreciation of Canada and its place in history.

I believe that the preservation of our heritage is as important to Canada's future as good economic policies or social programs. The monarchy is an integral part of that heritage. The symbol of the Crown in Canada is important constitutionally as well as historically. The fact that we are a constitutional monarchy sets Canada apart from the United States, both politically and culturally.

It was loyalty to the Crown that led to the development of much of eastern and central Canada by the Loyalists who fled the 13 colonies following the American Revolution. Two hundred years later, it is the Crown or the Queen in whose name government institutions, from local Crown prosecutors to Parliament itself, function and give force to decisions.

Today's motion deals with a proposal to erect a statue of Her Majesty the Queen here on Parliament Hill. Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, since coming to the throne in 1952, has served her Canadian subjects well, with grace, energy and devotion. Her Majesty has paid many visits to Canada over the years, helping Canadians celebrate many milestones including Expo '67, the Montreal Olympics and the ceremonies marking the patriation of the Canadian Constitution.

I fondly remember being here on Parliament Hill on Dominion Day in our centennial year of 1967, that great and wonderful year in which Canadian nationalism came to the fore. What a memorable, glorious day that was when Her Majesty joined thousands of other Canadians here on the Hill in proudly celebrating our one hundredth birthday. How appropriate it is, therefore, that her presence be permanently celebrated here on the spot she has visited so often.

Besides paying visits to Canada, Her Majesty has travelled throughout the world. It is interesting to note that in 1957, after a visit to Canada, she paid a state visit to the United States in her capacity not as Queen of the United Kingdom but as Queen of Canada.

When Her Majesty spends time in Canada, she does so as Queen of Canada, not as the head of the Commonwealth. The title, Queen of Canada, is a relatively new one, having been created only in 1953 to reflect Canada's changing role in the world.

In 1957, shortly after she opened Parliament in John Diefenbaker's first Government, Her Majesty addressed Canadians on television and stated in part the following:

> Industry and commerce may bring wealth to a country, but the character of a nation is formed by other factors. Race, language, religion, culture and tradition all have some contribution to make, and when I think of the diversity of these factors in Canada today and the achievements that have grown from their union, I feel proud and happy to be Queen of such a nation.

Thirty years later, how much more proud Her Majesty must feel, given the Constitutional Accord of 1987 which makes Canada whole once again.

In fact, the Queen's record in regard to French-Canada is undoubtedly equal or better than that of any of her subjects. Long before bilingualism became a political catchword, the Queen was its living exponent. Able to speak French fluently, she has used both languages in speeches throughout Canada. In an address to the Quebec Legislature, she stated:

> It is agreeable to me—to think that there exists in our Commonwealth a country where I can express myself officially in French—one of the more important languages in our occidental civilization.

The character the Queen bestows upon the state goes so far as to legitimize and even honour that part of the community which opposes the Government, Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. It is a reality then when Parliament is dissolved in the Queen's name and the Royal Proclamation reads:

> Whereas we are desirous and resolved, as soon as may be, to meet our people of Canada, and to have their advice in Parliament: we do make known our Royal will and pleasure to call a Parliament, and do further declare that by the advice of our Privy Council for Canada, we have this day given orders for issuing writs, for calling a Parliament in Canada.

There are those who suggest that the monarchy has no role in our modern society. This attitude, with respect, betrays a lack of understanding and appreciation both of history and of our Constitution. In my experience, it does not reflect the thinking of the young Canadians with whom I have come in contact since my election and with whom I have discussed the role of the monarchy.

I think of my own 11-year-old daughter Jennifer and her friends who have a keen, abiding interest in the royals, not just Di and Sarah, although I must say that they are special favourites, but the entire Royal Family. They recognize, as I think most thoughtful Canadians do, that the Queen and what she symbolizes contributes to our uniqueness and special character in the northern half of this continent and indeed in the world.

Her Majesty, Elizabeth II has always acted as a constitutional monarch, co-operating with and assisting her Ministers as well as accepting their advice. Some 36 years of direct involvement in Canadian affairs as sovereign in addition to her apprenticeship to that role have made her counsel highly valuable. I know how important that counsel has been to our own Prime Ministers over the years as it is on a weekly basis to Prime Ministers in London. As the Queen told Canada in 1977:

> My family's association with this country over many generations allows me to see and appreciate Canada from another viewpoint, that of history.

That historical perspective, perhaps helped by being viewed from across the Atlantic, is, I would suggest, a perspective that many of us could benefit from in our analysis of the issues that come before this Chamber and the Parliament of Canada.

Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II has made so many contributions to Canada that I think it is only fitting that Canadians honour her through the erection of a statue here on Parliament Hill, the seat of Her Majesty's Government in Canada. Once again, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton for bringing this suggestion to the House.

• (1750)

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper). We are all very busy, either in our ridings or in this House helping to formulate and guide legislation through. There are many occasions when something like this passes by unnoticed, but our hon. friend and colleague did not let it pass by. He took the time to put this legislation before us and I commend him for that.

Canada is a proud country. It is proud of its history. The Royal Family has always played a very important part in Canadian history. For us, no royal figure has played a more prominent role than Queen Elizabeth II. She is truly the Queen of Canada.

When considering statues around Parliament Hill, I sometimes think we do things backwards. I do not know why we have waited so long. We have commissioned statues for Parliament Hill and we have discussed doing it for great people. Do not misunderstand, they are all deserving, but I think a statue Her Majesty should have been considered before this. Therefore, let the Thirty-third Parliament be remembered as the Parliament which cared enough to honour our very own Queen.

I have enjoyed the debate very much. Hon. Members have reminisced so much that I have learned a great deal about their lives. I also have a sampling of the Queen's very busy life in Canada. Many Canadians on occasion regard the Queen as being way over there in Great Britain and not really attached to Canada. That is wrong. I shall not go into this at great length but the Queen succeeded to the throne on February 6, 1952. Skipping down to 1956, the Queen assigned coats of arms to the Yukon and Northwest Territories. In 1957 she became the first reigning monarch to open a Canadian Parliament. If I may quote briefly, she said:

> I greet you as your Queen. Together we constitute the Parliament of Canada.

In 1960 Prince Andrew was born to the Queen, on February 19. Her Majesty honoured the three-quarter million member Canadian Legion that year as well by giving it the prefix Royal. In 1965 the Queen proclaimed the Maple Leaf flag, on January 28. She approved the design of the flag of the Province of Ontario on April 12. In 1967 she approved the Canadian Armed Forces ensign. She presided at the Centennial of Confederation weekend and addressed both Houses of Parliament. In 1969, on Dominion Day, she invested Prince Charles as Prince of Wales at Carnarvon Castle. In 1973 she toured Ontario, Prince Edward Island, Saskatchewan and Alberta. She spent Dominion Day in Charlottetown for the province's centenary. In Toronto she made a widely-acclaimed speech, and I quote:

> I want the Crown to be seen as a symbol of national sovereignty belonging to all. It is not only a link between Commonwealth nations, but between Canadian citizens of every national origin and ancestry.

In 1977 the Queen celebrated her Silver Jubilee in Ottawa, in October, and opened the third Session of the Thirtieth Parliament. She said at that time:

> I dedicate myself anew to the people and the nation I am proud to serve.

Going down to 1981, the Queen held an investiture of the Order of Military Merit of Canada at Buckingham Palace. She declared to her Canadian Privy Council her consent to the marriage of the Prince of Wales. In March she approved a new flag for the Governor General. In 1982, as some of my colleagues have referred to, the Queen proclaimed the revised Canadian Constitution at Ottawa on April 17.

Those are just some examples of the extent to which the Queen visits and cares about Canada.

I just want to say that the Bill put forward by my hon. colleague has my unequivocal support. We very badly need a statue of the Queen of Canada for all Canadians to view on the grounds of this Parliament. It will remind everyone in Canada that Her Majesty is our Queen.

Mr. Pat Binns (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I realize that the clock is running and I may not have very much time to make my remarks in this debate, but I want to begin by congratulating the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper).

As one of the junior Members of this House, I speak from a slightly different perspective than some of my colleagues. I have never met the Queen, although I have had the opportunity to meet a number of members of the Royal Family. Despite the fact that I never had that opportunity, I certainly respect her role and feel she maintains the traditional relationship with Commonwealth countries around the world, which is very important to us here in Canada as well as in other nations around the world.

I recall her many trips to Canada over the last number of years, in particular her 1973 visit to Prince Edward Island where she commemorated the one-hundredth anniversary of the entrance of that province into Confederation. She was there for Dominion Day, a proud day for all Islanders and one we will long remember.

Her family has some relationship to all of us in their individual capacities. For example, I think Prince Charles is the same age as myself and so my family would relate to that particular year, and so on. I think all Canadians feel some relationship to the monarchy in one way or another. Prince Edward visited Prince Edward Island last summer. That again shows the relationship we have, and there are so many other connections we have with the monarchy and the institution. I live, for example, in Kings County, just a mile down the road from Queens County. Again, the relationship to the monarchy in our heritage is very important.

Let me just conclude by saying that I think our Canadian identity is very important. It developed because we recognize a sovereign leader. We have a Queen and that makes us different from our neighbour to the south. It influences our day-to-day policies, internal and external. The Queen has been a leading force in our development. I very much support the motion put forward by the Hon. Member and I hope all my colleagues will join us in supporting the motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the order is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

---

• (1800)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

Adjournment Debate

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION—LACK OF FINANCIAL RESOURCES/FARM FORECLOSURES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, last September I put a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and pointed out that the Farm Credit Corporation had slipped into a position of negative equity of $124 million, making it essentially insolvent. That was the state of insolvency of the Farm Credit Corporation on April 1 last year. I am told that by April 1 this year the level of insolvency will be over $300 million. The Farm Credit Corporation is in a terrible situation.

Many Canadians may not be too worried about the level of insolvency of a Crown corporation of the federal Government, but this corporation is charged with the responsibility of providing long term credit at stable levels in order to help some 50,000 farmers in this country who are either insolvent or facing serious financial difficulty. I asked the Prime Minister how this corporation could carry out this responsibility when it, itself, is insolvent?

The greatest failure of the Government in terms of agriculture has been the handling of the farm debt crisis. That crisis was well catalogued in the fall of 1984 by a report of the Farm Credit Corporation which indicated that thousands of farmers were in serious financial difficulty.

The Minister did little during that three and one-half year period. It took him almost a year and a half to bring in legislation for a Farm Debt Review Board. The legislation had no teeth but simply established a mechanism for consultation between farmers and their creditors. If the banks decided not to do anything, they simply waited out the stay of execution for the 120 days as prescribed, then went ahead with the foreclosure. It took years to get even that mechanism in place.

Next, the Minister introduced stay of foreclosures on people who had mortgages with the Farm Credit Corporation. He maintained that policy for some 18 months, without providing money to the Farm Credit Corporation or giving any meaningful programs to reschedule that debt.

The debt of Canadian agriculture during the last three and one-half years has grown from some $19 billion to approximately $22 billion, at a time when farm incomes are being chopped and the entire system is deteriorating.

When the Outlook conference was held and the Government announced all of its massive initiatives to help Canadian agriculture, it is interesting to note that it included the announcement that it would have to write off some $500 million more during the next three years. It is another indication of a tremendous opportunity lost, where the Government simply held on to land during the last three and a half years, rather than take a pro-active approach to find ways to reschedule debt and save literally thousands of farmers.

There are more farmers in serious difficulty now than in the fall of 1984 when the Government took office. Moreover, for over a year the chairman and vice-chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation were putting forward recovery programs. All of those were rejected by the Government. Finally, in December, it discharged the chairman and vice-chairman and brought in new people, one from the Treasury Board and another who was not an active farmer, to take charge of the Farm Credit Corporation and try to come up with a recovery program. Since then a new survey has been announced to find out how serious the financial difficulty is.

• (1805)

What we need is not more surveys. What we need is a pro-active recovery program to try to keep as many as possible of the 50,000 farmers who are insolvent or in serious financial difficulty on the farm. I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will announce tonight a complete revamping and recovery package for the Farm Credit Corporation so that farmers who are facing the loss of their land will know the Government is finally coming to its senses and putting in place a program not only to put this Crown corporation on a sound financial footing but to help the thousands of farmers who need help today.

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in July of last year the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) stated:

> We will be taking action to keep the FCC viable and to ensure that we are meeting the farm community's credit requirements.

He said further:

> —we are going to have to take steps to put the FCC on a firmer footing. I can assure the farm community that the federal Government will do just that.

These statements still apply. There has never been any question of the Government's responsibility for losses suffered by the Farm Credit Corporation. That is why the corporation has been able to continue an active lending program despite the financial losses it has suffered. There has been increasing concern in the farm community about the financial situation of the Farm Credit Corporation and it is important that this concern be allayed.

The Government has taken action. Funding for the completion for the 1987-88 lending program of the Farm Credit Corporation has been announced. This has provided additional funding of $100 million toward the past losses of the corporation and has indicated the Government's intention of addressing the remaining financial problems of the FCC once a business plan has been developed which clearly identifies the expected future financial position of the corporation.

The root cause of the financial problems of the FCC is the inability of its clients to meet their loan commitments. We have taken steps to deal with these basic problems. The commodity based loan program and funding for the FCC's participation in farm debt reviews are specifically aimed at the clients of the Farm Credit Corporation. The income support offered through the generally available Western Grain Stabilization Program and the programs offered under the Agricultural Stabilization Act and the Special Grains Program have also helped FCC clients to service their debts.

With respect to the financial position of the Farm Credit Corporation itself, I emphasize again that there has never been any question that the Government is responsible for the losses suffered by the FCC. The Government has always acknowledged this. When the full extent of the financial difficulty of the corporation is known, and the business plan is in hand, the appropriate action to address these problems will definitely be taken.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES—DIOXIN IN PAPER PRODUCTS—CHLORINE BLEACHING PROCESS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, you look like a coffee drinker to me. I will bet that, like myself, you really do not feel human in the morning until you have had your first cup of coffee. I can see by the way you are nodding your head that that is true. I do not think you should feel badly about this, Mr. Speaker, because there are thousands, probably millions of people like you and I who need that cup of coffee in the morning before we feel human. How do you go about making your coffee, Mr. Speaker? I use a Melitta coffee maker. When I get up in the morning I fill the container of the coffee maker with water and then I get out the coffee. Coffee is an awful price now, is it not, Mr. Speaker?

• (1810)

I get out the coffee and I put it in the filter. I put that into the coffee maker and turn on the switch. Before very long I have a wonderful cup of coffee. I know you would enjoy having a cup of coffee with me, Mr. Speaker.

Lately, I really have not felt the same way about my coffee as I did before. I do not really look forward to it now the way I used to. The reason for that, and I bet you probably feel the same as I do, Mr. Speaker, is because I have read in newspaper reports that traces of dioxin have been found in the paper filters for coffee makers.

Dioxin is a deadly, deadly toxic chemical. Fortunately, the most deadly kind of dioxin has not been found in the paper filters for coffee makers. But the most deadly kind of dioxin there is is very deadly indeed. Just a trace of dioxin of that sort can cause birth defects. It can cause cancer and damage to the immune system. A level of safe exposure to that kind of dioxin has never been established.

Fortunately for you and I, Mr. Speaker, as coffee drinkers, traces of that sort of dioxin have not been found in those coffee filters as yet. However, it is no wonder when we read the stories that you and I, Mr. Speaker, will look very carefully now at those coffee filters that we use in the mornings. It is no wonder that Your Honour and I watch the coffee dripping through those filters with much more intense interest than we ever did in the past. It is no wonder that Your Honour and I think twice as we sip our coffee that has come through those paper filters each morning.

It is not just the paper coffee filters in which dioxin has been found. It has been found in other forms of paper products as well. I refer to facial tissues, and I am seriously thinking of going back to the linen handkerchief. It has been found in paper plates. Just think of all the paper plates used by McDonald's and Burger King. It has been found in paper towels. In those types of paper products traces of the most deadly kind of dioxin known to mankind has been found.

When you and I think about this, Mr. Speaker, it is only logical that we feel that in using these products there is a transfer of the dioxin from the product to ourselves. What is causing this sort of thing? We do not really know for sure. However, the paper companies and the pulp and paper industry feel and suspect that this dioxin is formed in the bleaching process for paper. Chlorine is used in this bleaching process. Our pulp and paper industry uses this chlorine. The pulp and paper industry in the United States uses chlorine in the bleaching process as well.

You may remember, Mr. Speaker, that just last week the Department of the Environment conducted some tests on pulp and paper mills and found in and around a pulp and paper mill in Nanaimo, British Columbia, traces of dioxin.

In Europe, chlorine is not used in the paper bleaching process. An oxygen bleaching process is used instead of chlorine. It is used because it has been claimed that the oxygen process does not produce dioxin and that the process for paper is more safe. I wonder why it is that we are not using that oxygen process here. If it is safer and does not produce dioxin, and if we used it here, you and I, Mr. Speaker, would feel a lot better when we had that cup of filtered coffee every morning.

• (1815)

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, how about it? I put the same question to the Parliamentary Secretary, how about it, Mrs. Parliamentary Secretary? When are we going to get the pulp and paper industry in Canada to start using an oxygen bleaching process instead of a chlorine bleaching process for paper that causes and results in dioxin in paper products?

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I join with you and my hon. colleague in looking forward to that cup of coffee in the morning to make myself human.

The Hon. Member asks that the federal Government require Canadian pulp and paper mills to switch from the chlorine bleaching process, now used in Canada, to oxygen bleaching, as used in many Swedish mills. The reason for this is the detection of low levels of the dioxins 2, 3, 7, 8 TCDD in paper products, and also in effluents from some U.S. mills that use chlorine bleaching.

I believe it is premature to conclude that such a conversion is immediately required. Both the Department of the Environment, which regulates environmental matters, and Consumer and Corporate Affairs, which regulates product exposure, have been advised by National Health and Welfare that, based on a preliminary risk assessment, it is unlikely that there are any significant health risks associated with dioxins in paper products. National Health and Welfare will conduct a quantitative assessment when studies on the migration of dioxins from paper products are complete. That Department is also monitoring work which is under way in this area in the United States.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has formed an interdepartmental task force to address product concern issues, and is interacting with officials of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency in this area. The Departments of National Health and Welfare, Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and Environment are represented on this task force.

In addition, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) has formed a task force with Environment Canada to determine the amount of dioxin released from the Canadian pulp and paper industry, the levels in the environment, and to recommend ways and means of controlling releases.

It has been advocated by some, as well as my hon. colleague across the floor, that the oxygen bleaching process as a means of avoiding dioxin formation should be used, rather than the present chlorine bleaching process. Oxygen prebleaching is now fairly extensively used in Sweden. In fact, eight of the fourteen Swedish bleached kraft mills now use it. However, the Swedes use oxygen prebleaching to limit total organic chlorine discharges and not specifically dioxin discharges. The process is being implemented under a Swedish action plan that has the goal of reducing total organic chlorine compound discharges to 1.5 to 2 kilograms per tonne of product by 1991. At present, one Canadian mill uses oxygen prebleaching. That is the E. B. Eddy Mill at Espanola, Ontario.

We are seeking reliable information on the specific levels of dioxins formed and released with oxygen bleaching. It is possible that dioxin formation may still occur with the oxygen prebleaching process, as chlorine and chlorine compounds still continue to be used. However, the amount of chlorine used is less than that required for conventional chlorine bleaching.

The departmental task force within Environment Canada is charged with assessing the effectiveness of this and other technologies that may be used to reduce dioxin formation. Environment Canada officials have held preliminary discussions with the Swedish Environmental Protection Board, and will have further consultations with them and environmental authorities of other countries concerned with this issue.

• (1820)

Thorough assessments needs to be performed to determine dioxin levels in effluents and products, the risks posed, and the effectiveness of various technologies to reduce their presence. This work is now under way. Environment Canada will be reporting on progress.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY—DRUG PRICE INCREASES/ BILL C-22—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on January 22, 1988, I put a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), in view of the fact that the Ontario Ministry of Health published information with regard to the high cost of prescription drugs and the fact that it had conducted a survey of some 1,000 drugs and found that the prices of most of those drugs were rising beyond the Consumer Price Index. In some instances they were rising in excess of 100 per cent and, in a particular instance, in excess of 250 per cent.

As usual with that particular Minister, his answer to my question was totally unsatisfactory. In fact, I quoted for the Minister's consumption his own words as reported at page 10666 of Hansard wherein he said:

> One of the consequences of the activity of the Senate is to raise once again the spectre of whether drug prices will increase at a faster rate than the cost of living. They will not. I maintain that those who claim that they will are wrong and have no basis for making that claim.

Those were the Minister's comments away back then.

From time to time I have been required to purchase medication for my two daughters, Leigh-Ann and Jennifer. I have found in tracing the prices of drugs for young girls five and six years old that the prices have increased. It is not a phenomenon which has occurred only in the Province of Ontario. It has occurred in other jurisdictions as well.

What is perhaps very appalling is that the Government of Canada, in particular the Minister responsible, has not seen fit to act on behalf of Canadian consumers. He has failed to exercise the responsibilities given to him as Minister. Also, he seems to want to slough off the issue as something for which they were not responsible.

If one were to check Hansard and the proceedings of the various standing committees, in particular the legislative committee seized with Bill C-22, one would find clear and unequivocal statements by myself, and indeed by other Hon. Members, that in effect the mere tabling of the legislation, by providing to multinational corporations an extended monopoly of upwards to 10 years, would result in higher drug prices for Canadians both by brand name and perhaps by generic.

The reason we said so at that time was that the multinational corporations would choke off the viability of generic firms, thereby necessitating them either to float money on the markets and/or to increase the price of their particular product to generate additional revenues.

A few months have gone by since the passage of Bill C-22, and what we predicted has come true—higher drug prices for Canadians.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has abdicated his responsibility. He refuses to give a directive to the new Drug Prices Review Board in which I must admit I do not have much faith. He refuses to exercise the persuasive powers that are tied into that particular board. He refuses to give it a directive to investigate, when it is up and going, the drugs which have been reviewed by the Ontario Ministry of Health.

• (1825)

There has been an abdication of the responsibilities to consumers, to young people such as my daughters Jennifer and Leigh-Anne who, through their parents, have to pay higher costs for their medication, to senior citizens, to poor people, and to people on fixed incomes across the country. This was a time for the Government of Canada to seize the opportunity and act forcibly on behalf of Canadian consumers.

I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will stand in her place and share with us a new attitude, a new behaviour by the Government toward Canadian consumers. I hope that we will not get the same pat answers which we have been getting from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs for well over a year with regard to the high cost of prescription drugs.

It is time for new action. It is time for a new attitude by the Government which is quickly losing the confidence and respect of Canadians on a host of consumer-related issues.

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Government does not have to change its attitude toward consumers because it is and always has been concerned about consumers and will continue to be in the future.

It has been stated on numerous occasions that Bill C-22 has been carefully designed to balance a variety of objectives in respect of the pharmaceutical industry in Canada. Among these are increased research and development, increased chemical manufacturing, a healthy and growing generic drug industry, improved health care and, very important, the expansion of consumer protection in respect of drug prices.

Bill C-22 is both an instrument of industrial policy and, at the same time, an instrument designed to ensure that Canadian consumers have access to fairly priced drugs.

Members of the Opposition have consistently maintained that Bill C-22 fails to provide this guarantee. In fact, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) has said that drug prices in the Province of Ontario are rising faster than the Consumer Price Index because of Bill C-22. I point out that drug prices across Canada have risen more than the Consumer Price Index in each of the last 10 years. Bill C-22 did not exist then. How does the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond answer this?

In fact, members of the Opposition have failed to see, as they usually do, that Bill C-22 for the first time provides a new mechanism which will ensure fairer prices for consumers. The instrument the Bill created to ensure that prices will not get out of hand is the Patented Medicine Price Review Board.

In fact, the Board began start-up procedures over a month ago when the Chairman, Dr. Harry Eastman, and Vice-Chairman, Dr. Robert Goyer were appointed. At this time, through the development of effective regulations, the Board is gearing up to address not only the question of increases in Ontario which were the subject of considerable press attention as noted by our hon. friend, but also to address the prices charged for all patented drugs.

This is an important distinction because Bill C-22 provides the consumer much wider protection than was available under the previous compulsory licensing system. It is interesting to note that without Bill C-22 the price increases reported by the Province of Ontario would not have been an issue as there would have been no board with the potential to address the issue. Canadian consumers would have absorbed these increases because without Bill C-22 consumers have no way of knowing whether they are paying fair prices for their patent medicines.

The Board collects the necessary data to rule on the appropriateness of the drug prices and it will analyse, not only the information provided by companies themselves but also information from individuals and the provinces.

I am confident that with all the protective measures in place the interests of Canadian consumers are in good hands. The Minister has not abdicated his responsibility on Bill C-22 because the Board does exist and will examine this and other issues for the benefit of all Canadians in a way which was not previously possible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at 10 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, February 5, 1988

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

RAILWAY SAFETY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, February 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-105, an Act to ensure the safe operation of railways and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We should now be in the question and comment period of the speech of the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) on Bill C-105. If there are no questions or comments, we will proceed with debate.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, there is no question that Bill C-105, with respect to rail safety, is a very important Bill. Any Member of Parliament from Winnipeg should have a major interest in all questions of rail safety. The maintenance shops for both railways which employ thousands of railway workers is in Winnipeg. It is a city which is the turn-around point for most traffic, passenger and freight, therefore gives employment to a great many workers who actually move the trains.

When one looks at the record of this industry with respect to safety and sees the number of collisions and derailments that have taken place in recent years, one cannot help but feel that it is not only important that we discuss it thoroughly but that a Bill of this nature should have been brought forth years ago.

I have some figures obtained from the Department of Transport and they are, to say the least, shocking. In the last five years, from 1983 to 1987, there were 1,318 derailments across the country. There were 423 collisions and 3,437 crossing accidents which resulted in the death of 361 people. We are talking about a very serious situation, a situation which should have been dealt with a long time ago.

What are some of the reasons we have had so many accidents which have led to well over 300 fatalities? My colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), talked about one of the problems yesterday, that is, the thousands of level crossings across Canada. I do not believe there is another industrialized country in the world which has permitted so many railway level crossings to continue to exist. It is true that because of our relatively small population and because of the large area which Canada covers, there is no way in which we could get rid of level crossings as rapidly and effectively as they have in European countries.

The process has also been slowed down to a snail's pace because of the necessity for local communities to participate financially in doing away with level crossings. In my own part of Winnipeg alone where one level crossing was done away with, and another was projected, we were looking at expenditures of more than $10 million in each case, which required the city and the province to participate at a time when their financial ability to pay part of the cost is, to say the least, very difficult.

There is another reason for the number of derailments and accidents, that is, the cut-back and the reductions of the railways in their expenditures for maintenance of equipment and of trackage. This is a long-standing fact which has been brought to the attention of Governments, the former Liberal Government and the present Conservative Government, and by unions such as the Brotherhood of Maintenance and Way Employees whose members work on improving, maintaining or repairing tracks. Other unions such as the one to which the carmen belong have also complained about the continued use of rail cars and freight trains which have defects and need repairing.

• (1010)

The Government's decision to deregulate railway transportation will mean that the railway companies will find it much more difficult to compete not only between themselves but with alternative methods of transportation such as trucks and ships. If railway companies like any other companies have to compete and worry about whether they can continue to keep the kind and volume of traffic they have served in the past or to obtain more traffic, then one of the ways that they will try to compete is by cutting back on the maintenance of their equipment and their tracks. What we will see are more accidents, more collisions, more derailments and, I am sorry to say, more deaths as a result of these cut-backs. The morale of railway workers has gone down, down, down in my City of Winnipeg. I am sure that in other cities it has also gone down. It was not unusual to see working for the railways either in the running trades or in the maintenance shops second and third generation workers whose fathers and grandfathers worked for the same railway. The feeling of loyalty, the feeling that the railway was a good place to work is much less now than it once was. It will decrease more in the future. The reasons for this are very simple.

When I became a Member of Parliament the railway unions negotiated for over 200,000 members. Today, they negotiate for fewer than 75,000 members. In the relentless determination of the railways to be more efficient, which really means more profitable, they have cut employment to the bone. Thus people working for the railways now are not likely to advise their sons or daughters that they should think about working for the railways. Rather, they will be advising their children to look elsewhere for work.

Before the election the Government talked and still talks about its determination, its desire to consult with people who are affected concerning a certain question in any area in which the Government wants to make progress or to change the way that things are done. In the legislation that is before us the Government wants the companies to have the right to be able to perform random checks of their employees to protect the railways and the public against those who have been drinking or using drugs. I can understand the concern of the Government. I can understand the concern of the railways and their unions. I can understand the concern of the public. There have been accidents in which there seems to be evidence that some employees running the train had been using alcohol or drugs that cannot be excused.

Surely the way for a Government which believes in consultation and for railway companies which have more than 50 years of collective bargaining with their employees behind them to deal with the problem is not in a ham-fisted and tough way saying, "We are going to amend the legislation so we can decide unilaterally and in a random way that employees will be tested for drug or alcohol use". Surely, the way to cut back on the dangers and the problems which can arise, which do arise and which will arise if railway employees use drugs or alcohol while working is for railway management to sit down with the leaders of the unions representing their workers and together work out a system of education. In this way the use of alcohol and drugs which takes place among a small percentage of railway workers, as it does among a small percentage of any group of Canadians wherever they work, can be dealt with.

The former Liberal Government was, as is the present Government, driven by the determination that the railways have to become cost efficient and that their deficits have to be reduced or eliminated. The concern about employees, whether it be with respect to their number or anything else, has become a small factor, if it is a factor at all, for the management of the two national railway companies.

This legislation is deficient in many ways. Its objectives may sound right, but it will not succeed.

I wish to refer to another aspect of this legislation which was referred to by my friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). It is the question of stress and how it affects rail safety and the accidents which occur on railways. I refer Hon. Members to an article which appeared in The Globe and Mail of yesterday entitled: "Stress rides the rails". It is an article written by Professor Brian Tucker who teaches at the University of Saskatchewan's College of Commerce. He states in the article:

> Three train accidents in as many days last month claimed four lives, injured 35 and caused millions of dollars in damage. The latest episodes in the continuing saga of death and destruction on our railways, they point a spotlight on stress research. A year ago, a locomotive engineer came to see me to talk about the stress he was experiencing from his job. He talked about the trauma trainmen undergo when a car is hit at a crossing.

• (1020)

Earlier I referred to the number of crossing accidents that we have had. There have been almost 3,500 in the last five years.

The article further states:

> He described the sickening feeling when an engineer realizes there is no way he can stop thousands of tons of locomotive in time.

That is one experience. There are dozens, if not hundreds, of railway employees who have been involved in an accident. After there has been an accident, a collision, or a derailment, an inquiry is held between the railways and the Department of Transport to find out what happened and who was responsible. In many cases, they come to the conclusion that the engineer, the trainman, and the conductor were not responsible, the accident resulted from factors beyond their control, and they were absolved. But just because they are absolved does not mean that they can quickly forget about it. Not in the railways, but in many companies there are personnel departments with people who are trained, for example, including social workers, psychologists, or psychiatrists on a consulting basis, or social workers who can work with the employees and help them overcome the trauma and the tremendous feeling of guilt that they must have, even when they have been absolved of responsibility.

The railways have been loath to do that, either because they do not understand the importance, or possibly because it would just be another cost at a time when they are being pressed to reduce the cost, and become more efficient, which means cutting back on the financial burdens. In the article, Professor Tucker further states:

> Handling stress is a vital part of a manager's job. Managers can and must design jobs and working conditions to ease stress levels . . . When will CP, CN and Via take stress seriously? When will they (and other employers who provide extremely stressful working conditions) realize that proper stress management can prevent disasters?

Professor Tucker asks some very important questions. If we look at the record, the answers are that up until now the railways have been, to say the least, remiss in following the type of procedures and the type of suggestions that Professor Tucker has made in this article. Given the pressure on the railways to become more financially efficient, which means to save money, I suggest that the railways will not voluntarily follow the advice of Professor Tucker, and similar advice given to them many times by the railway union.

Rather than simply passing this Bill and including in it the right of companies or the Department to test employees on a random basis, the Department and the Government ought to be saying to the railways that it is time they started to deal with these very serious problems in a realistic manner. It is time to sit down with the employees, through their unions, and start to develop programs which will encourage workers to avoid the use of drugs and alcohol when they are on their way to work.

In that way, on a year to year steady basis, we will begin to see a reduction—which we have not so far seen—in the number of train derailments, train collisions, railway crossing accidents, and certainly a reduction in the number of deaths which result from rail accidents.

In my Province of Manitoba we have had a number of derailments. There was one in the centre of the city in the CPR yards where trains are moving and switching. In that derailment freight cars containing highly toxic chemicals left the track. In Winnipeg there could have been a situation as critical and dangerous to hundreds of people as the derailment in Mississauga a few years ago.

Those derailments could be avoided, or certainly the numbers could be minimized, if the railways were required to take the type of precautions that they have been urged to do, the identification of cars carrying dangerous chemicals, and much better planning of movement of freight which has potentially dangerous chemicals or other products on board. The railways have to do a much better job. They will not do a much better job unless the Government and the Department of Transport sit down with the railway management and with the unions and work out a program which will lead to the thinking and planning that will decrease, if not completely eliminate, the accidents and the situations that we have seen happen much too frequently in recent years.

While we are not going to oppose this Bill, we certainly think that there is a great deal that should be in the Bill which is not there.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). The Hon. Member has emphasized at considerable length the reduction of persons employed by the railways over a period of time, and I would suggest that this is in direct relation to the reduction in the number of miles travelled by the railways, and the accidents have been related accordingly. One of the greatest railway disasters which hit western Canada was the one that happened in Alberta. As a result of that accident, an inquiry took place conducted by the Hon. Mr. Justice Foisy. In his report Mr. Justice Foisy pointed out that no fault could be laid regarding the integrity of the system, the operation of the mechanics, or whatever signal system was in place. As the Hon. Member knows, it means that in this instance that disaster took place by reason of human fault. The Hon. Member, and all of us, are very concerned with the safety of railways and a reduction in the number of accidents. Is it fair to say, if human fault is one of the major causes of rail derailments or head-on collisions, that we should work together to find ways and means of reducing, not excusing, the number of incidents which take place?

• (1030)

The Hon. Member indicated that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) might be inclined to impose compulsory, random testing for alcohol or drug abuse. I remind the Hon. Member that a committee was formed, comprised of union people, management personnel, and people involved in safety. That committee reached a conclusion and reported.

I will refer to some of its findings. For example, 7 per cent of those surveyed were aware of workers drinking alcoholic beverages during shifts, 4 per cent were aware of drugs on the job, 52 per cent said that alcohol used by employees had compromised job safety at some time or other during the course of a run, and 48 per cent said that mandatory drug testing of railway personnel was desirable.

The Minister has not taken that position. He said that we must provide for a position where testing for alcohol and drugs takes place to determine what is the cause of an accident. If it is drug or alcohol, and the number of events justifies such course of action at a later date, then the Minister would be prepared to review and make a recommendation accordingly, in the interest of safety. Is that not a fair conclusion to take, in the interest of safety?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, nothing I said is contradictory or opposed to what the Hon. Member has just said. The accident at Hinton and many other accidents were caused entirely or in part by human failure, and part of human failure is the use of drugs or alcohol by railway employees.

Why should we be surprised about that? A huge majority of automobile accidents, particularly those which lead to the death of passengers, occurs because one or the other of the drivers of the cars was under the influence of liquor or drugs. The same is true when it comes to railway accidents. I tried to say that when I spoke earlier.

The way to deal with that, if we really want results, is not by the Minister calling for random or mandatory tests. It is not for the railways to implement unilaterally what they believe to be the best educational program. Because of the very marked reduction in the number of railway employees, because of the worry of railway employees that they may not have a job a year or two or five from now, and because of many other reasons, morale among railway workers is very low. Therefore, any unilateral proposal by the companies is looked on with a great deal of suspicion by the employees and by their unions.

I say again to the Hon. Member who has asked the question that if we want to succeed, we need co-operation, discussion, and development of programs. This must be done co-operatively among the companies and their management, the workers and their unions, and the Government—the Department of Transport and hopefully the Department of Health and Welfare. If we develop those kinds of educational information programs, I believe that—and I have had a good deal of experience working with unions in many ways—they would be accepted by the vast majority of workers. There would be real reason to believe that those kinds of programs would be successful. If we implemented such programs, we would begin to see a marked reduction over a period of years in the kinds of accidents which have taken place and which all of us regret.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North. I do not think any one of us can really get into a debate on why the morale of the railway workers is low. One reason might be is that they have failed to accept reality.

The position taken by the Hon. Member is such that he does not want any unilateral action to be taken by railway management. If that is the case, I suggest to him that the unions are free to take whatever attitude and action they want to take now to improve morale and safety of the railways. It is just as much in their interest as it is in that of management.

What action has the union taken from the point of view of improving morale, accepting the reality of the situation that exists in the industry today, and ensuring that the number of derailments and other incidents are reduced?

I emphasize the hard premise the Hon. Member comes down on that no unilateral action may be taken by railway management. The union members on the task force to which I referred a moment ago were prepared to recommend a harder line that the one taken by the Minister. They did not adopt that, nor has the Minister of Transport. He is prepared to work out a process of safety regulation in conjunction with the unions rather than take the recommendation which was put forward. That is the approach the Minister has taken in respect of safety in the railway transportation segment in years to come. I hope that it works, and I hope that with the co-operation of the Hon. Member we will get it.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the Hon. Member would suggest, as he did a moment ago, or even believe or think that railway workers and their unions are not prepared to face reality. They have had to live with the reality that in the period of less than 25 years the number of railway employees for whom the unions bargain has been reduced from well over 200,000 to under 75,000. They have had to live with that reality, and they have had to accept it.

I point out to the Hon. Member that the main point of contention between the striking group of railway workers whom we legislated back to work last August and the companies was the demand for improvement of the job security system. The main issue of contention of the shopcraft workers who are just waiting to go on strike and with whom the railways have stopped negotiating is the whole question of job security. They have faced reality.

• (1040)

Let me say just one more thing. I have not said for a moment that I am opposed to any kind of unilateral program initiated by the companies or by the Government. What I have said is that if any proposals, suggestions or programs that are designed to help cut back the number of railway accidents, crossing accidents and derailments are to work, they will work much better if they are planned and implemented through consultation, discussion and co-operation between the Government, the Departments responsible, the railway management and the workers on the job through their unions. Without that kind of co-operation, unfortunately in my belief, tragically the programs will fail.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say a few words on Bill C-105, the Railway Safety Act. We have seen enough derailments and accidents on rail lines in the last several years. Legislation in this regard is desperately needed. This Bill may be a starting point, but our side sees a lot of weaknesses in the Bill and we want to see it strengthened if it is to pass in the House after going to committee. When the Bill does go to committee, we hope the Government will be open and prepared to deal with the issues and the amendments needed to make the legislation effective. I say that because when drafters of a Bill put it together they often overlook weaknesses, and sometimes do not even deal with all of the existing legislation needing amendment.

A few weeks ago, we had Bill C-92 before the Agriculture Committee which had to do with the use of producer cars. That legislation provided for a refund of services by farmers in western Canada who use producer railway cars. These included carrying costs and interest charges et cetera. As the witnesses give their testimony before the committee it became apparent that the Bill did not really deal with all aspects. There was an extra cost in the maintenance of country elevator delivery points by using individual producer cars. This cost was being charged by the railroads to the general cost of transporting grain in western Canada. We had the situation where we had an inadequate Bill because it did not cover transportation costs. It only covered those costs are refundable through the Canadian Wheat Board.

Unfortunately, government Members on the committee refused to agree to spend the extra time to have all that information put before the committee. The same thing will apply to this legislation. Obviously we perceive many weaknesses. If we can deal with those weaknesses without the hammer of the Government's majority coming down, it will make for a better situation in dealing with legislation as important as public safety. Clearly we need improvement in the legislation.

We saw the Hinton train disaster in 1986 when 23 people were killed. Accidents have occurred in my own constituency with fatal results. Canada is rapidly moving to more and more travel by car and truck. Level crossings are dangerous and we have to deal with the question of the transportation of pesticides.

Deregulation of the railroad inevitably brings on more problems and threatens the safety of rail lines. We see deregulation having tremendous impacts in various parts of the country. The Globe and Mail carried a story yesterday in which the senior Vice-President, Mr. D. L. Fletcher of CNR, said that CN must move ahead rapidly to cut back on the number of employees because a general election might happen later this year. Surely that kind of secret memorandum where the political game is being played without thought of the workers and of their safety is a serious matter.

There is so much secrecy. We read reports and documents that the rail line from Espanola to Sault Ste. Marie in northern Ontario may ultimately be shut down because of deregulation because the volume of traffic carried over the line is something less than 400,000 tonnes a year. Yet when you go to the CPR to get a clear statement of its intentions, you never get an answer in any way, shape or form. This kind of secrecy does not give me much confidence that we will get any information from them on matters of safety.

The whole question of deregulation of the railroad system in this country is designed to make greater use of the American railway lines. It will allow shippers to go to the railway companies requiring them to provide a rate to move produce and lumber, whatever it is, down to the American lines to be moved across the United States. In the trade deal that we recently signed between Canada and the United States, the Government gave away one of the major economic benefits to western Canada by indicating that the Crow benefit, which amounts to some $700 million a year to western grain producers, is, in fact, a subsidy and will no longer be provided to shippers of grain and oil seed to the Pacific northwest.

So we have a situation where the Government in its trade negotiations with the United States is going to the GATT negotiations saying yes, this is a subsidy so it will ultimately be removed. The Government has stated that its policy is to be "a me too policy" to the United States in trade negotiations of the Uruguay round at the GATT. That whole movement of deregulation we see as being in conflict. The responsibility for safety is given to the Minister rather than to the CTC. The Minister is also implementing deregulation which is designed to put more pressure on rail employees to create a more competitive rail system with less regulation and less safety.

• (1050)

Those are some of the concerns we have with this legislation. When we are deregulating and giving over the responsibility for safety to the rail companies, we must also look at how good these large, centralized companies are as corporate citizens. Let us look at the way these companies maintain their buildings and properties in many communities along the north shore of Lake Huron, those communities from Sudbury to Sault Ste Marie. They certainly do not inspire much confidence. They are usually the worst looking buildings, the worst kept properties and on the worst lands. We just hope that this legislation, when amended, will have enough teeth to provide that the railway companies will not be so bad at keeping the safety of workers as a paramount consideration.

We know how the railway companies have acted in communities like the Garden River Indian Band. Negotiations have been going on for the past seven or eight years over lands which were given to the CPR to build a railway 75 or 100 years ago. The CPR refuses to return those lands which contain rich gravel deposits which could be extremely useful in the economic development of the band. The company refused to negotiate, even after an important legal decision in British Columbia. The company is saying that if the Garden River Indian Band wants the lands returned to it, then let it sue the company. That is just great, but the Garden River Band does not have the funds to carry on a long legal battle.

The corporate citizenship of this company is drawn into question. Can this company which has received tens of millions of dollars of benefits from the Government of Canada, including the railway right-of-way through the land of the Garden River Band, be trusted to be concerned with safety when it shows such incredibly bad corporate citizenship by holding up the development of a major new four-lane highway which would benefit not only the Garden River Band but the general public and the safety of the highways? That whole development has been stalled for several years because of the reluctance of the CPR to give any consideration to the Garden River Band which gave up, through an expropriation by the federal Government, a great deal of land 75 or 100 years ago.

This legislation is of great concern to our caucus as well because of Clause 41 which provides for fines and penalties. A single individual railway worker can be meted out a penalty of $10,000. That seems to be pretty severe and could work an incredible hardship on an individual railway worker, perhaps causing him to pay out his life savings. At the same time, the corporate fine for the railway company, whether it is CN or CP or one of the other billion-dollar corporations, is $50,000 maximum. That is a pittance for a large railway company which might find it more convenient to pay the fine occasionally rather than carry out important safety measures in the operation of the railway, the operation of level crossings or the installation of new equipment which would make the railway safer.

We are concerned about the level of fines and penalties provided by Clause 41 of this legislation. We are also concerned with the composition of the railway safety committees provided for in Clause 44. The clause provides for a committee of a maximum of 11 persons. That may be adequate, but it may not. Canada is a large country. There are 10 provinces and two territories. The size of the committee may not be adequate.

We are also concerned with the structure of the committee. The clause provides for only one representative of labour. In practically every train accident where there is a loss of life, labour is almost invariably involved in that loss of life. There is one representative of labour, and labour almost invariably lose lives in major train accidents, but there are six representatives of the railway companies and the railway business. It seems rather uneven. Surely the input from labour is more important than that.

There are two major railway companies and many other smaller railway companies like Algoma Central Railway which runs through my constituency. We will end up having no representation from most of the other railway companies and almost no representation from labour. Of course, four representatives are to be appointed by the Minister. We can imagine what those appointments will be like. We need only read Claire Hoy's book to learn about the whole approach to patronage. Surely this legislation is too important to be concerned with patronage in those Ministerial appointments.

There is no provision for representation from municipalities and cities on the committees. There should be provision for representation on that side as well.

I notice that you are signalling me that Question Period is about to begin, Mr. Speaker. Those are some of the concerns we in this caucus have with Bill C-105 which is before the House today.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being eleven o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 19(4) the House will now proceed to Members' statements under Standing Order 21.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[Translation]

ILLICIT DRUGS

AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kelleher), who signed an agreement this week with his American counterpart, under which our two countries will be able to consolidate further their measures against drug trafficking. The consequences of drug use and drug trafficking are a matter of grave concern for the Government and the people of Canada.

To help deal with this problem, the federal Government decided to take the offensive last May by launching its national anti-drug strategy. Tuesday in Washington, the Solicitor General concluded this important agreement with the United States to follow through on the commitment he made in May. The agreement will vastly improve the pooling of information on drug trafficking, thanks to the work of RCMP officers posted in three American cities.

Mr. Speaker, both countries agree that as a problem that is not only national but also international, drug trafficking must be attacked on all fronts. That is why Canada is placing such emphasis on this agreement and why we have every reason to applaud the Solicitor General's initiative.

* * *

• (1100)

[English]

POLITICAL PARTIES

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY—FORMATION OF BACK BENCH COMMITTEE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the media recently reported that some two dozen male Conservative Members of Parliament formed a very private, indeed secret club, called the BBC, or the Back Bench Committee. Some non-Members call this BBC the Braindead Brontosaurus Committee. Some of us who are more polite call it the Backward Blue Committee. It may turn out to be known as the Blather Bag Committee or, worse, the Brain Baffling Committee. One thing for sure, BBC does not stand for bilingualism and biculturalism.

These prehistoric remnants, these models of antediluvian thought, have lost the first round. We are going to start debating Bill C-72 on Monday. We will debate it thoroughly and I hope they all stand up and tell us what they think about it because we are very interested. They have lost the first battle but they have not lost the war. Let us keep fighting, gentlemen. Get up and tell us what you believe and what you think should be changed in the law. But, for God's sake, let us think of Canada.

* * *

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE

APPOINTMENT OF NEW DIRECTOR GENERAL—POSITION OF HULL MAYOR

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to deplore the statements of Hull Mayor Michel Légère concerning the vacancy in the position of Director General of the National Arts Centre. Mr. Légère, a former, and perhaps future, NDP candidate in this city, is an ex officio member of the board of trustees of the NAC. In that capacity he has insisted that the new Director General be not just bilingual but a Francophone.

Most Canadians, and certainly this Member of Parliament, would agree that it is highly desirable that most chief executives of national cultural institutions be able to function in both official languages. To insist, however, that a particular position be filled by a Francophone or an Anglophone, and not on the basis of merit, and further, that bilingualism, the law of the land, is not good enough, amounts in my considered opinion to racism. I call on members of the NAC board to reject Mayor Légère's regrettable remarks totally.

* * *

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

CENTENNIAL OF ESTABLISHMENT OF MUNICIPAL PARKS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, 1988 is an important year for municipal parks. It was 100 years ago, in 1888, that the Ontario Legislature passed the first ever Public Parks Act in Canada. That same year the first municipal park was established. On September 3, 1888, the City of Port Arthur, now Thunder Bay, established the first Board of Parks Management in Canada. It also established Waverly Park, the first municipal park in Canada, in that year.

We should all share in the centennial celebrations of Thunder Bay. Without municipal parks we would not have the facilities for sport, recreation, culture and horticulture that we enjoy today in our cities and towns. I salute the City of Thunder Bay and its Parks and Recreation Department, indeed, all Parks and Recreation Departments across this great nation, for their commitment to municipal parks.

The Government of Canada can help municipalities and their parks by agreeing to put money in the Budget this year for municipal rebuilding programs.

* * *

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—USE OF TISSUE FROM ABORTED FETUSES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, medical technology is such that it is now possible to use tissues and organs from aborted human fetuses for transplant purposes. Examples are pancreas cells for the treatment of diabetes, bone marrow, and organs such as kidneys. The recent Supreme Court decision on abortion leaves a void in the law governing these matters and might well lead to the deliberate growing of babies to be killed and used for spare parts, and a whole transplant industry based on fetal tissue technology.

The ethical, moral, and legal questions arising therefrom cannot continue to be set aside, and Parliament must prepare itself to deal with this issue.

[Translation]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MEMORANDUM OF VICE-PRESIDENT OF OPERATIONS—JOB SECURITY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, disgraceful is the word for the internal memo, dated January 11, 1988, sent by Mr. Fletcher, senior vice-president of CN operations in which he asked regional authorities to finish their employment cuts so as to get them out of the way before a federal election. Here in Ottawa, we are all familiar with the problems of railway services in Abitibi-Témiscamingue. We realize that the railways are part of our essential services and must be maintained for the sake of regional economic development. We therefore have a duty to protect our admissible CN workers in Senneterre and the region.

Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that under the provisions of Bill C-85 passed six months ago, workers may not negotiate job security or any other issues. Since there still has been no arbitration nearly six months later, how will these workers be able to protect their jobs, considering CN's memo?

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HAITI—POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary State for External Affairs implied that I would go to Haiti with the delegation of Canadian parliamentarians. I want to state that the Hon. Member does not have the right to speak on behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada. I may remind the House that we do not approve of this visit to Haiti and that we reserve the right not to take part in the visit at this time.

However, the Liberal Party of Canada has agreed to take part in the committee's proceedings next week, when we shall be considering and reviewing Canadian aid programs for Haiti, to determine whether they meet the needs and aspirations of the Haitian people.

We have also agreed to take part, the week after, in public hearings to be held in Montreal, where five members of the committee will hear the views of the Haitian community in Montreal, as well as the views of representatives of various non-governmental organizations working in Haiti.

That is as far as we are willing to go at this time, until we have received assurances that a genuine democratic election will be held in Haiti.

S. O. 21

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE

LANGUAGE TEACHERS' ROTATING STRIKES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention of Members of Parliament to the rotating strikes by language teachers, members of the PSAC, employed by the federal Government. It is indeed regrettable that persons who have worked long and hard with many public servants, including many Members of Parliament, in order to teach second languages, have found it necessary to take this action to support their stand.

It is officials of Treasury Board who have sought unilaterally to impose 25-hour classtime workloads on a job that requires considerable preparation to deal with students of greatly differing backgrounds and rates of progress. They have refused to pay teachers for preparation time which most teachers in other jurisdictions receive. Fortunately, the Federal Court has ruled that the 25-hour classtime cannot be imposed. Unfortunately, Treasury Board officials are now trying to get this classtime increased by the front door after failing to get it through the back.

I call on the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Mazankowski) to take a personal interest in these negotiations given the extreme importance they have for so many public servants and parliamentarians.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

TWO-PRICE WHEAT SYSTEM—CHANGES CAUSE FOR CONCERN

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, eastern Canadian wheat producers have expressed serious concerns over the Government's intention to abolish the two-price wheat policy. This has created considerable uncertainty in the industry and future planning is impossible. Producers have prepared an excellent position paper and they question the Government's compensation plan. To quote directly from their document: "We are only asking for fair, equitable and consistent treatment; we are not asking for special concessions."

In Prince Edward Island alone there are 30 growers who produce an estimated 65,000 metric tonnes of wheat for milling purposes every year. They fear that the proposed changes to the two-price system could have a devastating effect on their industry. Eastern Canadian milling wheat producers made a number of recommendations to the Government. I urge the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) to give their proposals his full support.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PARLIAMENT HILL VIGIL SEEKING TRANSFER OF PRISON INMATE FROM NEW JERSEY TO CANADIAN INSTITUTION

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Alice Curtis of Nova Scotia is in the midst of a vigil on Parliament Hill. She is committed to this vigil out of concern and love for her son Bruce, who is incarcerated in a prison in New Jersey. Appeals for a new trial or clemency for Bruce have failed.

Initiatives are in progress to have Bruce transferred to a prison in Canada to complete his sentence. The State of New Jersey has laid down conditions for the transfer beyond the Convention established between Canada and the U.S. for prisoner transfer. Such conditions are unacceptable to Canada.

• (1110)

All reports indicate that Bruce Curtis was an excellent student and a caring person who has shown no disposition to any type of criminal activity. I call on my colleagues in the House this morning, and on all Canadians, to join in the chorus to persuade the officials in the State of New Jersey to allow Bruce Curtis to complete his sentence in Canada and to begin his rehabilitation.

* * *

REVENUE CANADA

PAYMENT OF SOURCE DEDUCTION CHARGES—DISALLOWANCE OF MAILING DATE AS FACTOR

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, what does Revenue Canada have against Canada Post? Revenue Canada is now sending notices to employers concerning source deduction changes which read as follows:

> New remitting requirements go into effect for 1988, and subsequent calendar years. Beginning January 1, 1988, all payments of source deductions must be RECEIVED by the due dates. The payment will be considered to be on time if it is RECEIVED by the Department on or before the due date. The mailing date of the payment will no longer be a factor.

In other words, the Government and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) are telling all Canadians not to trust Canada Post because it will not be able to deliver the mail on time. If the Government does not trust the Post Office, why should it expect that ordinary Canadians should? It is obvious that the Government of Canada should start putting its money where its mouth is. It should start reforming the postal system and start believing in it itself.

[Translation]

INCOME TAX

PRE-REGULATION PROJECT CONCERNING LOADING AND TRAVEL ALLOWANCES FOR NORTHERN AND ISOLATED REGION RESIDENTS

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tabled on December 10, 1987, a pre-regulation income tax project on housing and travel allowances for residents of remote and northern regions.

Many remote regions in Canada can benefit from this program thanks to the Conservative Government of Brian Mulroney.

Mr. Speaker, many municipalities in the Gaspé riding which I represent qualify as isolated posts, to their great benefit.

Unfortunately, a number of communities in MRC Denis Riverin are excluded from this program.

The Minister of Finance has stated publicly that an inquiry commission would be established to examine further applications for eligibility under this program.

Therefore I can assure the Gaspé residents concerned that their applications will be duly considered and that our Government is fully aware of their problems.

* * *

[English]

STATUS OF WOMEN

WAGE GAP BETWEEN MALE AND FEMALE WORKERS

Ms. Marion Dewar: Mr. Speaker, in 1967 Statistics Canada began collecting data on the wage gap between men and women. Figures then showed that women were earning 58.4 per cent of what men were earning. According to the latest StatsCan report, women are now earning 66 per cent of a man's wage. That is hardly an impressive victory for women.

Last spring the Human Rights Commission called upon the federal Government to introduce a pay equity law with some teeth, a law to force employers to pay equal wages and not just to file reports. It has been eight months since the Commission made its recommendation and the Conservative Government has yet to respond.

Effective pay equity legislation requires mandatory compliance and insists on strong enforcement mechanisms to make it work. It must be bolstered by the support systems which encourage women to enter non-traditional occupations. These support systems include training and retraining programs for women, educational opportunities, and access to affordable, quality child care. Women can be assured of a bright future if the Government has the political will to put these systems in place.

[Translation]

HOUSING

NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO ACT

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, last March, the Government announced amendments to the National Housing Act to provide, among other things, mortgage access for certain classes of buyers, such as the owners of mobile homes and house boats.

It is now February, 1988, nearly a year later, and nothing has been done.

This clearly shows the lack of interest of this Government for the housing sector. The only acceptable reason to justify such a delay might be a decision on the part of the Minister responsible for housing to include changes which would benefit the homeless and those with inadequate housing in the new legislation.

The only question being asked by all those who deal with housing is this: What is the Government waiting for?

I therefore ask the Conservative Government to use this bill to legislate on the responsibility of the Federal government to provide housing for the homeless, as other countries such as Australia and England have done.

* * *

[English]

PRIVATIZATION

RADIOCHEMICAL COMPANY—PROPOSED SALE—FOOD IRRADIATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, some attention has been paid in recent days to the plans of the Government to privatize Radiochemical Company, the corporation within Atomic Energy of Canada which is responsible for food irradiation.

I want to suggest, if it has not occurred to some Members already, that there is a connection between this privatization plan of the Government and the decision by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to allow food irradiation.

The fact is that the decision of the Minister of National Health and Welfare makes the long-term commercial possibilities of this particular aspect of AECL much more pleasant to look at. I suggest that the Minister of National Health and Welfare abrogated his duties as Health and Welfare Minister in making that decision and was captive to the privatization agenda of the Government.

The Minister said in regard to the mussel problem that he was not the kind to play Russian roulette with the health of Canadian people. I suggest that he has played Russian roulette with Canadian people with respect to allowing food irradiation, and that he has done that out of subservience to the privatization and ideological agenda of his colleagues.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ADMINISTRATION

CONFLICT OF INTEREST CODE—PRIME MINISTER—REGISTRATION OF PERSONAL LOANS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister have well established in the House this week the principle that loans to members of Cabinet must be declared and registered as part of the provisions of the conflict of interest guidelines.

The Globe and Mail has reported today that Jack Manion, Associate Secretary to the Cabinet in the Privy Council Office, has "refused to reveal whether the Prime Minister has registered a personal loan".

In light of that information my question to the Deputy Prime Minister is straightforward. Has the Prime Minister registered, pursuant to the conflict of interest guidelines, personal loans reportedly totalling $158,000 which the Prime Minister has received from the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the Hon. Member is trying to get at or what the relevance of this question is. This issue was raised some time ago and I understand it has to do with an arrangement which has been a long-standing tradition of the Party wherein the Progressive Conservative Party has supported activities of the Leader. I know of no such loan and I am not sure why any such loan would have to be disclosed.

PC CANADA FUND LOANS REPORT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, early this week both the Deputy Prime Minister and the Prime Minister made clear that the initial reason for the dismissal of the Minister of Supply and Services was the non-disclosure of a personal loan as required under the conflict of interest guidelines. I think Canadians are entitled to expect the same standard from the Prime Minister as the Prime Minister himself has imposed on members of his Cabinet.

I repeat, did the Prime Minister record and disclose, as required under the conflict of interest guidelines, loans that the Prime Minister received from the PC Party of Canada as disclosed by the Fund Chairman, Mr. Angus, and as reported in The Globe and Mail last April?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as was pointed out in the House last April, the PC Canada Fund paid for certain expenses and the Prime Minister reimbursed the PC Canada Fund for his personal share of those expenses. It is my understanding that that was done and I am not sure what relevance that would have with regard to what the Hon. Member is pointing out.

LOAN REGISTRATION QUERY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, at question is not how much was loaned—reportedly $158,000—nor how much or how quickly it was repaid. At question is whether or not, according to the standards laid down and reinforced this week by the Prime Minister, the loan was registered as required by the conflict of interest guidelines. I ask the Deputy Prime Minister again—he doesn't have the answer now—can he please bring to the attention of the House as quickly as possible information relating to the loans—

• (1120)

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What loans?

Mr. Tobin: —secured by the Prime Minister from the P.C. Canada Fund. And can he tell us whether or not those loans were registered upon the dates they were received by the Prime Minister?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is making a charge or an allegation that there is indeed a conflict of interest here, why doesn't he stand up in the House, or go outside the House, and make that charge—

Mr. Foster: Just answer the question.

Mr. Mazankowski: —instead of the innuendo and smear he is engaging in? The fact is that this was responded to at page 5233 of Hansard on April 27, 1987, when I indicated that those things that were personal were paid for by the Prime Minister. This was not a loan in the traditional sense. The P.C. Canada Fund paid for certain expenditures, which has been the tradition of the Party for many, many years, and billed the Prime Minister for anything that was considered to be personal, which he paid for. That is my understanding of it.

COMPLIANCE WITH GUIDELINES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and is with respect to the matter of the Prime Minister's compliance with his own guidelines on the matter of conflict of interest.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: Give it a rest, Herb. Get up from the gutter.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): The Deputy Prime Minister has just said that the payments to the Prime Minister from the P.C. Canada Fund were not a loan in the traditional sense. If money was advanced to the Prime Minister and that money was later repaid by the Prime Minister, or if the money was paid by the P.C. Canada Fund to third parties on behalf of the Prime Minister, which he later paid, surely that is a loan, whether it is traditional or not. Why will the Deputy Prime Minister not admit this and tell us whether or not those transactions were disclosed and recorded pursuant to the Prime Minister's own conflict of interest guidelines? Why one set of standards for the Member for Langelier and another set of standards for the Prime Minister?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Go swim in the Trudeau pool!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is placing a rather interesting interpretation on this whole issue. This matter, of course, was discussed in the House of Commons on a number of occasions. I responded when I said that the Prime Minister has undertaken to pay for those things which are personal in nature. And consistent with the traditions of the Party and the Leader, where the Party supports the office of the Leader, those things were paid and whatever was considered to be personal in nature was paid for by the Prime Minister. So I am not sure what loan the Hon. Member is talking about.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): There is no loan.

QUERY WHETHER PAYMENTS WERE RECORDED

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I can only quote the Deputy Prime Minister's own words when he said the payments were not a loan in the traditional sense.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That's right!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Surely one can rely on the Deputy Prime Minister's own words that, while he did not consider it traditional, it was a form of loan. I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister a specific question, and that is, could he tell us were these payments recorded pursuant to the conflict of interest guidelines? Were they disclosed to the Deputy Registrar General and recorded in statements filed with the Deputy Registrar General? Could he answer yes or no to that question?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all Members of Parliament have what they call a petty cash account—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: —in the operations of their constituency office, and there are certain things which are personal and certain things which are paid for, perhaps, by their Party, or certain things that are paid for under the provisions of the Government of Canada. So these things are sorted out in much the same way. As I understand it, what has happened here is that there were certain bills that were paid for. Those which were personal in nature were paid for by the Prime Minister. Those which were considered to be, in the traditional sense, of the Party supporting the office of the Leader, were paid in that manner.

Mr. Gauthier: He didn't register them. The answer is no.

PC FUND—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I do want to say that for ordinary Canadians that kind of money is not petty cash.

For the sake of fairness and honesty and simply being above board, will the Deputy Prime Minister assure this House, on the questions being asked about the Progressive Conservative Fund and the moneys being provided to the Prime Minister, that the Prime Minister, when he returns, will indicate and disclose all of the aspects of the money he received from the fund so that everyone understands exactly what happened? Would he give us that assurance?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is suggesting that the Party has made a loan to the Prime Minister. That is not my understanding. This question is totally irrelevant. The Hon. Member, if he is suggesting there is some wrongdoing, if there is a conflict of interest, should make the charge. Make the charge here in the House, or go outside the House and do it in a proper fashion.

Mr. Cassidy: Just answer the question.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, we just want a very clear picture about what did happen.

Mr. McDermid: You just want to smear. That's what you like to do, muck-rake.

REPORTED FINANCIAL DIFFICULTIES OF FORMER SENIOR QUÉBEC MINISTER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister will be aware that today it has been reported that back in November of 1986 the Minister in Cabinet responsible for Québec indicated to the Principal Secretary to the Prime Minister that the previous Minister of Supply and Services was having very serious financial problems. Will the Deputy Prime Minister indicate to the House what steps the PMO took at that point knowing full well that the senior Minister from Québec was experiencing these kinds of personal financial problems?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member in the preamble to his question clearly pointed out, he is really not interested in the answers; he is interested in smear and insinuation and innuendo.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Mazankowski: It really is quite an incredible scene, Mr. Speaker. As the Prime Minister indicated earlier, the Prime Minister's Office had no evidence that the former Minister had breached the conflict of interest of guidelines until earlier this week. There are all sorts of rumours and gossip that float around the Hill, but as soon as that was ascertained, action was taken, and the Prime Minister took the action that he deemed was necessary in accordance with maintaining the spirit and relevance of the Code.

TIME OF ACTION TAKEN BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the Prime Minister's Office knew in November of 1986 that there were serious problems regarding one of his senior Ministers from Quebec in terms of financial matters. The Minister indicated yesterday that these loans took place over two years. Why was it, when this information was known for at least the last two years, it took until reporters were asking questions in a variety of Ministries—that is, before the Government got caught with its hands in the cookie jar—before the Prime Minister came clean?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I merely want to restate what the Prime Minister said in the House on February 3 with regard to the conflict of interest guidelines as reported at page 12573 of Hansard:

> —which are under my direct responsibility, when I was apprised, not of a violation, but of the possibility of a violation, which was not public knowledge in any way, I immediately instructed the officials of the Government to seek confirmation, and if confirmation was forthcoming, to provide it to me. When that was done, I immediately acted to seek the resignation of a Minister. It seems to me that that is in keeping with the most genuine spirit of parliamentary accountability and responsibility.

Mr. Riis: What year was that?

Mr. Waddell: What year was it?

Mr. Mazankowski: This is February 3, 1988. The Opposition wants the Prime Minister to ensure that Cabinet Ministers adhere to the spirit and code of the conflict of interest guidelines and, when action is taken, they are still not satisfied. All they want to do is to dig deeper and smear and tarnish the reputation—

Mr. Riis: What about November, 1986?

Mr. Mazankowski: —smear and tarnish the reputation of individual Members of this House and outside this House.

P.C. CANADA FUND CHAIRMAN'S LETTER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I have in hand a copy of a letter signed by Mr. David Angus, Chairman of the P.C. Canada Fund, sent to all major newspapers, which said: "Mr. Mulroney has reimbursed the P.C. Canada Fund"—reimbursed—"for expenses which were strictly personal in nature".

Mr. McDermid: It's paid.

Mr. Boudria: In view of the fact that one can only reimburse something that was borrowed to start with—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: Come on, Boudria.

Mr. Boudria: —can the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House why there is a different set of rules used for one cabinet Minister for borrowing $250,000 than for another one?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: You are reaching.

Mr. Speaker: The Deputy Prime Minister.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): That merely confirms my earlier answer, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF FINANCIAL COMMITMENTS OF FORMER MINISTER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and also concerns the conflict of interest guidelines, but this time in connection with the other Minister.

We know that the former Minister neglected to declare financial commitments, which is against Section 24 of the conflict of interest guidelines. Is the Deputy Prime Minister prepared to tell the House today what he should have told the House three days ago? Was the loan interest bearing? How much was the interest? And what were the terms of repayment? Was it a loan, a benefit or a gift?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the House I undertook to provide that information. As soon as it is available to me I will so provide it.

• (1130)

[Translation]

CONFLICTS OF INTEREST

MICHEL CÔTÉ AFFAIR—QUERY WHY GOVERNMENT WAITED TO ACT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister who just quoted the Prime Minister and his statement that, as soon as he was informed, he "took action" in the case of the former Minister of Supply and Services and asked for his resignation.

Today, it was reported in the press that the Prime Minister's Office was warned by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, fifteen months before the resignation of the former Minister of Supply and Services, that the latter had financial problems and had contracted some heavy personal debts.

The Deputy Prime Minister himself stated that the former Minister's loans were contracted over a period of two years. Furthermore, according to an article in the Globe and Mail, the Prime Minister's Office took action only after it heard a reporter was making inquiries.

My question is this: Why did the Prime Minister's Office again wait until the problem took on the proportions of a scandal before cleaning house? And why does this Government only worry about morality when it is caught with its hands in the cookie jar?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I responded to that question earlier. I indicated that the information that I have is that no evidence was available that would suggest that the Minister had breached or potentially breached the conflict of interest guidelines, until earlier this week. When that information came to light action was taken, swift action was taken.

I regret that the Hon. Member opposite finds fault with that. Quite frankly, I would have thought that he would have been applauding the Prime Minister for, first, putting in place a stringent set of guidelines and, second, for ensuring that they are enforced.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

QUERY WHY GOVERNMENT DID NOT ACT MORE QUICKLY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, if it is true, as alleged, that the Prime Minister's Office was warned in November 1986, I would have applauded if the Prime Minister had acted at the time and not in February 1988.

So once again, my question is this: Why, if the allegations are correct and the Prime Minister's Office was warned about the former Minister's financial problems, did it fail to take any action for fifteen months? Why, if the allegations are correct, was no action taken?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as I said, when evidence came to light that there could be a possible violation of the conflict of interest guidelines or meeting the strict spirit of the Code, when that was known and confirmed swift action was initiated, and the Minister was asked to resign.

LOAN DIFFERENTIATION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, earlier this week a cabinet Minister was fired. He was fired because he failed to disclose a loan pursuant to the Conflict of Interest Code. My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is simply this. What is the difference between the loan given to the former Minister of Supply and Services and the loan given to the Prime Minister from the PC Canada Fund?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, one was a loan and the other one was not.

LOAN DIFFERENTIATION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, according to David Angus, who was head of the PC Canada Fund, the money was a personal loan made to the Mulroneys after the 1984 election victory. My question again to the Deputy Prime Minister is this. Can he explain to the people of Canada what the difference is between the loan given to the former Minister of Supply and Services and the loan given to the Prime Minister of Canada by the PC Fund?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have answered that question. I invite the Hon. Member to read Hansard where he will get the answer.

* * *

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

BILL C-79—CLOSURE OF LOOPHOLE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Pump it up, Rod!

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I find it interesting that they are afraid even before they find out what the topic is.

Mr. Fennell: Keep it going, Rod, we like this one.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps if the Hon. Member would put his question we would know what the topic is.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, my question to the very nervous Deputy Prime Minister and his cohorts is the following one.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Murphy: Under the new Conservative dictionary a repayable gift is not a loan. Last night we discovered that a campaign expense is not an election expense. Considering that the Deputy Prime Minister is in charge of Bill C-79—it is in his name—and considering that he has not made any effort to close this loophole, what will the Government do to ensure that the next federal election will not be so wide open that nobody knows what the hell is going on?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, that question simply condemns all Members of the House of Commons. I think all Members of the House of Commons had a part to play in the passage of the Elections Act which governs elections in our country. The important part of the committee hearing process that has been going on is the fact that it has revealed a number of inadequacies within the legislation.

Quite frankly, we have been trying to work out with the Opposition a process wherein we could improve on the Elections Act. Rather than simply engaging in character assassination, I hope that members of the Opposition will be more interested in trying to resolve some difficulties that occur and are inherent in the Elections Act. I think that that can be a very productive process as a result of the hearings that are going on.

ELECTION EXPENSES—REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister knows full well that his Government has asked for quick passage of Bill C-79 without any discussion whatsoever of changing the definition of election expense. He should also know that the New Democrats and the Liberals in the summer of 1986 asked for changes to that definition, something which the Conservative Party turned down.

Considering that the Hon. Member for Frontenac was allowed to spend between $12,000 and $20,000 in campaign expenses, which were deemed not to be election expenses, will the Minister ensure that there is an immediate attempt by the Government to amend this legislation so that the next federal election is not Dodge City?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's allegations are not only unfair, they are untrue. He knows very well that there have been extensive consultations at the Party level amongst all Parties to try to redress the deficiencies in the Elections Act. We are not asking for quick passage. We are asking for consultation to ensure that all Parties can agree on a process so that, rather than engaging in long, protracted debate on the floor of the House of Commons, we can resolve these differences in bilateral and trilateral discussions.

Certainly we are all interested in improving the Elections Act. This Government has co-operated. The Chief Electoral Officer has co-operated. It is fair to say that if there is a genuine spirit that prevails in the interests of improving the Elections Act then I am sure that the Hon. Member can count on our full co-operation.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES SUBMIT RESIGNATION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, in addition to what we already knew, we are learning this morning that the Minister of Energy would have overspent to the tune of $20,000—

Mr. Hawkes: Wrong!

Mr. McDermid: That is not right.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Information disclosed in 16 police raids has it that the Minister would not have reported the personal chauffeur, gasoline expenses, dinners to promote his candidacy, the rental of hotel rooms, meals—

• (1140)

Mr. Speaker: I think that the Hon. Member has put sufficient into his preamble to place the question. I think that is what the Hon. Member is leading to, and I would ask him to put his question.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I wish to ask the Deputy Prime Minister if, in his capacity, he will talk to the Minister of Energy to suggest to him that what he should do next week when he appears before the committee is to seize the opportunity to do what he should have done weeks ago, and that is to submit his resignation, if it were only to prevent further embarrassment to the Government.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's charges are categorically false. I am quite surprised, as a member of that committee who was there and who heard the testimony of Mr. Gorman that he has the guts to stand up in this House and make that kind of false allegation.

Mr. Gorman clearly indicated that this was not a violation. My understanding is that the Commissioner said that the RCMP had placed entirely the wrong interpretation upon the Act in this particular area.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that the sixteen affidavits I just referred to are new affidavits that were not discussed yesterday in committee. Only one affidavit was considered in committee yesterday. And I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister and the Prime Minister to have a serious talk with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, stop this charade, and ask the Minister to resign immediately.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the charade is being generated by Members opposite. The fact of the matter is that they conveniently choose not to use the evidence and the testimony of the key witness who was brought before the committee.

Mr. Gorman, I am told, made it very clear, both in a written statement and in answers to Members' questions, that the expenses referred to were not election expenses, as defined by the Act, and therefore nobody in the campaign could be charged under Section 61 of the Act for overspending.

That is the fact, Mr. Speaker. Why does the Hon. Member persistently try to misrepresent the evidence that was presented before that committee?

* * *

THE ADMINISTRATION

PC CANADA FUND—PRIME MINISTER—PAYMENT OF MONEY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I, and many ordinary Canadians, are becoming confused by the answers of the Deputy Prime Minister. Therefore, I address another question to him.

We know that the Prime Minister received from the PC Canada Fund $324,000, which the Deputy Prime Minister describes as petty cash. Although this sum was repaid, the Deputy Prime Minister states that it was not a loan. If it wasn't a loan, then what was it?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I did not refer to the amount of money, as the Hon. Member suggests, as petty cash. He knows that, and he should not try to distort the facts. It is traditional that the opposition Members try to twist and distort the facts.

I think what ordinary Canadians are really wondering is why the Opposition has nothing more to offer than smear, innuendo, and character assassination. I think that is the issue.

DEFINITION OF A LOAN

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, in an exchange of the type that is going on in the House today I think it is important to define our terms. For the benefit of ordinary Canadians, and Members of the House, and perhaps even the dictionary, I would ask the Deputy Prime Minister to define for us what exactly is a loan.

Mr. Speaker: Even the Chair, although much tempted, is not going to get into definitions of words or phrases. I think I have to advise the Hon. Member that that question is out of order.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO PRESS SECRETARY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In answer to other questions put to him about what was the difference between the payment to the ex-Minister of Supply and Services and the payment to the Prime Minister from the PC Canada Fund, the Deputy Prime Minister stated that one was a loan and the other was not.

I have a report which appeared in The Globe and Mail on Friday, April 17, and it reports that a Mr. Marc Lortie, and I quote, said that the portion of the money that was lent has been paid back, while the rest was used to buy furnishings that now belong to the Conservative Party. Mr. Lortie said that the loans were a formal arrangement between the Prime Minister—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What is in quotes?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): —and the chairman of the PC Canada Fund, who raises money for the party. This report appeared on Friday, April 17, 1987.

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister, wasn't Mr. Lortie the press secretary for the Prime Minister speaking on behalf of the Prime Minister and in his name and, if he said it was a loan, how can the Deputy Prime Minister say today the money was not a loan?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): I have responded to that question. I think it is quite clear, and the Hon. Member knows it. He has been involved with party politics for a long period of time, and I am sure that the Liberal Party supports his Leader and the things that go on. It is in that same tradition that the Conservative Party has, for years, supported the Leader and provided support for the Leader of the office. That is the same kind of arrangement that was made in this particular case.

CODE OF CONDUCT—MONEYS ADVANCED BY PC CANADA FUND

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): My supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has created for his Ministers, and I presume himself, a Code of Conduct which he stated was the best in the world.

We are simply trying to find out to what extent the Prime Minister has complied with that Code with respect to the moneys advanced on his behalf by the PC Canada Fund.

If the Deputy Prime Minister's position is that that money does not have to be covered by the Code, let him state that clearly. If his position is that the Prime Minister was in error and overlooked filing, a technical breach, as was the case with the ex-Minister of Supply and Services, let him admit that. All we are asking is for a straight answer about how the Prime Minister lives up to his own set of rules.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the Hon. Member is not interested in straight answers. As I indicated, it has been a tradition of the Party that certain expenses are paid for, if they are to discharge the office of the Leader of the Party, and if there are some things that are deemed to have been personal in nature, they are paid for by the Prime Minister, by the Leader. That is exactly what happened in this particular case.

DECLARATION OF LOAN

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the Government has made it clear that the PC Canada Fund has given a loan to the Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is a falsehood. Withdraw that falsehood.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member would refrain from re-arguing a matter which has been, to some degree, already argued here, and put his question. I think that that would be helpful to order.

Mr. Harris: The question would be, Mr. Speaker, did the Prime Minister declare that loan?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have tried to explain. I wish Hon. Members would listen. There were accounts that were paid for by the Party. That has been a long-standing tradition. Those items which were deemed to be personal in nature would be billed back to the Prime Minister, and the Prime Minister paid for those things. That is part of the long-standing arrangement that has been existent with our Party for many, many years.

DECLARATION OF LOAN

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the question is not whether or not the loan was repaid. We do not know whether Mr. Côté repaid his loan—

An Hon. Member: Order.

• (1150)

Mr. Speaker: I have asked the Hon. Member to put his question and not get into an argument by way of preamble.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, the question is not whether the loan was repaid or not repaid. The question is whether or not the loan was declared, which the former Minister of Supply and Services was supposed to declare and resigned—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member has a question, I would ask him to put it. The Hon. Member is clearly indulging in argument on whether there is a question or what is the issue. I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, with respect, I believe the question is very straightforward.

Mr. Speaker: It may well be, but I would ask the Hon. Member to put it.

Mr. Harris: My question is: If this is a loan, why was it not declared?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): I have already answered that, Mr. Speaker. I will try to go through it again.

There are certain expenses incurred by the Office of the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Party, and certain expenses were deemed to be of personal nature which were billed to the Prime Minister and for which the Prime Minister paid. If that is a loan, then you have a different version of a loan than I have.

* * *

[Translation]

EMPLOYMENT

STATISTICS FOR PROVINCE OF QUÉBEC

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration or his substitute. Mr. Speaker, I am told that today, Statistics Canada has released its figures on employment in Canada. My question is this: Could the Minister inform my constituents and my colleagues in the House about the statistics for my own province, the beautiful province of Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, how I remember those Friday mornings when the labour market statistics would come out and the then Ministers, when they were in government, would shake because they had no answers to the growing numbers of unemployed, no answers to double digit inflation, or no answers to the families who were renewing mortgages at 15 per cent to 20 per cent.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the unemployment rate in Quebec has dropped from 12.9 to 9 per cent in less than four years. We have created 293,000 new jobs. Last year in Quebec, we created 119,000 new jobs. There are 104,000 fewer unemployed workers in Quebec since September 1984. In Montreal, the unemployment rate has dropped from 11.8 to 8.6 per cent, and 128,000 jobs have been created since January 1985.

* * *

[English]

TERRORISM

INVESTIGATION OF INCIDENTS

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Solicitor General I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

I have had a great interest in the terrorist acts which took place on June 23, 1985. One of them was the killing of two baggage handlers in a Japanese airport, and the other one was the crash of Air-India Flight 182 in the Irish Sea, killing 329 people.

In view of the fact that we have had calls from the Opposition for the resignation of the Solicitor General, especially coming from the Hon. Member for York South—Weston, because of unsuccessful investigations, I think it might be worth while if the Deputy Prime Minister could elucidate for the House and tell us about the culmination of a successful investigation which was announced yesterday.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that Mr. Reyat was arrested on February 5 in Coventry, England, by the local police and is now in police custody awaiting a bail hearing. An extradition hearing will follow in order for him to be returned to Canada.

A warrant for his arrest was issued by the B.C. Supreme Court on February 1, 1988, and subsequently by an English court. He has been charged with eight offences, including two counts of manslaughter, four counts of causing injury with intent, as well as illegal possession of explosives.

DISASTERS

AIR-INDIA CRASH—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Deputy Prime Minister in connection with that particular arrest which, as I understand it, does not relate specifically to the Air-India crash.

The Air-India crash took place some two and a half years ago. There have been no charges laid, no trials held, and no convictions registered.

Could the Deputy Prime Minister advise the House and Canadians when we will see action in connection with the Air-India crash? Does he not believe that it is time for a public inquiry?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think all Hon. Members would want to applaud the work of investigative officials, the job they have done in terms of the arrest that has been made.

With respect to the Air-India accident, it is still under very full investigation. I would hope that similar results might be forthcoming in the very near future.

* * *

CANADA PENSION PLAN

SURVIVOR BENEFITS—PAYMENT OF WIDOWS' PENSIONS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the Government's consultation paper, Survivor Benefits under the Canada Pension Plan. According to this paper, widows' pensions now paid up to the age of 65 will be paid for three years only.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House how he expects a widow with dependent children, who has been out of the labour force a long time and may even be in poor health herself, to become economically self-sufficient in three years?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has a tradition of putting very important and pertinent questions to the House. I think this deserves a full and comprehensive answer.

I simply want to tell the Hon. Member that, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and of the Minister of Finance, I will take that question as notice and assure her that she will get a full and comprehensive answer.

PROJECTED REDUCTION IN BENEFIT OUTLAYS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): When the full and comprehensive answer comes, Mr. Speaker, may I also have an answer to the following question? The Government's own paper projects a reduction of 15 per cent in benefit outlays as a result of these changes. Will the Deputy Prime Minister guarantee that the Government, in its commitment to deficit reduction, will not be doing it at the expense of widows?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think the Government's record in social justice has been exemplary. Certainly from the standpoint of considering the welfare of all Canadians, the best social justice is the security of a job.

With the figures which were just announced today, I think a lot of solace is provided for all Canadians, particularly when we consider that the job-creation effort has been so successful in terms of providing long-term jobs, particularly jobs for women. I think the record has been outstanding.

I will take the Hon. Member's representation into consideration and convey it to the responsible Minister. I am sure that she will be treated with a full and comprehensive answer to her question.

* * *

THE ADMINISTRATION

PC CANADA FUND—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO PRESS SECRETARY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Prime Minister's press secretary indicated today that the money from the PC Canada Fund was a loan and that it was repaid. He did not call it a gift. He did not call it petty cash.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister now indicate whether the Prime Minister registered the loan as required under the conflict of interest guidelines?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Hon. Member was in Question Period earlier today. I explained precisely what took place, and I really have nothing further to add.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member on a short supplementary.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER RESIGN

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, given all the answers that we have received in the House today, it is clear that the Prime Minister did not register this transaction—

• (1200)

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question and not argue about facts which may or may not have been established yet. Please put the question.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. When will the Prime Minister take the same course of action with himself as he did for the Member for Langelier, and resign.

Mr. McDermid: Why?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is trying to make a connection here that is totally irrelevant, totally irrelevant.

The PC Canada Fund paid for invoices, which were submitted, and those expenses which were deemed to be personal were then billed to the Prime Minister. Those bills were paid for by the Prime Minister. This does not constitute a loan. I wish Hon. Members would stop distorting the facts. The facts are as I outlined them and I have nothing further to add, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY TERM USED IN MEMBER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I believe, that in the statements at the beginning of the Question Period, the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) called the Mayor of Hull, Mr. Légère, a racist. I do not have the "blues". I would have to check them to see whether the Member firmly said that or said that he tended to be a racist, or some other words. If he said the former and called the mayor an outright racist, I think that is disgraceful, distasteful and I think it is unparliamentary.

Mr. Speaker: I have already ruled on another occasion that to accuse anybody in this place of being a racist is, in my view, unparliamentary. I did not hear the exchange. The Hon. Member may want to rise and set the record straight or do whatever is appropriate.

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to look at the "blues". I think the words I used were that the Mayor of Hull in rejecting the notion of a bilingual candidate as Director General of the National Arts Centre and specifying that the candidate had to be a francophone, I said, that such a statement in my view in rejecting the law of the land on bilingualism, and believing in bilingualism myself, amounted to racism.

I did not accuse any Member in this place of being racist. I do deplore the conduct and the words of the Mayor of Hull. As far as I am concerned, they are not unparliamentary, although I will, of course, abide by any ruling you make in that regard.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. That is not a withdrawal at all.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has made it quite clear that whatever he said was not referring to any Hon. Member in this place. I think procedurally that is where I must leave it. What the Hon. Member may want to do outside this Chamber, if he is asked about it, to elaborate on it or do otherwise, is, I think, his own business.

Clearly, I accept completely the Hon. Member's truthfulness that it was not a word aimed at any Member in this House.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

COMMONWEALTH FOREIGN MINISTERS COMMITTEE ON SOUTHERN AFRICA

TABLING OF FINAL STATEMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 67(2), I table in both official languages the final statement of the Commonwealth Committee of Foreign Ministers on Southern Africa and the proposed terms of reference of a study made in application of sections 7 to 11 of the Okanagan Statement.

* * *

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MEETING OF COMMONWEALTH FOREIGN MINISTERS, COMMITTEE IN LUSAKA—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and other Commonwealth heads of Government met in Vancouver and Lake Okanagan in October they agreed on measures to fight apartheid in South Africa and established a committee of foreign Ministers to give impetus to their decisions. I have the honour to chair that committee. I was asked in the House before departing by the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellette) to report to the House, and I rise now to report to the House on the first meeting of that committee earlier this week in Lusaka, Zambia. In beginning, I want to express formally Canada's great appreciation of the excellent arrangements made by the Government of Zambia.

The committee comprises the Foreign Ministers of Australia, Canada, Guyana, India, Nigeria, Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe. At Vancouver, the United Kingdom decided not to be a member of the committee, although Britain is contributing to other parts of the Commonwealth program against apartheid. For example, Britain and Canada will be the major contributors to the restoration of the second phase of the Limpopo Rail Line in Mozambique. Britain, Tanzania, Zimbabwe and Malawi are involved in the equally important work of providing security for transportation corridors against terrorist disruption. The best prospect for an end to apartheid is the negotiating concept developed by the Eminent Persons Group, established by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and other Commonwealth leaders in Nassau in the Bahamas. Our committee will work conscientiously to encourage conditions where that negotiating concept might be given effect.

Let me refer to the campaign to defend apartheid, Sir. It is systematic, organized, prosecuted as a priority by the Government of South Africa and supported, for various motives, by businesses and organizations with substantial interests in that country. Among some within South Africa, the resistance to change is intensified by fear, including the fear that they will be torn up from their own roots and that the strong economy they have created will be destroyed. That combination of power and fear is formidable, both in itself, and in the reaction it inspires.

Whatever other lessons might be learned from Africa, the record is consistent that, when majority rule could not be negotiated, it came by violence, fueled by the frustrations of majorities who would not forever be denied citizenship in their own country. That is the lesson of, among others, Kenya, Algeria, Zimbabwe and Mozambique. If the white 14 per cent of the population which governs South Africa maintains its racist system, the black majority will respond, inevitably, not with silence but with violence.

We have to take account of both the power and the fear that fuel apartheid. When I met President Chissano of Mozambique in August, he tried to address the understandable fear of white South Africans. He said:

> The Afrikaaner is as African as I am. We both belong here. There is no other place to which we can return.

The African National Congress acted in the same spirit in the meeting in Dakar, Senegal, where white and black South Africans came together to talk about their future together. Zimbabwe itself, with three white Ministers in the Government, and thousands of white citizens involved fully in industry, agriculture and the public service, is proof that white and black Africans can work together in freedom. The Commonwealth, because of our special reach across races and around the world, can help ease fears, among both blacks and whites. And Canada, in these circumstances, with our history and our nature, can play a leading role.

[Translation]

But fear is only one element of apartheid: power is another—power defended zealously, exercised ruthlessly.

Sanctions are applied for two purposes—the first economic; the second psychological. There is no doubt that the actions actually taken by Canada and other countries have sent clear messages of disapproval to defenders of apartheid, and of encouragement to its opponents. Nor is there doubt that the economic measures have inspired a vigorous campaign to bust sanctions, or evade them, or frustrate their purpose.

Naturally, the South African government does that; but so may other governments, so do many businesses. Those actions deserve to be known and, at Lusaka, we authorized terms of reference for two major studies which will bring to light new patterns of trade, new practices of accounting, new routings of shipments.

The terms of reference of the larger study have been published, and I have tabled them today. In the same spirit we are concerned by what appear to be significant breaches of the mandatory embargo on arms export, which members of the United Nations are obliged to respect. As individual nations, and as a committee, we will be seeking hard evidence and considering specific actions to ensure that the mandatory arms embargo is enforced.

• (1210)

[English]

The most effective new weapon enlisted in the defence of apartheid is the deliberate new emphasis on censorship within South Africa and propaganda at home and internationally. A simple summary of major press legislation in South Africa which sets out what journalists may not write about runs to over 300 pages. On top of that is the weight of other threats and regulations which limit freedoms that we Canadians take for granted: the freedom to meet, to publish, to speak without fear, and the right to protection against detention without trial.

No one knows how many people are detained today without charge in South Africa. No one who is detained knows when he or she might be freed or detained again. Even little children are locked away.

As the curtain comes down within South Africa, the campaign intensifies outside to portray as reform proposed institutions in which no authentic black leader will participate, to caricature all opponents of apartheid as communists or killers, to exploit prejudice. I have no doubt that the campaign of censorship and propaganda is carefully organized and targeted, and the Commonwealth will become much more involved in exposing and countering propaganda and censorship.

That holds its own risks. When it comes to rights, no Commonwealth country is blameless, some less than others. During the meeting in Lusaka and in other conversations, I warned that the accusation of a double standard would almost certainly be made against the Commonwealth and that the best way to deal with it is by improvement in our own countries, but most in this House and most in the world would agree that inequity or abuse in other countries does not excuse an apartheid regime which writes racism into law.

