A further two years went by and on January 19, 1987, just over a year ago, I again asked whether there was a project to replace the poultry barn at the Kentville, Nova Scotia Agriculture Research Centre; what was the status of the replacement; what amount had been budgeted; and what time it would be completed. Agriculture Canada's response was that it did not have a project to replace that poultry barn and that it was consulting. The Government is great at consulting; it does a lot of consulting. Agriculture Canada went on to say that the question of construction had not yet been decided. As to what amount would be budgeted, Agriculture Canada said that it was unknown at that time. As to when it would be completed, it said that that was also unknown at that time.

I raised a question with the Deputy Minister last spring. I asked him what good reinsurance was if lost buildings were never replaced, and what assurance did Atlantic Canada have that this particular centre of excellence would be brought back up to steam. He said that he would investigate, and I have since found out that there is an estimate of some $250,000 toward replacement of the barn.

Perhaps, if the research station could do the building itself, it could be replaced for that amount. However, if it follows the normal procedures it is required to follow, of having it put out to tender and using architectural services, the cost of the building would be somewhere in the area of $400,000.

I only raise this matter because the Government, which claims to be helping economic development in the Atlantic region, has sat on a particular project and has done nothing with it for almost four years. The research being done out of that station is very important. For instance, it does research of a very practical kind. One example would be long-term testing to see whether expensive feed additives are necessary to control disease in poultry, whether we have to put antibiotics into poultry feed at high costs, or whether in fact those antibiotics increase the growth and cost efficiency of poultry raising.

They appear to have found that if poultry are kept on balanced nutrition and in good, dry, and well-ventilated housing, those additives actually cost money and slow down the growth process, something which means hundreds of thousands of dollars not only to poultry producers in Atlantic Canada but to those in the rest of the country.

This kind of research is being held back because the Government refuses to give the funding which that particular part of Agriculture Canada needs in order to get the station back up to full steam.

I am very concerned when we are told that this $1 billion to be spread over five years will solve the problems of Atlantic Canada. It will actually be a massive cut-back in funds for economic development going into Atlantic Canada, and these funds will not even be aimed at assisting with research, development, and post-secondary education. These funds are being targeted through only one form of economic development. If it does not happen through business, these funds will not be any good. It is taking a unidimensional view of economic development. It is saying that there is no role for Government or community organizations to play in setting up infrastructures. It is saying that there is no role for educational and research institutions to play in the development of the region. I think it is a massive mistake. It is also saying that the only way to develop the region is to supply some funds to business which will therefore result in growth in Atlantic Canada.

It has been shown by previous government initiatives in other areas that heavy reliance on business to do the job which Government must do becomes unproductive. When there was an effort to change research and development from the Government to more of an initiative of business, research and development actually shrunk by the same amount as Government got out of it. Business in this country does not pick up in these areas. I am afraid that that is what will happen in the Atlantic area, and I am not sure that that great region of the country will be able to survive the policies of this Government.

I regret that the Government persists in cutting back the amount of funding and assistance to that very important region.

Mr. Harris: Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member's speech. I was glad to hear that the issue of regional development in Atlantic Canada is not confined to Members from Atlantic Canada.

Would the Hon. Member care to comment on a couple of references which have been made to the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency by a Minister of the Crown and by Senator Murray from the other place who is to be in charge of this agency as Minister?

The Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) is on record as having said that this agency is the last kick at the can for Atlantic Canada, that we have tried everything and this is the last chance for Atlantic Canada. This very phrase, "the last kick at the can", was echoed by Senator Murray when he was speaking before the Standing Committee on Regional Industrial Expansion. We should combine those comments with the references of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) when he introduced the Bill. He said that they have established a board of Atlantic Canadians, that the success of this plan was in the hands of Atlantic Canadians, and that we would have to wait four years or five years to see if it works.

As an Atlantic Canadian I find that very frightening. It seems to me that these remarks are not only a backing away but a frightful derogation of the responsibility of the central Government for the problems of Atlantic Canada and for the need for regional industrial expansion and development, particularly when the Economic Council of Canada indicates in a report that uneven regional and industrial expansion across the country is the most serious economic problem which we as a nation face.

I wonder whether the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), as a western Canadian, would care to comment on that. Does he feel some sympathy for the concern that central Canada is washing its hands of the Atlantic region?

• (1600)

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, as I had great difficulty understanding what the Minister meant when he said this was going to be the last kick at the can, or whatever the phrase was, I had this brief fleeting mental image of the Minister with a great mallet and chisel chopping through rock pushing the eastern part of the country out into the ocean, saying goodbye you are on your own. We don't want you anymore. Would the Minister, who I think comes from Atlantic Canada, perhaps be on the leading edge of the run into the ocean?

It distresses me to hear those kinds of comments from Ministers of the Government, whether this Government or previous Governments. Perhaps is distresses me more coming from a region that is not always considered to be the most wealthy part of the country. I think there has to be more sympathy from the rest of the country for regions experiencing problems, whether temporary or fairly long term.

I think the solution being offered in this Bill almost ensures that the region will fail the test. When you cut back the amount of funding going into the region, reduce the amount of assistance, it is almost certain to fail. When you have the kind of cut-backs that we have seen being applied against Atlantic Canadians, I think that Ministers are putting Atlantic Canadians to a very great test. I hope that there will be an opportunity for them to put their futures into the hands of some other group of politicians than the group on which they have been depending in the past.

[Translation]

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Business and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian and Northern Affairs)): Madam Speaker, it is a privilege to make a few comments in this House on Bill C-103, an Act to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, and also to answer a few questions that were raised in this debate. I will take this opportunity to review the comments heard during the consultation process that was held throughout Atlantic Canada, with a most enthusiastic level of participation.

The new agency reflects the Canadian Government's firm commitment to tackle the problem of economic growth in Atlantic Canada. Through the creation of a climate favourable to new investments, through regional participation in decision-making, through the implementation of initiatives that are well adjusted to the region, the agency intends to promote economic development in Atlantic Canada and more particularly to enhance employment opportunities and the growth of earned incomes in that region.

[English]

One need only look at the Speech from the Throne to see the firm commitment the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) gave to the spirit and importance of regional economic development in the regions of our country. We have distanced ourselves from the previous Government's approach and positioned ourselves as a Government which has a fresh and exciting vision. Our approach is a bold departure from the old government practice where most of the decisions affecting Atlantic Canada were made outside the region.

The Bill creates ACOA, an integral part of this Government's commitment to building a strong, economic climate in which there will be an increased number of permanent jobs and investment opportunities, a climate in which residents will be able to expect and benefit from the prospects of longer term development of our resources and from small and medium sized businesses.

This agency's primary objective is not to make up for disparities which exist, as previous Governments addressed, but to address the root causes of these disparities. It is for this reason the Prime Minister insisted the agency take a bottom-up approach. Local input and participation is the key to success and the bottom line for this Government.

When I refer to local input, I make specific reference to why it took 18 months, in the words of the Hon. Member for Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), to reinforce our commitment to consultation and the private sector. Before the agency was created on June 6, 1987, Dr. Donald Savoie, a prominent Acadian—an Atlantic Canadian and an expert on regional development—was specially appointed by the Prime Minister to consult with representatives from all sectors in Atlantic Canada. The result was an agency by Atlantic Canadians for Atlantic Canadians, an Atlantic Canadian product delivered where flexibility, sensitivity and political will gets things done. It wants to be a non-bureaucratic, action oriented, entrepreneurial answer to our problems. I should add that the consultations have not stopped.

Since early November, Madam Speaker, the agency has met with approximately 300 individuals during these Phase II consultation meetings. Another 12 meetings will be held over the next month, involving an additional 250 business and community leaders. Their contribution is paramount to the new generation of policy and program options for the agency. This new generation will elicit, cultivate and build on an entrepreneurial spirit in the private sector.

The agency, as you may know, has been given responsibility for all regional development programs related to Atlantic Canada. The expenditures committed to date show a considerable increase over expenditures in Atlantic Canada by the previous Government. The increase is well over 35 per cent in actual dollars.

In addition, the agency comes to us with an additional $1.05 billion over five years with which to address the needs of the region and sub regions of Atlantic Canada seriously. I must forcefully point out that the mood of Atlantic Canadians is not any longer that money is the answer to their problems. They had money thrown at them—they have had enough of that—and poured into the region in the past with no real intent or purpose being articulated, and worse, with no understanding as to what Atlantic Canadians wanted or needed.

Let us address once and for all the facts on funding. The previous speaker spoke about funding. The statements that have been made in the House are apparently based on budget papers which showed that spending under the economic and regional development envelope in 1987-88 would amount to $11.9 billion, a decline of $2.9 billion relative to the envelope total of $14.8 billion in 1984-85. A comparison of these two numbers has been incorrectly interpreted as a lowering of the Government's concern and commitment to regional development. That is not the case, Madam Speaker. The economic and regional development envelope includes many more activities than regional development per se. It includes the expenditures of some 11 departments and their related agencies.

Where declines have taken place, they reflect completion of infrastructure investments, more effective and less intrusive policy approaches; for example, our decision to scrap the flawed National Energy Program and the successful privatization efforts, such as the sale of Canadair and de Havilland. Members will remember what the New Democrats, our socialist friends, and the Liberals were saying about these privatizations, that they would be a disaster. On the contrary, they appear to be huge successes.

An examination of the changes in the level and composition of spending clearly reflects the Government's strong commitment to assisting regions, to regional development and to economic development priorities. By contrast, expenditures and regular DRIE and related programs are up some $120 million relative to 1984-85. More generally, expenditures by all federal departments and through federal-provincial regional development agreements—GDA and ERDA—in 1987-88 will be more than double the level in 1984-85. Yet opposition Members have the gall to come in this House and go to Atlantic Canada saying we are actually spending less in Atlantic Canada. Just in ERDA in 1987-88 we will spend double the amount spent in 1984-85.

I see Members on the other side nodding. They look at the figures but they cannot see them. We do not invent those figures. These are the facts. I see the Member from Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud). I heard him speak today. He should thank us. He should think about what the level of employment was when we took over from the Liberal Government. He must be honest enough to admit that the level of unemployment in the Province of New Brunswick has been drastically reduced in the last three years. That the Liberals do not like. You do not see the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent going to New Brunswick telling people that we have created more jobs there in the last three years. It is a good solid record.

There exists in Atlantic Canada today a new entrepreneurial spirit which is seeking access to capital as opposed to hand-outs. Remember the Liberal way of hand-outs? I think our entrepreneurs in Atlantic Canada are seeking access to capital, not hand-outs.

Going hand in hand with that spirit is the board of ACOA which is composed of experienced business and community leaders in the Atlantic region.

[Translation]

All are from the Atlantic region. They represent small businesses, business groups, labour groups and provincial governments. Those spokespersons also are active in their communities and have a very good knowledge of Atlantic Canada. The board, thanks to that balanced choice of representatives from a cross-section of the economy and from various backgrounds, ensures active and expert participation in the development and implementation of new programs. The board advises and guides the Minister in any decision involving the Agency's mandate, policies and options. Its influence already is clear through the contents of the Bill now before us and the programs that soon will be announced by the Minister in charge of the agency. That board has and always will have the Minister's ear.

[English]

I was most pleased to see and hear the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe endorse the basic principle of more autonomy and more decisions being taken in the region, as well as the principle of targeting the region to try and come to grips with regional development programs. I thank him for his strong endorsement of this government initiative.

The question of infrastructure was raised by the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey). Being a former cabinet Minister from the far north of Labrador, I am sure he has great passion for a commitment to the brick and mortar approach. However, I submit that that is not enough.

As in any organization, priorities had to be made and the emphasis was put on activities that can have the best possible economic return for the area.

However, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, Madam Speaker, would be ready to negotiate auxiliary agreements for the development of infrastructures under Economic and Regional Development Agreements, ERDA's. The funds invested in those new agreements, however, should not be taken from new funds allocated to the Agency but rather from departments with responsibility in that area, providing the provincial governments, agree on the need for such agreements.

[English]

My good friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie), is more than familiar with the details of regional development and regional disparities from the old days of DREE and DRIE. He said:

> The depth of the measures open to the new agency is more extensive than under DRIE, DREE, or other programs of the past.

This is not the superficial approach of the past. It is a flexible approach through the ACOA financing mechanism which will focus the resources of all departments of Government and all agencies as well as its own funding component on the problems in the area.

The agency does not vaguely refer to procurement, training and skill development, job creation, technology, and infrastructure development, as the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador indicated earlier. Its mandate is to be an advocate which will keep on top of the activities of all other federal departments and agencies. It will ensure that Atlantic Canada has a voice, and I assure you that it will not be too long before federal activity in Atlantic Canada is more unified, and joint action by the departments and agencies is commonplace.

[Translation]

Now, the Liberal doom and gloom merchants probably want Atlantic Canadians to remain where they kept them themselves for 20 years. I am not really surprised because their position on the agency is about the same as on the Free Trade Agreement. The Liberal Party, which was viewed in the past as the party of the future, has now become the party of the past; they want to turn back the clock and keep Atlantic Canada in the past. Well, I am sorry, but this Government has decided to propel Atlantic Canada into the 21st century and to promote progress and economic development. The Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) should listen to what his cousin, Mr. McKenna, the New Brunswick Premier, has to say about the Free Trade Agreement. If the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent has the development of the Atlantic region and of New Brunswick at heart, he should take lessons from Frank McKenna, the New Brunswick Premier, who has not been shortcircuited by the indefensible position taken by the Leader of the Opposition in telling Atlantic Canadians: You cannot make inroads on the American market, you cannot produce in the Atlantic region, you are not qualified to do so, you are small-time and we want to keep you that way. This is not what the Government is saying to Atlantic Canadians, and the agency is a tool which will allow our businessmen, our men, women and young people to create jobs and new wealth in Atlantic Canada, to go against the American market and do business with the rest of the country. The Liberals kept us in the dark for 20 years. This Government wants to bring Atlantic Canada out of the dark, but not by imposing made-in-Ottawa solutions. Certainly not! We are asking Atlantic Canadians to be the makers of their own development, and this is the purpose of the agency!

Madam Speaker, we have heard the Members opposite say that the Free Trade Agreement was sounding the death knell of regional development policies.

[English]

I hope the people of Atlantic Canada watch this Bill being debated in the House today. The free trade agreement allegedly prevents this Government from taking measures to ensure that we are able to fight regional disparity in the country. Yet the agreement has been signed by the Prime Minister and President Reagan and we are now introducing a Bill in the House to do just that, to equip Atlantic Canada with the tools of regional development. That is a unique approach. The people of Atlantic Canada will realize today that les prophètes de malheur in the Opposition were not telling the truth in Atlantic Canada when they told them that the free trade agreement would preclude regional development initiatives. Quite the contrary. This free trade agreement, coupled with the agencies, coupled with the entrepreneurial spirit of Atlantic Canada, will make that region a different place in the not too distant future.

I hope that Liberal Members of Parliament from Atlantic Canada, the very few from New Brunswick—one too many maybe—will put the best interests of Atlantic Canada ahead of their little political vision in the little federal Liberal Party. This represents the future of Atlantic Canada.

I was not in the House for all of the speeches but I looked at some of them and it is incredible that people would stand up and say some of the things they said. For example, the Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), in speaking to the House about the Bill, was talking about the question of funding. He said that we had cut $3 billion from regional development. I made the case earlier that this is totally, palpably, and blatantly false. We are spending more in Atlantic Canada.

When I hear the Liberals and NDP talking about economic development in Atlantic Canada only in terms of money, it tells me and Atlantic Canadians that theirs is the same old solution—throw money at the problem. They think that money solves everything. It has not in the past. We would rather rely on the industry of our people, on their talent and their entrepreneurial spirit. With that recipe and this Bill we shall succeed. I encourage all Members to support this Bill and vote in favour of its adoption.

Mr. Robichaud: Madam Speaker, I listened very carefully to the remarks of my colleague from New Brunswick. He did try to pat himself on the back, and when he says that the Government was firmly committed to take action in regional development matters, I have a question for him: Where was the Minister in the case of Moncton's CN shops? The agency we are talking about today will promote development, find new ways to create jobs, and protect existing jobs as well. I support that effort. But how can the people of New Brunswick be expected to believe the Minister's remarks are sincere when he never did stand up for the CN shop workers? I would remind him that when the Government took office in 1984 there were 1,200 workers in the Moncton shops. There are now 350 left. These 350 workers might hang on to their jobs if the Government were to tell CN to reconsider the matter and reorganize some of the Moncton shops facilities which do not exist anywhere else in the entire CN system. But where are they? How can they say they are committed to take action with respect to regional development and job creation?

Mr. Valcourt: Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to answer the question put by the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud). I may remind the Hon. Member that in my riding—the riding of Madawaska—Victoria in New Brunswick—Edmundston, the capital of the Madawaska Republic in New Brunswick, was a CN town. Before the previous Liberal Government cut CN jobs in Edmundston, 1,200 jobs at CN fed 1,200 families in this small town with a population of 15,000. In 1984, when I was elected by the people of Madawaska—Victoria to represent them here in Parliament, there were barely 150 jobs at CN in Edmundston, New Brunswick. As far as I know, Jean-Luc Pepin and the Liberal Party were responsible for that.

The federal Liberal Party doesn't have to tell us about cutbacks at CN.

Today, during Question Period, my colleague the Minister of State (Transport) (Mrs. Vézina) explained why CN had to cut jobs.

However, according to Jeannita Thériault in today's edition of Le Matin—I suggest the Hon. Member read this paper which is a major source of information—Paul Daigle, the director of the Moncton Industrial Development Agency, said that 1987 was one of the best years for Moncton's industrial development.

[English]

Moncton has never had a better year than 1987 in terms of industrial development. That is a fact. Opposition Members look only at one issue—CN. Business is booming in Moncton. Go see the young entrepreneurs in Moncton. Go see the investment by the private sector. Look at the jobs created in Moncton. That is a result of lower interest rates. It comes from consumer confidence and a better economic climate which has been brought about by the policies of the Government.

I remember Moncton in 1984 when the business people had to borrow money at 21 per cent. They were losing their houses. Mortgage rates were so high that people could not afford to pay the interest. People were going bankrupt in New Brunswick. It has all changed in three years and we can take the credit for that change. Members may laugh, but when the people in Moncton who is renewing their mortgages at 11 per cent, and hear the Liberals laugh at the misery imposed upon them by the previous Government, they will not forget.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, when the people of the Atlantic region look at the past three years and see what has happened and the hundreds and thousands of jobs that have been created, I am sure they will be confident the agency will be a major tool for their future development.

[English]

Mr. Comeau: Madam Speaker, we have been listening to the opposition Parties over the past two or three years telling us that the way to solve all problems is to throw money at them, that money will solve everything. That was the previous Government's way of doing things and is the only thing they know.

I am from Atlantic Canada. I have been talking to my constituents and they tell me that the solution is not to throw money at the problem, that the solution is in how you spend the money. The opposition Parties are worried that we have a winner on our hands with the ACOA. That is why they are laughing. You can hear them laughing in the background at some of the results we have achieved with our policies.

Did the Minister hear it said in Atlantic Canada that we should throw money at the problems? Was that the comment the Minister heard when he travelled around Atlantic Canada to find out what the business community and our constituents wanted? Did they want a continuation of the past hand-outs to our people?

Mr. Valcourt: Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question. It is a very important question because it points to a change of attitude in Atlantic Canada. Perhaps it is not so much a change of attitude as a better reading by the Government of the attitudes in Atlantic Canada. There is an editorial in the January 19 edition of The Times-Transcript. It is entitled "The Oliver Twist Syndrome". I do not know whether my hon. colleague has seen this. It states:

> —despite some slight reduction to date and a desire to reduce it further—the federal deficit is much greater than it was except for the last few years of the Liberals' incumbency.

People know about the Liberals' deficit. It goes on:

> $1.3 billion for R and D—"It's not enough." $7 billion for day care—"It's not enough."
> $1.1 billion in further assistance for Canadian farmers, bringing the total for 1988 to $3.2 billion—"It's not enough."
> The government is reforming the tax structure; some of the changes will mean more in the pockets of lower-income Canadians—"It's not enough."

• (1630)

He said:

> These are just examples in the past few weeks alone. The pattern has been increasingly evident of late.

The previous Government literally bankrupted the country. It threw money at the problems. As an Atlantic Canadian I will never suggest that the previous Liberal Government did not spend money in Atlantic Canada. They threw money at Atlantic Canada, but it was not directed at the causes or root of the problems.

That is what this agency is all about. It concerns a new approach to look at the causes of the problems in Atlantic Canada. One of the causes of the problems in Atlantic Canada is the weakness of the private sector base. Therefore, through the creation of new small and medium-sized businesses across Atlantic Canada we will create this private sector base, which will mean more capital in Atlantic Canada.

If we have more capital we will be better able to develop our economy.

[Translation]

And the Free Trade Agreement will come on top of that.

For instance, in the riding of the Hon. Member for Southwest Nova (Mr. Comeau) . . .

Mr. Rossi: He won't be there after the next election!

Mr. Valcourt: Yes, he will, because unlike the previous Member, the Hon. Member for Southwest Nova, an Acadian from Nova Scotia, realizes that the fisheries industry, for instance, is important to this area. Under the Free Trade Agreement, the people of Southwest Nova will be able to process their resources locally and export them to the United States duty free.

I fail to understand why people as intelligent as the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) are protesting against the Free Trade Agreement and the measures this Government is trying to take to revitalize the economy of Atlantic Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time allotted for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan).

[English]

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Madam Speaker, what the Minister has said is unmitigated nonsense. I have never heard the facts about Atlantic Canada so distorted or warped.

Certainly we could never accuse the present Government of throwing money at the problem because it has been taking money from Atlantic Canada. The Government attempts to suggest to Atlantic Canadians that it is improving their dignity by taking money from them since they do not really want this federal government money. It even suggests Atlantic Canadians will eventually be grateful for removing this money. That is absolutely insane politics on the part of the Conservative Government.

Not only will there be reduced funding as a result of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, as compared to the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, in the last three years the Government has also whittled away assistance for Atlantic Canada.

Furthermore, there is no mention of what will happen to the ERDA funds which have been put into Atlantic Canada once those projects are completed. The Minister responsible for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, the Senator in the other place, has stated that new money will be put into this agency. Clearly, it will not be new money because there has been no money from the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion because it overspent by $900,000 in the first three months since last spring. There has been a freeze on all spending since then, including spending in Atlantic Canada. The Government is attempting to make it until the end of the fiscal year without spending any money on economically underdeveloped areas in order to impress Canadians that it can achieve a reduced deficit. However, it is maintaining a low deficit on the backs of Canadians who need assistance while giving it to those Canadians who do not need government assistance, including the wealthy, the privileged and big businesses of this country.

The Minister talked about reduced unemployment. There is no possible way to determine the real unemployment rate according to government figures. First, it will not allow its Manpower employees and counsellors to talk to unemployed people. Anyone who is unemployed will now have to go to the job board and try to obtain whatever job is available. We will be unable to ascertain from the Manpower offices exactly who is unemployed.

The only statistics we have now are from unemployment insurance cheques and perhaps some surveys. We do not know the true unemployment figure as we were able to obtain from Manpower previously.

The Government has further distorted the picture. The Government states that unemployment has come down in my area of Cape Breton. I have already stated that Manpower is unable to get an accurate figure on the unemployment situation. Second, those who are retiring and are fortunate enough to obtain a pre-retirement package are leaving without their jobs being replaced. While that represents a reduction in unemployment, those jobs are not being filled and most of our young people must leave the area.

Furthermore, there have been severe reductions in employment in our major industries in Cape Breton. Cape Breton Development Corporation has reduced hundreds of jobs. Hundreds of jobs have been reduced in the Sydney Steel Corporation and there has been the closure of our two heavy water plants and a total of 700 jobs there, in spite of the fact that the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) assured us that such a closure would not take place until alternative employment was provided for those heavy water plant workers.

Those jobs were the kind of employment on which people could support families, perhaps buy a house and maybe send children to university. We have lost those jobs. In place of those jobs there is part time employment at fast food outlets or department stores. There is no assurance that these jobs will continue. There are no benefits with that employment. How can one possibly build a future on jobs like that? That is what is distorting the unemployment picture in Atlantic Canada, particularly in industrial Cape Breton.

The Minister said he wanted to help Moncton. How can Moncton be helped when the Government does away with 1,200 jobs? According to the Government, this new agency is a benefit to Moncton. If so, why has it taken so long to introduce this legislation? I suggest the reason is that the Government did not want to spend the money in Atlantic Canada. The President will be living in Halifax and commuting to Moncton. That is his commitment, to stay on the job. It is ludicrous and insulting to the people of Atlantic Canada.

Not only are we losing money in regional development, the Government is decimating the whole program of assisting Atlantic Canada. Look at the programs the Government has done away with. Look at RRAP, the program which was so important in helping housing in Atlantic Canada and other parts of this country. The Government reduced the budget down to nothing. Not only that, but it made the criteria so difficult that people who need assistance are not getting it. The communities are not able to get these funds to give to people to help them improve their homes. This affects older people, unemployed people, who want to stay in their own homes but cannot possibly fix their homes up to a state where those homes will be suitable for habitation. That fund does not exist any more so those houses are falling into disrepair and eventually will be unliveable. We have not heard the worst of that crisis yet. It has only been three years since this Government has been in office and this situation is going to accumulate and worsen and the housing problem in Atlantic Canada will be a very serious problem indeed.

What about the off oil program? We were able to help people to have alternative fuels. That was done away with. What about the Canadian Home Insulation Program? That program helped people with insulation to help them save energy costs. With respect to the money that was spent by the former Liberal Government on energy, the best bang for the buck was in conservation. We were able to replace 75 billion barrels of oil a year just through conservation alone. What about Small Craft Harbours Program? Where is the budget of the Small Craft Harbours program? Ask any fishermen in Atlantic Canada and they will say it does not exist any longer. The fishermen are told that if they want to do anything they must pay for it. It is absolutely insulting.

Where is the job development program? How are we going to help our communities if we do not have a job development program for those areas which do not have the jobs? It is easy to say, "Let the private sector do it", but how are the people going to eat until the private sector does do it? What are we going to do for those people in the meantime?

What this Government is doing is gradually whittling away the programs and assistance that were in place. I am not saying that we should just throw money away. That is not what I am saying at all. I would like to say that I feel this program is going to work. I hope, in spite of all that my common sense tells me, that it does work, but I am very leary and concerned that what I see does not indicate to me that this program is going to work. There is no commitment from this Government. The evidence is everywhere that there is no commitment from this Government.

In Cape Breton, for instance, we have the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation, which is an agency that has been trying to replace jobs in that area which are so badly needed. The board of Enterprise Cape Breton has from time to time passed resolutions whereby it has approved certain companies for funding to establish industries in Cape Breton, only to have those recommendations turned down by the internal board of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion in Ottawa. We cannot say that there is something about the air in Ottawa that makes them hate people from Atlantic Canada or makes them want to turn down job opportunities for people in Cape Breton, so what can we say? We are starting another board of directors in Moncton. Will that be any different? Are we just replacing one bureaucracy with another? This is no indication that anything is going to be changed. What we have done on top of everything else is politicized the board of directors that exists with the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, further deteriorating the belief of the people in Atlantic Canada that this agency really wants to do something.

The Minister responsible for this agency, the Minister in the other place, has said that this is the last kick at the can for Atlantic Canada, as if to say, "We just cannot be bothered with Atlantic Canada anymore. If they do not make it this time, it is their own fault. We are telling the people of Atlantic Canada that if it does not work, it is your fault, it is not the fault of this lovely, magnanimous, well-meaning Government". Who in Atlantic Canada is going to believe that nonsense? No one. Why is it the last kick at the can? Because the free trade agreement is going to put us into a situation where we are going to be inevitably drawn towards the United States. There is going to be an assimilation of the economy between Canada and the United States, and we are gradually going to get rid of regional development in this country. This Government is going to take it away from the people of Canada. There will be no regional assistance in Canada because the free trade agreement is not going to allow it.

The free trade agreement does not say we cannot have regional development and regional assistance, but if we do give it, it is countervailable, and that is the problem. So gradually regional development assistance is going to be whittled away by the free trade agreement.

We talked today about privatization. The Minister tells us that privatization has been most helpful for Canada. I wish Members in this House would ask the employees of Route Canada who have lost their jobs through closures. That is an example of privatization. The company was formerly called CN Express, then it was called CN Route. This Government and Canadian National decided they were going to put the workers of CN Route into a catch-22 situation. They were going to show them, especially those people in difficult regions with economic problems, such as my region of industrial Cape Breton. So they went to the workers and told them they were going to separate CN Route from the Canadian National system, all the Canadian National companies. They were told they had the choice of becoming a CN Route employee or a CN employee.

The workers knew at that time that this was a catch 22 situation and it was the beginning of the end for CN Route in Atlantic Canada, particularly in Cape Breton, but what could they do? They knew that CN Rail and the other CN companies may go on a little longer and, hopefully, go on a lot longer, but we have so many lay-offs in CN Rail and the other CN companies that there is a seniority list of people waiting to get back. If these people chose CN they would not have a job. If they stayed in CN Route they would at least have a job for what they believed would be a short period of time. That was in the fall of 1986. Sure enough, a short time later, the federal Government sold CN Route to Route Canada. The workers were told not to worry because Route Canada would protect them until June 1 and that the Government had this great package available for anyone who loses his or her job prior to June 1.

The people of Canada do not realize that the Government sold CN Route for about $23 million, and the land and rolling stock of CN Route alone is worth $80 million. That is incredible. The Government gave the new owners of CN Route a giveaway, and all that these guys had to do was to hold on to these employees until after the Government was able to launder its handling of the situation, so it thought, and the Government would then be away from the situation and any lay-offs would be the sole responsibility of the new company, Route Canada.

That is what happened. Route Canada kept the people on as a private company until after the period of qualification and assistance came to an end. Then, in November, came the lay-offs in a great many parts of this area. The terminal in Sydney was closed down. Not only was the terminal in Sydney closed down but other terminals in other parts of the country were closed down as well. The man who worked there had nothing—nothing.

• (1650)

One of the facets of the deal was that when the transfer took place from CN Route, which was the federal Crown corporation, to the private company of Route Canada, all the employees would be starting again. But now their seniority was gone. These people started out with nothing. They are people who had worked for federal Crown corporations in Sydney for as long as 46 years. They did not even have one year of seniority to fall back on when they were dismissed by this new private sector company.

That is the treatment that the Government is giving to people when it talks about the successes of privatization. What about the successes in terms of decency to Canadians, to people who have given the best part of their working lives to working for the country and in particular for a Crown corporation? It is disgraceful when something like this happens to any worker, but particularly disgraceful when it happens to someone who has been working for a Crown corporation such as CN Route in Sydney or CN in Moncton. There is a situation in existence here that is just not palatable to Atlantic Canadians.

I would now like to deal with the second part of the Bill. What we have here in the second part is that the Government will do away with the Industrial Development Division of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. It will form a new company called Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation. This is taking into consideration that there is already an economic development agency in Cape Breton called Enterprise Cape Breton. This new entity will be called Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation. There is not even any originality shown by giving it a separate name. The reason behind that is, of course, that these two will be merged together gradually and we will lose one of the two.

What is happening is that the Government is saying, "This is even better for you people in Cape Breton because it will be a separate Crown corporation". That means absolutely zilch. It is not better at all. When we had the Industrial Development Division of Devco we had, along with the coal division of Devco, a separate Crown corporation. We had a separate budget. Now we do not have that separate budget. Money will be allocated. How much will that money be? We do not know. We have no idea. No longer can we do funding for infrastructure. No longer will we be able to have a separate decision-making power in Cape Breton.

The President of Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation, just coincidentally, is also the President of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. So what the Government is saying to the poor souls of Cape Breton is that it is giving them something. It will give them a little part of an Act, a build up and some directors. It will let them think that they are big stuff. But when it comes right down to it, they do not get a thing. That is the way this Government is. Cape Bretoners or Atlantic Canadians—people anywhere in Canada—do not get a thing, especially if they need it.

Mr. O'Neil: Madam Speaker, as a Member from Cape Breton I disagree with much of what the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) has stated with respect to the Government's policies in regional development. When we talk about regional development it is important to acknowledge that national economic progress and national economic policies have a very significant impact on the people in the regions as well.

For example, when we talk about lower interest rates we cannot talk about it as if the people in our regions do not benefit from lower interest rates. The people that I represent and, indeed, the people represented by the Hon. Member are paying less for their homes because they are paying less interest on the money they have borrowed to buy those homes. They are paying less for their cars. They have more purchasing power. They benefit from the lower deficit and from the lower inflation rate. They are benefiting from the lower unemployment rate.

The Hon. Member from Cape Breton—The Sydneys did not concede that the unemployment rate in Nova Scotia today is below what the national unemployment rate was when we were elected in the fall of 1984. This means that there has been substantial progress in combating unemployment in the regions. In fact, national economic growth is being shared all across Canada.

In Cape Breton, in Atlantic Canada, we have policies today of decentralization and autonomy that are bringing about substantial economic progress. In Cape Breton alone the unemployment rate in the last 12 months has dropped from 21 per cent down to around 15 per cent or 16 per cent. Our Government has committed millions of dollars to the tourism sector, the fisheries sector, the agricultural sector and the manufacturing sector. In the riding which the Hon. Member represents there has been substantial progress in terms of economic growth with relation to industries being located in his riding, particularly in manufacturing. These are industries which could not be attracted and were not attracted during the last term of the previous Government.

Those are tangible results of the economic policies of the Government. These principles are being embodied and reflected in the Bill under discussion today. The Government's economic policies have worked at the national level. In Cape Breton we have progress on the regional level. In other regions there has been substantial economic progress as well. Our record is clear. In this Bill we see the Government moving on a broader scale to put in place the mechanisms that will help Atlantic Canadians achieve greater economic progress again.

Finally, I would like to say that any suggestion that the trade agreement somehow diminishes our ability as a country to continue our regional development policies and to expand them is just not founded on fact. In fact, the trade agreement is an instrument of regional development. The Atlantic Canadian fishery strongly supports the trade agreement with the United States because it means new and better opportunities and protection for existing opportunities that we enjoy in that fishery. The forestry sector of Nova Scotia has also supported the Canada-U.S. trade agreement because we will receive substantial benefits from this agreement.

Those who stand in opposition to this trade agreement stand in opposition to a very legitimate and real opportunity for Atlantic Canadians to take a fair and equitable place in the economic structure of Canada.

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Speaker, I would like to make a few remarks in reply to the comments of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil). I thought that he would come to a point, but obviously there was not one to come to as far as he was concerned. He does not have much to work with when we look at the Government's program for Atlantic Canada.

The Hon. Member talked about decentralization. Let me tell the House about decentralization. There were four decentralized offices of Income Security planned for Canada in 1984 when the Conservatives took office. Three went ahead in Tory ridings. One did not. That was the one planned for Cape Breton in Sydney, a riding which happened to be represented by a Liberal. This was just the first instance of blatant Tory patronage. What did that do for Cape Breton? It cost us 85 jobs. It cancelled the training for people who were already in training, some of whom were almost finished the training for this decentralized office. They were told that they could go to Timmins, Peterborough, or Chatham. That is what they were told. That is the feeling, caring Government that we have here today.

The Hon. Member talks about how the fishery is protected. A great deal was made about how the Government was able to secure for the fishermen and fish processors in Atlantic Canada that their provinces could state that they wanted the fish processed in their particular province rather than taken out. That was a big deal. What the Government did not say is that under the GATT the United States still has the power to challenge that ruling, if a particular province makes it. That completely negates the benefit given. The only reason the Americans gave us that benefit is that they knew they had another avenue under the GATT to be able to get at us. Not only are they devastating the economy of Atlantic Canada but they are insulting the intelligence of Atlantic Canadians.

Mr. Harris: I wish to ask the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) if he was paying attention to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt) when he was talking about the regional development programs, and whether or not he is aware that under the Atlantic groundfish countervail case the following programs were recognized as being countervailable. They include the investment tax credit, the Regional Development Incentives Program, the IRDP, the ARDA agreements, the P.E.I. Comprehensive Development Plan, the general development agreements and agreements under DRIE, the transitional payments under DRIE and the ERDA agreements. All of those programs, which are regional development programs, are countervailable.

The Hon. Member will know that that case has not been affected one iota by the agreement signed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and President Reagan on January 2, 1988. None of those programs have been protected from a countervail under the trade agreement. Despite the fact that this program is proceeding, it will not assist, and it will be subject to countervail if there is any export development or any complaint by Americans.

Mr. MacLellan: I would like to thank the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) for that question. I did say that regional development was going to be phased out. That is why the Minister responsible for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency could say that this was the last kick at the can for Atlantic Canada, because they are going to take the can away.

I did say that the regional development programs would be countervailable. I would like to thank the Hon. Member for St. John's East for elaborating and specifying more fully exactly what we are going to be losing as a result.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on some of the problems of Bill C-103, the creation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. Although it is well meant perhaps in certain ways, it certainly has some serious faults, which may or may not have been obvious to the Government when it drafted the Bill. Those problems need to be drawn to the attention of the Government, the House, and the public.

I am speaking on this Bill although I am not a representative in Parliament of an Atlantic constituency. I have not lived in the Atlantic area for any length of time whatever. I have visited friends there. I have visited in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and in Newfoundland. I hope to visit in Prince Edward Island. Most of my visiting was done before I became a Member of Parliament, but I hope to find time still to continue.

I am especially aware of a young couple in Newfoundland who settled there some years ago because they liked the people. They are hard working. They are raising a family and like to have the clean air for their children to grow in. I have met their neighbours who are also hard workers. The question arises in my mind, why do they get so little for their work compared to so many of my friends in central Canada?

From what I could see there and read about Newfoundland and other Atlantic provinces, I think the answer is that they do not have control of their resources. Unfortunately, this Bill seems designed not to give them any more control of their resources than they already have. I read, for example, that in the last century, in the 19th century, and in the century before, a great deal of the timber was cut to build wooden ships. Two-thirds of the capital from those ships did not stay in Newfoundland. It went to Britain, to the merchants in Britain who controlled the capital used to cut the wood and build the ships. In other words, the product of the work of those Newfoundland people did not, for the most part, stay in Newfoundland to help build the country; to build the infrastructure, to build the workshops, the schools, the roads, the things that would have enabled Newfoundland to develop better than it has and more prosperously.

There was a huge iron mine near where those people used to live.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): With all due respect, I must interrupt the Hon. Member.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, ATLANTIC CANADA, 1987

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Spadina.

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, what I was saying is that it seems that the problem with the people I have met in Newfoundland and other parts of Atlantic Canada is that their hard work does not produce what it should because they do not control many of the resources upon which they work.

I gave the example of the timber, and I was speaking of an example of iron—the huge old iron mine at Bell Island near where my friends used to live, which was once the biggest in North America. It was owned by the British. The money, the profits, went to Britain of course. Very little stayed in Newfoundland. It is now almost a ghost town with about a tenth of the population they had there. Even of that tenth about 90 per cent are unemployed.

There is the pulpwood industry in which the profits go mostly to central Canada where we are now. There is the Iron Ore Company of Canada and the Wabash Iron Company in Labrador in which the profits go to the United States.

I do not see anything in Bill C-103 that seems likely to change any of that. In fact, it is not clear really what would be the final result, so far as building up the country goes, from Bill C-103. The immediate result is said to be giving $200 million a year for five years to Atlantic Canada. However, to take that in context, we find that that is perhaps a fifth or less than a sixth of the money that has been taken out of Atlantic Canada at an annual rate.

What we see is that during the past three and a half years some billions of dollars has been pumped out of Atlantic Canada if we consider that the previous programs of assistance were part of the funding of that area. DRIE spending cuts—they cut $200 million in 1984, $100 million in 1985-86, and $150 million in 1986-87. In the regional development envelope there has been a total reduction of $2.89 billion between 1984 and 1987, and so on.

It is estimated that $1 billion to $1.5 billion a year was cut off from the funding that had been provided for Atlantic Canada. In its place only $200 million is being put back. When you take that all together, it is not a help, it is a cut. It is also a fact that the control of this spending will not be in Atlantic Canada. The controllers will not be Atlantic Canadians. The board may have Atlantic Canadians on it, but we are told by Senator Lowell Murray, the Minister responsible for this project, according to The Globe and Mail in June, that final decisions will be made by him in Ottawa. I am quoting here from The Globe and Mail for June 27, 1987: "Final decisions will be made by him in Ottawa. The ultimate responsibility rests with me and a Cabinet committee made up of six federal Ministers from the Atlantic region".

So much for decentralization. It is a bit like the Bank of Montreal when it puts a branch office in your neighborhood. That does not mean that your neighbourhood gets control of the Bank of Montreal; it means the Bank of Montreals gets further control of your neighbourhood. This does not mean decentralization in the sense of giving the decision-making power in Atlantic Canada; it means giving Atlantic Canada even less decision-making power than it might have had under the previous funding arrangements.

There is another very sad and very embarrassing aspect to this, Mr. Speaker. The rate at which Atlantic Canada has received assistance has been lower in many ways in many programs than the rate at which the rest of Atlantic Canada receives assistance. The one that embarrassed me particularly is that in Newfoundland there was a reduction of the GDA/ERDA program from $126 per person down to $80 per person, while in Ontario there was an increase from $2 to $3 per person. The increase is not big in Ontario, but Ontario is getting more from this program while Atlantic Canada is getting distinctly less under the same Government.

The essence of this program is the trickle-down theory. The money is to be given only to businesses, not to a municipality. Heavens, no. A municipality might be democratically controlled, it might be controlled by the people who live there and the municipality might use it to benefit the people who live there. It cannot go to municipalities. It cannot go to municipal infrastructure, which all the cities and all the provinces of Canada have said is needed. They have offered to go shares on a program with the federal Government. The federal Government has turned them down cold. None of this money will go to providing the necessary things to keep municipalities operating. Instead, the money will go to private business people. There is no criteria, no way of identifying the principles by which it will be given to this person, that person or another business, no criteria for the performance of the businesses. There will be a review five years down the road. Of course, the importance of five years is that it is after the next election.

The trickle-down theory, which has been used by this Government and by its predecessor Government, is very simple. The argument is that we pour money in at the top and some of it stays with the people at the top, some trickles down to the people in the middle and some trickles down to the people at the bottom. It sounds fine, unless you ask, where did the Government take that money from what it poured in at the top? We find over the years, and increasingly under this Government, that tax money which the Government poured in was taken from the people at the bottom. It was taken from the working people, the working poor, even from the unemployed of Canada, while some of the biggest corporations go absolutely tax free. The corporations, many of them, are not on the list when it comes to contributing the money, but they are sure there when it comes to taking the hand-outs.

So the story is that the Government takes the money from the people at the bottom, pours it in at the top and says "You lucky stiffs. If you live long enough, some of that money we took from you will come back to you. Smile". That is the trickle-down theory on which this program is built, Mr. Speaker. To add a little further injury, they are told, of course, that free trade will solve any problems that the rest of this program does not solve. Yet the same Government that is telling them that is the Government that has opened many of our industries, not just many of our industries but many of our services in Canada—unprecedented in international trade arrangements—are now open to American competition. For example, the Department of Supply and Services, which in 1984-85 spent $406 million in Atlantic Canada and is expected to spend a little more in the coming year, will be open to American suppliers who, with greater financial resources, may be able to undercut Canadian or Atlantic bidders. It is likely that they will get even less of that money than they have got in previous years.

What this program does is not to restore control to the people of Atlantic Canada over their own natural resources and over their own labour, which they must spend on what resources are available there, what this does is to remove control further away. The ultimate decisions, according to Senator Lowell Murray, will be made in Ottawa, except for those decisions which, according to the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal, will be made in the United States.

Mr. Heap: My colleague asks what is left. I can tell you there is not much left for the people in Atlantic Canada. If this is the way the country is to go, there will not be many people left in Atlantic Canada.

This is not a hand-out for poor relations in Atlantic Canada. We are not asking for a hand-out for poor relations in Atlantic Canada; we are asking for justice, justice in the sense that the people who live there, the people who were born there who have chosen to settle in there, who have put their bodies, their lives and their families there, those people should have a controlling voice in the disposal of their resources, whether it is timber, pulpwood, iron, other minerals, hydropower, tidal power or any other resource. They should have the controlling voice in the disposal of those resources, not the bureaucrats in Ottawa, not banks in New York City, but the people who live there. That is justice and that is what we are asking for.

My Party, the New Democratic Party, for example, would much rather see a Bill along the lines of what we have been advocating for over two years now. For example, we suggest a community initiative fund that would provide assistance to new co-operatives, community development corporations, small businesses and other community-based initiatives. We do not want to exclude individually privately owned businesses, and we do not want to exclude all the rest of the people, the big majority of the people, who have not been blessed with extra capital with which to be business people. We would also like to see a technological change fund to assist in private, public and co-operative ventures in high technology industries, in other words, target some of this money to where it can be viable in the modern economy. We would like to see a youth initiative fund which Canadian youth can draw on to encourage new initiatives. Again, the decision-making has to be local.

We would like to see a single industry community diversification fund to provide single industry communities with the means to explore diversification options. These towns, cities and villages in Atlantic Canada must be given back some of what belongs to them historically so that they can develop alternatives to the industries which are either exhausted because foreign entrepreneurs scooped out all the timber or scooped out all the metals, or else develop industries which would be more modern and more viable in the modern economy. As I said, there should be money for upgrading the municipal infrastructure, a thoroughly co-operative program between public representatives at all three levels of government.

Finally, there should be a decent housing program, not the kind that I saw when I was visiting Halifax. Under the then federal Government, not the present Government, disgustingly shoddy houses were built by an entrepreneur, I am sorry to say, from Toronto. If someone is going to cheat the people of Nova Scotia, why could it not at least be a Nova Scotian? I do not really know why CMHC let him do that, but what is most embarrassing and most unjust is that those people did not even get the chance to be cheated by a fellow Nova Scotian. They were cheated by someone from central Canada.

What we need at the very least is considerable amendment of this Bill so that it will be recast in the direction of putting control of this money into the hands of the people of Atlantic Canada. That is the first thing needed. The second thing is to restore at least that level of funding, $1 billion to $1.5 billion per year, which the Government took away in the last three years. If that were done, this Bill might well be worth passing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Belsher): Questions or comments.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, I am always interested to hear representatives of the NDP espouse their philosophical purity and idealism concerning regional and economic development. It is a bit like going to watch a Walt Disney fantasy movie; it is so far from realism.

The people of Atlantic Canada know very well that government monopolies do not yield the economic results they want. The NDP obsession with government control is not what the people of Atlantic Canada want. They want control themselves and through this agency they are going to get control over development initiatives in their region.

For the first time we are getting a development agency that will be outside the Ottawa bureaucracy. Its board will consist of Atlantic Canadians who will make decisions and bring forward programs in the interests of Atlantic Canadians. They will be formulated by Atlantic Canadians. That is what we are doing in this legislation.

It is very similar to what has been done in Cape Breton with Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation, an agency established by this Government, one which everyone who knows anything about regional development in Cape Breton will concede is a success.

The Hon. Member from Toronto spoke about the need for community initiative funds. There are such funds and they have been around for some time. There are federal-provincial agreements on technological development. There are special initiatives to involve youth. There are opportunities for single-industry towns to diversify their economies. However, I and the people I represent know that the answer to their problems lies in the provision of long-term meaningful employment.

In that respect the record of this Government is unequalled in recent years. The people of our region are gaining improved employment opportunities, yet the NDP is against the tax credits which are bringing investment to Cape Breton, for example, and yielding better economic opportunities. They do not like the philosophy. They do not like private business which is putting people to work in Cape Breton. They are against foreign investment unless it is billions of dollars going into Oshawa. It is all right for General Motors to put billions of dollars into Oshawa but do not let the foreign corporations put money in the regions. That is not good.

The NDP are against the Canada-U.S. trade agreement, which we believe will bring improved employment opportunities to the region. It is all right to have free trade in automobiles but not fish. Keep the Maritimers poor. Do not let them sell their fish freely into the U.S. It is all right for cars to go back and forth but not fish, or Christmas trees, or pulp and paper from Atlantic Canada. That is bad. Keep Atlantic Canadians poor.

However, we are going to tell them in Toronto that we are prepared to accept legislation which allows us to move forward and take our place in Canadian society. We are going to do it.

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, if I may try to find a question in that comment, it seems to me there are two. One is the question of control and the other is foreign money.

On the question of control, I noticed that Clause 20(1), which perhaps the Hon. Member who just spoke did not have the time to read, says:

> The Minister may make regulations
> (a) specifying programs and projects in addition to those referred to in paragraph 13(c)—

In other words, the Minister can say which programs will get the money. Or, for example, Clause 11(1):

> The Governor in Council shall appoint an officer to be the deputy of the Minister, who shall be called the President of the Agency—

Isn't that nice? He gets to be called President. In fact, he is the deputy of the Minister. In other words, the chief officer of the board is just an appointee of the Minister. The Minister can put him in or take him out. The Cabinet can put him in or take him out.

Senator Lowell Murray says he and six federal Ministers will be controlling this agency. I agree with the Hon. Member about the possible evils of what he calls monopolistic government control, but the trouble is the Bill he is supporting is doing that very thing. It is increasing the bureaucratic control of Atlantic Canada by people lodged in Ottawa, especially in the Cabinet. It does not increase control by the people of Atlantic Canada. It may be that some of the people in Ottawa who will exercise that control will be Ministers originating from Atlantic Canada, but the longer they stay in Ottawa, the less they are likely to remember where they came from. The Minister is primarily a member of a cabinet, and they are not in a position where they have to listen. They can listen if they wish but they are not in a position where they have to listen to the board members who live in Atlantic Canada.

The other point of the Hon. Member was the matter of foreign money. He has not given us the slightest hint, and there is nothing in this Bill that gives us the slightest hint that the Americans are waiting to pour money into Atlantic Canada, or the Germans, or the Japanese. Yes, Litton Systems did. Litton Systems has put some money in there after the Government of Nova Scotia gave it a $6 million subsidy. One of the richest corporations in the world with one of the worst anti-union records in the world, it sold out its civilian operations in order to concentrate on producing munitions. It is going to produce the means of death in Nova Scotia with a subsidy from the tax-paying people of Nova Scotia. They will pay $6 million in return for the creation of two or three hundred jobs. That is the only kind of money we hear of coming in to Atlantic Canada from these people with the billions and billions that the Hon. Member hungers for.

In fact, we in Canada have the resources to do the development ourselves if the Government would not give away those resources to the U.S.

Mr. Harris: Madam Speaker, I heard the Hon. Member from Cape Breton referring to the issue of decentralization. I wonder if the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) would comment on the following issue related to decentralization which I think bears some consideration.

If we use the civil service of the United States of America as a model, we see that in the United States of America about 12 per cent of the federal civil servants reside and work in Washington, D.C. In Canada 30 per cent of the federal civil servants reside in Ottawa. If the Government was serious about decentralization and having jobs throughout the country, it would not have an enormously large percentage of civil servants residing in the capital city. Those jobs and that work would be spread throughout the country, particularly in the regions of the country which fare so badly under the free enterprise system which requires government action and intervention to share the wealth. Would the Member like to comment on that?

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, having 30 per cent of the civil servants living here is obviously out of proportion. It is far too high, but a law which says that Senator Lowell Murray and six federal cabinet Ministers will be making, as he puts it, all the final decisions, means that they are not going to spend all their days doing that. They are going to have a new bunch of federal civil servants here in Ottawa, not living down there, but here in Ottawa, helping them to make those decisions to control the lives of the people in Nova Scotia. They are going to make it worse, not better.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to speak to Bill C-103 concerning the establishment of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. Well, we have been hearing about this agency for quite some time. It was in October 1986 that the Prime Minister announced his government's intention to take a different approach to regional development, that it would offer new programs. "A bold new approach", is the expression he used. We had not heard of it for quite some time, Madam Speaker, for you must realize that Atlantic Canadians had rejoiced following this announcement, because regional disparity is a problem which is not new in Atlantic Canada and several governments had done their utmost to try and reduce or eleminate all-together this disparity.

If some programs were successfull, others were not. But the efforts made in the past had nevertheless helped Atlantic Canadians improve their standard of living. In June, the government had announced the establishment of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. We had rejoiced again because we felt that it was finally coming. But nothing happened, except for those press releases put out by various ministers on behalf of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. But they referred only to existing programs and never mentionned the funds which would be allocated to this new agency. Yet, the government had emphasized that it would be spending $1.5 billion over the next five years. Although it was nothing to write home about, it was nevetheless enough to establish this agency immediately, without more ado. The government had claimed that this $1.5 billion would be new money on top of funds already allocated to various development programs.

We must wonder now whether this is altogether new money. This question has already been raised by several people, agencies and organizations in Atlantic Canada. When we consider in fact this amount, we realize that it is not much. We must realize that over the years, the amounts allocated to regional development programs had been reduced from $14.9 billion to $12 billion, a difference of $2.9 billion, almost $3 billion. That is on a national scale. The Atlantic region had been affected. As you know, Madam Speaker, whenever programs are cut, we, in Atlantic Canada, are the first to feel the pinch.

It goes without saying that we support the Government's decision to establish this agency. We want it to begin its operations right away. We wish it had begun a year ago. The government has waited until the Christmas break to introduce this legislation. Why did he wait so long? That is why we question the government's sincerity when dealing with regional development.

We were promised in 1986 there would be money, there would be a new approach but now, almost two years after, we are about ready. So much so that we were told: Hurry up, this must pass post haste. Yes, post haste because of the urgency. But we must also ask ourselves how come they suddenly realized this must pass? Had they done so earlier, we could have spent last year some $125 million, the allocation for 1987. This year there would be another $200 million. Questions must therefore be raised. We are in a hurry. But on the other hand we know there probably will be elections this year. So in fact there will be over $300 million to be distributed in Atlantic Canada. Not bad. Certainly not bad. And a lot is needed.

[English]

—$200 million for this years allocation and $125 million for last year. So there will be a lot of money available this year.

For that reason indeed I question this government's sincerity. And also for its lack of action on a matter that was very important for people in New Brunswick and even the whole Atlantic area.

Of course, Madam Speaker, you know what I am referring to. I am referring to the CN shops in Moncton. The new agency will have the mandate, a quite general one, to look for all sorts of ways to create new jobs, but also to create jobs that are there.

In 1984, there was in the CN shops in Moncton almost 1,200 workers who were earning good wages and enjoying good working conditions. But then the CN, in a rationalization effort, decided to shut down its Moncton shops.

I am not denying that in the overall system some degree of rationalization had be done, some adjustments had to be made. But I what I am questionning is the need for that adjustment to be made entirely at the expense of people in New Brunswick, more specifically in the Moncton area.

I am also questioning the sincerity of the Government's intentions with regard to regional development. At no point did a single minister feel the urge to make his voice heard in support of workers in our area. We were ballyhooed, we were given promises, we were misled, and finally we were told it is in the process and then, as it happened two weeks ago, the shops' shutdown was announced.

Again, it would not be too late to act, there are still 350 jobs left in Moncton. Those jobs could be saved, if only they wanted to act. Because the shops located in Moncton comprise two components, the foundry and the rail shop, that are found nowhere else in the CN facilities—nowhere else in Canada. Which means that when the shops will be closed, that work will have to be done elsewhere, the know-how will have to be found elsewhere. But we already have in Moncton the workers, the expertise and the facilities.

Why then is the Government not seeking to protect those jobs? There is nothing foolish in trying to protect the 350 jobs that are already in place. Why then is the Minister of Transport or the Prime Minister who has always said that he was taking particular interest in the frontier regions, why are they not doing anything? You would think the problem does not exist for them. Eight hundred of the 1,200 workers have already left and 350 more... It is as though it does not amount to anything, yet it is a hard blow for the Moncton region.

A moment ago the Minister said that the city of Moncton had experienced a very good year in 1987 and he mentioned Mr. Paul Daigle, whom I happen to know very well. Sure enough, the Moncton region did have a good year. Indeed I was listening to Mr. Daigle when he said that in spite of everything, in spite of the closing of the shops and the loss of 800 jobs in Moncton the region did manage to make some progress. But when the Minister said that this was due to programs set up by this Government, well I think that is stretching it a bit. Mr. Paul Daigle said during a radio interview that if indeed there had been some development in Moncton in 1987 it was because in 1983 and 1984 his own organization, the city of Moncton and other associations involved in economic development had estasblished a number of programs which made it possible to report a positive performance in 1987.

So the Government and the Ministers should not think that it was their own measures which made it possible for the people of New Brunswick and Moncton to enjoy a good year. The people themselves knew what to expect, so they set up programs designed to protect them against such things as the shops shutdown.

So I ask you, Madam Speaker, how the people of New Brunswick can possibly have faith in this Government when it says it will deal with regional development. And of course I say again that we want this agency to take action as soon as possible.

• (1750)

[English]

This agency has a very wide mandate. It will work through associations and through small business, which is all very good.

Also, an objective of this agency is to look at the transportation system in Atlantic Canada. I think this is very good, but I do not know to what extent the agency will be able to act. Right now, the transportation industry in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and all the Atlantic provinces is going through major changes. In the near future we will see a lot more goods being moved on rubber. The road system in the provinces will have to carry a lot more goods than it is presently carrying.

PETITIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty to table with the House two petitions signed by Canadians who would like to show their displeasure with the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal.

The petitioners say; whereas the Mulroney Government has sold out Canada and received nothing in return; whereas Canadian industries are still not protected from U.S. trade laws; whereas the United States obtained everything it wanted in all key sectors, especially agriculture, energy, auto trade, financial services and investment; and whereas thousands of Canadian jobs are threatened and the Conservative Government has not provided for any adjustment assistance for Canadian workers, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to denounce the Government for signing the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a large number of residents of Ontario and Saskatchewan with respect to the fact that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States. They note that this agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

They therefore call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

BRAINWASHING EXPERIMENTATION—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have a second group of petitions signed by many hundreds of concerned Canadians from across this land who note that the Canadian Government funded unethical brainwashing experiments by the late psychiatrist, D. Ewen Cameron, which were conducted at Allan Memorial Institute in Montreal in the 1950s and early 1960s.

They note that many Canadians were permanently damaged by these experiments that were inflicted upon them without their knowledge or consent, and that the Canadian Government has refused to accept any legal or moral responsibility to these Canadians, or offer any reparation.

They call upon Parliament to immediately release to the Canadians all the incriminating evidence it has to assist them in their lawsuit, to offer financial assistance and to publicly acknowledge its legal and moral responsibilities to these Canadians.

This is particularly significant in light of the important victory these people had in the federal district court in the United States just a couple of days ago, which I am sure all Canadians celebrate.

REQUEST TO AMEND THE LAW TO BRING AN END TO DISCRIMINATION ON THE BASIS OF SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Finally, Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which states that in October 1985, the Equality Rights Sub-committee of the Justice Committee tabled in the House of Commons a report which recommended amending the Canadian Human Rights Act to prohibit all discrimination based on sexual orientation, and that in March 1986, the government had accepted to amend the legislation accordingly.

The petitioners, therefore, ask Parliament and the government to finally respond to these major recommendations by amending the act to prohibit all discrimination based on sexual orientation.

INSTALLATION OF SUPPLEMENTARY SAFETY DEVICES IN AUTOMOBILES

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table 157 petitions signed by residents of Ste-Foy, Montreal, the Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic riding, Normandin, l'Ascension, Arvida, Dollard des Ormeaux in Quebec, as well as Ottawa, Summerside, P.E.I., Saskatchewan, Toronto and Almonte in Ontario.

These 157 petitions are in addition to the 31,288 others which I have already tabled in the House. The petitioners are aware that since 1974, the federal road safety regulations authorize the installation of inflatable airbags for passenger car drivers and that this device would reduce the number of deaths and serious injuries.

Therefore the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to make compulsory the installation of airbags for the protection of front seat passengers and adjustable shoulder-waist safety belts for back seat passengers.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure and indeed honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 from a number of constituents who are concerned that the Conservative Government does not have a mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a trade deal with the United States.

They believe that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised, in the course of negotiations that Canada would retain its sovereignty. They feel that it has now been compromised severely.

They also believe that the trade deal would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future, and thereby undermine Canada's ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

They also believe that it denies Canada the secure access to the American market which in fact was the key objective in the negotiations.

Since it also threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs, these petitioners are calling upon Parliament to dissolve now to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade deal in a national general election.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of Canadians who are concerned about the decision of the Government to proceed with the trade deal. They believe that this was not a mandate that the Government received in the last federal election. Indeed, the Government campaigned on an opposite position.

They call upon the Canadian Government to have an election and they call upon Parliament to do all it can to expedite an election prior to this agreement becoming final.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I also have the honour to table with the House a number of petitions that have been certified pursuant to Standing Order 106. The petitioners are concerned that the Conservative Government has no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement or any similar agreement with the United States.

Since the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised; since the Mulroney-Reagan deal which has now been signed makes it clear that Canadian sovereignty is at risk; and since the agreement not only denies Canada secure access to the United States market, which was a key objective in the negotiations, but threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs, the petitioners call upon the House to take whatever opportunities there are to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national election.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour and duty to present a petition to the House. This petition is signed by senior members of Royal Canadian Legion Branch 129 (Slovak), and Royal Canadian Legion Branch 113 (Ortona) in Thunder Bay.

These individuals who fought for our country argue that the Mulroney-Reagan deal threatens the very fabric of political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, develop energy resources in the best interest of Canadians and equalize opportunities between regions.

They end the petition by calling upon the House to dissolve and allow the people of Canada to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition from citizens of Canada. This petition is certified correct as to form and content pursuant to Standing Order 106.

These petitioners state that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States.

They also state that the trade agreement negotiated by the Conservative Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, develop Canadian energy resources in the best interest of Canada or to equalize opportunities between regions.

They also state that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and would undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

The petitioners ask that Parliament dissolve and allow the people of Canada to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

[English]

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have on the Order Paper Question No. 219 which was submitted on November 16 last year. Pursuant to the Standing Orders, it should have been answered within 45 days, by December 31. It has now been some 66 days since that question was submitted. Will the Parliamentary Secretary look into the matter and hopefully come back with an answer in the near future? It is a very serious issue involving the Correctional Service of Canada.

• (1120)

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I have already looked into that specific question, and all the questions that are a bit slow. The general reason is that the answers are made available at a time when the Minister is not, and that is the general difficulty for most of the questions which are a little slow in being answered. We have improved the system, as I said the other day, by at least 20 per cent in terms of the speed of this Government. Our record is substantially different from previous governments.

In terms of the Hon. Member's specific inquiry, I think he can anticipate that very early next week the answer will be forthcoming.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point. I have risen a number of times over the last little while about the growing number of questions which are left unanswered. Since the Parliamentary Secretary has just indicated he has looked into a number of questions which have not been answered according to the requirements of the Standing Orders of the House, can he tell us how many questions have not been answered according to that requirement? When is the Government going to live up to the Standing Orders that this House passed with the agreement of all Hon. Members?

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, at the beginning of this week I think there were probably 12 questions out of about 239 which were a little slow. By the end of this week I think that number will be considerably reduced.

As I said, we are attempting to get on it. It is a little difficult sometimes over the Christmas period as well. Not only do Members of Parliament go back to their ridings but those in the bureaucracy who serve us so well frequently use that time as holiday time. We may be a little slow with the remaining 12 questions, slower than I would like to see. However, the record is now much better than 95 per cent.

Mr. Murphy: The Parliamentary Secretary indicated in his answer that the delay was because of Christmas holidays. Presumably, Christmas being almost a month ago, certain answers were not delivered on time as required by the Standing Orders. I would hope that the Parliamentary Secretary would recognize that it is now January 21. Presumably the bureaucrats and cabinet Ministers have had more than ample time to provide answers which are required by the Standing Orders.

We do not want to make this into a major issue, but we do have a question of privilege if the Government is not going to answer questions as required by the Standing Orders which, I repeat, were passed unanimously by all Members of this House, including the Cabinet.

It is a fundamental requirement of this House that those questions which are designated questions—and not all questions on the Order Paper are designated as such—be answered within that time. When questions are designated, Members have a right which is guaranteed by our Standing Orders to have those questions answered within the required time limit. I want an assurance from the Parliamentary Secretary that the Government, whether it be during Christmas, Easter, the February break or the summer break, will live up to the requirements of the Standing Orders.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I do not hesitate for a moment to give the assurance to the Hon. Member that the Government is trying. As we look into individual questions, we find that some, for instance, involve all Departments of Government, while others touch on client privilege and the information provisions in our law. Therefore, sometimes things are of sufficient complexity, involving sufficient numbers of people, that in perpetuity it may indeed be difficult on occasion to live within the 45 days. However, we are pushing. We are doing the best we can. I can certainly give the Hon. Member the assurance that that indeed is true. I think very few questions will be outstanding under the priority category by next week.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, there have been some informal inquiries made regarding the enabling legislation for the trade deal. I wonder if I might ask the Parliamentary Secretary, in a sense in a formal way—I do not suppose he is able to report today but perhaps at some early date—to give some indication to the House and to the people of Canada, who are very interested in this major issue, when we can expect to see the beginning of the enabling legislation tabled in this House?

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, as the House Leader for the New Democratic Party knows, there have been discussions on this issue. The normal time to ask a House Business question in terms of the appearance of legislation and discussion of legislation is generally after the Question Period on Thursday. Today happens to be Thursday. I expect that the House Leaders will rise in their places and ask the question of the Government House Leader somewhere around three o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I do not want to prolong this, but I want to make it clear to you, Madam Speaker, that I was not asking whether the enabling legislation was coming up this week or next week, because that is the normal Thursday question, to get an idea about the following few days. I am simply seeking some indication from the Parliamentary Secretary, or from perhaps the Government House Leader, at some early time, of when we might expect the enabling legislation to be tabled, and by that I mean this month or next month or the following month? It is an issue in which Canadians are interested, and at the moment there seems to be no indication when that legislation will be tabled.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I realize the Hon. Member is very much interested, as are all Canadians, in this question. However, I do not think that at this time in the agenda it is the proper time to ask that type of question.

PRIVILEGE

NOTICE OF INTENTION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): I should like to give notice to the Chair that we may decide to raise a question of privilege concerning the remarks made by the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) as recorded on page 12097 of yesterday's Hansard. In answer to a question from the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) about the recycling of Government information pamphlets and the alleged careless expenditure of funds, the Minister is reported to have said:

> Mr. Speaker, we would like to dispense with this tissue of lies—

Madam Speaker, there is no need for me to remind you that the words "tissue of lies" are unparliamentary. This kind of language is unacceptable. I do not see the Minister or my colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell in the House today, but I should think that as Liberal Party whip I must raise the matter at this time and give notice to the Chair. As a Member, I object to this kind of language being recorded in Hansard, and I should like to have it deleted.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member is giving the Chair verbal notice of his intention to rise on a question of privilege at the appropriate time. If I may, I should remind him that, according to our procedure and Standing Orders, he should also put the matter in writing. Let us get back to routine proceedings.

Shall all remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, ATLANTIC CANADA, 1987

The House resumed from Wednesday, January 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunties Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate, and as we said yesterday, the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent has two minutes left to complete his speech, after which there will be a ten-minute period for questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Madam Speaker, yesterday, when the House interrupted its proceedings, I was talking about the need for improving the road system in the Maritimes or, I should say, the Atlantic provinces.

[English]

There is a need. It has been shown that the road system in the Atlantic area is deteriorating at a very alarming rate. That is because it was not made to support the kind of traffic which is being transported over that surface. Of course, it would be one of the objectives of the agency to look at the infrastructure of the transportation system.

The Savoie Report made the recommendation that the agency look at transportation policies and promote efficient modes of transportation. As you know, Madam Speaker, our transportation system is one of the prime components of a sound regional development program. The agency will not be able to undertake with its own moneys—the $1.05 billion over five years—the type of work that would have to be done. However, it could recommend to the Government that this work be done under IRDA agreements. I hope that the agency will look into this matter.

[Translation]

In concluding, Madam Speaker, I am confident that if the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is given a certain autonomy by the Government, the kind of autonomy recommended by the Savoie Report, the agency will undoubtedly have a positive impact on economic development in Atlantic Canada. However, if the agency were to become just another level of government bureaucracy, and the Savoie Report warns us of this danger, I believe it would lose much of its effectiveness and a great deal of its credibility.

[English]

Mr. Harris: Madam. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member would care to comment on the attitude that seems to have been expressed by the Government toward the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and, indeed, toward the problems of Atlantic Canada. The Minister responsible for ACOA, who is a Senator, seems to have agreed with another Minister, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes), that this agency and the $200 million per year being poured into it is the last kick at the can for Atlantic Canada. It seems that in having this attitude toward Atlantic Canada the Government has taken it off the national priority list, which is where it should be.

• (1130)

The Government fails to recognize that the Economic Council of Canada has said that the most serious economic problem for the country in the coming years will be that of uneven regional development. Will the Hon. Member comment on that aspect of this matter? The comments of the Minister responsible for the agency, who agreed with and, in fact, quoted the Minister of Public Works, do not seem to indicate a serious attitude—that we will put in money and wait for four or five years, as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) said, and see if it will work. The amount of money committed to this agency seems to indicate an attitude on the part of the Government that it does not take this matter seriously at all.

Mr. Robichaud: Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) for his question. I share his concerns, and I think it is too bad a Minister should have made these comments because the Atlantic region has been living with the problem of regional disparity for a long time. We have a long history of trying to reduce the disparity between the Atlantic region and the central, more developed part of Canada. We have tried a number of solutions. In some cases we have been successful, in others perhaps not as successful.

To say that the Agency is our last chance and to put this as a kind of ultimatum to the people of Atlantic Canada, meaning: We are going to give you the money, we are going to give you a number of resources, including this agency, and if you don't make it this time, that's it. I find it very difficult to accept this attitude on the part of the Government.

Madam Speaker, I sincerely hope the agency will find ways to help the people of Atlantic Canada, not as a last resort but as an agency that for a certain period of time will support efforts to enhance regional and economic development in the Atlantic region.

[English]

Mr. Merrithew: Madam Speaker, I very much regret that I was not present in the Chamber to hear all of the speech made by the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud). However, I had a chance to listen to his comments this morning in which he mentioned something with respect to the responsibility of building roads. We all agree that roads in Atlantic Canada have not maintained the same standards that are available in other parts of the country. Will the Hon. Member acknowledge that, generally speaking, the construction of roads is the responsibility of the provincial Government?

Is the Hon. Member aware that the Government negotiated with the previous Government of New Brunswick the largest highways agreement in the history of that province? In fact, it is one of the largest highways agreements in the history of Canada. It is an agreement involving $145 million which will enable the building of all sorts of highway infrastructure in various parts of the province. Is the Hon. Member aware of that particular fact?

Mr. Robichaud: Madam Speaker, I realize that highways and road construction are a provincial responsibility, but it is also a fact that, from time to time, agreements are signed with the provinces for the purpose of improving the road system.

The Minister will also understand why New Brunswick has to improve its road system because the Trans-Canada Highway in New Brunswick is a corridor to the other Atlantic provinces. In this particular case, it would be unfair to ask the province of New Brunswick to finance the full cost of building a new Trans-Canada Highway. The Minister said he signed an agreement worth about $140 million. He must know that according to estimates for the construction of a new section of the Trans-Canada Highway, the cost would be between $1.2 billion and $1.4 billion. I think it would be unfair to make the people of New Brunswick absorb the full cost of this project. The federal Government should use agreements to help New Brunswick develop a system that would benefit the other Atlantic Provinces as well.

[English]

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Madam Speaker, I am delighted to take part in the debate on second reading of Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts. I am delighted for several reasons. Number one, this is one of the first pieces of legislation in our new year, 1988. We think in Atlantic Canada, and we think as a Government of Canada, that this is an immensely important piece of legislation, and one which will undoubtedly have major benefits for the people of Atlantic Canada.

In introducing my comments, perhaps as many other people in the House, I have had some considerable experience politically in my 17 years in public life. I have had the pleasure, the opportunity, and the privilege to serve municipally for 12 years in the provincial Government of New Brunswick, with a good deal of that time as a Minister, and of course to serve in the Government of Canada. It is a rare privilege indeed.

Throughout that particular time I have followed with a great deal of interest developments in terms of the governments at all levels attempting to deal with the issue of regional disparities and the inequality of opportunities we have in Canada. I have lived with that. As a Minister, I was responsible for economic development in the province for some six years, so I have had to deal with a good number of different governments and different Ministers, and a good number of different measures and initiatives by governments to try to redress those anomalies.

I have lived through and watched as successive governments have indicated and introduced all sorts of agencies, programs, initiatives, and Acts to redress regional disparities. I remember very well the Atlantic Development Board. It did certain things for our region. I remember the ARDAs, the Agriculture Rural Development Agreements in the 1960s. I remember very well in politics when DREE was established. That was supposed to be the panacea for addressing regional development. That was to be the one government Department that was solely responsible for addressing regional disparities.

I was the Minister of Commerce and Development in the province when in 1981 then Prime Minister Trudeau announced, with some fanfare, that we no longer had a need for DREE and that every government department was now going to be responsible for regional development. They were themselves going to monitor and assist in dealing with regional development issues in those provinces and regions of Canada where disparities existed.

At that time I did not make a political condemnation of that particular statement. I said that I would wait. Ironically, I would have to say in retrospect, and historically, that what we expected at the time, to have every government department interested in regional development, simply did not happen to the extent that it should.

I have signed many GDAs, general development agreements, in history. I have signed many of the sub-agreements under the ERDA process. I have had the pleasure of doing that both as a provincial Minister and as a federal Minister. I can remember very well the RDIA, the Regional Development Incentives Act when it was introduced, and subsequently a program under that Act, IRDP. I have worked with it. I have worked with companies, institutions, and organizations that have applied for assistance under that particular Act.

Over the years I have seen many initiatives tried that to some extent have worked. I know that there are some people in Canada who say that nothing will work in Atlantic Canada. Having been close to it, I absolutely disagree with that. To a certain degree every one of those particular initiatives has worked. In some way or another they have all closed the gap in terms of opportunities and earned incomes in my region of Canada. To some extent we can take credit in governments for having achieved some measure of success, and I will deal with that later.

I was most delighted when on October 1, 1986 our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) put in the Throne Speech a statement which I understand he drafted himself. It shows the type of interest and commitment that our Prime Minister has taken in regional development when he put in the Throne Speech the following comment:

> It is time to consider new approaches, to examine how our considerable and growing support for Canada's regions can be used more efficiently, more effectively and with greater sensitivity to local conditions and opportunities.

Out of that this piece of legislation grew. What we are dealing with today in the establishment of ACOA or the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is, in my view, most welcome. It is a new and daring change from previous initiatives, and I think it will work.

This legislation we are dealing with today gives certain powers over the IRDP, which is still in effect; it gives powers over the Atlantic Enterprise Program. I happened to be there when one of the previous Ministers of DRIE made that announcement publicly in Moncton, New Brunswick. I supported it and helped draft and make changes to it, and I think it is an excellent program. It will undertake the Enterprise Cape Breton Program, and of course the ERDAs and successive agreements to the ERDAs. The program that has been passed over to this particular agency is challenging. It will be useful, and in the long run I think it will be very workable and useful for Atlantic Canada.

This legislation is based on six major principles, the first being the principle of consultation. We have done that more than any Government in the history of this country. We have done it through the efforts of Dr. Donald Savoie, of the University of Moncton. We have done it with municipalities, with the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, with the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce, with the Conseil Economique du Nouveau Brunswick, with the Economic Development Council of Newfoundland, with boards of trade, chambers of commerce, municipalities, provincial Governments, and the Council of Maritime Premiers. Nobody but nobody can deny that this legislation and this particular agency was born and is the fruit of considerable consultation.

The second principle is that, for a change, we wanted to make sure the decision-making would come from the region itself. I am delighted that 90 per cent of the decisions that will be made and have been made to date will be made in the region. Those decisions are considerable. There have been 451 approvals to date with tens of millions of dollars going to regional development.

The third principle is that we will direct our efforts to a field which I think is very apropos, and that is towards small and medium sized businesses. That is the basis and the ground work for development in our region. In my own home province 90 per cent of all of the enterprises are owned and developed by New Brunswickers. We think that is an important initiative and that there is a great deal of potential for future growth in the small and medium sized businesses of Atlantic Canada.

The fourth principle is that regional programs are adapted to regional needs. That is very important. We do not need Ottawa, we do not need the mandarinate, we don't need anyone to tell us what we need in Canada. We have had that for years and years and years. The business people of Atlantic Canada are the ones who know best how to deal with the issues of Atlantic Canada and how to make things work in Atlantic Canada. It is not quite the same as other parts of Canada. We have our own unique situations that need to be dealt with on a regional basis. Therefore, the programs will be adapted to regional needs in our region.

Another basic principle is one of creating an environment for business to flourish on its own. Over and over again I have said to the Board of Trade in the City of Saint John, New Brunswick, my home city, a city which I have represented politically for some 17 years, that it cannot expect government to do everything for it. We cannot expect governments to redress all anomalies in terms of equality in Canada. We cannot expect governments to do everything for us. However, what we can do is create the environment for our private sector to do what is necessary to create jobs and to create prosperity in our region.

We have done that. We have put in place policies, all sorts of new programs, and the kind of climate which is conducive to Atlantic businesses to invest, to create jobs, to create new enterprises, to make money, and to create investment and profit in the region.

The sixth principle would be flexibility. We want this piece of legislation. I do not think there has been another one like it in the history of Canada dealing with regional development and allowing more flexibility. I am pleased to serve with Senator Lowell Murray, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), and my other five colleagues in the federal Cabinet from the region, on a board which discusses the initiatives, policies, and programs we think are needed for regional development.

I suppose the seventh principle is not spelled out specifically. We want the particular agency, as we want the board which serves the agency, to have a co-ordinating role and function in regional development. I do not believe that this agency is the sole agency responsible for regional development. I expect every department in the Government of Canada to be aware of and to be concerned with regional development. I am pleased to say that largely they are concerned. We have had exceptional co-operation from Ministers and departments in the Government of Canada.

Perhaps the seeds of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency might have sprung from a conference, a convention, a meeting, or an initiative which we undertook in September 1986 called "The Atlantic Focus". At that time the Atlantic government caucus, the Progressive Conservative caucus, met with the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council. We also met with the Chambers of Commerce of the Atlantic Provinces, the Council of Maritime Premiers, the Governments of the four provinces, the Conseil Economique du Nouveau Brunswick, and the Economic Development Council of Newfoundland, and we listened. I take some pleasure in saying that as a result of "The Atlantic Focus" initiative which we undertook at that time, the Prime Minister listened and agreed—and I agree—that we must have new directions and new initiatives in this region.

We have undertaken all sorts of new programs. The previous speaker mentioned the expenditure of some $200 million per year. That figure is not correct. The correct figure is about $400 million per year. We have said that the $1.05 billion was additional new dollars. That was repeated over and over again by the Prime Minister and by other government Ministers. It will be over and above the expenditures we have, which will be around $200 million per year under the IRDA process and others.

Our Government supports equality through all sorts of programs such as our equalization program, our Established Programs Financing, and other initiatives taken by line departments in the Government. The dollars allocated to regional development are significantly more than ever before. I am pleased to say that we think the dollars are reasonably adequate. It is a refreshing increase in what the previous Government provided for regional development. It will go a long way toward meeting the needs of Atlantic Canadians.

The board which has been set up by the Ministers responsible in government has 19 members, all of whom are established, successful business people and public servants in the region. They are dealing very effectively with the policy, programs, and philosophy—what we are trying to do with ACOA. I can tell the House that we acted very swiftly in that regard. The Prime Minister announced the ACOA initiative in late June, 1987. By August 31, 1987 we had named the board, and three days later that board was meeting in Moncton, New Brunswick dealing with the problems faced in Atlantic Canada. It is still dealing with them. In fact, it has had four meetings, and I will be attending a meeting with them on Monday and Tuesday of next week in Halifax.

There are many things I could say, because I am truly very interested in regional development. However, I want to conclude my remarks by indicating why I am so supportive of this piece of legislation. I support Bill C-103 because it gives a formal, legal status to the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. It is needed. I support Bill C-103 because it outlines the very considerable, new, and flexible powers of the agency, far surpassing the power of any previous regional development mechanism or agency. I have worked with them and I have studied a good deal about them. It represents the very real and strong commitment of the Prime Minister and the Government to combating disparities in our region and to fostering economic prosperity in Atlantic Canada.

I support it because it was conceived, nourished, and developed in the Atlantic region to serve and assist our businessmen, our entrepreneurs, and indeed all Atlantic Canadians. It grew out of a wide consultative process with those who know our region, with those who live in our region, with those who invest in our region, with those who work in our region, and with those, above all, who understand our region and the difficulties, problems, and challenges we face there.

The form in which the legislation is before the House is a direct consequence of the consensus we reached together after consultation. It was not foisted on Atlantic Canada by Ottawa. It was developed in the region by Atlantic Canadians and by our citizenry. Atlantic Canadians wanted the right to plan their own destiny, not to have it dictated to them. It reflects the commitment of the Prime Minister to a new approach in regional development and to economic growth in Atlantic Canada as he outlined in the Speech from the Throne. It is an affirmation of our Government's commitment to developing the most important resource in Atlantic Canada—our people.

Bill C-103 will challenge Atlantic Canadians to show all Canadians their initiative, their enterprise, and their willingness to work hard to improve their lot in this wonderful country in which we live and to share in the wealth and prosperity which we know is not being equally shared today.

In closing I want to quote from an editorial which appeared in a Saint John newspaper, one of my own newspapers. It reads: "The ball has been placed squarely in Atlantic Canada's court". I have no doubt whatsoever as an Atlantic Canadian that Atlantic Canada will rise to meet that challenge.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister. I listened with care to what he had to say about this new money being more than ever before and so on. Could he explain, using the Government's own figures, the cut-backs in terms of the regional development envelope which has been reduced by $2.89 billion since fiscal year 1984-85 to the present year; DRIE spending cuts of $200 million in 1984, $100 million in 1985-86, and $150 million in 1986-87; and all kinds of specific cuts to Atlantic Canada such as $60 million to the East Coast ferry service, $100 million per year in terms of the jobs lost at Cape Breton heavy water plants, and so on?

Using the Government's own figures, the Minister and his Government have cut federal spending in the Atlantic region by $1 billion per year since coming to office. The entire ACOA allocation is $1.05 billion over five years, or a little over $200 million a year. How does the Minister explain the shell game of cutting $1 billion a year from regional development funding for Atlantic Canada since the Government came into office and replacing it with $200 million a year? It seems to me that that adds up to a net short-fall of over $800 million a year for Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Merrithew: Madam Speaker, first, I know from reading the debate that those figures have been refuted. The Hon. Member mentioned the figure of $200 million a year. There will be $200 million a year spent on the IRDA process alone this year and more than that next year in Atlantic Canada. In fact, spending in every province will be up this year over last year and it will be up again next year. We made a commitment to continue that level of spending with the additional spending of $1.05 billion in Atlantic Canada.

One of the programs I forgot to mention was one which I along with others announced in Atlantic Canada, one of which I am very proud, the Atlantic Opportunities Program. We studied what happened in New England as well as what happened in Atlantic Canada over the last 25 years. One thing we noticed was that prosperity increased markedly in New England but the disparities in Atlantic Canada actually increased. Analysis by many prestigious organizations in Atlantic Canada indicated one of the things that could be done was to use our government procurement programs more effectively in the regions. We made a commitment that we would markedly increase not just defence procurement but all government procurement in the region.

I, more than any other Member of this House, am proof positive of the commitment of the Progressive Conservative Government of Canada to that principle and program. I announced, along with my colleague, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty), the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt), and the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Côté), the placing of a contract in Atlantic Canada for six additional frigates. The Hon. Member talked about how much is spent in Atlantic Canada. In constant dollars that contract is worth $2.5 billion. That is over and above the ongoing work in that particular yard.

That is not all. I had the privilege on behalf of the Government of Canada to sign the largest highways agreement in the history of our province, amounting to $145 million. I had the privilege and pleasure to sign on behalf of the Minister of Regional and Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) a brand new industrial development agreement.

I would like to inform the Hon. Member that I was the provincial Minister of Commerce when the previous federal Government had an opportunity to renew the existing Industrial Development Agreement in 1980 and yet refused to do so. It took a Tory Government to renew that agreement and I had the privilege of signing on behalf of the Government of Canada. In addition, I had the privilege of signing the Industrial Innovations Agreement, another $28 million for the Province of New Brunswick. I had the privilege of being present when the tourism agreement was signed, and of course that has been extended.

We do not need the Hon. Member to tell us how much money is being spent by this Government in the Province of New Brunswick.

Mr. Dorin: Madam Speaker, in their criticism of this Bill and the agency, the NDP talked about municipal infrastructure. Many Members of this House from urban constituencies such as mine will be aware that there has been a campaign by the larger cities for federal Government involvement in repair and replacement of municipal infrastructure. Members of the NDP have talked about that with respect to this Bill and this agency. I wonder if the Minister could comment on that.

Mr. Merrithew: Madam Speaker, I am delighted to address that issue. I had the privilege of sitting as a city councillor in the City of Saint John for a period of time and I guess I am perfectly aware of the need for assistance to our municipalities in supplying things like water and sewage systems and street improvement and so on. We are able to do that to a certain extent. Under the new highways agreement we are able to build roads in the City of Saint John. We have undertaken to assist the province in that respect but it is essentially a provincial responsibility.

I am also aware that the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities requested government at all levels to pump a good many billions of dollars into municipal infrastructure. I have some sympathy for that. I agree it might need to be done. However, we should not lose sight of the fact that the municipalities are essentially the children of the provinces. It is the responsibility of the provinces to provide that kind of in-depth and costly infrastructure.

We may very well make the choice of assisting in things like industrial parks and in providing power and water to cities, things of that type. However, I am afraid that $1.05 billion would not go very far if we were to undertake to do water and sewage projects in every municipality in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, the Minister referred to the pride he has in government procurement programs and the emphasis that will be placed on obtaining those necessary goods and services in Atlantic Canada. I want to remind the Minister that the trade deal signed with the U.S. opens up government procurement to American suppliers on an equal basis with Canadian suppliers. I could not agree with him more, that government procurement is a real advantage in assisting regional economies. However, the fact is that Americans will now be able to bid on all those contracts and that will lessen the impact on regional development.

In addition, in the 1976-77 fiscal year, some 56 per cent of all federal expenditures on regional development ended up in Atlantic Canada. In the first year of the Conservative Government, 1984-85, that was reduced to 36 per cent. Can the Minister explain what appears to be something of a discrepancy between the points he was making and the fact that his Government reduced the percentage of regional development spending in Atlantic Canada from 56 per cent to 36 per cent?

Mr. Merrithew: Madam Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that I was part of the Government of New Brunswick when those expenditures dropped markedly under the previous Liberal Government. I watched very carefully, at a time when we had inflation of 12 per cent, 14 per cent, 17 per cent or 18 per cent and interest rates of 20 per cent and more, and saw increases in regional development spending of 3 per cent. It was just a joke.

I want to address the Hon. Member's first point, which had to do with free trade. He is talking to the wrong part of Canada if he thinks Atlantic Canadians do not generally support free trade. Let it be understood that when New Brunswick joined our great nation, and it was one of the four founding provinces, we took more wealth into Canada than any other province. National policy has not always served Atlantic Canada very well. Things like east-west trade, the St. Lawrence Seaway and provincial procurement policies have very often not helped Atlantic Canada's entrepreneurs and suppliers to provide the rest of Canada, but has precluded them from trading.

Most Atlantic Canadians remember very well that prior to confederation the normal trade routes were north-south. We have always traded with Boston and New York. Within 500 miles of the Province of New Brunswick, there is a market of 50 million people. Just let our entrepreneurs at it. That is what we want.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, it is interesting that the recent speaker for the Government was the Hon. Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew). In that title is a part of the problem about which we are talking today.

During the election campaign of 1984 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised the people of Canada that when he formed the Government he would create a full ministry of forestry. He indicated that forestry was an important industry for the entire country and particularly for the regions of the country. Today, nearly four years later, there is no full ministry of forestry. There is no full minister of forestry. With all due respect to my colleague, who is a very nice person, the fact is that he is the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines.

We are talking about the two major enterprises found in the regions of Canada, mining and forestry. The Government does not even have a full ministry of mines, let alone a full ministry of forestry. Therein lies the real concern of this Government for regional economic development in Canada.

If the Government were serious, it would have lived up to the promise it made to the people of Canada, and particularly those of us from the regions of Canada, to form a full ministry of forestry. That has not occurred. Today, forestry is handled by a Ministry of State. This means that a handful of people work with the Minister on forestry and a handful of people work with the same Minister on mines. Of course, the Department is relegated far down in the hierarchy of cabinet power. Forestry and mining are at the bottom of the pile.

Mr. Fulton: Forestry, the largest industry in Canada.

Mr. Riis: As my hon. friend from Skeena so aptly reminds Hon. Members, the largest export industry in Canada in terms of value is the forestry industry. It is one of the major employers in the country, employing hundreds of thousands of Canadians directly and hundreds of thousands of Canadians indirectly in every single region. Yet the Prime Minister does not feel that this is an important enough industry to have a full Minister. Therein lies the problem that we are debating in the House of Commons today.

Bill C-103 is an Act to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. That is really the wrong heading for this agency. It should actually be something like "The Atlantic Canada Smoke and Mirrors Agency", or the "The Atlantic Canada Hoax Agency".

This Bill in no way advances the cause of removing economic and regional disparities in Canada. As a matter of fact, I will attempt to make the case, as my hon. colleagues have before me, that this initiative by the Government will actually widen the gap in economic activity between Atlantic Canada and central Canada. That is exactly what has happened over the last little while.

I just finished reading a report written by Elizabeth Beale, the chief economist of the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council. She has recently reported that there has been very little improvement in any of the major indicators of regional disparity between the Atlantic provinces and the country as a whole since the 1960s. She goes on to make the point that the gap in the unemployment rate is proportionately the same as it was 15 years ago.

In a very objective, honest, fair, factual presentation, the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council has said that the situation faced by residents of Atlantic Canada has not changed since the 1960s and that the regional and employment differences are no different than they were 15 years ago. That is a real condemnation, not only of the actions of this Government but of the actions of the previous federal Governments since the 1960s when these statistics were first collected.

At one time or other most Canadians have read Hugh MacLennan's book, Two Solitudes, which makes the case for the French and the English realities of Canada. It seems in so many ways that there is now a new kind of two solitudes, a new two-tier Canada composed of southern Ontario and the rest of Canada, southern Ontario and the hinterland, southern Ontario, which is the industrial heartland, and the resource-based regions of Canada. That is the reality.

Not long ago The Globe and Mail said that despite the federal Government's assurances that economic renewal is working for all Canadians, more than 95 per cent of the additional jobs created last year were located in one province, the Province of Ontario. It is incredible that 95 per cent of all new jobs created in Canada were created in the Province of Ontario, and to be more specific, in the greater Toronto area. We do recognize that the large Province of Ontario has incredible regional variations in economic development and growth as well, particularly between the metropolitan area of Toronto and the rest of the province, particularly northern Ontario.

In the same article it was indicated that last week the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) acknowledged that the benefits of Conservative economics have not been evenly shared across the country. The Minister of Finance has agreed that everything is okay in his constituency and in downtown Toronto where the unemployment rates today are virtually nil, but for the rest of the country things are not going terribly well. Therein lies the essence of the problem.

As the gap between unemployment levels in central Canada and unemployment levels in the rest of Canada increases, we see the emerging challenge that will face Canadians in the decade to come. The Economic Council of Canada in its recent report pointed out that the major economic problem facing Canada is the tremendous difference in economic prosperity between central Canada and the rest of the country. This is the challenge that we must face.

I suppose that this is the challenge the Government has attempted to take on by creating this Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. Let us put this into context. As the Hon. Minister of State for Forestry and Mines indicated, the Government plans to provide $200 million per year to Atlantic Canada to assist it in its economic development, and $200 million per year might sound like a great deal of money to many people, and of course it would be a lot of money to many people. Let us put that into context because $200 million per year over five years comes to $1 billion. However, in every year of the last three years the federal Government has taken $1 billion of existing programs out of Atlantic Canada. Three years ago it took out $1 billion, last year it took out $1 billion and this year it took out $1 billion. Now it is saying it has some great news, it will give Atlantic Canadians $200 million and they are supposed to be thankful because this is supposed to be helpful. That is the reality. This is the hypocrisy with which we are dealing.

I think the Prime Minister should come clean and tell the people of Atlantic Canada that the Government has taken away many of the programs that existed in the past to assist economic development, but it will give back a pittance and is asking the people to be thankful for that.

Mr. Foster: Shame.

Mr. Riis: It is shameful. It is very dishonest in many respects. Of course, we must recognize that the senior cabinet Minister from Atlantic Canada, the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), asked the people of Atlantic Canada why they are complaining so much, they are a lot better off than the people of Bangladesh. That was his benchmark. He said that if they are better off than residents of Bangladesh, if there are more jobs than you find in Bangladesh, Atlantic Canadians are supposed to be thankful. That is obviously absurd. It is an unkind statement as well, and certainly not a very thoughtful statement coming from a senior cabinet Minister. The people of Atlantic Canada do not want to have their economic futures compared to those in Bangladesh or other Third World countries.

Mr. Fulton: Who said that?

Mr. Riis: The present Minister of Transport said that in Atlantic Canada. I have to give him credit for having the guts to say something like that in that part of the country. It is unbelievable. It is surprising that that would come from a Minister of his stature.

I do not want to dwell on what the Conservative Government has not done in Atlantic Canada. That becomes obvious. My concern is with this agency itself. Who is going to be in charge of this agency? Who is the Minister responsible for this new agency? The Minister in charge will not be in the House of Commons open to questions and inquiries from members of the Government from Atlantic Canada or members of the Opposition in the House of Commons. This is a democracy yet the Minister responsible for this agency does not sit in the House. He will likely never sit in this House.

Mr. Fulton: Is he in jail?

Mr. Foster: No, just on trial.

Mr. Riis: He is not in jail or anything like that, he is in the other place. I cannot use the name of the other place, but we know what that is, the other part of Parliament. That means that this critical Minister responsible for economic development in Atlantic Canada will not be subject to questions from members of the Government or the Opposition in the House of Commons. He will not have to stand here and explain why the funding going into this agency is so low. He is hidden away, closeted away, if you like, in the other place, far from any scrutiny, well apart from the people he is attempting to assist.

That is not right in a democracy. In a democracy people expect that Ministers responsible be in their places so that they can be held accountable for their actions. That is the way democracy works.

I suggest that when you are not sure that what you have done is correct, when you are trying to pull a smoke and mirrors trick on the people of a certain region, when you are perpetuating a hoax on the people of a region, you do not want to have a cabinet Minister in the House of Commons. You want that Minister to be in the other place where he can hide away from criticism, scrutiny, and evaluation. That is what Senator Lowell Murray said he was going to do. He said that he was going to be in charge of this operation and that the decisions would be made by him. That is, of course, a very undemocratic approach to this whole matter.

In his opening speech the Minister of Transport indicated that the majority of these funds would go to small and medium businesses in Atlantic Canada. Members on all sides of the House would endorse grants or special loans being given to small and medium businesses. I listened with interest to my friend, the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines, who laid out a long list of initiatives of which he had been a part in his previous life as a provincial Minister and as a Minister in the Government today. He listed all the infrastructure which the Government was providing and how important that is.

That is one of the shortcomings in the terms of reference of this agency. There is no quarrel that a good deal of funding and support ought to go to assist small and medium businesses, to develop new products, and to conduct market research with regard to new market opportunities, but we must also develop critical infrastructure in this day and age.

I read a report the other day of a survey of a number of young Canadians. When they were asked in Atlantic Canada what the most important natural resource of Atlantic Canada was the overwhelming response was cod fish or fishing. That same question was put to people on the Prairies who said that grain was the most important natural resource. In British Columbia some people said it was trees and forests.

The most important natural resource of Atlantic Canada and all of Canada are the people, particularly the young people. I believe that a lot of this support ought to be going to develop that natural resource, for the infrastructure for education, skill development and sophisticated training to develop research and development. That is the kind of infrastructure that the economy of the future will require as we move toward a knowledge-based economy and the year 2000. However, this agency does not have a major mandate to provide that necessary skill development and R and D infrastructure.

Another thing that is absent is a real commitment to lower the rates of unemployment in Atlantic Canada. We assume that in a few months from now we will be having a general election. A New Democratic Party government would set targets in Atlantic Canada. A New Democratic Party government with Ed Broadbent as Prime Minister would recognize that decade after decade programs have obviously not reduced the economic and regional differences between Atlantic Canada and regional Canada and that the levels of unemployment continue to be excessively high, decade after decade, because governments have not been serious in their efforts to reduce unemployment and produce economic prosperity for Atlantic Canada. A New Democratic government would set targets. It would commit itself to reducing the levels of unemployment in Atlantic Canada by a certain percentage point within the first year, the second year, and the third year until the unemployment levels in Atlantic Canada were zero. That would be our stated goal. We would set out a very specific annual strategy to achieve that goal. Each year we would ask whether we had been successful. We would be accountable as to whether we were successful in reducing the levels of unemployment. If we were not, we would increase our efforts toward those goals about which we would be serious.

However, the Government does not set any goal. If we were to evaluate this program five or ten years from now and found that the levels of unemployment had been reduced by half a percentage point or had perhaps even increased, there would be no way of determining whether the initiatives were adequate and successful. If you have no goal, no objective, how do you know whether you have been successful?

This is like starting off on a vacation, just getting into a car and driving off without any idea of where you are going, just aimlessly driving down the road. That is what this Atlantic agency is really all about. It is a rudderless ship moving about the harbour. It is a person driving along without any particular destination in mind.

It is critical that targets be set in order that unemployment levels in Atlantic Canada be reduced annually by a specified amount. We should set such goals, not only for Atlantic Canada but for the nation as a whole, for all the regions that are having difficult times.

One of the critical points which the Minister of State failed to mention in his comments involves government procurement. One of the tools which a government has, to give encouragement and support, to show that it cares, is government procurement targeted at all levels, local businesses and industry. In that way markets can be provided which will really assist new businesses and industries in particular.

In the trade deal with the United States we signed away the right to target government procurement programs to Atlantic Canada as we should. In other words, everything that all levels of government need in Atlantic Canada should be procured from that area. Whether they are goods or services, as long as they are reasonably competitive, the businesses and industries of that area should be given an advantage. We signed away that right. We have said that any company in the United States will be able to bid on government procurement programs. We have now signed away in the trade deal the one obvious vehicle that governments have to assist local business.

In closing, much more can be done. Many more steps can be taken to assist the development of Atlantic Canada. Let me quote what John Crow, Governor of the Bank of Canada, said recently: "Many of these regional imbalances that presently exist could eventually drag down the whole economy of the country". In other words, if we do not seriously address these regional differences in terms of economic development and growth, it could drag down the entire Canadian economy. That is our primary challenge.

I am afraid that this initiative by the Government in Bill C-103, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, falls far short of meeting that goal of reduced economic inequalities that exist in Canada.

Mr. Harris: Madam Speaker, let me congratulate the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) on his speech. He and all Members in this Party are concerned about regional development, as I am sure are all Members. However, the Government's measures do not seem to match the size of the problem.

Will he comment on another aspect of regional development that could assist the regions of Canada, particularly the Atlantic region in this case, and that is the allocation of the Public Service in this country? Thirty per cent of the federal Public Service in Canada is located in Ottawa, which is very highly centralized compared to other countries such as the United States where only 12 per cent of the public service is located in Washington.

There have been some decentralization experiments in Canada in the past, but these have been halted. The results of those studies have found that these units operating outside of Ottawa have been more efficient in terms of the complement of person-years required to do the job, the stability of the workers, and the lack of turnover compared to the experience in Ottawa. They seem to be successful not only in improving the efficiency of the Public Service of Canada but in spreading some of the funds and jobs of the federal Government throughout the country, particularly to areas where employment in the private sector and other sectors of the economy is difficult to obtain.

Would the Hon. Member comment on that method of contributing to reducing regional disparity in this country?

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has posed a very interesting question. Let me reflect for a moment on part of the problem we face in this country in dealing with economic discrepancies in terms of growth. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) comes from Toronto and has surrounded himself with some very well intentioned, serious bureaucrats. But I do no believe the Minister actually understands what it is like in the regions of Canada. Considering the constituency of the Minister of State for Mines and Forestry, I suspect that he would have a better understanding.

But part of the problem is that many of the critical decision-making people involved in these matters do not live in the regions and have no idea what it is like to live in western Canada, eastern Canada or northern regions of the country. For instance, in my constituency, unemployment levels reach as high as 40 per cent in some areas.

My hon. friend's suggestion to decentralize government makes nothing but sense, for providing a more practical and reasoned approach to many government programs.

Another reality is that in today's age of telecommunications we do not need to be sitting in Ottawa, cheek to jowl. There is no reason why the federal Government could not be much more decentralized, which would not only provide employment in the regions of the country but would likely provide a much more improved and sensitive Government infrastructure.

A certain inertia sets in after we have been in Ottawa for some time. I think it is important that Members of Parliament realize that unless they make an effort to return to their constituencies on a regular basis that certain inertia begins to set in, even with Members of Parliament.

When one considers that we are the second largest country in the world, it is important to make a significant effort to decentralize federal Government decision-making, which includes decentralizing some of the Public Service into the regions of the country.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I am moved to make a comment in response to my hon. friend. I was reminded of sitting here in the House six years ago when Liberal cabinet Ministers laid out certain targets by saying they would achieve a 2 per cent reduction or 5 per cent reduction. However, those targets were never achieved because the programs were improper.

The mess which our Government inherited, with almost two million unemployed Canadians, was a direct consequence of the policy my hon. friend is proposing for the future. The same program that the Liberals had in place during those many years produced this hardship for people in this country.

In contrast, this Government does not simply throw money at problems but works with communities and puts in place things like the agency we are talking about today, where local people work together to produce long term jobs. They are not temporary jobs; while the problem facing individuals who do not have a job is severe, it is not alleviated with six months of useless work. The problem is alleviated by communities working together with the private sector, in the proper economic climate, to produce goods and services which will be useful not just today or tomorrow but six and ten years from now.

The approach of this Government in three and one-half years has produced 1,118,000 jobs. We did not have phoney targets for Atlantic Canada or any particular province, we simply went about putting in place a set of policies and a fiscal regime that is reducing unemployment in every region and increasing employment and the opportunities that the system implies.

The artificial notion of targets, which is being propagated by the Hon. Member, may look good on national television or in a headline, but the reality is that a set of policies that produce real jobs for the long term for real people is what will benefit them.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, my hon. friend can talk all he wants about good intentions, and may cite all these figures, but I will quote for him from an article in The Globe and Mail recently which stated: "Conservative Member of Parliament James Hawkes of Calgary argued last week that there were 23,000 more people working in Alberta today than in September, 1984". The article goes on to say: "But he forgot to say that there are 20,000 more people out of work in Alberta last year than the year before".

While anyone can stand in the House and cite figures about the number of jobs created and so on, in his own province nearly 10 per cent of Albertans are out of work. In some parts of Alberta the unemployment rate is as high as 25 per cent, in areas like northern Alberta. They were not working last year or the year before. Nothing much has changed.

If we jump over the mountains into British Columbia, we find a situation which is significantly worse. It is small comfort for people in Alberta, Atlantic Canada and other places who are viewing this debate today to hear the Parliamentary Secretary say, "Look how wonderful things are". If one is in Toronto, yes, things are very, very good, thank you, and I am pleased for Toronto. However, the rest of the country has a long way to go.

The creation of this agency is another hoax, if you like, a smoke and mirrors effort, because taking out $3 billion and putting only $200 million a year back is not going to help regional disparities across this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate.

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Madam Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to participate in the debate on Bill C-103. I view this legislation as marking a crossroads in the economic evolution of Atlantic Canada within our Confederation. There are many people in this House from Atlantic Canada who sit here because they have a mandate from their constituents to work for and to achieve improved economic opportunities for their constituents. I am no exception.

I became interested in politics because I took the view as a young Atlantic Canadian that things could be better, that there were new ways which could be tried and that success and progress was an attainable goal. I did not accept that we as Atlantic Canadians were destined always to be the have-not region within Confederation. I took that message to my constituents in 1984 and they agreed.

Today we are debating a piece of legislation that reflects a very carefully taken policy decision by our Government that this is a better way to go. Let us look at precisely what Bill C-103 prescribes and what principles it outlines by way of a regional development strategy. First, let us look at the goals. There are some speakers who have said this legislation does not prescribe a goal, but the goal is outlined in Clause 4 which states:

> The purpose of this Part is to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada and, more particularly, to enhance the growth of earned incomes and employment opportunities in that region.

That is very clear. The purpose of this Bill, then, is to improve the economic lot of Atlantic Canadians.

What principles are embodied in the legislation? First, decisions are to be made in the region. Over 95 per cent of the decisions on direct assistance to business will be made in the region without reference to Ottawa. That process is now ongoing. The decentralization process is occurring and has occurred. Of a staff of about 300, only a small number, perhaps 20 or less, will be in Ottawa to participate in liaison and advocacy for the region.

What about consultation, another principle of this Bill? There is a 19 member board which will advise the Minister on policy. It will direct the staff, conduct studies and formulate new policy options. It will review program proposals and innovate unusual projects and will recommend policies or decisions to the Minister. That is flexibility. That is consultation.

By way of improving the business environment, under this legislation the agency will be able to provide more than direct assistance to business. It will be able to improve the opportunities in research, communication, co-operation and will provide scholarships related to business. The mechanism for federal-provincial co-operation are there. The co-financing mechanism is outlined. This will extend and enhance co-operation between government departments at the federal level and enhance co-operation with provincial departments.

Indeed, national programs will be directly impacted by regional needs to the advocacy program. The objective of the advocacy program is to promote an Atlantic perspective here in Ottawa to ensure that Atlantic Canada receives equitable consideration and benefits from national policies and programs. With respect to the specific goal of improving opportunities for medium and small business, the greatest number of ways and means, powers and authorities will be given to this agency so it will have the greatest flexibility to respond to the regions uniqueness.

I challenge the Opposition to tell us whether it is against these principles or does it support the idea of using a broad number of programs and a wide range of tools? Consultation has been lauded. In seeking more authority for the board, do Members opposite agree with decisions being taken in the region?

I have been disappointed as I sat through debate during the last few days not to hear the Opposition tell us whether it disagrees with the principles of this Bill. Instead it has complained about a wide range of things, many of them not based on fact. I challenge the Opposition to tell us whether it disagrees with the principles I have outlined.

In fact, just to comment on one of the suggestions of the Opposition about funding, it is clear that under our Government regional development spending has increased significantly. Under this program an additional $1 billion of new money will be made available to enhance economic development in our region. That is not money taken from other departments as has been suggested. It is new money. The programs that were in place in 1985 in my riding are still there. They are being funded. In addition to that, my constituents have the benefit of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and this new funding.

The suggestion that infrastructure funding is not possible is simply not based on any reading of the statute. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) was very clear in the House earlier this week when he said there are ERDA agreements, federal-provincial agreements, under which such arrangements can be concluded. None of that has changed. I believe we must move this Bill quickly into committee so that it can be made into law.

It is shameful that three days have been expended on a debate which does not concern the principles of this Bill. The debate has been about matters which can very well be addressed in committee. I have listened with interest to a lot of speculation from opposition Members about how this agency is going to work and where it is going to get its money and whether it can be successful. I have the distinct advantage of telling those Members that what we have in this legislation is not entirely new. The principles reflected in this legislation have been operating in Cape Breton for a couple of years through the Enterprise Cape Breton Agency. The principles of decentralization, the principles of autonomy and the principles of flexibility have been operating in Cape Breton. We have had a local board of directors with direct contact and accountability to a Minister. We have had a very successful two years.

In the last 12 months alone the unemployment rate in Cape Breton has dropped from 21 per cent to the area of 15 per cent or 16 per cent. That is real progress. That is proof that the economic regional development strategies of this Government can work and in fact are working. That I suggest is one of the reasons these principles are in the Bill. We know they can yield results which have alluded our regions for many decades.

That is not to say that all our problems will be solved quickly. However, it is to say that this is something better. This is progress. Maritimers and Atlantic Canadians are realistic. Anyone who stands before them and suggests that these problems will be solved overnight will not have credibility. Those who stand before Atlantic Canadians and say we believe this is in mechanism that will achieve progress, and then point to an example where progress has in fact happened, will have credibility. We have waited a long time for progress. We know that substantial and long term change takes time.

There has been the suggestion by some members of the Opposition that national economic progress is somehow irrelevant in Atlantic Canada. They have suggested that lower interest rates achieved as a result of better national management are irrelevant to Atlantic Canadians. Nothing could be further from the truth. My constituents buy homes, cars and furniture. Many of them borrow money to do so. They pay interest on that money. When interest rates are at 20 per cent they do not buy these goods, or else they pay a great deal more for them. We now have lower interest rates as a result of improved economic management. My constituents are saving money now.

There are small business people and prospective entrepreneurs as well in my riding. These people benefit from lower interest rates. They can expand or initiate new business enterprises. Thus the argument that lower interest rates are somehow irrelevant in Atlantic Canada is not true. It is an illogical argument. It shows a total lack of understanding of the economy of Atlantic Canada.

What about lower inflation? Many of the same points can be made. When prices are rising that means there is less money to spend in a region such as Atlantic Canada. Where people have a lower income level, as is the case in Atlantic Canada, it amounts to just that much more. As a result of the improved management of the economy our Government has brought this benefit to Atlantic Canadians.

What about the deficit? The suggestion has been made that somehow controlling the deficit is contrary to the interests of Atlantic Canada. We pay taxes in Atlantic Canada. A large percentage of our taxes is used to serve the growing national debt. This means that there cannot be more money for better programs, whether they be social programs or regional development programs. The political Parties which advocate reckless and uncontrolled spending do a great disservice to those who strongly believe in regional development and in our social programs.

What about the lower unemployment rate? It was suggested today that unemployment is down only in Toronto. That is simply not true. Unemployment is down in Nova Scotia. In fact, the unemployment rate in Nova Scotia today is less than what the national unemployment rate was in 1984 when we were elected. What the previous Government would have given for the unemployment rate that we have in Nova Scotia today, Madam Speaker.

There are now more jobs in Atlantic Canada. We have a stronger economy. National economic growth is providing opportunities in the regions as well. There are people in the regions who want to leave, to go to the bigger centres where there are different economic opportunities than in the smaller centres. However, if there are no opportunities in the bigger centres then, obviously, they will not go to them. If we want to support our social programs we need economic growth.

The NDP talks so much about the regions. It was the New Democratic Party which sponsored and supported the national economic program that devastated the western region of our country. Today, the same Party stands just as firmly against free trade as it stood for the National Energy Program. It stands against—

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. A certain degree of honesty is required in debate. The New Democratic Party voted against the National Energy Program. It is about time that certain Conservatives read the voting record.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) has the floor.

Mr. O'Neil: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member should do a better job of communicating his Party's record on the National Energy Program to western Canadians. There are millions of western Canadians—in fact most Canadians—who believe and were given the impression by the Hon. Member's Party that it was against economic growth in the oil and gas industry in western Canada. That is the truth of the matter.

Members of that Party joined forces with the governing Party in the early 1980s and just about closed down the oil and gas industry of Atlantic Canada. Today, those bedfellows want to block the free trade agreement with the United States, an agreement which will mean growth for our forestry industry, our fishing industry and for the regions. They are against these areas but they let the cars go back and forth. They let billions of dollars in foreign investment pour into Oshawa, but not into the regions. It is not okay for an Atlantic Canadian to work for a foreign company, but it is okay if one lives in Oshawa to work for big bad General Motors, a U.S. corporation.

I can tell Hon. Members that when the Leader of the New Democratic Party is in Oshawa he does not condemn General Motors. He does not tell the thousands of people who work at General Motors that they should shut down the plant, kick out the foreigners and that it is better to be unemployed and poor than working for a multinational corporation. That is the blind ideology of members of the New Democratic Party. That is their hypocrisy and their double standard. We reject that. We want to move ahead. We will move ahead economically to take our place in Canada. We will point out in an aggressive way the inconsistencies that form so great a part of the economic policies of the New Democratic Party.

In my region that Party is against tax credits for business. Our Government has provided tax credits to allow businesses to come into the Cape Breton region. As a result we are seeing new and better employment opportunities. The New Democratic Party, the Party which holds itself out as the guardian of the low-income Canadian, is against that. It does not want these tax credits. The people I represent want jobs. They will worry about who owns the corporation later. Right now they want jobs. They want to be able to put bread and butter on the table.

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, a couple of things said by the Hon. Member who just spoke were wildly erroneous, according to Statistics Canada. Of course, he will say that that is some sort of a communist front or something.

According to Statistics Canada in 1987 the rate of unemployment in Nova Scotia was 12.5 per cent. He says that that is lower than it was three years ago. Three years ago it was 13.3 per cent, according to Statistics Canada. The Hon. Member has just made an absolutely and totally unfounded and false statement, as is often the case in the House.

He also happened to say that the amount of regional funding going into Atlantic Canada is going up under the Conservatives. According to documents tabled by the Government in the House of Commons that is not true. I wonder whether or not the Hon. Member might want to tell the truth to his constituents rather than a finely woven web of fabrications, which is often the case with him.

The regional development envelope under the Hon. Member and his friend the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has gone down $2.89 billion since they were elected to office. DRIE spending cuts amounted to $200 million in 1984; $100 million in 1985; and $150 million in 1986. In terms of cuts in spending to Atlantic Canada, $100 million was cut from the budget of the Cape Breton heavy water plant and $16 million was cut from the East Coast ferry service budget.

Why does the Hon. Member not get up to tell the truth and let his constituents know that under the Conservatives regional development funding is going down? The Hon. Member should at least be honest with Canadians. According to his own Government statistics, when we look at the 10-year period 1976-77 to the present time, the amount of federal expenditures on regional development going to the Atlantic region was 56 per cent. It is now 36 per cent. That amounts to a decline of over 50 per cent.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure that the Hon. Member may want to continue later on today.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m., the House took recess.

EDUCATION

INCREASING NUMBER OF TEENAGE PREGNANCIES—URGENT NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO ACT

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, the number of pregnancies among Quebec teenagers between the ages of 10 and 14 has doubled in ten years. In 1985, the number of pregnancies among girls aged between 15 and 19 reached 27 per 1,000. One Montreal region accounts for 5 per cent of all births to single mothers under 20 years old.

This is an unacceptable situation not only in Quebec, but in all Canadian provinces. However, it is hardly surprising as the Conservative Government closed down the Family Planning Department in 1985, cancelled subsidies to Planned Parenthood and is very slow to take action as concerns child care, not to mention the fact that budgets for educational purposes have been drastically cut back!

To correct this situation, we need federal leadership to promote sex education and birth control and to help these teenagers complete high school.

Mr. Speaker, these children are at risk. The federal and provincial Governments must show some courage and accept their responsibilities as regards this issue. Let us forget our prudishness and take action quickly to provide sexual education or post-secondary assistance to put an end to the scourge of pregnancies among Canadian teenagers.

ISRAEL—TREATMENT OF PALESTINIANS IN REFUGEE CAMPS

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) was correct in recognizing the violation of human rights of the civilian population of Palestine by the Israeli military occupation forces.

Canada has always shown leadership in the area of human rights. Therefore, it is appropriate for Canada to issue a formal protest to the Israeli Government and call for an international peace conference on the question of Palestine, at which the Palestinian people's legitimate representative, the PLO, would be included.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CRUISE MISSILE TESTS—CALL FOR CANCELLATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday once again Canada participated in the testing of the U.S. air-launched Cruise missile despite the fact that in December the United States and the Soviet Union signed an agreement to eliminate all land-based nuclear missiles with ranges between 500 and 5,000 kilometres.

Although we are speaking of two different missiles, it should be noted that a major barrier to further agreement on strategic nuclear weapons is the verification of the Cruise, because it is small, transportable, and can fly under radar detection. The Government had stated that it would continue to test the Cruise until progress was made in the disarmament talks. Surely the Government must consider the recent Reagan-Gorbachev agreement as major progress in the arms reduction area.

Consequently, Canada should immediately halt all Cruise missile testing to advance the disarmament discussions and to rid the world of nuclear weapons, one of the greatest threats to human existence.

HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, in recent weeks the international community has been appalled at the treatment of Palestinian demonstrations in the Gaza Strip and West Bank at the hands of Israeli troops. Their heavy-handed tactics have resulted in the deaths of an estimated 36 Palestinians, including women and children.

The use of live ammunition to quell demonstrators is unconscionable. At issue are fundamental human rights, the right to life and freedom of expression. Whatever arguments may be made for either side in this dispute, the fact remains that young Palestinians are dying for daring to protest, and no argument can justify their deaths.

While touring Gaza, United Nations Under Secretary General Goulding stated: "In the judgment of the whole international community Israeli policy has been unduly harsh and—disproportionate to the threat posed by the demonstrators".

I call upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to condemn Israel's brutal violence and use of food as a weapon, and to demand a guarantee of fundamental human rights in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—TREATMENT OF PALESTINIANS—NEED FOR INTERNATIONAL PEACE CONFERENCE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, rage has given rise to the recent cycle of violence in the West Bank and Gaza, the rage of young Palestinians born and raised in refugee camps and deprived of hope for a better future by an indifferent international community, and by the mutual intransigence of their own leadership over the years in refusing to recognize Israel and negotiate accordingly, and that of a Likud and Likud dominated Governments which have acted towards the occupied territories in ways which suggest that no real Palestinian homeland will ever be tolerated.

This rage has been a rage visited upon the Israeli Government and its troops, and they have responded to it in a clumsy, heavy-handed, lethal, and now we are told apparently only brutal way. But it is a rage that should be heard beyond the Knesset, in all capitals of the world and by all parties to the continuing tragedy.

All parties know what cards have to be played in order for a peace conference and the subsequent peace process to have a chance. Let them all swallow their pride and begin to play those cards before there is no hope for the Palestinian people or for the peace of the world in so far as it hinges on the Middle East.

TRADE

AMENDMENT OF DAIRY PRODUCTS IMPORT CONTROL LIST

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for having completed a trade agreement with the United States that preserves Canada's agricultural supply management system.

In addition, I welcome the government response to representations by me and by other Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament who have advocated changes to the import control list.

This week's announcement by the Government that the import control list is being amended to prevent a rapid increase in the importation of certain U.S. dairy products is welcomed by the farming community and by me. It was just what we were waiting to hear.

This Government's record of support for the agricultural industry is unmatched by any other. It is a record that I have no trouble talking about. The Canada-U.S. Trade Agreement contains clear evidence of our commitment to protecting the agricultural industry while ensuring new and better economic opportunities for other Canadians.

MIDDLE EAST—IRAN-IRAQ WAR—EFFECT ON CIVILIANS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are deeply concerned about the situation in the Middle East as Khomeini's forces disrupt shipping in the Persian Gulf and attempt to subvert moderate Arab states in the region.

The war waged by the Ayatollah Khomeini against Iraq hides a disastrous social and economic environment. Children are being recruited to fight and become martyrs. Those who survive frequently become drug users.

Three million Iranians are homeless and six million are unemployed. Amnesty International reports that Iranian laws deny women not only their social and political rights, but also any human dignity.

[English]

Every effort must be made internationally to stop the sale of arms to Iran and to use all peaceful means to bring an end to this tragic situation.

POLITICAL PARTIES

ALLEGED USE OF WORKERS' UNION DUES FOR POLITICAL PURPOSES

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) questioned the legality of Canadian taxpayers being entitled to claim tax credits for contributions to political parties. He was referring to socialists who use contributions to their federal wing to finance municipal elections.

The House leader of the socialists was miffed and reacted. This is not the first time the socialists prefer their own interpretation when it comes to spending somebody else's money. For instance, notwithstanding an Ontario Supreme Court ruling they use the workers' union dues for their own political purposes. It is not legal but that is what they do, Mr. Speaker. I have raised the issue in the House on a number of occasions, but their parliamentary leader never did object. When will his Party get around to repaying Canadian workers for illegally collected union dues? I challenge the socialist leader to raise a question of privilege about this matter. For sure, Mr. Speaker, that Party will just have to come clean.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

MINISTER'S POSITION ON ISSUES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, environmentalists will be puzzled by at least two actions or non-actions this week on the part of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan).

First there is the question of the P.E.I. fixed link and environmental assessment. The Minister has said that there will be an environmental assessment, but how vigorous and by whose rules? Will it be the present rules or the proposed new system which would mean broader public access and an expansion of terms to include culture, the economy, and social life as well?

Second, there is the question of acid rain in Quebec where the president of the Union des producteurs agricoles stated that the federal Government lobby about this issue with the American Congress and the American President is weak and half-hearted. The federal Government will not even be represented at the Quebec meeting on acid rain. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) will have to assume his responsibilities in this field and actively support Quebec's environmentalists and farmer producers who are seeking to come to grips with the serious problems caused by acid rain.

LABOUR RELATIONS

COST OF STRIKES AND LOCK-OUTS—CALL FOR CHANGE IN RULES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, an objective look at strikes and lock-outs indicates that the real losers are third parties, the innocent people. For example, during the postal strike a small business went bankrupt because it could not deliver its products. Such losses could be multiplied hundreds of times.

During the Prince Rupert strike, demurrage charges alone amounted to some $50 million. Who pays this? The farmers, the innocent third party who had no part in causing the strike.

Is it not time that the people who cause the work stoppage pay the costs resulting from their action? If the 69 strikers at Prince Rupert knew they would have to pay the demurrage charges they would rush into binding arbitration while they continued to work. The company responsible for a work stoppage would do the same thing.

Farmers and other people have been picking up the tab for these strikes and lock-outs for far too long and they are sick and tired of it. Let us change the rules so that he who causes the expense pays for it. Then I guarantee there will be few if any strikes or lock-outs.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

REPORTED SMUGGLING OF CIGARETTES AND DRUGS THROUGH ST. REGIS INDIAN RESERVE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my dissatisfaction with the Government's lack of action in dealing with the cigarette and drug smuggling occurring at the St. Regis Reserve in Cornwall, Ontario. This smuggling has brought the proud traditions and reputation of the Mohawk Indian Band on the Reserve into disrepute. It is also endangering the legitimate tax-free status the Reserve has for other needed goods such as food and clothing. Besides that, Revenue Canada has estimated it has lost $60 million of tax revenue due to this illegal smuggling.

Of serious concern to me is the safety of Canada Customs officers on the Reserve. Those officers have witnessed shooting incidents and received bomb threats. They are afraid for themselves and their families. Recently they requested bullet-proof vests.

This situation is deplorable and action must be taken immediately to protect the Canada Customs officers, the integrity of the tax system, and to preserve the reputation of a very proud Mohawk nation whose credibility is being brought into disrepute.

WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION FUND

SASKATCHEWAN POTASH—EXPANSION AND DIVERSIFICATION OF MARKETS

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, on January 14 the Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) announced a $5.3 million contribution through the Western Diversification Fund to help expand and diversify markets for Saskatchewan potash. The Potash and Phosphate Institute of Canada will spearhead the effort to open new markets in northern China, south Asia and southeast Asia.

Those funds will support education and demonstration projects which have been largely responsible for the successful entry by western Canadian potash producers into the Asian market. Exports to China have gone from less than one tonne in 1985 to over one million tonnes in 1987.

This initiative is an important step in supporting the revitalization of the potash industry which has been badly damaged by reduced demand, decreased prices and international protectionism. In 1980, $1 billion worth of Saskatchewan potash was sold. In 1986 it was only $550 million. The spin-offs and the service industries generated will provide countless jobs in all sectors of the Saskatchewan economy. I look forward to similar announcements in the near future to diversify our economy.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann).

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the Hon. Member but I recognized him out of the usual order. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

LACK OF PARENTAL BENEFITS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to Parliament's attention a situation which occurred in Kitchener recently. Loretta Villeneuve was kept alive until her baby was delivered. Her husband, John McInnis, now has custody of the newborn infant.

John McInnis, like any parent concerned about his child, took a leave of absence from work to provide the care and attention that a newborn needs. In taking leave of absence he is not paid by his employer. So he went down to the unemployment insurance office and applied for maternity benefits. Of course, under the Unemployment Insurance Act he cannot collect maternity benefits. John McInnis inquired about parental benefits and was told that there are no such things as parental benefits and that, in fact, he does not qualify for maternity benefits. In fact, John McInnis is now being told that he should collect welfare.

• (1415)

We in the New Democratic Party have long advocated parental benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Program. The Government has refused to move on that very positive suggestion, and that puts people like John McInnis on the welfare rolls of Canada. It is a shame and a disgrace for the Tory Government to say it is concerned about people.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake.

POLITICAL PARTIES

NATO—POLICY OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, thank you for the second attempt at the same message. It seems to me that members of the NDP have found a very influential ally in their desire to withdraw Canadian forces from NATO.

When Prime Minister Jacques Chirac correctly criticized the NDP policy of withdrawing Canadian forces from Europe and outlined how that action would weaken the alliance and the security of Europe, guess who jumped to the NDP's defence? A little-known Soviet news agency, TASS, which distributes to newspapers all over the Soviet Union and abroad. This Russian news agency, for some strange reason, strongly supports the NDP position and vigorously attacked Mr. Chirac for even questioning it.

Let there be no mistake made by Canadians on this subject. Our PC Government supports NATO. Our PC Government will continue its assistance in the defence and stability of Europe. Our PC Government recognizes that Canadian efforts have helped to maintain peace in Europe for over 40 years. How could any rational, conscious, intelligent, thinking Canadian suggest that this policy should be changed?

CANADA POST CORPORATION

RECOMMENDATION THAT GOVERNMENT IMPLEMENT LABOUR RELATIONS SYSTEM TO MAINTAIN PEACE IN POST OFFICES AND IMPROVE SERVICES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post Corporation was created, among other things, to improve labour relations. Canada Post made it its policy, in April 1987, to suspend any employee for three days the first time he or she forgets to punch his or her time card and for five days with possible dismissal the second time.

Mr. Speaker, the private sector does not go that far. Such an action, such a policy is an act of confrontation. Canada Post Corporation, with the agreement of the Conservative Government, is pursuing a policy of confrontation and, ultimately, Canadians will have to pay for a poorer service that deteriorates every day.

I ask the Conservative Government to forbid Canada Post Corporation from harassing its employees and to institute a labour relations system that will bring peace in post offices and give us a good postal service.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

MINISTER'S INFRACTION OF PROVISIONS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question would be better directed to the Prime Minister, but I think I can ask the Deputy Prime Minister to answer it. On September 25, 1985, the Minister of Energy, who at the time was Minister of Communications, left the Cabinet because he was under investigation for possible infractions of the Canada Elections Act. The Minister rose in the House of Commons at that time and said:

> I am convinced that on completion of the investigation, my innocence will be established.

On November 28, Canada's Election Commissioner wrote to the Minister saying:

> Proof in the dossier demonstrates that you participated in an infraction again Paragraph 62.6——of the Elections Act. Three days after the Minister received that letter telling him that he had violated the Canada Elections Act, the Prime Minister put him back into the Cabinet.

Why is it that neither the Prime Minister nor his Minister told Canadians of the existence of the letter saying that the Minister had violated the law? While the Deputy Prime Minister is at it, maybe he can tell us why the Minister was put back into the Cabinet.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite right in pointing out that when this issue arose the Minister resigned and an investigation was launched by the appropriate authorities, the appropriate authorities being an officer of Parliament. The investigation was conducted and, after the investigation was complete, the Commissioner rendered a decision and concluded that no charges were to be laid.

The commission has the responsibility to ascertain and determine what charges, if any, should be laid. The commission had the authority and the obligation to oversee the investigation, and that was done in its proper form. A decision was rendered.

If the Member wants to second-guess or question the verdict of the Commissioner, he may very well do so. I might remind the House, Mr. Speaker, and the Hon. Member, that this is not the only investigation that took place. There are other investigations. Maybe the Hon. Member wants to question the verdict of the Commissioner in the other cases as well.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House take at face value the judgment of Elections Canada when they say that the Minister has been involved in an infraction of the Elections Act. It is the Government that does not believe it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONTENT OF COMMISSIONER'S LETTER

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, did the Minister tell the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister the whole truth about receiving the letter and its contents? If not, will the Minister be fired?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the letter having been sent and so obviously cannot answer the second part of the question. However, I do want to remind the Hon. Member again that the results of any investigation conducted under the auspices of this Act are reviewed by independent counsel retained by the Commissioner, as well as a counsel on the staff of the Chief Electoral Officer. It is the Commissioner who makes the decision as to whether any prosecution should be carried out. In this particular case he decided that one should not be.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister does not seem very curious. When one realizes that a person has been determined to have violated the law and that no charges were laid, someone should have asked questions.

QUERY WHY MINISTER REAPPOINTED TO CABINET

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, ordinary citizens were prosecuted under the Canada Elections Act in this case, and some were even convicted. Meanwhile, the big cheese got off without a single scratch and was even rewarded with a Cabinet appointment. My question for the Deputy Prime Minister is this: Why did the Minister go back to Cabinet when the Government knew Elections Canada had found he violated the Canada Elections Act?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member suggests that I have not shown an interest in this particular issue. Perhaps if he had shown the same interest as I and determined the facts, he would not be asking such silly questions.

The fact of the matter is that a backgrounder has been issued by Elections Canada. I would like to quote from it for the benefit of this Hon. Member, other Hon. Members, and the Canadian public. It reads: "The Commissioner consents to prosecution only when he is satisfied that he has all the necessary facts and only in those cases where he believes that it would be in the interest of justice to do so and where there is every likelihood that a prosecution will succeed."

That is a judgment call he has made. If the Hon. Member is questioning the judgment of the Commissioner, let him go ahead and do it outright. However, I can only assume that that is the basis upon which the judgment was rendered. I wish the Hon. Member would accept it as such.

AIR SAFETY

OTTAWA INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—HANDLING OF BOMB THREAT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and calls into question yet again the Government's handling of airport security.

The Deputy Prime Minister knows that a bomb threat was directed at the Ottawa airport this morning. He knows as well that the handling of this threat was as confusing as the Tower of Babel.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House why the Government's security arrangements failed utterly at the Ottawa airport this morning? Why, in particular, were airline ticket agents evacuated from their posts as a result of this threat while hundreds of members of the travelling public were left standing at the ticket counters, oblivious to the bomb threat and totally abandoned in what was being treated as a serious bomb threat by a terrorist organization?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House and Canadians that when we received the information about the possibility of there being a bomb at the airport, a search had already been started, and the subsequent conclusion was that it was a false alarm.

Again, I wish to say that security is priority number one for this Government and that all mechanisms are in place to ensure that Canadians and, in fact, all travellers can travel safely, and this morning we were told it was a false alarm. It is up to the individual airline to decide whether it should or should not delay its flights. In any case, everything is now under control.

• (1425)

REPORTED LACK OF PUBLIC WARNING

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): In light of the Air-India disaster and countless other less lethal but nevertheless embarrassing and revealing security lapses we have seen over the last year, that answer is not good enough.

Bomb detection teams were brought into the airport. Extra RCMP security personnel were brought into the airport. Company employees were directed to leave their posts. If the threat was serious enough for all of that action, why were members of the travelling public left standing, confused and abandoned, in what could have been a serious incident? The Minister knows full well that if this had been a serious incident there would have been many injuries, or worse, this morning. When will the Government get its act together so that members of the Canadian traveling public can travel in confidence in our country?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, the Chairman of the ICAO Council said again last August that Canada ranked first on safety and security. Programs are in place involving staff and the airlines to ensure maximum security, and these programs will be upgraded regularly.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

QUERY WHY TREATMENT OF ORDINARY CITIZENS DIFFERED FROM THAT ACCORDED TO MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

I have a copy of a letter from the Commissioner of Canada Elections sent to the Hon. Member for Frontenac on November 28, 1985. In his letter, the Commissioner said the Member had violated the Act but that no charges would be laid.

On the other hand, three other citizens in the riding were prosecuted during the same period. Why the double standard: one for ordinary citizens and one for a Member of Parliament?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am very surprised that the Hon. Member, who has been a Member of this House for close to 20 years, would challenge the authority of an officer of Parliament. The Commissioner rendered a decision. I am surprised he would now stand up in the House and try to question the decision that was brought down by the Commissioner.

The fact of the matter is, as I have outlined earlier, that when allegations arose the Minister did the honourable thing and resigned until the investigation was completed and until a decision was rendered. As I pointed out—

Mr. Foster: Then you covered up the decision.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member suggests that I covered up the decision.

Mr. Foster: Your Government covered up the decision.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is a most unfortunate charge because, as the Hon. Member knows, the Government has no influence whatsoever over the Chief Electoral Officer—

Mr. Foster: Why did you not make it public?

Mr. Mazankowski: —or the Commissioner of Election Expenses. I would ask the Hon. Member to withdraw it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member, who I know would want to support the rules of this place, to withdraw the remark, if that remark was in fact said, that the Deputy Prime Minister has covered up in this affair.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to withdraw in view of the concerns of the House in this matter. However, I would like to see the exact timing of that legislation.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member. I hope Hon. Members and the public watching will recognize that, as I have said before, on matters of this sort the Opposition not only has a right but a duty to ask questions. But we are bound by rules and I thank the Hon. Member for recognizing that.

CHARGES LAID AGAINST INDIVIDUALS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He knows very well that in making this judgment the Commissioner said that it was not in the public interest to lay charges or have charges laid in the case of the Minister. Considering that comparable sums of money, of the same magnitude, were involved and three ordinary citizens were charged, is it not of some concern to the Deputy Prime Minister that it was deemed to be in the interest of justice and in the public interest to charge three ordinary Canadians with a serious offence but a Minister of the Crown is excluded?

While he is answering that question, does he not think there is a dangerous precedent which could undermine the whole principle of the Election Expenses Act if a significant corporate donation is no longer deemed to be a serious infraction? Are we not undermining the application of all of this law in subsequent elections if this is not dealt with in a totally adequate way now?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Hon. Member is asking me to interfere with a decision which was rendered by the Commissioner under the Elections Expenses Act. If he is, I really wonder if he might want to reconsider that.

Today the Chief Electoral Officer issued a statement on the role of the Commissioner of Canada Elections and perhaps for the benefit of all Members I might just quote a passage from it because I think it does clarify the issue. Mr. Hamel said, and I quote:

> —the Canada Elections Act makes it quite clear that it is the function of the Commissioner to decide whether or not to proceed to prosecute a case. The Commissioner consents to prosecution only when he is satisfied that he has all the necessary facts and only in those cases where he believes that it would be in the interest of justice to do so and where there is every likelihood that the prosecution will succeed.

I can only presume that it was on that basis he rendered his judgment.

COMMISSIONER'S LETTER TO MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the Deputy Prime Minister that he is probably quite correct, that the decision was rendered on that basis. However, I am indeed asking questions about that judgment about which I think all Members of Parliament ought to be concerned. If, on the one hand, in the letter it is clearly stated, based clearly—as it says in the letter, a copy of which I have—on an RCMP investigation, that there had been a violation of the Act by the Minister—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): An infraction.

Mr. Broadbent: —an infraction of the Act by the Minister, the same kind of infraction by other citizens that took place—

An Hon. Member: You are out of order.

Mr. Broadbent: —it is of legitimate concern, surely, for us to ask why was it not in the interest of justice for the Minister to have action proceeded with against him, but it was in the interest of justice to take action against three ordinary citizens.

In this context, is the Deputy Prime Minister aware if the contents of this letter, and its import, the contents of this personal, confidential letter to the Minister, have been brought to the attention of the Prime Minister of Canada? And could he tell us when the Prime Minister learned of the contents?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party again that we are dealing with a decision that was rendered by an officer of Parliament, an officer of this House. I suppose if the Hon. Member wants to take issue, there are certain ways in which he can take issue with that individual, I suspect through a parliamentary committee or, the fact is that we are presently undertaking a review of the Canada Elections Act, and if he has a concern about the way in which this is written, he can certainly provide some suggestions.

But if the Hon. Member wants to draw into question a decision that was rendered by the Commissioner in this case, perhaps then he is drawing into question an investigation that was conducted with respect to the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East—

Mr. Broadbent: There was no infraction by them and you know it.

Mr. Riis: A cabinet Minister broke the law.

Mr. Broadbent: There was no infraction.

Mr. Mazankowski: Is he now throwing into question or doubt the rendering of a decision by an officer of this House? Is that the issue?

Mr. Riis: Cabinets can break the law in this country—is that what you are saying? Forget justice.

Mr. Mazankowski: If the Member is taking issue with this decision, then it can only be presumed that he is taking issue with the others as well.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, no, it was an infraction over there, not over here.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST SITUATION—QUERY WHETHER MINISTER COMMUNICATED WITH ISRAELI COUNTERPART

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Yesterday, the Minister referred in the House to a situation in the Middle East as quickly becoming extremely explosive, because the Israeli Government was resorting to increasingly unacceptable measures.

Could the Minister inform the House whether he expressed this Canadian position personally to his counterpart, the Israeli Minister of Foreign Affairs, and if not, whom did he advise of this position? What concrete measures did he suggest? And more important, what was the Israeli response?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did not speak to the Israeli Minister of Foreign Affairs. However, the Israeli ambassador to this country will be in my office this afternoon, at my invitation.

REQUEST THAT INTERNATIONNAL CONFERENCE BE HELD

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. The Minister will agree that durable peace in the Middle East will never be achieved unless the parties concerned decide to meet and settle their differences.

Is the Secretary of State for External Affairs willing to propose that an international conference be held as soon as possible, in the light of the fact that the situation appears to be deteriorating from day to day?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we do not really need proposals for an international conference. What we need is the support of the parties involved for such a conference. I do not think another proposal will be useful at this time. However, I do believe that Canada and other countries should continue to urge the parties in the Middle East to consider ways of making an international conference effective and acceptable to the parties concerned.

THE CABINET

QUERY WHY RCMP RECOMMENDATIONS NOT TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I too have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. In connection with the situation of the Hon. Members for Hamilton East and Broadview—Greenwood, can he confirm that the Minister and Member for Frontenac violated the Elections Act? Can he now confirm that, during the investigation, the RCMP came to the conclusion that the Minister had personally been involved in a breach of the Elections Act? If it were so, can the Minister now explain why the RCMP recommendations were ignored by the Minister responsible?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): I can only confirm what the Commissioner of Canada Elections, Mr. John Gorman, said on November 28, and I quote:

> I have reviewed the results of the investigation which I received at 1300 hours on Thursday, November 21, 1985 as well as the recommendations of independent counsel which I received at 2030 hours on November 26, 1985 and I have decided that no charges will be laid against the Honourable Marcel Masse or his official agent, Jean Morissette.

I could continue to quote the rest of it but I think that is the pertinent section.

RCMP FINDINGS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister responsible, the Solicitor General of Canada, whether he can now confirm that the RCMP did find that the Minister and Member for Frontenac violated the Elections Act, that he did breach the Elections Act? Can he confirm that, Mr. Speaker? He is the one who answers for the RCMP.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, that is repetition of the question and the responses have been given under the aegis of the report of Mr. John Gorman, who is the Elections Commissioner. I think that should be sufficient for the Hon. Member. The investigation was carried out—

Mr. Riis: And he was found guilty—

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member suggests—

Mr. Riis: —of an infraction.

Mr. Mazankowski: —he was found guilty. That is not correct. That is simply not correct.

Mr. Nystrom: I didn't say that.

Mr. Mazankowski: An officer of Parliament took the decision that no charges would be laid. I have quoted from his statements. Surely, if the Hon. Members do not want to accept the word of an officer of Parliament, whose word will they accept?

Mr. Shields: Shirley Carr's word, that's whose word you opposite will accept.

Mr. Nystrom: The RCMP.

CODE OF ETHICS— REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF MEMBER FOR FRONTENAC'S FILE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and it also relates to the case of the Hon. Member for Frontenac. When he presented his Government's new code of ethics on September 9, 1985, the Prime Minister told Members of this House that the conduct of his Ministers had to be beyond reproach. Referring to the contents of Mr. Gorman's letter, I quote:

> —evidence on file indicates that you were party to a violation of section 62 of the Elections Act.

How can the Deputy Prime Minister justify the action of his leader, the Prime Minister, who after receiving this letter—or at least after he ought to have been made aware of the contents—chose to bring this Minister back into his Cabinet? Why did he not ask him to sit on the back benches?

● (1440)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Commissioner undertook to render a decision on this basis and on the basis of the evidence that he had gathered. He reviewed it, with the assistance of his own legal counsel and outside legal counsel. He arrived at a decision that no prosecution would take place.

I repeat, this individual is an officer of Parliament, an officer of this institution. We have accepted his verdict. I think that the Hon. Member as a Member of this place should do likewise.

REAPPOINTMENT OF MINISTER TO CABINET

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, it is not the Chief Electoral Officer who appoints Ministers. It is the Prime Minister who has to be held to account, and no one else.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House when the Prime Minister first found out about the contents of this letter? Is it not true, as the Minister of Energy said himself, that he phoned the Prime Minister's office and told him about the contents of the letter? If that is the case, if the Prime Minister knew of the contents of this letter, then why did he renege on his word that he gave solemnly in this House that he would not reappoint the Minister to Cabinet until he was proven innocent?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can attempt to hurl insults across the way as long as he wants. The facts remain the same. The Hon. Minister resigned when the allegation appeared. The investigation took place. Due process was followed and a decision was rendered. The results are for everyone to see.

Again, I repeat, I wonder why the Hon. Member will not accept the verdict, or the version, or the conclusion of an officer of this institution. If anything, the Hon. Member is undermining the integrity of this institution. He is undermining the integrity of an individual who is not able to be here to defend himself.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Deputy Prime Minister. When the Minister of Energy resigned he said that even the possibility of a complaint could leave in doubt the integrity which would reflect on the Government. He also said that once the investigation had been completed his innocence would be completely established. We now know as a result of the release of the secret letter that his innocence was not completely established. By the Minister's own words he is still a threat to the integrity of the Government.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister act to have the resignation of the Minister reinstated until there is a complete investigation and until, as the Minister of Energy has said himself, he is completely cleared? He is certainly not completely cleared now.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member with all his experience may find it expedient to find the individual guilty. However, the Commissioner quite frankly says that he has the right to prosecute only when he is satisfied that he has all the necessary facts, and only in those cases in which he believes that it would be in the interests of justice to do so and where there is every likelihood that prosecution will succeed. Obviously, he did not believe that he had sufficient evidence to proceed with a guilty charge.

Again, I submit that the Hon. Member should accept the word, the verdict of a Commissioner of this institution. Not to do so is simply undermining the integrity of that office and the integrity of this institution.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONTENT OF COMMISSIONER'S LETTER

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister. If he reads the full letter, the letter of which we finally have a copy, he will see that it says that the Minister had participated in an infraction against paragraph 62.6 of the Elections Act.

Mr. Thacker: It is an allegation.

Mr. Murphy: You do not have the letter, do not pretend you do.

That is what Mr. Gorman said. Obviously, the innocence of the Minister of Energy has yet to be proven. Since that is now known, why not have the Minister resign until the issue is clarified?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there is a very fundamental axiom in Canadian life, that is, one is innocent until proven guilty.

Notwithstanding that, I thought that I would never have the opportunity to use the following article. It is an article that appeared in The Ottawa Herald on Wednesday, December 16, 1987. I thought it was somewhat harsh, but it does state this: "Turner and Broadbent: opposition muckrakers . . . 'murdering' parliamentary decorum".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Withdraw!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York West.

IMMIGRATION

ADMITTANCE OF CONVICTED TERRORIST—NEWSPAPER REPORT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It concerns the convicted terrorist who was granted landed immigrant status by the Government.

Throughout the entire week the Minister has maintained that the positive identification of this individual was only confirmed and established after he came into the country and that CSIS officials in Spain approved of the application on the grounds that they received misleading information from the applicant.

Will the Minister confirm or deny reports in The Toronto Star of today which suggest that the Canadian officials were informed and alerted to the man's true identity and record by either the CIA or the Israeli Secret Service even before the man set foot upon the aircraft that eventually brought him into the country?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware or familiar with the article to which the Hon. Member refers. I can only repeat what I have said in the House earlier. I am advised by my officials in CSIS that a positive identification was not established on the man in question until the month of May, 1987.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is not familiar with the suggestion, then, with all due respect, he should read the article. It poses some very interesting concerns and possibilities regarding what really happened in Spain.

SERVICE OF DEPORTATION PAPERS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Minister of State for Immigration. Given that yesterday the Solicitor General informed the House that the whereabouts of Mr. Mohammad were only confirmed at 1.55 p.m., and that following Question Period the Minister and his staff informed reporters that the deportation papers had been already served, will the Minister explain to the House why he wanted to mislead the public into believing that the deportation papers were already served when in fact the individual's Brantford lawyer today confirmed that Mr. Mohammad was served with the papers only this morning?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I was hoping that all Hon. Members would have learned the danger of citing newspaper articles without confirming the sources. We have a family, a father, a husband, whose job and life have been jeopardized because of some inaccurate quoting, for which one Hon. Member may now be apologizing or not apologizing.

I will confirm for the House that there is a convicted terrorist who is here illegally. Our intent is to use the full force of the law to get him out of the country. The deportation proceedings are under way. The papers have been served and the hearing will be next Monday.

AIR SAFETY

OTTAWA INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—REPORT OF BOMB THREAT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of State for Transport, or the Parliamentary Secretary, since it is the procedure that when a bomb threat is deemed to be serious and has to be dealt with, one or two individuals at any given airport have to make the decision. Once that decision is made, all appropriate actions are taken to evacuate employees and the public.

Is it not true that employees of one airline were notified, they vacated their positions and left the line-ups at their position counters; and employees of other airlines were not notified until they heard from employees of the first airline?

Can the Minister tell us why all of the airline employees were not notified, and why the public were left standing in the building while the employees of the airlines vacated their positions?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I was not at the airport this morning, so I did not experience the situation first hand. Security should be a shared responsibility. Transport Canada has a concern for security which we share with the airlines. We share that concern with the people who are responsible for our airports and we trust these people to act intelligently.

There was an investigation. A general search was conducted. It was a false alarm, and I am relieved to hear the case is closed.

We at Transport Canada maintain our concern for security and we are of course open to any advice or recommendations that might improve the situation.

QUERY WHY PUBLIC NOT WARNED

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): When an airplane is on the ground, or anything occurs in an airport, the responsibility is with the management of the airport, which is the Department of Transport, not the airlines, and it is not a shared responsibility. It never has been. I wish the Minister would inform herself of that.

Since it was deemed to be a serious threat and all the appropriate search measures were taken, can the Minister explain why provisions were not immediately laid on for the movement of the general public out of the airport terminal, either to another building or somewhere else in Ottawa? Why were the public left in jeopardy while airline employees vacated their positions? That is not the responsibility of the airlines, that is the responsibility of the Department of Transport. When will the Department really do something about airport security?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Transport)): I am afraid I will have to repeat what I said earlier, namely that our country has the best security system in the world. Our system measures up to any in the world, because it is well organized, because we can control the situation and we are, indeed, in control.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LUBICON LAKE INDIAN BAND LAND CLAIM

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and it concerns the whole question of the Lubicon Lake Indian Band land claim.

In October the federal Government appointed a negotiator. The Province of Alberta has appointed a negotiator. The report of the Hon. Davie Fulton has been released.

Can the Minister bring Canadians up to date on where these negotiations are going, and what we can expect for results?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the concern of the Hon. Member on behalf of his constituents. The commitment of the Government of Canada to settle this land claim is a commitment that will be fulfilled.

An Hon. Member: When?

Mr. McKnight: An Hon. Member says "when".

I have had discussions with the Lubicon Band. There are negotiators in place. There is a request by the Government of Alberta to have the genealogy of the Band in order that they may review the genealogy to assure themselves that the volume of land requested to fulfil this commitment could be ascertained.

We really believe that if the genealogy is transferred to Alberta, Alberta will then be in a position as a Government, and the people of Alberta will know the volume of land that should be transferred under the Constitution Act of 1930, and we will be able to proceed with the volume of land and other matters which are important to the Lubicon people in settling this outstanding claim.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

RECOMMENDATION TO CONVERT MATERNITY BENEFITS TO PATERNAL BENEFITS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister.

As he knows, both the child care report of 1986 and the Equality for All report of 1985 recommended changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act to convert maternity benefits to parental benefits and to rid the Unemployment Insurance Act of inequality. Similar recommendations were made by the Forget Commission and by the standing committee on employment. The Government did absolutely nothing about them.

Now we have the case of John McInnis of Kitchener who, as a father, claimed unemployment insurance benefits because he had to leave his job as a truck driver to take care of his child because the mother died in childbirth. He was refused benefits because he was a father.

I ask the Minister, what is he ready to do to help this father and child and provide for justice and equality under the Unemployment Insurance Act?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): The Minister of Employment and Immigration is away on government business at the moment. I would like to assure the Hon. Member that I will bring this question to his attention.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): The Government has been absent for a couple of years on this issue.

The fact is that four commissions have recommended the change that is required to bring about justice in this case.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister, be willing to bring in a Bill to change this matter immediately? I guarantee that on this side we will pass it immediately. Will he do that?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, it was the Government of which that Member was a part that brought in that legislation and—

Mr. Allmand: In 1945.

Mr. Weiner: It was never changed.

As I indicated, I will bring the matter to the attention of the Minister of Employment and Immigration upon his return to Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior on a supplementary to an earlier question.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LUBICON LAKE INDIAN BAND LAND CLAIM

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development regarding the Lubicon Lake Indian Band land claim problem.

The Minister knows the Constitution, or at least he ought to know it. The Constitution makes it clear that it is the trust responsibility of the Government of Canada to seek and obtain a just settlement with the Lubicon Lake Indian Band. If thereafter there is a problem with Alberta, then it is this Government that must meet that problem with Alberta.

Why will the Minister not carry out his constitutional obligations and enter into bilateral negotiations with the Lubicon Indian Band and reach a just and equitable settlement?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I view the Hon. Member's question as an appropriate question, and I know of his concern.

It is the responsibility of the Government of Canada to provide and assist the Lubicon people in this settlement. The Government of Canada does not control the Crown land in the Province of Alberta.

I have offered to the Chief of the Lubicon Band that we, Canada, will proceed with negotiations, and at a time period that would be appropriate to enter into tripartite discussions, I would ask the Band to reconsider its denial of that process.

If the Band does not wish to transfer the genealogy to the Province of Alberta in order that Alberta can fulfil its obligations under the Constitution Act, Canada is prepared to take further action that will put that genealogy in the public realm. The Government of Canada, the Government of Alberta, and the people of Canada will be able to see the genealogy, and at that time Alberta will be able to make the appropriate judgment as to the volume of land that should be provided.

I would much prefer to have that genealogy placed with Alberta voluntarily. However, Canada is committed to fulfilling its obligation, and the options available to the Government are that of either public court or an inquiry.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member on a supplemental.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, my question is also in relation to the Lubicon Band—

An Hon. Member: Sit down, Jim.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior has asked a supplemental. The Hon. Member for Skeena rises on the same issue with a supplemental, and I recognize the Hon. Member for Skeena.

REQUEST THAT FORMER BRITISH COLUMBIA SUPREME COURT JUSTICE REPORT TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is on the same issue of the Lubicon Lake Band. I know my colleague has other important questions to ask, but I should like to ask the Minister a very serious question. In relation to the request by the Lubicon Band to have former Conservative Justice Minister E. Davie Fulton involved fully in a reporting capacity to the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, would the Minister explain to the House, to the people of Alberta, and to the Lubicon Band, why he has refused to allow this former Justice of the Supreme Court of British Columbia to be involved?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. E. Davie Fulton provided a very important report. Mr. Fulton's view and Mr. Fulton's opinions are contained in that report. They are public. Mr. Fulton has a view.

In order to mediate one must be neutral. One must not have a point of view which has already been put forward to the public of Canada, to the Lubicon people. The one thing I would suggest is that if the Lubicon people wish to have Davie Fulton assist them, that is up to the Lubicon people.

However, in reporting to a House of Commons standing committee, one would hardly expect, looking at the confederational make-up of Canada, that the Government of Alberta would wish to have a mediator involved in something which is very important to the Government of Alberta, reporting solely to the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: There will be a single question from the Hon. Member for Outremont, followed by a single question from the Hon. Member for York East, and that will close off Question Period.

THE COURTS

OPPORTUNITY TO MAKE SENTENCES UNIFORM IN SIMILAR CASES—REQUEST FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF ARCHAMBAULT REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Last week, a judge in Ontario, at the federal level, handed down a totally unacceptable judgment in a case of sexual assault, namely a sentence of 90 days to be served on weekends only. The judge based his decision on the fact that the assailant was from a good family and that the victim did not suffer any serious physical or psychological effects. Mr. Speaker, it would appear that a number of judges across the country are applying legislation on sexual assault according to their own mood and milieu, and that there is a striking lack of uniformity in sentencing in such cases, depending on who the judge is.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister could inform the House when the Government intends to implement the Archambault Report which it has since February 1987 and which recommends sentence harmonization. When will the women of Canada be able to depend on our judicial system to see that justice is done?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. It is a serious and appropriate one. I share the concern of the Hon. Member with respect to the whole question of appropriateness of sentencing. Indeed I have addressed this matter on a number of occasions.

I should bring to the attention of the Hon. Member two things. First, the matter of sentencing is now a subject of consideration by the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General. I am awaiting the results of the deliberation of that committee.

In addition, I have taken my own initiative to discuss this matter with the provincial Attorneys General with whom the administration of justice under the Constitution basically lies. I hope to have a full discussion with respect to the Archambault Report with my provincial counterparts at an early date. I hope we will synthesize all these considerations on a very complex but important topic at an early date, so that we in Parliament can in fact address this matter.

APPLICABILITY OF PROVINCIAL LAW TO FEDERAL AGENCIES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. He has indicated that he believes all federal Departments and agencies should be subject to environmental law, but recently the Minister of Justice and the Department of Justice have defended federal polluters on the grounds of federal immunity from provincial legislation.

Will the Minister agree to amend immediately Bill C-74, which is presently in committee, to make absolutely certain that federal polluters are subject to all environmental laws? Will he ask his colleague, the Minister of Justice, to ensure that in future the defence of federal immunity will not be used in cases of this sort?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I believe strongly—and I know that my view is shared widely in the House—that the federal Government is not above the law. That principle applies as much to the environmental field as it does to any other.

When a federal Department or agency breaks the law and violates pollution controls, then the book should be thrown at it. That texture is woven into the very fabric of the Canadian Environmental Act now before committee.

Mr. Caccia: It is not.

Mr. McMillan: If the Hon. Member, and the Hon. Member for Davenport who is heckling me now, both of whom are members of that committee, believe that the law as it is proposed falls short of the principle that the Hon. Member for York East has now articulated in his question, I invite them to propose an amendment, and it will be viewed with great sympathy by me and by the Government.

PRIVILEGE

WITHDRAWAL BY MINISTER

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise today on a question of privilege. On reading Hansard of yesterday, I notice that in Question Period I inadvertently used a word that you normally would consider unparliamentary when I talked about a "tissue of lies" in discussing the Opposition's suggestion that millions of dollars were spent on trade documents.

I just want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that in no way was I implying that any Member of the House was lying; that would be unparliamentary. I was merely pointing out that the information was inaccurate. Therefore, I would like to take the first opportunity which is made possible today to set the record straight and withdraw the unparliamentary word.

Mr. Speaker: On what point is the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) rising?

Mr. Boudria: On the same point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Of course I do not want to cut off the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell on a point of order, but I would ask the Hon. Member to consider very carefully whether, in view of the complete withdrawal of what may well have been deemed to be an offensive word by the Minister, there is any need to pursue it further.

Mr. Boudria: Fine.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member.

ALLEGED INSINUATION OF WRONGDOING

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege as a result of remarks made by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) who mentioned me as being in a similar situation to the Hon. Member for Frontenac (Mr. Masse). I think that he should withdraw those remarks which are quite unfortunate and unfair to me.

I spent 13 months under investigation for an alleged offence. My name was entirely cleared and those of all my co-workers. I think it is most unfortunate that one's name is never entirely cleared.

It took Elections Canada a very long time; it sat doing nothing for a very long time, and finally when my name was cleared it was a total and complete clearance. It was stated unequivocally—and there were no secret letters—that there was no semblance of anything wrong done either by me or anyone in my campaign. I resent insinuations that there was anything suspect about that, and I regret the fact that months later I am still having to rise to clear my name. Certainly the Deputy Prime Minister ought to know better.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I gladly rise to indicate to the Hon. Member that I in no way impugned motives or actions of wrongdoing on her part. I merely mentioned, because I read it in the newspaper, that she was undergoing a similar investigation by Elections Canada. She was obviously cleared. In a similar manner the Hon. Member for Frontenac was cleared, yet Hon. Members across the way choose to bring the issue up. There were other Members under investigation. I was simply trying to make the point that an officer of this House rendered a decision and those individuals across the way are questioning that decision on a selective basis. I take issue with that.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Deputy Prime Minister's interjection, but this is worthy of clarification. It may be a modest clarification but nonetheless an important one.

The Minister referred to the fact that a number of Members of Parliament were being investigated. Indeed, there were three, one from each Party. The Liberal Party Member was totally exonerated. There were no infractions whatsoever by the NDP Member. The point they are making today is that there were infractions by the Hon. Member for Frontenac (Mr. Masse). I will just leave it at that. It was simply that distinction which was being made and I do not think the Minister, when he was making his case earlier, was suggesting there were any infractions by the other two Members. Perhaps some clarification of that would be appropriate.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear again by quoting from the November 28 news release from Elections Canada:

> "I have reviewed the results of the investigation which I received at 1300 hours on Thursday, November 21, 1985, as well as the recommendations of independent counsel which I received at 2030 hours on November 26, 1985. I have decided that no charges will be laid against the Hon. Marcel Masse or his official agent, Jean Morissette".

If that does not translate into a clearance of the Hon. Member for Frontenac, then I do not know what does. To do otherwise is to simply question the integrity of the Commissioner, and that is what the Hon. Member is suggesting.

Mr. Speaker: I think Hon. Members would want the Chair to exercise some judgment in this matter.

The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) rose at the first opportunity following what she took to be a remark by the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) which might be taken by some to indicate that she had been guilty of some infraction of the Elections Act. The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister rose and made it abundantly clear that that was not his intention. I think that ends the matter.

A further issue was raised in Question Period which we are now getting back into and I have to tell Hon. Members, with respect to questions asked regarding the resignation and investigation of an Hon. Minister, a question of privilege or point of order is not the place to pursue it. I am going to be quite firm in closing off any further comment in that respect under the guise of the question of privilege of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald).

I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) on what I hope is a somewhat different matter.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I think the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood has not been clarified and there is—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: With the greatest respect to the Hon. Member for Churchill, who has been of great assistance to me as Speaker on many occasions, I do not take lightly what he may wish to say. However, I am in some difficulty here. I think I heard clearly what the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister said and I have certainly taken that as a complete clarification and withdrawal of any suggestion that the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood was in any way guilty of anything wrong. Having said that, that ends the issue. Hon. Members will have to respect the position of the Chair in that regard.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I accept the ruling that you have just given but there is a new issue here. A similar remark was made concerning the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) today. While he may have withdrawn remarks made about the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), I hope he will take a brief moment and make a similar and unequivocal withdrawal of any remarks which may have harmed the reputation of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, of course I would be glad to do so in the same spirit that I did with respect to the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood. I was only using those as examples of issues which were investigated by the same officer of Parliament. Quite frankly, all I am suggesting to Hon. Members is that when we get into this sort of thing we should remember that when we are questioning the integrity or judgment of individuals, we do it right across the board. We cannot do it in a selective manner.

Mr. Speaker: I notice the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) wishes to rise.

POINT OF ORDER

ACCEPTABILITY OF QUESTIONS

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as a long-time Member of this House I must say that I am absolutely astounded by the line of questioning followed by both opposition Parties. I want to say why as a Member of this House—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has been given the floor. He should advise the Chair if he is rising on a question of privilege or point of order before getting into a long argument.

Mr. Thacker: It is a point of order as to whether or not perhaps yourself, as president of this assembly, should permit that type of question. As we all know, all sorts of charges can be laid and allegations made and those are handled, sometimes in a court of law; in this case, by the law of Parliament, the commissioner has that power. The RCMP are not judges.

If we are to get into the case of the Hon. Member for Frontenac (Mr. Masse) because of a leaked letter, then we have to get into all the supporting documents which might have been put before the commissioner with respect to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) and the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). We should not get into that at all, and I submit that perhaps as Speaker you should stop all of those types of questions.

The commissioner authorized by Parliament made the decision whether to prosecute or not. When he decides not to prosecute the slate is clean. There are no allegations that can be made against anyone.

As I said, I was quite shocked and astounded that Hon. Members would make that allegation against the Hon. Member for Frontenac because we will have to make the same ones against their people.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has risen and I thank him for not getting into extensive further debate on the issue raised in Question Period. However, I will take the Hon. Member's comments as a suggestion. I know it is suggested in the best spirit of this place, and it is perfectly proper to bring to the attention of the Chair the possibility that the Chair may have allowed some questions which under the circumstances ought not to be allowed. I will say this to the Hon. Member. Having allowed those questions, they cannot of course be undone. However, I will examine them carefully.

I am indebted to senior Members of this place who may from time to time wish to draw to the Chair's attention the possibility of error. I felt under the circumstances that the questions were appropriate, but I certainly will take into account the fact that the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) and perhaps some other Hon. Members may have felt that I extended too much latitude. I will examine that tonight.

I certainly want Hon. Members to know that the Chair does not take offence if Hon. Members bring to the Chair a question which perhaps the Chair should review, and I accept the suggestions of the Hon. Member in that regard.

Point of Order—Mr. Thacker

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, if Your Honour is to take into account the proposal made by my hon. colleague and start examining how much latitude you had given an Hon. Member, I would hope that you would listen to other points of view as well. We operate under the British parliamentary system and Your Honour and all my colleagues know that I am a great defender of the British parliamentary system. That British parliamentary system gives a lot of latitude to Members as to their way of questioning.

As much as we may resent the way some Members may ask questions, to me it is irrelevant under the British parliamentary system. If an Hon. Member chooses to go along a certain line, that may be resented by some other Hon. Members. I believe the Speaker is the supreme authority and will exercise his authority, having in mind the British parliamentary system which has worked very well for Canada. In the past, there were many things that I did not like, but I accepted them because they originated from the British parliamentary system, a good system.

The Hon. Member is saying that in certain cases the Speaker should exercise his final authority, though I know the Speaker is too wise a man to jump too quickly to the conclusion that what was done today should not be repeated because then he will create a precedent with which we would not like to live in the future.

I do not question the sagacity or wisdom of my hon. colleague's intervention. However, even he may not like his own intervention tomorrow if we were to enter into a very difficult debate for which there was already a precedent. What I like about the British parliamentary system, but what may sometimes not be to our tastes, is the strength of precedents. Because Mr. Speaker so and so, on a certain occasion many years ago, said the following, we shall today say the same. I do accept that, but we should not ask the Speaker to set a precedent with which the Hon. Member himself may not be ready to live in the days, months or years to come.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I will speak strictly to the point of order. I do believe that it is important for Members of the House, even for government Members, to be able to ask questions when they believe there is a need to do so. In this case the government Member said that the Commissioner of Elections made a decision on November 28, 1985, and therefore we in Opposition should not be able to ask questions on this matter. That is completely out of place.

The Commissioner made his decision and released a press release at that time which left a certain impression in the minds of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and others. We did not raise questions after the issuance of that press release because we were also left with a certain impression at that time. However, we now have a letter before us which gives us a different impression, an impression which demands that certain questions be asked in the House.

After examination, we have found that the letter sent to at least one other Hon. Member of the House by the Commissioner of Elections, the letter sent to the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), was a different letter from the secret letter that was sent to the Hon. Member for Frontenac (Mr. Masse). The fact that these two letters are different and that one letter, the letter to the Hon. Member for Frontenac, ended by saying that the letter would be kept secret indicates that there is a reason for the issue to be raised in Parliament. I think—

Mr. Speaker: I always welcome the assistance of the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). Perhaps it is appropriate for me to say that while the Chair has listened, as I think the Chair is bound to listen, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) took a position with respect to the sometimes difficult line between what is an acceptable question and what is not an acceptable question.

I have listened very carefully to the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) who has served in this House for longer than most of us and whose judgment on these matters is of very considerable importance, especially to the Chair, and who has reminded the Chair that there is an obligation and a duty to ask questions, and that in order to pursue the truth some latitude must be exercised. I have said to Hon. Members in the past, and I will say it again, that even in a difficult matter my view is that not only does the Opposition have a right to inquire, despite the fact that it may be a difficult matter, it indeed has a duty. I hope Hon. Members will agree that I as Chair have tried, as I intend to continue to do, to diligently apply the rules in such a way that there is in every real sense the free and proper right to ask questions, as there must also be the full opportunity of reply, subject of course only to this. We must not ask questions in such a way that inappropriately and wrongly traduce or destroy the reputations of other people.

I know that the Hon. Member for Churchill is making the point that despite the fact that sometimes questions are difficult and awkward, and sometimes on difficult issues even worse, the Chair ought not to be too restrictive. As I said earlier, questions were asked today and I allowed them. I allowed them because I thought they were appropriate, despite the fact that it was a difficult issue. As I have said, of course I will read carefully those questions and answers because, as I have said to the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills, the Chair has an obligation to consider a concern if it is raised by an Hon. Member.

I think we have probably gone just about as far as we need to go. However, I indicated that I would hear the Hon. Minister and I would welcome his intervention.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. Just by way of background, Your Honour and I were elected at the same time, and you will recall that in the early days of our time in this House it was common practice during all periods of parliamentary debate, including Question Period, for Hon. Members to rise on points of order and questions of privilege if they felt that a question, comment or statement was in fact contrary to the rules as set out in the Standing Orders or in Beauchesne's. That practice carries on during debate now and the Chair does not always respond to every obvious violation of Standing Orders or practices of Beauchesne's, but the Chair certainly listens if someone rises on a point of order or a question of privilege in relation to a statement made, and the Chair reacts to that.

Because of the time that was taken up during Question Period with points of order and questions of privilege, the House decided, with agreement on both sides, that we would no longer permit points of order and questions of privilege during Question Period. That created a dilemma, I believe, and has over time caused the practices of the House in Question Period to change, not so much by deliberate choice or by decision of the House that this is the way we should go, but rather by the fact that there was then missing an opportunity to identify on a timely basis changes in procedures, questions and responses that may not have been in keeping with the practices as set out in the Standing Orders or in Beauchesne's.

I do not want to go into the details of the matter. I was of the opinion that parts of the questions raised by the Leader of the New Democratic Party were out of order simply because they asked a question of the Government that was beyond the Government's competence. I would have to read the "blues", but they were something to the effect of why the Commissioner of Elections took such and such an action. That is clearly beyond our competence. Had that been asked in normal debate or prior to the change in rules I would have been on my feet to say, on a point of order, that that question was out of order. The Chair could have agreed or disagreed with me at that point. My point is that through practice there have been no opportunities for Members on either side to raise those kinds of things.

I welcomed in your response to the Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker), Mr. Speaker, the indication that the Chair welcomes these kinds of observations and that, should Members believe that certain questions are out of order at any time, the House need not assume that each and every question has been carefully considered by the Chair and should be assumed to be in order unless the Chair ruled them out of order. In fact, the Chair welcomes observations about their appropriateness, propriety, and so on, and would take them into account.

I welcome that. I hope we would re-establish that practice. I believe it is Citation 359 of Beauchesne's which describes the kind of questions that are allowed, which bears no relationship to what happens here now. I am not sure that it is the result of a carefully thought out decision on anyone's part what we want this place to become and how we want to project to the public that sent us here. Rather, I think it has arisen in part because of the inability, through the changes we made, to have an opportunity for discussion on both sides to determine what is appropriate demeanour, response, and so on.

I welcome the opportunity to have this debate. I think we would do greater service to the public if we were a little more careful sometimes, if we had the opportunity to examine what we were doing, and if we exercised better judgment. I hope I am not being unfair, but too often it seems that it is the demands of the ten o'clock and eleven o'clock news which dictate behaviour in this Chamber rather than what we as parliamentarians in our heart of hearts would like to see this Chamber do.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the comments of Hon. Members. Those of us who were here some years ago will remember that a point of order or question of privilege was a very effective way of sidetracking Question Period. While they cannot now be raised at that time, I want to assure the House that when Members have concerns, as they do from time to time, as your Speaker I want to hear about them. In most cases the suggestions and counsel that are received from Members here are indeed of help to the Chair.

The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) has a question of privilege of which I have received notice. It is somewhat complicated and I will hear him now.

PRIVILEGE

COMMITTEE ON ABORIGINAL AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—REQUIREMENT FOR COMMITTEE TO REPORT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the issue is a little bit complicated. I will try to give you some idea as quickly as possible of from where the question of privilege flows.

A Bill known as Bill C-31 was passed by the House on June 12, 1985. Clause 22 of that Bill has two requirements, the first one being that the Minister shall cause to be laid before each House of Parliament, not later than two years after the Act is assented to, a series of items of information in relation to Bill C-31, including the number of people involved, the names and number of bands, and the impact of amendments on the lands and resources of the bands.

My question of privilege does not flow directly from that clause but from subclause (2) which says:

> Such committee of Parliament as may be designated or established for the purposes of this subsection shall——not "may", but "shall"—"forthwith"—and its "forthwith", not "sometime in the distant future"—

> —further on after the report of the Minister is tabled under subsection (1), review that report and may, in the course of that review, undertake a review of any provision of the Indian Act enacted by this Act.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) did table a report in June, 1987, as was required. There was a rather lengthy debate, as you might recall, in this House as a result of the fact that there was almost no information in the report. However, that is a debatable point.

The point I want to get to is that the committee of Parliament, which has been designated by this House as the Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, shall report forthwith. That report has been before the Standing Commmittee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development since June, 1987. In various areas and bodies of law in the country there are definitions of what "forthwith" means. In some areas of law it can mean a few days. In other areas it means other things. To Parliament, obviously, it means the requirement to move with some kind of speed.

The difficulty is that last year there was a Chair appointed by the Government for the committee on aboriginal affairs but the committee was not called for nine calendar months last year. No witnesses were heard and no business was undertaken. I am not certain what could possibly have gone on to cause the committee not to sit.

However, last fall I was appointed to the Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development and am the permanent member of it. A steering committee meeting was held and a new Chair was chosen. As my colleague, the Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), and I have said on the record to the Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil), we were prepared to call it a new day in the committee and try to get the committee going. We began to invite witnesses in relation to Bill C-31 as we have a statutory responsibility to do. We invited the Assembly of First Nations, the Prairie Treaty Nations Alliance, and the Native Council of Canada, and we started moving on with other groups of witnesses.

Just before the break a committee meeting was held and a decision was taken there by motion and vote to call Mr. Justice E. Davey Fulton before the committee in February in relation to the Lubicon Indian band. The clerk of the committee was in touch with Mr. Fulton and he agreed to come on February 9. A very cordial and businesslike meeting of the committee was held with regard to the calling of other witnesses.

It was decided by all three Parties which were represented there that, because of the large number of witnesses—the Native Women's Association, and various bands, tribal councils and groups from across the country—who wanted to come, the job should be left to the staff and the clerk of the committee to request the presence of those witnesses on certain days beginning on Tuesday of this week for a full day of hearings and today for a full day of hearings.

The concern that I have, Mr. Speaker, is that without any notice or any attempt to give you notice by phone or mail, through the clerk or by any other means, the Chair of the committee cancelled all of those witnesses and all of those committee meetings. In some situations this might be seen only as an unfortunate situation, but this appears to be a conscious design in that once the committee stopped sitting last year it never sat again. It did not sit week after week until it had gone for nine months without sitting. The only committee of Parliament that did not sit during those months was the Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

The concern that I have is that members of that committee at the very least, if not all Members of the House, are in some way, albeit in a grey area, in breach of the law. I direct you, Mr. Speaker, to look at Clause 16 which comes just before Clause 22, which says that should an aboriginal Canadian, Indian, Inuit, or Métis, violate any clause of Bill C-31 they are liable to extensive fines and up to six months' imprisonment. There are jail terms and fines for any aboriginal person who contravenes any clause of this Act, but neither the Minister nor the committee has done what is required by the law.

It seems to me that there is an intentional blockage of the committee. I came here with my schedule prepared for a full day of hearings on Tuesday. I learned only yesterday, and confirmed it this morning, that all of the witnesses and all of the hearings were cancelled for today as well. This leads me to believe that members of the committee are in some way already in breach of Section 22(2). There must at some point be a definition of "forthwith". It surely cannot mean never. If saying that a parliamentary committee must report forthwith means that it never has to report, that is an interesting new definition of forthwith, albeit something which many aboriginal people have come to expect.

I have had calls from aboriginal groups who have been denied their right to appear as witnesses. It is starting to cast a shadow, and not only upon the Government. There are many aboriginal people who are extremely angry with the Government because of its policies. However, this is now casting a pall upon all Members.

My final point is that I have things to do in terms of serving my constituency. I arranged my time to be here for committees that were scheduled six weeks ago. On Monday of this week the Chair of the committee cancelled those for Tuesday. I am not sure when he cancelled the hearings for today.

I cannot arrange my calendar to the whim of a chairman who has never called me. He has been in the House every day but has never spoken to me or given me a note. At some point I think the Chair will have to rule on the meaning of "forthwith", whether we are in breach of the law, and at what point the cancelling or lack of holding of committee meetings reaches the privileges and reforms of the House. I am prepared to move a motion to move this entire matter before the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure, where I think it should best be resolved.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has certainly put his case succinctly and has given the Chair a clear and concise statement of the facts and points in issue, which is helpful.

I will hear other Members, certainly the Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner).

Of course, the Hon Member for Skeena has every right to put his case fully, as he has done. However, I now want any other Member who may address the Chair on this issue to keep in mind my gentle but nonetheless what I believe appropriate comments before Christmas on several judgments, that it has to indeed be a very serious matter before the Chair could be entitled to interfere into proceedings that are held by a committee.

If something is going on or not going on in a committee that takes it out of the ordinary and in fact works against the capacity of the Member to do his or her duty as a Member of Parliament, then there may be cases where the Chair can intervene. However, I need assistance from Members now as to whether these facts take us into what I would call that exceptional category.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, your instructions regarding how we should approach this question of privilege are most helpful. Indeed, I will argue that there are such circumstances that do call for intervention from another authority.

All Hon. Members in the House will know that ordinarily, as Your Honour has suggested, committees are masters of their own arrangements. They control the manner and the rate in which they do their business. We could call that a precedent of the House of Commons. The committees are only subject to Standing Orders.

For example, if a committee refuses to meet, then it can invoke Standing Order 92(2), which states that four members may require a meeting. I will not go over that Standing Order and take up your time, but would just add that when there are only two opposition Members on a committee, Standing Order 92(2) very quickly becomes inoperative.

If we were to argue just that, we would be bringing to your attention something that could be called a grievance rather than a privilege and you would be quite correct in dismissing it forthwith.

However, the current situation with the Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Committee is really quite different.

I want to argue that at the present time the aboriginal affairs committee of the House is under the obligation of law to fulfil certain duties. Namely, it is to look at the impact of Bill C-31 and is required to report to Parliament as to what changes are necessary. It is a statutory obligation, laid upon the aboriginal affairs committee.

According to Beauchesne 4th Edition, Citation 13, page 12, whenever there is an expressed order of the House, whenever there is a statute or statute regulation, that supersedes every mere usage or precedent. Therefore, the concerns that you raised about whether we were just calling upon you to interfere with the operation of a committee, you can see immediately that we go well beyond that because we are under the obligation of the law.

The Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) and myself, as members of this committee, want very much to fulfil our statutory obligations. However, we believe that we are being prevented from doing so. When an Hon. Member is in any way prevented from carrying out his or her duties, then I would argue that this becomes a prima facie case of privilege.

Let me illustrate. Before the Christmas recess, it was agreed by all Members that we would allow the staff to do the scheduling, to call the witnesses and immediately upon resumption of Parliament, beginning this week of January 18, we would get down to work. Those witnesses were properly notified. They made their travel plans and were prepared to be here. Then, unilaterally, on his own volition, the Chairman cancelled all the meetings. All of those witnesses had to be notified not to come to Ottawa and they were inconvenienced and extremely angry and upset.

I think it could be argued that the Chairman is breaking the law. There is in the Criminal Code of Canada a very generalized penalty for breaking any statute. However, I will not argue that point at all because I would not want to tempt the Speaker to tell me to refer this matter to the Attorney General of Canada and have the matter delayed.

What we need is immediate action from Your Honour. If the chairman of the committee will not follow the law on his own volition, he must be directed to do so by someone who has authority over him. You, Sir, as the first among equals in this House, have that authority to order Members of Parliament to obey the law as that law impinges directly on them. Therefore, I am asking you to rule in favour of a question of privilege so that the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure can fully review this matter and be empowered to issue very strict orders that the committee must meet and must report because the law requires it to do so.

Let me add another illustration. If the Auditor General of Canada did not carry out his important duties and report to Parliament, there would be an outcry. If the Public Accounts Committee did not meet to consider a report from the Auditor General, that would be a serious matter. It would be a grievance, but no law would be broken.

The Auditor General, however, must audit and the Auditor General must report. The law requires him to do so. He is under a statutory obligation.

Similarly in this case, I am arguing that the Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Committee does not just operate on its own will. It is under the obligation of Section 22(2) of an Act of Parliament under Bill C-31. It is operating under the law and must, therefore, meet forthwith.

The Hon. Member for Skeena indicated that the Minister for Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) reported on June 26, 1987. The aboriginal affairs commmittee did not have a single meeting on Bill C-31 until December 10 and the Statute says that it is to meet forthwith. How liberally can one interpret the term "forthwith"?

I call upon you, Sir, to intervene in the name of the law and to get this committee working and operative so that its statutory obligations can be fulfilled.

Mr. Speaker: Before I proceed to the next Member, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) referred to Beauchesne. He gave a page and citation. Would he assist the Chair?

Mr. Penner: I was referring to Beauchesne 4th Edition, page 12, Citation 13.

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I rise to address the point under discussion, as Chairman of the committee in question.

With respect to the initial point of meeting forthwith, the Speaker and the House should know that the committee in fact had several meetings prior to Christmas. Several of those meetings were unusually long in an effort to respond to the need to examine the implications of Bill C-31.

With respect to the second point about cancellation of meetings, there has been no cancellation. No meetings were ever called. It is true that some witnesses were contacted.

A rescheduling process has taken place with some of those witnesses. If the Members who preceded me had been thorough in their comments they should also have commented that I have instructed the clerk to formally call meetings for next Tuesday and next Thursday. The clerk had this knowledge this morning and, indeed, yesterday. I am surprised that the Hon. Members did not bring forward this information.

I repeat, no meetings have been cancelled. Some witnesses were called. Tentative schedules were discussed. A re-scheduling process is under way. A tentative re-scheduling process has been drafted. It will be presented to the committee on Tuesday. It is an ambitious program to examine the implications of Bill C-31 and I am sure all committee members will be pleased with the plan which the Chairman will bring forward to the committee on Tuesday.

Although the statute in question requires that an examination be undertaken forthwith, it does not require that conclusions be made in an immediate way. Therefore I do not share the concerns of the previous speakers. I believe the committee is moving along in a very aggressive way.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can assist Hon. Members. I have listened very carefully to the Hon. Member who is the Chairperson of the committee. What I would prefer to do at the moment is to adjourn this application of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). It may well be that the matters complained of are about to be corrected. However, I do not sit in judgment on that.

I do want to repeat again, in the interests of all Hon. Members and in the interests of members of the public who watch this place, it has to be an exceptional matter, indeed, for the Chair to interfere with committee proceedings. I am not saying, and I have never said, that something might not go wrong in a committee that would require the Chair's intervention. If I think something is happening in committee where, under exceptional circumstances, Members are not allowed to get on with the business they were sent here to do then that, of course, gets awfully close to privilege and the Chair would have to consider it.

I think I can save everyone some time, perhaps, by adjourning this matter, leaving, of course, all rights open, and I want to thank Hon. Members and the Chairperson, who obviously returned from some other obligations to come into the House and assist the Chair. The matter is adjourned and I will return to the House with this matter if it is necessary to do so.

Mr. Lewis: With respect to this matter, we did discuss this at length and the Chair brought down an excellent ruling prior to Christmas vis-à-vis what matters of privilege that happen in committee should be dealt with by the House. With respect, Mr. Speaker, I think that point ought to be the first point established in a question of privilege dealing with committee matters.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my calendar says today is Thursday. That being the case I do want to ask the Deputy Government House Leader to give us a statement of Government business for the next seven days.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, with respect to today, despite what I consider to be an unnecessary delay, we had hoped we would be able to complete the important legislation on the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. Unfortunately, the protracted debate has delayed that. However, we would hope the Opposition would see fit to let that important Bill go to committee and not stall it any longer.

Tomorrow we will deal with a variety of Bills, depending on the availability of critics. We appreciate that people have other things they may perhaps be doing. I am referring to Bill C-104 which deals with the Statutes of Canada, Bill C-99, the Currency Act, Bill C-96, amendments affecting agricultural matters, and Bill C-91, which is under Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

We will be designating Monday as an allotted day. With respect to Tuesday, we have been continuing discussions with respect to the amendments which have been sent back from the Senate with respect to Bill C-84 and we may or may not be able to proceed with those. We are also looking at Bill C-60, the report and third reading of the Copyright Act.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I want to thank the Government House Leader for his statement. However, I do want to take exception to his use of the word "stall" with reference to the exercising by Hon. Members of their right, in fact obligation, to take part in debates in this House on important matters. I do not think that speeches by Hon. Members, including Hon. Members on the Minister's own side of the House, should be subtly criticized by being referred to as "stalling". That certainly is not the case and I am sure the Minister knows better.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I too want to say that we appreciate receiving this tentative agenda for work planned for the House of Commons. But like my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), has indicated, I want to register my concern at the Deputy Government House Leader's remark that we are holding up legislation. If my recollection serves me, we have had probably four or five speakers from the New Democratic Party on a Bill that the Economic Council has recognized as one of the most important issues economically facing our country in this decade.

I, for one, certainly do not apologize for spending two or three days talking about this Bill. It is a very important Bill. It has major flaws attached to it. I just do not want to give any impression that we will accept the notion that we are somehow prolonging unnecessarily the debate on this Bill. I think if one looks at our track record, one can see the tremendous amount of co-operation the opposition Parties have shown. It has resulted in a tremendous amount of legislation actually having moved through the House of Commons in the last number of months. There has been a tremendous amount of co-operation. And we plan to continue to do that. However, when it comes to very important pieces of legislation, such as is Bill C-103, we want to ensure that Members have an adequate opportunity to provide their views, particularly to point out in this case the shortcomings of this legislation.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the fact that it has been a difficult week for my colleagues and I want to withdraw any implication that in debating this Bill they were stalling. I said it in an off-hand manner and in no way did I intend to impute any ulterior motives.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, ATLANTIC CANADA, 1987

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Riis: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I realize that the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) is rising, wishing to continue on the question or comments following the intervention of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil). Unfortunately, as the Hon. Member has had to leave the House, that period for questions or comments is, therefore, eliminated. We are now resuming debate.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, it is my understanding that the 10 minute interval is for comments or questions. I do not see that the fact that the member is not here makes any difference. He knew this was going to be the comment and question time. It is obviously impossible to ask him a question but it is still possible to make a comment, if Members so wish.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): This is a question that has arisen in the House on quite a few occasions previously. At other times as well the occupant of the Chair has always seen fit to resume debate. The comments or questions following an Hon. Member's intervention should normally be followed by the Member's own answer on to the comments or questions. As other occupants of the Chair before me have done whenever the Member has had to leave the House, the period for questions or comments has been eliminated. Resuming debate.

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, I am very aware of the previous rulings on this particular matter, but I would submit to Your Honour that there is a slight difference in this particular case because the Hon. Member for Skeena, I believe, had the floor at one o'clock and was in mid comment—

Mr. Fulton: No, no. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) was, then he left.

Mr. Althouse: The Hon. Member had the floor when one o'clock was called and I think that this is a slight variation from anything the Chair has ruled on before, if my recollection is correct.

• (1600)

Mr. Harris: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) was in mid-speech when the clock reached one o'clock, at which time Your Honour interrupted to say that perhaps the Hon. Member would like to continue his remarks when debate resumed. I now see that this is perhaps a different point of order.

Is the Chair suggesting that the ruling is that a Member by walking out of the House can prevent another Member from continuing a speech that is being made? If that is the rule then this is quite a different point of order from the one that was previously made. It would seem to me to indicate that if I do not like what someone is saying, especially in terms of a comment being made by a Member opposite, then I can get up and leave my chair and, all of a sudden, the question and comment period ceases. If I do not like a question or the tone of voice of an Hon. Member, then I can walk out and that would stop a speech from being made, or a comment. I do not think that that is the intention of the Chair in making the previous rulings that Members of the House by removing themselves can stop someone from speaking.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair's feeling is that, contrary to what the Hon. Member is saying, if a Member is not in agreement with what he or she hears then he or she would want to stay to have the opportunity to answer.

I would like to go back to a ruling made by the Speaker in 1985 in which he stated:

> Therefore, it is to me not sensible when a debate has been adjourned for a normal period of time, overnight or a lunch period or a week or whatever, to allow the questions and the comments to continue in the unavoidable absence of the Member who made the speech.

That ruling shall stand. We can now either resume debate, or is the House ready for the question? The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) on debate.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on the Bill that is before us today. It has two principal sections in it, one being the establishment of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, and the other being the establishment of the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation.

This is an interesting piece of legislation. We have seen this type of thing laid out before the House before. What is really behind it is what residents of Atlantic Canada would like to know more about. I say that because they certainly have been given a great deal of bluster and shell game by government Members, including a Minister who spoke this morning, as to what is really happening in terms of the Bill. We know roughly what kind of new or old money will be allocated. It is just over $1 billion over five years, that is, just over $200 million per year.

The Bill purports to be a new kind of decentralization. A special board will be created and so on. As I intend to point out, there is far less money than there used to be, either under the present Government or under any other previous Government in terms of real dollars per capita for regional development in Atlantic Canada. There really is not the kind of decentralization that government Members herald this measure to be.

I think a great many Atlantic Canadians would like to know what is really happening in terms of job creation in Canada, what free trade will mean and what these two new agencies will mean in terms of economic development, and whether or not small and medium-sized businesses, to which they are supposedly targeted, are the ones which will really benefit. We have to do a bit of looking to see whether or not what the Government is telling the people of Atlantic Canada is in fact what will happen. That is the proper role of MPs, whether they be government Members or opposition Members. It is certainly the role of opposition Members.

Statistics were released last year with respect to where jobs were being created in Canada. Such was reported on February 28, 1987, in The Globe and Mail. It was stated in an article in that newspaper that day that between January, 1986, and January, 1987, the total number of jobs in the country rose by 137,000, according to unadjusted figures, but only 5,000 of those jobs were created outside of Ontario. That certainly was and is well known in western Canada, which is where I come from. I come from an area not terribly different from some parts of Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, or certainly some areas of the Province of Quebec, if we include some of its areas as having the type of employment difficulties that are found in much of rural, northern and maritime Canada.

The games that can be played with figures are many. We heard the Minister and various Members from the government side claiming that this is new money and that it is more money. They said that it would really be the initiative that would finally get Atlantic Canada's economy going. Then, on March 7, 1987, not too long after this article pointing out where jobs were really being created was printed, it was pointed out that it is those regions of the country where we are starting to find real sluggishness in the economy. We see that in the areas of the country where the economy is really at work there is no unemployment. I refer to Toronto and the Golden Horseshoe, or the Golden Triangle, or whatever one calls it depending on what part of the country one lives in.

Many Atlantic Canadians were interested when the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) said that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency may be the last kick at the can as far as development programs for the region from the federal Government are concerned. He went on to say, "I think it will work but it may be the last kick at the can from what the federal Government may do in the region". What does the Minister of Public Works mean? I think we have to look at some figures to find out just exactly what this means.

We can look at some federal Government figures to give us some idea of why this is really a shell game, that these are not new dollars or that this is not some kind of a great new initiative. In the regional development envelope, between the time the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) took office and now, there has been a reduction of $2.89 billion between fiscal 1984-85 and fiscal 1987-88. That figure will certainly rise to well beyond $3 billion by the time we end this fiscal year. There were cuts in the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion to the tune of $200 million in the first year the Conservative Government was in office. Some $100 million more was cut from the Department in 1985-86, while $150 million was cut from the Department last year. There have been all kinds of other cuts to the regional economy of Atlantic Canada. Some $16 million was cut from the East Coast ferry services. There was $100 million cut in Cape Breton alone in relation to the 700 jobs that were lost at the heavy water plants. The estimate, which is clearly accurate and perhaps even on the conservative side, is that on an annual basis since the election of the present Government there has been a cut in federal spending in the Atlantic region of $1 billion.

If we take a look at the figures we will see that there is around $200 million per year being proposed under these agencies being set up in Atlantic Canada with these boards having anywhere from up to 20 members. While $1 billion is being cut, $200 million is being replaced. This, of course, is something that Governments are embarrassed to admit, rather than announcing their plans year by year and saying, "We are taking $800 million away and we are giving you $200 million". A great many Governments forget that those dollars come from the people of Atlantic Canada. They come from Canadians. They are not printed solely here in Ottawa by Governments as they come and go from power.

What is happening is that the Government, rather than announcing the initiative province by province, a few million here and a few million there per year, adds all the provinces together and then multiplies by five. Why does it not multiply by 10? My colleagues have touched on this before. Why does it not multiply by 20, 30, or 40 to make it sound like some substantial amount of money? Certainly Atlantic Canadians and Canadians I represent in the most western constituency of Canada do not forget very quickly that this is the Government that, on a quick, late evening phone call signed a cheque and gave a $500 million gift to the Reichmann brothers in Toronto to help them along with their Gulf deal. They like to call it a tax break—the Little Egypt Bump—they do not like to admit that it is gift wrapped. Those are real dollars. They are not 50 cent or 80 cent dollars. The $500 million that was given to the Reichmanns was real Canadian taxpayers' dollars. Of course, there was the billion for the bank bail-out, and the billion for the bail-out of bad loans that banks had offshore. There is lots of money to be spent out of Ottawa, but the priorities of the Conservative Government are what have to be looked at. Those two agencies are being sold very much as a pig in a poke to Atlantic Canadians.

We have to take a look at what the Government has been saying this really is. They claim that it is decentralized control over regional development. Many Atlantic Canadians found there was too much bureaucracy, it was too difficult to get through to Ottawa, it was too difficult to find out what the programs were, and it tended to be seen very much more as a straight patronage oriented operation whenever money was spent.

Senator Lowell Murray, the Minister responsible for the new agency, ACOA, was reported in the Globe and Mail on June 27, 1987 as saying that final decisions will be made by him in Ottawa. "The ultimate responsibility rests with me," and a Cabinet committee made up of the six federal Ministers from the Atlantic region.

The Bill claims that the decisions are being put into the hands of some Atlantic Canadians from various areas of Atlantic Canada and that they are going to make the decisions. But we find that just as the Government does not want to give as much money as it is taking away, it also does not want to give the type of decentralized decision-making that it claims this Bill is all about.

The power of the Minister and the lack of autonomy of the agency is clearly articulated. Anyone who wishes to read it will find it in Clauses 5, 6, 7, and 20, that is regarding the role and powers of the Minister. Clause 11 reveals the ties that the President of the agency has with the Minister in that the President is the deputy of the Minister and is "under the direction of the Minister".

It is worth taking a moment to take a look at what has generally happened over the years with the commitments from Ottawa regardless of Government, and we find that there has been a decline. Over the last 25 years less than 3 per cent of total federal economic expenditures have been applied to regional development. That is a statement that I feel very much involved in, in terms of what types of money is actually returned to the north coast.

We have a salmon industry that is worth $750 million a year. Huge amounts of taxes are paid on that. We have Prince Rupert Grain operating once again. As a matter of fact, it started moving grain only a couple of hours ago. A very substantial amount of revenue is created and generated for farmers across the country as a result of the operation of that grain elevator, or Ridley Terminals, for the movement of northeast coal from northeastern British Columbia, Tumbler Ridge, and so on down and out through Prince Rupert.

I know how rarely it is that federal economic development moneys make it out to the distant regions of the country, whether it is in the forest sector, in relation to new technology, research and development for sawmills and so on; whether it is in the fishery sector, in the mining sector, or in generalized small and medium sized businesses. That is why all Canadians, not only Atlantic Canadians, should take a close look at what type of legislation this Government is bringing forward.

It is clearly a pre-election period. We see the Prime Minister trying to live up to his promises that his Government would double the amount spent on research and development. He is never going to make it, but at least he is attempting to live up to some promises. There is the western development initiative, the Atlantic initiative, the northern Ontario initiative. There will be more initiatives between now and the election. They will always be for large areas and for many years or multiples of years, for five or ten years, to make the amount budgeted sound very large, whereas in fact the early years of expenditure are almost always very small. It is a political expediency and trickery that Canadians who live in the regions have come to expect not only of the Conservative Government but very much of the Trudeau years.

Explicit regional development expenditures in 1984-85 for all of Atlantic Canada were in the order of $230 million. We also have to weigh that. Many Atlantic Canadians or members of their families spend part of the year collecting unemployment insurance because of their seasonal employment, whether it is in the lobster fishery, the cod fishery, as shore workers, in the forest sector, or in small business or tourism. But the $230 million that this Government felt was appropriate for regional development in Atlantic Canada is only 15 per cent of what is paid in unemployment insurance. We have to take a look at that. There was $1.6 billion coming out through unemployment insurance payments. The total amount that is going in for regional development is one-seventh of that amount. We have to start thinking about that in terms of how Government makes expenditures and what are its priorities.

Let us look at expenditures under DRIE's industrial incentive programs. They have decreased in real terms from $9 per person almost 20 years ago in the 1969-70 fiscal period to $4 under the Government. These are not inflation related dollars, they are 1981 dollars. There was $9 per person 20 years ago and it is $4 per person now. If that is a commitment to the small and medium-sized enterprises in Atlantic Canada, it is not much of a commitment to be as nice as one possibly can.

Comparing Newfoundland to the area I come from in the Queen Charlotte Islands where there is a lot of fishing, forestry, and similar types of occupations and similar types of unemployment found in the areas, for Newfoundland the reduction in the same period was from $9 per person to $3 per person, while expenditures under the general development agreements and economic and regional development agreements, known as GDAs and ERDAs, have declined from $16 per person 13 years ago to $14 under this Government in the 1984-88 period. We are seeing a decline in all of those areas whether one looks at it in terms of fixed dollars or in any other way.

For Newfoundland the reduction was from $126 per person to $80 per person, while Ontario experienced an increase from $2 to $3 per person. When comparing what is happening in the regions, we are seeing a real decline, whether it is measured over 20 years, 10 years, 5 years, or however it is measured. There is a reduction in the amount of real dollars going out for economic development into the regions, whether we are talking about the Atlantic region, northern British Columbia, or other regions of the country, whereas in the area of the country where there is no real measurable unemployment, because most of those people are moving between jobs which are found when there is 5 per cent unemployment, as is found in the constituency of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson)—that is how low the unemployment is there—there is an increase.

My colleague from St. John's East (Mr. Harris) has kindly provided me with the most recent Statistics Canada unemployment rates in percentage. Last year in Newfoundland it was 18.6 per cent; in Prince Edward Island, 13.3; Nova Scotia, 12.5; New Brunswick, 13.2; Quebec, 10.3; Ontario, 6.1; Manitoba, 7.4; Saskatchewan, 7.3; Alberta, 9.6; and British Columbia, 12.0. We start getting some idea of what is happening in the country.

We heard from the Minister of State for Forestry another example of a promise made by the Prime Minister. There was going to be a full Ministry and Minister of Forestry as soon as the Government was elected. What did we get? We got a Minister of State for Forestry, who is very good at his job. I am not running him down for one moment. I think that he is very good at his job, and that is certainly what I hear from the sector. But we find that he has been buried. He has almost no staff, almost no Department, and to give him more work to do, mining was added on.

The regional occupations of a very substantial number of Canadians are in the forest sector. There are more than 1 million Canadians, if one takes those who are indirectly and directly employed in the forest sector. So we have a Minister of State with half a dozen senior staff, attempting to assist in terms of all the programs and everything that is going on. We know that the forest sector is running into some very difficult times as a result of bad management of the resource. There are too many companies cutting an ever diminishing number of mature and harvestable trees. In the mining sector again we see the Minister overloaded.

We have to ask why the Government would decide to try to confuse the voters of Atlantic Canada as to what is really being done. It cut the funds, then it announced a partial return, then that is multiplied by five and called a major new program, a major new initiative. Then the Minister of Pubic Works states that it is the "last kick at the can". If that is the way the Conservatives think they will catch the interest of Atlantic Canadians, I think they will find out soon enough that it is not acceptable.

The Bill will give ACOA control over federal regional development programs specifically related to the Atlantic region—the Industrial and Regional Development Program, known as IRDP; the Atlantic Enterprise Program, known as AEP; the Small Businesses Loans Act as it relates to the region; IRDA subagreements in relation to forestry, tourism, and so on; and the Atlantic Development Program.