There is one other dimension of this committee which I want to convey to the House. We are eight countries from five continents. None of us is a superpower. Some, like Guyana, are states with profound economic problems of their own, while others of the front line states are vulnerable every day to destabilization from South Africa. That we came together gave evident hope to groups like the South African Council of Churches whose representatives we met.

What we can do together will enlarge the information and initiative and will to fight apartheid in peaceful and practical ways. That we are together is the best answer to the fear that is at the heart of apartheid, the fear that different races, different colours, cannot work together. The Commonwealth is the antithesis of apartheid. We are different races, different colours, working together. I expect that this committee will help us continue our progress.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Minister for providing me in advance with a copy of his statement. I wish also to congratulate him for rising in the House at the first opportunity to give us an account of this first meeting, held in Lusaka, Zambia, of the Commonwealth Committee of Foreign Ministers which has been set up to initiate policies to fight against apartheid in South Africa. Unfortunately, this morning, he could not announce to the House very significant progress. He could only pay lip service to this very important cause. As he admitted himself on page 3 of his statement, and I quote:

> The best prospect for an end to apartheid is the negotiating concept developed by the Eminent Persons Group—

Well, I must remind him that according to his Department's 1986-87 Annual Report, this initiative has not brought about the expected results. It is even described as a ... The document does not say so in so many words, but it implies that this initiative was ultimately a failure. I was surprised this morning when I heard the Minister refer to it.

Also, and this may be the most important and straightforward point of his whole statement, the Minister described the campaign to defend apartheid, and I quote:

> This campaign to defend apartheid is:
>
> —Systematic, organized, prosecuted as a priority by the Government of South Africa, and supported, for various motives, by businesses and organizations with substantial interests in that country.

To clarify this resistance, he points out further on:

> Nor is there doubt that the economic measures have inspired a vigorous campaign to bust sanctions, or evade them, or frustrate their purpose.

It therefore seems obvious to me that, in spite of all our goodwill and all our efforts throughout the years, the situation in South Africa remains unchanged. The South African Government does not want to change its policies for any consideration or reason.

To relate to my own personal experience, I recall my first speech as Parliamentary Secretary to the Hon. Mitchel Sharp, then Secretary of State for External Affairs, before the UN General Assembly, in which I denounced apartheid. This was my first speech on behalf of Canada before the UN General Assembly, and I dealt with apartheid.

Today, 18 years later, I find myself still denouncing apartheid in this House. This is why I can accept that Canada, through its Minister, should continue to play a role in co-operation with Commonwealth countries or South Africa's neighbours in an effort to put as much pressure as possible on South Africa, but I also believe that, apart from such efforts, which are praiseworthy and should be pursued, Canada must do more. I believe that Canada must now take drastic action.

At this point I think I should quote my Party Leader, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), who said, in an important speech:

• (1220)

[English]

> Our goal as Liberals has always been to reach the day when every person on this planet lives under a rule of law which fully respects the human rights of all citizens. We can cite human rights abuses in every part of the globe, but nowhere are human rights being so blatantly trampled than by the institutionalized, state-sponsored racism of the apartheid regime in South Africa.
>
> Last September, I called on our Government to impose complete economic sanctions and withdraw diplomatic relations from that country by the end of the year if no progress was made toward ending apartheid. That deadline has been passed, and again we demand that the Mulroney Government take action.
>
> It is time for Canada to chart its own course, and send a clear message. Apartheid is an affront to human dignity and Canadians will not give validity to a regime which imposes it. I also believe that while it is preferable that we convince our allies to take the same action in concert with us, we must be prepared to act alone if need be.

[Translation]

This kind of dramatic gesture can have a very important psychological impact. It can act as a catalyst and help end a situation more quickly. I remember how Canada ventured forth on unbeaten paths in the early seventies when it recognized Mainland China, how it paved the way for many other western countries, how it in fact led the United States to do likewise, and how Canada's attitude, its unique position, enabled it to play a significant and important role on the international scene. I believe that today, breaking off diplomatic relations with South Africa would be as important and have the same impact as our decision, at the time, to be among the first to recognize the People's Republic of China.

I therefore urge the Conservative Government, as the Leader of our Party has done before, to make the dramatic gesture that would make it abundantly clear that we can no longer tolerate apartheid in South Africa.

[English]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by thinking the Right Hon. Minister for being faithful to Parliament and using the House rather than a press conference to report on his visit. It is greatly appreciated and a habit I hope other Ministers will imitate more frequently than they sometimes do.

In his statement the Minister made several points that I wish to comment on. The campaign to defend apartheid is rightly referred to as "systematic, organized and prosecuted as a priority by the Government of South Africa". The Minister went on to say, "supported for various motives by businesses and organizations with substantial interests in that country". Might I suggest—and I do not mean this in a narrow partisan way because it makes the Minister's approach to South Africa even more laudable in the circumstances—that one of the obvious, and I sometimes think willing, intellectual victims of this systematic campaign is the international conservative community, at least as expressed through its magazine International Conservative Insight, the latest issue of which I recommend to the Minister. That issue is a pot-pourri of attacks on sanctions, various anti-apartheid leaders, and approaches to the issue which the Minister himself condemns in his statement when he quite rightly denounces as propaganda the caricature offered by the South African Government and its propagandists of all opponents of apartheid as communists or killers.

The Minister has a lot of work to do in the broader political and ideological community to which he and his Party belong, and we wish him well. We also wish for him the same clarity of mind and language that he displays with respect to South Africa when it comes to the caricatures which come out of the Pentagon and White House concerning Central America and those in that region who want to control their own destiny. They are often referred to as communists or killers when neither description is appropriate.

The Minister says that if the white 14 per cent maintains its racist system, "the black majority will respond, inevitably, not with silence but with violence." With respect, that is all that the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) was saying when she was so roundly criticized by the Minister in September of 1987.

[Translation]

The Minister said, and rightly so, that the impact of sanctions is both economic and psychological. I applaud the concept of two studies on the ways and means used to avoid the impact of these sanctions. However, I suggest that these and other studies should also look into statements that some sanctions have actually reinforced certain sectors of the South African economy.

These statements made by opponents to sanctions must be addressed so that the effect of sanctions can be improved, if necessary, thus strengthening instead of weakening their impact.

[English]

The Minister referred to the fact that even little children are locked away. In this respect, I met not too long ago with Ms. Ann Mitchell, Executive Director for Canada of the International Defence and Aid Fund for South Africa, who attended an international conference on children, repression and the law in apartheid South Africa. One of the recommendations coming out of that conference included the need to make known world-wide the plight of apartheid's child victims and the nature of the South African legal system, one primary purpose of which includes detention, arrest and imprisonment of children. I hope this is something that the Minister and the committee he chairs had in mind when they made their decision to counter South African propaganda, and that making known the plight of these children would be one of the things they would be following up.

I also hope that some day soon either the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade or the Standing Committee on Human Rights might have a chance to hear testimony about this from Canadians who attended that conference, or other Canadians who have concerned themselves with this particular matter. I know that is something they are hoping to be able to do.

I also had the opportunity to meet not so long ago with members of a Canadian delegation to Angola sponsored by the Canadian Council for International Co-operation. One of their principal recommendations was that Canada begin to treat Angola on a par with other front line States and SADCC countries. I am somewhat disappointed that the Minister did not take this opportunity to indicate any new Canadian policy with respect to those recommendations made by Canadian NGOs. I believe Canadian aid to the front line states has to be comprehensive, include all the countries that need that kind of aid, and be thorough. I encourage the Minister to work with the NGO community in Canada which is to co-operate with him in any efforts the Government might contemplate to increase both the amount and effectiveness of Canadian aid to all the front line states.

• (1230)

Finally, the Minister referred to the argument about a double standard and, in very careful language, talked about no Commonwealth country being blameless with regard to "rights". It may be incidental and have no consequence, but I am curious about the blanket use of the term "rights" rather than "human rights". The concession by the Minister that Canada is not blameless is interesting and I welcome it. I have the suspicion that had I got up in the House and said this about Canada the Minister may not have been so forthcoming.

However, the Minister is right in reminding those countries, some of which are strident in denouncing South Africa and its apartheid system but which are not exactly models of political tolerance themselves, to clean up their own houses in order that their criticisms of racism in South Africa might have even more moral force than they already have by virtue of the inherent offence against humanity which apartheid constitutes.

The Commonwealth is the antithesis of apartheid, as the Minister has said. I might also suggest that la Francophonie, another organization to which Canada belongs in which both blacks and whites work together for the common good of the communities which they represent and the world, is also the antithesis of apartheid.

I ask the Minister to consider, not only with respect to the Commonwealth but also with respect to the U.N. and other international opportunities which Canada has in general, how Canada might act in concert with others and also alone to provide leadership and to give expression to the offence which Canadians unanimously, I hope, take to apartheid.

One of my colleagues has suggested some dramatic action. I do not agree with the dramatic action which he has suggested, the breaking off of all relationships with South Africa. That is not the policy which the NDP supports at this time. However, I do not think the Minister should rule out, as he sometimes does in his language, the possibility that some day—and I do not mean a far away day which never comes—we find ways for Canada to act alone and dramatically which would give expression to the unanimity with which Canadians abhor apartheid.

* * *

[Translation]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-279, an Act to amend the Official Languages Act (tabling of documents).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, this Bill arises from a concern for providing all Members of this House and all Canadians with the same service. The Bill provides that from now on, when the Government tables public documents, it shall do so in both official languages simultaneously—in French and in English—and that both versions will be equally valid. I think that today, it is essential that the Government adhere strictly to this obligation to table documents in the House in both official languages. If the Bill is passed, we will no longer have to complain about occurrences like the one we experienced recently with Bill C-22 or with the Mulroney-Reagan Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

[English]

PETITIONS

PROPOSED FREE TRADE—CALL FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present two petitions from Canadian citizens in Moose Jaw, Regina, Saskatoon, and Fort Qu'Appelle, Saskatchewan. The petitioners say that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised, in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations, that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised. They say that the Government did not have a mandate to negotiate a trade agreement and that the agreement denies Canadians secure access.

They therefore humbly petition this House not to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement until we have had a national general election.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT ECONOMIC ASSISTANCE TO MILITARY JUNTA IN POWER IN HAITI BE CEASED

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour and privilege of tabling two petitions signed by residents of my riding of Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic and general area. The undersigned, most of whom are from Haiti, humbly pray the Parliament of Canada to take immediate action and cease all economic aid to the military junta now in power in Haiti. They also ask the Parliament of Canada to increase its support for the Haitian people in their march towards democracy.

[English]

PROPOSED FREE TRADE—CALL FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty in accordance with Standing Order 106, to present to Parliament a petition duly signed by the Clerk of Petitions from a number of Canadians in Toronto, Sault Ste. Marie, Don Mills, London, St. Mary's, Brantford, Scarborough, Hamilton, and Richmond Hill.

These Canadians are concerned that the very fabric of Canadian sovereignty is threatened by the trade deal negotiated between the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States for which the Prime Minister of Canada had no mandate. They are concerned that it will reduce Canada's ability to plan our economic, social, and cultural programs.

Therefore, they request the House of Commons to ensure that a national debate takes place on the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal and that this debate result in a national general election before any agreement is signed.

OPPOSITION TO TRANSPORT OF PLUTONIUM OVER NORTHERN CANADA

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present petitions from White Horse, Yukon; Teslin, Yukon; Atlin, British Columbia; and Yellowknife, Northwest Territories. The petitioners are concerned about potential environmental and nuclear proliferation risks to Canada should flights of plutonium be allowed over northern Canada.

Therefore, the petitioners call upon the Parliament of Canada to recognize the dangers of such flights and to say no to the transport of plutonium over northern Canadian territory.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of the Minister's statement, Government Orders will be extended by 29 minutes.

Consequently, the hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business will start at 2.29 p.m.

---

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

RAILWAY SAFETY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-105, an Act to ensure the safe operation of railways and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

• (1240)

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to speak to Bill C-105, the Railway Safety Act. Although the constituency of Spadina has large railway yards in the southern end of the constituency, there is a very particular concern raised in the last several years and continuing into this year about rail safety that relates to the Gault line which runs along the northern boundary of Spadina and, in fact, runs east to west through the heart of the City of Toronto and Metro Toronto. Therefore, I am very much concerned not only because of the railway workers, the passengers, and so on, who are concerned with the railway yards in the south near the lake, but because of the situation on the Gault line about which I will say more.

In approaching this subject, I am concerned about the situation as reflected in the comments of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) this morning. In the last five years there were well over 300 fatalities in rail accidents. I am also concerned about the situation which has arisen just this year that because of failure of co-ordinated planning by the Government there is now no investigatory body since January 1 to look into rail accidents. The Government's own legislative action has cancelled the Railway Transport Commission and the Railway Transport Committee despite warnings by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) and the New Democratic Party. That rather supports the impression that the Government is not very serious about rail safety.

We are glad the Government is introducing legislation. Our Party and its predecessor have been asking for this for five decades. However, we are very sorry the legislation which was introduced is so weak that it is almost an excuse for no legislation. There are almost no teeth in it. The teeth will have to be in the regulations over which, of course, this Parliament and the public have no control, sometimes not even clear knowledge, and so far there has been no opportunity to debate them. If the Government will bring those regulations before the Standing Committee on Transport there will be at least some opportunity for Members of Parliament, including the opposition Parties and, I hope, the public, to examine those regulations and to give the Government the benefit of whatever wisdom they have. In that connection, I would hope particularly that all of the railway unions will be invited to comment on the regulations before they go into effect, since those people are the ones who must carry them out. In many cases, those people are the ones whose lives are most directly endangered by safety hazards.

In this connection, I want to say that it is not true, as has been implied by some people, that the principal failure of rail safety is the negligence of employees. There are other causes which often go unnoticed or, at least, they are not well publicized. I remember many years ago when my father, a lawyer in Winnipeg, took a case for a railway worker in a nearby town whose daughter had been killed on a railway siding. She had been going to school over a path used by herself and others for weeks during that winter and one day she was crushed between two boxcars that were being shunted. What the court found was that the railway was fundamentally at fault. The regulations required that there be a "brakie" on the leading end of the car being shunted, but management, in its usual corner-cutting, cost-cutting, way neglected to put a brakie on that job. It saved a little money but it cost a little girl her life.

From my own experience of working 18 years in a factory, I know there are many accidents which occur not primarily through employee negligence but through unsafe conditions created by management, including conditions of speed-up—"Hurry, hurry, hurry. Get it done. Skip the little rules in the book if they slow down your work". Therefore, I am very deeply distressed that this Act provides a ratio of five government officials, who do not necessarily know what is going on with respect to the rail lines, and five railway representatives to one representative of the workers. There would be five representatives from the company which is interested in making profits, five representatives from the Government, but only one representative from the workers who must carry out the orders and whose lives, are themselves more at risk than the lives generally speaking, of the public. This is a very unfair imbalance. It puts a single worker representative in the position of being a mere token who can very often have no real influence on a decision for which he, nevertheless, might be held responsible along with the majority.

Another unfairness of this Bill is the scale of fines. We are told the maximum fine for a worker who violates this Act would be $10,000. However, the maximum fine for a company in violation would be $50,000. That is sickening. An amount of $10,000 could very well be 20 per cent or 25 per cent of the annual earnings of, say, a locomotive engineer. What about the annual earnings of the President of CPR which are about $600,000? For him, $10,000 is almost invisible. It is less than 20 per cent of his earnings. Not, of course, that he would be charged individually, but it does help to point out the contrast. The real contrast is with the annual profits of these companies, which I believe are never less than $100 million, at least on average. If the annual profit of the company is $100 million or more, and if there were to be a proportionate fine levied against the company when the company is at fault under this law, it should be in the range of $20 million to $30 million. That would be a fine in proportion to the $10,000 against a locomotive engineer earning $40,000 or $50,000 a year.

The Government is not serious in this legislation about compelling or even persuading the companies to be serious about safety. Some of my colleagues have already pointed out the great lack of safety across this country at level crossings, for example. We have them in Toronto. The railways are very unwilling to spend a dollar, if they can avoid it under the law, in order to promote safety for children going to school and old people going to the store, or whatever else people have to do when they use level crossings.

There is a further unfairness in this Bill in its treatment of the doctor-patient relationship. This is something I have had experience with during my 18 years in a factory. There was a company doctor. We were not required to go to the company doctor when we felt sick, but we were required to go to the company doctor when they wanted us examined. The company doctor considered it his obligation to give the medical information to the company. Why? Because the company paid his fee. In ordinary business terms, of course, you get what you pay for and you give what you are paid for. However, the College of Physicians and Surgeons has a different view. The view of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, as expressed to the Toronto Board of Health some years ago in a letter, when we asked its view on a safety question and on a question of a doctor's responsibility to the patient, including a company doctor, said that the only person entitled to receive the information about the patient's health from the doctor is the patient or anyone to whom the patient is willing to have the information transmitted. He must give his waiver before that information is given to anyone else, whether it is the company, the union, the police or whoever it is. That is the view of the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

• (1250)

Yet this Bill violates the traditional confidential relationship between doctor and patient by stating that the doctor must give information on the patient's health to the employer. There may be a ground for an employer needing to know certain facts about the patient's condition. It can be addressed, but it should not be addressed simply by an arbitrary rule that the doctor can tell the employer whatever he thinks he should tell him and that the patient should have no recourse against that.

What has happened in our factory is that sometimes the doctor gave information to the employer that he had not even given to the patient. The patient did not know his own condition fully. I know that in another factory in Toronto, a lead factory, the doctor withheld vital information about lead contamination in the employees' bodies.

He may have given the information to the company but he withheld it from the patients because he considered that his obligation was to the people who paid him his money and not to the person whose life he was examining and to whom as a doctor he was sworn to be responsible.

Therefore I find that this pattern in the legislation of reducing worker representation on the railway safety code consultative committee to a token, and of setting such an unfair balance of fines and of giving the company rights over the information regarding the patient's life when he has been examined by a doctor, information which even the patient may not have, I find those to be in the pattern of blaming the workers in a situation where costs are cut on safety so that the profit goes to the company and the personal risk of injury and the blame goes to the worker. That is far too common a pattern in our country. I am sorry that this Bill perpetuates it.

It does thereby give to the company an incentive to increase its profits by corner-cutting. As has been pointed out, the Government has given the companies another kind of incentive to do the same thing by introducing deregulation. It has made Canadian Pacific and Canadian National extremely vulnerable to unfair competition from south of the border given the geographic arrangements. But to add this further incentive of giving the company an unfair control over safety decisions as against the workers is going to mean that companies will spend even less money on the construction or maintenance of tracks, even less money on the removal of level crossings, even less money on the buying of safety equipment and the maintaining of it in safe running order, even less money on adequate training for all employees, and even less money on necessary scheduling of employees' time so that there is no danger of overtiredness on the job. I think that is very unfortunate. There are possibilities that the Bill's faults in this respect can be rectified. I hope that the government Members as well as the opposition Members will look for those faults and remedy them in amendments in the Transport Committee.

I want to mention one other matter to which I referred at the beginning. Last month the Toronto Area Rail Transportation of Dangerous Goods Advisory Council held hearings in Toronto concerning the complaints that arose about danger on the Gault line since the notorious railway derailment in Mississauga in 1979. There has been continuous and strong pressure from residents of Toronto to stop the practice of bringing dangerous goods, explosives or dangerous gasses, anything that could cause harm to human beings as well as property if railway cars were derailed and perhaps broken open by the force of derailment. None of those things should be transported through that railway line.

At present about 80 percent of what goes through that railway line neither originates in Metro Toronto nor does it terminate in Metro Toronto. It is a through line for most of these dangerous goods. We are saying they should not be curried there. But there is nothing in this Bill that gives us anything to hang on to. Everything in it is referred, as it were, in a discretionary way. The vital parts are referred in a discretionary way to the regulations which we have not seen and do not know when we will see them.

The people in Toronto, and I do not mean just a few residents, I mean Toronto City Council and Metro Council, have both demanded that that line be moved out of Toronto, not on to the perimeter of Toronto but well north of Toronto, for which surveys have been done in a preliminary way. It is a feasible line to build. The advantage of it is that even though population in those areas will no doubt grow, even if the line is built now well outside of Toronto, there can be a buffer strip created along the line so that residents will not be living cheek by jowl with a railroad carrying dangerous goods. At present it would be horrendously costly to build a buffer strip such as that through the City of Toronto because there would be a great deal of expensive property that would have to be acquired. So we want the line out of Toronto.

I believe that from my knowledge of the housing and real estate activities in Toronto and Metro the cost of moving the line would be fully recovered by the railway and its subsidiaries such as Marathon Realty because the land values would immediately soar. I know Marathon well enough to know it would make a mint of money out of recycling that railway line into housing.

I regret that this law is weak as it is. It is no doubt better than nothing. It is a start. But it is a very poor start considering what the Government should have brought in in connection with public complaints. It gives no real voice to the workers. It gives no real voice to the public. It is loaded in favour of the cost-cutting interests of the companies.

I hope that this Bill will be amended so as to provide that the Government and the companies and the unions at least would sit down public hearings, to which the public have access as well, in order to work out a fairer system of responsibility for rail safety.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) on a question or comment.

• (1300)

Mr. Reid: The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) has emphasized the lack of provisions for safety on the railways. By way of comment, I would like to point out to him the Canadian incident record of railway happenings, and I will read from a report which states that the number of train accidents, derailments, collisions, crossings and maintenance equipment accidents decreased from 1,456 to 985 or 32 per cent between 1975 and 1985.

The Hon. Member gives the impression that all across the transportation modes there will be a decrease of interest and concern for safety. May I point out again that the Hon. Minister has emphasized that safety and security will be a top priority in the deregulation aspect of the modes of transportation.

In the United States, and on the United States' side, I do not know why the Hon. Member feels that this record of safety will diminish. How does the Hon. Member respond to the position of John Riley, a federal railroad administrator in the United States where the Staggers Act and the deregulation policy have been implemented for several years ahead of that which is being implemented in Canada? Mr. Riley states, "One of the often overlooked aspects of this issue is that safety for the railroads has improved dramatically since Staggers". I think there is a direct cause and relationship there. There is no reason to believe that with deregulation safety will be prejudiced.

The Hon. Member makes the misconceived statement that the Bill has no provision for investigation of accidents on the railway. Bill C-105 refers to the National Transportation Act and a National Transportation Agency. If the Hon. Member reads that Act, he will realize that the responsibilities charged to that agency is one of investigating the reason for the accident and determining causes, which gives Parliament an opportunity thereafter to take the necessary action.

As a Ministry, we have indicated that safety is of high priority as are the number of safety factors, security measures, and inspectors to ensure that the security measures are implemented and kept in place. I say to the Hon. Member that the basis of his presentation is not properly founded when he points out that safety will be prejudiced in the years to come under Bill C-105.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) for his intervention, and I take him quite seriously, knowing his concern in a number of other areas. I may not have explained myself clearly on one point that he raised. I did not intend to say that this Bill has no provision for investigation. If I stated that, I was mistaken. That was not what I meant to say. What I am referring to is the fact that for the last five weeks there is no provision for investigation. There is a gap. The accidents do not stop, but the investigation authority has stopped.

There I am referring to a statement attributed to L. R. Steves on January 19. He is the Atlantic District Director of NTA Rail Safety Branch. In chairing a public meeting in Halifax dealing with a series of derailments that have taken place in Nova Scotia over the past year or so, Mr. Steves admitted that as of January 19, there is no agency empowered to investigate accidents or make other inquiries into matters related to railway safety.

When this Bill is passed, and when the regulations are written and put into force, they may very well provide what the Hon. Member says. But sitting in front of the Hon. Member is a Minister whose colleague last summer promised a change of regulations in immigration matters. After six months all he does is to send us a nice letter saying that it will be some months yet before those regulations are written. We really do not know how long it will take to write the regulations for Bill C-105 and put them into effect. Until then, in effect, there is no investigative agency. We just have to hope that accidents will miraculously cease until the Government gets ready to put an agency back into being.

The Hon. Member referred to a decrease in the accident rate over a decade. I believe I remember that earlier today he referred to a decrease in the volume of traffic. Of course, one way to bring the accident rate to zero would be to shut down the railways entirely and permanently. Sometimes, in passenger traffic, it looks as if that is exactly what the railway companies are trying to do. If there is no service, there will be no passengers. Nobody will be hurt. There will be no workers, and none of them will be hurt either. I do not think that is what the Hon. Member who raised the question wishes, but I think his use of that statistic raises as many questions as it might answer.

As to the Minister's assurance that safety has a high priority, we have heard that before. We have heard it many times. It is now more than eight years since the derailment in Mississauga. That derailment could have been a disaster with a disastrous death toll, if it had not happened in fairly vacant land. If that had happened north of Dupont Street in Spadina, there may have been hundreds of fatalities. We do not know. But certainly it would have been a much larger disaster. Yet eight years later the matter is still being investigated under the authority of the Minister. There is no big hurry about safety, Mr. Speaker. This is in spite of representations from the city council and from the metro council, both of which are led by responsible officials, many of them of the same Party as the Hon. Member who raised this question with me. Yet they cannot get a serious answer from the Government on the safety question.

Most people are not even satisfied that the 25 mile per hour limit is being observed. It is difficult to prove. If someone stands by a train that goes rushing by, they usually do not have a radar trap with them in order to test the speed of the train. I know that residents along that line do not believe that the railway is honouring its so-called voluntary undertaking to reduce speeds to 25 miles per hour when carrying dangerous goods.

The public in Toronto is becoming impatient waiting for some evidence that the Minister has this high regard for safety that we have been told about.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate today on the Bill entitled, "An Act to ensure the safe operation of railways and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof".

Since I came to the House in 1984, I have been a full and active member of the Transport Committee. During that time the committee has dealt with a number of pieces of transportation legislation. We have dealt with two deregulation Bills, the Aviation Safety Act, and the Canada Shipping Act. This Bill is clearly an important component. It exemplifies the Government's attitude towards safety that it was not in a position to bring in a rail safety Act until after it had not only brought in legislation dealing with deregulation on the railroads, but actually had that legislation enacted and in effect.

As we know, even if we move quickly, consideration of Bills like this will take time. It is regrettable that, up until this point, the Government has put safety on the back burner.

• (1310)

Let me begin by indicating why we need a Railway Safety Act. I should point out that rail unions since almost immediately after the Second World War, along with the CCF and then the NDP, have been calling for a Railway Safety Act. It goes to show that the previous administration did not value safety on the rails as a high priority, nor did previous Conservative Governments. However, I am pleased that we finally have a Bill before us. I look forward to the work that we will be doing in the Standing Committee on Transport to refine the legislation to reflect better the needs of the people who work on the rails and the people who come in contact with railroads.

I want to do a little historical look-see since 1984 and to start with the final piece of correspondence I have on a matter regarding inspection procedures, particularly in Thunder Bay but elsewhere as well. It is a letter addressed to the Minister of Transport from the Canadian Division, Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, signed by its National President, S. A. Horodyski. I want to read into the record parts of this letter. It was sent in response to a letter from the Minister saying that safety was no problem and that there was no need for a safety inquiry. It read:

> Your response has missed the point of our concerns. Your policies have failed to recognize the serious potential for disaster being created by the railways' massive lay-offs of the employees who are responsible and specifically trained to identify defective railway rolling stock components and ensure they are set off the train and properly repaired prior to resumption of service.
>
> The intervals of inspections by specially trained carmen (car inspectors) are being reduced drastically across Canada's railways with elimination of inspection points with the railways relying on unqualified personnel to insure safe movement of trains across Canada. This practice appears to have the blessing of the soon to be defunct Canadian Transport Commission (CTC) . . .
>
> An example of why our confidence in the CTC is not what it should be is attached which deals with a directive by the CTC to CP Rail concerning mechanized inspections, which was ignored by the railway without any repercussion.
>
> While technologies introduced on the railways today have assisted in reducing mechanical failures, they have not eliminated those failures. It is extremely precarious for railways to adopt an attitude towards safety which is on a practical basis as opposed to one based on a stringent standard of rail safety with consistent maximum application so as to ensure minimal failure, thereby, protecting against loss of life, personal injury of employees and the general public, as well as property damage.
>
> By the federal Government introducing the economic regulatory reform (C-18) first, the railways appear to have taken this as a signal from the Government that safety takes second place to economics. This is further evidence by our understanding that the Railway Safety Act mentioned in your letter will not be introduced until sometime in 1990.

Obviously that part of the letter was incorrect, because the Act is before us in 1988.

I want to return to the reference about CPR ignoring CTC instructions. The matter was first raised with me in February 1986. To go back a little further, I have a May 24, 1985 copy of an internal CPR memo from the General Car Foreman addressed to the Westfort supervisors and the traffic yard supervisors in Thunder Bay. It reads:

> Effective immediately, Kubota Tractors are to be utilized to perform train inspections at Westfort Yard.
>
> This is to be done in all areas where the tractors can be driven and operated in a safe manner. It is realized that some areas are not yet suitable for this operation but will be made so in the future.

That was CP's first shot. On February 12, 1986 I received a letter from the President of Lodge 361, Mr. Lemesani of the Canadian Division of Brotherhood Railway Carmen. It read:

> Dear Mr. Angus:
>
> The subject of this letter in the form of a petition, is that of the Safety Standing Inspection of originating trains in the Westfort Inspection Yard of CP Rail by the Carmen who are being forced to do these inspections while operating Kubota tractors.

All Carmen of Lodge 361 in Thunder Bay who are required to do inspections of trains while driving the tractors, maintain that they can not do a proper inspection. Most of the under carriage is not visible while sitting on a tractor. The Carmen have to look ahead at the road while driving, and insist that no one can see to his side to inspect the train and also ahead to drive at the same time. This will undoubtedly cause many defects on these trains to be missed.

Many of these trains travel in excess of a thousand miles before having another Standing Inspection, and only have Pull-By inspections while on route to their destination. The Carmen of Thunder Bay strongly urge that this policy be changed, by allowing the qualified inspectors (Carmen) to walk the train while inspecting. In this manner they will be able to inspect cars properly by standing and bending to see up under the cars at the coupler assemblies, at the brake rigging and a close inspection of the wheels, all of which when defective cause cars to derail and cause major mishaps.

The lives of all the public who come in contact with these trains at level crossings and in towns and cities in which these trains travel through are at stake, as well as the train crews. The Carmen, who are the Safety Qualified Inspectors on the railroad know that they cannot inspect trains properly while driving tractors, and stress to you that this policy must be changed for the safety of all.

I wrote to the Minister of Transport at that time asking him to investigate the matter, which he did. On May 9, 1986, the then Minister of Transport, the present Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) wrote the following:

Dear Mr. Angus:

Thank you for your letter of 17 February 1986, with which you enclosed a copy of correspondence from Mr. H. Lemesani of Britannia Lodge No. 361 of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, concerning safety inspections at CP Rail's Westfort inspection yard at Thunder Bay.

I appreciate receiving Mr. Lemesani's comments on this matter. I understand that the Railway Transport Committee—was aware of this type of inspection practice. The matter was investigated and, as a result, the RTC instructed CP Rail to correct its practice.

I trust that this action will meet Mr. Lemesani's concerns. Thank you for your interest in this matter.

The practice was not corrected, and I have what appears to be a telex dated at Winnipeg on June 17, 1986 from the General Manager, Operation and Maintenance, CPR. It went to some of the Thunder Bay supervisors and read:

This refers to the recent press clipping from Thunder Bay and Moose Jaw quoting various Members of Parliament that CP Rail has been ordered by the Railway Transport Committee to cease using Kubota tractors in the safety inspection of freight cars. The procedures that CP Rail is using has been adopted by most North American railroads and we do not intend to back off from our position. You should therefore ensure that there will be no changes made in our inspection and repair procedures at Thunder Bay and Moose Jaw regardless of what the press has said.

Obviously regardless of what the Minister of Transport was saying at that time as well. This is why we need a Railway Safety Act. From January 24, 1986 to February 7, 1986, the following is a list of the level of inspections and what they found at Thunder Bay:

January 24-10 trains were run thru-only one was given a thorough check for running-gear defects train #481-Unit #5545 had skids reported on #5 and #6 wheels and had to be taken to the shops for repair. January 30-6 trains were run thru-only 1 was given a thorough running gear check . . .

February 1-7 trains R/T-only 1 checked—

February 3-6 trains R/T-2 checked—

February 7-7 trains R/T, 2 checked—

Obviously economics are dictating to the railroads that they must reduce their level of inspections. They are dropping back on the number of inspectors and changing work responsibilities for less qualified people to do the inspections, and all in the name of cutting costs. When they cut costs, they cut corners. This is also why we need a Railway Safety Act.

Quite frankly we need a Railway Safety Act which is a bit stronger than the one before us. Instead of there being an overseeing committee charged with the responsibility of administering the inspection side of things or in charge of enforcement, we have a railway safety consultative committee.

• (1320)

I mentioned earlier that this House had passed another Act during the life of this Government, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board Act. Under that Act there was not a consultative board or an advisory board set up. There was a Canadian Aviation Safety Board. Let me quote from that Act:

There shall be a board to be known as the Canadian Aviation Safety Board consisting of not fewer than three members, at least one of whom shall be a full-time member, to be appointed by the Governor in Council.

This Board is to oversee aviation safety, not observe it, not to pass comments to Ministers but to oversee it. Concerning the object of the Board, we find:

The object of the Board is to advance aviation safety

(a) by identifying safety deficiencies as evidenced by aviation occurrences;

(b) by conducting independent investigations and, if necessary, public inquiries into aviation occurrences in order to make findings as to their contributing factors and causes; and

(c) by reporting publicly on its investigations and public inquiries and on the findings in relation thereto and by making recommendations designed to eliminate or reduce safety deficiencies.

What we have in the Railway Safety Act is:

The Minister may establish a committee, to be known as the Railway Safety Consultative Committee . . . consisting of not fewer than two and not more than four members who, in the opinion of the Minister, have special expertise or special interests in matters of safe railway operations, plus seven other members as follows:

(a) one member to represent the Minister;

(b) one member to represent the Canadian National Railway Company;

(c) one member to represent Canadian Pacific Limited;

(d) one member to represent VIA Rail Canada Inc.;

(e) one member to represent the other railway companies to which this Act applies;

(f) one member to represent the shippers of rail freight traffic; and

(g) one member to represent the Canadian Railway Labour Association.

What does this committee do?

The Committee may, on its own initiative, and shall, at the request of the Minister, advise and make recommendations to the Minister on any matter affecting safe railway operations, and shall make to the Minister at least one report annually on the activities of the Committee.

That is not good enough at all. If we are to have a properly developed rail safety act, we have to ensure that we are not allowing the bureaucrats in the Department or the Minister, although we accept the fact that ultimately the Minister is responsible for the safety of the railways, but an independent board with the power to oversee the activities of the rail safety act.

The other area of concern that I have and upon which some of my colleagues have touched already is that of fines. There is an incredible imbalance in this Bill. We do not have to go back too far, just to the Hinton inquiry, to hear about the pressures of the rail industry and how it has become the practice for a conductor to not stop a train because he cannot communicate with the head end—he assumes it is a radio problem or what have you—and, if the train is later he will probably get demerit points. So, that railway psychology came into being. Someone who perhaps breaks a rule, not vindictively, but because everyone else is, may become involved in an accident. This individual is subject to a fine of $10,000. The company, which may have set the scenario for that ignoring of the rules by the economic pressure on workers—assuming that it could be convicted of that—will be fined $50,000.

Now, $50,000 to the CPR is petty cash, to use a phrase that was used earlier today. That is meaningless to the CPR, but $10,000 to an individual who works for the railroad, who is a brakeman, a conductor or an engineer with a family and a mortgage, is a lot of money. While there should be penalties for infractions, we have to keep the balance in mind. Quite clearly, the fine for the railroads the corporations, is peanuts. The amount should be raised substantially so that it is no longer deemed a licence fee, a licence fee to stretch safety requirements, to avoid living up to the law of the land.

The amount should be substantial. Make it $1 million, make it $5 million or make it $10 million. Obviously, we should be giving the judiciary the power to set a fine that relates to the infraction. If one of the two railroads providing locomotive services to VIA Rail, for example, by their economic action have not had locomotives safety checked for a period longer than is acceptable, and if they put at risk the lives of their passengers on that train, why should they only face a fine of $50,000 if convicted? It is ludicrous. That $50,000 has to be raised significantly. What about putting on a ceiling of $10 million or $20 million, but make the amount a major economic impact on the operator.

Another area to which I want to refer briefly is the section which requires engineers employed by a proposing party to certify for safety railway works that have received ministerial approval as well as other works which fall within certain prescribed categories. This section removes the responsibility of the regulator to ensure that works are completed to an acceptable standard for safe operation while placing that responsibility in the hands of proposing parties, namely, railway companies for the most part.

This provision of the Bill will make it easier for railway companies to operate as they choose. It is unclear what contribution they will make to safety of railway operations. I think it is a responsibility of the Government to ensure that whatever works are paid for meet the standards. The Government should not rely on the railroad or the company because they may cut corners. A company may decide to design something in a way that has a limited lifespan for purely economic reasons. That section has to be changed.

I am sure that if we talk to railroaders across the country we would be horrified to hear about all of the things happening, the violations and the stretching of safety, all of the problems that have been created in the name of the bottom line. Move more goods faster at less cost is the philosophy. There is a cost, and ultimately that cost is safety.

I look forward to working with my colleagues on the Transport Committee in reviewing this legislation and hearing witnesses. Hopefully we can modify the Bill and make it better. We have to change the consultative committee to give it real power. We have to change the make-up because it is really a railroad company committee as it stands now, with weight behind it. We have to achieve some balance. Over the years the railroad workers themselves have been fighting for safety, whether health and safety for themselves, demanding changes in the lay-out of the locomotives so that the workers can work in a proper environment, or whether it is inspection procedures, track maintenance, you name it. The railroad workers are the ones who have been fighting. We have a responsibility to them to make sure that this Bill, which will probably not be amended for quite some time, is the best possible rail safety act that money can buy.

• (1330)

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member. I always have considered him to be a reasonable Member, one who is trying to move the world forward with his comments and his positions. However, I was disturbed to hear him talk about the Government putting rail safety on the back burner.

As the Hon. Member knows, this piece of legislation is the first railway safety legislation of a comprehensive kind to be introduced in Canada in a long time. In fact, I am told that the original rail safety legislation was introduced in 1908, a long time ago. While there have been amendments and some tinkering with the law in an attempt to improve it in that time, there has not been a comprehensive look at the safety legislation until now, 1988, under the present Government.

I would hope that the Hon. Member would give credit where credit is due. This is a major step forward that has been long overdue and the credit for it belongs to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and the present Government.

I know from the Hon. Member's comments that he will be working to improve the Bill. I think that is exactly what all of us should be doing. That is the main thrust of the railway safety legislation itself. Safety is of prime significance to the public as it is to all Hon. Members. Members of the public do not want to see us playing politics with safety. They want to see us working together to make sure that railways and all other modes of transportation are as safe as they possibly can be.

I might point out to the Hon. Member that there are some concerns about the speed with which this legislation is actually progressing. A consultative process took place in the development of the Bill and part of that consultative process was with the railways, the unions and citizen groups such as the M-TRAC organization from Metropolitan Toronto, Metro residents for rail safety. That group played a major part in the consultation in and development of the Bill and it is most concerned that it have an opportunity to examine the Bill in its final form carefully and to make representations before the committee because it has many concerns with the Bill. I hope the Hon. Member will agree to co-operate with that and will give his assurance that he and his Party are prepared to give every accommodation to citizen groups who wish to make representations—

Mr. Benjamin: Listen to him.

Mr. Redway: —and that in fact they will co-operate in ensuring that this Bill is the best possible Bill to ensure public safety on the railways.

Mr. Benjamin: They refused a hundred witnesses.

Mr. Redway: I am sure the Hon. Member will not be disturbed by his colleague who keeps shouting out and interrupting me.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his comments and his questions. I will give credit to this Government. Unlike the last, it did bring in a rail safety Bill. The point, though, is the over-all priorities.

The Conservative Government has made its prime focus in transportation the economic side, deregulation. Bills C-18 and C-19, the deregulation Bills, were brought in well before the Railway Safety Act was brought in. It is my understanding that a national highway safety code is not in place yet. That code was to be in place to ensure that under deregulation, there was one set of national rules to govern trucking on the highways.

In road and rail, I can legitimately say that the Government had its priorities reversed. I will give credit to the Government because it dealt with safety on the air side before it deregulated it or deregulated it any more than the Liberals already had.

The Hon. Member spoke about M-TRAC, a very excellent organization. I would like to remind the Hon. Member that it was not the New Democrats who refused to allow in excess of 100 groups to appear before the Transport Committee studying Bills C-18 and C-19. We would be more than happy to hear from everyone who wishes to have input.

As I said in my speech, this is an important piece of legislation. The Hon. Member has pointed out that there has not been a comprehensive review of it since 1908. This means that it will be some time in the next century before we do it again. Even though it might take us a bit of extra time, I think we should do it right this time.

I would ask government Members to go into this not with the Whip's hand at their backs but with open minds and open eyes to look legitimately at this legislation and make it the best possible. This is not a philosophical issue, it is a question of safety, safety for those who work on or beside the rails and safety for the public as well.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to participate briefly in the debate on Bill C-105, an Act to ensure the safe operation of railways and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof. This is indeed a comprehensive piece of legislation. It is several hundred pages long, indeed a Bill which warrants special attention by all Hon. Members.

[Translation]

Since as usual, the Official Opposition in the House is prepared to give its full co-operation, Mr. Speaker, we want the Government to promise to hold hearings and listen to what the people have to say about a subject as important as that of the safety of our Canadian railways.

Mr. Speaker, we know the Railway Act has not been amended for many years. That is why it would be important for parliamentarians, as I said earlier, to hear the voice of the people, of elected municipal officials and of a large number of Canadians who are interested in the subject, and also of course, the voice of the railway unions.

[English]

This piece of legislation is necessary to bring rail standards up to date. It moves in the right direction and to that extent, of course, the Liberal Party intends to offer its usual co-operation to ensure that the Bill goes to committee without delay.

An Hon. Member: Sit down then.

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member across said that I should sit down. It only takes a Tory to make those kinds of unfortunate and Tory-like remarks—

Mr. Nunziata: Ignorant remarks.

Mr. Boudria: As my distinguished colleague from York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) has said, ignorant. That is a good way to describe it. We do not apologize for being concerned with railway safety. It is an important issue for us and it is important for me as a Member who represents a constituency in which there is a very important railway line which faced closure because of the inaction and unfortunate decisions of this Government to cut back on rail services.

Notwithstanding attempts of government Members to scuttle debate, I will continue with the brief remarks I had in mind. Statistics for the year 1985 from the Canadian Transport Commission show that 59 people died in rail-related accidents and 400 people suffered bodily injuries. One must wonder just how many more Canadians were affected because, of course, not all rail-related accidents are reported and for that matter, not all accidents of any kind are reported.

We know, of course, that the Foisy report was tabled in January of 1987. It has had a major impact on bringing rail safety to the attention of Canadians. A number of the recommendations of the Foisy report are in place now or are in this Bill.

• (1340)

There is a concern shared by some people that the Minister responsible for railways is also going to be responsible for rail safety. That is not a conflict of interest, but it is a form of conflict. We just wonder how sincere a Minister can be about the responsibility for rail safety when the same Minister is responsible for deregulation. We know about the adverse impact deregulation can have on rail safety. Need we remind ourselves of the experiments in highway transport deregulation and airline deregulation in the U.S. and the impact it had there. While not saying deregulation of Canadian railways will necessarily cause a number of accidents, we have to be conscious of the fact that when you operate in a deregulated environment you at least increase the chances of mishaps. Therefore, the concern for safety has to be increased in order to compensate for the danger inherent in the deregulation process.

The Minister has been telling the railways to downsize. We know about internal correspondence between officials of railways and railway employees with respect to cut-backs and how they are supposed to go about it. I have an article written by Mr. Lorne Slotnick of The Globe and Mail. Seeing as it comes from that newspaper, I know the Ministers here today will pay close attention because it is a very factual and accurate article, as I am sure they know. It says:

> A senior executive of Canadian National Railways has ordered his managers to get moving quickly on layoffs and other "downsizing" because the Crown corporation will find it harder to do so during an election campaign.
>
> "Current opinion is reflecting the strong possibility of a late spring-early summer federal election,"—

That was before the latest round of scandals. We know the possibility is a little more remote now. To continue:

> —says a confidential internal memo, dated Jan. 11, from D. L. Fletcher, CN's senior vice-president for operations. "Downsizing actions may be harder to implement as this time approaches."

So we have a situation whereby decisions on downsizing and lay-offs which could affect rail safety are taken not necessarily because they are the appropriate decision at this time, but because it is politically expedient to do so now as opposed to some months from now.

We all know that CN Rail has plans to shut down a large number of rail lines. The effect of doing so will not only be on rail safety but highway safety as well. I may have brought to your attention before the fact that CN has produced an internal document, a copy of which I just happen to have here because someone slid it underneath my door one day, which demonstrates clearly the intention of CN to shut down a number of rail lines across Canada, some of which are in the great constituency of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

The document I have comes from the St. Lawrence region of CNR and contains a rationalization program, which is a euphemism for cut-backs, from 1986 to 1996. It is entitled, "Lists of Sections Identified for Abandonment". Among those sections are the Beachburg subdivision, 163.9 miles, and the Alexandria subdivision, some 57.7 miles. That subdivision is the part of the CN rail line between Ottawa and Montreal. Actually, it runs from the Quebec border just west of Coteau-Station. I know the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) is familiar with that area. It runs from there almost to Ottawa. In other words, through my constituency. If you put the Beachburg subdivision together with the Alderdale subdivision, it would mean rail transport between Montreal and Sudbury could be done only via Toronto if one is using the CN line.

Why is that important to rail safety? For a number of reasons. I see my friend from York East is here. I know he is interested in the subject of transportation of dangerous goods via Toronto. He will know that once you shut down this rail line from Sudbury to Montreal, you increase the traffic and the flow of dangerous goods through Toronto. That is where the other line is. I have discussed this with the Hon. Member before and I know he is concerned about the issue. I congratulate the Hon. Member for his interest.

I have another letter here dated September 9, 1986, from the office of the President and Chief Operating Officer of CN rail. I do not think he likes me reading his confidential letters here in the House but that is just tough. It says:

> This will confirm discussions on Thursday, September 4, 1986, concerning the Alderdale-Beachburg Subdivisions.

You will remember that is the line between Ottawa and Sudbury. He goes on:

> These changes in routing should achieve economies of scale in the Montreal-Toronto corridor, and at the same time, will focus attention on actively seeking alternatives for handling the 2,000 annual carloads of woodpulp traffic from Portage du Fort, which is currently served by way-freight from Ottawa.

A carload is the equivalent of about two large 18-wheelers. This means 4,000 extra truckloads of wood pulp could be placed on the road in the national capital area as a result of that line closure. Obviously when you talk about rail safety there is a parallel concern about an increase in truck traffic which in turn increases the chances of accidents on the highways. We know that transporting goods by truck has a lower safety record than by rail. That is quite normal. We are talking about transporting on highways which become slippery during harsh periods of winter which does cause that unfortunate circumstance. That is an entire area which is not necessarily discussed in this Bill at all. However, that is an area of real safety which I want to bring to the attention of the Government.

• (1350)

I know that the Member for York East (Mr. Redway) is interested in the area of transportation of dangerous goods. Chemicals produced in northern Ontario presently go through the Alderdale, Beachburg, and Alexandria subdivisions. If the unfortunate decision to close this line were ever implemented, those goods would be shipped to Montreal via Toronto. In the process those dangerous goods would be travelling through an area with an even greater concentration of population, thereby further compromising the safety of Canadians.

I bring those matters to the attention of the House, not in an effort to use up time or delay the passage of this Bill, but to bring to the attention of the Government and all Members who will sit on the committee studying Bill C-105 that in the area of rail safety there is an important concern about safety on the tracks and the downsizing measures and cut-backs forced by the Government which may affect safety on those tracks.

A second concern is the effects which deregulation could have on rail safety. There are other concerns which I have expressed which I will summarize again in conclusion. Those are my concerns in the area of downsizing railroads and shutting down rail lines which will increase truck traffic and further compromise the safety of Canadians.

I wish to offer my own co-operation and that of my colleagues. I hope that the Government and all Members who will be sitting on the committee will take into consideration the remarks I have just made in order to ensure that rail lines are not closed, creating safety concerns in addition to the ones we have already. It is a difficult area to deal with.

I know that Governments are trying to cut down on rail lines but a cut-back in rail lines is not necessarily an economy. In many cases the federal Government saves a few dollars, but the increased truck traffic on highways causes further deterioration of road-beds. In that case you achieve an economy for the federal Government but an expense for the provinces which are charged with maintenance of highways. That is an important concern which I hope the Tories will remember.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my hon. friend. I listened to his speech and I do not think he mentioned in any detail the fact that the Bill contains no provision to allow employees to relate unsafe practices. In other words, when they encounter unsafe practices or are asked to do something which they believe is unsafe or unsound in terms of health or safety, there is no provision in the Bill for their protection.

Does my hon. friend not think it is reasonable that legislation should contain some mention of how that is to be handled? If employees are expected to report on unsafe practices by their superiors, it would be like reporting on your boss. That is probably an unfair request to make of any employee unless there was a procedure for the avoidance of any possible harassment. Could my hon. friend comment on those two items?

[Translation]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) for his question. The Hon. Member is right in that there is nothing to encourage or protect an employee who may decide to report or make public or inform his superiors or supervisors of a deficiency in the railway safety system. Obviously, an employee should be encouraged as much as possible to do so, and there should be a special provision in the Act or the regulations to protect the employee in question. In fact, this is not the only part of the Bill that is found wanting in this respect.

For instance, we know that a committee will be created as a result of this Bill. I have been told the committee will have eleven members: Four will be ministerial appointments, six will be appointed by the railway companies, and only one will be appointed by the unions.

So as you see, Mr. Speaker, we hardly have a balanced situation here. One representative for the workers and ten for the Department and the railways.

I think it is clear that this particular clause, I believe it is Clause 44, should provide a better balance, that is, increased representation by those who speak for the railway workers. I think the Government would do well to have a larger number of employees so that these employees or more appropriately, their representatives, the unions, could raise any concerns they might have about safety or similar subjects.

Interestingly, there are a number of other groups that do not have much say in the matter either. I am thinking of groups representing community interests, and a good example would be the towns, municipalities and counties across Canada that often have serious concerns about safety. They will not be represented on the committee the Minister proposes to appoint in Bill C-105.

My point is that municipalities, employees and their unions should have far greater representation on this committee. Some people will say that the Minister has the discretionary power to appoint municipal representatives, and so on, to the committee but I feel this is not enough. We should have a system that would guarantee public interest groups are given a number of seats, for instance, Transport 2000, municipalities and so forth, to provide as I said earlier, a balance and ensure that the committee will not only represent a Government that wants to cut costs and railway companies, who also want to cut costs like the Government tells them to, especially in the case of the Crown corporation.

[English]

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I was most interested in listening to the Hon. Member's response to the question with regard to whether he believes there should be some sort of job protection for employees of railways who disclose breeches of safety practices, in other words, to use the generic term, whistleblowing protection.

I was most interested in his comments in that regard because, as you know, Mr. Speaker, I introduced a private Member's motion on the subject of whistleblowing protection generally within the federal area of competence a few months ago. That particular whistleblowing protection would have included not only the protection of whistleblowers in federally regulated industries and businesses such as railroads, but it would also have protected whistleblowers in Government departments and agencies and those who were engaged in businesses which were contracting with the federal Government. At that time, during the course of the debate—and my motion was talked out, Mr. Speaker—the Hon. Member's Party, the Liberal Party, took a position against that sort of legislation. The spokesman for the Liberal Party spoke out quite strongly against support for whistleblowing legislation.

• (1400)

I wonder if the Hon. Member would have a word with Members of his Party and urge them in future to support this form of whistleblowing legislation, particularly my own motion when I bring it forth again in the House?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to respond to the Hon. Member. He, of course, will know that Private Members' motions are just that, Private Members' motions. It is interesting to note—and I invite the Hon. Member to pay attention to this—that most of the people who disagreed with the Hon. Member's motion, although it is true that one Liberal expressed that view, were speaking on behalf of the Conservative Party.

Mr. Redway: Only one Liberal spoke.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity late this week to make some comments with respect to Bill C-105, the Railway Safety Act. I must say that over the last number of months I cannot recall how many delegations representing the various railway unions, users of the railways and representatives of CN, CP and VIA Rail, I have received. They are all concerned about a variety of issues. I suppose the top of the list would be the low moral we are presently experiencing with our railway employees.

I suspect the number of people in this country who are directly employed by the railways would approach nearly 60,000 and, of course, there are thousands of others who are indirectly employed by either CN, CP or VIA Rail. Therefore, we are talking about a vast number of Canadians and the moral of railway employees is probably at its lowest level ever. One can hardly blame them when one considers that the Government of Canada legislated the workers back to work last August with the promise that the differences between the companies and the employees would be ironed out through an arbitrator. An arbitrator was appointed, but month after month passed, one deadline was reached and extensions were given, and now we are told that the arbitrator is planning meetings well into April, May and June and, I have heard, as far away as September.

It would appear—and I repeat appear—that the companies have no intention of working to resolve this issue with respect to the working conditions of their employees. It seems that the Government, by giving these extensions to the arbitrator, is almost sympathetic to that view. I hope that is not the case.

On the front page of the Globe and Mail yesterday there was a major story with respect to a memo sent by a senior vice-president of CNR, Mr. Doug Fletcher, indicating to his subordinates that they had better get on with downsizing of each and every aspect of the railway because of the fear that as we get closer and closer to an election, it will become more and more difficult for the railway to do so, for political reasons. I do not know if that memo is accurate. The Globe and Mail published it on its front page, and I suspect it would have ensured that a story of that nature would be well researched. If the railways are downsizing—which is a fancy word for saying laying off people—and from talking to employees across the country one certainly gets that impression, it seems the railways are bent on laying off people.

In Kamloops we have both the CN and CP coming through that community, and have seen the effects of downsizing. We have seen the loss of many, many jobs over the last number of months as the railways rationalize their operations and downsize. While I must admit I have never been a super fan of CN or CP in terms of how they approach their labour relations, I also want to be a little sympathetic because they have been forced to enter into what in many respects could be called an unrealistic competitive world as a result of deregulation in the transportation sector. They are now forced to rationalize their operations, to cut back their operations to the bone in an effort to compete with other modes of transporation, as a result of deregulation.

I realize that this is an ideological debate which I suspect we will have for many years, perhaps forever, with respect to the role our railroads play in terms of competitiveness. If we are trying to do everything as cheaply as possible, that is one route. If we are trying to do things as safely as possible, that is another route. If one is responsible for one of Canada's major railways and sees very clearly that because of the Government's commitment to deregulation one has to cut every corner possible to be competitive with trucking firms from the United States and elsewhere, the one thing that goes by the by, obviously, is safety, safety for employees and safety generally for people living along the rail lines, and for others. That is a fact of life.

Railroaders have consistently heard story after story about the lives of people working on the railways being put at risk. Many people have lost their lives through accidents of one kind or another. There is a growing sense that our railway systems are not becoming safer but in fact more unsafe. The fact that they are moving faster, that they are heavier, and moving more hazardous materials all the time, ought to raise our level of concern as parliamentarians higher than ever.

I also want to say that I am happy we are debating this Bill on railway safety. If I recall my history books correctly, CCF Members in the House of Commons in the late 1940s asked for this piece of legislation. I remember all sorts of instances where New Democrats in the House of Commons have called for Liberal and Conservative Governments to bring forward legislation that would enable those people working on or alongside the railways of Canada to do so in a safe environment. We are now debating that kind of legislation and, to be fair, I want to indicate how pleased I am to be doing so.

That pleasure will be reflected in our willingness to expedite this legislation with respect to its debate in the House of Commons and its treatment at whatever committee it might end up. That is not saying we like everything in this piece of legislation. There are things we do not like about it. There are areas where we believe we can suggest improvements through amendments, and we will be doing just that. However, I want to make it very clear that we have no intention of doing anything that might hinder the progress of this legislation so that we can see it introduced into reality as soon as possible.,

That becomes very important because I am sure you are well aware, Mr. Speaker, of the vacuum in which we are operating. Because of the deregulation legislation that was introduced into this House not long ago, the CTC and the Rail Transport Committee ceased to exist as of the end of last year. We are now into the next year and are awaiting the National Transportation Agency to set itself up and get its various regulatory organizations in place. That has yet to occur in total. So we are caught in a no-man's land. We are existing in a vacuum when it comes to railway safety. So I think it is in the interest of all of us to ensure we progress expeditiously and do what we can not only to improve this legislation but to see it passed in amended form.

Perhaps it would be useful to look at some of the statistics over the last little while in terms of what has been going on with our rail systems across Canada. You would be interested, Mr. Speaker, to learn that since 1982 we have experienced 1,318 train derailments. From my recollection, it would seem that most of those occurred in my constituency which is in the mountainous area of British Columbia where both the CN and CP travel through some incredibly scenic country. That is another way of saying very mountainous and rough terrain. It is a wonder that we do not have more derailments. There have been 1,318 train derailments that have resulted in a few fatalities, fortunately not too many.

• (1410)

Let us now look at collisions, which is another category when we talk about rail safety. Since 1982 there have been nearly 450 train collisions. Of course, part of this is because of those over-zealous dispatchers who, in the effort to move material more rapidly across the country to generate more transportation business, often have more than one train in the same section of the track at the same time. This has resulted in some problems which have resulted, inevitably, in a collision with a number of fatalities I am sorry to have to say.

The main area of concern in terms of fatalities is associated with crossing accidents. I refer to level crossings where one is required to cross a train track, whether one is travelling in a car, a truck or some other kind of vehicle. We have had 3,437 crossing accidents since 1982 resulting in 361 fatalities, to say nothing of the very serious injuries which have occurred because of these accidents.

When we look at the last six years, we find that hundreds and hundreds of deaths have occurred as a result of crossing accidents, train collisions or derailments. Obviously, when we consider legislation dealing with rail safety its importance becomes very evident indeed.

One of the aspects that perplexes me about this legislation, and I recognize that we are not talking about the specifics of it but about the principles involved in it, is that it does not set very high standards at all. As a matter of fact, in most areas it does not set any standards. We are told that that will come at a later time when the Government introduces regulations. For example, there is nothing in the Bill that provides specifics with respect to the frequency of inspections. When will these regular inspections occur, weekly, monthly, yearly, bi-annually, when?

The Government has decided to take the cabooses off our trains. Many people who make their living on those same trains say that this will result in less safety. They say that the removal of the cabooses will result in more train mishaps. As a result the whole matter of inspection frequency becomes a major item of concern. When cabooses are not on these trains there will be instead what is called special boxes and the like to do the monitoring. There will be people to do some visual monitoring as well. We are talking about some very sophisticated, heavy equipment. As a result inspection frequency becomes a critical issue, to say nothing of the specifics regarding the maintenance of track and equipment. If we are talking about a Bill regarding rail safety, it is not unrealistic to expect that it will have to say something about the maintenance of equipment and tracks which criss-cross the country. However, the Bill is mute when it comes to these areas. As I have said, regulations will come later.

While some people would suggest that unfairness has become a hallmark of the Government, when we consider this piece of legislation we see that there are some unfair aspects to it as well. I refer specifically to the area concerning penalties and the regulations which will be developed. There are expectations in the Bill for companies as well as individuals. If one breaks the regulations or fails to comply with them then there will be penalties to be paid. This legislation virtually does not distinguish between individuals and corporations such as the CPR. If one is found to be guilty of having committed an infraction and one is an individual, then one could receive a fine of up to $10,000, and spend time in jail. However, if one is the CPR and is found to be in contravention of some aspect of this legislation, then one could actually receive a fine of up to $50,000.

CPR is one of the largest corporations in the western world. It has assets in the billions and billions of dollars, with revenues in the many billions of dollars. To think that it could actually be fined up to $50,000 is hardly what one would think is something that will deter the CPR, the CNR or VIA Rail. The point I am trying to make is that this provision is probably a licence fee to be unsafe, since if one is caught and is found guilty one would receive a fine of a few thousand dollars. That will not do anything to encourage the CPR, the CNR or VIA Rail to change some of their habits.

In terms of the theme of unfairness I draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the railway safety consultative committee which is the committee that will be set up under this legislation to advise on a whole variety of areas. Let us consider the make-up of this committee. The Minister himself or herself will be able to appoint five members to the committee. The railway companies will be able to appoint five members to the committee. The employees, who represent 60,000 individuals, will have but one member on the committee. I think it is initiatives such as this that send a very clear message to the rank and file employees of our railways that their concerns and their views are irrelevant. Quite frankly, there should be 10 employee representatives on the committee, in addition to the five appointed by the Minister and the five appointed by the companies. This would send a clear signal that the views of the employees are respected and that their welfare is utmost in the mind of the Government. I can only interpret this provision to mean that that, unfortunately, is not the case.

There is another area in the legislation which is also of great concern to me. It has to do with the protection for employees who recognize that what they have to do or what they are being requested to do by their superior is unsafe. What course of events may employees such as these pursue? What course of action is open to them when they find themselves in such a situation? The Bill has no provisions for this type of situation. It simply indicates that the employee should report to his or her superior and complain about his or her decision. You can imagine a situation, Mr. Speaker, when someone's boss tells him or her to do a certain thing, that is, to ride a train in a certain way or to deal with a piece of equipment that that person knows to be unsafe because he or she works in that environment every day, and he or she refuses to do it. That person will be in deep trouble. Obviously, if he or she goes against the wishes of the superior then that person will be harassed. He or she can expect some type of disciplinary action. There is no protection in the Bill for the employee.

If we are going to run the type of incredibly vast railway system that we have in Canada then we must want to have the employees on side. I am always amazed at the tremendous amount of loyalty that actually exists in the train community, if I can use that term, where employees of CPR, CNR and VIA are committed to their work and the companies in terms of serving them in spite of the harassment and in spite of the incredible conditions under which they are forced to work.

I referred earlier to a copy of a memo that was printed in The Globe and Mail of yesterday in which the Vice-President of the CNR states that the company must move expeditiously to lay off as many people as it can as quickly as it can so that it does not become a political issue in the next federal election campaign. That is not the way to build morale with one's employees.

• (1420)

I want to conclude my remarks by referring to an article by Professor Brian Tucker who teaches organizational behaviour at the University of Saskatchewan's College of Commerce. For some time now he has spent much of his effort and expertise examining the whole matter of stress experienced by railway employees. He has interviewed individuals who work for the railway. Of course, much of our attention was focused on the terrible incident near Hinton, Alberta, that killed 23 people in February, 1986.

That incident prompted Professor Tucker to do some analysis of what it is that causes problems on our rail systems. He figured that stress was a major factor. In this era of deregulation when competition requires companies to cut corners at every opportunity, often the employees are pushed to limits that are simply unacceptable in terms of normal human behaviour. The other day I heard representations from railway employees who live in Kamloops. They indicated the type of shifts that they were expected to work, the hours and hours that they were expected to be alert and on the job and finely tuned in terms of safety conditions. After a person works for many hours in one day, has a short sleep, and is back again for another long shift, the level of stress and the alertness and ability becomes problematic.

Brian Tucker spent much time looking at the railroad system. In the article he states:

> In the macho culture of the railways, stress is a taboo topic. Trainmen are not supposed to be affected by work-related or domestic stress. If they can't stand the heat, they're supposed to get out of the locomotive.

That is an interesting observation and an interesting code, but the reality is that those people do have work related stress, and they do have domestic related stress. Quite frankly, what is needed is a change in the culture and the working environment on the railways to reduce this stress. When employees of the railroads of Canada read in yesterday's Globe and Mail that one of the senior vice-presidents of CPR is encouraging maximum lay-offs to occur immediately, that is not the type of comment that builds confidence and generates positive morale in a corporation.

In co-operation with the federal Government, because we are dealing with federal legislation and CN is a Crown corporation, and we know the ownership pattern of VIA, it is in the best interest of the rail companies and the federal Government to work co-operatively to build a sense of positive morale with the employees across Canada, the 60,000 men and women who make our railways run. If they all had a feeling that their jobs were secure, their futures were secure, and that their contribution is recognized, the productivity would inevitably increase substantially.

If one reads any book on management the theme is that an employee who feels confident, secure, understood, and recognized will perform at the highest level possible. Unfortunately, those conditions do not exist within the railways of Canada today. I am afraid to say it, but much of the legislation of the federal Government has abetted the downward spiralling of morale.

In conclusion, this legislation is welcome. I appreciate the fact that we are debating the Railway Safety Act. Our intention is to co-operate as much as possible not only to ensure that the Bill moves quickly, but that the final legislation that is passed at third reading is the very best possible.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, there are two things that I would like my colleague to comment on. One is the situation in his own community of Kamloops, and what he can tell us about any lay-offs there. A couple of years ago I was told about one railroad that reduced its number of carmen from nine to four. Those are the people who do the inspections and the minor repairs.

The other thing I would like to ask him is if he can comment on what he thinks would be appropriate penalties for railways, and should it also include railway officers.

You may not be aware, Mr. Speaker, but the only way to find out how much the officers of Canadian Pacific or Canadian National get paid is to go to the U.S. Securities Exchange Commission in Washington. That information cannot be found out in Canada, but the United States law requires that information. The last time I saw any figures, the President of Canadian Pacific Ltd. receives about 12 or 13 times as much as the highest paid locomotive engineer. The last time I received a figure it was $656,000 a year that that President received. I have often wondered if perhaps an appropriate penalty would not be a fine on the President of Canadian Pacific Ltd. of 13 times as much as an ordinary employee would be fined, and perhaps also a jail term for that President who is also an employee.

Would the Hon. Member comment on what he thinks would be an appropriate fine? Should it be on officers of the company as well as the company itself?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Regina West jogged my memory, and I want to make one other comment today as we are debating railway safety. Of course, railway safety to a large extent is a reflection of the willingness of employees and others to co-operate with regulations and so on. As those people wait for their contract after the Government of Canada legislated them back to work, what was interesting is that the management received their raises for the year. They received a substantial raise prior to the employees receiving theirs. Those of us here who in the past, or even at the present, have had employees, know that that is not a rule that one normally follows. Once the contract is settled with the employees, then one is in a position to consider the increases to the management personnel. The railways do it the opposite way around which again aggravates a serious situation.

With respect to the two questions from my hon. friend from Regina West. The situation in Kamloops is that, yes, there have been lay-offs over the last number of months; and, yes, they were in the inspection and repair areas. In a hard pressed part of Canada, the central part of British Columbia, where the unemployment rates in some communities are running as high as 40 per cent, this was a very serious blow. However, all of this happens in the spirit of deregulation and the fact that the federal Government is forcing cut-backs on the railway companies.

Returning to the suggestion of my hon. colleague that we ought to reconsider the penalties. When an individual can be fined up to $10,000 or receive a term in jail for an infraction and the company management do not exist under those same conditions, it is only fair, if we are going to have that type of penalty, that officers of the company be eligible for the same treatment. It is obviously ridiculous to consider a maximum fine of $50,000 for a company like CPR. The fine should probably be 10 times that figure, or perhaps something to approximate the annual salary of the President of CPR which is in the $600,000 range plus bonuses. Perhaps that would be an appropriate criteria to use.

To be serious, Mr. Speaker, certainly all I can say as a lay person in the area of railways, $50,000 as a fine for a company like CPR or CNR is obviously ridiculous.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 2.29 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business, as listed on today's Order Paper.

---

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ADVISABILITY OF ESTABLISHING MORE SANITARY ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of establishing, in co-operation with the provinces, regional municipalities and municipalities, a national water purification, sewage treatment and storm sewer building program, in order to provide Canadians with a healthier and more sanitary environment.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in presenting this motion today, I do so with full knowledge that the costs of such a program are high, and that indeed we will have to establish some form of consultative process, possibly a tripartite consultative process where the federal Government, the provinces, and the municipalities are involved in this study.

• (1430)

I also draw to the attention of Hon. Members that we are dealing with a very important subject. The Government of the day has said that it has consulted more than any Government in the history of Canada. It should listen attentively to the spirit of the motion, that is, that further consultations should take place. The Government has said to Canadians that the ongoing and meaningful process of consultation will open a new era of reconciliation. Those are nice words, but I am asking for some real action or some pro-active move on the part of the Government so that we will see in the near future a real process of consultation with the provinces and the municipalities to deal with the very important issue of establishing, in co-operation with them, a national water purification, sewage treatment, and storm sewer building program, in order to provide Canadians with a healthier and more sanitary environment.

I have brought forward this motion because of the issues which preoccupy the residents of Ottawa—Vanier. Environment or quality of life is probably the number one or number two preoccupation of my constituents.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this motion proposes the establishment of a national water purification, sewage treatment and storm sewer building program to provide Canadians with a healthier and more sanitary environment.

Many interested parties consider this motion deals with one of the most acute problems our country will have to face.

In the time available to me today, I will try to convey to my colleagues in the House the concerns I have over that problem in an attempt to make them realize how very urgent it is to deal with it, because there is an emergency.

There is no doubt people are worried about it. Every day and every week, we hear and read comments on the urgency of seriously coming to grips with the pollution problem.

All provincial Governments and the Federation of Canadian Municipalities have also acknowledged it.

Later, I will quote comments of different interested parties, including the provincial environment ministers. I sent each of them a letter to which they all replied, saying unanimously: Something must be done, because it is urgent!

Believe it or not, Mr. Speaker, in my own city of Ottawa, the National Capital, we still have wooden pipes! They have been in use for a hundred years and they are beginning to disintegrate, to fall apart. And it is urgent that we put in place modern systems to be able to do what we all want to do, to treat sewage and purify the water before returning it to nature.

Here, in Ottawa, in the Capital, deteriorating infrastructures would require $500 million worth of repairs and investment. In some cases, there may be up to $1 million worth of repairs to be done to buried pipes in one block.

Why is it urgent to make those repairs? Because, for instance, some Ottawa houses have been flooded as many as eight times in the last twelve months. Those floodings are caused by the non-separated, storm-and-sewage systems.

In my own case, Mr. Speaker, when I complained to the city about the basement drain overflooding when there was a storm, they came with a wood stopper and plugged the drain. No water comes in, but then no water will get out either. All they answer is: Well, that's it! It is impossible today, we cannot afford a separation! Too bad your basement on Cumberland Street, here in my constituency, can only be used for hosting on occasion a mixture of sewage and storm water that often contains contaminant waste. They come in, they clean up, they sterilize more or less.

However, Mr. Speaker, I am not the only citizen to complain about the lack of separation between storm water and sewage.

City officials mentioned recently that with the funding available and in view of the extent of the work involved, 100 years would be needed to pay for the whole program. Of course Ottawa is a major city, with an even-increasing population. Some people therefore, might explain that way the urgent need for that project.

However, this kind of problem does not affect larger cities only. According to a recent report in the Ottawa Citizen of January 26, 1988, residents in the town of Carp—not far from here—had to pay up to $11 000 each because 91 per cent of septic tanks and 83 per cent of wells in the town did not meet the standards of the Ontario Department of Environment. Worse still, wells were polluted by seepage from septic tanks. This means drinking water is at risk.

Even here in the city of Ottawa, we had similar cases of underground waters being contaminated not by septic tanks but waste from city dumps where domestic and industrial wastes are buried.

In the waste degradation process, fluids seep off. They can then infiltrate by gravity and finally contaminate underground water tables. Worse still, in some cases extremely polluant industrial wastes such as polycholorated biphenyls, lacquers and solvants, heavy metals, etc., find their way into drinking waters. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the pollution problem does not strictly concern cities. It concerns several levels of government. I am thinking of rivers, the Ottawa River that is polluted. And I am reminded of what I am told at times: "This is a municipal responsibility! Municipalities are responsible for cleaning up their waters!" Is Montreal to blame if it draws its drinking water from a river that is polluted with industrial waste by municipalities situated upstream? We only have to look on the other side of the river, Mr. Speaker, to see tons of industrial waste daily discharged in the river, and Montreal would be held responsible for purifying its water and getting rid of heavy metals and other poisons being found in it? Mr. Speaker, I maintain that it is a national problem which should be dealt with nationwide with the co-operation of all governments, at the federal, provincial and municipal levels.

The pollution problem, Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, is not strictly a municipal problem. Almost all sectors of production or services produce some pollutants biodegradable or otherwise, which should be eliminated or treated before being reintroduced into our environment. The problems arising from the disposal of waste are no less real and important. We will have to find one day some safe processes to get rid of them. I think that incineration, as recently suggested by the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton, is not a valid alternative if the incinerator itself will also pollutes the atmosphere.

• (1440)

We are all aware of the problem caused by acid rain and we know that it is caused in large part by atmospheric emissions. The incineration of solid waste could well turn out to be a disguised way to get rid of the problem instead of solving it.

However, those problems are not restricted to the city of Ottawa and the village of Carp. They affect all Canadians. That is why the Province of Quebec is considering the launching a huge project at a cost of $640 million to clean up the water and curb the pollution caused by wastes such as manure and liquid manure from farming operations.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the amounts required for water purification are colossal: $640 million in Quebec alone because of a farming problem. It is obvious that the municipalities will not be able to do the job alone, even though they have ultimate responsibility for it. What must they do? First, they have to ask the provinces for assistance, but even the provinces cannot absorb by themselves within their budget, the total cost involved which means a piecemeal approach to water purification programs.

Despite this fact, existing programs are quite substantial. For instance, in Quebec, the water purification program has a budget of $6.6 billion.

In Ontario, the Liberal Government is also doing its share. It recently announced the Lifelines Program, which will allow the municipalities to recover part of their costs for repairing their infrastructures. The Ontario Government expects to spend between $45 and $50 million a year under this program beginning in 1991-92. It expects to invest a total of $333 million in Lifelines, and as its contribution is limited to 33 per cent of the cost of projects, at least $1 billion will be invested for this purpose in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, according to the Federation of Canadian Municipalities, a very well-known and serious organization which has looked at the situation from a national perspective, some $15 billion will be needed over the next five years. Municipal infrastructures include a great many things, such as road repairs as well as recreational and cultural facilities. This projected expenditure of $15 billion includes all these services.

As for my motion, it deals only with the infrastructures related to water and the environment. The amounts required must therefore be broken down to determine how much will be needed for water purification, sewage treatment and storm sewer building programs.

These amounts have already been broken down and they are contained in the joint report of provincial and territorial departments and agencies responsible for municipal affairs. This report, published in 1985, is entitled Infrastructure Needs of Canadian Municipalities 1986-1990.

In the section dealing with Environment, water and sewer sytems, we see that the expenditures involved expressed in constant dollars of 1985, on the part of municipalities and provinces will be $1.5 billion in 1986, $1.3 billion in 1987, $1.3 billion in 1988, $1.2 billion in 1989, $1.2 billion in 1990, for a five-year total of $6.3 billion.

On the other hand, it is estimated that the minimum investment which would be required to preserve the integrity of the current structure should reach some $8.7 billion over the same period. There is therefore a shortfall of $2.25 billion. These amounts which should be invested, but which will not be invested for lack of funds, will contribute to a greater deterioration of our infrastructure system.

It is recognized that this system is in poor condition and should be urgently repaired; yet, we witness a laissez-faire attitude. Without any financial assistance from the federal Government, the deterioration of these infrastructures will reach a point where it will no longer be possible to solve the problem because of the enormous amounts which would be required. The more we allow these infrastructures to deteriorate, Mr. Speaker, the more Canadian taxpayers will have to pay.

According to a study carried out by the Ontario Government before it inaugurated its Lifelines program, the estimated costs for updating these infrastructures would be between 30 per cent and 50 per cent lower than for their complete replacement. Reason urges us to act immediately. What does the Mulroney Government do? Again nothing, or rather, since it had to do something, it did something:

All municipalities and provinces were told to "Get lost! We are not interested in footing your bills."

It told as I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, the problem of municipal infrastructures concerns us all, because it is a common problem. I hope that this debate and all the arguments we will put forward may help the Government change its mind. The problem is serious, the situation is urgent and all Canadians are concerned about it. We must realize that the problem will not go away and that the situation is serious. The Government is abandoning not only the municipalities, but all Canadians who are entitled to a quality environment and safe drinking water.

Although the provincial ministers of Municipal Affairs have made representations to the federal Government, they were met with a definite refusal. They were told: "We are not interested; you are on your own". However, historically, the federal government has always played a predominant role in economic development, particularly in the area of municipal infrastructure. During the 60's and the 70's, the federal government contributed mostly through Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. That contribution was made under three programs: the Sewage Treatment Program from 1961 to 1974, the Municipal Infrastructure Program from 1975 to 1978 and the Community Services Contribution Program from 1979 to 1980. Mr. Speaker, since I was Parliamentary Secretary to the Urban Affairs Minister during those years, I know very well that those very useful programs greatly helped to restore our municipalities and our urban fabric. They also helped to create important jobs and to purify our waters.

Between 1961 and 1980, loans of over $2 billion and grants of $750 million were made by CMHC to build sewers and other hydraulic works. From 1961 to 1974, a total of $980 million was lent at a preferred rate under the sewage program. Then, until 1978, storm sewer purification infrastructures and water supplies facilities were funded under the Municipal Infrastructure Program. Loans totalling $1.025 billion were made under this program. About 92 per cent of all the loans made between 1961 and 1978 were dedicated to building purification plants and main sewer collectors. Grants of over $525 million were also given during those years. In 1979 and 1980, the CMHC loaned money to the provinces for community equipment under the Community Services Contributions Program. A total of $221 million was granted for the construction of municipal water and sewage systems.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious the federal Government was present and actively helping the municipalities and if there are today water, purification and sewage treatment systems in the Ottawa—Carleton region, in the Outaouais region on the Quebec side, and in many eastern as well as western and central municipalities, we owe it in large measure to those programs that were financed by the federal Government in the 60's, 70's and 80's.

Considering all those facts, I sincerely believe it would be logical for the Government to once again get involved in that area because we helped put those installations into place and should now help upgrade them. It is the logical continuation of our investments. If those works were important enough some 20 or 25 years ago to spend billions of dollars for them, then we must at least continue to keep those installations in good shape, otherwise our initial investments will have been wasted.

Besides those reasons, there are others for re-activating such programs: they create jobs, and they do so in all parts of the country, not only in big cities. We could have a chance alleviate regional disparities in terms of employment if the Government decided to go ahead and agree to the motion I am proposing. Indeed, provincial government studies show that, for every $40,000 to $50,000 invested in infrastructure projects, one person-year of employment is directly created. Thus, a $10 million sewage system renovation project could create locally between 200 and 250 direct jobs, apart from the indirect effects. The impact of such projects on a small municipality is obvious.

Nationally, to meet the most urgent needs, we would have to invest over $5 billion over the next five years, which would create between 100,000 and 130,000 full-time jobs, or between 20,000 and 30,000 direct jobs a year. It would also be possible to achieve full employment in Canada, which would make it easier for municipalities to attract investments based on the quality of their work and infrastructures, and the general quality of life locally. This would not just mean a new federal-provincial program, but true economic recovery for all regions of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I have taken it upon myself to write to all provincial Ministers to inform them about what is being done. This correspondence is available to everyone who would like to see it. I shall gladly provide copies of it. I must thank all those people for having unanimously endorsed the idea of more extensive federal-provincial consultations, with, of course, the contribution of the municipalities. I urge this House to adopt this motion, which simply asks for more consultation and positive action for a water purification program.

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, usually my colleague from Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) speaks in fair terms in this House but today, he was unfair when he began his speech with a few comments on reconciliation and the consultation by the Mulroney Government.

I should like to say, Mr. Speaker, that last week in Montreal, the Quebec premier, Mr. Bourassa, said that Mr. Mulroney had done more than any other prime minister since Confederation to contribute to national unity by the process of consultation and reconciliation. This was pointed out by the premier, a Liberal Mr. Bourassa who said that last week in Montreal.

• (1450)

[English]

My colleague from Ottawa—Vanier has not been very just to us today, but has brought forward a motion to provide Canadians with a healthier and more sanitary environment. There are many ways to do that. Perhaps we could flush some political rhetoric down the toilet and we would have a much healthier and more sanitary environment. Let us not get into that, Mr. Speaker. It has been a rough week.

The Hon. Member should not be addressing Parliament. He knows very well that he should be addressing the mayors of the municipalities. He should be addressing the provinces, not Parliament. It is their problem and we all know that.

Mr. Angus: Don't you live in a municipality?

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, I live in a municipality, but it is not—

[English]

Let us look briefly at the history of this. From 1961 until 1980, CMHC had a program that dealt with this, a program introduced by Mr. Diefenbaker's Government. The CMHC program was enacted in 1960 through a change to the National Housing Act. Loans were given out, 25 per cent of which were to be forgiven.

The program was restricted to only new and extensions to existing sewage treatment plants and main-trunk sewers. Secondary sewers and water supply facilities were not included. The federal Government cited twin objectives for the program of job creation and water pollution abatement in providing this assistance. There was a sunset provision in the original 1961 program that was to have permitted the 25 per cent forgiveness only for those expenditures incurred up to March 31, 1963.

As Canada grew very, very quickly in population and in demand for housing, the urban population grew from about 6.2 million in 1941 to 13.7 million by 1961. That put tremendous pressures on the housing stock in Canada and there was a need for more co-operation between municipalities, provinces and the federal Government to provide more sanitary services.

The sunset clause of which I spoke was extended repeatedly through amendments to the legislation until the process had become automatic and almost routine. The administration of these programs became more complex and very controversial. From a situation of determining eligibility, strict financial arrangements, inspection and making progress payments as befitted the mortgage function of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the program started to deteriorate under the onslaught of provincial and municipal complaints of excessive red tape and federal intrusion into a provincial municipal area. It was not an area of direct federal responsibility.

In 1979, the Liberal Government of the time virtually handed over the process to the provinces. The federal Government became pretty much relegated to writing cheques to the provinces. What started out as a noble program with clearly defined objectives and parameters degenerated over a 20-year period into an undeclared fiscal transfer whereby moneys collected federally were transferred to pay for local services.

I wish to refer briefly to Hansard of January 19, 1981, a time when the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) was a member of the ruling Party. At that time, government Members asked if it was appropriate for the federal Government to continue funding the provision of services which were the responsibility of the provinces and municipalities. They questioned the rationale for such a program by asking whether the Government, raising moneys through national taxation, should not be accountable for the expenditure of such revenues and whether there was not better value for money in other programs, particularly job-creation programs. They asked themselves if the program was valid, given the climate of what was beginning to be serious fiscal restraint.

In 1984, the Federation of Canadian Municipalities submitted a report to the decision-makers in Canada at the provincial, municipal and federal levels, and suggested a new program of roads, bridges and sidewalks with a total price tag of $15 billion. In fact, water and sewer infrastructure accounted for half of that amount.

We have problems in Ottawa. There are two bridges over the Canal, the Mackenzie King Bridge and the Lyon Street Bridge, which the NCC wants to turn over to the region. The region does not want them and there are problems about who will pay for the repairs because they have been neglected for so long. The federal Government cannot always be looked upon as the big brother, the one to provide all the big bucks all the time to pay for these problems.

In 1984, the Federation of Canadian Municipalities outlined in its five-year program municipal, federal and provincial cost sharing of one-third each. There is a problem with sewage disposal in the National Capital Region. There is a genuine problem with the Green Creek sewage plant and I hope we will be able to reach an agreement as to how that will be financed.

Recently, Ted Carmichael of the C. D. Howe Institute spoke again of the importance of not losing sight of the federal deficit and the national debt which is still climbing, something over which we have little or no control, although the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has shown great leadership in reducing the amount. Where do we get the money for these things? Everyone says: "Go to the feds, they have all the money," but we do not.

I think of the Rideau River and Mooney's Bay. The Hon. Member has done a useful service to the House today by allowing us to bring to the attention of the public the importance of having cleaner water resources. Mooney's Bay is a mess. My brother and sister have houses there. They are afraid to water-ski on the river. If they ever fall into it and take two gulps of that water, they may end up in hospital because of storm sewage runoff. Their kids cannot swim in the river.

It cannot always be the federal Government that bails out money to provide better sewage facilities. The Hon. Member has brought this to the attention of the public, but I do not think the solution can be found in this House.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has put this motion on the Order Paper and I was pleased to have the opportunity to second the motion.

The reality is that this is a federal responsibility. There can be no getting away from that. The federal Government has the responsibility for the environment of Canada. It has the responsibility for the environment of boundary waters. Whether it is the Ottawa River, Lake Superior, Lake Huron, Lake Ontario, Lake Erie, the St. Lawrence River, or the Gulf, anything we discharge into those waters in eastern Canada contributes to the pollution of an international waterway and is therefore the responsibility of the federal Government. There is no getting around that.

• (1500)

I want to quote from a speech by an Hon. Member of this House which was given to a municipal organization. I will not initially tell you the name because I want you to guess where it is coming from:

> —if all three levels of government in Canada do not collectively deal with the growing water problem in the country, the problem will become unmanageable.
>
> Across Canada, municipalities are already struggling with aging plants and delivery systems that undermine the clean water all Canadians need and have a right to expect.
>
> Fact: Only 10 per cent of all raw sewage east of Ontario is treated.
>
> Fact: More than eight million Canadians, a third of the entire population, live in municipalities that do not provide sewage treatment.
>
> Fact: Water quality in Toronto, Canada's largest city, is causing so much concern that some politicians are calling for a $200 million pipeline from Georgian Bay to serve the city.
>
> Fact: Water quality has become such a concern to Canadians that they spent $80 million on bottled drinking water in 1986. This figure is expected to increase by 15 per cent this year.
>
> The bill for the next five years for repairing aging underground pipes alone is estimated at $3 billion with an additional $3 billion needed to improve water and sewage treatment facilities.

Who spoke those words? A member of the Opposition? A government back-bencher? They were spoken by the Hon. Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan). You know what else he said? He said:

> Let me begin by ending the suspense, for you and for me: The federal government does not intend to restore previously dismantled municipal programs. That's the bad news!

He was right about that.

The reality is that municipalities by themselves cannot afford the price tag of repairing the existing infrastructure, let alone providing the needed infrastructure to make sure our sewage is treated, not just primary treatment which is basically chopping up the lumps, but secondary and tertiary treatment as well so that we return to the environment what we took out. They do not have enough money to replace their aging water pipes. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier talked about wooden water pipes in Ottawa. In the City of Thunder Bay we have leaded pipes and we all know the ramifications of that for human beings.

We have two systems of taxation, a provincial and federal income tax system and a municipal property tax system. In theory the income tax system is fair and progressive. You need to have a certain level of income before you start paying. In theory, at least, the more money you make, the greater your share of the cost of running the country. However, property taxes and user fees, because the Minister is hiding behind user fees as his reason for not implementing a federal-provincial municipal program, are paid regardless of the ability to pay. They are based on the value of a home which may have been purchased or built 20, 30 or 40 years ago. Because of inflation its value has gone up astronomically. If you are a senior citizen you do not have the money at hand to pay taxes based on the value of a house at $50,000 or $60,000 or $80,000. Yet you are taxed based on that amount.

The same applies to water rates. They are of value in restricting consumption, and I agree every household in this country should be metered as a means of reminding people on a regular basis how much they are using and also remind them to restrict that usage. However, it will cost us anywhere from $12 billion to $15 billion over five years to repair the existing system. Municipalities cannot afford that by themselves. All 10 provinces agree with that, and have also agreed to match municipal contributions one for one up to one-third of the cost of the program. What the Canadian Federation of Municipalities is asking for is that the federal Government, the senior partner in this triumvirate, participate to the same level so we can repair our cities, their roads, sewers, sewage treatment plants and recreational facilities.

Even though the money from a federal-provincial-municipal program under the resolution put forward by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier would be focused on specific areas such as water purification, sewage treatment and storm sewer building programs, it would alleviate the pressure in other municipal areas so tax dollars can be used to repair park buildings, bridges and roads.

Just to give you an idea of the state of things in our cities, I have a study done by the Federation of Canadian Municipalities entitled "Municipal Infrastructure in Canada". It shows that for water treatment facilities, 15 per cent of the existing ones need some repair, much repair, or are not acceptable. For water distribution, 30 per cent; for sewage collection, 45 per cent; for sewage treatment, 25 per cent; for storm sewer treatment, 45 per cent. Some 65 per cent of our roads, 55 per cent of our walks, 45 per cent of our bridges, and 30 per cent of our buildings and parks need some repair, much repair, or are not acceptable.

Coming back to the environmental aspect, there has been study after study of municipalities along the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence River. We know the problem areas. We know raw sewage goes directly into nature's sewers, but those sewers were not designed to carry away the kind of effluent we are putting into that system today. It is not just human waste, it is deadly, toxic chemicals being pumped from our industries into our sewers and directly into our lakes and rivers without any kind of treatment. It is imperative, if we are to turn this situation around, that the federal Government participate. I urge the government side to take the message to the Minister of Finance so that when he brings down his Budget on February 10 there is a major component for municipal rebuilding programs. The studies show that the federal contribution will be repaid 100 per cent through increased income taxes of people working in the regions and through reduced pay-outs from the Unemployment Insurance Commission. It makes sense for the environment. It makes sense for employment. It makes sense for Canada.

• (1510)

[Translation]

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, if the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) gives rise to a certain concern about the protection and conservation of water resources in Canada for the benefit of all Canadians, I can then say that I share his concern.

Throughout Canada, municipalities have to make do with ageing purification stations and distribution systems which do not provide to Canadians the safe water they need and to which they are entitled.

However, if it is relatively easy to grasp the problem, it is not so easy to find valid solutions at reasonable cost. This is indeed a matter that has lost nothing in complexity since the building of our first water systems in the middle of the 19th century. Even the majority of our so-called modern water systems date from the end of World War II. The construction of most of our sewer systems dates from the middle-50's. The whole system is obsolete and nearing the end of its useful lifespan. Worse still, a large number of communities, including large cities, do not even have sewage treatment systems.

We must do better. The question is how to pay the bill. The construction and maintenance of a water infrastructure is costly by definition. Municipal authorities always found it difficult to increase tax. That was already the feeling during the golden days of the sixties when public expenditures were a matter of pride. Nowadays, in the eighties, city counsellors find it almost impossible to ask more from ratepayers. In their minds, it is still more difficult to do so for water systems because, contrary to services such as childcare or schools, water is literally an invisible commodity. Not only it is not seen, but it is taken for granted and therefore not a concern.

Requests for funds keep increasing despite the lack of a federal program in that area and of federal funding for that kind of program. And to be frank, in view of the fact the federal Government is head over ears in debt, it finds it impossible at this point to announce billion-dollar national programs to fund municipal water treatment projects which, under the Constitution and according to the provinces themselves, are not a federal matter.