I think I have dealt with the key points that I wanted to cover in some detail. The Government has announced that it is the major and last initiative and that it is decentralization. I think I have demonstrated that it is the furthest thing from decentralization. In fact, as Senator Lowell Murray said, the control over this is remaining in his hands, and he is not even available for questioning in the House or from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux), the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), or any member of the Opposition. No one gets to question him because he is not a Member of Parliament. He is not responsible to anyone. He can make whatever kinds of decisions he wants. There has been no decentralization. In fact there has been a major chopping of money rather than the kind of topping up there should have been.

There is nothing in the legislation which specifically requires that jobs created are in any way to be considered fundamental to the awarding of ACOA funding. There is no targeting. In general terms it says that it is for small and medium-sized enterprises, but it does not include the rigid and precise kinds of definitions which provide results. Does a corporation have to create new jobs, or does it just have to create more profits? Can those profits be diverted elsewhere? There is a fundamental kind of language or targeting which can be included in Bills to allow Parliament and Atlantic Canadians to decide whether or not their money is being well spent.

I am sorry I do not have more time to speak today. There are all kinds of comments I would like to make about proposals which I think should be made for Atlantic Canada. Perhaps, if someone questioned me about that, I might take the opportunity to expound a little on what I think would be a better way of dealing with economic development initiatives in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Harris: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member what he has to say to the notion we heard in the House twice today, once from the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil)—and the Hon. Member was commenting on it when the lunch break came—and once from the Deputy Government House Leader, that for some reason we were wasting the time of the House talking about this very important issue.

It is an issue which affects four provinces of the country. It is a most important issue. In the context of the business of the House, speakers from our Party wish to raise their concerns about the issue and to point out how government has failed, not only this Government but the previous Government as well.

Is it any wonder that the following conclusion can be reached by economists? I draw the attention of the House to the comments of Elizabeth Beale, a consulting economist for the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council. In the 1987 report she went back through 15 years of regional development programs of the Government of Canada, that is, this Government and the previous one. She says that there has been very little improvement in any of the major indicators of regional disparities between the Atlantic provinces and the country as a whole, and that the gap in unemployment rates is proportionately the same now as it was 15 years ago. She also indicates that although personal incomes have been raised slightly, the increase is attributable to the increase in personal transfer payments. She also says that funding for regional development efforts in recent years has been well below the peak reached in the late 1970s.

Is it any wonder—and I would like the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) to comment on this—that this is the case when the attention of the House cannot be directed to this issue for a period of four days or five days because the Deputy Government House Leader and a member of the government Party from Nova Scotia complain about the fact that we are talking about this issue on a national basis in the forum to which we were elected to debate issues of national importance? This is an issue of national importance. It is not only an issue of importance to Atlantic Canada.

I was pleased to see the Hon. Member for Skeena, whose riding is one of the farthest from my own, take the time to come to the House to speak on an issue of national importance. I would like to ask for his comments on that and for some suggestions he may have to improve regional development programs.

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to take the opportunity to do that. I share the concern of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) about the comments of the Government House Leader and the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) concerning three days of debate on Atlantic Canada. I must say that when there are debates about British Columbia or Skeena, I love it and the people from Skeena love it. They know that some national attention is being given to their problems and to the issues affecting them.

I know why the Deputy Government House Leader, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux), and the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso do not want it raised. It is because there is so little money and because it is a badly drafted piece of legislation. It is an embarrassment. If I were from Cape Breton I would not want it debated too long.

What if the real figures started being quoted in the papers? What if someone took out a chalkboard and a piece of chalk and said: "Just a minute now. It is $1 billion for five years for all the provinces, so it is $200 million for a year"? What if he went on to say: "But that is not just for Nova Scotia. It is for the four provinces"? Even if it is evenly divided—and it will not be—it will amount to $50 million each. Then if we break that down into 12 months, it comes to about $4 million. If we break it down further, it comes to a couple of bucks a day. There is not very much.

I know why the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso is embarrassed. It is because there is not much money going to Cape Breton, to Nova Scotia, or to New Brunswick. This is why the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) was talking about things he used to do when he was in the provincial Cabinet. He had to talk about what they used to do 20 years ago. He did not want to talk about the money that is in there. He did not want to talk about the legislation. He was nervous. He was worried. He was paranoid. Those Tories have crowed the falsification for too long. I know why the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso did not come back for questions this afternoon. It was because I caught him being mischievous at the very best. He was saying that the NDP had supported the National Energy Program in western Canada. Tories from Alberta have loved to crow about that in every election. They have said that members of the NDP were supporters of the National Energy Program and that they destroyed the economy of western Canada. There are many western Canadians who know that that is a lot of bumf. Tories can go around and talk about it, but all they need to do is to look at the public record to see that we did not vote with the Liberals. We voted with the Tories. Is that not amazing? We opposed the National Energy Program. However, it makes good grist in rural ridings which have small newspapers. They can manage to get these stories out and move them around.

This is why government Members do not want this stuff debated. The media in Atlantic Canada are starting to pick up on it. They are starting to say: "Just a minute". They gave glowing coverage to this $1.05 billion. The Prime Minister got his shoulder to it and just managed to squeeze it over the $1 billion mark. He might as well have said that it was over six years rather than $1.05 billion over five years.

Why not tell the truth to each province? Why not tell Nova Scotia that it is only $20 million? We do not know how it will break down. What we do know is that it is controlled by Senator Lowell Murray who cannot be questioned by anybody in this place or by anyone in Atlantic Canada. He certainly is not responsible to this board. It is a remarkable state of affairs.

The Hon. Member for St. John's East says that it is good that I am involved in the debate. I feel good about being involved in the debate because I have been to Newfoundland and I know what problems are faced by Newfoundlanders. I have been to Nova Scotia. I have been to New Brunswick. I have been to P.E.I. I have been in the Province of Quebec. I have been in all Maritime and Atlantic areas, and the problems which are faced there are very similar to those in northwestern British Columbia. I represent an area which is almost the size of France, and it will be bigger in the next election. The Government thought: "give him something bigger to represent and maybe that will keep him quiet". Of course it will not. It will really get my blood pumping.

The Hon. Member for St. John's East referred to an important point which has been raised by a number of economists in Atlantic Canada. As I am sure he would know—and in fact he used it in his own speech—the Economic Council of Canada, in its report released on September 30, 1987, indicated that the issue of economic disparity, particularly regional economic disparity, will be the largest problem facing the country over the next five years. It said the national economy is likely to expand steadily in coming years but uneven regional growth will be the country's major economic problem. Does the Government respond? No. It sends $500 million in Loomis trucks down to the Reichmann Brothers in Toronto. It is sending $1 billion to the banks to pay off bad loans they made outside of Canada. It is sending $1 billion to bail out some of its pals in the banking industry out west. Yet what does it give for the whole of Atlantic Canada? Is it even as much as the Reichmann Brothers got in one present in 1987? No. It gives $200 million per year to the whole of Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Thacker: Point of order, Madam Speaker. I just want my friend to clarify his remark about trucks of money going out to western banks. I am not aware of any bank in western Canada, its management or shareholders, which has been bailed out. Would he just clarify that for me?

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, as I am sure anyone who is watching the debate will know, I used a metaphor. The money probably went out in the form of a cheque. If it was $2 bills or $10 bills it would probably amount to $400 or $500 Loomis trucks packed to the ceiling with bags of cash, bulging at the edges, on their way down to Toronto. The Reichmann brothers barely need to ask for it. Of course, Mickey Cohen, who worked here in Ottawa, knew how to get the cash for them.

Mr. Thacker: My friend has not answered the question. He has not given me the name of the bank whose management or shareholders were bailed out. I am aware of a couple of banks where the depositors were paid, depositors such as credit unions who had deposited money in banks that got in trouble because of the National Energy Program. There were teacher's unions, hospitals, universities and municipal councils who were depositors as well. That seems to me to be quite different from bailing out banks and I just wanted him to know that the record should be clear.

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, I am glad that the Hon. Member put that on the record. It was very useful. I am glad he has a good memory and remembers exactly who got part of the bail-out. What I am referring to is the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and Cabinet decided it was more important to give $500 million cash, loaded in those Loomis trucks and sent down to Toronto, to the Reichmann brothers, the wealthiest family in Canada. This was the Gulf deal and the "Little Egypt Bump". It was better to give them $500 million than to give more money to Atlantic Canada for all those families who need the money.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time for questions and comments has now expired.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, I am happy to have an opportunity to speak this afternoon on Bill C-103. I know of the serious financial and economic difficulties which have been facing Atlantic Canada for many years. Even though when they joined Confederation they were one of the richest areas in the country, they have now suffered greatly. This Bill is designed to do something in that regard.

However, we are worried that it will be very similar to the northern Ontario recovery program which the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) talked about in the fall of 1986. He told us then that because of the slow economic growth in northern Ontario, which is very similar to Atlantic Canada, he was considering a number of options. They included a federal economic development committee, and a transfer of some federal agencies and services to northern Ontario. Project moneys were going to be dedicated to northern Ontario. A stabilization program was going to be established for the forest and mining industries. Special tax treatment was going to be given to equity investors in the region.

It is interesting to note that even though the Deputy Prime Minister said that on November 19, 1986, none of that has come to pass. Nothing has really happened. Something seemed to have happened last July. There was a grand announcement that the Government was establishing the Fednor program. It was going to establish a committee. Yet seven months later the program is not operational. You cannot find out by phoning any government office in Sudbury or Sault Ste. Marie or Thunder Bay what the criteria is for that program. Supposedly it will eventually provide some $8 million a year in loans or grants. Yet you cannot find out what that program will cover. Does it cover small business or large business? Does it cover manufacturing and processing or the service industry or transportation or whatever? We do not know. From what I have heard during this debate, ACOA does not know exactly what is going to be covered or how it will work.

I have a suspicion that even though the Fednor program for northern Ontario was announced by the Solicitor General and the Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion last July 13, there was absolutely no money allocated for the fiscal year 1987-88. If not, then of course the whole thing is really a charade.

What other reason can there be for indicating that the Government wants to start a program like this in the fall of 1986 and 16 months have gone by and the application forms do not exist? The criteria for the program does not exist. There is only one very small aspect of the whole program even available. There is talk in the Deputy Prime Minister's statement about a stabilization program for forestry and mining. What a joke. Two months after the Minister made that statement in the House, the Government imposed an export tax of 15 per cent on the forest industry. Do you think that will stabilize the industry? In fact, it cost northern Ontario some $26 million in 1987 to stay in the softwood lumber exporting industry. Fortunately, because of a very strong market in the U.S., the industry has survived. However, as the market turns down in 1988, as many economic forecasters indicate it will, that export tax will be devastating to the industry.

There is another little hook here. The Ontario Government chose not to transfer that export tax to a stumpage charge. If it did, the amount could be twice the $25 million. I am surprised that any company in the softwood industry in northern Ontario could pay a tax of that magnitude and still survive. Clearly, if it is transferred to a stumpage charge, it will be that much more devastating.

The Deputy Prime Minister talked about a stabilization program for the mining industry. Six months after he said that, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) came into the House with a tax reform Bill which does away with flow-through shares and the earned depletion allowance. That mechanism generated this year some $500 million or $600 million for mining exploration and development along the Lake Superior shore and the area North of Sudbury and across the north channel area. Exploration and development is now taking place, but it will not be when that program is phased out next year.

There is a whole series of assaults on northern Ontario at a time when the Government is talking glibly about a northern Ontario recovery program. I am sure the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will face the same kind of assaults. So many of the areas of Canada which have not been doing very well since the economic recession of 1981 have suffered difficulties from slow growth.

The other aspect mentioned by the Deputy Prime Minister in November of 1986 was the transferring of whole government Departments to regions like northern Ontario. Yet looking at the facts, we see that some 1,300 jobs have actually been moved out of northern Ontario. Practically every government Department, whether it be the Post Office, Indian Affairs, Employment and Immigration or the Armed Forces, has been moved out. As well, another 500 people have been laid off as a result of the export tax which caused many of the softwood lumber and stud mills to be shut down.

There is almost a conspiracy against slow growth areas like northern Ontario at a time when the Government is talking about recovery programs. I am sure that Atlantic Canadians are facing the same difficulties. My concern is that we do not simply pick out of the air nice, glib names like northern Ontario recovery program or Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency without actually putting money into these areas where so many other economic factors apply.

This afternoon, I heard the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) say how wonderful free trade would be for the Province of New Brunswick. However, it was only two weeks ago that Harrison McCain of McCain Foods, one of the largest food processing companies in Canada, said on a Sunday morning news magazine that the whole free trade arrangement which would remove tariffs on processed foods but maintain marketing boards will simply not work. He said that there will be only two choices for the grocery manufacturing industry to make: to destroy the marketing boards for poultry, turkeys, eggs and dairy products, marketing boards which the Government is trying to maintain, or to move processing plants to the United States.

Mr. McCain said that he could live with it either way. He said that he had plants operating in the United States as well as plants operating in Canada. He would prefer to continue to supply the Canadian market from his plants in Canada, but if the Government chooses to go ahead with the free trade agreement, he will simply operate the plants in the United States and ship the food into Canada.

I believe that that is one of the least understood aspects of the free trade deal. The grocery manufacturing sector is the largest manufacturing sector in Canada. Gross volumes of sales amount to some $40 billion per year. The sector employs 225,000 people, more than the total number of farmers in Canada who are making above the economic minimum of $20,000 in gross revenues.

The free trade agreement will increase quotas for poultry, meat, eggs and turkeys and will remove tariffs on processed food coming into Canada. Eventually, there will be a confrontation. It might not happen for two or three years, but eventually the grocery manufacturers of Canada who employ a great many people and have a massive volume of business will put it to the Government that it will have to either get rid of the farm marketing boards or they will move their plants and operations to the United States. I predict that at that stage, the marketing boards will be destroyed.

I listened to the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines and I have a great deal of respect for his remarks on most issues. However, I do not think he has looked into the problems of the grocery manufacturers in his own Province of New Brunswick or in the rest of Atlantic Canada.

We have to talk not only about pro-active programs like the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency but we have to look at all those underlying government programs which have been cut back. Services to farm groups like the inspection of potatoes have been cut back. More and more costs are being loaded on the input side. We must look at the cost of assistance provided in transportation agencies and the fishery as well as high profile programs. After all, a few million dollars in incentives often go a long way.

I have been very impressed with the small business economic development corporations which have been set up in my own constituency under the Department of Employment and Immigration. They have been extremely effective in creating jobs, often much more effective than the programs run by DRIE. One aspect of that program has been the involvement of local committees, and I think that is a very worth-while part of any economic development program including the one before us here today.

Those are some of my concerns. I am concerned that we do not take away jobs and that we do not impose new taxation as was the case with softwood lumber and the removal of the earned depletion allowance and flow-through shares. All government programs should be co-ordinated.

I want to see the Government not only announce and talk about these things but put the money up to see that these programs actually work and are not just a charade that will have no effect on balancing economic opportunities for the slow-growth areas of Canada, the North and the eastern provinces.

Mr. Angus: Madam Speaker, I would like to pose a question to the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). In the closing part of his remarks, he made reference to the business development corporations under Canada Employment and Immigration. There is a parallel organization with which I think he is familiar, the community futures committees. The City of Sault Ste. Marie was one of the first communities to be designated under community futures. Perhaps he could elaborate on how those kinds of things can be used first for local control and second for the improvement of employment and economic opportunities in those areas outside the Golden Horseshoe, areas like Sault Ste. Marie, Atlantic Canada and the northern parts of the country.

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, the question is a good one because the small business development corporations which have been developed are a part of the community futures program. In most communities they are called the business development centre. The one in Sault Ste. Marie has been extremely effective, as they all have. There are three of them in my constituency. There is one in the adjoining riding in Sault Ste. Marie which serves part of my constituency.

The figures which stick in my mind are that for an investment of $225,000 or $250,000 a year they have been able to generate 40 or 50 jobs. That is all money which was lent at 11 or 12 per cent, which is not any great gift. Therefore, they seem to have been very effective.

The Community Futures Program in our area is just becoming operative. The advantage seems to be that there is a local committee involved in it. The self-employment option is being used in some areas, which I think is an excellent program. Instead of putting certain strictures on the unemployment insurance or on welfare for people, they are actually given a wage to start their own business. That, of course, has to be vetted by the business development centre. That is a good feature. The community opportunities fund has a potential to be useful, although it has not been used to any great extent in my constituency.

I do not think the portion for retraining and manpower mobility really rests with the Community Futures Program. It seems to me that those should be run out of the Manpower office. I am very concerned that the Manpower office is being destroyed. It seems that so many things are being moved over to Community Futures. That is useful from the point of view that you get community development in things like the business development centres, self-employment grants, and the community opportunities fund. I think that all those rest naturally with it. However, to put manpower training programs and manpower mobility programs with it causes one to wonder what the Manpower office is left to do itself.

Therefore, I am not sure that I fully agree with that. In any event, the Community Futures Program lasts for one or two years and is then left mainly with the business development centres which are designed to operate for a long period of time.

I think the whole Canadian Jobs Strategy is in question. Many of the Manpower centres in my riding are completely denuded of funds for the fiscal year by June or July. You are left with a multi-faceted program and a local advisory council on how these Canadian jobs strategies should work with no funds left after the first two or three months of the fiscal year. I have great concern with that.

The other aspect on the employment and training side is the question of funding for seats for manpower retraining. We have four or five major community colleges in northern Ontario. Every one of those has been cut back by 40 per cent. If they had 100,000 training days, as the Cambrian College in Sudbury had in 1984, they were reduced to 60,000 training days. That is a real backward step because I do not see them being replaced, and this during a period when we have been in a severe economic recession in northern Ontario. Those are some of my concerns in response to the Hon. Member's question.

Mr. Harris: Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to the speech of the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) on this issue. I was particularly interested in his comments about local control over economic planning.

I would like to inform the Member that the expert whom the Government asked to advise it on how to design and set up this agency expressed a concern in his report to the Government that the agency ought to be set up very carefully because otherwise it may become one big slush fund. He expressed great concern that this might happen and cautioned against too much political development. He said it should be kept away from politicians.

In this particular agency the approach of the Government has been to establish a board and to appoint to that board a group composed almost entirely of Conservative Party supporters who are involved in business. On the national level the Government has said that the final decisions will be made here in Ottawa by Senator Murray and the five or six Atlantic Ministers who are involved.

Mr. Fulton: Who is Senator Murray?

Mr. Harris: He is the Senator from the other place who is not answerable here. Therefore, we have political control at the top level, and at the advisory and board level we have a group of other individuals involved.

Does the Hon. Member have a concern about the approach that the Government has taken in setting up this agency? I have a very serious concern with it and I wonder whether he and others in his Party share it.

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, that has certainly been of very great concern to our caucus. The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) pointed out that on the eight-person board on the program every member had extremely close contacts with or held a senior position in the Conservative Party. If there is any scandal in the appointment of that board, which I think has done the program a serious disadvantage, it has been appointment of a board comprised entirely of Conservative people. On that board are two former provincial members who have impeccable credentials with the Conservative Party, but that taints the board and makes people think that if they are not Conservative they will not get any help from the program. That is an important aspect of the point which the Hon. Member has made.

Politics has not been an important aspect of the local community futures boards and they therefore function strictly on the basis of their abilities, interests, and activities at the local level. The factor which the Hon. Member has raised is very debilitating and it should certainly be taken into account if this legislation is ever passed and implemented in order that the Government will not discredit and debilitate the board before it even gets started.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

THE ENVIRONMENT

ADVISABILITY OF INTENSIFYING RESEARCH FOR ALTERNATIVES TO REFRIGERANTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of intensifying research for alternatives to refrigerants such as freon, which contain chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) that erode the earth's ozone layer.

He said: Madam Speaker, I will proceed quickly to explain the reason for this motion. The use of chlorofluorocarbons, which are commonly described as CFCs is based on the fact that they are propellants in aerosols such as hairsprays, deodorants and anti-perspirants. This use was banned in 1980, yet clorofluorocarbons are still used as propellants for cooking and paint sprays.

The most common use for chlorofluorocarbons is as a coolant in refrigerators, freezers and air conditioning units. These clorofluorocarbons to which I will refer as CFCs are also used extensively in foams, including rigid insulation foam, flexible foam for cushions and foam for packaging food.

The high-tech and communications industries use certain forms of CFCs as a solvent for cleaning electrical circuits and the like. It should be pointed out that Canada is a small player in the clorofluorocarbon game, using only 22,000 of the estimated 940,000 tonnes per year consumed the world over. In the United States, for instance, 90 per cent of cars sold have air conditioning, as do 80 per cent of light trucks. This market alone consumes 54,000 tonnes of CFC 12 as a coolant, which is more than twice Canadian consumption of all chlorofluorocarbons.

One may wonder why refrigerants are named in this motion. It is because this is the largest of all the chlorofluorocarbons uses in Canada. Some 9,000 of the 22,000 tonnes of chlorofluorocarbons consumed annually in Canada are for refrigeration purposes.

What threat do chlorofluorocarbons pose? The five commonly used CFCs, namely, 11, 12, 113, 114 and 115, erode the ozone layer in the stratosphere, some 20 to 40 kilometres above the earth. Chlorofluorocabons are gaseous and travel easily in the atmosphere. They do not break down easily in the lower atmosphere and can last from 60 to 300 years in the stratosphere.

The ozone acts as the earth's sunscreen. It blocks some of the sun's ultraviolet radiation from reaching the earth's surface. What would happen if the amount of ultraviolet radiation increased? Health would be affected. Scientists in Environment Canada and elsewhere predict that the number of cases of skin cancer and eye cataracts would increase.

Our immune system would also be affected and even suppressed, making people even more susceptible to certain diseases, viruses and infections. The environment would be affected. Scientists predict that agricultural crops would not grow as well or yield as much, and that phytoplankton, the basis of the food chain in the oceans, would be adversely affected. The air quality would also be in question because ultraviolet radiation is a contributor to smog in urban areas. Therefore, an increase in ultraviolet radiation would create more smog and more associated health problems such as eye and nose irritation and, more important, asthma and heart problems.

This brings me to the global warming question, which is an issue that has been more recently raised in scientific circles and through the media for public consideration. chlorofluorocarbons also contribute to the greenhouse effect of global warming.

We mostly hear about carbon dioxide emitted by burning coal, oil, wood and gas as being the main culprit of global warming. However, CO2 pales in comparison to CFCs. Scientists estimate that a molecule of CFC is 10,000 times more effective than a molecule of CO2 in absorbing and radiating infra-red radiation, the process which warms up the atmosphere. Today it is estimated that CFCs account for about 10 per cent to 15 per cent of the warming trend. If CFCs continue to travel into the atmosphere at the present rate, that could grow to 50 per cent in 50 years.

There has been a global response to this question of ozone depletion and damage. In September, 1987, the United Nations Environment Program sponsored a protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer. It was signed in Montreal by 24 nations and the European Economic Community. If it were ratified and implemented, it would reduce the global consumption of the five ozone-depleting CFCs to 50 per cent of the production level of 1986 by the year 1998. This is a tremendous step forward.

However, we should not rest on our laurels. Due to the long life of CFCs in the stratosphere—60 to 300 years—Environment Canada suggested that a reduction of 85 per cent is required in order just to stabilize the levels of ozone in the atmosphere. This view is endorsed by many environmental groups and organizations, such as the Nordic Environmental Ministers, who advocate complete elimination as soon as possible.

Therefore, it would make sense to urge our Government to ratify the protocol immediately, to formulate and publish a strategy for reducing to zero our consumption of chlorofluorocarbon in the shortest possible time, and to launch a global initiative with like-minded Governments with the aim of eliminating rather than reducing by 50 per cent the production of ozone-depleting chlorofluorocarbons.

This is also a terrific opportunity for parliamentarians. The effort to sustain ourselves on this planet can also be moved on the international agenda. For example, those Members who are members of the Inter-Parlimentary Union which is scheduled to meet in Guatemala next April, can talk about sustainable development because it is on the agenda and will be debated there.

The Government of Canada also has a role to play. It could intensify its research effort in areas such as monitoring the progress and effort of the industry in research endeavours. It could ensure the transfer of new technology and information to Canadian users, consumers and importers of CFCs and products containing chlorofluorocarbons.

It should intensify its research in non CFC solutions, including the use of helium or other refrigerants, new designs for refrigerator systems, or other replacement technologies such as the solar powered refrigerator invented by a Guelph engineer. The fridge has no moving parts, no compressor and, most important, no CFC refrigerant.

It should study methods and technologies for the conversion of CFC-based processes to non-CFC systems. This is an important area in which to intensify research and promoting efforts.

It is also important to develop intensive co-operation with Canadian industry on demonstration projects and to develop methods and technologies for the conversion of chlorofluorocarbons based processes to non-CFC systems.

Finally, we must search for ways to reduce our consumption of CFCs by way of prohibition where alternatives already exist, for example, paper products instead of CFC foams for consumer packaging of food and otherwise, or, for instance, by following the lead of the Ontario Government and putting a national tax on motor vehicle air-conditioning to reduce its attractiveness to the consumer, something we did in the mid-1970s.

Of course, the role of industry here is very important. The major producers of CFCs are Dupont, Imperial Chemical Industries and Allied Signal. They must make major commitments to the development of alternative products, and I believe they accept that ozone depleting CFCs must be eliminated from use as soon as possible. There is also a role for the consumer, that is the reduction in our consumption of CFCs by way of prohibition where alternatives already exist, and I have already mentioned substituting paper products instead of CFC foams for consumer packaging and putting a national tax on motor vehicle air-conditioning.

The Government could also introduce labelling requirements that identify products containing CFCs so that consumers can make an informed choice.

Inevitably, when we explore an issue of this kind, we have to conclude that there is a necessity to elaborate on the question of climate protection policy. It seems to me that as a first priority, the Government of Canada should launch a global climate protection initiative. This requires long-term thinking, the ability to start in motion programs that will last far beyond the normal political term and which may, indeed, offer little in the way of short-term political gain. But it must be done. We must, as elected representatives, accept this responsibility and challenge if Canada and the world, for that matter, is to be a productive and hospitable place for future generations.

I would like to bring to your attention, Madam Speaker, the fact that West German parliamentarians are already considering how to tackle this very problem. I will list some of the principles they have proposed; first, the examination and understanding of the role of nitrogen dioxide and halogenated hydrocarbons; second, the necessity of assessing the contribution of methane to the greenhouse effect, identifying emission sources and developing international measures to set limits to emissions; third, assessing the disintegration products of halogenated hydrocarbons and their impact on humans and the environment; and fourth, to develop hydrogen fusion energy as a strategy to reverse the global warming trend. In these few words there is a complex and long-term problem. The fifth principle is to urge international co-operation in the maintenance of tropical forests described by scientists as the "lungs of the planet". Finally, the necessity of considering debt-waiving for Third World countries and other measures as a necessary premise for the switch to an environmentally supportable economy. These are items which are being discussed in the Parliament of the Federal Republic of Germany which struck me as being far-reaching and worthwhile to put on record here.

On September 19 the Citizen published an article by Gwynne Dyer. He put the problem this way, and I quote:

> There is a serious defect in the human system. We can respond with fear, a sense of urgency and a high degree of co-operation and self sacrifice to present, highly visible emergencies. But we have no built-in sense of alarm when confronted only with a rate of change that augurs disaster for the future.
> By the time most people begin to feel the effects personally and develop the sense of urgency that would provide broad political support for drastic corrective action, it will be very late in the process. Perhaps too late, for all these processes will be moving very fast by then, and probably interacting to produce synergistic effects that may be beyond our ability to control.

The article is entitled "Ozone treaty no triumph, but its a first step". Mr. Dyer continues:

> That is why the Montreal Protocol is hardly an unqualified triumph. The action it promises is slow and inadequate, and it took 10 years to get even this degree of agreement, although the Global CFC industry only has a gross annual value of about $1 billion. We are still a long way from even such limited international agreements to protect the environment where really rich and powerful interests are involved.
> But there is cause for at least a minor celebration. As Mostafa Tolba, executive director the United Nations Environment Programme, said at the signing ceremony: "This is the first truly global treaty that offers protection to every single human being on the planet". True, it doesn't offer much protection, but the precedent is vitally important.
> For the first time, sovereign states have formally recognized that their domestic activities affect the environment globally, and that they are accountable for the consequences. Now what we need is about a dozen more treaties of the same kind on various other environmental issues, each having far bigger teeth than this timid firstborn.

That is the end of the article which, I think, expresses very well, in a balanced form, the achievements so far and the challenge still ahead.

To conclude, I would like to read from the book entitled Our Common Future which is the report by the World Commission on Environment and Development, and specifically from the Foreward by Madam Brundtland, the Prime Minister of Norway and the chairperson of that commission, which sat for three years and produced this significant report in April, 1987. Madam Brundtland writes, and I quote:

> Scientists bring to our attention urgent but complex problems bearing on our very survival: a warming globe, threats to the Earth's ozone layer, deserts consuming agricultural land. We respond by demanding more details, and by assigning the problems to institutions ill equipped to cope with them. Environmental degradation, first seen as mainly a problem of the rich nations and the side effect of industrial wealth, has become a survival issue for developing nations.

I commend these lines to you, Madam Speaker, which contain a lot of wisdom and the political capacity of putting together in that statement the developed nations of the northern hemisphere with the developing nations of the southern hemisphere and thus creating a common global denominator which is so important in moving ahead with this particular issue.

I want to thank you, Madam Speaker, and my colleagues, who in their wisdom decided to move ahead on this motion we are debating today, urging the Government of Canada to intensify the research for alternatives to refrigerants. It is a small motion but behind its wording is a warning of some significance. In the end, when we examine this issue, we will inevitably have to deal with the question of climate as well as the welfare and the well-being of future generations of human beings on this planet of ours.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the Government and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), I am very pleased to have an opportunity to speak on the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia).

When we look at this motion from the outside we see that it speaks to intensifying research, but on the inside it explores the political will that our Government has to protect the atmospheric global commons and the common atmospheric heritage of mankind. There should be no doubt whatsoever in anyone's mind in this House or across Canada with regard to the high priority that the Government places on protecting the ozone layer.

In Montreal on September 16, 1987, an unprecedented international protocol to protect the earth's ozone layer was adopted by over 40 countries. The protocol, developed under the auspices of the United Nations Environmental Program, will slash emission of ozone-depleting emissions of chlorofluorocarbons, CFCs, by 50 percent. It is the first ever global atmospheric treaty, now known as the Montreal Protocol.

We should be proud of the key role that Canada played in the work which led up to this historic signing. Canada's participation in this issue, both on the national front and on the international plane, merits mention.

Canada is one of the small number of nations which has taken substantial individual action to reduce the use of CFCs, a group of industrial chemicals threatening the ozone layer. In 1980, Canada banned the use of CFCs as a propellant in deodorants, anti-perspirants and hair sprays. Notwithstanding, the threat to the ozone layer remains a global problem requiring a global solution.

Consequently, Canada has played a key role in international negotiations to protect the ozone layer and to develop worldwide controls on ozone-modifying substances. In 1981, Canada strongly supported a proposal that an international treaty be developed to protect the ozone layer. Under the United Nations Environmental Program representatives of some 30 nations have been meeting regularly since 1982 to hammer out the world's first global agreement on the atmospheric environment.

Regionally, opinion was sharply divided among many nations on just how CFCs and other ozone-modifying chemicals were to be restricted. Several times when the talks had broken down completely it was Canadian initiatives that reopened the serious negotiations. The Canadian delegation rapidly gained the reputation not only for the source of its motivation, environmental protection rather than economic self-interest, but also for developing compromise positions and helpful and innovative new ideas to bring together.

When it became apparent that an environmentally significant agreement on the control of ozone-modifying chemicals would be difficult to reach, Canada was one among the first nations which supported signing an agreement in principle first and then negotiating the controls later. Thus, in 1985, 28 nations, including Canada, met in Austria to sign the Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer.

The Vienna Convention establishes a framework to protect the earth's atmosphere through co-operative international efforts. It also provides for international co-operation in scientific research and information exchange. Canada signed the agreement in 1985 and was the first nation formally to ratify it in June of 1986. To date, 28 countries have signed the convention. About 10 have ratified it. Canada is hopeful that the required number of ratifications, which is 20, will be attained shortly and that the convention will come into effect this year.

As noted, Canada worked with other nations to develop international pollution control standards to limit the release of ozone-modifying substances. Canada was advocating both a short-term and a long-term strategy, one that would see both the phase-down in production and release of CFCs, and one that would control other ozone-modifying substances as well. These standards were enshrined in the protocol to the Vienna Convention at the diplomatic conference in Montreal on September 14 to 16, 1987.

Throughout the lengthy negotiations to develop both the Vienna Convention and the subsequent pollution control standards, Canada has played a key role. It was a Canadian proposal presented in 1986 which broke a serious deadlock in the negotiations and paved the way for the development of the final pollution control agreement in which Canadian contributions played an important part. In recognition of Canada's efforts, the United Nations Environmental Program accepted Canada's offer to host the diplomatic conference for the signing of this international agreement.

The controls set out in the Montreal Protocol, when implemented, will truly represent a major landmark in history. They will not only represent the first real international action to protect the global atmospheric environment, but also mark the first concerted international effort to prevent an atmospheric environmental problem before it reaches the crisis stage. The Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer and the Montreal Protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer will become a global turning point, a model for continued world-wide co-operation between Government, industry and public interest groups to safeguard our planet.

I am very proud of the major role which the Government and the Minister of the Environment played in making this happen. Consider for a moment the following. The Montreal Protocol will initiate a dynamic process for responding to all ozone layer depleting substances, not just those currently earmarked for control measures. It will provide a mandated phase-down for the most harmful chemicals. This has already stimulated the search for environmentally appropriate substitutes and will ultimately dramatically affect the marketplace. It will provide an incentive for less developed countries to avoid recreating the problem or repeating our mistakes. It will provide stringent trade sanctions against countries which do not join the protocol and refuse to accept their environmental obligations to future generations.

It is the first global treaty to protect the atmosphere from the possible effects of human activity. It is also the first global treaty to mandate controls before significant destruction and economic loss occurs. It demonstrates that Government, industry and other interested parties can set aside parochial interests and work together to preserve the common heritage of mankind.

It demonstrates that global agreements on environmental risk management are possible. It offers a global precedent for controls on toxic chemicals and perhaps even acid rain. For the protocol to come into force it will need to be ratified by a minimum number of countries. Canada will be among the first to do so under the authority of the new Environmental Protection Act currently before the legislative committee. Canadians should be proud of the important role Canada played in the development and signing of this historic agreement.

The Government is committed to achieving the 50 per cent reduction in emissions of controlled CFCs in Canada as set out in the protocol and more. The federal Government is not currently conducting research on alternatives to CFCs. However, we are meeting with the various industrial associations to review their respective programs.

There is a tremendous amount of research going on in the private sector. When all of these consultations are complete, and the ongoing research programs reviewed, then the Government will be in a position to decide whether there is any compelling need to intensify sponsored government research in this area.

I hope that this short intervention demonstrates clearly the responsible actions that our Government is taking and will continue to take to respond to the ozone layer depleting problem.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to participate in the debate this afternoon on a very wise and far-reaching proposal put forward by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) which states:

Alternatives to Refrigerants

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of intensifying research for alternatives to refrigerants, such as freon, which contain chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) that erode the earth's ozone layer.

It is a very simple proposition, and I am sorry that the response of the Government has not been more forthright.

Yes, Canada has played an important role in the Vienna Convention and the signing of the Montreal Protocol, certainly a global first for a strategy to reduce the emission of substances which deplete the ozone layer. We were very pleased to see that, although I am certainly going to suggest that we ought to be a little cautious as to how fortunate those results might be because it is a very modest first step on a problem on which we still have a great deal more to do.

Canada can be congratulated for its role there. But I am sorry that we see so much complacency that that seems to be adequate. The Parliamentary Secretary referred to the consultations with industry and that they will consult and see how much research they are doing. Industry may need a little more of a prod. Perhaps consumers need both a prod and a carrot. We need to see government action in terms of its own purchasing. We as consumers large and small can also play a role in safeguarding our environment. Indeed, on the question of ozone depletion, consumers have been prominent in the struggle. It was consumers who first of all took aerosol cans off the market and required that a substitute product be used. Consumer action can be extremely important in this regard. As a major consumer, Government can also be extremely important. Taxation policies have to be addressed as well as regulations. I am afraid that we have a very long way to go, and complacency that we are getting there is not very helpful.

Let us be clear about what the Montreal Protocol is going to achieve. As the Parliamentary Secretary stated, it was a compromise solution. Canada helped to work out the compromise. Certainly, a compromise to get something signed and something done in order to take that first step was worth taking. It was very important, but let us not think that it is enough. We do not know if it is enough. There is a lot of scientific doubt about it.

Approximately 10 years ago when the scientists themselves began to see the ozone depletion, they did not even publish the results because they were so amazed at the findings. They thought that their instruments were wrong. The problem was so mind-boggling that there could be this major depletion of ozone. Of course, the ozone hole has expanded enormously since then. We do not know if the measures that are being contemplated now will be remotely enough. They are only directed at a reduction, not an elimination. In some countries it is expected that there will be an increase in the use of substances that deplete the ozone layer. Then perhaps there will be a stabilizing and a falling off.

We know that because of the nature of these substances already the massive quantity of those ozone depleting substances are in the air and moving upwards. They have a long lifespan of 75 or 125 years. These chemical reactions of substances thought to be quite inert and harmless, substances that were welcomed by industry and consumers and that seemed to be an advance, that were non-toxic and not harmful to the health, over time, it turned out, that with chemical reactions in the stratosphere proved to have an extremely harmful effect on human health. They are harmful in terms of skin cancer, they have an effect on food production, and they contribute to the greenhouse effect, with consequences that are so enormous we can scarcely imagine them, climatic warming, raising of ocean levels, and perhaps a complete change in the geography of our country. These are the types of effects that we are talking about.

Yet what does the protocol direct itself to? First a stabilization of the production and emission of these products; then a reduction, not an elimination. We do not know if that reduction will be enough. Perhaps the scientists themselves do not know if it will be enough. Perhaps it was just a situation that that was all that could be achieved politically. Some countries, countries influenced by their own industries that are looking at short-term cost savings and not long-term costs to the environment and human health, stated that that was as far as they were prepared to go.

We have a very major problem yet to solve. We don't know, perhaps the measures are already too late. These processes will continue. Even if we completely stop the emission of these substances into the atmosphere it might be too late, given the quantity that is there already and in the process of these complex chemical reactions.

Practically speaking, what are we looking at? We are looking at substances such as solvents, coolants, substances that go into motor vehicles, air-conditioners, refrigeration, solvents used for electrical equipment, and fast-food packaging. There has been a substitute for aerosol cans. For some of those products there is obviously an alternative immediately available, cardboard for this foamy kind of substance. For other areas, there will have to be more imaginative solutions. It is encouraging to see things like solar run refrigerators, for example. For other substances such as air-conditioners, it is not clear what the substitutes will be, or if the substitutes that are being considered will be quite good enough. More research will be required.

Government policy in terms of taxation can also be very helpful to prod people not to use substances that will have economic, health, and environmental consequences and to use them more sparingly. Of course, one way is to make those unsafe substances more costly to encourage the use of environmentally health conscious benign substances. That is the type of direction in which we have to go.

It is for that reason that I very much welcome the proposal of the Hon. Member for Davenport. It is one that encourages the Government into stimulating research in this area. I would hope that the Government would see fit to support it and not to sit back on its laurels and talk about the good things that have happened. Yes, some good things have happened. Yes, we have made a step. Yes, we have a framework. But let us address this very serious problem with the appropriate kind of response. Let us look at the Brundtland report of the World Commission on the Environment and Development, and the commitment to sustainable development.

What could be more fundamental for sustainable development than the survival of this protective layer, the ozone layer around the planet? If we do not have that, then we are talking about very small matters indeed once that is destroyed.

The protection of our planet itself and of human, plant, and animal life on that planet is at risk. It is absolutely fundamental that we give this priority. I share the frustration with the Hon. Member who introduced this motion. It is difficult to talk about matters so important when the impact is such a slow incremental one. Perhaps it is not even that slow. It is fast enough, I guess. It is not like a chemical spill where we see the consequences immediately—one day something is fine and the next day it is contaminated. It has a gradual effect, and it is very much harder to raise the alarm as to the consequences to human health and the environment when the effects are ones which will take place years later.

People are using ordinary consumer products now and years later these elements, having gone through a very complex chemical reaction, will have the effect of depleting the ozone and depriving us of that protective layer, with dire consequences for all life on our planet.

It is a complex matter in which we must involve all people. We must involve consumers and Governments. There must be a research role. I very strongly support the motion and urge the Government to give it the appropriate, very favourable, very enthusiastic, and very serious response it deserves.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to join in the debate on this very important matter. Many people in the country have yet to grasp the importance of the protection of the ozone layer.

I should like to refer to the December issue of Bridges which contained an article referring to the danger or the threat to the ozone layer. The article concluded by indicating on the positive side that a global UNEP treaty had been designed to protect the ozone layer and that the level of knowledge had advanced. It went on to indicate that it has never been more true that the need for scientific research is imperative and exceeded only by the need for international recognition that short-sightedness and narrow self-interest put us all in peril.

I commend the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) for highlighting this subject matter. I say to him and to the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) that while the motion suggests that we consider the advisability of intensifying research, the Government of Canada has already actively entered into a program to work toward the co-ordination of testing, research, and product development of less hazardous product use. As a clear demonstration of this, the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. Browes) already pointed to the Montreal Protocol. In September, 1987 Canada hosted a gathering of 40 countries in Montreal to negotiate a protective control protocol on the use of CFCs.

Just recently, from January 13 to January 15, 1988, Canada, along with the Conservation Foundation and the

United States Environmental Protection Agency, co-sponsored in Washington a conference to explore the current scientific status of research and product development of substitutes.

For those who are not familiar with the Conservation Foundation, let me point out that it is a non-profit environmental agency in the United States organized to conduct research on emerging environmental issues, and obviously this matter is one of them. It brings together people with varied backgrounds—academic and scientific—to clarify issues and to reach agreement on what might be done. It communicates the findings of its work to policy makers, parliamentarians like ourselves, and opinion leaders in business, academic circles, the conservation community, and the press. Since its founding in the United States in 1948, the Conservation Foundation has been dedicated to improving the quality of the environment in all respects and to promoting wise use of the earth's resources.

I am happy to report that the conference in Washington was a tremendous success. They had planned for some 250 participants, and over 700 showed up representing industry, environmental groups, and Governments from over 20 countries. Happily there was a clear consensus on the need for action now, and industry described ways and means to introduce new programs designed to reduce emissions and to find environmentally acceptable substitutes for CFCs and halons.

For example, the major producers of these chemicals announced a joint toxicity testing program costing some $8 million to facilitate information transfer and thereby speed up the process of bringing environmentally acceptable substitutes to the market as hastily as possible.

In general terms the conference facilitated the collection and sharing of information on current technologies to reduce emissions of CFCs and halons, including substitute chemicals, recycling, recovery, and destruction. It facilitated the provision of a forum in which users, producers, researchers, regulators, environmental groups, and the media could discuss the development of product substitutes and alternative processes. It facilitated the making of pronouncements by industry that it is or intends to move away from those chemicals and products which are hazardous to the ozone layer. In addition, it facilitated the exchange of information on declining markets for controlled substances and on emerging markets for substitutes and alternatives to CFCs and halons. This is of great advantage to all.

The conference identified ways, means, and opportunities for reducing dependence on CFCs and halons through four separate plenary sessions and a series of workshop sessions. The workshops ran simultaneously with the plenary sessions, and each concentrated on a key application of CFCs and halons. The workshops offered sessions on alternative technologies and substitute products. Each focused on particular chemical substitutes, giving conference participants an opportunity to discuss one or many hazardous products.

In addition, during the two informal "poster paper" sessions, participants had the opportunity to discuss papers and ideas with scientists and engineers working on new developments in the field. The conference featured as well the very practical side effect of a trade fair where commerce could display products and services to all who were interested in the problem. Participants had the opportunity to learn first-hand about the substitutes and alternatives to CFCs and halons which are now being offered.

I have intentionally provided much detail on the successful event just completed in Washington in an effort to underscore the importance which is being placed on the issue not only by the Government but by the private sector, environmental groups, and the public at large. The collective commitment to finding solutions to the ozone layer depletion problem rang clear in Washington with the level of participation and the quality and quantity of information willingly exchanged.

Having looked at the clock, Madam Speaker, let me move on to my concluding paragraph. I hope that the comments which have already been made indicate the Government's high priority for this very severe problem. Major efforts are already under way devoted to putting in place substitute chemicals, substitute technologies, and suitable substitute products. Canadians in both the private and public sectors are involved in many of these projects either as participants or in a managerial capacity. Should any priority research area be identified by anyone as requiring additional information or attention, the Government, as is its custom, will give the matter the importance it deserves.

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to join in this debate on a very important matter. Before I begin I want to commend the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) for bringing this motion before the House. The Hon. Member has brought many environmental concerns before this House and I commend him for doing so and I want to support this motion.

Research on substitutes to ensure and secure an orderly transition to chemicals and products which will not adversely affect our ozone layer remains a critical element in the timely resolution of this problem. I am happy to be able to report that an unprecedented level of research is now moving forward on several fronts.

Growing concern within the international scientific community, as well as the expectation by industry of regulatory measures to control ozone modifying substances, have revived the quest for alternatives to chlorofluorocarbons or CFCs. Alternatives are being sought in three areas: alternative chemicals; products and services; and technologies.

First, producers of CFCs have concentrated their efforts on alternative chemicals with lower ozone depleting potential. Although many hurdles such as acute toxicity and technical feasibility have been successfully passed, some technical aspects such as catalyst selection surrounding the development of economically viable commercial processes remain unsolved.

Second, alternative products and services currently exist. For example, fibreglass insulation, though not as efficient per unit volume as polyurethane foam, can be used as a suitable substitute. Another example is egg containers, which do not require foam plastics. As well, aerosol products in many instances are now propelled by hydrocarbons. However, these alternative products and services will require that a price be paid, be it in either efficiency, increased safety or simply consumer preference.

The third alternative is new technology. Alternative technologies currently exist for some products and are under development for others. For example, the deodorant stick has partially replaced the aerosol propellant package. A new helium-based refrigeration system has been developed by Cryodynamics under the sponsorship of NASA in the United States. An aqueous cleaning technology for the electronics manufacturing industry is being substituted for CFC-based cleaning technologies. Last, but by no means least, procedures and work practices could also be re-designed to accommodate recycling of CFCs and minimize emissions to the atmosphere.

I would like to focus attention briefly on a special category of chemicals adversely affecting our ozone layer. They are called halons, chemicals which are very similar to CFCs. However, they contain bromine in addition to or in place of chlorine. These are the chemicals used in fire extinguishers. Current production of these chemicals is relatively small, but because they contain bromine they are three to 11 times more destructive of the ozone layer than CFCs. What is also very worrisome is the rapid rate of growth in the use of halons.

Canada does not currently produce any halons. However, we currently import about 0.5 kilotons of the chemical in bulk, and an undetermined amount in small products. Given the enhanced destructive efficiency of the halons, it is estimated that they contribute about 15 per cent of the Canadian chemical contribution to the destruction of the ozone layer.

Environment Canada officials have been consulting with the Canadian fire protection community on ways and means of dealing with the halon problem. That community agrees with the need for controls to protect our environment and prevent the depletion and/or modification of the ozone layer. However, the halons have a very high economic and security value and there are no known substitutes with the same important fire protection characteristics. The fire protection community has been challenged to meet the fire protection needs of Canadian society, whether it be government, financial, transportation, industrial or defence facilities. In many cases use of halons has been the only acceptable means to achieve required fire protection of critical facilities in a safe and effective manner.

Halon fire extinguishants are used to protect life and property from the destructive effects of fire. As such, they have some very desirable qualities. The halons do not cause secondary damage. They are highly effective. They are chemically stable and human tolerance to their exposure has proven to be very high. They are the only known fire extinguishants with these combined benefits and properties. However, their cost is very high compared to other extinguishants such as water, carbon dioxide, or dry chemicals. This fact has limited their use to those applications where cost-benefit concerns have been satisfied.

The fire protection community became aware of the importance of the environmental factors and possible destruction of the ozone layer by halons in the fall of 1986. Immediately a study was conducted by the industry to determine use and emission patterns and how emissions could be reduced or, in some cases, eliminated. Data for the study were provided by fire equipment manufacturers, fire equipment distributors and installers. Limited use levels for Canada were agreed to by consensus.

Let me just list a few of the actions these various groups studying the problem have come up with through consensus prior to any regulatory control. I think it is quite significant. First, they conducted a study to determine use and emission levels. Second, they published major articles in the Fire Journal, their most widely-read publication with a circulation of over 30,000 copies, explaining the problem. Third, they conducted major seminars to advise their community of the concerns and to seek solutions. Fourth, they established and financed the program to be administered by the National Fire Protection Association to co-ordinate and fund research, develop new requirements, and monitor program results. They recently proposed a scheme to charge 3 cents to 5 cents per pound of halon produced to create a research fund to find substitutes. Fifth, they are sponsoring an international meeting to raise the awareness of how halons destroy the ozone layer and to solicit even broader co-operation in the search for solutions. Six, they are looking into the possibility of warning labels for their products. Seven, they are exploring new and additional techniques for halon recapture and recycling.

I submit that this list is a good beginning of voluntary action currently undertaken by the fire protection community. It illustrates the kind of concerted and co-operative action which can be cost-effectively undertaken when government, industry and other interested parties are able to work together.

I look forward to the continuing debate on this subject and the vote to come on this motion because it has been designated as a votable motion. I would like to support the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hour provided for consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the order is dropped to the bottom of the list in order of precedence on the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—SITUATION IN HAITI—GOVERNMENT POSITION/CONVENING OF MEETING OF MOST IMPORTANT COUNTRIES INVOLVED IN AID TO HAITIAN PEOPLE—HOLDING OF INQUIRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to inform the House that yesterday in Montreal, I met with members of the co-ordinating committee for Canadian solidarity with the Haitian people. The people I met asked me to inform the Government, and especially the Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), of their views in the House of Commons.

Basically, one of the demands Haitians living in Canada were making on behalf of the Haitian people who are going through a very difficult time, one of their demands when they were still optimistic about the future, was to have a democratic election, for the first time in many years, and perhaps for the first time in their lives, so they could have a democratically elected government. However, we now know the kind of electoral travesty that led to last Sunday's so-called election. The co-ordinating committee would like to see the Canadian Government immediately and unequivocally condemn this illegal government's National Council for its human rights violations in Haiti and refuse to recognize the "Macoute" election held last Sunday. The committee also asks the Government of Canada to deny any formal or informal recognition to the government formed as a result of that election.

Monday, the Minister said in answer to one of my questions that, considering the extremely low-rate of participation, Canada did not recognize this election. That is one point the co-ordinating committee will appreciate.

Second, the Minister said: We intend to review our relations with Haiti, including development aid. Reviewing our relations with Haiti is basically a matter of recognition. Will the Minister, who said publicly that he did not recognize the election, turn around and recognize the Government that is expected to be formed shortly? That is a question the Minister failed to answer, but it is a fundamental one, and we would certainly appreciate the Government giving us a specific and intelligent answer.

If the Government does not recognize the election, it would of course be very difficult to recognize the government formed as a result of that election.

The Minister also said he intended to review his development aid program. If that is indeed the case, I think the Minister will have to consider recommendations made by eight non-governmental observers, sponsored by the International Human Rights Federation, who went to observe the election that was supposed to be held last November in Haiti. They returned to Canada and submitted a report with some very specific recommendations on Canadian aid to Haiti.

First of all, these impartial observers suggested that the Canadian Government immediately stop food aid because it is a disincentive to local food production.

Second, the Government should suspend bilateral aid to Haitian government departments and the institutions that are part of these departments, especially the "institutional reform" and "energy" sectors of the Canadian International Development Agency's Program.

Third, to re-examine publicly all assistance programs to Haiti, in consultation with Canadian non-government organizations operating in Haiti.

Fourth, to act in co-operation with other governments to withdraw any direct assistance to the Haitian government.

Fifth, to maintain and reinforce the projects of non-government organizations which benefit the basic groups in the community and strengthen the fabric of the Haitian society in areas such as literacy programs, free radio stations, labour unions, and so on, which can truly help the Haitian people to gain eventually a democratically elected government following a really free election by the Haitian population.

It seems obvious that the Canadian Government is embarrassed. On one hand, it gave in good faith its support to an election. It sent all the proper electoral equipment to Haiti, as well as Canadians to ensure the presence of a local force to guarantee a free election. The fact is that this did not happen. First, General Namphy simply cancelled the election, and second, he took action to ensure that the election would take place while the population could not truly exercise its voting rights democratically. We expect answers from the Government, and I trust that these answers will reflect the proposals of the co-ordinating committee of Canadian solidarity with the Haitian people.

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Madam Speaker, in his intervention yesterday, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) drew our attention to three points on which I would now like to comment further.

First, he suggested that the Canadian Government supported for months the military junta of General Namphy. I am certain that the Hon. Member would not wish to put the thorny Haitian issue under the impassioned, abusive and unproductive light too often favoured by certain groups.

In reply to his questions, it would be good to recall that the National Government Council or CNG led by General Namphy, whether we like it or not, represents the constitutionally identified authority to govern the affairs of Haiti until February 7, and thus to ensure the transition to a new government. It was therefore impossible not to have proper relations with the CNG. Until November 29, as I believe that everyone will agree, we provided assistance to organize the election, through the CNG as well as the CEP, while remaining concerned about the growing conflict between the two parties. After November 29, we focussed our action on the CNG using the means at our disposal, short of interfering in the internal affairs of an independent country, to remind the Haitian Government of its constitutional obligations each time it took undesirable action. It was without any illusion that we waited until January 17 to express ourselves as we did to avoid being accused of interfering in the internal affairs of another country at such a critical moment as the holding of an election, whatever the quality of this election. Some view this as improper procrastination. I urge them to give serious consideration to what might have been the democratic value of such a premature intervention, not to mention its real influence on the outcome of events.

Secondly, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has already indicated that we were holding consultations with countries concerned over Haiti. A meeting is being organized with the ambassadors of EEC countries that are interested in gaining a better insight into our position. Generally speaking, our partners are now seeking further consultations on the Haitian question. Still it may be too early to conclude that they are prepared to express similar positions in this respect or consider that pressure through their means of assistance might be the most appropriate way to proceed.

The question of possible concerted action remains relevant and is the subject of consultations. I think I can reassure the Hon. Member by saying that the assistance program is indeed part of the review process with respect to our relations with Haiti. Contrary to a number of blatant allegations, the Government does not fear that our financial assistance might be diverted towards questionable endeavours. However it would rather seek agreement with all the organizations involved and, if need be, make adjustments so that there be no doubt left as to our intentions and actions.

FISHERIES—ISSUANCE OF OFFSHORE LOBSTER FISHING LICENCES IN NOVA SCOTIA/REQUEST FOR CANCELLATION OF LICENCES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on January 19, 1988, I put a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) concerning the irregular issuing of four new Class A lobster licences. I asked the Minister to cancel those licences in view of a number of factors that would have to be taken into consideration.

By awarding these four new Class A lobster licences, the Minister has broken an undertaking he gave to the Lobster Advisory Committee, which advises him on such matters, and therefore has undermined the integrity of the entire fisheries management system on the East Coast.

Four new Class A licences were given to the offshore fleet when the inshore fleet is struggling to make a living. I might say that this year has been better than most as far as lobster catch is concerned, but the Minister took it upon himself to reverse an undertaking he gave to the Lobster Advisory Committee six months prior to the awarding of these licences. His undertaking was that he would consult with the Lobster Advisory Committee prior to the issuing of new lobster licences. As I indicated to the House, the Minister broke that undertaking.

When one considers the recipients of these new four Class A licences, one must call into serious question the patronage which is being exhibited by the Government of Canada. It is a well known fact that the individuals involved were known supporters and affiliates of the Conservative Party of Canada. That does not mean one ought not to be given an opportunity to make an application for various licences because one holds a particular political belief, but, on the other hand, it is very clear and obvious to many that the system we have in Atlantic Canada for issuing lobster licences was circumvented in this particular instance and four prominent supporters of the Conservative Party were able to obtain those licences and the largesse that goes along with those new four Class A lobster licences.

In fact, in August last year, the Minister took it upon himself to meet with two companies that I am aware of, and perhaps with even more privately, at the Prince George Hotel in Halifax. These two companies were Comeau Seafoods and Newell Lobsters. A business partner of Newell Lobsters just happens to be a Conservative MLA in Nova Scotia.

I am not suggesting any impropriety by the sitting MLA in Nova Scotia, but I am suggesting very clearly that there is a perception, and I believe it to be a real perception, that the only reason the recipients of those licences in Nova Scotia were successful in getting them is because of their affiliation and contacts with the Conservative Party of Canada. That is shameful, in view of the fact there is a large inshore fishery in Nova Scotia and the Atlantic region whose economic interests the Minister has sacrificed in order to soothe and facilitate his political friends who are operating boats on the offshore.

I think it rather repugnant that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans would stand in the House and refuse to cancel those licences. It is so repugnant that the Premier of the Province of Nova Scotia has called for cancellation of those licences. The Minister of Fisheries in Nova Scotia has called for the cancellation of those licences. The Leader of the Liberal Opposition in Nova Scotia, who brought this issue to the forefront, has also called for the cancellation, as have fishing groups, unions, and so on, in the Atlantic region. Yet this Government continues to wear the label of sleaze and patronage. When it has an opportunity, it refuses to seize the opportunity to cancel those licences and thereby restore confidence and integrity to the management system in the fisheries in Atlantic Canada. By supporting the inshore fishermen as opposed to the offshore fishermen, it would certainly rid itself of the label and symbolism of patronage, sleaze, and so on.

I hope the response from the Parliamentary Secretary today will provide us with new information, that it will now cancel those licences, since it has circumvented the process which has been put in place for many years. If he would do that, I am sure all those individuals, including myself, who have spoken out fairly forcefully on this issue, would compliment the Minister for taking this action. He now knows that the action he did take by issuing those licences was certainly not in the best interest of the inshore fishermen or, indeed, the Atlantic fisheries as a whole.

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Madam Speaker, the selection procedures for issuing new offshore lobster licences are similar to those used for new licences in other fisheries. The Department provided the Minister with a list of 13 applicants and a list of criteria which ideally could be met by candidates and against which they could be evaluated. Based on an evaluation, he chose the four applicants which best fit the criteria. The strongest candidate met all the criteria and received two licences. The other two were stronger than the remaining candidates and each received one licence.

In discussions over the past two years, lobster fishermen have stressed that no new inshore or offshore licences should be issued in traditional South West Nova fishing zones. They argue that no new fishing effort could be accommodated on these zones 4X and 5. The Minister has heeded this advice. There have been no new inshore licences in these traditional zones. What has happened is the Minister, based on advice from officials, has opened a new fishing zone in area 4W eastern Nova Scotia and allowed four new licences to harvest a developmental quota of 360 tonnes in that area.

In order to lessen the risk for the new participants in this fishery, he has allowed each of the new licences to have 30 tonnes, 120 tonnes in total, in the traditional offshore area 4X and 5 and reduced the over-all enterprise allocations of the original eight licences by a corresponding amount of 120 tonnes. To compensate the original licence holders, they have been given 15 tonnes each in the new zone. Let me repeat, the total offshore quota in 4X and 5 remains at 720 tonnes. It has not increased. In summary, the Minister has not increased effort in the 4X and 5 area and this was consistent with the advice of the committees.

Adjournment Debate

NATIONAL DEFENCE—AWARDING OF CF-18 MAINTENANCE CONTRACT/SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY—ESTABLISHMENT OF CENTRES OF EXCELLENCE—POSITION OF MANITOBA UNIVERSITIES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, on January 18, I put several questions to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) with respect to the awarding by the Government of the CF-18 contract to Canadair in Montreal rather than to Bristol Air in Winnipeg. That is a decision which has infuriated people from all sectors of the communities in Manitoba.

I asked the Minister why he had told the Leader of the New Democratic Party, who asked about this decision and who asked for assurances that the decision was made on the basis of an analysis of the competitive bids, and the Minister said that the Government had done that. The Leader of the New Democratic Party also asked why the Minister did not agree to the proposal that the New Democratic Party made, that the decision be looked into by the Auditor General. This is a proposal that was rejected by the Minister.

We now know, as a result of information obtained by The Globe and Mail and the Winnipeg Free Press, that the decision was made for political reasons. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion said in the House that the two bids were very close on technical merit and on cost, and that the results were very close between two highly competent groups of companies. Outside the House he said that the Canadair bid was $104 million over three and a half years compared with $105 million for Bristol.

We now know that according to the evaluation done for the Department by its technical experts that the facts are incorrect. In fact, what the experts said was that the Canadair bid would cost 13 per cent more in the first four years. With regard to the question of technical merit, they said that while both companies were technically acceptable, Bristol was the preferred bid based on "a significantly higher technical assessment". The people of Manitoba have every reason to continue to be angry with the Government for its wrongful decision.

The second question I asked the Minister was in connection with the report in the Winnipeg Free Press that highly-placed senior public servants had made it very clear that in the decision as to which universities would be chosen to receive funding as centres of scientific excellence that Manitoba universities would be frozen out because of the fact that the Premier of Manitoba, Mr. Pawley, has opposed so many of the recommendations of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), such as the free trade agreement. The fact is that the Prime Minister's proposal that the Government of Canada allocate $1.3 billion of new money for improving the quality of our higher education system and the establishment of the centres of excellence at a number of universities in Canada to concentrate on scientific research and development does not deal with new money at all.

The fact is that the Prime Minister, before he became the Prime Minister, criticized former Liberal Governments for their failures to adequately fund scientific research and development. He pointed out quite correctly that in Canada we were spending about 1.5 per cent of Gross National Product on research and development and that this was among the lowest of any of the countries belonging to the OECD, as well as Japan. He promised that a Conservative Government would increase expenditures to 2.5 per cent of Gross National Product.

We know now that in fact expenditures are still at the level they were during the Liberal years, that is 1.3 per cent. We know now that business and industry have not responded as the Conservatives promised they would to increase significantly their expenditures and their efforts in the field of scientific research and development. We know now that Canada is near the bottom, if not right at the bottom, of all the countries in the western world, including Japan, in terms of the efforts that are made in the field of scientific research and development. We know now that after the Conservative Government took office it realized what a tremendous scam and scandal had been created by the Liberal Government scientific research credit fund, which was supposed to encourage industry to participate in and increase its efforts in scientific research, and that it would probably cost the treasury of Canada and the people of Canada approximately $800 million. In fact, it would cost a great deal more.

The Conservatives announced the stoppage of that plan, but they grandfathered all those already in the pipeline. The result is that Canadian taxpayers will probably lose approximately $3 billion. In fact, very little in the way of real research has been done.

I say that it is time for the Government to face up to realities. It is time to stop playing politics when handing out contracts. It is time to live up to the promise made by the Prime Minister when he was the Leader of the Opposition, that the Conservative Government would substantially increase the efforts of Canada in the field of scientific research and development.

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Madam Speaker, I listened with considerable interest to my NDP friend telling us about the CF-18 maintenance contracts, but I found rather strange his reluctance to provide all the figures. Although he and the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) may not know it, the CF-18 maintenance contract was in two parts. The first part dealt with engineering and the second with repairs.

In his remarks, the Hon. Member said that, compared with Canadair, Bristol's bid was 13 per cent lower on the engineering side. What he failed to indicate, however, is that Canadair's bid on the repairs side was 10.5 per cent lower than Bristol's.

Well, Madam Speaker, if we consider the situation and the contract as a whole, we realize, as the Treasury Board minister indicated at the time, that there was some 3 per cent differential on the basis of which the Conservative government, anxious to promote national and collective interests—a notion which may escape the NDP member, let alone his leader—ruled in favour of Canadair.

It is on the basis of its concern for national identity and the equitable sharing of contracts that the federal government following various departmental assessments on technical merits and costs decided, under the circumstances, to award the contract to Canadair.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, may I tell my honourable friend that we have provided the Auditor General with the documents he was seeking and that the government would gladly and at any time provide . . . Of course, there remains the condition of confidentiality for the bids made by existing companies, but whenever the Auditor General wants to have a look at bid papers, Madam Speaker, the minister will gladly provide them, as tradition will have it. Again, the Progressive Conservative Government is demonstrating that it is accountable for its decisions which are based on the need to promote national unity and equitable sharing of contracts among all Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.30 p.m.

MISCELLANEOUS STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1987

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-104, an Act to correct certain anomalies, inconsistencies, archaisms and errors and to deal with other matters of a non-controversial and uncomplicated nature in the Statutes of Canada be read a second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I believe there have been consultations involving the Parties. Certainly on behalf of the New Democratic Party, in view of the nature of this Bill we are prepared to see it go through all stages in the House today.

It is legislation that has already been reviewed by the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General. It is an important and valuable process whereby legislation which has become in some way archaic or no longer in effect as a result of Government policy decisions can in fact be changed, whereby errors which have crept into legislation can be dealt with. Certainly we support the process.

The Bill in question has been dealt with. There were a couple of hearings by the committee on some of the more substantive provisions of the Bill. Given the unanimous support of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General, on behalf of the NDP, we are prepared to co-operate in the passage of this legislation in all stages through the House today.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to add on behalf of the Liberal Party and the Liberal caucus, that this Bill is practically an annual event and that it is tabled for the purpose of correcting certain anomalies. Occasionally, inconsistencies, archaisms and errors are found in the Statutes of Canada, and I believe the odd translation error as well.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure you we will certainly not object to the passage of this Bill, that we support it and that we will allow passage at all stages in the House today.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the Chair.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, in view of the sentiments that have been expressed earlier with respect to the study this Bill has been given, and the fact that we expect to move quickly, perhaps there would be agreement to grouping the clauses in the Committee of the Whole House.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: I thank the Hon. Minister for his suggestion.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I just have one question. Will the Government tell us where this legislation ends as far as statutes are concerned? Is this an update until, say, September or October of last year or does it include all of the year 1987?

• (1010)

Mr. Lewis: It is my understanding that the review included all statutes which had received Royal Assent.

Clauses 2 to 84 inclusive agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Schedules 1 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, concurred in, read the third time and passed.

CURRENCY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-99, An Act to amend the Currency Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: The Bill before us is of a purely housekeeping nature. Its purpose is to ensure that the accounting procedures followed in determining the exchange fund's net income are consistent with those followed in the consolidated Public Accounts.

[Translation]

Hon. Members may recall that in 1985, the Auditor General of Canada recommended that several special government accounts, including that of the Exchange Fund, be consolidated in with the general government accounts. In his February, 1986 Budget the Minister of Finance announced revisions to the accounting policies of the Public Accounts of Canada in response to the Auditor General's recommendations. Among these were the consolidation of the Exchange Fund with the Consolidated Revenue Fund for purposes of determining the fiscal position of the Government.

[English]

The Exchange Fund is a special account of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) which serves as the principal repository of Canada's official international reserves. Although the Exchange Fund has been consolidated with the Consolidated Revenue Fund in the Public Accounts, it exists as a distinct accounting entity and is governed by separate legislation, namely, the Currency Act, which Bill C-99 proposes to amend.

The Currency Act contains a provision that differs from the accounting principles now followed in the Public Accounts. In determining that income the Currency Act calls for gains or losses from exchange rate changes, and these occur daily and weekly, and gold transactions to be averaged over three years, while such changes are recognized immediately in the Public Accounts. So there are two different accounting treatments.

The amendment we are proposing would repeal the three-year averaging provision in the Currency Act and require that the accounting principles applied to the Exchange Fund be consistent with those of the Public Accounts. This will remove an anomaly that was created by the consolidation introduced in 1986.

I would like to note that this amendment to the Currency Act has no financial implications and will not affect the actual operations of the Exchange Fund in any way. It is concerned only with the presentation of the Exchange Fund's financial statements, making them consistent with the presentation already contained in the Public Accounts and which is based on recommendations of the Auditor General. The Auditor General recommended this not just for the Exchange Fund but for other funds of the Government of Canada as well to bring them into consistency.

Finally, I would like to remark that the payment of income by the Exchange Fund to the Consolidated Revenue Fund is only a bookkeeping entry. No cash is transferred. Income from foreign currency assets is retained by the Exchange Fund and the Canadian dollar equivalent which is paid to the CRF is matched by an increase in Canadian dollar advances to the Exchange Fund from the CRF so that there is no change in cash holdings. The change also has no effect on the Government's deficit whose measurement is already determined by the accounting principles adopted last year.

I do feel, Mr. Speaker, that not only is this Bill of a housekeeping nature, and not only does it follow the recommendations of the Auditor General, but it makes overdue sense since the changes introduced in 1986, and I would urge the House to give it speedy consideration.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, indeed, as the Minister said, this Bill is a straightforward Bill which is changing certain methods of reporting and accounting in line with recommendations of the Auditor General. Therefore, it is the view of the Official Opposition that it is not a Bill which requires extensive debate or a Bill on which there would be controversy.

The original recommendation to change the methods of reflecting currency matters in the Public Accounts of Canada came from the Auditor General in 1980. Indeed, the audit report to the Minister of Finance for the year ended December 31, 1979, disclosed the matter of the Exchange Fund account as an item that should be brought to the attention of Parliament since it had not previously been disclosed in a manner which made it clear to Members of this House.

I want to put this in the context of the whole question of financial accountability. We in this House have all been pleased with the changes that were made in committees. There was all-Party support for many changes that were made in the way committees functioned. Indeed, we have seen some improvements with which we can all be very pleased. However, a weak link still exists in terms of financial accountability.

If we consider the original purpose for which Parliament was intended a few centuries ago we will see that it was originally intended to be a place where citizens could have their grievances redressed before they paid their taxes. Later on, at the time of American independence, there was the stirring statement "no taxation without representation". One of the basic functions of Parliament is to ensure that citizens have a voice in the way their taxes are spent and that there is proper accountability. In spite of the changes in the committee system with which we are all so pleased, a weak link still exists in financial accountability. I say this not in any partisan fashion because every Party in the House has to bear some responsibility for this.

When we have Estimates put before the House it is traditional under Vote 1, General Administration, that questions can be asked about any aspect of that Department's administration and functions. What happens is that Members of the Opposition come in with whatever criticisms or complaints they have about the Department and they line up with them while the Government supporters line up to protect the Minister. Policy matters are discussed but it is very rare in the course of a debate on the Estimates to have a line-by-line examination of the costs.

Furthermore, since the rules were changed in the 1970s, an Estimates have gone out to different standing committees instead of being dealt with in the House. The advantage that was foreseen at that time was that there would be specialists on the committees, but that has not developed. We still have too much changing of Members in committees. What has been lost is the overview function which used to be provided in the House.

There is now nobody, and when I say "nobody" I am talking about Members of Parliament as distinct from Ministers, looking at the totality of expenditures inclusive of all government departments. In standing committees where there may be Members looking at Estimates of a particular Department, we do not find Members examining past expenditures and looking at trends. At the end of the day we come to the Public Accounts Committee which functions as an effective audit committee. However, we do not manage by audit alone. The Public Accounts Committee has the final accounting but the standing committees are not doing it at the present time.

When we consider the chain of information that is provided to Members we start with Estimates. There are Ways and Means Motions which do not necessarily always match precisely the Estimates, since there can still be Supplementary Estimates coming in to confuse matters. Then, eventually, there are the Public Accounts of Canada followed by the Auditor General's Report. Then, the Public Accounts Committee tries to establish at the end of the day that moneys were spent precisely as Parliament meant them to be spent.

I hope that since we have all—and I say "all" because it was an all-Party initiative—managed to make very substantial changes to the standing committees to achieve a higher level of functioning, Members of Parliament will come back to remember that one of the first and most important basic functions of Parliament is to control spending and ensure financial accountability. To carry this out two things are needed. First, what is needed is the will on the part of Members of Parliament, and second, clear, understandable information is needed. The quality of information provided to Members of Parliament has improved over the last 10 years, largely in response to constant pressure from the Public Accounts Committee of the House and from the recommendations of the Auditor General.

Part III of the Estimates now gives a great deal of information which provides an interested Member with the opportunity to ask questions based on financial accountability, and not only on administrative aspects of the Department.

If Part III of the Estimates is well used in conjunction with the Public Accounts of Canada, it can also help one to follow through the actual spending. The Auditor General has developed a further proposal; the acronym is FGRS which stands for federal government reporting study. It was a lengthy study done in co-operation with the Controller and Auditor General of the United States. I am very impressed with its potential since it gives Members a better chance to track expenditures from Estimates right through to conclusion than anything I have seen thus far.

For the busy generalist, be it Member of Parliament, journalist or interested business person, FGRS would allow one to see at a glance what has happened, whereas now one has to plough through Ways and Means Motions, Part III of the Estimates and Public Accounts. Sometimes one is frustrated in this attempt to see what has happened because different items are hidden. I am not saying that anyone has intended to hide them, but we do find apples and oranges and that measures are bulked together in a way that makes it difficult to understand.

The measure before us has to be seen in the context of attempting to provide more clear information to Members of Parliament and, of course, to the public. The next step is the commitment of Members of Parliament to use that information wisely and constantly. What is also required is a commitment from Ministers to make available this kind of information.

I was shocked to see a letter written by one of the present Ministers, admittedly one who has not had a great deal of experience in Parliament, in which, in response to a request of mine as the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee for additional information he wrote that financial control is a function of Government, not of Parliament. In this, of course, he is quite wrong. To be sure it is a responsibility of Government. It is also a responsibility of Parliament. It has been part of the basic responsibility of parliamentarians for centuries. Any Member of Parliament who forgets that is failing his or her constituents badly.

In the context of providing better information and of clarifying issues so that we know exactly what we are looking at in the Public Accounts of Canada this Bill is one additional step. It affects the presentation of the Exchange Fund account which is governed by the Currency Act. The steps that are taken by the Government today appear to be congruent with the recommendations of the Auditor General. Essentially, it repeals the three-year averaging provision. It requires the accounting principles of the Exchange Fund to conform with those used in the Public Accounts of Canada.

It is another step to make the Public Accounts of Canada more intelligible. It is a step that makes it easier for those concerned with accountability matters to find the facts that they want, and on that basis I welcome this measure.

[Translation]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) for having made what, I believe, was his first speech in French in the House.

[English]

I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) on her elevation to the front bench of her Party. I notice that briefly she was occupying a front bench seat in the New Democratic Party. We welcome her here since she may not be able to get a seat in the redistribution in her own Party.

Having worked with the Hon. Member for some time I know there are few who work as hard and as consistently as she does on subjects which are difficult, complex, and not always transparent to the average elector, and her promotion is deserved.

I wish to comment briefly on the Bill, and then perhaps a little less briefly on some of the implications related to the operations of the Exchange Fund account and the Band of Canada.

As the Minister and the critic for the Liberal Party have indicated, this is a technical Bill. It arises out of the 1986 Budget. In a modest way, it goes counter to some of the other steps that have been taken by the Government to hide its operations from average Canadians. In this particular case, it is a slightly more open accounting for the operations of the exchange fund account.

As I understand it, it appears to make a difference of between $200 million and $500 million a year in the reporting that takes place in the public accounts. It will bring the exchange fund account in line with the practices of the general public accounts. Interestingly enough, this is at a time when the banks in their operations are also moving away from smoothing and are being a little more direct on a year-to-year basis about the operations of their reserves. In a sense, this is what is happening with the Government of Canada.

If that was all there was to talk about, I could now sit down. I do wish to say a word or two, because yesterday for only the second time since his appointment we had the opportunity to have the Governor of the Bank of Canada come before the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. Since the Governor is responsible for the operations of the exchange fund account, among other things, it is appropriate to take some perspective in terms of how the exchange rate for Canada is being managed or influenced by the Government and what that may mean in terms of economic policies.

I would like to express misgivings over what seems like a single-minded obsession with inflation of the Governor of the Bank of Canada, at the expense of the other objectives of economic policy. The Governor is still worried about inflation. He states that the inflation rate of approximately 4.2 per cent is still too high. In his view, the only good rate of inflation is a zero rate of inflation. Therefore, until that goal is achieved, he does not wish to relent in terms of keeping inflation as his number one priority. He states that there can only be one monetary policy for Canada, that we cannot have any form of differential interest rates in different areas of the country. Then he states, in a rather sanguine manner, that he hopes that somehow some of the benefits of economic revival in the country might trickle down to Atlantic Canada, to the outlying parts of Quebec, and to those parts of Ontario and British Columbia which remain depressed and retain unemployment rates of 10 per cent or higher.

I was disturbed at the manner in which the Governor of the Bank of Canada seems to tolerate what really now is a two-Canadas economic policy. We have a situation where unemployment has fallen to 2 or 3 per cent in areas such as Mississauga, west of Toronto; the unemployment rate in the industrial belt of southern Ontario and around Metropolitan Toronto is in fact down to around the 4 or 5 per cent range. I have noticed on recent visits that if people are looking for low wage service industry jobs, they are amply advertised, the want-ads are full, and one can knock on the doors of restaurants and small manufacturing establishments and probably get a job. However, a person would not be able to pay the rent because of the price of housing in the Toronto region. Nonetheless, there is employment there in a way that there was not three or four years ago.

When I say that there are two Canadas, that is demonstrated markedly when one looks at the disparities in unemployment rates between central Canada, particularly southern Ontario, and the rest of the country. Although these are the November figures, December is only a little different. The unemployment rate in Ontario is approximately 5.9 per cent. In southern Ontario it is in the order of 4.7 or 4.8 per cent. That compares with an unemployment rate of 13 per cent in Atlantic Canada, 18 per cent in Newfoundland, 13 or 14 per cent in the interior of British Columbia, 10.4 per cent in British Columbia as a whole, 10 per cent across most of the region of the Province of Quebec with the exception of Montreal, where it is a shade lower, and perhaps the area of the eastern townships.

Therefore, we have a situation where, apart from southern Ontario, unemployment rates remain at levels which are historically excessive, which are too high, and which I believe are unacceptable to average Canadians. Nonetheless, they are certainly acceptable to the Governor of the Bank of Canada. Perhaps it is easier for the bank Governor because he moves in rarefied circles, lives in comfortable housing in this, my community of Ottawa. It is a comfortable community which tends to have an economy that is not as good as but close to that of southern Ontario. The real hardship and misery of what is happening and continuing to happen in much of the country in the other Canada is simply not visible to the Governor or to his staff here in their glass tower on Wellington Street in Ottawa.

What was particularly disturbing about the evidence of the Governor was when he indicated that in his view the economy of Canada is very close to over-heating. I asked, "What would happen if the unemployment rate came down by another 1 per cent?" He said, "In that case we would be very, very close to over-heating."

We know what has happened since the crash of October 19, 1987. We know that at the time the Bank of Canada, in conjunction and in consultation with the Department of Finance, dropped interest rates sharply, injected a lot of liquidity into the economy in order to prevent a snowballing effect from the stock market crash bringing the whole economy in its wake. That has been relatively successful in the sense that we have not had a continuing and accelerating crash along the lines of what happened beginning three or four months after the great October crash of 1929. Since that time we have seen interest rates go back up both in this country and in the United States. Those rates controlled or directed by the Bank of Canada have gone up by almost a full percentage point. In other words, it has been as if that was only a little nightmare that lasted for a few weeks, but now it is over and we can go back to the real business of the Bank of Canada.

In the view of the Governor of the Bank of Canada the real business is fighting inflation. The Governor is saying that he and his bank are really there to serve as the monetary policy directors for the economy of central Canada, specifically of southern Ontario. They are now putting on the brakes because they feel that southern Ontario is about at or beyond the point of over heating.

I would suggest that that is a message of despair for people who live in Atlantic Canada with an unemployment rate of 13 per cent, and for much of Quebec with an unemployment rate of over 10 per cent. British Columbia is still reeling from the recession and it still has unemployment rates that are generally over 10 per cent. Substantial parts of the Prairies, not to mention northern Ontario, also have excessively high unemployment rates. As far as those people are concerned, they are in another Canada. They can forget about getting any kind of assistance from the Bank of Canada. They can forget about any creative and constructive use of monetary policy to try to spread the benefits of economic revival in the country to those regions. It is significant that we are now in about the fifth year of economic recovery, yet economic recovery has mainly been felt in central Canada.

That is why I say we now have two Canadas. We have Central Canada whose economy is concentrated in Southern Ontario around Toronto and in the Golden Horseshoe, where the unemployment rate now averages less than 5 per cent. And we have the rest of the country where the unemployment rate is still over 10 per cent, going as high as 13 per cent in the Atlantic Provinces, 18 per cent in Newfoundland, and 10 per cent or more in British Columbia.

When I asked the Governor of the Bank of Canada whether he was prepared to take the necessary steps to help create full employment in these regions, the answer was in fact negative, since the Governor and the Bank of Canada have a policy that is aimed at fighting inflation, despite the fact that inflation has dropped to 4.2 per cent. They see a danger of economic overheating in Ontario, which justifies maintaining interest rates at levels that are excessively high now at about 5 per cent in terms of real interest. Historically speaking, this is very high, and what this means is that they refuse to allow the economy to expand, which would benefit Quebecers and Canadians in both Eastern and Western Canada.

[English]

We have seen this particularly over the course of the time we have had the free trade negotiations. When those negotiations began the Canadian dollar was at about 72 cents. Today the dollar is just above or just below 78 cents, at a level which I believe is the highest it has been for about seven years. It is back up to that particular level.

It is interesting that the American authorities have been pressing Canada to lay off in terms of our trade surplus with the Americans and to do so by raising our exchange rates. We have done that.

It is interesting as well that the exchange fund appears to have been used in recent days specifically in order to keep the value of the Canadian dollar from going even higher and at the same time to prevent the Bank of Canada having to step in to lower Canadian interest rates. In other words, the bank is using the fund, I presume with the co-operation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and perhaps at his direction, to keep the dollar from going higher. At the same time it is adhering to its policy of interest rates which are too high because of its phobia about inflation.

My Party and I have always thought that the priorities of economic policy are not just to try to balance an adequate and acceptable level of inflation against an acceptable level of economic growth.

The third element is that full employment should be just as much an objective of government policy as is inflation control or economic growth. Because of the Bank of Canada's direction of monetary policy and its influence over the exchange rates, I believe that the Bank of Canada must be seized with that as well. We cannot have one part of the duopoly which is governing fiscal and economic policy focusing only on inflation and leave it up to fiscal policy to do the rest in terms of trying to achieve full employment.

I was depressed when the Governor of the Bank of Canada said yesterday that there should only be one monetary policy for Canada. He did not reveal a shade or a smidgen of interest in trying to find ways to work with the chartered banks in order to ensure that their lending policies for real investment and real development in western Canada, Quebec, and Atlantic Canada might in fact be more liberal or more open than their policies in southern Ontario. I do not see why that could not be done. Perhaps it cannot be done by the use of monetary instruments directly, but the Governor of the Bank of Canada, who is a man with intellectual force, and is perhaps a bit more vigorous than his predecessor, a man who is new to the job, is in a position to establish some new traditions. In fact he might well start to sit down with bank chairmen and operating officers on a regular basis to review what they are doing in order to try to get away from the structural imbalance where Ontario is close to full employment at the same time that the rest of the country is far from employment, the structural imbalance where we have two Canadas.

Monetary policy, inflation fighting, the exchange rate, and fiscal policy are all very closely intertwined. This is why I have chosen to take this opportunity to speak a bit about these interrelated questions which I think are germane, even though they extend a little beyond the narrowly defined purpose of Bill C-99. However we do not have many opportunities for this kind of discussion. It is germane as well because of what I felt were some rather wrong-headed and misdirected statements of direction by the Governor of the Bank of Canada in his testimony yesterday.

The fact as well is that many of the instruments by which government seeks to influence and change the structural problems in the economy that lead to having two Canadas will in fact be weakened because of the Government's trade deal with the United States, what I call the "American option".

The American option does not stop the Americans from using defence grants, state policies, and those kinds of things to encourage industrial development and to put jobs into regionally poor or underdeveloped areas in their country. However, the American option of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) certainly does that here in Canada. If we try to use labour market policies, training, regional development subsidies, perhaps differential rates of taxation, and fiscal policy to encourage growth in Quebec, Atlantic Canada, and British Columbia, while at the same time discourage growth in central Canada to keep the economy from overheating, we will immediately become victim to interference from the American Government and from American industries. They will shout foul and start to talk about countervailing tariffs and other types of trade actions against the output of Canadian companies. Since most Canadian companies are of a scale where they will need and in fact be encouraged to develop markets in the United States, they will be vulnerable to that, and the Government will be vulnerable to that as well.

We have a Governor of the Bank of Canada who says that he wants one monetary policy, that he cannot do anything about trying to get jobs into Newfoundland, and that in fact he will put on the brakes before Newfoundland even gets close to anything approaching full employment. At the same time we have a Conservative Government which takes an American option which effectively in the trade deal means that future governments—and I am not only talking about future Conservative governments, but when the NDP forms a government and maybe the Liberals if they ever get to form a government again—will be constrained in using the traditional instruments of fiscal policy and the traditional tools of structural change in the economy in order to try to get a better balance among the regions of the country. I think that is very serious. In effect we are systematically stripping ourselves of the instruments and the tools that we have been using. At the same time we have the Governor of the Bank of Canada saying that he does not want to do anything about it.

I wanted to raise these particular questions. If the Governor of the Bank of Canada thinks that we are getting into an inflationary spiral before large parts of the country have even recovered from the depression, it is a very sad message indeed. One of the criteria on which the Conservative Government will be judged in the election that we expect to come this spring or this fall will be its failure to bring a lot of Canada out of the recession in which it had been plunged under the previous Liberal Government. The Government has talked about its priorities in terms of there being economic revival and national reconciliation. How the devil do you reconcile yourself to a situation if you are in Atlantic Canada where the unemployment rate is 13 per cent and the unemployment rate among young people is 18 per cent or 20 per cent? I would not reconcile myself to that. I say that is totally unacceptable.

What kind of economic revival is it, Mr. Speaker, when in Newfoundland the unemployment rate remains at 18 per cent or more? What kind of revival is that? All of that bumf has gone off to the shredder which was designed to tell people otherwise. The reason people did not take that information is that they knew it contained Tory misrepresentations of what was really going on. That, I grant you, may be a little far from Bill C-99.

I am suggesting that this area of economic policy is too little debated here in the House of Commons and should be discussed a great deal more because these questions all interrelate. It is by no accident that a governor who was obsessed with inflation has contributed to the operations of the exchange fund which has helped raise the dollar to 78 cents from 72 cents. This, in effect, has put an 8 per cent increase in costs, give or take a percentage point, on Canadian industries selling into the United States.

In other words, in order to get the deal with Washington, our monetary authorities in consultation with the Minister of Finance more or less did what they were told, which was to take some of the competitive edge off Canadian industry so that the Americans would not be so mad at us and Congress would pass the Prime Minister's American option—I have finally found the words for it that can be used in a parliamentary sense—which our Prime Minister signed.

What other deals have been made? I am not sure. I was encouraged because I think it was a sensible statement when the Governor said that he is not wedded to a particular exchange rate for the Canadian dollar. I think that is correct. I think we make a bit too much over whether the dollar is at 100 cents, 78 cents or 72 cents or even at 65 cents. What is important is how Canadians are living here in this country, and not more than that. I do want to know whether there have been any secret deals made between Canada and the United States in order to encourage Congress to go ahead with this American option for Canada that will put the dollar up to 80, 82 or 84 cents sometime in the near future.

I would like some reassurance from the Government, if it has any priority for full employment, particularly in the regions, that it will reject this obsession of the Governor who is prepared to wrestle inflation to zero per cent even if it means another half a million Canadians have to go without jobs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand there is a disposition for Bill C-99 to be referred to Committee of the Whole.

Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Hockin, seconded by Mr. Lewis moved that Bill C-99, an Act to amend the Currency Act, be now read a second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the Chair.

On Clause 1—Net income credited to C.R.F.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, I do not think when we agreed to put this Bill through today that we expected there would be some reason for which comments like the one made would be germane, but I think we can get through this within three or four minutes. Could the Minister of State for Finance comment on the recent operations of the Exchange Fund account? Specifically, will he confirm that the Government has intervened in the Exchange Fund account in order to allow the Bank of Canada to keep interest rates at their current level, a level which I think is excessive and that the Exchange Fund account is being used to control the dollar from going up as fast as it might because the Government is agreeing with the Bank of Canada that interest rates should be kept at their present level?

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Chairman, I certainly cannot confirm that. I will endeavour to do some research on that for the Hon. Member. I think the operation of the exchange fund account is affected by a whole host of variables. The Member mentions but one. There are many others. It would be very difficult to extract one particular determining variable and announce that that is the cause of the Exchange Fund account's differing balance at the end of each day.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, maybe I could pursue this a little bit and ask the Minister of State for Finance this question. Is it true that we could have prevented the dollar from rising at perhaps an excessive rate by allowing the interest rates to come down? Is it not also true—the Government talks about 120,000 jobs that might conceivably come in the 1990s from the trade deal which the Prime Minister had signed—that that reduction of interest rates would and could bring about a much bigger increase in employment and this could be done now in 1988 rather than waiting five years for the results of a trade deal which has all kinds of other adverse consequences for Canada.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I find it difficult to accept that this particular question is relevant to the Bill. The Bill is a straight accounting change. We are not discussing substantive policy. I think it is wrong for me to depart into an economic lecture on the use of the Exchange Fund account when this Bill is changing a simple accounting treatment which is about two years overdue for change.

The Chairman: I believe the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre recognizes that fact.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, to some extent my question did relate to the operations of the Exchange Fund account. We have the Governor saying that he needs to keep interest rates high because of the inflation problem. Then you see the Exchange Fund being used in order to keep the Governor from having to reduce interest rates. Does the Government agree with the Governor of the Bank of Canada when he says that the inflation rate is too high and that the inflation rate should be wrestled to zero regardless of what impact that might have on other desirable areas of economic policy, including unemployment?

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Chairman, clearly the Hon. Member certainly thinks that interest rates are too high. Clearly the Hon. Member thinks that the level of the Canadian dollar is too high. Clearly he thinks by lowering both all problems would be solved. The Government disagrees with both those premises.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Chairman, I also have a question for the Minister which follows on what he has just said. As the Minister pointed out, this is an accounting change which is overdue. I would appreciate hearing the chronology from the Minister and why this has taken so long.

The rules were changed some two years ago in the Public Accounts of Canada. In the February 1986 Budget, the Minister of Finance announced some changes in the accounting practices respecting the Public Accounts of Canada. Some of these were made in response to repeated recommendations of the Auditor General, and that included the consolidation of the Exchange Fund account and other special accounts with the Consolidated Revenue Fund. Those changes were put into effect immediately in the Public Accounts. Through those changes the three year averaging provision was abandoned with respect to the Public Accounts. It has taken a full two years to bring in this Bill which finally gets things on an equal footing. Could the Minister explain the delay?

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Chairman, the Member is quite right. The response in two recommendations of the Auditor General was the consolidation of the two accounts; the Exchange Fund account and the other special accounts with the Consolidated Revenue Fund. This change was put into immediate effect in the Public Accounts. We are now getting around to changing the Currency Act.

The Hon. Member asked why it had taken so long and it has been more than a year. I will be glad to try to see if I can get more information on this, but my understanding is that there were a number of accounts of the Government that had to be changed in order to be made consistent with the accounting principles in the Public Accounts. There were grain accounts and various other stabilization accounts. This is one of many. It is my understanding that they were to be done more or less at the same time and that is what has held us up. I would like to be able to confirm that for the Hon. Member and I will look into it further.

The Chairman: It being eleven o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to consider the Bill again later this day.

Progress reported.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALL-NEWS TELEVISION CHANNEL—SUPPORT FOR GRANTING OF LICENCE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to state in the House that the constituents of Ottawa—Vanier are writing to me in large numbers—this week alone I received over 20 letters—concerning the CBC all-news channel and the protest that has been raised by Tory Members of Parliament and others. I would like to read one letter from constituents of mine representative of the number that I have received this week:

> May I request you to voice on my behalf, and on behalf of many other constituents in our riding, our opposition to this move and to contact the Prime Minister and the Minister of Communications to urge that the Cabinet not overturn the CRTC's decision on this issue.
> The standards and quality of CBC's news programming have been judged superior to that of the private broadcasting companies. Moreover, the CBC is one of our most important national institutions, instrumental in the development of Canada's national identity and it is in our own interest to support and strengthen it. Awarding the licence to the CBC will ensure competent and independent news service in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I would only ask that, with respect to the question of linguistic specificity, francophone viewers be provided with similar services in their own language.

BANKS AND BANKING

CHARTERED BANKS—INTEREST RATE CHARGES

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, the Bank of Montreal has announced that it is about to shed what it calls nickel-and-dime charges. I commend the bank for its leadership in this direction and I am sure customers will appreciate not having to pay to deposit and withdraw from savings accounts.

There are other charges in all banks that are not so nickel and dime that should be looked at very seriously. There is also the feeling in the business community that our banks are charging an excessive interest rate to cover losses chartered banks incurred with foreign loans. Bank customers refer to the large spread between interest paid and interest charged. Perhaps the banks should clear this matter up for the general public. While some progress in public relations may be made by banks, there is still a lot left to be desired.

HISTORIC EVENTS

MILLENIUM OF CHRISTIANITY IN UKRAINE

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, today at 12 noon in the Rotunda of Parliament, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), on behalf of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), along with Members of Parliament from all Parties, will join with Metropolitan Maxim of the Ukrainian Catholic Church and Metropolitan Wasyly of the Ukrainian Orthodox Church and representatives of the Ukrainian Canadian Committee in inaugurating the celebration in Canada of the millenium of Christianity in Ukraine.

It is fitting that celebrations of this event be launched today in Ottawa, the day that in 1918 Ukrainians re-established their right to govern themselves by declaring the sovereignty and independence of Ukraine in Kiev.

In 988, St. Volodymyr the Great, the ruler of Kiev, adopted the Christian faith as the religion of his nation by baptizing his people in the waters of the Dnieper River.

The acceptance of Christianity profoundly altered the entire further course of Ukrainian history, significantly determining the development of Ukrainian culture in all of its manifestations and giving rise to a wealth of spiritual and social values.

The struggle of the Ukrainian Orthodox and Catholic churches, along with Ukrainian Protestant denominations, to overcome Russian imperialist and Soviet systemic persecution and banning has been a symbol to Ukrainians across the world to maintain their own rich historical and religious legacy.

I am sure I can speak for all Members of the House, and indeed for all Canadians, in extending best wishes to Ukrainians throughout the world for the solemn observance and festive celebration of the millenium year.

INCOME TAX

NORTHERN BENEFITS—LACK OF GUIDES AND TAX FORMS

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, this week the Olympic flame came to the Yukon and it was a great event as it has been elsewhere in Canada. Now Revenue Canada has set up enough hurdles for northern Canadians to file for their northern tax benefits to qualify as an Olympic event.

I have received numerous telephone calls from constituents who, when they received their tax forms, found that they had been requested to fill out their T22-22 northern tax benefit forms only to find that they were not there. I began the quest for the forms.

It appears that the guides for these tax benefits have not been circulated, and indeed are not printed and will not be available until the end of February. I have been told by officials at Revenue Canada that they will send out copies of the guides and forms to residents, or that residents may call regional offices. It is a good idea to call the regional offices, but many northern Canadians do not have telephones. That clearly does not serve the public.

I call on the Minister to ensure that guides and forms for northern tax benefits will be made available in all post offices in the designated regions so that northern Canadians too can "go for the gold".

AIR TRANSPORT

NOISE CAUSED BY AIRCRAFT USING PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to remind the Government and particularly the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) of the ongoing and unacceptable problem of aircraft noise over the Humberlea community in my riding. This frustrating problem is by no means new. The Minister's predecessor, now the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), was presented with this same dilemma on a number of occasions and failed then to resolve it to the satisfaction of residents.

The issue of overwhelming noise from planes departing from or approaching Pearson International Airport emanates from the disproportionate use of the East-West runway 24-L despite the fact that there is another parallel runway, 24-R, just to the North. The community is simply fed up and frustrated with the Government's excuses and it will no longer tolerate an unbalanced, unfair procedure of utilizing 24-L to an exaggerated and unacceptable degree.

I am demanding, therefore, that the Minister intervene to ensure that the Department's policy of alternating runways every four hours be respected. The time for action to guarantee a balanced pattern of flights over the Humberlea community is now, before its fabric as a neighbourhood and the health of its citizens are affected any further, particularly considering that the Government has now approved and will soon be building a third air terminal at Pearson International Airport.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

CRITICISM OF GRANTING SPECIALTY SERVICES CABLE LICENCES

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, the CRTC's November decision to grant new licences to TV specialty services deprives Canadians of the freedom of choice we cherish. Most do not know that if they do not want a 24-hour rock channel, a religious channel, or an all-news channel, they will be forced to receive it and will have no choice. Most do not know that they will be forced to pay an extra monthly charge for these services, estimated at over $2, and they will have no choice.

What about the 25 per cent of Canadians who do not have a channel converter? Their plight is even worse. Not only will they not be able to receive the new services but they will have to pay for them anyway. What about seniors or low-income families to whom the additional charge of $2-plus per month will be a burden? They will either have to pay it or give up their cable service.

Canadians here in Ottawa are rebelling and are making their views known to their cable companies here. They do not want this forced down their throats. I encourage all Canadians to write or call their cable companies to express their outrage at this mandatory carriage of service.

WINTER OLYMPIC GAMES

OLYMPIC TORCH RELAY

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, it is with great expectation that all Canadians await the opening of the 15th Winter Olympic Games in Calgary on February 13. In large part, credit for this air of anticipation must go to the efforts of PetroCan in its sponsorship of the Olympic Torch relay.

As the torch has travelled on its 88-day cross-country journey, it has served to capture the Canadian imagination and has acted as a focal point for national pride. Certainly this was the case on January 5 when 10,000 people braved bitterly cold temperatures to catch a glimpse of the flame as it passed through the city of Kitchener. It was a heartwarming and uplifting experience for everyone who had the privilege of being present.

PetroCan's rigorous planning has not only ensured that the relay proceeded safely and with remarkable precision, its sensitive attention to every detail also contributed immensely to the joy and excitement of this remarkable event. PetroCan is doing a first-class job and is to be congratulated.

NICARAGUA—PROPOSED BILATERAL TALKS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, Daniel Ortega, President of Nicaragua, has asked President Reagan to reopen bilateral talks, since he has met Reagan's condition by opening talks with the Contras. In the past, Reagan and the Contras demanded concession after concession and, when Nicaragua agreed, they demanded further concessions. Reagan demanded reopening of La Prensa, and ending of censorship and the state of emergency. When Nicaragua did so, Reagan said they were only cosmetic and asked for more.

Nicaragua has now abolished the popular tribunals and agreed that 3,300 prisoners, including hundreds convicted of assault or murder, can go free, and either remain in Nicaragua if the war has ended, or else leave Central America. It has offered to let the UN, the OAS, and the Republican and Democratic Parties send observers to monitor the Contras' re-entry into Nicaraguan civil and political life. Nicaragua has agreed to hold elections for municipal office and for the Central American Parliament on schedule.

Now the Government of Canada ought to tell President Reagan to stop supplying arms to the Contras and to begin the bilateral peace talks with the Government of Nicaragua which he broke off.

THE ECONOMY

SUPPORT FOR GOVERNMENT'S POLICIES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, cohesive and realistic were the words used yesterday by Michel Belanger, President of the National Bank, to describe the Government's economic policies. Belanger maintains that a cautious monetary policy, a gradual reduction of the deficit, and freer trade enabled Canada last year to outrank all other industrialized countries in production and growth in employment.

[Translation]

After asking "how does one explain the widespread silence on the quality of the Conservative Government's performance?", Mr. Bélanger went on to say that "a government following a successful policy for which it does not get credit is tempted indeed to change course". However we know that our Government will not change course and will implement the free trade agreement.

MATERNITY LEAVE—SUGGESTED AMENDMENT

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, as it stands, Section 30 of the Unemployment Insurance Act implicitly discriminates against the mothers of those premature babies who are most at risk and who are, for that reason, unable to come home from the hospital on their due date. Under Section 30, mothers can begin their maternity leave early should the baby arrive prior to the expected date. Alternatively, if the baby is premature and cannot leave the hospital immediately, the mother has the option of delaying her maternity leave until the expected date, at which time, presumably, the baby will be taken home from the hospital. However, there the flexibility of the Act ends. There is no provision to allow for further delays beyond the baby's expected date of arrival.

The mother of a premature baby who is not ready to come home from the hospital on her expected due date has two options. She can take her maternity leave without her baby, which defeats the purpose of maternity leave, can prove very depressing for the mother, and in general makes little sense, or she can choose to forgo part of a leave which should be hers by right of law.

This choice is clearly unjust to a group of mothers who surely need more help rather than less, and I urge the Minister to consider changing this very important part of the Act.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

CALL FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, there appear to be two systems of justice in this country. There is one system of justice for the rich and powerful, one system for Conservative cabinet Ministers, and another system of justice for ordinary Canadians.

We have learned that a Minister of the Crown, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), appears to have breached the Elections Act. It was decided that it was not in the public interest to prosecute him. I ask why is it not in the public interest to prosecute a Minister of the Crown who breaches an Act passed by this Parliament? Why is it in the public interest to prosecute ordinary Canadians who run stop signs or park illegally but it is not in the public interest to prosecute a Conservative cabinet Minister?

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) knew or ought to have known that there was sufficient evidence to prosecute and convict that Minister. He ought not to have allowed that Minister back in the Cabinet. What message does this send out to Canadians across the country? The message is very clear. If you are a Conservative cabinet Minister, there is one system of justice. If you are an ordinary Canadian, there is another system of justice.

I call on the Government of Canada to show some decency and some sense of morality and force that Minister to resign.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—ALLEGED TORTURE OF DETAINED CANADIAN CITIZEN

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, on December 3, 1987, I raised in the House of Commons the case of Balkar Singh, a Canadian citizen under arrest in India, and the fact that, in the presence of both a Canadian consular official and a doctor he made an allegation of torture.

Since that time Mr. Singh's lawyer has filed a writ of habeas corpus citing that in the presence of named senior Indian police officials he was first hamstrung from the ceiling, then someone sat between his legs and started jumping, using him as a swing. Following this, electric shocks were applied to his sexual organ, armpits and head. His legs were then forced to virtually 180 degrees. He was then beaten on the stomach and on the soles of his feet and to this day he cannot walk.

Three weeks ago a lawyer for the accused gave a copy of this sworn information to the Canadian High Commission and urgently requested a follow-up consular visit. No access has been allowed by the Indian Government.

BANK OF CANADA

CONDUCT OF MONETARY POLICY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, yesterday John Crow, Governor of the Bank of Canada, appeared before the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs to answer questions about the bank's conduct of monetary policy which affects interest rates and the value of our dollar. It is now clear that Mr. Crow sings from the same old song-book used by Gerald Bouey.

The regions of Canada, the Atlantic provinces, rural Quebec, northern Ontario, the Prairies, British Columbia, and the North, can suffer from exceedingly high rates of unemployment and still the Governor of the Bank of Canada will not even consider the possibility of lowering interest rates because the boom times in southern Ontario may nudge up inflation.

What we have here is an admission that there are two policies in this country, one for southern Ontario and one for the rest of us in the far-flung regions. Do the people in Corner Brook, Chicoutimi, Timmins, Flin-Flon, Cranbrook, Kamloops or Clearwater not matter as much as the people in Toronto? Why are John Crow and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) writing off these people? Do they not care? Obviously not.

New Democrats say it is time that the Bank of Canada reduces interest rates. Even a 1 per cent drop would yield twice the economic benefits of the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal over the next decade. We believe it is time for an interest rate policy which is fair to everyone. New Democrats believe that no matter where you live in this great country you deserve a chance to be employed.

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING SYSTEM—CALL FOR COMMITTEE EXAMINATION

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the Prince Rupert grain handling dispute is now over and western grain farmers will breathe a sigh of relief, temporarily. The tragedy is that it is those same grain farmers who will have to pay for the failure of management and labour to bargain collectively and reach an agreement. As is so often the case, the Government has been called upon to intervene.

I believe Canadians are tiring of a system whereby innocent third parties pay for the failure of management and labour to come to a reasonable conclusion. I think Canadians are asking parliamentarians to consider doing away with strikes and lock-outs in essential services, instead seeking out better ways of resolving these disputes without the terrible debilitating effects which strikes and lock-outs and prolonged labour disputes cause.

Whether it is Prince Rupert or Air Canada, or the railways or the Post Office, the Vancouver Port or the Port of Thunder Bay, the principle is the same. I implore Members of Parliament to consider establishment of a special committee to find better ways of dealing with these breakdowns in the collective bargaining system.

QUERY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER KNEW ABOUT MR. GORMAN'S LETTER CONCERNING INFRACTION BY MEMBER FOR FRONTENAC

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, it would be useful this morning if the Prime Minister were available and accountable to Parliament—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Boudria: —but in his absence I want to direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Where is Turner?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Who is Turner?

Mr. Speaker: I very much hesitate to interrupt the lead question. However, one of the reasons, as Hon. Members know, that we do not comment upon the presence or absence of a Member is that Members have to be many places, and that includes Prime Ministers. It creates disorder, as it just did. It is perfectly appropriate to say "in the absence of a certain Minister I will put the question to another Minister". That is a courtesy and a long-standing tradition. I know that Hon. Members will want to stay within our rules.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister, and it relates to the violation of the Elections Act by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

When the Prime Minister decided to bring the Minister back into his Cabinet in November 1985, was he aware of Mr. Gorman's letter in which he said to the Minister, and I quote: "... evidence on file indicates that you were party to a violation of Section 62 of the Elections Act."?

At the time, was the Prime Minister aware of that, yes or no?

• (1120)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think what is relevant in this case is the fact that when the allegations surfaced the Minister did the proper thing in the parliamentary tradition and removed himself from the office of the Minister of Communications. The issue was investigated in detail by the appropriate authorities. The Commissioner of Elections rendered a verdict and that verdict was accepted by the Prime Minister.

I remind Hon. Members again that if they want to take issue with the judgment, the discretion, and the verdict that was brought down by the Commissioner, who is entitled to bring down his verdict as outlined in the Act, it is perfectly within their right to do so. However, I remind him that this individual is commissioned under statute to carry out the law and he has carried out the terms of the law, exercising his discretion and judgment as he so saw fit.

Mr. Boudria: I am taking issue with a judgment, the judgment of the Prime Minister.

REINSTATEMENT OF MINISTER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, given that the Minister himself resigned from Cabinet, saying in the House that he was to establish his innocence, and given that Mr. Gorman's letter says of the Minister: "Proof in the dossier demonstrates that you participated in an infraction against paragraph 62.6—" of the Canada Elections Act, why did the Prime Minister, who knew or should have known, return this person to Cabinet?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member suggests that the Minister is guilty. The Commissioner did not find that he was guilty. If he so found he would have exercised his prerogative and proceeded with the prosecution. In his wisdom and judgment there was not sufficient evidence to proceed.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, on September 9, 1985, the Prime Minister, in an open letter sent to Members of Parliament concerning public sector ethics and morals, said that there was: "No doubt that the ultimate responsibility for the ethical standards of the federal Government rests with Cabinet and more particularly with me". Therefore, the responsibility belongs to the Prime Minister. He said so himself.

Therefore, why did he reappoint to Cabinet a person whom the Chief Electoral Officer had found to be in breach of the Canada Elections Act? Why did the Prime Minister breach yet another promise to the people of Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this is really, in effect, a parliamentary issue. An officer of Parliament has been charged with the responsibility of investigating this issue. As was pointed out by the Chief Electoral Officer in a news release of yesterday:

> —the Canada Elections Act makes it quite clear that it is the function of the Commissioner to decide whether or not to proceed to prosecute a case. The Commissioner consents to prosecution only when he is satisfied that he has all the necessary facts and only in those cases where he believes that it would be in the interest of justice to do so and where there is every likelihood that the prosecution will succeed.

I invite the Hon. Member to read the pertinent sections of the Act. Perhaps I may have to quote them in the House.

Hon. Members are taking issue with a decision that has been made by an officer of this House. I think it is wrong to do so.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

DRUG PRICE INCREASES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Two and one-half months ago the Minister said, as reported at page 10666 of Hansard:

> One of the consequences of the activity of the Senate is to raise once again the spectre of whether drug prices will increase at a faster rate than the cost of living. They will not. I maintain that those who claim that they will are wrong and have no basis for making that claim.

In view of his undertaking, and in view of the fact that the Ontario Ministry of Health has confirmed that drug prices in that province are rising above the CPI level—in some instances in excess of 100 per cent and in one instance above 250 per cent—will the Minister now admit that Bill C-22 is a sham with regard to protecting consumer interests? What will he do about it? Will he do the honourable thing and rescind Bill C-22?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in Canadian law passed by this Parliament, there has not been the ability of any federal institution to monitor the prices of drugs and keep them within reasonable levels. Bill C-22 provides that capability through the Patent Medicine Prices Review Board.

If, in fact, the Hon. Member is angry about this apparent news from Ontario that prices may be rising faster than the cost of living in the immediate past, he should direct his anger at his own colleagues in the other place who delayed passage of Bill C-22 so long that the Drug Prices Review Board is not in place to do anything about that apparent problem.

BILL C-22—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Canadians are saying, and the Minister has confirmed for all to hear and see, that he is nothing more than a mere puppet for the multinational corporations. After the Minister stated in the House of Commons on August 14, August 21, and November 3, 1987, that prices will not exceed CPI, how can he stand in his place and say that? Is it not a fact that he is not assuming his responsibilities as Minister responsible for consumers? This Bill is being allowed to gouge seniors by charging them a higher cost for drugs. When will he do something about it?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's ignorance of Bill C-22 and its purpose is mindboggling, given the apparent time he spent studying the Bill. He ought to be aware of the necessity of getting the regulations promulgated before the Drug Prices Review Board is able to exercise that authority. Had the Hon. Member, his friends in the New Democratic Party, and the Hon. Member's colleagues in the other place not been so irresponsible in their delay, this Board would be up and operating, and there would not be these price increases.

If he is angry at somebody, he should look in the mirror because the villain is there.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF DOCUMENT REFERRED TO BY COMMUNICATIONS DIRECTOR IN PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. Mr. Bruce Phillips, a well-known former Conservative and now Director of Communications in the Prime Minister's Office, said according to the media this morning, and I quote: "—the Prime Minister's Office was aware of the facts involving the Member for Frontenac well before yesterday". Mr. Phillips said: "There was other correspondence prepared by Mr. Gorman which gives further details on this case".

Mr. Speaker, my question is this: What was the date on the document which Mr. Phillips was referring to? When was it received in the Prime Minister's Office and what did it contain?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure of all the details to which the Hon. Member is referring. However, what is at issue here is a judgment that was rendered by an officer of Parliament who rendered a decision after an investigation and consideration of the case. Perhaps it might be appropriate to quote from the Canada Elections Act to put this whole issue into perspective—

• (1130)

Mr. Murphy: Answer the question, Don.

Mr. Mazankowski: If they do not want me to answer the question, Mr. Speaker, I can sit down. I am trying to explain it so it might enlighten them, because I think there is a certain amount of political grandstanding here—

Mr. Riis: It's an injustice.

Mr. Mazankowski: —over an issue that is of very fundamental importance, which strikes at the very heart of our parliamentary institution.

Mr. Riis: Indeed, it does, integrity.

Mr. Mazankowski: This is a law that was passed by all Parties in this House. Section 70 (3) states the following:

> The Chief Electoral Office shall appoint a Commissioner of Canada Elections—whose duties, under the general supervision of the Chief Electoral Officer, shall be to ensure that the provisions of this Act are complied with and enforced.

Section 70(4) states:

> No prosecution for an offence under this Act or for an offence under section 115 of the Criminal Code in relation to anything that this Act forbids or requires to be done shall be instituted except with the prior consent in writing of the Commissioner.

It is the Commissioner who has the duty, the power and the authority to press charges. In this case he exercised his judgment and discretion and chose not to do so, because of insufficient evidence, I would assume.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF CERTAIN DOCUMENTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, we have here the ghost of Allan J. MacEachen. Mr. Speaker, I would like an answer to the question I just asked. Mr. Bruce Phillips, Director of Communications in the Prime Minister's Office, said that other correspondence had been drafted by Mr. Gorman in the case involving the Member for Frontenac well before yesterday and had been circulated in the Prime Minister's Office.

I would like to know whether the Deputy Prime Minister is prepared to table these documents and also what these documents contain. And I would like to know when the Prime Minister's Office was made aware of the situation.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member has some documents which he has in his hands, as he had yesterday, let him table them. Let him bring them forward.

RETENTION OF MINISTER IN CABINET

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): It seems to me that Mr. Bruce Phillips is rather a reliable person in this operation across the way, Mr. Speaker. I would like to have that document tabled before this House and I am sure the Canadian people want it. What we want is honesty and openness in government and we are not getting it from this Minister across the way.

I also want to know why a year and a half ago, when the Prime Minister found more information about a former Minister, he kicked him out of the Cabinet and set up an inquiry, and now when we have more information about a violation of the Elections Act by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, why is that Minister kept in Cabinet, and why is there no inquiry into his conduct?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member makes a categorically false statement. If there had been a violation, prosecution and charges would have been laid. This was not the case—

Mr. Nystrom: There was a violation.

Mr. Riis: There was a violation.

Mr. Fulton: There was a violation.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member is now questioning the judgment of an officer of this House. I think it is fundamentally immoral to do so.

RESULT OF INQUIRY—REINSTATEMENT OF MINISTER IN CABINET—POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I find it incredible that the Deputy Prime Minister did not find time in the last two days to speak to the Prime Minister and find out whether he was aware of the results of the investigation when he recalled his Minister to Cabinet. Canadians expected the Prime Minister to consider the results of the investigation before making that decision.

I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister to explain to the House how the Prime Minister could decide to recall his Minister to Cabinet without first checking the results of the investigation. And if the Prime Minister did have time to check the results, how could he reappoint to Cabinet a Minister who was found violating the law of this country?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): He appoints Ministers, as far as I know.

Mr. Mazankowski: —in an issue which was dealt with by an officer of this institution, namely, the Commissioner of Elections. The Chief Electoral Officer has indicated in The Globe and Mail that he would be prepared to come before any parliamentary committee and explain this whole issue. If Hon. Members want to take issue with the verdict or decision that was rendered, let them take issue with the officers of this House who rendered such a decision.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, let me remind the Deputy Prime Minister that it is the Prime Minister who appoints Ministers and who has the responsibility to make sure that they are clean.

Mr. Gauthier: Absolutely.

QUERY WHY CHARGES NOT LAID

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): The Election Commissioner has determined that there is proof in the dossier that the Minister has participated in an infraction against Section 62 of the Canada Elections Act. Yet no charge has been laid. On the other hand, three ordinary people have been charged in connection with this election expenses violation.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister tell us how come there are two standards of justice in this country under this Government? There is one special standard for Tory Ministers and there is another standard of justice for ordinary people. Why do you accept the double standard? Why didn't you inquire as to why the charges were not laid?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will, of course, put his questions in the appropriate way.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to smear everybody, including the Commissioner of Elections, he can choose to do so. If the Hon. Member takes issue with the decision he rendered it is certainly his prerogative under the rules of the House to call him before a committee to explain his judgment. There is no question about it. That is not a decision, it is not a judgment that was rendered by this Government.

Mr. Gauthier: Will the Prime Minister appear, too?

Mr. Mazankowski: This Government was not even responsible for the appointment of the Commissioner.

Ms. Copps: What about Masse?

Mr. Mazankowski: This is a parliamentary issue.

Ms. Copps: Who appointed the Minister?

Mr. Gauthier: Will the Prime Minister appear?

Mr. Mazankowski: It is a parliamentary issue inasmuch as the officers of this House are charged with the responsibility of determining the facts and then rendering a judgment. That is what is done. If Hon. Members opposite want to take issue with that, they can certainly do so. If they want to call the individual before a committee of the House to respond, they can do that as well.

COMMISSIONER'S FINDINGS—PRIME MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The cabinet Minister in question, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, was found by the Commissioner of Canada Elections to have participated in an infraction of the Canada Elections Act. Other people were prosecuted for that same participation. Did the Prime Minister know that the Commissioner had found that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources had also participated in this infraction? And if the Prime Minister did know this, when did he find it out?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members insist on prosecuting the individual when there were not grounds for prosecution. Again, I am quoting from a background document which was provided by Elections Canada.

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: If the Hon. Member who wants to ask a question would stand up, he may be recognized, rather than talking from his seat.

The backgrounder document has an item in here that explains when a prosecution is authorized, and I quote:

> The Commissioner consents to prosecution only when he is satisfied that he has all the necessary facts and only in those cases where he believes that it would be in the interest of justice to do so and where there is every likelihood that the prosecution will succeed.

That is the power and authority he has, and he rendered that discretion and that judgment in accordance with the provisions of the Act.

INFRACTION OF ACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, time after time the Deputy Prime Minister has risen and quoted from the press release. Why does the Deputy Prime Minister pretend that the letter written to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources does not exist? Why will he not deal with the fact that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was found by the Commissioner to have participated in an infraction of the Canada Elections Act, an infraction for which others were prosecuted? Why does the Deputy Prime Minister not answer the question as to when the Prime Minister found this out and whether or not the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources told the Prime Minister this? And why has the Government not acted on this very important issue? Why the stonewalling? Does he have a log cabin in Vegreville he wants to go back to?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member takes issue with me quoting from the background document that is provided by Elections Canada. Perhaps, then, to edify his mind just a wee bit, I might quote from Section 70(8) of the Canada Elections Act which again puts into perspective the discretion and power the Commissioner has. It states as follows:

> Where the Chief Electoral Officer has reasonable cause to believe that an election officer may have committed an offence against this Act, the Chief Electoral Officer shall—

The word is "shall",

> —direct the Commissioner to make such inquiry as appears to be called for in the circumstances and, if after making such inquiry, it appears to the Commissioner that a prosecution for the offence should be taken, he shall—

• (1140)

It goes on to outline the steps that he should take, such as institute and carry on such a prosecution or cause it to be instituted and carried on. It is solely the Commissioner's judgment in this case. It is clearly specified in the Act.

Why will Hon. Members not follow an Act which this House passed and which had the endorsement and agreement of all Parties?

HUMAN RIGHTS

ISRAEL—TREATMENT OF PALESTINIANS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister will know that in recent weeks Israeli troops in the West Bank and Gaza Strip have killed 36 Palestinian demonstrators, including women and children. He will also know that Israeli troops have indulged in beatings, the use of food as a weapon, and violated fundamental human rights of Palestinians.

Will the Minister advise the House what specific action the Government of Canada is taking to protest Israel's excessive measures?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am pleased to know that some Members of the House are interested in questions of this importance. I met yesterday with Israel's Ambassador to Canada. I expressed to him Canada's deep and growing concern about developments in the occupied territories and about actions of the Government of Israel. I was able to speak as strongly to the Ambassador because of Canada's historic and continuing close friendship with Israel.

Later today I will be meeting with Ambassadors to Canada of various Arab countries. In all of those conversations I am making known not only our deep concern about developments there but I am asking that all parties with influence on events in that region use their influence to try, in the first instance, to bring about some reduction in the atmosphere of violence and, in the second instance, to look for any ways that might provide a more durable solution to the problems there, including conditions that would allow an international peace conference to be effective.

REVENUE CANADA

SEIZURE OF MOTOR HOME

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are wondering about justice in Canada. My question is for the Minister of National Revenue.

Last night Canadians were outraged to learn of the case of an elderly couple in Eganville who were wrongfully accused of a criminal act and subsequently acquitted. They had their $62,000 motor home seized three years ago. The Government and the Minister of National Revenue refuse to release the $62,000 motor home to this elderly couple.

Canadians are wondering where is the justice. They are wondering where is the fairness. Why has the Minister not taken action before now? I ask him not to give us any excuses. Will he tell us today whether he has given the order to release the motor home immediately?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite comes a bit late to this case. Some of his colleagues have been making very effective representations for a long time.

This matter came officially to the attention of our Department about a year and a half after the difficulty occurred. Had Mr. and Mrs. Buelow been able to avail themselves of the regular appeal procedures there would have been a much easier resolution to the problem. However, I am glad to inform the House that, after some difficulty in finding an appropriate mechanism to do the proper thing, it appears that a solution has been found. I will be glad to report to the House very shortly on the matter.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, it is kind of strange that it takes the news media to bring some sense of justice to the Government. Had it not been for the report last night the Minister would not have taken action.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: Could we have some silence from the other side?

Mr. Charest: We are sorry, we will not do it again.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. Nunziata: The Minister has admitted that he has known about this case for about a year and a half. Notwithstanding the fact that he has known about it, his official on national television last night said that there was no answer. I would like to propose an answer to the Minister today.

Will the Minister introduce immediately in the House a Bill—and I give my consent on behalf of the Official Opposition to allow it to go through all three stages—to allow the release of the motor home to the Buelows? Further, will he extend an apology on behalf of the Government of Canada to the Buelows and pay them the necessary compensation?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, if I may say so, it appears that it was the media who brought the attention of the matter to the Hon. Member. As I stated, our Department has known about this matter for some time.

We will do whatever is necessary to provide some equity in this situation. The solution my colleague has offered may be feasible, but there is probably a more expedient way to deal with the matter.

NATIONAL SECURITY

MARC BOIVIN AFFAIR—QUERY WHETHER CSIS CONTINUED TO PAY AGENT AFTER BEING INFORMED OF HIS ACTIVITIES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Yesterday we learned that when CSIS agent Marc Boivin worked at the CNTU he incited others to engage in such criminal activities as arson, kidnapping, dynamiting, and even murder. On Tuesday the Minister said that CSIS did not exceed its mandate. Here is my question: Can the Minister tell us whether CSIS was aware of Boivin's activities and why it kept such a dangerous agent provocateur on its payroll?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, first, I believe that the Hon. Member is referring to some allegations made yesterday in a press conference by a certain individual of the CNTU. I suggest, if he is making allegations of that kind and, given the serious nature of these allegations, he should certainly go to the police with them. I am surprised that he has not done that.

Second, with respect to the activities of Mr. Boivin, I have advised the House on a number of occasions that I asked the Inspector General to investigate this matter thoroughly. He has completed his investigation in that regard. I am advised by the Inspector General that Marc Boivin was not directed or encouraged by CSIS to commit any illegal acts, nor was Boivin targeted against the CNTU or any union in Quebec or elsewhere in Canada by CSIS.

ALLEGED EMPLOYMENT BY CSIS OF POLISH HIJACKER

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer the fundamental question. Did CSIS in fact know that Boivin was encouraging these criminal and illegal acts while he was being paid by CSIS? If CSIS does not know what its own agents are up to it is no wonder that it does not have a clue as to what its real targets are doing.

In light of this latest revelation of Boivin's activity and the Minister's blindness to it, and after learning that CSIS apparently got a committed Polish hijacker and prison escapee into Canada with fake I.D., how much more will it take before the Minister finally recognizes that he has no control whatsoever over CSIS, and does the honourable thing and resigns?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered the allegations with respect to Mr. Boivin.

With respect to the Hon. Member's allegations about the Polish individual, I advise the Hon. Member and the House that the individual entered Canada illegally in December, 1984. I am advised that some months after and only after he arrived in Canada he volunteered his services to CSIS. I have been advised that prior to his voluntary departure in August of 1986 from Canada the Service severed its relationship with him.

Finally, I can advise the Hon. Member and the House that there is an outstanding warrant for this individual. If he attempts to re-enter Canada he will be arrested and subsequently deported.

Oral Questions

INDIA—ACCESS TO DETAINED CANADIAN CITIZEN

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It again concerns Balkar Singh, a Canadian citizen under arrest in India.

• (1150)

Can the Minister confirm that several weeks ago Mr. Singh's lawyer requested a further consular visit from our High Commission in New Delhi citing allegations of torture, that the Canadian High Commission has been attempting to secure access to Mr. Singh, and that the Indian Government is refusing to allow a consular visit? If so, what formal action is the Minister prepared to take?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we were requested to seek a second consular visit. We have sought a second consular visit. I have not yet received a response. I expect to receive that response soon, and I expect it to be positive.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

DRUG PRICE INCREASES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, or his spokesperson. It deals with the outrageous revelations in today's paper that multinational drug companies have succeeded in ripping off Canadian taxpayers by putting in increases which the Minister claimed would never occur.

I would like to ask the Minister's spokesperson, given that he made this commitment, does he realize that this juicy little increase that has been implemented by the multinational drug companies will result in an extra billion dollars in compounded profit over the next 10 years? Because of this outrageous rip-off by the multinationals, will he not now revoke this unfair law which will raise drug prices for senior citizens?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Tell the Liberal Senators.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was in the House earlier, and he answered that question. He gave that answer to the House, and that answer stands.

Mr. Gauthier: He did not answer that question.

COST TO CONSUMERS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the Minister's promise on no higher drug prices is about the same as the Prime Minister's promise on no cuts on senior citizens' pensions.

I wish to ask the Minister if he will answer the specific question, that as a result of this deliberate move by the drug companies to sabotage a price system in Canada, they have moved in and jacked up prices because they know that this will be compounded over the next 10 years. Does he realize that Canadians will be paying an extra billion dollars to the multinational drug companies? Is that what we can expect from the benefits of free trade?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, experience has taught me not to accept anything as factual from that Member.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: I don't tell lies. I don't tell lies to the people of Canada.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What I say to the Hon. Member is that they delayed Bill C-22. They are now delaying Bill C-84. Whenever something happens to the public then they want to blame somebody else for not having taken the action.

They set up the Eastman Commission. They knew there were going to be changes. Now they want it both ways. It is about time that they decide which way they want to go—

Ms. Copps: We want that Bill removed.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —rather than coming here every day and creating issues when they know in the Senate that they have been blocking those Bills, and this commission would have been in place even when they themselves had appointed the commission. It is just that the Member loves much more to make some political mileage than to get back to the truth.

REQUEST THAT INCREASES BE ROLLED BACK

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Health.

When Bill C-22 was introduced the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Minister of Health were repeatedly questioned on the effect on drug prices. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs stated on November 18, 1986, "The price of drugs will not increase by one cent, not those now on the market, not those coming on the market".

Since the Government gave the drug companies 10-year patent protection retroactive to June 27, 1986, and the drug companies promised no increases above the CPI, and now on more than 1,000 drugs they have broken that promise, will the Minister of Health tell the House and the people of Canada whether the Government is going to live up to its word and roll those price increases back?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the Government will live up to its word. With the passage of Bill C-22 it is setting up a commission along the lines of the Bill for exactly the purpose relative to the CPI and the pricing policy related to that Bill.

I wish that the Hon. Member had thought of this a little sooner and supported it a little earlier.

SENIOR CITIZENS—PRESCRIPTION DRUG PROGRAMS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister.

This obviously intentional blink will cost the consumers of Canada a couple of hundred million bucks, but I guess that those kind of blinks are okay for the Conservatives.

Late last year the Government sent to households across Canada a leaflet about the drug Bill C-22. In the publication it states, "All senior citizens are covered by prescription drug programs". The Minister of Health knows that to be categorically false. What steps does he intend to take to at least set the record straight for seniors in Canada?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the NDP Party opposed the establishment of a price review board under Bill C-22. They did not want a price review board and opposed it day in and day out. Now, after that long delay, we can finally shut it up because it is going to work—

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —I say to the Hon. Member that they should have supported a price review board rather than coming here and asking what we have done about it. We have done something about it, and they have not as yet.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT MINISTER BE RELIEVED OF DUTIES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He probably knows that Canadians are stunned to learn that the Minister of the Environment wants to make his position in Cabinet weaker by relinquishing part of his environmental duties in favour of the fixed link from P.E.I. to the mainland. The Minister of the Environment proposes to reduce the heart and soul of his environmental mandate.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister agree that, in light of the Minister's support for the fixed link and his concern about possible conflict of interest, he should be relieved of his environmental duties altogether in order that he will be free to pursue his involvement in the link?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister of the Environment has written to the Prime Minister expressing his concern about the perceived conflict that could arise in the consideration of this very important matter. The letter is in the Prime Minister's hands and it is being considered, but it by no means has been accepted at this time.

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF NEW MINISTER

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): My supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister is the following. If the Minister of the Environment is unwilling to carry out his full duties, why does the Deputy Prime Minister not appoint a real Minister of the Environment in order that we have the environmental concerns of Islanders, New Brunswickers, and Canadians at large fully addressed by one and not by two Ministers?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that anyone in this House, or anyone in the country, would wish to criticize the distinguished service that the present Minister of the Environment has provided to Canadians, and particularly on environmental concerns.

It is simply because of his high standard of integrity that he wanted to draw this to the attention of the Prime Minister. I certainly believe that, in fairness, the Minister will be able to carry out this duty and all his other responsibilities pertaining to the environment in an effective fashion.

It clearly demonstrates to the House and to the country the fact that he, as a Minister, wants to be seen and perceived as being a man of integrity, and a man who is primarily concerned about the environmental interests of this great nation.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

INCREASED BENEFITS FOR THE DISABLED—POSITION OF ONTARIO GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Last year the Minister and his Department gave a very needed $140 to $150 increase to the disabled and disadvantaged in this country only to see this very generous sum taken back by the Peterson Government in Ontario. I find it rather hypocritical when the Liberals talk about drug price increases—

Mr. Gauthier: The Tories did it for 40 years.

Mr. Jepson: —that we would see this type of uncaring attitude from the province.

We now see a further increase of 4.4 per cent for the disabled pensioners. Does the Minister foresee the same callous act being perpetrated by the Peterson Government in Ontario taking back this very much needed increase to the disabled pensioners in this country?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct in what changes were made to the Canada Pension Plan, and specifically disability benefits to those on social assistance. The Ontario Government chose not to pass on that benefit to those who were on social assistance.

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I wrote to all the provinces, keeping in mind the jurisdiction in the social welfare field, stating that it was the Government of Canada's position that that money should be passed on to the recipients, that it was a contributory pension, and additionally that our interpretation of the Canada Assistance Plan was such that the provinces would not be in violation.

• (1200)

To my understanding the former Liberal Government never did that, so we brought in that change. While we now have an increase of 4.4 per cent, the principle of the past remains. I say to the Hon. Member that it would be my hope that Ontario and the other provinces would pass it on, because one of the positions we have taken is that, if people on welfare can get additional money through contributory pensions, part-time work, or training programs, they should not lose their social benefits immediately but rather have the opportunity to get out of welfare. Obviously the Liberals opposite do not agree.

LABOUR

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF RETRAINING PROVISIONS FOR WORKERS

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance.

This week the Minister of Labour released the report on labour adjustment benefit programs. According to this document one-third of claims filed under such programs have been rejected. Only 719 workers throughout Canada have been declared eligible for these benefits.

At the same time as ever more older workers find themselves excluded from the labour market, the federal Government gradually eliminates adjustment benefit programs. In addition, the Government has yet to make a move in connection with the retraining program for laid-off older workers.

In February the Minister had promised—

Mr. Speaker: Order! I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but could she, please, ask her question?

Mrs. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, I already raised that question with the Minister. When is he going to make sure that older workers, both male and female, have access to adjustment benefits?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration is out of town. He is on Government business outside of the capital, but I will pass the question on to him and I am sure he will answer it as soon as he comes back to Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton-Mountain has the floor for a short supplementary question.

[English]

REQUEST FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF PROGRAM

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In the February, 1986, Budget the Minister of Finance announced that there would be a program for the people. Some 1,300 people have been laid off at Firestone, as well as many other older workers across the country. When will the Government make use of this program?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the question is probably more appropriately directed to the Minister of Labour. As I am sure the Hon. Member is very much aware, the Minister of Labour has had negotiations with the provinces to try to involve them to the maximum extent possible in this program.

There have been changes of government in some provinces since the time the program was announced, which has resulted in some delays. I think there are three or four provinces which are on side, but the Minister is working to ensure that we can get all provinces committed to this program so that we can move ahead and deal with the problem the Hon. Member has addressed.

Mr. Speaker: Given the time, and given the fact that we started just a little late for legitimate reasons, the Hon. Member for Algoma has indicated that he will ask a single question, and that will be the last question of Question Period.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

FEDNOR PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA AND APPLICATION FORMS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. In the fall of 1986 he promised a Northern Ontario Recovery Program to try to cope with the serious economic difficulties faced by that region of the country. He announced that a six-point program was being considered. In fact only one of them was announced with great flourish last July, the FEDNOR Program. After more than six months no criteria are available, no application forms are available, and things continue to worsen.

When will the application forms and the criteria for the program be made available? All we have heard about so far are the blatant political patronage appointments to the board of directors. We want the application forms and the criteria so that people can apply and make use of the program. When will they be made available?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure of the precise details. My colleague, the Solicitor General, has taken a very active interest in this issue. He had to leave early to pursue some activities with respect to northern economic development, and as a matter of fact I think some announcements are being made.

Quite frankly I find it rather strange that the Hon. Member is taking issue with it, because as we travel the northern Ontario region the people out there are very happy with the performance of the Government and with the initiatives we have taken.

Mr. Speaker: Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap on a point of order, I think I should advise him and other Hon. Members that I received a question of privilege during Question Period which must take precedence. I will come back to the Hon. Member in a moment.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT—ALLEGED INSINUATION OF WRONGDOING

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises from comments made during Question Period which follow on the comments made yesterday by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). I understand that in my absence the Deputy Prime Minister had tried to associate my name, among others, with the investigations that have taken place in the case of the Minister of Energy, and that the Deputy Prime Minister had withdrawn those comments yesterday.

However, today in the course of Question Period I distinctly heard the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer), the Hon. Member for Portage—Marquette, and the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Scowen) make specific references to myself again in relation to the events surrounding the Minister of Energy.

I would like to make very clear to the House that at no time was I ever investigated for any under-the-table overspending under the Canada Elections Act. At no time did I ever receive a letter in which it was indicated that I was in fact violating sections of the Canada Elections Act. At no time did I allow workers or friends to proceed with charges in court and keeping my silence knowing in fact the situation.

I resent very directly the association made between my name and the name of the Minister who has allowed his workers to take a fall for him, and I would like to have the Members withdraw that statement.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member will also allow me to suggest that she withdraw the statement she just made about the Minister. That would be appropriate, and I would ask the Hon. Member to do that.

In the meantime let me say that I will look at the "blues" to see whether anything is recorded there. However, I think it is appropriate for the House to know that yesterday the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) most clearly made an unequivocal withdrawal of any suggestion of any wrongdoing on the part of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) and also the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

If any Hon. Members have said anything that suggests that they do not agree with that unequivocal withdrawal, then of course the Hon. Member for Hamilton East has a complaint which I will have to take into consideration.

I will look at the "blues" and I will talk to the Hon. Member, but I want all Hon. Members to know exactly what is the situation and that there was absolutely no equivocation in the withdrawal of the Deputy Prime Minister.

I would like the Hon. Member for Hamilton East to put on record that she withdraws the last couple of remarks in her submission.

Ms. Copps: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The only reason I even raised the issue of the Deputy Prime Minister was because, of course, yesterday he unequivocally withdrew and I accepted that. I was not here at the time of the interchange, and I would hope that that type of statement would not continue.

Certainly, in the interest of respect for the Chair, I will withdraw any section of my remarks that the Chair finds offensive.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for her statements.

Point of Order—Mr. Riis

POINT OF ORDER

PROPOSED REFERENCE OF ALLEGED WRONGDOING TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps I will make a suggestion. In a number of exchanges during Question Period today the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) indicated that perhaps the matter regarding the questions surrounding the Minister of Energy ought to be referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure.

Since both Mr. Gorman and Mr. Hamel have indicated a willingness to appear before that committee, and to show leadership and perhaps to clear the air so that these exchanges will not need to take place in the future, I wonder whether the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) will indicate that the Government is prepared to take the leadership and refer the matter to the appropriate committee for consideration.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, once again, we seem to be bringing up committee business on the floor of the House. It seems to me that if any committee which has jurisdiction in this matter wishes to hold a committee meeting and discuss the matter it would be within the purview of that committee's agenda to do so.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to make one thing clear to Hon. Members. I indicated that the Question Period, for legitimate reasons, had started late today. In the event that there are any Hon. Members wondering why that was, Members will remember that we were in Committee of the Whole and in order to complete that work we extended past the usual time for starting statements by Members. As a consequence, the Chair allowed the procedure to go on for a little longer.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, today it is my duty and my privilege to table in the House four petitions dealing with a very important matter, in which the undersigned object to, and ask Parliament to take a firm stand on, the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement.

Mr. Speaker, the petition reads as follows: Whereas the Mulroney Government has sold Canada without obtaining anything in return:

Mr. Charest: Who signed those petitions?

Mr. Gauthier: Whereas Canadian industries still have no protection against U.S. trade laws;—

Mr. Charest: Members of the Macdonald Commission!

Mr. Gauthier: If the Minister would keep quiet, I could read the petition and he can make his comments later on.

Whereas Canadian industries still have no protection against U.S. trade laws;

Whereas the United States obtained everything it wanted in major sectors, including agriculture, energy, the automobile industry, financial services and investment;

Whereas the jobs of thousands of Canadians are threatened; and

Whereas the Conservative Government has no plans for manpower adjustment assistance to help Canadian workers.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray Parliament to condemn the Conservative Government for signing the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. As for the Minister, I can inform him, that the undersigned are probably all from Quebec.

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest), on a point of order.

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier has just informed me that the petition in question came from the Province of Quebec. Perhaps the Hon. Member could inform the House whether one of the persons who signed the petition also signed the Macdonald Commission's Report which recommended a free trade agreement, and I am referring to Michel Robert, President of the federal Liberal Party of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not consider that a point of order.

Perhaps we could discuss this some other day. Meanwhile, the House will revert to petitions. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition to you and to the House signed by many residents of southern Ontario in which they petition this House that the Government had no mandate from the people of Canada to conclude a trade agreement with the United States. They petition that the proposed agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the U.S.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106 I have a petition, and it is my responsibility to present it to the House, signed by many citizens from Hamilton Mountain. These petitioners say that whereas the Conservative Government has no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States; whereas a trade agreement negotiated by the Mulroney Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership and to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians or to equalize opportunities between the regions, the undersigned, the petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, it is my pleasure and, indeed, honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of constituents who indicate that the Conservative Government has no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude this trade deal with the United States. They believe that the trade deal would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine Canada's ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States of America.

Because they feel the agreement denies Canadians secure access to the United States market, which was in fact the key objective in the negotiations leading up to the trade deal, they are asking Parliament to dissolve in order to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade deal during a national general election.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of citizens of Canada who are very concerned about the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal and the threat—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Ms. Mitchell: —it brings to Canadian sovereignty, as well as the fact that this Government has no mandate to negotiate such a trade deal with the United States. They ask the House of Commons to ensure that a national debate take place on the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Ms. Mitchell: —and that this debate result in a national general election before any agreement is signed.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and pleasure to present a petition from a number of residents of Toronto, and St. John's, Newfoundland, who say that because the fabric of Canadian sovereignty is threatened by the proposed Mulroney-Reagan trade deal—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I know that Members are all aware that they should not use the family name of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I ask Members to do that also when they are presenting petitions. The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) has the floor on petitions.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your advice. I would ask you given that I am reading from the wording of the petition, could you, instruct me as to whether I should follow the wording of the petition or not.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No. The rule would apply for instance if the Hon. Member would be reading from a newspaper. One could not use the family name of the Prime Minister in the House.

Mr. Benjamin: The petition was approved by the Clerk.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, because the Government with the unmentionable name has no mandate to negotiate a free trade deal with the United States—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Heap: —and because this unmentionable person negotiated with the President of the United States a deal which would reduce Canada's ability to plan the economic, social and cultural programs of Canada—

Mrs. Mailly: You have no respect for the House.

Mr. Heap: —and because this deal with the unmentionable name would integrate Canada further into the North American defence industrial base, for these reasons they ask Parliament to ensure that a national debate take place on this deal and that the debate result in a national general election before such an agreement is signed.

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I raise a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) raises a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I seek your guidance. First of all, I understand that the Standing Orders require a petition to be summarized. Also, our Standing Orders forbid Members of this House to refer to their colleagues by their family names; this is not a weird or whimsical requirement, but the very tradition of this House, and by refusing to abide by our rules, the Hon. Member shows complete disrespect for the House. And I suggest that this disrespect should not be taken lightly. Heaven knows just how difficult it is for our institutions to command respect.

• (1220)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Hon. Member wants to reply to the point of order, I would like to tell the Hon. Member that the Chair welcomes the intervention of the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) but does not find that it is a point of order.

OPPOSITION TO PLUTONIUM FLIGHTS OVER NORTHERN CANADA

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present petitions containing over 200 names of residents of Teslin, Mayo, Pelly Crossing, Whitehorse, Yukon, and Edmonton, Alberta, who are calling on the Canadian Government to say no to plutonium flights over northern Canada proposed in the pending United States and Japan agreement.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition from citizens of Canada. The petition is certified correct as to form pursuant to Standing Order 106.

These petitioners say that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised and they further state that the trade agreement negotiated by the Prime Minister's Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians or to equalize opportunities between the regions.

They further state that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada policy freedom to determine its own economic future and would undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

The undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement in a national General Election.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by persons from my constituency and adjoining constituencies. It contains approximately 300 names. It has been certified correct as to form and content pursuant to Standing Order 106.

The petition indicates the feelings of the petitioners with respect to the trade agreement with the United States. The petition first suggests that the Government has received no mandate to proceed with such an agreement. It points out some of the problems that would exist with the agreement, in particular, the loss of policy freedom on the part of Canada to determine its own economic future. It also indicates the feelings of the petitioners that there would be a loss of thousands of jobs as a consequence of the trade agreement.

Given these various factors, the petitioners call very strongly on the Government to permit the people of Canada to have a final say before this agreement goes forward through a General Election.

I would wish at this time to move:

That this House adjourn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has received a motion which is the following one: moved by Mr. Langdon, seconded by Mr. Benjamin:

That this House adjourn.

The Chair finds the motion to be in order.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion defeated. Resuming petitions.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from residents of Canada who point out that the present Government has no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States and that the proposal removes the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership and removes the power to develop the Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians and to equalize opportunities between regions.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour and privilege to present a petition signed by residents of the City of Windsor. These petitioners humbly call upon Parliament to dissolve in order to allow a national general election to be held on the matter of the trade deal the Government purports to have signed between this country and the Reagan administration of the United States of America.

POINT OF ORDER

USE OF MEMBERS' NAMES IN PETITIONS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a point of order with the Chair regarding the assertion of the Chair that the name of the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) should not be mentioned in the House, particularly in the context of a preamble to a petition. Since the petition has been approved by the Clerk of the House as to form, and I presume that also means content, I do not see how the Chair can rule that that name should not be mentioned.

Does the Clerk or an Hon. Member of the House have any authority or right to change or amend the wording of a petition signed by Canadian citizens outside this Chamber? I do not know if we have any right to change the words of the petitioners.

The form of the petition, as I understand it, is in proper historical and traditional form, and the Clerk has so said. I think it is just a case of a petition being presented with a brief explanation, no matter what its content is, as long as the Clerk has okayed it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At this time I will make a preliminary ruling to the effect that the first ruling I made still stands. I would like to remind all Members that they must not read the petition but rather make a summary of it. The Chair holds the view that in that summary the family name of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should not be used. However, the Chair will look into the matter and make a formal ruling as soon as it can and report back to the House.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to draw to the attention of the Chair that there are some 10 paragraphs, I believe, in the preamble to those particular petitions. Members have presented only one or at most two of those paragraphs. They have not read the whole thing, which I believe would be proper, if they chose to do so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member and I will get back to the House on this point.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 221, 228, 231 and 236 through 239 inclusive.

[Text]

NON-SMOKING AREAS IN AIRPORT TERMINAL BUILDINGS

Question No. 221—Ms. McDonald:

Do Transport Canada's practices with respect to the provision of non-smoking areas in airport terminal buildings ensure the provision of smoke-free air to those employees and passengers using the buildings and facilities who wish to avoid exposure to second-hand smoke?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): During the past four months, Transport Canada has taken several steps towards ensuring the provision of smoke-free air to those employees and passengers using airport buildings.

In late August, 1987, all airport staff were advised of the Treasury Board ban on smoking by public service employees at all service counters, waiting rooms, desks or wickets where the public is served. Employees were also advised that, as of October 1, 1987, smoking was prohibited, except for designated smoking areas, in all Public Service work places in accordance with the Treasury Board policy to phase in a total ban on smoking in all Government of Canada buildings by January 1, 1989.

Since the Treasury Board directive pertains only to government employees, Transport Canada took the initiative of issuing a directive to all its airports to restrict smoking in most areas of the air terminal buildings for the travelling public as well.

Specifically, the directive bans smoking in all free circulation areas, ticket locations, baggage claim areas and washrooms. A minimum of 60 per cent of the seating locations in holdrooms and food and beverage outlets is designated as no smoking, and a maximum of 40 per cent of the seats in these locations can be designated as smoking. All these smoking areas are wherever possible located well away from service counters and aircraft boarding exits where passengers congregate.

In areas where there is insufficient space to properly delineate smoking and non-smoking areas, then the whole area is designated as no smoking. The only areas where smoking is freely permitted are in the bars.

To indicate smoking and no smoking areas, pictographic signs are being posted in conspicuous places inside all air terminal buildings (ATBs). Additional signs are also being posted at the main entrances of these buildings to inform the public, in both official languages, that such accommodation is provided.

Enforcement of these regulations is in accordance with the airport traffic regulations, and nay applicable municipal by-law in cases where the airport is within the boundaries of a particular municipality.

Although public co-operation is required in order to respect the provisions outlined above, we feel that these measures will significantly improve the level of safety, comfort and health of both passengers and Transport Canada employees.

USE OF PETRO-CANADA JET

Question No. 228—Mr. Boudria:

On or about November 21, 1987, was the Petro-Canada jet utilized for the purpose of transporting Maurice "Mad Dog" Vachon from the United States to Canada and, if so (a) who were the passengers on this flight (b) what was the role or purpose of each person for being on the flight (c) what was the total distance travelled for this purpose by the plane in question (d) what was the total cost of the trip?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): In so far as the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is concerned:

1. Yes. (a), (b), (c) and (d) This information is proprietary to Petro-Canada and therefore cannot be released.

GRANT TO JULAC INC.

Question No. 231—Mr. Althouse:

1. (a) Did the Department of Agriculture recently grant $500,000 to Julac Inc. in the Lac St-Jean area of Quebec to assist in reviving the blueberry processing industry (b) did the shareholders provide any new funding and, if so, in what amount?

2. (a) How long has the company been in business (b) what is the company's experience in the processing of blueberries (c) what is the name of each shareholder?

3. Has any other government department granted monies to the company and, if so, in each case (a) in what amount (b) from which departments?

4. What form of processing is to be developed from the use of these funds?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): 1. (a) Yes. (b) Yes. The shareholders have contributed $347,140.

2. (a) The company has been in business for 15 years. (b) The company has been processing blueberries since it was founded and, at the time of closing, it was selling two blueberry aperitives and one digestive. (c) The shareholders are: Evans Laberge, Philibert Simard, Maurice Darveau, André Bussières, Gaston Perron, Jacques Madgin, Lise Audet, Claire Denano, Ls-Henri Frigon, André Tremblay, Mario Naud.

3. In so far as the Departments of Employment and Immigration and Regional Industrial Expansion are concerned; no.

4. No new form of processing will be undertaken as a result of the grant. The grant will be used primarily to reimburse the creditors and to reinstate production. The company intends, however, to undertake research on new products made from blueberries such as fillings, jams and syrups.

USE OF DRUG BENDECTIN

Question No. 236—Mr. Young:

1. Have cases been reported in Canada of birth defects associated with the use of the drug Bendectin and, if so (a) how many (b) for what reason does the Department of National Health and Welfare allow the continued use of this drug, by prescription, under the name of Diclectin?

2. Was Bendectin tested by the Department and, if so (a) how extensively (b) for how long before the drug was originally approved?

3. Have there been adverse reports on this drug and, if so (a) how extensive are they (b) on what date did they first appear (c) does the Department keep records of women who use Bendectin during pregnancy for the purpose of tracking possible birth defects?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes.

(a) Worldwide approximately 30 million women have taken Bendectin. The Canadian market is about 2 per cent of this, thus, approximately 600,000 Canadian women were exposed to the drug between its marketing in 1957 and 1983 when the drug was withdrawn by the manufacturer, Merrel Dow. there were 40 reported cases of birth defects in Canada associated with the use of Bendectin. This corresponds to about one child born with birth defects, out of every 10,000 children born to women exposed to the drug. Since 2 or 3 out of every 100 children born have a major birth defect, the available data indicate that fewer children were born with birth defects to Bendectin-treated mothers than to untreated mothers.

(b) The Department of National Health and Welfare allows the continued use of Diclectin, a generic product, because careful review of a large number of epidemiologic studies have provided no evidence that Bendectin causes congenital malformation.

Similar conclusions were reached in the United States and by health authorities in most countries. Therefore, there is no reason to ban this drug.

2. (a) & (b) No. The testing of drugs is the responsibility of the manufacturer; the Health Protection Branch carries out only an evaluation of the data provided by the manufacturer.

3. Yes.

(a) The Drug Adverse Reaction Program, a voluntary reporting program has received the following reports; five affecting the mother alleged to cause rash, dry mouth and unsteadiness, 32 affecting the baby with signs and symptoms ranging from various limb and other deformities in no specific pattern, to convulsions and death. In most reports the mother had been taking a number of other drug products concomitantly.

(b) First report of suspected drug adverse reaction was in November, 1965.

(c) No.

BIRTH DEFECTS—AID TO FAMILIES

Question No. 237—Mr. Young:

1. Has the government or any government agency taken any measures to aid the families of children with birth defects associated with a drug taken during pregnancy and, if so, what are such measures and do they include maintaining a fund that can be drawn on for the purpose of pursuing legal action?

2. To the knowledge of the government, is there an association of parents of children with such defects caused by drugs taken during pregnancy?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The Health Protection Branch has taken steps to assist in the prevention of future birth defects, including those which may be associated with drugs.

Health Protection Branch maintains a congenital anomalies surveillance system, which provides data for studies to identify factors which contribute to birth defects. This system also provides early notice of unusual occurrences of birth defects.

Second, drug manufacturers are required to submit to Health Protection Branch the results of tests of new drugs in animal models. Such tests are designed for a number of purposes, including to identify the potential of a drug to cause birth defects.

2. DES ACTION/Canada, Snowdon, P.O. Box 233, Montreal, Quebec H3X 3T4.

THOMAS R. BERGER

Question No. 238—Mr. Kaplan:

When Thomas R. Berger retired from the bench, was he eligible for a pension and, if so, is the government paying or planning to pay him one and, if so, what was or will be the date on which the payments begin?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): No. In order to qualify for a judicial pension, a judge who has not reached the age of retirement must have served at least 15 years in office and have attained the age of 65 years, unless retirement is due to ill health. Mr. Berger did not seek retirement on the grounds of ill health, and did not meet either the age or service requirements of the Judges Act.

MARCHETTI SF-260 AIRCRAFT

Question No. 239—Mr. Friesen:

Did Transport Canada send an official from its Airworthiness Branch to Italy, in order to make inquiries about the SIAI Marchetti SF 260 aircraft and, if so, what was the cost to the Department for travel and expenses for this official?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): The Transport Canada Airworthiness Branch did not send an official to Italy, in order to make inquiries about SIAI Marchetti SF260 aircraft, but took the opportunity of having one of its officials, who was in Italy on other business, to discuss with SIAI Marchetti and the Italian airworthiness authorities the eligibility of the SF260 aircraft in the military and civil roles.

Mr. Lewis: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order concerning the answers to the questions on the Order Paper. I must congratulate the minister for answering this week at least a good many questions. However, Question No. 209 listed in my name has been on the Order Paper since October 15 of last year and it should have been answered within 45 days which so far has not been the case. That is why I ask the Minister of State to urge the people in charge of answering questions to answer this one concerning the National Arts Centre, a matter of some interest, if only to Ottawa residents.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise also on a point of order. I call the Minister's attention on Question No. 235. It is a question dealing with the operation of the Canada Lands Corporation in Mirabel, and as the House is aware, all questions concerning this Crown corporation raise considerable interests. The Canadian people want answers to these questions. I should like to remind the minister that the 45 day delay is now over concerning this question and I urge him to press his colleagues for an answer as soon as possible.

I take this opportunity to thank the Minister for having finally answered Question No. 228. I dare hope, however, that most questions may be answered within the 45 day limit, and not after the 45 day period has expired, sometime even months and months later.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleagues for their inquiries. As they know, we have made every effort to answer as many questions as possible prior to the time required. I think the record is pretty good in that respect. I appreciate the questions they have raised and I will make inquiries to see whether we can get these answers to the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Question Passed as Order for Return

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, if Question No. 230 could be made an Order for Return, the return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that Question No. 230 be deemed to have been made an Order for Return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CURRENCY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-99, an Act to amend the Currency Act—Mr. Hockin—Mr. Danis in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-99, an Act to amend the Currency Act.

Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1—Net income credited to C.R.F.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Chairman, before the House went into Question Period I asked the Minister of State for Finance if he was in a position to explain the delay in producing this Bill which, as he himself said, is a simple technical Bill. Just to repeat my question, since it was asked some hours ago, in February, 1986, the Minister of Finance agreed to move on a number of recommendations made over the years by the Auditor General, supported by the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, with respect to changes in accounting policy. These changes in essence made for a faster reporting in the Public Accounts of Canada of some items which in the past were averaged out over three years.

These changes were partly made, but the exchange fund, which is the subject of this Bill, is a special account of the Minister of Finance and serves as the main repository of Canada's official international reserves. It is governed by the Currency Act and that Act contains a provision which differs from the accounting principles followed in the Public Accounts. Namely, in determining net income the Currency Act requires gains or losses from exchange rate changes to be averaged over three years, while such losses are recognized immediately in the Public Accounts of Canada. This amendment simply repeals the three-year averaging provision. That means the accounting principles of the exchange fund conform with those of the Public Accounts of Canada.

This was announced in February, 1986, and the Bill is coming before the House only now, two years later. It is a very simple Bill. It has just one clause to give effect to that recommendation. Therefore, I would appreciate knowing from the Minister why the delay; why did it take almost two years to implement?

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Chairman, I have made some further inquiries as a follow-up to the answer I gave the Hon. Member before Question Period. A number of accounts are going to be brought into conformity with the accounting treatment given them in the Public Accounts of Canada. As well, if you look at what was announced in 1986, this affects the 1987 accounts, so this is relatively rapid.

The Hon. Member is probably aware as well that it has been necessary for all of us to find a time convenient for the House to introduce this Bill, which is basically a housekeeping Bill. There just did not seem to be a propitious time in the House schedule for it. I think that is a large part of the answer as well.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hockin moved that Bill C-99, an Act to amend the Currency Act, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to add a brief tail to the excellent speech by my colleague from Ottawa Centre on second reading with respect to interest rates, unemployment, and the interaction of those two factors with the level of the Canadian dollar.

Even within the Province of Ontario itself there are tremendous variations in economic circumstance. For instance, the most recent statistics available from the labour force in the City of Windsor for December, 1987, indicate that the unemployment rate for the City of Windsor district is 11.3 per cent. This suggests that there are parts of the province, even in areas which are relatively close to other centres of prosperity, which suffer from considerable unemployment rates. If one considers northern Ontario, the difficulty is even greater.

The fact is that we are talking about the golden horseshoe when discussing the tremendous strength of economic growth that has taken place. It is perhaps historically the least widely shared process of economic growth has taken place in any business cycle which I have looked at as an economist. For that reason I would urge the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) to spend some more time dealing with this question to see if the department itself is prepared to give it more consideration. It makes a very strong case for an attempt at differentiating both fiscal and monetary policy to a much greater degree than before.

I am not certain that it is possible to go that far with respect to monetary policy, but I believe the examination must be made. I believe it is certainly possible to make such differentiation with respect to fiscal policy. We try to do so through regional development policy, but that regional development policy itself is very often caught up on statistics which are very much out of date. For instance, despite the very heavy level of unemployment in Windsor at this stage, we are still classified as tier 1 for the Industrial and Regional Development Program, which means that virtually all modernization and expansion projects in our industrial sector cannot be supported.

I believe this caveat to the points made by my hon. colleague is very much worth considering. I hope the Minister will be spurred by this debate and take some of those questions to the department to see if it will be persuaded to look more closely at ways to differentiate the levers of government with respect to fiscal and monetary policy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the Question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

FRUIT AND VEGETABLE CUSTOMS ORDERS VALIDATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of National Revenue) moved that Bill C-96, an Act to validate certain customs duty orders relating to fresh fruits and vegetables, be read a second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think you will find unanimous consent to move this Bill to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, is the Minister asking to move to Committee of the Whole?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, obviously I am prepared to make a few preliminary remarks at second reading, if my colleague wishes to do the same. We would be pleased to do it that way. We could then move to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, that is with the understanding that once we are finished in Committee of the Whole we will proceed directly to third reading today.

Mr. Lewis: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is unanimous consent, therefore, that the Bill be sent to Committee of the Whole instead of a legislative committee.

Mr. Lewis: I appreciate the co-operation of the Opposition Parties with respect to this and other Bills today.

This particular Bill is an Act to validate certain customs duty orders relating to fresh fruits and vegetables. We are essentially cleaning up a technicality. Between January 1, 1972, and January 10, 1985, there have been collections of tariffs and customs duties on fruits and vegetables pursuant to certain orders made. I believe it was found that there was some technical difficulty with them. This Bill simply corrects that technical difficulty and declares that all customs duties which were collected to be validly collected.

I have no further remarks to make on the Bill. I commend it to the House for second reading and reference to Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding as well that Bill C-96 is designed to validate the collection of certain tariffs which were collected between 1972 and 1985 but not properly registered as a statutory instrument. This was observed by the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments in its report to the House in 1987. We support this legislation because we believe the work of the committee is very important in order that the House or the Government does not take action which may go beyond the rule of law.

The third element of the legislation, as I understand it, also provides for the validation of certain tariffs which were imposed between 1984 and 1985, and provides for the remittance of certain tariffs which have not been collected during that period.

I wish to raise a couple of other issues with the Minister when the Bill goes to Committee of the Whole. However, we support the Bill as it is put before the House.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, we have no objection to this Bill. It simply clears up a technicality. Apparently the Minister's signature did not appear on many of the orders that had allegedly occurred under the Bill. It was only recently discovered that his signature rather than that of officials had to appear before those orders became operative at the border. This amendment is expected to clear that up.

I want to say a few words about the question of fruit and vegetable imports and exports, given the fact that we do not have much opportunity to discuss the need for and efficacy of these temporary duties. I would like to bring to the attention of the House the importance of these duties in the past and how they will be gradually done away with under the proposed trade agreement with the United States. I would like to read into the record a couple of briefs and letters which have come to my attention from the Province of British Columbia. I could do so for other regions of the country but these are the shortest and most concise.

I think the House should be aware that the use of seasonal import duties has in fact created an industry in this country. I think we sometimes tend to think that fruit and vegetable production is not a terribly important part of agriculture, but I want to point out some information I received from the British Columbia Vegetable Marketing Commission. It tells us that in 1987 there were 34,000 tonnes of speciality crops that will be affected by these changes proposed in the Trade Act. That includes sweet corn, beans, peas, cauliflower, broccoli and brussel sprouts.

I think the important thing to note here is the great amount of value added that occurs. It points out that the farm value of these crops is only some $9 million, yet through the processing, sale and distribution of these vegetables, between $85 million and $90 million of gross value added is attached to the British Columbia economy.

Removal of the ability to provide these duties is going to mean that fewer producers will survive. As a result, the jobs that go with the distribution and processing of these vegetables and small fruits will disappear as well. Therefore, it is a very important part of the economy, particularly in the lower Fraser Valley.

Some of the other valleys have also concerns. I have a letter from a resident of Summerland, British Columbia, who points out the importance of keeping the seasonal tariffs alive and well. She states this year our markets were flooded with North Carolina and California clean up, last of the season and small fruit, which ruined our markets before we were even ready to ship. Our apples are traded in the States now on a fairly free basis but we only export because the States floods our markets before our apples are ready to be shipped. In order for British Columbians to get rid of their crops they are forced to go to the United States.

I just wanted to bring that to your attention very briefly, Mr. Speaker, to point out the kinds of concerns people have that these temporary seasonal tariffs are to be lifted. I think it makes very good sense that in the period of time they are still permitted to exist, officials of the Ministry may provide their signatures to the necessary documents at the border. I do not know how we managed to make this error back years ago when Parliament passed the Act originally, but I hope we will now correct it very quickly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the Chair.

Mr. Chairman: Shall Clause 2 carry?

On Clause 2:—Validation of Orders.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of questions for the Minister because I know he is an expert on the whole question of fruits and vegetables and the tariffs which have been forgone in this case.

Is it clear now that the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments has recommended that in fact when an order or seasonal tariff is being ordered on the seasonal tariff list it is being ordered on the day on which it is imposed? For instance, the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments found that an order was being executed on February 5 in one of the years under consideration in this Act, but imposing the seasonal tariff five or six days previously. Of course, that rendered the whole exercise illegal. I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary or the Minister can assure the House that in fact the procedure which was recommended by the Standing Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments is being followed at this time?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Chairman, since my hon. colleague has asked a detailed question—and I am pleased to have the assistance of the Parliamentary Secretary—I would like to ask for a moment's recess and we will bring in an official to assist on some of these detailed questions.

Mrs. Mailly: I might begin by answering this question, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

It is precisely because there were some delays in the signing of some of these orders. First, there was an error in having them signed by officials other than the Ministers and that started back in 1972, in fact. That was founded on the fact that the officials who were dealing with that matter were following a legal order that was out in 1973. It was their interpretation that they could sign these orders. When it was discovered in mid-1984 that perhaps that was not according to the regulation, it was decided to suspend some of these signings by officials and to have the Minister sign them all. Indeed, there were some delays in some of the signings. So that was part of the problem that we are trying to deal with today.

I would just like to ask my official about the matter that was brought up by the Hon. Member whereby there were some delays in the signing of some of those orders and whether they come into effect, I believe, on the same date as the order is issued. Was that the question asked by the Hon. Member?

Mr. Foster: Yes.

Mrs. Mailly: Yes, it has just been confirmed. Actually, those orders come into effect the same day, and there were these delays, and this particular housekeeping Bill will also solve those problems, as well as ensure that all those orders that were signed and all the moneys that were brought into the Canadian Treasury from that order since 1972 can remain with the Canadian Treasury. In other words, it makes them all valid.

Those orders which were not carried out during the short period where the regulation was in suspension will also be made valid and the moneys that were not received at that moment will be brought into the Treasury. I believe it is a very small amount of money that was not received, but all will now be in order. All this was done because of the——recommendation of the secretary of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, namely that the Department ought to draft corrective legislation to validate the remittance collection orders which I have just mentioned.

That is precisely the purpose of this measure. We want to make sure there is no mistake and that everything is very clear.

• (1300)

Mr. Foster: Will the Parliamentary Secretary outline exactly how many dollars of tariffs are being legitimized by this measure, both those in the period from 1972 to 1985 and the period from 1984 to 1985? As well, can the Parliamentary Secretary outline which funds are being forgiven or remitted to those who have not paid the tariffs that were due in the period 1984-85?

Mrs. Mailly: In the first case, the figure amounts to millions of dollars. This is why this is a very important piece of housekeeping legislation.

In the case of sums which were not remitted for a short period of time, I believe the figure is just a few thousand dollars. There is really not very much involved in that case.

Mr. Foster: Since the Parliamentary Secretary has an official with her, can she advise whether or not the Government is enforcing Sections 58 and 59 of the fruit, vegetable and honey regulations? This whole issue has been before the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments which seemed to rule that it was ultra vires and was brought into the House to strike down those regulations. However, after due consideration and negotiation between House Leaders it was decided to refer the report of the Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments Committee back to the committee.

Will the Parliamentary Secretary indicate whether those regulations relating to container size in the fruit and vegetable industry for imports are being enforced?

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: No, Mr. Chairman, the Bill has nothing to do with those sections. Still I should like to tell the Hon. Member that with the advent of tariff harmonization in January 1988 the question has become irrelevant because these are no longer non-statutory regulations and so we do not deal with these regulations any more.

[English]

Mr. Foster: Does that mean that with the harmonization of those container sizes between Canada and the United States there will be complete harmonization and in fact the Government will not be able to maintain separate regulations in Canada different from the United States?

Mrs. Mailly: Perhaps my colleague did not understand what I said in my previous response to him. This has nothing to do with containers. The harmonization has to do with tariffs, the way they are listed and the way to which they are referred. It has nothing to do with the actual content of those regulations.

The two sections to which the Hon. Member referred, Section 57 and Section 58, will not be in force any longer. Under the harmonization there is a different system and the question will not pose itself. The matter of containers is another question which is not dealt with in this Bill and about which I am not ready to talk today.

Mr. Foster: The reason I raise the matter is that the industry is suffering tremendously without the enforcement of these sections of the fruit, vegetable and honey regulations. It has been promised by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) that he will bring in new regulations under the agricultural standards legislation. I am not sure whether or not amendments to that legislation are required! However, I thought that, since we were dealing with it, since it is intimately tied up with the whole trade negotiation arrangements with the United States and is of tremendous value and since we have a Parliamentary Secretary to a Minister of the Crown before us dealing with the question of tariffs and import duties in regard to fruit and vegetables, she might be able to comment.

I have a copy of a directive from Agriculture Canada, from the Food Production and Inspection Branch, which advises that these regulations are not to be enforced, although it is suggested that it should be indicated to exporters from the U.S. and importers to Canada that this should not be made public. In fact, the whole matter should be left in doubt. It seems to me that when the Minister is running around the country promising to do something about this in order to preserve our fruit and vegetable industry it would be useful to have a straight answer from the Parliamentary Secretary.

Since these sections of the legislation dealing with fruit, vegetables and honey cannot be legally enforced, many people would like to know whether the Government will bring in amendments to the agricultural standards legislation to do the same thing as these sections have been doing in the past. That is to say, they have been providing the standards with regard to container size and other issues. This will ensure the integrity of the fruit and vegetable industry. This is an industry which will be under tremendous attack, especially in light of the type of seasonal tariff which we are legitimizing.

These are tariffs that have been collected for the last 16 years which are being legitimized as a result of Bill C-96. Under the free trade deal such seasonal tariffs which have allowed the fresh fruit and vegetable industry to continue in the Okanagan Valley and the Niagara Escarpment will be done away with. There is a new mechanism called the snap-back mechanism which most observers feel will not be very effective because injury has to be shown. The processing procedure will be so long and so cumbersome that it will not be effective. Once the price breaks on a fresh fruit or vegetable it is very difficult to reinstate it, even with the proposed snap-back mechanism. Of course, that is being completely done away with for an industry which is expanding and growing. It is only available if that sector of the agricultural community is in entrenchment or not growing at all.

It would be useful if the Parliamentary Secretary could give us an indication that the equivalent regulations to the fruit, vegetable and honey legislation will be brought in under the guise of the agricultural standards legislation.

Mrs. Mailly: I would like to assure my colleague that those regulations exist but that they are not under the purview of Revenue Canada. They are under another Department. This particular Bill has nothing to do with containers or with the agricultural parts of these items. It has to do with process and with housekeeping matters. It has to do with the money that this Bill permits and validates.

In terms of the harmonization of tariffs, the United States is not part of that, so we are not dealing here with U.S.-Canada. As a matter of fact, in Revenue Canada we have a joke that we do not want to be the fifty-second country, we want to be thirty-third, because we are now the thirty-third country that has gone into this harmonization of tariffs, and the United States is not one of them.

This Bill has really only to do with validating practices or decisions that were made where millions and millions of dollars of taxpayers' money was involved. The money was brought into the Treasury, and it was found in mid-1984 that perhaps the practices were not in conformity with the law, and that these instruments were signed by officials rather than by the Minister. We want to ensure that this money stays with the Canadian Treasury and get those few thousand dollars that were not received.

I would like the Bill to go through very quickly, unless the Member has something to discuss about the process. I would be delighted to answer his questions, but it has nothing to do with the agricultural aspect of this item.

Clauses 2 and 3 agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Mr. Gauthier: I am not a specialist in linguistics or in the English language, but today I have had some communications from persons who state that the title, "An Act to validate certain customs duty orders relating to fresh fruits and vegetables", is utilizing an "s" at the end of "fruits" which is an American usage and in Canadian usage the "s" should not be on "fruits". I wonder if the Chairman would advise the drafters of our Bills that Canadian usage does not have an "s" after "fresh fruits". In other words, it should read "fresh fruit".

Mr. Chairman: I thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for his comments, and I am sure the people who draft bills will make a note of this.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS RETURNS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded with consideration of Bill C-91, an Act to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee.

Hon. Douglas Lewis (for Mr. Côté (Langelier)) moved that Bill C-91 be concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

Mr. Lewis (for the Minister of Supply and Services) moved that Bill C-91, an Act to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, be now read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, on third reading of this Bill, I would like to thank the members of both the liberal and the New Democratic Parties for their co-operation in ensuring the speedy passage of this legislation.

These amendments reduce the paper burden of corporations by bringing the reporting period under the Act in line with the fiscal period of each corporation. At the same time, these amendments give assurances that sensitive data on finances and technology transfers will remain confidential to Statistics Canada.

Equally important to these changes is the fact that the original statistical program of CALURA will be unaffected by these changes. Such reports as those that I have recently tabled will continue to shed light on aspects of foreign control and corporate concentration that are fundamental to the examination of Canadian economic issues.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to rise on Bill C-91 and indicate my Party's consent to the provisions of the Bill. We certainly agree with the necessity, where possible, to save on the reporting burden of companies, corporations, and labour unions. We agree that there is little purpose served in reporting periods that do not coincide with the fiscal period of the company or union to which the financial reporting cycle is directed.

We are glad to see the flexibility retained in the Act for the deeming powers granted the Minister in order to cope with special situations such as those where corporate mergers or reorganizations take place which may result in changes to the fiscal year. We believe that the Bill will constitute a significant measure of administrative convenience for a number of the corporations and unions, particularly the smaller ones which are reporting under the Act at present.

We are entirely in agreement with the need for Statistics Canada through the CALURA process to continue collecting information on corporate control and particularly the degree of foreign ownership within the Canadian economy. That is something that definitely has to be continued, and we are glad that there is no erosion of this objective of CALURA.

We are in broad agreement with the provision that confidential data provided by corporations should not be made too readily available to analysts within the Government. Similarly to many corporations we are concerned that they not be inadvertently granted opportunities for the use of government programs to accomplish corporate data collection objectives on their competitors which, of course, are generally available through the disclosure provisions of the Securities and Exchange Commission in the United States.

The distinction between public and private corporations is one that is very germane to this Bill. We trust that the Government will continue to monitor closely any process by which public corporations are converted into private corporations, and determine the relationship between any such movement and the reporting provisions of CALURA.

I would like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to record my Party's support of this Bill on third reading.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have some very brief comments to make in support of Bill C-91, and on third reading I would like to say that my Party has seen fit to support this measure.

Information collected annually by the authorities will now be produced according to returns based on the fiscal instead of the calendar year. I understand that businesses are in favour of the new system, which requires an amendment to the definition of reporting periods. This has been done in the Bill.

A second and vital amendment repeals all provisions relating to access to privileged information. My colleagues explained that this amendment responds to a need for giving our statutes some flexibility and for preventing departments from gaining access to detailed business information for policy purposes. I believe this is a positive measure and we will support it without hesitation.

Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) who was our spokesman on the Bill in committee, we are very pleased to support the Bill on third reading.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to begin my comments by thanking all Hon. Members of the House for their co-operation today in order to clean up these four housekeeping Bills.

There have been discussions among the Parties, and I think Your Honour would find unanimous consent to commence Private Members' Business now with the consideration of Bill C-246 standing on the Order Paper in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner). The Government has no intention of calling any more government business today, so we could commence Private Members' Business now with unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that we commence Private Members' Business at this time?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton) moved that Bill C-246, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (sale of liquor) be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, today it is my privilege to say a few words about this Bill, whose purpose is to remove the ban on the sale of liquor in a public place during polling hours.

[English]

I first introduced this Bill on March 5, 1986. The House prorogued and the Bill subsequently died on the Order Paper. I reintroduced essentially the same Bill on January 26, 1987. That was almost a year ago, and here we are now finally getting a chance to address it.

A Federal Court Justice referred to this continual national frustration of the Chief Electoral Officer about a year and a half ago in the Federal Court of Canada. He said that the community should look to Parliament, not the courts, to find relief from this archaic law. This is one of the reasons I brought the matter before Parliament.

It is not new to Parliament. It has been introduced before by other Hon. Members of the House. In October 1978 the late Tom Cossitt referred to it as an archaic, Victorian anachronism and asked the House to strike out this part of the Canada Elections Act. The Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) referred to it in May, 1982 in the same vein, as did the Hon. Member for Halton, now the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek). They asked the House to consider removing it from the law.

Here we go again. Finally there is a serious new twist to this archaic law, as it has been described, in that the Government of Canada in its wisdom saw fit to incorporate this particular Private Member's Bill, word for word, into a piece of proposed government legislation, Bill C-79, which received first reading in June, 1987. Bill C-79, which I have here, incorporates word for word the two suggested sections I want to have repealed.

The prohibition can be found in Canadian legislation since shortly after Confederation. In 1970, the House amended the Canada Elections Act to restrict the prohibition to polling hours only, whereas before that 1970 date prohibition applied to the entire election day.

In the last few years some provinces have abolished the legislation within the context of provincial election campaigns. Ontario was one of them that in 1975 completely abolished the legislation at the provincial level. British Columbia did it in 1978. Manitoba did it in 1985. Quebec now permits the sale of liquor during by-elections.

There is a certain amount of inconsistency on two counts at the national level. First, there is confusion between national and provincial responsibilities during election periods and, second, there is no prohibition at the national level during the days of advanced polling, which seems to be somewhat an anomaly as well. As we know, extensive votes are cast during advance polling hours, but anyone can have the enjoyment of imbibing if one so wishes anywhere in the country.

Confusion also exists during by-elections where an establishment on one side of the street just outside the riding within which the by-election is taking place can sell alcoholic beverages. However, an establishment inside the riding cannot do so. Obviously that confuses the public and is discriminatory in a sense.

In his last three reports following the federal elections of 1979, 1980, and 1984, the Chief Electoral Officer asked Parliament to repeal those sections of the law in order to make it clear and consistent and to bring us into the 20th century.

Some of the organizations from which I have heard recently which are very much in favour are: Red Lobster of Canada in Toronto; the Tourism Industry Association of Canada; Pacific Western Airlines, which is now part of Canadian Airlines International; the Tourism Industry Association of Alberta; Tourism Ontario Incorporated; CN Hotels; Molson Breweries; and the Ontario Motel and Hotel Association which represents 1,600 members. As we can see there is a fair amount of broad support for the proposal.

Because I have a considerable amount of faith in the process in this House, I believe that Bill C-79, which the Government introduced in June of last year, will come forth and become the new law of the land. I am not advocating any mad, passionate plea to repeal the Act. I am trying to make a rational request to bring that part of the Act into the 20th century. In the best spirit of Parliament, and so as not to use unnecessarily the resources and finances of Parliament by having the piece of legislation I have introduced go to a legislative committee, and recognizing that the Government intends to move fairly soon to see that Bill C-79 comes back to Parliament and becomes law before the next federal election, I seek unanimous consent of the House to have my particular Bill withdrawn.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would not want to refuse the unanimous consent for which the Hon. Member has just asked. However, perhaps we could agree informally among ourselves to proceed with the deliberations, and a few minutes before the appointed hour of adjournment, we could then proceed with giving unanimous consent. Notwithstanding the fact that the Hon. Member wants the item removed, I believe a number of Members would nevertheless like to speak on this very important issue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has no objection to that. Is that suggestion agreeable to the House? The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) has asked for unanimous consent to withdraw his Bill, but one or two Members would like to say a few words. May I gather from that that after a few Members have spoken the House will give unanimous consent to the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I believe there has already been some debate on this matter, and there are a number of Members who would like to comment on the subject, but it will not take long, and we agree with the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) to have the Bill withdrawn—always, of course, with the consent of the seconder of the motion.

[English]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) for having brought the matter to the attention of the House. As all Hon. Members will know, the present law is one that has certainly long outlived its effectiveness. We could go further and say that it has outlived its usefulness and in fact has created harm to our tourism and hospitality industries.

Prior to being in elected office I had the opportunity to work in the tourism and hospitality industry for a number of years and I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that people in that industry are of the opinion that an Act of this Parliament which precludes the sale of any alcoholic beverages on the day of an election is somewhat antique in 1988. It is fine that elections are important and have to be treated seriously. Obviously any elected person in this Chamber or elsewhere is aware of that. That being said, elections are no less serious if there is a convention going on in this city where alcoholic beverages cannot be sold, which has created tremendous harm. We have within a stone's throw of this building one of the largest and most beautiful convention centres of Canada. Imagine having 1,000 delegates to a meeting there, some of whom may not even be Canadians—I am told by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton that that has happened—at the same time as a general election is taking place and the whole place virtually shuts down from an entertainment standpoint because of the election. I do not think that makes the electoral process any better. Frankly, I think it makes us look stupid and archaic.

The other proposition is one of by-elections which the Member from Ottawa—Carleton raised. If liquor were an influence on the electoral process at one time, I would suggest that in 1988 one could hardly buy someone's vote for a bottle of beer. Even if you could, the arbitrary line in the case of a by-election is what would make it legitimate to buy that bottle of beer on the north side of the street but not on the south side of the same street?

We have established, in my opinion, that this law is outdated. It is so outdated that it is nothing short of a joke. We know that around Confederation there was a period when we did not have formal ballots the way we have now. The process was far less rigorous than the one we know today. It could have been that, at the time when we were choosing people to represent us in Parliament and the process was less formal, you did not want that type of meetings totally permeated by alcoholic beverages. That does not enhance the debate in any way nor does it provide for effective representation afterwards.

At one time I suppose the availability of liquor was synonomous or was influenced by candidates who had the wherewithal to provide it, namely, candidates with money to buy liquor for people who did not. Again, that is hardly applicable in 1988, nor do I believe that it would be meaningful in the years to come.

The law needs to be revamped. There are other sections of our election law which probably have ridiculous kinks in them as well.

To come back to the last point which the Member for Ottawa—Carleton raised in his presentation today, I would hope that our agreement as a House to withdraw this Bill later today will indicate to the Government, not that we are disinterested in the subject and, therefore, are willing to stand aside, I think it will be a unanimous demonstration instead of our willingness to have Bill C-79 enacted in the very near future. I want the Government to understand that that is at least my position. From what I see of the interest of other Members, I am sure that that would be the position of all Members of the House of Commons.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I wholeheartedly support the proposal by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) to bring this outdated and Victorian piece of legislation into the 20th century.

Just to make one point in closing on the availability of liquor in the unlikely event that someone is not convinced that the law ought to be modernized, our electoral process, as you know, has evolved into a two-tier affair, one being the nomination or the investiture by a political Party and the other one the election. Some nominations will have four or five thousand people attending a very large convention type of affair in order to choose a candidate. We all know that liquor is not restricted in that kind of process. While there is this two-step affair, with the first step having no restrictions at all, one could argue that in some cases there should be a little more restriction in that regard. On the other hand we have this second level, the formal electoral process. Once the candidates have been invested, the laws governing the process are, shall we say, at best useless and are at worst the laughing stock of the country. In order for any law to be effective, it should reflect the contempory view and it should have a purpose. I believe that the present Act as it pertains to liquor distribution on election day does not serve either of those two purposes and, therefore, should be altered.

Having said that, I want to offer my support for the initiative of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton and also my support for that portion of Bill C-79 which will modernize our Elections Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) has asked for the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw his Bill. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Bill is, therefore, withdrawn.

PETITIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to table four petitions which concern the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal and explain that whereas the Mulroney Government has sold out Canada and received nothing in return, whereas Canadian industries are still not protected from U.S. trade laws, whereas the United States obtained everything it wanted in all key sectors, especially agriculture, energy, auto trade, financial services and investment, whereas thousands of Canadian jobs are threatened and the Conservative Government has not provided for any adjustment assistance for Canadian workers, wherefore the understand, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to denounce the Government for signing the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present petitions from Hamilton, Ontario. The petitioners are objecting to the Government's trade deal in that this trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future.

In view of that, these petitioners call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject this proposed free trade agreement.

OPPOSITION TO IRRADIATION IN FOOD PROCESSING

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have four petitions containing some 250 names of constituents from the riding of Kent. The petitioners humbly pray that food irradiation not become part of home food processing in this country.

They ask Parliament that further independent agencies and scientists do more complete study on the safety in this area and also ask that in the event any food irradiation is allowed it be clearly labelled "treated with ionizing radiation".

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition signed by Canadians expressing their concern with the Government's trade agreement.

They believe the agreement negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership and develop Canadian resources in the best interest of Canadians, or to equalize opportunity between the regions.

They also believe that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

Therefore the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

PORNOGRAPHY—SUPPORT FOR BILL C-54

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of residents of Frontier, Saskatchewan who wish to express concerns regarding all aspects of pornography. They believe it is time for the Government of Canada to stop listening to dissenting voices and to take specific action to put laws into effect that will curb the spread of pornography and, in particular, to put in place laws that will protect children from the abuses that often result from exposure to explicit and sexually deviant materials.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to take a stand on this issue and to pass Bill-C-54 intact which they view as absolutely crucial to the future welfare of children, families and the nation.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and responsibility to present a petition signed by residents of Chelmsford, Cartier, Dowling, Hanmer, Levack, Azilda, Val Thérèse and Garson, all in Ontario in the riding of Nickel Belt.

The petitioners point out that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States. Furthermore, they point out that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised.

They also state that the trade agreement negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians or to equalize opportunities between the regions.

In light of all that, the petitioners call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the—

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think there was some discussion last week about the Standing Orders in relation to petitions. There was a fairly clear statement from the Chair that petitions are not to be read. I would bring that to the attention of my hon. friend.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. We have had this debate before. We agree that even though we may not read entirely a petition, Canadians who are listening would like to know what we are talking about when we table a petition. It would be too easy, Your Honour, to say, "A few people in Canada have asked me to put forward this petition concerning one problem. Thank you". I do not think that is the intent of a petition.

I may be tempted to agree with the Hon. Member that to read all of a petition is not necessary. If Your Honour consults the record he will see that to go along with what the Hon. Member is suggesting is to agree that it would be foolish to have any petition presented in the House.

I do not have any petitions to present today. However, I would not do honour or show respect for the people who give me petitions to be put to the House if I do not say in the House what they are all about. Perhaps some Members exaggerate by reading a whole petition. If we wanted to just table a petition then we could do that with the office of the Clerk.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I know that we have had this debate before. I want to point out that I named the communities of the individuals who signed the petition. Since people at home are listening and want to be sure that what they have signed is in fact what I am tabling in the House, then it would be remiss of me not to do what I have done. That is why I picked two or three paragraphs from the petition. In this way the folks who have gone to the trouble of signing the petition know exactly that what they have signed is what I have tabled in the House and that I did not make up something else when I got to my feet.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) who has a proven reputation here for expressing vigilantly the views of his constituents and others who have sought his services would want the public and the people who signed the petition and all Members of the House to know what is the subject matter. The Parliamentary Secretary raises a legitimate point of order in that a petition itself ought not to be read. I am cognizant of the remarks of the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) who is often of great help to the Chair. There has to be some balance in this matter and the Chair tries to achieve that.

However, if the statement that goes with a petition goes on overly long or is thought to be going on overly long then naturally someone will rise and raise a point of order. I think that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt has made it clear to his constituents that indeed he has presented his petition today.

I should also point out for the information of all Hon. Members and for the public that petitions are not necessarily always spoken to. Many petitions are just filed with the Table, which is a proper recourse under the rules.

It is understandable why Hon. Members would want to stand and put on the record the fact that they have indeed presented petitions on behalf of those who signed them.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 82—THE STATUS AND USE OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier) moved:

That this House condemns the government for its inaction, its lack of political will and its hesitation to accept debate in the House of Commons, at the second reading stage, on Bill C-72 respecting the status and use of the official languages, thus causing a clear setback in the application of the Act by federal departments and agencies, in addition to having detrimental effects on national unity.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion moved by the Official Opposition condemns the Government for its procrastination, its inaction and its hesitation to accept serious debate, at the second reading stage, on Bill C-72 respecting the status and use of the official languages.

• (1120)

Bill C-72 does not propose amendments to the existing official languages legislation. It is a completely new law replacing, after 19 years, the original statute, and incorporating important changes which must be explained to Canadians.

That is why we want a serious debate. We want it to start and to finish soon. That is why we fear that the Government does not have the political courage to bring it in for debate before the next election. Some of us believe that the Government has cold feet on this issue.

Since its election in 1984 the Tory Government has promised meaningful changes to the Official Languages Act; two Throne Speeches, many statements of impending reform, and Minister after Minister promised in this House that the Government would pursue with vigour the work already undertaken by the former Liberal Government of the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau.

The Government could draw encouragement and inspiration from the many contributions made to this cause. There were the proposals made by the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Official Languages, inspired by the content of seventeen annual reports published by three successive Commissioners for Official Languages, namely, Keith Spicer, Maxwell Yalden and the present incumbent, d'Iberville Fortier, and supported by many national and provincial associations, including the Fédération des francophones hors Québec, Alliance Quebec, the Association canadienne-française de l'Ontario, and similar groups in the various provinces, such as Parents for French, and many others, Mr. Speaker. All seemed to be going well for the Government. At least, that was the general impression. In 1984, the Conservatives inherited a thoroughly researched and well prepared dossier, and it was now up to them to provide the requisite leadership and have the courage of their convictions. We waited three and a half years for Bill C-72, which is intended to fully replace the Official Languages Act of 1969.

On June 25, 1987, three Ministers—the Minister of Justice, the President of the Treasury Board and the Secretary of State—held a joint press conference to formally present Bill C-72. When I saw the Government bring in its big guns, like so many others I was delighted because I thought the Government had finally decided to act without delay. The Minister of Justice who was responsible for the dossier stated last June, when the Bill was tabled, and I quote:

"We are putting our money where our mouth is".

That, Mr. Speaker, is a firm commitment.

In June the Official Opposition was delighted because we take official languages seriously. The Commissioner of Official Languages was also delighted, stating that the Bill was a step in the right direction. Most of the recommendations made by the Committee on Official Languages in its many reports to the House were incorporated in Bill C-72. However, the Bill was tabled in the House on June 25 printed and we have all had a chance to read it, and subsequently nothing has happened. Total Tory silence. Not a ripple. Complete inertia. Nothing.

According to a rumour confirmed recently by Conservative Members, the Tory Caucus is so divided on the Bill that they will bury it in style, in other words, drop the whole thing until after the election expected to be called this year. Some Tories would prefer cremation, Mr. Speaker.

On December 12, the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) openly demonstrated his opposition by resigning his post as parliamentary secretary here in the House. That takes a lot of courage, and I want to say this publicly, because he could have done what so many others did and hide behind the confidentiality and anonymity of the Tory Caucus. He did not. He had the courage to express his convictions and defend them. The Hon. Member of Simcoe South, at least, cannot be accused of being a wet hen, and, we are looking forward to the debate and to hearing his views and his case against Bill C-72 That is the whole purpose of debate, Mr. Speaker.

We want to hear the arguments for and against this Bill; we want to have a real debate on this serious issue. If some Conservatives are against this Bill, let them rise in this House and let the Government give them an opportunity to express their fears, their objections and their uncertainties. A debate will give us an opportunity to find solutions to their resistance, and it will also provide the best opportunity for them to make their feelings understood and for us to make our our own views clear.

I would not want such an important piece of legislation to be sneaked through the House. The Government must not ask us to adopt the Bill on the sly on a Friday afternoon as it suggested before the holidays. Let there be a debate so that everybody can express their views. That is democracy, Mr. Speaker.

Some will say that, in 1969, there were only three speeches by then party leaders at the second reading stage. That is true. However, I would remind them that second reading gives all Members of Parliament an opportunity to discuss the principles of a Bill, and that it would be at the very least strange if this Government refused to let those who wish to do so express themselves freely and clearly on this issue. We should not forget that, in 1969, 19 Conservative Members voted against the principle of the Official Languages Act at second reading stage without even having an opportunity to explain to the House why they were against the legislation. Mr. Speaker, we have just adopted the Meech Lake Agreement. There is already a basis, an official statement by all Conservative Members, in support of linguistic duality. Bill C-72 gives more strength and momentum to the Meech Lake Agreement and contributes much to its implementation. Those who are against recognition of our official languages should therefore rise and explain their views, because recognizing this principle would support the Meech Lake Agreement. It is therefore important for the Government to allow a serious debate on this Bill.

I shall not dwell on the details today, Mr. Speaker, as I hope that there will be other opportunities to do so. I want to speak about a historic cultural, social and political trend, that of federal administrative bilingualism which, as we know, is an aspect of institutional bilingualism, the others being parliamentary bilingualism with which we are familiar, judiciary bilingualism which we often hear mentioned, and educational bilingualism which we are still trying to implement in our provinces. Well, I distinguish between this administrative bilingualism and individual bilingualism. But I should like to deal with the historical trend which is trying to establish a federal administration with a view to meeting the hopes and expectations of Canadians. This administrative bilingualism is a vehicle to the promotion of which, I confess, I devote a considerable part of my energy.

It is the justification of my presence here as representative of a riding in the national capital, a national capital which should reflect what is best in this country. And finally my personal commitment for more than 30 years to the social, educational and political areas has had a profound influence on me. I strongly believe in a Canada which is both respectful and generous, and which is essentially characterized by its French-English or, if you prefer, English-French duality. I am one of those who believe that our country is stronger and richer because of its linguistic duality, that it will live on forever, whatever the resistance.

I prompted this emergency debate today because of the sadness and anger I felt upon realizing that the Government was having cold feet on the issue of administrative bilingualism, that it was not pursuing it with enough vigour and that it was weakening in its determination. I felt the need to strengthen its political will and re-inforce its commitment to bring this Bill before the House, so that we may discuss it freely and clearly, and finally adopt it because it is a good Bill.

My feeling about the Government's procrastination in presenting Bill C-72 is shared by a great many people, Madam Speaker, not only the members of my caucus, but also the provincial associations, the Official Languages Commissioner, as well, I suggest, as many other members of this House who do not always see eye to eye with me, including many Tory members who would like this Bill to be read a second time and finally passed on third reading.

Madam Speaker, from a Government that is preaching top priority enshrinement of Canada's basic duality, the French and English duality, that delay is totally illogical. Would it be that the Mulroney Government is only interested in elections ratings, short-term electoral points? Must I remind them that we in the Liberal Party supported by a huge majority the Meech Lake Agreement, although we had some reservations? Why? Because we felt it was important to recognize this country's fundamental, basic feature—French and English duality. This being so, should we not also recognize the immediate consequence of Meech Lake? Should we not also accept the consequences of that duality?

If this country is dualistic, French and English, by reason of language, culture and civil law, can it not prove that duality by giving itself a Public Service that reflects such a nature? Is the Government not bound to practice what it preaches?

After promising heaven to the supporters and hell to the opponents of Meech Lake, will this Government remain in limbo, especially in view of the fact that so much time was needed to get started on bilingualism at the Government level? Are we aware for instance that this Hon. Chamber only got simultaneous Translation in 1959? Are we aware that in the early 60's, when I first took an active interest in politics, the talk was of bilingual cheques and bilingual menus at the parliament's restaurant?

We have gone a long way since then, Madam Speaker. As we know, the Pearson-Lamontagne mandate and the Laurendeau-Dunton recommendations opened the door, followed of course by the Official Languages Act passed by this House in 1969. But there were shortcomings, loopholes in that great statute that have too often been pointed out by the Standing Committee, the Cabinet, the Public Service, the Official Languages Commissioner, and interested groups such as the FFHQ, Alliance Quebec and Parents for French. What are those loopholes? The 1982 Constitutional Act plugged a few, as we know, by enshrining, for instance, Government bilingualism along with parliamentary, judicial and school bilingualism. We now have that in our Constitution. Those provisions in the 1982 Act can no longer be changed by way of ordinary legislation. A constitutional amendment will be needed.

We know that significant progress has been made in the Public Service in the areas of services to the public, equitable representation, working language, all this is included in Bill C-72.

We are aware of the progress made in the use of official languages by provincial governments, especially in my own province of Ontario, whose Premier recognized during the election campaign the need to legislate bilingualism as soon as the situation would allow, and we all know that Bill 8 has been passed in Ontario and that it extends services in French to a greater number of people. This is why we must not stop there; we have to help move matters along. Now, a number of improvements suggested since 1969 have with much difficulty been put together in the new Official Languages Bill which is now before us, or which would be if the Government had the courage to call a debate. How is this Bill different from the 1969 legislation? What has been added? Why is the Government reluctant to try to have this Bill approved? Having proclaimed the principle of English and French duality, why is the Government reluctant to proclaim the consequences of this principle?

Let the dinosaurs rise; let those who are against the legislation explain their position, but let us see some action, Madam Speaker! Let those who are against the main provisions of this Bill rise, and I shall now list those main points. Let those who are against them rise and tell us if they are against improved access to justice in the two official languages of this country. Does anyone oppose recognition of the right of Canadians to work in the language of their choice in federal institutions? Let him rise and say so. Is anyone against full participation of French and English speaking Canadians in the Canadian public service? Let him rise and say so. Is anyone against the commitment to promote the development of official language minorities in Canada? Let him rise and say so. Is anyone against the principle of a court challenge when the linguistic rights of Canadians are denied? Let him rise and explain his position. Is anyone against recognizing the supremacy of this Act, which defines the terms of application of what the Meech Lake Agreement defines as being the basic characteristic of Canada? Let him rise and speak!

Madam Speaker, those who are against these principles should rise, explain their views and stop hiding. These principles must be publicly stated. That is why the Official Opposition demands a debate on this Bill, and hopes and prays that the Government will have the courage to call this debate within the next few days so that we may finally take action to deal with this major issue.

Mr. Speaker, I am glad that Bill C-72 on Official Languages has been introduced. We need this Bill. The 1969 legislation was getting old and had been found deficient in a number of areas. Among other things, a number of rulings cast doubt on its precedence over other legislation; it became imperative for the Public Service to clarify the notions of language of work and, first and foremost, the law had to reflect Canada's new constitutional and social reality. There can be no denying that mentalities have evolved and that the Act of 1969 has indeed been one of the factors behind this evolution. There have been others, Madam Speaker, but the Act of 1969 was the starting point of a number of measures and changes.

This new Bill C-72 is essential because the time has come for the Canadian Government to openly reassert its political will with respect to the official languages. The Meech Lake Accord, whose legal text was voted upon by the House on October 26, did acknowledge that linguistic duality is one of Canada's basic feature. All provincial premiers agreed with and endorsed this idea. My personal view is that it would have been better had the accord acknowledged Ottawa's constitutional obligation to promote the rights of linguistic minorities, the precedence of the official languages. This was not to be, and the Government explained that it had made an attempt but had felt resistance from some provinces. We accepted that. We will again try to convince these provinces that it is advisable, sound and essential that the central Government not only guarantee the protection but also the promotion of minority groups, fundamental as they are to the future of our country.

We simply cannot do without the Official Languages Act of 1987, precisely because it will reaffirm our constitutional progress and help obviate such resistance. The linguistic minorities must be given the means to fulfil their aspirations despite occasional resistance on the part of provincial, regional or other government levels.

Although mentalities have rapidly evolved, as demonstrated by the recognition by all the provinces of our linguistic duality, the fact remains that it did not occur everywhere at the same pace.

I refer here to the Piquette case of last Spring, where a Francophone member was prevented from using French in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. Yet, that province had signed the Meech Lake Accord. We could have reasonably expected the Alberta Government to be more openminded and in a demonstration of generosity towards its minority, to have taken this opportunity to generalize the use of French in the Alberta Legislature, which it did not.

This Bill, therefore, becomes necessary to promote both official languages in this country by weakening the resistance to them.

From the brief historical background which I have given at the beginning of my remarks, it is clear that Provincial Legislatures often take unfortunate steps, either by statute, administrative acts or regulations, which result in a reduction of minority rights.

Bill C-72 will provide Canadians with important tools and will make it possible for these minority groups to show what they are capable of. I suggest some people are wrong to fear that administrative bilingualism will threaten their future and that of their children if they remain unilingual. We will have to re-assure these people and continue to work towards mutual understanding. Together with the Constitution, this Bill will become an indispensable tool towards this goal.

Madam Speaker, you are indicating to me that my time has expired. I wish I could go on, but I will conclude by saying: we are urging the Government to bring Bill C-72 before the House, so that we may have a democratic debate where, hopefully, justice and fairness will prevail while being both generous and fair to all.

Mr. Grisé: Madam Speaker, I was listening to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), in which he eulogized the contents of Bill C-72, a Bill that, I may add, was tabled by this Government. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier set himself up as the defender of Bill C-72, and I think there is something wrong here. Bill C-72 as it stands today an excellent Bill as the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier said—was tabled by this Government. It was drafted by this Government. Bill C-72 was instigated by the Joint Committee, first under the joint chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin), succeeded by the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Desjardins), both excellent, and as far as I know, both Members on the Government side.