At a time when the federal Government must face many high-priority problems, it is indeed unrealistic to expect more large federal expenditures to fund municipal water treatment plants. I said "more expenditures" because the Government is already injecting tens of millions of dollars in order to help provinces provide such essential services. It is doing it either directly through special projects, or indirectly through large transfer and federal tax exemption schemes. We simply cannot afford to increase our financial participation.

Let us look at the facts. Each year, the Government of Canada has to face a $30 to $35 billion deficit. The national debt has grown to $300 billion.

In 1975, debt servicing accounted for only 12 cents out of each dollar spent by the Government. Today, it is 33 cents. By contrast, provinces only allocate 12 cents out of each tax dollar to debt servicing while municipalities pay less than 9 cents.

In Canada, the federal Government is the level of government that has the least fiscal flexibility. It is unable to pay its own bills and cannot therefore pay those of others. In fact, we are speaking of such huge expenditures that no single government has enough reserves to afford them. Provinces and municipalities are better placed than the federal Government to get new loans for water distribution and treatment plants.

If we manage to justify expanding the federal Government's role at the municipal level, it will be necessary to work through existing federal programs. This could be done, for instance, by using a formula similar to that used for regional economic development agreements, a mechanism that has worked well in other areas.

However, I think we have to ask ourselves whether requesting federal subsidies for municipal facilities is a reflection of sensible public policy or just another way "to pass the buck". We could also ask whether the reluctance of other levels of government to deal with this responsibility will not in fact perpetuate poor water management in Canada by making it easier to avoid realistic solutions.

In my view, if we truly want to find a solution, we must look at the basic problem of over-consumption and abuse of our water resources. The inevitable conclusion is that, unfortunately, we do not have a realistic pricing system. The problem in a nutshell is that today, only a few Canadians pay water rates that reflect actual cost. When water is cheap, it is taken for granted. And like anything that is taken for granted, it tends to be wasted.

In Europe, where the price of water is four times as high as it is in Canada, per capita consumption is less than half. In the Durham area, in Ontario, per capita consumption dropped 20 per cent between 1975 and 1983, when a realistic pricing system was in effect. When the first water meters made their appearance in Kingston in 1954, per capita consumption dropped by more than one third.

Other industrialized nations have applied this principle and asked their users to pay the capital costs for the water distribution and sewage collecting systems as well as their costs of operation. Canada has yet to apply this principle. Although tax benefits and Government subsidies are granted everywhere in the world . . . I think that my ten-minute period has expired. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

• (1520)

[English]

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I am going to respond to this motion of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) in a way that will give one of his colleagues a few moments as well. At the outset, I would like to put on the record my bona fides for being able to speak in this debate. The fact is that some 30 years ago when I entered the Council of the City of Belleville, all of the raw sewage from that community went into the river and the bay beside Belleville. When I left some 19 years ago, all of the raw sewage was given secondary treatment and, indeed, since that time subsequent mayors have improved on the system and it now receives tertiary treatment. In fact, in my constituency even the smallest municipalities have sewer and water systems and the residents of those areas have paid for their own systems.

The federal water policy recognizes that water is at present one of Canada's most neglected natural resources. The underlying philosophy of the policy is that Canadians must start viewing water as both a key to environmental health and as a commodity having real value, and begin to manage it accordingly.

It is now recognized that more stringent regulations and standards alone cannot protect our water resources without economic incentives and disincentives to prevent their impairment. The water policy, therefore, emphasizes the "polluter pays" principle which will redirect the inevitable cost of pollution reduction to those responsible. As a result, costs will be distributed more fairly to the benefit of all Canadians.

In terms of water and sewer systems, realistic pricing for these services will encourage users to conserve water, raise the funds needed to build and maintain these costly systems, and encourage efficiencies and greater effectiveness through technological innovation.

The Government has already considered the proposal put forward by the Hon. Member in considerable detail. It has also been discussed at length with provincial Governments and national municipal organizations. In fact, in response to the Hon. Member's request, there has been a great deal of conversation and mutual discussion on the subject.

The federal Government has concluded for both fiscal and constitutional reasons, and for consistency with the principles which I outlined earlier, that it will not reinstate a general program of financial assistance in this area. Instead, it will promote the view that municipalities should institute more realistic prices for their water and sewer services and will limit federal involvement to sponsorship of research and development. It will continue to implement proper environmental and health practices with respect to federal undertakings. It will provide financial assistance for projects that otherwise meet federal and provincial development priorities and are eligible for assistance under existing federal programs and it will encourage financial and economic efficiencies in supplying water and sewer services to Canadians.

In the technological area, Environment Canada operates a major waste water technology in Burlington, Ontario. One of its current projects involves demonstrating a process to convert sewage sludge to oil. In many urban centres, sludge disposal is a serious economic and environmental problem which accounts for almost half the cost of waste water treatment. In Canada the proposed technology could solve disposal problems for 350,000 tonnes of sludge by generating 700,000 barrels of oil per year.

Another innovation is a Canadian developed computer-automated process control system for sewage treatment plants. This innovation alone could save hundreds of millions of dollars over the next five years.

Within its own area of responsibility, the federal Government has pledged itself to implement proper environmental and health practices for all water supply and waste treatment services associated with federal undertakings and facilities. These include projects with federal involvement, as well as those in the North on native and reserve lands, in federal parks, as well as federal buildings and other facilities such as airports.

In terms of encouraging realistic pricing and greater efficiencies, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is working closely with his provincial counterparts on the Canadian Council of Research and Environment Ministers on several fronts.

I want to leave time for the colleague of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier so I will conclude by saying that what we do not need in this country is another protracted subsidy debate. What we do need is a realistic approach to pricing which encourages conservation, raises the cash necessary to provide the needed services and stimulates the kind of research and technology development required to bring down costs and make our systems more effective.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to thank the Hon. Member opposite for giving me a couple of minutes of his time so that I could make a few remarks in this debate. There are a few Members of this House who have had the opportunity of sitting at the municipal level of Government. The Hon. Member opposite is one and so am I. Actually, I am one of those who has been fortunate enough to sit at all three levels of government; municipal, provincial and federal. There are concerns that municipalities have at the present time with the decay of the infrastructure. These are concerns, in my view, which are very legitimate and, indeed, need to be addressed. Need we remind ourselves of the experience south of us with respect to the decay of the infrastructure in the United States as an example of just how much we need to address the problems of the municipal infrastructure. Whether we are looking at the U.S. interstate highway system, which is full of pot holes, or the downtown areas of many American cities, we know it is a problem which needs to be addressed.

On May 4, 1987, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), speaking to the Ontario Municipal Water Association:

> Water pollution has become so bad in this country that vast numbers of Canadians cannot take water quality for granted in their communities—a third of the Canadian population (eight million people) live in municipalities that do not treat their sewage.
>
> Faced with those bills, municipalities in every part of Canada are seeking a quick fix. Having ignored the problem for so long, without planning for the day of reckoning or budgeting for it, they now expect the federal Government to help bail them out.

That kind of attitude is not one which is shared with Members of my Party, at least not myself, nor my Leader. We are of the opinion, as is the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), as proven in his excellent motion, that the federal Government should consider co-operating with all the provinces and with the municipalities in order to update and review the municipal infrastructure.

[Translation]

On June 1, 1987, Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), made a speech before the Canadian Federation of Municipalities, in which he indicated that, upon the 50th anniversary of this organization, it would be important for the Canadian people, through its federal Government, to adopt a policy whereby the three levels of Government would make a concerted and collective effort to renew and update Canada's municipal infrastructures. This is an important issue, and I urge all Hon. Members to support the initiative taken by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) in his motion today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for consideration of Private Members' Business is now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

It being 3.30 p.m., the House stands adjourned until Monday at 11.00 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 3.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, February 8, 1988

The House met at 11 a.m.

---

Prayers

---

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

CONSUMER PACKAGING AND LABELLING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-280, an Act to amend the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce this legislative measure to amend the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act. The purpose of the Bill is to ensure that the information appearing on the label of a prepackaged product is in both official languages.

To this day Consumer Packaging and Labelling Regulations 417 refer to implementation standards. As we know, however, a regulation may be amended at any time without the agreement of the House. That being so, with a view to ensuring the protection of one of the elements of Canada's linguistic duality, I thought it would be necessary to incorporate the regulations in a legislative measure.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

[English]

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO TRANSPORT OF PLUTONIUM OVER NORTHERN CANADA

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present petitions signed by residents from as far away as Spence Bay, Gjoa Haven, Eskimo Point and Yellowknife, Northwest Territories as well as from Toronto and St. Catharines, Ontario. The petitioners express their concern about the proposed plutonium flights over the Canadian north.

Owing to the potential serious environmental effects and the contribution to nuclear proliferation, the petitioners pray and call upon the Parliament of Canada to recognize the dangers of such flights and to say no to the transport of plutonium over northern Canadian territory.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 from people from Vancouver, Richmond, Delta, North Vancouver, Coquitlam, Powell River, Saanich, Duncan, New Westminster, Langley and Summerland, British Columbia.

It is the perception of the petitioners that the Conservative Government does not have a mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a trade deal with the United States. They believe that the trade deal negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canada and to equalize opportunities between the regions.

Therefore they are calling upon Parliament to dissolve now to enable the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade deal during a national general election.

OPPOSITION TO MANUFACTURE AND DISTRIBUTION OF FILM

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions signed by residents of my constituency from the towns of Imperial, Craik, Aylesbury, Chamberlain, Stony Beach and Pense. These petitions were circulated at the local legion. They protest the manufacture and the distribution of the film entitled The Kid Who Couldn't Miss.

Order Paper Questions

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I too have the honour to present, a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106, from constituents of mine from the City of Brantford and also from residents living just outside of Brantford in the Town of Waterford. They protest the trade deal of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and call upon the Government to dissolve the House and go to the people for a mandate in view of the fact that the Government did not have a mandate for this type of deal in the first place.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition signed by western Canadians who express their concern that the Conservative Government does not have a mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States. For that matter, Mr. Speaker, as you know, the Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had actually campaigned against such a deal.

In their petition the people say that the Government's trade arrangement threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, or to equalize opportunities between the regions.

Therefore the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement through a national general election.

* * *

• (1110)

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

Mr. Speaker: Before calling Government Orders, I would like to advise the House that I have received an application of privilege dealing with an alleged contempt of this House as a consequence of a word used in a preamble by another Hon. Member in Question Period on Friday. I propose to hear this at three o'clock.

I also wish to indicate to all Hon. Members that, whatever the outcome of that particular application is, and I shall listen carefully to all sides, I would hope that Hon. Members would be constrained and very proper in preambles in Question Period today. All Hon. Members can realize that a statement, whether made out of over-enthusiasm or sometimes carelessness, or even although absolutely accurate in the context which causes a severe reaction on the other side, is tantamount to moving toward disorder.

I want it clearly understood that I will be asking for and expecting the co-operation of all Hon. Members. I will hear the honourable application at three o'clock.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your words, and the reality that you have given me until three o'clock to get my research in order. That will assist the House, because I think it will be succinct, brief, and compelling, and the extra two or three hours to prepare that will be very helpful.

Mr. Speaker: Under the circumstances, I would ask the Hon. Member to extend the courtesy to the Hon. Member who is also involved in this, and I would expect that that be done.

---

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved that Bill C-72, an Act respecting the status and use of the official languages of Canada, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: I am pleased to rise today to begin the second reading debate on Bill C-72, an Act respecting the status and use of the official languages of Canada. This Bill marks an important milestone in the development of our country.

[English]

We have designed the legislation to take into account the fundamental elements of our language policy as it has evolved over the past 120 years, and to allow us to meet the changing needs of Canadian society. I am confident that this Bill is an accurate reflection of Canada's present day linguistic reality.

As indicated in its purpose clause, the primary objectives of this Bill are to ensure respect and equality of status for both official languages in federal institutions, notably with regard to the provision of services to the public; to support the development of English and French linguistic minority communities; to foster the advancement of both languages within Canadian society; and to set out the powers, the duties, and the functions of federal institutions with respect to official languages.

These objectives represent both continuity and evolution. They are consistent with the language provisions which were written into our Constitution by the Fathers of Confederation in 1867, and later supplemented by both the Official Languages Act of 1969 and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms of 1982. This Bill is a comprehensive legal document embracing all federal Government activities and provides all Canadians with concrete means by which they can affirm and protect their language rights.

The reform of the official languages policy had to be undertaken. Parliament has a duty to bring the provisions of the Official Languages Act of 1969 into line with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

[Translation]

This bill is also an important element in our efforts to effect national reconciliation. This step forward in the area of official languages complements the 1987 Constitutional Accord. Both are crucial to our national identity. Together, they reflect the government's commitment to preserve a fundamental characteristic of Canada, to promote the status and use of both official languages at all levels, and to enhance the vitality of Canada's official language minorities.

[English]

The renewal of our language policy is intended for all Canadians. It provides for the needs of the majorities by guaranteeing government services for them in their own language. In addition, it recognizes the aspirations of minorities, who have often expressed a desire, and rightly so, to live and prosper using their own language. This Bill reflects the open-mindedness and tolerance of Canadians in matters of language and culture. This generosity of Canadians toward each other is one of the most endearing features of our national identity.

I would now like to review some of the changes that we propose to make. With respect to the administration of justice at the federal level, we affirm equal access to the courts for all Canadians in either official language, and we specify what this entails.

The courts that are covered are the same ones as under the 1969 Act and under Section 133 of the Constitution Act, 1867, that is, courts and court-like adjudicative or quasi-judicial bodies which are created by federal law, but do not include provincial courts with federally appointed judges.

Therefore, this Bill applies to federal judicial bodies such as the Federal Court, the Tax Court of Canada, the Human Rights Tribunal, and so on. Of course, this does not mean that all federal judges have to be bilingual.

The Bill itself clearly imposes a duty on federal courts, as federal institutions, to arrange their affairs so that cases are heard in English, or in French, or in both languages, as the case may be, depending on who the parties are, by judges who are capable of functioning in English, in French, or in both languages, respectively.

To assist them in undertaking these responsibilities, the courts may make rules requiring proper notice. This has already been the practice for several years now in the Federal Court, the Tax Court, and a number of adjudicative tribunals.

Bill C-72 preserves judicial powers, privileges and immunities. Nothing takes away from a judge's right, as a "person" under Section 133 of the Constitution Act, 1867, to choose to use either English or French in court proceedings.

• (1120)

Clauses 15 through 18 are meant to respond to the situation revealed by the case law—where an English-speaking person in Quebec as in the MacDonald case was unable to obtain a traffic ticket in English; where French-speaking persons outside Quebec were unable to get a ticket in French such as the Bilodeau case; or appear before judges who understood directly the case that they were pleading, such as the Société des Acadiens case. Again, however, these provisions are restricted to proceedings before Federal Courts.

When cases so require, these courts will have to assign judges who will understand directly, without relying on an interpreter, the official language in which the proceedings before them are being conducted. Of course, simultaneous interpretation will continue to be used by the courts. In addition, the federal Government will be required to use the official language chosen by the other parties in civil proceedings.

[Translation]

Concerning provincial courts exercising criminal jurisdiction, we will continue to co-operate with the provinces to implement the provisions of the Criminal Code regarding language of trial in all parts of the country.

The Government is already participating in a joint federal-provincial program to assist in the provision of language training for judges and in setting up bilingual court services. The purpose of these legislative and administrative measures is to ensure equal access for all Canadians to their judicial system.

[English]

Clause 87 amends the Criminal Code to spell out the rights that flow from an accused person's right to trial before a judge or judge and jury who speak the accused person's language. Some of these rights are essentially transferred from the 1969 Official Languages Act which, for example, gave the right to witnesses to use either language not only before federal courts but also before courts exercising criminal jurisdiction. The rest of the rights confirms the practice that has grown up in the provinces where Part XIV.1 of the Criminal Code has been put in force, that is to say, use of interpreters and prosecutors who speak the accused's language, and so on.

I have indicated on different occasions that we have made substantial and significant progress on a voluntary basis in respect of introduction in a variety of provinces. As a Member from Saskatchewan I should like to point out that recently my province entered into an arrangement in respect of the provision of trials for an accused in criminal proceedings in the French language as well as in the English language.

This would ensure that the language of trial provisions come into force by 1990. Since 1978, the Minister of Justice of Canada has had the power to proclaim these provisions in force in any province, following consultations in which no agreement has been reached with the provinces concerned, once two years have elapsed.

In January 1986 my predecessor, the then Minister of Justice, who is now the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), put the provinces on notice publicly that he intended to consult them with a view to bringing the provisions of Part XIV.1 into force across Canada as soon as possible. I reiterated that commitment to the Canadian Bar Association upon assuming the responsibilities of Minister of Justice.

Legal challenges to the province by province implementation have been mounted, some successfully, against the constitutionality of the scheme on the basis that it offended the equality rights provisions of the Charter. The January 1, 1990 date gives ample notice for bringing these 1978 provisions of the code fully into force and fully into compliance with the provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The Bill also reinforces the right of Canadians to use the official language of their choice in communicating with and receiving services from federal institutions. We are honouring the Charter by establishing constitutionally sound criteria for federal institutions regarding communications with the public and the provision of services. The new Act and the regulations under it will clearly determine, in accordance with the terms of the Charter, those offices at which there is significant demand for services in both languages and those offices whose nature makes it reasonable to provide such services.

Another important feature of the Bill relates to the languages of work in federal institutions. For the first time a federal law will spell out the right of officers and employees to use either official language while working for the institutions of Parliament and the Government of Canada. These institutions will be required to ensure that widely used work environments in the national capital and in prescribed regions are conducive to the effective use of both official languages. Elsewhere, the treatment given to the language of work must be comparable between regions where English predominates and regions where French predominates. When institutions carry out their language of work obligations, the right of members of the public to service in their language of choice will of course be respected.

In addition, I should note that it is not sufficient to foster the use of English or French within federal institutions without ensuring participation. The federal Government recognizes this requirement in its Bill. The Government is committed to seeing that English-speaking Canadians and French-speaking Canadians, without regard to their ethnic origin or first language learned, have equal access to employment in federal institutions, and that the composition of the workforce of federal institutions tends to reflect in an equitable manner the presence of both English-speaking and French-speaking communities in Canada, taking into account the nature of the various institutions.

[Translation]

My colleague, the President of Treasury Board, has responsibility for the general direction and co-ordination of the policies and programs relating to the implementation of the parts of this bill concerning communications and services, language of work and full participation. Under the provisions of this bill, he will also be required to submit an annual report to Parliament on the progress achieved.

[English]

Bill C-72 reaffirms another important initiative of the Government—the enhancement of the vitality of the English and French linguistic minority communities of Canada and the advancement of the status and use of the official languages generally in Canadian society.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie), who is present this morning, will play a major role in the implementation of this commitment. He will be responsible for co-ordinating federal efforts in this area and for co-operation with the provinces, as well as with the private and voluntary sectors. He will also ensure that his programs relating to official languages are maintained or developed. When the Bill was tabled, the Secretary of State announced that a further $25 million would be allocated over three years to improve the provision of key services at all levels of government.

The Bill specifies that the Commissioner of Official Languages will continue to ensure that the spirit and letter of the law are upheld. The Commissioner will be given more effective instruments to achieve that goal, including a timely and efficient process for handling complaints.

Indeed, it would not have sufficed to set out the rights and obligations I have mentioned in the absence of mechanisms to ensure that the law is enforced. The new Official Languages Act will therefore provide for judicial recourse after a complaint to the Commissioner. Any complainant who feels that his or her language rights have been violated or denied by a federal institution may apply to the Federal Court for such remedy as the court finds just and appropriate in the circumstances. The Commissioner of Official Languages will also be able to exercise this recourse to the court.

This outlines the three principles which have guided our reform of Canada's official languages policy and legislation and sums up the major changes. I am confident that the objectives which form the basis of this Bill will respond effectively to the needs of all Canadians and reflect the Government's commitment to equity in official language matters for all Canadians. Bill C-72 facilitates the full participation of all Canadians in the institutions of Government. It reflects Canada's present linguistic reality in a manner which is consistent with both the Constitution and the fundamental principles of tolerance and fairness.

• (1130)

I believe this is a good Bill. I certainly commend it to the House for consideration and passage. This Bill is about fairness. This Bill is about equity of treatment of our fellow Canadians. This Bill is about the way in which we treat minorities in our country, and I think all of us seek to advance these principles in a tangible way. What we want in legislation is legislation that is not only sensitive but is fair to every Canadian regardless of which official language they speak.

This Bill after much consideration and deliberation attains what I consider to be an appropriate yet delicate balance in Canada which will serve as the threshold and the basis upon which we can move forward to reach the potential we have. I am heartened by the fact that there was very substantial and widespread consultation leading up to this legislation. The response to the Bill has, by and large, been superlative praise for the provisions of the legislation because it can now be said that the Bill does attain the elements of fairness and reasonableness which I think have to pervade everything we do concerning this matter. I do not consider this to be a trivial or laughing matter at all—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I am not laughing.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is a very important consideration with respect to which all of us in this House have a responsibility to assess and to make sure that the Bill does reflect those principles which all of us hold dear, namely, a united Canada, one which is based upon the fundamental principle of fairness.

I stand committed, the Government stands committed, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stands committed to these very important principles.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by saying that we share the Minister's view that the Bill must be generous, must be open and must provide Canada with a more up-to-date and more equitable framework for official languages.

Mr. Speaker, I am of course delighted to be taking part in this debate on Bill C-72, because it is the culmination of almost 16 years of parliamentary experience here in the Parliament of Canada and of over 12 years experience before that in education. I have always thought it would be nice to come to the House some day and say to whatever Government would be there: I think we have made progress, we have accomplished something. To us, this Bill is a charter, a road map, as it were, that will guide us in the years to come, and I am sure it will be a beneficial experience for all Canadians. I am pleased, the Liberals are pleased and the House is pleased, and I feel the Government is to be commended for this initiative.

As I said earlier, we want the future to be equitable and fair, more generous and more respectful of that fundamental characteristic of Canada which is its English-French linguistic duality.

Bill C-72 fulfils the 1982 constitutional commitment and recognizes the formal commitments in the Meech Lake Accord, the legal version of which was tabled in the House and approved on October 26 last year.

This Bill is therefore in line with Canadian constitutional commitments. It defines federal objectives within the framework of new and updated legislation. The Liberals felt it was imperative to proceed as soon as possible with thorough consideration of Bill C-72 which, as we all know, has been on the Order Paper since June 25 last year.

I will not repeat the endless series of complaints, criticisms and requests for action that have been addressed to the Conservative Government for the past three and a half years. A glance at the Index of Hansard should be self-explanatory. There have been any number of questions and answers, debates and interventions. There is enough to fill a book on the vicissitudes of the language question.

[English]

This Bill has been long awaited by various Parties concerned with the issue of official languages, among others the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons, the Office of the Commissioner of Official Languages and representatives of many official language minority groups.

The Official Languages Act of 1969 has become outdated. A number of problems have surfaced as a result of applying legislation on a daily basis for 19 years. Court rulings have weakened the scope of some of the statute's provisions. The constitutional context has evolved since 1969, particularly in light of the adoption of The Charter of Rights and Freedoms and its Sections 16 to 20 respecting language rights.

The Meech Lake Accord, signed by all provincial Premiers, states clearly that our fundamental characteristic is our language duality—English and French—and that all must strive to preserve this essential characteristic.

Attitudes have changed toward languages, Mr. Speaker. Our increased awareness, respect and generosity toward official language groups have been helpful. Language training programs at all levels and in all regions of our country have shown that there exists in Canada a greater understanding and acceptance of our language duality. There is a willingness to accept and appreciate la différence, be it immersion courses at the elementary level, core programming in the other language in secondary schools or language training programs in the workplace. There has developed in Canada over the last 20 years a new era of understanding.

There exists after all these years a generous Canadian commitment to making this country great and united. We are working toward bonding our people in respect and love rather than separating them in fear and hate.

Provisions for two official languages do not undermine the preservation and enhancement of languages other than English and French. It follows that the multicultural heritage of many Canadians is strengthened by collective respect and support for our two official languages.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this Bill is the culmination of many years of hard work, reflection and personal experience. It is not the work of a single person or group, any more than it reflects the policy of a single Party in this House.

Bill C-72 is the outcome of a process that has kept pace with the development of this country, starting with the British North America Act and going on to include the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission, the Official Languages Act 1969, the Parliamentary Resolution of June 1973, the Pepin-Robarts Commission, the Constitution Act, 1982 and most recently, the Meech Lake Accord. The situation has evolved over time, and it has been quite an experience for many of us, a rewarding and certainly an interesting experience.

Over the years Canada developed rapidly, following the industrial revolution. Urban development, reforms in education, the socio-cultural revolution and political leadership in the provinces, both federal and provincial, all these factors were instrumental in producing a strong push for change, and this could happen because of the understanding and generosity Canadians have shown with respect to our official languages.

In 1963, a Liberal Government headed by Mr. Pearson created the Royal Commission of Inquiry on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, the terms of reference of which, as I think should be recalled, read in part:

> "to inquire into and report upon the existing state of bilingualism and biculturalism in Canada and to recommend what steps should be taken to develop the Canadian Confederation on the basis of an equal partnership between the two founding races, taking into account the contribution made by the other ethnic groups to the cultural enrichment of Canada."

Mr. Speaker, those terms of reference were issued in 1967 to a Royal Inquiry, and it will be remembered that this country was going through difficult times in the area of recognizing official minority language rights.

That may have been the true turning point as far as official languages were concerned, and it led us in 1969 to the proclamation of the Official Languages Act, later to the entrenchment of official languages in the 1982 Constitutional Act in 1982, and finally to the Meech Lake-Langevin Agreement recognizing the language duality as a fundamental characteristic of this country.

Further to the recommendations of the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission, the Liberal Government enacted in 1969, over the opposition of some Conservative Members on second reading, the Official Languages Act. That Act gives English and French equal status, rights and privileges as official languages of Parliament and the Government of Canada.

Finally, in 1982, language rights were enshrined in the Constitution through the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, Sections 16 to 24. From that point on language rights take precedence over any Acts or Regulations of the Canadian Government or provincial legislatures.

Since 1982, language rights are protected from political whims. Nonetheless, concrete steps must be taken both at the national and provincial levels to implement the broad constitutional principles. The everyday life of minority groups often has become difficult. They sometimes have gone through a very difficult stretch.

History tells us the issue of official languages requires more than political will. It also requires that aggressive administrative measures be put in place in order to ensure that the political will is converted into facts.

The 1969 legislation has served us well, but it has become outdated and it should be rejunevated and given a new impetus, because we need a modernized tool. To begin with, it should be made consistent with the new constitutional and social reality in Canada. Then the weaknesses which have to come to light after 18 years of enforcement should be corrected. For example, its primacy over other legislation has been questioned in many decisions rendered by the courts; its executory nature should be confirmed; the language of work concept should be clarified to allow the Public Service to become more efficient. Madam Speaker, I will come back to this later.

Communications with and provision of federal services to the public require clear and specific guidelines. The Canadian public is entitled to communicate in the language of their choice with federal institutions and to obtain services in that language. Under Section 20 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms (1982), we find an important criterion which is not defined in the Charter but is stated as follows:

> Any member of the public—has the right to communicate with and to receive available services from the government of Canada in English or French and has the same right with respect to any other office of any such institution where—there is a significant demand for communications with and services from that office in such a language; or due to the nature of the office, it is reasonable that communications with and services from that office be available in both English and French.

The two important terms are "significant demand" and "the nature of the office". Both terms are not defined in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The Bill proposes that detailed criteria for "signifiant demand" be set by the Governor in Council. Concerning offices that because of their nature should communicate and provide services in both official languages, some are listed in the legislation and others will be designated by the Governor in Council.

I think that those clauses are fine and give the Cabinet the power to act in the national interest. If the decisions and designations are delayed, the Canadians will know that it is the Government and not the legislation that is to blame.

Mr. Speaker, the Official Languages Act has to be renewed. The time has come to restate outright the political will of this Parliament with respect to official languages. Even though attitudes have evolved, as attested by the fact that in the Meech Lake Agreement all provinces have recognized that the linguistic duality is a fundamental characteristic of Canada, it is nevertheless a fact that that evolution has not proceeded at the same pace everywhere.

The 1987 Official Languages Act is important precisely to consolidate our constitutionnal gains and to try to overcome resisters. We must give official language minorities the means to assert themselves, sometimes in spite of provincial and territorial governments.

For example, New-Brunswick has voluntarily made binding the constitutionnal clauses of 1982, but not the other provinces. As for Ontario, it has adopted Bill 8 on French services which will extend services offered to French-speaking Ontarians. At the same time, Alberta is opposed to the right to address the legislature in French, as was shown by the Piquette case.

The Piquette case is especially surpising, Madam Speaker, as Alberta had just signed the Meech Lake Accord. We would have expected more open-mindedness on the part of the Alberta Government, which should in a generous gesture toward its minority have seized the opportunity to broaden the use of French in the legislature, but this did not happen.

There is still a lot to do to ensure justice. The recent ruling of the Alberta Court of Appeal denies the right of the accused to have his trial before a judge or a judge and jury who speak his mother tongue. Bill C-72 will allow us to amend Part XIV.I of the Criminal Code, which deals with the language used in a trial, to develop a complete code of linguistic rights in criminal law and ensure the application of national standards within a prescribed period.

Madam Speaker, I remember a debate which took place in this House ten years ago when we were considering Bill C-42, whose purpose was precisely to amend Part XIV.I of the Criminal Code. It was suggested during the debate that the provinces needed some time before proclaiming the legislation and providing actual access before the courts to a judge and jury who spoke the language of the accused. It did not happen everywhere, as many provinces have not yet proclaimed that particular piece of legislation. However, Bill C-72 prescribes a specific date, 1990, which means that the provinces will now have to meet this requirement.

Concerning the administration of justice in federal courts, the Act will continue to ensure the right of everyone to use French or English for all matters brought before the federal courts. Subsection 15(1) of Bill C-72 requires every court, other than the Supreme Court of Canada, and I emphasize the words "other than the Supreme Court of Canada", to ensure, and I quote:

> —any judge or other presiding officer is able to understand the official language or languages in which the proceedings are conducted without the assistance of an interpreter.

Sub-section 15(2) provides for a phasing-in of this requirement to understand both official languages and sets a time limit of five years after the Act comes into force.

• (1140)

Madam Speaker, the Supreme Court therefore escapes entirely the requirements of Section 15. We have to wonder why the Supreme Court, the highest court in the land, should be excluded from the requirements of bilingualism.

The Bill does not require that all judges of other courts be bilingual. It does require the presiding officer at a hearing to be bilingual. With respect to the Supreme Court, for all practical purposes it would mean that the Chief Justice is bilingual. Is that expecting too much?

It seems to me that if Canadians now expect their leaders to be bilingual—Governor General, Prime Minister, Leader of the Opposition, and so on—are we asking for too much when we suggest that the Supreme Court of Canada Chief Justice ought to be able to follow the arguments of anglophones and francophones alike without the services of an interpreter? Madam Speaker, we will ask for explanations in committee, and we will consider the possibility of moving amendments.

The 1987 linguistic situation in Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick as compared with that of Alberta underscores how differently mentalities evolve. We have, on one side, Quebec, New Brunswick and Ontario which have been generous and open to their minorities and, on the other, we witness less generous gestures such as those I just mentioned with reference to the Piquette case.

Still most people readily agree there has been great progress despite resistance fron certain quarters. The new legislation is a must if we want to continue forging ahead in terms of Canada's official languages, while at the same time contributing to bringing opponents on side and filling the gaps in the 1969 statute.

[English]

The question is sometimes asked, why this new law and why now? This revised law, Bill C-72, is much more than a cosmetic job. It is a major face-lift, major reconstructive surgery. The official languages framework will not just look better, it will feel a lot better too. It will feel a heck of a lot better than the old law. That is the main reason the Government, after 20 years of experience, after consulting thoroughly, and after inheriting a dossier which I know was well advanced, has had the courage to present this House with what I consider is a good Bill. Why this new law and why now? The best answer is found in a recent article by Mr. Stuart Beaty published in Language and Society. Mr. Beaty is an adviser for special projects in the Office of the Commissioner of Official Languages. He writes and I quote:

Proposals to amend the Act itself have also been presented with some regularity over the years by Members of Parliament, by all three Commissioners and by Parliament's own Joint Committee on Official Languages, which submitted 19 recommendations on this subject in 1983.

There have been differences of emphasis in each set of proposals, but there has also been a considerable consensus among them about the deficiencies of the present Act and the best ways of overcoming them. While there have been surprisingly few legal actions brought under the Act in the last 18 years, its day-by-day application had nonetheless brought to light a hard core of issues which need to be resolved.

1) the law's relation to the fundamental political and linguistic nature of the country: its constitutional context in short;

2) the implications of this national commitment where other sectors of Canadian society are concerned;

3) its primacy over other federal legislation;

4) the executory nature of the Act and the need to set out more clearly how it is to be enforced;

5) clarification of how bilingual services are to be adjusted according to regional and other differences; this means, for instance, substituting a more workable concept for the "federal bilingual districts" which were never proclaimed;

6) building into the Act itself the language of work and full participation objectives found in the 1973 Parliamentary Resolution;

7) Clarifying the role of the main federal actors, including the Commissioner, in ensuring prompt and effective application of the Act.

• (1150)

[Translation]

Bill C-72 is quite different from the 1969 legislation. The new measure contains a ten-point preamble which clearly defines the link between the constitutional progress achieved until now and the spirit of generosity and reform from which inspiration can be drawn when interpreting the law. We will have to be more generous and more equitable once Bill C-72 has been enacted. According to the Interpretation Act, Madam Speaker, a preamble is part and parcel of the legislation and provides an explanation concerning its purpose and scope. Through an interpretation clause, therefore, the legislator wants to make sure that the constitutional provisions and the law are at one. Is that better than having it included in the legislation? The question might best be put to legal experts, but one thing for sure is that it goes to show how important we legislators want this law to be, for it is rare indeed that an interpretation preamble is found in a public statute.

In its preamble, Bill C-72 refers to Clauses 16 to 20 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Federal Government's commitments to the protection and promotion of bilingualism and the protection of official linguistic minorities. In this sense, the Bill goes beyond the Constitutional Accord of 1987 which only recognized the Federal Government's obligation to preserve the linguistic duality.

As the House knows, Madam Speaker, I would have preferred the Accord to state that the federal government is also obliged to promote linguistic duality, but that did not happen.

[English]

As I said a few moments ago, Bill C-72 is more than a cosmetic make-up job; it is a major face-lift. In the section on the purpose of the Act we find a strong commitment to ensure respect for English and for French as the official languages of Canada and ensure equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all federal institutions, in particular with respect to their use in parliamentary proceedings, in legislative and other instruments, in the administration of justice, in communicating with or providing services to the public and in carrying out the work of federal institutions which are defined in the Act.

Furthermore, we find that the Act will support the development of English and French minority communities and generally advance the equality of status and use of the English and French languages within Canadian society. The Act sets out the powers, duties and functions of federal institutions with respect to the official languages of Canada.

[Translation]

The purpose of Bill C-72 is to strengthen the Official Languages Act by ensuring equal status to French and English, by supporting the development of English and French linguistic minority communities and by clearly stating the powers, duties and functions of Federal institutions with respect to the official languages of Canada. It is unfortunate that the clause relating to the equality status of official languages and dealing with the rights under Clauses 16 to 20 of the Canadian Charter, does not emphasize their equality as languages of work and in equitable participation.

It would have been desirable to include these two issues under the "Purpose of Act" section because they are not mentioned as such in the Charter, as is the case for the language of service. It is agreed that these issues are dealt with more specifically in the Bill, but their inclusion in the "Purpose of Act" section would have given them priority status.

Bill C-72 confirms such existing principles as those calling for the provision of services to the public as well as Secretary of State programs promoting minorities. Moreover, Bill C-72 offers new elements concerning the language of work and the rule of law, subject to the provisions of the Canadian Human Rights Act. There is also the obligation for the President of the Treasury Board or any other minister designated by the Government to consult the Francophone and Anglophone minorities when drafting the regulations applicable to this legislation.

• (1200)

Consultation itself is not new, Madam Speaker. As far as I know, it has existed for at least 15 years. In June 1973, Mr. Trudeau, who was Prime Minister at the time, sent for the representatives of various official language minority groups to hear their views on his project to extend the national radio and television network everywhere in Canada and to make it possible for the CBC to serve all communities of more than 500 people regardless of where they lived. For that, it was necessary to develop satellite communications technology. It was a major step forward in establishing the significance and justice of our linguistic duality. It was very useful in that it forced us to develop a new technology to meet our own needs and at the same time become international leaders in the area of communications.

In addition to these requirements with regard to minority consultations, the Bill provides for a Committee of the House and/or the Senate to supervise its implementation. I would point out, Madam Speaker, that this clause of the Bill does not require the committee to be made up of members of both Houses. It could be a committee of the House and/or the Senate, each House having its own. This may only be a technicality but it is important to realize that the Bill allows for something other than a Standing Joint Committee. One day, perhaps this House will see fit to have its own Standing Committee on Official Languages.

Bill C-72 had to reflect present realities. Thus, the Official Languages Committee that had previouly been created by an order of the House now has a legal status under an Act. This means that the Government is adding to the Act elements that had come to existence gradually over the years. Since 1969, many improvements were made, both in the administration of the Act and in the implementation of new government programs. They are part of government policy as legal requirements. Therefore, they had to be included in the Act, but they represent nothing new because the programs exist already.

Other elements are new, for example, the requirement to publish simultaneously in both official languages all legislative, regulatory and other documents. This is new in Bill C-72, although the idea is not. As a matter of fact, last Friday, I introduced in the House a Bill to amend the 1969 Act in order to make sure that all documents are tabled by the Government in both official languages in the House of Commons and the Senate. I think that is elementary. And it would certainly prevent disgraceful occurrences of the kind we had recently, when a Minister of this Government who claims to respect official languages read to us, at top speed, a list of amendments to Bill C-22, drafted in English only. It would also prevent documents as important as the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement from being tabled in the House of Commons in English only, as happened initially. There are people in this House, Madam Speaker, to whom this is a matter of vital importance. And it is important that any document tabled by the Government in the House should be made available to all Members, whatever their mother tongue, and made available in both official languages, in French and in English.

Madam Speaker, I am delighted with these new provisions, awaited by so many people for so many years. The necessary amendments to the legislation were identified, considered and in some cases suggested by the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages which was established in 1979, and the Committee's recommendations were published in a number of reports. Now we are ready to enjoy the fruits of our labours. At this point I would like to thank all those who took part in the consultation process and helped prepare these amendments, and I also want to congratulate the Government once more for taking the initiative of tabling this Bill.

Bill C-72, tabled in 1987, responds to the principal recommendations of the Official Languages Committee. The new legislation includes the concept of active offer of services. In other words, public servants have a duty to invite the public to use the language of its choice. We also find the language of work concept and provisions for its application in the Public Service of Canada. The recommendation to make the legislation executory, which would create rights that would be protected by the courts, is essential if we want the law to be observed. The matter of full participation by both official language groups is also covered, as well as the issue of primacy of the legislation.

There are those who feel that the legislation's primacy is guaranteed by the very fact that Sections 16 to 20 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms were enshrined in the Constitution Act, 1982. According to this interpretation, the Charter would render invalid the provisions of any other rule of law that would be incompatible, since the Constitution is supreme. Incidentally, the Charter repeats, almost word for word, Section 2 of the Official Languages Act, 1969. Any lack of precision in the Act means that the extremely vague guarantees of Section 16(1) of the Charter will prevail.

Others feel that the Official Languages Act will always be the framework for the courts' interpretation and will enable the courts to determine the spirit and intent of the legislator. Since the Charter is rather vague, they feel it would be preferable to state precisely the spirit and the intent of the legislator by including in the legislation how its provisions are consequential on other Acts. This would provide more specific guarantees which would, furthermore, be supported by the guarantees afforded under the Charter.

Madam Speaker, I admit that I support the second option. I believe that the legislation should serve as a basis for interpreting the Constitution and that it would be more equitable to include that in the legislation.

To protect the provisions of the Official Languages Act, therefore, it becomes imperative to include a clause clearly confirming the intention of the lawmakers to place this legislation above any other Act, ordinance, decree, order, rule or regulation and confirming its supremacy over any other Act.

As a member of this House, I have introduced several private Bills calling on the House to have the Official Languages Act override any other Acts. From 1977 to 1984, I introduced a series of eight Bills with that definite purpose in mind.

I am therefore proud and happy to support this initiative. Bill C-72 ensures that if some essential provisions of this act are in conflict with other federal legislation or regulation, the act will prevail, subject only to the Canadian Human Rights Act. However, there could be problems with the drafting of the section. Indeed, Subsection 79(2) excludes explicitly the Canadian Human Rights Act and any regulation made thereunder. Well, it may happen that some provision of the Canadian Human Rights Act, such as Section 3 dealing with discrimination based on race, ethnic or national origin, or Section 7 dealing with job discrimination, or even Section 8 dealing with job applications and advertising, may come in conflict with the Official Languages Act.

The linguistic rights could in this case be weakened because of discriminatory motives, since the Canadian Human Rights Act is excluded from the overriding clause.

Moreover, the fact that Part VI of Bill C-72 is excluded from the paragraph dealing with supremacy could cause problems in the areas of equitable participation, language of work and language of service. For instance, there could be inconsistencies between the provisions of the Public Service Employment Act and those of the Official Languages Act.

As concerns administrative bilingualism, which covers the three major areas of language of service, language of work and equitable participation, Bill C-72 will first correct the obvious weaknesses of the Act in the matter of the language of work. As for the language of service, everyone knows that this means contributions of public servants who deal with the public as part of their work to serve Canadians. The obligation to provide services in the customer's own language has already been well covered, and this right is in fact guaranteed by the Constitution.

As for the language of work, this is a more complex issue, but Bill C-72 provides that English and French are the languages of work in all federal institutions and that employees have the right to use either official language.

The Government will have to ensure that the working environment allows real use of both languages; it will have to provide central services in both languages and ensure that the documentation and material used at work are available in both French and English.

There is a great variety of applications on the theme of the language of work. Which variations will be implemented under the new legislation? Will there be foot-dragging? We shall have to wait to see the administrative mechanisms implemented by Treasury Board. We all know that Treasury Board increasingly delegates its powers to the deputy ministers and that accountability often leaves much to be desired. We shall therefore have to remain vigilant to ensure an equitable and effective implementation.

In addition, there will be requirements as to the ability of supervisors and senior management to communicate and operate in both official languages.

We may wonder how this will be implemented in practice. Will there be sufficient political will to take necessary action? We may well wonder, and I have already raised this issue in the House several times as the instructions of the Treasury Board allow the deputy ministers and senior public servants to depart more easily from linguistic requirements.

Whatever the President of the Treasury Board might tell me, we all know the influence of a supervisor has over his subordinates. If he is unilingual, there will be a very strong pressure on the department to have all documents and communications in the language of the senior official. This is a fact. I am not suggesting that this senior official will force all others to use his language, I am simply saying that it is more than likely. We will need enlightened leaders who can tell the difference between authority and autocracy, while showing full respect for the linguistic rights of all Canadians.

Again I say that even with the new law, strong political will will be required to make sure it is duly enforced. We can easily live with the principles, but the administrative regulations and their implementation are something else again.

For example, the major issue of equal participation is covered under Bill C-72, to the extent that the Government will have to make sure that all Canadians, regardless of their ethnic origin or mother tongue, have equal employment and promotion opportunities in federal institutions. In addition, the staff of these institutions will have to reflect the presence in Canada of both the English and French-speaking communities.

Well, Madam Speaker, federal employees are not hired by Bill C-72, but by Treasury Board and the Public Service Commission of Canada. We will have to see to it that their hiring practices do reflect the spirit of the law. That is what is called political will.

Thanks to this legislation, individuals or groups who feel their rights have been breached will at least be entitled to legal recourse, which means they may be heard by a court and seek redress. This is an entirely new concept, Madam Speaker, and I do believe it is the essential aspect of Bill C-72, in the sense that it will give executory power under the law, the fact that an individual may appear before the court to seek justice, to seek redress.

The possibility of a legal recourse when one feels his rights have been aggrieved has been included in the legislation. So, ultimately, that could be a means of countering the bad faith on the part of a lazy administration.

Besides a recourse to the Commissioner, this Bill provides for seizing the Federal Court of a complaint six months after lodging that complaint with the Commissioner. One can proceed alone or with the help of the Commissioner.

This is an indispensable guarantee at which one can only rejoice although the process is long and costly. At least, it is there and it can be used.

So, Clause 75(1) states that anyone who has tabled a complaint with the Commissioner can take legal proceedings. It remains to be seen if the courts will act on a single complaint or rather on a series of complaints. As I said, will the courts act on the basis of one single complaint or only on a series of complaints? As we know, Madam Speaker, one swallow does not make a summer—will one language incident be enough to trigger the use of the judicial process? Time will tell!

There are serious gaps that should have been corrected, one of which is the matter of the privatization of Crown Corporations, and in that respect I would like to suggest that as far as I am concerned that whole question will have to be closely scrutinized. As we know, the Government is committed to privatizing certain Crown Corporations that sometimes have been providing essential services in such different areas as transportation, communications, health, security and other areas. There is nothing in the legislation that would prevent a Crown Corporation wholly owned by the Government from avoiding the impact of the legislation by selling 1 per cent of its shares. In fact, the legislation as drafted only applies to a corporation or to its wholly owned subsidiaries. As I said, selling 1 per cent of the shares would be enough to avoid being subject to the requirements of the Official Languages Act. It is clear that such behavior is unacceptable—a mischievous management could turn that clause into a real farce. The Government might answer they intend to preserve language rights by inserting into the privatization sale agreement a clause safeguarding those rights.

I have strong doubts that a satisfactory solution may be reached, so much so that there would be no legal requirements to do so. Each time a corporation is privatized the debate will surface. I find it hard to visualize, madam Speaker, how Air Canada, if it were to sell 1 per cent of its shares, could feel it is not covered by the new Official Languages Act. It is my view that in committee we will have to discuss that whole question with the Minister and hopefully we can find an acceptable solution.

Another gap involves federal-provincial agreements, because Canadians are treated differently according to the region they live in. For instance, a federal-provincial agreement between Canada and Saskatchewan would not have to be written in French. It could be if the provincial Government so requested. Why different standards? Does the Federal Government wear its bilingual hat when negotiating with Quebec, New Brunswick and Manitoba, and a different, unilingual hat when negotiating with other provinces? This Madam Speaker, is a matter that will have to be very closely examined.

It is to be assumed also that if that clause is enacted minorities would not have exactly equal status. That Section, that is Part II reflects a deplorable lack of political courage. The federal Government should at least require full bilingualism from its own institutions.

Madam Speaker, my colleague and friend, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) will deal with a provision he feels strongly about, Clause 90 relating to the Northwest Territories Act. He will have some strong reservations to express on the necessity for Parliament to give consent should the Commissioner in Council wish to amend or repeal the Official Languages Ordinance.

• (1210)

[English]

Finally, let me deal with the role of the Commissioner of Official Languages. Indeed, over the years he has been the language ombudsman. His role in Bill C-72 is being clarified. His powers are greatly extended and he will have a very active part on his own or on behalf of a complainant in applying to the Federal Court for a remedy to an alleged violation of the Act. This gives the law the needed teeth, the executory powers to ensure compliance with the law. I welcome this disposition.

The Commissioner will also be able, under the law, to look into complaints arising out of provisions of other federal laws and to review any regulations or directives of the Government made under the Act.

The Government has incorporated other recommendations made by the Standing Committee on Official Languages. In my view it could have gone a little further and established an effective language ombudsman, something like our Auditor General. We will pursue this matter in committee and hope to be able to strengthen the office of the Official Languages Commissioner.

[Translation]

In theory, Bill C-72 is satisfactory. In practice, the Government, the Ministers, the agencies, the Crown corporations and all those involved will have to show great understanding. The legal parameters are there to foster harmony and strengthen the will to make Canadian society more just, more open and more tolerant of its minorities.

I hope with all my heart that we will achieve that goal together and that Bill C-72 will prove to be as important a step in the evolution of attitudes as the Official Languages Act was in 1969.

Finally, there must be public education. To discuss and pass bills in the House is not enough. We must also see to it they are explained to and understood by the general public. That is also the role of a Member of Parliament. I count on my colleagues to spread and explain the spirit of the Bill.

I call on all Members of this House to stand up and be counted on this Bill, to make their views known openly here in the House. Madam Speaker, it will be worth while to discuss the Bill. I think it will be useful to do so, but I wish also to assure the Government that on our side of the House, the Liberal side, we want this legislation adopted as soon as possible.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity this morning to speak to the Bill before the House, because to me, it is a very strong piece of legislation, and I say congratulations to the Government of Canada for tabling this Bill in the House.

[English]

We are not only dealing with the substance of Bill C-72, but with the direction in which I hope our country and society is headed. It is with some sadness that during recent provincial elections people in various communities were still attempting to maintain them as unilingual communities. We must get a stronger understanding of our history, as I hope Bill C-72 will help to achieve, but we must also remember that it took Canada almost 100 years to enact legislation protecting the language of both founding cultures.

Canada was established not through war but through an agreement between two colonies who wanted to establish a single country which would make them both the richer while protecting their cultural differences. Unfortunately, we too seldom teach our children the history of how these two cultures were brought together into one country and society. I believe that some of the tensions and difficulties in this country arise because that protection did not exist and different groups in areas of the country did not feel a full part of society.

Two of the most important commissions which have changed the direction and social fabric of Canada were the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, chaired by Senator Bird, and the B and B Commission chaired by Mr. Laurendeau and Mr. Dunton. The establishment of those recommendations into law in 1969 was only a first step. For the first time we saw that our country could be administrated in both official languages.

It is rather amusing to think that some of the crises which arise are very much related to our day-to-day activities, such as the St. Jean appeal case in the Yukon. Something as simple as a speeding ticket or parking ticket brings forward the importance of establishing those rights in our country. This Bill has teeth, which is why, as I said earlier, I want to compliment the Government for bringing it forward. It is a Bill with which we can live. I hope it will put to rest many of the concerns that we have heard across the country in the past. It is an affirmation of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in terms of the protection of both official languages in minority communities.

• (1220)

However, we do have some concerns with the Bill. They can be dealt with at the committee level. They are with respect to the exclusion in the Bill of the Northwest Territories as a federal institution. The fact that the Northwest Territories is excluded while at the same time any change to its official languages legislation must be brought forward to the House of Commons is a heavy-handed move. It is up to Parliament to review such matters. The power is with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) to carry out such measures. We should look at these provisions and ensure that we let the Government of the Northwest Territories know that we respect its autonomy with respect to official languages and with respect to its legislation.

My other concern is that the Yukon has not been excluded from the Bill. We recognize that the St. Jean appeal is going forward and that something might automatically come from it. If it does not, there is some concern with respect to the ability of the Yukon to implement its own official languages legislation giving priority to aboriginal languages.

There are two scars on our country. One is with respect to the way we treated our native people in the past. There is a consensus across the country wanting to change that and to ensure that future legislation will respect the rights of our aboriginal people while addressing some of the wrongs of the past. We must recognize the resources which exist in the Yukon in terms of being able to implement minority languages. There is goodwill in the Yukon. There have been negotiations between the Government of the Yukon and the Government of Canada to ensure that such legislation can be put in place.

At this point in time perhaps it is not essential to declare the Yukon officially bilingual, at least not until it has the capacity to put bilingual services into place. It has a Bill of its own which will start to put such services in place. I am sure we can come to a consensus to deal with this difficulty if we hear from the Government of the Northwest Territories and the Government of the Yukon at the committee stage.

For the first time we have a Bill in front of us that will allow the children of those from both languages and both cultures the opportunity to feel comfortable in that they will be living in a society which has two official languages. It is with pride that they will be able to say, "This is my country. As an Anglo- Canadian I know that the other founding official language and culture is protected in my community even though it does not represent the majority". A French Canadian youth can say, "Anglo-Canadians in my community can have the same type of pride in what their culture and identity is".

We do not celebrate enough the great steps that we have taken forward. They are steps which have not occurred in other societies. This is what makes me feel proud to be a Canadian. We have taken two very different cultures and two very different peoples and brought them together to form a country. In the process of doing so we have been able to protect individual rights and individual cultures. If we had not had the official languages legislation of 1969 we could not have been quite as explicit as we were in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. What Bill C-72 does is to take the cosmetic appearance of the 1969 Official Languages Act and give it strength. It has given it a certain amount of justice. What it does is give the responsibility to the people who are there.

The Commissioner of Official Languages will no longer have to be concerned with just reporting. He now has the ability to take action. I was pleased to see that he will be reporting to the Treasury Board. The President of the Treasury Board will be able to use his or her clout to see that the recommendations of the Commissioner are not just recommendations but that they are implemented.

Also in the Bill is a provision that as a last resort matters can be referred to the courts. That is very important. It is important that those who are heard in the courts can be heard in their own language. Anyone who studies our history in any depth knows that we must celebrate our two cultures and our two languages. We have to ensure that our two languages will always be protected. As we learn to celebrate this fact with each other we can then become the kind of people who will be an international influence. We will have dealt with our own difficulties with some justice and with a great deal of dignity and strength. That is very important to me.

It is important for Members of Parliament, not just as Members of Parliament but as members of this society, when we are in our communities and hear people objecting to our language laws to say that a law such as this is a law which was supported by all three Parties. We will hear such objections if we are sensitive to what is happening at the grassroots level of our communities. This is a law by which we can understand our history. It is out of the evolution of our history and our maturation as a country that something as strong as this law is in front of us. We should never back away from that.

My dream is that some day every child who graduates from a Canadian school will graduate with pride in that he or she can understand what the two cultures are all about. They will understand that it was not because of the Treaty of 1763 that we became a country but because of the events which took place in 1967. That is when we had two strong and separate societies which came together. Once people begin to understand that the debate about whether or not we need an Official Languages Act will be over. There is a dream and an image that eventually perhaps in the not too distant future we will have a society that is truly bilingual which can freely express itself in terms of its own culture, arts and language.

I do not often compliment the Government. However, I want to say that the Government has showed courage and strength in bringing this Bill forward. The Government had a choice of saying that there is an Official Language Act and nothing needs to be done about it, but it chose to give us a much stronger official languages Bill. That is something we can all celebrate. Sometimes in the House the whole process is difficult, and that process is difficult because it is adversarial. It gives me great pleasure to rise and speak to a Bill that we know will strengthen the fabric of our society.

• (1230)

Some parts of this Bill we are looking at today are long overdue. I wish to refer to the old Act that provided for the issuance of regulations in both languages, but permits issuance in one language before the other in urgent cases. The legislative instruments and proclamations and the subordinate legislation such as regulations adopted by the Governor in Council would have to be made simultaneously in both official languages. The Government of the Northwest Territories, Indian bands, bands or councils, or other bodies would not be affected by those provisions. That is the part that I referred to earlier; we hope that the Yukon would be excluded from until it is ready to get its own resources, and certainly I would hope that it receives some help from the federal Government to enforce its own language Act.

Parts of the Act are important and will have great importance in the future because of the fact that we still see and know ourselves as a mosaic. We also see that this Act, and Section 27 of the Charter states:

> This Charter shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians.

The provision for the two officials languages now would not undermine the preservation and enhancement of languages other than English and French. That is very important, as we look more and more at the richness of multiculturalism in our country. I have often heard people of first and second generation Canadians ask, "Why English or why French?" depending upon what part of the country they live in. They ask, "Why can it not be partly the language that I have brought with me from my roots?" Again, I refer to the fact that that comes from our superficial knowledge of our own history. We want to ensure that every one of those people who came to this country bringing other cultures and other heritages can be proud of those roots, feel good about themselves, and know that they truly contributed to the development of our society. That is very much protected within this law, and that is very commendable. It is something that we should all respect and understand.

The old Act contained an enabling provision which attempted to open the door to proceedings in either official language in criminal trials. In the proposed Act we have Criminal Code provisions. If we are going to get anything that has some strength, we have to address the Criminal Code provisions.

The provisions of this proposed Act would permit the amendment of Part XIV.1 of the Criminal Code which deals with the language of trial. It provides for a complete code of language rights in criminal matters and ensures the national implementation of the law. In the past that is something that we have seen as very difficult. We now have a certain sense of security in that we know the Act has actually dealt with these amendments. I cannot call them amendments because it is a brand new Act, and it is an Act with a lot of strength.

Also when we look at the role of the President of the Treasury Board, or another Minister who is designated, it makes sense that the President of the Treasury Board should be the one who is presently designated, because it is the President of the Treasury Board whose over-all responsibility is the management of the public and administrative functions. It seems to me that giving that office that type of power is really important.

When I was at the municipal level we had factions within the provincial context that were angry that there could be two official languages in a province. We were able to bring people from our community and municipality together and have a by-law that declared a municipality bilingual. For me, it was something that affirmed the fact that it could be done. I was told that we would bankrupt the municipality, that it was totally impossible. With some very practical applications it was possible.

When I was President of the New Democratic Party, travelling across the country, more and more I realized the richness and the willingness of people in all communities. Sometimes those people rationalized it a little by saying, "I would never want to learn the other language, but for the sake of my children it is important we do", or "I think it is important for the good of the children that we encourage them to learn the other language". But it was the rationalization of older biases that were starting to diminish and the resolution was beginning to be there because they understood the importance of strengthening our country as a bilingual and bicultural country.

As we travel through the country and talk openly, and let us not be afraid to talk about it, even if we do have some differences, let us put them on the table and talk about what type of vision we have. Where are we going with it? Is it correct that an individual who speaks the language of one of the founding nations of our country, either English or French, cannot be heard in a court of law in the language with which he or she is most comfortable? There are not many people across this land who would say that such person should not be heard in the official language with which he or she is comfortable.

In looking at the language of work, it seems to me that certainly the public service is just that, it is giving service to the people of the country. It does not make any sense to suggest that citizens of this country could only receive this service in one official language, either French or English.

We have put a law in place that will say forever more there will be that type of protection; forever more that there will be the ability for us to operate our federal Government in both official languages, and that as we move into the future we will reach that point, I hope, when we are rid of those types of debates that took place in some of the communities across this land during provincial elections. I am quite sure that they also take place periodically during municipal elections.

Today we must state that it is a pleasure to be in the House of Commons and know that we have Bill C-72 before us knowing that it has to go to committee. There are a few areas that I think have to be strengthened or amended. But there is goodwill, and I think this can be done. There are none of us here who do not recognize the difficulty and the tensions that exist in the North regarding the protection of the languages of our aboriginal people. We do want that to be the case, while at the same time we also want to ensure that English and French receive the priority they should receive. It is unacceptable that French and English people living and working in the North cannot receive services in their language.

At this moment in our history it is possible to make some amendments in order that both the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories can be excluded from being officially bilingual. I guess that happens by not identifying them as federal institutions. They will then have time to meet the needs of their communities, needs which are very different needs from those in the South. It is important that we recognize that fact.

As we are trying to recognize the justice of our bilingual and bicultural society in our evolution, surely we must remember that the peoples who were here first are those peoples who have probably had the most difficult time in protecting their culture and their language. It seems to me if we can do anything through our Official Languages Act, through other laws, or by providing resources to the territories to help them change the situations that have existed for so long, we should be wanting to do that.

• (1240)

I do not think the Bill will require a great deal of amendment. I think we can do it. However, I would ask Hon. Members to think about perhaps excluding the Yukon as a federal institution under the Act. If we look at the total implications, and recognizing that the Yukon Government is willing to deliver services in both official languages but is trying to balance its resources to protect aboriginal languages, I do not think it is an extraordinary request. The place to do that would be at committee, and I think we can come to some resolution that would make some sense.

I am pleased that this legislation is before us. We have probably taken three steps in this regard. The first step was in 1969 with the first Official Languages Act. The next step was in 1982 when once and for all the rights of both cultures and languages were recognized in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and soon we will have a very strong law to protect both languages. Certainly society will recognize the fact that it is not whether it is French or English, but it is because of French and English which gives our country its strength and beauty. As we live with this legislation it will make more sense and legislators and public servants will automatically address the delivery of their services in both languages.

Annually, since 1969, we have always looked at the report of the Official Languages Commissioner. It has had a certain amount of clout. It was always interesting to see what Departments were not doing so well and what Departments were doing better. There was a certain amount of pride when Departments did well, and it was very important. However, this Bill will no longer depend upon a review or a report. We will still be getting reports, but the Bill will put some teeth into the legislation so that the Commissioner of Official Languages will be able to recommend and enforce. This is very important. If there is anything that is almost pathological in society today, it is the cynicism of recommendations constantly being made without the ability to enforce or implement them. Certainly we can now say with a great deal of pride that we have an official languages Bill that does not only depend upon review and reports but actually has some teeth to implement the recommendations coming from these reports. This is probably one of the most important parts of the whole Bill. As good as is any law, if it is difficult to enforce, it gets watered down or people tend to ignore it. That is not what we want.

I say on behalf of the New Democratic Party that we would like to ask for a couple of amendments at committee. They are nothing very great. It would be just to get some consensus in terms of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. Apart from that, we are very pleased to support the Bill. It is a step forward in the evolution of our country and our society. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to have been able to speak to it. It is something that has been very close to my heart. As a native Quebecer I saw a lot of discrimination happening to the majority of the community there when I was growing up. Today I see the progress which has been made, and I see people born in English Canada who are proud of the fact that they are part of a bicultural and bilingual society.

All I can say is that we have come a long way and we will still go a long way with positive evolutions in society that will give us the character and fabric of which many of us have dreamed. I think that will be a reality, and the Bill will help it happen.

Without being overly full of praise, I say that this is one time the Government has done something which we can all certainly support.

[Translation]

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I want to start by congratulating the Hon. Members for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) on raising the level of debate on the Bill before the House above any hint of political partisanship. I am sure the Government has no objection to the House adopting this Bill as soon as possible. Madam Speaker, as the Member for Chambly and as a resident of that riding since my earliest years—

[English]

I was raised in a very small community which had a few Anglophones. I had the opportunity to learn English at an early age and to attend a French high school where I had good English teachers, which improved my English a little. Of course, Madam Speaker, I would never say that I am as bilingual as you. I also had the opportunity to send my children to English schools. Even if we are Francophones in origin, we understand a little better the two cultures of our great country.

I am very proud to live in a part of Quebec where there is absolute co-operation between French-speaking and English-speaking people living in the community and in fact in the whole riding of Chambly. I am very proud to represent them, whether they are English or French.

• (1250)

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak at the second reading stage of Bill C-72, an Act respecting the status and use of the official languages of Canada. This Bill is an important piece of legislation which, I believe, reflects the many linguistic aspirations of French-speaking Canadians, whether they are from Acadia, Manitoba or Quebec, and of English-speaking Canadians, whether they are from Newfoundland, Quebec or Alberta.

Madam Speaker, I would like to start by congratulating the Members of the Standing Committee, Members of both Chambers who worked so hard to prepare and draft this Bill, and especially the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin), who chaired the Committee for several months and the Hon. Member for Abitibi (Mr. St-Julien), the present joint chairman.

The House will recall that the existing Official Languages Act is 18 years old. It was necessary to amend the Act to reflect changes that have taken place in Canadian society in the last two decades and the linguistic reality of the eighties. We had to provide a modern and progressive framework for our language policy for the years to come. The Bill contains a number of new elements that are compatible with the linguistic needs of Canadians.

I think Canadians will approve of the rights conferred under this Bill and the obligations it places on federal institutions, and I am thinking of the proceedings and business of Parliament, legislative documents, the courts, communications with and services for the public, language of work, and so on. Canadians will also have access to judicial recourse when they consider they have been denied their language rights.

The concept of official languages has changed a great deal in the last 20 years. From the report of the B & B Commission to the 1969 Official Languages Act, from the entrenchment of language rights in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms to the recognition of the Canadian linguistic duality in the Meech Lake Accord—when once more our Government and our Prime Minister, along with his provincial counterparts representing four different political parties, were able to sign this historic agreement that brings back Quebec within the Canadian constitutional family—, we went from what some consider to be a symbol to a concrete and living reality.

This Government, with its commitment to national reconciliation, started early to work for a reform of language policies in order to ensure institutional equality between English and French-speaking Canadians. In June 1987, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) introduced Bill C-72, which is the cornerstone of linguistic renewal in this country. If there is a part of the Bill which reflects the Government's will to concretely and effectively improve established systems, it is the one dealing with administration of justice. In this regard, the Bill is to be considered as an extension of the rights afforded in the 1969 Act and of the basic guarantees given by the Constitution.

Madam Speaker, each and every year, during the Canada Day celebrations, we can see all over the country another concrete proof of the importance of bilingualism and national reconciliation for this Government. Since 1984, and particularly since July 1st, 1985, Quebec in particular celebrates Canada Day. Canada Day is not exclusively for the rest of Canada any more; Quebecers are also full-fledged Canadian citizens and celebrate Canada Day with as much vigor, energy and pride as Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day on June 24.

Madam Speaker, I will not repeat each component of this Bill. My colleague, the Minister of Justice, has stated them very clearly. Just let me, as Parliamentary Secretary, say a few words on language obligations imposed on federal institutions in the administration of justice as well as on this Bill's opening onto Canadian society in general.

In that important area, the new legislation proposes to implement the existing constitutional guarantees, namely, as the Supreme Court of Canada said in the decision on language rights in Manitoba, "to give French-speaking and English-speaking people equal access to the legislative bodies, the legislation and the courts of law."

Of course, the Bill states some obligations that already appear in the existing Official Languages Act. Thus, federal courts will still be required to hear witnesses in either of the official languages, to provide simultaneous interpretation services and to make available to the public their decisions in both official languages. However, the Bill goes even further. For the first time, a federal law will force federal courts to ensure that the judge chosen to preside at a hearing understands without the help of an interpreter the official language in which the case is being heard.

Madam Speaker, also for the first time, the Government of Canada will have to use in legal proceedings the official language selected by the other parties. Finally, under a new provision, forms that are required to be served by federal institutions must be bilingual.

With respect to provincial courts having a criminal jurisdiction, the Official Languages Act provides for some consequential amendments to the Criminal Code concerning the language in which the proceedings are carried on.

We have to remember that the Criminal Code already provides in Part XIV.1 that any accused is entitled to be prosecuted in his own official language.

It has been noted throughout the years that the scope of that right had to be specified. The Bill provides that when a court orders that an accused is to be prosecuted before a judge or a judge and jury who speak the official language of his choice, the accused and his lawyer will be entitled to use any official language during the proceedings; the witnesses will be entitled to testify in one of the official languages; the accused will be entitled to hear the plaintiff in the language of his choice; the courts will be required to offer simultaneous interpretation services; and finally, the file will include a copy of such interpretation.

I suggest this brief statement shows convincingly that this new legislation will enable us to make large strides in the administration of justice. I am firmly convinced of that.

I would now like to point out a significant provision of this Bill which shows the innovating nature of the linguistic renewal undertaken by the Government and its desire to open up the Canadian society.

Once again, Madam Speaker, I refer to the Meech Lake agreement concluded by our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) which has allowed the Canadian people to realize that we are a society unrivalled throughout the world. Canadians are unique.

As I said, the Meech Lake agreement undoutedly shows the interest shown by the Government to allow the Canadian community to become more open.

Madam Speaker, the enforcement of the legislation is not merely restricted to federal institutions. It has a wider scope since it attempts—and I insist on that term—to involve Canadians generally. Thus, it sets forth the Government's commitment to promote full recognition and use of French and English in the Canadian society, to encourage the development of French and English minorities in Canada, with as much equity and equality as must be deserved.

The Bill had surely to provide for means of carrying out those commitments. So the Governement, through the Secretary of State, intends to co-operate with the provinces, and the private and volunteer sectors to pursue those various interests. The Secretary of State will also have to attend to the continuation and development of programs relating to the official languages. The Government's policy in that area is clear: it seeks to foster recognition and use of as well as training in the official languages, everywhere in Canada.

Madam Speaker, the Official Languages Bill is a complete measure in that it makes linguistic duality meaningful. It covers the most important aspects of the linguistic field and gives them a strong and durable basis in law. It proves the very strong will of the Government of truly and really reforming its language policy. It fits in with our efforts to achieve national reconciliation. In that sense, it complements the historical Meech Lake Accord. In short, Madam Speaker, it has all the necessary elements to fulfill everybody's aspirations and expectations in that area. So, as a Progressive Conservative Member and as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister, I am very proud of the contents and scope of this Bill, and I hope it will soon be part of our federal statutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

---

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[English]

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSAL TO HARMONIZE CANADIAN AND AMERICAN LAWS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in its haste to get a trade deal with the United States, the Government neglected to examine possible environmental consequences. The Mining Association of Canada said recently that it favours a "harmonization" of environmental law on both sides of the border so as to achieve "a level playing field" between environmental requirements and costs to industry.

It is fair to say that Canadians would support this concept only if standards are equalized to the higher, not the lower standards, so as to reflect the growing concern of both Canadians and Americans for more stringent environmental protection. But the Government did not address this issue when negotiating the sale of Canada.

If any harmonization of environmental standards to keep industry on both sides of the border on a level playing field is to be made, it must be done with improved environmental protection as the priority. By its own admission, the Government has not studied possible environmental impacts of the trade deal. Thus, the Government has failed to live up to its commitment to the Brundtland Commission report. What a sham!

* * *

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF U.S. WHEAT ASSOCIATIONS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, Canadian critics of the Canada-U.S. trade agreement in their overblown rhetoric claim that the Canadian Wheat board is gone, the family farm has been sold, and other like nonsense. Let us examine the American viewpoint regarding these same provisions.

A delegate to the National Association of U.S. Wheat Growers said: "We got shafted by Canada. We want fair trade, not free trade". The Association President, James Miller, stated: "Canada came out the clear winner in the FTA because it will gain access to the huge U.S. market without giving anything in return".

Winston Wilson, President of the U. S. Wheat Association, stated: "We got our pants taken off on this one. We can't afford any more agreements of this type. We can't see the rights of our producers sold off. Canadians can sell all the wheat they want to us but we can't ship any back".

This is the other side of the coin. These are the comments of leaders of the United States wheat growing groups. Can it be that maybe, just maybe, our negotiators did an outstanding job of safeguarding the interests of Canada's wheat producers?

* * *

BANKRUPTCIES

PRINCIPAL GROUP—LENGTH OF INVESTIGATION DEPLORED

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, thousands of Principal Group investors throughout Canada are angry. They are angry at this Government that promised them over eight months ago that it would soon be completing its investigation into possible misleading representations made to investors by the Principal Group.

Principal Group investors, many of whom lost their entire life savings, are demanding to know why it has taken the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs over 240 days to complete its investigation. On August 12, 1987, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) assured us that he was "looking into" allegations of misrepresentation. On August 13, 1987, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) said that his Department was "attaching high priority to this matter". On August 26 the same Minister said in this House that the investigation would be completed by the end of August. The Minister was later criticized by a bureaucrat in his own Department for going "a little too far".

Eight months later, despite all this talk of action, the investigation is still not completed and thousands of investors are demanding to know why.

* * *

POLITICAL PARTIES

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Brain Trust did so much ripping at its meeting in Vancouver last weekend, where the free trade pact was discussed, that it reminded me of Rip Van Winkle.

"Rip it up! Rip it up", cried the Right Hon. John Turner. "Don't rip it up. Don't rip it up", shouted Paul Martin, an alleged rising star in the Liberal Party.

"Rip, rip, rip!" "Don't rip, don't rip!" "Rip, rip!" "Don't rip, don't rip!"

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that the Right Hon. Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner) may rip the Liberal Party apart if he does not wake up and join Don Johnston.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CONDITION OF SCHOOL IN FORT ALBANY ON JAMES BAY

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, Fort Albany is a small Indian community on the western shore of James Bay. There are 130 children, from kindergarten to grade eight, who attend the local school. Their school is a fire trap.

The school's fire hazards were brought to the attention of the Department of Indian Affairs in 1986, and again in 1987, with little response. A recent evaluation by an architectural firm from Winnipeg states that the fire detection, fire alarm and fire-fighting systems are completely inadequate. The firm recommends closing the school immediately. The firm states: "Without over-emphasizing the situation, we suggest that the lives of the children are hanging in the balance".

The Minister must move quickly to make this school safe from the threat of fire. Plans for the construction of a new school, scheduled for completion in four years, must be accelerated. Prompt action now can prevent a disaster.

* * *

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

NORTHERN TELECOM—OPENING OF NEW ADVANCED TECHNOLOGY CENTRE IN NEPEAN

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on Friday in Nepean—Carleton, the Hon. Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) opened Northern Telecom's new Advanced Semi Conductor Technology Centre built at a cost of $106 million. This is one of the most significant high-technology investments made by the private sector in Canada in the last decade.

• (1405)

In addition, Northern Telecom's research and operating expenses related to the centre will exceed $205 million between 1986 and 1990.

Northern Telecom is the world's leading supplier of fully digital telecommunications systems and the fourth largest manufacturer of telecommunications systems in the world. Its goal is to achieve world leadership in telecommunications by the year 2000. The company chose Canada for this major investment because of availability of skilled personnel, enhanced trading relations with the U.S., and a favourable tax environment.

Friday was a day to celebrate, in both Nepean—Carleton and Canada.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—PEACE CONFERENCE PROPOSED

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the violence in the Middle East has left three more dead and scores injured. While the Israeli Government seeks control through beatings and killings, the persistent resistance of Palestinian youths attests to the bankruptcy of this policy. Until now the Canadian Government has failed either to issue a diplomatic protest or ask the Israelis to show restraint.

The Israelis and the world now know that the Palestinian call for a homeland demands an urgent response or the Middle East will plunge into dangerous and violent anarchy which will threaten not only the existence of Israel, but world peace.

A long-term solution must be found and an international peace conference will provide a means. More than once the opportunity to resolve the Palestinian problem has been lost because Governments dithered. It is imperative that we do not allow this to happen again. I therefore call upon the Canadian Government to state its support for such a conference and commit itself to working towards its accomplishment with the urgency the situation demands. If this effort is made, perhaps some good can yet come from this turmoil.

* * *

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION—HONOUR, INTEGRITY, RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, the House is the only institution in Canada where Members can exercise complete freedom of expression without consequence. This intrinsic right, however, entails a heavy burden of responsibility. By our actions we set the moral agenda for present and future generations. Recent events in this House are reason to examine this right more closely.

As a Member who was born and spent the early portion of his life in Holland, I am familiar with the rules and regulations of European Parliaments. When Members in those democracies comment on an event involving individuals, they must be certain of the facts before any names are used. Innuendo, circumstance, and partial facts are not allowed. That protects individuals as well as the integrity of Parliament and its Members.

A few weeks ago the Leader of the Socialist Party of Canada underscored this point when, using a newspaper article as his source, he accused an innocent person of being a Palestinian terrorist. Freedom of expression means honour, integrity, and responsibility. If we follow these ideals, then no one will be hurt.

* * *

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

CANADA SPACE AGENCY—DELAY IN DECIDING LOCATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, once again Canada's space agency has been launched into the world of publicity, but not to the stars and not into orbit. Once again the Government's launch was aborted, and once again its lack of leadership has hit the news. This time it is the frustrated former head of the agency who resigned because of the Conservatives' inertia and inability to take a decision on whether the agency's headquarters should be in Ottawa or Montreal. We have been waiting more than 16 months for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to make up his mind, and we are still waiting today.

The Minister of Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) said the delay had put a lot of extra pressure on Art Collin. More than six months ago the Minister asked the Prime Minister to make a quick decision, and Mr. Ken Lewis, head of the Canadian Aerospace Industries Association, said Canadians are the victims of the space agency delay. If the Government cannot make a decision, who the heck can? Let us have a decision on the space agency as soon as possible.

* * *

POLITICAL PARTIES

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY—FUNDING THROUGH UNION DUES

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, here are a couple of paragraphs from a letter from a constituent of mine, a union member who is extremely upset:

Dear Felix:

Why do I have to support the NDP with my union dues? More than half of my buddies can't stomach the Socialists, especially here in Manitoba. We're paying through the nose here because of those "beep beep" Socialists under Howard Pawley.

Felix, can't you make a law that stops our union from automatically taking and giving my hard-earned money to Socialists?

Do I, as a Canadian, not have the right to object to this misuse of union funds? Aren't the NDP collecting campaign funds in an illegal fashion this way?

Felix, I read in the Hansard you sent to me that the municipal NDP candidates were funnelling money as a tax rip-off through their federal party. There is nothing democratic about this situation. Please help.

Signed, Bill.

* * *

• (1410)

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF MILITARY BASE IN NANISIVIK

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) announced last week the establishment of a permanent military base in Nanisivik, Northwest Territories. The Minister promised there would be consultation on the cultural, social, and environmental impacts of this project.

The Government does not have a good record of listening to northerners. The concerns of the Innuit with regard to low level military flights, and of the residents of Cold Lake, Alberta, with regard to Cruise missile testing, have fallen on deaf ears.

I call on the Minister to set out a specific timetable for the consultation process that will take place with groups such as the territorial Government, local communities—particularly those of Nanisivik and Arctic Bay—environmental groups, and other interested groups, and to ensure that the current land claims negotiations between the Tungavik Federation of Nunavit and the federal Government will be respected.

Further, the Minister must ensure that northerners benefit from any development in the North. I call upon the Minister of National Defence to guarantee that skilled job opportunities with commensurate training will be available to the people in whose area this project is built.

* * *

POLITICAL PARTIES

NATO—POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland—Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, last week we witnessed the NDP's dilemma of whether to reject the Party's longstanding policy to pull Canada out of NATO. While anxiously awaiting the result of this battle between ideology and pragmatism, we witness the now true colours of the Liberal Party as articulated this weekend by their Leader (Mr. Turner).

After some 20 years of neglecting our Armed Forces and of not pulling our weight in NATO, we see that the Liberals would further weaken our already rusty Navy while at the same time threaten our traditional freedoms and values by planning to abandon the NATO Alliance.

The Liberals plan to demilitarize the Arctic, yet the Soviet Union has some 200 nuclear powered submarines, with a new one off the assembly line every five weeks. The Liberals plan to discontinue Cruise missile testing, while the Soviet Union continues to fly simulated attacks on the North American continent with their Cruise missile carriers, the Bear H Bombers.

During the last election campaign we found that the Liberals turned to Washington for their foreign and defence policy. In an attempt to swing their Party to the left are they now seeking their policy from Moscow?

Now is the time for solidarity in the NATO alliance, not a time to grab at superficially attractive but substantially inadequate measures.

* * *

FOOD

CALL FOR LABELLING OF FAST FOODS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I think the saddest moment I have experienced as a Member of Parliament was when I had a lady in my office last December whose son had died after eating a fast-food apple turnover at Arby's. She cried in my office and said that he died in her husband's arms and he did not even have a chance to wake up. He knew that he had a problem with the food but, unfortunately, the Government has not required labelling of fast foods.

At the time I was so moved that, rather than making a partisan issue of it, I spoke to the Minister directly and asked whether there was something we could do to the Food and Drugs Act to prevent this kind of tragedy from occurring again. I waited some time and nothing was forthcoming. In mid-January I made plans to introduce a Private Members' Bill by seeking legal drafting. I have been waiting for that.

In the meantime another young woman has died. How many young people in the prime of their lives have to be snatched away before we in fact take some action with respect to labelling of fast foods? McDonald's has money for packaging to sell the clowns and the sizzle. Why can it not simply mark what is included in fast foods in order to prevent the senseless deaths and tragedies that we saw recently in Ottawa, and before that in the city of Burlington?

I ask the Minister to support a request I will be making tonight before the Committee on National Health and Welfare to have the Government move with regulations on fast food labelling.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

THE CABINET

MICHEL CÔTÉ AFFAIR—APPOINTMENT OF JEAN SIROIS AS CHAIRMAN OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF TÉLÉFILM CANADA

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and deals once again with the resignation of the former Minister of Supply and Services.

According to a report published in Le Soleil, the Rivard, Hickson and Sirois lawfirm paid some $200,000 toward the purchase of the former Minister's house.

In view of the fact that Mr. Jean Sirois was appointed Chairman of the Board of Téléfilm Canada some two weeks later, is the Prime Minister in a position to tell us whether it was by a happy coincidence that Mr. Jean Sirois was chosen for that job, rather than someone else?

• (1415)

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, that is a matter which does not touch upon the Government's responsibilities. The transactions between a Minister and someone else in this instance are not presently under any inquiry of the Government.

Mr. Speaker: Before the Hon. Member begins his supplementary question, I must say that I was listening carefully to the question and I think that the answer that has been given is probably a right observation procedurally. I would ask the Hon. Member to proceed with some care.

TELEFILM CANADA—APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the appointment of Mr. Jean Sirois as Chairman of the Board of Telefilm Canada was an Order in Council appointment, will the Prime Minister explain to the House why this individual was hired for this job and why, in particular, he received a salary of $64,225 a year when his predecessor's salary was $13,325 a year?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat that the Government is prepared to answer questions on government policy. With all due respect, however, I am not nor do I think any one in the Ministry is in a position to answer that particular question.

PURCHASE OF FORMER MINISTER'S HOUSE—APPOINTMENT TO TELEFILM BOARD

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and the Minister will know that Order in Council appointments are the responsibility of Cabinet and, more particularly, of the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister indicate to the House now why that particular individual who, along with others, had contributed to the purchase of the Minister's former house, was chosen for that position?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the Hon. Member suggesting or making some charge of wrongdoing with respect to some individual in relation to a purchase of a house by a Minister? If so, this is not the proper place to make it. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East.

ISSUANCE OF GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. When he announced the resignation of the former Minister of Supply and Services, he said that it was because the Minister did not report a loan as required by the conflict of interest guidelines, and described it as a technical violation.

However, on the weekend we learned that the Minister, who is responsible for government purchasing, had taken this loan from an individual whose corporate enterprises had been given large government contracts. Does the Prime Minister not consider this behaviour as a conflict of interest and not a mere technical violation? Why was it not reported as such? When will the Prime Minister give us the full details with respect to this loan?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, the firms of Adélard Laberge and Talbot Hunter have been on the government supply list for some time—in fact Adélard Laberge since 1979 and Talbot Hunter since 1973. In other words, they have been supplying the Government for some time and there is no suggestion of any improprieties.

We are presently conducting an investigation. As soon as the examination is complete a full report will be made available.

Mr. Allmand: No Minister received a loan of $250,000 in the period of time referred to by the Minister.

Mr. Crosbie: How do you know?

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, reported these matters to the Prime Minister's Office over a year ago. How can the Prime Minister or his Deputy House Leader say that the Government did not know about these matters? Why did it take them so long to act on them?

Finally, do the Prime Minister and the Government intend to act on the request by the Member for Rosemount, the former Minister, when she asks for a Royal Commission to look into all these very shady matters?

• (1420)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, as I advised the House, a full inquiry is taking place by the government officials. I think my hon. friend made a mistake when he referred to the Minister of Energy.

As soon as the failure to report was reported to the Prime Minister, the Minister's resignation was demanded.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Oshawa in a moment.

I listened carefully to the question. I think that perhaps the Hon. Member mentioned the Minister of Energy in error. I want to be sure that the record is accurate on that point. Perhaps the Hon. Member can assist the Chair and indicate whether he meant the Minister of Energy or another Minister.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I stated that the Minister of Energy is reported to have told the Prime Minister's Office more than a year ago about these matters relating to the former Minister of Supply and Services yet nothing was done. It was in that respect that I mentioned the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

* * *

THE ADMINISTRATION

PC CANADA FUND—CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my questions are for the Prime Minister. They concern two subjects about which I wrote the Prime Minister on Friday.

The Prime Minister will recall that last Tuesday he asked for and obtained the resignation of a Minister of the Crown because, in his words, the Minister failed to register a personal loan. Since Section 24 of the Prime Minister's conflict of interest guidelines requires all members of the Cabinet, including the Prime Minister, to register "all direct and contingent liabilities", why did the Prime Minister not act in compliance with this section by registering the moneys that he received from the PC Canada Fund?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on January 19 the Leader of the NDP rose in the House of Commons and made a false accusation against the wrong man, Mr. Mohammad. On Friday he made another false accusation, using misinformation about me and about my family.

Mr. Broadbent: What is the accusation?

Mr. Mulroney: He did indeed. The Leader of the NDP on Friday said that either he was telling the truth last year when he said it was a loan, in which case it has to be registered, or it is not a loan, to put it bluntly, and they were lying to the people of Canada. The answer is that it was not either/or. The answer is that it was neither.

There is a statement issued today by Mr. Jean-Pierre Kingsley, Assistant Deputy Registrar General of Canada, which states the following:

> In view of the confusion surrounding this matter, however, I wish to make it clear that my Office has been aware of the Prime Minister's arrangements with the P.C. Canada Fund since they were first mentioned publicly and at no time have I or my predecessor or anyone else considered them to be related in any way to the Code.
>
> Moreover, were I asked today if these arrangements are covered by the Code, I would advise that they are not and I would consequently state that they do not constitute a potential conflict of interest, an apparent one, or a real one, and that they do not require to be reported under the Code.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONTENT OF GUIDELINES—REGISTRATION QUERY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. It would have helped if the Prime Minister had answered the question. The question refers to a very specific section of his guidelines where it states that all direct and contingent liabilities ought to be registered. My question was straightforward. I asked him why it was not registered. I asked him that particularly in light of the fact that the same gentleman to whom he referred, prior to the weekend indicated in his view, in terms that we all understand, that money obtained under those circumstances did indeed constitute a liability. The question was straightforward when I put it to the Prime Minister, and I would still like an answer.

• (1425)

Could the Prime Minister, who is responsible for those guidelines, and who has heard the wording twice from me already, tell us why, in his view, the moneys he received from the PC Canada Fund ought not to be registered? It is a straightforward question.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am under no illusions with the Leader of the NDP, and I say this with some sadness. He has become the master of calumny of the thirty-second clip.

Mr. Broadbent: Answer the question now, Mr. Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister to continue his answer, and as much as possible I would ask all Hon. Members to contain their language during this exchange.

Mr. Mulroney: I notice, Mr. Speaker, that he made no apology to Mr. Mohammad or his family for having unfairly defamed them, and I expect none today from the Hon. Member. That is becoming, unfortunately, his tradition of throwing out falsehoods and accusations that he cannot sustain, and then backing away from them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Look who is talking.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will know that earlier this morning I made it very clear that I expected all Hon. Members to exercise this Question Period at a proper level of parliamentary procedure. I asked Hon. Members who were asking questions to think through very carefully their preambles. While there may be a little straying, there is some indication that those admonishments have been respected.

I would expect that all other Hon. Members, who may be in a position to answer questions, try to ensure that their answers are also as procedurally proper as can be.

The Right Hon. Prime Minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, clearly the New Democratic Leader refuses to accept a completely watertight statement. I will therefore read once more the statement just issued by Mr. Jean-Pierre Kingsley, Assistant Deputy Registrar General, who concludes the following:

"In view of the confusion surrounding this matter, however, I wish to make it clear that my Office has been aware of the Prime Minister's arrangements with the PC Canada Fund since they were first mentioned publicly and at no time have I or my predecessor or anyone else considered them to be related in any way to the Code. Moreover, were I asked today if these arrangements are covered by the Code, I would advise that they are not and I would consequently state that they do not constitute a potential conflict of interest, an apparent one, or a real one, and that they do not require to be reported under the Code.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, it would be interesting to know now what other kinds of loans will not have to be registered. We know that loans from the PC Canada Fund do not have to be, and Canadians will be very interested to know what other kinds of loans will not have to be registered.

[Translation]

MICHEL CÔTÉ AFFAIR—QUERY WHY PRIME MINISTER WAITED YEAR BEFORE ACTING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): But my last question deals with a different matter. According to a report published in Le Devoir, a newspaper that is well respected in Quebec and other provinces, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources informed the Prime Minister's Principal Secretary in November of 1986 of certain allegations concerning former Minister Côté. If that was accurate, why did the Prime Minister wait a year before acting?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to a report according to which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources informed, I am told, on November 10, 1986 my Principal Secretary of some matter. As it happens, on November 10, 1986, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was abroad.

[English]

STATEMENT RELEASED BY ASSISTANT DEPUTY REGISTRAR GENERAL

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister on the statement of Jean-Pierre Kingsley which I understand was released at two o'clock just before Question Period began.

I understand that on Friday, Mr. Lortie, the Press Secretary for the Prime Minister, described the payments made by the PC Canada Fund for the Prime Minister as advances. That same day Jean-Pierre Kingsley stated that funds made available to a Minister, whether called a loan or an advance, are subject to the conflict of interest rules.

• (1430)

I would like the Prime Minister to tell the House exactly what was it that led Mr. Kingsley to issue his statement today, taking a position which seemed quite at odds with the one he took on Friday. Could he help the House to understand exactly what happened over the weekend?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to help my hon. friend. Mr. Kingsley sets it out very clearly in the first two paragraphs:

> In view of statements attributed to me in the media relating to the "Conflict of Interest and Post-Employment Code for Public Office Holders" and the Prime Minister's arrangements with the P.C. Canada fund, I wish to clarify the matter.
>
> Last week, in response to inquiries from representatives of the media, the Liberal Party, and the New Democratic Party, I advised on what constituted a liability, a loan, and an advance on a loan concerning public office holders generally. I have always refused to discuss the individual situation of any public office holder and I avoided commenting on the Prime Minister's arrangements with the P.C. Canada Fund, either directly or indirectly.

Some Members took the liberty of extrapolating from that statement a conclusion against me. The conclusion was false.

I say to the Leader of the NDP or the House Leader of the Liberal Party: If you have any charge to make against me or my family, rise in your place and make it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INTERPRETATION OF GUIDELINES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I and other Members of the House have a perfect right to know the extent to which the Prime Minister is applying to himself his own conflict of interest guidelines and whether he is dealing differently with himself, for example, than he dealt with the Hon. Member for Langelier.

Now we have Mr. Kingsley's statement, and I want to ask the Prime Minister if he can tell us whether Mr. Kingsley has gone into detail on exactly what loans or advances to Ministers are now acceptable under his guidelines. Can he answer that question?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is a classic illustration of the recklessness of the Opposition in regard to the truth. Mr. Kingsley puts out a statement which clearly deals specifically with the question raised by the Leader of the NDP and the House Leader of the Liberal Party and, notwithstanding that, he refuses to accept the word of a senior public official of the Government of Canada and tries to cast aspersions.