I have a short question for the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier. He was of course referring to the Meech Lake Accord which recognizes linguistic duality, and the Hon. Member would like to take advantage of any disagreement that may exist in this respect in the Conservative Caucus. Madam Speaker, I think that during the last three and a half years this Government has done an excellent job on Bill C-72 with respect to official languages and on the Meech Lake Accord where Canada's linguistic duality is recognized. I think there is absolutely no doubt about the Conservative Government's outstanding record on these issues.

Mr. Prud'homme: What was the question?

Mr. Grisé: I would like to ask my question, if the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) would give me a chance, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Prud'homme: I can't wait!

Mr. Grisé: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier said that our Government lost interest and that we failed to make any progress. Where was the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier when the Liberals were in power from 1969 to 1984? What did the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier do between 1980 and 1984 to improve the Official Languages Act?

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, how much time do I have left? Three or four minutes?

Mr. Prud'homme: Four minutes.

Mr. Gauthier: Where was I? Here in the House, and I have been since 1972. Before that, I was in this province, fighting for French in our schools, so that my children could go to French schools paid for with public funds. I did that for twelve years. Before that, I was active in community service through the Richelieu Club and that sort of thing. I tried to set up mechanisms and institutions that would be useful to my community, to my particular group. I wanted to give my community a chance to succeed. The Hon. Member may not be aware of the fact that in 1968 in Ontario, only 14 per cent of my fellow Franco-Ontarians finished high school. There were no schools for the rest. On both the social and the educational fronts, I fought battles whenever I felt I had to.

I came here in 1972, and in June 1973, we had to vote on this Parliamentary resolution calling for the implementation of an adminsitrative bilingualism which would make it possible for civil servants to be promoted to positions where they could use their own language, a resolution which would promote equal opportunities. Well, you need only look at the figures to realize the enormous improvements made since then. There were clearly short comings, something we realized later. In 1979, the Committee on Official Languages was established by Joe Clark, a former Tory Prime Minister, and under his direction. I paid him a visit with Mr. De Bané and Mr. Joyal in 1979. You need to know that when we asked him for a Parliamentary Committee to deal with this problem, he granted us our request. His Government was defeated. What can I say? The Committee under Mr. Clark never met, but as soon as Mr. Trudeau came to power in 1980, he established a Standing Committee which I had the honour to chair. I think all Members of this House, including the Hon. Member's own colleagues, are aware that I still sit on the Standing Committee on Official Languages. We try, but it is not easy. Today, I have not mentioned a single violation by the Federal administration, I did not blame the RCMP, I did not allude to the problems we experience every day in the administration of the Act, but I can say to the Hon. Members that I was here and doing the utmost to make the majority move.

Mr. Prud'homme: It did.

Mr. Gauthier: It is not always easy, but things did move. Finally, after many years and many committee meetings, the Government has brought forth a bill which I feel is good, because it reflects what we have been seeking for quite a long time, and I now ask the Government to make a special effort to bring this bill to the House, a bill which we will adopt quickly because it is good.

M. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I would also like to contribute to the discussion and put a question to my Hon. colleague for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) while commending him for his excellent speech. Certainly, Madam Speaker, all Members in this House would like the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier to be commended not only for his speech but also for his great commitment to the area of official languages.

Here is my question to Hon. Member. Does he believe it is by coincidence that in June 1987 a bill was tabled in this House and immediately thereafter there was a provincial election in Ontario; that during that election the Conservative party fought bilingualism, and that just after the election and the situation in which the Ontario Conservatives found themselves with the support, dare I say, of some federal Conservative MPs, this Conservative Government chose to shelve, for all practical purposes, its good piece of a legislation, and I recognize it was good. And may I recall that some Conservative MPs from Ontario also made representations against Bill C-72. Does the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier feel that series of events was pure coincidence, remembering the position taken by Mr. Grossman during the provincial elections in Ontario?

Mr. Gauthier: Very briefly, Madam Speaker, I have no crystal ball. I could not say what went through the heads of those politicians, both federal and provincial, but it was passing strange that the legislation we had been expecting last winter, that was promised in 1986, was tabled on June 25, just before the summer recess, and since that time there has been no mention of it. Did that contribute to the election of a Liberal Government in Ontario? This I do not know, but I would hope so, because it has shown the Liberals, as straight-thinking people, want to support that cause and are ready to do so with all their hearts and energies.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé), I would like to suggest that during my 25 years in political life here in Ottawa and as a student at the University of Ottawa, since credit must be given where credit is due, I never met a greater champion of Francophones outside Quebec than the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). I would like to point out that I got to know the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier when I received from the Association canadienne-française d'éducation . . . I know that the Hon. Member represents a Quebec constituency, but I am speaking about a champion of francophones outside Quebec. I got to know him in 1957 when I was given some award—I do not really want to speak about myself, but about the Hon. Member—at Ottawa University by the Association canadienne-française d'éducation de l'Ontario. At the time, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier was already known in francophone circles outside Quebec as the great champion and defender of francophones. I say this with a lot of friendship for my English-speaking friends. There are great defenders of Quebec anglophones in Quebec. That is quite normal. However, if someone is going to ask where we were when things were not going well, I shall have to attest to the extraordinary efforts made by the Hon. Member, to his tenacity and his loyalty to his own culture, and to the the fact that he never tried to take anything away from the culture and pride of others. This is the important point. This has always been the motivation of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, and I would be remiss in my duty if I did not take this opportunity to reflect upon the history of francophones outside Quebec and pay the Hon. Member a very simple and humble hommage by saying that he has no lesson to receive from anyone when it comes to his determination to promote the rights of francophones.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I feel some ambivalence about entering into this debate on this particular motion. I say that because the motion indicates the desire of the Official Opposition to proceed with the discussion of a Government Bill. The fact is that we are in the unusual situation today of having the Opposition say that this Bill finally achieves a proper legislative approach to official languages in Canada, something the Liberal Party failed to do in 19 years. This Bill really is a testament to the failure of the leadership of the Liberal Party in matters of language in Canada.

This is one of those Opposition motions which ostensibly is critical of the Government but, after reading it, is found to be an absolute condemnation of the Liberal Party's position and the lack of present leadership on this issue.

Before I get into the text of my speech, I would like to point out why we are now debating this matter today on an Opposition motion. I heard the speech by the Hon. Member, for whom I have the greatest of respect. I do not say these things to cast any reflections on his motives, and the Hon. Member knows that. However, I ask the Hon. Member and members of the Liberal Party of Canada why, if in fact this is a matter of such great urgency for them, their House Leader has never, as I understand it, asked that this matter be brought forward. Is this some sort of conversion or has the Hon. Member for Ottawa Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) now assumed the role of the House Leader of the Liberal Party?

When I discussed the matter of dealing with this Bill on the agenda we had this fall, although the Hon. Member tells me that he wanted to get this Bill through, he said that he thought he would be able to get by with 25 speakers from his Party.

Does this sound like a Party that wants to get this matter through with great dispatch as the Hon. Member has said?

We talk about delays, filibusters and not getting on with the agenda, but we all understand the parliamentary system. It is very simple. The Government brought forward a Bill which received universal approval from all critics and all persons who were interested in the matter, including the Hon. Member who has presented this motion today. But what was on the agenda when we came back last fall? We came back to deal with the refugee determination Bills, Bill C-84 and Bill C-55, and we were faced with a constant and ongoing filibuster by the Opposition. The Meech Lake Accord, an important constitutional resolution, was brought forward. Opposition Members spoke and spoke on that matter. I am not being critical, I am simply talking about the agenda. Bill C-22 has still not gone through. The Opposition and the Liberal Party in particular were involved in a day-to-day delay of all legislative matters so that it was virtually impossible for us to bring forward this very important piece of legislation. The record shows that the fault for that lies across the aisle with the Liberal Party which delayed our legislation.

I have said those few introductory words without casting reflections on the motives of this motion. I know the Hon. Member is very interested in the matter. Of course, I understand that he is a Franco-Ontarian. I think his time would be better spent in going to his political ally, the Premier of the Province of Ontario, to talk about the rights of Francophones in the Province of Ontario. If he spent more time doing that rather than moving this unhelpful and unnecessary motion on the first Opposition day of this year, he would be doing a far greater service for his constituents.

When this Bill received first reading in June, it represented the culmination of a great deal of intensive and sustained work and consultation on the part of the President of the Treasury Board, (Mr. Mazankowski) the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) and I. We were mandated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to review all aspects of the law, policies and programs relating to official languages and to develop a plan for a comprehensive review of this crucial area of our national life.

Soon after I accepted the responsibilities of Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada in the summer of 1986, I spoke to the Canadian Bar Association of my intention to promote the Government's official languages policy actively in regard to the reform of the Official Languages Act and related amendments to the language of trial provisions in Part 14(1) of the Criminal Code. The re-enactment of the Official Languages Act to ensure conformity with both the letter and spirit of the Constitution and the implementation of the right of accused persons to be tried in their official languages under the Criminal Code would be, I stated, areas of primary importance to me as Minister of Justice and important elements in the advancement of the Government's policies of social justice and national reconciliation.

It took 10 more months for us to perfect the work on those initiatives and to develop improved policies and programs relating to the use of official languages not only within federal institutions but also throughout Canadian society as a whole. We were subject to criticism during that period by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier for the delay in reforming the Act and renewing the policy. The strength of our commitment was put into question. Yet it was the seriousness with which we undertook this endeavour that required us to review, study and consult in order to ensure that the reforms the Government would be proposing would be balanced, reforms designed to move official languages policy forward into the year 2000 and beyond, yet ones that would be fair to all Canadians and could be implemented in a reasonable, effective and practical manner.

To paraphrase the Supreme Court of Canada in one of its more celebrated language rights decisions, language reform combines legal and constitutional questions of the utmost subtlety and complexity with political questions of great sensitivity. I say unabashedly that this Government, under the leadership of the Prime Minister, finds the matter of official languages one which goes to the unity of Canada. Unlike the Liberal Party, we use it as a unifying force and not for political division. The historical record of that party is blatant and unfortunate.

What was the result of this painstaking process? On June 25 the official languages Bill was introduced and related policy and program initiatives of Treasury Board and the Secretary of State were announced. I want Hon. Members and the people of Canada to understand the reaction to this legislation when we introduced it at the end of last June. I suggest that the headlines summarize the reaction rather succinctly. "Bilingualism Bill Wins Nothing But Praise", Ottawa Citizen, June 26, 1987. "All Parties Back New Languages Bill", The Toronto Star of June 26. "Minority Language Rights Get Boost", Winnipeg Free Press, June 26.

"Tabling of Bill in Commons receives unanimous approval", La Presse, Montreal, June 26.

[English]

"Language Bill Would Promote Life of Minority", the Montreal Gazette, June 2.

[Translation]

"The Language Act gets more teeth—Unanimity on reform proposal", Le Devoir, Montreal, June 26.

[English]

Here is a sampling from the articles that followed those headlines:

> Opposition MPs and minority official language groups couldn't find a bad word—in English or in French—to say about the government's new bilingualism legislation.

That is from the Citizen. Another one:

> The Progressive Conservative Government has introduced a new Official Languages Act to near-universal acclaim.
> Official Languages Commissioner D'Iberville Fortier, Ottawa's independent bilingualism watchdog, called the changes "magnificent" and said the great majority of his recommendations had been included.
> Liberal spokesperson Jean-Robert Gauthier said the Act appears to be thorough, solid and carefully crafted.

I take that from that great journal, The Toronto Star.

The new text, which replaces the 1969 Official Languages Act, was applauded by all major groups and individuals directly affected.

The Liberal and NDP opposition parties, the Official Languages Commissioner, the Fédération des francophones hors Québec, Alliance Québec, as well as the co-chairman of the Joint Committee of the House of Commons and the Senate on Official Languages have stated that they agree to a large extent with the Bill—

The Liberal spokesman, Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier), stated that the Bill represents a new step forward, that it has "more theeth" than the previous legislation and that it meets most of his expectations. (La Presse)

To continue:

> A new Official Languages Act that requires the federal government not just to protect official language minorities but to promote the vitality of their community life was met yesterday with a hallelujah chorus of approval . . . Commissioner Fortier's assessment—"A very fine piece of work—a major step forward"—captured the gist of the comments.

That is from The Gazette. I could go on and on about the kind of response we have had to this legislation.

Of course it is our intention, in conjunction with the House's agenda, to bring this matter forward so the Hon. Member will have an opportunity to praise the Government for at last coming to terms with official languages in a fair and equitable way, unlike the way it has been dealt with by previous Liberal Governments. I understand the Hon. Member will be doing that because I am sure he cannot in all conscience change his position from that which I quoted in the newspapers.

Mr. Gauthier: Did you hear me this morning? I said bring it on.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The fact is this debate is a reflection of the lack of leadership in the Liberal Party. Given the pressing issues facing us, which obviously cause some discomfort to the Liberal Party, they bring forward this rather silly motion. The point is there is a proper way to bring these matters forward. It is traditionally a matter of negotiation between the House Leaders to determine an appropriate time. The opposition Parties have to give some consideration to co-operating with the Government rather than constantly delay and filibuster. They have done that not only with respect to the legislation I have mentioned, they did it over the Christmas recess to make sure no legislation got through, because of their curious opposition to things such as free trade and Bill C-22 and the refugee legislation, which is much overdue.

As I said, the commentary I read aptly demonstrates the fact that the official languages Bill respects the Constitution, and renews the Government's commitment to this policy by providing a legislative framework which is as fair, reasoned and balanced as it is forward-looking. It reflects both Canada's linguistic reality and its aspirations. It also complements the commitment to Canada's linguistic duality intrinsic to the Meech Lake constitutional Accord. I firmly believe that Bill C-72 will ensure greater linguistic justice, equity and opportunity for all Canadians.

I continue to prepare the ground for the next steps in the process of enactment of this legislation. Officials in my department have been active in explaining a number of essentially technical points, pursuing concerns that came up during the general reaction following the introduction of a Bill, or that have been raised in further consultation and information sessions with the office of the Commissioner of Official Languages, the Canadian Judicial Council, the Conference of Canadian Court Administrators, and various minority language organizations. We have reviewed matters raised in correspondence with provincial attorneys-general. We are continuing discussions with the two territorial Governments with a view to the best means of assuring the advancement of Canada's official languages.

As I noted in reply to previous questions from the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, this is a Government that believes in communication, consultation and co-operation. We believe these things are essential to ensuring the continued progress, understanding, acceptance and development of official languages policy in this country. This is particularly true in the important field of the administration of justice for which I have responsibility under the Act.

When I undertook to continue the consultation process with the provinces to achieve the Canada-wide proclamation of Criminal Code Part XIV.1 on the language of the accused, I was aware that it would not be easy to guarantee not only the co-operation of the various jurisdictions involved but also the availability of the technical, human and other resosurces required to reach that objective. Still, with the support of my colleague the Secretary of State and the interest shown by most of the provinces concerned we were able to report significant progress in that field.

Right from the day I was appointed Minister of Justice I thought that equity made it imperative for any person accused of a crime in Canada to be able to claim the linguistic rights guaranteed under the Criminal Code. As a matter of fact, pursuant to the Charter of Rights, Parliament and the provincial legislatures may take measures to advance the equality of status or use of the official languages in their respective fields of jurisdiction.

The provincial governments had agreed to open discussions designed to make sure that Part XIV.1 would apply from coast to coast. At the October 1986 conference of attorneys general and provincial justice ministers my colleagues agreed to exchange information and help one another with a view to ensuring that trials might be conducted in both English and French in all jurisdictions. I expressed my appreciation to my provincial colleagues for their precious support and went on to say that I would do everything in my power so that we might reach our goal.

[English]

The happy result of these consultations and this co-operation was the proclamation and coming into force last September of Part 14.1 of the Criminal Code in Saskatchewan, and with regard to summary conviction offences in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

So these provinces have just joined with the provinces of Ontario, New Brunswick and Manitoba as well as the Yukon and Northwest Territories where the right of the accused to be tried in his or her own language has now been a fact of life for a number of years. Through his official languages promotion program the Secretary of State provides financial assistance for linguistic training courses as well as translation and interpretation services. Consultation has not ended, far from it, and I am still convinced that it will soon lead to the implementation of Part XIV.1 elsewhere in Canada.

Better still, Bill C-72 prescribes a deadline for implementing that part of the Criminal Code. These provisions will become operative on January 1, 1990 in those provinces where they were not previously enforceable. At the same time, Bill C-72 makes a number of changes to the system under Part XIV.1 to better define and confirm the rights and obligations resulting from the right of the accused to have his trial before a judge or a judge and jury speaking the official language of the accused. There are, in the Official Languages Act as it exists now, a number of provisions concerning the Federal tribunals and the Courts dealing with criminal matters, but these provisions should be updated and improved. For instance, concerning the language used during the trial, the accused and his counsel will have the right to use either of the official languages during the arguments and for all purposes relating to them; the witnesses will have the right to testify in either of the official languages; the accused will have the right to have the plaintif use the same language as he does; the Courts will have to provide similtaneous interpretation services and the file will have to include a transcription of this interpretation. These rights exist also at the preliminary inquiry stage.

When these amendments come into force, a series of transitional provisions maintaining some rights and powers resulting from the 1969 legislation governing the use of both official languages in criminal proceedings will be repealed. As to the Federal Courts, the new provisions will go beyond the basic constitutional guarantees to ensure for both Francophone and Anglophone Canadians equal access to the legislative bodies, statutes and Courts of this country, as ruled by the Supreme Court of Canada in its reference to the linguistic rights in Manitoba.

As was the case under the 1969 legislation, the Federal Courts will have to hear the evidence in the official language requested by the witness, to provide similtaneous interpretation services and to make available to the public their decisions, as well as their grounds, in both official languages. These obligations have been extended, however, and the exceptions limited or eliminated altogether wherever the practice of the past 18 years has demonstrated that it was possible and reasonable to do so.

In addition, the Federal Court, the Tax Court of Canada and, within five years, various federal agencies will have to arrange their affairs so as to assign judges capable of understanding directly and without interpretation proceedings in English, in French, or in both languages as the case may be. Clearly it is not a duty of all judges to be bilingual. Rather, it is an institutional obligation to provide the services where required in either of the official languages.

I see that my time is up, Madam Speaker. I could go on and on in support of this Bill and the defrocking, if I can put it that way, of this rather specious, unworthy motion. If the Hon. Member is truly interested in making progress, I suggest that he communicate that fact to his House Leader so that there may be discussions with respect to the appropriate timing of this legislation. That would provide an opportunity for all of us to deal with the merits of the legislation in order to allow it to go to committee where there will be an opportunity for serious discussion on the provisions of this Bill and for full understanding. In that way we will be able to bring this legislation back to the House on the understanding that it is intended to make this country reach the potential which we all know it has.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a question or two of the Minister. Having been a House Leader in this he understands how this House operates, as does every one of us. He knows that the Government is in charge of proposing legislation. The House can dispose of the legislation once it is before the House. The only time the House Leaders discussed this legislation was on a Friday just before Christmas when the Government wanted to pass the Bill quickly on a Friday afternoon. I said no to that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: I said no to that because the people in my caucus have a right to be heard in this debate. They have a right to hear the arguments of the Tories who oppose this Bill.

They have a right to be heard and we want to hear them because that is how the House operates—it debates.

Mr. Charest: Now we know the truth.

Mr. Gauthier: The Minister of State for small things—

Mr. Charest: Cheap, cheap.

Mr. Gauthier: Just as cheap as your remarks. You are an expert in cheapness and you should know that.

[Translation]

I say to the Minister who has the floor: Stand up, as a Quebecer, and tell this Government to get moving! Tell it to get moving on official languages as it should, instead of using delaying tactics as it has been doing for at least the past three and a half years!

Mr. Charest: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Minister of State (Youth) (Mr. Charest) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Charest: Madam Speaker, like all other Members of this House, I can only observe that unfortunately the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has—perhaps he got carried away and used terms he would not normally use but since he took it out on me, I seize this opportunity to point out that he had at least the courage to admit today that until now the Opposition has refused to debate and pass the Bill in the House, and in the same breath he can hardly criticize us as the Government for not introducing the Bill in the House. He can only blame himself and his colleagues—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Unfortunately, when words are exchanged between Members from either side of the House without being addressed through the Chair incidents such as the one we are witnessing are a frequent occurrence. I know that both Hon. Members involved in this case are not in the habit of indulging in breaking the rules in this way. We will continue with the comments of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I am sorry—the Minister arrived a little late for the debate and did not hear what I said. I said during my speech that once, before Christmas, the Government rushed into the Opposition lobby and urged us to put the Bill through quickly, and I said no. It is fundamental legislation that must be debated thoroughly, in a democratic way. I make no apologies about that to anybody, not even the Minister. I think this Bill is very important and Members on both sides of the House want to debate it seriously. There is no question of having only one speaker, after which 19 Conservative Members will rise, as in 1969, to vote against the Bill without giving any explanation or reason why.

I ask the Minister who defended the Government . . . He did not tell the House that the Government would introduce the Bill in the next few days. He did not answer the fundamental issue raised in the motion, that is our condemnation of this Government which is unable to bring forward a Bill we consider serious and important. I ask the Minister this: When will the Government bring this legislation forward?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I think I should correct some of the allegations that have been made with respect to what has transpired to this point. At the request of my House Leader, I discussed with the Hon. Member the time which might be involved in discussing this matter and the timing of the presentation of the legislation.

Mr. Gauthier: Never.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Perhaps if I refresh the memory of the Hon. Member, at that time he indicated to me—my recollection is subject to his correction—that he thought this would take quite some time. He thought there were at least 25 people in his caucus who were interested in speaking. He thought he could bring that down to perhaps 18 or 17 people. As I recall, he was sitting in the Chamber next to me and I said, as the Hon. Member will recall, that we were interested in proceeding with this legislation because it is an important Bill, but I wanted to find a time.

The Hon Member said that he felt it would not be appropriate for us to call it at the end of the week because many of his Members might be interested in speaking but would be absent. Therefore, he suggested, it might be better for the House Leaders to determine a time at which we could have this debate take place at the beginning of the week and carry on into the week. I have conveyed this information to my House Leader, as I always do, with the idea that he would be in a position to discuss the business of the House.

The whole point I want to make in response to the question is that this is trivial pursuit. This motion is trivial pursuit on the part of the Opposition because they do not have anything serious to talk about.

This is an important issue. For them to trivialize it on the basis of saying, first, that this is the best legislation they could imagine, and second, that they want this to go through quickly, and third, to condemn the Government for not bringing it forward sooner, and then to say that they are going to spend an inordinate period of time discussing this matter and holding it up is hard to believe, and I know the Canadian public will find it hard to believe.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I am encouraged to make a comment at this point, recognizing that what happens at House Leaders' discussions and meetings is not to be necessarily discussed on the floor of the House of Commons. While I do not think that is appropriate, perhaps I could simply say to the Hon. Member, who indicated an interest in proceeding with this legislation, that I believe there is a feeling on all sides that it would be appropriate to take all steps necessary as soon as possible to impress with House Leaders that this legislation ought to be expedited.

I can assure him that as far as New Democrats are concerned we will do everything we can to co-operate.

We also recognize that it is important legislation because there are divergent views represented in the House of Commons as to the appropriateness of certain clauses. I know there are Members on all sides who have very important questions they want to pose, presumably at the appropriate stage of the debate, particularly at committee. I encourage the Hon. Minister to approach his House Leader to see if we cannot proceed with this expeditiously.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I appreciate that offer on the part of the New Democratic Party. I am very interested in having this matter dealt with because I think it is a fair Bill. It is a Bill that addresses this matter in a fair and consultative way. It certainly bears scrutiny, but when I hear—not from the Hon. Member's Party—that we are going to spend a very long period of time, by the Liberal Party in filibustering this Bill at second reading—

Mr. Gauthier: You are being dishonest when you say that and you know it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —when we are dealing with the principle of the legislation, I agree that—

Mr. Prud'homme: A point of order, Madam Speaker. I usually do not disagree fundamentally with the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), but unless the Hon. Minister can prove that the Liberal Party intends to filibuster, because he said that the Liberal Party intends to filibuster, unless he can prove—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please.

Mr. Prud'homme: This is a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. I think the Hon. Member knows very well that it is not really a point of order but more a point of debate.

Mr. Prud'homme: Certainly not. Therefore it is a question of privilege.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I will try to address it. I do not want to alarm the Chairman of the Liberal Caucus—

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I would hope that we can discuss the language issue in this country without being passionate, because that is always the danger.

Mr. Charest: Why the motion, then?

Mr. Prud'homme: You will see later on. I will participate in the debate. I am a Member of this Party. I do not intend to filibuster. If the Minister of Justice can prove that we said that we would filibuster, I would disagree with my Party because I do not intend to filibuster.

Mr. Charest: Hear, hear!

Mr. Prud'homme: The Hon. Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest), is very enthusiastic. As Minister of Youth, I hope he is more enthusiastic when looking at the projects for youth next summer.

Mr. Rossi: You know what filibuster means, Ray.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It seems obvious that the Hon. Minister is making a general statement.

Mr. Rossi: She does not know what filibuster is, but you do.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) may want to participate in the debate right now, but it is becoming very difficult to answer the query by the Member for Saint Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) when the Speaker can hardly hear herself speak in the House.

[Translation]

I think the Hon. Member knows very well that so far at least his privileges as Member have not been questioned, that the Minister made a general remark which, as he said himself, he will undoubtedly want to qualify at the earliest opportunity. The Hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, before I was interrupted I was saying to my distinguished friend, who is Chairman of the Liberal Caucus and speaks on behalf of the Liberal Caucus on all matters, that what I am talking about in terms of filibuster is that I think the most appropriate place for us to look at this legislation is in committee where we can go through it clause by clause and have the people who are involved in this examine these matters. There is no provision on the floor of the House for us to look at the matter clause by clause. We are constrained by the rules to deal with principles.

The Liberal Party has spoken by its porte-parole. They have already spoken with respect to the fact that they think this is the best Bill they have ever seen in terms of official languages. Why would they suggest to me that they will have practically three-quarters of their caucus rising to spend an inordinate period of time on the Bill if they are really interested in making progress?

Mr. Penner: It is called democracy. That is what we do. We debate the Bill in the House of Commons.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I do not want to patronize the Hon. Member, but the fact is that we have an agenda in the House. If the Opposition is really interested in passing the Bill, it will get together with the House Leader and propose a reasonable amount of time that will allow it to put forward the cogent argument on the principle of the matter but will also allow a good and thorough examination of the Bill when it gets to committee.

Mr. Gauthier: You are scared of the Bill.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That would be a rational way of proceeding. Unfortunately the Liberal Party still has a trace of that tendency under Mr. Trudeau to use language as a divisive force in our country. We are not going to deal with this kind—

• (1230)

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Gauthier: That is a cheap shot and you know it. That is the cheapest shot I have heard come out of you.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, if the comments which were made were made by a less senior Member of the House I might not have been so insulted. But coming as they do from the Minister of Justice I want to ask him to withdraw. I am a Member of the Liberal Party. I have always said that if there is any issue that is the most explosive for our country it is the issue of the relationship between the French and the English. To say to us that, intentionally, Mr. Trudeau or any one of the Members of his Party at that time was using the language issue to divide is not worthy of a Minister of Justice of Canada.

I hope that we can discuss this Bill. I see a lot of good in it. I have only a very few comments to make on certain chapters of it when it is referred to committee. It is the Minister of Justice who should set the tone for debate. What he has just said is extremely divisive. If the Minister cannot back up what he has said with proof then I hope that he will set another tone for a debate of this type. There are enough problems in Canada and enough misunderstandings. There are many problems in Manitoba at the moment in every village. I hope that the Minister will be more careful.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It would be easier for everyone as we are discussing this very important issue if Members would be more careful with off-the-cuff comments and for Members on the other side not to be so thin-skinned in terms of remarks which are made off-the-cuff.

I would now like to inform the House that the time for questions and comments has expired.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Because my colleague for whom I have great respect has raised this matter I do not want there to be any misunderstanding about it. I share with the Hon. Member as fervently as any Member of the House the belief that this matter should be dealt with in a responsible and unifying manner. It is an issue fundamental to our country. I make no apology for that. As a western Canadian and as a member of a minority group I understand the rights of minorities. This Bill deals with minority rights.

If we are going to deal with it in the way in which the Hon. Member wants it to be dealt with, then I would ask him to reflect and to discuss in his caucus this Wednesday with his Party—

Mr. Prud'homme: That is not a question of privilege, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —whether this type of motion is in fact legitimate or mischievous.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp).

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, we are debating this morning an Opposition motion which might be worth putting on the record again at this point. It states:

> That this House condemns the government for its inaction, its lack of political will and its hesitation to accept debate in the House of Commons, at the second reading stage, on Bill C-72 respecting the status and use of the official languages, thus causing a clear setback in the application of the Act by federal departments and agencies, in addition to having detrimental effects on national unit.

That is a powerful motion. I can understand some of the sensitivities being expressed this morning and early afternoon by Members of the Official Opposition as well as by Members of the Government. I must say that I came into the Chamber just before the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) made his comments and asked his question of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who moved this particular motion. He asked a question about the credentials of the Hon. Member. That struck me as one of the less informed, and I am tempted to use that good straightforward term "ignorant" questions that I have heard in the House. If a question could allow a speaker to lay his credentials out and impress others with what he has done then that particular question did so.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier has clearly been working hard for years within the Government caucus, the Liberal caucus in the years past, and now in Opposition, in order to advance the cause of bilingualism in Canada. There is no point in raising any questions about his right to express concern about inaction and to press for action by the Government on Bill C-72.

I would like to say something about the context within which bilingualism developed in order to provide a basis for appreciating the importance of Bill C-72 as it comes before us for debate, presumably some time in 1988. Of course, the precise question is how soon it will come before us so that it can be advanced to committee for detailed consideration and for it to become law. The comments I want to address are the comments of the leading New Democratic Party Member of the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages, as well as those of the critic for multiculturalism. I want to interrelate these various aspects in appreciating the place that bilingualism has in our country in order to indicate why we are concerned to have the Bill come forward, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), has already indicated.

If we cast our minds back some 20 years and more in Canadian affairs we will remember that there was a very great struggle in the political life of the country, and in the politics of the Province of Quebec even more particularly, a struggle in politics, in society and in culture. It was a struggle between an English-speaking Canada expressed in so many ways, and encouraged as it had been from the late 1940s through the 1950s by the federal Government, a struggle against the assertion that Canada was simply an English-speaking country.

We can look back to various attempts to recognize what has often been called simply the French fact in Canada. We know that before the 1960s, as well as afterwards for that matter, it was always a struggle against a powerful reality, the nationalism of all of those who saw Canada as simply English-speaking and wanted to remove the diversity that existed.

The fact that the federal Government in the 1950s had become so active in cultural activity is a fact that is all too rarely remembered these days. That is surely the context into which we can place the Constitutional Accord of 1987. Looking back some 30 years to the work of the Tremblay Commission in Quebec we might remember the assertion of a primary responsibility in Quebec for cultural and social policy and the maintenance of a French-speaking community in the Province of Quebec, regardless of what might happen beyond its borders. Of course, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier as a Franco- Ontarian knows how much more difficult it has been outside the Province of Quebec to maintain the life of Franco-Ontarians.

In the 1960s the assertions in the Province of Quebec blew up quite clearly. I need only allude to that for all of us to appreciate that there was an enormous crisis. A Royal Commission that was appointed called this "the greatest crisis the Canadian nation had ever faced". When the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism recommended that the Canadian nation must become officially bilingual, that was a federal political response to this particular challenge to the Canadian nation.

Of course, it found expression in 1969 in the Official Languages Act which established principles of service to the public and employment opportunities for both language groups in Canada. In 1969 that achievement was only one of the very significant events that occurred about 1970 in the recognition of diversity as the reality of this country rather than simply an English-speaking country with a French fact that could not be successfully swamped.

I point out that even before it had completed its work, the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism had to recognize that one could not define the country as bicultural, even if one were going to establish English and French as the official languages. In 1971 the statement of a multicultural policy for Canada within a bilingual framework was an inevitable outgrowth of this turning away from an Anglo Canada to a Canada of diversity.

I would assert that during that same period when the newly formed Trudeau Government issued a White Paper on Indian Affairs which anticipated the destruction of aboriginal communities in Canada and the disappearance of native Canadians into the mainstream Canadian society only with rights that other Canadians have, that Government found itself under criticism and attack. It abandoned the policy and the aboriginal peoples found themselves gearing up to a higher level of political activity and eventually of legal work, judicial struggle and constitutional activity in the 1980s, a struggle against great difficulties and enormous barriers.

All of us who were critical of aspects of the Constitutional Accord of 1987 last summer and fall recognized that while it did justice to the demands of Quebec and the realities that official bilingualism deals with, it neglected those of the aboriginal peoples and the multicultural realities of the country. In that sense it was an incomplete accord as far as dealing with all of the shortcomings in Canadian national political life.

Sketching those aspects of Canadian diversities within which the Official Languages Act has a fundamental place, and recognizing that official bilingualism was the first victory won in this country for the diversity that we now celebrate in multiculturalism is to appreciate how important that Bill is. To recognize the need to consolidate, re-enact, and improve the language legislation of the country is a very important matter. Bill C-72 deserves the type of concern expressed by this motion and our desire that the policy be advanced. It is obvious that the work of ensuring that the federal Government operates on the basis of the Official Languages Act always involves a struggle.

I am sure that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier would be frank in saying that he struggled with Government, with departments, and with the institutional inertia that is so characteristic of Departments of Government and of the institutions of the country. He struggled with those just as much in the days of the successive Trudeau Governments as he has been doing now with the Conservatives pulling the reins of power in this country. Institutional inertia is the brutal fact.

It is always a struggle to advance the principle of service to the public in the language of choice across the country, to ensure that members of the official language minority have the opportunity to work in their own language wherever they are in the country, to achieve fair representation and equitable participation in the Public Service of Canada, and perhaps in other areas, and to ensure that the principles of official bilingualism actually prevail.

I do not suppose there is much point in comparing Governments. The slanging that took place between the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and some of his colleagues and members of the Liberal caucus a few minutes ago represented aspersions on the other in each case and obvious attempts to elevate their own standing in this particular struggle.

What is surely significant to recognize in how the struggle can be advanced is the role of the Commissioner of Official Languages. That office observes the activities of the federal Government, receives complaints, investigates them, and so on. The office of the commissioner takes us back to the early 1970s and the existence of a Joint Standing Committee on Official Languages. There is a committee of parliamentarians from both Houses which works together with the commissioner and receives information on the activities of government departments, agencies, and Crown corporations, and focuses on the fact that there is still all too often justified criticisms of the extent to which official bilingualism is operative in those various departments, agencies, and Crown corporations.

In listening to testimony, participating in questioning and considering the evidence that exists on those various institutions of the federal Government over the last three years, I have learned an enormous amount about institutional inertia. Very often I have found myself joining with others in criticism of the departments, agencies, and corporations in dealing with the deputy ministers and others who come before us.

For example, I recognize the difficulties in any short period of time in changing the proportions of employees in a department. That is not something that can be done in a year or in a few years, although at the end of 15 or 20 years of a policy one might expect that significant progress would have been made. By now it is quite fair to focus on those areas where still there is little representation of the official language minority, whether it is French-Speaking Canadians in one part of Canada, for example Atlantic Canada, the Prairies, northern Ontario, or the whole Province of Ontario, or one may think of the English-speaking minority in the Province of Quebec and the representation of members of that minority in the Public Service in the Province of Quebec.

Whatever hesitation one might have on these proportions and representation in local offices, there seems to me to be no excuse for shortcomings in the way of signs. There is very little excuse in the area of materials made available. These days there is less and less reason to be unable to serve the public when they approach an office by telephone. Surely with the technology available to us, and with any type of determination at all, the federal Government should appear in the way of official bilingualism in English and French across the country. Yet at this very late point we still find shortcomings in these matters that need to be redressed.

When we come to the question of the proportions in Government and actual advance in service we find reason to be quite concerned. It seems to me that two things have happened since the present Government took office in 1984. The decision to reduce the Public Service has made it very difficult to achieve real progress in improving the representation of the minorities in the Public Service of Canada in the various places. The administrative consolidation that has taken place also seems to raise questions, although in this area I would not be quite as assertive.

The attempt to increase responsibilities under the Official Languages Act of managers at lower levels in Departments and to phase out offices at the tops of Departments which are responsible for this makes it more difficult to be sure that that will mean setbacks in the actual development and maintenance of official bilingualism. However, I think there are dangers because managers at lower levels have a great many responsibilities. It is fairly clear, from some appearances before the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages, that the attempts to advance the principle of official bilingualism have certainly collided with the constraints on employment, the need to cut back in numbers, and so on. Consequently there has been less advance in these areas than we would have wanted. Those realities in the Government concern members of the committee from all sides.

I want to recognize the activities and the present circumstances of members of the Conservative caucus, just as I recognized earlier the activities of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier in the days of the Liberal Government. In various ways we have all been trying to press for movement in institutions which can be so hard to move. We want a new Official Languages Act. We want the enactment of Bill C-72 to be moved forward and carried through as quickly as possible. I share the concern of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier who proposed the motion that it should be done.

In saying that, I want to make a couple of criticisms of the Bill which have not been given very much play by the press. The Minister of Justice for his part this morning in commenting on the motion suggested that the Bill had been received with universal approbation, although when one listened carefully to what he read it was clear that it was not quite perfect as a piece of legislation. As someone who attempted at the press conference on June 25, 1987 to focus a couple of critical comments on the Bill and found the press not picking them up, I should like to put them on record this morning and to provide the basis for saying that there needs to be some debate on the Bill, even though the principle is accepted by most of us and the Bill has been applauded in quarters all around. I recognize that most of the Bill is very good, but there are clauses which could do with strengthening, particularly Clause 21 and Clause 38.

Clause 21 of the Bill notes the following:

> Every federal institution has the duty to ensure that any member of the public can communicate with and obtain available services from its head or central office in either official language, and has the same duty with respect to any of its other offices or facilities.

(a) within the National Capital Region; or

(b) in Canada or elsewhere, where there is significant demand for communications with and services from that office or facility in that language.

The "significant demand" provision puts the onus on members of the public. It creates the need to demonstrate that the federal Government should be responding. It is a weaker provision than we ought to have from a Government which is as committed to official languages as the Minister of Justice suggested earlier. Certainly it is a particular point on which debate needs to be focused.

In committee we may well want to come up with different provisions to ensure that the federal Government will actually recognize that the demand is not often very large and that if we believe in the official languages and the Official Languages Act, we must meet that demand without putting the onus on the public to keep pressing in that way.

Another clause of which I made even more at the press conference is found in Part VI entitled "Participation of English-Speaking and French-Speaking Canadians". Clause 38 of the Bill reads:

(1) The Government of Canada is committed to ensuring that

(a) English-speaking Canadians and French-speaking Canadians, without regard to their ethnic origin or first language learned, have equal access to appointment and advancement in federal institutions; and

(b) the composition of the work-force of federal institutions tends to reflect the presence of both the official language communities of Canada, taking into account the characteristics of individual institutions, including their mandates, the public they serve and their location.

The second paragraph dealing with the reflection of the presence of both official languages and its other lines really open the door to those Departments that do not want to move very far.

In these two specific clauses there is good reason to debate the Bill critically in the House in the way of advancing official bilingualism. I think that is what members of all Parties want to do. I call on the Government to respond to the particular motion and to get the Bill before us at an early date so that we can do it.

After all, at this point we are fearing the end of this Parliament at least in terms of the business before it. Of course all of us anticipate an election. Parliament may end all too soon and this enactment could well not pass, given that we are into 1988, that it needs to go through all stages, that it needs to go to the other House, and so on. There is need to get on with it if the Government is as committed to the principle as the Minister of Justice told us this morning.

I just want to bring two points to his attention. One reason the Bill must be passed quickly, as he and other Hon. Members know, is that there are federal-provincial agreements that will be terminated in March of this year, which agreements cover post-secondary and minority language education. If the agreements are to be renewed, in my view they must reflect the new reality of Canada. They must reflect the Meech Lake spirit. They must reflect not only the spirit of Bill C-72 but the fact that it contains a little more than Meech Lake. It proposes to enshrine in legislation the fact that the federal Government must promote minorities.

I would hope that the Hon. Member will be able to respond to my question. Given the fact that indeed the agreements terminate on March 31 and that we would all hope that the agreements would reflect for the next five years, because they are five-year agreements, the spirit and generosity of Bill C-72 and Meech Lake, would he not agree that it would be imperative or absolutely essential that we pass the legislation as soon as possible so that those who negotiate the agreements will have that as a bottom line from which to operate? That is my first question.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. It certainly underscores the urgency of the matter.

One might assume and trust that the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) and others involved in the negotiation of these agreements would act in the spirit of something which the Government led in last spring in achieving the Constitutional Accord with the provincial Premiers, that that spirit would be respected, and that the agreements would be reworked in those terms.

However, in dealing with the Government let us ensure that we give the greatest encouragement to the Secretary of State to do that. Let us have the law as the law of the land. I agree with the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member will have an opportunity to continue his comments later today.

SENIOR CITIZENS—ANNOUNCED CHANGES TO NEW HORIZONS PROGRAM—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT RETAIN STATUS QUO

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has sent to all Hon. Members last fall a notification of changes regarding the New Horizons Program for senior citizens.

I fail to understand how the Minister can conclude his message by indicating that these measures are intended to better recognize the senior citizens as full members of society, when he brings about changes restricting and limiting the scope of this program.

Indeed, these changes will have a very negative impact upon senior citizens groups. Their opportunities for recreational activities are being restricted because each group will now be limited to only one payment every five years in this regard. New membership conditions now stipulate that 70 per cent of the members must be retired for a group to be eligible to this program. Funds towards repairs and renovations are also being limited since, for instance, in order to have its expenses reimbursed a group must own the building.

After taking all this away from senior citizens, Mr. Speaker, the Minister dares claim that these changes are intended to help them.

That is unacceptable and that is why I call on the Minister to reinstate the status quo in this issue.

WILDLIFE

WHOOPING CRANES—RESCUE FROM BRINK OF EXTINCTION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, in 1941 the migratory flock of whooping cranes had declined to an all-time low of 15. They were all but extinct.

Since that time co-operative efforts of the Canadian and American Government and private organizations have brought the species back from the brink of extinction to where they now number about 140. These rare birds breed in Wood Buffalo National Park near the town of Fort Smith, Northwest Territories. Last year 25 chicks were successfully hatched.

Probably no one deserves more credit for this success story than Mr. Ernie Kuyt, long time employee of the Canadian Wildlife Service of the Department of the Environment. Mr. Kuyt has devoted a lifetime to the study and care of the whooping crane.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

INCREASED DRUG PRICES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the Government has once again betrayed the trust of the Canadian people.

Between the time the Government introduced Bill C-22 to the House of Commons and the day the Bill was passed, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) said no less than eight times that drug prices would not increase. Now, less than three months later, we see that prices have drastically increased on 1,099 different drugs. The sad thing about the situation, besides the fact that our seniors and less fortunate Canadians have to pay this greed money out of the multinationals, is the fact that the Government will not do anything to accept responsibility for this affair.

The Mulroney Cabinet caters to the wishes of these big drug companies at the expense of average Canadians. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that come election time the Canadian population will not cater their vote to the Government. The Government argued that it would trust the big drug companies, but the drug companies are not good corporate citizens. They are all greed mongers out to rob Canadians, and they are getting lots of assistance from the Government, the Conservative Government of Brian Mulroney.

FISHERIES

OVERFISHING BY FRENCH FLEET OFF NEWFOUNDLAND SOUTH COAST

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the Government continues to show its weakness in failing to prevent the French from overfishing in the disputed 3PS fishing zone off the south coast of Newfoundland. The French have now announced that not only will they not negotiate on the boundary question or put the matter before a court like a civilized nation but they are going to send in their ships to catch four times their historic entitlement.

The most recent affront by the French is the snubbing of Governor General Jeanne Sauvé, now on an official visit to Paris, by the Premier of France and the French Minister of Fisheries. This repeats the action of last summer when the Lieutenant Governor of Newfoundland, the former Member of Parliament for St. John's East, was refused entry to St. Pierre for his annual visit.

The situation is very critical and the only solution the Government has offered is the same ineffective measures it took last year. When will the Government realize that the French are not taking the Government seriously? It is long past the point when the Government should have acted on behalf of the fishermen on the south coast of Newfoundland and demonstrated to the French that other bilateral issues of concern to the French will have to be re-examined in view of their belligerent action on the issue of fishing in this disputed zone.

WINTER OLYMPIC GAMES

TORCH'S PASSAGE THROUGH MOOSE JAW CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate and pay tribute to the people of the great constituency of Moose Jaw.

Last weekend, as the Olympic Torch made its way through our constituency on the way to Calgary, the response was overwhelming. The excitement and the splendour of the Olympic Games were demonstrated not only by the local residents who carried the torch but by the spectators who participated in the official ceremonies which took place in the City of Moose Jaw and the Towns of Davidson and Kenaston. The fact that the ceremonies in Davidson took place in the evening, and those at Kenaston early in the morning before daylight, added greatly to the occasion.

I would like to acknowledge the volunteers who organized these events in each community and regret that time does not allow me to mention each individual by name. As a result of the unselfish work of these people, residents of the constituency of Moose Jaw can indeed say with justifiable pride that we have "shared the flame". The feeling of patriotism and unity across Canada will be a lasting legacy of the Olympic torch run.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALL-NEWS TELEVISION CHANNEL—SUPPORT FOR GRANTING OF LICENCE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue speaking on the question of the CBC all-news channel. A decision was rendered by the CRTC some time ago awarding the CBC the licence for a continuous news channel on cable. I have been receiving a number of letters from people in my riding who would like to voice their opposition to any government interference in the decision taken by the CRTC.

I would like to read extracts from one letter written by Mr. Mark Stiles:

> My reasons are quite simple. First, the CBC application was far superior to Allarcom's. Practically, only the CBC could mount an effective service of this kind without importing large quantities of news produced by the American networks. Second, any tampering by Cabinet would make a mockery of the independence of the CRTC and like quasi-judicial bodies. There are no circumstances surrounding the CBC's application that would warrant Cabinet intervention.
> Let's give public broadcasting the opportunity to flourish in Canada. It is, I believe, critically important to our national identity.

I am getting all kinds of letters supporting the decision. I would hope that the Government would not meddle in, interfere with, or change that decision.

TAX REFORM

FARMERS' INCOME—RETENTION OF FIVE-YEAR BLOCK AVERAGING URGED

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, five-year block averaging was provided to farmers back in 1947 in recognition of the uncertain conditions affecting them—the vagaries of weather, climate, marketing conditions and commodity prices—all of which lie beyond their control and yet can result in wildly fluctuating incomes. Block averaging provides a mechanism whereby farmers can average their fluctuating incomes over a specified five-year period, thereby benefiting as much as possible from the graduated marginal tax rate structure.

The Standing Committee on Finance, after comprehensive hearings on Phase I of tax reform, stated that the unique aspects of the farming industry justify the retention of five-year block averaging. The committee further recommended that block averaging be retained for farmers.

According to Finance Department information, block averaging is not a significant expenditure item. I therefore urge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to reconsider his decision to eliminate block averaging for farmers.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

CRITICISM OF LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, this week parliamentarians will once more be engaged in dialogue with the Nation Consortium of Scientific and Educational Societies. They will state the obvious: there is no prospect of an economically sound Canada unless there is a real commitment to producing a highly skilled, well-educated population, and the development of policies and the commitment of resources through which Canadians can create the technologically advanced and innovative economy necessary to produce new jobs.

The time is long past in which catchy slogans, advisory committees and forums can substitute for real action. Three years after the Government came to office, we were no closer to the promised achievement of a rate of expenditure of 2.5 per cent of GNP for scientific research and development, nor have promises with respect to education and training been met. In fact, real expenditures by the Government for research, whether basic or industrial, have in real terms actually decreased.

Transfer payments for post-secondary education have been cut. Accessibility to colleges and universities has decreased. Training in community colleges has decreased. Real support for student summer employment has been cut back and support for industrial research and development has gone no farther than it was three years ago.

It is typical that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) recently and with ostentation announced $1.3 billion in new money spread over five years for research and development with the vaguest possible indication of how the money would be spent. Now we learn from the PMO that no specific decisions have yet been made.

I say to the Prime Minister that it is time for real commitment to the kind of support post-secondary education must have to stop its decay. It is time to state clearly his your Government's commitment to a rate of expenditure of 2.5 per cent of GNP for research and development by 1995. Only that will lift us beyond the confusion of policy heretofore obscured by forums and inflated rhetoric.

PENSIONS

PROTECTION AGAINST INFLATION

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday the Ontario Task Force on Inflation Protection for Employee Pension Plans released its recommendations with respect to pension indexing and surplus withdrawal regulations. The task force recommends that inflation protection be required using a minimum standard of 75 per cent of the increase in the cost of living minus 1 per cent. This was particularly pleasing for me since I developed this formula for the federal Government and it is already embedded in the federal Pension Benefits Standards Act.

The task force also recommends that employers be prohibited from withdrawing surpluses from pension plans unless they contractually index all pensions, past and future, to the minimum indexing standard, also as I suggested.

Hopefully both the Ontario Government and the federal Government will move quickly on these recommendations to co-ordinate their policies to ensure that Canadian workers receive appropriate inflation protection for their pension plans.

ROBERT BURNS DAY

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, today is Robert Burns Day, and all over the world Scotland's immortal bard is being remembered, by Scots and non-Scots alike. Scots remember him for many things, his poems and songs in particular, but many also remember him as one who eloquently lamented the power which Scotland's more densely populated southern neighbour came to have over Scotland's destiny as the political and economic powers-that-be in the south co-opted the Scottish ruling class and enlisted it in the course of integration. Those of us who are Canadians of Scottish heritage are now to be placed in double jeopardy by the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: Canada, like Scotland, is to be given away without a fight, for American gold, instead of English gold as Burns put it. The war of 1812 was won, only to be lost in the negotiations of 1987. Or, as Burns put it:

What force or guile could not subdue,
Thro' many warlike ages,
Is wrought now by a coward few,
For hireling traitor's wages.
The English steel we could disdain,
Secure in valour's station;
But English gold has been our bane—
Such a parcel of rogues in a nation!
But pith and power, till my last hour,
I'll mak this declaration;
We're bought and sold for English gold—
Such a parcel of rogues in a nation!

Mr. Speaker: Burns also said:

O wad some Power the giftie gie us,
To see oursels as ithers see us!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

TAMIL REFUGEE CLAIMANT—ALLEGATION CONTAINED IN NEWSPAPER REPORT

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): What is going on, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Blaikie: Another Englishman.

Mr. Redway: And I do not mean Robert Burns. First it is the Canadian Security Intelligence Service goofing up the granting of landed immigrant status to a terrorist. Now The Globe and Mail reports that the RCMP has been sitting for two months on a request to investigate a refugee claimant apparently wanted by West Germany for violating arms laws. All of this does not lend much credibility to the claim of CSIS and the RCMP that they are still actively and vigorously pursuing the investigation of the two and a half year old Air-India crash.

Let us get on top of these terrorists. If this latest story is not true, I hope The Globe and Mail will apologize. However, if it is true, it is time for the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) to shake up both CSIS and the RCMP again. While he is at it, he should order a public inquiry into the CSIS and RCMP investigation of the Air-India crash.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—NEGOTIATOR'S REMUNERATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, you will probably recall that during the last year and a half I have criticized the Government for its free trade initiative. I have even gone so far as to say that no Canadian would benefit from free trade. Today I take that back. I apologize, because one Canadian has made this a very enriching experience. As a matter of fact, the media are stating that since November 8, 1985, Canada's free trade negotiator, Mr. Simon Reisman, will probably generate something in the order of $500,000. That is enough to make some of the Tory backbenchers wish that they were civil servants or, even better, trade negotiators eating chicken in Washington.

• (1415)

Five hundred thousand dollars is a lot more than my constituents make and is certainly a lot more than they will make after this free trade deal, given the negative effects it will have on my constituency. No matter how you look at it, $500,000 is not bad for taking potshots at The Toronto Star, even if you have to put up with the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney).

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—MEDIA COVERAGE OF DISSENTERS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, last Friday the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) briefly visited my riding as part of a swing through eastern Ontario. Some 500 men and women warmly greeted him and Mrs. Mulroney at CFB Trenton, as did over half of the 1,100 employees at Northern Telecom, and 300 of my friends at a reception in Belleville.

At the Northern Telecom plant four United Auto Worker members displayed anti-free trade T-shirts, which is certainly their right. Why is it, however, that the press, including Global TV, CTV, CBC, The Globe and Mail, the Belleville Intelligencer, and others gave coverage to these few dissenters out of all proportion to the activities of the day?

What warped sense of reporting allows these four, who stood silently until Mrs. Mulroney engaged one in conversation, to gain top level recognition over hundreds and hundreds of well-wishers, at least one of whom travelled thousands of kilometres just to be present?

Is there no fairness left at all in the press today? Is there no limit to their desire to downplay the excellent reception being enjoyed by the Prime Minister throughout Canada?

CANADA LANDS COMPANY

TRANSACTIONS INVOLVING GOVERNMENT SUPPORTERS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel, the mess that will not go away. First we had Gervais Desroches, friend of the Minister of Public Works, benefiting from a $13 million industrial park deal which he and others bought for $140,000. Then there was the Gérard Poirier case who says he was coerced into selling his farm to Mario Taddeo and was told to keep his mouth shut by the Member of Parliament for Argenteuil—Papineau. Third, a Tory organizer who owned a bar got a $42,000 contract for supervising vacant land. Now we have the overwhelming evidence of Tories making a killing out of land sales and one Tory alone making $252,000 in 24 hours.

Why did the Prime Minister allow this kind of thing to happen? Why does he permit this kind of outrageous waste of taxpayers' money to continue?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, let us put this all in perspective.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McInnes: In 1969 the then Government expropriated 90,000 acres of land, 5,000 acres of which are now being used for the Mirabel Airport. They dispossessed 10,000 people who occupied and owned those lands. They spent $225 million from 1969 to 1984 and all they left was a social scar.

QUERY WHEN PRIME MINISTER WILL DEMAND MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister just heard the reply of his Minister of Public Works. He knows also that the same minister said, as recorded on page 11808 of the official report of the Debates, December 15, 1987, that the taxpayers "got value for the money".

Considering what we know today, Mr. Speaker, that $100 million have been wasted, $100 million have been lost, that a Conservative made $252 000 in 24 hours, is it not time to take that Minister and send him back to the back benches? When will the Prime Minister demand the resignation of the Minister of Public Works?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, since 1984 we have been involved in a salvage operation. We have put in place a procedure to allow those people who had their lands expropriated unfairly to purchase their lands back on a fair and equitable basis. The procedures put in place were very much the same as those put in place by the previous Government, although we improved the justice, morality, and economics of the situation.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, it has been an enriching experience for some, that is quite true.

LAND SALE PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. The former Minister of Public Works, the Member for Joliette, said in an interview that the Prime Minister personally authorized him to overrule Treasury Board and Public Works staff to expedite phase 2 of the land sale program at Mirabel. Why did the Prime Minister overrule experts for political considerations? Will he now do the right thing and call a Royal Commission of Inquiry into the management, into the disposition of properties and the operations of the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel? If he does not want to do that, I will have to ask him what he has to hide.

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Member to produce proof that any member of that community received the kind of treatment that is not available to any other member of the community. Every transaction has received Treasury Board approval and every transaction over $70,000 has been audited and approved by the Comptroller General of Canada.

QUERY WHEN PRIME MINISTER TOOK COGNIZANCE OF RESULTS OF ELECTION COMMISSIONER'S INQUIRY INTO MATTER CONCERNING MEMBER FOR FRONTENAC

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I should like, first of all, to point out to the Prime Minister that last week, his Deputy Prime Minister has stonewalled and systematically refused to shed some light on the circumstances concerning the reinstatement in Cabinet of the Minister of Energy,Mines and Resources. Now that the Prime Minister is back in the House, he could perhaps tell us when he got acquainted with the conclusions of the investigation made by the Commissioner of Elections. When did he see the letter received by the Minister of Energy,Mines and Resources? And when did the latter discuss with him the contents of the letter,at which time they both concluded that he would be reinstated?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks when I learned about the decision. I was advised by the secretary of the Cabinet on November 28, following the publication of a statement issued by the Commissioner of Canada Elections, Mr. Joseph Gorman, on November 28 as follows:

"I have reviewed the results of the investigation which I received at 1300 hours on Thursday, November 21, 1985 as well as the recommendations of independent counsel which I received at 2030 hours on November 26, 1985 and I have decided that no charges will be laid against the Honourable Marcel Masse or his official agent, Jean Morissette."

The official responsible to Parliament issued a decision which was conveyed to me and we acted accordingly.

QUERY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER HAS SEEN CERTAIN PORTION OF FILE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister has only taken a glance at those documents. If he had read them thoroughly, he would have seen that the Election Commissioner was saying:

"Proof in the dossier demonstrates that you participated in an infraction against Section 62 of the Elections Act."

I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has also read that part of the file and whether he thinks he has honorably fulfilled his responsibilities when reinstating in Cabinet a minister who had participated in an infraction, according to the same Commissionner who had conducted the investigation.

The Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, it is not up to the Commissioner to decide whether a Member of Parliament is guilty or not. In our system, it is up to the courts to decide. According to the law, the officer of Parliament has the obligation to investigate and to decide whether charges are going to be laid or are not going to be laid against a Member of Parliament suspected of having committed an infraction against the Canadian Elections Act. Therefore, the officer responsible, Mr. Gorman, has dutifully conducted an investigation. He has investigated into the Minister's behaviour and has rendered a public decision on November 28, 1985, saying:

"And I have decided that no charges are to be laid against the Hon. Marcel Masse."

That was his decision. That is the decision he has rendered. Accordingly, I have decided to invite the minister, the Hon. Mr. Masse, to come back to the federal Cabinet. And I was proud to do so at the time and I still am today.

• (1425)

QUERY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER WAS AWARE OF LETTER'S TENOR AT TIME OF REINSTATEMENT IN CABINET OF MEMBER FOR FRONTENAC

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Commissioner Gorman wrote in the same letter that the Member for Frontenac had participated in the breaking of the Elections Act. My question to the Prime Minister is very simple: When he reinstated the Member as a Minister on November 29, was he aware of that letter's content?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Gorman is an officer of Parliament. His duties are described in the Act. He has full discretionary power with regard to investigations and complaints. Having inquired on November 28, I was advised by the Secretary of the Cabinet of the investigator's decision not to lay charges against the Hon. Marcel Masse. In view of that decision obviously positive in which case fortunately the presumption of innocence is clearly established on behalf of all Canadians and all members of this House, and considering also that the Minister had decided to step aside as a Minister of the Crown during the inquiry, which is much to his credit and in keeping with the finest British parliamentary traditions I decided, in view of the report issued by the Commissioner, to invite Mr. Masse to rejoin Cabinet of Canada. I feel I acted consistently and in all fairness.

MINISTER'S REAPPOINTMENT TO CABINET

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the House will have noted that the Prime Minister did not answer a very direct question. I want to ask him again.

When the Commissioner wrote the Hon. Member for Hamilton East and the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood at the same time he made absolutely no reference to any possible infraction of the law. To the contrary, he made it quite clear that there had been no infraction, in his judgment, by either of these Members. In contrast, he said to the Hon. Member for Frontenac that in his judgment there was on his part a participation in the breaking of a law.

When the Prime Minister asked the Hon. Member for Frontenac to rejoin Cabinet did he ask him if there was any reason that he had to believe that would make him illegible for membership in Cabinet at that time? Did he receive any suggestion from the Hon. Member for Frontenac that he had obtained, the kind of information that he had by then in fact obtained to the effect that he had violated the law?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The Member for Frontenac, when he was advised that an inquiry might be initiated in respect of the election law, stepped aside as a Minister of the Crown to ensure that the inquiry could be conducted in complete freedom and impartiality. I think that all Members of the House would agree that that is very much to his credit and in keeping with the finest parliamentary traditions. This was in September of 1985.

On November 28, 1985, the Commissioner of Canada Elections, Joseph Gorman, issued a statement, having interrogated witnesses, I presume, and analysed the evidence, in which he stated, "I have decided that no charges will be laid against the Hon. Marcel Masse". It is his responsibility and his responsibility alone either to bring charges or not to lay charges. Having analysed the evidence, he decided not to lay charges, in which case the presumption of innocence is clearly established on behalf of all Canadians, and I presume all Members of Parliament.

When this information was conveyed to me by the Secretary of the Cabinet, I instructed the Secretary of the Cabinet to arrange for Mr. Masse to be reinvited to join the Cabinet of Canada, which took place. This seems to me consistent with all parliamentary traditions that my hon. friend would want me to uphold.

PROSECUTION OF MINISTER'S SUPPORTERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, quite the contrary. I believe the Prime Minister of Canada has a responsibility to assure that the highest standards of moral rectitude are maintained by the Cabinet of Canada. That is the point.

Since the Prime Minister did not answer either the first or the second question, I wish to ask him the third question. Considering that there are three other ordinary citizens, who were not Ministers of the Crown, in the same constituency as the Minister who not only had charges laid against them for infraction, but were convicted, and the Minister who, according to the Commissioner, violated the Act, did not even have charges laid against him, does the Prime Minister accept this as an acceptable standard of justice, one standard for the ordinary people of Canada and another standard for a Minister of the Crown? Is that the Government's view?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think upon reflection my hon. friend will regret that prefatory remark which is fundamentally unfair in respect of a colleague in the House of Commons, and which violates very strongly the presumption of innocence.

My hon. friend was a Member of the House of Commons—I was not, but he was—when this legislation was created in respect of the Canada Elections Act and the interrogation capacity that flowed therefrom, including the Office of Commissioner. The Commissioner was made an officer of Parliament to ensure his complete independence from the Government and from other Members of Parliament. His responsibility is to interrogate, as he did, allegations against, as I understand it, the Member for Hamilton East, and the Member for Broadview—Greenwood of the NDP. He pursued these investigations, and he concluded that charges ought not to be laid. He decided that charges should be laid against other people in the exercise of his independent judgment as a servant of Parliament. I accept the independence of the officer of Parliament.

If my hon. friend has reason to disagree with the integrity or the independence of an officer of Parliament, then perhaps he should call him before the Bar of the House and deal with that particular officer of Parliament. I have no reason to believe that the officer acted in anything other than an objective and fair manner.

REINSTATEMENT OF MINISTER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. The fact is that the Minister, in the full knowledge that he participated in an infraction of the Canada Elections Act, as stated by the Elections Commissioner, sat by silently while two of his workers were convicted in court on the issue of the infractions in which he participated.

I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether he thinks it is suitable for his office to appoint as a Minister of the Crown, a Minister who has been shown to have sat by silently while two of his own workers went to court and were convicted, who sat by silently and said nothing publicly about an infraction that he knew had been cited by the Elections Commissioner in a secret letter to him in November, 1985?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Member suggests, and I think I am quoting her accurately, that the Minister "participated in an infraction". The Minister did no such thing. Under British common law, only a court is capable of making that adjudication. Pending a conviction everyone is entitled to the benefit of the doubt and the presumption of innocence.

The Member states that the Minister "participated in an infraction", thereby suggesting that the Minister violated the law. Someone is entitled to his or her opinion on the conduct of all of us. But no one, except the court system, is entitled to say, having heard the evidence, that a Member of Parliament is or is not guilty. Until such time as a court in Canada makes that adjudication, every Canadian citizen, including Members of Parliament, is presumed to be innocent.

STANDARD OF ETHICS APPLICABLE TO MINISTERS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the words are not those of the Member for Hamilton East, but those of the Elections Commissioner, an officer of the Crown, who has stated explicitly that the Minister participated in the violation of subsection 62.6 of the Canada Elections Act. I would like to remind the Prime Minister that, if the Minister had been charged and found guilty, he could have been forced to give up his seat in Parliament. This is not a minor administrative problem. We are talking about a violation which has already brought two members of the Minister's own group before the courts. Now that the Prime Minister is aware of the facts that the Minister kept hidden for two years, namely that he himself was a party to the same offences as his associates who were brought before the courts, does he believe that the Minister should remain in the cabinet? Is that the level or the standards which apply to ministers of the Crown in the Mulroney Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to see the senior members of the Liberal Party remain silent in view of extraordinary slanders made by the Hon. Member. What a distortion of the legal system and process! "If he was guilty, if he had done such and such a thing." The fact is that only the courts can come to such a conclusion. The Hon. Member said that the Elections Commissioner is an officer of the Crown. He is not. He is an officer of Parliament with discretionary and completely independent powers. The Commissioner had the responsibility to make a value judgment based on facts. He concluded that there were no grounds to file a complaint against the Minister. In the same circumstances and quite democratically, he also concluded that there were no grounds to lay charges against the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. In both cases, the Hon. Members were properly given the benefit of the doubt. This is the basic presumption on which Canada operates, and I am extremely surprised to see that the Hon. Member disagrees with this most basic presumption of our legal system.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Right Hon. Prime Minister, recognizing that he did not respond to the questions put by my Hon. Leader. He is aware that the Commissioner of Canada Elections wrote a confidential letter which says the following: "Even though the evidence demonstrates that you"—that is the Hon. Member for Frontenac—"took part in an infraction of Section 62(6) of the Canada Elections Act". In other words, in the letter of which the Prime Minister is now aware the Commissioner indicates—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Read it all.

Mr. Mulroney: Read.

Mr. Riis: All right. "By having Lavalin Incorporated pay the campaign expenses of $2,235 for the benefit of Marthe Lefebvre"—

Mr. Mulroney: Read, read.

Mr. Riis: The point is—

Some Hon. Members: Read more.

Mr. Riis: My question to the Prime Minister is that the Commissioner of Elections—

Some Hon. Members: Read the entire letter.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member.

Mr. Riis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Right Hon. Prime Minister, since the Prime Minister is now aware that the Commissioner of Canada Elections indicated that the Minister in question actually did commit an infraction of the Act—there is no question; he was not ambivalent about it; he said that there was an infraction—does the Prime Minister, now that he is aware of this, believe that it is appropriate to have in his Cabinet as a Minister of the Crown someone that the Commissioner of Elections has indicated did commit an infraction?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I may have an opinion about the conduct of my hon. friend and vice versa but, fortunately I suppose for all of us in society, it is not up to individuals to make adjudications in respect of guilt or innocence. It is up to the independent judiciary that is very much a part of our citizenship. The responsibility of an officer—

Ms. Copps: Send it to court.

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Member says: "Send it to court". The Commissioner, in the exercise of his discretion, decided not to send it to court. That is precisely the point. He decided not to send it to court because—

Mr. Broadbent: Why?

Mr. Mulroney: —in the exercise of his judgment he concluded that it ought not to go to court. He exercised his judgment and decided that it ought not to be brought to court.

If my hon. friend and the Leader of the NDP, who is now counselling with his House Leader, are offended by the notion of the presumption of innocence or the independence of an officer of Parliament, perhaps they can say so. As far as I am concerned this same officer wrote—and I hope my hon. friend listens carefully— rendered a decision in which he said, and this is Mr. Gorman, "I have decided that no charges will be laid against the Hon. Marcel Masse". That is his decision.

Surely my hon. friend will agree, in light of that decision, that all the presumptions of innocence, all the presumptions of innocence in this country, ought to flow to everyone, including Members of Parliament.

RETENTION OF MINISTER IN CABINET

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In terms of what Commissioner Gorman advised the Prime Minister, we can set that aside for discussion at another time.

It is now clearly evident. The Prime Minister now has the appropriate letter, presumably that the Minister has provided him, where it says that the evidence put before the Commissioner indicated that an infraction of the law had taken place, that the Minister had broken the law, as had a number of his associates during his campaign. They were charged, charges were laid, including the Lavalin company. My question to the Prime Minister has nothing to do with Mr. Gorman or his advice.

Now that the Prime Minister knows that a Minister of his Cabinet in fact did commit a violation, does he feel that it is appropriate for that Member to sit in Cabinet until the whole matter is aired?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend is really showing a pretty fundamental disregard of the basics that have to govern conduct, both in the House and in respect of the rights of all Canadian citizens regarding litigation of any kind.

My hon. friend says that the infraction of law was concluded by Mr. Gorman. Mr. Gorman's responsibility, if he believes that there was an infraction, is to lay charges.

Mr. Broadbent: Yes.

Mr. Mulroney: The fact that he did not lay charges—

Mr. Broadbent: Why?

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend says "why". I presume that it is because of the independence of an officer of Parliament. Surely he should not be asking the questions of me. He should be asking the questions of the independent officer of Parliament who chose not to lay charges.

Surely if I asked the Commissioner, thereby violating his independence, the Leader of the NDP would be the first one to attack me for intruding on the independence of an officer of Parliament.

Make up your minds. You either agree with the presumption of innocence or you don't, and if you have got a problem with Mr. Gorman's decision, ask Mr. Gorman.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CENTRAL AMERICA—PEACEKEEPING PROCESS—POSSIBLE CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. According to news reports Canada's peacekeeping assistance is desired in Central America. Has the Government received a formal request, supported by all five Governments in the region, for Canadian peacekeeping personnel? If so, for what period of time is Canada prepared to commit such personnel?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have not received such a formal request. I had the opportunity last week to meet, at their invitation, with the five Ambassadors or heads of mission of the Central American countries involved in the Arias peace plan. I indicated to them again, as I had last year during my visit to Central America, that Canada is interested in doing what we can to move forward the peace process in that region, and that we would certainly be prepared, if requested, to help in the design of a peacekeeping arrangement that might advance that process.

That is where the matter stands as of today.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Last week Canadians were treated to an alarming degree of government incompetence in the awarding of landed immigrant status to a convicted terrorist. Today another report in The Globe and Mail reveals that both RCMP and Immigration failed to act on another case involving a Tamil refugee living in our country who is wanted by the West German police and Interpol on charges of "preparing an explosive attack".

Therefore I would like to ask a question of the Minister. Given that a warrant for his arrest was issued by West Germany in 1986, and that Immigration officials discovered this fact through an Interpol alert last fall, at which time they alerted the RCMP, can the Minister explain to the House why, during a period of almost six months, the Government failed to take any meaningful action and why the Government did not even bother to contact and question the individual in order to respond to Interpol and to ensure that there was no breach of Canadian security?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to clarify the story to which the Hon. Member is referring.

I can advise the Hon. Member that indeed the West Germans did contact the RCMP in the fall of 1987. We did give them the information which they requested, and they have not requested anything further of us since that time.

I can also advise the Hon. Member that at the time the West Germans did contact us they told us that there was a warrant out wishing his presence in Germany as a witness only. There were no charges whatsoever laid against him.

I can further advise the Hon. Member that as of this past Friday that warrant had been withdrawn, and there is absolutely nothing outstanding against this gentleman at this time.

GOVERNMENT ACTIONS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I think Canadians, and myself, are reassured to learn of that information. However, I should like to ask a question of the Minister.

If in fact Interpol requested assistance of our Government, if there were an arrest order by the West German Government, one would have thought that surely it would have been incumbent upon the Government at least to contact and question the individual in order to respond adequately and expeditiously. That was not done.

Why did the Government have to wait until last evening upon interviewing the individual? That only came after the individual volunteered information to the Government, as opposed to the Government of Canada trying to solicit the necessary information six months ago to make a determination that no Canadian lives were in danger because of the possibilities as communicated by Interpol then. I ask him to compare that with what he knows now.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, that is simply not accurate.

At the time the gentleman in question first arrived in Canada which was the summer, 1986, we inquired of the West German authorities if they had any charges or information on him and we were advised by them that they did not. When they requested information on him in the fall, 1987, we gave it immediately and expeditiously. They requested nothing further from us.

I can tell you that as of today, Mr. Speaker, there are no warrants outstanding against this gentleman. In any event he was only wanted as a witness, never as a participant in any crime.

Oral Questions

SALE OF EXPROPRIATED MIRABEL LANDS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. It has to do with Canada Lands Mirabel Limited. We have learned that expropriated land was resold at 30 per cent below market value against the advice of Public Works officials. In an article by Claude Arpin in The Montreal Gazette on Saturday, the former Public Works Minister is quoted as saying:

> I went to see Brian Mulroney, and in 30 minutes I convinced him to get those fuddie duddies off my back so I could deal with this problem in my own way.

Does the Prime Minister recall that question? Will he tell this House why he permitted the former Minister of Public Works to do it his way?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, we have to start with the knowledge that tremendous injustice was done to the people of that particular area. The price to be paid by the former owners or the tenants was the level established in 1982-84, even though they may have purchased the property in 1985, 1986 or 1987. This was to allow every single member of that community to participate and purchase at exactly the same level. The same procedures were followed and they have all been reviewed. Everything over $70,000 has been approved by the Comptroller General of Canada.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. I want to give him an opportunity to clear up the confusion which surrounds this very serious matter.

Did the Prime Minister get the fuddy-duddies off the former Minister's back so he could appoint his cousin to sell off Mirabel lands 30 per cent below market value to Tory supporters? That is the question, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, two out of every three people in that particular constituency happened to vote Tory in the last election. They did so for a very good reason, because of the tremendous injustice perpetrated by the previous Government. The Prime Minister said to the former Minister of Public Works: "Install a system of justice. They have been unfairly treated. That is the procedure I want you to follow".

MIRABEL ISSUE—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF SALE OF PROPERTIES AND LOTS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister, and it is also related to the Mirabel transactions.

It was reported that more than 1,000 properties and some 60,000 acres of land were sold at close to 30 percent below market value. Why did the Government allow the sale of those lots at 30 percent below market value? Who made those decisions—

Mr. La Salle: You do not know the case! You do not know anything about that! I could tell you something about it.

Mr. Robichaud: Do not get excited, Roch! Who made those decisions? Who determined the value of those properties—

Mr. La Salle: It's dreadful!

Mr. Robichaud: —especially the lands which were sold to supporters of the Party?

Mr. La Salle: It's dreadful! I would be ashamed to talk about Mirabel if I were a Liberal!

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, let me refresh the Hon. Member's memory. It was the previous Government which perpetrated this chaotic situation.

Mr. La Salle: Right.

Mr. McInnes: It was an injustice to the people of the area. The Member for Joliette who was the Minister at the time endeavoured to commence and, in fact, completed a system which has brought equity to all of the people of that particular area.

INQUIRY WHETHER THERE WILL BE A PHASE THREE IN MIRABEL MATTER

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmoreland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, we have to ask questions of Ministers even if it irritates them. Are we going to see a third phase soon, that is the sale of some 60 farms and about 12,000 acres of land? Will this property be sold at market value or will it be given away to friends at special prices? How long will the Minister allow such a ridiculous behaviour in this matter?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to see that the Liberals who fathered the great Mirabel scandal—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mulroney: —where individuals, ordinary citizens and farmers were ridiculed and treated with contempt by the Liberal government.

Mr. La Salle: Shame!

Mr. Mulroney: When the Conservative governement was elected, the Hon. Member for Joliette, who was then Minister of Public Works, was instructed by Cabinet to implement a program that will bring justice to the taxpayers of Mirabel.

Mr. La Salle: Apologize!

Mr. Mulroney: Finally, after the Liberal terror, there is justice from the Conservatives—

Mr. La Salle: Right on!

Mr. Mulroney: —and now the Liberals dare raise this matter. The people of Mirabel and Saint-Hyacinthe will remember you at the next election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY TAX DEDUCTIONS—REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE INVESTIGATION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Elections and Privileges.

The Member is aware that NDP supporters are receiving federal tax deductions contrary to the spirit of the present legislation, by washing their contributions to municipal candidates through the federal New Democratic Party.

Will the chairman undertake to have his committee investigate this NDP tax rip-off? Will he also undertake to determine how it is possible for the NDP to condone this sort of activity by calling before the committee, as a witness, the Hon. Member for Oshawa?

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, may I say that the Hon. Member for York East has had a long, distinguished career as a municipal politician.

I am sure that all individual Members in this House, including New Democrats, would like to see this item referred to the Standing Committee. I ask the Hon. Member to send his request in writing to the striking committee which will be pleased to review it.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

DRUG PRICE INCREASES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): My question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who is also responsible, supposedly, for consumers.

We have learned that the price of generic labelled drugs has dropped about 1 per cent in Manitoba while prices of many brand name drugs have increased over 100 per cent in some cases.

Will the Minister explain, especially to four million Canadians who have no drug plan at all, why his friends, the multinational corporations, are being so greedy? Will he also explain to consumers why he is doing nothing as Minister for Consumer Affairs to stop this price rip-off?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will know or should know, if she were following the debate on Bill C-22, there was nothing in Bill C-22 which could in any way shape or form contribute to an increase in the price of existing drugs. Even the most severest critics of Bill C-22 acknowledge that fact.

She may also be aware that, for example, in 1983 the CPI went up 5.8 per cent while the price of drugs went up 12.8 per cent. In 1987 the price of drugs went up 8.9 per cent while the CPI went up only 4.4 per cent.

The Member will also be aware that Bill C-22 provided for the creation of a Patent Medicine Price Review Board which has the power to keep the price increases of drugs below the cost of living unless there is justification not to. In other words, it will exercise a downward pressure on prices. The reason the Board is not in place and working now is because of the delaying tactics of her colleagues and friends in the Liberal Party. If she wants to blame someone for current price increases, she should blame her colleagues sitting around her.

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF DRUG PRICES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister should also explain why the price of generic drugs has gone down. Perhaps he could explain that to the Canadian people.

I would also like to remind the Minister that the Bill is not yet in place. However, the Drug Prices Review Board was ready go ahead in December. Under this new Act it will have a mandate to look at drug prices over the past five years, as I understand it.

Will the Minister ask this board to meet immediately to review drug prices and recommend action to protect consumers and the provinces whose health systems are being completely eroded by the very high price of prescription drugs?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I find it incredible that I am now hearing representations made by that Party which did everything it possibly could to prevent the creation of the Drug Prices Review Board. The Hon. Member is now asking why we did not have it in operation yesterday. This is just absurd.

The Hon. Member should also talk to the former Health Minister of the Province of Manitoba who said to some researchers at the St. Boniface Hospital in Winnipeg that Bill C-22 was a good Bill but they had to oppose it because it was too much of a political opportunity. I think we have some political opportunism here in the House now.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question in Question Period.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question too is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He will know that senior citizens, the poor, and working-class Canadians are appalled at the gouging that is taking place at the hands of multinational corporations. They are even more appalled by this in view of the Minister's statement of November 18, 1986, when he said that the price of drugs "will not increase by one cent, not those now on the market, not those coming onto the market".

What is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs prepared to do today, not next week, next month or next year, to protect Canadian consumers from an unprecedented rip-off by the multinational corporations? What will he do?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would have hoped that the Hon. Member might have had the integrity to read the entire quote in its context. I said there was nothing in Bill C-22 that would cause the price of existing drugs to go up by one penny. That fact was even acknowledged by the most severe critics of Bill C-22 and the Hon. Member knows that. I wish he would stop misrepresenting my position in that regard.

Second and most important, Bill C-22 provides for the first time at the federal level an agency that looks at the price of all drugs, not only those that have generic competitors, and will be exercising a downward pressure. It is not in existence today or fully operational because of the delays of the Hon. Member and his colleagues in the other place. As I said the other day, if he wants to find a villain, he should look in the mirror.

REQUEST THAT PRICE INCREASES BE ROLLED BACK

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. It is not I who have raised the issue of integrity, it is this Minister. It is not only an issue of the high cost of prescription drugs, it is an issue for the Prime Minister and the Government about the integrity of the Government and how it keeps it commitment—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, in view of the clear, unequivocal commitments the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs made to the House and Canadians that there will be no increases in the cost of prescription drugs, will he rise in his place today and give a clear undertaking to those consumers, senior citizens and the poor, that he will roll back those prices and reimburse Canadian consumers? Will he do the honourable thing?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what one can do to prevent members of the Opposition from making those patently false statements the Hon. Member has just made. It was an absolutely false statement.

Perhaps the Hon. Member should also be a bit more responsible and cease trying to invoke the elderly and the poor, and recognize that in Canada all senior citizens are covered by drug plans. In Canada, no one goes without drugs for lack of money. Everyone on welfare receives drugs.

Finally, the Hon. Member should acknowledge that under Bill C-22 there is, for the first time at the federal level, an agency looking at the price of drugs and exercising a downward pressure. He should be applauding the Government, not invoking these false, phoney accusations of which he has just been guilty.

Mr. Dingwall: Supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: I know the Hon. Member would want to pursue this matter, but the time for Question Period has expired.

PRIVILEGE

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT—ACTIONS OF FORMER COMMISSIONER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a Question of Privilege arising out of the actions of the former Commissioner of Canada Elections, Mr. John Gorman, in a decision he took during the investigation into the breaches of the Canada Elections Act of the Hon. Member for Frontenac (Mr. Masse) and several of his associates during the last federal election campaign.

I would like to begin by reviewing the mandate of the Commissioner of the Canada Elections as laid out in Section 70(3) of the Canada Elections Act which states as follows:

> The Chief Electoral Officer shall appoint a Commissioner of Canada Elections—

Mr. Speaker: I certainly have every intention of hearing the Hon. Member, but before the Hon. Member gets too deeply into his argument could he assist the Chair by setting out exactly what he feels is his point of privilege? That, I think, would give the Chair some assistance. If he could do that, then the Chair might be in a more comfortable position. At the moment, I am having a bit of difficulty understanding exactly where the argument may be leading.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the intervention and I will do just as you have requested. I believe that there is a case of privilege in that the actions of Mr. Gorman have diminished the public's respect for the House of Commons and for Members of Parliament. The actions he took led to a view which would be that there are two standards of justice in Canada, one that applies to cabinet Ministers and the other that applies to every other ordinary Canadian citizen. For that reason, I believe that I do have a prima facie of privilege and would like to present support for my case. By and large, that is the essence of the question of privilege.

As I said earlier, I would like to begin by very briefly suggesting that the appropriate section of the Canada Elections Act states the following:

> The Chief Electoral Officer shall appoint a Commissioner of Canada Elections—whose duties, under the general supervision of the Chief Electoral Officer, shall be to ensure that the provisions of this Act are complied with and enforced.

In the case of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Commissioner of Canada Elections inquired into the allegations of the Elections Act violations as they were brought to his attention and did in fact find that violations had occurred.

You are likely aware, Mr. Speaker, that after the investigation took place, the former Commissioner, Mr. Gorman, caused charges to be laid against three officials and one company involved in the Minister's election campaign. Three individuals were charged in Thetford Mines, Quebec. Mr. John Vincent, the campaign organizer, was charged with five offences under Section 62(6) of the Canada Elections Act. As well, Gilles Remillard, the campaign auditor, was charged with violating Section 62(6) of the Canada Elections Act and Section 115 of the Criminal Code. Marthe Lefebvre, a campaign worker, was charged with one violation of Section 62(6)—

Mr. Speaker: Everything the Hon. Member is presenting may well indeed be factual, but I am having difficulty ascertaining how that particular information touches on a question of privilege which, after all, as we define it, means that something has been done which is affecting the ability of a Member or Members to carry on their duties.

I may be having difficulty accepting a position that may be more clear to others than it is to me. I would ask the Hon. Member to come back to the point of how it has affected himself or any other Hon. Member.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your intervention.

There are precedents which I could quote where there was found to be a prima facie case of contempt of Parliament. As Members of Parliament who must face our constituents virtually every day, we have an obligation to take whatever steps are necessary to maintain respect for Parlament and the work done by parliamentarians. This must be done in the eyes of the public and we must make that effort wherever and whenever possible. I believe that the decision taken by Mr. Gorman sends a very clear message to the people of Canada in that it casts a pall over all Members of Parliament and their activities during an election campaign.

If there was a message it was that, yes, the commissioner indicated in a confidential letter, which has now become public and therefore I feel comfortable in quoting from it, to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that even though the evidence demonstrates that the Minister took part in an infraction of Section 62(6) of the Canada Elections Act, in his, Mr. Gorman's judgment, a prosecution against the Minister would not be in the public interest or in the interests of justice.

What I am suggesting is that that says to the people of Canada that here is an individual whose job it is to make recommendations to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) but who says, in spite of the fact that he suggested charges be laid against a number of individuals in the Minister's campaign as well as a corporation, it was not appropriate to charge the Minister who was obviously involved in his own campaign. My contention is that that appears to be a two-tiered system of justice.

While the commissioner felt it quite appropriate to recommend charges be laid against a number of ordinary Canadians, when it came to the Minister he felt it was in the public interest and in the interest of justice to not lay charges. I believe that reflects on all Members of Parliament. It appears that certain Members, those in the Cabinet, are not subject to the same rules and regulations that others would be.

I can, if you like, point out a whole number of precedents for a prima facie case of privilege being cited against individuals who are not in this House. Of course Mr. Gorman is not in this House. I could refer to the case, in May 7, 1976, when a prima facie case was found against a former Member of this place who had alleged that Members of Parliament took bribes. Clearly that was an instance of contempt of this House and, as in this case, had the effect of diminishing respect for the House of Commons.

That is my point. I believe the respect Canadians hold for Parliament and its elected Members has been affected and set in some disrepute as a result of the decision by Mr. Gorman. If you were to examine those actions by Mr. Gorman in light of the precedent I have just referred to and other similar ones, you would clearly find a prima facie case of contempt of Parliament has taken place.

It might be useful to remind ourselves of the wide scope permitted in allegations of this sort. I refer you to the 19th Edition of Erskine May, page 68, outlining the difference between a breach of privilege and contempt of the House:

> When any of these rights and immunities, both of the Members, individually, and of the assembly in its collective capacity, which are known by the general name of privileges, are disregarded or attacked by any individual or authority, the offence is called a breach of privilege, and is punishable under the law of Parliament.
> Each House also claims the right to punish actions, which, while not breaches of any specific privilege, are offences against its authority or dignity . . . Such actions, though often called "breaches of privilege" are more properly distinguished as "contempts".

Therefore I suggest that there has been an offence against the dignity of Parliament in this case. Any suggestion that there may be different types of justice for different Canadians, particularly those in Parliament, is something I think we have to take extremely seriously.

While I am on my feet, I want to remind you of what Joseph Maingot's Parliamentary Privilege in Canada says at page 192:

> While privilege may be codified, contempt may not, because new forms of obstruction are constantly being devised—there is no closed list of classes of offences punishable as contempt of Parliament.

In this case I firmly and strongly believe that the former commissioner has seriously hindered us in our tasks as parliamentarians. I believe in doing so he has committed a contempt of this House.

In conclusion, if you find a prima facie case of privilege, I would move that this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. I thank you for this opportunity to say a few words on this critical matter.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief because I realize that today is an Official Opposition Day and I do not want to take up any more time than is necessary. However, there are some things we have to get on the record. My friend was given an unusual amount of latitude to put his case and I want to speak for two people who are not here.

I want to speak for Mr. Gorman, who is not in this House, not able to defend himself, who exercised his duty as an officer of Parliament in accordance with the Act, and now finds it being suggested that he is guilty of contempt of Parliament. I think it is unfortunate that such a charge would be laid against an individual who is not here and able to defend himself. The other person I want to speak for is the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse).

There is a presumption not only in this House but in this country under democratic principles that you are presumed innocent until proven guilty—proven guilty. The Hon. Minister found out that there was an investigation under the Elections Act being conducted into his actions. He immediately advised the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and resigned or was relieved of his duties. In other words, he stepped aside as a Minister of the Crown. He did the honourable thing. Then, at a later date, November 28, the Commissioner of Canada Elections, the very gentleman who it is suggested is in contempt of Parliament, states this:

> I have reviewed the results of the investigation and I have decided that no charges will be laid against the Hon. Marcel Masse.

Mr. Speaker, the Act makes it quite clear that it is the function of the commissioner to decide whether or not to proceed to prosecute a case. The commissioner consents to prosecution only when he is satisfied that he has all the necessary facts and only in those cases where he believes it would be in the interests of justice to do so, and where there is every likelihood that the prosecution will succeed. The commissioner makes the decision, the same decision made every day by Crown attorneys and law enforcement officers, and he made the decision not to prosecute. He conducted an independent investigation, drew his conclusions, came to a decision, and announced that decision: No charges will be laid.

Any further action second guesses the Commissioner, amounts to double jeopardy for the Minister, and interferes with the jurisdiction of an officer of this House. I suggest even further, Mr. Speaker, that it puts every Minister, and in fact every MP, in an impossible situation because they are never charged, therefore never exonerated and, if you follow that reasoning to the end, never innocent. No one in a free democratic society such as ours would accept that conclusion or line of reasoning.

Perhaps I can make the point to the Hon. Member by quoting a member of the other place, a member who served in this House for a long time and would, therefore, know the difficulty of being a Minister of the Crown, as he once was, and being an elected Member of Parliament. Senator Pierre de Bané said: "The attacks on the rights of Marcel Masse are not justified and sap the basic principles of our system of rights".

That is a Liberal Senator and a former colleague coming to the defence of the system. He is coming to the defence of a system which says that you are innocent until proven guilty. In this case there was not even a charge laid because an independent commissioner, an officer of this House, said that there were not sufficient facts and it was not in the interest of justice to lay a charge. Surely he has fulfilled his duties and surely the system has been well served.

I think it is unfortunate to drag this out any further. It is unfortunate for the reputation of the Hon. Minister and very unfortunate for Mr. Gorman who is not here to defend himself. He served this country honourably as a member of the RCMP, took on a difficult position on the Elections Commission, and now finds himself pilloried by a Member of this House and cannot come to his own defence. I think that is very unfortunate.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is no contempt of Parliament. There is contempt for the system of justice that you and I believe in. There is contempt for the theory that you are innocent until proven guilty. I urge you, Mr. Speaker, with all of the knowledge that I have at my command of justice at the bar which both you and I served, to reject outright this suggestion that there has been any contempt of Parliament.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong this discussion but I do want to correct a couple of errors that the Hon. Minister of State just made. The individual in question, Mr. Gorman, is not an officer of this House. The Minister of State will note that an officer of the House is someone who reports to Parliament. Mr. Gorman never did report to Parliament. He reports to the Chief Electoral Officer.

Mr. Hawkes: And who does he report to?

Mr. Riis: The Chief Electoral Officer is an officer of Parliament. I just wanted to clarify that because the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) kept referring to this individual as an officer of the House and he simply is not an officer of this House.

In spite of what my hon. friend has indicated, you will be aware of the numerous precedents of prima facie cases of privilege being decided against individuals who were not Members of this House. I want to make it clear that you do not have to be a Member of the House in order to be the subject of a question of privilege.

In my earlier comments I referred to the specific case on May 7, 1976, and there are many others. I simply wanted to make it clear on the record that you do not have to be a Member of this House to be named by the Speaker as being in contempt of Parliament.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a short contribution which might indeed be helpful to you.

The Member opposite has advanced the case that the actions of Mr. Gorman have in some way impeded the ability of Members of this House to carry on their duties. I see nothing in the submission that deals with the actions of Mr. Gorman.

The Member opposite goes on at some length on the issue of a two-tiered system of justice. Any reading of the letter would fail to find anything which could be interpreted as a two-tiered system of justice. The notion of a two-tiered system of justice comes from the Opposition. If contempt is really the issue about which the Hon. Member is concerned, the appropriate motion would be to examine the behaviour of the Opposition in the House of Commons for bringing the House into disrepute. It is certainly not Mr. Gorman's motion which is advanced at any point.

All of us who serve in this Chamber were involved in a campaign, subject to the Canada Elections Act. We were all involved totally in our campaigns in the sense that we signed statements about expenditures which our official agents signed as well. Whatever others did on our behalf when we were out knocking on doors while they were in the office, we did.

I am looking across at the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) who, I believe, signed a form which was found to put her in a position of contravention of the Act. Working with the elections officer in the investigation it was modified in some fashion to reflect—

Ms. Copps: Amended by the courts.

Mr. Hawkes: —a view of the facts, which was not the view first presented and signed and which would have been a contravention.

Parliament, in its wisdom in setting up this Act, very carefully included the principle that the official elections people would look at the circumstances of the case, reach certain conclusions, and make those conclusions firm and public.

It seems to me from the letter that was introduced by my hon. friend into evidence that Mr. Gorman has complied exactly with the Act. Some of the dispute in the House has centred on the word "involved". According to the Act we are all involved in all aspects of the campaign from the day we are nominated and file our papers to the day that we sign our expenses at the end of the line.

If evidence existed to show that the Minister of Energy had acted in a manner which caused the commissioner to think that charges should be laid, surely he would have laid charges. If Members opposite think that Mr. Gorman did not act in the manner required by the Act, surely they should present some proof to the House.

The Opposition's assertion that Mr. Gorman is in contempt of this House for creating a two-tiered system of justice that treated, Members differently than campaign team members were treated should be documented. There should be evidence produced that Mr. Gorman treated people in a two-tiered fashion rather than simply an assertion. The man surely deserves that much protection from the House and the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has listened carefully to the representations that were made. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) did cite some authorities. I know Hon. Members will understand that I wish to do him the courtesy of reading them. I will look at them.

I must say, though, that in a case like this the Chair is under some particular difficulty. Even assuming for the moment that the argument which was skillfully put by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap is one that the Chair ought to adopt, the Chair is in considerable difficulty over evidence that is not before us. Having listened very carefully to the argument and having listened very carefully to questions and answers put in the House for several days, it is not possible for the Chair to decide why a certain official decided to prosecute in some cases and not to prosecute in others.

Certainly from that point of view there is a lack of information which, as long as it is not there, makes it very difficult to draw any inference one way or the other with respect to whether the official conducted himself in an appropriate way. However, I want to assure the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) that I know that he has raised a matter in a serious way. I will consider it and return to the House if I feel that that is appropriate.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gauthier:

That this House condemns the government for its inaction, its lack of political will and its hesitation to accept debate in the House of Commons, at the second reading stage, on Bill C-72 respecting the status and use of the official languages, thus causing a clear setback in the application of the Act by federal departments and agencies, in addition to having detrimental effects on national unity.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House took recess at one o'clock, seven minutes remained in the period for questions and comments after the speech by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp).

[English]

I will now recognize Hon. Members who wish to continue question and comment period. Resuming debate.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise and participate in the debate today on the motion introduced to the House by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). His motion states:

That this House condemns the Government for its inaction, its lack of political will and its hesitation to accept debate in the House of Commons, at the second reading stage, on Bill C-72, respecting the status and use of the official languages, thus causing a clear setback in the application of the Act by federal departments and agencies, in addition to having detrimental effects on national unity.

That legislation is of great importance to our society because it concerns two communities that have lived together, for the most part in peace and harmony, since 1760. This is a very important and vital issue in our society. We should get on with this question because I sense that the frustrations we saw in the House this morning mostly are due to the poor planning of the Government in bringing this measure to the floor for discussion.

Members of the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons has spent a tremendous amount of time, effort and considerable creative energy on this important issue, bringing their combined wisdom to bear to put together a very important Bill.

It is nice to stand up on occasion and congratulate the Government for doing a good job. While there are some omissions and areas of the Bill which need improvement, it is a good Bill on the whole. It provides the basis on which to have an exciting and dynamic discussion in the interests of living together in this experiment called Canada.

Many changes have taken place in Canada which have been manifest in good will. As an anglophone from Quebec who has made a very serious effort to become functionally bilingual, it has been very exciting to meet my francophone colleagues from Quebec who have become functionally bilingual. How many other countries can communicate in two languages?

This is very exciting when one considers that it brings the culture of two great peoples together.

I travelled out West with the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin), who has serious concerns about official bilingualism. Together, we heard concerns expressed in Saskatchewan and Alberta by Francophones dehors Québec. We heard from the Crie d'Alarme and the need for service. We understood their heartfelt request for services.

I come from an English constituency in Quebec where we have a degree of concern about the application of the official language policy.

This Bill concerns a national issue and reflects the distinctiveness of Canada, which is home to two marvelous cultures and languages. Since we live in respect and harmony with each other, why can we not bring this Bill to the floor of the House of Commons to discuss it rationally? Let us accept and rejoice in these two cultures and promote the vitality of each of those communities.

I am not saying that there are no problems with the Bill, but I am suggesting that the new generation of Canadians throughout this land are preparing to work in both languages and want the respect for their individual languages to be part and parcel of the delivery of services by the federal Government. Let me remind Hon. Members that language is an important therapeutic tool. Therefore, the services delivered by the federal Government, whether through the Canada Assistance Plan or our cost-sharing programs, must respect that language of health and culture.

In his first Throne Speech in November, 1984, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was full of hope and promises. He said that the linguistic minorities require and should have equality of access and equality of opportunity. In the October 1, 1986, Throne Speech, he said that he wanted to bring us into conformity with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In my view, nothing could be more important than doing just that.

In June, 1987, the three political Parties expressed satisfaction with the tabling of the long awaited legislation. However, a degree of apathy set in. I object to the complaints by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) when he said there was obstruction; in bringing this Bill forward. Debate on issues of national concern are part and parcel of the obligations of Members from all sides of the House.

However, the control of the agenda in a House with a majority of over 200 belongs to the House Leader of the Conservative Party. He had ample opportunity to bring the Bill forward and ensure that it had the full discussion it merits. This would have allowed us to clarify some of the difficulties within the Bill.

This motion was not moved today because we want to be obstructionist, we want to ensure that this Bill receives the acknowledgement and study it requires.

This Bill has been long awaited by various parties concerned with the issue of official languages. They include, among others, the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons, the Office of the Commissioner of Official Languages and representatives of official language minority groups.

The Official Languages Act of 1969 has become outdated. A number of problems have surfaced as a result of applying the legislation on a daily basis for 19 years. This becomes particularly significant for Canadians who find that they are unable to live and work and express themselves or be served in the language with which they are most comfortable. It is very important that this Bill, which is practically new legislation, sees the light of day and is given the proper attention. The attitudes of Canadians have changed. They would like to see the application of the amendments which are warranted.

All Parties came to an agreement with respect to the new legislation which marks a turning point in the evolution of the language issue. It is likely one of the best pieces of legislation that the House has seen, and I congratulate the Government for it. We can follow up on all the criticisms and recommendations put forward in the different reports to the Standing Committee. We could be listening much more carefully to the Official Languages Commissioner.

A very fine article appeared in a magazine entitled Language and Society. It appeared in the fall issue of this magazine. In the article the author, Stuart Beaty, wrote about acts of faith and the relationship between the old and new Official Languages Act to the fundamental political and linguistic nature of Canada. He asked how the proposals to amend the Official Languages Act tabled on June 25 were to be interpreted, applied or enforced.

He went on to consider many of the aspects that are found in the Bill. He expresses an exciting concept in his article. He wrote about the relationship between the Act and the fundamental political and linguistic nature of our country. That is to say that he looked at this matter in the constitutional context. He considered the impact of our national commitment in this area and other sectors of society.