I tell my hon. friend, and I tell the Leader of the NDP, that while I accept the cut and thrust of partisan debate, I believe that Canadians think, in regard to the matters that you persist in raising every day, you have crossed the boundaries of fairness and propriety. You have gone too far.

* * *

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR USE OF TORONTO LANDS FOR HOUSING PROJECTS

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for CMHC. In view of Metro Toronto's housing crisis due partly to the high cost of land there, what initiative can and will the Minister take to free up some of the land now being held in Metro by the Government, including 50 acres around the offices of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation itself, as well as some lands in the city of Scarborough?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, a report was commissioned and filed by Mr. McLaughlin who studied all federal sites in the city of Toronto. That study is now being analysed to see if there are any surplus properties that might be made available for housing or for any other reason.

We hope to have the results of that report and that analysis reasonably soon.

[Translation]

CONFLICTS OF INTEREST

MICHEL CÔTÉ AFFAIR—ALLEGATIONS THAT PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE HAD BEEN INFORMED—REQUEST FOR DETAILS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who will know that one of the most respected journalists in the province of Quebec reported last Friday that in November, 1986—I would not know the precise date—the Prime Minister's Office was made aware of concerns and scandals, and specifically of problems in the case of the Minister, now the Hon. Member for Langelier, about his personnal debts and the cost of his lifestyle. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources did not deny that report so far. He did not comment it at all.

Could the Prime Minister confirm that discussions have been held in his office with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, on or about November 1986, about problems in Quebec City? If so, why no action has been taken for 15 months?

[English]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have just returned from Saint John, New Brunswick, where they are very interested in the regional development policies of my hon. friend. They want to see my hon. friend from Ottawa Centre who announced that the NDP regional development policy was to take business away from the Saint John Shipyards in Atlantic Canada. They do not think that is much of a regional development policy at all, and they are waiting for you in the Maritimes.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I will want to take a look at the newspaper clipping to which my hon. friend refers in regard to a respected journalist, as he says, from the Province of Quebec. I will take a look at it.

My information is that it contains a specific date, in which case my information is that during the time when this meeting was alleged to have taken place the Minister in question was out of the country.

[Translation]

QUERY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE HAD BEEN INFORMED ON PROBLEMS AND LIFESTYLE OF MEMBER FOR LANGELIER

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, Canadians want an "open" answer from the Prime Minister who has had four days now—the PMO has had four days to confirm or deny the article published in Le Soleil by one of the most respected journalists in Quebec. Yes or no, during the month of November 1986—I do not have the exact date—did the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Quebec's "political" Minister in the Conservative Cabinet, tell the Prime Minister's Office about serious problems concerning the life style and personal debts of the former Minister of Supply and Services, the Hon. Member for Langelier? And why was nothing done for at least 15 months after being advised that journalists wanted to write articles on this question?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I listened very carefully to that question and I cannot help but note that a lifestyle or some debts are not necessarily any kind of criminal offence. I just want to make that observation before the Government replies, and I would ask that in that reply Ministers keep carefully in mind exactly what the question was.

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered that question. Having failed in their first attempt to smear the Prime Minister of Canada, the NDP Members—conceited as they are—are now trying to stain the reputation of other persons. Please, talk about issues like employment, regional development, interest rates, national unity, talk about something but not garbage!

* * *

[English]

THE ADMINISTRATION

PUBLICATION OF NEW CONFLICT OF INTEREST CODE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand a copy of the statement by Jean-Pierre Kingsley, which was given to Members just before Question Period.

My question is for the Prime Minister. In light of the interpretation by Mr. Jean-Pierre Kingsley of the Conflict of Interest Code, specifically Section 24, Members can only be left with the conclusion that all loans arranged by Ministers of the Crown through Party funds, or for that matter by extension through riding association funds, are not subject to the Code. I ask the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member suggesting that there is any accusation around any Minister getting money from Party funds?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I just want that clear in the question.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I think if you check the "blues", you will see that I have made no accusation. I am asking a question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: Given my premise and given that the Prime Minister intends to publish soon, we are told, new conflict of interest guidelines for public office holders, specifically

Ministers of the Crown, will this interpretation, if it stands with respect to Section 24 and which I submit would be an enormous loophole, be closed in the exercise of publishing new conflict of interest guidelines?

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Kingsley's statement is straighforward. If that statement raises some concerns with the Hon. Member, it seems to me quite appropriate to discuss those concerns whenever some legislation is tabled in the House. We all want reasonable and leakproof rules to govern the conduct of Hon. Members and Ministers. Therefore, I will listen carefully to any new suggestion from my hon. colleague.

• (1440)

[English]

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER CLOSE POSSIBLE LOOPHOLE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I submit to the Prime Minister that given the interpretation of Section 24 as outlined today by Mr. Jean-Pierre Kingsley in his letter versus a strict reading of Section 24, we have an obvious, massive, grey area. I submit it is a loophole big enough to drive a Mack truck through.

Can the Prime Minister give the House an undertaking today that he will specifically look at Section 24 and the interpretation of Jean-Pierre Kingsley, as outlined in his letter, with a view to closing any possible loophole that will allow public office holders, specifically cabinet Ministers, to use Party fund-raising apparatus as a means of obtaining loans that otherwise would not have to be reported?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have just seen a situation with regard to the Elections Act where clearly, on behalf of all Members of Parliament in all political Parties, changes ought to be made. That Act has to be tightened up to protect Members of Parliament against inadvertent errors that could result in unfair charges against a Member in any political Party. That, I think, should be part of our urgent review to make sure that Members of Parliament are not needlessly or unfairly dealt with pursuant to the Elections Act.

It may very well be that when my hon. friend sees the new legislation he will want to raise concerns, to tighten up any suggestions to make the legislation better and more reasonable. Indeed, I will listen with care. What I am looking for is what I am sure all Members of Parliament are looking for, namely, the highest standards which require integrity on behalf of all Members of Parliament on behalf of the national interest which we all seek to serve.

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—POSITION OF B.C. PREMIER—ACCESS TO HEALTH CARE

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. This past weekend the Premier of British Columbia defied the spirit of the Supreme Court decision on Canadian abortion laws, contrary to the Health Care Act.

When the Minister meets with his provincial counterparts will he make sure that Canadians right across the country have fair access to health care?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as I said in the House last week, I have written to all my provincial counterparts asking for their views.

I think all Members, regardless of what position they take on the question of abortion, and specifically the Supreme Court decision, know that it is not only complicated but also that it runs very deeply into various areas of administration and public concern. The Government, as the Minister of Justice indicated earlier, will come forward with a policy, but we will do it when those consultations have taken place.

CANADA HEALTH ACT

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, it has been more than 10 days now since the Supreme Court decision came out. The Premier of British Columbia is creating a two-tier system, one for the rich and one for the poor. It is very, very irresponsible of the Minister if he does not make a decision very quickly that the Canada Health Act be certainly met by every province in Canada.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I take it that that was a statement and not a question.

SECTION 7 OF ACT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the same Minister on the same subject. Does he feel that Section 7 of the Canada Health Act is currently being respected?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, Sections 8 to 12 of the Canada Health Act very clearly spell out the principles of the Canada Health Act, and Sections 13 and 14 very clearly spell out the action which the Minister has to take.

REQUEST FOR MEETING OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister to give me an answer to a very simple question.

Does he believe that Section 7 is being respected? If he believes there is a problem with respect to the application of the Canada Health Act, as set out in Section 7 dealing with principles of comprehensiveness, universality, portability and accessibility, will the Minister within the next 48 hours convene a meeting of the Ministers of Health across the country so that we can start to return some order into the chaos that has erupted as a result of the Government's lack of leadership?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court heard the case and took approximately 16 months to come forward with its decision. I think any person who has looked at the issue will agree that some time can and should be taken on these very sensitive issues before a decision is made.

The Member mentions Section 7. I have already indicated, through Sections 8 to 12 and 13 and 14, the exact position of the Canada Health Act.

* * *

BANK OF CANADA

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF LOWER INTEREST RATE POLICY

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister, I am sure, will have noted that various Members of this House, particularly from my Party, as well as government Members and the Premier of Quebec, last week called upon the Government to institute a lower interest rate policy. In fact Mr. Bourassa stated that the high interest rate policy is causing a loss of jobs and that the Government can and should instruct the Governor of the Bank of Canada to lower the rates.

Does the Minister agree with the Premier of Quebec, or does he agree with the Governor of the Bank of Canada and the tight monetary policy that that institution is following?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think what Mr. Bourassa has said in terms of the over-all desire for increased economic growth is something which this Government shares and has demonstrated with the policies we have followed and a broad range of things we have done over the last three and a half years.

What I have made very clear, and I will state quite clearly in the House today, is that we are in support of the monetary policy that has been conducted by the Bank of Canada.

I want to draw to the attention of the Member that in previous times, particularly in the 1970s when inflationary pressures were ignored, this led to considerable economic problems which took a long time to work their way out of the system. It is important to head these inflationary problems off in their earliest stages, rather than letting them develop to the magnitude which they did before.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ISSUE INSTRUCTIONS TO BANK GOVERNOR

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister. On the one hand we have a government policy attempting to keep the Canadian dollar down, or at least stable in its relationship with the U.S. dollar, yet on the other hand we continue a high interest rate policy forcing the dollar up. The result is a loss of Canadian jobs.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. de Jong: Is the Minister of Finance not prepared to instruct the Governor of the Bank of Canada to ease up on the monetary policy so that people in Saskatchewan, in rural areas in northern Quebec, northern Ontario, the Atlantic Provinces, and in many regions of this country with high unemployment, know that at least there is a monetary policy to help those regions and create more employment in all our regions?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has to cast his mind farther afield than on just one element of economic policy. What has produced the good economic results in Canada has been a range of economic initiatives taken by the Government.

If I may quote Peter Martin, chief economist for the investment dealers McLeod, Young, Weir, described in The Gazette as an influential voice in the financial community in Canada, he said: "They have had a fabulous economic policy, the best economic performance in Canada's history and an extremely good fiscal policy".

That is what we are standing on. We have followed a range of policies that were first enunciated in September, 1984. The over-all result is the creation of over 1,150,000 jobs, an economic growth in Canada that is best of the G-7 countries, an employment growth in Canada that is best of the major industrialized countries, and an inflation rate that is stable, but on the high side in relation to Japan, Germany and France. It is that inflation rate that we would like to see down a little bit further to improve our competitive position and to improve the job-creating performance that we have today.

* * *

• (1450)

TRADE

TEXTILE EXPORTS—MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES TRADE AMBASSADOR

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question as well to direct to the Minister of Finance. During the visit he made to Switzerland, he had a meeting with Mr. Clayton Yeutter, the chief trade ambassador for the United States, at which time they discussed, I gather in fairly dramatic terms, the question of the proposed remissions on textiles for Canadian garment makers.

Could the Minister confirm that at that meeting in fact the U.S. officials asked Canada to withdraw its proposals? Could he tell us whether the Canadian decision still stands firm to hold towards a program of aiding the garment and apparel people in this country so they will be able to compete properly and effectively?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer in part to the Hon. Member's question is, yes, I met with Mr. Yeutter at the meeting in Switzerland. But the content of that meeting, I think, the Hon. Member, who was himself a Minister, would understand is a matter of confidence between Mr. Yeutter and myself.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—U.S. SENATORS' LETTER

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance or to the Minister for International Trade. I have here a copy of a letter that was sent by a number of Senators in the U.S. Finance Committee, which is responsible for approving the proposed Canada-U.S. agreement, to Mr. Clayton Yeutter. It is signed by the chairman, Mr. Bentsen, and a number of other Senators. It states that before the committee will turn its attention to the specifics of implementing legislation on the Canada-U.S. agreement, the Congress wants to know how the administration intends to deal with the proposed Canadian moves on both textiles and import controls on dairy products, two very important ingredients in terms of the competitiveness of our own industry.

In light of this kind of position being taken by the U.S. Senate Finance Committee to the U.S. administration, is it not the responsibility of the Minister of Finance to report to this House whether the Government is now under some form of threat, or intimidation, or pressure to change its position? Can we get a firm confirmation that the Minister does not intend to change the position on either the textile remissions or the proposals on import controls for the dairy products of Canada?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, my responsibility for duty remissions prompts me to answer that supplementary question. I am delighted the Hon. Member is expressing concern about the Canada-U.S. agreement perhaps not being passed. I am pleased he has expressed this concern. Perhaps he will join in helping us bring it about.

More importantly, I feel that quotations from the United States on the duty remission scheme from Canada are vastly premature. We have no formal position in place. We have no program in place. We have no level in place.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hockin: Therefore, statements from the Americans are totally premature at this time.

Mr. Axworthy: Here we go again.

* * *

HOUSING

METROPOLITAN TORONTO—VACANT LAND AT DOWNSVIEW AIR BASE

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as well. It also relates to the affordable housing crisis in the greater Metropolitan Toronto area at the present time. As the Minister is aware, the Government is sitting on some 250 acres of vacant land at the Downsview air base. Will the Minister give the House his assurance today that that land will be made available for affordable housing just as quickly as possible?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, as I previously indicated to another question, we are looking at the McLaughlin report. I might note that the fiscal and housing policies of the Government have realized some 55,000 housing starts in the Toronto area in the last two years, 2,200 of them directed toward social housing. Those are record-breaking numbers that should be observed.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

BRITISH COLUMBIA—STATUS OF ECONOMIC REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He will be aware that his British Columbia counterpart has recently announced that the Province of British Columbia plans to withdraw unilaterally from the Economic and Regional Development Agreements, thereby causing even more difficulties in terms of that regional economy getting back on its feet. In light of this rather peculiar initiative by a Finance Minister from one of our provinces, could the Minister of Finance indicate, first, whether or not he is aware of this withdrawal and, if so, what the Government has considered doing about it?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, the question put by the Hon. Member is hypothetical. We are aware that the Province of British Columbia is reconsidering its approach to economic development. Talks are taking place between officials of both Governments concerning the ERDAs which do exist in the province. No decision has been made, to our knowledge, by the province to withdraw unilaterally. My colleague, the Minister responsible for WDO, is in close contact with British Columbia and is looking after the issue.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S POLICY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the Hon. Minister that I am also in close contact with British Columbia. The Minister of Finance announced a few days ago that the Government of British Columbia was in fact unilaterally withdrawing—had withdrawn—from the ERDA agreement. That has been confirmed as late as this afternoon.

Knowing that the Government of British Columbia had decided to abandon its serious pursuit of economic development in that province, and considering the extremely high unemployment levels throughout the interior and coastal areas of the Province of British Columbia, will the Government now take some initiative on the eve of the Budget to indicate that, while the Government of British Columbia might abandon its business sector and any attempt at economic development, this Government will plan on some special economic affirmative action program to counter that province's particular inaction?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, quite in line with our policy of national reconciliation, I do not think it is the intention of the federal Government to dictate to British Columbia how it should deal with economic development within that province. What we have told British Columbia, and what Members of this House will know, is that the Government, through the western diversification initiative, is fully ready and willing to co-operate with British Columbia to address the economic issues affecting that province, and that is what we are doing.

* * *

HOUSING

PROPOSED SALE OF LAND IN VAUGHAN

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister responsible for CMHC. In the area of Vaughan, adjacent to the riding of Willowdale, there is also a large parcel of land about to be sold. Can the Minister assure the House that this land will be used, or can be used, for building reasonably priced homes?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the particular parcel of land in question. However, if the Hon. Member would like to give me particulars and indicate his particular wish, I would be happy to direct Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to review the possibilities and report to him.

TRADE

IMPORT CONTROLS ON DAIRY COMMODITIES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. In light of the letter written by Lloyd Bentsen, the Chairman of the Finance Committee of the United States Senate, to Mr. Yeutter, concerning the imposition of import controls on dairy commodities which the Minister of Agriculture announced with great flourish at the meeting of dairy producers of Canada in Vancouver a couple of weeks ago, is the Minister now saying that these import controls were not passed as a cabinet order? Are they not in place? Could he clarify just what the position of the Government is now in this respect?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that the measures announced by the Minister of Agriculture are in fact valid measures and are in place as appropriate.

* * *

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO CHAIRMAN

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Acting Minister of Agriculture in the absence of the three Ministers of Agriculture and the Parliamentary Secretary.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Foster: It concerns the hardship that has been worked on dairy farmers by the Government. I want to ask the Acting Minister of Agriculture if the statements made by the new Chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation, Mr. Jim Hewitt, represent government policy. He said that farmers will be dealing with a tougher, unforgiving federal loan agency in the future, and that the agency will move against farmers who cannot make their payments. I wonder if the Acting Minister of Agriculture can say if that represents government policy or whether Mr. Hewitt was just talking off the top of his head.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the statements of Mr. Hewitt will be examined and the Minister of Agriculture will respond to them tomorrow.

Mr. Foster: Late show!

• (1500)

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody is rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. St. Germain: A question, not a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary question.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION FUND—APPLICATION TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism, and is supplementary to the question asked by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap.

Mr. Marchi: That is not a supplementary.

Mr. St. Germain: It is a supplementary.

I would like the Minister to state clearly in this House, and eliminate any confusion in British Columbia, that the western diversification initiative and all federal programs will remain in place and will progress for British Columbians as set out. Would he verify that, please?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can give that assurance to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Speaker: I want to say something to the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe. It may very well be that on his question, which turned out to be completely appropriate, I interrupted too soon. I want to apologize to the Hon. Member.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WAYS AND MEANS—DESIGNATION OF ORDER OF THE DAY

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I think you will find that there is unanimous consent to move the following order immediately and vote on it without debate. It concerns the Budget. I move:

> That further to the order of the House of Jan. 29, 1988 respecting arrangements for budget day, Feb. 10, 1988, the following paragraph be inserted between the first and second paragraphs of the said order:
>
> That, immediately following such budget statement, the House shall revert to the routine proceeding "Introduction of Government Bills" and, following introduction and first reading of such Bill or Bills, the Speaker shall recognize a Member of the Official Opposition in debate on Ways and Means proceedings No. 29; and

There have been discussions among the House Leaders and I appreciate their co-operation in this matter.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to report that indeed there were consultations and what the Hon. Minister has just explained to the House appears to be a true reflection of the agreement reached.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to say how pleased we are to lend our support to this initiative. In this way the entire budget package will be before the people of Canada on budget night as opposed to dribs and drabs coming out over the following weeks. We appreciate this initiative so that we and the people of Canada can have a comprehensive view of the Budget and its implications on budget night.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED CONTEMPT BY MEMBER

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in my eight and a half years in this House I have never risen on such a question and in many ways I am hoping that before we are done it will go away; that the graciousness and integrity for which this House is known will prevail, and it will not have to be carried even further.

You may have noticed that during Question Period on Friday, on the basis of what I heard, I was obviously distraught and disturbed. This morning I had the opportunity to read Hansard and that reading confirmed the feeling I had at that time. Sometimes during Question Period we may or may not hear correctly and I hesitated to raise the matter until I had Hansard in front of me.

Privilege is a time-honoured tradition in this House, and I think Joseph Maingot's book, Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, has for many of us been the definitive work on privilege in the House of Commons. Those privileges can be breached in a general way when Members or the press or anyone else shows contempt for the Chamber. It can also be argued as to what constitutes contempt. I think it can also be corrected if the record is corrected by the Hon. Member who made the statement. I am referring to statements made in this House by the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) as shown on page 12672 of Hansard of Friday, February 5. In his opening statement the Hon. Member said:

> Mr. Speaker, in addition to what we already knew, we are learning this morning—

I would like to stop there for a second and point out to the House that there is information available, about the situation which is the subject matter of the question, which is not known to all Members of the House but is known to members who sat on the committee. It is known to those of us who were not members of the committee but who sat through the hearings.

The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques was and is a member of the committee and he sat through two very traumatic hearings on Wednesday and Thursday of last week, February 3 and February 4, in which matters related to the Elections Commissioner, evidence collected by the RCMP, and conclusions reached by the Commissioner, were the subject of some five hours of testimony. I assume that the Hon. Member is speaking about what we already knew in the context of his continued attendance at that committee, including questions he asked and information which was given to him by the Commissioner and others in response to those questions.

His words "we are learning this morning" refers to an article in the Montreal Gazette which supposedly put new information on the table. It may have seemed like new information to many Members of this Chamber and the general public, but to members who sat on the committee it was not new information.

Mr. Gauthier: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have been listening to the argument of the Parliamentary Secretary for the last four or five minutes and I do not understand the question of privilege he is trying to develop. He said himself that the assumptions he made are wrong. I would like to know exactly what the point of order is so that we can deal with it in a thorough manner. It is not a question of privilege if, as I understand, his assumptions are wrong.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary could respond.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I will just go to the next part of the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques' opening statement:

> —we are learning this morning that the Minister of Energy would have overspent to the tune of $20,000—

I have in my hand The Gazette of that morning. I asked my office to carefully check other sources of information and the only source of information available about the overspending is in The Gazette article. The headline says: "Masse hid big outlays: RCMP allege" and then: "Affidavit filed by police during probe suggested excess spending of $20,000."

The affidavits mentioned in this particular newspaper article are related to the alleged overspending of the Minister. I want to point out that one of the statements in the article, and in many other articles over many other months, is:

> By law Masse was allowed to spend $35,500 for his campaign in Frontenac riding. He reported expenses of $32,941.

The publicly available document of election spending reported by the Minister reports spending of $52,328.92. That amount is approximately $20,000 higher than the amount mentioned in The Gazette article. Committee members are aware that affidavits were issued and searches were conducted in September and October. All members of the committee who attended the hearings are also aware that all of the evidence from those searches and seizures was presented to the committee and that the Electoral Commissioner—

Mr. Speaker: As I understand the alleged question of privilege of the Parliamentary Secretary, it relates to the preamble to the question put by the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) yesterday. I repeat:

> Mr. Speaker, in addition to what we already knew, we are learning this morning that the Minister of Energy would have overspent to the tune of $20,000—

• (1510)

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary then interjected and said "Wrong!" and others interjected. The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) continued and said: "Information disclosed in 16 police raids has it that the Minister would not have reported the personal chauffeur" et cetera, and a number of other things, at which point I asked the Hon. Member to put his question.

It seems to me, unless I have misunderstood, that the point of the Parliamentary Secretary is that in some way the questions of the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques leave an impression which is not consistent with the facts as were presented in the committee. Do I understand the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary's point?

Mr. Hawkes: Yes, Mr. Speaker, you do.

Mr. Gauthier: Well you are wrong then. You cannot do that.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): You cannot do that.

Mr. Gauthier: Go back to the committee.

Mr. Hawkes: This so-called new information mentions the 16 police raids—not 16 affidavits but 16 police raids. The evidence before committee is that all the evidence gathered through that investigation was presented to the Commissioner of Elections and the Commissioner of Elections decided that the Minister would not be charged for overspending, would not be charged for not reporting expenditures made—all of which would be breaches of the Act—would not be charged for signing in improper fashion an incorrect return, and not be charged for counselling anybody else to break the law. That is a brief summary of two days of testimony.

The Gazette story presents what the Member for Saint-Jacques describes as new information based on affidavits. I would like to read into the record a very brief exchange between the Member for Saint-Jacques and the—

Mr. Rossi: You are boycotting the language Bill, Hawkes, and you know it. That is what you are doing.

Mr. Speaker: The suggestion that is being made is that an Hon. Member has made statements in this House which, according to things which have taken place in committee with regard to the Hon. Minister of Energy, do not accurately reflect the situation. As I understand it that is the Parliamentary Secretary's procedural point.

It would seem to me that if the Chair were to find contempt or privilege the Chair would have to be satisfied that even if the statement was incorrect it carried an intention to mislead the House. It may be that hon. friends on the other side listening to the Parliamentary Secretary are a little concerned that that imputation may be being made here and they may very well want to offer it.

I think I have the Parliamentary Secretary's point and I have to ensure that I hear it all. However, I understood also that the Parliamentary Secretary may very well be saying that the newspaper is in contempt of this place. If that is the case, I would like to receive some instruction on that.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the nub of the issue is that the privileges of the House, as they affect contempt, are based on the issue of anything which a Member does in the House which offends the dignity of the House. That is on page 14 of Mr. Maingot's book and it goes further in the same paragraph to provide such protection for officers of the House. The Elections Commissioner is indeed an officer of the House.

As the Member knew the testimony of the officer of the House you face the following situation, Mr. Speaker. If you accept that evidence from the officer of the House you then know that the so-called new information is not correct in many of its particulars, and in particular on the issue of overspending. You have another choice if you believe that the officer of the House has not told the committee the truth. In that case you can make a charge about the officer of the House.

However, it is not possible that the story is correct while at the same time the testimony of the commissioner is correct. There is a libel against the officer inherent in what was said or there is disrespect for the House involved in what was said, and for this Member in particular, who is the only member of the committee who brought forward an RCMP affidavit which the committee accepted and distributed to all Members. There was an exchange about the RCMP affidavit. If I could, just for one second, read from that exchange—

Mr. Speaker: My difficulty is that while I think it is incumbent upon the Chair at some times to give considerable latitude, we are now getting into a debate over evidence or information. My difficulty is that I am not quite sure how far it leads. We cannot take up the whole of the afternoon trying to unravel what interpretation might be given.

Mr. Rossi: That is what he wants.

Mr. Speaker: I am trying very hard to ensure that no one in this place imputes the motive of any Hon. Member and I am having some difficulty with interventions from somewhere on my left.

I am essentially concerned that if this is to be privilege or contempt there has to be a clear indication that, prima facie, the Hon. Member made certain remarks with some deliberate intent to mislead this place or knowing something which, if the Hon. Member had paid any attention to it, would have kept him from making those comments. In other words, there must be some suggestion of intentional wrong-doing.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has certainly made a compelling argument that there are perhaps two sides to the fact pattern. However, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has not gone so far as to suggest that whatever was in the preamble of the question of the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques on Friday was an intent to deceive this place. It may very well be that two Members can come at the same set of facts with a different version.

However, my concern, again, is that the Speaker cannot decide which Member's version of the facts is the most accurate. I must decide whether there is a prima facie case of someone trying to mislead this place. That is the difficulty I am in. Perhaps the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary could sum up and I will consider what other Hon. Members have to say.

Mr. Hawkes: I thank you for your wisdom, Mr. Speaker. It would be helpful if more time passed and we had the committee report and all of the testimony before the House. I would be quite willing to stand down at this time in light of what you have said, Mr. Speaker, because it is a difficult case for Members to understand without the transcripts and all the testimony available to them. Members would have to decide for themselves whether or not the knowledge which the Member for Saint-Jacques had by the time February 4 was over should have been used by him in dealing with the so-called new information on the fifth.

The whole issue of protection of the integrity of the House might go away if the Member, either at this moment or between now and then, reflected upon it. Perhaps we are simply dealing with someone who mis-spoke. You can see from the record that the Member was cut off. Had he been allowed to continue he may have had a chance to finish a set of ideas which, in themselves, constitute a kind of privilege. I would certainly be willing to let the matter rest for a while.

Mr. Speaker: It may well be that the Chair, in intervening when I did, did the Hon. Member an injustice. I certainly did not want to do that. I will certainly hear the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, let me first thank the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), not for raising this confusing would-be question of privilege in the House, but rather for his courtesy this morning in advising my office that he would make an attempt at convincing Your Honour that I was in breach of privilege.

First, to clear the air, let me say that whatever I did last Friday—and I will come back to that—was in no way an attempt to try to mislead the House as to facts as I knew them. It was not an attempt to charge a Member of the House. I believe that over the years I have been known for using very straightforward language. If I had wanted to charge someone, I think everyone would have been able to realize it.

• (1520)

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary was wise enough to guess that when I rose on Friday morning I was quoting the morning issue of The Gazette, from an article which I am holding, entitled "Masse Hid Big Outlays RCMP Alleged".

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is wrong in saying that this was the only place where the information could be found. It also appears in The Ottawa Citizen in an article entitled "Masse overspent by $20,000: Report". I have more than that now. I am holding a pile of affidavits which describe in detail what is only hinted at in these articles.

If I am guilty of something, it would be for quoting a press clipping without properly attributing the source. In fact, I had only three lines in Hansard in describing my preamble before I was interrupted by the Hon. Member who is raising the question of privilege and by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. McDermid). I had little time to carry on describing what I was reading verbatim from The Gazette when Your Honour stood to say:

> I think that the Hon. Member has put sufficient into his preamble to place the question.

I was getting to the point of quoting a couple of other items from the article and stating clearly that I was quoting from The Gazette.

I had to clarify this because if I made these statements on my own I believe I would have to account for them.

I did not even go as far as The Gazette. I can provide the Chair with a copy of the article that I was reading. If Your Honour reads the whole article, I think you will see that I was trying only to give the essential elements in the preamble to my question. Your Honour can analyse my statement that the Minister "would have overspent" with the article which states in much straighter language: "Mr. Masse's spending report made no mention". It is very clear. I was very careful to say "Would have overspent". I went on to say in my question, "Would not have reported", contrary to the article which makes an outright accusation.

I believe I can establish that I have been prudent in not trying to lay a charge in the House but to quote from a press report as a basis to a question, as has been done in the House dozens of times and continues today.

I suggest it is wrong for the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to try to place before the House his confused interpretation of what transpired at committee hearings and allege that I should have known some of the things that happened in committee which would have prevented me from asking my question. Your Honour has known for a long time that one cannot raise a question of privilege because an Hon. Member does not understand committee proceedings the way another Member understands them.

I will not go into the details but simply say that the information that was disclosed before the committee is an opinion of officers of the House. It was clear from the testimony that we heard that this opinion is not shared equally by other participants in these inquiries, the RCMP. The RCMP will appear before the committee tomorrow night and if they give their testimony in accordance with some of the material I have, I think it is obvious that they will not come to the same conclusion as the lawyer from Elections Canada. I think that is all beside the point.

The real issue, I submit, is to determine whether I was willfully trying to mislead Parliament or charge the Minister. If there was anything that I said which led anyone to believe that I was trying to mislead the House, and it was interpreted that I did, I am ready to withdraw anything I said. I have never done that and will not start.

I make the same statement with respect to charging the Minister. I would not want anything I said to be interpreted as making a personal charge against an individual in the House. I will leave it up to the Chair to make a decision and will abide by the Speaker's ruling.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary and the Hon. Member for Saint Jacques I have listened with care. It is a complex matter and may well not have been made any easier by some reports in various places.

However, what is significant is that the Hon. Member for Saint Jacques has made it very clear that whatever differences there may be about what was said in committee or what ought to be known as a consequence of what was said, he did not at any time intend to either charge the Minister or to misrepresent or mislead this place. I think that is the end of the matter.

---

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-72, an Act respecting the status and use of the official languages of Canada, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House rose at one o'clock the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) had just completed his remarks. We are now in the question and comment period.

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, one of my highest priorities ever since I came to Parliament in 1965 has been the protection of minority rights, whether these be racial, religious, ethnic, aboriginal or language rights. My constituency in Montreal, Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, is a community of minorities. We have people from many races, religions and ethnic backgrounds.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair would like to make sure that the Hon. Member heard what I said. Is the Hon. Member on debate? I indicated that this was a period for questions and comments and I recognized the Hon. Member for a question or comment. However, as I listen to him I believe he is entering into debate for which I will be delighted to recognize him later.

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, I misunderstood. I was entering into debate. I will wait for the question period to finish.

[Translation]

Mr. Kindy: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé), who expressed some of his views about the Official Languages Act.

I would like to ask him two specific questions about the administration of justice. Section 15 requires all courts except the Supreme Court of Canada to be perfectly bilingual within five years and also requires that the judge understand perfectly the language used.

Can the Parliamentary Secretary tell the House whether he believes that, within five years, every court in Canada except for the Supreme Court will be bilingual and that judges, even in Alberta or in Manitoba, will have to understand French perfectly, or does he think that this will not happen? That is my first question.

I have a second question about the language of work. Section 35 states that, in certain regions, employees in management positions must understand the language perfectly. Does the Hon. Member believe that it is realistic to implement such a provision in certain parts of Canada?

Mr. Grisé: Madam Speaker, I wish to thank my colleague for Calgary East (Mr. Kindy) for his interest in the official languages. First, as concerns the judges of a federal court, whether in Alberta or in another province, the important thing is to be able to provide judicial services in the language of choice when it is requested. This does not mean that we have to require that all judges of all federal courts throughout the province be perfectly bilingual.

Madam Speaker, Bill C-72 states that when the accused in a trial requests to be heard in French, he be given a French-speaking or at least a bilingual judge, and that the judge be able to hear the accused in his mother tongue, whether English or French.

The Bill will certainly not require that all federal court judges in Alberta be bilingual. That is not the case. However, Alberta courts must be able to provide services to the accused in either official language, whether French or English. I can tell the Hon. Member for Calgary East that, in every province, the Department of Justice and the courts can now provide such services.

As for the second question about the language of work, especially as concerns supervisors and managers, this provision obviously applies to the language of work of the employees at a given office in a given location, not to the whole country.

If in St. John's, Newfoundland, there is a Federal National Revenue office where most of the employees are English-speaking with only one Francophone or bilingual employee, it is clear that English will be the language of work. It would not be administratively possible to demand, just because there is a bilingual or Francophone employee on the premises . . . The same should apply in the various regions of Quebec, but not in Montreal, because Montreal, just as the National Capital Region, has been designated as a bilingual area. As far as the language of work is concerned, however, one should be able to function in the language used by the majority of the employees.

Mr. Kindy: A supplementary question, Madam Speaker. The Parliamentary Secretary has presented his view well, but I understand Clause 15 of the Bill differently. Could he indicate whether the Government is prepared to bring in an amendment to clarify the situation? For it is stated that any judge or other presiding officer must be able to understand the language well. I feel that an amendment should specify that such should be the case in one or two jurisdictions, and not in all the jurisdictions in every province. Let us make this clear. On behalf of the Government, could the Parliamentary Secretary assure the House that he will accept an amendment to Clause 15?

Mr. Grisé: First of all, Madam Speaker, Clause 15 applies only to federal, and not provincial courts. Only when Bill C-72 applies to courts of federal jurisdiction. If I may, I should like to read again the first part of Clause 15 which reads:

> Every court, other than the Supreme Court of Canada, has the duty to ensure that, in any proceedings conducted before it, any judge or other presiding officer is able to understand the official language or languages in which the proceedings are conducted without the assistance of an interpreter.

My friend the Hon. Member for Calgary East would like to move an amendment to limit the number. Well, Madam Speaker, how could one justify a number? Would a number of 1, 2 or 3, in one province, be justified in another province? What really matters is for this legislation to clearly indicate that the Government of Canada and the Canadian courts at the federal level, wherever they may be, will make sure that the cases are dealt with in the language chosen by the defendant.

• (1530)

[English]

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, I would like to pursue this point concerning the matter of Clause 15(1) which deals with the Federal Court. I would like to reiterate what my colleague has said with respect to the indecisiveness of the wording. Clause 15(1) states:

> Every court, other than the Supreme Court of Canada, has the duty to ensure that, in any proceedings conducted before it, any judge or other presiding officer is able to understand the official language or languages in which the proceedings are conducted without the assistance of an interpreter.

I suggest that that wording needs to be changed. Will the Parliamentary Secretary consider a couple of changes? First, rather than "every court" I suggest it should state "every Federal Court". Rather than "any judge or other presiding officer" it should state "any judge within the Federal Court system". If it says "any judge" it means all judges.

Will the Parliamentary Secretary not consider an amendment in that respect to read "a judge", which clearly would make it more acceptable to me? It would mean to me that in a jurisdiction considered to be a region that is able to enforce this measure the whole region would not need to have every judge, or any judge, able to communicate in both official languages without Translation but rather a judge able to handle the needs of the minority. I say that, whether or not the minority is Anglophone in one region or Francophone in another. Such a change would dispel any anxiety on the part of not only the judges but of certain Members of Parliament as well.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time allocated for questions and comments has now expired. However, I will allow the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to answer briefly.

• (1540)

[English]

Mr. Grisé: I wish to respond because I know how hard the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) has worked on this matter. He is very interested, and he has some very good suggestions regarding Bill C-72. I wish to assure my colleague, the Hon. Member for Peterborough, that when this Bill is brought before the committee, I definitely will take note of that. Of course, we will deal with this matter and with the very interesting suggestion from the Hon. Member regarding this matter, and particularly Clause 15 of Bill C-72.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Madam Speaker, as I was about to say earlier, ever since I came to Parliament in 1965 one of my highest priorities has been the protection of minority rights whether these be racial, religious, ethnic, aboriginal, or language rights.

My constituency in Montreal of Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East is a community of minorities. There are people from many races, religions, and ethnic backgrounds, and a strong representation from both language minority groups. In my constituency the French-speaking population is approximately 40 per cent of the total population. This means that the Francophone group in the constituency, while they are a minority in the constituency and a minority in Canada, they belong to the majority group in Quebec. On the other hand, the 60 per cent of Anglophones in the constituency, and here I include people whose mother tongue is English, and those who have another mother tongue but who have opted for English as their official language in Canada, constitute 60 per cent of the population. Therefore, they belong to the majority in Canada and in North America, but are a minority in Quebec.

Because of the strong presence of both language minorities in the constituency, I am very pleased to support this Bill which attempts to strengthen minority language rights in Canada under federal jurisdiction. In addition to strengthening minority language rights under federal jurisdiction, the Bill also has provisions to encourage improvement in language rights at the provincial level and in the private sector.

As the Minister stated this morning, this Bill is a result of wide and long consultation. As a member of the Official Languages Committee in Parliament since 1979, I wish to inform the House that over the years we have held hearings with respect to the Law and have been able to identify weaknesses and loopholes in it. Over those years we have made recommendations in order to strengthen the Law. Now a large number of those recommendations have been brought together and have been incorporated in the Bill.

What then does the Bill say? Well, the Bill deals with improvements with respect to the two official languages in Parliament, in the courts of Canada, in government institutions, with respect to the right of the public to communicate with the Government in the Public Service, and with respect to the Official Languages Commissioner. In all those areas improvements are recommended. I wish to refer to a few sections of the Bill in particular because I think they are extremely important.

In the preamble of the Bill one of the paragraphs states:

> AND WHEREAS the Government of Canada is committed to enhancing the vitality and supporting the development of English and French linguistic minority communities, as an integral part of the two official language communities of Canada—

A further paragraph states:

> AND WHEREAS the Government of Canada is committed to cooperating with provincial governments and their institutions to support the development of English and French linguistic minority communities, to provide services in both English and French, to respect the constitutional guarantees of minority language educational rights and to enhance opportunities for all to learn both English and French.

Those two paragraphs in the preamble are extremely important because they point to new ground. That new ground is spelled out in greater detail, for example, in Clause 38. I refer to the following clause because I think it is extremely important. It states:

> 38 (1) The Government of Canada is committed to ensuring that
>
> (a) English-speaking Canadians and French-speaking Canadians, without regard to their ethnic origin or first language learned, have equal access to appointment and advancement in federal institutions; and
>
> (b) the composition of the work-force of federal institutions tends to reflect the presence of both the official language communities of Canada—

That is a very important clause. It puts into law some of the policies that Governments from both the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party have been attempting to enforce for years. Similar provisions are found in Clause 40 of the same Bill.

Another clause that I find extremely good and useful is Clause 75 which provides for remedies when a person's language rights are violated. Under the present Official Languages Act if a person thought that his or her rights were violated, he or she could make a complaint to the Language Commissioner who is an ombudsman for language rights. They could make a complaint to that person and the commissioner would investigate the complaint and make a report. It would be up to the Minister or the Government to take action on that report. That is all very good. But now in Clause 75 we have provided for a remedy before the courts, in addition to the remedy before the commissioner. These improvements in the law are important.

While it is a new Bill, this Bill constitutes a series of amendments to the Official Languages Act of 1969, a law that was passed in the early Government of Mr. Trudeau, but which was based on the royal commission report of 1963, a royal commission on the official languages in Canada established by the former Prime Minister, Lester B. Pearson. I had the good fortune to serve on the parliamentary committee in 1968-69 which dealt with that legislation. Therefore, I have a very real interest in it.

This legislation also builds on the constitutional provisions with respect to language rights that we find in our Constitution Act, 1867, and in our Constitution Act, 1982. In the Constitution Act, 1867 there is Section 133 which guarantees the right of people to use the French or the English language before the Parliament and courts of Canada, and before the Legislative Assembly and courts of Quebec. That was the only provision in the Constitution Act, 1867 with respect to language rights.

However, in the 1982 Constitution Act, there are Sections 16 to 22 which entrench very specific language rights for institutions under the federal Government and institutions under the New Brunswick Government. There is a paragraph in those sections that allows any other province to opt in to those constitutional provisions. Of course we are always hopeful that other provinces will do so. Recently the Ontario Government has taken some initiatives to further minority language rights. We hope that they will opt in fully to these provisions in due course.

• (1550)

Also in the Constitution Act, 1982 we have Section 23 which guarantees minority language rights in education to the linguistic minorities throughout Canada. This applies to all provinces, with one exception which I will mention in a few minutes.

The legislation strengthens some other measures as well. Over the last few years we have introduced a court challenges program by which the Government helps individuals to finance their court cases when they believe that their language rights under the Constitution have been violated. A number of cases has been financed by the Government under that program. It is a good program. It can always do with improvement, but it is a good one.

We also have two other government programs to assist with minority language education. There is the minority language education program whereby the federal Government gives money to the provinces to assist with minority language education. We have another program to help provinces introduce programs for second language education.

All these things move in the same direction—toward greater assistance and help for minority language groups in Canada.

Many Canadians might ask how Bill C-72, which is before us, relates to the Meech Lake Accord, in particular to its language provisions. As I stated in the debate on the Meech Lake Accord, there were parts of the accord which we in this Party did not like and tried to amend. The amendments were defeated, but on balance we accepted the accord and voted for it. I want to make it clear that in my opinion and in the opinion of most people in my Party, the Meech Lake Accord did not reduce minority language rights; it did not reduce minority language rights. If anything, it affirmed and added to minority language rights.

A good number of people, some of whom are in my own constituency, will argue that the Meech Lake Accord drastically reduced minority language rights for Anglophones and in fact even eliminated them. That is complete nonsense. The Meech Lake Accord did not take away any of the rights entrenched in the Constitution under the Constitution Act, 1867, that is, Article 133. It did not reduce or take away any of the language rights in the Constitution Act, 1982, the ones to which I just referred, Sections 16 to 22 and Section 23. It did not reduce or touch those articles in any way whatsoever.

What in fact it did, if we read the Meech Lake Accord closely, was to add some new provisions recognizing the linguistic minority communities in Canada. Because this is such an issue, I think I had better refer to it once again. It goes hand in glove with the provisions of the Bill before us.

Those who will argue that the Meech Lake Accord took away or reduced minority language rights—and in particular in my case they refer to anglophone rights in Quebec—the only evidence they will give to support their argument is that part of the Meech Lake Accord which recognizes Quebec as a distinct society within Canada. They say that that provision will harm or reduce the rights of Anglophones in Quebec. I do not know how they come to that conclusion, because there is no definition of a distinct society and there is no provision to indicate that it will harm or hurt other rights.

However, there is a provision in another subsection of the same clause which recognizes the fundamental characteristic of Canada. That clause says that the Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada and English-speaking Canadians concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada. In the very next paragraph it says that the role of Canada and provincial legislatures, and that includes Quebec, is to preserve that fundamental characteristic of Canada.

In other words, by the Meech Lake Accord, the Government of Canada and the Governments of the provinces including Quebec must preserve this fundamental characteristic of Canada which includes the English-speaking factor in Quebec. I do not know how those who argue that the accord does away with or reduces Anglophone rights in Quebec can ignore that particular paragraph.

Unfortunately this paragraph has been referred to as the "distinct society" paragraph, but some learned jurists have suggested that it should be called the "D and D" paragraph, meaning the distinct society and duality paragraph because it does both things. It recognizes the distinct society of Quebec, but it also says that duality, the English and French-speaking minorities in Quebec and outside Quebec, must be preserved by the Governments of Canada and of the provinces.

That is a new protection for language rights in Canada. I do not know how those who argue the way my learned colleague from Westmount (Mr. Johnston) does, can ignore the paragraph to which I just referred.

I have challenged those people to show me anywhere in the Meech Lake Accord provisions which would reduce or eliminate Anglophone rights in Quebec or francophone rights outside Quebec. I have challenged them to do that, and I have not had one person come before me who has been able to do so.

I also believe that those who argue in that way are making a serious mistake because by undermining or making little of the duality clause they may be hurting their case in years to come when they would want to use the clause to protect their rights before the courts. I can see the day coming when a provincial Government, as has happened in the past, will take steps through ordinary legislation to reduce Anglophone rights in the Province of Quebec. Those who are harmed may want to go to court and say that according to the Meech Lake Accord the Government of Quebec is to protect the fundamental characteristic of Canada, which includes the English-speaking community in Quebec, and that therefore they want this harmful or destructive legislation overturned. They will want to use it, and they should give it a fuller interpretation rather than ignore it as some have been doing today. This does not say that the provisions of the Meech Lake Accord could not be clearer and stronger. Of course they could be clearer and stronger. The fact of the matter is that they do not specifically reduce or eliminate language rights at all.

Having said that, this is not to say that there have not been attacks on English-speaking minority rights in the Province of Quebec. Of course there have been such attacks, and they have been overwhelmingly carried out by provincial Governments, in particular by certain clauses of Quebec Bill 101. By the way, the Quebec Governments which introduced that Bill did it without the help of the Meech Lake Accord. When a Government wants to act in the way they acted in respect of Bill 101 and wants to attack language rights, it does not need a Meech Lake Accord to do it. They did not need it in the past. There are still several oppressive sections in Bill 101 in respect of language rights.

• (1600)

I can accept parts of that law which are meant to protect and promote the French language, to make sure that it survives, but I cannot accept articles in Quebec Bill 101 which outlaw and suppress the English language which existed in that province going back to the 17th century and which, by the way, in parts of the province was the first European language there. We all know that both the French and English speaking communities only came in the 17th century. There were aboriginal languages long before either the French or the English came. In any case, the English language was in parts of Quebec going back to the 17th century. It is a complete travesty of justice to try to eliminate those language rights.

Of course, the Supreme Court of Canada has already struck down several provisions of Quebec's Bill 101. It has struck down the provision that would have eliminated English in the courts and in the legislature of Quebec. The Supreme Court of Canada has also struck down the provision which would have insisted on the Quebec clause with respect to education rather than the Canada clause. Both the Superior Court of Quebec and the Quebec Court of Appeal have struck down the provisions eliminating English on commercial signs, and that case is now before the Supreme Court for which we are awaiting judgment.

I must say that with respect to the signs law, I am extremely disillusioned and disappointed with the present policies of the Quebec Government. Premier Bourassa in the election of 1985 very clearly said that he would modify Bill 101, the French langauge Charter, to allow the use of English on commercial signs in Quebec. Not only did he promise that in the election but it was part of the Liberal Party platform in Quebec. The polls in Quebec overwhelming supported that kind of action. Francophones in Quebec overwhelmingly felt that Anglophones had the right to put English on signs in addition to French.

One cannot understand what Mr. Bourassa and the Quebec Government is afraid of. Do they think that the 95 per cent Francophone population of Quebec will flood the province with bilingual signs? Do they think we are going to see bilingual signs in Lac-St-Jean, Abitibi, Gaspé, the Beauce, Champlain and so on and so on? Only 5 per cent of the province is English speaking. The English speaking minority is limited mostly to Montreal and the Eastern Townships, in the Gaspé to a certain extent, and up here near Ottawa. They are not asking to be allowed to have unilingual English signs. What they are asking is that they have the right to put English on signs in addition to French. They admit and accept that French must be required on all signs in the province but they are saying that when certain individuals want to add English they should have the right to do so. That is a long standing right and it is wrong for the province to take that right away and it is particularly wrong for the Premier of the province to welsh on promises that he made during the election campaign with respect to those rights.

When the Constitution Act of 1982 was before this House I, of course, supported it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There is only one minute remaining for the Hon. Member to wrap up his speech.

Mr. Allmand: I am sorry I did not have my attention on the Chair, Madam Speaker, and did not see your signals.

The Bill before this House is an excellent Bill. It moves to protect English and French speaking language minorities in Canada. I hope that we pass the Bill and that we pass it quickly. I would ask those provinces out there in the country that also deal with language minority groups, whether the English language minority in Quebec or the Francophone minorities in Ontario, in the Atlantic Provinces and in the west, to do likewise as we are doing here today in this House, namely, to follow the example of this Parliament, this Government and the previous Government and protect the minority language groups in Canada as they should be protected and as the Constitution of Canada has pointed the way.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, I was very interested, as I always am, in the remarks of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). He certainly talked a lot about Meech Lake. I think he said more about Meech Lake here this afternoon on Bill C-72 than perhaps he did when the Accord was being debated initially. I will not come to that for the moment.

His closing remarks were on Bill 101, which I am glad the Member mentioned because he comes from the province where that Bill has caused so much political discontent and/or, frankly, betrayal, as I read the papers. In view of what was said in election campaigns and what has actually been done, with the Hon. Member, coming from that province where Bill 101 does adversely affect a good bulk of Canadians within that province, would he be prepared to have conversations with his House Leader on this House doing what we did on the Manitoba language question of passing a resolution asking the Quebec Government to move on Bill 101 and/or to fulfil its promises made in the election campaign? Or will we just sit back and wait until the Supreme Court perhaps comes down and helps resolve the problem?

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, if the Government House Leader were to make such a proposal, I would certainly approach my House Leader and ask for support of such a resolution, similar to the one in the case of Manitoba. By all means, I encourage the Government to come forward with such a resolution. We will be glad to discuss it on this side.

I agree with the Hon. Member that fairness must be done on all sides. The same fairness that we are attempting to provide at the federal level must also apply in provinces. That is why I said I hoped Ontario one day will opt in totally to the constitutional provisions in the Constitution Act of 1982. That is why I ask Quebec to follow the example that we are setting here.

We passed the Meech Lake Accord. Let Quebec respond in like kind and pass legislation that would take away those repressive parts of Bill 101.

By the way, I must inform my hon. friend that I spoke at great length on the Meech Lake Accord when it was before the House.

Mr. Kindy: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). He said the distinct society clause is simply to protect the French fact in Quebec. We have not yet had an interpretation by the courts of the meaning of the phrase distinct society. Is the Member not afraid that once we get a ruling from the Supreme Court of Canada, distinct society might mean all sorts of things, similar to what we have seen lately concerning the abortion legislation which has been struck down by the Supreme Court of Canada. Nobody knew about it, but it happened. We are leaving a lot to be desired because the court might interpret that distinct clause differently than the Member does, then Bill 101 might stay forever.

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, perhaps I was speaking too quickly but I certainly did not define distinct society in the way in which the Hon. Member just quoted me.

I said that the distinct society was not defined in the Meech Lake Accord and consequently I did not know how others could interpret it to mean that it would eliminate minority language rights in Canada or in Quebec. That is what I said. I went on to point out that since the distinct society has no definition in the Meech Lake Accord, it is not defined, it cannot be interpreted to come into contradiction with other parts of the Meech Lake Accord which are clear. What is clear is what is called the duality clause. It says that a fundamental characteristic of Canada is that we have French language minority groups outside of Quebec, that we have an English language group inside Quebec and that the Governments of Canada and the provinces must preserve those minority groups. That is very clear in the Meech Lake Accord. The distinct society clause is not defined.

• (1610)

Mr. Kindy: Madam Speaker, I understood what the Hon. Member said but I wonder, when he voted in favour of Meech Lake, he voted for something that was not defined. I think it is dangerous for the House to let the courts decide the definition of a distinct society. It might override Bill C-72. The courts might say that because of the distinct society clause, the Bill is going to apply only in English Canada and will not apply in Quebec because Quebec has to preserve its own language.

The constitutional amendment overrides any legislation by Parliament, as we have seen lately with respect to the abortion issue. Does the Hon. Member agree with me on that?

Mr. Allmand: No, Madam Speaker, as a lawyer, in my wildest imaginings, I do not know how nine judges of the Supreme Court could interpret the distinct character clause in that way when in the very next paragraph it says that the Parliament and Governments of Canada must preserve the fundamental characteristic of Canada and I put accent on "fundamental" characteristic of Canada which is that there is an English-speaking community in Quebec which must be preserved and French-speaking groups in the other provinces which must be preserved. That is a fundamental characteristic of Canada. How nine judges collectively in a majority decision could just ignore that clause and interpret the distinct society clause to do away with all English-speaking rights, as a lawyer I cannot see that. Some people are arguing that way but they are completely ignoring the duality clause which is only one sentence away from the distinct society clause. They are completely ignoring that.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig)—Labour relations—Prince Rupert grain handlers' strike; the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse)—Finance—Credit card interest rates; the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher)—Administration of justice—Convicted murderer-rapist charged with triple murder while on parole.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-72, an Act respecting the status and use of the official languages of Canada, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, as Member for Madawaska—Victoria in New Brunswick, as an Acadian and a Francophone outside Quebec, I am honoured and privileged to join in this important debate on Bill C-72 respecting the status and use of the official languages of Canada.

I would be remiss if, from the outset, I failed to underscore the historic character of the legislation now under consideration. We all know that this Bill is the first major reform of the Official Languages Act since it was adopted in 1969, yet however valid and avant-garde it may have been at the time no one would question the urgent need for reconsidering and redrafting the law to reflect Canada's changing requirements and new circumstances.

The legislation had to be adapted to the new constitutional and political realities of this country so that it would be a more satisfactory reflection of the linguistic changes that have taken place in Canadian society. Needless to say, Madam Speaker, Bill C-72 goes well beyond these two prerequisites, covering all major aspects of the language question. Today, however, I would prefer to highlight some aspects of the Bill that are particularly important to me as an Acadian and a Francophone from a region outside Quebec. I am thinking more specifically of the Government's new responsibility for promoting and developing official language communities and the special place this Bill has in the process of promoting and implementing the French fact in Canada.

I said that this Bill was drafted in order to provide urgently needed legislation. Actually, it was necessary to update the Official Languages Act, 1969, to bring it into line with the constitutional requirements of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In this respect, there are some important provisions regarding the language of work in the federal Public Service, service to the public across this country, full participation by French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians in federal institutions, and the administration of justice. Furthermore, as I said earlier, it was necessary to adapt our official languages legislation to the linguistic changes in Canadian society. In fact, tremendous progress has been made in this respect since 1969. Hence the need for a better definition of the roles and responsibilities of the various departments responsible for implementing the new policy, and also the need for determining the parameters of federal-provincial co-operation involving the enhancement of official language communities and, finally, the need for expanding opportunities for learning the other official language.

[English]

I truly believe that Bill C-72 reaches all of its initial objectives. In fact, the introduction of Bill C-72 in the House on June 25, 1987, was greeted throughout the country by a wave of approval by the opposition Parties, the Commissioner of Official Languages, and representatives of the Anglophone communities in Quebec and the Francophone communities outside of Quebec unanimously agreed on the value and depth of the proposed changes.

[Translation]

The Constitutional Accord signed by all First Ministers on June 3 recognized, as was mentioned earlier by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East

(Mr. Allmand), that the existence of French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians in all regions of the country constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada, a characteristic that Parliament and all provincial legislatures now have a duty to protect thanks to this Accord, and this should, in my opinion, be considered a substantial step forward in the age old struggle waged by Francophones for recognition of their language rights.

As I pointed out in this House on October 1 of last year, representatives of French-speaking groups outside Quebec and supporters of their cause would have liked all governments to be given the role of promoting as well as preserving the fundamental characteristic recognized in this Accord. But we know, as all Honourable Members do, that in spite of the efforts of the Prime Minister of Canada himself, his provincial counterparts could not agree on such an objective. This non-commitment on the part of provincial partners, which I hope is circumstantial and temporary, should not prevent us from proceeding resolutely in that direction with regard to matters and in areas under our jurisdiction. So I am glad to read in the preamble of this legislation that the Canadian government is committed, and I quote:

> —to enhancing the vitality and supporting the development of English and French linguistic minority communities, as an integral part of the two official language communities of Canada, and to fostering full recognition and use of English and French in Canadian society;

Moreover, this legislation reflects our government's commitment, and I quote:

> —to cooperating with provincial governments and their institutions to support the development of English and French linguistic minority communities, to provide services in both English and French, to respect the constitutional guarantees of minority language educational rights and to enhance opportunities for all to learn both English and French;

[English]

It should be understood that the official languages policy of Canada was not intended to force all Canadians to become bilingual. That is important. On the contrary, the policy allows for the majority of Francophones and Anglophones of our country to function on a day-to-day basis in their first official language, and even to remain unilingual if they so desire. However, this policy does require federal authorities, and encourages the provinces and the private sector, to become bilingual with a view to bridging the gap between citizens and communities of both French and English backgrounds.

My own riding of Madawaska—Victoria is 75 per cent Francophone and 25 per cent Anglophone. Unless the public authorities there can serve these communities in their own official languages, there will be chaos, and this is what we are attempting to do.

• (1620)

[Translation]

And as my colleague, the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations and Leader of the Government in the Senate, senator Lowell Murray, was saying quite appropriately in Quebec City on June 26 of last year, and I quote:

> Bridges can only be useful if we prevent both banks they link together from crumbling.

Madam Speaker, that is why I consider that in promoting and supporting linguistic communities, a role the government assumes under Bill C-72, we are dealing with one of the most important and essential aspects of our new language policy.

According to that logic, indeed, could we on the one hand force the federal Government to offer its services in both official languages everywhere in the country and, on the other hand, abandon linguistic communities to their fate without protecting them nor promoting their development?

I am also happy the Secretary of State has been given the responsibility of inciting, encouraging and co-ordinating the fulfilment within other federal institutions of that commitment to help official languages communities prosper and develop.

Allow me, Madam Speaker, to point out that the Department of the Secretary of State did not wait for the coming into force of the new Act to show it was interested in honouring that commitment. The national program that was launched last September to create community radio stations for official languages communities is a very good example of the new role the Department of the Secretary of State, and hence the Government, will be able to play in the social, economic and cultural development of those communities.

I hope that program, as other similar measures, will help the representatives of those communities understand that, contrary to what some of them may say, they are not the great losers in the 1987 Constitutional Accord.

Other departments such as Employment and Immigration also prove to be much more open towards the development of our linguistic communities. For instance, this very day and more exactly one hour ago, in Edmonton, in the province of Alberta, the Department of Employment and Immigration signed a contract worth over $40,000 for personnel replacement and community development training, for a group of nine anglophone organizations in Alberta.

I think we will see other similar initiatives come from this new legislation, and the whole country will benefit.

Madam Speaker, allow me to expand for a moment on the importance of this language policy for the affirmation of the French fact in Canada. The tabling of Bill C-72 is not an isolated and inconsequent move. As I already said, it is part of the whole evolution of the Canadian society, and the result or end-product of more than 20 years of reflection and analysis about official languages.

Consequently, it is not, in its form and content, foreign to the values and concepts put forward by the Canadian Government during 20 years of language policy.

However, when we look at the path followed by our Government, this Bill takes a particular significance. It is consistent with our objectives respecting national reconciliation, social justice and international influence.

On the international scene in particular Canada, thanks to its dual identity, is able to enjoy with French-speaking countries, within the Francophonie, newly created at the second summit held in Quebec, the same kind of special relationship it has enjoyed with English-speaking countries within the Commonwealth.

The second summit of countries which have French as a common language, held in Quebec in September, and later the Commonwealth summit, in Vancouver, strengthened the international stature of Canada. It would be ironic on our part to try and play a major role within these two international organizations while neglecting, at home, these two languages and the communities which use them.

Madam Speaker, our official languages communities shall not be left alone in their undertaking towards the preservation and promotion of their culture and heritage. Because their heritage is also ours!

Madam Speaker, I was particularly pleased with the positive and serene atmosphere in which this Bill has been prepared, presented and received. This feeling is all the more vividly felt for me since I had the opportunity of following very closely the painful debate which took place in New Brunswick in 1984 and 1985, during the review process of the province's Official Languages Act.

Indeed, Acadians and the French speaking community had been anxiously awaiting since 1980 for their provincial Government to re-examine in its turn the language legislation passed as well by the New Brunswick legislature in 1969.

I take opportunity of this debate, Madam Speaker, as did my colleague the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine-East (Mr. Allmand), to call once more upon New Brunswick political leaders. I strongly urge them to enact the positions they have sustained in the past and to adopt as soon as possible, following the example of the federal Government, a clearer, more articulate, more open and more generous linguistic law, a law that would have a wider scope and, finally, that would better represent the social fabric of the province.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I wish perhaps to underline the leading and exemplary role the Prime Minister has played in order to bring about this linguistic reform. For us it would have been difficult—perhaps even impossible—to undertake such an initiative if we could not have relied on people like the Prime Minister who was able to give us a coherent and articulate insight into what Canada is today and what it should be tomorrow. I sincerely commend him for his unwavering will to work towards erecting a Canadian society based on justice, tolerance, fairness and respect.

I also want to congratulate my colleagues the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), the Secretary of State, the former President of the Treasury Board—and the new President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Mazankowski) who is continuing the work—for producing a well-balanced, responsible and, in many respects, avant-garde measure. Members of the Senate and House of Commons committee—and I see my colleague the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) is here—did not spare any effort with respect to this Bill and they deserve our congratulations.

Madam Speaker, my closing remarks are directed to my colleagues in the House. I urge them to give generous support to this Bill and promote it in their respective ridings. This morning I heard the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) say that as Members we should all go to our ridings and promote this Bill on the official languages. I agree with her and I hope that all Members of the House will support this Bill and promote it in their respective regions.

Madam Speaker, I am convinced that Bill C-72 will mark the long awaited new beginning in the realm of the official languages, and I think we all have every reason to be proud.

Mr. Kindy: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a question to the Hon. Member for Madawaska—Victoria (Mr. Valcourt) about the Province of Quebec, which is adjacent to his own province.

What is his position on Quebec Bill 101 and on the protection of the English language in that province? Would he support a resolution of this House asking Quebec to withdraw Bill 101?

Mr. Valcourt: Madam Speaker, earlier today during the Oral Question Period, I told a Member who had asked me a question about the economic development policy of British Columbia that, in my personal opinion, it would go against our national reconciliation policy to interfere in areas under provincial jurisdiction.

Bill 101 is an issue which obviously concerns the Quebec Government, and it is also taking a new dimension with the Meech Lake Accord. Once implemented, the constitutional amendments contained in the Accord guarantee to Quebec and English-speaking Quebecers not only their survival, but also their promotion within Quebec. I am certain that the Quebec Government will adapt its own laws to the new circumstances when the Meech Lake Accord is approved, as I hope it will be, by every province in Canada.

• (1630)

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, I have a couple of questions. With regard to the question of my hon. friend from Calgary East (Mr. Kindy), I understand why Parliament does not often trespass on provincial jurisdiction. However, the fact is that this Parliament, under a former regime, had a history of passing resolutions when provincial history was being changed by language law.

The first such resolution came before this Chamber on October 6, 1983. In 1983 the Parliament of Canada in effect passed a directive to the Manitoba Legislature on its language question. We could do the same thing with regard to Bill 101. The next time the issue came up was on February 24, 1984, with "whereases" which could be changed slightly to tell the Province of Quebec that it is abrogating history with regard to Bill 101. However, we will leave Bill 101 aside.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) spoke this morning but our rules do not allow us to ask the Minister questions. I would therefore like to ask this Minister a couple of short questions and, depending upon his answer, perhaps a brief supplementary question.

Does the Minister agree that this Bill is not only an amendment of the Official Languages Act but basically a brand new Bill extending, very fundamentally and substantively, the official language policy of the Government?

[Translation]

Mr. Valcourt: Madam Speaker, I believe that it is a good thing that the Bill extends the scope of the Act. If it were a perfect replica of the 1969 Act, there would be no reason to discuss it or to adopt it. As I have already said, I believe that the amendments contained in the Bill reflect the new situation in Canada.

[English]

The Government had the obligation to bring this Act in line with the charter requirements. The Government also had the obligation to reflect in this Bill the new situation.

The Member has been here for a long time, much longer than I. In 1969 when this legislation was passed my home province of New Brunswick passed similar legislation. I remember the mood in the communities in my home province at that time. I have witnessed tremendous progress in terms of the attitude of people toward the official languages. Although we may talk about Bill 101 in Quebec, as parliamentarians in this House of Commons we must address this Bill before us and the merits of it. We must look at what it attempts to do.

Some people try to portray this as the Government obliging people to become bilingual or to force English or French on to them. That is not the purpose of this. If you want to remain unilingual English, that is fine. If you want to remain unilingual French, that is fine. The Bill only says that when the Government extends services to its people it recognizes that there are two official languages and that the Government should provide those services in the language of choice to our clients, our constituents, our people. That is all it does.

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker—

Mr. Nowlan: I am very glad that I have been recognized for a supplementary question, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I have seen the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malepart).

[Translation]

However, I had already recognized the Hon. Member for a supplementary. I shall come back to the Hon. Member afterwards.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question fits in with the Minister's answer. There is no doubt that things have changed. I was here when the first Bill came through and there are now different feelings.

However, I was very bothered by part of the Minister's answer in that he said that we are not moving into individual bilingualism because even the commissioners said way back in '68 and before that that we must not get into a situation of individual bilingualism. They said that we could have institutional bilingualism to communicate and correspond in either of the official languages.

The interpretation clause 3(2) says that:

> —"court" means any court, tribunal or other body that carries out adjudicative functions and is established by or pursuant to an Act of Parliament.

I would like the Minister to answer me so that we will know what we are doing with this Bill. Pursuant to Clause 15 you have to have the proceeding without the benefit of official translation, which in effect means that you have to be bilingual, that you must have individual bilingualism. With the definition of "court" as any tribunal, is the Minister prepared to argue that that will apply to the parole board, the CRTC, the CTC, the NTA, and any other number of federal boards and tribunals which have adjudicative or quasi-judicial powers?

Does the Minister agree that those two clauses get away from the principle of the initial Act and the B and B report of institutional bilingualism but will compel people who have to serve on those boards and speak before them to represent their clients to be individually bilingual? That is one of the concerns which Members have.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I thought the Hon. Member spoke about a short supplementary. The Hon. Minister of State.

Mr. Valcourt: Madam Speaker, my understanding is that the provisions of the administration of justice generally apply to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Federal Court, the Tax Court of Canada, and to every other federal agency including a court, tribunal, board, or commission which exercises judicial power applying legal principles to the assertion of claims under their constituent legislation.

For example, with regard to the parole board, I do not find it offensive at all that the person who will decide the fate of an Acadian from New Brunswick appearing before a parole board should understand the language of the person in front of him. Yes indeed, I believe that is the effect of that clause and I think that is what we want for our people.

Why should an Anglophone in Gaspé appear before a parole board, as an example, and not be able to speak himself, or through his counsel, to someone who will understand him without interpretation? That is what we are talking about. That is what we want Clause 15 to do, and I think it will do that.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, first of all, I think everyone knows our Party agrees with the Bill before the House today, a Bill whose purpose is to reflect changes in bilingualism in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Stewart: Madam Speaker, is the Member on debate? I have a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I had told the Hon. Member, when I allowed the Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) a supplementary question, that I would recognize him for a short question thereafter. We will then go into debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, I said that our Party supported the Bill. However, I rose to say how disappointed I am in the two Hon. Members who just spoke, the Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kindy) and the Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan). They were complaining to the Minister about Bill 101 and worried about the fact that an Anglophone was having trouble in Quebec, while the Hon. Member for Calgary could have spoken out to make sure French-speaking parliamentarians like Mr. Piquette are able to express themselves in French in his riding.

I hope those were the last two Members we will hear worrying about the situation in Quebec. I think Quebecers are mature enough to handle this themselves. I don't think Anglophones are treated any worse in Quebec than Francophones are treated in other provinces, especially in Alberta.

I would be interested to hear the Minister's opinion. I think he is to be commended on his speech, although I rarely congratulate Conservatives in the House, but I think bilingualism is an issue that should be discussed without political partisanship, and this Bill is part of the normal changes that take place in the life of this country. I think some tolerance is in order, because we must not forget that in Quebec, the Montreal area for instance, there are schools where the majority is neither French nor English speaking, and there are neighbourhoods where Francophones have become a minority when they used to be a majority. If we fail to protect the French language in Quebec, Madam Speaker, I think it would be a serious loss. So I would like to hear the Minister's comments on his colleagues in other provinces.

• (1640)

[English]

Mr. Valcourt: Madam Speaker, I take exception to the Member referring to Members who ask questions about this Bill. This Bill is before the House for debate and we should let all Members pose questions. The questions that have been asked deserve consideration and it is the right, indeed the obligation, of Members of the House to address this Bill seriously and air those concerns. They have been elected to come and represent the interests of their constituents. I take exception to the Member's statement.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to enter the debate on Bill C-72, an Act respecting the status and use of the official languages of Canada. This legislation needs serious reflection because it is the kind of legislation that must have the benefit of knowledge and facts rather than emotion and exaggerated statements. Our comments on this legislation must reflect our concern for unity and harmony in this country and for a consensus with regard to official languages.

During my remarks I want to deal with the question of official languages, the kind of debate with which we are involved today, as well as to deal with some very serious shortcomings in the legislation.

Until now, the official languages legislation was the product of the Liberal Party. Today is an historical occasion because the introduction of this new legislation by the Conservative Party means that the issue of official languages has moved from being a partisan subject to being a non- partisan issue. The policy of official bilingualism has been supported from the outset by the New Democratic Party.

Bilingualism has a negative meaning to many people. To some, in the worst parlance, it means that French is being shoved down their throats, that they must learn another language and cannot work in the federal Public Service unless they are bilingual. Of course, that is a distortion of the reality because bilingualism means that Canadians can speak their own language without having to learn the other. It means that English-speaking western Canadians do not have to learn French, because Canadians can live in their own language.

Of course, we hope that that right will only encourage Canadians to choose to learn the other official language or any of the other languages that are spoken in this country.

Clearly, once people understand that they have this right to live in their community and speak their mother tongue, they will feel secure enough to enjoy the benefits from learning the other languages that exist in this country.

We must understand that the official language policy means that Canadians have the right to live and work in their own language without having to learn the other.

The official languages Bill is an historic development because it means the end to social prejudice which gave rise to comments such as "speak white" to French Canadians and gave rise to an attitude that somehow French Canadians were less than equal to English-speaking Canadians. It means an end to prejudice and discrimination which led to some powerful and articulate poetry based on those attitudes.

This legislation is a first step toward equality and we must approach it with some understanding as to the meaning of bilingualism while setting aside some of the distortions that have been propagated over the years.

Let us consider the debate in which we are engaged with regard to the Official Languages Act. I suggest it is essential that it be a non-partisan debate that is characterized by its capacity to educate and shed light on this subject, not from an adversarial or political point of view, but on the basis of understanding. It is only through understanding the legislation and through understanding the different communities in our country that we will be able to preserve the unity of Canada. Only in this way will we be able to continue to have a country called Canada.

• (1650)

The debate must be democratic and open. We must listen to all sides of the issue. We must listen to those who are strong proponents of the legislation, those who indicate the need for such legislation. At the same time we must be open to those who have concerns about the legislation, people who say that aspects of it go too far. It is only when people can speak up about the legislation without fear that we can have a useful and open debate and that language policy will find an acceptable place in Canada.

I want to point out one thing about the debate, not only in the House but in the country, with respect to what it should not be. I refer specifically now to a magazine called the Western Report. On the front cover of a recent issue it stated: "Si vous ne pouvez pas lire ceci, vous ne pouvez pas travailler pour le gouvernement federal." It then states: "Translation: If you can't read this, you can't work for the federal Government." I just sat here to read the legislation. What this says is a complete and utter distortion of the reality of the legislation. It is a complete and utter distortion of the official languages policy of Canada. This so-called contribution to the debate is what subtracts from it rather than adds to it. This type of characterization of the legislation with which we are dealing is unfortunate. It adds nothing to the debate. In fact, it makes it much more difficult.

Rather than respond to those types of distortions which particular writers place on the legislation, let us remind ourselves that, while this legislation recognizes that there are two official languages in Canada, both French and English enjoy an equal status. The legislation also has its limits. It should have limits. No legislation should be without limits.

Let me point out specifically what I mean when I say that this legislation should have limits. With respect to the right to work concerning those in the federal service, officers and employees of all federal institutions would have the right to use either official language. That is a pretty broad and sweeping principle. I happen to think it is a good one. However, I point out that the principle is limited in its application, as I think it should be. That is reasonable.

This part of the legislation is limited to head offices of federal institutions. It is limited to federal institutions in the National Capital Region. It is limited to federal institutions in other prescribed regions. It does not apply in an unlimited fashion. It is necessary to make these points in order to bring reason back into the debate and to put aside the distortions that lead to excessive emotion with regard to this subject.

With respect to the provisions concerning service, we need provisions with regard to service in the official languages of our country. People must be assured that they can receive service in their own official language. However, those provisions are limited, as I think they should be. They are limited with regard to service to those areas where there is a significant demand for the service. It does not apply to every place and all over but to places where there is a significant demand.

Let us bring some rationality and some reason back to the debate so that we can progress with regard to unity. This will enable us to amend such legislation when it is indicated that an amendment is appropriate. It does not have to be all or nothing. One should not be accused of being a racist if one raises questions about such legislation. One should not be accused of giving special privileges to one group if one is in favour of this legislation. We must bring reason to the debate. We need to stay away from excessive emotion and partisanship. The debate must be open to all sides of the issue.

I now wish to make a couple of points about the legislation which are critical. This legislation deserves to be criticized because it is important legislation. It falls short in two respects. I refer to the provisions affecting the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. With regard to the Yukon, the Yukon is treated as a federal institution in this legislation, while the Northwest Territories is exempted from such designation. Why not exempt the Yukon from the provision as well? Why not respect the legislative authority of the Yukon? In that respect this legislation is ham-fisted. It is too heavy. It ought to show some respect for the local authorities.

With respect to the Northwest Territories, it has an Official Languages Act. Yet there are provisions in this Bill which state that in order for the Northwest Territories legislation to be amended it would require the concurrence of the Parliament of Canada. Surely, that provision should not be there. The legislative authority of the Northwest Territories should be respected. We live in a country which has a federal system of government. That means that we respect the jurisdictions of different legislatures. In that respect this legislation falls short. It must be amended.

I have heard from some quarters of the House concerns with regard to the provisions affecting courts. Those provisions need to be examined critically. Surely, we need a court system which is capable of serving people in their own language. However, that does not mean that every judge in every court in the country has to speak both official languages. We need to approach this debate in an open fashion, a fashion that will allow, permit and enhance the unity of our country. We must approach the debate about official languages from the perspective of what we have in common as Canadians.

We have one common citizenship. We are all Canadians. There is but one Canada. It is only when we start from that premise that we can then move forward to celebrate and recognize the differences that we have. They are differences in language and culture. They provide a strong foundation upon which to build our official languages policy.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House resumes studying this Bill the Hon. Member will have three minutes in which to conclude his speech. A ten minute question and comment period will follow.

It being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

---

• (1700)

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—BILLS

[English]

SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBER ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West) moved that Bill C-236, an Act respecting the use of social insurance numbers be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, anyone who is watching this debate could assume that the process was a democratic one, that elected representatives of the people would debate the merits of this Bill and vote according to choice. The reality is different. The process is a triumph of bureaucracy not democracy. It is a charade of Parliament. We will debate the merits of the Bill but the decision has already been made. The elected representatives of the people will not have a chance to vote at all. That has already been decided. There will be enough speakers to maintain the debate until 6 p.m. when the Speaker will assume that a motion to adjourn the House has been made.

This debate has usually been called "talking out". It is very familiar, and because of its familiarity it has gained a certain legitimacy. It is unworthy of Parliament. I have to believe that it is a form of legislative "coitus interruptus" which is the term for the ancient Roman method of birth control that prevented conception simply by bringing the whole process to an end when a decision could be made. So here we are, the House witnessing the possibility of legislative life being snuffed out by interfering with the process. We are here to talk not to vote, that is the message.

I have to ask, why would this Bill suffer such a fate? Not for the obvious reason that one Minister or many Ministers do not want it to become a law. We know that, because the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), the Minister responsible for the law affecting the social insurance numbers, spoke in favour of such a Bill when he was a Private Member. We remember when the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) as a Private Member introduced a Bill comparable to Bill C-236. He cannot be against it. Well, who is? Who wants to talk it out? It is not the elected Government. It is the appointed Government. So such is my inference, that Canada, as I have observed in the years that I have served in the House, has two Governments. There is an elected Government that is accountable to the people; and there is a Government by appointed officials, accountable mainly to each other. Their hand reaches out everywhere in this capital, including the precincts of Parliament. Some are eminent, such as Deputy Ministers and senior officials. Others are not, such as ministerial assistants. But all have power, including the power to shape what will happen on the floor of the House of Commons, a House they cannot enter, but which they can affect.

The result today is that we will have a masquerade ball in which Members of the House will dance a parliamentary minuet with one another, according to music that the bureaucrats have chosen. I understand why bureaucrats would make such a decision, for this is the type of Bill that undercuts power. The assumption of all bureaucracy is that if there is anything they do not control, it is for one reason: they have chosen not to control it. This Bill is a threat to that. That is why, to use another figure of speech, it is going to be aborted.

In the information age knowledge is power. The more you know about a person, the more control you have over him or her. This is the reason that the very thought of reducing the opportunities of demanding the social insurance number of an individual is a threat to bureaucracy.

The social insurance number gives bureaucrats the chance to control us by giving them the key to start up the entire high-tech apparatus. Given the large number of government agencies and Departments, federal and provincial, now using the social insurance number, that number is the key to a mass of information about every one of us in this Chamber, everyone listening to this debate via television, everyone from coast to coast. Thus, the computer gives the bureaucrat an instrument of power such as none before him ever possessed.

When the social insurance number was first proposed, many Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament pointed out how it could become an instrument to identify each person in the country, a registration by which Governments could keep tabs on everyone. For example, the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker warned that it could become a national identifier that could be the basis for a national registration. When he heard that, Prime Minister Pearson insisted that it would never be so used. When it was suggested that the social insurance number might be used for income tax as well as for unemployment insurance, he immediately interjected, "Certainly not".

The most startling feature of this entire travesty is the claim of Professor Flaherty, who has made an exhaustive study of the social insurance number, and who stated: "The House of Commons was never asked in 1964, or at any other time, to authorize or ratify the introduction of social insurance numbers, which was essentially a decision of the Unemployment Insurance Commission". There you have it, Mr. Speaker, from the very conception, through the delivery, through the growth, it has been fathered, mothered, nurtured, educated and bred by bureaucracy.

Since then it has become the legislated right of 19 federal agencies to require that individuals report their number when seeking service. And they are not all. Without legislation, other agencies have began demanding it, as have provincial Governments, and hospitals. By abusing the social insurance number it has become possible to gain a great, illicit, unmerited grasp of a person's life including many dimensions of his or her life that should be private. One can learn what is the hospital history of a person, whether she has had an abortion, whether he has been admitted to a psychiatric centre. Now such is the abuse of this by Governments.

I want to point out briefly that the potential abuse of the social insurance number is not confined to Governments, for bureaucracy is not confined to Governments. Bureaucracy is a state of mind, and it is found in the corporate dimension of the private sector. The private sector does not as a whole abhor bureaucracy. The entrepreneurs do, and the small business people do. They want to live and work as free individuals and serve other free individuals.

But people who are at home in the mass of corporate structures of the private sector have the same mentality as those who are at home in the massive organizational structure of governments. What difference is there between the management of a government Department and the management of a corporation department? Not very much. Neither assumes that the shareholders own it. They act, whether in government or in corporation, as though management owned it. That is why so many government officials can readily move into corporations and then come back to government. One can almost describe a certain two-way traffic between Toronto and Ottawa in certain dimensions of government. A person may come out of university, come to Ottawa and learn all about a Department, then go down to Toronto or perhaps to Montreal and be in business. They know all the loopholes, how to exploit them, and then they return to Ottawa as a senior official and rewrite the law. One environment is the same as the other. Each is an environment of bureaucracy, and each has the same passion for control of people.

We often find that elements in the private sector are as eager to abuse this as elements in the public sector. The social insurance number is now demanded of customers and employees as though a corporation had a right to it. A person opening a bank account may have to report it. A person applying for a job may have to report it. A person wanting insurance may have to report it. One may ask: Why not? What is wrong with that? This is what is wrong with it: the accumulation of a vast continent of information, its reportability made possible by computers, means that anyone with the right key to this storehouse of data can learn about a person what should be that person's own.

• (1710)

The abuse of the social insurance number is thus an invasion of the privacy to which every citizen in a democracy is entitled. We ought to see the threat that is before each of us. The social insurance number is a key which can open the door to a person's life revealing that which is his own.

Here is a man complaining that two large food chains in Newfoundland demand the social insurance number before cashing cheques. Here is an Ottawa woman reporting that a local hospital emergency ward demanded that her number be reported before she could be admitted for medical treatment. Here is a New Brunswick man complaining that his union insisted its members give their numbers.

If Bill C-236 could only come to a vote, could take one more step toward becoming law, that could change. It would mean that no person, organization, group, or body could demand that a person disclose his social insurance number, and that no federal body should request it without setting out in writing what is the particular purpose for which it is needed and what Act of Parliament authorizes the disclosure. Any organization requesting the number would be required to advise the person that he or she is free to refuse it.

Our need for this legislation has been clear for years. On December 8, 1978, the then Hon. Member for Saskatoon—Biggar, the Minister of Justice gave a carefully crafted, vigorously worded plea for a similar Bill to Bill C-236. He said:

> My real worry arises from the real possibility that use of a single identifying number, such as SIN, in more and more computer files makes it easier and cheaper for organizations to exchange data among themselves and to merge records from files of different agencies, departments and organizations into central data banks. There arises the ultimate possibility that a person with access to the data banks will be able to compile a complete dossier on any individual.

I recognize that some people, perhaps some Hon. Members, may wonder whether that is a critical threat to a person with nothing dishonest, nothing illegal, or nothing subversive to hide. The threat is real. The more a government knows about us, the more power it has over us. The more corporate data manipulators know about us, the more they can exploit us. This is why the Government of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) planned legislation to restrict the use of the social insurance number. The defeat of that Government meant that that legislation did not see the light of day until the Hon. Member for Wellington—Dufferin—Simcoe, the Minister of National Defence, introduced a Private Member's Bill in 1980, as did Senator Jacques Flynn in the other place. Other Bills have been introduced over the years by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon—Biggar, the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen), and Mr. John Gamble when he was a Member of the House. In March, 1987 the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General reported that it shared the concerns expressed in these initiatives and recommended changes to the Privacy Act that would achieve many of the objectives of Bill C-236.

When we face this kind of threat to our privacy and hence to our freedom; when we see this issue excite the concern of Hon. Members over many years, patiently returning to the House when one Bill after another has been talked out according to the process that I have described; and when we see a government wanting to take initiative to bring in some control over the use and abuse of the social insurance number, I must ask: Why should we wait any longer? Here is a Bill to be voted on and if approved by the House to be sent to committee. We are not allowed to use the word "hypocrisy", but if we were, we would certainly think of it if we were to describe the process which says that we cannot accept the Bill because it has something wrong with it. What human composition ever lacks something wrong with it? Any Bill which comes into the House invites amendment and improvement. This is what committees are for. If some part of a Bill is deficient and needs to be corrected, the committee is the place to do it. This debate is to focus on the principle of the legislation, and if we are satisfied as a House, then we can work on the refinement of the Bill itself.

Why wait? Why not today strike a blow for liberty by restoring some of every Canadian's privacy? I ask that question but I know the answer, for since there will not be a vote on the Bill we cannot strike a blow for liberty. Liberty has struck out.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the Hon. Member who just made a very eloquent and compassionate speech to the House. I paid very close attention to his remarks, and I cannot think of anything but praise for the Hon. Member on his effort today in not only convincing Members of the House of the necessity of such legislation but in indeed trying to convince anyone who cares to listen that some people who are not elected unfortunately wield much power around this place and in other circles of government. That message which he gave to us is as important as the Bill which he proposed to the House. Again I reiterate my sincere congratulations.

The issue which the Hon. Member brings to our attention is certainly not a new one. Indeed, from its very inception Members of the House have been concerned with possible misuse of social insurance numbers. The authors of the initiative never contemplated that social insurance numbers would be used, and I would add abused, the way that they are today.

In his annual report of 1986-87, which was tabled in the House, the Privacy Commissioner described some of the worst cases of misuse of social insurance numbers. Let me read a few of them. The first one reads:

> The Privacy Commissioner's participation on CBC's Cross Country Check-up generated an entire two hours of calls about the use and abuse of SIN. One caller, a woman from the Maritimes, told the Commissioner that unemployed workers were required to put their SIN on the outside of the envelope in which they send employment reports to EIC.
>
> The Commissioner, concerned about her allegations, inquired about the practice. In fact, the offending envelope had been replaced some time earlier with one that does not ask for SINs. The regional office has been using up its large stock.

In other words, what we had was a government agency not only requiring social insurance numbers to be used but asking that they actually be displayed within public view on the outside of envelopes. Here is another example which concerns all of us:

> Another caller was upset because Canada Post insisted on a SIN before releasing registered mail. The postal clerk had rejected three other pieces of identification, insisting on the SIN. The clerk relented only when the woman asked that the letter be returned to sender.

• (1720)

How many people would take that amount of time and trouble in order to refuse the giving up of private information such as is the social insurance number? Most people just give in and say, "I don't have time for this argument," provide the social insurance number, as wrong as that is, and go on doing their daily business.

The now Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) in 1978 and the now Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) in 1979 both proposed in this House a reform of the use of social insurance numbers. Today, of course, those two Members of Parliament are cabinet Ministers. I know that they are listening attentively to the remarks that I am making today and they will want to convey to the rest of their cabinet colleagues my comments and even, more important, the comments of the Hon. Member who proposed the Bill to us. It is my hope that if the Government talks this Bill out today, which I know is the fear of the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) because he took great pains to express that to us, at least on the second day of debate the Government will have had time to reconsider doing that. Perhaps there is a message out there to all Canadians to lobby their Members of Parliament whoever they are, whatever Party or constituency they represent, including cabinet Ministers, to ensure that this Bill or one like it is passed by this Parliament.

There are, of course—and the Government will take great pains in telling us that—flaws in the Bill. A number of government bills have flaws in them. We were discussing a government initiative earlier today known as the conflict of interest code. A few people found things wrong with that particular initiative. It was a government initiative proposed in this House by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

There are several other initiatives—I am only using that as an example—of government legislation, which are flawed. Many Bills are introduced in this House and when they are presented to us, they are often, at second reading, filled with amendments. In committee we sometimes get amendments that are so broad that legislation has to be withdrawn and reintroduced. The fact that there may be failures in this Bill, and if there are any failures they are not major, is not an excuse for anyone to refuse having this Bill to come to a vote.

My wish would be that the Bill would have primacy over other legislation to ensure that no other government agency passes or causes an Act to be passed by this Parliament or any other so that we can prevent the use of social insurance numbers by other government Departments. That is not quite covered in the Bill. We could tighten up that provision at committee. Notwithstanding that, what is in the Bill is far better than what is there now because what is there now is almost nothing at all.

[Translation]

I would like to take a few moments to share with you, Madam Speaker and Hon. Members, some of my personal experience with the use of unemployment insurance numbers.

A few years ago, when I was a Member of the Ontario Legislature, I received a phone call at my parliamentary office in Toronto. My wife was calling to let me know that Julie, our little girl who had just started nursery school, was given an envelope that morning she was asked to take home to her parents. So Julie had put the envelope in her school bag and brought it home. The envelope was from the school and contained a form to apply for a social insurance number. This was for a four-year-old child!

I was very upset. I called the school and I asked them: What on earth are you sending us this for? Why did you ask our daughter to take this envelope home and give it to her parents to complete and send back to the school? School authorities simply said: Well, that is the policy of the school board. Here, a number is given to each child on the first day of school. So the policy of the school board was then to give each four-year old a social insurance number. Why, Madam Speaker? I have no idea. I was never given a reason.

You can be sure that the next day I rose in the Legislative Assembly to ask the then Minister of Education, Mrs. Bette Stephenson, why school boards asked for the children's social insurance numbers. She replied: That is nonsense, of course, no school board has such a requirement. I rose and presented her with the envelope my daughter Julie had been given the day before.

Needless to say the Minister was startled and that a few days later the school board made it known it no longer insisted children needed a social insurance number.

Our daughter who is now 10 years old still does not have a social insurance number, and I wonder why she would need one at that age. You would be astonished to learn how often she was asked for one to participate in a sport or other activities, as if it was thoroughly acceptable for a child to have his or her social insurance number. I still ask myself the same question: why?

[English]

Orwell in his book, 1984, was predicting that governments would have big computers, the big brother of government as he referred to it, that would have massive amounts of data on people. In a way, he was carrying it a bit far but in another way he was still, nevertheless, close to the point. However, it is not as much big government that has made most of the abuse, it is big government that has permitted others to abuse the system even more than governments have done it themselves, to such a point that I have even entered buildings and have been asked to register and indicate my social insurance number.

Those practices are totally unacceptable, and I think all Members of this House would agree that they are. It was not a federal government building but it was a form of government building, to answer my friend from Winnipeg. There is indeed a need for legislation as proposed to us by the Hon. Member for Scarborough West.

I am sure that if all Members took the time to inform themselves of the abuses of this system and the potential abuses in the future, not just by governments but by corporations that can exchange data of all sorts merely with a social insurance number which, as we know, is not kept privately enough, then that misuse is cause for concern.

Let me conclude by reading an article written by Vicki Barnett of The Calgary Herald on July 14, 1987. She said:

> The Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce asked for it when I opened an account there. I needed to give it for family allowance. Years ago, I couldn't get a student loan without it, and when I studied journalism at Toronto's Ryerson Polytechnical Institute, my SIN was my student identification number. Credit agencies use it to keep track of my credit record. Some retailers want it as identification on cheques, and there is even a local 7-11 video club that demands it before you can obtain a membership.

Clearly, Madam Speaker, Orwell was not too far off.

• (1730)

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I would like to make a few brief comments with regard to the Private Member's legislation before us today. I want to commend my colleague for having brought the legislation forward. I also want to remind him, when he talks about this legislation being talked out, that it will not be anyone from this Party who talks it out. I know this is Private Members' Hour and Party lines are erased, but I also know that no New Democrat will talk this legislation out. I do not know whether any Liberals will do so. I doubt it. But I wonder who will talk this legislation out? Perhaps if the Hon. Member could identify those who would talk this legislation out, legislation which should go to committee to be studied, if those Hon. Members were named publicly, it would put a little pressure on them and perhaps persuade them to give this legislation the serious consideration it deserves.

I believe this legislation ought to go to committee. The subject ought to be studied. We have to take seriously the concerns expressed by Canadians about the use of social insurance numbers. I have been spending considerable time visiting my constituents and this is one of the things that was brought up frequently. One gentleman who lives in my riding of Winnipeg North Centre is doing quite a study on the use of the SIN number. He has documents from the Privacy Commissioner. He points out the limitations of any citizen who tries to assert his or her right not to divulge his SIN number if he does not wish. He finds that this is a right which is honoured more in the breach than in the practice.

We have to study the way in which the social insurance number is used. On the basis of fact and understanding we have to come to some appreciation of what the number is used for and when its use turns into abuse. There is something to be balanced here. The balance is between privacy and the capacity to get things done. We have a social insurance number because of the need for organization. Yet if the number is used appropriately, I am sure people would accept its existence. However, if it is abused, then serious questions are raised. Therefore, we must examine how the number is being used and abused these days.

I do not know whether Hon. Members recall when the social insurance number was introduced or for what purpose. I am sure it was introduced for some specific and limited purpose. For the life of me, I could not really say exactly what. I am sure it has something to do with the administration of federal social programs. But that is the dilemma we find ourselves in. We know it was introduced some time ago for a good reason and it grew like Topsy. Now it is popping up all over the place. In an age of large organizations and instant communication, the age of the computer, this information on Canadian citizens can be collected very easily. It is time to examine how the social insurance number is used and to what extent it is being abused. It is time to recognize that the social insurance number is just the tip of the iceberg in a modern information age in which we once again must define and assert the notion of privacy. Our individual privacy has to do with our own individual power to assert ourselves as individual citizens rather than being abused by those who can surreptiously collect information about us in ways which were never intended.

I do not want to talk this Bill out. I want the Bill to go to committee which will result in a thorough and public study of the use and abuse of the social insurance number. It is time we did this. I call upon those Members who have been appointed to talk the Bill out to slip behind the curtains and allow this Bill to come to a vote so that this subject can be dealt with. The Whip or whoever it was who told Members to talk this Bill out might be angry and come down upon them, but it will be for a good cause. Show some moral integrity, slip behind the curtains and allow the legislation to be dealt with so we can have a thorough and comprehensive study of the use and abuse of the social insurance number.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure this afternoon to speak in support of Bill C-236 which was introduced by the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse). This is not the first time a Bill such as this has been brought before the House, nor would I expect it to be the last. It is rather unfortunate that apparently this Bill has not been selected for the five hours of debate and then a vote. Far be it for me to make any critical comments about the committee of my colleagues which makes the selection. However, I would hope that if this Bill does return to the Order Paper at some time in the future, such a selection will be made. I think it deserves much more than one short hour's debate. It is something that should be voted upon.

I am speaking in support of this Bill but I cannot be as forceful, as eloquent or as knowledgeable as the Hon. Member who presented the Bill. I think there is a tendency for Members to become somewhat repetitive due to the fact that when one decides to speak on an issue and starts making notes, it seems that everyone has the same things in mind. Everyone is worried about social insurance numbers starting off with a very limited use and then being used more and more until abuse is built into the system with much more potential for abuse, so that we must look at ways in which this might be controlled. Forgive me, Madam Speaker, if I repeat a few of the points made beforehand.

We have to look with good intent at the spread which has taken place. It has been insidious but it has not been done deliberately and maliciously.

Social insurance numbers were originally brought in with a good purpose in mind. We needed an indentifier for social programs such as unemployment insurance and the Canada Pension Plan. There had to be some form of identification. But then it spread into the tax system because deductions for Canada Pension Plan and unemployment insurance were of interest to the tax Department and it was only natural that it would want to credit the right account. So it all made sense and it grew a little there.

Employers are required by law to deduct tax and unemployment insurance premiums and to remit that money to the Government. It is only logical, in a way, that they should require that same number so that the proper accounts could be credited. Because they have to use this number for every employee, it becomes natural for them to use that as an employee identification number. They could argue: "Why have two numbers? We have to use this one. Why not use it as our employee identification number?" So it grows bit by bit. The same applies to banks which sometimes are required to deduct tax payments on interest or at least provide someone with a T-5 form. It is the same thing with trust companies and stock brokers. They are required to credit dividend tax credits and so on. So it grows and grows and grows and so it spreads.

Perhaps the problem with the social insurance number is that it is just too useful. It is becoming a universal identifier for every reason. In the age of the computer, that can certainly lead to abuse. Everyone who has spoken on this has a vision in mind of what that abuse could be with the computers available to us today.

• (1740)

If this trend continues I can foresee the day when every baby born in Canada will be held upside down and have a social insurance number tattooed on the sole of his or her foot. Then, later on in life, someone will punch a button on a computer and up will come the history of that child from birth. All the taxes paid and taxes owing; where the person lived and lives; marital history and what they were up to when they were not married; how much they owe in maintenance payments or anything else. There will be the child's medical records, list of assets and liabilities, criminal record if any, passports issued, and where that person has travelled around the world.

A veritable mine of information will be available at the push of a button. This information will be extremely useful to certain people and certain agencies. It will obviously be very useful to tax collectors. It will be useful to police investigating certain offences. It will be useful for people involved in assessing security risks and that type of thing.

As much as we do not like tax collectors, for example, we know they are necessary. The difficulty they, for example, may have in drawing the line is that if you have a useful tool, when do you not use that useful tool? That question has to be addressed. If that kind of a situation were to arise, would it be consistent with the relationship we expect in a free society between the state and its citizens? That is where we have to find the right balance.

In certain totalitarian states, and I believe the Soviet Union is an example, people are required to have with them all kinds of information to present on demand to the authorities. In South Africa people are required to have with them the so-called Book of Life which lists all manner of information about them. I know South Africans do not like having to carry around with them all that information to present to the authorities on demand. They consider it to be an abridgment of their freedom and their rights as citizens. They certainly resent the situation, and I would like to think that we are not coming to the same thing in Canada.

If this kind of information is available to Government, you can bet your bottom dollar it will also get into private hands. It is almost impossible to stop that from happening. Even if we have a degree of confidence in our Government, there are very few of us who would want that type of information to get into private hands as well.

How do we address these questions? Evidently a lot of thought has gone into the drafting of this Bill. I compliment the Member for that. He has presented some pretty good ideas which should be considered in detail with respect to the steps we must take to curb abuse or potential abuse. First he suggests the restriction of compulsory use of social insurance numbers to federal Government and agencies thereof. Provincial, municipal and private bodies would be unable to demand social insurance numbers. He proposes to make sure that any other persons who request a social insurance number must point out that it is not necessary that it be given. In addition, there can be no repercussions if the number is refused. He also creates a number of summary conviction offences and civil remedies if someone's rights have been abused.

Thank you very much indeed for giving me the opportunity to speak on this most important subject, Madam Speaker, and once again, I offer my congratulations to the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse).

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Madam Speaker, I am indeed, dear colleague for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse), number 224-490-622. I am pleased to identify myself by that SIN which of course is fictitious because I would not like it to be known across Canada that I am number 224-490-622. You are absolutely right indeed with your proposal. And I appreciate your evident frustration that minuet directors apparently decided to have us talk on that Bill, although it is extremely well taken. And I am telling the good news right now that number 224-490-622 will support you on that private member's Bill, dear colleague. Certainly I will not prevent you from taking this opportunity to have the Bill enacted.

In order that people and especially the French-speaking community understand correctly, the thrust of my dear colleague's Bill is that the famous social insurance number that is imposed upon us at birth does not become some sort of a universal identity card used for this or that, for all sorts of things, a number that deprives you of your identity or that stamps on you a final, abosolute, digital identity that sticks on you all through your life.

Of course I had another opportunity recently, when one of my constituents came to me, Madam Speaker, saying: Sir, I do not exist anymore. She had applied for something with a public institution, which did not find her social insurance number on the relevant list, and the official told her: Madam, you do not exist. That's all. You do not exist. We have no business with you, you simply do not exist in this department. I can absolutely not meet your needs. You have no right to the service applied for, since you do not exist.

In order indeed to condemn such abuse, my colleague put forward this legislation that would further control and limit the use of that almost universal number identity that is hanging about somewhere. And it is my view that even if we only enacted the Bill, it would be a start.

You should not, however, delude yourself into thinking that, by limiting the use of social insurance numbers, people will not know who you are and what you do, how much you are worth, what people you know, and so on. There are now in Canada companies which specialize in stripping you naked, which could be nice in certain cases and less so in others, and which are in the business of investigating systematically your financial means and your record, criminal or otherwise. Certain organizations can say what you are worth, what you will be worth, and so on. Such firms use all sorts of information, including probably social insurance numbers, and they can provide a detailed report on just about anyone and anything. Name it, we have it, they say.

In this regard, I would like to steer the Hon. Member in another direction, as I would really like us to succeed in limiting the activities of such firms which rate people for all kinds of things, and if possible, I would like us to pass legislation to protect all such personal information on yourself and the members of your family.

There is now no such legislation. At this time, if someone has the money to pay, he can strip you naked, my dear colleague, without any problem, and use this information for all kinds of other purposes which are not always very honourable. People might want to sell you all kinds of things or to involve you in all kinds of activities. With this information, people can invade your privacy.

However, even if it were only a fist step, this legislation would be something positive. On the other hand, I would certainly prefer legislation which could protect ordinary citizens from the information specialists who offer their services to those who have money to pay them. Naturally, this brings to mind our tax returns, which contain special identity numbers, especially if we think about the interrelationship or compatibility of IBM and other systems, and I am not trying to provide free publicity for any company. We can all be computerized, and as a matter of fact we already are, and sold for purposes which are not always justifiable and which are certainly not in our interests, at least 98 per cent of the time. Such information serves other interests than ours and threaten our privacy, as you pointed out yourself. There is so little privacy left nowadays. I know that we still enjoy a lot of it in my beautiful riding, but the fact remains that privacy, confidentiality today means self respect and control of the environment; I do think my colleague's proposition is well justified. On this note I will now end my remarks so that this legislation can come to a vote, as is the wish of my colleague which would be a first step, wouldn't it. So, SIN 224-490-622 thanks you, Madam Speaker.

• (1750)

[English]

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Madam Speaker, I would like to compliment the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) for a very thoughtful presentation on this subject which is of great concern to many Canadians. While I plan to use up the remaining time allotted to us today to discuss this Bill, I hope that by the time it comes around again some of the questions I would like to raise will have been answered so that we can proceed to pass this Bill.

Bill C-236 deals with a matter which is near and dear to many Canadians. The use of social insurance numbers has been ever-increasing since their introduction. Given the very important object of this Bill it is important that it be clearly understood. To foster this understanding it is necessary to look at the provisions of this Bill in some detail. This I propose to do. However, before I proceed, it is important that the issues which the Bill addresses are put into context. To do this, additional information is required.

First, in my view it would be helpful for Members to have the benefit of some information about the origin of the SIN and subsequent developments with respect to its use. It could also be useful to Members to be aware of a 1980 study which was done by the Privacy Commissioner concerning the extent to which the SIN was being used and the privacy implications arising from its uses.

I also believe it could be useful to Members to know more about the Privacy Act, which came into force on July 1, 1983, and how it affects the collection, use, retention, disclosure, and disposal of the social insurance number. Finally, it would be important to know what initiatives have been undertaken by the Government recently with regard to the social insurance number.

This information is important for two reasons. It will indicate why the social insurance number was created and how it is used. It will also help Members to identify the privacy implications which are associated with this number. Finally, and most important, it will permit Members to assess the controls proposed by the Bill in light of those which are currently in place and those which are now being undertaken by the Government.

The issues raised by the SIN are not new. In fact, in previous sessions of this House efforts have been made by Members to address them. However, the approach which has been adopted in the past has not necessarily been the same. Bill C-236 contains a preamble which provides the underlying rationale for the Bill. The Bill is to prevent the SIN from becoming a general use identification number and to restrict the use and disclosure of the SIN to those purposes authorized by Parliament.

Clause 2 of this Bill sets out the definition of two terms; "federal body" and "social insurance number". It is necessary to define "federal body" because, as will be revealed in future discussions, a distinction is made between entities which are federal bodies and those which are not. Generally speaking the term as defined would include federal Departments and agencies as well as federally created boards and tribunals.

Another matter which requires further study and review before this Bill can proceed relates to the remedies which the Bill intends to provide. Clearly the Federal Court of Canada plays an important role where relief is claimed against the Crown. However, the Federal Court may not be the appropriate tribunal to deal with the claim of an individual who is seeking a remedy against an entity which is in no way related to the federal Crown. Until the point has also been clarified, the Bill should be deferred for further clarification.

We would do well not to vote on this Bill today but to wait until another day. I propose that we defer this matter to another day to be brought back before the House for further consideration.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1) the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

---

• (1800)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

LABOUR RELATIONS—PRINCE RUPERT GRAIN HANDLERS' STRIKE

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to expand further on a question I first raised in the House on December 17, 1987. The point I want to make is the futility of strikes as well as lock-outs when a labour dispute occurs.

When a labour dispute occurs it is as a result of a breakdown in negotiations between representatives of labour and management. This was never more evident than in the recent labour dispute in Prince Rupert which began on December 9, 1987.

When operations at the Port of Prince Rupert resumed on January 22, 1988, the Canadian Wheat Board indicated that it had been unable to ship some $70 million worth of grain that would have otherwise been shipped from this port. In addition, there was some $15 million spent on transportation costs to divert grain to the St. Lawrence ports for export.

All of this has taken place while the parties involved in this dispute have both claimed to have the best interests of the western Canadian grain producers uppermost in their minds. Unfortunately, the grain producers of western Canada are the ones who suffer from the lost sales, and it is these same producers who must pay the increased transportation costs as well as the demurrage that must be paid to some of the ocean-going freighters waiting to be loaded.

This was shameful behaviour on the part of both parties in this dispute. Both parties displayed a complete lack of concern for western grain producers. Both parties not only shirked their responsibilities but completely abdicated them. Since this facility is in large part owned by the western Canadian co-operatives which, in turn, are owned by their shareholders who by chance happen to be western Canadian grain producers, it is particularly difficult to understand how this situation could have been allowed to fester for four years before breaking out as a strike by 69 grain handlers last December 9.

The Minister of Labour of the day had appointed Mr. Vince Ready as conciliation commissioner in 1985. He worked on this problem throughout 1985 and in January, 1986, produced a report with recommendations for a settlement. This recommendation was unacceptable to the union although the companies did accept it with reservation. The dispute simmered until December 9, 1987, when the boiling point was reached.

The third party in these labour disputes is the Canadian public, who will not tolerate prolonged disruptions. The Prince Rupert situation was particularly stressful to western Canadian farmers who are already suffering from tight cash flows as a result of the cost-price squeeze. But consider also that 70 employees of CN Rail were laid off as a result of this dispute.

In my opinion, we must have a dispute settling mechanism in place that will start up at the end of a contract if the parties are not able to reach an agreement. It matters little if it is the postal workers or rail workers or the Air Canada workers, the Canadian public must have some safeguards in place. If a new contract cannot be negotiated before a present contract expires, we should have a labour court system that would automatically kick in to gear and would require both parties to submit to binding arbitration.

I further recommend that a parliamentary committee be established with all Parties represented in the House to investigate and implement this type of dispute settling mechanism.

[Translation]

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig) has raised a question having to do with an industrial dispute which, as we are all aware, was dealt with by this House on January 19, 1988, when it passed the Prince Rupert Grain Handling Operations Act. The Act terminated the strike by the 69 grain handlers at Prince Rupert and provided for the settlement of all outstanding issues in dispute between the parties by the use of binding aritration. Although the dispute has been settled, the Hon. Member's question is still very relevant as it has to do with the inconvenience that Prairie farmers were subjected to during the strike.

• (1805)

[English]

The Government is fully appreciative of the frustration our Prairie grain producers experience whenever the grain handling system is threatened by a labour disruption. We are all in favour of a labour relations system in which disruption is minimized. In this regard the Government is convinced that our free collective bargaining system is the most appropriate and the most effective method of resolving labour-management conflicts in a democratic society.

Collective bargaining is an adversarial system and, as such, disputes will occur. The key to the effective functioning of this system is the acceptance by labour and management of their rights and responsibilities to settle their differences through reasonable and fair compromise.

Over the course of the tenure of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) close to 1,000 collective agreements have been negotiated under the collective bargaining provisions of the Canada Labour Code. Over this period there have been four disputes in which it was evident that labour and management could not accept their responsibility to work toward and to achieve a final, negotiated resolution of their differences.

In these instances, the parties were imposing, as a consequence of their actions, an unacceptable cost to the Canadian economy and the public interest. On each of these occasions the Government fulfilled the responsibility entrusted to it by the people of Canada by ordering an end to the disruption, prescribing a method for the final resolution of the issues in dispute.

With respect to the dispute between Prince Rupert Grain Ltd. and the grain workers union in particular, I would like to draw to the attention of all Hon. Members the fact that Mr. Justice Peter Seaton of the Court of Appeal of British Columbia has been appointed as arbitrator to resolve the three issues the parties were unable to settle.

This approach of providing the parties with every opportunity to negotiate and freely arrive at a settlement of their differences and of reserving arbitration as a remedy of last resort is far more effective in promoting constructive labour-management relations in the federal private sector.

FINANCE—CREDIT CARD INTEREST RATES

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, on March 26, 1987, I asked the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) what action he could take to remind major credit card institutions of the obligations of good corporate citizenship. Since then most banks and trust companies have lowered their rates, but not the major department stores.

They are still charging an incredible, indefensible whopping 28.8 per cent. Not only have they stayed at that line, but they have convinced at least one Minister that they charge less than banks and trust companies because they do not make a charge for the first 30 days. They say users of their charge cards are thus better off, which is true, but only for three months.

I ask Hon. Members to sit down to figure it out. Compound the interest over a period longer than that and Hon. Members will see that after that the 2 per cent per month sky-rockets.

I can tell Hon. Members of one person in Toronto who had his indebtedness to one department store sky-rocket over a period of under two years from $2,000 to $4,000. Many people cannot pay off their accounts in shorter periods of time, so they become victimized by this massive interest rate that is afflicted upon them. I am not referring to prodigals, wastrels, or spendthrifts. I mean those people who simply have no way of coping with the situation for which they are not at fault. I am thinking of a mother, perhaps a single mother who has a group of little children to outfit for winter. Her choice is between using a charge card or letting her children go inadequately clothed through the snow. We both know what decision she makes, and what decision she should make. Very often that woman cannot pay off her indebtedness in short order.

• (1810)

I am thinking of a person who perhaps buys a major appliance when that person has a job and expects to have it for a reasonable length of time. Then that person finds that he or she cannot pay this sizable amount because, through no fault of their own, the plant has closed and they are out of a job. That person is not to be blamed, they cannot help it. It is not their fault if unemployment insurance is only enough for subsistence.

A profound in-depth study of this problem has shown that credit card rates chiefly cause injury to people of low income. This problem to which I refer today is not chiefly a matter of concern to yuppies, to people who have gone out and bought high ticket items and wanted to indulge themselves in a higher, faster style of life. Studies have shown that it is the type of person to whom I have just referred that is the chief victim of the abuse of interest rates on credit cards and charge cards.

I raised this question because a committee of this House, the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, in its fine, impressive, and influential report on this entire subject stated that retail stores should reduce their rates on accounts over $400. They recognized the need to draw some line such as that because there were additional administrative charges borne by department stores that were not borne by every other issuer of credit.

However, there has not been the slightest budging by the department stores. They have not moved even a tiny little inch toward acknowledging the message of this Parliament, a message of the parliamentary committee that was reinforced by a Minister of the Crown. When that report was submitted to the House, the Minister of State for Finance stated that he would act if there was not a proper response to the report of the parliamentary committee. In response to my question raised on March 26, 1987, he stated that, if rates do not come down, as I have stated before, we will consider the best ways to proceed.

Madam Speaker, I am asking the question again. What are the best ways? I am asking, when will he proceed? When will he follow up the commitment made and implied in this question?

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in March 1987, as indicated by my friend the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse), the Finance Committee tabled a report on the credit card issue. I think it was a major and even fundamental step toward understanding the cost involved in the use of credit card, especially at the financial level.

Madam Speaker, the Committee did not recommend that the Government should set credit card rates. On the other hand, it did recommend that the Canadian people should be made more aware of the cost associated with using credit cards.

As you know, Madam Speaker, the Federal Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) published in December 1987 an information booklet on credit cards, users costs, interest rates, etc., all the costs involved in the use of credit cards.

I suggest that the Hon. Member for Scarborough West should be praised for his contribution and the results he has obtained with this special information booklet on credit cards.

As you certainly know also, in June 1987, the Federal, Provincial and Territorial Ministers responsible for Consumer and Corporate Affairs got together and agreed to set up a special task force to look into the issue of costs and problems resulting from the use of credit cards. The report from that task force should be available shortly.

Since then, and thanks in part to the excellent work which the Hon. Member has done, a number of financial institutions have been offering Canadian consumers products which are definitely more competitive and interesting. Madam Speaker, I feel that the Hon. Member should continue his good work and keep on informing Canadian consumers about the costs involved in using credit cards. I suggest it is in this direction that the Government and the Hon. Members of the House should continue to work.

Madam Speaker, I can assure you that this is in this direction we will continue to move.

• (1815)

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—CONVICTED MURDERER-RAPIST CHARGED WITH TRIPLE MURDERS WHILE ON PAROLE

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Madam Speaker, on December 13 last, a 34-year old Chilliwack woman, her 12 year old daughter, and her daughter's best friend, also 12, were murdered by the mother's common-law husband. These murders shocked the small, closely knit community and tragically affected the lives of family and friends of the three victims.

The murderer, Allen George Foster, of Chilliwack was a convicted murderer and rapist who had already spent seven years in jail in the early seventies for murdering an 18 year old girl, Gwen Ann Lingor. When he killed Joan Pilling, her daughter Linda Brewer, and Megan McCleary just 12 days before Christmas, he was out on full parole.

The perversity of the situation is obvious. By the very weakness of our parole system this murderer was given the freedom to murder again, not just once but three times. Had he not taken his own life on December 27 in the washroom area of the Forensic Psychiatric Institute in Port Coquitlam, he very well may have murdered yet another time. It is no wonder that my constituents in Fraser Valley East and countless other Canadians recoiled in shock and disgust at this crime but, even more so, at the system which allowed Foster to be out on our streets.

On January 18, I asked the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kelleher) in the House why this convicted deviant sexual offender, who had committed a heinous murder and rape in 1971 and who was subsequently convicted of indecent exposure in 1986, was let out on full parole.

The Minister's response indicated that there would be a full inquest conducted by the coroner of B.C. at the end of February or March. This is welcome news to the people of B.C.

Many Members in the House of Commons voted against the motion addressing the reinstatement of capital punishment when it came up for a vote in June of last year. At the time and despite the disappointment that I felt personally, I hoped that this would force us to move in a different direction and would lead us to tightening our parole laws. We did not move fast enough for Joan Pilling, Linda Brewer, or Megan McCleary.

I realize that we have made advances in this regard with Bill C-67 from the first session, but unfortunately and obviously they were not enough. The amendments to the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act, which received Royal Assent in July, 1986 have given us the power for the first time to keep inmates who meet the criteria under the Bill in prison for the full length of their term. I was pleased to hear that since the introduction of the Bill some 25 per cent of all people who have come before the special parole board are now being detained until the full length of their term has expired.

We have been told that the parole board followed the proper procedure before granting full parole to Foster, and I have no doubt that it did. However, human nature being what it is, is there any doubt that even if every rule was followed Foster could have stepped out of line anyway? Who can predict what a convicted murderer will do next? It is time we examined the rules.

I would like to take the House quickly through the life of Allen George Foster from 1971 to December 27, 1987. In 1971, Foster then 20 years old, was living with a young woman in British Columbia. For reasons not known to me or probably anyone else, he decided to rape his girlfriend's 18 year old cousin, beat her to death, wrap her in chains, and throw her body into Okanagan Lake. For this crime he received a life sentence but was granted unescorted temporary absences in 1979, only seven years after the conviction.

In May 1980 the National Parole Board allowed Foster to leave custody on day parole, which meant that he had to report in only at night. One and a half years later, in October 1981, he was granted full parole. Over the years he was watched and psychiatric tests were taken, but despite these precautions he was charged in April 1986 with performing an indecent act and breaking and entering.

• (1820)

Two months later he was convicted for the indecent act and sentenced to 21 days in jail. He remained there until August of the same year. In July, 1986, he was granted day parole and in December of that year he was granted full parole. Over the next year he was closely supervised. Then, again for reasons unknown to anyone, he murdered these three innocent people in Chilliwack. The two young girls, best friends, honour students and athletes were not even born when Foster committed his first act of murder back in 1971. Unfortunately, their destinies were tied in with Foster's even then.

This case is not unique. Another convicted killer out on parole on mandatory supervision from Sumas Centre in Abbotsford did not return to the centre on September 5, 1987. He broke into an unoccupied home and stole food and household items in order to survive and then stole a vehicle belonging to the home owners. He also took a large knife. This knife was to be used by the convict just four days later to terrorize completely a Matsqui husband and wife.

The details of this crime are almost too disgusting to be repeated but will show us in even greater detail why we must do something now to tighten our parole laws. After breaking into the home while the couple was in bed, he sexually assaulted both husband and wife in front of each other, all the while threatening them with the knife. After sexually assaulting the couple, the man made them go into the kitchen and forced the wife to make him a meal. He then demanded, at gun point, that the couple give him liquor, food and other items and made them load their own car for his escape. He then drove away. This entire scene lasted three hours but will live on in the minds of this couple for the rest of their lives. The same prisoner when apprehended three hours later told the detectives "I didn't want to come out. They made me come out. I can't even make it in a backyard, let alone society or the community".

It is up to the parole system to protect society from these criminals, and I am not satisfied that this is being done. I have written to the chairman of the Justice and Solicitor General Committee to ask that when the committee visits British Columbia it have hearings on sentencing and the parole system and that the committee visits the municipalities about which I am speaking, and Fraser Valley East. I am pleased that representatives of the three municipalities have written to the Solicitor General, as have many of the citizens. I know they will welcome the opportunity to put their cases before the committee. I am encouraging the committee to come this spring when it visits British Columbia so that people can be heard and their concerns written into the register.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, first I would like to express my shock and horror at the tragic death of a young mother, her daughter and a young friend in British Columbia last year. Both as Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General and as a father, I sympathize deeply with the families of these victims.

The alleged perpetrator of these crimes had been convicted of homicide 16 years earlier and was on parole at the time of these brutal murders. Two weeks later he took his own life while under psychiatric observation. We therefore may never know his full role in these crimes nor what could have motivated him.

A police investigation into the matter is now under way and the circumstances surrounding the crime will soon be examined by a coroner's inquest. Officials of the Solicitor General's ministry have been and will continue to offer whatever assistance they can to the police and coroner. In the meantime, it would be inappropriate to speculate on the findings of those inquiries.

The parolee in question was paroled after serving over 10 years of a life sentence for his earlier conviction. He had been on parole for over six years. He was seen weekly by his parole supervisor and received regular psychotherapy from two therapists. He had received psychological and psychiatric treatment throughout his sentence, including three years in the psychiatric treatment centre. By all accounts he was doing well, and at each stage of his sentence when decisions were made with regard to his very gradual release into the community, psychiatric and/or psychological opinions were considered by the parole board.

None of this can compensate for the loss of three innocent lives. The Minister will continue to examine the facts as they become known to ensure that this was the case, to learn what we can from this tragedy and to take whatever corrective action is indicated.

Our parole system must continue to help inmates to make the transition back to the community in a law-abiding fashion. At the same time the degree of risk must remain the key element in making such decisions. The harsh reality is that assessing risk remains a matter of human judgment to a large extent and human judgment is not infallible. Despite the difficulties which will always remain, I can assure you, Madam Speaker, that this Government has done and will continue to do what it can to improve the process.

• (1825)

First, as Hon. Members know, Bill C-67 was passed in July of 1986. That Bill allowed the parole board to intervene and prevent the automatic release to mandatory supervision of patently dangerous inmates. Up until July 31, 1987, one year after the legislation was passed, 346 inmates had been referred to the National Parole Board for detention hearings. Of these inmates, 81 were ordered detained, subject to yearly review until sentence expiry. Seventy-two were given residency conditions, 65, one-chance mandatory supervision and 110 were released under "regular" mandatory supervision.

Second, the Parole Board is at this time implementing on a trial basis decision-making policies that will focus on undue risk. Third, the correctional service is implementing a case-management-strategies approach aimed at reducing and controlling the risk posed by paroled offenders.

In addition, in response to the Ruygrok inquest, certain measures such as information co-ordinators were speedily introduced and other longer-term measures have recently been proposed to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) by a sentence-management review conducted by ministry officials. We are striving daily to find ways of improving our performance. To the extent the inquiries into this tragedy reveal any necessary corrective measures, they will be undertaken in addition to those to which I have already referred.

In closing, Madam Speaker, let me again express my deepest sympathies to the relatives and friends of those three victims who so tragically lost their lives.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.27 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, February 9, 1988

The House met at 11 a.m.

---

Prayers

---

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATIONS

PRESENTATION OF TWENTY-SEVENTH AND TWENTY-EIGHTH REPORTS OF THE CANADIAN NATO PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Chairman of the NATO Parliamentary Association, and pursuant to Standing Order 101, I have the honour to present to the House, in both official languages, the twenty-seventh and the twenty-eighth reports of the Canadian NATO Parliamentary Association.

[Editor's note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-281, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (false news and hate propaganda).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce this Bill to amend the Criminal Code of Canada regarding false news and hate propaganda.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

[Translation]

CANADA LABOUR CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-282, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code (scabs and essential services).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Plamondon: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce a Private Member's Bill, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code (scabs and essential services). The purpose of the Bill is to prohibit hiring people to replace Crown corporation striking or locked out employees. The Bill is also aimed at maintaining essential services during a Crown corporation strike or lockout.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

[English]

PETITIONS

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct honour to present a petition on behalf of petitioners from Salmon Arm, Eagle Bay, Vernon, Burnaby, and Maple Ridge, in the Province of British Columbia, who are of the opinion that the Conservative Government does not have a mandate from the people of Canada to conclude a trade deal with the United States.

They believe that this deal threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty, since it removes the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, and to equalize opportunities between the regions of Canada.

Therefore, the petitioners are calling upon Parliament to dissolve to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade deal during a national general election.

• (1110)

SUPPORT FOR BILL C-54

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions. The first one is from a number of residents of Swift Current, Saskatchewan and concerns Bill C-54 which creates new laws against the production, sale, rental, and distribution of pornography.

The petitioners are concerned that the pressures exerted by various permissive minority groups may cause government to water down and weaken this legislation.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to support Bill C-54 as is and to pass the Bill without dilution in the belief that it gives recognition to the inherent dignity of individuals, particularly women and young people who are most vulnerable to exploitation in this area.

BLOCK AVERAGING OF INCOME

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the second petition is from a number of residents of southwestern Saskatchewan who note that farmers and fishermen for many years have enjoyed the right to block average their income, and that on December 16, 1987 the Minister indicated his intention to eliminate block averaging.

The petitioners, therefore, call upon Parliament to take the necessary steps to retain block averaging for farmers and fishermen as recommended by the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs in its report on the White Paper on Tax Reform, Stage One.

OPPOSITION TO TRANSPORT OF PLUTONIUM OVER NORTHERN CANADA

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty under Standing Order 106 to present petitions signed by 175 residents from Eskimo Point, Northwest Territories, and Spence Bay, Northwest Territories.

These petitioners are concerned about possible environmental effects and contributions to nuclear proliferation by proposed plutonium flights over northern Canadian territory.

As a result, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon the Parliament of Canada to recognize the dangers of such flights and to say no to the transport of plutonium over northern Canadian territory.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to present two petitions. One is from residents of Toronto who say that the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement between Canada and the United States will have a fundamental impact on Canada's economic, cultural, and political independence.

Therefore, they request that the Parliament of Canada obtain a clear mandate from the Canadian people through a national debate on the alternatives available to Canada and that this debate result in a national election prior to the signing of any such agreement.

The second petition is from residents of Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, who say that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), promised in accordance with bilateral trade negotiations, that Canada's sovereignty would not be compromised.

Therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement in a national general election.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition. It is signed by Canadians who are concerned about the Government's trade deal with the United States.

They believe that it will have a fundamental impact on Canada's economic, cultural, and political independence. They believe that the agreement will also have an effect on job loss, especially in many different sectors in Canada and in the various regions of Canada.

Therefore, the undersigned request that the Parliament of Canada obtain a clear mandate from the Canadian people through a national debate on the alternatives available to Canada and that this debate result in a national election.

It is signed by many Canadians who are very concerned about the deal.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, question No. 153 will be answered today.

[Text]

REVIEW OF AGRICULTURAL PROGRAMS

Question No. 153—Mr. Althouse:

1. Are any agricultural programs being reviewed to determine their acceptability under the criteria agreed to by Canada at the Cairns Group meeting held in Ottawa, May, 1987, and the OECD summit held in Venice, June, 1987 and, if so, which programs?

2. Do the programs continue to meet the criteria as agreed to at the two meetings and, if not (a) which ones do not (b) what program changes could be made to make the programs fit the new requirements?

3. During the last fiscal year, was financial assistance provided under the programs which no longer meet the criteria agreed to and, if so, in what amount?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): 1. No review of agricultural programs to determine their conformity with the internationally agreed guidelines is being undertaken at the present time. However, the OECD has developed a unit of measure, the Producer Subsidy Equivalent, for comparing amongst countries, the amount of support provided to specific agriculture commodities. Agriculture Canada officials are reviewing the PSE calculations as currently applied by the OECD to Canadian programs.

The initiatives of the Cairns Group and the principles agreed to by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) are aimed at making agricultural production more responsive to market forces. These guidelines will have to be taken into account by countries in their domestic policy formulations to the extent they are reflected in the contractual undertakings in the Uruguay Round of the Multilateral Trade Negotiations (MTN).

At this stage, it is too early to predict the outcome of these negotiations. Canada and other participating countries have tabled proposals on how to proceed with the negotiations. Only when the scope and content of the MTN become clearer will it be possible to ascertain the full implications for change to existing Canadian policies and programs.

2. Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

[Translation]

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

PRIVILEGE

PRIVACY OF MEMBERS' OFFICES—ALLEGED BREACH—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: On January 28, 1988, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) claimed that the rights of three Members of Parliament had been breached in relation to the privacy of their physical offices. He contended that House of Commons staff had removed software from computers in Members' offices without informing either the Members concerned or their staff what they were doing. I undertook to look into the specific circumstances of this issue and report back to the House. I am now ready to do so.

[Translation]

There is a pilot project underway at the present time in relation to the installation of personal computers in the offices of Members of the House. There are some 29 participants involved in this pilot project at the present time.

[English]

In an effort to proceed as expeditiously as possible with the pilot, interim software was installed in various personal computers in order for the evaluation phase of the project to proceed on schedule. This interim software was intended to be utilized only until the customized software was available.

On December 2, 1987 sufficient copies of the customized software were available for installation and evaluation in nine of the twenty-nine pilot machines, and the substitutions were made. The balance of the pilot project participants were provided with copies of the final version of the software on January 27, 1988.

It would appear that the intention of staff in the OASIS group was simply to ensure that Members' offices were equipped with the most up-to-date software and, in the case of pilot project participants, that they be provided with the same software that will shortly be provided to all Members' offices.

Clearly, however, the extent to which OASIS staff apprised Members' staff of what they were doing was insufficient. In that context, the complaint raised by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan is not without foundation. More important, he underscores an issue that pertains to policies and procedures for servicing and maintaining Members' personal computers so as to ensure the confidentiality and integrity of data stored and manipulated on these machines.

I am satisfied that what has occurred in this case was done innocently. However, the point made by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan that electronic information should be treated no differently from "hard copy" material is well taken. All staff involved in providing electronic equipment or electronic data processing services to Members have been cautioned on the importance, in future, of fully briefing Members' staff and obtaining their prior authorization before any alterations or changes are effected to Members' data bases or data processing equipment or software.

[Translation]

In addition, a policy statement covering these issues is now being prepared and will be submitted to the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services for discussion, as quickly as possible.

[English]

This policy statement is to include not only the procedures and practices to be followed by House staff in relation to their access to and maintenance of computer hardware and software in Members' offices, but also the whole question of the safety and security of computerized data stored in Members' offices. This is an issue of vital importance and one which is to be addressed immediately.

In view of these facts, it would be the Chair's contention that there is no necessity to proceed with a question of privilege at this time.

[Translation]

I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) for having raised this very serious issue and assure him, and all Members of this House, that corrective steps have been put in place to ensure that such an occurrence does not take place again.

[English]

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in relation to your ruling. I think it is a very important ruling and that it sets out the parameters of the concerns raised by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus). I believe it is important that the committees of the House look into the matter.

I would also hope that in doing so the committees would look at ways of ensuring, when copies are made of Members' disks with names, addresses, and all other information, the privacy of what we have been putting on our disks, that they are kept for Members' use only, and ways of ensuring security in that regard.

Obviously a number of names have been given to us from various sources, some of which are very politically sensitive. We want the guarantee that we will have some security in this area.

• (1120)

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his intervention. I will be very sure that his remarks are passed on within a few minutes to all the appropriate officials.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, February 8, consideration of the Motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-72, an Act respecting the status and use of the official languages of Canada, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) has the floor.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I understand that I have a few minutes in which to wrap up my remarks.

Yesterday, with regard to this debate on the official languages policy of Canada I was saying that we should be proceeding in a way which builds national consensus. In that context I wish to indicate that my view with regard to the official languages policy of the country is that it is not a policy that should or does confer special privileges on any group but, rather, it is a policy that is designed to remove injustices from Canadian society.

In that connection it is important for people to recognize that the rights which are enunciated in the legislation and which are stated in very broad principles, such as the right to work and the right to service, are limited in their application. I am hoping that that will assuage some of the fears that are being aroused throughout the country in articles about this policy, which are complete and utter distortions of the impact of it.

I also wish to point out that it is better that the debate be carried out more in the nature of a town hall meeting than of a dog fight. It is historic that we have a Conservative Government introducing legislation with regard to official languages policy and that the original sponsor of this legislation, the Liberal Party, is not the only political group in the country that has chosen to approach the notion of official languages in Canada. In this way official languages policy has become a non-partisan question. All three major political Parties have recognized the realities of Canada; they have recognized that we have two major language groups which we call official language groups.

Finally, in the sense that we should have an open and honest debate about this legislation it is critical that the flaws in it be pointed out. I refer to the provisions in the legislation which deal with the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. In that respect the Government is acting in a heavy-handed and ham-fisted way. It ought seriously to entertain amendments at committee. There is no reason why the Yukon should be treated as a federal institution. There is no reason why it should not have the legislative capacity to determine its own policy in this area, as is the case with the Northwest Territories. There should also be some clarification with regard to the impact of the clause affecting the courts.

Canada is maturing in its approach to the whole question of official languages. It is good that the House hear all opinions with regard to this subject. That is the only way that we can develop a larger consensus with regard to official languages in Canada and develop greater unity.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Are there questions or comments? The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson).

Mr. Nickerson: Madam Speaker, following along the non-partisan lines adopted by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) I would like to compliment him on digging out the flaws in the Bill we have before us. They are flaws which do not deal with the language issue but rather with constitutional issues as they affect the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. I am thankful for the assistance that has been rendered by the Hon. Member in pointing that out. He has pointed out the anachronism that exists in Clause 90 of the Bill. It states that the Official Languages Act of the Northwest Territories, which was enacted by the Legislature of that Territory, cannot be changed without the consent of the Parliament of Canada. That is completely unacceptable to the people who live in the Northwest Territories. There is no need for such a provision in this day and age.

With respect to the Yukon, it is treated even worse. It is treated as if it is a department of Government.

My question to the Hon. Member is this. Is what he has said the official policy of the NDP? Can we count on the support of the NDP when this Bill gets to committee for the necessary amendments that have to be made if this Bill is to be made acceptable to the people of the North?

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, it is curious to me that the Hon. Member started out by indicating the non-partisan fashion in which he wished to proceed and then asked me what is the position of the New Democratic Party on this matter.

I am sure that my colleagues will see the wisdom of my comments and that they will recognize that this is a federal country. I hope they will see that there is no way in which the federal Government should be imposing policies on the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. I hope they will see that the notion that there has to be parliamentary concurrence in the Official Languages Act of the Northwest Territories should be removed from the Bill. That the Yukon should be treated the same as a department of the federal Government is a mistake in policy. It should be treated on the basis of what it is, that is, a legitimate legislature of the country. It should be allowed to develop its own policies.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a direct question of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper). He has just replied to a question asking him about the policy of the New Democratic Party on this Bill. I wonder if the Hon. Member has noted the comments of the Conservative Member of Parliament for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) and what he thinks of them, given the fact that in the City of Winnipeg there are each year an increasing number of English-speaking students attending French immersion schools right through to the end of grade nine, including schools in the constituency of Winnipeg—Assiniboine. Would the Hon. Member like to comment on the views expressed by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine?

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I must be honest, I have not paid much attention to the comments of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie).

Mr. Orlikow: They do not deserve much.

Mr. Keeper: I must say that I have noticed that the schools in Winnipeg have increasing numbers of children who are taking instruction in immersion classes. Those in an English-speaking community are learning to speak French. When they complete their schooling they will be able to speak French with ease. They will not have to learn French in the way in which I have learned it, struggling word by word. I am happy to see that this is happening.

I know that the amount of French immersion is increasing in Winnipeg. It has reached something in the order of 25 per cent in the City of Edmonton. In the City of Ottawa it is something in the order of 50 per cent. I know that in a small rural village just outside Selkirk, Manitoba, which is a small town, the families were given the option of keeping their children in the village school or sending them to an immersion school. Half the families chose to send their children to the immersion school.

What this indicates is that we are raising a new generation and that some of the attitudes that are expressed today about the French language in Canada will become a thing of the past with this new generation. We are building a new, more tolerant Canadian society, a society in which the prejudicial and discriminatory attitudes of the past will in fact be a thing of the past. For the moment, we are still going through a period of transition. However, there will be a new dawn with the new generation, people who will understand both communities and both language groups.

• (1130)

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, members of the NDP have completely missed the point. This Bill has nothing to do with children learning to speak French. In Winnipeg—Assiniboine there is one of the highest entry rates for immersion school because people realize that they will not get jobs in the Government if they do not learn French. However, just because an Anglophone learns French does not mean that he will get the job. He has to take a language diagnostic analysis, and if he does not pass that he is turned down.

For many years, I have been asking for amendments to the Human Rights Act that would insert the word "languages". Then, when any Anglophone is denied employment or promotion, he will have grounds to file a complaint with the Human Rights Commission and will have a proper and thorough examination of why he is being denied employment or promotion. This was recommended by the former language commissioner, Maxwell Yalden. He did not believe in the firing and dead-ending of fully qualified English-speaking Canadians.

I have been working on a case on the Hill here for two years. A uniformed Staff Sergeant here was sent away for language training. He was an Anglophone and was having difficulty learning the French language. The teacher suggested he have a hearing test so he had a hearing test and his doctor told him that he had a problem with one ear and would have great difficulty learning the French language. There was really no point in carrying on. He was sent back to the Hill and was demoted from Staff Sergeant to Sergeant, with a loss of pay.

I do not support discriminatory action like that. French-Canadians are in a different category. There are hiring teams out looking for French-Canadians for jobs in the Government. As well, French-Canadians have special promotional privileges. No other nationality has these privileges and I consider that discriminatory.

This Bill imposes bilingualism on the private sector. I would like to know where, in Penticton, British Columbia, a firm doing business with the federal Government will find fully qualified bilingual persons to handle any customers who want service in French. If the French-Canadian customer does not like the quality of the French that is being spoken by an Anglophone, or if the Anglophone is not writing proper French, the customer can file a complaint with the language czar. I suppose the language czar will warn the firm to start with, but if it cannot correct the situation, the language czar can haul it into Federal Court and prosecute the firm.

I do not support the language czar having dictatorial power and being immune from prosecution. This has not been explained properly to the Canadian people. The press has done a terrible job of explaining the contents of this Bill.

Another thing that deeply disturbs me, and I am sure Canadian taxpayers, is that there has been no figure put on what all this will cost. Will it be $100 million, $1 billion—who knows? That is a legitimate question. We do not have any cost figures.

For years, we condemned Liberal Governments for running blank-cheque Governments. They just shoved through legislation and we did not know what it would cost. I do not support that.

The NDP and the Liberal Party have not explained any of these things to the Canadian people. They are not serving their constituents if they are not pointing out these problem areas. The problems are genuine and we are entitled to answers.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time allowed for questions and comments has actually expired, but I will allow the Hon. Member a minute to conclude.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity to respond, because clearly statements like that should not go without response.

I note that in his closing remarks the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine said that the NDP and the Liberals have not explained. He failed to mention his own Party. He is playing partisan politics with the very sensitive issue of national unity.

The Hon. Member did say that people will not get jobs with the federal Government if they cannot speak French. That is a complete and utter distortion of the legislation before the House. Obviously there is an advantage to being able to speak both languages, but the legislation protects the right of the individual to work in his or her own language. That means, in plain English, that the right of an English-speaking person to work in English is protected.

The Hon. Member raised the case of an individual who, in his opinion, had been discriminated against. That is a legitimate role for a Member of Parliament to play. Members of Parliament should take up individual cases, be ombudsmen and see that justice is done. Members of Parliament should continue in that tradition. However, to distort the legislation poisons the debate. This is the kind of debate in which we need more facts and less distortion.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in the debate on the new Official Languages Act, Bill C-72. I think it is important to look at what the Government has tried to do with this Bill. First, we have tried to reflect the principle of equality of status of English and French as embodied in the Constitution Act of 1982. Second, we have endeavoured to improve upon the original Official Languages Act wherever possible. I think it is important that the House understand that both objectives have to be accomplished with the principle of fairness and equity first and foremost in our minds.

No Bill is perfect. We may not have fully achieved our goals. Some of our efforts may have fallen short of the mark. In other cases, we may not have used the most precise language possible in either the French or the English version of the Bill. Nevertheless, the effort has been made. I do not sense that our efforts are being rejected out of hand.

I noticed in debate yesterday that our political opponents, the Liberals and the New Democrats, have been complimentary and supportive of our efforts. I also noticed that members of all Parties have raised questions of interpretation and intent at the same time as they have addressed the principle of the Bill. I submit that that is the purpose of second reading stage.

When we debate this Bill, we do so keeping in mind the principle that Canada is a bilingual country. That fact is found not only throughout history but in the Constitution, and particularly in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Canadians are fully committed to equality of language within the parameters found in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I refer specifically to Section 16(1) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms which states:

> English and French are the official languages of Canada and have equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all institutions of the Parliament and government of Canada.

As well, Section 20(1) states:

> Any member of the public in Canada has the right to communicate with, and to receive available services from, any head or central office of an institution of the Parliament or government of Canada in English or French, and has the same right with respect to any other office of any such institution where
>
> (a) there is a significant demand for communications with and services from that office in such language;
>
> or
>
> (b) due to the nature of the office, it is reasonable that communications with and services from that office be available in both English and French.

Most Bills introduced in the House fall under the jurisdiction of one particular Minister. This Bill falls under the jurisdiction of three Ministers. The carriage of the Bill is with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) who is responsible for the proceedings of Parliament, legislation and administration of justice. The Ministry of the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) is responsible for the advancement of English and French. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Mazankowski) is responsible for communications with and services to the public, language of work and participation of English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians.

• (1140)

In the short time available to me, I would like to refer to those parts of the Act within Treasury Board's responsibility. I would like to suggest solutions to some of the problems which have come to my attention, and send a signal that the Government is open to improvement and clarification, whether in second reading debate or committee. We welcome constructive questions and comments for the purpose of clarification in order that the Bill pass second reading and progress to committee stage.

First I will deal with Part IV, "Communications with and Services to the Public". As I suggested, Section 20 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms spells out the rights of a member of the public. As it happens, the same numbered article, Clause 20 in the Bill, reiterates the right of the public to communicate with the Government and receive available services from federal institutions in accordance with that part.

In Clause 21 reference is made to "significant demand". In other words, where there is significant demand the federal institution has the duty to provide, and so on. The question then arises, what is significant demand? That has been asked in the House and it is a legitimate question.

I do not have a precise definition of "significant demand", but I would presume that in making regulations under Clause 21 the Government would take into account the following considerations. I refer the House specifically to Clause 31(2) which states that in prescribing the regulations which define significant demand:

> —the Governor in Council may have regard to
>
> (a) the number of persons composing the English or French linguistic minority population of the area served by an office or facility, the particular characteristics of that population and the proportion of that population to the total population of that area;
>
> (b) the volume of communications or services between an office or facility and members of the public using each official language; and
>
> (c) any other factors that the Governor in Council considers appropriate.

I do not think these are exhaustive but they do give us some idea as to what the Governor in Council would take into account in drafting those regulations.

The Bill goes on to recognize that the travelling public has a right to expect that federal institutions which provide services to those people in particular can communicate in either official language. That provision is found in Clause 22. Why? In order to recognize the bilingual nature of Canada, both nationally and internationally. Most of all, I suggest, it is to make all Canadians feel at home everywhere they travel through this unique and wonderful country.

I also want to address Clause 23 of the Bill, more particularly subclause (1) which states:

> Every federal institution has the duty to ensure that any member of the public can communicate in either official language with, and obtain available services in either official language from, any of its offices or facilities in Canada or elsewhere—

It then goes on to spell out the circumstances, the most important of which concerns the health, safety or security of members of the public. In other words, a member of the public dealing with a federal institution has the right to communicate with that institution in either official language and obtain service from that office in either official language.

Clause 25 regulates persons or organizations whose activities relate to the health, safety or security of members of the public:

> —wherever it is reasonable to do so in the circumstances, that members of the public can communicate with and obtain available services from those persons or organizations in relation to those activities in both official languages.

Why? Because we wanted to give federal regulatory agencies a mandate to take the official language needs of the public into account with respect to health, safety or security of the public. Those three things have to be paramount in anything we legislate.

In this part as well there are provisions to ensure that the public is aware that the services are available in both official languages. For example, in the case of federal institutions there must be signs which point out that each official language is given equal prominence. Clause 29 says in part:

> —it shall communicate by using such media of communication as will reach members of the public in the official language of their choice in an effective and efficient manner that is consistent with the purposes of this Act.

Let me move on now to Part V. First I would point out Clause 30 of the Act which is all too often overlooked. The primary emphasis in Bill C-72 is service to the public. It is pointed out in Clause 30 that where there is an inconsistency between service to the public and the choice of language of work, the service obligation will prevail. As I said, I think that is sometimes overlooked.

In 1969 the Official Languages Act declared the equality of status of the two official languages and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all federal institutions. That fact was raised to the level of a constitutional principle by way of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We feel that the language of work regime set out in the Bill takes into consideration the linguistic reality of our country. It recognizes the existence of two types of work environments: first, those in the National Capital Region and the more bilingual parts of our country where both languages are commonly used; and second, where one of those languages predominates. Obviously the obligations of federal institutions are not going to be the same in both cases. I refer to Clause 33 of the Bill which states:

> English and French are the languages of work in all federal institutions, and officers and employees of all federal institutions have the right to use either official language in accordance with this Part.

I now want to look at some of the questions raised by this particular clause. For example, what about the right to work in either official language in accordance with this part? Does that mean this is unlimited? I think the right has to be understood in the context of the Bill which requires federal institutions to provide certain types of services to public servants in both official languages in certain regions and to create work environments conducive to the use of either official language in such regions. Therefore, the employee's right to choice of language of work is linked to these institutional duties.

As well, the Bill provides, and I stated this earlier, that where there is any inconsistency between the duties of the federal institutions to serve the public in both languages and the duties of those institutions in respect of the language of work of their officers and employees, the obligation to serve the public must prevail.

What about the question of supervisors? Does the Bill require all supervisors to be bilingual? In a bilingual institution as large as the federal Public Service there are work units composed entirely of positions requiring the use of only one language. To insist on bilingual supervisors in such units would be useless. On the other hand, the federal government policy will be to require supervisors to have a real bilingual capacity where the work environment requires it.

• (1150)

What about the work instruments that are referred to in Clause 35? Does that include all the technical manuals of the federal Government? The work instruments to which we refer in the Bill are the manuals, guidelines, circular letters, and forms which are regularly and widely used by employees and which are produced on behalf of the institution concerned. For that reason many technical manuals which are only used by a limited number of employees would not fall under this definition. It will be up to Treasury Board to set out the parameters on work instruments through the regulations and guidelines.

What about the participation of English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians? Our objectives are two-fold: first, that English and French-speaking Canadians should have equal opportunities to obtain federal jobs and promotions: and second, that the workforce of the federal Government should reflect the presence of English-speaking and French-speaking populations in Canada while respecting the principle of merit.

All of the comments which I have made with regard to the Bill, and I tried to be specific with regard to the sections under Treasury Board jurisdiction, should be read in conjunction with Clauses 81 and 82 which refer to the regulation-making authority of the Governor in Council and the Treasury Board. We are inviting suggestions as to whether or not this Bill brings together the old Official Languages Act and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We are inviting suggestions with regard to improvements to the Bill.

One suggestion which may be considered is the requirement that regulations under Clauses 81 and 82 be printed and distributed for a consultative process prior to their issuance and promulgation. In other words, these two sections seek the views of members of the English and French linguistic minority communities and, where appropriate, members of the public. Clause 82 also provides for a review by the permanent committees of the House of Commons and the Senate. This is another improvement which we think could be suggested at committee.

In conclusion, I want to suggest to the House that the Bill may not be perfect, that clarifications may be required, that there may be interpretations which could be requested in committee. We understand that. That is the process through which all Bills go.

I would like to comment on any suggestion by anyone that this Bill has been held up for an inordinate length of time. From memory I believe that there is on the Order Paper Bill C-30 still at second reading, Bill C-33 which has not had second reading, Bill C-54 which is at second reading, and Bill C-72. In other words, we have progressed in working our way through the Order Paper. Now is an appropriate time to deal with Bill C-72.

In doing so we seek tolerance and understanding in debate, in committee, and in implementation of the Act. Since September 1984 we have made great strides as a Government and a country. We have the Meech Lake Accord and we have federal-provincial relations on a level which has not been seen in the last 18 to 20 years. Even when provinces and the federal Government disagree they do so on a level and plane which Canadians understand. It is not down on the low road. We have a working agreement. The child care effort, the tax reform effort, and all the improvements which have been made through the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) demonstrate the ability of the Government to bring the provinces and the federal Government to work together on a regional basis.

This Bill demonstrates the Government's willingness to work together with the founding peoples of this country. I ask that the House and all Members join in the debate, in second reading passage, in committee work, in report stage, and in third reading so that we can send this Act on to the other place as soon as possible.

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, I listened attentively to the speech of the Hon. Member. It was very well reasoned, very thoughtful and, by all normal standards, very convincing. Yet I know that the Hon. Minister has difficulties convincing some of his own back-benchers of the merits of this Bill. I fail to understand why he is not capable of convincing a number of them who are present in this Chamber to abandon the backward, ill-informed, and unrealistic position they have on this very important Bill.

This Bill puts forward a basic concept which has not only been accepted but supported in recent decades by Canadians all across the country. This Bill recognizes a cultural and linguistic reality. The Minister has made some very good points in advancing the merits of this Bill which deserve the support of his own back-benchers.

Therefore, I hope that his back-benchers listened carefully and will not come forward with notions of cost as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg did, as though to him dollars are more important than the national fiber and the cultural and linguistic values of the country. That is unacceptable. If Hon. Members prefer to put dollars before Canadian unity, that is their political responsibility, but we on this side of the House will not stand for that nonsense—we will not. That is a backward, asinine concept.

Therefore, why is the Minister not capable, with the well-reasoned position he took a few minutes ago, of convincing some of the backward back-benchers who are sitting behind him today?

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I tried to suggest in my remarks that this subject was worthy of a long, hard, and reasoned debate and that we should try to deal with it on the high road. I am not at all surprised that my hon. colleague deals with it on the low road. It comes as no surprise to my colleagues in my Party that the Member would try to divide my Party as his Party has tried to do in the past.

Mr. Caccia: No, no.

Mr. Lewis: The Member shakes his head. We were in the House when the legislation on the rights of Francophones in Manitoba was brought forward with one intent in mind, that being to divide our Party. Quite frankly, the gambit failed miserably. We have had a bellyful of being divided by the Liberal Party on this and similar issues. We have had it.

This Hon. Member makes this comment after the Liberals demonstrated four different positions on international trade in Vancouver. Where does the Hon. Member stand on that issue?

Mr. Caccia: What about linguistic rights?

Mr. Lewis: On this issue there is no need to worry about our caucus and our back-benchers. That Member is a dissident who used to sit rather close to the Leader of his Party but is now out on the edge and clinging by his fingernails. He has to have his nomination early because he is afraid of it. The earliest nomination in the Liberal Party is sitting right there because he is afraid he is going to lose it. Do not try to divide our Party with a simple tactic like that.

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, I wonder whether it is fair of the Member in the Official Opposition to bring forward this thought without considering whether he would endorse a resolution to the Quebec Government similar to the resolution which his Party put forward to the Manitoba Government. I want him to think about that.

• (1200)

I have a number of concerns dealing with the regulations that will be put in place by orders in council which will permit the Cabinet or Government to implement language in the work place. One of the principal reasons I object to the Bill, and this is a major dilemma, is that we do not know what will be the basis for these orders in council, we do not know the regulations.

The Minister referred to Clause 2(a) and Clause 31 dealing with regulations which refer to such things as population of an area in order to determine where there is significant demand. The Minister referred to what percentage of the total area would cause these regulations to be implemented. In order for me to support this Bill and represent my constituents, I want to know what that population of an area should be, and what the percentage of the total area should be. I could probably consider whether to support Bill C-72 based on that information which the Minister has referred to as important. If that information is important to the Minister in implementing this, it is important to Members of Parliament in knowing what they are approving in principle.

A similar case, which everyone would understand, existed with a former Bill passed in this Parliament under the former Government. It indicated that orders in council could be passed on the recommendations of a metric commissioner to the Cabinet, implementing mandatory metric in various industries. That did not work. Parliament had no input.

I suggest that this Bill is flawed because it does not give Parliament the opportunity to look at the requirements allowing orders in council to be passed, implementing mandatory regional workplace bilingualism. That is what the debate is about. Could the Minister respond?

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, Clauses 81 and 82 provide for the review on a permanent basis of all regulations and directives. I stated specifically that one consideration may be to provide for those regulations and directives to be reviewed prior to implementation. We are reluctant to pin down numbers in the legislation because it would be difficult to change the Act if there were changes in circumstances.

Debates of this kind are often difficult. Legislative schedules of Government often include other priorities. One may take the case of 5,000 fishermen on the south shore of Nova Scotia who are francophone Acadians. The fisheries officers may well have to be bilingual. However, if all the Acadians were involved in fishing—which I do not know—it may not be as important for people at the agricultural station to be bilingual.

My point is that by leaving it to regulations which are brought about by a consultative process, that are discussed ahead of time and subject to review by a parliamentary committee, we would have the best of both worlds. Clause 31 describes the basic criteria and those regulations should come under Clause 31 and therefore be up for review.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak today to a Bill that I consider vitally important for the country's linguistic minorities. I am of course referring to the Official Languages Act, that to us—when I say us, I mean Acadians, Francophones residing outside Quebec—is particularly important. The Government is to be commended for introducing the Bill at this time, and indeed I want to congratulate the Government for doing so. I also hope that the debate on this Bill will be non-partisan, so that the proposed legislation can be dealt with as quickly as possible.

I said that I congratulated the Government, and I also want to congratulate the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) who said yesterday, and I support him wholeheartedly in this:

[English]

> The renewal of our language policy is intended for all Canadians. It provides for the needs of the majorities by guaranteeing government services for them in their own language. In addition, it recognizes the aspirations of minorities, who have often expressed a desire, and rightly so, to live and prosper using their own language. This Bill reflects the open-mindedness and tolerance of Canadians in matters of language and culture. This generosity of Canadians toward each other is one of the most endearing features of our national identity.

• (1210)

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I think all Members of this House would do well to read this paragraph from the speech made by the Minister of Justice yesterday. It says a great deal about the Bill and about Canadians.

I am sure the proposed legislation will make a lot of associations and a lot of people happy as well, and I am thinking particularly of the Fédération des francophones hors Québec, which at a press conference last week urged the Government to act on the official languages question. The Government was asked to take concrete action as quickly as possible, since we had waited long enough.

Today, the President of the Fédération des francophones hors Québec, Mr. Yvon Fontaine, must be pleased, since the final words of his press release were:

"We believe the federal Government should take action as soon as possible so that the Official Languages Act can become effective without further delay."

Those were Mr. Fontaine's concluding remarks. Well, his wish has almost come true, since we are now at the second reading stage. Madam Speaker, I repeat that I hope we will be able to proceed quickly with the second and third reading stages and that the Bill is adopted as soon as possible.

I also wish to say a few words about an association I know rather well, Canadian Parents for French, who should also be pleased with what is happening here today, especially if they have read, and I am sure they have, the following in the preamble to the Bill, and I quote:

> The Government of Canada is committed to cooperating with provincial governments and their institutions to support the development of English and French linguistic minority communities, to provide services in both English and French, to respect the constitutional guarantees of minority language educational rights and to enhance opportunities for all to learn both English and French;

Of course Canadian Parents for French are delighted, because they have seen it as their role to promote the other official language, in their case French, since most members of this association are English-speaking.

This Bill, as we have said before, is the work of a number of individuals, a number of organizations, associations and even governments. However, I do not think taking the credit is an issue here. The important thing is that we have reached this stage. We have reached our goal, or at least we are well on our way to doing so.

To me, as an Acadian, the Bill also fills a gap left by the Meech Lake Accord. Granted, the Accord recognizes English-speaking and French-speaking minorities. There was also a commitment to preserve that fundamental characteristic of Canada, but only from the province of Quebec. And this is what I would have liked to see in the Meech Lake Accord, Madam Speaker—a commitment by the Canadian Government to promote official languages across the land, rather than the sole province of Quebec making that commitment.

But, you see, even though the Liberal Party proposed an amendment, that was not accepted. The thrust of the Bill now before us is to fill that gap, and I am in fact delighted the Canadian Government accepts the role of promoting that fundamental characteristic of Canada. This is very important, and although I still would have preferred to see that role entrenched in the Meech Lake Accord, I am happy Madam Speaker to see it in the legislation.

Of course the Bill is not perfect, but it is a stage we must go through, and that stage indeed is of great significance to language minorities in Canada. It must be stressed that over these last few years we made very large strides, and I recognize that. Being an Acadian from New Brunswick, Madam Speaker, I am part of that distinct society which had a very stirring history since the very beginnings of Canada's colonization. With our own language, our own culture, our own customs, we are quite distinct. And our language, our culture were not preserved without hardship and difficulty.

If I go back to the 50's when I was in school, those memories now make me smile. Of course such conditions as we had in school at that time would not be accepted today. Let me explain. When I went to school, I had to study arithmetic in English textbooks, also algebra and geometry, and of course The World History. We often had difficulties with mathematics, not because the subject matter was that complicated, but quite simply because we did not understand the language, since everything was received in English. So we had severe difficulties. When I go back and remember the way we were doing the reading and the words we invented because of course we had the wrong accent, the wrong pronunciation, I can tell you that we were making sounds that sometimes were unintelligible. But despite all this, we broke through and we went ahead. How fortunate that this no longer is the case. My children were able to study with French texts and text-books. Of course this is a great step forward, but a lot of ground still has to be covered. Everything has not been done.

This legislation proposes very major changes at the courts level, providing that the individual has a right to be heard and understood in the official language of his or her choice. And this is very important because although a defendant would have the right to be heard in his own language, the presiding judge himself was under no obligation to understand the language chosen. This was a major deficiency which this Bill will remedy. Yet, there is a deficiency in this Bill in view of the fact that the Supreme Court will be excluded. When we deal with this Bill in committee, Madam Speaker, we will have to see whether these provisions could not apply also to the Supreme Court. We know that at least the presiding judge should be able to understand both official languages.

We must also recognize that the amendments to the powers of the Commissioner of Official Languages are also very important. His increased powers will make the legislation enforceable. People will be able to go to court, something they could not do until now. I suggest this is also very important.

Madam Speaker, we need to consider this Bill with a non-partisan, open-minded attitude, and with a will to make progress.

It would be unfortunate if the debate on this Bill would reopen the debate on our official languages everywhere in Canada. I suggest that this debate has already taken place. We should not go back and put everything in question!

We have come a long way and this Bill is the end result of our effort. We should all strive for the success of this Bill by working together in a non-partisan fashion.

Madam Speaker, I am sad to say that when we hear people talk sometimes, one might think of Francophonie or even Anglophonie as a disease. Some people are afraid to accept bilingualism.

To reassure these people who are a little bit afraid, I could tell them not to worry. We do not want to take anything away from anybody, but we want to grant other individuals certain rights.

As I was saying, Madam Speaker, this Bill is not perfect. I did not want to cover all the sections. This is a job we will take on when we deal with the Bill in committee. Madam Speaker, I want the House to know that I fully support this Bill and I strongly urge all Hon. Members of the House to do likewise.

• (1220)

[English]

Mr. Reid: The Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) comes from a bilingual province and, even though he talks in terms of being an Acadian speaking French, he points out difficulties in making his way through life and reaching the great status that he now holds.

The Hon. Member was probably sitting in the House when the Minister spoke, prior to the Hon. Member having the floor. The Minister pointed out that this Bill was designed, to some degree at least, to help make Canadians all across the country feel at home in whatever part of the country they happen to be in.

Does the Hon. Member think that this Bill will alleviate the problems that he experienced growing up in New Brunswick in his ordinary way of life? Is this Bill not more related to the delivery of services rather than getting down to the level of person to person and people meeting in the street?

When the Hon. Member makes his response, I ask him to consider the most unilingual piece of legislation in the country, that is, Bill 101 in the Province of Quebec, and what deterrent does this have in making people feel at home in different provinces where minorities live and work?

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question which is whether this Bill will help us function better as a nation. If we look at the preamble, I do indeed believe it will help us live better lives as Canadians, whether we are Anglophones or Francophones. For instance, this part of the preamble provides that:

> the Government of Canada is committed to enhancing the vitality and supporting the development of English and French linguistic minority communities, as an integral part of the two official language communities of Canada, and to fostering full recognition and use of English and French in Canadian society;

I believe the preamble makes clear that wherever they happen to be, Canadians will not have to cope with the difficult circumstances we faced as Acadians during the fifties. We are making services available to people, and this can only foster the cause of official languages.

My colleague mentioned Bill 101 in Quebec. I would say "Thou beholdest the mote that is in thy brother's eye but considerest not the beam that is in thine own", and I am of course referring, be it reluctantly to the case of MPP Léo Piquette in Alberta, who was denied the right to speak French in the Legislative Assembly. He was not allowed to finish what he had to say, and I am sure no one would get that kind of treatment in Quebec.

[English]

Mr. Graham: I would like to point out to the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) that perhaps some people are not so much concerned with the intent of the Bill but rather with the drafting of the Bill and, because of the drafting, the interpretation which may be placed on it. We believe that the law should be written in such a manner that average citizens can understand it. I consider myself in the category of an average citizen.

The Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent specifically referred to Clause 15(1), the Duty to ensure understanding without an interpreter. If the Hon. Member has a copy of the Bill, I would like him to refer to it. That clause states:

> Every court, other than the Supreme Court of Canada, has the duty to ensure that, in any proceedings conducted before it, any judge or other presiding officer is able to understand the official language or languages in which the proceedings are conducted without the assistance of an interpreter.

We can certainly understand where the Bill may be coming from. I believe that the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent is fortunate enough to be able to converse in both languages. I was wondering if he would look at the French translation of that particular clause and point out to me where judges are referred to in Clause 15(1). I am not overly conversant with the French language, but I am at a total loss to see where judges are referred to at all. This raises the point that the drafting of the Bill has left many loopholes and possibly much misunderstanding. Perhaps this is where the concern is, rather than the partisan approach which he suggested may be the reason for the objections to the Bill. Could he conceivably point out for me where it refers to judges?

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Madam Speaker, I am not sure I understand, because Clause 15(1) provides, and I quote:

> 15. (1) Il incombe aux tribunaux autres que la Cour suprême du Canada de veiller, dans toutes les affaires dont ils connaissent, à ce que le président de l'audience . . .

And I think that is the term he wants, "le président de l'audience" > —comprenne, sans l'aide d'un interprète, la langue officielle dans laquelle se déroule l'affaire et sont rédigés les actes de procédure.

I don't see any problem at all. When rendering the law in another language, one does not do a literal translation. One renders the meaning, and I think it was done quite satisfactorily in this case. I don't see any problem.

[English]

Mr. Crosby: Madam Speaker, let me say at the outset to the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud), that I do not quarrel in any way, shape, or form with the principle of two official languages in Canada. I think that all Canadians support that policy.

• (1230)

I think what Hon. Members are concerned with, and myself in particular, is how that policy is implemented and whether it is implemented in a fair, appropriate, and proper way.

I am sure the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent would not want to promise Francophones in his province, as I would not want to promise Francophones in my provinces, services which they will not receive in the future under this Bill or any other legislation.

I want to review very briefly with him the past experience in the Province of New Brunswick. He knows that under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and under the new Constitution Act passed in 1982 the courts of New Brunswick were made bilingual. The specific provision under Section 19(2) is that English or French may be used by any person in any pleading or process issuing from any court of New Brunswick.

My impression is that in the City of Saint John, for example, if a Francophone comes before a court he cannot be assured that he will be heard in his language. I wonder if the reverse is true in the City of Edmundston. Perhaps an Anglophone can have difficulty being heard in his language.

What we want to be assured of is that if Parliament passes legislation that indicates to Francophones that they can be heard in their language in court, or that Anglophones can be heard in their language in court, we are ready to implement it.

How has that official policy been implemented in New Brunswick over the last six years? Does that situation exist in New Brunswick today, the instant right to be heard before the courts of New Brunswick as guaranteed by Section 19 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

I say to him at the same time that if that is not a reality today he had better have another thought about supporting provisions in Bill C-72 which would purport to do the same sort of thing for other Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Madam Speaker, I really do not see what the Hon. Member's problem is. Even in cases outside New Brunswick, whether an Anglophone can be heard in English or a Francophone can be heard in French has no bearing on this Bill, and I fail to see why we should not go ahead with this Bill. It does not affect the Bill at all. I think we have now reached the point where we have to do something. We must draft certain laws. We must give rights to English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians. Whatever the situation in New Brunswick happens to be, it does not release us from our obligation to proceed. And I believe it is high time we did. We must go ahead, no matter what the situation is elsewhere.

[English]

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, on December 11, 1987 I stood in my place and resigned as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Supply and Services. At that time I said, and I repeat it, that I am a Conservative, a strong Conservative, and a strong supporter of my Party, my colleagues, my Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and in general my Government; that I am also unilingual; that I represent a riding which is overwhelmingly unilingual Anglophone; and that I fear my constituents' rights are jeopardized by Bill C-72 as it is now written.

Why did I resign? It was certainly not because I do not recognize and respect the duality of Canada and the two official languages. I resigned because of the wording and the way Bill C-72 was written and because it is not fair. If Canadians do not believe that it will change the face of Canada judicially, as has been pointed out, the supervisory capacities in the Public Service, the private sector, and by a dictatorial language tsar who is above the law, then they do not believe that Wayne Gretzky plays hockey or that the NDP Leader from Oshawa is or was Vice-President of Socialists International.

I resigned in the vain hope that the Prime Minister would come forth and withdraw this unfair piece of reverse discrimination from the House, or substantially amend it. The Bill was stopped for a little while. We were to have discussions on it, and we had a couple of meetings in which I and most of us who were there were led to believe that there would be no changes in the Bill.

I was more than appreciative of the Minister, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), when he rose a short time ago and said that perhaps now this is not the case. I certainly hope so.

Prior to this, the Bill had been discussed at meetings of the caucuses of B.C., Saskatchewan, and Ontario, and there were severe reservations about its contents. Hon. Ministers and some people in the House would have you believe, Madam Speaker, that this Bill is about fairness. They would have you believe that it is for unity, and this is untrue. All of us in the House want a united Canada. All of us believe in two official languages, but this Bill is patently unfair. It is not about unity. It is about division. Bilingualism is no longer an emotional issue. It is an accepted fact, but this is a matter of fairness and language should not be a power struggle.

Who really wants this Bill? I would like people to tell me. I am sure it is not the majority of Canadians, not my constituents.

My daughter, who has a Masters in Science, applied just a short time ago to Air Canada for a position. When she filled out the forms she was told that because she was not bilingual there would be no need to have an interview—"You can have the interview if you want it, but our policy is no hiring". I wonder what would happen if Bill C-72 went through in these circumstances.

Bill C-72 is about reverse discrimination. It places linguistics above merit regardless of the claim in Section 38(3) which is totally ambiguous. It makes second-class citizens of Anglophones, the majority of Canadians, the 76 per cent of Canadians who operate in an English milieu. This is Draconian legislation, fitting of Machiavelli himself.

Let me now ask who speaks for English Canada? Well, I do and I entreat my other English-speaking colleagues, who I know sit silently opposing the Bill, who have spoken out in committee and in private, to rise to their feet and voice their opposition and not allow constituents to be treated as second-class citizens.

I particularly challenge the press. I want to see the press take apart this Bill clause by clause, understand every part of it, and explain to their readers and viewers, the Canadian public, the true significance contained therein.

• (1240)

Let us look at the facts. Since the Official Languages Act makes us equal and gives equal access and opportunities, supposedly, to both linguistic groups, what has happened in the Public Service since the Act came into force under a Liberal Government and, in particular, Pierre Elliott Trudeau? Administrations became overstaffed with Francophones by 1984. This is what happened in 1986. I have in my hand statistics with respect to 26 departments. Statistics do not lie. I will not read them all out, but I will tell Hon. Members what happened with respect to the percentage of Francophones in these departments from 1984 until now.

In 1984, 50 percent of the staff of the Canadian Human Rights Commission was Francophone. That figure has risen to 59 per cent today. At the offices of the Canadian Intergovernmental Affairs the figure went from 83 per cent to 91 per cent. At the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission office the figure went from 65 per cent in 1984 to 70 per cent today. The Federal Court went from 53 per cent to 57 per cent. The Law Reform Commission went from 65 per cent to 71 per cent, while the offices of the Chief Electoral Officer went from 84 per cent to 88 per cent. The staff at the Veterans Allowance Board went from 33 per cent Francophone to 87 per cent Francophone. Francophone employees at the office of the Commissioner of Official Languages went from 82 per cent to 85 per cent.

Is this fairness? Would this Bill have repercussions the way it is written on these statistics and more? I ask Hon. Members to think about that. This is what has occurred without the dictatorial powers that we would give the Commissioner of Official Languages above the Government and above the law.

The Official Languages Act states "bilingualism where numbers warrant". This wording is to be changed to a "significant demand". What does this mean? Does it mean that 20 Francophones from outside Quebec can complain once a month to the Official Languages Commissioner, that an airline, an officer, a company is not toeing the mark as the Bill is written and interpreted by the Commissioner? Will it be a case of, "Give me the service or I will take you to court"? There would be no recourse to take a person back to court, none in the least.

I have a letter in my hand which I received from the Commissioner of Official Languages some time ago. In this letter he brings to my attention a complaint which he received to the effect that my office provided unilingual telephone reception during the morning of March 14. Although the Official Languages Act applies only to the institutions of the Government of Canada and not to Members of Parliament he takes it for granted that I would wish to be made aware of complaints received by his office and to concern myself with my staff.

From 1979 until to date I have not received one letter written in French from a constituent of Simcoe South. In 1981 I received 10 letters written in French from inmates of Laval Prison in Quebec in answer to a questionnaire dealing with capital punishment which I issued. In February of 1988 I received a letter from Jacques Marchand, of the French-Canadian Association of Ontario. Not one constituent has ever phoned me and spoken in the French language. Yet this Bill will change the face of these things. I ask everyone to read it carefully.

I now refer to an article written by Frank Howard which appeared in his column "Bureaucrats" on February 2, 1988. He writes about the former director of Chancellery of Canadian Orders and Decorations at Government House. He was reported to have caused a commotion because he drafted a letter to the Queen, so to speak, from Her Excellency, so to speak, with respect to some matter of heraldry. The Governor General, a disciple and an appointed head of state, refused to send the letter in English. The Director found himself to be persona non grata and he now finds himself in the Department of Fisheries and Oceans.

I recently sent my householder out in a bilingual format. I noted in it that the average cost of an English only householder is $4,011.23. The bilingual householder cost $7,468.78. I included a questionnaire in the householder to which I received 1,973 replies. I asked the following question:

> Do you favour bilingual service for all federal government departments and crown corporations?
>
> (a) For communities of 5,000 (eg. Toronto, etc.) or more whose mother tongue is French.

Thirty-three per cent replied yes; 59 per cent replied no; and 8 per cent were undecided.

The second part of the question states:

> (b) For communities with 50 or more who request bilingual service for 12 consecutive months?

Sixteen per cent replied yes; 71 per cent replied no; and 4 per cent were undecided.

The next question I asked in the questionnaire was:

> Do you wish to receive my Householder as bilingual in future?

Fourteen per cent replied yes; 82 per cent replied no; and 4 per cent were undecided.

The next question I asked was:

> Do you favour compulsory bilingualism for the Province of Ontario?

Eleven per cent replied yes; 85 per cent replied no; and 4 per cent were undecided.

I have in my hand an article which appeared in The Ottawa Citizen on January 27, 1988, written by Keith Spicer, the former Commissioner of Official Languages. He stated:

> The new law's more legalistic and coercive approach may put at risk the old gentle, persuasive ombudsman approach to language rights—

That is something which we all accept and champion. He went on to state:

> —Quebeckers are linguistically secure with Bill 101 and broadly convinced that the old Official Languages Act has worked; only French-speakers outside Quebec and Ottawa's language administrators really seem eager for a stronger law;

Amen, Madam Speaker.

In 1981 we received the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. As has been pointed out time and again by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) and by myself, is there anywhere in the Charter which protects you, Madam Speaker, or me from discrimination by reason of language? I will tell Hon. Members that there is not. There is no provision for property rights. There are notwithstanding clauses. We have problems before the House with respect to abortion because of this imperfect document. I am proud to say that I voted against it.

In 1987 we had the Meech Lake Accord. Bill 101 was already in place in the Province of Quebec as a result of our good friend René Lévesque. For all intents and purposes that made Quebec unilingually French. There are no English signs. When Premier Bourassa said that he would relax that law, Zellers put up some bilingual signs which were fire bombed. Is that fairness? Is this how the Official Languages Act of this country works? Is this how the Charter of Rights and Freedoms works?

If Meech Lake is passed and "significant demand"is instilled into the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and our Constitution then what will happen with Bill 101? Is there any element of English-speaking persons in Canada who want Bill 101 and want to institutionally and individually bilingualize the country the document which we have in front of us? I want a united Canada. I want an Official Languages Act that will work. But I do not think that any free people should ever have a minority language right enforced by the law of the country.

The Meech Lake Accord refers to distinct society. Is Premier Bourassa now waiting for the distinct society provision to take effect in order to legitimize this discriminatory Bill? What a hammer to have in place in conjunction with Bill C-72 as well. The distinct society provision could legitimize unilingualism while the rest of us would be struggling for a bilingual country.

Regarding the preamble of Bill C-72, there are two approaches to bilingualism in Canada today. One is that all Canadians have access to the institutions of Canada and essential services yet remain unilingual without jeopardizing their careers. We all support that. The second option is that everyone has the capacity to interchange language in any way, in other words, be fluently bilingual. Until now that has worked as everybody has been saying. It has been enshrined in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. However, for the first time, we have legislation through Bill C-72 which will force the abandonment of option one and pull this country inexorably toward institutional bilingualism.

The quote I have in my hand has been given in the House of Commons time after time. I will not go through the Alberta report again. What this quote is saying can and probably will be true if Bill C-72 goes through in its present shape and form.

I would like to quote what the Minister of Energy Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) has said in his hiring practices. On page three under the objectives it is stated that the suppliers of goods and services of the Department in bilingual regions shall provide such goods and services in both official languages. This would pertain to any corporation in Canada doing business with the federal Government. The manual also indentifies springboard positions that foster the accelerated development of incumbents and staff with high potential candidates, 30 per cent of whom are to be Francophones, not bilingual but Francophones.

• (1250)

The old Act was based on service to the public. Bill C-72 changes all that, giving every public servant the right to work in the language of his or her choice. The Language Commissioner would like us to believe that this will pertain only to the National Capital Region and designated areas. However, we know that in reality, any supervisory position or opportunities thereto in the public service will have bilingualism as a prerequisite because of this Bill, just in case one should have to communicate in both French and English.

Bill C-72 states that the instruments of work must be provided in both official languages. I heard the Minister reply to this by saying that it was nothing to think about. Every piece of software, hardware and equipment for communication in Canada must be bilingual-capable. The DND regulations were just translated a while ago, costing tens of millions of dollars. The cost will be astronomical in the face of the deficit we are fighting so hard.

Both the federal and the Ontario Governments have designated Toronto as a city where French-language services are to be provided. They should be providing it in Italian. How can they justify this course of action when the 1981 Census figures show that the number of residents of Metro Toronto who speak French is only 0.69 of the population? To serve the people in French, 99.3 per cent of the population will pay the millions, and I mean millions of dollars, to have everything done in two languages. Obviously it means jobs, jobs for Francophone people. Unfortunately, that provision will not protect the ethnic people. The ethnic people of the City of Toronto and elsewhere will have to be bilingual as well.

Bill C-72 confuses two important issues. The present Official Languages Act commits the Government to bilingualism, not the country. Bill C-72 commits the country to such a concept.

The Official Languages Commissioner is above the law. He is a tsar. He is answerable only to the Charter of Rights, not to Parliament. He can charge, subpoena and accuse but he himself cannot have that done to him.

Language in the workplace will change the face of this nation. It will mean that the private sector doing business with the Government will have to have bilingual employees in order to serve public servants in the language of their choice. Bill C-72 does this by simply making a bilingual capacity a prerequisite for all government jobs.

Indeed, it is apparent by the thrust of the preamble that an ability to speak in both languages will become a prerequisite for all jobs in Canada. The Bill may not spell that out loud and clear, one may have to search a bit for it, but it is there.

Already the Act denies the right of unilingual Canadians to take any position in the Public Service with a supervisory capacity. It demands that all federally-appointed court judges with the exception of the Supreme Court be bilingual. My hon. friend, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), suggested in his opening remarks that Bill C-72 would not do that, that although the actual legislation refers to all courts, somehow, some way, not all courts would be affected. One of the officers of the Law Society of Canada phoned me, however, to tell me of his grave fears about the whole issue.

Canadians want to be bilingual. We should teach French in schools from kindergarten on. The ability to absorb a second language falls drastically from the age of six. This has been proven by Chomsky, the father of linguistics who I studied in anthropology and who is still alive and well at MIT. Put it in the schools, but do not jam it down our throats through a Bill that takes away people's rights. Who wants this Bill? Is this what Canadians really want? Let us be very clear. The bilingualization of all Canadians means a great deal of expense, energy and effort. It is not fair and it is a decision which should not be taken lightly. Without having to resort to a complex and expensive poll, I can tell Hon. Members that the answer is no, my constituents do not want this, westerners do not want it and most maritimers do not want it. Even some people from Quebec do not want it. Certainly I believe that the provinces in general do not want it. I wish we could have a secret ballot on this. I wish this Bill would be amended drastically or would be totally withdrawn. I challenge Members from all parts of the House to think very carefully on it.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, I certainly do not share the views just expressed by my colleague, particularly when he claims that Anglophones in Quebec are not allowed to speak and that bilingualism is a fact of life in the rest of Canada.

I should like the Hon. Member to tell me whether he accepts the fact that a French-speaking MLA, say in Alberta, is not allowed to use his mother tongue, French of course. So how can he tell us that the rest of Canada is bilingual, but that Quebec is not? I think that is false.

I would like to know his views. Why be so strongly opposed to this Bill which would ensure that federal institutions provide services in both official languages throughout the country but which does not apply to all provincial legislatures?

Can the Hon. Member tell us how come he is so dead set against Quebec's Bill 101 and yet does not say anything about the other provinces, about MLAs like those in Alberta who dare not speak French lest they be dragged before the court?

[English]

Mr. Stewart: Madam Speaker, I am not opposed to bilingualism where the numbers warrant it in all federal institutions as the Act spells it out now. Leave it alone; it is not broken, do not fix it.

How would we expect the people of Alberta to ever countenance bilingualism in the Alberta Government on the strength of what has happened in the Province of Quebec with Bill 101, with Meech Lake in limbo and with all the things that have gone on there? I do not recall hearing of any fire-bombings or mailbox-bombings in Alberta. I do not recall hearing of a linguistics struggle in Alberta.

I might point out that the English-speaking population of the Province of Quebec is more than that of many of the western provinces themselves. The problem exists and we know it. However, this Bill will not correct it.

Again, I would like to reiterate for the Hon. Member that I champion bilingualism from kindergarten up in the educational system, not through phoney legislation designed to force francophone participation in Canada. That is what this Bill is, make no mistake about it. It does not force Anglophones into positions. I would meet the Hon. Member at any time, and I want it clearly understood that I do not oppose the French language but I certainly oppose this Bill.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to comment briefly on this speech and to do so in English. I am a Member who challenges the question that has been asked, who speaks for English-Canada?

This has been an extraordinarily divisive speech behind the protestations of support for national unity, support for bilingualism and support for the Official Languages Act of 1969. It makes me as a member of the Joint Standing Committee on Official Languages think that we really do work there in one of those solitudes that this country has known far too often.

It is quite clear to us, dealing with agencies of the Government and officials who head Departments, that the Official Languages Act points to the changes that are being proposed by this Bill. The Hon. Member recognizes that bilingualism is advancing in various Departments, which is not to say that there are 85 per cent Francophone Canadians in the Official Languages Commissioner's office but rather that 85 per cent of the persons there are capable of working in both languages. When he brings that kind of reality into the question to pander to the fears of some parts of the Canadian population, he is doing something extraordinarily divisive.

I realize that it is one o'clock. One could say a great deal more, but I, as one Canadian who speaks English far better than French, regret what the Hon. Member has said.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. later this day.

The House took recess at 1 p.m.

---

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[Translation]

CANADA POST CORPORATION

JOB SECURITY FOR RURAL CONTRACT AGENTS—NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO MAKE CORRECT DECISIONS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Some time ago, Mr. Speaker, I called the attention of the House on the unacceptable situation Canada Post rural contract agents must live with. At the time, I described the situation faced by Mr. Ronald Laliberté, from Hawkesbury, in my Glengarry—Prescott—Russell riding, who has been a rural contract agent for the Post Office for over 30 years and who, because of some Canada Post procedure, could find himself without a job in spite of his long and loyal services. For almost two years now, 5,000 rural contract agents are faced with the same dilemma as Mr. Laliberté when they see their contracts extended without any guarantee from Canada Post.

The Minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation should make the required decisions by making it possible for rural contract agents to renew their contracts without jeopardizing their jobs. Why should a Canadian citizen who has been a Post Office employee for 30 years have to make a bid each year to keep his job? Mr. Speaker, such an attitude is altogether unacceptable, and the Government of Canada should protect the job of rural contract agents in this country.

* * *

[English]

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—EFFECT ON UNBORN BABIES

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, the recent Supreme Court ruling overturning Section 251 of the Criminal Code leaves all unborn babies defenceless in their mother's womb.

Did you know that four days after conception sex can be determined under a special microscope? Or that 24 to 25 days after conception the heart begins to beat and pump its own blood? Or that 43 days after conception brain waves can be detected? Or that 30 days after conception, foundations of the brain, spinal cord, nerves and sense organs are completely formed?

All of the following occur even before the mother knows she is pregnant: nerves and muscles begin working together; lips become sensitive to touch and the shape of the body is unmistakably human and possesses all the internal organs of an adult. In fact, the stomach produces digestive juices, the liver manufactures red blood cells, and the kidney eliminates uric acid from the body. Even the legs, arms, fingers and toes have already been formed. From this point on the only changes will be in size and sophistication of use of the unborn's parts.

Under Canadian law there is no cut-off date after which abortions may not be performed. It is incumbent upon Parliament to exhibit moral leadership in establishing laws to stop the killing of approximately 100,000 babies in their mothers' wombs each year.

S. O. 21

HOUSING

PLIGHT OF HOMELESS—INCREASED GOVERNMENT FUNDING URGED

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, in Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver, Ottawa, and in every other Canadian city, there are men and women without shelter. They sleep in the streets, on park benches, in abandoned buildings, and under bridges. The number of people chronically without shelter is still relatively small but nonetheless significant, and the fact it is increasing is alarming.

During 1987, the United Nations International Year of Shelter for the Homeless, the Canada Council on Social Development produced a comprehensive study of homelessness in Canada. Its recommendations, ranging from a complete review of the Canada Assistance Plan, expanding social programs and developing new ones, to establishing national objectives for increasing the supply of low-cost housing, and viewing housing construction as a vehicle to put people back to work, have the potential to go a long way. What is needed now is a strong commitment by the federal Government and provincial Governments to provide the money and support necessary to implement these recommendations.

The International Year of Shelter for the Homeless has passed, but the problem will persist until we can find the political will to change it. I urge the Government to meet that challenge, and there is no better place to do it than when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brings his Budget forward tomorrow. He could increase the funding allocation for the homeless then.

* * *

POLITICAL PARTIES

ARCTIC SOVEREIGNTY—POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative northern defence policy of providing optimum protection and sovereign control at a reasonable price is compelling in its good sense and logic. The NDP policy of surrendering the nation to the first Russian soldier to step off his skidoo might appeal to a few. What makes no sense at all is the Liberal policy outlined in Vancouver by their Party Leader (Mr. Turner) on the weekend.