He commented on the primacy of the Act over other federal statutes as well as the executory nature of the Act and the need to spell out clearly application measures. He commented also on the ways of adapting bilingual services to regional and other differences, for example, by replacing the formula for designating federal bilingual districts which, as it so happens, have never been proclaimed, with a more practical one. This is something I would like to address in a moment, especially in terms of the practicality of the application of the Bill.

The two other major areas which he considers have to do with the integration into the Act itself of the objectives in the 1973 resolution relating to "language of work" and "full participation". Finally, he considers a better definition of the roles and responsibilities of the main federal agents active in this matter, including the Commissioner of Official Languages, with respect to prompt application of the provisions of the Act.

It is important that the Bill be sent to committee quickly in order that there can be open hearings and so that small amendments can be made to it. This will bring it into practical use for those Canadians who need it on an everyday basis. When we look at the preamble of the Bill, which is beautiful, we see that there is no definition of linguistic minority. It is important that we define it in the most generous of senses. It cannot deal only with the mother tongue or the language first learned. It has to deal with the language of use. If that is the case, then there will be a better application of the intent, the thought, the will and the wish behind this Bill.

Before I move on to another aspect I wish to point out the fact that with respect to hiring practices in the Bill there has been some deterioration. In this respect let us consider the civil service. In terms of percentages some 30 per cent of the civil service is francophone. However, that is misleading, particularly if one happens to live in northern Ontario, New Brunswick or in parts of Alberta or Saskatchewan. If one happens to be an anglophone in Quebec, then it is a serious problem. Some 5.5 per cent of the federal civil service in Quebec is composed of anglophones. Yet, in Quebec, people whose mother tongue is English make up 11 per cent of the population of that province, whereas those who claim it as their language of use total 13 per cent. In this respect we are talking about 800,000 people who live in my province and who have certain services but who are not represented and who are not supported in the hiring practices of the federal Government. Treasury Board was lax in the application of its responsibility and its mandate in this particular area.

In 1976, 12 per cent of the civil service of the federal Government in Quebec was English-speaking. The figure today is 5.5 per cent. That is very severe under-representation. In the Bill there is a recommendation that one should "tend to reflect" the distribution of linguistic minorities across the land. I think it should state instead "reflecting" linguistic minorities and not tending to reflect them. That is only one aspect of the Bill which I think needs to be addressed with a slight amendment.

I bring to the attention of Hon. Members an aggravating issue which arose recently. Hon. Members will recall that the Government decided that it would get rid of the $1 bill and replace it with that candy-shaped bronze-coloured dollar coin. In this respect the Government let a contract to promote its campaign in order to make the public comfortable with this new coin. Ads appeared across the country. Although they did not bear the logo of the Government of Canada, it was reasonable to assume that they came from the federal Government since this was a federal Government initiative. In the year that the new Official Languages Act was in the making, an Act which speaks eloquently of the need to ensure the vitality of the linguistic minority communities, the federal Government felt quite comfortable about seeing advertising exclusively in French about this dollar coin in Quebec and exclusively in English in Ontario. That does not reflect the spirit and the intent of the law.

Under this Bill there is no control with respect to the responsibility for the promotion of federal initiatives unless they happen to deal with a federal Crown corporation. This is an area which needs to be looked at. What happens if the issue does not deal with a Crown corporation? What happens if a Crown corporation is privatized or semi-privatized?

An area which bothers me in particular, especially after reading the preamble, is the area of the Bill which deals with communications in terms of services to the public. There is a reference to significant demand. In this respect the concept is to determine in which region bilingual services will be delivered. In this respect what will be the determination of significant demand? How will we find it out? What are the demographic criteria that will be used? How will census data be interpreted? This is why a definition of linguistic minority, be it French or English, is key.

When one is obliged to provide a service it is important to know to whom the service is to be directed. I suggest that when the Act was enacted to reflect and to promote the linguistic duality of Canada the existence of a French-speaking majority in Quebec, an English-speaking majority in the rest of Canada, and the presence of official language minority communities in a number of provinces were the concrete manifestations of the promulgation of this Act. In this way we could support the linguistic duality of Canada, which is a fundamental characteristic of our country, something that is a principle accepted by all Parties in the House. Serious care has to be taken in how we define this significant demand. We need to examine carefully Clause 21(b) and Clause 22 to make sure that we reflect the spirit in this Bill.

I would also suggest that, when we talk about the nature of the office and the regulations that are to be enunciated, we have to be very certain that those regulations are carefully examined and the parties that are to be involved are consulted.

We talk about third parties and the services that are to be provided. In Clause 24 it states:

> Every federal institution has the duty to ensure that, where services are provided or made available by another person or organization on its behalf, any member of the public in Canada or elsewhere can communicate with and obtain those services from that person or organization in either official language in any case where those services, if provided by the institution, would be required under this Part to be provided in either official language.

I would like to suggest that we need to consider extending the obligations to render services, and such responsibilities should be extended to federally regulated utilities or enterprises which fall under federal jurisdiction, such as banks, airlines, railways, interprovincial transport companies, and telecommunications and broadcast policy. It is very important that this country have a stamp and footprint across this land that states that English and French wherever you may live should be available and the potential to understand the information that is being disseminated should certainly be the primary concern.

It is very difficult to speak to this Bill because we do not know what the regulations are and we do not know the definition and the criteria of certain of the services. In the interests of good will, in the interests of a new Canada, this new generation of Canadians, and the excitement of this experiment that is in such a wonderful place in the spectrum of the world, it is important that the principle of equality be brought to our attention and that we deal with it expeditiously.

The preamble sets the stage for the Bill. It provides a guide to the spirit of generosity and reform in which the new law is to be interpreted. With a few amendments, this Bill supplies the glue that will mark the vitality and the difference that is this nation of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Desjardins).

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate today. I do so as a Member of this House who has a keen appreciation of the importance of the official languages question, and especially as Joint Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Official Languages.

Madam Speaker, before I start my speech, I want to congratulate and thank all Members on the Committee, both from the House of Commons and the Senate, who in the past few years have made a vital contribution to the committee's work. I say this in a strictly non-partisan spirit, since we are all working for the same cause, which is to defend and promote the status of official languages in this country.

I also wish to thank all members of the Committee's staff for their dedication. They often work 18 or 20-hour days, providing our Committee with what it needs, often work under difficult conditions.

Finally, I think we should recognize the important work done by the Commissioner for Official Languages and his team who, in the Commission's annual report, provide us with a picture of the status of official languages in this country, thus helping our Committee set its priorities.

That being said, Madam Speaker, I have been listening very carefully to the various speeches we have heard in the House today on the Opposition motion. For the benefit of Hon. Members, I would like to read the motion presented by the Official Opposition and the Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), and I quote:

> That this House condemns the government for its inaction, its lack of political will and its hesitation to accept debate in the House of Commons, at the second reading stage, on Bill C-72 respecting the status and use of the official languages, thus causing a clear setback in the application of the Act by federal departments and agencies, in addition to having detrimental effects on national unity.

Madam Speaker, after listening to the various speeches thus far, one cannot help concluding that the wording and even the credibility of the motion leave something to be desired. This morning, it was made clear—and like many other Members I heard this for the first time this morning—that before the holidays a proposal was made to expedite the Bill and refer it to a legislative committee, a proposal that was turned down by the Opposition. And for what reason? We are told it was because they wanted to hear as many Members as possible on the Bill.

This is no doubt a very valid reason, but if we ask the linguistic minorities in this country, the Francophones outside of Quebec, the Commissioner for Official Languages, if they would not have preferred to see the Bill adopted rapidly and implemented rather than to have a lengthy debate which would cause the adoption of the Bill to be delayed, it would be up to those who favour such a debate to argue their case and I hope that the question will be put to them.

This is why I am saying, Madam Speaker, that some form of discredit should be placed upon the motion we have before us today. One thing is certain, Madam Speaker, as those who sit on the Official Languages Committee know full well, and it is that Bill C-72 has become absolutely necessary and essential. Why? Quite simply because the current Official Languages Act that was enacted in 1969 had become outdated, it had become laughing matter and was not being adhered to.

Madam Speaker, we are not to blame if previous Governments were soft and a bit too lax in the interpretation of that Act and this is why we found ourselves in 1984-85 with a totally archaic Official Languages Act that had no real impact anymore at the various levels of Government and Canada's Parliament.

Madam Speaker, I pointed out this morning a few cases involving agencies or Crown corporations or departments that appeared before our Committee since 1985. There were more than thirty of them. Hardly three would deserve to be graded B, "very good" under the Official Languages Act. This is why the situation is quite alarming, Madam Speaker, if not dramatic, within the various levels of Government and the Canadian Parliament. As I said, Madam Speaker, this is due to the soft, laxist attitude that prevailed for some fifteen years in the implementation of that Act.

Madam Speaker, we heard this morning that they would rather have a debate where the greatest numbers of MP's could deal with the legislation. We were also told they would like to see and hear Members who might oppose the legislation.

Madam Speaker, what I admire in a Parliament, a Government, is the freedom of speech, because it is wishful thinking to suppose that in a Parliament with 282 Members everyone would always agree on legislation. And I for one am proud to be a member of a party where everyone can express his own views when there is a real debate on legislation. That is what party democracy is all about, and it fully exists within this Government.

I suggest we had an example in this House some months ago, during the debate on capital punishment. We heard very rational debates during which one fully respected the opinions of others. Some people said they were against the death penalty because they saw it as a means of eliminating crime, while others, myself included, said it was no answer to crime, and in that fascinating debate expressed opinions which were respected and, in my opinion, that is democracy in action, Madam Speaker. And if there is an entirely open debate, as some wish, I hope Members of the opposition parties who are against that Bill, and there must be some of them, will say so.

The important thing for a government, Madam Speaker, and we did it many times, is to take the decision that serves the national interest. And when the majority but not all people clearly express themselves for the national interest—this Government has always acted in the national interest, and that is what it will do once again with Bill C-72.

Madam Speaker, what is Bill C-72? I think it is important to give a general outline and mention its most important parts. It might be interesting to note that Bill C-72 contains no fewer than 103 clauses, compared to the forty sections or so of the present Official Languages Act. It is worth mentioning the presence of a preamble in Bill C-72, something rarely seen in public bills, which only shows that the legislator has every intention to enact very clear and precise legislation.

And what do we find, Madam Speaker, in the preamble of this Bill? The preamble of this Bill is really very precise and refers to bilingualism in the workplace, to fair participation and to the federal government's commitment to enhance bilingualism, to support English and French linguistic minority communities and to cooperate with the provinces.

It is also worth noting, Madam Speaker, that the preamble refers to the important promotional role that the Canadian government will have to assume regarding the official languages.

The Bill then defines the three main purposes of the proposed Act. The purpose of Bill C-72 is, firstly, to ensure that English and French have equality of status. Secondly, to support the development of English and French linguistic minority communities and to advance the equality of status of the official languages. And thirdly, to set out the powers and duties of federal institutions in this matter.

Madam Speaker, Bill C-72 is divided in 14 parts and I should like to quote from some of them which are entirely vital and essential to that bill. In Part I of Bill C-72, one clause appears as follows:

> 4.(1) English and French are the official languages of Parliament and everyone has the right to use either of those languages in any debates or proceedings of Parliament.

This seems to be taken as granted, but the members of the Committee on Official languages were supprised to learn almost a year and a half ago, after having asked a legal adviser whether the House of Commons and the Senate were subjected to or covered by the Official Languages Act, that no, the House of Commons and the Senate were not covered under the Official Languages Act now in effect.

Therefore Bill 72 confirms that French and English are the official languages of Parliament, everyone having the right to use either one of them in the debates and proceedings of parliament. It is high time, as you will agree, that in 1988, such an established fact be recorded in a legal statute.

Further, Madam Speaker, we find Part III of the Bill dealing with the administration of justice where it is clearly stated:

> 13. English and French are the official languages of the courts, and either of those languages may be used by any person in, or in any pleading in or process issuing from, any court.
> 14.(1) Every court has, in any proceedings before it, the duty, to ensure that any person giving evidence before it may be heard in the official language of his choice, and that in being so heard the person will not be placed at a disadvantage by not being heard in the other official language.

Those are very imporant provisions as far as the administration of justice is concerned.

Moreover, Madam Speaker, if we refer to Part IV dealing with communications with and services to the public, it is of tremendous importance for the Canadian public and for people dealing with federal services. This legislation does say the following:

> 20. Any member of the public in Canada has the right to communicate with and to receive available services from federal institutions in accordance with this Part.
> 21. Every federal institution has the duty to ensure that any member of the public can communicate with and obtain available services from its head or central office in either official language—

This concerns communications, Madam Speaker, and it is true of all the parts of this legislation which clearly shows that we were committed to make it a very clear and precise Bill.

Part V, which is a vital part of this legislation, deals with language of work. It clearly says this:

> 33. English and French are the languages of work in all federal institutions, and officers and employees of all federal institutions have the right to use either official language in accordance with this Part.

It is clear, Madam Speaker; it is now stated in a bill.

Part VI, Madam Speaker, deals with the participation of English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians

> 38.(1) The Government of Canada is committed to ensuring that (a) English-speaking Canadians and French-speaking Canadians, without regard to their ethnic origin or first language learned, have equal access to appointment and advancement in federal institutions; and

I think this is also a very important point in this legislation.

Then Part VII deals with the advancement of English and French. Madam Speaker, in a country whose identity is deeply rooted in both cultures and both languages, the advancement of English and French is absolutely vital, and it reads as follows:

> 40. The Government of Canada is committed to (a) enhancing the vitality of the English and French linguistic minority communities in Canada and supporting and assisting their development; and (b) fostering the full recognition and use of both English and French in Canadian society.

Madam Speaker, all the clauses, all the parts of this Bill relate to one aspect or another of our country's official languages.

The Commissioner of Official Languages must be delighted with Part IX of this Bill because it extends the duration of his tenure of office.

Finally, Part X of the bill deals with court remedy. This is also something entirely new, madam Speaker, and it is important to know that from now on, following the adoption of this Bill, any person who has made a complaint to the Commissioner will be able to institute proceedings before the Courts against Government authorities.

With this quick overview of the bill, Madam Speaker, I think I have demonstrated that it had become necessary, considering that we had been obliged to operate under a legislation which is quite outdated and archaic: we needed only to hear what was going on and the testimonies which were presented to the Committee on Official Languages to realize that we had to act.

In this connection, I feel compelled to mention the remarkable contribution made by the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) who, over the past year or year and a half, has managed to give a new momentum to the Committee on Official Languages, together with the other Committee Members, including the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) who took part in this debate this morning, the Honourable Member for Saint-Boniface (Mr. Duguay) who sought from the individuals, departments and organizations appearing before the committee suggestions for remedies, an other means of rectifying the situation, which is not easy, Madam Speaker, because some people having gained seniority through 15 years of leniency, it was almost impossible to impose bilingualism on them. I find solace, however, when I hear heads of Departments or Crown Corporations or Federal organizations declare that they will present us with plans to remedy the situation and that they will assume their responsibilities in the area of official languages.

Madam Speaker, I should like to mention that a Prime Minister and a Government which so far have achieved so much will go ahead and make sure that Bill C-72 is adopted within the next few weeks. If I say so, madam Speaker, it is on the basis of the rather exceptional and extraordinary record of this Government and Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Desjardins: I can see some members of the Opposition do not agree. Well, let them answer this question: when we, when this Prime Minister campaigned in 1984, what was the central theme of our platform? Wasn't it "Jobs, jobs, jobs"? In 1987, we had figures showing that we created more than one million jobs in this country, 80 percent of which were permanent jobs. This was an undertaking of this Prime Minister and of this government and we delivered.

Madam Speaker, what else did we say in 1984? We promised to reduce the deficit. Actually, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) did quite a remarkable job with his strategy aimed at deficit reduction. Since we took office, the deficit was reduced by more than $8 billion. What else did we say in 1984? We talked about national reconciliation. Does anyone of those who were yelling earlier have anything to say about the Meech Lake Accord, which is probably one of the greatest achievements of our Prime Minister and of this government? Another promise that was kept. Who initiated the talks on free-trade? Our Prime Minister did, because he wants prosperity for the people of Canada. Another commitment that was kept in the best interests of all Canadians.

We promised a tax reform and we delivered since it is being implemented. That means that the Official Languages Bill will only be one more addition to a long list of achievements which this government can be proud of. I am sure that Bill C-72 will be passed in a few weeks. It is a major part of our legislative agenda because we want our minorities to be proud of their roots and we want their members to be first-class citizens with equal rights.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I must say that sometimes the Hon. Member's comments surprise me. Generally, however, as Joint Chairman of the Joint Committee on Official Languages, he does his job and does it with great dedication, and he knows perfectly well why we are having this debate today.

Madam Speaker, I heard the Hon. Member repeat what a number of ministers were saying this morning about the business of the House, which was that the Government proposes and the House disposes. One Friday afternoon, at half-past one or two o'clock, the Government came to ask me whether we would agree to quick passage of the Bill with one speaker per party. I said no, this was not satisfactory for a Bill as fundamental as this one, as important as the Meech Lake Accord. I felt that only one speaker for the Official Opposition, one for the New Democrats and one for the Government, would not be enough and would not do justice to Anglophone Members from Quebec, Francophone Members outside Quebec, Francophones from Quebec and Members generally. That is why I refused to pass this Bill in an hour's time with only three speeches.

I think the Hon. Member can hardly blame me for digging in my heels. He can't say we threatened the Government with a filibuster. That isn't true. We never threatened the Government with a filibuster. We only asked for a democratic debate where as many Members as possible would be able to participate. I think that is fair. I think that is democratic. My question is a very simple one. Since the Hon. Member is now aware of the situation and knows exactly what happened that Friday afternoon, would he have agreed—in his speech he asked us to explain why we acted the way we did—would he have agreed to pass Bill C-72 at top speed without giving other Members of this House a chance to comment? Would he have been willing to treat this issue without the care it deserves? Would he have agreed to expedite a Bill through the House, to ram it through in a hurry to avoid any possible controversy? I hardly think so, but I am asking him just the same. Quite frankly, would the Hon. Member have agreed to let this Bill be passed with three speakers and an hour's debate on a Friday afternoon?

Mr. Desjardins: Madam Speaker, I thank my colleague the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for his comment and question.

The question is adressed to me. I would rather ask those groups concerned across the country. In the final analysis, they are the ones, I believe, who will voice their opinions, once they are made aware of the facts. And as far as I am concerned, their opinion is the one that counts. I must say to the Hon. Member that I am not convinced that these groups would have opposed a decision taken in the context you have just described, since they are not so much concerned with the duration of this debate, which may last several days if necessary, as with the resulting legislation and its implementation. And in saying this, I am sure that I am in no way misrepresenting the opinions of those to whom this question could be put. I therefore wish to see this Bill adopted as quickly as possible. What form will the debate take?

If you insist on hearing every Hon. Member who wishes to speak, there will be no end to the debate, in my opinion at least. I do not think that such a course of action would serve the national interest. If you wish the kind of debate we normally have, then I believe you will get what you want. I am convinced, as I have said before, that the debate will take place in the coming weeks and that it will take the form that the Government so chooses.

Mr. Grisé: Madam Speaker, I want to join my colleagues in congratulating the Co-Chairman of the Joint Committee on Official Languages, the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue

(Mr. Desjardins), for doing such marvelous work on that committee and, particularly, Madam Speaker, for following in the footsteps of the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) who performed an exceptional and gigantic task in that area.

I have a comment to make and a small question to put to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Desjardins). I quote what Mr. Michel Roy wrote in La Presse of June 30, 1987: "Thanks to that new legislation, Canadians will finally be able to communicate more easily with federal institutions and get services in the official language they prefer. The new legislation also gives government employees better opportunities to work in their own language in federal institutions, something which many of them could not do until now. In the area of justice, access to federal courts of law will be assured to Canadians in either official language. Everywhere, and no longer in a few provinces, they will be able to use French or English in oral or written proceedings. From now on the Official Language Commissioner will be able to initiate investigations, offer his mediation and present reports on compliance with the spirit and the letter of the law. In cases where complaints are not resolved, a judicial appeal will also be provided."

Madam Speaker, that being said, I will be very brief. Does the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue think the people who appeared in committee and the Canadian people in general are more interested in the passing and implementation of that Bill than seeing a number of Liberal Members rise one after the other to say in their speeches that is really a good Bill? What is more important for the Canadian people, Madam Speaker? I would like the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue to explain it to us. Is it the enactment of the legislation or listening to Members in the House?

Mr. Desjardins: Madam Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague from Chambly (Mr. Grisé) for his comments. It is true that if you ask French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec and all minority language groups in the country, they will tell you quite frankly and honestly, I think, that they want the Bill passed. They are not concerned about the way it will be passed, they have no use for the mechanics of the thing. We want the Government to pass the Bill as quickly as possible. I recall what the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) was saying this morning. He wanted a quick debate to take place very shortly. We have offered that opportunity, but it was refused. Now the opposition would like us to bring that legislation up for debate, but they should have made up their mind earlier.

We had made a proposition which was refused for various reasons, but eventually, as I said earlier, we will come back to this Bill, because it is tremendously important for Canada, for the identity of the country, for both cultures, to give Canadians a new pride in their country and the chance to live in the language of their ancestors.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTED DAY, S. O. 82—THE STATUS AND USE OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gauthier:

> That this House condemns the government for its inaction, its lack of political will and its hesitation to accept debate in the House of Commons, at the second reading stage, on Bill C-72 respecting the status and use of the official languages, thus causing a clear setback in the application of the Act by federal departments and agencies, in addition to having detrimental effects on national unity.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I am pleased this afternoon to take part in this debate concerning the official languages. First of all, I should like to congragulate the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier for the excellent motion he has moved today. Madam Speaker, it is clear that the Members of this House—most of them, if not all of them—support this bill, but we are all aware that a number of Tory Members do not. But when the majority supports a legislation, two things are needed: first, a little more courage on the part of Government to go ahead with the second reading. That is exactly why the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier called the attention of the House on this debate. It is to make the Government realize that the Official Languages Act is an issue in which Canadians are very much interested and that most Members of the House, with the exception of course of a few Tory Members, want to adopt this bill.

Madam Speaker, I do not intend to deal with this issue in an overly partisan manner. Because you know me better than that, you realize that I should like first of all to deal with the issue of official languages. But this morning, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and a number of other Government

Members, including the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé), as Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister, chose to blame the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier . . . You can imagine the gall of a Tory member blaming the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier for his contribution in the area of official languages! Just as the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) for that matter, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier has done a tremendous job on this issue. I see that someone is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Grisé: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) on a point of order.

Mr. Grisé: Madam Speaker, I listened to my friend from Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria). I never questioned the capacity and the work of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier this morning. I asked him the following question: What has his government done from 1980 to 1984? What has his government, the then Liberal Government, done, as far as official languages are concerned, from 1980 to 1984, Madam Speaker, since I never—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair appreciates the Hon. Member's remark but it was not a point of order. The Hon. Member from Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I am wondering how come the Hon. Member, the parliamentary secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister—

Some Hon. Members: The Hon. Member for Chambly.

Mr. Boudria: —the Hon. Member for Chambly—I thank my colleagues for reminding me—has such a short memory that he does not even remember the criticism he has made this morning. I suggest that he reads Hansard tomorrow and rather slowly at that so that he be able to understand what he has said.

So, I was mentioning the extraordinary contribution of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) in the official languages field and I was saying that we could also praise the contribution of the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin), who has chaired the Official Languages Committee to which I attend regularly when it is not sitting at the same time as the committe of which I am a member.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, as we know, has been and still is a member of the Richelieu Club, has been a school board commissioner and has worked for many years in the field of the official languages, has even been elected Man of the Year, Madam Speaker, in 1970, by the Junior Chamber of Commerce, and has been chairman of the Official Languages Committee for many years. So, Madam Speaker, you see and I trust all Members except the one for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) have seen that the Member for Ottawa—Vanier has done a good job, and I think it was my duty to mention it here today if only in case other Hon. Members, following the example of the Hon. Member for Chambly, would question the competence of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier.

At last, we are talking about the question of official languages. Some were asking: What has the Liberal Party done in the field of official languages? Can you imagine once again the ignorance of some Conservative Members, of some ministers indeed who do not even remember the Liberal contribution! I have in front of me the five volume report of the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission, the so-called B & B Commission, which was active in the 1960s, and which had been appointed by Prime Minister Pearson to look at the whole official languages issue; it is as a result of that very famous report that we have developed a very much needed official languages policy in our country, a policy which was finally implemented because of a Liberal initiative many years ago.

A few years later, in 1969 I believe, this House passed the Official Languages Act which gave English and French equal status in this country. And we will recall, as was mentioned this morning by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, the private member's motion, the 1973 resolution which not only reasserted the principle in the Official Languages Act, but also made clear the right of public servants to carry out their duties in the official language of their choice. However, I have to admit that this principle I just stated has not yet been implemented entirely, even today, even under this government, although they might want to brag about it. We know all too well that francophone unilinguals the public service of our country, particularly within the RCMP and other government agencies, will advance much less than anglophone unilinguals. I think we all agree on that. That is the sad reality. But I think all members of this House are unanimously willing to improve that situation, and the Standing Committee on Official Languages has looked at that issue. I have myself attended many meetings where that question was addressed, for example in relation to the RCMP as well as other police forces.

In 1978, the Liberal Government implemented the Court Challenges Program to provide financial support to Canadians who wished to have their linguistic rights recognized by the courts. Hon. Members will recall that a number of Canadians in Manitoba made use of such services to obtain recognition of their historic rights which had been ignored for nearly 30 years.

Finally, in 1979, the Conservative Government created the Official Languages Committee, but this Committee was not unable to hold any meetings. In 1980, the Liberal Government re-established the committee and appointed as its chairman the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, whom we still have the pleasure of having among us today.

Bill C-72 is without doubt the most important official languages reform since the original piece of legislation in 1969.

Why would the Government try to stifle the debate and ask that there be only one spokesman for each political party represented in this House? In view of the importance of Bill C-72, I have to ask mysef a serious question: Why would the Government not want to have a few days of debate on such a Bill in this House?

I see before me the Hon. Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) who took up so much of the time of this House to discuss his famous Bill C-22, which is going to make large multinationals richer at the expense of low and middle income Canadians. I have to ask myself whether it would not have been preferable to take a few days to examine Bill C-72 instead.

I also have in mind another Bill, the one suggesting that Canada was being invaded by refugees last summer, a Bill which most Canadians have already forgotten. Why did the House not take a few of those wasted days to discuss Bill C-72? It had already been introduced. As a society, would we not have gained more by examining Bill C-72 than by discussing the so-called Refugee Bill, which has now been forgotten? I am certain that all Hon. Members would agree that Bill C-72 is more important than those I have just mentioned.

Yet, when the curtain was coming down last June, the Government wanted to close the session by giving second reading to Bill C-72. What would have happened then? The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier would have been allowed to speak to this important bill, one NDP Member, the Minister responsible for the Official Languages Act, but nobody else. Even the chairman of the official languages committee would have been unable to make a few comments on such an important bill. Madam Speaker, imagine the scenario as the Government saw it last June: even the chairman of the official languages committee would have been prevented from taking the floor on Bill C-72, the reform concerning the official languages of Canada, all Members of the Committee on Official Languages as well as those Conservative backbenchers who do not support the Official Languages Act would also have been prevented from having their say. This may have been the strategy of the Conservative Government. Perhaps the strategy of the Government was to allow only one Conservative Member to speak, just so the other Government Members who were against the measure would not have the opportunity to rise in the House and express the views of their constituents.

I do not agree with the Conservative Members who are against the Official Languages Act, but still I think they have the right to be heard in this House even though I simply do not see eye to eye with them. Their constituents sent them here to Parliament Hill to speak and express their aspirations. Should a Member decide that his role is to speak out against Bill C-72, I will feel bad about his speech, I will go as far as condemning his remarks, but indeed I will respect the Hon. Member's right to say what he thinks.

Madam Speaker, we Members of the Liberal Party are not alone when it comes to questioning such delays on the part of the Government. I have here an article from the Journal de Montréal dated November 27, 1987 intitled:

> Official Languages: Concern over Ottawa's procrastiration

And that article states precisely the following situation, and I quote:

> The Conservative Hon. Member for Richelieu Mr. Louis Plamondon explained that discussions were still going on within the Conservative Caucus concerning the objective and modes of implementation of the Bill.

I quote:

> This is not a priority for some people, he said, before adding that there was no systematic opposition to the Bill in the Caucus. "There will always be debates, he indicated. Some will still be discussing when we have reached third reading, and they might back down our vote for this Bill."

Then, even a Government Member recognized that some of his colleagues were not in favour of this Bill, although he said there would be no obstruction on their part in the House.

However, it is important to note that the Government did back down not because more than one member of the Opposition wanted to speak but because the Government was concerned about the speeches of Government Members and not of members of the Opposition.

That is a legislation that may be of a very rare nature, in the sense that Opposition Members I believe, all those I know at any rate, support the Bill, while objections or opposition would rather seem to come from certain Government Members.

What caused that opposition? This is rather difficult to explain, Madam Speaker, but I would remind you that last summer we had here in Ontario a provincial election. The whole issue of official languages was raised during that election. For a long time, some Liberal MLA's had been wanting Ontario statute that would guarantee the provision of services in French. I was one of those, Madam Speaker, during the 1981-84 period, when I was a Member of the Legislative Assembly. On a number of occasions I requested an Act to guarantee French services in Ontario. At that time, the then Conservative Government declined, it denied French-speaking Ontarians that privilege to be served in their language, in their own province, where a large number, especially in my constituency, had been living for generations. In my constituency indeed, Madam Speaker, we still have the Municipality of the Township of Longueuil which, as you probably surmised, was the Seigniory of Longueuil before the 1791 Constitutional Act. Imagine, living in 1983-84 in the Township, of Longueuil and having to ask the Ontario Government for the right to be served in the official language, a right that existed since the 1784 Quebec Act in that same area.

At any rate, that is an issue that we raised at the Legislative Assembly at the time, and when the Ontario people recognized the time had come to change Governments in Ontario—and God knows the time was ripe after 42 years, eight months and some odd days—the people elected a Liberal Government that lost no time in enacting a statute ensuring French services in Ontario. But there was a small group in Ontario called "The Alliance for the Preservation of English in Canada", and that group decided to go to work so to speak against an Ontario act ensuring French services. And during last year's provincial elections, they got support from the then leader of the Ontario Conservative Party, Mr. Larry Grossman.

Mr. Prud'homme: What arrogance!

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis is right: it takes a lot of arrogance to prevent French-speaking Ontarians from getting what they had expected for so long. But even so, the situation, as it happened, fueled discussion in certain areas and I think that some government members in this House who oppose the Official Languages Act have been inspired by those discussions that took place last summer. The Hon. Member for Chambly is certainly not one of them but I urge him to talk to some of his colleagues from Ontario and he will realize like me that it is true.

I am sure the Hon. Member for Chambly wants this bill to be passed. But, like the others, like the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue who was addressing us earlier, like the other government members in this House, he would certainly not want this Official Languages Bill, which is central to the preservation of the bilingual character of this country, to be passed by the House after only three of 282 Hon. Members have been heard.

Madam Speaker, last year we held a debate that I would describe as useless on capital punishment, which lasted countless days in the House when it should not have been held in the first place because the issue had been settled a decade before. If such were the case last year with capital punishment, why not then dedicate a few days to Bill C-72, a bill of capital importance, I might say, as far as this country and its citizens are concerned.

That is the proposition we have before us today. The Government introduced a Bill in June of last year with the avowed intention of adopting the proposed legislation. As a matter of fact, the Bill was introduced with great fanfare. The opposition Parties in this House gave the Bill their support. However, there is now an unwillingness on the part of the Government to proceed with this legislation.

In closing, Madam Speaker, I invite the Government to put this Bill on its agenda for it is the role of the Government House Leader to ensure that this legislation proceeds. I hope the Government recovers some of its courage. If the Government House Leader has a problem with the Conservative Members of Parliament who are not in favour of this Bill he can give us their names and we can assist him by lobbying them. We want to be co-operative, as the Opposition always is.

I want to take this opportunity to state again my support for this Bill and my condemnation of the Government for refusing to proceed with it.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Madam Speaker, thank you very much for giving me an opportunity to enter into this debate. I want to preface my remarks by advising my hon. colleague who just spoke that assistance from that particular Member is about the last thing one would need if one were governing anything. That was probably made evident by Premier Peterson's relief when the Member left the Ontario Legislature.

Mr. Boudria: Be nice.

Mr. Lewis: I can assure him that we have absolutely no need of any assistance from him.

Mr. Boudria: Well, no more Mr. Nice Guy.

Mr. Lewis: I reject outright the premises in this particular motion. I reject any suggestion that there is inaction on the part of the Government. I reject any suggestion of lack of political will, and I suggest to the Hon. Member that there is absolutely no way that the actions of the Government are having any detrimental effects on national unity.

If one wants to deal with national unity one should remember that it was the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who unified the country under the Meech Lake agreement.

Mr. Boudria: Brian saved Canada?

Mr. Lewis: No, I said it and the country is saying it. Just to be clear about that, the country knows who made that deal work. It was our Prime Minister because the previous Prime Minister failed. That is who is saying it. They are saying it not only about Meech Lake but about the free trade consultations. Whether or not the Hon. Member likes free trade, he should bear in mind that there has been no suggestion from any Premiers, Liberal, NDP, or Conservative, that they were not consulted at the Premiers' level or the bureaucratic level.

Take as an example the legislation which allows all provinces to co-operate to chase people who are not making maintenance and alimony payments. We created that by co-operation and unity. It was not only through the legislation but through the atmosphere we created. To put a motion on the floor suggesting that the Government is doing anything to disrupt national unity, when you look at our record, is nonsense.

The Hon. Member is suggesting that we are not plowing ahead with legislation. I point out to my hon. friend that in the previous Parliament 229 pieces of legislation were introduced and 179 were passed in four and one-half years. We have introduced 232 pieces of legislation, up until today, and passed 181. That is in three and a half years.

Mr. Boudria: That is because of the excellent co-operation of the Opposition.

Mr. Lewis: It is the Opposition that has made the allegation that we are not dealing with legislation. Let us look at the Order Paper. There are nine Bills ahead of Bill C-72 on the Order Paper. There are only three of those on which we have not commenced debate. Just look at the record. We are moving along and passing legislation. To suggest that there is any hesitation or lack of political will by the Government on this particular piece of legislation is nonsense. The record will bear out the fact that we are proceeding on all the items of legislation mentioned in Throne Speeches, as my hon. friend from Ottawa—Vanier so ably indicated this morning.

We offered to get this legislation into committee and give it detailed study. My hon. friend cannot have it both ways. He cannot say that we are delaying it and then, when we go to him and say that we will proceed with it, say that he does not like the way—

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister just made a statement which is false. He did not offer to have the Bill go into committee. He offered to have it passed in one hour on Friday afternoon with three speakers. If he denies that, Madam Speaker, he is not an honest person. That is what he offered.

Mr. Lewis: My hon. friend may have misunderstood me. It was never a suggestion of mine that it not go to committee. Let us be realistic.

Mr. Gauthier: You offered three speakers, one hour.

Mr. Lewis: Into committee.

Mr. Gauthier: I said no to that.

Mr. Lewis: My hon. friend may have misunderstood me.

Mr. Gauthier: There were witnesses there.

Mr. Lewis: No there weren't.

Mr. Gauthier: Yes there were.

Mr. Lewis: Well, trot them out.

Mr. Gauthier: They happen to be people from your shop and my shop.

Mr. Prud'homme: I don't understand why everybody is so nervous.

Mr. Lewis: Who is nervous?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair would appreciate very much if two-way conversations were not held in the middle of debate. It would be very helpful.

Mr. Lewis: Just to repeat it, Madam Speaker, the proposition put to the opposition Parties was that there would be one speaker from each Party and then it would go into committee.

Mr. Boudria: One speaker? That means I don't have the right to speak?

Mr. Lewis: You just spoke.

In any event, Madam Speaker, I repeat the offer. We intend to deal with this legislation whether or not the Opposition puts up a lot of speakers to delay getting it into committee. We are prepared to move this legislation into committee. We are prepared to speak to it. We are prepared to deal with it. We put it on the Order Paper, something which, I would point out, the Hon. Member's Party never did while he was sitting there pushing it to do so.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to be clear, as the Member of Parliament representing the largest number of francophones outside of Quebec anywhere in Canada, that the Minister has just said that under his formula I would not have been permitted to speak on this Bill. I want to confirm that that is in fact the case.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I point out to my hon. friend who spent some time in the Ontario Legislature, that we also have a stage called third reading. My hon. friend may want to stick around some day and see third reading at which people speak. The deal was to get it to committee.

I appreciate that there is some unease on that side because we brought forward this legislation. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) was quoted at length, congratulating the Minister for doing it. We want all of that on the record as well. I appreciate his embarrassment on that matter. However, that deals with the legislative aspect. I can assure my hon. friend that we have every intention of proceeding with this legislation and sending it to committee. There will be discussion at second reading, there will be full examination of it at committee and it will be brought forward just as all other legislation we have on the Order Paper has been processed.

Let me take a moment to illustrate what the Government has done under the auspices of Treasury Board to further official languages. We have not spared any effort in the area of language training. During the financial year 1985-86, we conducted an in depth study of the support mechanisms for this official languages policy.

[Translation]

The Government language training program was established so that ministers could find the bilingual staff they need to fulfill their responsibilities. This program also allows French or English speaking Canadians a better access to employment in the federal Public Service.

[English]

More than 34,000 public servants have received language training since 1974. We have a sizable pool of bilingual employees in the Public Service, which is now large enough that in 80 per cent of the cases employees actually meet bilingual requirements at the time the positions are staffed. It is to take into account this improvement that the Government has undertaken a review of the over-all orientation of the language training program.

We are aiming at increasing the effectiveness and efficiency of the program while permitting an over-all access to this very important resource. We believe that it is essential to maintain generous access to this program. We want to be sure that members of the Public Service can undertake second language courses at government expense and during working hours. That is part of the commitment which has been made by the Treasury Board.

From April 1, 1987, we have undertaken a massive program to verify the level of bilingualism of all employees who receive the bilingual bonus. We have a double objective in this respect. On the one hand we want to ensure that employees can offer services of a good quality in either of the official languages because we believe that Canadians have the right to communicate in either official language with their federal institution. On the other hand, we also want to ensure that the bilingual bonus is only paid to employees who deserve it and who can meet the bilingualism requirements of their positions.

At the present time some 55,800 employees receive the bonus. Of this number, about 7,800 have a level of bilingualism which is well beyond the language requirement of their position. It makes it costly and in fact useless to retest them. However, all other bonus recipients must take the new second language test over the next three years to confirm their linguistic proficiency. Those who fail obviously will no longer receive the bonus, and the manager must re-examine the position and the employees. The incumbent will then be offered additional training to reach the required level of competence.

We also examined Government scientific activities, an area where we wanted to improve the bilingual aspect. We established a committee of senior science managers from across the Government to review the success of Treasury Board strategies to ensure equitable participation of English and French-speaking Canadians.

The committee has been assembled and includes a senior official from the Office of the Commissioner of Official Languages and will also advise on further changes to policy should the need for these become apparent.

Let me stress that these efforts are in line with our commitment as expressed in Bill C-72. We are committed to ensuring equal access to appointment and advancement in federal institutions for English and French-speaking Canadians. We are also committed to ensuring that the composition of the workforce of federal institutions tends to reflect the presence of both official language communities of Canada, and takes into account the characteristics of individual institutions.

We have taken steps through Treasury Board in the field of information technology and office automation. Our officials are consulting with the industry on their ability to enhance the bilingual capability of the systems they supply to the federal Government.

We are also taking steps to ensure the implementation of our policies by all federal agencies.

We have a new management philosophy which involves an increase in the decision-making authority of Ministers as well as their accountability. In this respect, the annual plans are replaced with letters of understanding between the Departments and Treasury Board. The letter of understanding will be prepared after consultation between the Department and the Treasury Board. It will be an understanding of exactly how the Department will implement a better representation of both official languages in that particular Department. They will deal with specific areas, specific objectives and we will expect concrete results from those objectives.

At the end of each year, we will receive progress reports on objectives based on a comprehensive analysis of Ministers' strong and weak points.

[English]

Treasury Board will be able to review these plans, or even take additional measures such as inviting a Deputy Minister to discuss progress or lack of progress in his or her Department. That will take place every year.

We believe that the three-year planning system will strengthen our initiatives, facilitate the implementation of policies in federal institutions, given that letters of understanding will provide a framework for planning and accountability.

No letter of understanding will be signed if a Department or agency does not have in place an adequate system for information gathering, for assessment, for monitoring and auditing. It must also use the necessary measures to be able to report annually to the Treasury Board.

We have also undertaken many audit-related initiatives recently. In 1985, there was a management accountability review of departmental official languages implementation. It covered over 60 Departments and agencies. We examined the management of the program and made formal recommendations where necessary.

The Treasury Board has conducted and continues to conduct follow-ups in these organizations to ensure compliance with government policies.

We are undertaking consultations with other audit centres in Government, including the Comptroller General, the Commissioner of Official Languages, and the Public Service Commission to ensure that duplication is avoided while the official languages aspect is in one way or another covered adequately.

We believe that the Treasury Board Secretariat has provided detailed guidance to Public Service managers on how to monitor and how to audit their official languages program.

In order to facilitate their work we have prepared and distributed a management review guide. As well, internal auditors in federal Departments are being given information sessions on official languages and the auditing of same. We have tried to develop government-wide policies on official languages and recommend them to Cabinet for implementation. The legislative framework which we propose in Bill C-72 would see the Treasury Board continuing its policy creation role as well as expanding it to include issuing regulations or recommending them to the Governor in Council in several areas.

I say to Hon. Members that since the tabling of Bill C-72 we have had our officials developing regulatory proposals in consultation with a wide variety of federal institutions. In this way we will be able to undertake at the appropriate time consultations with the various people involved with official languages to meet the requirements of the Bill.

Treasury Board is providing the leadership with the Public Service to allow for the discharge of responsibilities under the official languages policy and under Bill C-72. We feel that we have demonstrated our commitment, not only through our legislative program but by bringing the Bill forward and putting it on the Order Paper. One thing that is far too often forgotten is this. Legislation is a matter of a Government taking a decision to do something and formulating that policy into a law. The law is then printed on what is called first reading.

This is a large country in which it takes some time to get information out. No matter how often it is published or referred to or how many brochures are printed it takes a while to disseminate this information. As with other Bills we have to have public debate and parliamentary debate. There has to be media debate as well. I make no apologies for allowing this debate to take place, or for allowing different interested groups to think about legislation and to get back to us.

My hon. friend wants to move forward quickly. He suggests a lack of commitment. I suggest to him that there is absolutely no lack of commitment. There is a commitment on the part of the Government not only to this Bill but to listen to people. Where it is proven that it is necessary to take into account ideas for changes in legislation we will act. We have done that before, and we intend to do it again.

I urge the House to reject this motion out of hand. In view of the number of Members that are here today, I am sorry that we will not vote on this so that we could reject it very vividly for my hon. friend and put into place the actual situation.

I wish to close with this comment. The Government is committed to an official languages policy as expressed in Bill C-72. If my friend would just be patient we will put it through with or without his co-operation.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I have a question to ask of the Minister which relates to his last comment. He said that his Government will ensure that this Bill will be passed. Can he tell us on what date the Bill will be put to the House for debate on second reading?

• (1710)

The Minister knows, as I know, that there are rules and regulations that have to be written to go along with the Bill. He knows that that will take time. To put those regulations in place in an appropriate amount of time the Bill must be passed soon. Is he ready to pass this Bill at second reading this week or at the beginning of next week? If he is, I will give him the assurance that the Opposition will co-operate to the best of our ability. Members of the Opposition will want to be heard. It cannot be as he suggests, one speaker from each Party. That may be sufficient for him. We do not accept that because at that time those who want to express a view on the principles of this Bill at second reading must be heard. It would not be proper for anyone to railroad this Bill through second reading with but one speaker from each Party.

Is the Minister ready to tell us when the Bill will be brought forward? Does he not appreciate that this is an urgent matter that presses upon the House so that the regulations that are required can be written into law before the next election?

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, with respect to the first question, I point out to my hon. friend that we are proceeding apace with legislation and trying to fit everything in, trying to give enough advance notice so that everyone can speak on particular Bills. Sometimes things go faster than I expect, and other times things are slowed down. I expect that we will be in a position to commence second reading within the next few weeks.

As to the second part of my hon. friend's question, I do not always expect that he listens to everything I say, but I believe that in the text of my remarks I pointed out that we have been looking at the regulations which would go apace with this Bill. Obviously, one of the reasons that legislation is printed is to allow for it to be debated, as I have suggested, in the media, in Parliament and by members of the public.

There is another place that legislation is debated as well, that is to say by the people who are in charge of administering it. I can assure my hon. friend that we are taking advice from people who have an interest in the legislation internally and that that process is proceeding.

While it would be nice to have the Bill passed and then start the process, it is fair to say, as with a great many things, that one starts with a review of the regulations, something that has already started. I think my hon. friend will find that when his Party finally lets this Bill pass we will proceed quickly with the regulations.

Mr. Robichaud: Madam Speaker, I only want to direct a question to the hon. Minister. Why should it take a few more weeks as he say? Another few weeks and we will adjourn for one week, which means some more delay. So, why wait since we, in the opposition, are prepared to go ahead with that bill right now, when every French organizations, Francophones outside Quebec, Alliance-Québec and Canadian Parents for French want the Government to go ahead with that piece of legislation as soon as possible? Why wait then? Why make us wait some more for a legislation that everybody wants?

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I have no problem with that piece of legislation. I have one with other laws. It is a matter of organizing all the legislation. But that one is not a problem. You should see our schedule.

[English]

—what we have passed and what we have in front of us, the Hon. Member will see that we are proceeding apace, as I indicated earlier, faster than the previous Parliament. When one reviews the record one will see that we are proceeding faster than have previous Parliaments as well. We have no problems whatsoever with our record.

I assure the Hon. Member that within the next weeks we will bring this forward for second reading. We will put it into committee. Hopefully, with his co-operation, we will be able to get it out of committee, through report stage and on to third reading.

The Government does not put items on the Order Paper to let them fall off it. Look at the record. Prior to No. 72 there were only nine that we have not passed. Three of those are the only ones that we have not got out of second reading. I am not going to apologize for a thing. We have passed everything up to No. 72 except for nine Bills, and three of those are in committee or at third reading stage. Look at our record. Do not worry, it will come.

Mr. Gauthier: I have one comment on the last statement of the Minister. It is, indeed, because the Opposition has been very co-operative that this Government has been able to pass its legislation. I would like to remind Members that on Friday we passed four pieces of legislation which are very important Bills. They were passed because we were in agreement with the Government on the purpose and objectives. That is the point of this debate. We think that the principle of this Bill is excellent. We agree with the Government. We said to the Government it has been three and a half years, what is it waiting for? The Government said that it would table the Bill.

I have a record of the questions that I have put to the Government over the last three and a half years. I could read them, but we would be here until midnight tonight. There have been 18 questions put in the House asking the Government to move on this subject. Finally, on June 25, 1987 the Government moved.

The Minister snaps his suspenders and says, "Aren't we good?" I say, "Yes, because we co-operated with the Government". We will co-operate with the Government at any time to pass good legislation, just don't try and pass bad legislation because we will not agree with that. We are saying to the Government now that this is good legislation, come across. We are offering co-operation, support, and our help. What else does the Government need?

Mr. Lewis: I heard my hon. friend count the number of times he asked the Government to pass this legislation. I wonder if he would be good enough to tell the House how many times, while he was here from 1972, he asked his Party to pass legislation. I wonder if he would make us privy to the number of times that he failed to get the Liberal Party to bring forward this progressive legislation. That we do not hear. That we do not want trotted out, do we, my friend from Ottawa—Vanier?

We remember his annoyance with the Liberal Government of the day that it would not move on progressive legislation. Tomorrow he will have an opportunity to deal with another piece of legislation. I challenge my hon. friend to give us that same co-operation tomorrow that he suggested he is prepared to give today.

All of our legislation has been good legislation. That is why it is passed so quickly.

Mr. Gauthier: May I just remind the Minister, in a very friendly way and co-operatively, that between 1982 and 1983 we actually passed in this House a constitutional amendment. It talked about what I called in my speech this morning "administrative bilingualism". It talked about parliamentary, judicial, and school bilingualism. Now it is all in the Constitution. That was a reaction to much pressure by some people in this country on the Government of the day. I agree with the Hon. Minister that sometimes one has to push and push hard to get majorities to move.

I am very happy to tell him today that, with the help of members of his caucus in the Official Languages Committee, we succeeded in getting the numerous reports of that committee. I think there are in total 17 or 18 reports that have been tabled over the years by the committee. Most of them were accepted by the Government, both the Government of Mr. Trudeau and the present Government.

That was a result of consensus, and because of that consensus we now have a Bill which is a good Bill. I am offering the Minister my full co-operation. But I do not think that it is proper for him to impose his iron fist and say that "no one speaks except those I decide". I say that everybody has the right to speak. That is democracy.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry).

• (1730)

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today, as New Democratic Party spokesman on the Official Languages Committee, to rise in the House and offer my comments on the motion of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). As the Minister of State indicated earlier, I am sure that one of the Hon. Member's motives in moving this motion was his frustration at not, at least not yet being able to determine the Government's legislative agenda. Nevertheless, Madam Speaker, it is a sign of the Hon. Member's continuing dedication to the issue of official languages that he felt he had to present the motion before the House today.

Madam Speaker, I see the former Joint Chairman of the Official Languages Committee is waiting his turn, and I don't deprive him of this opportunity to comment on the motion. The fact that this motion is before us today may also be partly due to an article that appeared in Le Devoir on Saturday which stated that the Prime Minister had decided to move quickly on the issue of official languages. According to reporter Michel Vastel, the Prime Minister's principal collaborator had indicated the Bill would be passed in a matter of weeks. I was surprised that Mr. Vastel reported this phrase Government spokesmen are very fond of using in referring to the Government's legislative agenda, especially since he went on to say that Francophone associations outside Quebec and the Commissioner of Official Languages were afraid the Official Languages Bill would die with the Government.

Madam Speaker, I have no reason to doubt the Minister of State's assurances that the Bill will be tabled in the House for second reading in a matter of weeks. However, ever since I became a Member of this House, I have seen weeks turn into months and months into years. I would rest a lot easier if the Government were to set a deadline for tabling this Bill.

Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, as a Member of his Government's caucus and in the present caucus of the Official Opposition in recent years, has worked to promote the cause of bilingualism in Canada. The preamble to the present Bill also contains many proposals that we in the New Democratic Party would have no trouble supporting. For instance, the federal Government undertook to achieve, with due regard to the principle of selection of personnel according to merit, full participation of English-speaking Canadians and French-speaking Canadians in its institutions. Also in the preamble, the government recognizes the importance of preserving and enhancing the use of languages other than English and French while strengthening the status and use of the official languages. I will return to this point later.

The Government is also committed to cooperating with provincial governments and their institutions to support the development of English and French linguistic minority communities, to provide services in both English and French, to respect the constitutional guarantees of minority language educational rights and to enhance opportunities for all to learn both English and French.

Madam Speaker, these are objectives which are no different from those of the NDP and the Governement, and I am sure the Official Opposition agrees to them. The problem of, course, is to start from these principles to come up in concrete terms to a bill that will be acceptable to this Chamber. I will not add my own suspicions, but the reporter that I quoted earlier says that a fraction of the Conservative caucus does not want the government to proceed with this Bill.

Madam Speaker, the specific question of course is: When will this Bill be studied at second reading and sent to committee? I and my Party cannot agree to a short Friday afternoon debate. The matter is important enough to justify a serious examination both in the House and in committee.

Madam Speaker, I wish at this point to briefly examine the history of official bilingualism in Canada. Everyone knows, everyone remembers, those who lived in Canada at the time, that there was some degree of political unrest, let us say, in our country and specially in the province of Quebec, with regard to society, culture and language and that all conclusions are not to be dismissed and that the issues raised are not all resolved yet.

We have had difficulty in the past to recognize what is now described as the French fact in Canada. Looking back on the work done some 30 years ago by the Tremblay commission in Quebec, we can recall that what was put to the test at the time was the province of Quebec's primary responsibility with regard to cultural and social policy and the survival of the francophone community in Quebec.

I will recall, if I may, a few experiences which occurred to me when I came to Canada almost 18 years ago. I came to Canada with the idea, the impression that I was coming to a bilingual country where I would discover that most people—most Canadians were bilingual. Obviously, I was therefore slightly disappointed and quickly lost any illusions I had in that regard. Once in Montreal, at Dorval airport as a new immigrant, I attempted to answer the immigration officer in French. After a brief exchange, he asked for my passport and as I handed it to him, he flattered me to some degree perhaps, madam Speaker, by commenting that he had thought I was a Belgian, whereas I was merely an English immigrant doing his very best to answer in French when questions were asked in French.

Having spent two years in Montreal, I have had the opportunity of course to develop an awareness of the true nature of things and I remain, to this day, somewhat astounded by the degree of solitude, as it is described, which I have encountered in that great city where I received such a warm welcome to Canada. Indeed, in the two years I spent in Montreal I did not meet more than a few Anglophones who, in my opinion, spoke French better than I. I was then struck by the fact that in that not exactly bilingual society, in that community where the two languages co-exist, Francophones have and have had to make greater efforts than Anglophones to make themselves understood.

I am speaking, Madam Speaker, of a psychological situation in which an individual finds himself when he realizes he has to learn and use a second language in most of his dealings with others, and realizes at the same time that someone else considers the knowledge of a second language as an option which he may accept or reject. If, Madam Speaker, there are people in our country who admit the existence of bilingualism gives Francophones a competitive edge in getting a job with the federal government or any other business, it is not up to us to conclude that advantage exists because French-speaking Canadians, Francophones, have been more or less forced in the past to make greater efforts than their English-speaking fellow citizens.

That need to make a much bigger effort is twice as great in communities where Francophones are a minority such as the Franco-Ontarian and Franco-Albertan, to name only those.

Madam Speaker, the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism recommended that Canada become officially bilingual, and for some twenty years now we have been working at improving the situation without getting to the level of improvement that would satisfy everybody. Presumably we will never be able to satisfy everybody in that context. However, I think we have come to a point where the reality of a bicultural, bilingual country is accepted and it is only as to the degree, the extent of that acceptance that we have major differences.

Madam Speaker, I would like to briefly return to the matter of other languages, which is referred to in the legislation. I have in my constituency a good 30 per cent of people whose mother tongue is neither French nor English. Most of them, perhaps 25 per cent, have a native mother tongue. I would like to ask Hon. Members and all Canadians to consider the situation of those who have a native mother tongue. We boast too much of being a bilingual country. Of course we are a multilingual country, but officially we are bilingual. It is not good enough for our natives to hear that myth of the two founding peoples which oftentimes is linked to bilingualism, because basically this is still a myth and a legend, an accepted story that is just the same offensive to some extent for members of the first nations in our great country.

Madam Speaker, my colleague for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) referred this morning to the situation, the inertia among institutions. This is a fact. I believe that inertia is very hard to overcome—it will always be a struggle to ensure the principle that services in the official language of one's choice should be available throughout the country. I am convinced we are grateful that in some areas of the country, there are only very small minorities whose mother tongue is the other official language and it is often very difficult, even among civil servants who want to serve the minority language community. Even for those civil servants this is often difficult in view of the volume of demand and the urge to maintain one's own strength, especially when they are of the other mother tongue and they were trained in the second language in that area.

Madam Speaker, we have institutions whose goal is to support and develop bilingualism in Canada, mainly of course the Commissioner of Official Languages and the Joint Committee. This is the only Joint Committee on which I sat and of which I wanted to be a part, in view of my own views on the Senate, but at any rate it is a Committee that did a very needed and demanding job, especially in the area of official bilingualism.

Madam Speaker, my colleagues and I have often noticed, during sittings of the committee, that there were shortcomings as far as bilingualism is concerned. In some Government or semi-Government institutions there is a mentality which tends to negate the equality of both official languages.

We have also to consider and correct the situation which exists in certain parts of the country, where it is extremely difficult for someone born outside the majority group, the dominant linguistic group, to find employment in the federal or provincial Public Service.

To conclude, Madam Speaker, I wish to emphasize the point I was making earlier. Bill C-72 is too important to be passed expeditiously by the House, following some kind of agreement, it is too important to be treated like that, but I would like the Government to react to the motion of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier and present its Bill to the House for second reading.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) has the floor.

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Madam Speaker, each time I rise to speak about linguistic issues, and especially the linguistic duality of Canada, I feel that I am touching on the very fabric of this country, on the best of what makes Canada what it is. It is Canada in its Sunday best. Today I would like to speak about Bill C-72. Naturally, I agree with my colleague for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), who praised this Bill with some reluctance earlier, but whose feelings I share to a very large extent. I believe that the Hon. Member would probably deserve the title of "First Defender of the Canadian Linguistic Duality", and I seriously believe that we should consider putting up a monument to him now rather than later, as, with the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), and many others from all political parties, especially the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier has shown constant determination to bring out the best in Canada make this country what all Canadians would like it to be.

I am therefore rather surprised at the position taken today by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier. I understand that he belongs to an Opposition party and that it is traditional for the Opposition to move motions that condemn the Government and to use terms such as inaction, lack of political will and hesitation. In this case the motion gives the impression of cowardice on the part of the Government by accusing it threatening the national unity because Bill C-72 has not yet been debated at the second reading stage.

Hon. Members will know that the fabric of this country is a very sensitive issue. It was not so long ago that this Government asked the Canadian provinces and federal parliamentarians to have a debate on our Constitution and to discuss the Meech Lake Accord. This was of critical importance. It also gave rise to major hesitations, even among the Liberals opposite, and to deep rifts and resignations. This is a sensitive issue, but what is surprising about the Meech Lake Accord is that, apart from recognizing the Canadian linguistic duality, it also recognized that we have concentrated but not limited French and English-speaking communities, and so on. What Bill C-72 proposes is an even greater commitment on the part of the federal Government. It takes political courage for a national party, a party which is represented throughout the country, in all provinces and all regions, to deal with these sensitive issues which become even more important, more real and more restricting at the political level. It is easy enough for anyone who belongs to a regional Party and who puts all or nearly all his eggs in the same basket to be unconcerned about the political reactions and feelings of people in the west, in the east or in the centre.

I think my colleague the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier could very well have introduced a much more positive motion, appealing to the better sentiments of Hon. Members and urging the Government to introduce the bill which has gained support from both the anglophone and francophone linguistic communities in this country. And as he said himself about his long struggle of almost 20 years, and I quote him textually: "It has not always been easy, but we did make some progress." Sad to say, Madam Speaker, when it comes to these questions we do have here in Parliament and elsewhere in this country certain people who have a somewhat dinosaurian mentality. I have no idea which planet these people inhabit, but they do have a dinosaurian approach. The blue dinosaurs are not alone, there are red dinosaurs as well, and probably a new kind of NDP dinosaurs, green, I believe—

An Hon. Member: Orange.

Mr. Hamelin: Orange. More subtle, particularly in Manitoba. We have to live with that. As Cicero put it: Quo usque tandem—How much longer?—abutere nostra patentia? How much longer will these dinosaurs try our patience? True enough. And instead of putting the question with a somewhat partisan approach as you did—be careful my dear colleague, this is a very sensitive issue. So many people are searching for platforms, the kind of carriages with which they can so easily find themselves in the ditch. That is what we saw in a recent provincial election. Some people are prepared to stand on platforms which rest on rather shaky foundations, the platform soon becomes a sled which hurtles down the slope, and someone gets hurt. That happens often in the case of cultural and linguistic issues. You may have noticed that every time someone endorses sensitive issues and tries to get people upset and to spread fear with scarecrows, of course, there are dinosaurs and the odd prehistoric monster on his tail for a while, but all such efforts lead to political failure because Canadians are more mature than we give them credit for. True enough, it is easy—

• (1740)

—with these questions to play games, to play politics—

[Translation]

It is so easy to play petty politics, to blame all our economic, social, political and even religious woes on Anglophones or Francophones. Go ahead! And it is so easy to play this game when an election is forthcoming, as it is now. You have nothing to lose and everything to gain by telling all sorts of stories to the Canadian people. Let me say it once more: there are, unfortunately, in every political party people who adhere to this pre-historic approach. They stir controversies and raise false issues. They start campaining with that, with the hope of attracting as many followers as possible by imputing ill intentions or designs to our community or another. Imagine that! There is something of which I should remind the enormous Anglophone community in North America: we are in Canada, and especially in Quebec, a small community of 8 millions lost in an ocean of over 250 million Anglophones. Are we as threatening as all that? There are two possibilities:

[English]

We are very strong and you are so weak.

[Translation]

People are not aware of their force? As a French-speaking nation in America, are we as threatening as that? It is unbelievable! We are a very small group of people and we can frighten 250 million people! It does not make sense. Really, it does not make sense. Yet, there are dynosaures who are travelling all around frightening people. If these Francophones were going to take away——our jobs, those bastards.

[English]

[Translation]

If these Francophones were going to deprive us of our economic security and jobs? That is frightening! They are threatening. What is this? They are disturbing people.

[English]

—annoying people, disturbing people.

I know that this attitude is disappearing slowly in this country, because we are developing more equality, more mutual respect and understanding with the Constitution and this legislation. It is true. This bill has been favourably received by both communities. Alliance Quebec, the Francophones outside Quebec, the Commissioner of Official Languages, the people interested in this issue have all said:

[English]

It is a step forward.

—towards national unity, a better understanding between the two solitudes which are trying to get together through Constitutional acts and legislations which are coherent, significant, inspired by justice, fairness and a desire to make Canada a country where two nations can live side by side and prosper.

Madam Speaker, I wish my colleagues who moved this negative motion could nevertheless transform it in an appeal to all the best elements in this country to get together in an act of faith and understanding in this country and its linguistic duality which makes us different and is responsible for Canada being what it is.

[English]

Linguistic duality means Canada, a real Canada, different from the American people, a country in itself. That is what dualistic reality means. We must believe in that. We must open our minds and our ears to other people, to other sensibilities. We need that piece of legislation for Canada, for the unity of Canada, for a better understanding between Canadians. We need that piece of legislation. Instead of blaming the Government—

I would rather call upon the Government and the Ministers, both English and French-speaking, to find the time as soon as possible for this Bill—which is a step forward for our country—to be debated in a dignified, clean and honest manner, in the presence of all Members and of all parties.

I call upon my French and English-speaking colleagues to support the Standing Joint Committee on official languages and all interested Members in asking the Prime Minister and all responsible Ministers to proceed as soon as possible with Bill C-72 which will provide for a better Canada.

Mr. Lanthier: Madam Speaker, my colleague has a reputation for eloquence and I thank him for it as well as for his colourful and sometimes forthright language.

However, as he mentioned Meech Lake at the beginning of his speech, I would like, with your permission, to take up and comment a point he has made and then ask for his opinion. Last Saturday, in a riding close to mine, that of Saint-Henri—Westmount, a mock Parliament meeting was held for all English-speaking school children of the region. It was a sorry state of affairs that they had to ask for help from the next riding because the representative for Saint-Henri—Westmount never showed up, and he is not likely to do so, as things stand now, even in his own riding. There is little danger, of course, that he would show up in the Saint-Henri part of the Saint-Henri—Westmount riding, since he voted against Meech Lake, which means that he voted against a united Canada.

On his home ground, however, in the English-speaking part—

Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a question, make a comment. An English-speaking girl of 18, from Westmount, asked me the following question. Just imagine the kind of education she received from her federal Member:

[English]

"Are you allowed to speak French in the House of Commons?"

[Translation]

That happened Saturday, in the riding of Westmount. As a Quebecer, I always thought that people from Westmount did not want to be Quebecers, but by God, the truth is they don't want to be Canadians. I answered to her in French: "Yes, not only is it tolerated that we speak French, but we feel right at home in the House of Commons which belongs to us as much as it belongs to English-speaking Canadians."

The time has come to pass that Bill with all the seriousness it requires. I would like to ask the Hon. Member who just spoke what he would have answered to that girl who asked me Saturday:

• (1750)

[English]

Are you allowed to speak French in the House of Commons?

[Translation]

Mr. Hamelin: Madam Speaker, I thank my colleague for his comment which shows, once again, how constant progress and greater interrelation between communities must take place. I think the slogan we should make ours and that probably underlies Bill C-72 is greater tolerance with respect for differences. We know things are quite different in Saint-Henri—Westmount. Through you and others, perhaps that young person should also learn greater tolerance with respect for differences. And to respect our differences, we must learn what they are, which is probably what she will do from now on.

Madam Speaker, with the permission of my colleagues, I would like to yield the floor for the few minutes remaining to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme.)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I see that the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) is seeking the floor. There is still a period of time for questions or comments. On the other hand, the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) had been trying to give the floor to the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), so I am in the hands of the House.

Mr. Stackhouse: Madam Speaker, I will respect the desire of the Hon. Member, which is also my desire, to hear from my friend across the floor. I rise briefly to pay a tribute to the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) for raising the debate up to a level above the immediately and merely partisan. I think he has given us all in this Chamber a vision of the Canada not only of tomorrow but, I am glad to say, of today.

I say that for this reason. We deal here with the principles of Bills. We may have our ideas about this or that clause which could be approved in committee, but we deal with the principle of a Bill, its aspirations and objectives. I come from a city where, 20 years ago, a bilingual street sign was erected by the Province of Ontario. It was a Conservative Government, I might add. Someone took a shotgun and fired at the sign. The sign understandably was taken down and there was no repetition. That was 20 years ago.

In that same city today we have public schools which are not only devoted to including French as a serious part of the curriculum, but three public schools which offer their entire curriculum in the French language. There is a line-up of parents who want their children enrolled. Not only is that true of young people, but in that same community only last week I visited a senior citizens' centre and what should I find but a language class engaged in French studies. That is the Canada of today and tomorrow.

I am very glad to have heard the Hon. Member for Charlevoix rise to that level in this debate.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming the debate. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) has the floor.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, I believe I shall not disappoint the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) by lowering this debate to the level of petty politics, for when my country is concerned, I have always claimed that we should, as he suggests, raise the level of the debate.

Rapidly, since I do not have much time, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) for the speech he delivered in the House. I would have liked to pay tribute again, as I did briefly this morning, to the Hon. Member who raised today's issue, my colleague for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). However, I shall not repeat the views I have already expressed. I also would have liked to pay tribute to d'Iberville Fortier and his predecessors. I would have liked to speak again about the precursors of this great Canadian debate, from Maurice Lamontagne to Lester B. Pearson, who launched the issue in the past and brought about the evidence contained in this volume of the Royal Inquiry Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism.

Indeed, I must say that I do dislike pessimists.

[English]

I do not think we should be pessimists. Great progress has been made in this country. Each Government has the obligation to take a step forward.

I do not intend to blame the past. I will not even blame the Government for not doing anything. We are just trying to be like the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) said. He made a special call to his own Government.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member called a few moments ago upon his Government and members of the Cabinet, hoping that they would find enough time in the agenda. Such is somewhat the aim of today's motion. We certainly intend to cooperate with the Government. However, let us not fear, as the Hon. Member for Charlevoix rightly said, a few opponents who might appear stronger than the vast majority in the House and the Canadian population. There is more generosity in this country, in each of its provinces . . .

[English]

There are more generous and understanding Canadians in this country than some Members of Parliament sometimes would like us to believe. They are more understanding of what Canada is all about than when I came in here 25 years ago. At that time we loved les Canadiens Français, as they used to say.

[Translation]

—the "little French Canadians", as we used to say! They loved us, and there are still some who love us, but crawling on our knees if possible. Well, it is not possible. As far as I am concern, I do respect my fellow citizens from English Canada. I expect them to stand for their rights. But in return, I expect also that they do understand that for me, for my fellow citizens from Quebec and for the Francophones outside Quebec, to have a country means to be able to identify themselves with that country, to feel comfortable in Canada, and they cannot have that kind of feeling if they are crawling before anybody. Never will my friends from Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin), from Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce), from Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), from Richmond—Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) and my other colleagues whom I heard in this debate, never will they crawl on their knees in Ottawa.

M. Della Noce: Never!

Mr. Prud'homme: My friend from Duvernay (M. Della Noce) is as straighforward as I. We are not here to beg. We have been told that Ottawa was the capital of our country. So, we must feel confortable here.

[English]

I always say , in the committee I have the honour to chair, try to be us for a week. Try to understand what it is to go through the process of functioning very often in someone else's mentality, in someone else's language, and to be on an equal footing with you, the rest of Canada, you, hon. colleagues who happen to speak the language that I am using now. It is only a question of understanding.

There will always be politicians of all kinds, I am ready to concede to the Hon. Member for Charlevoix, who will try to play to the division, who will scare the people: Could you imagine, Madam So-and-So or Mr. So-and-So, what would happen? Then it seems they are speaking for the majority of the Canadian people.

[Translation]

I think that when we appeal to their understanding and generosity, the people are willing to follow us. All we wanted to do today, Madam Speaker, in the minute I have left, all we wanted to do in our motion was to tell the government to go ahead. As you have heard today, you have support in your own party. Introduce this resolution, introduce this Bill C-72, and we will respond in a responsible manner. We will review it. We would like to make some excellent amendments at the committee stage, without changing the Bill too much. But I will now bring my comments to a close because the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (M. Gauthier) cares so much about this Bill, probably a lot more that many Hon. Members. He cares so much about it that he will certainly not allow its referral to committee and third reading to be blocked. But to say that only two or three Hon. Members could speak on it would show, Madam Speaker, a lack of patience and of responsibility. Why? Because speeches also trigger an educational process.

• (1800)

Every time I speak about Canada I receive telephone calls immediately from people who say that there should be more people speaking like this because it is educational and helps them to understand better what Canada is all about. If we have only one speech on a major piece of legislation we will not be able to help the process of education for Canadians. I hope we have achieved that today.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): As deeply as I regret it I must cut short the remarks of the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

Adjournment Debate

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION—NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY/CONSULTATION PROCESS

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Madam Speaker, in my short time in this House I have taken a keen interest in economic development programs, particularly programs under the auspices of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and the Ministry of State for Small Business, which is responsible for economic development programs for aboriginal people in Canada.

As a result, in August and again on September 25 I asked questions. I directed two specific questions on September 25 to the Government with regard to Department of Regional Industrial Expansion programs above the 60th parallel and the native economic development programs for aboriginal people throughout Canada.

In the first instance I asked the Government what the plans were, in view of the western diversification initiative and the Atlantic initiative, for the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion programs north of the 60th parallel. We were assured at that time that there would be special consideration given to northern programs and that they would not be subsumed under the western diversification initiative but that some other arrangements would be made.

At that time I was asking the Minister what the plans were. There were many rumours north of 60 about what would be proposed, and at that time I asked what the consultation process would be and what the specific programs proposed were. There were questions at the time as to whether the programs north of 60 would be treated by the one window concept as is being proposed under the western diversification fund, or whether it would continue to be dealt with separately.

It may not have seemed like a very large issue, but one must realize that in the North we are attempting to develop independence and self-sufficiency. Both administratively and in a policy sense, regional industrial programs are extremely crucial to the development of the North, not only in my riding of Yukon but in the Northwest Territories as well. I asked at that time what process was intended. To date there has not been definite clarity on that issue.

The second related issue about which I asked at that time was related to the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion consultation process proposed in July by the Minister. This was a six-month process. We are now getting near to the end of that six months.

• (1805)

At the time, the Assembly of First Nations made a decision not to participate in that process because it had received information which indicated to them that many of the decisions had already been made and the process would not be meaningful. Since then, I understand the Assembly of First Nations has been able to successfully address this issue with the Government and will be participating in the latter stage of this consultation process. That is a very positive step and I am glad that with the intervention of many people, the Assembly of First Nations will be able to participate in this process and be given due credence by the Government.

However, I believe my questions are still outstanding, the first of which deals with the DRIE funding and whether there will be the co-ordinated delivery agency. There are economic development agreements in the Yukon and Northwest Territories which are being renegotiated at this time. They have been of great assistance to the territories. In March, 1989, those programs will require renewal or revision.

I believe we have seen with the tourism subagreement and the various programs under the economic development agreement some real economic development possibilities in tourism and particularly small business which has been very favourable in my constituency.

It is no secret that aboriginal communities suffer from a high rate of unemployment. Therefore, programs such as the special ARDA and the Native Economic Development Program are especially important to ensure not just short term, band-aid programs but long term fundamental economic development programs that will create some economic stability in that community and enhance not only the economic life but the social fabric of aboriginal communities.

I am pleased to be able to report, after working with the Minister responsible for several months, that one of our large projects for the Yukon has received, a favourable consideration. I hope this will continue throughout the rest of Canada.

I call on the Ministers to clarify these two issues so that northerners and aboriginal people can go ahead with strong economic development.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to the Government's position with respect to ongoing DRIE programs. She will be aware that the consultative process is taking place and it would seem to be somewhat premature for us to attempt to prejudge the outcome of consultations before they are completed.

It is an important initiative about which the Government is very concerned. Indeed, it is an issue with which all Members of the House should take interest and indeed support.

As the Hon Member mentioned, many of these programs expire at the end of March, 1989. Therefore, we do have some time. The federal Government is most anxious to continue the support of these activities and to encourage even more native activity in these fields.

It is essential, however, to have the considered opinions of those groups involved so that they may be analysed and evaluated before we take decisions. The opinions of the aboriginal peoples in these areas are most important to the Government and, I am sure, all Members of the House.

Let me emphasize again that these consultations are taking place in a very open, frank and, above all, honest manner. The suggestion that AFN did not participate because it believed or had information that the Government had already taken decisions about the form or the nature of the ongoing programs is quite incorrect. No such decisions had been taken and no such decisions will be taken until the Government has fully evaluated the result of the consultations.

We are all pleased that there is so much interest on the part of native peoples in this government program. The Assembly of First Nations has recently, and very thankfully, agreed to participate fully and has joined with other organizations representing the Métis, the Inuit, the status and the non-status Indian communities that have been involved since the process was launched last summer.

DRIE's native economic programs are well known to the aboriginal communities. They have been utilized to a great advantage in all parts of the country. For example, until the end of January, 1988, five major projects totalling $6.7 million have been approved for the Yukon under the Native Economic Development Program. Indeed, throughout Canada under the NEDP over 386 projects have been approved, representing a total commitment by the federal Government of some $183.6 million.

We are delighted by the interest in these programs. We are delighted that the consultation process is ongoing. We are looking forward to the very real and meaningful suggestions of the native peoples as to just how these programs can best be changed to adapt to the future.

AGRICULTURE—SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM—COVERAGE OF IRRIGATION FARMERS.

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, I am very happy tonight to further raise some concerns I had, as I indicated in my question on November 26, 1987, regarding the Special Canadian Grains Program. At that time the concern had been expressed to me by many of my constituents that the irrigation farmers were not receiving recognition for the increased costs in increased yields unless they were in a specified irrigation district.

As a result of representations I made, and as a result of representations by many other Members of Parliament who had constituents in this same position, I am happy to report that the Government has recognized irrigation farmers, if they fall within certain criteria. That is to say that they must pay either a water tax or a water licence each year. Based on that recognition and the additional yields they produce that are recognized by irrigation districts as well as other irrigation associations and, in fact, crop insurance in Saskatchewan which provides additional coverage for irrigation farmers, they would receive additional payouts under the Special Canadian Grains Program.

I also want to indicate to the House that there were some other very important changes made to the Special Canadian Grains Program. We have included pulse crops so people who have diversified their production will not be penalized as they are in fact helping with the overproduction of wheat.

We have also included the honey producers in northeastern Saskatchewan, largely as a result of representations made by the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Scowen) and other Members in northern Alberta who have honey producers in their constituencies.

Another major benefit was the recognition of summer fallow. That is particularly true in the south central portion of Saskatchewan, the area which I represent, where producers tend to summer fallow half and crop half of their cultivated land each year. The recognition of summer fallow will no longer encourage people to seed additional acres simply to trigger a payout under the Special Canadian Grains Program.

I would like to read into the record the necessity for continuing the Special Canadian Grains Program. If we examine the record of both initial and final prices paid in previous crop years, we see a tremendous shortfall in income for our producers. For example, I would like to quote from the 1983-84 crop year. In that year the initial price for No. 1 hard wheat was $4.33 a bushel. The final payment that year, which was not received until January, 1985, was 73 cents a bushel. That payment, which totals $5.06 a bushel, is considerably more than producers are getting today. That year under the Western Grain Stabilization payment there was also a payment of approximately $5,500 to producers who had contributed the maximum.

If we follow the price along each year, we see that grain prices have declined considerably. In 1984-85 the initial price was $4.27 a bushel. The final payment was 58 cents a bushel. That year we also triggered a pay-out of $9,800 under the Western Grain Stabilization. That continued on until in the 1986-87 crop year, which is the crop year which ended July 31, 1987, when the initial price of wheat was $3.22 a bushel. The final payment which was recently announced on No. 1 hard high protein wheat was 4 cents a bushel. This indicates that prices are starting to strengthen, but very little as yet.

In the last crop year the Western Grain Stabilization Fund paid out a record payment of approximately $28,000 for a producer. Last year the Special Canadian Grains Program paid out approximately 40 cents a bushel to producers in my area of Saskatchewan.

In the 1987-88 crop year the initial price of wheat declined by 65 cents a bushel. In spite of the fact that we are making record pay-outs under the Western Grain Stabilization as well as the Special Canadian Grains Program, the Special Canadian Grains Program did not pick up the shortfall on the initial price drop.

The reason I am quoting these figures is that I wish the people of Canada generally, and particularly those people who may not be familiar with the plight of agriculture today, to realize how essential it is that we continue to make these pay-outs. In fact, under the Special Canadian Grains Program we may, as a result of shrinking dollars be forced to apply that subsidy only to that grain which goes into the international market-place. That idea has also been put forward.

I think it is safe to say that the consultation process does work when representations made by myself and other Members from western Canada to make changes in the Special Canadian Grains Program from year to year have been listened to. These changes have been made. I am very happy to report to my constituents that the input that I have made has been listened to.

I see you are signalling that my time is up, Madam Speaker. I will be pleased to hear from the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the Minister I want to briefly respond. I feel somewhat inadequate among those in this Chamber, particularly those distinguished Members from western Canada. The Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig) stands out in our minds as not only a champion but as a Member of Parliament who thoroughly understands the difficulties faced by agriculture, particularly western grain growers. Indeed, the Hon. Member is very modest. In large measure the changes are as a result of the input that he has made.

As the Member has noted, both last year's program, and under the 1987 extension to that program, supplemental payments are being paid to irrigators. It is particularly with respect to irrigators that this House, and indeed western people owe some considerable depth of appreciation to the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw.

Irrigators have substantially higher yields than "dryland" producers and therefore experience greater revenue loss as the dollar value and prices decline. The point made by the distinguished Hon. Member is of course well recognized and one of some continuing concern to the Government.

Under last year's program only irrigators within provincially defined districts in Alberta and Saskatchewan were eligible for the supplementary payments. Because of the Hon. Member's intervention and that of others, it was decided to expand eligibility for the supplemental irrigation payment to all provincially licensed irrigators and to those irrigators on Prairie Farm Rehabilitation projects. The only exception would be backflood irrigators.

It is believed that this modification to the program will make it fairer and more adequately reflect the reality of the irrigation system in western Canada. As usual the Hon. Member's comments were pertinent and knowledgeable.

VISIBLE MINORITIES—CITIZENS OF CHINESE ORIGIN—PAST INJUSTICES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, on November 26 I reminded Parliament that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had said recently on television that he wanted to be remembered for his tolerance and justice toward minorities. In view of this commitment and past promises, I asked why his Cabinet has prohibited the Minister responsible for multiculturalism from meeting with representatives of the Chinese Canadian National Council concerning past injustices against elderly citizens of Chinese origin who were subjected to legislated racial discrimination under the Chinese head tax and the Chinese Exclusion Act. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) defended the Prime Minister but admitted that he had no knowledge of the matter. He had forgotten the following Conservative election pledge:

> A Progressive Conservative Government would look forward to having discussions with representatives of the Chinese Canadian community regarding appropriate remedial action and the specific matter of financial compensation.

I first became aware of the Chinese head tax in 1983, when an elderly constituent brought his head tax receipt for $500 to my office and asked that Prime Minister Trudeau reimburse him since this discriminatory tax was contrary to the new Charter of Rights. I subsequently raised the issue in the House of Commons several times with several Liberal Ministers. The Minister of Justice finally acknowledged that there had been an injustice and that, although there was no legal obligation, he would look into the matter. He never did.

Meanwhile, news spread and over 1,000 head tax receipts were brought to my office. I eventually presented these to the newly formed Chinese Canadian National Council. The Council has Chapters in many cities, has received many more receipts, and is acting on behalf of approximately 700 surviving head tax payers now in their eighties and nineties.

The Chinese Immigration Act of 1885 imposed a head tax on all Chinese seeking to enter Canada. By 1903 it was increased to $500, the price of a home in those days. It was a debt that many immigrants worked all their lives to repay. The Canadian Government netted over $23 million from this discriminatory policy.

In 1923 the head tax was replaced by the Chinese Exclusion Act, which deliberately ended immigration from China until it was repealed in 1947. Many lonely men were never reunited with their wives and children who had to remain in China.

As a Canadian I abhor the early injustices that were imposed on Chinese immigrants, those who worked for a pittance and in many cases died to build our railroads. I am deeply ashamed of early British Columbians who referred to the "yellow peril" in posters, who practised racism and limited the place where Chinese Canadians could live and work. I find it hard to believe that it was not until 1947 that Canadians of Asian origin finally were given the right to vote in Canada.

Today Vancouver is thriving because of the Chinese community which contributes highly trained professionals and leaders in all aspects of life, with the unfortunate exception of politics. Our mainstream community is enriched in many ways by contributions from Chinese culture, technology, business, and family life. However, the present is marred by memories of our disgraceful past.

I ask that the all-Party parliamentary committee which was approved by the Government begin meetings with the CCNC immediately to discuss the head tax issue and to recommend government action which should include, first, formal acknowledgement of the injustices of the Chinese head tax and the Chinese Exclusion Act; second, compensation to individual survivors who are now in their eighties and nineties and, third, recognition of the community suffering by the establishment of a community fund.

I ask that the Government representing all Canadians take steps immediately to fulfil its 1984 campaign promise and acknowledge and compensate past injustices so that our children of all races will know that we really believe in the Canadian Charter of Rights. It is urgent the Government act now since fewer and fewer survivors remain.

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister Responsible for Multiculturalism): Madam Speaker, I too would like to respond to the Hon. Member for Vancouver-East who, on November 26, has shared with us her concern for the head tax that was levied on immigrants of Chinese origin at the turn of the century.

I fully understand the deep concern of the Hon. Member for that important question. I am not very proud either of that chapter in the history of our country and I am pleased that the federal gouvernment has already indicated its intention to find a means to express the deep regrets of Canadians and their government relatively to the injustices of the past.

I would simply like to tell my Hon. colleague that injustices have been done not only to Canadians of Chinese and Japanese origin, but also to Canadians of Italian origin. I will not go into details, but there were also injustices done to the Ukrainians and others that have not yet been revealed.

The contribution of all those Canadians, be they of Chinese or other origin, has nevertheless been fantastic. The contribution of Canadians of Chinese origin to the building of this country for 125 years has been invaluable in all sectors. This government recognizes the key role that community has played and continues to play in the economical, social and cultural growth of this country.

Madam Speaker, it was with pride that I joined the Secretary of State when, on December the 1st, he introduced Bill C-93, on multiculturalism in Canada, saying that this Bill is in itself a new commitment on the part of the Government of Canada. Its objective is to help our Canadian nation create a kind of society where discrimination, as in the case of Canadians of Chinese or some other origin, will no longer be tolerated. Those shameful incidents which regretfully were part of our history should never ever occur again. Once passed, this legislation on multiculturalism in Canada will guarantee racial and cultural equality. Moreover, this new legislation will allow us to face today's realities and tomorrow's needs.

Madam Speaker, in the brochure entitled Multiculturalism—to be a Canadian, which was circulated when the Bill was introduced, we namely find sentences which speak for themselves:

> By chosing to turn towards the future, the Government does not try to hide the painfull injustices of the past, to erase the shame nor to minimize the feeling of frustration, of humiliation or of indignation felt by the members of different minorities. They do not claim that any trace of cultural, racial or religious discrimination will disappear from Canadian society overnight. No, their intention is to appeal to moral values and generosity, considering that the vast majority of Canadians, both from today and tomorrow, will not settle for anything less.

We also have an obligation towards the past, Madam Speaker. In this regard, the Government is quite prepared to deal with injustice against minorities. We should recognize, however, that the search for solutions is not an easy task, since the incidents we are talking about today happened at different stages of our history to various degrees. This is why we must examine the matter very carefully.

Still I can assure the Hon. Member that the Government will indeed give very special and very particular consideration to the question of the Chinese head tax.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.30 p.m.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

TABLING OF REMISSION ORDERS

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 67(2), I have the honour today to table in the House three tariff remission orders each of which remits over $20 million during a five-year period.

While the Government made a commitment to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts in respect of income tax remissions, I am tabling these tariff remission orders in the spirit of openness and transparency and because of the similarity between the two types of remissions.

PETITIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 from a number of constituents who point out that the Conservative Government does not have a mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States.

They believe that the trade agreement negotiated by the federal Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership and to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians or to equalize the opportunities between the regions of the country.

They also point out that the proposed deal would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future which thereby undermines our ability as a country to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

Since this denies Canadians the secure access to the U.S. market that was the key objective in these trade negotiations from the outset, and since it also threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs, they are asking Parliament now to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement in a general election.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present four petitions to the House.

Your petitioners humbly declare that the Mulroney Government has sold out Canada and received nothing in return, whereas Canadian industries are still not protected from U.S. trade laws, whereas the United States obtained everything it wanted in all key sectors, especially agriculture, energy, auto trade, financial services and investment, whereas thousands of Canadian jobs are threatened and the Conservative Government has not provided for any adjustment assistance for Canadian workers.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to denounce the Government for signing the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement.

• (1110)

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106 I have the duty and the honour to present a petition signed by a number of Canadians who are expressing their concern about the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal.

They are concerned about the impact on our sovereignty, about losing effective control of our foreign ownership, development of Canadian energy resources, and on and on.

In conclusion, the petitioners call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, again I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of Canadians who express their concern with the trade agreement that has been negotiated by the Conservative Government. They believe that it threatens the very fabric of the Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, and to equalize opportunities between the regions.

Therefore, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade arrangement during a general election.

COMPULSORY INSTALLATION OF AIRBAGS, IN THE FRONT SEATS, AND SHOULDER SEATBELTS IN THE REAR SEATS OF AUTOMOBILES

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present eight petitions signed by 201 Canadians. These petitions are in addition to the others, 31,646 all told.

The petitions originate from Theodore in Saskatchewan, Quebec, Montreal, London in Ontario, Saint-Félicien, Kingston, Sussex in New Brunswick, Magdalen Islands, North Battleford, Vancouver, Ruddell in Saskatchewan, the Lower St. Lawrence, Gaspé, Saguenay and Lac-Saint-Jean regions.

The petitioners are aware that since 1974 the federal road safety regulations authorize the installation of inflatable airbags for passenger car drivers and that this device would reduce the number of deaths and serious injuries.

Therefore the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to make compulsory the installation of airbags for the protection of front seat passengers and adjustable shoulder-waist safety belts for back seat passengers.

[English]

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, the petition of a number of Canadians has been approved and certified correct as to form and content.

The petitioners state that the very fabric of Canadian sovereignty is threatened by the proposed Mulroney-Reagan trade deal, and that the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal will reduce Canada's ability to plan the economic, social, and cultural programs that Canadians need.

For this, and a number of other reasons expressed here, the petitioners ask Parliament to ensure that a national debate takes place on the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal, and that this debate result in a national general election before such an agreement is signed.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Madam Speaker, I too have the honour of presenting a petition on behalf of a large number of Canadians who feel that the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal will destroy Canadian sovereignty.

They ask that this matter be the subject of a general election in order that the will of the people can be expressed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Before we give the Parliamentary Secretary permission for this, I would like to ask him how much he gets paid a year for not answering questions?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, ATLANTIC CANADA, 1987

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, January 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I am grateful for the opportunity to speak to this legislation. Our caucus has taken the position that we support the legislation, although we have many concerns with it and with the Government's action in this particular area. It is not a new concern. This is something that we have been concerned about not only with this Government but also with the previous Government.

I know you were not a Member of Parliament, Madam Speaker, when the Liberals formed the Government in the years between 1980 and 1984, but you will recall that in those years the Liberals talked about a western development fund of some $4 billion. A certain percentage of that money was supposed to go to the native people in western Canada. That became a phantom fund. It was promised and repromised. Certainly Ministers of the Liberal Government, the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), and others went to western Canada and talked about how valuable that fund would be for developing western Canada, and how important that fund would be for the native people of western Canada. Yet that money was never received.

That is one of the concerns that we have when we look at this legislation. I know that we are not alone. This legislation which is centred in Atlantic Canada has created many questions for people in that region. They are wondering if there will be new money, or is it merely the situation, which we believe to be true, that this is money that has already been taken from the region as a result of cut-backs and other programs. We are in a situation now where some of that money is being promised back to Atlantic Canada as if it was new money. That is an unfortunate situation. Of all the regions in this country that need more funding and deserve more funding, there is not one that deserves and needs it more than Atlantic Canada.

As a Member of the New Democratic Party caucus I have travelled throughout Atlantic Canada and gone through all the provinces there. I have gone to Labrador. I recognize how great that need is. It is disappointing to see a Government which has actually taken money from regional development over the last three and a half years now promising that it will do something new.

As I stated, we support the legislation because we recognize the need to do something in Atlantic Canada. But we have some legitimate concerns. I am sure when this legislation gets to committee, which I suspect it will do either some time today or tomorrow, through our caucus spokesperson, the Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris), we will have an opportunity to explain what type of changes must be made to this legislation.

We believe that the only way any region of this country can be developed, whether it is the west, or a northern riding like mine in Churchill, Manitoba, or whether it is Atlantic Canada, is by having the people in the region make the final decisions. If we are in a situation, which this legislation allows for yet again, where recommendations come from the region but the decisions are made on a political basis in Ottawa whenever the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) can spare the time to go to Atlantic Canada and make an announcement, then we are not achieving anything new. That is the problem.

I understand that Mr. Rino Volpe, who is a member of the Atlantic Advisory Committee, told a class of business students at the University of Moncton just yesterday that he is frustrated by the set-up of the agency because it does not adequately take business interests into consideration. He is already considering resigning from the board. He shares the concerns expressed earlier by the President of the Atlantic Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Rick DesBrisay, who called the Atlantic Advisory Committee a toothless tiger.

Here we are with a member of the advisory committee already considering resignation and with the President of the Atlantic Chamber of Commerce calling the committee a toothless tiger. Why are they saying these things? It is because they believe that it has no decision-making power.

It is interesting to note that Mr. Volpe was also speaking as the President of the Conseil Economique du Nouveau Brunswick. He was not only expressing his individual concerns but the concerns of the group which he represents. Also in his speech yesterday he explained that the advisory committee would have no say over the selection of public servants in the agency. His primary concern is that decisions will not be made in the region.

I have gone through this kind of system before. The Government is just setting up a new form of regional decision making. Since 1977, before I was a Member of Parliament, in one form or another we have had a northern development agreement in my riding. We have had an agency in the North of federal government people working with provincial government people, and we have an advisory committee which reports to a federal Minister and to a provincial Minister. The concept is good, that we would have representation from the native people and from the various groups which composed northern Manitoba. They are an advisory council, just like this piece of legislation calls for. However, the problem is that in the regulations and in the way it is set up, all they do is give advice. They do not make decisions. Therefore we in northern Manitoba are in the situation which Mr. Volpe and Mr. DesBrisay have already expressed concern about. They are concerned that they will be in the same position, that decisions will not be made in the region, and that decisions will be made for political purposes. I know how badly that works.

As the Hon. Member for St. John's East expressed so eloquently in the House, if one is to sit on the committee and work with the people making representations, and if one has some understanding of the people of Moncton, of Saint John, of St. John's, of Charlottetown, or of any other community whether it be Halifax or Cape Breton, one must realize that the business people who will be making presentations have talked with the local mayor and council and with the local labour council. They understand what is needed and what can work in the region. Surely to God we should be in a situation where the people who serve on these advisory committees have the ability to make decisions.

I recognize that the final dollars are federal dollars and that the federal Government and Cabinet should have ultimate control as they have ultimate responsibility for what is happening in any of their programs. However, that does not mean that we cannot have decision making taking place in the regions. The regions of the country are developed by co-operative community development.

I can understand the federal Government, through its Ministers and the cabinet decision-making process, wanting and needing the right to say yes or no. However, it should not be saying yes or no to each and every project. It should be saying yes or no to the framework of the legislation, what kinds of programs are acceptable, and what kind of guidelines are necessary. That should be the function of the Government, and that is all the Government should be responsible for. I believe that the Government is responsible for its programs and that it should be in a position of setting the guidelines. I know that you realize, Madam Speaker, that the people in your region are capable of making decisions which are necessary for the region. It does not make sense to me that we should set up a structure where we bring in very talented people who know their regions only let them give advice. I support Mr. Volpe and Mr. DesBrisay when they say that it is a toothless tiger. Unfortunately this is happening yet again.

As I said earlier, since 1977 we in northern Manitoba have had a very similar program. We have gone through the growing pains. At present we have had an extension of our third agreement. We know that we will be renegotiating a new agreement over the next two years, and we know how necessary it is to take the decision-making process from Ottawa and put it within the province or, even better, within the region involved. Obviously, with regard to Atlantic Canada, that is the situation which needs to be developed.

I am afraid that we will be in the situation which I expressed earlier of having decisions made on a political basis only. I am afraid that, because there is pressure at a certain time, the money will be used to help Cape Breton one year or Moncton the next year, and that all sorts of announcements will be made just prior to the upcoming election on the basis of the best information available, not on the basis of information that would be there had the power to make decisions been given to the people of Atlantic Canada.

One problem which all of us face as Members of Parliament is that decisions are not made in the House of Commons. Decisions are often made not only by senior federal government employees but quite often by federal government employees. The reason for this is that we pass legislation such as the measure before us. We are setting up an advisory committee which can give advice. We have a federal Government which is dissatisfied with its situation in the political polls at this time and is obviously very concerned about its ability to be re-elected. Real decision making is not made by Members of Parliament or by people in the regions. They end up being made by people working in the departments.

I have no problem with federal government employees giving advice on which programs are good, which programs are not good, what kind of changes should be made to programs, or whether there should be training components in programs. All these things make sense, and we are hiring people to give us good advice. However, the problem is that federal government employees are working within their own regime. They are not necessarily emotionally involved in the development of a region. They are very often concerned about what they believe their Minister may or may not want. They are also concerned about what are their opportunities for advancement.

I have seen the situation within my own riding. I am sure people from Atlantic Canada, the Member for St. John's East, for instance, can give other examples of people making decisions which might make sense in Toronto, Ottawa or Winnipeg but do not make sense in the regions which they actually affect. We are often in a situation where programs do not make sense for a region. I can give all sorts of examples.

Let me talk about Canada Mortgage and Housing. We have the same rules with regard to the percentage of income that must be given to the Government if people are in federal government sponsored housing—it may be a provincial government program as well—whether they live in Toronto or northern Manitoba. I will explain that a little further. The federal Government requires that if you are living in a subsidized house, a house the Government has helped build, 25 per cent of one's gross income must be used to pay the mortgage. This makes sense in some areas where there is competition and other housing people can go into. But what if you make a large income and you are paying 25 per cent of it to live in a house, but your income goes up and up and up. All of a sudden you do not want to pay 25 per cent of your income to live in a CMHC sponsored house? What if you decide to move elsewhere?

This is a lovely principle, and it makes sense to some degree in the Torontos, Montreals and Ottawas of this world. But when you get into a northern community, whether northern Saskatchewan, as my friend from Prince Albert would talk about, northern Quebec or in some of the remote areas of Atlantic Canada, and the only housing available is federal Government sponsored housing where there is no land available, or serviced lots available, what then? You are stuck with this rule that makes sense in Toronto and Ottawa where options are available for people to move out.

In my riding there are houses with no water, no sewers, no municipal services. Because of the 25 per cent rule people are paying more for what could basically be called a cardboard shack. They are paying $500, $600 or $700 a month for a house without water, without sewers, without any of the services that we take for granted, a house which may have only 15-amp power. We say «You can build your own house.» But there are no lots available. You can have your own water and sewer but that is impossible because of the nature of the land.

The federal Government's rule—I do not want to pick on the Conservatives although they deserve all the picking on they can get—is a rule the Liberals brought in and it is the rule which the Tories have not yet had the political courage to change. The rule is that one pays 25 per cent of one's gross income for a federal government sponsored house regardless of where one lives in this country and regardless of whether there are other options available.

I was at a housing conference in northern Manitoba just a week and a half ago. People complained up and down about the problems. They complained that they cannot build log houses under the federal government program. They complained about the houses which might look nice in a southern suburb, a suburb of Toronto, a suburb of Calgary or any of the other communities I have mentioned earlier, but which make absolutely no sense in the communities in which they are being built. CMHC is a national program. The rules make sense in some parts of the country but they do not make sense right across the nation.

We are again setting up a new agency. We have very talented people in the Atlantic region who are willing to serve on the advisory committee and who understand how development should take place in their own regions. But we are denying them the real decision-making power. Why are Conservatives, who in 1979 talked about a community of communities, doing exactly as the previous Government did? Why are the Conservatives following exactly the same structures as the federal Liberals did in the programs which they developed for northern Manitoba?

I can go back to my speeches of 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982 and 1983 and feel like I am making almost the same speech again. I really wonder if there was an election in 1984. It is so typical, Madam Speaker. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) makes his big promise during his Atlantic swing. When we finally get the details and we look at them—thanks to our new Member for St. John's East who has given us very good advice—I do not see any differences whatever from what the Liberals did in my riding through the Northern Development Agreement during the middle part of the 1970s and the early part of the 1980s.

I remember a Liberal Cabinet Minister, Pierre De Bane, who is now in the Senate, saying that the Liberals needed more political credit for what they were doing in northern Manitoba. Therefore they set up an office and a program. I looked at what he did and I look at what the Government is doing now and it is exactly the same.

I hope when this legislation gets to committee—we support the concept and principle of money going into Atlantic Canada because it is so necessary—that the Government and government Members who will be serving on that committee will allow the amendments necessary to make sure that the decisions are made in Atlantic Canada, that the community and co-operative development which the people in that region want can proceed and we do not have yet another political exercise.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, would the Hon. Member elaborate on some of the very fine points he has made so that the Government could have the benefit of his experience and insight into these matters?