The Liberals would spend billions of dollars on diesel submarines completely incapable of operating under the ice, thereby abandoning any semblance of Canadian Arctic sovereignty to the Americans. Using the same logic, maybe the Liberals would want to replace our tanks with Roman catapults, equip our infantry with longbows, and reintroduce the cavalry.

S. O. 21

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—DISTURBANCES IN GAZA AND WEST BANK—UNITED STATES PEACE PLAN

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, it is with a sense of unease that I watch the struggle, feel the hostility, and sense the futility on all sides of the disturbances in the Gaza and West Bank. The confrontations have created a dangerously unstable situation which causes serious concern for many people in Canada and around the world.

Since 1945, 150 regional wars have caused 20 million casualties, mostly civilian men, women and children, and forced many people to seek refuge from violence and oppression. While some of these disputes in the Middle East have been settled, the same is not true in the Gaza and West Bank despite many concrete attempts to resolve the situation. Recent events demonstrate the need for direct negotiations towards a peaceful resolution of the conflict. Valuable time is being lost in the search for a just and lasting peace that recognizes Israel within secure boundaries and responds to the aspirations of the Palestinians.

Restoration of order is a necessary first step. While no army or police force in the world should have to forgo its right to self-defence, it remains true that human rights know no boundaries and must be respected. I urge all parties to refrain from further aggression and to work towards an environment in which a negotiated settlement can be found. The U.S. peace plan may be such a starting point. It is an initiative worth serious consideration. Let this not be another tragedy of lost opportunity.

* * *

• (1405)

IMMIGRATION

SENATE DELAY IN PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, during the past two weeks Canadians have been skilfully manipulated by Mahmoud Mohammad, the terrorist convicted in Greece of attacking an Israeli jet in which there was a loss of life. Flanked by his family, this individual told Canadians that he was rehabilitated, and gave a hazy account of the terrorist attack.

It has now been proven that Mr. Mohammad's account of the incident was false. However, there is a major principle at stake here. The principle is what this individual represents. Terrorists have no compassion, pity, or remorse. Their only aim is terror, to be achieved by any means they have at their disposal. Any human being is a potential target for these cowardly people for they only prey on those who cannot defend themselves.

These individuals have been responsible for thousands of innocent deaths throughout the world. They are responsible for the unprecedented security now enforced at all points of departure. Yet this individual is making a mockery of our immigration system. While the Government has passed C-55 and C-84 to control this abuse, the Senate continues to stall its process. I call on the other place to act before more criminals enter Canada.

* * *

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

GREATER DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION REQUIRED

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Assistant Deputy Registrar General, Mr. Kingsley, claimed that the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) arrangements do not constitute a potential conflict of interest.

I would assert that this is not the case. By his actions the Prime Minister is in a natural conflict. As this House knows, we are studying Bill C-79, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act. Negotiations are ongoing regarding the disclosure of the financial status of local political Party associations and a fuller disclosure of the financial transactions of the central Parties.

Ordinary Canadians deserve to know what is happening with money provided by rebates and tax credits. They wish to know what the federal Parties are doing with this money. The New Democratic Party has always been in favour of open disclosure. Despite our attempts during negotiations with the other Parties, all we have been given in the Bill is a voluntary disclosure of the financial status of local association funds. This is simply not good enough. We must either eliminate this farce, or make the legislation binding and enforceable.

It seems that working Canadians cannot expect the Prime Minister and his Party to be in favour of the disclosure of his Party's financial records when it includes information that is embarrassing to himself. Mr. Speaker, ordinary Canadians, through the tax rebate system and the tax credit system, are paying a lot of money to the PC Fund. We deserve to know and should have legislation to ensure that that information is available to the public.

* * *

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—CALL FOR MEASURES TO PROTECT UNBORN CHILDREN

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court of Canada has struck down the abortion law as breaching the Charter of Rights. However, the court has not said that the Charter gives a woman the right to an abortion. Rather, it has said that, although Section 251 of the Criminal Code breaches the Charter, Parliament does have the power to enact legislation restricting abortion and protecting the unborn child.

As one of my constituents said, we did not elect the Supreme Court to govern Canada. Surely, with due respect to Parliament as a mechanism of Canadian democracy, we could re-enact Section 251 of the Criminal Code as well as invoking the provisions of Section 33 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms to provide protection to the unborn child pending a permanent solution to this very pressing problem.

* * *

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—CALL FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, the natural reaction of the Government when facing a controversial issue like abortion is to sit on the fence and avoid falling into either camp. That is exactly what it is doing now.

Last week the highest court in the land ruled that women have a right to decide on the choices affecting their own reproduction. As a result, the country is in a state of confusion. Abortion is now supposed to be legal but most provinces have done nothing to come to terms with this reality.

The tidal wave has swept across the country and the Conservative Government is refusing to clean up the chaos left behind. I ask the Government to start cleaning up, to start facing today's new reality. Canada is confused and needs direction.

When is the Conservative Government going to stop studying the document and start facing its responsibilities? When are Canadian women across Canada going to have equal access to all services and options regarding reproduction? When is the federal Government going to give the provinces and the people of Canada some leadership on this issue?

I ask the Government at least to recognize that women have more choice today than they did last week and that access to all choices and options concerning reproduction must be guaranteed. It is time that the Government started cleaning up the confusion.

* * *

[Translation]

TRADE

IMPORTANCE OF FREE TRADE FOR QUÉBEC

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, 800 members of our important business community got together in Quebec City to hear Ambassador Simon Reisman talk about free trade.

The business community of the major 03 area have come to realize that free trade means above all the preservation for the Province of Quebec of an export market in the United States of nearly $18 billion a year. Quebec businessmen see free trade as a tremendous opportunity to reach an additional market of nearly 250 million customers. The manufacturing industry, the service industry, the agricultural industry are winners, and so are Quebecers, together with Premier Bourassa!

When Mr. Reisman was asked about the position adopted by the Leader of the Liberal Party of Canada, he said, and I quote: "Are you referring to the statement he made on Tuesday, or that he made on Wednesday, or to the contradictory statement on Thursday? If we wait until Saturday, he might have something entirely different to say".

* * *

YOUTH

SOCIAL PROGRAMS—ABSENCE OF REAL POLICY IN CONSERVATIVE PARTY FOR YOUTH—OUTLOOK FOR FUTURE

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, an article which appeared in the newspaper Le Devoir has raised a very important matter for the future of the country, more specifically dealing with young Canadians.

This question is raised at a time when the various governments are considering the rationalization of funds invested in social programs, including higher contributions of workers to various pension funds.

Mr. Speaker, what is the Government doing for our young people? Why such striking disparity between the financial assistance granted to them and that granted to other groups in the community?

Let me quote part of that article: "If, as it is considered, contributions to the Quebec and Canada pension plans have to be increased to more than 10 per cent, it would be disastrous for unskilled workers and especially young people."

The financing of pension plans appreciably reduces their wages which are already low.

Our young people should not be penalized in the interests of other groups in our community. They should be granted the necessary aid to face such social changes.

Unfortunately, it seems that we cannot rely on the Minister of State (Youth) (Mr. Charest) for the implementation of such programs, thus showing the lack of any real policy for young people within the Conservative Government.

I will not ask directly to the minister what are his intentions because I already know his answer: "The rate of unemployment has decreased, the economy and our young people are doing fine."

With such a reply, what kind of future can our young people who are experiencing problems and youth generally expect?

* * *

• (1410)

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BERLIN WALL—DISMANTLING URGED

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, 1988 marked the beginning of the twenty-sixth year since the erection of the Berlin Wall, first established in 1961 to seal off the Soviet sector from the rest of Berlin.

The Berlin Wall remains an ugly and hated symbol of the division of Germany and the German people, and is a monument to the distrust and paranoia of the communist regime. While we struggle to deal with the many and vast differences between East and West, the tragedy that is the Berlin Wall should not be allowed to slip into obscurity.

The Wall epitomizes the difference between East and West and defines the reality of the Soviet Bloc, a vast prison from which there is little chance of escape. It has divided a nation and a people, and must be demolished. Not to do so would be a betrayal of the many brave individuals who have lost their lives attempting to scale its treacherous walls.

I call upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Government of Canada to use all available measures to maintain pressure on the Soviet Union until this barricade to freedom is dismantled, never to be erected again.

* * *

HEALTH

MEDICAL RECORDS—ABSENCE OF UNIFORM REGULATIONS GOVERNING RETENTION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, at present no federal legislation regulates the length of time medical records must be retained, nor does legislation require doctors or hospitals to release medical records or test results to patients.

When doctors do not release this kind of information to their patients and files are eventually discarded, a patient is left with no records at all.

The need for these records is becoming increasingly evident. Many illnesses take considerable time for diagnosis and medical histories have a bearing on the health of descendants and other family members. Our increasingly mobile population adds to the difficulty of updating medical records.

• (1415)

At present each province and territory has jurisdiction over its own Health Ministry regulations on the issue of the retention of medical records. These run the gamut from no regulations at all in Newfoundland, Saskatchewan and the Northwest Territories, to Prince Edward Island which retains records for 50 years if microfilmed. Other provinces retain them for varying lengths of time, from five years in Quebec to 30 years in Manitoba.

I urge the Government to work with the provinces to develop a consistent policy across the country on this important matter.

---

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF NATIONAL POLICY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it has been about two weeks since the Supreme Court of Canada made its ruling on abortion. It is a controversial decision, but the Supreme Court has ruled and it is now the law of the land.

The Supreme Court has said that whether or not a woman may have an abortion is not a matter for a therapeutic abortion committee, or a provincial Premier, to decide. Any future changes to the law must be made by Parliament, not by the provinces. Has the Prime Minister advised the Premiers that they should not attempt to frustrate the ruling of the Supreme Court of Canada?

I should think the Prime Minister would agree with me that it is for Parliament to show some leadership in this matter, so I ask when he will bring forth a detailed national policy for abortion so that women in this country from one coast to the other are treated equally?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition because it allows me the opportunity to remind the Right Hon. Leader again of the fact that we on the federal level have indeed been giving very urgent priority to this matter and giving leadership on a national level.

The fact is that the Supreme Court decision has left a void in terms of the law of our land with respect to abortion. That has been acknowledged. We in the federal Government have been in consultation, my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, with his provincial counterparts, and I with the provincial Ministers of Justice and Attorneys General of the provinces. We in the federal Government believe that a legislative approach on the federal level is appropriate and are therefore dealing and consulting with our provincial colleagues who have a very significant role in terms of the delivery of medical services.

I conclude by saying that Canada now, I think, as a result of the Supreme Court decision, is the only western industrialized country which does not have legislative rules with respect to abortion. We are considering all of our options in that regard and hope to present them to Parliament, so that we can debate the matter on the floor of this House at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is a more positive response than the responses we received earlier when both the Minister of Justice and his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, said they were consulting with their provincial colleagues but, frankly, giving the country the impression that this consultation was a surrendering of jurisdiction or responsibility.

DIFFERENCES IN PROVINCIAL APPROACHES TO PROVISION OF SERVICES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to come back once again to the Prime Minister. Does he think it is acceptable that in one province a rape victim will not have an abortion paid for under medicare unless she faces death, while in another province all abortions are fully funded?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I won't answer the question directly. I want to say to the—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Just answer the question.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): No, I will not answer it directly—

Mr. Kaplan: That's your job.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —and I will tell the Right Hon. Leader why.

• (1420)

I said yesterday, along with the Minister of Justice today, that we are looking at various options. I mentioned yesterday that there are certain interpretations, for instance, also relating to the Canada Health Act which are not correct.

It is better to consult with the provinces and put forward exactly the types of questions and positions that the right hon. gentleman has put forward, than to speculate on the floor of the House.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that the consultation described by the Minister of Health would be leadership and not just an attempt to build up a consensus when it is obvious that various provinces are treating this matter in different ways, to the detriment of equality across the country.

[Translation]

SUPREME COURT DECISION—"NOTWITHSTANDING" CLAUSE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my third question to the Minister of Justice.

I thought the Minister had assured me in this House, eleven days ago, that the Government would not use the "notwithstanding" clause of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms to try to disregard the Supreme Court ruling, but the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe has indicated on television last weekend that the Minister had said to some Members of his caucus that he was still thinking of using the "notwithstanding" clause to bypass the Supreme Court ruling.

The Minister has had two weeks to reflect on that. Will he tell me whether or not he is going to use the "notwithstanding" clause to try to thwart the decision of the Supreme Court?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the advice and counsel that I have received from the Official Opposition, and I look forward to hearing their unanimous view as to how to deal with this very serious problem.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You have heard our view. You are the Government; now tell us your view.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The right hon. gentleman was the Minister of Justice when the present law, which was struck down by the Supreme Court of Canada, was in fact passed in the House. Subsequent Ministers of Justice in previous administrations gave us assurances, not only with respect to this legislation but also in terms of our debate on the constitutional matter, that this provision was quite within the parameters of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

I have responded fully and frankly to the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Section 33 or not Section 33?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I have answered that question, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Government. I now tell the right hon. gentleman that we are anxious to give leadership, because I believe that this is an issue which the people of Canada do not want partisanship to enter into, but they want a sense of leadership, cohesion, and co-operation to bring the best possible result in a difficult situation.

I ask the right hon. gentleman to join with me, the Prime Minister, and other members of the Government to bring this matter to a satisfactory conclusion.

* * *

[Translation]

THE CABINET

QUERY WHEN PRIME MINISTER WAS TOLD OF SERIOUS PROBLEMS CONCERNING TWO MINISTERS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and concerns the circumstances surrounding the resignation from Cabinet of the former Minister of Supply and Services, the Hon. Member for Langelier.

Can the Prime Minister tell us exactly when he was advised that scandals were about to come out involving two of his Ministers, the Hon. Member for Joliette and the Hon. Member for Langelier, during the fall of 1986, and whether it was on November 10 or on some other date? When exactly was the Prime Minister informed about the existence of serious problems involving two of his Ministers and what action did he take at that time? Why did he wait to be publicly embarrassed before taking action?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the question is false. I have already given a clear and specific answer to the House about the information I was given. I acted immediately and quickly in this matter.

[English]

INFORMATION ALLEGEDLY CONVEYED TO PRIME MINISTER'S PRINCIPAL SECRETARY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, according to reliable reports, Mr. Bernard Roy was told by none other than a Minister of the Crown of imminent problems involving two of his cabinet colleagues.

I want to ask the Prime Minister the following question. Has he, during the last three days, asked Mr. Roy of his office for an explanation as to why the Prime Minister was not apprised of the circumstances, and what has he done to ensure that he is informed of difficult and potentially embarrassing situations in the future? If he has not done that, why not?

• (1425)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think colleagues will want to remember the prefatory remark of my hon. friend. He says: "According to reliable reports". He then goes on to quote an article in Le Devoir which reads as follows:

[Translation]

Le Devoir has been able to verify that it was during the week of Monday, November 10, 1986, that Mr. Masse advised the principal assistant of Brian Mulroney that the situation was such that it might also smear the reputation of Ministers Roch La Salle and Michel Côté.

Le Devoir would not have been able to verify that because, during the week of November 10, 1986, Mr. Masse was not in Canada.

* * *

FINANCE

FORTHCOMING BUDGET—NON-PAYMENT OF TAXES BY PROFITABLE CORPORATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Perhaps tomorrow we will have the last budget of this Government before the next elections.

An Hon. Member: I hope so, I hope so!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, even with the so-called reforms of the Minister of Finance more than 60,000 profitable companies will not pay any taxes at all. My question to the Prime Minister is very simple: would he guarantee right now that the Government will turn the situation around tomorrow?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wonder why we should overhaul a system which has created in excess of 1.1 million new jobs since September 1984 and which has produced the highest rate of economic growth among the seven summit member countries.

[English]

Housing starts at 10-year record levels, double digit business investment, and consumer and business confidence at record levels.

In 1987, 474,000 new jobs were created under policies brought forward by this Government. That represents the largest number of jobs ever created in Canada since Statistics Canada began collecting data.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I will tell the Prime Minister why we want change. First, it is because he promised that there would be fairness, in the 1984 election, and, second, because the tax system in Canada is still unfair. That is why we want change.

REQUEST THAT ALL CORPORATIONS PAY TAX

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, considering that, for example, the Alcan Corporation with profits of $220 million last year will not pay any taxes with this system, that the Power Financial Institution with profits of $132 million will pay no taxes, and that Hudson's Bay with profits last year of $50 million will pay no taxes, and considering what the Prime Minister himself promised in the 1984 election, will he now deliver on that promise and make sure that these companies, as well as others, will have to pay a minimum tax when they make profits? Will they pay taxes like other Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a number of important initiatives have been introduced by the Minister of Finance since 1984 to ensure that all Canadians pay a fair share of tax. A large number of tax avoidance measures have been introduced. I might point out to my hon. friend that we shut down one of the great scams in the history of Canada introduced by the Liberals, the SRTC, which drained almost $1 billion out of research and development in Canada.

My hon. friend mentions Alcan, Hudson's Bay, and other corporations. I would have to examine to see whether these corporations took losses in the past, whether they made investments, whether these are "loss carried forward" situations.

[Translation]

I know that Alcan is creating thousands of jobs in Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean. Is the Hon. Member suggesting that we ought to do something against the interests of Alcan even though the company has followed the basic rules applying to Canada?

[English]

With regard to the fairness situation, my hon. friend can do a great deal in regard to the importance of fairness that he raises. The Minister of Finance has introduced tax reform which will mean that eight Canadians out of ten will pay less tax, that nine seniors out of ten will pay less tax, and that 875,000 Canadians will pay no tax at all.

He should support the Progressive Conservative Government. There is a fundamental measure of tax fairness.

• (1430)

REQUEST THAT MINIMUM CORPORATE TAX BE INTRODUCED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Prime Minister has at his fingertips additional material on his briefing note that will show that after 1984 his Government increased taxes on the average family by some $1,300 and that when these so-called reforms are put in place the only people who will be paying lower taxes than when the Conservatives were elected in Canada in 1984 will be the richest 2 per cent of Canadians. That is the so-called reform coming from the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister cited a number of companies that perhaps did not make any profits in one year and therefore are not paying taxes. We agree that if, in a given year, they do not make profits then they do not pay taxes that year. I would have thought that the Prime Minister would do as his friend Ronald Reagan of the United States did. He brought in a minimum tax. When a company makes a profit, it pays taxes, as they do in the United States. Therefore will he bring in tomorrow a Budget that will ensure that the 60,000 companies that will be profitable will not go scot-free but will pay their taxes like other Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Ronald Reagan will be delighted with the compliment from the Leader of the NDP. I will phone him right after Question Period.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend is asking me to be—

Mr. Riis: Fair, honest.

Mr. Mulroney: Talking about projections and predictions, I should remind him that when the Minister of Finance in 1984 introduced his Budget the Leader of the NDP stood up in the House and predicted that our Budgets would mean the loss of 150,000 jobs in Canada. He was dead wrong in his economic projections. There were not 150,000 jobs lost. There were 1.1 million new jobs created. That is how wrong my hon. friend has been.

With regard to tax fairness, obviously we want everyone to pay his or her fair share of tax. However, my hon. friend, and I may be wrong, just went down to Montreal. He talked about incentives for medium and small business—la PME à Montréal—and he talked about tax incentives. When a company accumulates tax incentives it takes tax write-offs to create jobs. That is exactly what the Hon. Member was suggesting on the weekend, that they have these kinds of incentives to create employment.

When a company does that, it is not violating fairness if it takes those tax write-offs in a subsequent year. That is part and parcel of programs put forward by the NDP in Manitoba and by the NDP in this House. You cannot have it both ways.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

THE ADMINISTRATION

CONFLICT OF INTEREST CODE—POSITION OF ASSISTANT DEPUTY REGISTRAR GENERAL

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I believe he will appreciate after 24 hours' reflection that the position announced yesterday by Mr. Jean-Pierre Kingsley with respect to an exemption from the Conflict of Interest Code, specifically Clause 24 dealing with political Party funds, has potentially far-reaching implications for all Category A public office holders, both current holders and future holders.

My question to the Prime Minister is the following. Given that Mr. Kingsley is not an officer of Parliament and therefore not accountable to Parliament, but is, rather, a civil servant accountable to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and to the Prime Minister, will the Prime Minister direct Mr. Kingsley to provide Parliament with a full explanatory briefing setting out the rationale for the position announced by him yesterday? I hope that the Prime Minister will welcome this prudent and reasonable suggestion.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question yesterday. I indicated yesterday and on other occasions that there will be an important piece of legislation introduced soon in the House that will deal with this and important allied matters. At that point in time, clearly, my hon. friend will no doubt want to raise matters of concern to him involving this and other items. At that time I will be happy on behalf of the Government and my colleagues to listen to him and to produce to the extent humanly possible any expert testimony that he might wish.

I think what all Members of Parliament want is an effective piece of legislation, recognizing that there is no substitute for personal integrity. We want an effective piece of legislation that does not needlessly place Members of Parliament in a straitjacket which will preclude them from leading lives. I seek this. I presume my hon. friend seeks the same thing. I will be happy to work with him and officers of the Government to bring this about.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF POSITION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is indeed right. He did say yesterday that legislation is coming and he promised to work with the Opposition. We welcome that. That is not what I am asking about today.

I am asking about an exemption declared yesterday by Mr. Kingsley without any explanation whatsoever based on the current legislation that now applies. Given that Mr. Kingsley is not an officer of Parliament and therefore not accountable to Parliament, but rather a civil servant accountable to Cabinet and ultimately to the Prime Minister, will the Prime Minister direct Mr. Kingsley to explain the rationale behind the judgment brought down yesterday based on the current conflict of interest guidelines, and not based on some future legislation the Prime Minister might introduce in the weeks ahead?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question raised by my hon. friend deals with Mr. Kingsley's opinion. It is one that he delivered. It is clear cut. It deals with the matters raised by Members of the House. My hon. friend, I suppose, if he wishes to interrogate him or any other public servant, can seek the appropriate instrument to do so.

In fairness to Mr. Kingsley, because certainly no one would want to impugn his motives, he provided a public document which stands by itself on its own. If my hon. friend has any questions he wishes to ask him, then I suppose he can direct them to the appropriate people.

* * *

[Translation]

THE ADMINISTRATION

MICHEL CÔTÉ AFFAIR—QUERY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER BRIEFED BY HIS PRINCIPAL SECRETARY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Prime Minister. According to Le Devoir reporter Michel Vastel, Bernard Roy and the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources had a conversation last November about a potential conflict of interest for the Hon. Member for Langelier. As the Prime Minister has said that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was not in Canada during the week of November 10, I would like to ask this question: Has the Prime Minister spoken with his principal secretary about the events of November 1986, and can he now confirm whether or not Mr. Roy and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources had a conversation about a possible conflict of interest for the Hon. Member for Langelier some time in November 1986, if not necessarily during the week of November 10?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already replied to this question. I have no further comment. I hope that the Hon. Member will not ask me to comment every speculation or opinion published by Canadian newspapers! He is going fishing. He would like me to cross-examine all the officials of my Government. If you have an accusation to make against a Member of Parliament or a member of my staff, please stand up and have the courage to make a specific accusation. Otherwise, please shut up.

[English]

QUERY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER SPOKE WITH PRINCIPAL SECRETARY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, once again the Prime Minister is trying to be a bit too cute.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that all Hon. Members who want to put questions will put them and all of those responding will want to stick to the answers. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has had since Friday to have a conversation with his Principal Secretary to see whether or not the Minister of Energy brought to the attention of the Principal Secretary the possibility of a conflict of interest concerning one of his Ministers back in November of 1986. What I want to know is whether or not he has spoken with his Principal Secretary. Can he confirm now that such a conversation took place? Yes or no. Do not try to skate around it.

• (1440)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is one of the most unusual suggestions that I have heard. My hon. friend, based on rumour and speculation and unsubstantiated information, is asking me whether I will conduct a witch-hunt throughout the Government of Canada today with respect to that rumour, tomorrow with respect to another rumour. Then the next day it will be in regard to another rumour.

If members of the NDP want to indulge in witch-hunts and McCarthyism, they can do it themselves in their own Party. I will not inflict it upon the Public Service of Canada.

* * *

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—EFFECT ON HOMOSEXUAL COMMUNITY—EDUCATIONAL POLICY

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare. As the House knows, the Minister recently returned from a national AIDS conference in England. Canadians continue to see the AIDS epidemic increase with alarming results.

Bearing in mind that the greatest purveyors of this disease in North America continue to be the homosexual community, can he tell the House whether or not education is having any significant results when it comes to the lifestyles of the homosexual community and others?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, at the London conference the main agenda item was how we best, as Ministers of Health, could convey to our respective populations the need to take personal decisions for personal health care and specifically the spread of AIDS, and what educational messages might be most appropriate and most effective. The evidence of that was shown. Obviously it varies dramatically from country to country. There are various reasons for that, including demography and different religious, moral and social mores.

What is clear is that at the moment there is no cure. There is no projected period of time for a cure. Education is the best approach at this time. All of us recognize as well that, while education is necessary, the evidence of changed behaviour in high-risk groups was not nearly as direct as many of us had hoped for.

* * *

TRADE

DUTY REMISSION PROGRAM FOR TEXTILE AND APPAREL INDUSTRIES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industrial Economic Expansion. Yesterday in the House I posed a question to his colleague, the Minister of State for Finance, concerning the proposed government development of a duty remission program for the textile and apparel industries. I asked the question in light of the letters that had been issued by the Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee in the United States asking that any program like that be altered in hostage to the proposed trade agreement.

The Minister of State for Finance said that the Government has no position on this issue. However, I have in my possession a letter written by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion which says that, with regard to duty remission programs, the Government has long been on record as favouring these for both the apparel and the textile industries.

In light of the fact that there is now a contradiction between the two Ministers, I ask the Minister if we can be assured that the Government still intends to proceed with a major, comprehensive duty remission program for the textile and apparel industry, and that it will not concede to the kinds of demands that are now being placed as hostage to the trade agreement.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that his concerns are premature. Considerable work is going on in this field, and I remind him that the free trade agreement provides for the bringing in of further duty remission programs within the text of the free trade agreement. The nature and the timing of these programs are still under discussion.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON DUTY REMISSION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the Hon. Minister for International Trade that it is hardly premature when there is a clear statement signed by 10 Senators who will be considering the Government's proposed trade agreement, indicating that they do not intend to proceed unless there are clear answers from the Government indicating that it will not go ahead with the duty remission program.

In light of that circumstance, will the Minister tell us the nature of the discussions that took place between Mr. Yeutter of the U.S. administration and members of this administration concerning the duty remission program? Why will the Minister not simply say publicly, so that there will be no misunderstanding on the part of U.S. Senators, that the Government fully intends to go ahead with a duty remission program to ensure that the textile and apparel industries will stay competitive and healthy? Why will she not answer that very specific question?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to answer the question. I spoke to Mr. Yeutter last evening and I made the same reply to him that I have just made in the House. We discussed the fact that this is provided for in the free trade agreement that both he and I negotiated. This matter is being addressed within the framework of the free trade agreement. No decision has yet been made. When it has been made, it will be announced.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. He will know that in the first three years of this Government there were substantial cuts to various regional development programs and subsequently they were replaced with various agencies, but the level of funding never reached the levels that were actually cut. The Prime Minister will be aware that in centres of Central Canada there has been good prosperity, but in the regions of Canada such has not occurred. There is a real imbalance in economic activity in Canada.

Would the Prime Minister indicate that the upcoming Budget will provide an excellent opportunity for the Government to show that it really is concerned about the regional economies of Canada and that the Prime Minister is prepared to commit the Government to take special action to ensure that the regions of Canada reap the economic prosperity we have witnessed in Central Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I view with some concern statements made by the NDP in Montreal the other day indicating that 80 per cent of the jobs created in Canada are created within an 80-mile radius of downtown Toronto. That is dangerous regionalism, trying to put one region against another. I think that is a very, very dangerous development.

We are very pleased with the economic development in Ontario and in southern Ontario. We wish the NDP would stop knocking that and start celebrating job creation across Canada, as opposed to trying to raise regional rivalries. This is what took place with regard to the frigate program in Saint John, New Brunswick.

I want to tell the Leader of the NDP that he should stop smiling about it because the people of Saint John, New Brunswick, and the Maritimes are most displeased with the capricious nature of the statement made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre in respect of taking away matters from Atlantic Canada.

Apart from the 1,100,000 jobs that were created since we were sworn in, 38,000 jobs were created in January. This brings the total since September of 1984 to 1,158,000. May I tell my hon. friend that the unemployment rate remains at a six-year low of 8.1 per cent. The Quebec unemployment rate last month fell to 9 per cent, its lowest level since September of 1979.

In the regions, the British Columbia unemployment level fell to 10.1 per cent, the lowest level since March of 1982. In fact, in British Columbia, and this will please my hon. friend because it will convey to him the strength of what the Government is trying to do, the unemployment rate has fallen 3.9 percentage points in the last year alone.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT—GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. I must say that we are pleased with the prosperity the market has provided for Central Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: We are simply asking that the Prime Minister recognize that there are serious economic difficulties facing the regions. Rather than read the general statistics on the state of the economy, I want to tell the Prime Minister that there are regions of Canada that have still not experienced virtually any prosperity over the last number of years. These areas require some special attention.

Going back to what my Leader said, if the Prime Minister started to tax those 60,000 profitable corporations, he could raise $1 billion to $2 billion and really start to help the regions of Canada as opposed to simply ignoring them.

• (1450)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I referred to the dismaying hypocrisy of the NDP. I want to point something out to my hon. friend and perhaps he can explain it to the Canadian people. He just made a pitch on behalf of regional development. I have already pointed out to him the extent to which regional development programs are working.

Mr. Riis: We want more.

Mr. Mulroney: He wants more. Fair ball. With the Expos in the gallery I think that is an appropriate comment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I would say the same for the Blue Jays, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Perhaps the NDP can explain this. On December 10, 1987, the NDP voted against the Government's Supplementary Estimates B and C. In so doing the NDP voted against $127 million to fund the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: They voted against $101 million to fund the Western Diversification Office, and $456 million in additional funding for regional industrial expansion.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Mulroney: You are a bunch of hypocrites! You had an opportunity to do something and you did nothing!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Call an election!

Mr. Crosbie: You struck out, you bum.

Mr. Holtmann: We love you, Nelson.

Mr. Riis: Call an election.

Mr. Mazankowski: Call an election? You phoney!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon East.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ACQUISITION OF SUBMARINES TO ASSERT ARCTIC CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has proposed that we build a fleet of conventional submarines and scrap the plan to create a nuclear powered submarine fleet.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ravis: Is it realistic to ask our Armed Forces to undertake the responsibility of defending the vast territory of Arctic Canada if they are provided with obsolete equipment, or will this simply lead to further Soviet and American violations of the Canadian North and eventual loss of sovereignty?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there is actually more confusion about what the policy of the Liberal Party is after the right hon. gentleman's speech than before. He says no. He shakes his head. I can hear it from over here, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister of National Defence has been asked a question by an Hon. Member of his own Party, which I think suggests the answer. I would ask that the Hon. Minister answer the question quickly.

Mr. Beatty: The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

TRADE

IMPORT CONTROLS ON U.S. DAIRY PRODUCTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture concerning implementation of import controls on U.S. dairy products such as yoghurt and ice cream about which Senator Bentsen complained to Secretary Yeutter in a letter yesterday.

Can the Minister assure Canadian dairy farmers that the import controls are firmly in place and will be operated in such a way as effectively to exclude U.S. dairy products coming into Canada, just as American controls effectively exclude Canadian dairy products going into the U.S?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the short answer is yes. I want to remind the House that the Hon. Member put a question on this subject yesterday to my colleague, the Minister for International Trade. My colleague's response was accurate. The Hon. Member should know that we made a commitment to the dairy farmers of Canada, in keeping with the Canada-U.S. Trade Agreement, Section 710, that we can move products onto that import/export list consistent with Article 11 of GATT. The Order in Council has already been passed. There is a procedure which one has to follow: Number one, notification of trading partners, which has been done; number two, you negotiate import levels with your trading partners.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, in his letter Senator Bentsen suggested Canada has violated the free trade agreement and suggested the U.S. may retaliate against Canada for not observing the standstill provision of the agreement, perhaps by not excluding Canada from provisions of the U.S. omnibus trade Bill.

Can the Minister assure Canadian dairy producers that, regardless of the pressure from Senator Bentsen and the U.S. Senate, the Government will not sell out Canadian dairy farmers and allow a flood of cheap surplus dairy commodities into Canada?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, again the short answer is yes. We made it very clear where this Government stood concerning supply management. The action we took is consistent with Article 710 of the trade agreement.

It is also fully and completely consistent with our rights and obligations under Article 11 of GATT.

* * *

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER COMMUNICATE WITH B.C. PREMIER

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He will know that women in the Province of British Columbia are being denied access to safe therapeutic abortions by a Premier imposing his own extreme anti-choice views on this sensitive issue.

Mr. Mantha: That is not true.

Mr. Robinson: Will the Prime Minister finally show leadership and communicate directly with his counterpart, Premier Vander Zalm, and tell him to stop displaying such contempt, both for the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, and for the women of British Columbia whose lives are being seriously threatened by this very dangerous Premier?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have pointed out that my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, very shortly after the Supreme Court decision came down, was directly in touch with all of his provincial counterparts. Even as we discuss this matter on the floor of the House he is involved in discussions and consultations with the provinces which, as the Hon. Member knows, have a significant constitutional responsibility for delivery of health services.

We are moving in this area. We are dealing with our provincial counterparts across the country. I have every confidence that my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, will deal with this matter not only in the best interests of British Columbians but in the best interests of all Canadians.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the Prime Minister himself will not show the kind of leadership he should be showing on this issue.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Thacker: Where is your leadership?

[Translation]

INVOCATION OF NON OBSTANTE CLAUSE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Minister of Justice. On Friday, January 29, the Minister stated in the House that he had no intention of invoking the notwithstanding clause with respect to this matter. Is that still the position of the Government today?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, my answer is the same as the one I gave Friday after the Supreme Court ruling.

* * *

[English]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PEACE RIVER PULP MILL PROJECT—POSSIBLE EFFECT ON LUBICON LAND CLAIM

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He will know that his Minister of Indian Affairs recently announced the provision of sizeable aid, some $9.5 million, from the Western Diversification Fund for the establishment of a Japanese owned pulp mill to be located in the Peace River district of northern Alberta. Be that as it may, the timber for use in this mill is to be cut from lands which are subject to the yet unsettled Lubicon Indian land claim.

• (1500)

How can it be reconciled that the Minister takes action of this kind as Minister responsible for the Western Diversification Fund at the same time as he has constitutional trust obligations to protect the interests of Indian bands? Is there not here a very classic case of conflict of interest?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the last part of the question is very directly no. There is a question as to whether the lands for which cutting rights have been received are even within the area claimed. The Hon. Member puts that as a fact in the preamble of his question and that is not necessarily agreed upon.

The Hon. Member knows that cutting rights and provincial jurisdiction flow from that as well. The judgment which he made in his concluding statement does not necessarily follow from the facts, and neither does it follow that the conclusion he drew is correct.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister takes much unto himself when he denies that there is any conflict. I think that is a very large constitutional question.

LUBICON INDIAN BAND LAND CLAIM—REQUEST THAT MEDIATOR BE APPOINTED

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, has the Deputy Prime Minister been made aware that this morning in the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs a motion was agreed to by all Parties that the Government of Canada commence, without any further delay, bilateral negotiations with the Lubicon Indian Band and that the Hon. E. Davie Fulton be appointed as a mediator in that dispute?

Will the Minister direct his Minister of Indian Affairs to get those negotiations going right away? Will he use the services of this most distinguished Canadian as a mediator in this longstanding and very troublesome dispute which is attracting so much international attention and blotting the good name of Canada?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member will recall that there were answers given by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to questions very similar to the one posed by the Hon. Member today. Those answers are on the record.

With regard to what happened in the committee today I will convey that to the Minister, and I am sure his staff will do the same.

Mr. Speaker: That is the end of Question Period. I have received notice of a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Skeena.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

LUBICON LAND CLAIMS—ANNOUNCEMENT BY MINISTER—ALLEGED BREACH OF TRUST

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege relates to information which came before the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs this morning before which the Hon. E. Davie Fulton appeared as a witness. As was pointed out by the Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), all three Parties have now joined in urging bilateral negotiations with Mr. Fulton as the negotiator on the Lubicon claim.

However, during the committee hearing we learned that yesterday the Government of Alberta made a joint announcement with the federal Government through the office of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) who also handles western diversification. An announcement was made of plans to fund jointly the $500 million pulp mill in Peace River on lands that are, at least in part, those lands in question presently being negotiated with the Lubicon Band.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) just indicated to the House that the lands involved with the Daishowa company are not lands overlying the Lubicon claim. However, the Minister of National Health and Welfare may have inadvertently misled the House in that the Forest Minister for Alberta, Mr. Fjordbotten, has now confirmed that the lands involved, some 11,200 square miles of land, do in fact overlie the Lubicon claim and the lands that are presently being negotiated.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am naturally reluctant to interrupt my hon. friend's dissertation, but I would suggest that this is once again a committee matter which should be dealt with in committee. If my hon. friend has some way of proving that it is something on which the House should use its time, then I suggest he should come to that point of his argument very quickly and we can then listen to the rest of it.

Mr. Fulton: I have no difficulty with that, Mr. Speaker, I was just coming to that very point.

The fact of the matter is that the Minister of Indian Affairs is responsible for the negotiations which are presently high centred in relation to the Lubicon claim. The same Minister is responsible for the Western Diversification Fund, and yesterday he made an announcement of an expenditure of $9.5 million which now removes those very lands that were supposedly being negotiated in good faith.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is the only Minister of the federal Crown who holds a specific trust relationship with a specific group of Canadians, that being the first citizens, the first nations of this country. These 11,200 square miles of the Province of Alberta have been transferred without public hearings and without tendering. The Minister who is now funding the Diashowa project, the same Minister who was supposedly dealing in good faith with the Lubicon Band has, in my humble view, involved himself and the good offices of the Ministry of Aboriginal Affairs in a breach of trust. I think it is a very simple and clear-cut case in which the federal Crown has not lived up to its responsibilities to the Lubicon people. This has been carried forward in reports by the Ombudsman of Alberta and various groups including the World Council of Churches and the United Nations.

My friend, the Member for Cochrane—Superior, has several additional points which he would like to make. However, I think this is a prima facie case of a Minister of the Crown with specific constitutional responsibilities and specific legislative responsibilities in relation to the first citizens which are not being upheld and have now been specifically violated by an expenditure under another part of a portfolio held by the same Minister.

Mr. Speaker: It may very well be that the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) could add a great deal to the general issue. I think Hon. Members who have known him for many years would be in agreement with that. However, I am having a great deal of difficulty finding any question of privilege in this, although I think the matter is very serious. I am going to examine carefully the point the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) has made. If I think I need to hear further argument I will return to the Chamber.

Nothing I say takes away from what I think Hon. Members know is a serious matter, but I am having trouble finding a question of privilege. If, upon examination, I feel it is necessary to come back to the Chamber for further discussion, I shall do so.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-72, an Act respecting the status and use of the official languages of Canada, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: I should advise Hon. Members that there was an Hon. Member on his feet when the matter was adjourned. I have looked for him and he is not here. I think I should appropriately recognize the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner).

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I in no way wanted to intrude upon the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie). I look forward to what he has to say as I did on many occasions when he held high office in the City of Toronto.

I have taken part in many debates on constitutional matters. During the course of my public life I have seen some important breakthroughs. I am very proud that I had the honour, when I was the Minister of Justice, to share the responsibility for piloting the original Bill on the Official Languages Act in 1969. Consequently, you can understand my pleasure in being able to rise to take part in this debate on the second reading of Bill C-72, the up-dated version of the Official Languages Act.

Some talk about state sanctioned bilingualism as if it were born with Bill C-72, or with the Meech Lake Accord last year, or with Mr. Trudeau's 1982 Constitutional Act. The fact is that bilingualism began with the British North America Act of 1867, Section 133. Admittedly, that was only a parliamentary and judicial regime applicable only to Ontario and Quebec, to federal and Quebec parliaments and our courts of justice.

• (1510)

By the early 1960s it was still so meek and mild a regime that when I arrived in this place in 1962 the main aspects of bilingualism being discussed on the floor of the House were bilingual family allowance cheques, bilingual menus in the parliamentary restaurant, dollar bills, and in eloquent terms I can still remember the late Réal Caouette, Leader of the Social Credit Party, complaining about the lack of bilingualism on TransCanada Airline planes, later Air Canada.

As a Member from Montreal at the time, for the now disappeared riding of St. Lawrence—St. George, I felt as dismayed, indeed as outraged, as my other Quebec colleagues.

André Laurendeau wrote in his famous letter of January 20, 1962, that became the starting point for the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission:

[Translation]

"Issuing bilingual cheques is too little, too late, considering the present aspirations of French Canadians".

[English]

He understood well the mood of that age. As a result of that type of persuasion, the persuasion of Liberals around Mr. Pearson, particularly Maurice Lamontagne, Mr. Pearson brought in the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, known familiarly as the Laurendeau-Dunton commission.

From 1964 to 1970 the commission issued six reports which were to revolutionalize Canadian thinking on the subject. The preliminary report called for two equal official languages in Canada. Another report called for the protection of minority language rights across the country. The third report called for the guarantee of the rights of public servants to work in their own language and culture.

The Bill we are discussing today reflects the spirit of Laurendeau-Dunton as it has been revived and nourished by several commissions and committees.

[Translation]

I have the honour of sitting in the House with my old friend, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), and I would like to pay tribute to his work and to the role he has played and continues to play in promoting bilingualism in the Public Service and protecting language minorities in the provinces. I don't want to embarrass him, but it is always a pleasure to praise my colleagues from time to time.

During the past 20 years, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier worked first for the school boards here in Ottawa and subsequently in the House of Commons, but always spurring governments onward, both Liberals and Conservatives.

He did so especially from 1980 to 1984, as Chairman of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons. He still does today as a Member of the Standing Joint Committee, and he has had considerable input in some of the concepts and mechanisms contained in Bill C-72.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier is a typical example of the Member who believes in a goal, a mission, and who manages to get his message across, despite the slowness of our procedures and the often crushing pressure of the executive on the business of the House.

I thought the expressions of appreciation that came to him from all sides of the House during the debate on January 25 were well deserved.

[English]

Let me make three points on the principles of this Bill. In advertising terms, the time is right, the subject is right and the content is right. Some commentators, particularly on the other side of the House, say that we do not need the Bill. They suggest that because there is peace on the language front now we should let sleeping dogs lie rather than arouse the passions of the country or provoke old antagonisms. In other words, why do we not wait for a crisis?

We have done that too often before. We waited too long before bringing in the Bill finally in 1969. We waited too long to patriate our Constitution in 1982. We waited too long to bring Quebec fully into Confederation as we have attempted to do in the Constitutional Accord. Goodness knows that we have not really set our mind on reforming the Senate, something I hope to live long enough to see reformed—I would like to see an elected Senate.

There is a difference between prudence and procrastination. Prudence gets there eventually, procrastination never does. We are fortunate that there is no major linguistic conflict nationally at the present time, even though there are several regional and serious difficulties in language. That is why I believe that now the time is right to proceed to consolidate and enhance the Official Languages Act. Now is the time to weave in the many advances made since 1969 to keep the Act abreast of a changing mood and a positive tolerance in Canada. Therefore, the time is right.

Second, the subject is right. Some may be surprised to hear me speak about this Bill as a constitutional matter. Let me remind them and Members of the House that the Constitution is more than the separation or division of powers. The Constitution now includes our rights and liberties and provides for the equality of the two languages we speak.

The subject of Bill C-72 on the Official Languages Act is right for another reason. We passed a major constitutional Act in 1982 which includes a Charter of Rights enshrining language equality. Section 16 of the Charter states:

> English and French are the official languages of Canada and have equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all institutions of the Parliament and the Government of Canada.

Through Sections 16 to 23 of the Charter a whole new institutional bilingualism regime is built in general terms and enshrined. Those sections cover Parliament, the administration, the courts, minority language system. Now some flesh must be placed on those bones. We cannot proclaim equality and then simply let it happen by accident. We must adjust our laws to accepted constitutional principles. The laws of this country must accord with the Constitution. That is a primary impetus behind bringing this law up to date.

Another major principle will be proclaimed when the Meech Lake Accord becomes the law of the land. According to the Constitutional Accord, English-French duality as a fundamental characteristic of our country will be proclaimed. My Party is in agreement with that. Some of my colleagues have had problems with the second leg of the principle, the recognition of Quebec as a distinct society. I want to remind everyone in the House that this Party, in its resolution in November, 1986, by a majority of 85 per cent, approved the recognition of Quebec as a distinct society, not as a constitutional innovation but merely as a recognition of the fact that Quebec is unique and distinct, having been the only province speaking French in its majority and having a different system of law, different collective psychology and history.

There has never been any hesitation on the question of duality. My Party has been a perennial promoter of that concept since 1867. I have read some historians who say that we even invented it.

Those words in the 1982 Charter and the Meech Lake Accord must now be given flesh, teeth and specific meaning. That is what Bill C-72 does and that is why, once again, my Party is willing to support the Government against the attack of its right flank. It may be overly generous on our part electorally, but we are not about to abandon one of our deepest traditions, the promotion of national unity, identity and equality of our two languages, merely to score some political points on the floor of the House.

I leave to the Government benches their responsibility in bringing their Members into line and ensuring that they do not retard further progress of this Bill.

[Translation]

Third, the content is right. During the debate on January 25, when the Opposition—our Party—insisted that Bill C-72 be tabled in the House for second reading, some Government backbenchers asked, as if they had just invented the wheel, what the Liberal Party had done about institutional bilingualism between 1969 and 1984, when it was in power. Madam Speaker, ignorance is bliss.

One of the reasons why this Bill is acceptable to us and to a substantial majority of Canadians is that it is in our Party's tradition, which includes the 1969 Act, the experience we acquired from 1969 to 1984, the Parliamentary Resolution of 1973, the 1982 Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the proceedings of the Joint Committee on Official Languages, especially from 1980 to 1984 when it was led and chaired by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Take, for instance, the right of public servants to work in their own language. That right was expressed for the first time by Mr. Pearson, together with the right of public servants occupying a position designated bilingual to receive language training. The right to choose one's language of work is implicit in Section 2 of the 1969 Act. It was the object of a parliamentary resolution in 1973 and the joint committee agreed that it was urgent to amend the legislation because it was ambiguous, as was confirmed by the many court rulings.

Among other things, Madam Speaker, that is what Bill C-72 does. Why is that possible? Because mentalities have evolved and because parliamentary, judicial, administrative and academic bilingualism has progressed at both provincial and federal levels.

Madam Speaker, I regret to say that a monthly publication delivered across western Canada, Western Report, printed these words on its cover: If you cannot read this you cannot work for the federal Government. It appears in both languages.

• (1520)

[English]

The magazine, Western Report, is carried throughout our western provinces. It had on its latest front cover a sentence in French which read: "If you can't read this, you can't work for the federal Government". That is simply not true. That it should be written and widely distributed in the current climate of this country, I think, is a shame. The Government knows that is not true and it should be telling Canadians that it is not true. I hope the Secretary of State when he gets to his feet, will say so. The truth is that thousands of Canadians can read those lines in French because of the progress which has been made in the last 20 years.

In every major community in western Canada immersion courses in the French language are becoming more and more popular. In my riding of Vancouver Quadra we have 15 high schools. There are French immersion courses in each. I try to visit every one of those high schools and the students proudly put questions to me in French—probably to test my own French—which demonstrates that in Canada we can feel comfortable using the other language. The students look forward not only to becoming better Canadians by speaking the other language but by becoming part of the human race in a wider civilized scope while enjoying two of the greatest cultures ever brought forward by the mind and ingenuity of mankind. That is why the cover of that magazine is contrary to that spirit.

In fact those who cannot speak French can still work in the federal Government. Sixty per cent of all federal positions in the public service of Canada are designated unilingual English. Only 7 per cent are designated unilingual French. That is the truth. That is what western Canadians should know. That is what English speaking Canadians should know. The Government has the responsibility today to tell them the truth. Sixty per cent of all federal positions are designated unilingual English and only 7 per cent are designated unilingual French.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I said more about one aspect of the contents of the legislation, freedom of choice with respect to the language of work in the federal public service. A few years ago I had the same responsibility as the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), namely to represent a national capital riding. So again I ask the question: What does Bill C-72 do? The answer is very clear. Basically the Bill consolidates, legalizes, and allows for regulations; exceptionally, it strengthens and extends the legislation of 1969.

What does it consolidate? First, the Official Languages Act of 1969; second, the 1973 resolution of the House of Commons in favour of free choice with respect to language of work and bilingual training; third, the right of the two linguistic groups to participate fully in the operations of the federal administration. It also consolidates the Constitution Act of 1982, whose sections 16 to 23 enshrined institutional bilingualism; the spirit of the Meech Lake Accord is consolidated, particularly concerning the Canadian duality; and finally all the experience acquired since 1969, since the existing Official Languages Act was adopted and in the implementation of the objectives of institutional bilingualism in all sectors: the parliamentary experience, the judicial experience, the administrative experience

What does this Bill do with regard to principles? Let us look at the essential. First and foremost, institutional or state bilingualism, as opposed to individual bilingualism which created for the Government a series of obligations under the 1969 legislation, will become now, due to the incorporation of the effects of Clause 16 of the 1982 Constitutional Act, not only a series of enforceable obligations for the Government, but also a series of rights for Canadian citizens. The supremacy of the Official Languages Act is confirmed and its content adapted to the 1982 Constitutional Reform.

Second, the equality of the official languages is now defined and applied to the federal Public Service, our courts of justice, and the protection of the linguistic minorities within the provinces. The choice as to the language of work, implicitly contained in the 1969 legislation, is now made explicit. So is the principle of full participation by members of our two linguistic communities. The promotion of these measures is now the responsibility of the Treasury Board and the Secretary of State. The Commissioner will enjoy extended powers. He will have the authority to get involved in proceedings instituted by individuals before the courts, or he might even institute such proceedings himself.

Third, the legislation will continue to evolve but it will have acquired much more precision and strength. Instead of being expressed by the Government's instructions or voluntary programs, it will be expressed through regulations dealing, for instance, with the language of work, full participation, the definition of a "major request", the function of the Treasury Board and that of the Secretary of State.

These regulations will be of tremendous importance. On occasion they will have as much importance as the Act itself. As parliamentarians, we do not hold the regulating process in high esteem, but the arbitrary process clearly has its drawbacks too. We will have to keep an eye on these regulations, demand their tabling in the House and their discussion in Committee. We will see to that as long as we sit in the Opposition and then again when we are the Government.

• (1530)

[English]

I had the honour of bringing in the Statutory Instruments Act which ensured that every regulation and every Order in Council promulgated by this executive responsible to this Parliament was published within a period appropriate to the occasion, giving the Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments Committee an opportunity to review those regulations and orders and render reports on them, and to ensure particularly that those orders were within the ambit of the power accorded by Parliament and not exceeding that ambit. Since the regulations under this Bill will have wide-ranging consequences, will fall within the ambit of the law but will render more precise the application of the law, it is important that Members of the House exercise their surveillance and monitoring function with the usual aptitude and persistence.

I said that the time is right, Madam Speaker, the subject is right, and the content is right. I urge all Members of the House to support the Bill, and send it to committee. There may be amendments proposed. As one who has the honour of holding a seat in western Canada, I particularly appeal to those Members who may have some reservations about the Bill to recognize the progress we have made since the early 1960s in recognizing the dual nature of our linguistic heritage, the understanding that that gives to us and the tolerance that it reflects, which make our federal system work.

Canadians from coast to coast and people from around the world will be attending the Calgary Olympics in the next two weeks to share the spirit of national unity, and they will be able to hear those announcements in two languages and read the notices in two languages. They will feel at home in a national celebration in both our languages. People will be able to watch it on television in two languages, and be able to feel at home in a western Canadian city because this is a national occasion.

I urge Members of this House not to yield to any hesitation that they may have, to back up the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie), back up the Government, give the Bill a unanimous vote in the House of Commons, and rededicate the spirit of this House to the spirit that we had when we were pioneering in 1969. The unity of the country has been enhanced, the strength of the country has been enhanced, and the spirit and tolerance of our people has been enshrined in the Constitution.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) on a point of order.

Mr. Nowlan: I appreciate the rule that the first speaker in reply to a motion has unlimited time and that there are no questions. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was not the first speaker for his Party. I therefore wonder why one is not permitted to ask him questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I would like to thank the Deputy Clerk for providing me with the exact number of the Standing Order.

Standing Order 55(2) will provide the answer to the hon. gentleman. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) have unlimited time, but there is no period of questions or comments following their speeches.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, I wonder if I could seek unanimous agreement to pose a question or two to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I see that my friend, the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) is also asking for the floor. He may want the same privilege to ask a question. If we extend the courtesy, and it will be an act of courtesy because the rules provide otherwise, the Leader is willing. We will give unanimous consent, but it will have to be understood that we also may give unanimous consent to others. We cannot extend a privilege to one without giving it to someone else.

[Translation]

Mr. Hamelin: Madam Speaker, on the same point of order. If there is unanimous consent, I would also like to put some questions to the Leader of the Opposition, just as the Hon. Member is seeking to do.

Mr. Grisé: Madam Speaker, I still would like your opinion about the time that should be allowed for questions and comments. Will it be as usual—a ten-minute period—or do we have unlimited time for questions and comments? Madam Speaker, before giving my consent, I would appreciate some clarification as to the maximum time available for questions and comments.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In such a situation, the Chair is totally in the hands of the House, and the House has given unanimous consent. I would take it for granted that Hon. Members would want to continue the debate sometime this afternoon. I am sure that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has other duties which he will want to attend.

Perhaps the normal period of 10 minutes could apply, if I have the consent of everyone.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants.

Mr. Nowlan: I thank the House for the courtesy. I must say that I will not argue with the Chair's interpretation of Standing Order 55. I do know that when the Leader of the Opposition or the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) speak in relation to the first reply on a Bill no such courtesy is extended. However, I have been given the courtesy, so I had better put the question.

I was very glad to be here when the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition made his contribution to this Bill. I am also glad that he came to the latter part of his speech, because I have those remarks in his speech of May 20, 1969 as recorded in Hansard on page 8844 when he was the Minister responsible for the introduction of the 1969 Bill.

I do not know if I fully appreciated what the Right Hon. Leader said this afternoon in terms of extending the scope of the 1969 Act. When that Bill came in, sold to us, and voted for by me and others following the precept of Bob Stanfield, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, who was then the Minister responsible for the Bill, stated:

> The principle of this bill is that there should be equality of access to the federal institutions of government, that every citizen should be able to communicate with the federal government in either of the two languages . . .
>
> It is not compulsory individual bilingualism; it is institutional bilingualism—

I totally agreed with him there, then, and that was how the Bill was sold, as far as I was concerned.

Today, I understood the Minister to have said that the present Bill C-72 goes further. Perhaps the world has changed. There are bilingual signs at the Olympics, separate and apart from Bill C-72. I think the Right Hon. Leader got carried away with some very interesting remarks that he made. We all know that duality has been extended. There are immersion schools. My children have gone to them, and I have tried to learn la langue française—beaucoup de cours de français par immersion, et cetera.

We are talking about the reality of Bill C-72. I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman to square with what he said in 1969, and in part what he said today, about the right of institutional bilingualism.

Clause 15(1) states, in effect, that any judge or presiding officer has to carry on without the benefit of an interpreter, that is, be bilingual. That means individual bilingualism. In referring this to Clause 15(2), the definition of court, when I make my speech, I will give the Right Hon. leader a count of 59 different tribunals or agencies where, until now, an English or French individual can appear quite properly and communicate or correspond, as he or she should be able to, in either language, but the presiding tribunal is not required to be necessarily bilingual. It has simultaneous translation.

• (1540)

Is this not a very real extension of institutional bilingualism, which we all bought and still buy, to a compulsory need for individual bilingualism?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am glad the Hon. Member knew that the time was limited.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member reminds me of the late Syl Apps when he was the captain of the Toronto Maple Leafs. He could never bring the puck up the ice until he had circled the net about four or five times to build up speed.

Mr. Nowlan: He was my hero.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am not saying that the Maple Leafs could not use Syl Apps right now.

The section in the Official Languages Act which the Hon. Member cites has now been embedded in the Constitution, so that the institutional bilingualism he recited is now part of the constitutional fabric of the country.

What has happened in this Bill, as I said, is that it is now enshrining and enacting a practice which has been developed since 1969, recognized by a resolution of the House in 1973, further enshrined in the Constitution Act, 1982, and further enhanced by the Meech Lake Accord. The third paragraph of the preamble to the Bill reads:

> AND WHEREAS the Constitution of Canada also provides for guarantees relating to the right of any member of the public to communicate with, and to receive available services from, any institution of the Parliament or Government of Canada in either official language;

Obviously there are not only institutional rights; there are individual rights recognized in this Bill and by the Constitution.

Mr. Hamelin: Madam Speaker, I would like to quote the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). He said that the time is right and that the Bill is right. Maybe for the first time the Opposition is right and its leader is right. It is a good Bill.

[Translation]

I would like to congratulate the Leader of the Opposition on the position he has taken on Bill C-72. I also wish to pay tribute to him and to the other Members of his party who have been working so hard, as was remarked by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), to foster Canada's linguistic duality.

I am also very pleased that you have tried to raise this debate above the level of political partisanship.

The question I would like to ask, and especially the suggestion I would like to make, since all party leaders have their problems—you have yours with Meech Lake, which is also an important piece of constitutional legislation, while other party leaders are trying to convince the majority while maintaining the greatest possible measure of tolerance and respect for the individual.

Mr. Leader of the Opposition, are you and the Members of your party prepared to make a commitment to raise this particular debate above partisan issues during the election campaign, bearing in mind the best interests of Canada's linguistic duality and Canada itself?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, this question is far too important. We do not see it as a partisan issue but as a fundamental question that goes to the very roots of our nation.

[English]

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, we have just a few minutes remaining, but I want to explain to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) why this Bill is not being accepted by Canadians. It is because of the discriminatory aspect of the Official Languages Act of 1969. I have acted on behalf of many English-speaking Canadians who have been denied promotion and employment because of the discriminatory language laws in this country.

I would like to read to him a case which indicates why western Canadian people are not accepting the Bill. This letter was sent from an official in the Patent Office to a Deputy Minister in Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I worked on this case a couple of years ago. The letter indicates that there were many rumours circulating in the Patent Office that the hiring team, who were then seeking examiners, had been instructed to limit their search to Francophones, particularly to unilingual Francophones. It was further alleged that academically qualified Anglophones had been rejected, and the possibility that these rumours could be true appeared to have been supported by the apparent attempt to keep bilingual positions open for those Francophones being hired rather than offering those positions to bilingual examiners presently in unilingual English positions. Is he telling me that English-speaking Canadians are supposed to accept the Bill when this sort of thing is going on?

This morning I referred to a staff sergeant on the Hill who was demoted because he could not learn French fast enough in that he had a hearing defect. He was demoted. He lost his crown and had a loss of pay. Does the Hon. Member think that I am going to accept that and vote for some more of that? I most certainly am not, and that is what I will be explaining to Canadians.

I have been calling for laws to protect the rights of English-speaking Canadians. Former Language Commissioner Maxwell Yalden wanted the word "language" inserted in the Human Rights Act, so that if an academically qualified English-speaking Canadian was being denied promotion or a job, he could file a complaint with the Human Rights Commission to have his case properly investigated to see if he was being treated fairly.

Would the Leader of the Opposition support an amendment to the Human Rights Act to have the word "language" included, so that a Francophone or an Anglophone who is being discriminated against in terms of promotion or employment could file a complaint and have his case properly examined?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, the equality rights of Canadians of either language are protected under the Constitution.

I met recently with Mr. Yalden, the new Human Rights Commissioner, and I am assured on his record that he will apply the Constitution and the Human Rights Act fairly in any individual case.

I had the honour, at one stage in my life, of representing a neighbouring riding to that of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). It happened to be the riding with the largest number of English-speaking public servants in Canada. I happened to be the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton when I had the honour of presenting the Bill to Parliament. I had the responsibility of explaining it to the Public Service of Canada, of negotiating with C. A. Edwards, the then President of the Public Service Alliance, and of negotiating the terms of the Bill with the four western Attorneys General and persuading them not to take the issue at that time to the Supreme Court of Canada.

I want to say to the hon. gentleman that he has the right and duty to represent his constituents as they present their cases to him, and I respect that. However, I have the feeling in my own experience that this law has been applied as fairly as humanly possible since it was introduced, and that everyone responsible has done his or her best to ensure that the application of the law did not unfairly intervene in a career in the Public Service.

Even after 20 years, as I said earlier in my speech, 60 per cent of designated positions are unilingual English and only 7 per cent are unilingual French. The advantage is still overwhelmingly in favour of the English-speaking population in terms of the Public Service of our country.

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Madam Speaker, let me say that I am pleased to be able to speak today on to the amendments to the Official Languages Act and to talk a little about the official languages policy in the country.

Yesterday and this morning the House was able to hear the views, concerns, obligations, and responsibilities of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) with respect to the courts under the current Act and indeed to some of the proposed changes in the Act. We also heard this morning from the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) regarding language rights and opportunities in respect of services in federal institutions.

My particular role as Secretary of State is somewhat different and has perhaps not received the same kind of attention as have other interested perspectives in respect of this Bill. Clauses 40 to 44 deal with those responsibilities which are given to the Secretary of State. They amount to two. First, there is the responsibility to recognize the use and learning of both official languages. Second, support is to be provided to official language communities across the country.

• (1550)

Those two responsibilities given to the Secretary of State under this Bill reflect what we have been doing for the last 18 years. It extends what we have been doing somewhat, but there has been a slow progression of events. It fits in well with the role of the Secretary of State because the Secretary of State has a general responsibility with respect to the sense of belonging and equal participation of all Canadians from all walks of life. That is why it is important that at least a significant part of this Bill be understood within the context of other initiatives that the Government, and in particular the Secretary of State, have been taking with respect to, for example, the new multicultural Bill and the amendments to the Citizenship Act. In all these matters, whether it is the multicultural Bill, changes to the Official Languages Act or changes to the Citizenship Act, we are responding as a Government to three fundamental principles that the Government, and I think all Canadian Governments at their best, stand for. That is to say equality, diversity and community.

Those may be clichés and principles unrelated to practice to some people. However, when we talk about those principles and try to deal with them in legislation we are on very serious business. When we talk in this instance about language and culture we only have to watch television, read newspapers and look around the world to see those countries which have not paid attention to the divisiveness of language and culture. In those countries their problems have been solved by conflict and not by co-operation and consensus.

When we deal with the Bill before us, with the multicultural Bill and our understanding of the Citizenship Act amendments we are responding to the principles of equality, diversity and community. It should never be forgotten that the end result is freedom for individual Canadians and stability for Canadian society as a whole.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, our official languages are a fundamental characteristic of Canadian society. They set us apart from most nations in this world.

This linguistic duality gives all Canadian citizens the right to live and develop their potential in either official language.

Madam Speaker, language is a very personal part of ourselves. If we can all learn to respect the language spoken by our fellow citizens, we will have made an important contribution to tolerance and harmony among the various races, creeds and cultures that constitute our country.

[English]

We have been in the business of dealing with two official languages for a very long time. It is not merely and only a product of 1969. Earlier, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) talked about the constitutional and legal process which over decades was dealt with in our two official languages. We could go back even further. We could begin in 1867. At another time and another place it would be interesting to note that there is a 200-year old tradition in the country from the Quebec Act of 1774 to the Constitution Act of 1791 to the British North America Act of 1867. We have been involved in developing, building, creating, fashioning and tolerating two languages for 200 years.

With respect to specific changes in the role of federal institutions as they relate to the two official languages, I think we can mark the beginning of the modern era, if I can put it that way, in 1934 when the Secretary of State, under the prime ministership of R. B. Bennett, introduced into the House a Bill that created a translation service for the federal Government. That was some 54 years ago. In a sense, that was the first practical example of the need to ensure that federal institutions spoke to all Canadians in both official languages.

In 1958, for the first time in the history of the country, a Translation service was brought into the House. We are used to it today. We simply put a small device into our ears and we are able to listen to an automatic, first-class translation of the proceedings. That began only in 1958, I might add, with some price, under the prime ministership of John George Diefenbaker.

In 1969, when the Official Languages Act was adopted, it should not be forgotten that all three political Parties supported that Bill and have done so since that time.

I have gone through these events because it is important to understand that history did not begin yesterday. These important matters did not begin when we showed up. They have been part of the Canadian understanding of our country as long as we have been around. It is fair to say that since the 1960s the climate with respect to the language question has improved immeasurably.

For the past 20 years we have seen an emerging positive and impressive growth of the use of those two languages. That may be denied by some. But all one has to do is to attend meetings anywhere in the country where people from other parts of the country are brought in. One will find that there is some facility so that people in both languages can understand.

If I had to pick one example to illustrate my points I would like to introduce some statistics, although I hate to use them, with respect to the success enjoyed by immersion courses in schools, institutions and community groups across the country. For the past 10 years enrolment in terms of immersion courses has increased 20 per cent per year. It has grown from 37,000 in 1977 to over 200,000 in 1987. In Alberta, one out of every ten schools is a French immersion school. In Regina, the number of students enrolled in French immersion courses was 60 in 1977. It was 3,000 in 1987.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): How about Toronto and Vancouver?

Mr. Crombie: My friend the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition asks about Toronto and Vancouver. There has been amazing growth in those cities as well. I picked these other cities to illustrate my point. In every province and in every major metropolitan area, city and town one will find such statistics. My right hon. friend knows that, as do the great majority of Canadians, certainly those who are interested in these matters.

In fact, there was a study done by Stacy Churchill and Anthony Smith which showed a major shift in Canadian attitudes towards language reform, use and the recognition of the two official languages. That is shown by incredible demands on my own Department with respect to supporting the provision of minority language services. I suppose that if one had to see it anywhere one would see it in the habits and instincts of young Canadians. Their feeling for the linguistic duality of this country is something that previous generations would not have dreamed of.

It is these young Canadians who are learning a second official language who hold a big promise for us. I have had the opportunity in meetings across the country with young people to see that not only do they understand the importance of language for their own community but they understand the importance of extending that to the other official language groups as well. I think that they see the benefit of being able to speak two languages in a world whose borders are coming closer and where travel, politics, education and international trade will welcome those who are able to avail themselves of a natural resource, that is, of the two official languages. I might add, as I have in other places and at other times, that a multitude of heritage languages also exist in Canada.

• (1600)

The Bill as it relates to the Ministry of the Secretary of State is very important. It deals with the encouragement, the recognition, the use and the learning of two official languages. It also deals with the support of official language communities. We do that in deliberate, constructive ways. For example, through agreements since 1980 with provinces and territories, we support educational programs and services for English-speaking Quebecers and for Francophones outside the Province of Quebec.

We provide opportunities for all Canadians to learn a second language. The summer language bursary program is particularly popular. It gives students the chance to spend six weeks immersed in their second language. Over 19,000 students applied for 7,250 bursaries last year.

We also support the development of teacher-training programs in universities and colleges across Canada, from Memorial University to all three universities in the Province of British Columbia. As well, the Government assists provinces and territories in developing learning materials. Our commitment to the development of TV Ontario's La Châine Française is an example of this.

TV Ontario now offers Franco-Ontarians the same kind of educational programming English-speaking students have had for years. It has also developed, with federal assistance, a number of excellent programs on TV Ontario to teach French as a second language.

In short, this Bill stresses the importance of giving Canadians the opportunity to expand their horizons by learning a second language. The Bill responds to the linguistic needs and aspirations of Canadians, make no mistake about that. It is for Canadians who want for themselves and their children the opportunity to be themselves in their own language wherever they live in Canada, Canadians who want for themselves and their children the opportunity to learn a second official language and Canadians who realize that having two official languages gives us access to over half the people on this planet. That puts us in a first-class strategic position in terms of trade advantages, international relations and cultural exchanges.

The Government's approach is a positive one. It is based on incentives, consultations and partnership. Jean Pelletier of the Journal de Montréal, wrote about Bill C-72 a few weeks ago. He said:

> Some of the most striking changes are reflected in the preamble of the Bill . . . It removes the Act from the realm of mere rules and regulations and elevates it to the status of a law that—can serve as an inspiration for the day-to-day political life of this country.

[Translation]

The time has come to offer Canadians throughout this country a better chance to develop their potential in their own official language.

[English]

I had the opportunity, as all Secretaries of State do, to visit with people across the country, not only with constituents and people I am trying to serve but with members of official language communities, both francophone and anglophone. It was a very impressive opportunity and I wish all Canadians could have that opportunity.

[Translation]

The Government directly helps minority communities to acquire tools and establish institutions, which enables these communities to participate in various aspects of Canadian society in their own language.

We support a number of groups representing Francophone communities across Canada, such as the Fédération des francophones hors Québec, the Association canadienne-française de l'Ontario, French-speaking Canadians in British Columbia, Newfoundland and the Northwest Territories, and many other groups I had a chance to meet last year in Winnipeg, Yellowknife and Charlottetown, for instance.

These groups provide for solidarity and community action. They make it possible for communities to express their views and carry out collective projects.

Francophones in Halifax-Dartmouth or in Cape St. George, Newfoundland can get together and set up a community and education centre, jointly financed by the federal-provincial governments.

The Fédération des jeunes canadiens-français is organizing a project for community radio across the country. Programming will be developed by the communities themselves. And the Department of the Secretary of State is of course proud to support this project!

[English]

I also had the opportunity to meet a group of which I did not have much knowledge before. This group consists of small anglophone communities in the Province of Quebec, outside the Island of Montreal. There is, I think, an unintended feeling in other parts of the country that Anglophones live in Montreal only and that, by and large that is whom we hear about.

I had the terrific opportunity to meet with members of an Alliance Quebec as well as regional grassroots organizations including the Committee for Anglophone Social Action of the Gaspé, the Townshippers' Association of the Eastern Townships, the Outaouais Alliance of the Ottawa Valley, the Voice of English Quebec of the Quebec City area and many others. They introduced me, as they would introduce all of us, to a very impressive piece of Canadian history. They have a network of 14 weekly newspapers, some of which have been around, informing, building and helping create communities, for decades.

The Stanstead Journal in Rock Island has existed since 1845. The West Quebec Post in Buckingham has been there since 1895. The Watchman in Lachute has been there since 1877. My impression of these communities is that not only were they appreciating their own history but they knew that they were building their own communities as Quebecers and as Canadians. That impressed me. The reason I mention it in this context is that they support this Bill. They do so because they know that the programs we have been offering and want to continue to offer and expand support those anglophone communities in the Province of Quebec.

I also had the opportunity to deal with another group, non-governmental. There are a great many voluntary organizations and business organizations which are now and have been for the last couple of years interested in getting support to expand opportunities in Canada's two official languages. Mr. Lloyd McGinnis, past chairman of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, has said:

> Modern business managers in Canada—recognize that it makes good business sense to employ communications tools that capitalize on both official languages.

That is why, on a voluntary basis, the Secretary of State has received requests from bodies and organizations wanting to serve clients in English and in French. Two examples of this are the Canadian Bankers Association and the Canadian Life and Health Insurance Association. My Department assists 275 voluntary groups in bilingual services at conferences and annual meetings, and more than 60 major associations are being helped with bilingualism development plans.

We support organizations such as Canadian Parents for French. One of the most impressive groups we support is the Canadian Society of Association Executives with well over 1,200 member associations. On their own initiative, its representatives came to see me in order to establish a program of assistance for private and voluntary groups promoting both official languages. I say these things because that is the reality in Canada and we ought to begin to understand it.

I know that my time has concluded. I would like to finish with one final remark. The Government is committed not only to strengthening the official languages in Canada, it also understands that in doing so, there is something greater at stake and that is the fundamental proposition, that we must continue to support the development of the community of Canada. We can only do that when we rise to the challenge and recognize that being Canadian means we should continue the tradition of two official languages and move forward.

• (1610)

I hope the House will be able to conclude the debate and we can get it into committee to deal with those matters which are of concern to some people. However, at the end of the day we will have failed the promise of this country if we do not move forward, as the Government would like to with changes to the Official Languages Act that tell Canadians and the world that we have not forgotten the great traditions of this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments.

[Translation]

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, being also a Member from Ontario as the Minister is, I would like to commend him, first for his speech and second for that part of his speech he chose to deliver in French in this House this afternoon. I suggest this reflects an open mind, and that special effort by the Minister deserves to be emphasized today.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Especially since he is a former mayor of Toronto!

Mr. Boudria: Yes, especially from a former mayor of Toronto, Madam Speaker!

I pay close attention to the Minister's comments. I may have a slightly different opinion from his in that he is hoping for an early conclusion to the debate, and I would welcome an opportunity to make a speech in this House on this matter. I represent in this Parliament the largest number of Francophones outside Quebec of any constituency, and this is why I am hoping for such an opportunity. Needless to say, I am hoping contrary to the Minister that the debate will last at least one or two more days, so that I also can take part in it and express my support for the Official Languages Bill.

I suggest, Madam Speaker, that in view of the official languages situation at this stage in Canada, it is important to have Bill C-72, even though the legislation holds nothing new; by that I mean that we need Bill C-72 because we need a vehicle to re-emphasize our commitment to official languages, and of course there are many more reasons why we want Bill C-72. Hon. Members explained them and I also will discuss them when I rise in this debate.

I simply wish to put a specific question to the Minister concerning the Supreme Court. As far as I am concerned, I feel that the clause providing that the presiding member of a panel of judges hearing a party to the proceedings must be able to do so in that party's language. There is one exemption to that rule under the Bill, being the Supreme Court of Canada. I have no idea, Madam Speaker, why they chose to do that. I would like to ask the Minister whether in committee the Government would accept to change that, even if it entails extending the period for the Supreme Court to adapt to that new recommendation.

[English]

Mr. Crombie: Madam Speaker, first let me assure the Hon. Member that, as always, we listen to his remarks with interest and we are sure he has some wisdom to offer to the House. When I indicated that I hoped the debate would be concluded, I of course meant after all Hon. Members had the opportunity to make their contribution.

The second part of the Hon. Member's question dealt with changes to the Bill which he favours. When the Minister of Justice spoke the other day, I think it is fair to say that he indicated that there needs to be a capacity in each of our courts, and I think the emphasis should be on the word "capacity", and that it excludes the Supreme Court. I think the Minister dealt with that, I am not sure. It may well be that there are other views. I am sure that when it gets into committee any specific changes that Hon. Members are looking for will at least be appropriately considered by the committee.

Mr. Kindy: Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to the remarks of the Minister concerning the situation of the Anglophone in Quebec. Having lived there for a while, I saw what happened when Bill 101 was brought into force and the effect it had on anglophone Quebecers most of the young Anglophones had to leave the province because they were being discriminated against. Therefore, would the Minister consider a motion of the House asking the Government of Quebec to withdraw Bill 101, as was done in the case of Manitoba?

Mr. Crombie: Madam Speaker, I should remind the Hon. Member that Bill 101 is a provincial Bill and at least some aspects of it are before the courts. It would therefore be inappropriate for me to deal with that aspect of it.

However, let me respond to what I think might be the spirit of the question, which is something that I tried to deal with in my own speech. Clauses 40 to 44 are positive ways where we do not try to recapture the past but try to see what we can do to fashion a future. It is always an easy way out for people to bog down because of their understanding of things in the past. I appreciate that because I have been involved with it myself in a number of circumstances. However, in our circumstances today, I hope what Hon. Members will do is to look at the positive things in Bill C-72 that deal with Anglophones in the Province of Quebec, and there are many of them. I have met with those people and their organizations, such as the ones I mentioned in the Gaspé, the Outaouais, in the Comtés de l'Est. They want to be part of a society that respects their heritage, understands them as Quebecers and as Canadians. That is what this Bill does and I commend that to my hon. friend.

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, we all concur with the Minister's comments dealing with voluntary French immersion in our schools. In Peterborough we have a line-up to enrol in those schools, and I think the voluntary approach is a good one. I think it is also a good approach for the private sector which has indicated its interest in obtaining information and advancing this voluntarily in the private sector. The aspects of this Bill which are a little repugnant are those that change from the voluntary to the mandatory.

I would like to ask the Minister at what point it is the Government's intention to cause a region to become bilingual, thus falling under—the Minister has a question mark in his eyes. We have a language of work in approximately seven regions of this country as defined in our legislation and in the understanding of the Department of Justice. There is the rest of Canada to deal with. This Bill makes it possible, through regulations and Orders in Council, to declare regions bilingual. At what point does a region become bilingual by Order in Council, thus causing this Bill to take effect through mandatory regulations enforced by Orders in Council? We as backbenchers have no idea at what point or with what regulations that will happen.

Mr. Crombie: Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member understands, as I do, that regulations are important, particularly with respect to a Bill of this nature. It is the regulations that take the words in the Bill and turn them into practical day-to-day living. I was very pleased therefore to hear the Minister of Justice indicate that when the regulations are brought down there will be an opportunity for full public exposure and debate. At that time I am sure the Hon. Member's question will be answered.

• (1620)

Mr. Graham: Madam Speaker, the Minister referred to the fact that certain segments of Bill 101 in Quebec are before the courts. Would the Minister comment on the timing of this Bill? One of the things that is probably of concern to some Members is why the federal Government would bring forward Bill C-72 when we have still not been able to resolve the problems and attitudes expressed in Bill 101.

While he is on his feet would the Minister also try to define "significant demand"?

Mr. Crombie: Madam Speaker, "significant demand" will be defined by regulation. As I indicated in response to the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm), when the regulations come down, significant demand in a particular area will be understood in the full glare of public exposure and public discussion. I commend that process to the Hon. Member because I think that is the fair and open way to do it.

With regard to the impact of Bill 101 in the Province of Quebec, as I indicated earlier there are aspects, in particular signage, before the courts and I would not want to comment on them. I would, however, say again to this Hon. Member that anglophone communities in the Province of Quebec support this Bill. People can play around with that fact all they like, but the reality is that if one is interested in supporting not only francophone communities across the country but anglophone communities in Quebec, one should do one's duty and support this Bill.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Interprovincial trade—Removal of barriers; the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone)—Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—Proposed all-news television channel—Suggested partnership with private sector; the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Science and technology—Announced closure of astronomical observatory / Algonquin Park Observatory.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-72, an Act respecting the status and use of the official languages of Canada, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to join in a very important debate on Bill C-72 which amends and re-enacts the Official Languages Act of 1969. I am honoured to follow the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) who both joined in the debate this afternoon.

When this Bill was originally tabled in the House I had expected that I would be the first speaker on it from our caucus. However, when the debate was scheduled for Monday of this week I found myself in one of those conflicts which Members of Parliament have occasionally. I had a commitment to travel 250 kilometers north of Thunder Bay to the small community of Armstrong in order to present some Celebration '88 medals and scrolls to people in that community. I did not think it was fair to them to ask for a drastic rearrangement of timetables in order to allow me to come here.

I am grateful to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar), for the able way in which she addressed the topic before us yesterday morning. She spoke skilfully from her experience here in the national capital area on the importance of official languages and put it in a variety of contexts which are important to Canadians.

Today I want to take up something of the attitudes which have been expressed here in the House and outside the House and to elaborate on the support which I think exists in Canada for Bill C-72 for a strengthening of the laws dealing with official bilingualism in this country. I do this all the more because of the report in The Globe and Mail specifically which suggested that the Ministers speaking yesterday in support of Bill C-72 were being heckled by back-benchers in their own caucus, a highly unusual situation and one which certainly arouses one's interest.

I have asked my colleagues about the strength of this opposition, if you will, in the Conservative caucus to Bill C-72. I gather that "heckled" may be over-doing it a little bit, although the questions being posed this afternoon to the Secretary of State suggest the concerns which a variety of back-bench Members feel.

I was distressed earlier today when listening to the Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) on this topic to sense much more than only concern about the way in which the Official Languages Act might impact on individuals in various ways. I was particularly distressed to hear him taking statistics on the advance of bilingualism in various areas of the federal Government as evidence of a dangerous tendency, or at least that is what I inferred from it. He appeared to suggest that these advances in bilingual ability to some very high and impressive proportions in certain areas of the federal Government were a bad thing.

I suspect that what he was thinking in the first order, and trying to suggest to all of us here and those outside listening to the debate, was that these bilingual persons were persons whose first language was French and that these proportions suggested an overwhelming employment in these various areas of government of persons who were francophones as against anglophones in the Canadian population. That would certainly be a concern given the principle of equitable participation if employment in various areas of government ran to three-quarters and more of francophone Canadians. I could understand concern among Anglophones across the country because employment in the Public Service is a desirable form of service to the country and persons whose first language is English want to share in that opportunity to serve.

I think, however, that he failed to recognize the fact that many of the persons who are included in these statistics are persons whose first language is English, who have become bilingual and who, by being bilingual, enhance the service they can give the people of Canada and enhance the abilities of the Public Service to operate in both languages.

In pursuing that I want to make something of a report in Language and Society published by the Office of the Commissioner of Official Languages in April, 1987. There is an article in here by Stacy Churchill and Anthony Smith to which I believe the Secretary of State referred. I would like to pull some sections of this particular article from it for all of us to contemplate because I think that few of us appreciate that attitudes in the country have been changing since the Official Languages Act in 1969 responded to a political challenge, in Quebec particularly but out of Quebec as well. In that response the Official Languages Act has loosed a ferment, if you will, in the Canadian population which has been modifying the culture of the country in ways which I personally regard as desirable.

These two sociologists first consider the ways in which attitudes across the country are sensitive to the bilingual reality, to English and French. They put Quebec beside British Columbia assuming that these might be our polar opposites, one society being first French-speaking and the other being largely English-speaking. They note that an astounding 99 per cent of Quebecers consider the ability to speak both English and French to be very or moderately important in helping a young person get ahead. Fully 93 per cent of Quebecers believe that English and French should be required in school. They note that Quebecers are almost as supportive of the language rights of the English-speaking minority as they are positive about the value of learning English. Eighty-eight per cent of Quebec's Francophones believe that Anglophones in Quebec should be entitled to education for their children in English. Eighty-nine per cent believe that English-speaking residents of Quebec should be able to receive hospital service in English. Support for service in English in the Post Office is 85 per cent and in department stores 82 per cent.

• (1630)

Those are impressive figures in a province in which Conservative back-benchers have been obsessed about Bill 101 as reflecting a reality in Quebec.

What are the attitudes in British Columbia as far as acceptance of English and French in various ways is concerned? This public opinion poll is a Canadian fact survey which the Commissioner of Official Languages commissioned in 1985. It indicates that 69 per cent of the British Columbia population believe that speaking both English and French is important to a young person getting ahead. Seventy-seven per cent think it would be beneficial if all Canadians spoke both English and French, and 59 per cent support the compulsory teaching of both languages in schools. This is in a province where the francophone population in 1981 was not even 2 per cent. Fifty-seven per cent of the population in British Columbia believe that people who live in the province and speak French should be entitled to education for their children in French. Similarly, a majority of 55 per cent of British Columbians believe that hospital services should be available to Francophones in French.

As the authors suggest, what is desirable in exploring this matter of service of official bilingualism is to put it in a human context in terms of services to real people. There is not the kind of fear that Western Report is pandering to or the kind of prejudice that still exists in some minds, but the kind of compassion that I believe characterizes Canadians as they recognize that official bilingualism is a humane response to part of the reality of the Canadian population.

The authors conclude that the national picture is a positive one over-all. The levels of support for service in the language of the provincial minorities is at the 50 per cent level or better on all questions asked, including those which deal with both the public sector and the private sector.

For those outside Quebec, the support is 50 per cent or better on all questions asked about the public sector. What I find quite astonishing is that outside Quebec 40 per cent or more of the Canadian population believe that institutions in the private sector should be prepared to serve Canadians in both official languages. Such an astonishing change in attitude of Canadians leaves no doubt that in the last 20 years a cultural revolution has been under way. Bill C-72 is designed to support and enhance that change in attitude among most Canadians.

The authors recognize that a minority in this poll feel differently. If we want to use the public opinion poll data to create a profile of Canadians least likely to support bilingualism, it would single out an Anglophone, 50 years of age or over, with no past training in French as a second language, no current contact with the French language, living in western Canada. I hesitate over those last words. I am western Canadian myself in origin and I think it is important to recognize that there is this minority feeling across the country, including various parts of Ontario and Atlantic Canada. It is clearly a minority, but one that is decreasing.

Canadians of all ages believe that bilingualism is a useful skill for young people, even if older Canadians do not consider bilingualism valuable for themselves personally. That in itself is evidence of how this country is changing and developing.

Bill C-72 allows us to explore ways in which the Official Languages Act of 1969, which was supported by all Parties in Parliament and enhanced by the Charter in 1982, can be strengthened. This includes explicitly addressing the question of cost in accomplishing this goal. Undoubtedly there is a cost attached, but we should be capable of recognizing that governments make decisions that cost money. The argument that an expenditure must be carried out is not valid because countries spend money in various ways to enhance the unity and strength of a nation. In terrible circumstances, countries are forced to make expenditures to suppress minorities or maintain forces of occupation.

Rather than being forced to make expenditures in such ugly circumstances, we spend money on the cultivation of both languages, to encourage immersion programs across the country, which have been spectacularly successful. Government expenditures are used to support organizations such as Canadian Parents for French, a group which reflects the change that has taken place in this country.

I suggest that the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars each year in these areas is a good investment, and one that we should continue to make.

Therefore, speaking for my colleagues in the New Democratic Party caucus:

[Translation]

—we remain committed to the cause of generally promoting the official languages in Canadian society, co-operation with the provinces in that respect, particularly assistance to official languages minorities, and the opportunity for all to learn the second official language.

[English]

That is the position that the New Democratic Party has taken over the years, and it is one in which we are solid today. We supported the goals of the Official Languages Act of 1969 and we recognize that, considering the developing circumstances in the country today, it is advisable to have an amendment and re-enactment of the Act. We support Bill C-72 in its attempt to address the desire of Canadians to work in the Public Service in the language of their choice as well as to deal with the Government in the language with which they are most familiar and best able to express themselves.

At the press conference following the tabling of the Bill last June there was a very warm pouring out of support for the Bill from various quarters, to which I joined to some extent. There may have been some satisfaction as well as pleasure about the fact that the Conservative Government, which we realize includes Members who are concerned about what official bilingualism represents, was able to introduce a Bill with as good and varied provisions as Bill C-72 has. When I saw it against the current of approbation for the Bill, to express a concern or two, I did not get anywhere with the media, as anyone can see simply by going back and looking at the coverage in the Ottawa Citizen and other newspapers.

• (1640)

Without diminishing any of that support this afternoon, I would like to express those same concerns here and add one or two others. My concern at the time focused primarily on the statements dealing with service in Clause 31 of the Bill and with equitable participation, as the jargon goes, and with the matter of fairness of employment, if you will, with which Clause 38 deals.

Clause 31(2) provides for the prescribing of circumstances in which there is a significant demand for the purpose of service to the public. This is by no means a simple matter. My concern is primarily that the situation previously was one in which the obligation was on Government to provide service to the official language minority except where the demand was so low or uneven as to be unjustified. As a member of the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages, I can tell my colleagues in the House that government action under this section, that is, service to the public by Departments and agencies and Crown corporations, has been advanced only very, very slowly over the years. It is astonishing that in the mid-1980s one still has to bludgeon various Crown corporations, in particular, and to a lesser extent Departments of the Government, to achieve this matter of service to the public.

This is simple humanity. If someone who is unilingual French or who is far more fluent in French than in English approaches Government, it is only simple humanity that the government Department or Crown corporation be prepared to serve him or her in that language. The fact that it has taken so long is quite a commentary on the fact that the Act of 1969 laid on the obligation except where demand was low or uneven.

I put that as the background against which we have now, in a sense, a change in posture. Government will specify what the requirements of significant demand are and the public will have the opportunity to bring legal pressure to bear. It is certainly the tradition to use litigation these days to advance the cause, and official language minorities certainly know a great deal about being forced to use litigation. Frankly, I am not at all happy about the possibility that people are going to have to use litigation. That route will be used because of a political failure of the will of Government. That is one of the parts which concerns me.

With respect to Clause 38, the provision is for a Public Service which will tend to reflect the Canadian population that may do the job, although this will even more clearly require will on the part of the Government of the day. The phrase "tend to reflect" is really pretty loose. I would like to see much stronger language, although I would say this is very much in keeping with Bill C-62, the employment equity Bill, which was all too weak as well. I am not all that surprised to have this sort of legislation from this Conservative Government.

These are concerns which I articulated last June and I appreciate the opportunity today to state them again. There are other concerns which I will not have the time to address with respect to the main comments expressed by the Governments of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. Those are points that certainly will be put forward at committee. I believe my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin), will certainly want to expand on those points at an early point in the debate. I am sorry I will not have the time myself, unless someone places a question and I can say something about it.

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member noted his concurrence with Part VI, participation of English speaking and French speaking Canadians, and employment opportunities. The intent of the Bill is, of course, to give equal opportunity to both English and French to participate in this program, according to this Bill. I wonder if the Hon. Member could explain how we can have equal participation in the Bill when the Bill specifically states that it is a requirement, once an area is designated bilingual, that any supervisory or management functions which are to be carried out by those institutions are to be done in both official languages? That is according to Clause 37(1)(a)(iii). I wonder if he would explain how that is going to happen if the person is unilingual.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. The matter of equitable participation does not establish a general right for any and all Anglophones to serve in government. I was reminded of a struggle for a Supreme Court position in the United States some years ago. I believe it was a Senator from North Dakota who argued that mediocrity had a right to a place on the Supreme Court of the United States. Simply because he had been described as mediocre was no reason why he should not be appointed to the position.

That incident comes to mind because what we are clearly approaching is the development of a Public Service in Canada which has some new characteristics. It is a Public Service which, at its higher levels, in particular, will be bilingual. It will be a Public Service, the supervisors of which will be capable of dealing with their subordinates in English or in French, depending on which language their subordinates would like to work in. That, I recognize, creates pinches along the way. It creates the challenge to learn the other language, a challenge which faces so many persons in public life.

On the way to doing that, there will be people who think it is all terribly unfair and that it is not a matter of equality. But equitable participation is primarily a matter of ensuring that there is opportunity for minorities, the English language minority in Quebec and the French speaking minority across the country. We want to be sure that as the Public Service develops over time, we move closer to having a reflection of the Canadian population in Government. That is clearly the direction in which public opinion expects Government to move. French immersion classes outside of Quebec are so spectacularly successful these days because parents recognize they need to prepare their children for a time when the Canadian elite, if you will, will be bilingual. That elite in the Public Service of Canada will be capable of working in either language.

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, may I say through you to the member of the Opposition, that I fail to see the logic of the Hon. Member's statement that it is fair to Anglophones in Quebec, as the Hon. Member has mentioned, in supplying this position of supervisory or management function, because the unilingual Anglophone in Quebec would have no chance under this legislation, according to Clause 37(1)(a)(iii) which simply states that any supervisory or management functions that are to be carried out in both official languages by that management team.

How does the Hon. Member propose to protect unilingual Anglophones or unilingual Francophones with this legislation in the workplace? How can they improve their position by advancement through management to top positions if they are unilingual? I fail to see the fairness.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) would look at Clause 37, he would note that subclause (1) states:

> The Treasury Board may make regulations in respect of federal institutions,—

• (1650)

The Bill goes on to set forth the goals of our policy. The "may make" is clearly an indication that there will be recognition of rights. Grandfathering has gone on throughout the Public Service for a long time in a straightforward manner, often to the detriment of the policy that was expressed in the Bill of 1969.

I am sure that tender regard for the rights of individuals, and their assertions through one organization or another, will provide protection as we move toward the goal that the majority of Canadians want, whether or not the Hon. Member for Simcoe South thinks that this is all terribly funny. He is in the minority. The minority or the silent majority, as they would like to think of themselves, are the silent majority of the 19th century, those dead and gone.

Mr. Domm: The Hon. Member is misinterpreting the legislation before us. When the Hon. Member quotes Clause 37(1), "The Treasury Board may make regulations", we are talking about making regulations deeming such things as that other areas in respect of Canada or places outside of Canada shall become bilingual by designation.

There are seven areas in Canada which are now deemed to be bilingual in the workplace, and let us deal with those seven. How does one protect a unilingual Anglophone in the Province of Quebec who wants to be in mid-management when it is a prerequisite under this Bill that that management position be filled with a bilingual person?

While the Hon. Member is answering that question, will he tell me how to protect a Francophone in the rest of Canada who cannot speak fluently class C or a top grade of English, in order that he can advance through the Public Service in Alberta when he is not fluently bilingual? He cannot take a management position, according to this Bill that we are studying today, and the clause referred to by the Hon. Member, with all due respect, does not deal with a designated bilingual place or region in the workplace.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): There are two realities here. One is the practice for years past in which many odd things go on for the protection of those who are unilingual. All sorts of odd things have gone on, and I expect all sorts of odd things will go on in the future for the protection of those persons.

Early in 1988, 19 years after the Official Languages Act became law, and long after the anglophone population of Quebec should have faced up to reality, and I assume the Hon. Member is talking about an Anglophone Quebecer, if the Hon. Member asks me how I am going to protect such a person, I am not sure how much I want to do to protect such a person.

Mr. Domm: Right.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): A person living in Quebec who is still unilingual after all those years with all the assistance that the federal Government can provide in the way of language study, knowing full well that that is what advancement in the Public Service requires, and knowing this reality for the past two decades, how far does one extend the compassion that the Canadian population generally feels, which I was invoking earlier, when one is on the brink of testing that compassion?

There are challenges to be met. Anglophone Canadians can meet that challenge in the same way as Francophone Canadians. I am sure that all of us have watched with some interest the manner in which the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), who came out of the francophone context, has learned English and how to operate in the House. He deserves a lot of credit for doing that.

Personally, I do not think that George Bain's observation some 20 years ago, and I remember the column well in The Globe and Mail about this strange malady suffered by western Canadians, the inability to learn French, is anything but a satirical observation by a commentator who knew which way things were moving in this country, and had to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Charlevoix.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Madam Speaker, I have barely four minutes left but I will undoubtedly have other opportunities to pursue the debate.

From the outset I should like to say that Bill C-72 is one of the major components of the over-all proposition made by this Government in terms of unity and national reconciliation. Since the Meech Lake Accord did acknowledge the existence of two linguistic communities in this country, it is important to point out the federal Government's commitment not only to acknowledge this linguistic duality but also to promote it throughout Canada.

Briefly now, some of my colleagues seem to be concerned about the difficulties this Bill might create for their fellow citizens.

There is talk of possible discrimination in employment, and some of my colleagues rapidly produced protest letters referring to language discrimination. I want to tell my colleagues that for every such letter they have I can produce 1,000. Yes, 1,000 letters about discrimination—alleged or otherwise—against the Canadian francophone minority. One has to be wary of such literature and such statements. It is a ready-made excuse, such an easy way to hide one's lack of experience and qualifications: I was not selected or I was not promoted because I speak French or because I speak English. What an easy way out! One has to be careful. I have had people coming up to me and say: I did not get the job because I am Francophone. A check into the matter showed that such was not the case, the person involved simply did not have the qualifications required for senior management.

On this point, the clause of Bill C-72 is very clear:

[English]

Clause 38(3) reads:

> Merit principle (3) Nothing in this section shall be construed as abrogating or derogating from the principle of selection of personnel according to merit.

[Translation]

This section, therefore, will not change anything to the mode of selection based on the merit principle. And that remains a basic criterion.

Madam Speaker, some of my colleagues often refer to Bill 101. Strangely enough, they are representatives from other provinces. The main reason Quebec felt compelled to adopt Bill 101, is because this country, in the past, would not respect the Canadian linguistic duality and had failed to show enough generosity to make us feel fully at home in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Unfortunately, it is now five o'clock; I am sure that the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) will want to continue his remarks at the first opportunity.

[English]

It being 5 p.m. the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

• (1700)

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—BILLS

[English]

PUBLIC EMPLOYEES POLITICAL RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West) moved that Bill C-273, an Act respecting political rights of public servants, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to rise today, as the only public servant who was elected in the last federal general election, to speak on my Bill C-273 designed to extend political rights to public servants. I have spoken on this issue on a number of occasions in the past, the first time being my maiden speech in this place in November, 1984. It gives me some pleasure now to present legislation aimed at redressing what I view as an injustice. I believe firmly that this is an issue which should transcend Party affiliation. It is an area that all Parties and Members have an interest in promoting, and it can demonstrate how well the House can work when an issue that all Canadians see as important is brought before it.

I should like to highlight briefly why I feel that the issue is an important one. The report on equality rights presented to Parliament in 1985 noted the following:

> While the neutrality of the Public Service must be preserved as a general principle, it seems to us that the rights of public servants are, at least in certain circumstances, unduly curtailed.

In my view that is a classic understatement.

There is a fundamental issue at stake here—whether a group of Canadians has the right to free speech, free assembly, and the right to work peacefully and lawfully for democratic change. Hundreds, perhaps thousands, of public servants all across Canada who have participated in the election campaigns of all three Parties have had to look over their shoulders, worrying that big brother working out of the Public Service Commission office would discipline them for stuffing envelopes or painting lawn signs. Drivers, clerks, or technical staff whose work may never touch upon policy cannot join their neighbours in the simplest of election tasks without risk of losing their jobs.

Balanced against the claim that basic rights are being denied is the argument that political activity would jeopardize the neutrality of the Public Service and undermine the effective administration of government policy.

The debate over the political rights of public servants must take into account that the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees everyone in Canada freedom of conscience, thought, belief, opinion, and expression. The Charter clearly states that these rights are subject only to such "reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society".

Therefore, two obligations exist in this debate. Those of us who defend the right of public servants to political expression must answer legitimate questions raised about the effects of such expression on the effective administration of public policy. Those who would deprive public servants of their democratic rights must show that the limitations are "demonstrably justified".

The objections to allowing public servants the opportunity to enjoy democratic rights are not superficial. Indeed, they go to the core of our beliefs of how a democratic government should function. These objections are rooted in the idea that the expression of Party loyalty or political orientation by public servants would endanger the public perception of neutrality, allow public servants to promote their personal political philosophies in advice to Ministers, and put Party interest above service to the public in the implementation of policy.

However, are we to assume that the only people who have a political philosophy are those who are active members of a political Party? Moreover, just as we are aware that there are active members of political Parties who have no discernible political philosophy aside from self-interest, we know of how profoundly the political philosophies of supposedly neutral public servants have affected the development of public policy in the country.

The fact is that whether or not public servants belong to a political Party or stuff envelopes in an election campaign, their political philosophies will remain intact. Preventing them from speaking or from participating in the political process will not stop them from thinking.

This is not to deny the rights to which both Ministers and the public are entitled in their expectations of service from the bureaucracy. However, neither the public nor cabinet Ministers have the right to the illusion that public servants have no political opinions. Rather, they have a right to have those opinions expressed visibly, so that some sort of accountability may be carried out. There is no protection for the public with a muzzled Public Service, only an increased opportunity for the obtrusive influence of personal and hidden views.

With the open declaration of political affiliation, any public servant with a partisan affiliation will be constrained to behave in an objective manner when dealing with both the public and his or her colleagues, to demonstrate that political bias does not exist.

Nothing in the restoration of political rights to public servants through the Bill removes the burden on the Public Service of behaving in a non-partisan manner in the execution of public duties. There is, of course, nothing unethical in the expression of political opinion. The essential question is whether public servants will act to implement government policy in a non-partisan manner, not whether they have personal views on politics or a political philosophy.

Canadians must be assured that their treatment by public servants will not be coloured by political affiliation, just as they must be assured that their treatment is not affected by their sex, their race, their language, or their ethnic origin.

We have laws and regulations prohibiting discrimination on these grounds. However, such regulations do not prohibit people from having bigoted or sexist views, for example, because that of course is impossible, but they do prohibit public servants from manifesting any such views in the execution of their public duties. The same logic is applied in this Bill to the expression of political rights by public servants.

I do not think that there is a pressing need in this day and age to deprive hundreds of thousands of Canadians of their political rights, but if we are to impose such important limitations, Parliament cannot do so lightly. The restrictions on basic political liberties of public servants are more severe in Canada than in most western democracies. In the United States, Great Britain, Australia, France, and Sweden, public servants have the right to free political expression. More important, when there are restrictions on political activity, these are spelled out clearly in law as they are in the United States.

In the United Kingdom there is a clear delineation of political rights for different categories of public servants, running from complete freedom for the largest category in jobs of little or no political sensitivity, to severe restrictions, similar to those that we now have in Canada, for a small group of senior public servants. The British model is one which has been suggested as an option for Canada by the 1979 report of the Special Committee on the Review of Personnel Management and the Merit Principle, known as the D'Avignon report. It also served as a model for the Bill before us today.

As I have told the House on a number of occasions, I find that the D'Avignon approach seemed to provide the best balance possible between the competing principles of a neutral Public Service and individual freedom of expression. Coming to the present law, the sad reality for Canadian public servants is that Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act is worded vaguely, so that it has left the definition of political liberties up to the Public Service Commission. The commission has been notoriously fickle in its interpretation of the Act, permitting political activities in some parts of the country while denying them in others.

Various federal Departments governed by the Act interpret it in different ways, and federal agencies not subject to the Act have also varied in their interpretations, some permitting almost complete political freedom to their employees and others imposing severe restrictions.

Section 32 does not deal with the right to public comment on political issues. Limitations on freedom of expression are imposed largely through policy or regulation by government agencies, not by legislation. The Public Service Staff Relations Board has set stringent limits on freedom of expression by public servants, banning criticism of public policy by all employees. It has done this even when it can be shown that public comments do not affect the performance of a public servant's job.

If our commitment to free speech and freedom of expression is anything, then it is not divisible. Neither clear cause nor vague fears, can be the only justification for limiting basic democratic rights in a free country. If those rights must be limited then Parliament must make that decision, after a careful and measured assessment of the genuine need and clear dangers behind such action.

• (1710)

This Bill aims to provide basic democratic rights to public servants. It ensures that it is Parliament that will set out which rights will be curtailed and how this will be done. It will be Parliament that guarantees the public's right to a non-partisan delivery of public services. I would like to outline briefly how this Bill endeavours to achieve those objectives.

The Bill classifies public servants into three categories, based roughly on the political sensitivity of the duties performed. These categories reflect very closely the recommendations of the 1979 D'Avignon report. In my view this classification is essential if we are to perform properly the required balancing act between the principles I referred to earlier and to recognize that those employees who engage in activities that are more politically sensitive cannot enjoy the same range of liberties as those whose positions do not touch upon policy at all.

The reasons for not granting full political rights to employees in the executive and senior management occupational groups seem quite clear. It would be most inappropriate for our senior public servants to work in an election campaign to defeat the Minister to whom they are providing advice at the time. All political activities, aside from voting, making financial contributions to a Party, being a member of a political Party, attending political meetings, and within certain limits expressing opinions on matters of public interest, would be prohibited to employees in this category. In other words, pretty much the status quo would be maintained for category A employees. The Bill creates a second category wherein access to full political rights would be subject to request and decision by the Public Service Commission, depending on the specific responsibilities of the applicant and the political sensitivity of those duties.

The occupational groups in this category, as suggested in the D'Avignon report, are set out in Clause 1 of the Bill. I hope that the composition of this category will be reviewed closely and carefully in committee. Some Members may feel that D'Avignon included too many classifications. I know that the Public Service Commission has expressed the view that not enough were included.

The commission would be obligated to hold public hearings to determine the limits, if any, to the political rights that will be extended to employees in this category. However, it is important to remember that it will be Parliament that will have the final say on the regime to govern these groups.

Those category B occupational groups are ones in which the duties of the position vary so that neither a blanket denial nor complete political freedom can be supported. They contain positions whose incumbents may quite properly be allowed to take an active part in politics and others whose duties are such that political activity would be inappropriate. In this category, for example, are employees in the commerce group whose duties involve awarding government contracts, employees in the purchasing and supply group who are responsible for awarding contracts, and staffing officers in the personnel administration group who are directly involved in the recruiting of new employees. The House will be asked in committee to consider whether political action by members of such groups might be seen to be incompatible with the exercise of their responsibilities.

I recognize that the creation of this middle category of public servants is not universally supported. I also realize that it makes for a complex and initially somewhat cumbersome and time-consuming process. However, I am convinced, largely based on my understanding of the British experience, that it is a system which is intellectually more supportable than simply dividing the Public Service into two categories—senior managers and others. Attractive as that approach is from the point of view of simplicity and certainty, it does not, in my view, provide quite the right balance between the need for a politically neutral Public Service and the rights of individual public servants.

Employees in all remaining occupational groups, which constitute the vast majority of public servants, would be placed in category C. This will entitle them to full political rights without review by the Public Service Commission, other than requiring a leave of absence without pay upon nomination by a political Party to contest an election. The activities of these employees rarely touch upon policy and political questions. Granting them the rights shared by other Canadians would hardly jeopardize the neutrality of our Public Service and the effective administration of government policy.

In my view we have allowed the present unjust system to go on for much too long. We have all paid a price for it. It is difficult to estimate how many public servants, committed to improving all aspects of life in Canada, have been deterred by the present provisions of the Public Service Employment Act.

This Bill is by no means perfect. Indeed, on rereading it after it was printed I noticed a number of imperfections. I am sure that some of them will be pointed out today. I am also sure that a number of them can be dealt with at committee.

The regime as set out in Bill C-273 is one that I would commend to the House. It sends out the clear message that all Canadians may contribute to political life in our country and that the safeguards for a neutral, non-partisan Public Service will remain in place.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to congragulate the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) for introducing this Bill for discussion in the House, and I hope that the House will agree to refer this Bill to a committee this afternoon if necessary. I want to congratulate him on his initiative, because having personally on several occasions debated the issue of extended rights for Federal public servants, especially the right to participate in the political life of this country, I recognize that his initiative provides us with food for thought. I thank him for his well-reasoned remarks concerning Bill C-273.

It is an interesting Bill fashioned after the D'Avignon report, a report which had been commissioned by the Liberal Government of the time concerning the application of the merit principle in the Public Service of Canada.

The Bill is therefore global. It is interesting to note that the Hon. Member has addressed every possible aspect of this issue and provided also not only for more generous application, but also for the review of the issue by a House committee every four years, a suggestion which I feel is new and which I welcome most positively.

The purpose of this Bill is not new. As I was saying earlier, I had an opportunity, on September the 23rd, 1985, to move in the House a motion calling essentially for the same thing. What is new is that a Government member has introduced a Bill which is fairly complete and in my opinion meets almost all of D'Avignon's expectations. I am aware, just as the Hon. Member for Ottawa West is, that this idea originated in the British Parliament, the so-called mother of Parliaments, and I feel the matter is important because there are now 200 000 federal civil servants who rather arbitrarily are openly denied their democratic privileges during an election campaign.

Hon. Members will know that, whenever there is an election campaign, the Public Service Commission sends a letter or notice to public servants in which it says: Section 32 of the Act prohibits your active participation in an election, even though, according to our interpretation, you may hold a membership card, make financial contributions, and even attend political meetings, but you cannot be seen or participate actively in a federal campaign as a supporter of one of the political parties. I find this regrettable because, as someone from the National Capital Region, it is quite clear to me that many public servants want to take part in the democratic process, to act according to their political beliefs and to help the candidate of their choice get elected.

It is a secret for no one, Mr. Speaker, that we all have in our constituencies, whether Ottawa—Vanier, Ottawa West, Ottawa Centre or Ottawa Carleton, public servants who work in our election campaigns and who are very helpful to us. It should be clearly understood that legal proceedings can be taken against a public servant only if a candidate in an election lodges a complaint with the Commission saying that a public servant has worked for the election of another person. I must say that no candidate has ever complained in Canada that a public servant has worked for someone else during an election.

As we all know that there are public servants who work for candidates in political elections, we should put an end to this hypocritical practice of refusing to admit it openly. As for me, I say so quite openly: There are indeed public servants who work for me during election campaigns. I encourage them to continue to do so, because I am convinced that, for the majority of them, it is their democratic and constitutional. I find it difficult to believe that another candidate in a federal election would object to the participation of a public servant who, according to Mr. D'Avignon's classification or that proposed in the Bill introduced by the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney), belongs to category C and is not in a position to advise the Government of the day. I cannot understand how someone could say that a doctor practising medicine, a veterinarian working at the Experimental Farm, or another public servant, whether he is a bookkeeper, a postal worker or an employee of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, might in any way embarrass the Government by taking part in a democratic electoral process.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, when the Canadian Public Service issues its instructions for an election, it gives a very narrow, and to my mind unfair, interpretation of the Act. It is not the responsibility of the Commission to legislate. It is the responsibility of Parliament, but the employer, the Treasury Board, also has the responsibility to suggest and implement changes to modernize the Act and make it reflect the Canadian reality.

Mr. Speaker, during the 1984 electoral campaign, the Conservatives promised that this matter would be settled and that a parliamentary committee would examine the whole issue of the political participation of public servants. We Liberals said that we supported the idea of having a committee of the House discuss and examine this issue. The New Democrats also agree with us. I don't see the problem. The back-benchers agree and I think the Government must act fairly with all its employees. We must eliminate hypocrisy and settle this issue some day. Let's do it today. It is a Government commitment which is supported by the opposition Parties. I don't see where the problem is.

I would like to repeat it, Madam Speaker, I think that today a federal employee who gets involved in a procedure as central to democracy as the election of a Member of Parliament must not be threatened with proceedings if he or she has been identified in the Hon. Member's Bill as a category C employee, whose involvement would not be subject to any limits. I think that it is a good idea to divide employees into three categories: A, B and C. Obviously, those who work at high levels advise the Government. It would not be realistic to allow them to participate in an election campaign in which the Government that they themselves would have advised would be criticized . As for the Category B employees—as I have already said in a speech on September 23, 1985—it is a question of judgment since some public servants occupy positions where discretionary decisions are taken and they could be accused of favouritism or partisanship.

As for the category C employees, probably 80,000 to 85,000 public servants, I think they could be freed of all restriction and allowed to participate freely in the democratic process.

To conclude, then, Madam Speaker, so that other Hon. Members may have the opportunity to speak, I want to say that since it is an administrative step that has to be taken and the House of Commons agrees to free an important number of public servants, let's do it and send the Bill to the committee so that the question can be examined and the decision be taken before the next election to allow many public servants to participate.

• (1720)

[English]

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Madam Speaker, I am delighted, on behalf of my constituents of Nepean—Carleton, to rise in the House to share some of my thoughts relative to the Private Member's Bill put by the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) dealing with the political rights of public servants.

I have spoken on this issue in the House several times before, but today I wish to make special reference to my comments of February 7, 1986, at page 10607 of Hansard. I would like to quote my remarks from that time so that Hon. Members will know that I have been consistent in my approach to the matter on which I wish to speak this afternoon. This is what I said:

> I personally favour in style the recommendations which were put forward in the D'Avignon Report. It is a concept which is fairly widely used in the British House of Commons and in the British Parliament, where public servants are in fact tiered. For example, there is a tier of persons who have total political freedoms and an upper tier of those who do not.

I would like to compliment my colleague from Ottawa West for raising this issue. I think he has a very sensitive feel for public servants, having been one himself, a very sensitive feel for the handicap the present regulations place upon public servants and a very sensitive feel for finding a constructive solution to this, a solution which he has proposed in his Bill. As well, in this Private Members' Hour, I want to compliment my colleague for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for showing support for this Private Member's Bill, hoping that it will go to a vote this afternoon and from there on to a legislative committee.

There is no question that this item was pivotal in many of the activities associated with the process of the 1984 election. In that process, questions were put to political Parties on their policies, and I shall really only deal with the response given by my Party. The question put was as follows: "Would your Party be prepared to remove the current restrictions on the rights of federal Public Service employees and grant full political rights to employees currently covered by collective agreements?" The response to that was as follows: "The Progressive Conservative Party favours a general removal of the restrictions on political activity, especially for those public servants covered by collective agreements. These restrictions are unnecessary and may not be justifiable under the terms of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. There are some senior public servants whose job responsibilities are very political in nature and whose rights should be somewhat restricted to prevent conflict of interest. But we are confident that these people could be covered separately without disenfranchising over 200,000 public servants in the process." That is the position of my Party and, I presume, the position of the Government.

• (1730)

In the 1984 election public servants operated under a very difficult handicap. A memorandum was issued to all public servants by the Public Service Commission dated February, 1984, under the signature of Edgar Gallant, then Chairman of the Public Service Commission. He outlined the guidelines under which public servants would be expected to operate. To highlight a couple of them let me quote the following: "For greater clarity of this general principle we propose the following guidelines:

First, employees should not personally campaign for or against political parties or candidates in federal, provincial or territorial elections.

Employees should not become involved in the solicitation, collection, distribution or administration of the finances of political parties.

Employees should not assume any official functions.

Employees must not stand for elected office or seek nomination in a federal, provincial or territorial election unless they have first obtained permission from the Public Service Commission to take leave without pay in order to do so."

Those guidelines effectively made political eunuchs out of all public servants. I very much regretted that because I spent most of the 1970s in municipal politics where you put together and work with a team of people who help you get elected, provide you with advice on policy matters, and who are generally part of your team. It was disappointing to me as I sought nomination and eventual election to this House that so many people who were part of that team in earlier days felt it necessary not to participate in the federal process and assist someone like myself in seeking higher office. Those people are my friends, neighbours, people I had worked with professionally or touched in other ways and it was really regrettable. However, in that memorandum that I referred to, Mr. Gallant makes this final comment: "Until Parliament gives further manifestations of its will the above constitutes our interpretation of the spirit and scope of the law in regard to the political impartiality of Public Service employees." It is against that background that I am so happy to speak to this Bill before us this afternoon because I find it closely approximates what I supported back on February 7, 1986, and which I believe would be a good way of solving the problem.

My colleague suggests in his Bill that public servants be divided into three categories. One category would be those who are responsible for developing policy, policy recommendations and policy advice, and they would be effectively restricted from the political process. The third category, described as category C, would be a person who could participate in depth. Then there is a group in between which would have to go to a judiciary council of some sort to decide whether or not they would have that right.

When you look at this Bill in some detail you will find that it recommends that all public servants have the right to vote, to make financial contributions, to be a member of a political Party, and to attend political meetings. He outlines very thoughtfully as well that no public servant can make a public statement that directly conflicts with the duties of his or her position. That is a very useful item in the Bill. It prevents public servants from commenting on the area in which they work professionally or technically.

The Bill goes on to add in Clause 5 that no category C employee shall engage in an activity during working hours. Those two points, that you are not to comment in any circumstances on your area of professional activity or comment at all during working hours, really safeguard the public in a remarkable way. Those employees who fall into category C are able to work for a candidate, be a candidate, and solicit funds, and hold office.

It is absolutely essential that this Parliament find a solution to enable public servants to participate with good conscience in the political process. I believe this Bill provides that opportunity. The Public Service that I know is very professional. It includes Departments like Energy, Mines and Resources, Agriculture Canada, and the National Research Council. I am confident they will approach this with a great deal of professionalism. Therefore, I would urge all Hon. Members in the House this afternoon to send this Bill to a legislative committee so that we can move forward with something which is awfully important to a significant number of Canadians.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, I welcome Bill C-73 and I congratulate the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) for having brought it forward. I thank him also for his support of similar legislation which I have proposed three times now during Private Members' Hour over the last three and a half years.

As the Hon. Member said, a decision by this House to send this Bill to committee today would send a clear message to the Government. As it happens, the Party which forms the Government is a Party of which he is a Member, and I regret that the promises of the Progressive Conservatives in 1984 on this issue have so far been honoured in the breach when there was clearly a consensus about the need for action.

What is important now is that this Bill not be talked out, and I plead with Hon. Members not to do so. I will be the only spokesperson for my Party. It is in the hands of Progressive Conservative Members. If they have particular concerns and there is not time to voice them in this hour, then they can take them to committee. I know the committee considering this matter will be happy to give a full hearing to people who have concerns about it.

While I have certain differences with the specifics of this Bill, both I and my Party certainly endorse it in principle. We believe it is a basis on which one can work in order to bring forward effective legislation to protect political rights.

I have brought forward two Bills, Bills C-231 and C-277, on this subject. I expect to go forward shortly to the Federal Court of Appeal with a case on political rights which I launched in July of 1984. It takes a long time to move these things through the courts, and I am personally disappointed that Parliament has not yet had a chance to take the necessary action and have this matter referred to a committee. I recall, a bit wryly if I may say so, that earlier, when I suggested this matter be sent to committee, the response from government Members was that it is going to happen so quickly it would be a delay and waste of time for the House to send it to committee for further study.

• (1740)

My colleague from Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper) referred to the promise of the Conservative Party which was quite clear. During the 1984 election campaign the Conservative Party said that the present restrictions on political activity are unnecessary and that the issue could and should be addressed without disenfranchising over 200,000 public servants. There is no question about the clarity of the promise that was made in 1984. In fact, it says here that the Conservative Party favours a general removal of the restrictions on political activity, especially for those public servants who are covered by collective agreements.

Unfortunately, for the last three and a half years the Conservative Government has abdicated this issue to the Public Service Commission, and I am afraid that the commission has gone far beyond its mandate in terms of its interpretation of Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act. I will come to that in a minute.

There are many similarities between the Bill before us and Bill C-231 which I proposed. In particular, they both agree on the need to repeal Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act. In his Bill, the Member for Ottawa West follows quite closely the D'Avignon report, leaving a restricted group of senior officials who would essentially have few political rights, a middle group who may get political rights if that is approved by the Public Service Commission and by the House of Commons, and a large group, the majority, who would have full rights to participate in political campaigns, to be members of political Parties, to stand for office, et cetera, et cetera.

The Bill I proposed also repeals Section 32. It allows for managerial and confidential employees to be excluded subject to approval by Parliament on each category and then gives full political rights to all the rest including federal employees in agencies, boards, and commissions who are not covered in the Bill proposed by the Member for Ottawa West. In other words, I had proposed a two-tiered system as opposed to the three-tiered system suggested by my friend from Ottawa West.

My problem with the three-tier proposal is that it is somewhat difficult to implement and that a likely result is that many persons who are not in politically sensitive positions would still wind up without political rights because they would find themselves falling into category B. I note that the Conservative Party's promise in 1984 was that it would extend political rights particularly to persons covered by collective bargaining agreements.

However, in fact most members of the Professional Institute of the Public Service would find themselves, according to the Bill of the Member for Ottawa West, in this grey area. They would be people working in such areas as commerce, program manager, purchasing and supply, law, information services, or personnel management. Likewise, members of the economists, sociologists, and statisticians Union all fall within the ESS category, which would also be in that grey area in category B.

I said earlier that I am disappointed that the Government has dragged its feet when there was clearly room for leadership on this particular issue. There have been elections in almost every province since 1984, and the restrictions which have been enforced by the Public Service Commission have applied to federal government employees who might have wished to become involved in those elections. There have been by-elections in several provinces; in the Yukon, Quebec, and Newfoundland, since 1984. The restrictions have applied there as well.

The basic problem of the Government's failure to act has really been a failure to endorse the professionalism of people working in the Public Service. The question is whether people working in Government can act impartially in the way in which we would all hope they would act and remove any personal opinions that they may have. As the Member for Ottawa West pointed out, those personal opinions exist whether or not a person is a member of a political Party. No one suggests that public servants fail in general to act impartially despite what their personal views may be. Yet the Government has failed to recognize that by not acting on the question of political rights.

Likewise, as we have seen in the last two weeks with the decision of the Supreme Court on the Charter of Rights, the Supreme Court is taking a strong position in terms of charter freedoms. The Charter guarantees freedom of expression and freedom of association subject to such restrictions as are justifiable in a free and democratic society.

This is the cornerstone of the case which I have before the Federal Court of Appeal, but until the courts finally rule we have a chilling effect which, as my colleague from Nepean has indicated, is particularly strong on Members in the national capital area because of the concentration of federal government employees in this particular area.

I would remind my colleagues that the Ontario Law Reform Commission held a very effective and extensive set of hearings and studies on the issue of political rights for government employees and came up with a position which is very close to that which was proposed in my Bill and in the Bill which we are debating right now as proposed by the Member for Ottawa West.

I would also remind all Members of Parliament that the Public Service Commission is meant to be an agency of Parliament. In fact, however, the articulation, the way by which that commission reports to Parliament, is extremely weak. There is now a Committee on Government Operations to which that commission is meant to report, but it is not called on to account regularly on its activities. When that committee or its predecessor has been critical of the Public Service Commission for its interpretation of Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act, the commission has essentially thumbed its nose at Members of Parliament to whom it is meant to be responsible. I for one, as a Member of Parliament, find that behaviour objectionable and indefensible.

Section 32 of the Act says essentially that public employees should not work for or against a candidate in an election. However, the guidelines issued by the Public Service Commission go far further than that. They state that federal Public Service employees should not undertake activities, assume responsibilities, or make public statements of a politically partisan nature or of a kind which could give rise to the perception that they may not be able to perform their duties as public employees in a politically impartial manner.

As long as Edgar Gallant was the Chairman of the Public Service Commission we knew that his perception was that there was a biased politically partisan public servant under every stone and that the least activity in which they engaged would give, in his view, the perception. In other words, there was no definition of what the perception was all about.

Unfortunately, his successor, Mrs. Huguette Labelle, has taken very much the same position. Although she has acknowledged that the courts and the Federal Court of Appeal have forced the Public Service Commission to climb back on some of its interpretations in law, there has been no effort to circulate that among federal government Departments and federal employees in the active, vigorous, and productive way which was undertaken in February, 1984, when the current guidelines were circulated.

I agree with my colleagues. I believe that in five or ten minutes or right now, if you will, we should let this Bill go to committee and allow this matter to have a full airing. If the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Mazankowski) has a Bill, let him bring it forward and send it to the same committee. Let us get action on this issue so that the fundamental rights of public employees are not ignored in the next election as they have been in so many previous elections.

[Translation]

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): First of all, Madam Speaker, I should like to congratulate my friend the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) for putting together Bill C-273 concerning the political rights of public employees.

Madam Speaker, we are called upon today to deal with an issue which is not new but which certainly deserves our undivided attention. As a matter of fact, we have been concerned already for quite some time with the problem of the participation of public employees in political activities as well as their involvement in political associations. Since the beginning of this century, when a number of pieces of legislation were implemented to ensure the neutrality and impartiality of the Federal Public Service, this organization has made every effort to maintain a fair balance between the individual rights of its employees and the collective rights of the Canadian public.

Public Service impartiality is an issue of great concern especially to the Ministers who must be quite sure that the advice they are getting is unbiased and not based on partisan considerations. It is also of great concern to the public employees themselves whose faithfulness, obedience or even opportunities for promotion must not be influenced by the result of a federal election. The importance of this impartiality is reflected in the provisions of the Public Service Employment Act which clearly limit the political activities of federal employees, and I quote:

> No employee shall engage in work for, on behalf of or against a candidate for election—or engage in work for, on behalf of or against a political party.

In view of the current legislation, public employees cannot participate actively in the political process, which means for instance that they cannot show their support for a candidate or political party. They may however be a candidate in an election, provided they have been authorized to do so by the Public Service Commission. This permission may be denied if their political involvement were likely to conflict with the impartial and neutral exercise of their duties.

For example, it is obvious that a deputy minister has to avoid any kind of partisan politics in the discharge of his responsibilities. Some other public servants simply must be impartial about government policy. This is why Public Service Commission officials have to keep in mind the employment category and level of a public servant asking for leave to run as a candidate in an election.

The commission wants to make sure that the public will never have any doubt as to the possibility of conflict of interests in the case of the employee involved. Of course civil servants can take passive participation in federal or provincial politics by making contributions to a party or exercising their right to vote.

For a few years now some people have been expressing doubts about the legitimacy of restricting public employees to passive participation, particularly by people claiming specific individual rights.

The issue has become more relevant since the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms was proclaimed in 1982. I should like to quote the Charter section 2:

> Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:
>
> (a) freedom of conscience and religion;
>
> (b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;
>
> (c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and
>
> (d) freedom of association.

The Charter refers to the fundamental freedoms of all Canadians, and section 3 reads:

> Every citizen of Canada has the right to vote in an election of members of the House of Commons or of a legislative assembly and to be qualified for membership therein.

However the Charter acknowledges the right to impose reasonable restrictions. So if we accept the principle that public employees must be subject to certain restrictions, these have to be defined.

The Government believes that such restrictions concerning the political activities of public employees should be as few as possible. However, we have to proceed with caution, because it would be unacceptable to compromise the neutrality of the Public Service and to question the principle of a permanent Public Service based on the merit principle, of a Public Service which can serve the Government objectively in the interests of all Canadians.

We have to recognize that, by the very nature of their responsiblities and their work, public servants must maintain some degree of impartiality to protect the integrity of the institution.

Thus, the Government must be assured that its policies will not be openly criticized by its public servants. On the other hand, public servants must remain neutral in the advice they give or the positions they may have to fill. It is indeed for this reason that the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) divides public servants into three categories in his Bill. The first includes public servants in the executive and senior management groups, who would be granted limited political rights; the second includes public servants of other professional groups, for whom the Public Service Commission would establish the required restrictions, and the third includes all other public servants, who would be granted extensive political rights.

The Commission has already been the subject of studies, such as that carried out by the Special Committee on the Review of Personnel Management and the Merit Principle, better known as the D'Avignon Committee. In his report, Mr. D'Avignon mentions the British regulatory system, which is based on a categorization of positions according to the nature of the duties and the extent to which their incumbents are involved in the process of policy-making and of advising the Government. According to Mr. D'Avignon, this system would be an excellent example to follow for the Canadian Public Service. Employees in a position which is not defined as being of a sensitive nature have full freedom to be politically active, while those who hold a sensitive position are denied the right to play an active role in politics.

It is difficult but not impossible to find a proper balance between exercising the rights of all Canadian citizens and maintaining the principle of neutrality of the Canadian Public Service. While recognizing the risks of giving back their political rights to public servants, we have to ensure that the restrictions imposed on them are not unreasonable.

Madam Speaker, others will have their own opinions on the best way to achieve a proper balance, and I shall listen carefully to their comments during this debate.

• (1750)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

---

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

INTERPROVINCIAL TRADE—REMOVAL OF BARRIERS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Madam Speaker, I know that you are a very busy person and do not have an opportunity to watch very much television. I wonder if, on occasion, you have seen the program called The Great White North? You may think that today, here in Ottawa, that is exactly what it is, but that is not what I am talking about.

The program that I am talking about is the one with a couple of characters named the MacKenzie brothers. Do you not recognize Bob and Doug MacKenzie? Perhaps if I use the phrase "Take off, eh", that may ring a bell.

As you know, on that program they seem to consume quite a bit of alcoholic refreshment known as beer. I do not know whether the beer they are consuming is Labatt, Molson, Carling or O'Keefe, but I do know if Bob and Doug MacKenzie are consuming that beer here in Ottawa, Ontario or Quebec, they are not consuming Moosehead beer.

Moosehead beer may not mean anything to you, but Moosehead beer is made in New Brunswick and can be bought in New Brunswick. It can be bought in Nova Scotia, as the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary knows. I am told that you can even buy it in the United States. In fact, it is the fourth most popular brand of some 400 brands of beer that are imported into the United States. Strangely enough, one cannot buy Moosehead beer here in Ottawa, nor in Quebec. In fact, one cannot buy it anywhere in Canada except in New Brunswick or in Nova Scotia.

• (1800)

You probably do not care, Madam Speaker. If you drink beer at all, you may drink another brand, or you may not drink it at all, and I am sure you probably do not. However, do you not think it is strange and peculiar that we cannot get Moosehead beer here in Ottawa?

The reason we cannot get Moosehead beer in Ontario is because of something called "interprovincial trade barriers". As you know, Madam Speaker, the Government has negotiated a trade agreement with the United States to help reduce the trade barriers between Canada and the United States. As well, we are in the midst of trying to negotiate through the GATT to reduce trade barriers around the world. However, for some reason or other, we still have these trade barriers right here in Canada which affect a great many products, not just Moosehead beer.

There is a vast array of examples of these interprovincial trade barriers. Back in 1985, the Quebec Government ordered the City of Aylmer, Quebec, to rip up a street that was paved with bricks because those bricks were made in Ontario. It ordered the city to replace those bricks with bricks made in Quebec. In addition, I am told New Brunswick has a surplus of fish processing capacity and Newfoundland has a surplus of fish but they cannot get together because of these trade barriers.

Ontario keeps milk produced in Quebec out of the province. Quebec prohibits the export of timber that is not fully processed in Quebec. British Columbia, I am told, has a mark-up of 50 per cent on British Columbia wine, while it has a mark-up of 110 per cent on Ontario or Quebec wine. Ontario will not even sell Quebec wine or British Columbia wine. As you can see, Madam Speaker, there is a vast array of these trade barriers.

One of the worst trade barriers, I suppose, is the purchasing preferences of provincial Governments, and I might say it is not just provincial Governments. They often give a preference of a 5 per cent or 10 per cent additional price to a supplier in their own province rather than buying it at a cheaper price from a supplier in another province. I am very familiar with that situation because when I served as a hydro commissioner in Metropolitan Toronto, we gave a 5 per cent purchasing preference to local firms. The reason we did that is because the chairman of the Hydro Commission, an excellent fellow by the name of Jack Christie, who had served for years and years, became a little upset that our local suppliers were discriminated against elsewhere and insisted that we discriminate as well against suppliers from other parts of the country. Therefore, I am very familiar with this kind of trade barrier.

I am told that 20 per cent of Canadian manufacturers have difficulty selling their goods in other parts of Canada because of these trade barriers. What can we do about all of this? The Government has been trying to do something about it, to its credit. In 1985 the Government set up a task force on interprovincial trade which is co-chaired by the federal Director General of DRIE and the Deputy Minister of Economic Development in the Province of Alberta. That is aimed at attempting to get rid of interprovincial trade barriers.

• (1805)

At the First Ministers Conference held last November in Toronto, and I was present at that time, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Premiers set up a committee of Ministers to deal with the question of internal trade, and to try to improve the situation. In addition, the federal Government has appointed Mr. Jim Grandy, a former federal bureaucrat, to attempt to reduce the trade barriers in areas like purchasing preferences, and also for beer, wine, and liquor.

We have a lot of committees, Madam Speaker, but what we need now is some action. It would be a shame if we got rid of the trade barriers between Canada and the United States, and got rid of the trade barriers with Canada and other parts of the world, but somehow or other at the same time we had those internal trade barriers.

Tonight, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to assure us that he, the Minister, and the Government will get rid of those interprovincial trade barriers. I am going to ask him to tell us the progress that they have made. I am going to ask him to ensure, to the use the words of the MacKenzie brothers, that we tell the interprovincial trade barriers to "Take off, eh!"

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, we have taken off in the reduction of barriers to interprovincial trade. I might say to my dear friend that one can buy Moosehead beer in Texas.

Mr. Redway: I know that.

Mr. Forrestall: What Texans drink the world drinks.

Very shortly one will be able to buy Moosehead beer in British Columbia, and here in Ontario. No other Government has been more concerned about the impediments caused to trade in Canada by artificial barriers, provincial barriers, than has this Government.

Domestically such barriers remain a great hindrance to trade, and a great hindrance to the development of our competitive capacity. We want to get rid of them once and for all. We must encourage Canadians to become competitive nationally and internationally. One of the ways we do it best is in the reduction and elimination, which is the ideal goal, of many of those barriers. We need Canadians to have as wide an access to their legitimate markets as is possible. Our goal is that those markets be national, and that they be international.

Most of us know that the federal, provincial, and territorial Governments have embarked on a consultative process to undertake collective action with the intent of reducing or eliminating these barriers.

In response to my hon. friend, I would like to give him a very brief report on four or five of the steps that have been taken and which show meaningful progress. As I have indicated, there have been a number of meetings that have taken place, as the Hon. Member knows, with the consultative committee that is set up and in place.

As part of the FMC decision a committee of Ministers on internal trade is now in place to work on all of those problems. A short list of priority areas for negotiating reductions in barriers has been developed, starting with government procurement policies and provincial marketing practices for, as the Member delightfully and entertainingly suggested, alcoholic beverages. Negotiators representing federal, provincial and territorial Governments are meeting regularly to negotiate those issues. Other priority areas have been identified, including transportation, professional mobility, and norms and standards.

As we and the provincial Governments pursue our efforts, I cannot over-emphasize that interprovincial barrier reduction is indeed a complex issue. Some may argue that progress has been slow, but we are an active participant together with the provinces and the territories. There will be some action so that we can buy Moosehead beer here in Ontario.

• (1810)

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—PROPOSED ALL-NEWS TELEVISION CHANNEL—SUGGESTED PARTNERSHIP WITH PRIVATE SECTOR

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, I am rising this evening to continue discussion on a question regarding the Government's unwarranted and unprecedented interference with the decision of the CRTC to award the all-news licence to the CBC.

Canadians are concerned about the Government's intervention into the decision of the CRTC; it was a fair and open decision-making procedure. This intervention challenges its authority, its process, its decision making and its autonomy.

The CRTC decision was taken after long deliberations and after weeks of public hearings with support from every province, with the exception of P.E.I., and the three major cable system operators—Rogers, Western Cable Systems, and Telecable Laurentien. The CRTC decision was based upon the CBC's proven ability to best manage such a service. Previous calls for such an all-news service had been made. Only one other applicant showed interest. It was based on merit. The CBC offered the best service and the most complete Canadian content. The licence was won by the CBC because its proposal was far superior.

The CBC had openly indicated its interest in rendering such a service to the Caplan—Sauvageau task force on broadcasting policy which widely consulted Canadians and recommended this service. Some $2.9 million was spent by the task force to come out and say: "We think this is a good idea for Canadians". Then our Standing Committee on Communications and Culture studied and tabled an extensive report on speciality services and never objected to such a licence. The Chairman never objected to such a licence. The Minister appeared before the committee and never indicated any concern in respect of the CBC, and she was well aware of its proposal. She never challenged the arm's length right of the CBC board to take such a decision. There was an appropriate time and place for the Minister to make a policy statement or quietly inform the CBC that its request was not in her interest or in her view; that would have been an acceptable request. To come in after the fact is totally reprehensible.

The Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) has said that Cabinet cannot make a final decision on the licence until September 1, when the CBC licence is officially awarded by the CRTC. This causes us all grave concern. Why? It is because of what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is reported as having said following the CRTC decision on all-news. I will quote what he supposedly said:

> There is no way this Government is going to allow that flawed decision to stand. Instead of hammering us two hours a day, they will be hammering us 24 hours a day.

I believe these statements are prejudicial to a fair Cabinet review.

If the Tory Cabinet decided to succumb to the pressures of the "Back-Benchers Club" or the BBC, it will be a precedent. Never before has Cabinet taken such an action against the CRTC. What credibility and impression will future decisions have? What damage has been done?

How can a government pressure the CBC to find a private sector partner, which it had already tried to do but people were not interested because they did not see enough profit potential in the particular project? How can a government ask the CBC to provide an equivalent service in the French language, which it had already planned to do and a feasibility study was already in progress, after such a service has been awarded? That amounts to changing the rules in the middle of the game. I do not believe that this is fair, and the Canadian public does not think that it is fair. What kind of message is the Government sending? Is it telling Canadians that it only believes in fair competition when the winner is who it wants? How does this affect the image of the CRTC? What about its credibility? What about the credibility of the CBC board and arm's length?

It has been suggested that the CBC all-news service will result in unnecessary concentration of news influence. Canadians do not want concentration, particularly in news, but this was just a smoke and mirrors argument to deflect the interference and the pressure by the backroom boys. This service will not be concentration in the market. The CRTC secretariat showed that as of March 31, 1987, there are 602 originating radio stations and 104 originating television stations operating in Canada, all of which are privately owned. The CBC has 16 outlets.

• (1815)

In addition, there are 110 daily newspapers, 1,277 weekly or community newspapers and 14 news services all privately owned. How can this be concentration?

At present, the American CNN provides 24-hour cable news in Canada. By the Government's action it is allowing American concentration and an American monopoly to exist in our specialty services. In an area crucial to the forming of a Canadian perspective reflecting Canadian culture and values and our sovereign approach to international issues, as well as understanding regional diversity and concerns from all parts of Canada, this service, 70 per cent of which was to be produced outside of central Canada, is seriously needed. The CBC with its infrastructure in place was the obvious best choice. What Canadians deserve is the best choice, not the biased choice of the Government. The CBC is targeting for 1 per cent of the audience share, which is clearly enunciated in its proposal. I would not call that concentration.

With respect to French language service, the Minister of Communications on behalf of the Government expressed concerns about the appropriateness of embarking upon a major expansion of news and information program services in one official language. However, one of the conditions of the CBC licence was to complete a feasibility study for such a service.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister's attempt to be noble is rather shallow when she talks about insisting on this French all-news service. To consider an equivalent French language service the Government should have announced funds to fulfil such a mandate. It knows perfectly well that the market is smaller with respect to providing a profit so that there will be a requirement to subsidize from the English side or from the Government. What private sector company will become involved in providing a service when there will be no profit?

If the CBC makes the changes that the Government desires then it will fail to meet the terms of its present mandate. This will probably require the CRTC to call for new applications and for new hearings to be held. Another year will be lost. This will allow the American CNN to gain more and more of a foothold in the Canadian market.

Is this what Canadians want? I do not think so. The Minister has not articulated any clear vision about the future of Canadian TV other than to tell us that we need to hear each other's stories. The Government of the Prime Minister has certainly interfered in such an opportunity. It is communication through direct dictatorship.

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) has characterized the position of the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) on the CBC's news and information service as a request for a "shotgun wedding" between the corporation and the private sector.

I would like to clarify this matter by repeating here in this House just what the Minister of Communications did say in her letter to the President of the CBC on this subject. I quote:

> My colleagues and I have identified two major areas of concern arising from the CRTC decision respecting the CBC news and information service. They are:
>
> 1) The degree to which the proposed licence might contribute to excessive concentration in the field of news programming. This concern might be addressed by an alternative service embracing both the private and public sectors of the Canadian Broadcasting System.
>
> 2) The appropriateness of embarking upon a major expansion of news and information program services in one official language without simultaneously addressing the requirements of the other official language group.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we believe that co-operation between the private and public sectors is possible.

For example, I would like to remind the hon. Member that the CTRC responded favourably to the TV5 application. It involves a consortium composed of eight Canadian organizations:

Three public broadcasters: the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation; the Société de Radio-Télévision du Québec and the Ontario Educational Communications Authority.

So you see, Mr. Speaker, the minister of Communications has simply stated publicly that the Government has concerns that it will consider when the issue is brought forward in the autumn for formal review.

In view of these concerns, and the possibility of further petitions to the Governor in Council between now and next October, the Government feels it would not be prudent for the CBC to undertake major expenditures or structural reorganization to implement the proposed service at this time.

• (1820)

[English]

Some of the largest French-language private broadcasting undertakings include Télé-Métropole Inc., Cogego Inc.,

Télévision Quatre-Saisons Inc., the National Film Board of Canada and the firm Film Sat Inc. representing Quebec's independent producers.

The Government believes that for the news and information service, the CBC could use the period until October to examine approaches such as a partnership drawing on the skills and resources of the private sector as well as its extensive news-gathering services already deployed.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY—ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF ASTRONOMICAL OBSERVATORY/ALGONQUIN PARK OBSERVATORY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, some 15 months ago, I brought to the attention of the then Minister of State for Science and Technology the fact that the Government's program for scientific research and development had led to the virtual termination of the world-class astronomical observatory at Algonquin Park. In trying to explain what was happening, the then Minister said:

> —what the Prime Minister has indicated in his book, and what I have repeated many times is that we will spend as much as is necessary to position Canada and its industries in the new frontier effectively and in every possible way.

We are now three years into a Conservative Government and what do we see? When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was the Leader of the Official Opposition, he castigated the Liberal Government by saying, and quite correctly, that among the OECD countries and Japan, Canada had one of the poorest records in efforts and expenditures for scientific research and development. He pointed out that in those years, we were allocating substantially less than 2 per cent of our Gross National Product to scientific research and development and he promised that a Conservative Government would more than double that quickly so that we would spend about 2.5 per cent of our Gross National Product on scientific research and development.

After three years of a Conservative Government, the Prime Minister had to admit at a recent scientific conference that in the last year, we had only devoted 1.3 per cent of our Gross National Product to scientific research and development. Why did that happen? It happened because the Conservative Government is locked into its ideological belief that somehow, if we were to just let the free enterprise system operate, it will do better than any Government effort.

The Government has tried to persuade the private sector to increase dramatically its expenditures. That has not happened. After three years of Conservative Government, we are now doing even worse than we did when the Liberals were in office.

At a recent conference, the Prime Minister promised that the Government would allocate new money, $250 million per year for the next five years, for research in universities. Even if that takes place and if the attempt to persuade the private sector to increase its efforts in the field of scientific research and development were to work, which it has not up until now, and if the Government matches those increases, we will still have only marginally increased the funding for the granting council.

What has been the result? We can read about it in newspaper accounts of the last few days. Yesterday's Winnipeg Free Press carried a story entitled "Morale weaker at NRC". The story says:

> The parking lots at National Research Council laboratories aren't full on Saturdays any more—
>
> "Morale is certainly not what it used to be at NRC," says Herzberg,—

That is Gerhard Herzberg, one of the few Canadian scientists whose efforts have led to a Nobel Prize.

The union representing most of the scientists, the Professional Institute, issued a statement which was reported in today's Ottawa Citizen. The institute said that federal government laboratories need stable funding and better management and pointed out that the Government should stop budget cuts in federal research establishments and not privatize federal laboratories for purely ideological reasons.

• (1825)

Again, yesterday we learned that the head of the space agency has resigned. Why? Because the Government, after months of argument apparently, cannot even decide where the space agency head office should be. In December of 1987 the Minister said it was critical that the agency head office be in place early this year. Now, obviously because Ministers are still fighting about whether it should be in Ottawa or Montreal, the same Minister says it is no longer critical. A story in today's Citizen says:

> Today, the space industry is frustrated and government workers designated as part of the new agency are in limbo.
>
> Its head, Art Collin, has resigned, saying his job of drafting the required legislation and finding staff was finished long ago.

We need to have the Government live up to the commitments the Prime Minister made before the election and do what is needed to make this country prosperous and have its people working in the next 10 to 20 years. We need to raise our efforts in the field of scientific research and development so that we will at least come close to what other western industrialized countries are doing. The time when we could continue complacently to lag far behind those countries has long since passed.

[Translation]

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, once again the Hon. Member has asked us during the late show to talk about the subject concerning his question, and he lost no time in making other comments on our science and technology policy.

Since he asked a question concerning the closing down of the Observatory, I shall give him the information I have, and then I shall set a few facts straight. The Hon. Member's statement reflects a blatant lack of understanding about the major initiatives taken by the Federal Government for the progress of science and technology in Canada.

In 1986, the Hon. Member had already raised the question of the closing down of the Algonquin Observatory. However, following the steps taken by the Government, Canadian scientists obtained access to the most sophisticated astrophysical facilities in the world, namely the giant telescope of James Clerk Maxwell in Hawaii. Canadian scientists, from coast to coast, totally support the present situation.

For the time being, no other decision has been made and the facility will stay in operation this winter, and other decisions could be made next Summer.

Contrary to what is mentioned in several reports and questions, the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) has played no part in the budget cuts concerning the Algonquin radioastronomical Observatory. The management of the NRC made this decision after consultation with the representatives of the astronomy community in Canada. Therefore, we assume that these people have advised according to what they thought was in the best interest of the Canadian astronomical community under the current conditions.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make the following observation. Since the Conservative Party was elected in 1984, ever since we have formed the Government, our policy with regard to science and technology has been a long-term policy and each of our moves is of extreme importance for the future of the country.

Let us start, if you wish, with the creation of a Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology where people can be heard, where Hon. Members can make suggestions and where Opposition Members can participate in the definition of a strong policy and the building of a larger vision of science and technology.

Let us talk also of the federal-provincial agreements which have been signed. The Cabinet, federal and provincial Ministers work together, because we also promised Canadians that we would introduce new policies after consultation with the provinces and in a spirit of mutual understanding.

We also, Mr. Speaker, authorized new funding. By God, Mr. Speaker, it would take me at least an hour to explain everything the Government has done, because it is not just a question of money, it is also a question of long-term strategy. Each of our moves, each of our policies has a bearing on the future of all Canadians.

Next time, Mr. Speaker, I will be able to expand on this subject.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Redway): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.31 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, February 10, 1988

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REDUCED SERVICE IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stands today to deliver his budget address, I am sure that he will mention the many taxes which he has piled upon Canadians since 1984. Each day workers are taking home less and less money. Canadians are paying more, yet the Government, and especially Canada Post, are cutting their services to those same people.

First it was rural post offices. Now people in the communities in the West Prince area of our province will have their mail delivery cut back. This is unacceptable.

Furthermore, where is the consultation that Canada Post promised? Nobody contacted my office, so I urge the Minister responsible for Canada Post to cancel this decision and restore proper mail service to the people in the western part of Prince Edward Island.

* * *

[Translation]

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

FANTASTIC IDEA OF GABRIEL DESJARDINS

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, Conservative Member Gabriel Desjardins has come up with a tremendous idea, which is to make Rouyn-Noranda a national environmental research centre which would benefit not only Témiscamingue but also Abitibi.

According to Gabriel Desjardins, his riding has become a national and international laboratory and could be used as an observation centre.

I agree, and I think all of us in Quebec and across Canada should support Mr. Desjardins.

• (1405)

[English]

REFUGEES

REPUDIATION OF NEWSPAPER ARTICLE BY FORMER HOUSE SPEAKER FRANCIS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Lloyd Francis, former Speaker of this House, is mistaken. His Citizen article "Illegal Immigration Time Bomb in our Society" attacks Canada's 10-year refugee policy based on the United Nations Refugee Treaty we signed 20 years ago.

He does a disservice to Canada by raising irrational fear of refugees with mistaken statements such as these: that for 500 million immigrants and 40 million refugees Canada is a preferred destination—no responsible authority supports such wild exaggeration—and that humanitarian groups seek exemption from the law so as to help illegal immigrants.

What a slander. Of the dozens of witnesses against Bill C-84, not one asked for exemption because all were conscientiously obeying the law by bringing refugee claimants, not illegal immigrants, to Canadian immigration offices.

Does Mr. Francis wish us to ignore refugees persecuted by Governments in some former colonial countries? Canada benefits by the cheap exports of those countries and is partner to some of their violently repressive Governments that enforce virtual slave labour at starvation wages. These refugees Mr. Francis fears are the voice of our conscience.

* * *

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—STATEMENT ISSUED BY PRESIDENT OF CANADIAN CONFERENCE OF CATHOLIC BISHOPS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, Archbishop James Hayes, President of the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, issued a statement on January 28 on the Supreme Court's decision regarding abortion laws. The following are quotes from that statement:

> The situation of "abortion on demand" that follows from the court's decision must be corrected legislatively as soon as possible. This is our common task now, and the future of our human society depends on how soon and how well it is done.
>
> Abortion is the destruction of human life. The challenge is to change our society's attitude toward life and to channel the energies and strong emotions involved in this debate toward correcting mentalities and situations that lead to abortion.

We need to create a society that supports life and enables children to be raised with dignity; a society that puts other people's rights and needs ahead of personal comfort and gain; a society that respects human life at every stage of its development.

The vision and hope that lead us forward flow from our God-given belief that every human life is sacred. Today's Supreme Court decision leaves us in a situation where the sacredness of life is being violated.

We must urgently work together with all Canadians for legislation that will indeed safeguard the life, liberty and security of every person, including the unborn.

May I say Amen to all of that, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

[Translation]

SOCIAL SECURITY

NEED FOR GOOD HOME HEALTH SERVICES PROGRAM FOR SENIORS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on his twenty-fourth anniversary as a Member of the House of Commons. However, I also have a few comments to make about yesterday's statement by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) concerning senior citizens. I am pleased that the Minister took the advice of the Liberal Party and put back the $5 million he had cut from the New Horizons programs. We agree with the new programs aimed at increasing the autonomy of the elderly, but unfortunately, funding is minimal. We have nearly 2.6 million senior citizens in Canada, and the Government is granting the equivalent of $10 each. Instead of announcing this bare bones program to help senior citizens stay in their own homes, the Minister of National Health and Welfare should have set up a full-fledged program of home health care and housekeeping services. That is what they need!

* * *

[English]

WINTER OLYMPIC GAMES

POSSIBLE EFFECT OF NURSES' LABOUR DISPUTE

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, all Hon. Members know that Alberta and the City of Calgary will soon be welcoming the world as the Winter Olympics edge closer. In fact, at this very moment, the legendary Olympic Torch is being paraded through my city of Edmonton. All Canadians are expecting the best Winter Olympics ever. The one potential cloud that looms on the horizon is the nurses' strike currently going on in Alberta.

More than 150,000 people are expected to visit the Olympic site, and although one-quarter of the 9,400 volunteers are trained in First Aid there is nothing like the care of an Alberta nurse to ease one through injury or illness.

Some nurses have shown true western spirit by volunteering their services to the games organizing committee, but picket duty may interfere with their good will, so I call on both the Alberta Hospital Association and the United Nurses of Alberta to settle the dispute quickly. The eyes of the world are upon us.

* * *

• (1410)

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—CALL FOR EQUAL ACCESS TO SERVICES BY WOMEN

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court decision on the Morgentaler case found Canada's abortion law unconstitutional in part because therapeutic abortion committees denied women reasonable access, and long delays put women's health in danger. Section 251 of the Criminal Code contravened the Charter which guarantees security of the person.

The federal Government should have provided immediate leadership and should have clearly communicated the implication of this Supreme Court decision. Women must have equal access to abortion across Canada. To deny access to health services, according to the Supreme Court, is to contravene the Charter.

The decision on abortion is a health matter to be decided by a woman in consultation with her doctor. By refusing to take a leadership role immediately, the federal Government has contributed to mass chaos across Canada. Some provinces like British Columbia are victimizing women and imposing impossible decisions on doctors.

We call on the federal Government to instruct the provinces that, under the Canada Health Act, they are responsible for ensuring that medical services are universally accessible, comprehensive, and portable. Health services must be covered by medicare. Women's health clinics with a range of health services should be publicly funded, and the federal Government should immediately launch a campaign in support of family planning to prevent unwanted pregnancies.

[Translation]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD—FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of my Opposition colleagues and of all Canadians to the fact that Question Period has become a real circus. When I was elected, I had to learn about the procedure in the House, and I was told that the main purpose of Question Period was to inform Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, for some time now, we have been exposed to a steady stream of repetitive and harassing questions whose purpose can be only to tarnish the reputation of the Government and all its Members. Mr. Speaker, this is called disinformation and obstruction, and I sincerely believe that the Opposition's role should not consist of those activities.

Mr. Speaker, I think you have a duty to put an end to this charade, otherwise the Canadian people will no longer have access to the information they have a right to receive.

* * *

[English]

TOURISM

EFFECT OF TAX REFORM ON INDUSTRY

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, the Tourism Industry Association of Canada, TIAC, is the country's largest and most important tourism association with a membership covering approximately 30,000 tourism businesses. Recently, TIAC wrote to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) accusing his Government of total disregard for the concerns of the tourism industry in the tax reform legislation.

The Tourism Association stated that if tax reform in Canada places our tourism products and services at a greater competitive disadvantage with the U.S., both our foreign exchange earnings and job-creation potential within Canada will be seriously compromised. The association points out that the Conference Board of Canada is already predicting that the travel account balance of payments deficit for Canada will grow to the $3 billion range by 1990.

If this deficit is allowed to escalate further, it will end up having serious negative employment implications for Canada. In support of TIAC, I urge the Government to start paying attention to our tourism industry. Tourism means jobs, jobs, jobs.

Oral Questions

THE BUDGET

POSITIONS OF OPPOSITION PARTY LEADERS

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I want to help all Canadians understand what the two opposition Leaders will be saying after tonight's Budget. This is what they said the last three times. The Liberal Leader (Mr. Turner) said that "the Budget does not have an economic plan, no agenda for growth and no agenda for jobs". He was wrong, wrong, wrong.

The NDP Leader (Mr. Broadbent) said that "not only have we had no improvement but things have gotten worse". He was wrong, wrong, wrong.

• (1415)

The Liberal Leader: "There is nothing in it for farmers". No Government has done more for farmers than this Government, and he was wrong again.

On unemployment the NDP Leader said: "The projections show virtually no change". How wrong could that wrong man be?

Bill told me, Mr. Speaker, that after tonight's budget speech he was going to celebrate. He said that Mike Wilson has brought more economic growth, more employment, more real stability, than ever thought possible, and Mike has been constantly right, right, right!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

[Translation]

MARCEL PRUD'HOMME

TWENTY-FOUR YEARS OF PARLIAMENTARY LIFE

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I may point out to Hon. Members that on February 10, 1964, as a result of a by-election, Mr. Marcel Prud'homme was elected a Member of this House, twenty-four years ago. Congratulations!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

---

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—PROVINCIAL COMPLIANCE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday, in testifying before a U.S. congressional committee,

Secretary of the Treasury Baker said that the U.S. will seek compensation or redress from Canada if any provinces do not comply with the terms of the agreement initialled by the Prime Minister and President Reagan. We already know three provinces have said they are not in agreement with the deal.

Can the Prime Minister tell us if the U.S. has the right to seek compensation and redress under the terms of the agreement? As well, is he ready to offer such compensation in view of provincial non-compliance? In other words, is he prepared to give away even more in order to get the deal approved?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, obviously when one concludes a treaty with a trading partner, that partner is quite entitled to assume that the treaty will be fully honoured by the sovereign nation with which it was concluded. That is the assumption under which Mr. Baker is functioning and it is not an inaccurate one.

With regard to the questions raised by my hon. friend, clearly he has not been listening to comments made yesterday by U.S. Congressmen and Senators, many of whom are voicing grave misgivings in regard to the treaty, not because they disagree with the principles involved but because they feel Canada got by far the better deal.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I submit that the Prime Minister did not answer what was a very important question, that is, to what extent does the agreement bind the provinces, to what degree must they comply, and does the U.S. have the right to compensation?

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF AGREEMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, several months ago, under the Freedom of Information Act, we sought from the Department of Justice and other government Departments the legal view of the constitutionality of the agreement and its impact upon the provinces. We got back three blank pages, one with the title of a U.S. law firm, one article from a U.S. trade publication—

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Axworthy: —and an article from The Toronto Star.

Is this the kind of information the Government is working from, and why is it refusing to give parliamentarians and other Canadians a proper legal interpretation of the agreement rather than a bunch of hopeless articles from a U.S. law firm?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, surely my hon. friend is not calling into question the sovereign right of the Government of Canada to conclude international treaties and cause them to be enacted. If my hon. friend is stating that as policy of the Liberal Party of Canada, he should stand up in the House and say so.

The Government of Canada, on behalf of the people of Canada, has concluded an international treaty. We believe it is very much in the national interest. We will submit it to Parliament at an appropriate time and we will ensure that that treaty is respected, as I am sure my hon. friend wants to ensure the respect of all of our international obligations.

• (1420)

Mr. Axworthy: As a gentleman who at one time practised law the Prime Minister will know that there was a decision in 1935 on the International Labour Organization which gives the provinces the right not to ratify international agreements signed by the federal Government. For him to try to mislead this House by suggesting—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Where do you get your legal advice from, Lloyd?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member would not want to impute any intentional misleading, especially with regard to the interpretation of a decision of the courts. The Hon. Member.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, it is certainly not my intention to do that. We are trying to get the facts.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, we are faced with a very serious challenge by the Secretary of the Treasury to which the Prime Minister has refused to respond. We have asked for proper legal opinion from the Government of Canada and it has refused to provide that legal opinion. The Prime Minister is not dealing with the facts as he should know them.

When and how will the Government provide a clear response to the challenge raised by Mr. Baker concerning the responsibility of the Government to ensure the compliance of the provinces? Can the Prime Minister say today that all the provinces will comply, or is he going to do as Mr. Baker said and provide further compensation to the United States in the face of the fact that three provinces say they do not go along with this deal?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the legal and constitutional authority of the Parliament and Government of Canada to proceed in this regard is clear and unchallenged. If anyone chooses to invoke a challenge, then he, she, or that Government is entirely free to do so and to address the appropriate courts. The Supreme Court of Canada will, no doubt, at an appropriate time, render a decision in this regard.

With regard to the Government, we are absolutely persuaded that we are acting not only within the purview of our legislative authority but very much in the national interest.

With regard to the objectives of the trade agreement itself, the basis of our action has been consistency throughout on behalf of the people of Canada.

I draw my hon. friend's attention to something which will interest him because he is not referred to in it. It came from the Vancouver Liberal Conference. The Member mentioned one article from The Toronto Star. This is another article from The Toronto Star, and therefore is probably accurate.

This article from The Toronto Star sets out the position of the Liberal Party. It says that Mr. Turner promises to kill the deal, that Paul Martin says we have got to be realistic—

Some Hon. Members: More!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I know how anxious Hon. Members are to hear exactly what The Toronto Star said.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PRESIDENT OF FEDERAL EXECUTIVE COUNCIL OF YUGOSLAVIA

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the attention of Members the presence in the gallery of His Excellency Branko Mikulic, President of the Federal Executive Council of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF FINLAND'S MINISTER OF FOREIGN TRADE

Mr. Speaker: I wish also to draw to Members' attention the presence in the gallery of Mr. Pertti Salolainen, Minister of Foreign Trade of Finland.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mount Royal.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Prime Minister be more concerned about the differences in his own Party, particularly surrounding Bill C-72.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

[Translation]

FILM INDUSTRY

REQUEST THAT FILM DISTRIBUTION ACT BE INTRODUCED

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, what kind of an answer is that!

Our artists and authors, singers and film makers are entitled to the truth from this Government.

The Minister knows perfectly well that under the trade agreement with the United States, we can say goodbye to broader distribution of Canadian films, songs and books.

My question is directed to the Minister of Communications. If the Americans are not keeping the film distribution Bill from being tabled, and the Bill has been ready for months, who is? So prove the Americans are wrong and table the Bill this week as a Saint Valentine's Day present to our film industry.

• (1425)

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in their meeting last weekend in Vancouver the members of the Liberal Party certainly could not come to any agreement on how they should face up to trade relations with the United States. They ought to ask Paul Martin what he thinks.

During the lengthy negotiations on trade, one of the beneficial aspects of these negotiations was the fact that the U.S. negotiators came to recognize the uniqueness of Canadian culture and the need to have it exempted from any free trade agreement. That was done. That is recognized in the agreement.

As the debate continues in the Senate, I am sure that members of Congress will recognize the uniqueness of Canadian culture and the need for measures such as Bill C-58, simultaneous substitutions and the need for film distribution rights for Canada as a separate entity. We will see that that is done.

Mrs. Finestone: The Minister's odyssey into fantasyland certainly forgot our cultural policy. Certainly she did not read the Bill.

SOUND RECORDING INDUSTRY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Government has faked its promise on the film distribution Bill. If the Minister cannot protect the film industry, will she at least enrich the sound recording fund to ensure more Canadian French and English recording artists and records, or will the Americans claim once again that their commercial interests have suffered, total up the cost, and hammer us back with a countervailing action?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I thought that Member was the spokesperson for the Opposition in this field. She does not seem to know that $5 million annually has been added to the sound recording industry and that the past year was the most successful year ever for the sound recording industry in this country. She can ask artist after artist in this country who met with me to say that publicly and privately. I am very proud of what sound recording artists are doing in Canada.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LUBICON BAND LAND CLAIM—NORTHERN ALBERTA PULP MILL PROJECT—TIMBER RIGHTS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As the Minister will know, on Monday Premier Getty announced plans for an untendered transfer of harvesting rights to the Daishowa pulp project, some 11,000 square miles of northern Alberta, which is an area over 100 times the size of the area sought by the Lubicon Band for settlement.

Since parts of these lands that were announced on Monday are those sought by the Lubicon Band and, we must assume, by Crown Canada, as the basis for the settlement of the outstanding Lubicon claim, has the Minister expressed concern to the Government of Alberta about the proposed transfer of these lands and the fact that it will be harmful to a peaceful and just settlement of the Lubicon claim?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the way the announcement was made yesterday in Alberta on the transfer of forestry management to assist in the development of a large scale pulp plant in northern Alberta was indeed unnecessary and unhelpful. Some of the lands that were prescribed are indeed lands which may be transferred to Lubicon when we have reached a settlement.

I can assure the Hon. Member that the 25 square miles originally put forward by Alberta in 1940 have been excluded from that forestry management, and any lands that will be transferred to Canada to settle that outstanding claim, as is Alberta's obligation, will be transferred and exempted from the forestry management agreement between Daishowa and the Province of Alberta.

• (1430)

Again, as Minister of Indian Affairs or as Minister responsible for western diversification, I was not consulted on what is solely a provincial prerogative.

GRANT MADE FROM WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION FUND

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister could rise, wearing his hat in terms of western diversification at the same time as aboriginal affairs, and explain to the people of Canada and, in particular, the Lubicon people and the people of Alberta, why the Minister participated in the announcement by announcing an economic participation in terms of $9.5 million, in the project?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased the Hon. Member has drawn a distinction between an economic initiative taken by the Province of Alberta, the Government of Canada, and Daishowa, and the land claims which we both wish to see proceed to settlement. Hopefully, there will be a negotiated settlement.

The reason the Government of Canada through the Western Diversification Fund was pleased to participate with the Daishowa and the Province of Alberta was that over 600 direct jobs will be created in northern Alberta, some 2,000 years of person employment in construction, indirect benefits to a part of western Canada and a part of northern Alberta which has suffered economic decline, particularly in the oil and gas industry under the National Energy Program which was available to those people in the past. This initiative was undertaken with major, major foreign investment to benefit people in western Canada, particularly in the Peace River region.

LAND CLAIM—REQUEST THAT MEDIATOR BE APPOINTED

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday John Diefenbaker's former Minister of Justice, the Hon. E. Davie Fulton, stated that in his judgment, as a former Minister of Justice, as a politician, and as a well-respected Canadian, he rated the Lubicon crisis, on a scale of one to 10, as a 10 in terms of tragedy. The Prime Minister has now heard from the Minister responsible for aboriginal affairs. What the Government of Alberta has done is unhelpful in resolving the situation.

Mr. E. Davie Fulton has publicly offered his services, which are requested by the Lubicon band. That has been blocked so far by the Minister responsible for aboriginal affairs. Will the Prime Minister show the leadership he has shown in the past, for example, on South Moresby—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: —and satisfy himself in discussions with the Minister responsible for aboriginal affairs that the appointment of E. Davie Fulton at this point in time would be helpful, because the eyes of the world are on the Calgary Olympics and on how Canada has mishandled the Lubicon case to date.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, every Member in this House hopes that the settlement of the Lubicon claim can be proceeded through negotiation. The Lubicon band walked away in July from bilateral negotiations under the leadership of Mr. Tassé on behalf of Canada. It refused to negotiate bilaterally in November with Mr. Malone, whom I appointed negotiator. It had up until January 29 last to enter into negotiations. That time of negotiation, unfortunately, has passed. Canada has sent a letter of request to the Government of Alberta outlining the needs of Canada and the needs of Alberta to provide, under the Constitution Act of 1930, the land which is required to settle this claim.

* * *

THE ADMINISTRATION

CONFLICT OF INTEREST CODE—ASSISTANT DEPUTY REGISTRAR GENERAL'S STATEMENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday I asked the Prime Minister to assist the House in receiving an explanation from Mr. Kingsley, the Assistant Deputy Register General, with respect to the decision he made Monday, in essence exempting political party funds from the provisions of the conflict of interest guidelines. The Prime Minister kindly invited me to be in touch with Mr. Kingsley to seek clarification and understanding of the decision that was reached.

Fifteen minutes ago I spoke to Mr. Kingsley, who has refused to provide me, or any other Member, with any background to the decision which has been reached. More importantly he has refused to direct me to any particular clause in the conflict of interest guidelines which would explain, in essence, the exemption which has now been declared.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Question!

Mr. Tobin: With the Prime Minister's invitation in mind, sincerely given, I believe, I ask him today for his assistance. I ask him directly whether or not he will direct Mr. Kingsley, who is, after all, not an officer of Parliament, nor accountable to Parliament, but accountable to the Prime Minister as a civil servant, to issue for Parliament a complete backgrounder explaining and giving the rationale for the decision that was reached on Monday?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on February 8 last Mr. Kingsley provided the country and the House with a complete and definitive statement in this regard. I think if my hon. friend checks the record he will see that while, of course, I offered him my assistance, and will continue to do so, in respect of this I think I indicated that the Government was planning to bring in an important measure in this area, and when he had the opportunity of examining this measure he might indeed want to consider any questions he would have or manners by which it might be improved or corrected.

It was in that light the discussion ensued over the last couple of days. In respect to Mr. Kingsley's statement, it stands on its own. It is a straightforward, clear-cut statement in which he conveys his decision. I would hope my hon. friend would agree that it meets the objectives he has been raising.

REQUEST THAT OFFICIAL PROVIDE EXPLANATION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear by now that what I am asking for is an interpretation of the current guidelines, not future guidelines, that allowed the current exemption announced Monday to be made.

I remind the Prime Minister that the last time he rose in the House to quote an ADRG as an authority over an allegation of conflict of interest was April 29, 1986, when he quoted Mr. Boyle who said at the time—

Mr. Mazankowski: Order!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order!

Mr. Tobin: —that the former Member for York Peel was in no way in a conflict of interest.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Tobin: In light of the subsequent findings of the Parker Commission, does the Prime Minister not agree that it would be prudent and appropriate that the current ADRG, given his ruling on Monday, provide Parliament with a full explanation of the rationale behind that ruling and, more particularly, point out to Parliament which clauses of the conflict of interest guidelines give rise to an exemption for political party loans or advances?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my friend raises the issue of the Parker Commission which is, of course, relevant to Members of this House. There will be action in respect to this important and growing problem that affects all jurisdictions of conflicts of interest.

I notice that Premier Peterson had some comments to make yesterday on this sensitive matter because three of his Ministers were called upon to resign because of allegations of conflict of interest.

May I just say that Mr. Bourassa's Solicitor General was called upon to resign because of conflict of interest.

Ms. Copps: Kingsley wrote that letter with a broken arm.

Mr. Mulroney: The same happened in British Columbia. We are dealing—

Ms. Copps: What did you do on the weekend, Don?

Mr. Mulroney: It is sort of difficult for me to answer a sensitive matter, Mr. Speaker, with constant heckling from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

An Hon. Member: Just answer the question.

Mr. Mulroney: I would be happy to try to answer—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend—

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Prime Minister has said it is a sensitive matter, and it is. The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe has asked a question which is completely procedurally sound. The Right Hon. Prime Minister is giving an answer and I am sure that Hon. Members will give him the courtesy of allowing him to continue his answer to its proper conclusion.

Mr. Mulroney: I must say that it is with admiration that I view the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. It must be nice to be absolutely perfect in one's private and public life—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Mulroney: —so as to make such severe judgments about other people.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister to answer the question put to him.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to answer the very serious question put forward by my hon. friend. I indicated to him yesterday that, given the seriousness of the matter, we would be bringing forward a very serious Bill—

Ms. Copps: Answer the question!

Mr. Mulroney: —that I think is going to respond exhaustively and completely to any concerns my hon. friend has. At that point in time it would be entirely appropriate for him to raise any questions or seek to interrogate any public officer. We are dealing with a matter that has been out there for some years. I think my hon. friend will agree, when he sees the legislation, that the legislation itself is sufficient to remedy a very difficult human problem.

Mr. Tobin: Kingsley, will you provide Kingsley?

Mr. Mulroney: We will provide—

Mr. Tobin: Now?

Mr. Mulroney: I indicated to my hon. friend that we are bringing forward the legislation—

Mr. Tobin: No, no, the current legislation.

Mr. Mulroney: —and as soon as he sees it, I think he will be satisfied.

• (1440)

EMPLOYMENT

PROGRAM FOR OLDER WORKERS

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Two years ago in the 1986 Budget the Government announced a program for older workers of $125 million. To this day, this program is not in place.

Can the Minister give the House an assurance that the program announced in today's Budget will be implemented, not slid under the carpet like the POWA program was two years ago?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): I am not sure, Mr. Speaker, if I heard the Member say "the program announced in today's Budget". But if that is what I heard, I don't know today's Budget.

INTRODUCTION OF PROGRAM

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): My supplementary question is the following. The Canadian Advisory Council was told that it would take over $1 billion to provide a program for unemployed older workers. The Government promised that two years ago. The Minister of Labour keeps saying that it is coming, and it still has not come.

When can the people of Canada expect to see a properly funded concrete program for older worker adjustment?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): The program was announced in the 1986 Budget, and it should be in place soon.

* * *

FUR TRAPPING INDUSTRY

BRITISH PLANS TO LABEL FUR PRODUCTS—EFFECT ON LIVELIHOOD OF CANADIAN TRAPPERS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Bowing to the propaganda of the anti-trapping law, the Government of Great Britain has announced plans to label fur products as having been caught in steel-jawed leg-hold traps.

What action has Canada taken to forestall this threat to the livelihood of our trappers? Will Canada retaliate against this restraint of trade?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was surprised by that announcement by the British Minister. We will oppose it, and we will fight it. It constitutes a very serious threat to the livelihood of Indian,

Métis, and Inuit Canadians who depend upon the fur industry to live.

I must say that I particularly regret that there was virtually no advance warning to this Government by the Government of Great Britain in bringing in this matter. I will be pursuing it personally with the British Foreign Secretary, and with others.

* * *

[Translation]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

MONTREAL EAST END—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, although I would have liked to answer the other Minister. He has been negotiating for older workers for three years, and he's getting nowhere fast.

This week, the Vice-Chairman of the Executive Committee, Mr. Robert Perreault, told Le Devoir that the municipal authorities of the City of Montreal feel they have been let down by the Conservative Government on issues as important as the Vieux-Port de Montréal, Montreal's East End and the Space Agency.

Mr. Perreault, members of the Chamber of Commerce and the union complained they have been unable to meet either the Prime Minister or the Minister, and they have been waiting two months for information.

Could the Minister inform the House why his Government, day after day and month after month, has failed to announce $50 million in funding to upgrade businesses in Montreal's East End, an early retirement program for Montreal's East End and special funds for manpower training? Why is his Government procrastinating on measures that people have been demanding for so long and which the Leader of the Opposition was ready to announce in Montreal's East End last week?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I am certainly not aware of what Mr. Turner would like to announce for Montreal's East End in way of programs. I can inform the Hon. Member that a number of decisions have been made involving Montreal, and those decisions have in fact brought about a substantial drop in the unemployment rate in that city, which is now at 9 per cent, compared with an unemployment rate of 12.9 per cent in September 1984. We did not delay development in Montreal, but the people who blocked Bill C-22 delayed Montreal's development for months and months!

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE DEMANDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the people of Montreal are fed up with these stupid answers!

The question came from Mr. Perreault, Vice-Chairman of Montreal's Executive Committee. Will the Minister stop fooling around and find out what the Chamber of Commerce wants, and could he inform the House why the Government is taking so long to make its announcement on the Space Agency?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, if fooling around means creating 64,000 new jobs in the Montreal area over a period of 12 months I will go on fooling around. I will go on creating jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, all political rhetoric aside, if we want to look at the facts and discuss questions as important as the Vieux-Port and Montreal's East End, we are now at the negotiating stage, and in fact we are negotiating with the Government of Quebec. The latter has asked us to prepare a bilateral agreement between Canada and Quebec, before discussing these very important issues with the municipal authorities. I can inform the Hon. Member that we are on the move, and there has been more prosperity in Montreal since we came to power than there ever was under your Government.

* * *

[English]

NUCLEAR ENERGY

DANGERS POSED BY FERMI II PLANT IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. All four Members of Parliament from Essex County, representing all three Parties, have petitioned the United States Nuclear Regulatory Commission to revoke the licence of Fermi II nuclear plant, which is very close to Windsor.

Given the record of serious safety breaches, design deficiencies, operational incompetence, concealment of emergency events, about all of which NRC, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, was aware, will the Secretary of State table the written report of the Atomic Energy Board of Canada which has resulted in Canada's lack of objection to the operation of this plant at full power, a plant at which if there was an accident it would threaten 300,000 Canadians?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is a serious question that has engaged the interest of Members on all sides of the House.

I have been asked a question that I cannot answer at this stage. I will certainly look into it to see if it is possible for me to publish that report, or otherwise to make available its contents to interested Members of Parliament.

I take the issue seriously, as the Hon. Member does, and we will proceed in that spirit.

REPORT MADE BY ATOMIC ENERGY BOARD

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is the following. Would the Government examine the report of the Atomic Energy Board of Canada to ascertain whether the board was aware of the sorry record of Fermi II, as well as the record of duplicity and collusion of the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission which has been documented before three congressional committees?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I indicated that I take this matter seriously. I will look into it, and report to the Hon. Member. But I will not associate myself, or the Government, with the language used by the Hon. Member—

Mr. McCurdy: It was used by Senators and Congressmen.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Having been used by Senators and Congressmen is not necessarily any more recommendation than having been used by Members of this House.

* * *

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

REFUNDABLE TAX CREDIT

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I direct my question to the Prime Minister.

In his 1985 Budget the Minister of Finance increased the refundable tax credit for research and development which, he said, "will be of most use to small start-up research and development firms who may not otherwise be able to use tax incentives immediately".

Yet a survey released by the Canadian Advanced Technology Association last week indicates that uncertainty and delay in the processing of claims are hurting the very firms that the Minister of Finance said he would help, namely, the small research and development performers.

My question to the Prime Minister is the following. The Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister promised an efficient refundable tax credit for research and development. Will the Government respond to the concerns raised by the Canadian Advanced Technology Association and take immediate steps to correct this situation?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance is examining this policy and the delays in particular, and he hopes to be able to make a response to the House before long.

• (1450)

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, the problem is not a new one. It was raised as long as two years ago by the association.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Mr. Gordon Gow, Chairman of CATA, said "that the Ministers of Finance and Revenue have both been trying to pass off this issue as the other's responsibility".

Will the Prime Minister, as Chairman of the National Advisory Board on Science and Technology, put an end to this buck passing of his Ministers and provide Canadian business with certainty and effectiveness in the administration of tax incentives for research and development?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, if I might be permitted to respond to the question briefly, I recognize the validity of my colleague's concerns. I want to assure him that we are taking steps to improve the situation.

I want to quote briefly in the House for his benefit a recent article by Diane Francis in The Financial Post. It reads:

> Scientific research tax credits will go down as the biggest scandal in the history of tax policy in Canada. Perhaps anywhere. It was an ill-conceived scheme, contrived by former finance minister Marc Lalonde, and his deputy, Mickey Cohen, in the dying days of the Liberal government. About $3.2 billion flowed out of—

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Minister would like to conclude his answer.

Mr. MacKay: Having been presented with this very regrettable situation, our officials and the Minister of Finance have been bringing in a better regime, which is bringing great benefits to the scientific community in Canada. It will be further improved.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ACQUISITION OF NEW TRUCKS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Hon. Associate Minister of National Defence. Why did the Department choose a truck designed and patented by a non-NATO country when there was an opportunity to get a "made-in-North America" truck to any specifications desired?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on June 6, 1986, an interdepartmental force, which was later confirmed by the Ministers, decided to open up the bidding to all truck manufacturers in the world and not restrict it to NATO trucks.

At that time when the tenders were put out on July 31, 1986, all truck manufacturers, both inside and outside NATO, had an equal opportunity to meet the specifications.

When the truck was purchased, we purchased the lower priced truck of those trucks which met specifications. A couple of trucks did not meet specifications.

* * *

COMMUNICATIONS

CALL-NET TELECOMMUNICATIONS—APPEAL AGAINST CRTC DECISION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. It concerns an appeal to Cabinet by Call-Net Telecommunications.

Officials in her Department have been actively working with Call-Net to overturn a series of CRTC and cabinet decisions. What Call-Net is seeking is a special exemption and the right to do business in a way that no other company can.

Why is the Minister's Department working with Call-Net behind the scenes to amend the CRTC decision? Why is this special treatment being given to this company?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member quite understands what in fact took place. At the time that the original appeal was denied—and he will remember that that was done—the Department of Communications indicated that there would be a period of 180 days in which Call-Net would have the opportunity to bring its operations within the ambit of the law, and that is what is being done.

I may say that obviously we indicated to Call-Net, we indicated to the CRTC, and we indicated to other small businesses that we would be prepared to assist them to ensure that they would be within the law and not remain outside the law.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, what Call-Net is asking for in its petition to Cabinet is a further extension until the regulations are changed, which is quite different. In other words, Call-Net is not willing to change its modus of operation. It is asking for changes in the regulations themselves.

I should like to hear the Minister assure the House and Canadians that the decision of the CRTC will stand, and that the Government will not interfere in another case with the CRTC as it did with all-news CBC broadcasting.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, once again I have to point out that the Hon. Member does not seem to be aware of the proper processes.

Call-Net has the right to make any additional appeal it wants to the Cabinet. That is what has been done, and that appeal is now before the Cabinet.

* * *

THE ADMINISTRATION

CONFLICT OF INTEREST CODE—REQUEST THAT OFFICIAL APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to return with the Prime Minister to the question raised by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe. Surely the Prime Minister understands and has conceded the importance of Mr. Kingsley's interpretations of the applicable rules about spending, and yet today in his answer he seems to have taken a step back from the position that he took yesterday.

Yesterday the Prime Minister said, and I am quoting him, "My hon. friend, I suppose, if he wishes to interrogate him", meaning Kingsley, "or any other public servant, can seek the appropriate instrument to do so".

The appropriate instrument is the Prime Minister's approval, and that is what is required.

I want to ask him whether Mr. Kingsley will be made available for examination in front of a parliamentary committee, not on legislation that the Prime Minister has been promising for a long, long time, but on the conflict of interest guidelines which are presently in effect and about which Mr. Kingsley has presently given an interpretation that, to say the least, surely the Prime Minister will agree is controversial.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the committees of the House are masters of their own rules. The Hon. Member from Newfoundland—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister whether he approves or will give his approval, for the purposes of the record if he likes, that Mr. Kingsley can appear before the committee? Do you support his appearance?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my approval is not required. It is up to the committee to make its own determinations. I am not going to conduct witch-hunts or insist upon rules being imposed upon public servants. If I did that, the Hon. Member would be the first one to criticize it.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—DETENTION OF CANADIAN CITIZEN—REQUEST THAT FORMAL PROTEST BE DELIVERED

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. For over five weeks the Indian Government has refused to allow consular access from our High Commission in New Delhi to Mr. Balkar Singh, a Canadian citizen under arrest in India, who, our officials allege, has been tortured while under arrest.

Is the Minister now prepared to have our High Commissioner in New Delhi deliver a formal protest to the Indian Government as a result of its failure to honour its commitments to Canada under the Vienna Convention?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question was whether I was yet prepared to take that step, and the precise answer to that is no.

We are very concerned about the situation and are seeking consular access again. I should remind the Hon. Member and the House that the Canadian citizen in question does have regular, and I underline the word "regular", access to his lawyer and to his family. We are seeking further consular access.

* * *

MULTICULTURALISM

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for multiculturalism, my question is for the Prime Minister. He knows how important the Commissionership of Official Languages has been in achieving the goals of the Official Languages Act of 1969. However, when the Government put forward a Bill to establish multiculturalism in Canada, it rejected the unanimous recommendation of the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism and refused to create a Commissionership of Multiculturalism.

Does the Government still hold to this position, providing no impetus to achieve the policy of multiculturalism, or does it plan to act on the call of the Canadian Enthocultural Council to ensure that a Commissioner of Multiculturalism will be at work to achieve worthy goals?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend would probably agree that the Multiculturalism Act has made very significant strides in areas of citizenship and the promotion of multicultural values.

The Minister responsible for multiculturalism deserves the support and, I know, the gratitude of all Hon. Members of the House for this tremendous move forward in the field of multiculturalism. There have been significant advances in a number of areas. I will be happy to take the question as notice in respect to the specific point and report back to my hon. friend.

• (1500)

Mr. Speaker: A short supplemental.

CONTENT OF BILL C-93

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Lewis Chan of the Canadian Ethnocultural Council described Bill C-93 as simple without substance.

Does the Prime Minister plan to arrive at the next general election waving a flag but with no strength behind it, none of the impetus that a Commissionership of Multiculturalism would give to a policy that presumably we all support?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope I am not misinformed. I thought my hon. friend and his Party were going to support this Bill. I hope that continues to be the case.