The Member touched on the very important matter of political patronage being a major feature of this type of development where a board or political appointee winds up advising the Minister to do the patronage thing. He talked about the problem of having new money available for these programs. Often the Government announces spending that is already in place basically in an attempt to deceive people. The Member from Churchill (Mr. Murphy) mentioned that this program has little support from the Atlantic Chamber of Commerce and a number of others.

Will the Member develop these points so the Government could have the benefit of his knowledge and experience of the Manitoba situation?

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly). He always asks some good questions. Unfortunately he never tells his caucus Whip what questions he is going to ask before he does so. Obviously this is not the situation of a planted question and a planted answer. Let me express some of my concerns.

There is an estimation that in Atlantic Canada as a result of the federal government cut-backs over $1.5 billion annually has been cut from various federal government programs going into Atlantic Canada. The amount of money here, although as usual the federal government likes to talk about $1 billion for this program and a billion for that program, is a billion dollars over five years. I have quoted the Chamber of Commerce and others. I have not been quoting those groups that are normally considered to be New Democratic supporters. The Government has taken away $1.5 billion from the various programs that used to benefit Atlantic Canada and has replaced that with a program which will give Atlantic Canadians at best $200 million a year. The net effect is that money is being lost.

I see that the Minister in charge of the western diversification office has entered the House. He understands that the same thing applies in western Canada. He now has a grand political machine and he is in a position of making decisions, but the people in the west know that they have suffered as a result of government cut-backs. They also object to the fact that the decision making will be done in Ottawa.

That is not just my perception or the perception of the Chamber of Commerce. According to The Globe and Mail of June 27, 1987, Senator Lowell Murray, the Minister in charge of this agency, said that the final decisions will be made by him in Ottawa. Those were his words.

I do not understand why there is a political need to have all decisions made in Ottawa. It seems to me that since the Government appoints the advisory board, it already has control through its ability to say who will be on the board and what groups will be represented. That advisory board is accountable to a Minister. The Government already has control.

I also recognize that the Government is in a position to set regulations and pass legislation. It has the ultimate control over the purse, as it should. Why not let people in the regions make the decisions? That is what we are asking for and that is what we believe is so fundamental to the entire process.

Mr. Young: Makes sense.

Mr. Murphy: The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), a Member from the community of Toronto which I have been attacking for the last little while, has said that it makes sense.

If the Government wants real political credit in Atlantic Canada, western Canada or the North—

Mr. Skelly: How about the Pacific coast?

Mr. Murphy: Even the Pacific coast. The Hon. Member is from the Pacific coast and his riding spans the waters. The Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River understands what I am trying to say.

If the Government wants political credit, then it should make the change. It should not be like the Liberals. It should not be afraid to let the people in the regions make decisions. It should not want political credit for every grant that is given, and grants are not given unless a cabinet Minister is travelling through the area or the Prime Minister attends an opening of winter games or something of that nature. The Government should trust the people in Atlantic Canada, western Canada and even the City of Toronto to make the decisions which make sense for the regions.

I challenge the Minister of Indian Affairs (Mr. McKnight), who is also in charge of the western diversification office, to let that happen. Do not make sure that the Prime Minister is travelling through western Canada before making promises. As we know, the Prime Minister has actually stopped in Manitoba twice since 1984. We believe he came in the middle of the night because he has not had the courage to come to Manitoba in the daytime.

The people in the regions know their regions and they know what programs will work. If they make the decision, we will not get stuck with a bunch of political patronage and opportunism, all those things which create so much havoc in the House of Commons. We are saying to the Government that it should let the people who know the regions make the decisions.

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Madam Speaker, I listened to the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), especially when he said that he approved of the concept of this new agency and of directing funding to the Atlantic region, and that he believed in regional development. As you know, government contracts play a vital role in regional development, and not long ago, New Brunswick was awarded a contract for the frigates. I believe that throughout this debate, his Party agreed the frigates should be awarded to New Brunswick. Yesterday, however, the press reported a statement by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) in which he said, and I quote: «If it forms the next Government in Ottawa, the New Democratic Party of Canada will reverse the present Government's decision on the frigates and award part of this contract to shipyards in Quebec, NDP Member Michael Cassidy promised.»

Now we know there was a reason for awarding the contract to New Brunswick. First of all, Saint John Shipbuilding made a bid that could compare with that of any other shipyard in Canada. It was the best price. And we also know that the unemployment rate in New Brunswick is pretty high and indeed higher than in many other parts of the country.

We also know that under this contract, nearly 50 per cent of the money will be spent outside New Brunswick.

I therefore want to ask the Hon. Member who just spoke whether his Party has now decided to reconsider the frigates contract. I find that rather astonishing.

[English]

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, I am actually very glad the Hon. Member brought this up. Without telling secrets about our caucus executive meeting this morning, I can say that this issue was discussed. I will not go into the details of it, but the gist of the decision that was made—

Mr. McKnight: Why not?

Mr. Murphy: The Minister who is in charge of the western diversification office, who is also the Minister of Indian Affairs when he has the time, has asked why not. If he is willing to tell us what happens in Cabinet, I am willing to tell him what happens in caucus, but I do not think that that was the gist of the question.

We are very concerned with how decisions are made. People like me who are from Manitoba are very concerned about the way the decision on the CF-18 was made. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) said in the House that it would cost only $3.5 million or $4 million more to build in Quebec, and on technical advice he said that both groups were pretty well equal. As we know, the information that came out over Christmas as a result of the access to information law indicated that it cost a heck of a lot more for the contract to go to Quebec. One estimate was that it cost $65 million more, but that was denied by the Conservatives. The Chairman of the Conservative caucus, the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay), said that it did not cost $65 million more for the contract to go to Quebec, it cost a lot less. He said that he actually knew the information but no one had ever asked him. Someone finally got around to asking him. He said that it would only cost $26 million more for the contract to go to Quebec.

We have said in the House and will say to members of our caucus when they step out of line that these decisions should not be made on a political basis. They should be done after an open and honest tendering system, regardless of where you live. Whether it is Saint John, and I have toured the dry docks there and I know they are very good facilities, or Montreal or Winnipeg, you have to know that you are playing on, to use an expression of the Prime Minister, a level playing field. You must know what is going on. Not like the poor people of Manitoba who bid on a contract they did not have a hope in hell of getting. Let us make the system fair, that is what we are saying.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I must interrupt the Hon. Member because the time for questions and comments has now expired.

As we are resuming debate, I must advise the House that from now on, according to our rules, the speeches will be subject to a 10-minute limitation.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Madam Speaker, 10 minutes is certainly enough time in which to talk about this Bill, I can tell you that. After reading the Bill and after looking at some of the promises made by the Government in introducing it, one would have to come to the conclusion that it is perhaps not even worth 10 minutes. The organization itself is nothing more than a political structure or political announcement to try and give the people of Atlantic Canada the impression that the Government is really interested in the problems of Atlantic Canada. That is all it is.

As the Bill itself says, all it will do is co-ordinate matters related to the federal Government in Atlantic Canada. In other words, all of the announcements being made regarding this agency are being made with funding which is already in place through an existing agency such as DRIE which we all know about. This $1.05 billion is really nothing to shout about at all.

A good indication of the importance of this agency is that the person in charge of the agency, the most senior person, the ultimate boss, should have been a cabinet Minister but is not. Perhaps we have lost sight of that. He is not even a cabinet Minister in the House of Commons. This glorious new Bill is not sponsored in the House of Commons by a cabinet Minister. The person responsible is a Senator.

The Senator the Government chose to head the agency—the Minister said he is the Hon. Member for—

Mr. McKnight: He is a member of the Cabinet of the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Baker: The only real attribute of the Senator that I can see is that he is from New Waterford, Nova Scotia.

I believe you have to direct your questions in the House about this agency to the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). He is answerable in the House on behalf of Senator Murray who has been put in charge of this Bill. That is an indication of how important this agency is to the Government of Canada.

If you look at the opinions expressed by some reputable people in Atlantic Canada on the CBC radio this morning, they quote a Mr. Volpe, President of the Economic Council of New Brunswick, past President of the New Brunswick branch of the Canadian Manufacturers Association, Vice-President of the Chamber of Commerce of Edmundston, and member of the Board of Directors for the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council. He sits on the New Brunswick Forestry Products Commission as well. He is quoted this morning as saying that the agency is not working. It is really not doing what the Government of Canada said it was going to do. It is really not originating the ideas from Atlantic Canada and funding those ideas. In other words, it is not working, according to Mr. Volpe.

I forgot to mention that Mr. Volpe is a government appointee to the board in charge of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. He is on the board appointed by the Government. When you have a member of the advisory board appointed by the Government saying the agency is not working, then obviously something is seriously wrong with the agency.

That is all there is to say about the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. They should call it the Atlantic Canada overblown agency. All we have heard about it is rhetoric from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Ministers from Atlantic Canada, and there is nothing there. There is absolutely nothing at all in the Bill that is going to help Atlantic Canada. Not one single thing is there, not one thing. In every program that you see there has been a reduction in the amount of money going into Atlantic Canada.

If the Government of Canada is really interested in doing something for Atlantic Canada, it would address the inshore fishermen of Newfoundland who are up here today trying to get a meeting with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon), trying to find out why the Government of Canada increased the quota of northern cod. In other words, it is robbing the industries around Newfoundland of fish. It is bowing down to the Government of France.

Yesterday or the day before when France announced that it was going to catch 26,000 tonnes of codfish, the Government just bent over backwards and said it can't do anything about this because it is the Government of France and the French are over here catching Canadian fish. Oh, we cannot send out a boat to try and arrest them. Oh, no. That is the Government of France. However, if that were a Nova Scotian or New Brunswicker or Prince Edward Islander or Newfoundlander or Quebecer, oh, yes, drag them into court and charge them.

The whole direction of the Government of Canada is off. It walks in here with this Bill and says the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, what we call the Atlantic Canada overblown agency, is the new future of Atlantic Canada. We are saying that the Government is fouling up everything else. The future is sitting out there right now. All it has to do is address the problems it has created.

I know my 10 minutes are about up and I thank the House for its indulgence. As I say, there is nothing to this Bill. It will go down in history as being a nothing Bill with 300 employees and no budget. The Government is underspending for this year, according to the Prime Minister, because the Government does not want to give the agency the authority to spend any money.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Madam Speaker, I must commend the Hon. Member for that eloquent and hard-hitting speech. I think he really elucidated the shallowness of the present Government in its dealings with Atlantic Canadians.

Certainly the Bill before us today can only be described as disappointing. When the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) spoke, he spent some time outlining the whole purpose of these kinds of things from the Government's point of view. It is a mechanism to try and obtain political credit.

It is interesting that one of the things which was not included in that discussion is that the Government has to do something significant before it can expect any political credit. Certainly the Bill before us today, proposing to set up an Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, is not doing anything constructive.

People in this House have spoken of the shortcomings, the fact that the board itself has no decision-making power, that Atlantic Canadians will not have an opportunity to determine which projects are appropriate for their region and which are not. In fact, many of those projects will be decided on the basis of political patronage. The Government has had a litany of patronage arrangements which have done irreparable harm to the Government. I cast my mind back to the tuna fish scam and the clam scam. Today we have what is being labelled as the lobster scam. Essentially it is more important for the Government to fill the pockets of its friends than to take care of the needs of Canadians. With some well-known pork-barrellers sitting on the board of this agency, political patronage once again looms its ugly head in the distribution of Government benefits. Therefore, it is an element of very serious concern raised by many people in this House.

There is talk of funding in the order of $200 million a year over a five-year period, something in the order of $1 billion. We have seen this operate in other areas before. In order to obtain political credit for doing nothing the Government simply reannounces existing spending programs or chops a program and then uses the funding for an equivalent kind of program under the guise of creating something new, of indicating an interest in the area and acknowledging its need, while only reshuffling existing dollars into the area. There is a great deal of concern that the new agency and the projects it recommends will not be receiving new dollars, that existing dollars which are allocated to meet certain needs in the region will be spent from a political patronage point of view.

Previous speakers mentioned that there is really no base of support for this organization, that it was created out of smoke and mirrors by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Organizations such as the Atlantic Canada Chamber of Commerce and various chambers of commerce in the region are criticizing it. There was no consultation in setting it up, there is no real decision-making power in the board and, as I said, there is no constituency for it. It has been termed a toothless tiger. The suggestion put forward by the Whip of the New Democratic Party in his speech was that if the Government had any guts, any real demonstrated concern for Atlantic Canadians, the board would have the decision-making authority to determine projects which are relevant for the region.

The whole thrust of the Government in removing regional development programs is interesting. It brings to mind the difficulties that will be experienced under the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. Under that trade arrangement with the United States opportunities for regional development subsidization to get certain industries in deprived or problem areas in the country operating will disappear. That arrangement will probably do serious harm, in many cases, to attempts to get industry going in Atlantic Canada under regional development.

There is a great deal of concern that where profitable opportunities do exist, rather than seeing them fall into the control of Canadians we may see American firms taking them over and operating them for, in many cases, benefits across the border. The Mulroney-Reagan trade arrangement will certainly be a major problem in this area.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. The Hon. Member has been told constantly, as have many other Members in the House, that the name of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should not be used in the House of Commons. I know that the Hon. Member is referring to a trade agreement between Canada and the United States and he should refer to it as such.

The Chair has shown a lot of patience, but I think I must tell the Hon Member once more at this time that, according to our rules, the name of the Right Hon. Prime Minister should not be used in the House and the Chair would appreciate the Hon. Member paying heed. The Hon. Member has another three minutes available to him.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, on a point of order I would just point out that across the nation this agreement is now known and quoted in many documents as the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement. Unfortunately we have a situation which indicates—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The rules of this House are different than what is being done outside, and the Hon. Member knows that.

Furthermore, as has been indicated earlier this week or late last week, if an Hon. Member is quoting from a newspaper which uses such an expression, the Hon. Member should make the necessary changes while quoting from the newspaper. I would appreciate the Hon. Member paying attention to that and referring to the trade deal as what it is, a commercial agreement between Canada and the United States.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I appreciate your intervention because I think the traditions of the House and respect for them are something from which we deviate with considerable risk.

However, having brought it to the attention of the House at this time, I wonder whether the Member might also remind his caucus and the Official Opposition caucus that rather consistently today during the presentation of petitions, either by reading from the petitions directly or in the summary comments, they were violating the rules of the Chamber. I hope that by tomorrow they will have had a chance to reflect on the wisdom of that rather than continuing to violate the rules of the House so blatantly.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) in a moment. If the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary had a problem with the use of names while petitions were being presented he should have brought it to the attention of the Chair at that time. The Hon. Member cannot do indirectly what he cannot do directly or vice versa. I think the Hon. Member understands exactly what the Chair is trying to get Hon. Members to understand.

The problem arose last week during the presentation of petitions. Some Hon. Members said that they were reading what was on the petitions. Hon. Members were told at that time that while reading petitions, just as when quoting from a newspaper, they should make the changes. I must admit that the Chair was quite lenient earlier today. However, during his intervention the Hon. Member was obviously and repeatedly doing this, which is why I brought it to his attention. I hope all Hon. Members will follow the rules. I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier who had been seeking the floor.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I fear that the ruling you have just made with regard to the editorializing of texts by Members of Parliament is one that I do not understand and on which I would like to ask for some clarification. When one reads a petition which was presented and signed by Canadians one performs the duty of reading to the House the text which was given to him or her to present. Therefore, I do not see how, in any way, we could accept that the wording of a petition be changed to meet your requirements of always addressing every document, every Bill, and every motion with its full title.

We in this House have a habit of making concise and shorter expressions of long explanations in Bills. There is always a short title to a Bill. There is always a way of getting around reading the full title of a Bill by saying the Bill deals with such and such. I doubt very much that you are telling me and Members of the House that every time we refer to an official document, be it the trade deal signed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of this country and the President of the United States, Mr. Reagan, that there is any pejorative intention in saying the «the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal». I do not see any difficulty with that. If you do, Madam Speaker, then I guess all of us will have to address that question in a very serious manner, because what you are proposing to us today is a radical change from the long practice in this House that Members refer to documents in as brief a manner as possible.

I would ask the Speaker to give me further advice on this matter because my caucus will probably consider it tomorrow morning. It is a very important question that you raise, Madam Speaker, and I would ask for some clarification on that question.

Mr. Hawkes: On the same point of order, Madam Speaker, just briefly, in response to the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), I think the rules are clear, and certainly the precedents are clear, that petitions should not be read but that there should be a short statement summarizing the petition. Therefore, I do not think the difficulty is as it reflects petitions. I agree with my hon. friend that the petition itself should be presented in the form in which the petitioners present it to the Member. However, in the presentation in the Chamber, I think the rules are clear that it should be a brief summary.

We were on a point of order on this matter yesterday and I do not think the difficulty is in dealing with the trade agreement by its official title. It would facilitate the Chamber if Members did that rather than not using the correct title of the agreement, which is really what I think the Chair has been bringing to our attention.

It is not our tradition to name Members in the Chamber, to use their names. We can refer to their ridings. I agree with my hon. friend that it is our tradition to use correct titles. You have brought to our attention, Madam Speaker, that we are not using correct titles and I thank you for doing so.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I get the message clearly and I think we of the Opposition have not in the last while abused the time of the House. We have not read the petitions in full, which normally go on for quite some time. What we have all attempted to do is make a concise statement as to what a petition pertains to.

Coming back to the original point made by the Chair, which I want to address, because petitions are not the point under discussion right now, when Members refer to a document, to a Bill or to any official papers, must we now refer to the full title? For example, taking the first Bill on this Order Paper, Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Commonwealth Canada, the short title of that Bill, is the Teleglobe Reorganization Bill. That is the way we have referred for many years to many of the Bills and documents. When referring to the Meech Lake Accord, if we have to refer every time to a Bill amending the Constitution of Canada, 1867 and 1982 thereof and so on, we will not be able to finish making our speeches. I would have to take 10 minutes just to explain what I am talking about.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The article to which I was referring is Citation 319 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which states:

> It is the custom in the House that no Member should refer to another by name.

Referring to the Hon. Prime Minister by name is not allowed, any more than it would be for any other Member, which is the only problem I had with the Hon. Member's statement. I brought it to his attention and to the attention of all Hon. Members.

As the Hon. Member may recall, I was not the one who first brought up the problem which arose or did not arise during the presentation of petitions. I am simply reminding the Hon. Member of Citation 319 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which states that it is the custom in the House that no Member should refer to another by name. This has been a long-standing rule, and I am sure all Hon. Members will want to abide by it.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, for further clarification, it would strike me that the ruling made now does need some clarification. I will just use by way of example an article in the Citizen which talks about Mulroney discussing the matter of Masse, and reading right from the article, «—as a serious problem with the electoral enforcement». My understanding of the direction from the Chair is that under no circumstances can we use the name of a Member even when quoting directly from an article. That, to my understanding, is a substantial change from the way this House has operated in the past.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair cannot really see how the Hon. Member would want the Chair to allow an Hon. Member to do indirectly what he cannot do directly, even if he or she is quoting from a document. If the Hon. Member cannot directly call another Member by name, how can he or she do it while he or she is quoting? I think the substitution of the Hon. Member's riding or his title as a Minister or Prime Minister can then be made.

This is something that was talked about, I know, before the Christmas holidays. I know it was brought to the Speaker's attention late last week. After listening very closely and intently to what the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly) was saying in his intervention, it seemed that it was not really a slip of the tongue but something which he seemed to be doing purposely and repeatedly throughout his intervention, which is why the Chair decided to intervene.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I wonder if I might make a suggestion? Your interpretation of the rules, of course, is accurate, that we are not to refer to one another in this House by their proper name, but the name of their constituency or the title they have been given. However, it seems to me we are now talking about an important related matter. It is something quite different when we are referring to a title of a document or, as the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly) has just indicated, when we are asked to quote from a document, newspaper article or something of that nature. My suggestion is that before we paint ourselves into a corner on this issue, it might be just as well to set it aside and reflect on it together and see if there is not a clear direction we want to follow as opposed to making, if you like, a statement that would be a precedent then for future discussions. Might I recommend to the Chair that we give ourselves time to think about this matter before the Chair rules?

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, from the Government's perspective, I think this might be an item we would want to discuss at the House Leaders' meeting. If we continue to ignore the Chair's advice, we will get into things where government Members are rising and talking about the «Turner-trade» rip-up or the «Broadbent-tax» rip-off. It has no end. I think Members can see clearly the end result of failure to follow the Speaker's admonition. Let us reflect on that. Let us accept, with the concurrence of the Official Opposition, the suggestion from my hon. friend that we in the three Parties take a collective look at it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I would like to thank all Hon. Members who participated in this—

The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), on the same point of order.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Madam Speaker, I followed the discussion in the foyer, on T.V. I understand the Chair will reflect on the present situation and is seeking Opinions. I think there is some danger of creating a precedent here, especially since in future the Chair may decide to judge terms used by Members to describe Bills or actions or initiatives. We all know there are dozens of ways to describe a government initiative, an administrative measure or a public matter. I think it would be dangerous if there were to be any censorship of these various ways of expressing ourselves.

I realize that strictly speaking, it is not appropriate for a Member to rise in the House and address another Member by name. A Member is to be addressed by the name of his riding. However, occasionally a person's name may be used to describe an initiative originated by that person, so there is a fine line here, and perhaps when the matter is discussed, as I imagine it will be, by the various Members who take the Chair from time to time, perhaps that is a point that should be considered, because it has never been customary in this House for the Chair to intervene and correct language used by Members unless that language is clearly abusive and contrary to the Standing Orders or to established custom.

Those are my comments, and perhaps they will be useful in helping the Chair reach a final decision in this particular matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) for his comments which are indeed useful, both to the Chair and to all Members of this House. Being in the Chair, what I tried to do today is simply to enforce a regulation that has been part of our Standing Orders and parliamentary procedure for quite some time. I believe all Hon. Members will want to give this matter some serious thought before they decide to put a label on a document in which all Canadians are involved and in which all Canadians are interested at this time.

I will now give the floor to the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly), and I am sure he might wish to think about the discussion we have just had when he finishes his speech.

[English]

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, since I set off the slight bush fire in here might I have one second to deal with the point of order and then return to the topic of debate?

I feel that to prohibit me from using a description that is commonly known in the country and often quoted in articles would in fact violate my privileges as a Member of Parliament. It would prohibit me from using an exact quotation as opposed to conjuring up something in my own mind. I hope that there will be an opportunity in the House to explore the very difficult application of this rule. I feel very sensitive about it, having moved farther than I think Members of the House intended it to go.

I certainly accept the proposition that one cannot refer directly in discourse in the House to another Hon. Member by name. However, if it is a matter of quoting or referring to articles then we should be allowed to use those names in ways which are understood by the people.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The second that the Hon. Member asked to have to talk about the problem has now expired. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member on debate.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I also think that enough time has transpired with respect to the matter of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

Obviously, the Canada-U.S. trade agreement will prohibit certain kinds of regional development activity. The point I was making is that it is ironic that an area of Canada in which this House has had such tremendous interest and would like to see development move ahead in terms of Atlantic Canadians sharing benefits with the rest of the country is that we may in fact be prohibited from putting those in place because of the Government's negotiation of a particular trade treaty with the United States.

I would like to conclude on those remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on the motion of Mr. Mulroney, seconded by Mr. Côté (Langelier), that Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts be read a second time and referred to a legislative committee. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, there have been discussions with the critics of the opposition Parties with respect to commencing the consideration of Bill C-84 at three o'clock when the Minister is present. Given the fact that we are rapidly approaching the hour for the lunch adjournment, I would call it one o'clock.

Mr. Gauthier: One o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent to call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 12.29 p.m. the House took recess.

ACID RAIN—SUGGESTION UNITED STATES BE BILLED FOR DAMAGE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, only this Government is surprised by the unwillingness of the Americans to negotiate a treaty to stop acid rain coming across our border. The fact is that President Reagan only agreed to consider the possibility of a treaty, not to sign one. The U.S. State Department officials made this distinction clear on several occasions. Yet the Government tries to maintain the illusion of progress.

S. O. 21

In 1985 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) appointed an acid rain envoy to reinvent the wheel, in 1986 accepted the U.S. five-year research and demonstration program, and now discovers the true intent of the U.S. administration is not to cut transboundary air pollution, but to continue with research and development.

In 1985 the Government made the mistake of abandoning the multilateral, global policy approach to acid rain which served us well because it led to 21 nations signing the Helsinki Accord on Acid Rain.

We urge the Government to resume the global policy, and at the same time prepare a Bill to be presented to President Reagan at the next summit for compensation for damage caused each year to lakes, fisheries, agriculture, maple syrup producers, forestry, tourism, health, structures and buildings by acid rain pollution coming from the United States into Canada every day.

HISTORIC EVENTS

INDIA—ANNIVERSARY OF ESTABLISHMENT OF REPUBLIC

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure today to recognize the thirty-eighth anniversary of India's Republic Day. In 1950 India became a republic. Like our Canada Day, India's Republic Day is its biggest national holiday.

Sharing similar aspirations of accommodating various ethnic and linguistic groups, India has tried to achieve a better democratic system and standard of living for its people. Canada, for its part, has made its contribution to India through various development efforts down through the years. In the international arena, Canada and India have shared values, particularly the desire to bring justice and peace to the world.

Canada has been made richer by having amongst its cultural mosiac Canadian citizens of Indian origin. I, for one, would vouch that they have made a tremendous contribution to our country and our Canadian society as a whole. I am proud to have citizens of all cultural origins in my riding of Etobicoke North, and today I am pleased to be able to pay a special tribute to those Canadians of Indian origin.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES—CALL FOR ENDING OF AID TO CONTRA FORCES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, today the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) leaves for a conference in Lusaka. Before he goes, once again I would like to urge upon him that the Canadian Government take a stronger position with respect to U.S. funding of the Contras. In recent days we have seen that President Reagan has made this a priority for his political agenda. I would urge upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs that Canada finally come out and be explicitly critical of this particular preoccupation of President Reagan.

When I raised this matter in the House last week, the Secretary of State said that I was suggesting he attack the United States. I suggest no such thing. However, I do suggest that he be critical of the United States.

He states that it is not Canadian policy to offer advice to other Governments. We do offer advice to other Governments. In recent weeks we have offered advice to the Israeli Government. The Secretary of State is going to Africa, presumably to offer advice, along with others, to the South African Government. We offer advice and criticism, constructive we hope, to many countries.

I see no reason why the United States of America should be exempt from criticism, and why we should make an exception when it comes to American foreign policy and feel that we cannot be critical of that particular country.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

TRAINING ACADEMY—APPOINTMENT OF WOMEN INSTRUCTORS WELCOMED

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, as you know, I have often been critical in the House and in committees of the RCMP's role in terms of the promotion and advancement of female members of the force, and rightly so, but I am pleased today to give credit where credit is due in terms of a new initiative that the RCMP is taking to ensure equality for women within the force.

As I am sure Hon. Members know, the RCMP only started to hire women recruits in 1974, and it has been difficult for many of them to achieve the status of corporal. That has meant that of the 94 corporal level positions at the Training Academy in Regina there are no women. With the increasing number of women coming into the force, it is obvious that there is a need for women to be teaching in that instructional academy.

Thus I am pleased that the RCMP is instituting a special program provided for under Section 15(1) of the Canadian Human Rights Act, the effect of which will be to place female members as instructors at the corporal rank at the RCMP Training Academy in Regina.

The RCMP is conducting an internal competition to fill these posts, so I would like to offer my congratulations and of course my very best wishes to the women who win these posts and who, I am sure, will be very successful in their future endeavours.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

NECESSITY TO ADOPT BILL C-72

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the House debated a motion condemning the Government for its inertia and lack of courage with respect to the official languages.

The Government claimed it is not dragging its feet in this case. Yet again this morning we read in the newspapers that the federal government language teachers will probably call a strike because Treasury Board wants them to work under unacceptable conditions.

This is the same Conservative Government which reduced the number of teachers from 3,000 in 1970 to 700 now. This Government shows so little interest in the official languages that it has decided to cut back language teaching in the Public Service. Last year the Government announced person-year cutbacks in excess of 40 per cent and this year the trend continues.

The Minister said «we will put our money where our mouth is», then he goes on to prove that by practically ensuring the disappearance of government linguistic training services and forcing teachers to strike. If this Government is really interested in the official languages, Mr. Speaker, why tear down the product of 17 years of Liberal work? The Government will be judged in light of its actions, for Bill C-72 will be just another piece of paper until it is passed by this House.

MINES AND MINING

TAX REFORM—IMPORTANCE OF TAKING SITUATION OF SMALL GOLD-FIELDS INTO ACCOUNT

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, since the crash, the small gold-fields are having a hard time, as can be seen in the article by Michel Girard published in the daily La Presse of January 25, 1988, under the title Période difficile pour les aurifères juniors.

Despite an average drop of 40 per cent in the stock prices compared to before the stock exchange crisis and an increase in the price of gold, small gold-fields cannot seem to be able to take off again. And as we are sailing in a downward cycle, there is little chance of seeing small gold-fields come back in the medium-term to the peak they reached before the crash.

According to the mining analyst, David Charles, who is a researcher for the firm Tassé et Associés, investors would then be well advised to bank on quality stock because of the difficult situation in the stock market.

On the other hand, we expect a seasonal recovery of small mining operations for February or March. Traditionally, there is such a recovery around that time, but nothing guarantees it will happen again this year. This period also coincides with the delivery of many flow-through shares bought in 1987.

I would like to bring this to the attention of the Finance Minister (Mr. Wilson) and of the Deputy Minister of Finance, Mr Stanley Hartt, so that they watch very closely that period and revise the tax reform accordingly.

TRADE

POTATO EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES—NON-TARIFF BARRIER

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, Canadian potatoes are world renowned for their quality and taste. Too bad American inspectors don't agree.

When Maritime potatoes which have already been thoroughly inspected by Agriculture Canada cross the border into Maine, inspectors pick over them trying to find fault. Since the destination inspection is the final one, these first-line inspectors cannot stop the spuds from continuing on to New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and other eastern seaboard destinations.

However, they are harassing the industry by saying that they have to phone the end receiver and warn him of poor quality. Since many loads come through at night when receivers are not available, truck drivers must either wait or head back to Canada. There are some who persevere, however. Up to January 22, 20 out of 29 loads which were declared to be poor at the border passed reinspection at the end.

Maine is using this non-tariff barrier to keep New Brunswick potatoes out since its anti-dumping suit was not successful. The Government assured us that the trade agreement would prevent this type of action. It was wrong again.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-FRANCE RELATIONS—GOVERNMENT'S NATIONAL RECONCILIATION POLICY

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, the state visit of the Governor General of Canada in France is the concrete result of the extension abroad of the national reconciliation policy carried out without respite by our government. In addition to having permitted two long expected francophone summits, the second of which was held in Quebec City September last, the action of the Government, especially the Prime Minister's, has contributed to improve greatly our political dialogue with France.

Good relations between two privileged partners such as Canada and France do not exclude the emergence of bilateral problems such as the one which we face in our relations in the area of fisheries. We should consider them realistically and maturely. I can assure the Government that I fully support the firm attitude it has maintained to uphold the interests of the Atlantic area in that issue and no doubt that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), who is accompanying Mrs. Sauvé, will assert the Canadian position.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we all acknowledge that the visit of the Governor General in France is an historic event and provides an opportunity to extol the unique relations existing between Canada and France.

HOUSING

TOBIAS HOUSE PROJECT IN TORONTO—LACK OF AFFORDABLE LAND

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, Tobias House is a church-sponsored group with excellent experience in the case of disabled adults. The group's proposal for funding was favourably received by the Ministry of Housing but had to be turned down because Tobias House was unable to obtain land in the central part of Toronto. Its non-profit project of 80 to 100 units reflects its interest to serve low-income households of a variety of types including families, seniors, and the disabled.

Tobias House is facing a major problem. There is no affordable land on which to build in central Toronto. We all know that the federal, provincial and municipal Governments have parcels of land which could be made available for projects such as this one. The federal Government must show its leadership now by releasing some of its own land in and around Metropolitan Toronto where the housing shortage is most acute in order to help house the most unfortunate in our society.

I urge the Minister of Housing to act now.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S VISIT TO FRANCE

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note the historic visit to France of the Governor General, the Right Hon. Jeanne Sauvé.

This first ever state visit to France by a Canadian Governor General confirms the new spirit of co-operation and confidence which permeates the relations between France and Canada and which results from the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) policies of national reconciliation, his strong support for the Francophonie and his important efforts to improve the climate of France-Canada relations.

I commend the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for the enlightened efforts of his Government. The participation in the visit by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) reflects the priority accorded by the Prime Minister to both the visit and the bilateral relationship.

There are disagreements, Mr. Speaker, notably the fishing and maritime boundary dispute, but I am confident that with mutual goodwill a solution will be found.

FINANCE

TOBACCO INDUSTRY—CALL FOR SUBSTANTIAL INCREASE IN TAXES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the most difficult aspect of the legislation to ban tobacco advertising is the impact that it will have on funding for sports and cultural organizations.

Today the Cancer Society, along with other groups concerned with public health, proposed a solution. What these groups want is a substantial increase in tobacco taxes. This would raise some $800 million in additional revenue for the Government each year. With additional revenue, the Government would be in a position to replace the lost corporate funding and perhaps to increase it, as well as providing funds to aid tobacco farmers and finance public health education and medical research.

According to a Gallup poll released today, some 78 per cent of Canadians agree with such an approach, including a two to one margin of smokers. This proposal has merit and deserves much more serious consideration than the Minister's attempts yesterday to water down his legislation to appease Bill Neville and the tobacco lobby.

Clearly, Canadians are prepared to help sports and cultural groups break their addiction to tobacco. Is the Government prepared to help?

POLITICAL PARTIES

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S FUND RAISING APPEAL—AN UNAMBIGUOUS REPLY

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, what have I done? The Leader of the New Democrats (Mr. Broadbent) thinks I am a socialist. I am insulted, hurt, humiliated, pained, mortified, grieved, distressed, troubled, worried, offended, disparaged, belittled, discredited and wounded.

The socialist leader sent me a letter asking for money, money to help take Canada out of NATO, money to help him fight free trade so the poor people of Canada won't be able to buy cheaper food, money to bring pornography into Canada.

These policies are outrageous, contemptible, vile, disdainful, wicked, disgusting, appalling, frightful and terrifying. And he wants me to help pay for them? It makes me ill, sick at heart, perturbed, weary, queasy, squeamish, fastidious and nauseated. Mr. Speaker, will you tell the socialist leader that I will not be sending him any money, because I am a free enterpriser and a Tory.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

PARENTAL LEAVE DISCRIMINATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, now for a voice of reason to follow that rather unusual plea. The Government claims that it is interested in equality of the sexes. Yet when it has an opportunity to change a piece of discriminatory legislation dealing with the issue of parental leave, which will not cost a penny, it refuses to do so.

No less than two government committees and an extra parliamentary committee have suggested that it is sexist to allow people to claim maternity leave without offering the same benefits for paternity leave. In the Province of Ontario there are two cases of individuals whose spouses have fallen ill not being able to look after their children because the legislation refuses parental leave for fathers.

Is it the belief of this Government that only women should be involved in the rearing of children? Is it the belief of this Government that the father does not have a role to play in parenting? If the Government really believes in equality, it will support my Private Member's Bill to ensure that parental leave is available to the father or mother, depending upon who chooses to seek leave for assisting the child. Parenting is not simply a mother's responsibility.

THE CABINET

MARCEL MASSE ISSUE—THING OF WONDER

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to get back to the election expenses of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Yesterday, I asked the Prime Minister two questions which he refused to answer. The first question was whether the Prime Minister had read the letter, dated November 28, that was sent to his Minister by Mr. Gorman at the very moment the Prime Minister decided to bring the Minister back to Cabinet. No answer. The second question was whether the Minister had told the Prime Minister about the contents of the letter and whether they had discussed the contents at the time the decision was made to call the Minister back to Cabinet. No answer.

When will the Prime Minister come out of hiding to answer these two questions? Unless of course the Prime Minister claims that keeping this a mystery as long as possible is in the public interest.

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if there is a mystery about this matter, it is why the Official Opposition has, for three days now, along with the New Democratic Party, been repeating in the House and directing toward the Government questions that would be more properly directed toward the official of Parliament whose report is in question.

ALLEGED ELASTICITY OF ETHICS STANDARDS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, here is a question that certainly concerns the Minister. On September 9, 1985, the Prime Minister tabled in Parliament a Code of conduct for his Ministers. On that occasion he said in the House, and I quote: «The Government must be able to provide competent management and . . . be guided by the highest standards of conduct.» A few weeks later, he recalled to Cabinet a Minister who, according to the Commissioner of Elections, had taken part in a violation of the Canada Elections Act. My question is this: Is the conduct of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources an example of those highest standards? Or is the Code of conduct for prospective members of Cabinet as flexible as the Prime Minister wants it to be?

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have some acquaintance with the difficulties of Oppositions in desperate situations, but members of the Official Opposition will not make very much progress directing these questions at the wrong target. If they are serious about this matter, they know the procedures that have to be open to them.

• (1420)

KNOWLEDGE OF FACTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in light of those responses and in the absence of the Prime Minister, I will direct my question to the former Prime Minister and now Acting Prime Minister.

This is not just a question of criminal guilt or innocence. It is a question of ethical standards. It cannot be delegated to anyone else but the Government and particularly the Prime Minister for whom the right hon. gentleman is speaking. That is the issue.

The former Industry Minister got in trouble not because of a criminal charge but because he mixed his public and private interests. A former Minister of National Defence got into trouble not because of a criminal charge but because of conduct unbecoming a holder of high office.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order! That is before the courts.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): A former Minister of the Environment got into trouble for excessive and free wheeling spending in Europe. The former Minister of Public Works got into trouble for questionable fund-raising techniques. The former Solicitor General got into trouble for a cosy little private meeting with a former Premier. The former Minister of Youth got into trouble because she used government funds to recruit young people to the Conservative Party. Each time the Prime Minister missed the point, and once again the Acting Prime Minister misses the point.

Either the Prime Minister and his Minister together hid the whole truth from the country for a whole two years, or the Minister kept the truth from the Prime Minister for those two years. I ask the Acting Prime Minister, which is it? Did the Prime Minister hide all the facts from the public, or did his Minister hide the facts from the Prime Minister?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I hate to raise his name in these circumstances but Pierre Trudeau used to say: «I disagree with the premises of that question.» Nonetheless, the answer is no.

QUERY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER KNEW MEMBER FOR FRONTENAC PARTICIPATED IN INFRACTION OF CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think the Acting Prime Minister underestimates the importance of this question, but that is his problem. The Minister does not seem to understand that what is at issue today is the Prime Minister's judgment, because only the Prime Minister appoints members of Cabinet.

When the Prime Minister reappointed the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to Cabinet in November 1985, did he know that the Commissioner of Elections was of the opinion that the Minister had been party, to use the Commissioner's own words, to a violation of the Canada Elections Act? Or did the Minister hide the full contents of the Commissioner's letter from the Prime Minister? If that is the case, isn't this sufficient reason to expel the Minister from the Prime Minister's Cabinet?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question was whether the facts of a letter were hidden. I gave my answer.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I can understand the Secretary of State not wanting to carry the can today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): However, I would have expected him to treat the questions a little more seriously in view of his experience in this place.

If the Prime Minister had faced up to this issue, or his Minister had faced up to this issue, depending on when the Prime Minister knew, these questions would not have been placed to the Minister today.

When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was reappointed to the Cabinet, the Prime Minister declared him to be a hero. He went into the Minister's riding, celebrations were held everywhere. However, the letter should have been made public. The country should have been told the whole truth.

I ask the Acting Prime Minister to take this question seriously. What standards does the Prime Minister expect of his Ministers? What degree of truth does he expect his Ministers to convey? Does he think that a Minister who would conveniently hide an important, relevant fact from him is worthy to remain in his Cabinet, or is it the Prime Minister's view that anything goes as long as you do not get caught?

• (1425)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on the record, that is not the Prime Minister's view. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition can speak for himself.

ACID RAIN

GOVERNMENT'S STRATEGY VIS-À-VIS UNITED STATES

Mrs. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment.

In view of the fact that a major reduction in acid rain emissions is essential to the survival of our waters and forests, especially in Quebec, what concrete strategy will the Government be using to convince the Americans of the need for specific reductions, especially in the midwest, within the shortest possible time frame? What strategy is this Government using now, since the Americans refused to take any concrete action?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will know and the House will know as well, the Canadian Government has been seeking from the U.S. administration agreement on a proposal from our Government to slash American acid rain-causing emissions by 50 per cent by 1994 based on 1980 figures. That program would parallel exactly the program we have imposed on ourselves.

The Canadian negotiators went to Washington yesterday for a major meeting at which the American administration, through its negotiators, was to respond to our call. The initial response to our call for a bilateral accord was deeply disappointing. We are now discussing within the Cabinet, particularly among the Prime Minister, myself, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, our options and we will keep the House informed as the issue progresses.

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Minister must know that the answer is more than deeply disappointing, it is a disaster for Canada.

Plan A was the envoy process. Plan B was the very meager promise written into the script of President Reagan's address here in Canada last year. Plan C was a propaganda program which was withdrawn because it was offending the wrong people. Does the Government have a Plan D now?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I should correct an essential facet of the premise of the Hon. Member's question. We have not withdrawn our communications program, to be aimed largely at Americans travelling into Canada as tourists. It includes as well major visitations by cabinet Ministers, not only myself, to the United States to influence American public opinion.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, may I draw to your attention that when we took office in September of 1984, Lou Harris polls indicated that only 63 per cent of Americans were aware of the acid rain problem. A recent Lou Harris poll shows that 95 per cent of Americans are now not only aware of the problem but also cognizant that it is a serious transboundary problem. That increase is attributable in very large measure to the efforts of the Canadian Government to raise the profile of this serious pollution problem in the United States.

REQUEST THAT CANADA BREAK OFF NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Will the Minister now respond to environmentalists in Canada and at the very least break off negotiations with the Americans, sending a clear message to the United States, to our friends in Congress and to environmentalists in the United States, that this constant playing along with the refusal to take concrete action by way of timetables and targets is unacceptable? Will the negotiations be broken off so we can start with a clean slate when we have a new President to deal with, one who might take our concerns seriously?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has some mistaken impression that the Canadian effort and that of Canada as a whole is aimed exclusively at the American President and his administration. It is not. We have had numerous meetings with prominent political leaders in the United States, in the Senate and in the House of Representatives alike. I, for example, have met most recently with Congressman Gerry Sikorski, with Congressman Sherwood Boehlert, with Senator George Mitchell, and other names which could be mentioned.

We have had a very extensive round of meetings with editorial boards, for example, Time magazine, Sports Illustrated, the U.S. National Public Press, the New York Times, the Wall Street Journal, the Chicago Tribune. Our efforts at convincing the Americans that this is a serious environmental problem on both sides of the border are aimed at American public opinion, at both Houses of Congress, in addition to the U.S. administration, and our total efforts should be judged by that standard.

REQUEST THAT CANADA PRESENT BILL FOR DAMAGES TO UNITED STATES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who, I am sure, is not impressed by these exhortations and incantations on the part of the Minister of the Environment. The Secretary of State for External Affairs knows that if the Government continues to pretend that there is hope for negotiation on acid rain with the United States in the near future, it is fooling itself. It has been for some time abundantly clear that the Government made a mistake in endorsing the five-year U.S. clean coal technology program.

Will the Prime Minister on behalf of Canadians present at the next summit a bill for damages to our resources, human health, buildings and structures, as a result of the transboundary pollution coming from the United States into Canada daily? Will he do that?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Davenport keeps coming into the House with these grand ideas which he did not act upon when he was Minister of the Environment—

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

Mr. McMillan: —which were not even proposed much less acted upon when he was a member of the Government. Nor were they acted upon by any Minister of the Environment during the entire period when the Liberals were in office. Indeed, I draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberal Party of Canada was in office during most of the time that Ronald Reagan has been President to date. In fact, it was in office for 1,335 days, compared to 1,229 days of our administration.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McMillan: Why did the Hon. Member for Davenport not act upon his ideas when he had a chance to act upon them?

Mr. Caccia: The Minister of the Environment forgets that his Government has been around for almost four years. His memory is pretty short. He should know that at least the Liberal Government initiated a global initiative which paid good dividends for Canada, bringing 21 nations to sign the Helsinki Accord in 1985. That was a result of Liberal initiative, and he should know that if he reads his own papers.

GLOBAL INITIATIVE—CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Since this Government abandoned Canada's initiative to bring the acid rain issue to the table as a global concern, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs again put that initiative on the table and resume that global initiative to bring the United States to an agreement, as we wanted the Government to do since 1984?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the question is fundamentally flawed. The Hon. Member suggests that the Canadian Government has dropped the Helsinki initiative, the 30 per cent club. It is not true. The Hon. Member was in the audience when I raised that very issue on the floor of the United Nations General Assembly. He knows I have met with every single Environment Minister from Europe. He knows, for example, that I travelled to London to meet with the two Ministers of the Environment in the United Kingdom to raise the same subject. He knows as well as anyone, and if he does not, he should, that the matter is one of the top priorities in our total global initiative on acid rain.

FORMER COMMISSIONER OF ELECTIONS' LETTER—PRIME MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. The Acting Prime Minister, as well as everyone, is now aware of the secret letter of the former Commissioner of Elections, where it is explained that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Hon. Member for Frontenac, violated the Elections Act, that he broke the law. The question is not what Mr. Gorman recommended. According to Mr. Gorman the Minister had violated the Act. My question has nothing to do with Mr. Gorman's recommendations. When was the Prime Minister aware of the fact that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources violated the Elections Act? When was he aware of that?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, repeating falsehoods doesn't make them accurate. The Hon. Member is asking a question based upon a version of events which did not occur.

TIMING OF NOTIFICATION OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, let me be very specific, then, in my question to the Acting Prime Minister. When was the Prime Minister made aware of the fact that the then Commissioner of Elections found that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources had violated the Elections Act? When was the Prime Minister made aware of that fact?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will have to verify when the Prime Minister became precisely aware of the decision by the responsible officer, established by this Parliament, that no action should be taken with respect to the allegations made against my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Ms. Mitchell: That is not good enough.

CANADA LANDS COMPANY

SALE OF MIRABEL PROPERTIES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister and it concerns the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel. Can the Acting Prime Minister tell us today what the Prime Minister refused to tell us here in this House yesterday? When and why did the Prime Minister authorize the former Minister of Public Works, the Hon. Member for Joliette, to overrule established practices of the Department of Public Works and the Treasury Board, which were to sell government properties at fair market value?

Will the Government now come clean with the people of Canada and tell us why the Prime Minister authorized the looting of taxpayers' coffers to reward Tories?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, let me understand the complaint of the Hon. Member. Is it that this Government brought stability and harmony to an area where there was economic and social chaos? Or is it that we gave Gervais Desrochers one contract for $25,000 and the Hon. Member's Government gave Gervais Desrochers three contracts for $68,000? Or is it that $1 million of investment by this Government produced private sector initiatives of over $21 million and 225 jobs? Or is it that we were cutting short the life of this corporation which the former Government had planned to extend to the year 2000? We are terminating it in a very few months with a saving of $10 million a year.

What is the complaint of the Hon. Member? Tell the people of Mirabel. Tell the people of Quebec.

Mr. Boudria: I will tell the Minister what my complaint is. It is that people have been treated unfairly and Tories have been rewarded.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF ALLEGED MISSPENDING OF $20,000

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): My supplementary is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Canadians know that the mandate of Canada Lands Company in Mirabel is the resale of Mirabel lands to Mirabel residents, a mandate that has not even been honored. In view of that mandate, how can the Minister explain the $20,000 wasted on trips to Africa and Israel by the cousin of the Hon. Member for Joliette, Mr. Pierre Hardy and his group? Did he try to sell Mirabel lands in Tel Aviv?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it might be useful for the Hon. Member to know about those trips to which he has referred, which were taken by employees of the corporation. First, the trip to Togo resulted in sales of agriculture machinery, tractors, and the largest export contract of mineral water in Canadian history. All of these products came from the Mirabel area. There was a trip to Israel which resulted in a $13 million Canadian services contract for the development of the Israeli dairy industry.

Mr. Gauthier: Come on!

Mr. McInnes: This resulted in benefits of $2.5 million to the people of Mirabel.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SITUATION IN HAITI—APPOINTMENT OF TRIPARTITE DELEGATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister received yesterday a proposal from New Democrat Members for the establishment of a three-party delegation that would go to Haiti to find a Canadian answer to problems in that country. Since the Minister is about to leave, can he give an answer before his trip to Africa?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I received a letter from the Hon. Member stressing the need for a non-partisan approach to the matter of Canada-Haiti relations and suggesting the establishment of a parliamentary delegation that could be fully involved. That in my view is a good idea, and it is my intention to put in place such a parliamentary delegation. I had an opportunity to hold preliminary discussions with spokesmen from all three Parties in this House, and I hope to be in a position before I leave for Africa to establish such a delegation.

I must stress that in my view it is in the best tradition of this Parliament to have suggestions put forward in good faith by Hon. Members, as the Hon. Member did yesterday.

LABOUR RELATIONS

RAILWAY DISPUTE—ARBITRATOR'S ACTIONS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour. In August, Parliament passed back-to-work legislation with regard to the railway unions, giving an arbitrator 60 days to make a final decision. Since then the Minister of Labour has extended the arbitrator's role until March 1.

Without any permission whatsoever the arbitrator himself has now set up meetings for March 7, March 28, April 5, April 18, and May 2. Will the Parliamentary Secretary tell us if the Minister of Labour has authorized the arbitrator to go beyond his time limit, therefore holding back any benefits to those workers whom the Government ordered back to work in August of last year?

Mr. Joe Price (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the Hon. Member that to date there has not been a request from the arbitrator to extend the time allowed for the proceedings under arbitration. However, I should point out that under the arbitrator's guidance the parties have been endeavouring to resolve some of the outstanding issues with respect to this dispute and meetings extended into the weekend as late as midday Saturday and were suspended at the request of the union. At this point in time the arbitrator is awaiting a response from the union before he can resume negotiations, if indeed that is possible.

SOUTH AFRICA—MEETING OF COMMONWEALTH FOREIGN MINISTERS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. This afternoon in Question Period the Minister mentioned that he is going to Africa. What are the Minister's expectations and what continued Commonwealth role does he see as he goes to Lusaka to chair the Commonwealth Special Committee of Foreign Ministers on South Africa?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we will be beginning on Monday of next week the first meeting of the Special Committee of the Commonwealth Foreign Ministers on South Africa. The agenda will involve a review of the areas set out for action by the Commonwealth Conference at Vancouver, including means by which we can look at ways of making sanctions that are in place more effective. Ways of encouraging greater dialogue between opponents of apartheid who live inside and outside South Africa will also be included. We will also be looking at ways in which we can encourage more productive dialogue within the region itself.

This is the first meeting in a process. It is designed not only to continue pressure upon the Government of South Africa to change the apartheid system but also to expand the capacities of those of us who are, as are all in this House, committed to an end to apartheid, to find ways in which real change might be encouraged.

INSTITUTION OF DEMOCRACY IN HAITI—MARIGAT REGIME—CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Although I wish the Secretary of State for External Affairs a pleasant journey and favourable winds, Mr. Speaker, I would have appreciated it if he had made a statement, thereby making it possible for representatives of the Opposition Parties to contribute to this trip which he wishes to make as successful as possible.

In any case, I shall await until he comes back to ask him some precise questions concerning South Africa. For the time being, may I remind him that, on January 18, he made in the House the following statement: «We shall review our relations with Haiti, including our development assistance». The Minister is certainly aware that he has created a tremendous feeling of hope among those who truely want democracy established in Haiti. Yesterday, unfortunately, he recognized de facto the regime of Mr. Leslie Marigat. He has apparently decided to abandon all those who wanted to see the establishment of true democracy in Haiti. Why has he changed his mind and given up?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not changed my mind. The Canadian Government wants to reach two objectives with regard to the Haitian people. The first is to encourage democracy in Haiti, and the second is to continue to help the most deprived people in our hemisphere. To help the poor, there must exist state-to-state relations, and this is clear for every realistic person who looks at the issue. We have reviewed and will continue to review our relations with Haiti. We have decided to set aside the planification of our bilateral assistance program to Haiti.

As I have just said to my friend the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill, I am prepared to agree to and work with a Parliamentary delegation which could approach the issue in a non partisan fashion to achieve the goal of all Canadians which is to help the Haitian people.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF POSSIBILITY OF PARLIAMENTARIANS VISITING HAITI WITHOUT DANGER

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. If the Minister wants to help the Haitian people, he can certainly count on the support of the Liberal Official Opposition.

The Minister seems to agree with the idea of a delegation of parliamentarians, so I would like to know whether he has already consulted the Haitian authorities about this, especially since a few months ago, a number of Canadians went to Haiti to take part in an operation that was supposed to be a democratic election. We know what happened then. Canadians risked their lives and got little or no thanks for their efforts from the military junta. What guarantees does the Secretary of State for External Affairs have today that parliamentarians can safely go to Haiti and will be welcomed by the Haitian authorities? Has he spoken to Mr. Marigat?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, I received a proposal from the New Democratic Party. As the Hon. Member pointed out, I am leaving today on a trip to Africa. I have had some brief preliminary discussions with the Hon. Member and his colleagues of the New Democratic Party. He has raised an important point. We must be sure we will be able to have useful contacts with the citizens and the authorities of Haiti. I hope it will be possible to make certain arrangements that will lead to effective consultation. That is our objective, and I am confident all Members of this House will agree.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

DELIVERY OF PROGRAMS—NON-PUBLICATION OF REPORT

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, and in his absence I direct the question to the Acting Prime Minister.

I have a copy of a report made to the Prime Minister's Office and presented in May, 1987, by Donald Savoie, who was asked by the Government to design this new Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency which was announced more than 15 months ago.

The Government has failed to follow the recommendations contained in this report in many important ways, particularly regarding the decentralization of delivery of the programs to the Atlantic Provinces and the provincial Governments.

Why has the Government, specifically the Prime Minister's Office, refused to make this study public? Why has this report been kept from the House which is called upon to examine this agency's formation?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to reply to my colleague's question, I think the Hon. Member knows, having participated in the debate and knowing the legislation, that this Government has created an agency which is particularly suited to meet the needs of Atlantic Canada, which has decision-making flexibility, and access to resources which is absolutely unprecedented in regional development policy up to this point.

Dr. Savoie, as well as other eminent persons, have had the benefit of consultations. They chose the particular instrument of ACOA after considering many other alternatives.

DECISION-MAKING PROCESS

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, this report expresses concern that the agency could become one big slush fund, and recommended insulating it from political control and staying away from the delivery of programs directly.

Instead, the Government has appointed numerous well-known Tories to the board. Senator Murray has publicly stated that the decisions on projects will be made here in Ottawa by him and six Atlantic cabinet Ministers.

Has the Government not assured that this agency will become a political slush fund?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): No, Mr. Speaker. The Government has done no such thing. At a meeting of the board of directors which I and colleagues attended last night, the vast majority of the board of directors were very satisfied that they have a unique advisory capacity, that they have the flexibility, and they have a perfectly understandable role, as does the President, Donald McPhail, and the Minister.

This instrument is a far better entrée into Government on behalf of Atlantic Canada than any other scheme that has been put forward up to this point.

CANADA LANDS COMPANY

AUDIT OF ACTIVITIES—REVIEW OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. The Acting Prime Minister knows that the Minister of Public Works has often cited the November, 1987, internal audit carried out by Public Works Canada as evidence that everything is and has been operating above-board at Canada Lands Corporation at Mirabel.

On page 4 of the audit it states, «Our review of selected documentation supplied to us by the corporation—indicated deficiencies—»

Why were only selected documents provided to the auditors by Canada Lands Corporation? Does the selective nature of those documents not indicate the need for a full, open public commission of inquiry into the Canada Lands operations at Mirabel, the role of current and former Ministers, and the role of the Prime Minister in overturning established Public Works practices for divesting public property?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Hon. Member that every transaction has received Treasury Board approval—

Mr. Boudria: No.

Mr. McInnes: —and every transaction over $75,000 has been audited by the Comptroller General.

Let me read from the same report referred to by the Hon. Member, which states, «To achieve its mandate the new management of the corporation followed management practices and controls examined during this review. In the areas of land sales and agricultural renewal a structured and controlled process was put in place in accordance with Treasury Board terms and conditions and regularly monitored by central agencies. The corporation complied with the approved process and produced complete documentation in support of the decisions and approvals».

REQUEST THAT COMMISSION OF INQUIRY BE APPOINTED

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. The facts in this case are painfully clear. We have all heard the former Minister of Public Works proclaim loudly and with great pride that the Prime Minister personally overruled established practices by Public Works in divesting public property, and personally approved of the nature of the operations of Canada Lands Corporation at Mirabel.

Canadians have a right to know why the Prime Minister personally approved a raid on the public Treasury. Given the facts and given the scandal that has been played in the newspapers, television, and across the floor of the House of Commons over the last week, why will the Government not announce a full, open public commission of inquiry into this raid of the taxpayer's purse conducted at Mirabel by Canada Lands Corporation, and approved by the Prime Minister of this nation?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Do I understand from the Hon. Member that he is disappointed that those who have made inquiries have been able to identify only three Tories out of 1,500 people who bought property from the corporation?

The reason that the Prime Minister intervened and gave very specific directions to the former Minister of Public Works was because of the anarchy and the social injustice that had been perpetuated on the people of this particular area. I ask the Hon. Member to ask anyone in the Mirabel region, anybody in Quebec, if they do not find full favour with the procedures adopted by this Government.

THE BUDGET

DATE OF PRESENTATION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister has had a policy of presenting his Budget in February of every year. I wonder if today he is able to set a date for the presentation of the Budget for this year?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am quite taken aback by the perceptive nature of the Hon. Member's question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): As it happens, in the Priorities and Planning Committee meeting this morning we did discuss the timing of the Budget. I will be presenting it to the House on February 10.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON WOMEN IN SERVICE SECTOR

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State responsible for women. Most women in Canada work in the service sector. Yet a credit risk analysis by the Bank of Nova Scotia states that the service sector will be hurt hardest by the Prime Minister's deal.

Rather than defending this deal so vigorously, why is the Minister not fighting the deal since women will be hurt so badly by it?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I understand the study that was done by the Bank of Nova Scotia was done some five months before the deal was signed. After the Bank of Nova Scotia people had a chance to look at this particular deal, their chief economist came out in favour of it.

The services sector is one of the fastest growing sectors in Canada. We are among the leading industries in the world. Based on this particular deal, there are real opportunities for women that will come about as a result, because they are the experts.

As a Government we want to ensure that they are not only employed in the services sector, but that they are upgrading their skills and creating new opportunities for themselves by taking things like management courses, and so on, in order that they are not just in the services sector. They are participating in a stronger way and a non-traditional way, and they will do that in a growing services industry.

Mr. Langdon: In fact this study by the Bank of Nova Scotia indicated that the services sector should be left out of the trade deal because of the benefits that we would get as a country.

GOVERNMENT POLICY—REQUEST FOR JUSTIFICATION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. This study also indicates some serious problems with respect to small businesses.

Why has this Government set up a policy that supports the multinationals and not small businesses?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, that is absolute nonsense. I can't believe what I am hearing from over there. This study from the Bank of Nova Scotia was done last June—June, read my lips!

• (1500)

The deal was initialled in October, and it was signed in December. The report about which the Hon. Member is talking has nothing to do with the deal which was signed.

The people who are going to do well out of this deal are people like women and people like small and medium sized businesses, who incidentally are supporting the free trade deal in large numbers. I cannot understand why they cannot face up to the fact that this is a good deal for Canada and therefore a bad deal for the NDP.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

AWARDING OF ALL-NEWS TELEVISION CHANNEL LICENCE TO CBC

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the CRTC decision to award a Canadian all-news service to the CBC, the Prime Minister is reported to have said about the CBC that «there is no way this Government is going to allow that flawed decision to stand. Instead of hammering us two hours a day they will be hammering us 24 hours a day».

My question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Does he not realize that the Prime Minister's comments are not only prejudicial to journalistic integrity and prevent fair cabinet review but would be the most direct political interference ever in the well-established arm's length relationship between the Government, the public broadcaster, and the independent regulator?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member dwells in a fantasy land from which she emerges from time to time. I would ask her to consider seriously the announcement that has been made by the CRTC and indeed the consideration that is being given to it by Cabinet.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, a number of appeals and petitions have been presented to Cabinet. Others may still be forthcoming, and because of that I have no comment to make at present on the decisions which have been announced by the CRTC.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member on a very short supplementary.

Mrs. Finestone: If we are talking about fantasy land, the film policy is still in fantasy land and has not appeared on the scene as yet.

Immigration Act, 1976

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, there is a question of policy and natural justice about the issuing of a licence by the CRTC to the CBC for a specialty television news service, for neither the Minister, nor the standing committee, nor the special task force on broadcasting, has said that special permission was necessary, nor have they ever not known about the fact that since 1986—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put her question, given the time.

Mrs. Finestone: My question is for the Minister of Communications. Is it not true that the Minister met with the CBC, had full knowledge of their intentions to make an application for an all-news channel, and that she did not dissuade or object to their proceeding?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that you realize the CRTC does have the authority as an independent agency to call for applications whether they are for specialty services or for other services.

I am equally sure, Mr. Speaker, that neither you nor the Hon. Member would want me to say to the CRTC that it should or should not do such and such a thing in calling for services. We have a process which is established in law, and I would think the Hon. Member would want to respect that.

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House proceeded to the consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I rise before the House today to move the adoption of the reply to the other place on Bill C-84. The Government proposes several amendments to the report before us.

Bill C-84 addresses an issue of grave concern to Canadians—the growing abuse of Canada's refugee claims process. The number of refugee claims received in Canada has grown from some 1,600 in 1980 to almost 30,000 in 1987. We have a backlog of more than 40,000 claims pending. The backlog is growing by 2,500 claims or more every month. Thousands of recent claimants have arrived with fraudulent documents or no documents at all. We cannot allow this situation to deteriorate even further.

Bill C-84 and Bill C-55 are essential parts of this Government's strategy for restoring the integrity of Canada's immigration and refugee programs. The passage of Bill C-55 will establish a new refugee determination system in Canada.

Bill C-84 was introduced to send a message world-wide that Canada would no longer tolerate abuse and would deal with security risks.

[English]

I met with the Senate committee on December 8 at the conclusion of more than three months of hearings on the Bill. I informed the Senators that I would not change the principles or objectives of the Bill, but that I was willing to consider changes about which lawyers would have less to argue. I was also willing to consider any proposals that would clarify the Bill and further the achievement of our objectives.

Let me restate the objectives of Bill C-84. The primary objective of the Bill, as is stated in its preamble, is to protect genuine refugees. The Bill seeks to deter the wholesale abuse of the refugee claims system that has taken place over the last 10 years and to create a scheme of penalties to ensure that abusers are properly punished.

These provisions do not affect thousands of genuine refugees whom we bring to Canada each year. In short, they do not make it more difficult for people who need our help to obtain it.

Bill C-84 deals, however, with sanctions and penalties for persons who encourage illegal immigration to Canada and who knowingly abet the abuse of the refugee claims process. The Bill closes a loophole through which people who are criminals or terrorists can use the refugee claims system to defer their removal from Canada for many years.

The Bill also deals with detention for those who are security risks to the Canadian public, or those who conceal or destroy their identity documents so that we cannot easily discover who they are or from where they came.

We know that some 14,000 people have arrived in Canada with forged documents or no documents at all over the last two years. Most of these persons were not using forged documents in order to escape from the country in which they faced persecution, but rather to conceal the fact that they already had a safe haven somewhere else or that they had no real claim to refugee status at all.

[Translation]

This Bill, Madam Speaker, provides stiffer fines and jail terms for those who abuse Canada's immigration laws. Under existing legislation, for instance, the captain of the Amelie, the ship that arrived last year in Nova Scotia, could only be fined $5,000 and receive a maximum sentence of two years.

This is an insignificant penalty when 174 people are each prepared to pay several thousand dollars for an unauthorized voyage to Canada. When I spoke to the Senate committee in December, I addressed the issue that was most frequently raised by the committee and its witnesses—the issue of Bill C-84's compliance with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

As I told the senators, during all of the months of the Government's consideration of solutions to abuse of the immigration program, Charter compliance was foremost in our minds. I rejected any suggestion that the Charter simply should not apply to persons who are not Canadian citizens or permanent residents of Canada. The Charter applies equally to all people regardless of their status in Canada. That is the law and Bill C-84 is consistent with the law. This view was affirmed by the expert counsel I have received from the Department of Justice.

As I also told the Senators, I do not want any person to be able to escape the operation of our laws because of a technical deficiency. I told the senators that I would be happy to consider any amendment that would give lawyers less to argue about—provided such an amendment does not weaken the operation of the Bill.

The Senate has now reported and I have reviewed the Message from the Senate carefully; there are 20 amendments, under 13 headings. Nine of the Senate's proposals are acceptable to the Government, at least in principle, but minor amendments to some of these proposals are necessary in order to ensure that the Bill will achieve its purposes, and to ensure that the amendments will fit the technical scheme of the Bill.

[English]

The amendments I am prepared to accept are these. One, to substitute the term «illegal entry» for the word «smuggling» in the Bill's statement of objectives. This will ensure consistency between the English and French text. Two, to amend the English version of Subsection 103.02(1), changing, for issuing a search warrant, from «evidence may be found» to «evidence will be found». This amendment corrects a technical flaw in the English version of the Bill; to permit the judge to review the reasonableness of the security certificate. This change clarifies what had been intended from the outset, and makes it clear that the review will be made on the basis of all the information available. Three, to provide discretion to the Federal Court judge with regard to the persons of the person concerned at hearings involving alleged security risks. This is a change which emphasizes considerations of fundamental justice in a system of security review that is stronger than that which currently exists.

[Translation]

To require the personal, written consent of the Attorney General of Canada or the Deputy Attorney General for the prosecution of those who organize illegal migration. This amendment adds further substance to the Government's undertaking that a person who violates the Act in the cause of rendering needed humanitarian assistance to refugees will not be prosecuted.

To provide for a weekly review of the detention of unidentified arrivals and suspected security risks by an adjudicator. This change maintains the additional powers for detention, but ensures compliance with the Canadian law that every person detained by the government has their detention reviewed by independent tribunal.

Other amendments which would alter the principles and objectives of Bill C-84, I cannot accept.

First, security risks—right to claim. The Senate wants us to grant the right to make a refugee claim to persons who have committed a serious crime or who pose a risk to the security of Canada. It also wants us, Madam Speaker, to provide special detention review hearings for those held on ministerial certificates endorsed by the Solicitor General and myself.

[English]

This makes no sense whatsoever. No country has an obligation to protect a person who is a serious criminal or who constitutes a threat to its security. The Senate has already accepted this principle in the case of war criminals and, in any event, the 1951 Geneva Convention on refugees specifically excludes such persons from the benefits of the conventions. Even if we give such people access to the refugee board for a hearing on the merits of their claims—and even if they are found to be refugees—we are not obligated to let them stay in Canada. They should and will be removed whether or not they are refugees. The Senate proposals guarantee that such persons will claim, because they will be able to litigate against removal for months if not years, and the Canadian public will bear the risk and the expense. All this will do is ensure that those security risks who do not wish to leave will be able to retain a foothold in Canada. For this reason, Madam Speaker, I cannot accept the Senate's proposal.

Let me turn now to the matter of power to turn ships away. The Senate wants to rescind any power by which I could turn ships away. It is important to note that this provision provides the power to turn ships away. It does not stipulate that such measures must be used in all cases. It is very important to understand that this power must be retained to send a clear message world-wide that Canada will no longer tolerate abuse of our refugee determination system.

It is true that some genuine refugees must use boats to flee their country of origin and to find asylum in a neighboring country. The Vietnamese boat people provide an example with which everyone is familiar. That is not the kind of situation in which we would consider turning ships away. Our concern is with ships that bring illegal immigrants to Canada from safe countries, those which are signatories to the refugee convention and which have good records of compliance with their obligations toward refugees.

Let us remember that people who use ships to come to Canada illegally from safe countries are not fleeing for their lives. They are not escaping from oppression or inhumane conditions. They are simply seeking to improve their economic circumstances. They have all the characteristics of those who want to immigrate to Canada, but who are not willing to submit to the legal processes in order to do so.

[Translation]

It as been argued, Madam Speaker, that the most effective deterrent would be to bring the ship into port and to confiscate it. I cannot agree. Such a «half-measure» would still permit large numbers of persons to enter Canada illegally.

By retaining the power to turn ships around—even if that power is used only on rare occasions—we will be depriving the racketeers who promote such schemes of their main selling point: guaranteed entry to Canada.

By casting doubt on the success of these ventures, we will reduce the incentive for people to pay the high price which the racketeers demand, and we will diminish the appeal of such schemes.

For this reason, I cannot accept any changes to this provision. In order to provide yet another safeguard, however, I am proposing an amendment which will insure that the decision to use this power will be taken personally by the responsible Minister.

Because this amendment is not within the scope of the Senate's message to the House, I must seek unanimous consent from the House to incorporate it into my message to the Senate. I urge all Members to support this amendment.

I will also be seeking unanimous consent for an amendment that will make the definition of «exigent circumstances» more precise by substituting the word «means» for «includes» in Clause 11 of the Bill.

Other provisions which the Senate wants to change are equally important.

The Senate wants to limit prosecution for misrepresentation only in those cases where the claims are manifestly unfounded. I think this proposal is simply unworkable. We need to be able to curb misrepresentation as soon as it is detected. The restrictions proposed by the Senate mean that we would not be able to do so. Prosecution would only take place after the Government proves that a claim is unfounded, which may be weeks or months after the offence is detected.

• (1520)

[English]

The Senate also wants to limit the powers of search and seizure to daytime hours and to confine warrantless search to instances where lives are at risk. If we accept the amendment, we will seriously hamper the ability of our officers to apprehend and prosecute those who organize groups of illegal migrants. Transborder schemes would be conducted mainly at night so the perpetrators could escape Canadian jurisdiction if something went wrong.

This proposal means that in winter months when darkness comes early, the time of day during which effective action could be taken would be greatly reduced. What could we say about the North where sometimes there is one hour of daylight a day?

Finally, the Senate wants to restrict the penalties for organizing illegal migration to those events carried out in a clandestine manner. If we adopt this proposal, we would see ships steam right into Halifax next summer with unauthorized passengers and we would not have the power to do anything about it. The practices we are trying to deter are not always clandestine. We want to deter all forms of illegal entry. Therefore, we cannot accept this Senate amendment.

I have, however, accepted the Senate's proposal that all prosecutions under this provision should receive the consent in writing of the Attorney General of Canada. This measure, as stated earlier, adds further substance to the Government's undertaking that a person who violates the Act in the cause of rendering needed humanitarian assistance to refugees will not be prosecuted.

[Translation]

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I will not accept any amendments to Bill C-84 that change the principles or objectives of the Bill. The amendments I am ready to accept will meet the basic concerns raised in the Senate's report.

I do not believe that we need to go further. Indeed, we cannot go further.

[English]

Canada's refugee determination system is strained to the breaking point. Bill C-84 aims to solve a clearly understood problem of abuse and to do so through the full application of the Charter. Parliament was recalled in August to deal with the urgent problem of a refugee determination system under siege. That urgency remains. We cannot permit further delay of our efforts to deal with it.

[Translation]

I would therefore call upon the House to deal quickly with the motions that I am introducing. I urge this House to accept those amendments that are in accordance with our objectives and to reject those that would impair the effectiveness of Bill C-84.

Madam Speaker, I move the following amendments:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House agrees with amendments 8 and 13(e) made by the Senate to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, but disagrees with amendments 4, 5(a), (b) and (c), 6(a) and (b), 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13(a), because this House believes they contradict the principles of the Bill for the following reasons:

Amendment 4 would exclude only criminals and war criminals from the refugee determination process, but would allow terrorists, spies and subversives to pursue a claim to refugee status, notwithstanding the fact that Article 33 the UN Convention would permit the removal of these latter individuals to their countries of nationality or permanent residence, even if they were determined to be Convention refugees.

Amendment 5(a) would eliminate the authority of the Minister to direct a ship to leave or not to enter Canadian waters. This amendment would reopen a significant gap in Canada's ability to control its borders.

Amendments 5(b) and (c) arise out of Senate amendment 5(a), which is not acceptable, and are therefore inappropriate.

Amendments 6(a) and (b) would reverse the policy on which the Immigration Act, 1976 was based, which policy was not changed in the Bill as passed by this House. The amendments jeopardize the possibility of successfully prosecuting persons who profit from organizing illegal migration and from counselling fraud among refugee claimants.

Amendments 9 and 10 would restrict the ability of peace officers and immigration officers to act quickly to search for evidence of major offences under the Immigration Act, 1976, in exigent circumstances, where lives are at risk or where evidence with respect to those offences may be lost or destroyed.

Amendments 11 and 12 would restrict the ability of peace officers and immigration officers to execute search warrants which have been duly authorized by a Justice of the Peace, by denying explicit autority to break open containers where it is reasonably believed evidence will be found and by limiting the authority to execute these warrants at night.

Amendment 13(a) would reduce the initial period of detention without review from seven days to forty-eight hours, which would allow insufficient time for the gathering of information to substantiate allegations or to identify the individual, particularly when large groups of undocumented persons arrive at one time.

And, that this House agrees with the principles set out in amendments 1, 2(a), 3, 7, and 13(b), (c) and (d), but would propose the following amendments:

Amendment 1 be amended to read as follows: «Strike out lines 22 to 23 on page 1, and substitute the following:

(c) to deter those who assist in the illegal entry of persons into Canada and thereby minimize the»

Amendment 2(a) be amended to read as follows: «Strike out lines 29 to 39, on page 4, and substitute the following:

Amendment 3 be amended to read as follows: «Strike out lines 7 to 12, on page 5, and substitute the following:

Amendment 7 be amended to read as follows: «Add, immediately after lines 6, on page 10, the following:

Amendment 13(b) be amended to read as follows: «Strike out lines 1 to 22, on page 21, and substitute the following:

(2) Where, with respect to a person detained under subsection (1), the Minister certifies in writing

(a) that

(i) the person's identity has not been established, or

(ii) the Minister has reason to suspect that the person may be a member of an inadmissible class described in paragraphed 19(1)(e), (f) or (g), and

(b) that an additional period of detention is required to investigate the matter referred to in subparagraph (a) (i) or (ii), the person shall be brought before an adjudicator forthwith and at least once during every seven day period thereafter, at which times the adjudicator shall review the reasons for the person's continued detention.»

Amendment 13(c) be amended to read as follows: «Strike out lines 23 to 47, on page 21, and substitute the following:

(2.1) Where the Minister has issued a certificate under subsection (2), the Minister may amend the certificate to which the detention relates to include any matter referred to in subparagraph (2) (a) (i) or (ii), following which the person shall be brought before an adjudicator forthwith and at least once during every seven period thereafter, at which times the adjudicator shall review the reasons for the person's continued detention.

Amendment 13(d) be amended to read as follows: «Strike out lines 48 to 50, on page 21, and lines 1 to 18, on page 22, and substitute the following:

(4) Where an adjudicator who conducts a review under subsection (2) or (2.1) is satisfied that reasonable efforts are being made by the Minister to investigate the matter referred to in subparagraph (2) (a) (i) or (ii), the adjudicator shall continue the person's detention.

(4.1) Every review under subsection (2) or (2.1) of the detention of a person suspected of being a member of an inadmissible class described in paragraph 19(1)(e), (f), or (g) shall be conducted in camera.

(4.2) Where (a) the Minister is of the opinion that any evidence or information to be presented by or on behalf of the Minister at any review under subsection (2) or (2.1) of the detention of a person referred to in subsection (4.1) should not be disclosed on the grounds that its disclosure would be injurious to national security or to the safety of persons, and (b) a request therefore is made by the Minister, the adjudicator shall order that the review or any part thereof be conducted in the absence of the person and any counsel representing the person.

(4.3) Any person excluded by an order under subsection (4.2) from the whole or any part of the review under subsection (2) or (2.1) may apply to the Chief Justice of the Federal Court or to a judge of that Court designated by the Chief Justice for the purposes of this subsection to have the order quashed and sections 36.1 and 36.2 of the Canada Evidence Act shall apply, with such modifications as the circumstances may require, to such applications.

(4.4) Unless quashed, an order under subsection (4.2) shall, with respect to the person to whom the order relates, apply to every review under subsection (2) or (2.1), or part thereof, at which the Minister is of the opinion that any evidence or information to be presented by or on behalf of the Minister at the review, or part thereof, should not be disclosed on the grounds that its disclosure would be injurious to national security or to the safety of persons.

(5) Where the adjudicator who conducts a review under subsection (2) or (2.1) does not continue a person's detention under subsection (4), the adjudicator shall make the appropriate order under subsection 104(3).

(6) An adjudicator who conducts a review under subsection (3) shall make the appropriate order under subsection 104(3).»

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the Liberal Party I am pleased to respond to the motion just put before the House of Commons by the Minister. I would like to begin my remarks with a commendation for the work done by the Senate. It should be noted that Liberal Members of the Senate have not moved amendments to the Bill in order to delay or as a tactic to frustrate the will of the House of Commons. Rather, this is a position adopted unanimously by all Senators on the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, including Conservative Members of the Senate. That speaks volumes about the kinds of amendments that have been moved. On this issue the Senators were not moved by any partisan feelings on Bill C-84, but were genuinely moved to improve a piece of legislation which was flawed seriously.

I would also like to congratulate the Senate for paying attention to the many deputations, representations, and witnesses which came before the Senate committee. There were many groups, individuals, and representations which were denied an opportunity for input because in the summer months the Government rushed the Bill through committee and through the House of Commons. At the very least the Senate deliberations provided a forum for those, particularly from the regions of the country, who were unable, on such short notice, to change their schedules, come to Ottawa, and make their views known.

I would like to pay special tribute to the Chairman of the Senate Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, Senator Joan Neiman, who was a pivotal and very sensitive factor throughout the deliberations of the Senate. In short, democracy was well served by the report of the Senators in the other place.

There are a number of clauses in Bill C-84 which have no business being there. There have been a number of changes adopted by the Minister, although those changes are less of a priority when compared to some of the bigger ticket items which the Government refused to move on. However, it is still a sign that the Government was prepared to show more flexibility than it did during the summer months when this debate came to the fore with great passion and emotion.

There was a trickle of understanding and warmth which was completely absent during the debate in the summer. That recognition emanated since the summer debate and is a by-product of a Government which has reflected upon what it did. The Government has seen that the piece of legislation introduced in the House in the summer was overkill. It went far beyond the necessity to update legislation. When discussing this issue with Canadians last month they gave a different view than they did in the heat of the moment. I believe that Members, if not Ministers, of the Government have recognized that they went too far with that piece of legislation.

Therefore, even though the changes are few and of less priority than some of the other items in the legislation, there is still a recognition that the Government erred in its approach, in its contact, and in communicating to the Canadian public what we were dealing with. I believe the Government feels a certain amount of remorse for having fabricated that crisis, remorse for having brought Parliament together. The Minister says that we are still in an urgent or emergency situation. Yet in discussions with the Senate committee and with the Senators we find there was absolutely no pressure, no signals from the Government of the day that it wanted that legislation quickly. There was no order from the Government to the Senators on that committee to rush through that committee as Bill C-84 was rushed through the legislative committee of the House of Commons. I believe that when the Government stepped back it began to realize that the crisis was a figment of its public relations imagination this past summer when its poll ratings were at 22 per cent at best. That was the impetus for the fabrication of the so-called crisis.

That brings into play the question of the role of Government if it is not to educate, to inform and to mobilize a progressive, understandable and calm public relation opinion towards very sensitive issues of the day, of which the immigration and refugee policy is an important part. Instead there is no leadership offered. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) talked about queue jumpers and illegal aliens. We had the situation in the last number of years where family immigration is down and entrepreneur immigration with the $250,000 capital investment is doubled. We are in a mess with respect to the backlog in refugee applications, and we have seen the spectacle of three or four high profile individuals who were clearly undesirable and who had come into this country notwithstanding. Therefore, we had a confusion of priorities, a lack of direction and a bankruptcy of leadership. That has bled the public confidence. That is really where the haemorrhaging is.

When we look at this piece of legislation, we must compare it with other issues. We must put into perspective the 330 individuals who came in by boat and asked for refugee asylum. I will admit that perhaps a few of those individuals, who knows, might not have been legitimate. A few might not have been true refugees, and a few perhaps should not have received the compassion of this country. Time will tell which of those individuals, if any, fall into that category. But we must compare the reaction of this Government to the reaction of the Government headed by the then Prime Minister, the Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), in 1979, followed by the Government of Pierre Elliott Trudeau in 1980. What was their reaction when the world was asking its countries to come in and collectively help out with the Vietnamese boat refugee crisis? What was the reaction of our country then? We accepted over a two-year period, be it under the former Prime Minister, the Hon. Member for Yellowhead, or former Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau, 106,000 Vietnamese refugees. That was above and beyond every other aspect of the program. There were 50,000 sponsored by the two Governments, and the other 50,000 were sponsored by communities.

I ask you, Madam Speaker, was it not a challenge of the Governments of that day to educate the Canadian public as to why we should try to help out in this world crisis? Should we not have educated the public as to why communities should open up their doors and their hearts to these individuals? These communities did that, and these are the same Canadians who live in our communities across the country today. These 106,000 refugees were allowed into the country with understanding and a sense of compassion and pride, and they are now integrated into Canadian society. They hold good jobs. Many of them own their own homes. Many of them have businesses, and their children, by and large, are doing extremely well. That is a successful and proud example of a people complemented by the best political leadership.

I ask myself where that leadership was when this Government was faced with a response to 300 people over two summers. The Senate began its deliberations and when it presented its recommendations, which represented the views of both the Conservative Party and the Liberal Party, I think the recommendations had two things in mind. The first was to try to maintain and keep the traditions that have made us a world leader in terms of assisting the plight of refugees. Therefore, the Senate wanted to instil some modifications in the Bill in order to try to have a piece of legislation which was moderate and in keeping with the progressive attitude that has shaped our policies over the long course.

I recall the words of Rabbi Gunther Plaut who came before our committee during the summer and gave a very moving testimony before the committee. He said: «I think the Bill was drawn in undue haste. This is why I think we need just a little more leisure to write legislation that makes sense». He said: «I think Draconian and emergency legislation gives the wrong signal not only to the world but to our own people in Canada». He asked the members of the committee to look carefully at some of the amendments suggested. He said: «Do not follow the worst instincts of people, but follow their best instincts». I think those words really provided guidance to members of the Senate committee who took those words to heart and made the changes that would allow that legislation to be in keeping with those traditions.

I believe the second impetus was to ensure that we would not be getting into any constitutional crisis vis-à-vis our Charter and laws. There was the fear that upon proclamation of this Bill into law, lawyers across this country would challenge this piece of legislation in the courts as a violation of certain aspects and sections of our Charter. What would happen then if one of those courts agreed with those arguments? It would cripple and paralyze the refugee policy yet once again. What would Canadians say then after being told by the Government that their concerns were taken care of? It would bleed confidence all the more. It would make the haemorrhaging problem even greater.

Therefore, we must recognize as parliamentarians that when adding up all the things we do, from constituency case files to speaking up on the floor of the House of Commons and in committee, we have two responsibilities that really dominate our work in this place. First, we must collect tax dollars and spend them wisely. Second, we must create and draw up good legislation in keeping with our Constitution and Charter to govern Canadian citizens. I submit to you, Madam Speaker, with all due respect, that it is simply unacceptable for the Government to bring forward a Bill, in the full knowledge that there are serious legal and constitutional flaws in that piece of legislation. Rather than racing through this legislation only to be sorry later, the message from the Senate, and, indeed, the message we departed with in the summer, was to take care of those legal flaws now in order to avoid complications later on.

I would also like to take a moment to discuss some of the amendments and recommendations for changes that were not approved by the Minister in his statement only moments ago. He mentioned that he did not agree with some of the statements since they were against the principles of the Bill. I question what the principles of the Bill actually are in light of the fact that some of the recommendations made by the Senate are sensible and in keeping with the very premise and objective of the Bill.

The first recommendation he rejected was with respect to the clause put in by his Government that would enable a Minister or the Government to turn back a boat. In the summer we felt, and we feel now, as the Senators do, that this is the wrong clause to have in any legislation. It offers no due process to those people who may be on board a boat. The Minister talked about the fact that people on these boats are largely economic refugees. How does the Minister know this? How will he know how many are on board? How will he know who is on board? How will he know from where they are coming? How will he know what are their ages? How will he know what their health is on board the boat? The whole question of the unknown is a big variable that the Government simply cannot dismiss.

We cannot have the Minister woken up one morning by a call from his Deputy Minister saying to him, «Turn the boat back». There is human cargo on these boats. Their cargo is not wheat or some raw material. They are not carrying shipments of steel. There are human beings on board who may in fact be legitimate refugees. We cannot afford to be flippant about this type of human cargo.

If the Minister is allowed to turn back a boat, then clearly the operative words become «mode of transportation». If a relative of mine were to flee his country as a refugee and come by air to land at Pearson International then he would be processed once he said, «I am a refugee». If another relative of mine from the other side of the world, who also may be a refugee, were to take a boat, that person would not receive the time of day. How can we allow the mode of transportation to dictate how the system will process such a person? Such a thing cannot be allowed. There is but one system and one law. There is but one category and one class of refugee. There are not two classes dependent upon whether one arrives by boat, plane, bus, or whether one arrives riding a bicycle across the border from Buffalo. The fact of the matter is that there should be one response by the system to a person, irrespective of how he or she come into the country.

The last aspect of this whole matter is the most curious. My contention is that turning back a boat does not discourage the manipulators or the traffickers of human flesh about whom the Minister spoke. According to his statements today he stated in his press release that some amendments, including turning back a boat, attempt to change the principles of the Bill, and that some do not support its over-all intent. He said therefore that he could not accept these amendments.

My question to the Minister is this. How will this turning back of a boat discourage smugglers and traffickers from trying the whole process again? As the legislation is written now the Minister can turn back a boat. He seems to think that that will discourage another boat from arriving. I ask Hon. Members to put themselves in the place of a smuggler, the captain of a boat. All he has to lose is the fact that he might be turned away. Thus there is a 50 per cent chance that he will dump his human cargo in Canada and a 50 per cent chance that he will be turned away.

If he is turned away, then perhaps he will dump his cargo a little further out, or else he will dump it on another part of the coastline, or even take his cargo to another country. The captain, the smuggler, does not care because he has received cash on delivery. By this point in time he has already pocketed the $10,000, $15,000 or $20,000 fee. He really does not give a hoot as long as he has the dollars in his pocket. If there were a second captain about to leave from another port, would he be discouraged from leaving with a new shipment of refugees? I think not.

What does the Senate suggest? It articulated the recommendation that rather than turning back a boat it be escorted into port. If we want to punish these smugglers of human misery then we should bring the boat in, confiscate it and sell it, and punish the captain by imposing a fine upon him or by placing him in prison. If we were to do that with a boat which arrived today and the message went back to all ports that the captain had lost his boat and is in prison, do Hon. Members think that another captain would leave harbour risking imprisonment and losing his livelihood? I think not.

The discouragement is greater if we bring the boat in and then punish the culprits. We will also be more wise since we will be able to question the captains. We can even try to break down the rings and the networks that are operating throughout the world. How wise would we be just to turn back a boat? It would not discourage anyone. We would only find the next morning another boat in another harbour.

When the Minister says that these recommendations do not fulfil the principles of the Bill he is wrong. In part, one of the principles was to discourage human smugglers. Turning back a boat does not discourage human smugglers at all. What it does is to offer a public relations gimmick to the Government to try to communicate the message that somehow it is doing something about the so-called problem.

Our suggestion is that the Government accept the recommendation to take in the boat and to punish those who need to be punished, allowing those who are on board the due process of law. We are not suggesting that, because someone is on a boat, that person is automatically a refugee. No one has suggested that, not the Senators, not myself, nor members of my Party. It will have to be established through due process whether or not these people deserve to stay in the country.

In this Bill the Government has created a new offence, a new fine and a new prison term for those who help refugees who might not have a valid visa. In addition to the question of turning back a boat, the recommendation in this regard probably summarizes the frustration that Canadians have with this piece of legislation. I would be embarrassed if my Party forced me as the Minister to put such measures in the legislation. What will be done through the implementation of such measures is to create civil disobedience for those such as priests, nuns, or the average layman who helps a refugee come into the country without the proper documentation.

Does the Government realize the impact of such a measure? Does it know the reality of the true refugee? I think that after a period of time in his position the Minister should know that sometimes the true refugees do not have the time to line up to obtain a visa document. Sometimes they have to forge such documents in order to get through the Customs of the country they are fleeing. Sometimes they do not even have the time to do that as they are being pursued. They simply get on the first plane or boat and get out of that country. Therefore they come to Canada without the proper documents that Members of Parliament, our families and other Canadians have six months to validate.

This measure puts the operative word on the document. It goes beyond that and states that if a priest were to help someone to come into the country who did not have a legitimate visa, he or she would face a possible fine or prison term. That runs counter to the life of the true refugee. It is offensive. It is offensive to those organizations and religious institutions that have made it a career and interest to help those refugees.

When one thinks about other issues, it has been the churches together with many organizations that have been at the forefront of the social issues. It has not been the Government, regardless of its stripe, but the churches that have attempted to feed the hungry and started the phenomenon of food banks in order to help. It is the churches and other organizations that have given shelter to the homeless. It is the churches and others who have helped the aged, the lonely, and the depressed. Now they are also helping those who do not have a country, not because of choice, but because of pressure, torture, assassinations, and threats.

They are now going to be punished if those individuals do not have the proper documentation. I find that offensive and embarrassing, even as a member of the Opposition. It will go down in the history of Canada that it was this Parliament that passed such a regressive piece of legislation with such an offensive clause to make it civil disobedience if a priest or nun helps an individual come through without the proper visa.

We suggested wording changes. As did the Senate, we suggested that it should be illegal for any church or other member of Canadian society to counsel individuals on fraudulent claims, or to advise individuals on fraudulent applications, or to establish, forge, or write the wrong visa documents.

They told us before both committees of the House and of the Senate that they would accept that. They do not want to be above the law. I have heard the Minister of Immigration on numerous occasions suggesting that somehow they want to be above the law. They want to be within the law. But we want to create a law that is respectable and a reflection of Canada in 1987-88 and not some sense of a society as it was back in the days when anything went.

This clause should not be looked at in a flippant manner. Many of those organizations will in fact be breaking the law. They have told us so themselves. I recall the words of Nancy Pocock from the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees who stated:

> If my Government tells me it is a crime to help these people, I will have to say I am obeying a higher law and I am going to continue to help them when they need me.

Therefore, there are citizens who have been forced to say that they are prepared to break the law. They are prepared to break the law not because they do not want to preserve a sense of order and fair play in this country, but because they do not respect the law. They do not respect the impetus behind the creation of this law, and they do not believe that it is just and fair and that it should be part of our system.

I was taken aback that, on those two primary recommendations about escorting the ship into port as opposed to sending it back, and not to create a new offence for those aiding and abetting legitimately, the Government did not move on those two aspects to bring it into line with the Charter, with the Constitution, and with the premise of the Bill.

Another area of contention was the search and seizure. The Minister mentioned that he did not want simply to use a warrant during the day, he wanted it in the evenings. He suggested that the Senators were saying that once it hits four o'clock in the afternoon they are not allowed to get a warrant because it is part of the evening. The Senate said no such thing. The Senate was suggesting that it would be more in keeping with trying to get the warrants during the day. But if the situation merited it, if the ship was getting away and it was eight o'clock at night, there was nothing in their recommendations that stopped the Minister or the Government from executing such a search and seizure.

There too the clauses went far beyond the need and the necessity of this legislation. It was almost suggesting that they wished to make immigration officials into Rambo-like people rampaging the country, opening and breaking at their leisure. Is this the type of country that Canadians want? Are those the type of laws that we have developed and nurtured over the years? Of course, they are not. The laws and regulations that we as a society have nurtured have been far more moderate, tolerant, and intelligent than simply providing wide powers that one day may be abused by some Minister or Government, regardless of political stripe.

Therefore, we thought that some of the recommendations proposed by the Senate with respect to the search and seizure powers would be taken back somewhat. Not for one moment do we want to take away the tools of any Government to ensure the security of our country. There are tools presently in place to look after our country. After all, I think that we have been doing a pretty good job all these years. There must be something in place that has allowed us to protect our borders. The tools are there now. We should improve those tools, yes, changing with the times to meet the new challenges, but certainly not galloping ahead into regulations that leave open the serious possible abuse of rights of Canadians citizens and non-citizens alike.

Another similar aspect of the Bill was the detainment provisions. This summer Senators, including government Senators and Members of Parliament, pleaded for some moderation in terms of the tools that they wanted in place. The existing regulations provide that anyone can be detained for good reasons for up to 48 hours without any questions asked. In order to continue to detain the person following 48 hours, the law requests that the Government must get approval from an adjudicator. That approval will be granted for one week, at which time that approval needs to be re-established.

Therefore, if there are good grounds for detainment, for example, if the identity papers have not come in from some other country, or if there has been a delay or questions, the adjudicator will provide an extension. No adjudicator in this country will abandon the security considerations of Canada because it is also their country. Any adjudicator worth his or her salt will obviously have to balance the interests of the country from a security viewpoint and the variables of individual rights. He or she will weigh them.

But let us remove and depoliticize that decision-making. Let us have a politically disinterested person, that is, an adjudicator making the decision as opposed to a politically motivated individual, for example, a cabinet Minister or a deputy minister.

Our system would be far healthier if that were the course taken, rather than giving great powers vested in a Minister who can basically detain at whim, simply with a rubber stamp. The proceedings are that seven days would be automatically granted, following which a 21-day period must be granted if they so desire because there is no discretion offered to the adjudicator to change that.

The Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) is present in the House. During the lifetime of this debate in the House I ask him to reconsider perhaps the moderation aspect with respect to both search and seizure and detainment.

Another aspect was the whole question of security. To start with, it is a very sensitive issue. It is even more sensitive following on the experience with which the country has had to live in the last year in respect of the granting of immigrant status to a convicted terrorist. It is an extremely sensitive and emotional issue.

The Government suggested that anyone suspected of a security flaw should not have access to the refugee process or the refugee system. The Senate came back and said: «We believe that that should be the case for those who are convicted of a serious crime, for terrorism, and for convicted war criminals». It indicated that those people should not have access to our refugee system to buy more time or to abuse the compassion of our country. I would agree with that. However, the Government wanted to go beyond that and talk about people it may suspect of some wrongdoing. Currently it wants to incorporate under Subsections 19(1)(c), (e), (f), and (g) of the Immigration Act people suspected of undermining security or people suspected of having done so in the past. It is all based on suspicion. As the Prime Minister mentioned a number of times this week, we have in our system the presumption of innocence until proven guilty. Our point is that we cannot simply detain or order people out of the country based upon suspicions. It must be much more valid than that. We must also define what we mean by «subversive».

Is Nelson Mandela a terrorist because he has tried to obtain freedom for himself and his people in South Africa? According to the definition, Nelson Mandela would be one of those individuals who would be seen to be undermining a Government of another land. He would be seen as going against the system. Currently Nelson Mandela is in prison and has been convicted of what South Africa thinks is a crime and what we would reward with a medal, namely, the seeking of one's democracy and freedom. Therefore we must try to define what constitutes subversive activities.

Our position has been that we need more than simply suspicion, and at the end of my remarks I will be moving an amendment which plays to that fact. On the one hand people convicted of serious crime have no business being in our country, let alone applying for refugee status. That is one extreme. The Government is going to the other extreme and saying: «Look, give us the power so that if we suspect somebody we can get rid of him rather than having them apply for refugee status». That is the other extreme, and it is too much of an extreme because it can be abused. My amendment, which I will read into the record at the end of my speech, would do the following.

If the Government had a suspicion about someone in Canada undermining the security of our country or having done so and not having been convicted in another country, the Government would have to begin deportation proceedings and allow for due process. If the deportation proceedings were upheld, that is to say, if it can be proven that the suspicions are true, I would agree that thereafter the door could be closed and that they should not be given a second opportunity to buy more time for a second merry-go-round by saying: «I am a refugee».

If the Government had suspicions about people who have not yet been convicted but are undermining security, we are mandating the Government to begin deportation proceedings immediately, which would trigger due process and a hearing. If the hearing concludes that they are a threat to Canadian security, following that judgment they should not be able to make a refugee claim. I think we are prepared to support that amendment.

We are also putting it forward in the spirit that I believe the country has learned something about our security system in the last two weeks about which I wish we did not have to learn. It is a balanced compromise which says that those who are convicted must leave the country and certainly have should not been allowed to apply for refugee status. Second, those who are suspected must have the due process of deportation proceedings, at the end of which they must leave or have their refugee application treated accordingly.

In conclusion, we wish to say that in part the objective is to curb abuse of the system. We have never said that everyone who has applied for refugee status is a legitimate refugee. We have never said that there has been no abuse. I wish we could have said that. We cannot afford to say that realistically about any aspect of Government. If we look at the unemployment insurance program we find abuse. If we look at the Canada Pension Plan disability provision, we find that there is abuse if people collect even though their backs or knees really do not hurt. We also know that there is abuse in terms of workers' compensation cases. Government tries to eliminate abuse without making disparaging remarks about the majority of cases which are legitimate ones. Therefore, if we have not turfed out the workers' compensation program, or the UIC program, or the CPP disability program, why should we turn the refugee program upside down because a number of individuals may have abused the system?

We are saying that no one should welcome, support, or reward those people who wish to abuse refugee procedures. At the same time we are asking the Government not to undermine what has taken many years to build up—a system of which Canadians are proud, a system which needs reform but, in the world context, is looked at with awe and envy in all corners of the globe.

During this debate we wish to submit a second conclusion to the Government. It should not get lost with the short term and think that this is a temporary piece of legislation. It has a larger long-term perspective. The Government should be educating the Canadian public, not trying to undermine or decrease public confidence in the system. Immigration and refugee policy is a very important area which can help to make Canada a better, bigger, and more prosperous country. The Government should not ruin in the short term what is there for the long term.

It should also discuss with Canadians in a mature way the following facts. We have a dwindling birth rate, an aging population, 50,000 people leave the country every year, rates of immigration are higher in terms of targets than the actual number of people coming into the country, and we need individuals because our educational system is still not producing a sufficient number. For example, we still go to Great Britain to import tool and die-makers.

When we add together all these variables, we see that we cannot sacrifice educating Canadians on those needs. They can see the merits of immigration, that it has an important role to play in coming years. They know that Canada will continue to search, to promote, and to invite people to its shores to join in the building of the country, which never stops because we are always building and always have an eye to the future.