With regard to the matter the Hon. Member raises on behalf of the multicultural community, I will be happy to consider it and refer back to my hon. friend.

He refers to the Canadian Ethnocultural Community. I was informed when I met with that council that I was the first Prime Minister of Canada to meet with the Canadian Ethnocultural Council. This Government has increased, by 100 per cent in three years, the number of ethnocultural appointments to commissions, boards and agencies in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question. The Hon. Member for Davenport.

* * *

HEALTH

LEUKEMIA—REPORTED INCREASE AMONG CHILDREN LIVING NEAR NUCLEAR INSTALLATIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I have a short and easy question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

As he probably knows, a British study conducted last summer reveals a higher incidence of leukemia and an increased number of leukemia related deaths among children and young adults up to the age of 20 living near nuclear installations. The National Cancer Institute in the United States announced that a similar study will be conducted in the United States in the next nine months.

Will the Minister launch a similar study in Canada to establish whether or not there is a relationship in our country as well and, if not, why not?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for bringing the two examples to the attention of the House and to me particularly.

I cannot give him any answer beyond that today as to whether Canada would consider such a study. I will consult with my Cabinet colleagues and obviously with officials in my Department as I am sure my colleagues will consult with theirs. Because this is a major policy issue, we have to do that, and I will get back to the Hon. Member at the appropriate time.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

CORRECTION BY MINISTER

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In responding to the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong)—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister has risen on a point of order. I would ask Members on her side and Members on the other side to give her the courtesy of addressing the Chair.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, in responding to the Hon. Member for Regina East, I said that the Call-Net appeal of the CRTC decision was before the CRTC. I should, of course, have said that it is before the Cabinet.

---

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

WAR CRIMINALS

TABLING OF MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table in both official languages copies of a Memorandum of Understanding between Canada and the Soviet Union. In addition, I am tabling copies of the Memorandum of Understanding in the Russian language.

This agreement will enable Canadian officials to gather evidence in the Soviet Union and it includes the conditions recommended by Mr. Justice Deschênes to ensure obtaining such evidence in accordance with Canadian procedures and safeguards.

* * *

HOLIDAYS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-283, an Act respecting Sir John A. Macdonald Day.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to re-introduce an amendment to the Holidays Act, seconded by the Hon. Member for Pontiac—Gatineau—Labelle (Mr. Moore), that would declare the third Monday in February a national holiday entitled Sir John A. Macdonald Day.

Our first Prime Minister, more than any other individual was responsible for the creation of the Canadian Confederation. A day set aside to honour him is long overdue. I believe as well that Canadians would welcome a February holiday in the middle of our long Canadian winter.

Therefore, I call on all Members of Parliament, and Canadians everywhere, who believe we should honour Sir John A. Macdonald, to support the creation of a new national holiday.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, ATLANTIC CANADA, 1987

AUTHORITY FOR LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE TO TRAVEL

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties. I think you would find there is unanimous consent for the following motion to be put and voted on immediately.

I move:

That, the legislative committee on Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts be authorized to adjourn from place to place within Atlantic-Canada from March 6 to 13, 1988 inclusive, for the purpose of holding public hearings with respect to the Bill and that the necessary staff accompany the committee.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

PETITIONS

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 signed by petitioners from Vancouver, North Burnaby, Richmond, Abbotsford, North Vancouver, Port Coquitlam, B.C. who have indicated in their opinion that the Conservative Government does not have a mandate from the people of Canada to conclude a trade deal with the United States.

They believe, of course, that this trade deal would weaken Canada's sovereignty. They believe that the trade deal threatens the very fabric of our political and economic life by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership and its ability to develop Canada's energy resources in the best interests of Canadians.

Therefore, they call upon the Parliament of Canada to dissolve now to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject this proposed trade deal during a national general election.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present today from Canadians who would like to table a grievance with the House concerning this commercial deal concluded by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of this country and the President of the United States—the so-called free trade deal.

• (1510)

The petition states that, whereas the Government has sold out Canada and received nothing in return, whereas Canadian industries are still not protected from U.S. trade laws, whereas the United States obtained everything it wanted in all key sectors, especially agriculture, energy, the auto trade, financial services and investment, whereas thousands of Canadian jobs are threatened and the Conservative Government has not provided for any adjustment assistance for Canadian workers, wherefore—

An Hon. Member: Oh!

Mr. Gauthier: What is the Hon. Member saying? Is he not in agreement with this? It is a good petition, signed by many petitioners and it is in order. It goes on to say, wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to denounce the Government for signing the trade agreement. In spite of all the noise from over there, the petitioners do not agree with it.

[Translation]

MANDATORY INSTALLATION OF SUPPLEMENTARY SAFETY DEVICES IN AUTOMOBILES

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the privilege of tabling 422 petitions signed by residents across the country. These signatures are in addition to those on petitions I tabled previously, making a total of 32,182 signatures. The petitioners are from Chibougamau, Roberval-Dolbeau, Saint-Pamphile, Metabetchouan, Alma, Beauharnois, Châteaubriand, Lac-aux-Sables, Saint-Hyacinthe, Saint-Marc, Farnham, New Market, Sudbury, Montreal, North Battleford in Saskatchewan, Mont Saint-Hilaire, Granby, Delisle in Saskatchewan and Aylmer in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, the undersigned are aware that since 1974, federal legislation allows the installation of self-inflating bags in the driver's seat for private cars, and that this device would reduce the number of deaths or serious injuries.

Wherefore, your petitioners humbly pray Parliament to make it mandatory to install inflatable bags in the front seat of passenger cars and adjustable shoulder seat-belts for passengers on the back seat.

[English]

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions I would like to deposit with the House of Commons. The first is a petition collected by Mr. Maurizio Bevilacqua, resident of the federal riding of York North and a member of the Maple Village Ratepayers Association. The petition concerns Canada Post and the Government's plan to adopt supermailbox services and also the closure of rural post offices. They say this is creating havoc and tremendous inconvenience for all residents of the federal riding of York North.

Therefore, the petitioners are calling upon the Government to reject the corporate plan proposed by Canada Post and to instruct post office officials to provide one service for all Canadians rather than to differentiate between Canadians and create second-class citizens.

REOPENING OF EMBASSY IN ECUADOR

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the second petition is from a number of individuals from my riding who signed a petition because of the recent closure by the Government of the embassy in Ecuador.

The petitioners call upon the Government once again, because of the hardship created on individuals seeking to apply for immigration and the long delays, as long as six months, in making an appointment at a nearby embassy in Bogota, Ecuador to reopen the embassy in Colombia to provide the service people in that part of the world certainly merit and to respect the large community in Canada that relies on an embassy in Colombia.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition signed by people from the great City of Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan. The petitioners humbly pray and petition the House that they feel the proposed trade agreement not only denies Canadians the secure access to the U.S. market that was the key objective of these negotiations but threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement in a federal General Election.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have here a duly certified petition from a number of Canadian residents saying that the Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a trade agreement with the United States, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised, whereas the free trade agreement negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians or to equalize opportunities between the regions, and that the proposed trade agreement denies Canadians the policy freedom to determine their own economic future, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national General Election.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I too have the honour and duty to present a petition in which a number of citizens call upon the Government to dissolve in order to call a national election to determine the will of Canadians as far as the trade deal is concerned.

It is the considered opinion of the signatories to this petition that the present Government of Canada had no right or mandate to engage in a treaty with the United States that would erode and destroy Canadian sovereignty.

Therefore, they request the Parliament of Canada to dissolve so that an election may resolve this issue.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from residents of Toronto, London, North Bay, Gloucester and other parts of Ontario, a petition duly signed by the Petitions Clerk, in which the petitioners say that they are concerned that this Government had no mandate to negotiate a free trade deal with the United States but that our Canadian sovereignty is threatened by what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has signed, that it will reduce Canada's ability to plan our economic, social and cultural programs, and also it makes us integrated further into the North American defence industrial base.

For these reasons, they ask the House of Commons to ensure that a national debate takes place on this trade deal and that this debate result in a national General Election before any agreement is finalized.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present on behalf of a group of citizens of Saskatchewan, B.C. and Alberta a petition which comments on the undemocratic procedures the Government has followed in presenting the free trade agreement and calls upon the Government to act democratically and call an election so that the people can comment on the trade agreement.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to present petitions on behalf of residents of the Province of Saskatchewan protesting that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised, but the agreement negotiated threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians and to equalize opportunities between the regions.

Since the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future, the petitioners call on the House of Commons to dissolve and to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national General Election.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all Notices of Motions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

RAILWAY SAFETY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, February 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-105, an Act to ensure the safe operation of railways and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the occasion of a Railway Safety Act is an important and momentous one in the House of Commons and for the country. We should always remember that rail transportation was one of the keys to creating this confederation. It was created by a commitment to tie together our country with a band of steel which is symbolically, what was the railway. It was an east-west commitment to create a nation in the northern half of this hemisphere.

• (1520)

I think when we deal with revisions to the legislation affecting railways we should always keep in mind that the railway is a part of the vision of this country. I like to remember that when arguments are made about rationalizing, downsizing and elimination of overlapping and duplication. Certainly those are important goals and I am not suggesting that we do the opposite, but we would not have a country if we had not been prepared to do something that seemed pretty irrational at the time, that is to establish a nation on an east-west axis.

We now have before us in Bill C-105, the Railway Safety Act. As my colleagues indicated, particularly the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud), our principal spokesman on this subject, we support the Bill in principle and are going to vote for it. However, it would be a great deal easier to do so if we knew the Government was prepared to be more flexible than it has so far indicated it intends to be when the Bill moves into committee.

I want to take some time to talk about our specific concerns and I hope the Parliamentary Secretary or the Minister himself might respond and indicate that at least some effort will be made to look into the important arguments we on this side have raised because we think that is necessary if the Bill is really to serve the railways and our country.

Just before getting to my main points, I have had some interest in a specific issue of railway safety which I have raised both in the House in Question Period and outside the House through statements and press releases. That concern relates to the transportation of dangerous goods by rail through Metropolitan Toronto. That is a subject dealt with by the Railway Safety Act.

Members should know that this is a matter of great concern for us in Toronto, as it is in western Canada because of the Hinton disaster. For us it was fortunately not a disaster but a very near miss when, several years ago in Mississauga, a train carrying deadly chemicals was nearly derailed. It forced us to confront the issue of the carriage of dangerous goods through Toronto, the location of our rail lines in metropolitan areas, and to reflect on emergency relief and emergency measures when dealing with this type of disaster. It was all hypothetical, thank God, because actual disaster was averted and in the end no one suffered injury. However, it showed us how vulnerable we are to potential disasters which arise from carrying dangerous goods by rail through built-up areas.

When I heard, for example, a couple of years ago that notice was being given by the railways of their intention to close down some important lines running through northern Ontario I could not help but think of the impact that could have on dangerous goods which might be channelled through cities and urban areas because of the shutting down of those lines. That is a powerful argument for keeping lines open outside of urban areas.

I have done some work on statistics and it turns out that most of the dangerous goods carried by rail through dense metropolitan areas are carried to destinations inside those areas. Obviously, for most of them, it is inevitable that they are going to be carried on those lines and the question of northern lines or remote lines is irrelevant. However, the problem of those goods not destined for downtown urban areas or metropolitan areas being carried through those areas if the northern lines are closed down is a problem worth considering.

I want to hear from the Government that it cares about that, and that when the viability of northern lines is being looked at, one of the principal factors which should be considered is that those lines present a method of diverting some dangerous goods from being carried through urban areas.

To those of us, like myself, who represent urban populations, it is important to make that point and it is important to hear from the Government that the point has registered and indeed the northern lines are recognized as a method of diverting dangerous goods, in cases where it is appropriate, from being carried through urban areas.

Of course, that is not the only recourse for dealing with dangerous goods. There was a task force meeting in Toronto, I believe it has now concluded its public hearings, which attracted a great deal of interest. It demonstrated a concern that Canadians feel about the problem.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), appeared before that committee and set out a number of ways of providing greater safety when it is inevitable and necessary that dangerous goods be carried to and through urban areas. In his brief he talked about, as he has in this House, a lower speed limit because of the strong likelihood that more care can be taken and more notice of danger given when railway cars are travelling at a lower rate of speed.

He talked about the importance of observation of the cars and the rails. While all kinds of technical methods are available for observation and security and these methods should be used, human observation is an essential part of a proper system of safeguards. People can spot rail defects, loose freight, poisonous leaks, track wash-outs and, perhaps most important, are able to stop the train if an emergency is perceived. These are important and essential safeguards when dangerous goods are carried through areas where people live. He emphasized as well, as I have done now, the importance of lowering the risk in general in heavily-populated areas. That is where, of course, any disaster would have its greatest impact.

In conclusion, I want to turn to the features of the Act that concern us. I know Members opposite are listening with intense interest and I hope they will indicate that these concerns matter and that the Minister will look with some sympathy at these ideas. We are first concerned that a sort of conflict of interest exists in a broad sense for the Minister in assuming some of the powers to be awarded under this Bill when added to his already significant powers; for example, responsibility for deregulation.

The goal of deregulation is simple, to reduce the amount of control by the state over the subject matter, in this case railway carriage. The new or reinforced responsibility awarded by this Act for safety could lead him in the opposite direction, and I would not like to think that the interests of deregulation would be a goal that the Minister would keep in mind when issues of safety are being considered. We know that railways want to operate in an efficient manner and they certainly want to operate in a safe manner. However, regulation has a role to play in assuring that they do operate in a safe manner.

• (1530)

We would like to hear that the Minister is not obsessed with the goal of deregulation and that that will not be a consideration which prevents him from considering the kind of regulations which I have urged in my remarks today and that others have urged when these disasters have arisen and when the problems of safe passage have been considered.

Second, my colleagues have made the point that the fines and penalties provided for in Clause 41 do not give enough range to a court. I am not saying that the amounts are not substantial and that they may not cover most of the situations in which penalties will be imposed. However, when you think of the seriousness of the consequences of some unsafe procedures for which fines may be imposed, a maximum fine of $50,000 to a corporation and $10,000 to an individual seems small.

One could imagine the situation in a corporate boardroom of a decision being made when a very expensive regulation or costly procedure is being considered. Although they will be careful and try to avoid doing anything wrong or getting caught, if they are caught $50,000 is a lot less than it would cost to avoid the problem. Much larger fines would be in order in the circumstances of the risks and costs of implementing regulations about which we are speaking here.

Third, I want to talk about the committee which is proposed to be set up pursuant to Clause 44. That committee is to be composed, according to the draft legislation, of one position for labour, six for businesses and the railways, and four at the Minister's discretion. I do not think that is a fair balance. I think it would be better to provide more representation from labour if there is to be that much representation from business and railways.

I am not only thinking of labour from the point of view of issues of labour management or the point of view of workers' concerns as workers. Some of the most expert people on the subject of rail transportation and safety are people who have hands-on experience, who know how trains operate, and who know the kinds of situations which can arise. Therefore, I say that not only from the point of view that business and labour have a different perspective, but from the point of view of having someone who knows how railways work from a hands-on position. I hope that the Government will concede that more than one labour voice be put on the committee by right, and not just if the Minister feels like it, as is the present provision of the Bill.

Also, there ought to be an official designation of one position on such a committee for a community representative. Who the community representative should be would depend on the circumstances. It could be a designate of the mayor or council of a community. It could be someone in a ratepayers' association when a smaller issue is at stake which only affects that kind of a limited group. It could perhaps be someone from a consumer group who would want to bring to bear the position of consumers.

However, to say that if the Minister so chooses the committee could operate without such a person is overlooking one of the sources of legitimacy which we want such a committee to have and the respect which we want the public to give to the decisions which such a committee reaches.

A fourth area of concern has to do with the hours of work which will be applied in circumstances where rail safety is being considered. I would like the statute itself to lay out some guidelines. The Parliament of Canada should indicate in legislation some type of scheduling to give a signal about the standards which we want to apply to those who work on the railways and whose attention and energy are affected by long hours of work or too much overtime on particular shifts over a long period of time. Parliament ought to do a bit more than identify that as an issue and leave it totally to be established outside the legislation.

We want this Bill to move forward.

[Translation]

It is a significant undertaking. We must always make progress in the field of railroad safety. We are very much in favour of that, and we hope that the contribution we are making now in terms of ideas and suggestions will be of some interest to the Government.

[English]

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker dealt very effectively with some of the key issues on this matter. I wonder whether he would be in a position to elaborate in a little more detail on shortcomings arising from the Mississauga event regarding hazardous products. There have been a number of serious incidents subsequent to that. Has he any additional concerns about sufficient prevention in the carriage of dangerous products?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I could go on at great length on this subject. I have in my office the report on the incident which I have read with great interest and also the work of the task force which has just concluded. I know the Hon. Member is as concerned as I am about railway safety. I want to ensure that he receives a copy of the report. From that he will see what this task force, which was appointed by a Conservative Government but seems to be doing a very good job, is going to propose.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member with great interest and I appreciate the remarks he made about the transportation of dangerous goods. Does he realize that in a metropolitan area such as Toronto thousands of tonnes of dangerous goods move every day to and from manufacturers, wholesalers, retailers, and processors? If we were to move rail lines further out of Toronto those same dangerous goods would have to move by road through Metropolitan Toronto. As the Member, I, and everyone else all know, the incident of accidents on the road, particularly involving trucks, is many times higher than on the rails. Despite the Mississauga incident, rail is still the safest way to go.

Does the Hon. Member think that that consideration should override the demand for the wholesale moving of railway tracks, whether spur tracks into warehouses or mainline tracks, out of a metropolitan area?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, my friend makes a very good point. I agree with him that rail carriage is perhaps the safest way of transporting dangerous goods. The wholesale removal of lines from urban areas where they are needed, with the objective of forcing the transportation of these goods on to the roads, is no real solution. It is a step backward.

The first priority is to be certain that rail lines within urban areas are not being used to carry dangerous goods that are irrelevant to the economy of that community. If the line is being used simply because it is the shortest distance between two points, through what happens to be a great metropolitan centre, a high priority should be given to a diversion of that commodity to a railway line that goes around the city.

• (1540)

Art Eggleton, the Mayor of Toronto, made an impassioned plea before the task force on the transport of dangerous goods, to urge them to build a new line going around the city. It would cost some $700 million to build a line so that goods would not have to go through the city unnecessarily. While that is a very substantial amount of money, it can be less than the cost of a disaster that could occur.

Furthermore, such a line could be used to move goods from one side of the city to the other, thereby increasing the safety of the population in the urban area by moving goods around the city on a rail line rather than through. When one adds all these elements to the equation, it is evident that a line like that could be a very important factor in making our urban areas a safer place for residents.

Finally, there is the question of dangerous goods that are required in the cities. Historically, certain industries that require the use of dangerous goods have been in the hearts of our cities. It may be worth giving some priority to the thought of relocating those industries to industrial suburbs where many of the risks that are involved might be reduced.

I once visited the site of a former bomb factory in New Brunswick. I was given a long explanation about the measures that had been taken to divide the operation into a number of buildings and caves on this vast site in an effort to make them as safe as possible. One might suggest that that type of planning could be done in the first place when dangerous goods are involved in industrial projects, but I do not want to rebuild our cities around this principle. We should keep that in mind in everything we do as a Parliament, and governments as well at other levels. We should take account of the increasing danger of these industrial activities and try to make them truly as safe as possible.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, many people are concerned that this Bill will allow the railways to make their own rules to an even greater extent than they have in the past, and that the decision about how to care for such things as the movement of dangerous goods may be tied to economic considerations. Will the Hon. Member suggest an alternative to this method of ensuring that the rules that are put in place by the railways will provide safety in the movement of those kinds of goods?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, the safety function which I mentioned earlier and said should not reside with the Minister to the extent it does, perhaps could be given to the safety board that is also referred to in the legislation. At least the safety board has as its main concern the question of safety.

[Translation]

If we consider that the Minister wants deregulation and is actively promoting this issue, whenever he has to come to grips with safety problems he may be prepared to compromise to achieve deregulation or give it first priority.

Given the safety plan now being proposed, why not give more power to this agency so it will feel free to make any decision aimed at ensuring maximum safety without compromising in respect of deregulation issues.

[English]

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to Bill C-105, the Railway Safety Act. It has already been pointed out that the New Democratic Party supports the legislation in principle since anything that will lead to a safer transportation environment is to the benefit of all Canadians.

My main area of concern is the political will of the Government to deal effectively with questions of safety. We know that the legislation on rail safety is likely only before the House today as a result of four wrecks that occurred during the last month. There were wrecks in London, Sudbury and Regina where two people lost their lives. The Bill arises only because of the crisis management nature of the Government rather than a timely and organized approach toward enhancing transportation safety.

This is a reflection of a general problem with the Government. On the one hand it expresses its serious concern about certain problems, while on the other hand it tends to delay implementation of legislation which, from a philosophical point of view, erodes its effectiveness.

We have heard for some time a litany of concerns about rail equipment safety, timely upgrading and proper inspection of that equipment. We have heard about railway grades that need substantial improvement and repair because they eventually become a serious hazard to safety.

The transportation of dangerous goods is of great concern. Cars containing propane have overturned, and dangerous chemicals have been spilled. Many Canadians believe that the attempt to address the problem of the transport of dangerous goods, especially in sensitive areas, has been inadequate. In the last several years the injuries, loss of life and the destruction of property have increased our concern about rail safety. In the last year some 350 people were killed at level crossings, of which there are thousands in Canada. Most of the level crossings in Europe disappeared years ago. However, this country's penny wise and pound foolish approach to railway transportation safety has not allowed us to effectively deal with the problem of level railway crossings.

Urban centres like Vancouver, Mississauga and Toronto must face the safety aspect of dangerous goods transported by rail every day.

The double tracking of the Fraser Canyon is of great concern to us. Just over a year ago the Fisheries and Oceans Committee heard serious concerns about the intention of the double tracking of the CN through that very delicate environment where slides and the disturbance of the local ecology have the potential of serious environmental impact. Other concerns include the danger to the goods that are transported and the problems associated with that. As well, there are the concerns of aboriginal people. We are very concerned about the double tracking proposal and, later on in the future, the possibility of the double tracking of sections of the other carrier through the Fraser Canyon.

• (1550)

It is quite surprising that the Government and the railways seem to again choose the penny wise and pound foolish route of dealing with the problem rather than considering the many other safer alternatives that were proposed. But the Government chose not to insist that the railways explore those possibilities and take the pressure off that sensitive environmental area. The cheapest way is the best way in the minds of some people in this present Government.

Another serious concern we have involves the whole question of the integrity of the safety infrastructure. Over a period of time there has been a profound feeling that although the Government is saying it is very concerned about safety, there is an erosion of the will of Government to become aggressive and active on safety issues. We would point out that the deregulation program of this Government is bound to create more safety problems than it will resolve. The experience in the United States tends to indicate that as the deregulation process goes into place, major safety problems arise.

There is the whole question of the aviation industry. We have seen a massive expansion of aviation activity, by way of comparison. Both the growing economy and the deregulated environment have resulted in a massive increase in air transportation traffic. At the same time, the Government has failed to apply adequate human resources for inspection, safety compliance operations and accident investigation. The application of these human resources has not been expanded to keep up with the expansion of activity. On the other hand, the Public Service has gone through a number of cuts which has led to intense pressure on those responsible for inspection and investigation and who deal with questions of safety.

Therefore, deregulation has had an impact on expanding activity, along with an improved economy, since the days of the early 1980s. Yet at the same time the Government has gone in absolutely the opposite direction and laid off public servants, allowed the Public Service to shrink by attrition, and essentially loaded more and more responsibilities onto a smaller and smaller group of people who, in fact, cannot handle, other than through a very low-grade spot-check system, the safety factor. As we watch more and more carriers operating and more and more activity because of economic growth, we will find that those people are certainly not going to be able to guarantee the integrity of the safety infrastructure.

On the question of the lack of the Government's will to continue to strengthen the safety infrastructure, we have the problem of the removal of resources. The people who are still in the system, doing the inspections, the safety enforcement, prevention and accident investigation, are finding that because of the Government's desire to curtail deficits, to reduce over-all spending, there are fewer and fewer resources to do a decent job and guarantee to the public that its safety is a matter of priority and is being looked after in an effective and timely manner.

The Government's will to develop and enhance the safety system in Canada, therefore, is being harmed by its budgetary activities. The cuts to spending, the inability to obtain adequate resources to do the kinds of things that can guarantee safety, is apparent to most Canadians.

Again, it is a matter of serious concern to us. Over all, the Government's philosophy almost contradicts its stated intention to improve safety. In a deregulated environment, the Government wants to remove itself from the back of business and basically say, "You get out there and do it. You are responsible for safety and we are counting on you to undertake the problem". We see the Conservative philosophy of getting Government off the back of business as almost a contradiction to improvement in safety.

Secondly, there is a lack of political will in enforcing safety regulations. We have a situation in which there is Government interference, where there have been Public Service attempts to enforce safety regulations, and where those attempts on occasion have been modified by direct interference by Government. Even though regulation may be there, the question of the will to enforce those regulations on the part of the Government is a matter of serious question. I have gone into the whole question of Public Service staff and financial resources at great length. Each year, with growing traffic problems and with the growing number of people involved in the business, we wind up with a situation where those resources are far too inadequate to deal with the problem.

It is interesting to note that on this issue of resolve in the safety area, the Ministry of Transport has quite a negative track record. I would point to the issue of the lighthouses. The Department of Transport is charged not only with railway safety but with marine and air safety. In the marine environment, by way of example, the Government had intended to shut down a majority of the lighthouses on the coast of British Columbia. In the face of a massive amount of evidence that those lighthouses were providing a very important safety network along the coast of British Columbia, the Government charged ahead with its objective to shut those facilities down. It was clearly demonstrated that they needed to be enhanced. There is a need for improved weather reporting capability and communication equipment; indeed, there is a need for the human resources to do the job.

But the Government was completely unwilling to upgrade that structure even though marine transportation was increasing along the coast of British Columbia, and even though there are a substantial number of serious accidents every year, and lighthouse keepers have played an important role in mediating those accidents. Yet the Government preferred to move in the other direction, to cut human and financial resources, saying, "It is not our mandate", which is a very curious thing. In dealing with the over-all responsibility of transportation, whether it be commercial, recreational or tourist transportation, that Department is saying that giving weather forecast to those vessels is not its responsibility, but the responsibility of some other Government Department, so it is going to chop it. Indeed, a very narrow, short-sighted approach to marine safety is illustrated by the Government's desire to cut those lighthouses.

It was pointed out by a previous speaker that over the years there has been an interesting conflict of interest in enforcing safety. The Minister of Transport has a dual role in many cases, especially under the new transportation legislation, to deregulate the environment, to encourage more carriers and to facilitate their opportunity to become involved in the industry. At the same time, there is a deterrent and expensive proposition to enforce rigorous safety standards. At times the Minister comes into a conflict situation.

To move over to the air side, to illustrate this point as it would apply to rail safety, we see it as an awkward area that we are certainly loading onto the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and onto the Ministry, away from the Canadian Transport Commission. Instead of an organization that operates to some degree at arm's length from the Minister, an organization which can, with some objectivity, with independent resources and decisions, apply those resources to prevention, investigation and inspection programs, we now have it locked within the responsibility of the Minister whose mandate is to promote, improve and encourage expansion, and on the other hand, to impose major cost and regulatory burdens in terms of safety.

• (1600)

The Dubin Royal Commission into air safety uncovered this conflict within the aviation branch of the Department of Transport. There is no doubt that that conflict and the requirement to enforce rigorous safety standards within the aviation branch during the period of the Liberal Government wound the Minister of Transport or the Department of Transport into a major conflict.

There was political interference in the outcome of many accident investigations. Those people within the safety and accident investigation branches were hampered from bringing their material to public knowledge and to those agencies that could improve the situation, and to impose the burden effectively on the carriers.

We wound up with a Royal Commission, and Judge Dubin stated that these ought to be split off in order that they can function independently, and guarantee to Canadians that air transportation will be as safe as humanly possible, and that that can be done by an outside agency through the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, rather than under the direct auspices of the Minister of Transport.

It was pointed out by the previous speaker, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) that we are moving railway safety into a potential conflict of interest area. That is a matter of concern, given the history dealt with in the Dubin Royal Commission in the early 1980 period.

There is an interesting point in the legislation on penalties. How serious are we about railway safety and the implementation of safety standards, when one considers that an individual can be fined $10,000, yet a corporation can be fined a maximum of $50,000? It is a very strange situation when a manager within the railway system, concerned enough about the Budget for his or her department, can say, "If we are detected for having a faulty system in place, the fine is cheaper than the cost of changing or repairing that situation". With some of the equipment and systems that we are dealing with, $50,000 is an absolute drop in the bucket.

I have spoken with many engineers who are responsible for air safety from a maintenance point of view. They state that indeed the deregulated environment has put pressure on certain air carriers. Years ago a defective part would be taken out and thrown away and another one would be put in. Today that is not done. The part is taken out, fixed up, haywired together in order that it works. It is stuffed back in the machine and they hope for the best. I have heard people say that their hands shakes when they sign the log book stating that that beast is airworthy.

The same situation applies when a safety or maintenance supervisor or a manager states, "We are going overboard on our accounts or budget. What we should do, because this thing probably has a few more hours left in it, is use it". The same thing applies in the railway safety area. There should be penalties in this legislation that are serious deterrents to managers who put the corporation's budget ahead of safety matters.

Within the House there should be serious consideration, especially in committee, to recommending much stronger penalties from a corporate point of view where matters of corporate budget concern exceed the need for safety, where one could find a manager who states, "In order to keep the budget that has been assigned to my department within limits, I am going to overlook the safety requirements here". That is well within the realm of possibility, and there are examples that that is indeed happening today.

In the transportation system the Government got involved in a number of things. The commitment to remove the regulatory burden and the burden of government from the industry, and to some degree from safety, the cutting of human and financial resources to the government department responsible over-all for the implementation of safety, are serious matters. Even in the cost recovery program the example of substantial increases in charts, in navigational material within transport, and down the road the use of Transport Canada services designed to assist in safety imposing a cost to the public or to the users, instead of a general burden to the population, will result in people avoiding the use of those services, taking a chance, and returning us to the old concept of the wild west approach to public safety.

In some areas, the Government has done a major disservice to people by the philosophy that it has imposed on the safety infrastructure of the railway transportation system.

Mr. Friesen: I thank the Hon. Member for his speech. Earlier in his speech there were actually some remarks directed toward rail safety. The rest of his speech was off the subject of the Bill. I did notice when speaking about rail safety, the Hon. Member gave some attention to the need for double tracking in the Fraser Canyon. I take it from the context of his remarks that he was promoting that idea in order to promote rail safety in the Fraser Canyon. The Hon. Member mentioned when he was on the fisheries committee that he faced a lot of concern about the environment when dealing with the subject of double tracking.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly) if he supports double tracking of the Fraser Canyon, or does he not?

Mr. Skelly: I thank the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen) for his intervention. Certainly, he must have been wandering a little during the discussion. He knows as clearly as anyone else in the House and in the country the position of the New Democratic Party on double tracking in the Fraser Canyon. The position is clearly stated on the record.

I do wish to deal with another matter that I know is of concern to the Hon. Member—

Mr. Friesen: Are you for or against? Which track are you on?

Mr. Skelly: —that is on the question of drug and alcohol within the legislation. It is interesting that the legislation deals with punitive aspects regarding individuals who are involved in drug an alcohol problems in the workforce. Certainly, it is our hope that under this legislation the Government and the Department of National Health and Welfare will work with the railroads and the railroad employees to see that ideal programs involved in prevention and resolution of personal problems with employees will be undertaken before there are accidents, not simply the old standard of drug testing and the firing of an employee who has contravened the legislation.

Perhaps, the Government will take the example of the Canadian Armed Forces in relation to alcohol treatment. The Canadian Armed Forces has to be considered one of the leaders in developing treatment programs and rehabilitation programs for its employees. It provides a service to the employee in terms of alcohol and drug rehabilitation that can return the individual to useful and productive service, can remove the problems that are experienced by an employee's family, and the potential risks in a very delicate and serious work situation where the abuse of alcohol and drugs, or personal stress experienced by an individual, can lead to a major safety problem. Of course, this applies to air, marine, and rail safety, and in the Armed Forces these come together in an even more crucial area. That branch has become one of the leaders in Canadian society in the alcohol and drug rehabilitation system.

It is my hope that the provisions that are in this legislation will not be used as a punitive sanction, but to lay down an example in Canada of how employers in the industrial, and especially in the transportation environment, can provide support services to their employees that aim at rehabilitation and returning the individual to the workforce and in particular, preventing the types of accidents and difficult situations that can occur before they happen by recognition and effective treatment and rehabilitation.

• (1610)

I am appreciative of the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta for bringing this matter to the attention of the House in the skilful and effective way he always does. Incidentally, we are also opposed to the double tracking of the CN through the Fraser Canyon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

* * *

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I think Your Honour would find unanimous consent for suspending the sitting until 4.30 p.m.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary is correct. We could adjourn for 18 and a half minutes, have coffee, and wait for the next CPR wreck to present the Budget.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) also give his consent?

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, there is agreement that it be postponed until 4.30 p.m.

[English]

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the wish of the House to suspend the sitting until 4.30 p.m.?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

At 4.13 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

---

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 4.30 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being 4.30 p.m., pursuant to orders made Friday, January 29, and Monday, February 8, 1988, the House will now proceed to Ways and Means proceedings No. 29.

* * *

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance) moved:

That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

He said: As Canadians look ahead to a new decade and a new century, they have good reason to look forward with confidence.

Our economy is growing stronger, more dynamic, better able to compete.

Many more Canadian men and women have jobs.

Canadians are successfully meeting new challenges and seizing new opportunities.

In three and a half years, our economic progress has been dramatic. Overall, we have done better than any of the other major industrialized countries.

We have been number one in economic growth since 1984.

We have been number one in employment growth.

[Translation]

More than 1,150,000 jobs have been created since we came to office; the great majority are full-time jobs; the unemployment rate today is the lowest it has been in six years.

[English]

Economic and employment growth last year were more evenly balanced among regions. Unemployment dropped in all provinces.

Mortgage rates are 3 percentage points lower, saving homeowners $1,200 per year on a $50,000 mortgage amortized over 25 years.

Housing starts last year reached a 10-year high.

[Translation]

Business is confident; the pace of investment has increased sharply.

Consumers are confident; consumer spending has continued to grow strongly.

[English]

POLICIES FOR GROWTH AND JOBS

This solid record of progress didn't just happen.

This government brought to office a vision for a stronger, more prosperous Canada, now and into the next century.

Our vision is rooted in the belief that the source of real, lasting jobs and economic strength is the creative energy of Canadians themselves—their capacity to innovate and produce, their desire to excel, their determination to build greater opportunities for the future.

To make this vision a reality, we set out a long-term plan—our Agenda for Economic Renewal—to transform the economy so that it can meet the challenges of a more competitive world.

Step by step, we have been putting in place a wide-ranging series of actions. These actions complement one another. Together they strengthen Canada's economic and social fabric and reinforce our place among the leading nations of the world.

[Translation]

We have revitalized the private sector and positioned Canada's economy to meet the challenge of international competition in the 1990s.

[English]

We have restored fiscal responsibility by reducing the deficit and cutting the growth of the national debt.

We have implemented priority programs, and we have helped regions and sectors hurt by unexpected developments in the world economy.

The budget I am tabling today is an accounting of the steps we are taking to build a stronger economy to create productive jobs. It reviews the economic and fiscal progress we are making and sets out our prospects for the future.

It is a record of how our policies and initiatives have worked in building the framework for the economic success we now enjoy. It is also a statement about the economic and social progress still to be achieved by holding to the course we have set—progress measured in rising standards of living and an improving quality of life that fully reflects the distinctive priorities and values of Canadians.

REVITALIZING THE PRIVATE SECTOR

The driving force behind productive growth and job creation is a dynamic private sector.

To encourage this dynamism, the government has taken far-reaching measures to modernize the regulatory environment for business, reform the federal tax system and secure markets for our exports.

MODERNIZING THE REGULATORY ENVIRONMENT FOR BUSINESS

Before this government came to office in 1984, the confidence of the business sector was at a low ebb.

The need for fundamental change was overwhelming.

We have acted to bring about this change.

We deregulated the energy and transportation sectors.

We opened financial markets to global opportunities and stimulated greater competition in financial services.

We modernized business framework legislation for competition policy, copyright and patents, providing better protection for the public interest.

[Translation]

We privatized Crown corporations to reduce the intrusion of government in the market-place.

[English]

We created Investment Canada to encourage and welcome investment capital from abroad, investment that is creating jobs for Canadians.

Through these and other initiatives, we are providing the environment for a stronger, more confident and growing private sector to play its role as the dynamic force behind growth and job creation. We are helping to build a more flexible and outward-looking economy, one that will be successful in the competitive and often volatile world economy.

Sceptics said the private sector would not respond; that jobs would be lost. The record proves the sceptics were wrong.

MAKING THE TAX SYSTEM FAIRER AND MORE EFFECTIVE

To build a firm foundation for success in the 1990s, we need a tax system that is fairer for individual Canadians. We need a system that is effective in supporting growth and job creation.

We need a system that helps our businesses and industries to compete in the world.

• (1640)

We are meeting these objectives. On January 1, 1988 major reforms to the personal and corporate income tax systems went into effect. The key to these reforms is our belief that the best possible tax incentive for productive activity is lower tax rates.

For individuals, three federal tax brackets are replacing 10. To make the system fairer we are converting personal exemptions and many deductions to tax credits, and we are reducing and eliminating many special tax breaks.

The results are compelling.

More than eight out of 10 households will see their personal income taxes reduced. About 850,000 lower-income individuals will have their income tax reduced to zero. Almost nine out of 10 Canadians aged 65 and over will have income tax reductions. The vast majority of families with children will pay noticeably less personal income tax.

For the corporate sector, many special tax breaks are being eliminated or reduced, and tax rates are being lowered. This will mean that the corporate tax system will be more competitive with systems in other countries. Business and investment decisions will be based more on economic merit than on tax considerations. At the same time, many more profitable corporations will pay tax and corporate income tax will contribute a larger share of total tax revenues.

I will be presenting to this House legislation covering these income tax reforms in the near future.

Still ahead of us is reform of the federal sales tax. We will replace the archaic and distorting sales tax system we now have with a multi-stage system that will be effective in supporting growth and job creation.

We have been working with the provinces and others to develop the most effective means of implementing this new system—particularly the opportunity of an integrated National Sales Tax. While the progress so far has been good, we have more work to do. We are actively pursuing these discussions to ensure that, coupled with the major reforms in the personal and corporate income taxes, Canadians have a tax system that meets both our shared commitment to fairness and the demands we face in a competitive world.

I want to emphasize that tax reform is not a "cut now, pay later" proposition. There are many who have failed to understand, or who choose to ignore, that stage two of tax reform, like stage one, will neither increase nor decrease the deficit. It will not raise additional revenues. The revenues from sales tax reform will be used only to replace the current sales tax, support further income tax reductions for middle-income Canadians, fund a generous sales tax credit for low-income Canadians and remove the income tax surtaxes.

SECURING AND IMPROVING ACCESS TO WORLD MARKETS

Another key element of our strategy for the 1990s is to secure improved access to world markets for Canada's exporters.

The government supports the liberalization of world trade. That is why we are determined to resist the forces of protectionism that ultimately damage the spirit and health of any nation's economy.

And it is why we worked so vigorously for a new round of multilateral trade negotiations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. The current negotiations in Geneva are an important opportunity to overhaul and strengthen the rules that are essential to an open world trading system.

In January, the Prime Minister signed a free trade agreement with our largest trading partner, the United States.

[Translation]

The free trade agreement with the U.S. is a major building block in the government's strategy to strengthen Canada's competitive position in the world and enhance the prosperity of our people.

[English]

The economic benefits of the free trade agreement will start to be realized shortly after its implementation on January 1, 1989. Prices for a wide range of consumer goods will begin to decline, expanding the purchasing power of Canadian households. Investment in plant and equipment will expand as Canadian firms move to take advantage of their enhanced access to the huge U.S. market-place. Increased consumer and investment spending will lead to stronger economic growth and more job creation.

The free trade agreement will provide greater opportunities for economies of scale in Canadian production and marketing and this will encourage greater productivity and stimulate innovation. In short, the agreement will lead to a more efficient and lower cost Canadian economy. A stronger and more productive economy will allow us to better support our social programs and further advance our cultural identity.

The government has completed a number of detailed studies on the impact of the free trade agreement on the Canadian economy. We estimate that there will be a net increase of at least 120,000 new jobs by 1993. We expect, too, that by the time the agreement is fully implemented, the real incomes of Canadians will be increased permanently by about $1,800 per year for a family of four.

There are further benefits to the economy that cannot be estimated in advance but that will be every bit as important—intangible benefits that result from greater incentive to invest and expand and the confidence built by broader horizons and opportunities.

The agreement itself is a symbol of our maturity—of our confidence as a sovereign and independent nation in our ability to compete successfully with products from around the world inside our own borders as well as in foreign markets.

REDUCING THE DEFICIT AND CONTROLLING THE GROWTH OF THE DEBT

Nothing is more basic to a strong framework for economic growth and job creation than responsible management of government finances.

In 1984, the federal deficit and the national debt were out of control. The deficit was more than $38 billion—up from $14.9 billion just three years before. The national debt had doubled in the same period and was growing at an average rate of 26 per cent per year.

If we had continued to pile up public debt at the same rate, today the debt would be more than $100 billion higher than it is—equivalent to $16,000 more for a family of four.

When government loses control of its finances, everyone is affected. It leads to higher interest rates for mortgages and for business and consumer loans; it means declining economic confidence, less growth and fewer jobs; it threatens our ability to provide the kinds of government programs and services Canadians need and want.

I believe that this generation of Canadians wants to leave our children and grandchildren a legacy of opportunities and optimism, not one of crushing debt and crushed hopes.

Our challenge in 1984 was to restore fiscal stability and rebuild credibility in the management of government finances.

[Translation]

The only way to do that was to set out a medium-term fiscal plan with sustained deficit reduction—and then hold to that plan.

That is exactly what we did. We embarked on a series of actions to restore fiscal order by cutting government spending and increasing revenues.

[English]

BRINGING SPENDING UNDER CONTROL

The first priority had to be to get government spending under control.

In the four years before we came to office, government spending on programs had increased at an average annual rate of 14 per cent—far in excess of the rate of inflation and enough to double spending in about five years.

• (1650)

In the first three full years of our mandate, we cut the average annual rate of increase in government spending to just 3.5 per cent—less than the rate of inflation.

We achieved this record because we put in place a new, disciplined approach to the management of government and its finances.

An increase in government revenues is also an important part of our fiscal progress. Almost 80 per cent of the increase in revenues comes from the job and income growth that our policies are helping to create. Tax increases account for a relatively small part of the revenue gains.

With these actions, we have systematically reduced the deficit.

We said we would cut the deficit in each and every year. We did.

For the current fiscal year, I said we would cut the deficit to $29.3 billion. We will meet that target.

We said that control of expenditures would be the main source of deficit reduction. It has been.

We said that we would respond to the priorities and needs of Canadians in a fiscally responsible way. We have.

MAINTAINING FISCAL PROGRESS

Sound financial management was essential in 1984. It is essential now and it will be essential in the future. We must hold to our fiscal principles and we will.

First, we are reducing the growth rate of the national debt to no more than that of the economy by 1990-91.

Second, we are achieving steady year-to-year declines in the deficit. The reduction projected for 1988-89 will be the first time in the post-war period that the deficit has declined four years in a row.

Third, we are ensuring substantial reductions in the government's financial requirements.

And fourth, we are achieving the greater part of this progress through expenditure restraint and disciplined management.

Through continued adherence to our fiscal principles, through the measures taken in this budget and through the structural improvements designed to encourage our economic expansion, we will stay on the fiscal course that I set out last June.

In June, I proposed measures to prevent the erosion of the sales tax base that results from the creation of marketing companies by related manufacturers. Following consultations on these proposals, an improved approach has been developed. To ensure that sales tax revenues are maintained, the Excise Tax Act will be amended as set out in the supplementary information and technical notes tabled with this budget. We will also tighten the provisions which permit the purchase of inventory by wholesalers on a tax-free basis.

In 1988-89, government program spending will increase by only 4.3 per cent. To ensure continued deficit reduction, this budget includes further expenditure reductions.

Today I am announcing a reduction in non-statutory spending by government departments of $300 million beginning in 1989-90. This reduction will be carried out in a similar way to the $500 million in expenditure cuts announced in the 1986 budget. Details will be made known by the President of the Treasury Board later this year.

These reductions, together with the continuing impact of our earlier restraint measures, will ensure that spending on non-statutory programs, excluding foreign aid and defence, will be lower in 1989-90 than it was when we took office. This is a real reduction, after inflation, of almost 20 per cent over a five-year period.

To raise revenues, the tax on gasoline will be increased by one cent per litre effective April 1. The rebate on gasoline purchased by farmers, fishermen and other primary producers will be increased by this amount. These measures do not apply to diesel fuel.

I am tabling Notices of Ways and Means Motions covering the changes I have announced and a number of further amendments to the Income Tax Act, the Excise Tax Act and the Customs Tariff. These additional amendments are described in detail in the supplementary information.

Legislation will be introduced shortly to amalgamate the three import institutions—the Canadian Import Tribunal, the Tariff Board and the Textile and Clothing Board—into one new institution: the Canadian International Trade Tribunal. This action will remove the duplication that currently exists.

Pursuant to a motion of this House, I will also introduce today a bill seeking borrowing authority for the 1988-89 fiscal year.

[Translation]

ECONOMIC OUTLOOK

Mr. Speaker, the steady progress we have been making in carrying through our fiscal and economic policies is reflected in the economic record and outlook for the Canadian economy.

[English]

The performance of our economy in 1987 surpassed most expectations. At the start of last year, forecasters were saying that the economy would grow by just over 2 per cent. When the final numbers are in, the growth of the economy will be close to 4 per cent. With growth driven by high levels of business investment, housing starts and consumer confidence, employment growth was very strong and the unemployment rate declined by 1.3 percentage points over the year.

For 1988, the Canadian economy is on course for a sixth consecutive year of expansion. Business confidence remains high and our corporate sector is in good financial health; we are competitive in international markets.

However, even without the October decline in the stock market, we could not have expected to sustain last year's rapid pace of economic growth. This year I expect the rate of growth to moderate to just under 3 per cent. Employment will continue to grow. Interest rates are expected to remain relatively stable over the course of the year.

Inflation has averaged just over 4 per cent over the last three years and in recent months has declined from the levels reached in mid-1987. To maintain a positive climate for growth and job creation, it is essential that wage and price pressures continue to be restrained and that further progress be made over time in reducing inflation. Both monetary and fiscal policy have an important role to play in this regard.

In 1989 the rate of economic growth is expected to rebound, with consumer expenditures buoyed by refunds resulting from tax reform and the lower prices resulting from the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement. Investment spending and exports will also be spurred by the trade agreement.

IMPLEMENTING PRIORITY PROGRAMS AND RESPONDING TO UNEXPECTED DEVELOPMENTS

Strong economic performance is good social policy.

By creating more jobs, more opportunities and better incomes, our expanding economy provides the means for Canadians to improve their own well-being and economic security. That same economic growth also provides the means for the government to maintain the social services that are an integral part of the Canadian way of life.

• (1700)

But strong economic growth coupled with our fiscal progress has enabled us to do more. It has created the financial capacity we need to do things that only government can do—to act in specific areas of national priority and to respond in support of regions and sectors hurt by unexpected developments beyond our borders.

We have undertaken a number of priority initiatives.

CHILD CARE

One of these is the National Child Care Strategy which was announced in December.

This initiative will benefit children because many more good quality facilities will become available for their care. We expect 200,000 new spaces to be created in all parts of the country in the next seven years.

[Translation]

The initiative is of great importance to Canadian families. It will help to eliminate a barrier facing many women who work, or want to work, outside the home. It also increases tax assistance to many who choose to work in the home.

[English]

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

We are also implementing a new approach to regional development, an approach that will be more responsive to needs and priorities in the regions. It will draw fully on the ideas and the initiative of people living in the various regions as we work to achieve more balanced development across Canada.

In the Atlantic Region, local entrepreneurship and small and medium business development is being promoted by the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

In the West, diversification of the economic base will be assisted by the Western Diversification Office.

In Northern Ontario, increased private sector activity is being assisted by the Federal Economic Development Initiative in Northern Ontario.

[Translation]

The Government has also announced its intention to respond more effectively to the real development needs of the less prosperous outlying regions of Quebec. To this end, an extensive consultation process will be undertaken with the people of the regions, representatives of local business communities and the provincial government.

[English]

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

We are ensuring jobs for Canadians in the future by investing in knowledge today.

Our ability to grow and create jobs depends fundamentally on our ability to use science and technology to our advantage.

At the National Conference on Science, Technology and Innovation in January, the Prime Minister announced $1.3 billion in federal funding for new science and technology activities over the next five years. These will include a national program of Centres of Excellence on university campuses and a program of Canada Scholarships in science, engineering and related disciplines.

Canadian companies carrying out R and D receive strong support through the tax system. When deductions and tax credits for R and D are taken into account, the tax incentives for Canadian firms to invest in R and D are among the most advantageous in the industrialized world.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

To protect Canada's sovereignty and meet our commitments to our allies, we must have a strong and modern defence capability. In the White Paper on Defence Policy, the Government defined three major elements in Canada's renewed defence strategy.

We will strengthen and modernize our naval defences. We will fulfil our commitment to NATO by consolidating our forces in Western Europe. And we will strengthen our defence of Canadian territory by enlarging our reserve forces and integrating them into the regular forces.

This Budget begins the process of implementing the White Paper proposals in a manner consistent with our fiscal principles.

AGRICULTURE

The Government has provided strong support to Canada's farm community in the face of severe international market conditions.

In addition to agricultural assistance under existing programs, the Government announced in December a further series of agricultural initiatives. These initiatives provide income support, help alleviate the pressures of farm debt on many farmers and maintain the economic base of many rural communities.

These actions have been made necessary in large part by falling grain prices caused by the continuing export subsidy war between the United States and the European Economic Community and by the lack of effective international rules governing agricultural subsidies.

At home and internationally, the Government will continue to support Canadian agriculture and work to advance agricultural interests. We will continue to seek better international rules. The Prime Minister is at the forefront of efforts to find a resolution to the international grain subsidy problem. We will continue to work through various forums, most particularly the multilateral trade negotiations currently under way in Geneva. In addition, Canada is a leading member of the Cairns Group—a group of countries that account for more than a third of world grain trade. Together we are working to ensure our shared objectives are met.

ENERGY

Since 1984, we have provided wide-ranging support for the development of Canada's vital energy industry. We signed energy accords with Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and the Western producing provinces to end years of federal-provincial disputes, to make the industry market-responsive and to instill investor confidence.

In 1986, following the collapse of world oil prices, we assisted the oil and gas industry by eliminating the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax. We also cushioned the shock of lower prices through the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program.

CANADA AND THE WORLD ECONOMY

I want to place this Budget and our economic program in the broader international perspective.

[Translation]

We live in a volatile world economy. Changes in commodity prices, inflation, financial markets and world economic growth have been large and difficult to predict. This situation is not likely to change in the future.

[English]

To succeed in this turbulent environment, we must be able to adjust quickly and be flexible in responding to change. At home, we must continue to build the strength and resiliency of the private sector to position the economy to meet the challenges of the 1990s and beyond. We must stick to our fiscal principles. We must continue to implement priority programs and to deal effectively with unexpected developments in a fiscally responsible way.

We will continue to support the individual and collective efforts of the major industrial countries to strengthen the basis for global economic growth.

• (1710)

At this juncture, the Group of Seven industrial nations has a vital leadership role to play. The world's trade problems and the difficulties faced by developing countries will be the focus of attention when the Prime Minister and the other leaders of the major industrial nations meet this June in Toronto for the Economic Summit. In addition, as Minister of Finance, I am in close consultation with my counterparts in the other G-7 countries to assess global developments and to co-ordinate economic policy action.

Canada is committed to this co-operative approach. By carrying forward actions to revitalize domestic economies and by working together, the major industrial nations can improve the prospects of all countries, including the developing countries. I will be introducing legislation which will allow Canada to support the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility of the International Monetary Fund to help address debt problems of the poorest developing countries.

CONCLUSION

To grow and prosper in a more competitive world requires the combined efforts of people in every sector of the economy, every part of the country.

[Translation]

From the day we took office, we invited Canadians to share in these efforts. We have benefited greatly from the advice and co-operation that we have received through our extensive consultations. We have also worked closely with provincial governments on a wide range of initiatives essential to Canada's future.

[English]

Through the policy course that we charted in 1984, this government embarked on a series of carefully planned actions to strengthen the fundamental components of economic growth and job creation.

We are staying the course because we know that our policies are working. We also know from the experience of the 1970s and early 1980s the approaches and policies that do not work.

We will continue to take actions requiring tough decisions, difficult adjustments and firm resolve. There are no short cuts to achieving Canada's economic potential.

We must continue to improve our ability to adapt, to seize the opportunities created by an ever-changing world.

In the decade to come we cannot be satisfied simply to do as well as other countries. We must continually strive to do better, to be the best.

For the next two weeks Canada and the world will witness many of the finest athletes competing in the Winter Olympics in Calgary. Their commitment and quest for excellence must be what we as a nation bring to the task of building our economy.

[Translation]

This commitment and this pursuit of excellence are essential to ensure an economic future that provides challenging opportunities for our children, jobs and economic security for all Canadians.

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Hear Hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order! Pursuant to orders made Friday, January 29, and Monday, February 8, 1988, the House will now revert to introduction of government Bills.

---

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1988-89

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-109, an Act to provide borrowing authority.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

---

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, at a time when the thoughts of Canadians are focused on Calgary and the Olympic Games, I understand why the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) preferred to move up the date for his Budget speech, because with his performance he would never have been able to compete with athletes from all over the world.

[English]

The Minister of Finance with this Budget could not even make the cut-off for the Calgary Olympics. Like a worn out athlete who is living in the past, all he can tell us about are his past glories of Lake Placid and Sarajevo. As to the future, no vision, only new taxes, $200 million in new sales taxes and $300 million in new gasoline taxes. If I were a Member on the Tory benches, I would—

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, we have listened to the speech of the Minister of Finance. May I have the same courtesy?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has the floor.

Mr. Garneau: This Budget does not say that in 1988 the Canadian people, on top of the half billion dollars of new taxes announced by the Minister of Finance today, will pay $870 million in taxes announced in December, on telecommunication. De-indexation of personal income tax will cost the Canadian taxpayer an additional three quarters of a billion dollars. The additional sales tax announced last December will be implemented this year. That will add another $60 million. This Budget, together with the news that was announced in December, will mean $2 billion of additional taxes for Canadians in 1988.

• (1720)

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, $200 million worth of new sales taxes, $300 million worth of excise tax on gasoline, plus the taxes announced last December, which are to come into effect this year—all this adds up to a total of $2 billion in new taxes announced by the Minister of Finance, in his December speech and in today's speech, for fiscal 1988.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance referred to his past achievements. He said everything was under control. But what is the reality?

[English]

What is the reality about the public finances today? The national debt has now reached $300 billion, an increase of 66 per cent since the Government took office on September 4, 1984. I should add that 40 per cent of the total national debt was brought in by the Government.

What about the deficit? I am surprised that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is playing with his credibility in that manner. He stated that he would hold the line and meet his target of $29.3 billion of deficit. Can you imagine that, Mr. Speaker? That is after six years of recovery—and I will quote the Minister in a moment—and after having increased taxes by $22 billion, and the Minister gave me proof that I was right when I was saying that because he stated that 80 per cent of the tax increase came from growth of the economy and 20 per cent came from increase of taxes. The 20 per cent corresponds to the total amount of taxes that I was talking about, $22 billion of new taxes. Six years of recovery, and the deficit is still around $30 billion. If I take for granted the statement made by the Bank of Montreal in a report published a few weeks ago, without the accounting tricks used by the Minister, the real deficit in this fiscal year will be between $32 billion and $33 billion. Canadians will remember.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, our national debt has increased by 66 per cent. Taxes have gone up by $22 billion. After six years of economic recovery, the deficit in real terms, if we ignore the Minister's sleight of hand, is more than $31 or $32 billion. I am convinced people in the business world will realize that the Minister's promises . . . I sometimes have the impression the Minister thinks that if he beats his chest and blows his own horn and keeps repeating everything is under control, people will start believing everything is under control, while nothing is further from the truth. Our public finances and the national debt are in a pitiful state.

Mr. Speaker, the real deficit is over $30 billion, our national debt has gone up and taxes keep going up as well. Nevertheless, not a word in the Minister's speech about how the Government intends to finance the announcements it has made in recent months. Where is the Government going to get $16 billion for its nuclear submarines? How is it going to finance research and development programs? How is it going to finance its five-year day-care program? How is it going to raise the $2.8 billion it has promised our farmers?

Mr. Speaker, I do not object to these programs, but if the Minister wants to maintain some credibility, he should provide some indications in his fiscal plan, as we know only what will happen during the first two years, and in some cases, we do not even have the total figures for the year 1990. We have no indications, Mr. Speaker, and I can understand why the deficit is not going down.

[English]

The much hoped for "death-bed repentance" by the Minister of Finance was nowhere to be seen in this Budget. Instead, this Minister and the Government have chosen to stand on their record of broken promises and the massive $22 billion increase in individual taxes on our children, our young adults, our families, and our senior citizens.

In short, the Minister of Finance and the Government have chosen to be judged on their record of broken promises and massive tax increases. Even at this eleventh hour—because it is an outgoing Government, and we will have an election sooner or later—Canadians had hoped that the Minister would reverse these massive, huge, unfair tax increases, but this was not to be.

Canadians had hoped that the Minister would finally respect his word, his solemn promise made in the House in 1984, only a few months before the general election in 1984 when he stated that a Tory Government would not increase taxes. A Tory Government would cut spending.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Did he say that?

Mr. Garneau: Yes, he said that in the House on behalf of the Government on March 6, 1984.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Who said that?

Mr. Garneau: The present Minister of Finance when he was sitting on this side of the House. Those words can be found in Hansard on March 6, 1984, a few months before the general election. He stated, "We would cut spending. We would not raise taxes, tax levels in Canada are already too high".

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Who said that?

Mr. Garneau: The present Minister of Finance made that promise on behalf of the Tories in 1984. After the election, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) repeated that. They are both sitting there on the pile of money that they have taken out of our pockets since they have been elected, $22 billion.

Taking into account tax reform, the last three Budgets, and not taking into account the tax increase in today's Budget, it will cost a one-income couple with two children $1,200 a year in additional taxes that have been imposed by this Minister who promised in the House in 1984 that he would not increase taxes, he would cut spending.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, do you have any idea how many taxes have been imposed? In giving us an empty Budget speech which shows only the good sides, the Minister has made a noteworthy omission. He forgot to list all the tax increases, and if I may, Mr. Speaker, I shall now do so very quickly. It could take a few minutes as the list is long.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Certainly! Take your time.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, the first tax increase was immediately after the Conservatives came into office in 1984: a 1 per cent increase of the sales tax, for $1 billion more. Then, there was a second sales tax increase of 1 per cent in 1986, for another $1 billion. Still in 1986, there was a third sales tax increase, for another $1 billion.

There was a first tax increase of 1 cent a litre on gasoline in 1985. This meant an increase of $450 million. Then, there was another 1 cent increase in 1985, for $450 million. We had a third 1 cent increase in 1987, for $450 million. In 1987, there was still another 1 cent increase, for another $450 million, which brings us to 4 cents, and we got another 1 cent increase today.

[English]

It is amazing, talking about the Olympic Games, that with that performance the Minister could not have made the cut-off for the Olympic Games. Perhaps he could have won one medal, the gold medal for the tax on gasoline. Five cents a litre means 23 cents a gallon. Even the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) would have to be satisfied with the bronze medal for trying to implement an 18-cent per gallon gas tax in 1979.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, there have been increases of the sales tax on candy and soft drinks and a new sales tax on snacks. We had a first increase of the excise tax on cigarettes in 1985 for $300 million and a second increase in 1986 for $156 million. In 1987, there was a third increase on tobacco for $70 million. By eliminating the tax credit for Registered Home Ownership Savings Plans, which helped Canadians to save to buy housing, the Government increased taxes by $105 million. Then there was the deindexation of the tax system.

Mr. Speaker, deindexation of the tax system increases taxes by $750 million a year, but the Minister has not said a word about it. There were also changes to the exemptions for spouses, a general surtax of 3 per cent, a temporary surtax of 5 and 10 per cent, an increase in the air transport tax, a 10 per cent tax on long distance calls, an increase of the tax on wallpaper, paint, and so on. Mr. Speaker, there is a whole series of taxes which the Minister forgot to mention.

Let us examine this additional tax on gasoline. If we look at the fiscal plan, we find on page 34 that the tax on gasoline will bring in about $500 million over the next two years. However, if we look at the impact of the trade agreement with the United States, the Minister will lose some $500 million in customs duties. In other words, what the Minister has taken away from us in customs duties is being billed to the consumer.

• (1730)

[English]

It is very clear on page 37 of The Fiscal Plan that the additional taxes on gasoline are to pay for the tariffs that will be taken out by this agreement with the United States. Now Canadian consumers will pay for the deal that is supposed to lower the price for consumers.

There was only one positive thing that I saw in all these papers. I am very pleased to say that finally the Minister of Finance is acknowledging that the economic recovery in Canada did not start with the Conservative Government.

I should like to quote from the Budget document entitled Canada's Economic Prospects: Looking Ahead to the 1990s. Here is what I found:

> Canada is now in its sixth year of economic expansion following the 1981-1982 recession.

Indeed it is gratifying to see that the Minister has recognized that Canada's economic recovery had commenced at least two years before under the previous Liberal administration, and that his Government has been carried along on the wave resulting from world-wide economic recovery. This is what he is saying in this document. I suggest that all Hon. Members read it because it is probably the only page where we can find truth in these documents. I thank the Minister for acknowledging that the Conservative Government was not responsible for Canada's economic recovery.

Aside from this quote which I found in the papers, I will have much more to say tomorrow. However, in a nutshell I would say that it is a non-budget. It is only preparation for an electoral campaign. The Minister gave us only one side of the coin.

Generally speaking the fiscal and budgetary policy of the Government will not solve the problem it was supposed to solve, contrary to what the Minister said. I would say that the general framework of the philosophy of the Government is a blueprint for a Conservative Canada—a Canada for the rich but not a Canada for the average Canadian, not a Canada for the poor; a Canada for the rich regions of the country, but not a Canada for the underdeveloped regions of the country; a Canada that may bring prosperity to a very few, but misery and poverty for many Canadians.

[Translation]

I therefore move, seconded by Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra):

That the debate be now adjourned.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to orders made Friday, January 29, and Monday, February 8, 1988, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 5.35 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, February 11, 1988

The House met at 11 a.m.

Prayers

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATIONS

PRESENTATION OF THE REPORT OF THE SIXTEENTH GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF AIPLF AT YAOUNDE, CAMEROUN

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 101, I have the honour to present to the House, in both official languages, the report of the Canadian section at the XVIth General Assembly of the AIPLF held at Yaoundé, Cameroun, from January 4 to January 10, 1988.

[Editors note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was informed earlier this day that there might be one report from a committee. I wonder if we could revert to committee reports if the Member involved comes into the Chamber a little late.

Mr. Speaker: We have not proceeded past that item yet, but I think we should move on.

* * *

[Translation]

PETITIONS

REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE GOVERNMENT ACTION ON SHELTER FOR HOMELESS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present petitions signed by 179 Canadian residents. They originated from Swift Current (Saskatchewan), New Westminster (British Columbia), Locust Hill (Ontario), Victoria (British Columbia), Saint-Eustache (Québec), Niagara Falls and Toronto (Ontario).

The undersigned deplore the fact that last year, over 100,000 persons were homeless in Canada; that the number of homeless young people, women and entire families is increasing steadily; that the number of affordable housing units is still dropping; and that the Government has yet to take actions to deal with these problems.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray Parliament to take immediate action to provide all Canadians with acceptable and satisfactory accomodation and to establish social reintegration programs to help these needy Canadians become part of our society again.

[English]

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of signatures on a petition addressed to this House concerning the trade deal between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President.

Since the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine Canada's ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States, and further denies Canada and Canadians the secure access to the U.S. market that was the key objective in the trade negotiations, the petitioners pray that Parliament be dissolved and the people of Canada be given the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

• (1110)

I have a second petition from a number of Canadians who argue the same point. They are requesting that Parliament be dissolved and that the people of Canada be allowed to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement with the United States during a national General Election.

PORNOGRAPHY—SUPPORT FOR BILL C-54

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present three petitions this morning. Two of them relate to Bill C-54, the anti-pornography legislation.

The first is from a number of residents of Swift Current, Saskatchewan, and the second from a number of residents of the Burstall, Mendham, Leader and Fox Valley districts of Saskatchewan. Both petitions support the Bill.

The petitioners express concerns that pressures exerted by various permissive minority groups might cause Parliament to water down and weaken the legislation. The petitioners call upon the Government to pass Bill C-54 without dilution in the belief that this Bill gives recognition to the inherent dignity of individuals, particularly women and young children.

OPPOSITION TO MANUFACTURE AND DISTRIBUTION OF FILM

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the third petition relates to a different topic. A number of residents of Gull Lake, Saskatchewan, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to urge the Government that the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) instruct the National Film Board to take action to have the National Film Board production The Kid Who Couldn't Miss removed from distribution because it defames without proof whatsoever Billy Bishop, VC, Canada's most highly decorated serviceman.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions to present on the question of trade. The first is from Toronto's Spadina region and it states that considering that the trade agreement between Canada and the United States would have a fundamental impact on Canada's economic, cultural and political independence and implies the loss of jobs in many sectors and regions, the petitioners request that the Parliament of Canada obtain a clear mandate from the Canadian people through a national debate on the alternatives available to Canada and that this debate result in a national election prior to the signing of such agreement.

I also have several petitions from Hodgeville, Swift Current and Maple Creek, Saskatchewan.

The petitioners appeal to the House and say that the Conservative Government has no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised, in the course of bilateral trade negotiations, that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised. The trade agreement which is being negotiated threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty and would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future. Therefore, they call on Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national General Election.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to table a petition that meets the requirements of Standing Order 106 and expresses a grievance that dozens of Canadians wish to bring to the attention of the House.

Whereas the Mulroney Government has sold out Canada without getting anything in return; Canadian industries have yet to be protected against U.S. trade laws; the United States has obtained everything it wanted in major sectors including agriculture, energy, the automobile industry, financial services and investment; the jobs of thousands of Canadians are threatened; the Conservative Government has made no provision for adjustment assistance for Canadian workers;

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray Parliament to condemn this Government for having signed the Mulroney-Reagan Trade Agreement.

[English]

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to present a petition on behalf of constituents of mine, residents of the City of Thunder Bay, who protest that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised, in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations, that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised, but the trade agreement negotiated by the Government actually threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians and to equalize opportunities between the regions.

Since the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the U.S., these petitioners call upon the House of Commons to dissolve and to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement in a national General Election.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition, pursuant to Standing Order 106, on behalf of a number of western Canadians who are of the opinion that the Conservative Government does not have a mandate from the people of Canada to conclude a trade deal with the United States.

They believe that Canadian sovereignty is certainly being jeopardized as a result of the trade deal. They also believe that the trade deal negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty since it removes the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership and also to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadian citizens.

Since they believe the trade agreement denies us secure access to the United States market, presumably our number one goal in the negotiations, they call upon Parliament to now dissolve to give the people of Canada an opportunity to either accept or reject this proposed trade deal during a national General Election.

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

---

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Wednesday, February 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, before starting my comments on last night's Budget Speech by the Minister of Finance and informing this House and the Canadian public of the views of the Official Opposition, I would like to take a few moments to recall what Canadians have been able to hear and read about the Budget through the various media. In fact, our electronic media have already qualified the Conservative Government's Budget as a billboard for election advertising.

One headline in the press, and I quote from today's Ottawa Citizen, was:

[English]

—"Wilson's numbers belie fiscal rhetoric".

[Translation]

The headline in Le Droit reads: "More promises than action". Another headline in the Ottawa Citizen was:

[English]

—"Budget full of noise but does nothing about deficit". The Montreal Gazette: "Consumer groups, gasoline retailers denounce penny-per-litre tax hike".

[Translation]

Le Droit: "$300 million in cutbacks". Montreal's La Presse: "Pumping taxes", a reference to the excise tax on gas we mentioned yesterday.

A column by Alain Dubuc, who always writes about economic and financial issues, appeared under the following title: "A statement of failure".

Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote the first few paragraphs of this article, where Mr. Dubuc says:

The Budget—Mr. Garneau

> Last night, the Minister of Finance, Michael Wilson, brought down his fourth Budget. Let's hope it will be his last. On his fourth time around, he dashed any lingering hopes that his Government would be able to deliver the budgetary goods. This harsh judgment is not based on the fact that yesterday's speech failed to contain any impressive initiatives. A Budget is not supposed to be a political and media event, especially when brought down barely two months after a major tax reform. So the Minister had nothing to say, but unfortunately, he had a great deal to hide!

One editorial in Le Devoir is headed: Budget bien fragile (A precarious Budget) and another editorial in Le Devoir: "Budget a general disappointment".

Mr. Speaker, budget speeches have always been a major political event in Canada, an event that attracts the interest of the media and of millions of Canadians. In two years, the present Minister of Finance has managed to make it a pedestrian exercise and to rob it of its true meaning.

• (1120)

[English]

Traditionally a budget speech has been an opportunity for the Government to explain its philosophy, and set out the main lines of its economic and financial policies, both nationally and internationally. Yet here we have a Minister of Finance who has succeeded in turning one of the most important events of our parliamentary life into a non-event, "full of sound and fury and signifying nothing". The Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance yesterday is little more than an accounting exercise, a complacent and self-serving document that fails to address any of the real problems which Canadians have to face today.

[Translation]

I consider this an insult to the millions of unemployed, of welfare recipients, of workers nearing retirement age who lose their jobs and of senior citizens who are now living in poverty and who were expecting the Minister of Finance to give them some hope, if not solutions, in his Budget.

The Minister of Finance is much more like an accountant trying to balance his budget than a manager of the Canadian economy with a vision of the future. Yet, the first responsibility of a government should be to govern the country and to prepare for the future; to ensure that our young people will have the education they need to face future difficulties; to guarantee that our workers have and will receive the training they need to adjust to their fast changing working environment; to ensure that our businesses have and will continue to have access to the financial services, the capital and the technology necessary to develop; and finally, to see to it that the poorest members of our society have and will continue to have enough money to live decently. A Minister of Finance must think about the needs of the economy, not only for the closing year, but also for coming years. This is where the Minister of Finance has failed miserably.

If there is one lesson to be learned from the market crash of last October, it is that our economies can no longer prosper in a profoundly unbalanced environment. For instance, the growth we witnessed in recent years was the result mostly of a strong consumer demand. The rate of savings in Canada and in the United States is among the lowest in the world. The current account of our balance of payments has shown record deficits in the last three years. Canada is the second most indebted country in the world after the United States. Our public and private external debt has reached $220 billion according to the C.D. Howe Institute. Our budgetary debt is now $300 billion, or nearly $12,000 for every Canadian man, woman and child. When the Conservatives came to power, this debt was only about $7,000 per capita. This means a 60 per cent increase in three and a half years under a Conservative Government, and this debt increases at an even faster pace than our economy.

That is the other side of the coin, the side the Minister of Finance refuses to see. He may have been able to turn a blind eye to these problems during the past three or four years, but he can no longer do so today. In his speech last night, the Minister of Finance totally ignored this new reality, and worse, he perpetuates the illusion by juggling the books and hiding the truth.

[English]

The Minister of Finance predicts a deficit of $29.3 billion for 1987/88, but does not say that that objective will be reached only due to accounting gimmicks which have little to do with the reality of the situation.

Last December the Bank of Montreal issued a report on business and had this to say about the public finances of Canada. The so-called progress in deficit reduction was but an illusion, the bank said. It concluded that the actual deficit for 1987/88 would be close to $4 billion above the level announced by the Minister, but due to accounting tricks, including accelerated remittance of source deductions and sales taxes, this did not happen. That statement was made by one of our largest financial institutions. So much for the Minister's credibility.

Moreover, this Budget, like any other, cannot be viewed in isolation. It must be assessed and evaluated in the context of the Government's previous budget initiatives and promises.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, that is why I want to repeat the promises made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to Canadians during the last election campaign. At the time, they both solemnly promised all Canadians they would reduce the deficit, not by increasing taxes but by cutting expenditures. And now, four years after this irresponsible promise, we are hit with the worse tax increase in Canadian history. The tax on gas rose by one cent per litre last night, which means that in three and a half years the Conservative Government has raised the excise tax on gas by five cents a litre.

This means twenty-three cents a gallon after three and a half years!

Mr. Speaker, on the basis of this record, the Minister of Finance, as I said yesterday, deserves a gold medal as the biggest "gas taxer" in Canada.

Yesterday, federal sales tax was raised for the fourth or fifth time, adding an additional cost of $200 million. And this is in addition to previous increases that raised federal sales tax from 9 to 12 per cent! The tax on tobacco and alcohol has been raised four times. And imagine, Mr. Speaker, a 10 per cent tax on every long distance call Canadian men and women will make this year! A 12 per cent tax will be levied on candy, snacks, soft drinks, paint and wallpaper. There has been a substantial increase in the tax on air travel. Family allowance payments have been partially deindexed and the same applies to child tax credits. Our income tax tables have been partially deindexed as well. As a result of these three decisions, the Conservative Government, without saying a word, has annually taken hundreds of millions of dollars out of the pockets of Canadian taxpayers.

In 1988, partial deindexation of our income tax tables will give the Minister of Finance, who did not even have to mention this in his speech, $750 million, three-quarters of one billion dollars.

Mr. Speaker, the same Minister of Finance who was not going to raise taxes—and he promised as much here in the House—started by introducing a temporary 3 per cent surtax, which became permanent in his Budget.

Mr. Speaker, I am skipping over a whole series of other tax changes, involving altogether $22 billion in tax increases over three and a half years, from a Minister who, when he was seeking the voters' trust, promised not to increase taxes. That is an unbelievable lie Canadians sadly remember.

What is the impact of those increases for the average family? Mr. Speaker, we have evaluated that the average family with two dependent children, with one breadwinner, an average family with $30,000 or $32,000 income that certainly is not extravagant. The additional cost of the new taxes to that family is $1,200 a year. That is $1,200 a year in new taxes imposed on the average family, coming from a Minister who promised not to raise taxes.

Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, the Minister in his statement yesterday brushed a picture that was too flattering for the Canadian economic situation, a rosy picture that was a far cry from the current reality.

[English]

In the following moments I intend to set out eight specific areas where there are concrete problems deserving concrete solutions. I want to talk about the conduct of Canada's monetary policy and interest rates, problems of regional development, poverty and, more particularly, the situation of the working poor, family benefits, Canada's demographic crisis, the environment, the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement, and Third World debt.

• (1130)

In each case the Minister should have outlined a detailed plan of action. In each case he failed to do so and I intend, in this speech, to give an indication of the approach a Liberal Government would take.

The first area where the Conservative Government should act immediately and in a positive fashion is interest rates. Even though I agree with the Governor of the Bank of Canada that inflation should not be given the chance to rekindle again, I nevertheless believe that conditions are favourable for some sort of reduction in interest rates.

However, if the Government strongly believes that the high interest rates policy of the Bank of Canada should be maintained—and it is a decision which the Minister seems to have taken—then it should concede that this policy has negative effects on the region,s where the major problem is not inflation but unemployment.

In that sense I would urge the Government of Canada to come up with a realistic national regional development strategy to compensate the regions that have been hurt by a monetary policy which may well suit western Canada but which is totally inadequate for the regions. In making this request I am reflecting the view of many business organizations and provincial Premiers as well as many Canadians.

Before addressing the regional development issue, let me explain why I think the Minister of Finance has some room to manoeuvre to reduce interest rates. In its prebudget brief to the Minister of Finance the Canadian Chamber of Commerce asked the Government to adjust its monetary and fiscal policies. In a period of anticipated slow growth, argued the Chamber of Commerce, it would be appropriate for the Government to put in place economic policies to act as counterweights to the effects of the slow-down in the rate of growth of the economy. Following the stock market crash this policy is needed even more. Action on the monetary front and, more precisely, a reduction in the interest rate is, in the current circumstances, appropriate.

Moreover, yesterday the Canadian Manufacturers Association added its voice to that of the Chamber of Commerce and argued that there is room now for a cut in interest rates.

[Translation]

Moreover, over the last weekend Quebec's Premier, Mr. Bourassa, also urged the Minister of Finance to reduce interest rates. Mr. Bourassa argued that the Canadian dollar's appreciation relative to the American dollar over these last few years increased the cost of our Canadian exports to the United States and made our firms less productive and less competitive. In my view, Mr. Speaker, all conditions are ripe for lowering interest rates. First, because most forecasting agencies, including the Economic Council of Canada, are expecting slow economic growth this year. Such a slowdown generally signals that a more expansionist economic policy is needed.

Moreover, the Canadian dollar gained some 9 cents relative to the American dollar over two years, partly because of increases in the relative interest rates. The short-term interest rate differential between Canada and the US currently is 2.75 per cent, that is the differential between Canadian and US interest rates, as compared to only 1.75 per cent a year ago, as pointed out by John Grundy in the Globe and Mail of January 30, 1988. By themselves, the higher interest rates and the Canadian dollar's appreciation wipe out any gains the Government boasted or hoped to make by eliminating tariffs between Canada and the United States, in addition to unnecessarily increasing the cost of housing for all Canadian homeowners and tenants.

In fact, the Canadian dollar's appreciation in two years has been higher than the tariff reductions negotiated under the trade agreement with the United States.

[English]

All these factors lead us to the conclusion that interest rates in Canada are unnecessarily high. Lowering the rates would not only prevent the economy from going into a slow-down but would encourage the creation of many new jobs. Moreover, it would help the Government fight its own deficit. The C.D. Howe Research Institute said last week that reducing the interest rate by 1 percentage point would slice between $2 billion and $3 billion off the deficit each year. I encourage the Government to live by Sir Winston Churchill's motto, "Action this day".

[Translation]

So much, Mr. Speaker, for one serious problem, namely the unwarranted relative increase in interest rates, which is costing the Treasury millions of dollars and which threatens to stifle the economic recovery which we have witnessed in the last six years, as the Minister of Finance indicated in his speech yesterday. We have had six years of economic growth which began well before the Conservatives came into power!

[English]

As I said earlier, if the Government does not want to have lower rates of interest, if the Government agrees with the policy of the Bank of Canada that inflation is the most serious problem at this time in Canada, then it should at least recognize that this unnecessarily high interest rate policy has negative effects on the regions by increasing unemployment to unbearable levels. If the Minister of Finance believes that the monetary policy is not an appropriate tool to help ease regional disparities, then he should compensate these regions by putting forward a real national strategy for regional development.

[Translation]

The problem of regional development is probably one of the most acute and difficult to solve now facing Canada, yet the Minister of Finance barely mentioned it during his speech yesterday. Mr. Speaker, the figures on regional disparities are quite alarming. Unemployment in Newfoundland, for instance, is now 17.4 per cent. After six years of economic recovery, it is still 17.4 per cent, or three times as high as in Ontario. The per capita income in New Brunswick is about 32 per cent lower than in Ontario. In 1987, Ontario, which includes about 38 per cent of Canada's manpower, obtained 45 per cent of new jobs. After six years of economic recovery in Canada and throughout the world, our unemployment rate has still not gone down to the 7.5 level it had reached before the economic recession which hit all industrialized countries in 1981-82.

Of all the major initiatives of the Government, not a single one will be able to reduce the gap between the have and the have-not provinces. The Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada appeared before the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs two weeks ago to say just that, and she stated that, contrary to what the Prime Minister had maintained to the effect that the trade agreement with the United States would solve the problem of regional disparities, that Newfoundland would become as rich as Ontario . . . Can you imagine, the Prime Minister of Canada actually said that! I know that you are not involved in partisan politics, Mr. Speaker, but it is quite surprising to hear a Prime Minister make such statements. The Economic Council of Canada Chairman had no choice but to say that the Prime Minister's statement was unfounded and that the trade agreement with the United States would not change the regional disparities afflicting Canada. I know that some of my colleagues, one in particular who sits very close to me, chaired the committee proceedings and vividly remembers Mrs. Maxwell's remarks . . .

And what about the quality of the new jobs created which the Minister of Finance is bragging about? A few months ago I was puzzled by some of the data released by Statistics Canada concerning the trends of Canada's labour force income. After scratching the surface I realized that, taking inflation into account and despite the self-congratulatory posture of the Government with respect to employment growth, the average income of Canadian workers had declined since 1984. The average income of Canadian workers went down 0.5 per cent in 1985, 1.3 per cent in 1986, and the preliminary indications we have point to a further drop in 1987. After four years the average take-home pay of Canadians will have shrunk by nearly 3 per cent. It may be true that the number of Canadians at work now is higher than it was in 1984, but the fact is that on average these workers earn less now than they did in 1984.

A fair number of new jobs created over the past few years are part-time minimum-wage jobs, the kind of work available in the service sector, employment offering minimal protection, few fringe benefits and very limited promotion opportunities.

The solution to the problem of regional development is certainly not an easy one and I realize it. There exists no miracle or overnight solution. But the Tory strategy which consists for all practical purposes in ignoring the problem will certainly settle nothing. It is not by announcing structures that the problem of Canadian men and women living in areas where the economic growth is stagnate will be solved. By ducking the problem of regional imbalance, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Government are consistently doing, the Government hopes that the problem will simply go away.

I, for one, believe that any solution with any chance of success should be based on the dynamic human resources of a community. In such a context, the Government would create an adequate infrastructure, a welcoming climate and an environment favourable to the flowering of regional initiatives.

The Government acts as an engine, a spark plug, and therefore should not hesitate to use its fiscal and budgetary capacities to help the underdeveloped regions of our country regain a more acceptable growth rate.

• (1140)

[English]

The example of New England is an inspiring one in this regard. It is an area which is not unlike our own Atlantic Provinces. In the 1970s new England lagged behind the rest of the United States in terms of job creation, investment and use of new technology. Now the situation is reversed. The tiny New England economy is booming. Why? It is because governments created the conditions in which entrepreneurs could flourish and because there has been a massive co-operative effort between New England's world class universities and research institutes, the Government and the private sector.

Perhaps the New England experience cannot be copied integrally in Canada, but I am sure we can draw some useful lessons from it. For instance, since the majority of businesses in the regions are small and medium sized businesses, and since one of the major problems of these businesses is to have access to capital at competitive conditions, why does the Government not ask the Federal Business Development Bank to provide more equity financing, and not put in place a program with financial institutions to reduce the administrative costs of loan applications for small businesses?

[Translation]

Or, in order to increase the flexibility of corporate operations, why does not the Government take steps to facilitate the participation of workers in corporate capital or profit sharing? These avant-garde measures would reflect the fact that employees of small and medium-size businesses feel deeply involved in the life and success of their respective businesses. Or why does not the Government regroup in a single centre all the services made available to small and medium-size businesses? It is the notion of a single service counter which is so often talked about but which never materializes.

About a year ago, the Federal Development Bank established a list of some 560 federal programs and sub-programs available to small businesses.

Mr. Speaker, how do you think a small business can find its way through this maze of 560 programs with any chance of success when it must knock on doors of between 25 and 30 different federal administration offices? Or in order to help corporations promote their own products on markets abroad, why does not the Government increase its support to the small and medium-size businesses in their efforts to sell abroad?

Indeed, how do you think small businesses in the Gaspé area and even in Montreal could make representations throughout the world to sell their products when their turnover is relatively low and their cash flow does not allow them to hire consultants to travel worldwide? It costs thousands of dollars to do marketing studies, to set up contacts, to publicize and market a product. However, in spite of this substantial potential, the Government does not seem interested in promoting foreign markets for small and medium size businesses.

Finally, why not generalize the experience of industrial incubators that enable small businesses to obtain expert low-cost advice? I have seen myself some experiences made with industrial incubators in the Mauricie area, in Shawinigan, Shawinigan-Sud and Grand-Mère and those projects can accomplish remarkable things. Their development only requires a limited assistance from the Government, some financial and technical assistance and I am convinced that it could contribute very positively to the development of our small and medium size businesses.

[English]

Let us look at one more very specific area. I was talking about regional development. If there is one decision made by the Government that will affect regional development it is flow-through shares. The Government is gradually eliminating the 33-1/3 per cent deduction for earned depletion allowance in the resource sector. This change, together with the new rules restricting the projects eligible for flow-through shares, and higher capital gains tax, will have dire consequences for the mining industry and the regions concerned. It is my belief that the present system of flow-through shares has considerably accelerated the exploration of our resources which I believe we all agree is a high risk activity.

In addition, it is a measure which has made it possible to finance the development of resource-rich regions which are generally in the remote areas, thus creating thousands of jobs. I urge the Minister to reconsider these ill-conceived changes to the flow-through shares program.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have had the opportunity, as you may have yourself, to visit regions like Northern Ontario, where I went with my collegue for Algoma (Mr. Foster), the area of Cochrane—Superior, as well as the area of Abitibi, of Val d'Or, and I am always amazed at seeing that Members of Parliament for that region do not protest more against the decisions taken by the Minister concerning the elimination of flow-through shares. The Val d'Or and Rouyn area which had a very high unemployment rate had seen that rate, particularly in Val d'Or, decrease from 20 to 5 per cent after the implementation of those flow-through shares which have allowed the development of mines and especially a strong expansion in mining exploration. As a result of the Minister's decisions for all intents and purposes flow-through shares were eliminated because by removing the accelerated depreciation from those shares, all profits of course, disappeared and the risk is now too big.

I hope that the Conservative Members from Abitibi, from the Northern regions, from Northern Manitoba and Northern Alberta, are going to get together not to fight the legislation on bilingualism but to fight this decision of the Minister which will result in job losses and a slowing down in economic development.

Mr. Speaker, in the area of regional development I have developed an approach combined with a whole set of measures, which could contribute to the development of small and medium-size businesses and also to regional development. These measures are certainly not outstanding they are not wonder solutions, but they reflect an approach which would bring about a long term solution to the problem of underemployment in remote areas.

These recommendations have one thing in common: they support the initiatives of the people willing to help themselves.

[English]

Where in the Budget Speech are the Government's new ideas? Where is its creativity? Why does it not have anything new to propose in terms of regional development except for expensive slush funds like the Tory Members are crying to get? I would like to move now to another subject.

• (1150)

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre: You had better.

An Hon. Member: The Liberals had a slush fund.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): You had better get off that subject.

Mr. Garneau: The Minister of Finance seems to be impressed with my last sentence, which means there is reality behind what I say. The Tories know they are going to be defeated, particularly when they see the results of the Gallup poll this morning; 41 per cent for the Liberals, 27 per cent for the Tories. This is why they are crying. They are crying for slush funds to buy their way to the election. The Minister of Finance has said he will not put it up front in his Budget. He would try to use the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Program and the Federal Economic Development Initiative in northern Ontario. He says: "I will not talk about it but you will get your slush fund".

Mr. Foster: Shame!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): You should know all about that. You are the expert.

Mr. Garneau: In my speech in reply to the Budget last year I described our country as a nation divided. I spoke of the poor, the unemployed and the homeless. I spoke of those who have lost hope, those who are locked out of our institutions. The picture has not improved. There are still 3.9 million Canadians who live below the poverty line. Twenty per cent of Canada's children are growing up poor. One hundred thousand Canadians are still homeless. That is the reality. There are still too many women who are poor or stuck in badly paid jobs. There are too many single parent families and too many native people who have not been given a fair deal. There are too many elderly who are suffering. There is too much substandard housing. That is also the reality.

I want to take this opportunity to address a problem that deserves our attention, that is the plight of the working poor. Contrary to what we think, the poor in Canada are not only the welfare recipients and the unemployed. Astonishingly, 57 percent of Canada's poor families earn an income. The Government cannot claim that the system works well when most of our poor work.

Let me illustrate with a concrete example. A family of four with one working adult earning $5 a hour for 40 hours a week, 52 weeks a year, has an annual income of $10,400 which is well below the poverty line for that particular family. It is in fact maybe 50 per cent below the poverty line. Where are the incentives for a welfare recipient to find a job in these circumstances when they know that they may lose additional benefits such as housing subsidies and dental care? According to some calculations, the benefits people lose by finding a job sometimes overweigh the salary they earn.

The answer to this problem is not to cut welfare benefits as the Conservative instinct dictates. It is to provide adequate incentives for those who can work, to work. That is why the Liberal Party proposes the application of the concept of a guaranteed annual income, a program of income supplementation for those who work but whose salaries are still below the poverty line. Canadians must be encouraged to work, not in a negative fashion by making unemployment and other benefits less attractive, but in a positive sense by ensuring that work can be obtained with adequate financial security and dignity.

Moreover, such an income supplementation program cannot succeed without a new national training program. As representatives from the Vancouver food bank told a Liberal task force on the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement: "If jobs, jobs, jobs are the issue, then training, training, training is the solution". This training program is not only needed because of the massive number of workers who will be affected by the Canada-U.S. trade agreement but also because of the new technological society in which we live.

Income support and training go hand in hand. Tax reform was an ideal opportunity to put in place some measures in this direction. Once again, this opportunity was missed. The Government should have acted. It cannot back away from its responsibilities.

There is a fourth area where there exists a number of serious problems, that is, family taxation. We had hoped that tax reform would have corrected some of the unfairness of previous Tory Budgets. However, Canadians have been bitterly disappointed. A week does not go by without there being a newspaper headline about the unfair taxes families are forced to pay. Sometimes we read that tax reform hurts families with many children. Sometimes it is families with average incomes that seem to be the target of this Tory Government fiscal policy. It has even been said that the taxation of families is discriminatory and that it grants deductions solely on the basis of a couple's marital status without due regard for the real cost of family life. The policies of this Government have often been described as anti-family. They deserve this label.

[Translation]

Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to give you an example of a flagrant inequity which could have been corrected by the Minister of Finance yesterday afternoon. I am referring to the taxation of middle income families. The night the tax reform documents were tabled, I was very surprised to find out that families earning $30,000 a year would be taxed at an effective rate greater than those making over $60,000 and $100,000 a year.