Let the Government not deny that future, that potential which is there for immigration to add to Canada, by inciting and fabricating a crisis which does not exist. Let us be more positive. Let us be more statesmanlike. Let us be more outward looking. That is our second message to the Government today.

Our third message is that policy is not only a domestic policy; but it is also a window to the world. It has international implications. We must recognize that as Canadians sometimes we do not promote ourselves or our policies as aggressively or as actively as we should, as Americans do, for example. We should recognize that here is an example of international diplomacy, a recognition of international leadership in trying to combat what is a world problem. This is not a problem only akin to Canada; this is a world-wide problem in need of a world-wide solution. Let us not again be followers as opposed to leaders. Let us continue to lead. Bill C-84 is not leadership. It is a message to the world that we are loosening the resolve of trying to combat this terrible problem of where people have to go when they are on the run. This is a message to Great Britain, to the United States and to Europe that they too can become lax. If Canada is being lax it must be right.

I ask you with all due respect, Madam Speaker, where is the international solution if all those countries take away what is there now? What will we have if we have that long corridor of internationally locked doors? Will it make the problem go away, or will it make the problem greater? Will it lessen the frustration of the refugees who see those locked doors, or will they become more desperate and will more of them run to underworld manipulators?

Therefore, the international message is rather than loosening the resolve, rather than softening the political international will, we should be putting out a strong message. If there was ever a time to strengthen that resolve, it is now. Canada cannot accept 10 to 15 million refugees. No one is saying that. It would be impossible physically and politically. We know that. The world together must solve the problem, but this type of legislation begins to undo that resolve.

Rather than creating Bill C-84s we should be calling for an international conference. We should be bringing together the Ministers of Immigration and the Foreign Affairs Ministers who should be looking each other in the eye and saying. «Are we still as resolved?» Does the Geneva Convention really mean a damn at the end of the road? Is the Geneva Convention simply becoming an empty piece of paper that is manipulated by every Government or opposition Party which points to the Geneva Convention? Everyone mentions the Geneva Convention in his or her argument to justify the argument. That to me makes it meaningless because it does not have a significant, realistic impact at the end. If we want to restore the Geneva Convention to its proper stature, we need that political resolve internationally. We cannot do it alone, and we know that. Canadians do know that. Canadians are proud of past Governments of whatever stripe which have had the courage and the conviction to stand up and be counted in trying to get an increasingly stubborn world dealing with this human dilemma before us all.

Those are the three messages we would like to deposit into the records of the House of Commons for the benefit of the Ministers and the Government to try to convince them that there are other recommendations, a major one in the Senate report, that will preserve our traditions, keep intact our leadership and promote the pride that Canadians feel about our policies. Reform the system, yes. Improve it, yes. Cut out abuse, yes. But devastate the policy, no. The message from Ottawa to the country and to the world must be an unequivocal, resounding no. We are staying our ground and leading the world in the right direction.

History is created by monumental decisions that we look back to. If Bill C-84 is allowed to stand as it is now, people will not look back to this Parliament in 30 or 50 years in any good way; just as we looked back to the Parliament which turned back a boatload of Jews many years ago. That action might have been popular then, but it is disgusting now. We have the ability to learn from our experience and to ensure that future Members of Parliament and Ministers will look back upon this legislation as a building block as opposed to a stumbling block.

Pursuant to my earlier discussion in moving an amendment to clarify the security aspect of the Senate amendments, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi):

That the message of the House of Commons to the Senate be amended by:

a) deleting, in paragraph one, the reference to Senate amendment 4;

b) deleting paragraph two;

c) adding to paragraph nine a reference to Senate amendment 4; and

d) adding after amendment 3 the following:

«That amendment 4 of the Senate be amended by deleting the said amendment and by striking out line 16 on page 7 of the Bill and substituting the following therefor:

«(2)(c) and against whom a deportation order has been upheld by the Board; or"»

With those words, Madam Speaker, I conclude my remarks and I look forward to discussing this amendment with the Government. I look forward to further changes and further flexibility exhibited thus far on some of the more minor amendments. We also need movement and change on the basic tenets of this legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member will allow the Chair to look at the amendment and reserve as to the admissibility of the amendment until later on this afternoon.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, and the motion of Mr. Bouchard (p. 12300).

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to respond on behalf of the New Democratic Party to the Government's motion. I welcome the amendments that were adopted unanimously by the Senate. They follow very closely the amendments which my Party moved when this matter was debated in the House. They would, in fact, correct the main flaws of this Bill. Therefore, I regret that the Government has rejected the great bulk of the amendments of the Senate, including ones in which it said it accepted in principle but whittled away most of the meaning of the amendments from the principle. I regret that the Government has chosen after months of delay to rush this Bill in with so little time for Members to read it before the debate begins. I will take the opportunity later in the debate to assist members of my caucus in moving any appropriate amendments.

What the Government's action against the Senate amendments demonstrates is that this Government has chosen to stick by its policy of overkill reflected in Bill C-84 and Bill C-55. The Minister, in his speech, pleaded that there is an overload of refugees, and so there is. But he fails entirely to acknowledge that this has arisen largely because for several years, including the administration of his Government and the administration of the preceding Government, the backlog was allowed to grow by negligence, either in not applying staff where it could have kept the thing in pace with the need or by not applying necessary restrictions in immigration, which this Government did apply but much too late. It is using that overload cynically to build up hysteria in support of Bill C-84 and Bill C-55. It did that in a massive way last summer and it has begun to do it again.

Many people are wondering why just at this time somebody, high in the Department with access to CSIS reports, somebody leaked the case of Mahmoud Mohammad to the press so that all last week the headlines were filled with hysteria about terrorists. The timing was very interesting, and it is reminiscent of what was done last summer when there were certain well-timed leaks that had the effect, and some people think the intent, of creating more and uninformed hysteria on the part of the public. But it has not only been lateral leaks. Last Wednesday, the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) said that we should be talking with members of the other Chamber about Bill C-84 to see if it could be advanced quickly. He said, «It is possible that some of those who have spoken against it now want to speak in favour of what we, the Government, are trying to do, which is to keep terrorists, saboteurs and spies out of the country».

That is a shameful misrepresentation of the facts. I am not saying that it was intentional because this Minister has often given me grounds to conclude that he has no idea of what he is talking about, or that perhaps somebody else writes his speeches and he only reads them. But in fact the case of Mahmoud had nothing to do with refugees, and it was utterly slanderous for the Minister to introduce the matter of refugees in the discussion of his Department's egregious goof in allowing a person in without the normal security check.

But that has been the pattern of this Government for a year now, the pattern of both Ministers and the pattern of senior officials. It has been noticed far and wide. I quote from the Winnipeg Free Press of January 22:

> These are the ministers who claim that Canada needs tough new immigration laws which could be used to send genuine political refugees back to face potential imprisonment, torture or death. Their action demonstrates that, far from draconian new laws, what this country needs most is the competent and honest enforcement of the ones we have.

The Winnipeg Free Press in that case is dead on. However, the fact is that this Government set its agenda as long ago as about two and a half years ago, in the middle of 1985.

We find the agenda set by this Government in the Nielsen report, the cost-cutting report, in which, when he came to immigration, he said he could cut $60 million out of the Department and he would do it, of course, mainly by cutting back on humanitarian work. One of his recommendations, he called them options, was to insist that claims for refugee status be made only when the person is abroad except for those in hot flight, people arriving by direct transport from the country from which they are fleeing. That was proposed in a report dated October, 1985. In other words, it was prepared behind closed doors by the senior immigration officials with the then Deputy Prime Minister, notwithstanding the fact that the Standing Committee of Parliament on Labour, Employment and Immigration was then completing its work as asked by the then Minister of Employment and Immigration and by Parliament, its work of reporting on the recommendations of Rabbi Plaut, the commissioner who had reported to the Minister early in 1985.

So while the committee, dominated of course by members of the Conservative Party, was carrying out the mandate of Parliament at the request of the Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister was working out a totally different and opposite program. The report that we were asked to report on, Rabbi Plaut's report, was a pioneer work of humanitarian principle, and the committee followed his report very closely.

The Government ignored the Labour, Employment and Immigration Committee's report, violated the Standing Orders of this House by refusing to report on it. In two and a half years they have not reported on it because, it is clear now, they had their agenda fixed. They do not want any refugees in Canada except those who are selected overseas as good economic immigrants by our embassies or those who come in hot flight, that is by direct transport from their country of origin, and in fact it is fairly well known that it is almost impossible for a refugee to come in that manner from any country except the communist countries.

In other words, this Government chooses a sneaky, administrative means to shut out refugees from most of the countries of the world where refugees are being created such as in Latin America, the Caribbean, Africa, Asia and the islands of the Pacific. The Government does not want those non-white refugees in Canada. They only want white anti-communist refugees or ones who are considered economically very advantageous to Canada. That has been their agenda for two and a half years. That is why they ignored illegally the recommendations or the report of the parliamentary committee and that is the report that they followed in drafting Bill C-55 and Bill C-84.

I want to comment on the handling of the recommendations in this Bill. The first recommendation of the committee was to replace the word «smuggling» with «clandestine entry». The Government claims to accept that in principle, but in fact it does not. By replacing it with «illegal entry», what they do in fact is to continue the same policy as was put forward by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to the legislative committee last summer in which he said that the phrase «illegal entry» will mean that anybody who helps a refugee, a real refugee who lacks a visa, is committing a crime. In other words, the Government has not changed its policy by pretending to accept, with the weasel phrase «in principle», the first amendment of the Senate.

The second amendment on security certificates, yes, the Government has accepted that amendment. That means that the Government will revert to the standard practice of justice in this country and let the court decide rather than some ministerial official, on the question of security certificates, that a person who is the subject of a security certificate should have the chance to be present during the presentation of the Government's case to the judge except where the judge, not the Minister, decides there are compelling reasons for exclusion. I am glad that the Government has accepted that amendment.

That was amendment 2(a). The second part of 2(a), however, the Government rejects. That really negates the value of the first amendment which they have accepted. That is, they will let the judge hear the case but they will not let him make a decision which he is qualified to make. They are saying that the amendment of the Senate would provide for a review of detention on the sole grounds of danger to the public. They say that that is too narrow and they will not let the court, the impartial court, override the decision of the Minister.

On Amendment no. 3, in the matter of security certificates, they have a rewording which may be adequate. They do not want to give us time to do a careful study of this. It may be that I will find, when I have had opportunity for further study on this during the next day or two, that there are problems there, but for the time being it looks adequate to say that this amendment would confirm that the judge is to assess the reasonableness of the certificate on the basis of all the evidence available to the judge.

Now we come to Amendment no. 4 which would allow people who are found to be security risks to make a refugee claim. Contrary to what the Minister and people on his side keep repeating, that is required of us by the treaty we signed 20 years ago with 100 other nations of the United Nations. Article 32 on expulsion reads as follows:

> 1. The Contracting States shall not expel a refugee lawfully in their territory save on grounds of national security or public order.
> 2. The expulsion of such a refugee shall be only in pursuance of a decision reached in accordance with due process of law.

There is no due process of law there, Mr. Speaker.

> Except where compelling reasons of national security otherwise require, the refugee shall be allowed to submit evidence to clear himself, and to appeal to and be represented for the purpose before competent authority or a person or persons specially designated by the competent authority.

Section 3 of Article 32 is the one where the Government fails in its international obligation by treaty. It says:

> 3. The Contracting States shall allow such a refugee a reasonable period within which to seek legal admission into another country.

That is the reason for letting him make a refugee claim and have it decided whether or not he is a refugee, because if he is found to be a refugee he has a right under international law, by the treaty we have signed, to a reasonable time to find another country that will accept him. It goes on to say:

> The Contracting States reserve the right to apply during that period such internal measures as they may deem necessary.

That could include detention if they are worried about what he might do while they are finding another country.

It is very ironic, Mr. Speaker, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) a few weeks ago, when he was in Central America, suggested that Canada might take in some of the Contras. Some of the people who have killed, burned, and carried on war against the Government and the people of Nicaragua might be accepted as refugees in Canada, according to a statement by the Secretary of State. He later qualified the statement, but it is very interesting that it depends upon whose ox is gored. In other words, when he is in Central America as an ally of the United States he is willing to bend the rules and allow people in who should be excluded by this Bill.

I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs ought to talk to his colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and point out that Canada should amend this Bill as the Senate asked in order not to violate our international obligations under the United Nations Convention regarding the status of refugees which we signed 20 years ago.

We then come to the matter of turning the ships around. We find that even a good Tory newspaper, The Globe and Mail, agrees with the Senate and not with the Minister. In their editorial on January 5 they say:

> Bill C-84 would, for instance, let the Minister turn ships away from Canadian waters if he thought they might be smuggling passengers—a response more dangerous to those passengers, and less intimidating to the captain, than seizing the ship and arresting the crew when the boat landed.

They go on to object, likewise, to further clauses of the Bill. They point out that what we should be doing is to bring the ship to shore, charge the captain with any offence that we believe he has committed, and deal with the passengers accordingly. That would have the effect of drying up the illegal traffic.

However, the principle of turning the ships away is part of Erik Nielsen's principle of hot flight only. In other words, the Government wishes to turn refugees away because they come from the wrong countries and they have the wrong colour of skin and perhaps the wrong politics. So the ship turning amendments, (a) and (b), have been rejected by the Minister and likewise amendment (c).

We now come to the infamous amendment on aiding and abetting. This says, in effect, that anybody who helps a refugee can be prosecuted for doing so if the refugee did not have a visa to enter Canada. Madam Speaker, it has been said time and again by everyone who knows about refugees that refugees most often cannot get visas, certainly not valid visas. This means to try to intimidate ordinary Canadians from doing what thousands of them have been doing and what thousands of them continue to do to this day, to intimidate them with the threat of a jail sentence.

The Minister claims that he has to do that, that he will not apply it to everybody but he has to do that to catch the guilty ones. In other words, the Minister is saying that our Department of Justice is so incompetent that it cannot define a crime. He has no confidence in the legal experts of our Department of Justice. There are 35,000 lawyers in the land who attack that clause through the Bar Association. I am sure they could easily provide the legal expertise, and I believe some of them would do it for free on a matter of conscience. The Minister is so contemptuous of the legal expertise of our Department of Justice that he says they cannot write a law that describes the illegal actions that violate our immigration security without attacking thousands of people whom he says he would not prosecute.

In Section 7 again the Minister weasels. He says he accepts in principle the amendment that would require the personal written consent of the Attorney General of Canada before a prosecution could be launched. That is what he actually proposed, so I understand, when he spoke to the Senate. But then, of course, he backed off from that and decided that that was not good enough, that it has to be the Attorney General and his deputy. He now has it that the Attorney General or the Deputy Attorney General can initiate the charge. In other words, he does not deal straight, even with his Conservative colleagues in the Senate.

Amendment no. 8 is accepted, and I am glad of that. They probably could not do any less since the Supreme Court, in the Hunter versus Southam case, made it quite clear that a search warrant should only be issued where there are reasonable grounds to believe that evidence will be found. In other words, the Government knows that it is prohibited from going on a fishing trip, from searching and seizing, in the hope that it might find some evidence. That is illegal and I am glad the Government has admitted it.

With regard to Amendment no. 9 on search and seizure, it is very interesting that in his message to the Senate the Minister misrepresents the nature of that amendment. That is very interesting, Madam Speaker. In speaking of Amendments nos. 9 and 10 he says they would restrict the ability of peace officers and immigration officers to act quickly to search for evidence of major offences under the Immigration Act in exigent circumstances where lives are at risk or where evidence with respect to those offences may be lost or destroyed. The amendment expressly says that where lives are at risk it may be done. They expressly allow for that, and the Minister has misrepresented them in order to justify his refusal.

I see you are signalling to me, Madam Speaker, that my time is nearly finished. I am very sorry that such a large subject as this is presented in such a hurry. I will have to rely on my colleagues to bring out some of the further faults. I wish merely to summarize by saying that this motion of the Minister must be rejected because it is contrary to our Charter of Rights as the Senate has explained in page after page of its explanations.

It is contrary to our treaty with the United Nations and a hundred other members of the United Nations with respect to the protection of refugees. It is a shameful and unacknowledged application of the policy of restricting refugees to people in «hot flight», that is only from a very few countries, or to people chosen as immigrants for their economic value. It has a bias against racial equality in the selection of refugees thereby, and makes use of hysteria and fear to try to get public support for passing it. Public support for this Bill has been waning for many months. The Government would be very lucky if it could find a way out of this mess it has gotten itself into and not have to pass this resolution.

Mr. Marchi: Madam Speaker, I listened with some interest to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), who is the critic for the New Democratic Party on immigration. I also want to take a moment to say he worked very diligently during the summer months in terms of trying to come to grips with Bill C-84.

I know it is a bit unfair because I have not had time to bring him a copy of my amendment, but I wonder, since he only had 20 minutes to speak on the Bill, whether it might afford him a few more minutes to discuss the amendment I moved in the sense that the essence of the amendment is to try to reach a compromise between the Government's position that a person who is convicted of a criminal offence or of war crimes is ineligible to access a refugee claim, and the Government saying that if we suspect anyone of any security breach or uprising, however it may wish to define it, those people will not be able to access the refugee claim.

The intent of my amendment was simply to put in place that if there are legitimate suspicions of individuals, at least they be given the chance to defend themselves through a deportation inquiry hearing, at which time their side of the story will be brought to bear. If in fact the deportation inquiry confirms and upholds the order for deportation, at that stage I believe those individuals should not be able to access the refugee system or buy more time, but in fact should be asked to leave the country. From that viewpoint, and I will not go into it any further, will the Hon. Member tell us what his initial position would be toward that amendment?

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I respect the work the Hon. Member has done and the many points he made during his address. However, I will not give a final opinion on his amendment for two reasons. First, it appears to me to violate Article 32 of the Convention, and this is a treaty that Canada has signed. It appears to violated the Convention because it would deny a person a chance to make a refugee claim. The United Nations is quite firm on that.

This is pioneering legislation on individual human rights. As a democratic socialist, I find it very illuminating that it is a Tory Government that attacks individual human rights internationally. This follows the Declaration on Human Rights by the United Nations in 1948, Article 13. It follows the Convention on the Status of Refugees of 1951, and the Protocol of 1967 signed by us in 1968. What that says is that a person has a right to seek asylum and protection from his own Government if it is persecuting him or allowing persecution. He has a right in law. We agreed with that law. Therefore, we should not deny it even though it is a little inconvenient or expensive.

We can keep him in detention if we are afraid of him or her, but we should not deny their right because it can make a difference to what happens after, and this brings me to my second point. He has to have a chance to choose another country, not necessarily to be sent back to, say, the Pinochet regime, which could declare him to be a terrorist or criminal on grounds that would not hold in Canada.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, I once had a colleague who said that those who preached tolerance many times are the most intolerant, and members of the New Democratic Party want to be the champions of tolerance. Very often, we find the only ones they want to be tolerant of are those people who happen to agree with them, and if they do not agree with them, they quickly resort to name calling and epithets. Witness, for example, the provincial election campaign in British Columbia about 18 months ago. Practically on the day the writ was dropped, the now Premier of British Columbia was called names. There were racist slurs against him by the then Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe we are discussing Bill C-84 and not the Premier of British Columbia. I would ask that the Hon. Member stick to the subject.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Member will very quickly make a link between his comments and the Bill that is being studied right now.

Mr. Friesen: The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) in his speech again made accusations against the Government which had the nature of racism wrapped around them when he said this Bill included provisions that were designed to keep non-whites out of Canada. That is reprehensible on the part of a Member who has worked well in this House on this legislation. It is a reprehensible remark. There is nothing in the legislation that deals with this. There is nothing in the record of the Government that would indicate that. It is an unconscionable slur on the part of that Member against the Government.

I want to give the Hon. Member an opportunity to retract the statements he made in his speech regarding racism in this legislation. He has done that in his speech today. He has done it during Question Period. I invite him to look at the record. It is this Government that introduced a policy that allowed at least 50,000 Vietnamese to come to Canada in 1979 and 1980. It is this Government that has kept the policy of immigration open for people from Southeast Asia and Africa to come to Canada under its immigration policies. I would invite the Hon. Member to withdraw the statements regarding racism which he has levelled against this Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) on a very short comment.

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, my reference in the Question Period of last week was a reference to the slanderous remark of the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) attributing to refugees something that the RCMP had not been able to find. My reference to racism was a reference to the legislation first proposed by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) in the Nielsen report and which is now being implemented in Bill C-55 and Bill C-84. The facts speak for themselves. The effect of those two Bills is to prevent refugees from coming from the kind of countries to which the Hon. Member has just referred. They would no longer be able to come because they could not come directly from those countries.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

NATIONAL ANTHEM ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West) moved that Bill C-232, an Act to amend the National Anthem Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, let me begin by taking one minute to record the purpose of this amendment to the National Anthem Act proposed by Bill C-232. Simply stated, the Bill deletes a reference to «my sons» in the national anthem so that O Canada will read «True patriot love in all of us command».

Why make this change? Again, simply stated, the existing words, «command», exclude female persons and can be interpreted as suggesting that patriot love, the love of one's country, is not required of female persons.

Let us face it, 100 years ago only the sons of Canada, not the daughters, were expected to go forth to do battle for their homeland. In two great wars women were not expected to enter hostile action. But, today, 1988, we welcome women in all phases of national life, including in a very special way Canada's Armed Forces. It is time for other changes. This evolution should be reflected in the national anthem.

The point is this. Whether or not one regards the reference to «our sons» as implying male superiority, everyone should agree that elimination of the reference is consistent with equality of the sexes in Canada. Equality is a legislative principle now enshrined in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms with the consent and concurrence of virtually all Canadians. Why not extend that principle of sex equality to the national anthem?

It would be appropriate if I mentioned at this point two other points by way of clarification. First, the National Anthem Act in its French version differs substantially from the English version in terms of the words. There is no problem with sexual references in the French version. Thus I can say to my Francophone colleagues that they need not be concerned with this particular point.

Second, I should point out that the official national anthem, O Canada, as designated in the National Anthem Act, contains only one stanza. It is that stanza with which we are now dealing. Other verses of O Canada do not have official status. Thus I ask Hon. Members to keep this in mind while debating the particular words of the Bill. We are talking about the one official stanza.

I want to proceed with the presentation but I think, Madam Speaker, you would understand me if I, while taking a high road in this debate, mention some of the difficulties that one encounters on a subject such as equality of rights as related to the women of Canada. I have to admit that there still is abroad in the country—indeed, in the Parliament of Canada—a degree of chauvinism that will take subjects of this kind in a rather lighter vein. I should mention in passing that this particular amendment to the National Anthem Act was before the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business. It was rejected for special treatment under the new Standing Orders. That special treatment would allow this amendment to the National Anthem Act to come before the House and to be voted upon. That process was rejected by the committee.

On the more chauvinistic side, I think I cannot resist the opportunity to refer to remarks by one Earl McRae in today's The Ottawa Citizen. I should mention that Earl McRae is a sports writer whose major concern is the losing streak of the Toronto Maple Leafs. He goes into deep analysis of that and related subjects. But when it comes to the change in the national anthem, he pooh-poohs it and defeats it as a meaningless thing and asks if I have not better things to do.

I want to say to Earl McRae and to all others like him that I have many more important things to do and many less important things to do. However, I regard equality of rights as one of the more important subjects for the Parliament of Canada. I regard this change to the national anthem that I propose as an extension of that equality of rights. So, Mr. Earl McRae and all other Canadian chauvinists, I do not apologize for bringing this matter before the Parliament of Canada. Indeed, I intend to pursue the objectives of this Bill regardless of the outcome of today. I do it without any concern for those who regard this to be an unworthy occupation for Members of Parliament or unworthy of the time of the House of Commons.

Having said that, let me deal with the history of the National Anthem Act and the official version of O Canada. We can go back almost 100 years ago when Robert Stanley Weir put together the words that now substantially are the verses of O Canada. There was never an official version of O Canada, although the current version, or something very close to it, was used in the Diamond Jubilee celebrations, and it was printed in connection with the royal visit of 1939. However, the current version of O Canada did not really achieve its prominence until 1968 when a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the National and Royal Anthem agreed upon the words that are now present in the National Anthem Act. The committee did that after much deliberation, but for reasons unclear to me it allowed the words and the reference to «all my sons» to continue in the official version.

We can update all this to 1980 since no real action was taken with respect to that 1968 parliamentary committee report until 1980 when, I might point out to Hon. Members, our colleague, the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart), who is still a Member of this House and representing the constituency of Simcoe South, introduced a Private Members' Bill, Bill C-20, which would have allowed O Canada, the Weir version so-called, to be adopted as the national anthem.

The matter was debated in the House of Commons, as it is being debated today as a Private Members' matter. At that point the Secretary of State indicated that if the Bill were withdrawn and the subject matter presented to a committee he would undertake to give government support to the measure and to produce an alternative Bill in the very near future.

In fact, he did that. In June of 1980, Bill C-36, which is the Bill that enacted the current National Anthem Act, was introduced and passed. As I have said, it is more than a historic note with respect to the procedure that took place in June of 1980 because that Bill was passed with the consent and concurrence of all the Parties in the House of Commons. However, it was on the particular understanding that the words provided for in Bill C-36 were not to be written in stone. Further changes were to be considered.

In fact, it was on the record of the House of Commons that it was anticipated that Private Members, through the medium of Private Members' Bills, would introduce changes in the House of Commons. Thus I want to use that to deal with this point. Some people say, «Do not change the national anthem. It is part of our history. It is changing our traditions». That is not so. Anyone who knows the history of O Canada and the national anthem simply does not accept that as either factual or proper in theory or in terms of heritage. The O Canada was not adopted by the House of Commons until 1980. There was no official version until the National Anthem Act was passed in that year. It was clearly on the understanding that there would be changes from time to time, and particularly on the understanding that those changes would be brought to the House of Commons by way of a Private Members' Bill. We are exactly on course. There are changes in the National Anthem Act that I think are required with the evolution of our society. I believe they should be made. I believe the change removing the reference to «thy sons» is one of those changes that was contemplated when the National Anthem Act was adopted.

I wish to refer briefly to the constitutional process that has taken place in Canada over the last decade. I wish to remind Members that we all agreed to the Constitution Act of 1982. Some did not, some voted against it, but the great majority agreed with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In Section 28 it enacted the assurance that there would be equal rights for men and women, that there would be no discrimination based on sex.

I ask Members of the House of Commons how, on the one hand, they can see fit to enact Section 28 as part of our constitutional record, and reject the amendment that I proposed? It is not consistent. I have looked at the matter and I have come to that conclusion. I do not believe there is any justification for any other conclusion.

That brings me to my personal involvement with this issue. It was not a matter that I discovered. I did not go looking for reasons to change the national anthem. I was approached by representatives of Mount Saint Vincent. It is an institution in the federal constituency of Halifax West that contains the mother house of the Sisters of Charity and a university of higher education dedicated to the interests of women. It accepts men as students, but everyone knows that Mount Saint Vincent University is the leading women's institution in Canada. It was suggested to me that this reference in O Canada was not consistent with our pattern of evolution in terms of equality rights for men and women. On examination I agreed that that statement was correct.

As a result, on June 14, 1984, I introduced Bill C-247 in the House of Commons, which is exactly the same as the Bill now before us. On the prorogation of that particular session I reintroduced the Bill in 1985, one year later. The whole matter has a history that did not start yesterday, but this is the opportunity to pursue and act upon the contents and substance of this Bill amending the National Anthem Act.

It is important that I cover the legislative process that might apply to Bill C-232 and its action before the House of Commons. As everybody knows, the motion is for second reading of the Bill and reference to a legislative committee.

Quite often when Private Members' measures gain acceptance in the House of Commons, the Member is asked to withdraw the Bill and consent to a reference of the subject matter to a standing committee of the House of Commons. I have had that happen in the past. It happened with respect to missing children's legislation that I introduced. It happened with respect to victims of crime legislation that I introduced by way of a Private Members' Bill.

That process is not appropriate to this Bill. I cannot help but think that anyone suggesting that the subject matter be referred to a standing committee of the House of Commons rather than reference of the Bill itself to a legislative committee, is really trying to assist in the process that would bring about this legislative change. I wish to tell you why, Madam Speaker.

Under the new rules standing committees that have an interest or jurisdiction over an area can deal with any matter they want. They do not need a reference from the House of Commons. If the committee responsible for the Secretary of State is interested in this change, it can go ahead and pursue it. It does not need a reference from the House of Commons.

I come here asking the House of Commons and my colleagues in this Chamber to refer this matter, this request for a change in the wording of our national anthem, O Canada, to a legislative committee. I do not think anything less than that reference to a legislative committee is acceptable. I do not think any Member will do any favour to the women of Canada who are interested in this issue, and all other persons who believe the issue should be acted upon, by suggesting any other course of action.

I ask Members to take this matter in a serious vein, allow it today to go to the legislative committee. I am not wedded to the words that constitute the change. I simply believe that the change must be made. It is the only conclusion consistent with our endorsement of equality for the sexes. If we do any other action we will be called into ridicule by those interested outside.

We do not change the national anthem recklessly or without regard to the heritage of Canada and Canadians. We adopted the National Anthem Act in the House of Commons in 1980. We said it would be changed. That was part of the agreement by which it was enacted. Now it is time to give effect to those changes.

There may be other changes, but I present to the House one that I think is necessary and desirable. For those who would say, «Don't change it. Let it go. Do it another day. It is now part of our history», I say that it is not yet part of our history. It will become part of our history, but it will only become an essential and honoured part of our history if we get the words right. Therefore, if we get the words right in 1988, O Canada will be sung for years, decades, and centuries to come by our sons and by our daughters with pride in the words and pride in the meaning. We will not be faced with these ludicrous distinctions.

I suggest to any Member of this House who wants to challenge me on this subject, who wants to pooh-pooh it, who says it is not necessary, it doesn't mean anything, my mother-in-law likes it, or my sister likes it that that is not the point. I say to Members and I say to everybody that, if you do not understand this point, if you do not take this point to heart, you do not understand equality.

I have found it to be the case, most unfortunately, that those people who denigrate a change like this are not in the forefront when it comes to equal pay for work of equal value. I find they are not there when it comes to positive action, employment opportunities for women, or any of those issues which are vital to the women of Canada. I do not want to suggest that this is an issue that is vital to the women of Canada, but it is a demonstration of the will of Parliament to give real meaning to equality, to give a meaning to equality, in this case to the sexes, but in another case to the equality of all Canadians.

Members of Parliament and colleagues in the House of Commons do not number yourself with those who stand against equality. Count yourself with those who stand for equality. Let this amendment go to the legislative committee, and we can all be proud of our national anthem.

[Translation]

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Madam Speaker, I wish to be counted among those who are in favour of equality as advocated by the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) by supporting his Bill.

To begin with, Madam Speaker, I should like to say that I have a personal interest at stake, because it is proper during the consideration of bills to advise the House about such personal interest. I should like to state that my personal interest is due to the fact that for almost a year I have become the father of a young girl, Laura, who will be one-year old next week. Moreover, I have five nieces in my family and up to now there is no nephew among the progeny of my parents.

I also wanted to say that I agree with the Member for Halifax West when he said that it is an important symbol because I had the opportunity during recent years to see girls of two, three or four years of age learn our national anthem in school.

Madam Speaker what can be the effect of the words «in all our sons command» on a young girl learning our national anthem? One could argue that it is a trifle or an unimportant matter, but who can deny that it could have some effect on young girls who could perhaps feel they are excluded in that important symbol of our country?

I heard the Hon. Member mention the comments of sports writer Earl McRae who denigrated, it would seem, the importance of debating this matter. Perhaps it is from the world of sports that we should take our lead in this debate and remind ourselves that several weeks ago a young woman from Toronto, after two years or three years of legal battles, succeeded in participating in a boys' hockey team. I think that we all remember her name is Justine Blaney. When she went on to the ice, and it was reported in the newspaper, I could not help but think to myself: «Good for you, Miss Blaney». She had to put up with a lot and she had to fight hard to achieve what she wanted to achieve, that is, basically to play with the best of them and to the best of her ability.

I think the Hon. Member's analysis is correct when he referred to the passing of the National Anthem Act in 1980. He said that the understanding at that time was that the words were not to be written in stone, that there would be changes from time to time, and that these changes would be brought to the House in the form of a Private Members' Bill. I was in the House at that time and, without having checked the record, I recall that that general consensus prevailed in 1980.

I also think that the reference he made to the people from Mount Saint Vincent University who came to see him was an apt one. Obviously the matter is of concern to well thinking, honest people concerned about the effect of symbols on equality in society. It seems that it would be appropriate for the House to join with the Hon. Member and support his motion.

Therefore, I wish to support him in the hope that, with not much debate, we can refer the matter to a legislative committee where, as he said, the exact words could be open for debate and perhaps to suggestions from expert witnesses. It is appropriate that we proceed with the matter and that the precious time of the House be not wasted.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, for the benefit of the House I would like to reflect briefly on Bill C-232, introduced by the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby). The purpose of this Bill is to change, in the English version only, the words «thy sons» to the words «of us», in order to remove any sexist reference from our national anthem. I would also like to thank the Bill's sponsor for giving us this opportunity to consider a question that to some people may seem far less important then the major economic issues the Conservative Government has been dealing with for almost three years, as you well know, Madam Speaker, and the major social issues that same Government has been dealing with for over three years.

Madam Speaker, I realize the Opposition gets upset at good news, but there has been a lot of good news in the past three years. They will have to live with it.

An Hon. Member: What about the polls?

Mr. Vincent: What about them? Look at the results of the poll in Trois-Rivières!

We are talking about a question we deal with regularly, but to many Canadian women and perhaps some Canadian men, it has become a matter of principle. This question is of vital importance because it concerns the concept of justice and equality for all the citizens of this country.

The Bill before the House today is reminiscent of another Bill, introduced on various occasions and again just recently in the House. Its purpose was to change the official name of the Province of Nova Scotia, this time in the French version. Although the respective purposes of these two Bills are quite different in nature, there are enough similarities for us to be able to draw some conclusions that will be useful in considering the latest Bill.

The Hon. Member for Halifax West would like to see the words «thy sons» in the English version of our national anthem replaced by «of us», in order to avoid the sexist connotation of the former term. I would say, Madam Speaker that the purpose is in fact to neutralize an expression the Hon. Member judges to be undesirable because it is essentially masculine in nature and therefore sexist.

In fact, with today's major waves of feminist claims, Madam Speaker, this is the sort of difficulty we must face every day when we speak either in French or in English. I have nothing against making the necessary effort to find alternatives. Quite the contrary, I feel that our languages must keep up with the times.

We had a most significant example of this about a year ago when the time came to find a name for the «Museum of Man». I felt that the construction of this new building which would host the exibits in Hull was a perfect opportunity to re-think the name of this noble institution which is part of our national heritage.

I congratulate the people in charge of our national museums for the name which was finally selected. The old museum will be referred to as the «Museum of Man» and the new one as the «Canadian Museum of Civilizations», these two terms having a connotation not only with different cultural and linguistic eras, but also with realities as concrete as architectural designs.

I have had the opportunity to research the history of our National Anthem. I want to emphasize two facts: the original version of O Canada in French, was composed and sung for the first time in 1880, over a century ago; the English version, although not quite so old, goes back some time as well. With lyrics composed in 1908 by Robert Stanley Weir on the original music by Calixa Lavallée, it spread during the years which followed World War I and was fairly quickly adopted by Anglophone Canadians generally as the true national anthem of our country.

We are also impressed by the long parliamentary debate which resulted in the official adoption of our national anthem.

The whole thing began in 1964 when Parliament dealt seriously with the issue of the national anthem with the creation of the first Special Joint Committee of the House and the Senate. Another parliamentary committee, created in 1967, recommended that the music composed by Calixa Lavallée be adopted as music for our national anthem and that the lyrics, those in French by Adolphe Routhier, and those in English by Robert Stanly Weir, be officially adopted with minor changes in the latter case, for the sole purpose of avoiding some unfortunate repetitions.

The House had to deal with the Bill on the national anthem at least half a dozen times before adopting it. Finally it was only in 1980 after agreement had been reached among the three Party leaders that it was possible to adopt the current version of the national anthem, on the basis of recommendations made by the parliamentary committee 12 years earlier.

Madam Speaker, the interesting aspect of this story is that the people of Canada did in fact choose their national anthem long before our predecessors in this Parliament even began to deal with the national anthem issue. And as I see it, Madam Speaker, Canadians were well-advised to act as they did.

In light of the Bill we are debating today I can certainly understand the concern of my colleague from Halifax West and those of some of the Canadian men and women he represents.

But as lawmakers we have to do our utmost to promote the cause of women. In that respect our Government's performance stands as an example. Madam Speaker, you are witness to this . . . without extending my remarks. We must be ever more vigilant concerning the words we use and the decisions which have an impact on our collective future. As I pointed out earlier, that is the kind of approach we took concerning the future Museum of Civilizations.

Still I am not at all sure that we are on the right track when we try to correct the past as we see it today. On the basis of that principle, just how far should we go?

Our national anthem is the product of popular tradition, it is part and parcel of our common heritage. Of course we must do our best to ensure that our society and our country continues to prosper, and to a certain extent we must plan the future on the basis of today's values and ideals. Yet at the same time, Madam Speaker, I would suggest that we have to show respect for the integrity of such symbols as time and tradition may have left us. As it happens, they are among the better sources of enlightenment because they enable us to identify with our own times and steer our future course.

Madam Speaker, I conclude with this question: What would our children and our descendants think if they came to realize that we were so pretentious and bold as to disguise our ancestral heritage in the hope of making it better?

• (1730)

[English]

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, in writing to speak in this debate I must first declare that I am in sympathy with the Bill proposed by the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby). I heard his impassioned plea for reason and I highly respect that. If the anthem is to be a symbol of our cohesion, then what it says must be consistent with what Canadians as a whole believe and value. No one should feel that O Canada is not meant for him or for her. There is no doubt that national symbols, such as flags, anthems, emblems, holidays and the like, play a very important role in our lives. They represent and project an image of our country. They link us to our heritage and, in this manner, give us a feeling of continuity and serve to evoke in each of us a clear understanding of our identity as Canadians. They remind us of what we hold to be important and communicate that to the world.

O Canada, the symbol under discussion here today, has its roots in the early days of this land. Its beginnings go back to 1880 when it was suggested that a competition be held for the composition of a national anthem. Some of the principals involved in the evolution of O Canada were Calixa Lavalée, Canada's leading music figure of the day who composed the music for O Canada, and Adolphe-Basile Routhier, a judge of the Superior Court of Quebec who wrote the French lyrics.

It was not until after the turn of century, in 1908, that an English version composed by Robert Stanley Weir began to come into use. In 1924, the Association of Canadian Clubs endorsed Weir's version as a suitable anthem to be sung at all Canadian Club meetings. At the same time, the Lavalée-Routhier-Weir version was given official recognition by the federal and provincial Governments on many important occasions.

This version was used to mark the fiftieth anniversary of Confederation on July 1, 1917. In 1948, by Order in Council, it became the anthem of Canada's Armed Forces. In May, 1967, a special joint committee of Parliament was constituted to study the question of a national anthem. In its report in February of the following year, the committee recommended the adoption of O Canada as this country's national anthem. The members of the committee agreed that the music composed in 1880 by Calixa-Lavalée should be adopted as the melody. They agreed that the first verse of the poem O Canada, written by Judge Routhier, should be adopted as the French lyrics. They agreed further that a slightly modified version written by Robert Stanley Weir should be adopted as the English lyrics for our national anthem.

The first Bill, proposing the adoption of O Canada along the lines of the recommendations of the committee, was presented by the Secretary of State in February, 1972. This Bill died on the Order Paper. However, in May, 1980, 100 years after the composition of O Canada, the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) introduced a motion urging the Government to present legislation recognizing O Canada as the national anthem of this country. The three House Leaders at the time agreed to limit debate on second reading to one speaker from each Party, and, at the same time, not to propose any amendment to the English version of the anthem which would replace «sons» or «native» or «north» or «land» or even «God». These words were not acceptable to some because of sexist or racist overtones and unacceptable to others who wanted to see Canadian waters as well as the Canadian south, west and east mentioned. Still others preferred that no mention of faith or belief in a supreme being be made. So, however, unsatisfactory the wording of O Canada may have been, legislation was adopted and O Canada was officially proclaimed as our national anthem on July 1, 1980.

Our anthem, like our Constitution and our flag, has evolved very slowly. For some reason we Canadians do not get all wrought up about documents and symbols that define who we are as a country. Ringing declarations about Canadian nationhood are likely to leave many of us feeling a little embarrassed. As frustrating as this reticence may sometimes be, I think we do well to remember that this reluctance to define Canada and Canadians in a clear and passionate way is rooted in the same reserve that abhors jingoism, imperialism and «me first» nationalism.

The purpose of the Bill before us today is to change, in the English version only, the words «thy sons» to the words «of us» in order to remove any sexist reference from our national anthem. The reasons for this were very eloquently spoken by the mover of this motion, the Hon. Member for Halifax West. The abolition of sexist references and sexist behaviour is a goal we all wish to achieve, nobody more so than the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his cabinet colleagues.

For nearly four decades success at federal Governments have affirmed a commitment, both nationally and internationally to advancing the equality of women. Many initiatives, too numerous for me to go into here, have been undertaken by the federal Government to promote sexual equality. As the Hon. Minister responsible for the status of women has stated:

> We intend to provide women with a full range of choices and opportunities to use their talents and to benefit from their use, whether in the home, the workplace, the community or the world at large.

I want to assure the Member for Halifax West that I, too, am committed to the goal of equality. But the issue here, I believe, is a recognition that our national anthem is part of our collective heritage, our identity as Canadians. It is that heritage that we all, as Canadians, should be proud to pass on to our children to be protected, respected and cherished.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, first, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) on a very excellent change to an important document which is the National Anthem Act. I agree wholeheartedly, certainly my Party would support this, with the very progressive change the Member is proposing which at long last recognizes in our national anthem that not all of us are sons of Canada and that daughters of Canada also are capable of patriotic love for our country. I believe that the deletion of the words «thy sons» from the English version to be replaced with the words «of us» is a very excellent change. On behalf of the daughters of Canada, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for this Bill which would, I am sure, be supported by the 52 per cent of our population who happen to be daughters.

I am sure all Hon. Members agree that this is not a token or a nit-picking change but quite a symbolic and significant gesture that is important to women in Canada. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, in Section 15, states that every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and in particular without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

I thank the Hon. Member for bringing to our attention once again how disgraceful it is that our national anthem, the song in which we portray ourselves as Canadians to the world, contains within it sexist language which in a subtle way perpetuates discrimination against women. The use of sexist language is insidious because it is often thought to be very harmless or perhaps merely annoying and certainly not a big problem that should be given priority by many people.

I know my colleagues in the House and even my colleagues in caucus often get a little tired of those of us who remind them that terms which for many, many years were thought to be generic are masculine and therefore exclude women. We do this rather deliberately and not to be offensive, as I am sure you will appreciate, Madam Speaker, but because it is a trick of the mind to which we have been acculturated. It is important that we be a little more conscious of language changes.

The fact is that sexist language, when left unchallenged, does tend to perpetuate without any thought on our part certain views which are no longer accurate. My colleague who spoke a few minutes ago said that the wording of our national anthem came from the roots of our land many years ago. Of course it did, but let us not forget that it originated in an era in history which was a patriarchal society. In that day, women did not have the vote and indeed were not legally considered persons. We have come a long way since those days and it is important that our language be updated to reflect that.

Indeed, I have mentioned on numerous occasions in this House that it is time we changed the language of our very legislation which still, out of British tradition, uses masculine language expecting that «his and him» automatically refers to all of us.

When we say, «our sons» in the national anthem, does it really mean that our daughters are not important? If some daughters really thought about it, they might feel that way. Does this mean that our daughters are incapable of loving Canada, our country? Some say that it really means nothing, that actually «sons» is not a generic term.

Let us consider the reverse use of such sexist language. What would men feel about this? Would they be happy if our national anthem said: «in all our daughters command,» and left them out?

There are, of course, two sexes, and half the population is of each gender. We want to recognize that in all our literature and especially in our national anthem. When we use a general term for Canadians, we want to be sure that we refer to all Canadians.

The use of male language which ignores the female sex is a subtle way to denigrate that sex. That is why we object to this and try to have consciousness-raising about language. It is to say to our daughters that in some way they do not exist and no matter what standards of excellence they personally strive for and achieve, in this country perhaps only the sons count for anything in the long run. In the public eye, they are the ones who love their country. None of us agree with that and none of us intend that to be the interpretation, but I think that by changing the language, we automatically include everyone. Again, I thank the Hon. Member for proposing these changes.

I thank the Hon. Member for making us consider, as a result of his Bill, one other point. I did not realize until I went over it today, as a matter of fact, that there is another change in language which I hope the Hon. Member for Halifax West would consider when this Bill is referred to committee. There is another very inaccurate word in our national anthem. This matter was referred to me by the Hon. Member for the Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) who heard representations on this matter from one of her constituents, an immigrant who was born in the United Kingdom.

This constituent wrote to the Hon. Member objecting to the phrase «native land» in the opening lines of our national anthem which reads: «O Canada, our home and native land». He objected because the word «native» refers to the land of a person's birth and excludes immigrants to Canada who cannot refer to Canada as their native land.

I believe this appeal, which was made on behalf of all immigrants who have chosen to come to Canada and have become Canadian citizens, is completely justified. I would like to point out that the The Oxford Dictionary defines the adjective «native» as meaning: «of one's birth, where one was born, belonging to one by right of birth or indigenous». I think it is quite clear that when we are talking about our native land, we are referring to people who were born in Canada, not to people who chose to become Canadians but were born in other lands.

In view of this inaccuracy, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Halifax West if he would include an additional proposed change in wording when this Bill is referred to committee. I propose that the word «native» be changed to «cherished» so that our national anthem would then read: «O Canada, our home and cherished land», a simple change which would include a significant number of immigrant Canadians.

This second change in wording would, I think, be a significant gesture just as the Hon. Member's word change is to women. It would assure Canadians who were born in other lands that they indeed are first-class citizens in Canada and are not excluded from our national anthem or from anything else.

In conclusion, I thank the Hon. Member for proposing this Bill. Certainly we do support it and hope that it will go to committee and will include the second change I mentioned.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Madam Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to participate in debate on the Bill brought forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby). I, like my colleague from Edmonton East, have a different opinion and view of his proposal. It just so happens that the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), at the last moment, brought forth a very valid point of view.

The Hon. Member for Halifax West proposed a change and the Hon. Member for Vancouver East found another change. I thought that we finally had a national anthem that could last us for a couple hundred years and become a very historic and nationalistic thing for all Canadians, but here we are changing something again.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver East brought forward someone's concern about the use of the word «native». Let us look at that concern in a different light. Many people consider the native people as the first people of Canada, people who have been here for thousands of years. They might object if we took that word out of the national anthem. In many cases, they think they have not been fairly treated and might perceive this in a different way.

Then there may be Canadians who do not believe in God and are wondering why they would hope God would keep this land. That is a possibility. Atheists have a right to live in this free land.

If you go one step further, Madam Speaker, it says «glorious and free». We do not have the free trade agreement yet. Some day this country will probably be free in that regard. Some people may consider that to be free means that we do not have to use any money. Surely we could find people who do not agree with the statement that Canada is free. It is not very specific and surely we could find people who would argue that point of view. Maybe in five years someone will stand up in the House and say that we should use «equal» rather than «free».

People may object to the biblical term «thee» which we use about four times. I kind of like «thee», it rhymes with «free». It was probably helpful when the national anthem was written to consider that it had to rhyme somewhat, that there had to be lyrics. I believe that during the famous debate when the official national anthem was accepted someone stood in the House of Commons and actually sang the national anthem. I would do the same thing but it would bring tears of nationalism to your eyes due to the very words. It would fill you with emotion. I happen to love the national anthem as it stands right now.

I did a little research. I phoned some women in my riding and asked them their honest opinion about this phrase change. I asked them how important it was. They said that perhaps we could change it but asked what it would do for the disparity which women now face. They asked what parliamentarians are doing about that, what we are doing about the women on North Main in Winnipeg who have to resort to prostitution. They believe that the Government should be helping those people.

Mrs. Killens: What are you doing about it?

Ms. Mitchell: What are you doing about it?

Mr. Holtmann: That should certainly take priority over changing our national anthem, because changing the national anthem will not take them off the street. We must consider that.

I can understand the Member for Halifax West wanting to make a change. It gives him some prestige and he could probably even run his next election campaign on it. However, I do not think women will vote for the Government because we made this change.

Ms. Mitchell: Do you think they're going to vote for you?

Mr. Holtmann: I do not think the women of Canada will vote for the Opposition because they support this motion. That will not give them a vote.

Where does this lead us, Madam Speaker? If you look around the House of Commons you will see lions and moose. Have you ever checked the sexes of them? They are all male. Some day someone will get up and suggest that we should desex these critters around the House of Commons. In the entrance way there are many statues of men. Where is the equality? Where is this going to lead?

In Manitoba we have a Museum of Man and Nature. It was decided that «man» also means «humanity». What is wrong with the word «man»? We do not have to change things for the sake of change. We have taken change too far. When the national anthem was written no one thought that women were not important, that they were not part of Canada. No one suggested or thought that.

I would like to come back to life in 200 years and find the national anthem just as it is. I am going to come back in 200 years. I am sure it will be an exciting time. I hope people are not sitting in this very House still trying to change some of these things.

Where does this all lead and when do we stop? Let us start doing things which are important to the economy. Let us get all people working and better the lives of all Canadians. That is what is important. Bringing this Bill forward puts the issue in the open once and for all. I know that my point of view will hold and we can get on with more important business of the House

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, at the time of Confederation the country was preoccupied with the mechanics of unification and asserting a unique identity among the family members of world nations.

After Confederation Canada grew steadily, but in an orderly fashion. It was not until 1917, 50 years after Confederation, that we finally established our true independence in the eyes of the rest of the world. During that year, at the Battle of Vimy Ridge, Canadians served for the first time as a wholly Canadian force, emerging with distinction as victors. Other nations at that point came to regard us as an autonomous nation with our own strengths, Government and national character.

At that time the red ensign graced flagpoles around our nation, side by side with the Union Jack. As the years passed the Parliament and people of Canada expressed the desire that we have a new flag that would be readily identified as a symbol of Canada throughout the world. Some people today are sorry that there is not a bit of blue in that flag because it is my understanding that blue stands for integrity, white stands for peace, and red stands for sacrifice.

Our own red and white banner of freedom and equality, with the distinctive Canadian maple leaf, was adopted by Parliament in 1964 and officially proclaimed on February 15, 1965, by the Queen. There are Members here today who were serving in Parliament at that time and I am certain each one of them remembers that day with fondness and pride.

Again, a fair amount of time passed before we obtained our own Constitution in 1982, but with the careful planning that went into that completely Canadian document we ended up with the finest and fairest declaration of self-identity in the world. We do things gradually, but we do get them right.

Madam Speaker, the story of our national anthem as well parallels such timely growth. Its inception dates back to 1880 when the French Canadian composer Calixa Lavallée wrote the music to a French text by Mr. Justice Routhier at the request of the Lieutenant Governor of Québec. For a while English Canadians would still sing God Save the Queen or The Maple Leaf Forever.

In 1908 the Hon. Robert Stanley Weir penned the English version which, over the years, was given recognition by federal and provincial Governments for ceremonial occasions. Forty years later this became the official anthem of the Canadian Armed Forces by way of Order in Council.

Finally, in 1980, the 100th anniversary year of the music, our House of Commons adopted a Bill proclaiming O Canada as our legal, official national anthem. We have fondness for centennials in Canada, Madam Speaker.

These inspiring lines still make our hearts swell with pride when we see our flag wave, when our athletes excel in international competition, and when we travel to foreign lands and hear people speak with such respect for this nation we call home.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is with deep regret that I must interrupt the Hon. Member.

[Translation]

Perhaps I might be allowed to make a very brief observation. It was with great pleasure that several times during the debate I heard the name Calixa Lavallée, a great Canadian, an outstanding former resident of the Saint-Hyacinthe region.

The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the order shall be dropped from the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

Adjournment Debate

IMMIGRATION—ADMITTANCE OF CONVICTED TERRORIST—NEWSPAPER REPORT/SERVICE OF DEPORTATION PAPERS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Madam Speaker, I rise in my place during this late show opportunity to raise a further question pursuant to a question I raised in the House of Commons on January 21. My question was directed to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) and concerned an incident to which Canadians have been treated for the last 10 days or so, namely, the incredible bungling of extreme proportions involving the convicted terrorist who was allowed to come into this country and then granted landed immigrant status.

As you know, Madam Speaker, from your knowledge of the regulations, such an individual would be clearly inadmissable according to our Act, yet not only did he find himself in this country but the Government actually approved his landed immigrant papers.

The Government was negligent in three areas; first, it did not find out about the true background of this individual in Spain from CSIS, which has the responsibility in our immigration proceedings, of making sure all applicants are security cleared. There are two essential tests with respect to individuals who want to come into this country. First there is a health check and, second, a security check. Enough resources are allocated to this area that cases such as this should be discovered.

The second mistake was that despite a telex alerting Pearson International Airport that this gentleman was arriving, this individual was able to walk right past immigration and Customs officials at the airport in Toronto without any questions being asked. That was the second time he got past our officials.

The third mistake, in our submission, would be that he was allowed to live in a Canadian community without any questions asked. He is a convicted terrorist who, in the words of the Government, did not pose a security threat, something I find somewhat odd given the individual's background.

Another question we raised is what happened in Spain? At what point did the Government commit this serious error. The Government and its Ministers have been defending the situation, saying it was the individual who misled Canadian authorities and it was on those grounds he was approved. We asked the question that was raised by the Toronto Star which suggested in its January 20th edition that the American intelligence service and the Israeli secret service had advised our Canadian officials in Spain about the individual's true identity and about his terrorist record. Despite those warnings, it is alleged by the Toronto Star that those officials somehow, for some reason, still saw fit to give this individual a security approval.

Our question was very specific. At any time did the secret service or officials from the Israelis ever make representations to Canadian officials? We asked the Minister to confirm or deny. He chose to do neither, which I think is significant because if it clearly was a situation where there was no recommendation by these other two security forces, I think, politically and logically, the Minister would have taken the opportunity to deny the story. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary who will be responding tonight will inform us as to whether or not Canadian officials were advised and, in fact, requested by the other two security forces to not allow this person to get on board the plane. The Toronto Star states, according to its sources, that the officials knew of these recommendations even before the person boarded the plane.

The second part of the question was, if we give the benefit of the doubt to the Minister that the officials were misled, or ignored the individual's background, on what immigration criteria was this person allowed to come into the country? There are 12 factors including job, education, language, training, family, age, dependants and a number of other issues, which criteria must be met by all prospective immigrants.

Therefore, when one looks at this individual's unemployment situation in Canada, the fact that he is involved in a Manpower training program, and the fact that there are literally thousands of applicants with impeccable qualifications who get turned down every year with the story that they were misled, surely there must be some criteria by which this person was able to come into the country. We would like to know from the Parliamentary Secretary what that criteria was.

I look forward to the answer of the Parliamentary Secretary to both these very important questions.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member stated, he raised this matter last week. Security screening of prospective immigrants to Canada are conducted by CSIS under the following statutory authority: Section 14(B) of the CSIS Act which states:

> The Service may provide any Minister of the Crown with information relating to security matters or criminal activities that is relevant to the exercise of any power or the performance of any duty or function by that Minister under the Citizenship Act or the Immigration Act, 1976.

Section 15 of the Act authorizes the Service to «conduct such investigations as are required for the purpose of providing—advice pursuant to Section 14».

Responses to questions relating to this case have already been given by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) in the House of Commons. On January 19, 1988, the Minister said:

> We did a police security check on him in Europe based on false and misleading information which he gave to us. Based on that he was given his clearance and allowed to come to Canada.
> We received subsequent information. CSIS officials interviewed Mr. Mohammad the day after he arrived in Canada. He still denied that he was the known terrorist. Three days later the RCMP interviewed him.
> Fingerprints were taken which were sent to Europe, and no positive identification was made on that gentleman until May, 1987. That information was then turned over to Immigration officials in June and they began their investigation.

As a deportation hearing in this case is now going on, I want to ensure that Mr. Mohammad receives a fair hearing. For this reason I do not wish to comment further on this matter.

THE CENSUS—ALLEGED RELEASE OF CONFIDENTIAL MEDICAL INFORMATION/REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF CENSUS FORMS—RIGHT TO REFUSE IN-DEPTH INTERVIEWS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Madam Speaker, the issue I would like to raise resulted from a question I asked on November 3, 1987, concerning the operation of the Canada census and, in particular, the interviews that stemmed from the health care section of it.

In the Young case in Powell River, two members of the Young family have chronic illnesses of a very different nature. They require very specific treatment and very specific medications that are, again, very different. The family members use different physicians in different communities. They purchase medication from different sources.

They went through the health care interview very carefully with the interviewer. After that time they received calls from a drug company, which had been given the information, offering to sell medication to both individuals. This matter was raised with the Minister. There has been a refusal to investigate adequately the matter.

This matter should very definitely be turned over to the RCMP. It should be thoroughly investigated to determine from where that information leaked out of the system and whether or not there are additional problems with it.

In the same community another family experienced some serious unacceptable harassment from the same interviewers. The harassment went on after the parents refused to co-operate in a discussion of a family member's medical problem. The health care interviewers contacted the children and attempted to interview them on the same matter. The parents were absolutely irate and to this date no action on the matter has been taken by the Minister responsible for the Canada census.

If in fact Canadians are going to have confidence in this program of gathering information about the population there will very definitely have to be co-operation from the Government to ensure that absolute confidentiality is in place. When people with a legitimate reason refuse to involve themselves in additional and supplemental material that is not necessary to the main census, there must be a respecting of the wishes of those citizens and certainly not attempts by the employees of Statistics Canada to circumvent what would be proper procedure. Those procedures are laid out very carefully.

There must be a referral of the one case to the RCMP, and basically there must be an apology to the individuals who have complained, and an assurance that this will not happen again.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, on behalf of Supply and Services I would like to address the allegations made by the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly) that Statistics Canada staff passed confidential medical information about census respondents to drug company sales representatives. More specifically, that information about the Young family of Powell River was passed to a firm called Bridgewater Marketing Research.

These allegations are very serious. Upon being informed of them, Statistics Canada and the Minister responsible for Statistics Canada immediately launched a full-scale investigation.

Statistics Canada officials in Vancouver and in Ottawa searched federal, provincial, and municipal sources in an effort to locate the business enterprise identified by the Young family. An exhaustive search by Statistics Canada failed to locate a company operating under the name Bridgewater Marketing Research, or a variation thereof. When contacted again, the Young family was unable to provide additional information about this firm.

A thorough investigation into the procedures and conduct of the Statistics Canada interviewer was also undertaken. This investigation confirmed that the interviewer from Statistics Canada had adhered to proper procedures and had taken every measure to ensure that confidentiality was safeguarded. Furthermore, no other complaint was received from the other 95 households covered by this interviewer.

I can assure you, Madam Speaker, that the Minister responsible for Statistics Canada is completely satisfied with both the manner in which the Young family's questionnaire was handled by Statistics Canada and with the results of the investigation that were conducted by officials. The only way to obtain additional information would be to trace Bridgewater Marketing Research, the company which contacted the Young family. Until this can be done, it is completely unfair to accuse Statistics Canada of a breach of confidentiality. No evidence can be found linking a Statistics Canada employee to Bridgewater Marketing. In fact, no firm with such a name could be found.

The Minister and Statistics Canada recognize the Young's distress and can assure them that no violation of the information they entrusted to Statistics Canada has occurred. Should the Hon. Member have any additional information that would enable us to trace this company, we would appreciate receiving it.

REFUGEES—COST OF WELFARE FOR REFUGEE CLAIMANTS IN TORONTO

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Madam Speaker, do you get home to your riding every weekend? I suspect that you try to get home. I certainly try to get home to my riding every weekend. When I do, one of the first things that I always do when I get home is to start to go through the massive amount of mail that has accumulated while I have been away.

I am sure you, Madam Speaker, receive a lot of mail. I receive a lot of mail at my constituency office, and I receive a lot here in Ottawa, but the mail I receive at home is of a certain variety. I suspect you know what I am referring to, Madam Speaker, that is bills! I suspect as well, Madam Speaker, that you may get a few bills in the mail, and you may have to write out some cheques when you get home to your constituency every weekend. I have that problem.

Last weekend when I went home and started opening my mail I found in those bills my real estate property tax bill for the first half of 1988. Not a very pleasant thought when I looked at the size of that bill and realized how that had escalated over the year. It disturbed me somewhat. In fact, it disturbed me a great deal. When I receive my property tax bill and look at it and think of what I am paying for in that bill, I think of policing. I am paying for the local police force. I think of the fire department. I am paying for the fire department. I am also paying for the garbage to be collected. I think of the local roads and sewers, and perhaps some of the recreation facilities and activities. These are the sorts of things for which I expect to be paying in my local property tax bill. I do not expect to pay for the cost of processing welfare payments to refugee claimants.

I do not know about you, Madam Speaker, but to me that seems to be something which really does not belong in the property tax. It does not seem as if when I pay my local taxes to the municipalities that I should have to pay for the cost of processing welfare payments to refugee claimants. It seems to me that some other level of Government should have that responsibility and, to my mind, it is the federal Government.

Before you say, Madam Speaker, that it is impossible that I should be paying for the processing of these welfare payments, let me tell you that the Metropolitan Toronto Community Services Department conducted a study on welfare claimants, in particular refugee claimants, back in July of 1987. It examined refugee claimants who were receiving welfare and found, in the month of July, that there were some 3,310 active cases of refugee claimants receiving welfare payments in Metropolitan Toronto. Just reflect on that number for a minute or two, Madam Speaker; 3,310 is the size of a good many communities and towns across the country.

Included in the costs of processing the payments for these cases were things like salaries and fringe benefits for employees, office space rental, and all that sort of thing. These 3,310 cases amounted in one month to $252,000 for the processing cost alone. I am not referring to the payments to the recipients, but just to the administrative costs of processing them—$252,000 for one month. That is over a quarter of a million dollars for one month and amounts to $3 million in one year.

As you may know, Madam Speaker, in the Province of Ontario the administrative costs of processing welfare payments are divided 50-50. The province and the federal Government pay 50 per cent of the cost and the local taxpayer pays the other 50 per cent. In this case the 50 per cent of the cost paid by local taxpayers through their property taxes for refugee claimants amounts to $1.5 million per year.

I want to stress that I am not talking about actual welfare payments to refugees, because there is some confusion in the department's mind on that, but I am talking about processing costs. The payments themselves are very substantially over that and are paid 100 per cent in the first year by the province and the federal Government. When we get to the processing costs, in fact only 50 per cent is paid by the province and the federal Government. I do not think that is a fair way of handling the processing of welfare payments to refugee claimants who are not, after all, the responsibility of municipalities but really fall within the jurisdiction and responsibility of the federal Government.

I do not know about you, Madam Speaker, but if you had to pay in Saint-Hyacinthe the processing costs of welfare payments for 3,300 refugee claimants, would you in fact think that it was fair? No, sirree, Madam Speaker, you would not think that that was fair. No, sirree, the Parliamentary Secretary who has a big smile on his face over there would not think it was fair if that were going on in Surrey, White Rock, or wherever.

I am expecting tonight that the Parliamentary Secretary will tell us that the federal Government will live up to its responsibilities in respect of refugees and ensure us that it will cover all the processing costs for the administration of welfare payments to refugee claimants and that it will relieve me and other property taxpayers of having to pay these costs through our real estate taxes.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, first I want to say that while all Members in the House have the right and the responsibility to raise questions that cover subjects of concern to them, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) has earned the right over and above the normal rights that we have in that he comes from local government activity and therefore understands how federal activities can impinge on local governments. He has also consistently in the House asked questions about subjects such as this one. While every Member has the right to ask questions which they may choose, the Member from York East has displayed a pattern about showing concern for fiscal responsibility, particularly as those burdens could shift to the local Government if the other two levels of Government do not do their share of the work or carry their fair share.

I have noted the Hon. Member's question. Unfortunately the question focuses more intently on the $1.5 million cost sharing program between the federal and provincial Governments. It is easy to lose sight in the question that there is also the ingredient of the cost of processing that $1.5 million. The Member stated that Metropolitan Toronto had asked the federal Government to pay at least a portion of the $1.5 million. I understand that the issue of refugee claimants and their impact on municipal services in Metropolitan Toronto was first brought to the attention of the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) last June. A report prepared by the Commissioner of Community Services called for a tri-level government committee to deal with the influx of refugee claimants. This resolution was supported by the Minister of State for Immigration.

The Minister wrote to the clerk of the municipality of Metro Toronto offering the services of Canada Employment and Immigration officials in the Ontario region and welcoming the establishment of an intergovernmental committee to co-ordinate the planning of services to newcomers in Toronto. I understand that an introductory meeting has taken place which has set out parameters for the mandate of the committee and to establish membership.

As the Hon. Member is aware, the Canada Assistance Plan requires that provinces and the federal Government share the cost of income assistance on a 50-50 basis. As the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) pointed out in his reply to the Hon. Member's question, agreements between the provincial level and the municipal level are decided by these two parties. Having paid its 50 per cent of the cost, the federal Government does not interfere in the provincial-municipal cost sharing arrangements.

Might I add, and I think the Member understands this, that if the other place will do its duty to Canadians and make certain that it accepts the motion put forward by the Minister of Immigration today on Bill C-84 and passes Bill C-55 speedily, most of the questions which the Hon. Member has raised regarding this subject could be solved. The refugee claimants could then move from positions of being claimants to being landed immigrants or being asked to leave the country. That would relieve the burden from cities like Toronto, Vancouver and Montreal and would resolve from those refugee claimants what is at present a life of tension for them. If the Senate would do its job, we could get the job done.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

INDUSTRY

CLOSURE OF FIRESTONE PLANT IN HAMILTON

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, this weekend a plant in my riding which employs 1,200 people is going to close its doors. This weekend the Minister who is responsible to help save that plant, is off fiddling in France. He didn't even have the courtesy to respond to a plea that I made to him last December regarding the retraining money. He put $6.5 million aside for retraining monies when it was going to go to an American company. Now it is going to go to the workers, it is only $545,000. It is peanuts.

I am a member of the Opposition. I know that there are at least two interested parties who would like to buy Firestone. I have personally seen a guarantee for a $30 million offer from a bank here in Canada, yet the Minister refuses to take seriously the possibility that Firestone may be sold, and he continues to bow to the will of Firestone in the United States to refuse to sell that company.

• (1405)

I am asking the Minister, as a Member of Parliament who is concerned about saving those jobs, to return from France to deal with the issue in the City of Hamilton, to take seriously an offer which could be up to $30 million for that plant in the city of Hamilton, and not to put out the kind of garbage that I received this morning in the form of a letter which basically said that he has written off not only the Firestone plant in Hamilton but the whole city.

I want answers from this Minister, and I want answers from this Government. Stop fiddling in France and come home and do your job.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CRITICISM OF OPPOSITION PARTIES' POLICIES

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, hear these "flop-flips". After months of stonewalling Bill C-22, opposition Members of Parliament now rise in anger over recent drug price increases, even when they know that a quick passage to Bill C-22 would have established the Drug Price Review Board which would have monitored the cost of drugs.

And take the case of Mahmoud Mohammad, the Palestinian terrorist now living in southern Ontario. Wasn't it just a few short months ago that opposition Parties were assailing the Government over Bills C-84 and C-55, legislation designed to remove quickly those refugees who entered Canada by way of illegitimate means?

The current opposition squabble over the Mirabel land sales is another example. If only one Member on the opposition side could experience having his land and way of life expropriated so unceremoniously, I am sure they would be singing a different tune today.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, good opposition is hard to come by these days. I know the people of Alberta have taken note of these Liberal-NDP flip-flops. I know that the rest of Canada has too.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MANITOBA INDIAN BANDS' LAND CLAIMS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, once again it is necessary to stand in the House and point out how the federal Government is neglecting its responsibilities to our native people. In Manitoba those bands involved in negotiations over treaty land entitlement are feeling extremely frustrated with the ongoing inaction of the federal Government. This weekend native leaders from the bands involved met in Thompson, Manitoba, in my riding of Churchill, to discuss their strategy for getting the Government to act.

Agreement has been reached between the provincial Government of Manitoba and these bands. Despite repeated requests on the part of the Manitoba Government, there still has not been action by the federal Government. Realizing that what is left to be negotiated lies with the federal and provincial Governments, the bands have set a deadline at the end of March for this matter to be settled.

Last March the Minister of Indian Affairs (Mr. McKnight) refused to sign a land entitlement agreement to which the provinces and the bands had agreed. The Province of Manitoba is still trying to meet with the appropriate officials of the federal Department of Indian Affairs in order to meet the deadline. Repeated attempts have been made by the provincial Government to get negotiations moving, but all to no avail.

I have written the Minister of Indian Affairs a number of times and have raised this issue in the House. It is time for the Government to fulfil its obligations to the native people. Justice is being denied to the native people, and I believe that justice is long overdue.

SHIPYARDS

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, this week the socialist Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) announced in Quebec that his Government would cancel New Brunswick's frigate contract.

We did not need help from a socialist to seal the fate of the Lauzon shipyards: they have a promising future in Quebec. They were standing idle and without contracts when we took over in 1984. My Government found an excellent buyer for the shipyards and they now have orders totalling close to $600 million and extending well into 1991. Through assistance for specializing and equipment upgrading, we managed to convince Marine Industries to buy and operate the Lauzon shipyards. Their future as provincial shipbuilders is now guaranteed.

There is no need for the Ottawa Centre socialist to cloud the issue, and the contradictory statement of his boss, the socialist leader, does not shed any light because he happens to be the man who once said he would have military equipment imported into rather than produced in Canada. How could he possibly build frigates under NATO programs since he wants Canada to withdraw from NATO?

Mr. Speaker, that was yet one more proof of the inconsistency of meaningless statements made by these socialists.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

ST. REGIS INDIAN RESERVE—DANGEROUS POSITION OF CUSTOMS OFFICERS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I once again rise to draw the attention of the House to the very serious situation taking place at the St. Regis reserve near Cornwall, Ontario.

Canada Customs officers at the Customs office in St. Regis have been unable to do their jobs properly for the past two years because they have been expected to turn a blind eye to the taxation laws at this particular Customs crossing.

I call on the Government to establish a parliamentary inquiry into the problem at the St. Regis reserve. I urge the Government to act now and remove the Canada Customs office from the reserve and put it permanently in Cornwall. The 14 male and 4 female Canada Customs officers are all in a very dangerous position and fear for their safety due to the contraband and drug smuggling going on through the border at St. Regis.

The Government has known of this situation for the last two years and has done absolutely nothing. I believe that if the Government does not act now, immediately, and if the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) does not act today, there is a very real possibility that serious injury will result.

I call on the Government to exercise responsible behaviour in the situation and to move forthwith with a parliamentary inquiry.

OLYMPIC GAMES

FEDERAL SUPPORT FOR TORONTO'S BID TO HOST 1996 SUMMER GAMES

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, Toronto's bid for the 1996 Olympic Summer Games received a tremendous boost from the federal Government with yesterday's announcement of a $2.4 million commitment of support.

Toronto has the facilities, the organizational talent and enthusiasm to make the Olympic Summer Games an outstanding success, and following on the heels of the anticipated success in Calgary next month this could do much to enhance Canada's reputation as a host for international sporting events.

Our sports and cultural facilities are first-class and we can offer accommodation that is second to none. The cosmopolitan and multicultural nature of this world-class city will serve to make the many athletes and spectators from all over the world feel at home in Toronto.

I call upon all Members of the House to join with me in sending a strong message of support to the International Olympic Committee on behalf of Toronto's bid for the 1996 Summer Olympic Games.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON ENERGY INDUSTRY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government has now released its study on energy and the trade deal and it proves that Canada has lost tremendous freedom as a country under the deal, just as New Democrats have said.

If this sell-out deal is accepted, no export taxes on energy will be possible, no export bans to the United States could exist even if we are desperately short at home, and no lower Canadian price for energy could exist which is financed by an export tax. Meanwhile, the United States would keep its power under the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to cut back and control Canadian oil and gas exports to the United States. The United States could use the national security clause to cut back our electricity exports.

So much for fairness. Canada got hosed on energy. Canadian provinces have lost key power over their resources, and Canadians have lost much economic freedom.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

SOCIALISTS' POLICIES

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, recently when New Democratic Party Members voted against the Supplementary Estimates and the allocation of additional monies, they voted against the grant of $93 million for price stabilization of agricultural products; against a $63 million increase of supply earmarked for the individuals drawing Old age security; against the $65 million to be used for the payment of Guaranteed Income Supplement; against the additional funds of $456 million earmarked for regional industrial expansion; against $111 million to meet the operating expenses of VIA Rail.

Moreover, they voted against the allotment of $84 million for spouse allowances. Socialists keep talking about regional development, about the lot of farmers, about research and health care. Their negative vote has shown their true colours. Who can have confidence in them after such a stand? Who can take the risk of voting for a NDP government? Who can risk the future of his children, his family and his parents by entrusting the future of the Canadian society with socialists?

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

AWARD OF ALL-NEWS TELEVISION CHANNEL LICENCE TO CBC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, we live in a society where the separation of Government, church and the media is vitally important to the traditions that we have built over the years. This morning, the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald), in a complete abdication of her responsibilities, put an end to one of those traditions.

• (1415)

This morning the Government of Canada, through the Minister, announced that it has quashed and put on hold the decision to grant a licence to CBC for a 24-hour news channel. The Government is admitting today that it has no broadcast policy for Canada, and the Minister is admitting that she has lost control of her department and has abdicated her responsibilities in favour of the back-benchers and caucus meetings of the Tory Party of Canada.

The Government has now served notice to every broadcasting network and radio and television station in Canada that they may, through independent means and under independent test, get a licence from the CRTC, but if they are not in good favour with the Government of the day, particularly the Tory Government, that licence can be revoked. That is a breach of the concept of separation of Government and media in Canada, a dangerous breach. The Minister of Communications ought to have the courage to repudiate it and, if necessary, to resign her position to protect that tradition.

PORNOGRAPHY

SUPPORT URGED FOR BILL TO FIGHT SEXUAL EXPLOITATION OF CHILDREN

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, do you and the people of Canada know that at this time it is not against the law to use a child in the production of pornography? The lack of action by the previous administration on this issue was absolutely shameful.

Bill C-54 hits hardest at pornography showing violence, the degradation of women, and the sexual exploitation of children. It is about time that those in society who make personal gain from the portrayal of physical and moral abuse of others are put behind bars, and for a long time. A great many of my constituents have contacted me urging speedy passage of Bill C-54. Today I urge all Hon. Members to join me in ensuring that this Bill is passed soon.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

FORMER COMMISSIONER OF ELECTIONS' LETTER—REINSTATEMENT OF MINISTER IN CABINET

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, for a week the Prime Minister has refused to tell the House whether or not he was aware of the letter from Mr. Gorman to the Minister of Energy alleging that the Minister had violated the law. When the Prime Minister restored the Minister of Energy to his Cabinet, did he know about the full contents of that letter or did he not?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, I did not, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

QUERY WHETHER MINISTER TOLD COMPLETE TRUTH TO PRIME MINISTER, AND WHEN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, nothing this Prime Minister says would surprise me. In the circumstances, however, only the Prime Minister can tell us when he was apprised of the full text of the letter and what he did about it. Recently, he said he was proud of the fact he had brought the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources back into Cabinet. If that is the case, why doesn't he tell us what he knew at the time?

Does he expect Canadians to believe that for over two years, the Minister failed to read a letter, a page and a half long, in which the Commissioner of Elections advised him he had violated the law?

Does he expect Canadians to believe that during that period, the Minister did not find time to advise the Prime Minister of the full contents of the letter?

Does he expect Canadians to believe that for more than two years, this letter lay undisturbed under a spare shirt in one of the desk drawers of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources?

Mr. Speaker, did the Minister tell the Prime Minister the whole truth or not? And when?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): As far as the second question is concerned, namely, when was I apprised of the full text of the letter, the answer is when the letter was published in one of the papers.

As for the other questions the Leader of the Opposition seems anxious to ask, he will address these questions at the appropriate time to the appropriate person. I gave him a straight answer when he asked when I was apprised of the text of the letter.

• (1420)

MINISTER'S NON-DISCLOSURE OF LETTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, several cabinet Ministers have had their ethical standards called into question during the life of the Government.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: So have you, John.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Some of those Ministers may have done nothing legally wrong within the narrow context of the law. Yet every time the Prime Minister himself compounds the problem by not being totally forthcoming with the people and this House about what is going on.

If it was a bad judgment call, say it was a bad judgment call. If it was carelessness, say it was carelessness. If it was totally improper, say it was totally improper. Do not consistently and repeatedly try to defend the indefensible. That is what we are saying to the Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Grisé: Oh, sit down!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): In the circumstances will the Prime Minister admit that it was wrong for the Minister of Energy not to immediately reveal to the Prime Minister the contents of that letter from the commissioner? Will he also admit it is wrong in those circumstances, that information having been withheld from the Prime Minister, for the Minister to remain in his Cabinet?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that in past days and again today the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, while dealing with a sensitive human matter, has made reference to several Conservative cabinet Ministers who have resigned. That is true. In light of that, he might care to make reference to certain Liberal cabinet Ministers who resigned, including himself. He resigned, to the best of my knowledge, without providing an explanation to the House or the country as to why.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Unbelievable!

Mr. Mulroney: To the best of my recollection, when an explanation was provided by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition during his leadership campaign, that explanation was repudiated by then Prime Minister Trudeau in a press release issued that day. My right hon. friend who asks for understanding for people in public life should indicate a little more understanding himself for other Members of the House of Commons.

With respect to the conduct of the Minister of Energy, when he was apprised of the fact of an investigation pursuant to the federal Elections Act he did what was entirely proper and submitted his resignation. The investigation went on for two months, and an officer of Parliament reported that no charges should be laid against the Minister.

If my right hon. friend has questions about the composition of the letter, or questions about that judgment, the officer of Parliament signed the letter and I assume the House would be willing to interrogate him. The Government will be happy to have the committee consider this matter, and all relevant information can be discussed.

However, if my right hon. friend is asking me whether I believe in the circumstances, the decision having been rendered by an independent officer of Parliament, I did the right thing in inviting the Minister to rejoin the Government of Canada, on the basis of information I had and in light of the decision of that independent officer of Parliament, my answer is yes.

MINISTER'S ACTIONS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the Prime Minister means that hiding the contents of the letter from the people of Canada and the Prime Minister himself for a period of more than two years is commendable behaviour by the Minister. The sequence of events as related to us by the Minister has it that upon receiving the letter he only skimmed rapidly through it, then placed it in a drawer under one of his shirts before going to the Prime Minister's Office where he was summoned, and where obviously he did not spill the beans.

• (1425)

Will the Prime Minister now agree that by hiding the letter in his drawer under one of his shirts, instead of disclosing its contents to the Prime Minister, the Minister has in fact lost his shirt and lost the confidence of the people of Canada and should be dismissed from his position?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the slurs of the Hon. Member are being recorded, the hon. gentleman can be assured that one day those words will be read to him. He will want to be very careful about the procès d'intentions that he is making in respect of another Hon. Member.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What kind of threat is that?

Mr. Mulroney: It is a statement of fact. The hon. gentleman indulges in slurs, in the procès d'intentions, in maligning character, and he objects to the fact that I find that offensive. I find his conduct offensive. I find it indulging in character assassination, and so do the people of Canada.

Ms. Copps: You're offensive.

Mr. Mulroney: The Member of Parliament stepped aside from cabinet responsibilities, sat on the sidelines and watched the interrogation go on for two months. He received a report saying that no charges were going to issue against him. My hon. friend seems to suggest that it is not a human reaction to take pleasure in the fact that one is not going to be charged and to proceed with one's normal parliamentary life. To not understand that, I think, is to not understand human nature.

Ms. Copps: That's your human nature, that's the problem.

Mr. Mulroney: This may be a deficiency but we happen to believe in the presumption of innocence. When an officer of Parliament, charged with the conduct of an inquiry, and who alone has the responsibility to make a determination as to whether a charge should or should not be made, comes to the conclusion that a charge should not issue, surely all Members of Parliament will want to give the Member the benefit of the doubt.

[Translation]

QUERY WHETHER TIME HAS ARRIVED TO RELIEVE MINISTER OF HIS DUTIES

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the problem is a lack of openness. We know now that the Minister doesn't have time to read important correspondence. He claimed he quickly glanced through the letter and slipped it in a drawer, under one of his shirts. Yesterday, to excuse the inexcusable, the fact that he failed to advise the Prime Minister of this letter, he simply said: Why should I have?

In the light of these facts, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he does not believe the time has come for him to act responsibly and release the Minister from his duties, which would give the Minister time to file his correspondence and straighten up his drawers.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, these comments are grossly unfair, and I may draw the attention of the Hon. Member to the fact that a mechanism exists that would allow Parliament to conduct a full investigation. That mechanism is a parliamentary committee. We are quite prepared to have the appropriate committee consider this matter and hear testimony by Mr. Gorman or other officials with his responsibility.

Finally, I would like to remind my hon. friend who since last Thursday has been accompanying his questions with the most derogatory remarks, that a Member of the Quebec Liberal caucus, the Hon. Pierre de Bané, said that the attacks on Mr. Masse were not justified and undermined the basic principles of our legal system. I suggest you listen to your caucus colleague!

RETENTION OF MINISTER IN CABINET

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. However, I want to say at the outset that the comparison he made between the resignation of the Leader of the Opposition when he was a cabinet Minister at a time that had absolutely nothing to do with scandals, and resignations of members of his own Government that had everything to do with scandals, is outrageous. All Canadians will feel that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: There are two issues involved in this matter. One is to get an explanation for Mr. Gorman's unusual decision, on the surface, and the other is the Prime Minister's responsibility for ensuring that Ministers of the Crown not simply adhere to law but adhere to moral standards that go beyond law as the Prime Minister himself has often underlined. Since he now knows of the contents of the letter that the former Minister received, does he believe that a member of a Cabinet should be someone who is accused by a senior officer of the House of breaking the law, and should that member remain in the Cabinet when he did not inform the Prime Minister of the reception of such a serious letter?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend has perhaps put his finger on the problem. He is right. There has been an accusation in that letter to which he refers. That accusation was prepared in a statement that otherwise indicated no charges should be laid against the Minister.

The accusation was made by Mr. Gorman. Only Mr. Gorman can explain why he made those references and then concluded that no charges ought to be laid. In light of that, I think it is important as parliamentarians that we pursue the parliamentary opportunity of interrogating those who made these decisions, to call him before the House to explain why.

If my hon. friend has any problem with that decision, as he clearly does, the question ought to be put to the man who made that independent decision, and I would support him in that.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I welcome that, since I suggested precisely the same thing last Thursday.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: It happens to be the case that I suggested last Thursday that Mr. Gorman be asked to appear before a committee to explain the decision. I hope we will have the occasion to experience that.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER CONTACT FORMER COMMISSIONER OF ELECTIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question for the Prime Minister concerns his responsibilities. Does he not think it appropriate, now that he knows the contents of the letter and that the Minister did not reveal the contents to him, that he get in touch with Mr. Gorman and ask him why he reached the very serious judgment he did, that the Minister in fact broke the law? Why does the Prime Minister not do his job under the circumstances?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has again, with uncanny accuracy, put his finger on another part of the problem. He says the Prime Minister should get in touch with Mr. Gorman. Nothing could be more inappropriate for the Prime Minister, the Leader of a political Party, to get in touch with an independent officer of Parliament.

The independent officer of Parliament, who responds to Parliament, should be asked to come before a parliamentary committee to provide the explanations as to why he indicated that no charges should be laid against Mr. Masse and then put in that comment which Le Devoir properly referred to this morning as une lettre empoisonnée which violates the fundamental rights of a Member of Parliament and a fundamental right of any Canadian.

[Translation]

QUERY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER WILL ASK MINISTER REASON FOR HIS SILENCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is suggesting now that this letter has violated the Minister's rights. He has completely changed his approach concerning this issue.

My question is simply this: Does he intend to ask point blank the Minister why he kept silent about this for two years, yes or no?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have absolutely not changed my position. Quite the contrary! The letter in question does not mention any charge. It does not recommend that a charge should be laid. Quite the contrary! The letter comes to the conclusion that no charge should be laid.

This notwithstanding, the letter clearly mentions an hypothetical situation which only the commissioner can explain.

In view of the fact that the commissioner is an independent officer of the Canadian Parliament, he is entilled, I think, to appear before the Committee to explain the reasons why he signed this letter which is ambiguous, to say the least.

Meanwhile, I urge the Hon. Member to grant his colleague and former Minister the benefit of the doubt, as all Canadians do!

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

AWARD OF ALL-NEWS TELEVISION CHANNEL LICENCE TO CBC—GOVERNMENT POSITION—REQUEST THAT MINISTER RESIGN

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, we just finished a press conference with the Minister of Communications. I will direct my question to her. The decision to put off to the end of November the all-news network awarded to the CBC seems to be an interference with a process of Government. Canadians will resent that the Minister indeed has killed all chances of having the All-News Network.

The Government, in a scandalous and, I suggest, shameful interference, has destroyed for all intents and purposes, any public broadcasting network—

Mr. Speaker: There has to be some sort of reasonable limit on the pejorative words used in the preamble. I am sure Hon. Members would know that. I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Gauthier: Given that the Minister has lost control of her department and it is now being run by right-wing Tory backbenchers who are telling her how to run her Department, and by a Prime Minister who cannot stand bad news from the free press, will the Minister not resign?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question, no, I will not.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Because of the confusion which resulted from the wording of the decision regarding the appeal period, that question being raised with me by the CBC and others, I sought advice from the Department of Justice, and the Minister of Justice, on the question of the appeal. I was advised by the Minister of Justice who said: "I have concluded that the 60-day period within which the Governor in Council has jurisdiction to review this decision of the Commission commences on the day that the licence referred to in the decision issues and takes effect, that is September 1, 1988".

I felt that in this time period it was both fair and appropriate that the Government advise the President of the CBC of the concerns we have at the present time.

I wrote to the President about those concerns, namely, the degree to which the proposed licence might contribute to excessive concentration in the field of news programming. I said that this concern might be addressed by an alternative service embracing both the private and public sectors of the Canadian broadcasting system.

[Translation]

Second, an opportunity to get involved in a major expansion of the news broadcasting services.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I might point out that questions that are, by their very nature, inquisitive of a wide ranging set of factors invite fairly long answers. I think it would be better if the Minister waits for the second question and summarizes what it is she has to say.

I am sure that before Hon. Members call for order too quickly, they will keep in mind that the question put is on a complex matter and the Minister should be given some latitude in answering.

[Translation]

FRANCOPHONE EQUIVALENCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I might suggest that the Minister table the agreement, the decision and the opinions which she has, so that we may share their contents with her.

My supplementary question is directed to the Minister. Two reasons—concentration of media and lack of attention to the French language equivalence—were put forward by the Cabinet to the CBC to withhold the decision concerning the All News Network.

My question to the Minister is this: Concerning the French language equivalent, is she or her Government prepared to make available the necessary resources—money, equipment, human input—to set up a French network equivalent to the English only All-News Network?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I indicated there was another reason why I wrote to Mr. Juneau.

Second, would it be proper to get involved in a major expansion of the news broadcasting service in one of the official languages, without at the same time meeting the needs of the other linguistic group.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): I think it is very important to have a balance between our two official languages in the area of broadcasting as with all the other policies.

I gave this advice to the President of the CBC.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RESIGN

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, an hour ago at the press conference the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier would not join with me in calling for the Minister's resignation. I am glad to see he has changed his mind.

I would like to ask the Minister a question. If she cannot defend a CRTC decision, a decision of an independent agency, where the merits of the application that was approved were clearly superior to the merits of the application that was denied, if she cannot defend this decision against the goon squad in her own caucus—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. McDonald: —how can she usefully serve as Minister? Should she not now do the honourable thing and resign?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, one thing we do believe in doing is following the dictates of the law. That seems to be beyond the sensibilities of the Member who has just spoken. We have advice from the Department of Justice as to the procedures to be followed, but it is terribly important that we recognize the concerns that do exist. I mentioned one, the concentration. I just want to say as well to the Hon. Member that we also have a concern about services in both the French and English languages in this country.

[Translation]

I said that it was important to determine whether it was necessary for such an important federal Crown corporation to get involved in an endeavour of this magnitude before taking steps to meet the expectations of both our major linguistic communities.

[English]

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wonder that the Minister is not so interested in concentration of media when it comes to newspapers and cross-ownership issues. I would like to ask why she misled the press conference earlier today and came up with a false issue and stated that Francophone taxpayers would be required to pay for this service when that is contrary to what the CRTC said, that the money would come from advertising and subscribers? Why is the Minister setting the Francophone community against the Anglophone community in this case? Why does she not respond to the needs of the Francophone community, but act immediately now on the application which has been fully justified before the CRTC for the All-News Channel?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to send a copy of the ruling of the Department of Justice to the Hon. Member so she will understand when the appeal period exists. I also want to say to her that as a Government we have recognized the needs of the French-speaking communities, in the Province of Quebec and all across the country. We will be seeing, through the introduction of our official languages legislation, just how important this is not only in the Province of Quebec, but elsewhere in Canada.

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

PROMISE CONCERNING ANTICIPATED PENSIONS AFTER 25 YEARS OF SERVICE FOR CORRECTIONAL SERVICES EMPLOYEES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General of Canada. This Government promised early retirement to correctional officers after 25 years of service. I have been pleading with the Minister for nearly two and a half years. He did express his good intentions, but we have yet to see any concrete results. As a matter of fact, I introduced in the House a notice of motion which will force the Government to come clean. Can the Minister provide us today with a progress report on this question?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that I am, of course, as the Minister responsible for those officers, very much in favour of early retirement for those people, given the very difficult and stressful job they have. I am hopeful that legislation will be brought forward in the very near future which will assist them in this regard.

[Translation]

QUERY WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL INTRODUCE LEGISLATION

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): The Minister is aware of the problems of our correctional officers. Good for him! Can the Minister give us a specific date when the Bill might be tabled? Can he also tell us whether he has secured the funds required from Treasury Board?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am not the Minister responsible for the legislation when and if it is brought forward, but I can say that I am hopeful that it will be brought forward in the very near future. Certainly I am strongly supportive of it, given the difficult task these people have and which they perform so well.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

AWARD OF ALL-NEWS TELEVISION CHANNEL LICENCE TO CBC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. The only thing more shameful than the Prime Minister's performance in this House today—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Tobin: —was the performance of the Minister of Communications in defending the indefensible. I ask the Minister whether or not she realizes, in the face of the decision she has announced today on behalf of the Government of Canada, that the Government is in effect sending a signal to all electronic broadcasters in this country, both radio and television, that notwithstanding the independent judgment of a CRTC, which has an arm's length relationship with the Government, notwithstanding those decision-making powers, if those broadcasters do not behave, if they do not keep on the good side of this Government, licences that may be awarded by the CRTC will be taken away by the will of a Tory backbencher.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member could put his question.

Mr. Tobin: Does the Minister of Communications realize, as the Minister responsible for broadcast policy, that the decision taken today will be interpreted by Canadians and by broadcasters as a warning that if they do not behave and manage to engender and keep the good will of the Conservative backbench—

Mr. Speaker: I think we got that question earlier. The Hon. Minister will reply.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I hate to disappoint the Hon. Member, but there was no decision taken today. I stated and read into the record, and I will outline to the Member again, that the appeal period takes place in the 60 days following September 1, 1988. That is when any decision will be taken by the Government. So I am just advising the Hon. Member that we did express two concerns that we had about this application. One had to do with concentration, the other with the lack of services in the French language.

It was very interesting to me to note that the other day in the debate on official languages in this House, the official spokesperson for the Liberal Party on communications, speaking of telecommunications and broadcast policy, said as reported at page 12252 of Hansard:

> It is very important that this country have a stamp and footprint across this land that states that English and French wherever you may live should be available and the potential to understand the information that is being disseminated should certainly be the primary concern.

What we are hearing today is that the Liberal Party, in its expressions to the country, has said that concerns about the French language are no longer of interest to it. That is what they are really saying.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RESIGN

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, this Party is concerned about the bilingual nature of the country, but we are also concerned about the independence of the media and that it not be brought to heel by the Government.

As the Minister of Communications, if she is not prepared to defend the principle of the separation of Government and media in this country, and the independence of the CRTC, then will she do the honourable thing—because I know that this is very tough for her today—and resign, instead of making a mockery of her position?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I suppose because the Liberals are a little slow in understanding things that I will have to say twice what I have already said once in this House.

No, Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to resign. I wish that the Hon. Member who has just spoken would understand that. I also want him to understand that the concerns we have expressed and that I have conveyed to Mr. Juneau are very real concerns. They happen to be concerns expressed by people across this country about concentration, particularly from our colleagues in the Province of Quebec and French-speaking persons elsewhere in Canada about the lack of adequate services in the French language. That will continue to be a concern.

AGRICULTURE

RUSSIAN WHEAT APHID—POSSIBLE IMPACT ON CANADIAN WHEAT PRODUCTION

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Recent press reports indicate that there is a pest known as the Russian wheat aphid that has spread rapidly from Russia through the Mediterranean countries, South Africa, into Mexico, and reached the southern part of the United States in 1986. In two growing seasons this pest has now reached the northern states with which we share a border.

Taking into consideration the future impact that this could have on wheat production in Canada, with crop losses in the U.S. reported as high as 100 per cent, would the Minister indicate to this House what measures his department is taking to monitor and control this very serious threat to Canadian wheat production?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question of the Hon. Member. I appreciate the fact that the Hon. Member did not ask for my resignation. That seems to be quite topical today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wise: I also have received representations from my colleague, the Member for Mackenzie. I want to tell the House and the grain growers of Canada that I certainly share their concern, particularly in view of the fact that the Russian aphid has been in the United States for four or five years, and it is moving to the north. There are indications total crop losses could indeed reach 100 per cent.

Because of my concern over this potential problem, I have already instructed my Deputy Minister to move immediately on a task force basis to obtain as much information as possible so that if the Russian aphid does move from the United States into Canada, which we certainly hope it does not, then we will be in a position to have a safe and an effective control for that particular pest.

FORMER COMMISSIONER OF ELECTIONS' LETTER—MINISTER'S NON-DISCLOSURE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. A number of times over the last couple of years the Prime Minister has insisted that his cabinet Ministers maintain the highest moral standards.

Does he believe that it is acceptable that, over the last two years, the Member for Frontenac, the Minister of Energy, did not tell the Prime Minister anything about the letter that he had received from Mr. Gorman?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have responded fully to that question. The letter in question was referred to by my friend, the Leader of the NDP, as an unusual letter, as it is indeed. I have indicated what, in the circumstances, justice would require be done with it.

I responded fully and completely to all of those questions.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister believe that it is acceptable behaviour by any of his cabinet Ministers not to fully inform him of a decision that is made by someone of the rank and position of Mr. Gorman?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was informed of the decision by the Secretary of the Cabinet. The decision was that no charges were to be laid against the Member. That was the decision—

Ms. Copps: He committed an infraction.

Mr. Mulroney: In respect of an opinion, in respect of a surmise or a point of view—

Ms. Copps: It wasn't a surmise.

Mr. Mulroney: —that may or may not have been contained in the letter—

Ms. Copps: I thought you didn't read it.

Mr. Mulroney: —I think that it might be important to interrogate the signatory of the letter.

The only manner in which this can be done, inasmuch as the signatory is an officer of Parliament, and you would resist with the utmost vigour any attempt by me as Leader of the Party or Leader of the Government to interrogate him personally, is to call him before a House committee to ascertain any relevant facts in this and related cases.

We are fully happy on behalf of the government Party to indicate that we would consent to this type of procedure. I hope my—

Ms. Copps: Will you appear?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I am attempting to respond to my hon. friend, yet the Member for Hamilton East persists in her comments.

I would be happy—

Ms. Copps: Will you appear?

Mr. Mulroney: —if the House desires—

Mr. Nunziata: Touchy, aren't you, Brian?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, in view of those affectionate remarks from the Member from Toronto, I think I better sit down. It is getting dangerous.

Mr. Speaker: It might be helpful when questions are being asked and answers are being given if other Members await their turn.

CANADA LANDS COMPANY

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, and it concerns the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel. For the second time in two days Canadians have learned that their tax dollars have been wasted to supply junkets around the world for the chosen few.

Yesterday it was three officials of the Canada Lands Company, and today we discovered that $15,000 from the agricultural renewal program was spent on a trip to Israel to investigate how to breed and raise Holstein cows that can live in the desert.

I wish to ask the Prime Minister when will he put an end to the orgy of spending that has been going on, perpetrated by his Government against the people of Canada? When will he do the right thing and call a Royal commission of inquiry into the management, operation, and disposition of properties by the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel? Why will he not do it now?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, first the Hon. Member has criticized the administration of Mirabel Corporation, then he has been contemptuous of the policies of the Government for that particular area, and now he takes issue with the plight of the farmers of that area.

Let the record show, and let the people know that those Hon. Members have no regard for the welfare of the farmers of Mirabel.

[Translation]

QUERY REGARDING PERSON INTENDED TO BE PROTECTED

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Given his answer, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works.

The day before yesterday he told the House:

> We have put in place a procedure to allow those people who had their lands expropriated unfairly to purchase their lands back on a fair and equitable basis.

How can the Minister make that statement and the one we heard today when Canadians know full well that 40 per cent of the lands ended up in the hands of speculators, a great many of whom are Conservatives? Why does the Minister continue to protect his predecessor? Who is he trying to protect: the Prime Minister, the Member for Joliette, or both?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): I think what the people of Canada want to know is that $250,000 was paid to the President of the Liberal Party of Canada, Michel Robert, for services during that particular Government's era.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. McInnes: Pierre Brien, the Vice-President of Mirabel and ex-provincial Liberal candidate for Anjou, took two trips in 1984 on behalf of the corporation in order to stimulate economic activity, without result.

Mr. Tobin: Answer the question.

Mr. McInnes: Mr. Jacques Corriveau was given an untendered contract for $29,000. Of course, Mr. Corriveau is now one of the vice-presidents of the Quebec wing of the federal Liberal Party.

I think that that is what the people of Canada want to know.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

PROJECT ALLOCATIONS—EXPENDITURES IN NEWFOUNDLAND AND LABRADOR

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and concerns the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. From the time that the formation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency was announced on June 8, 1987, to about December 31 of last year, $75 million worth of projects had been approved, projects under ACOA's administration.

Of this amount $6 million was approved for projects in Newfoundland and Labrador. At the same time Nova Scotia received $45 million, including $35 million for Cape Breton, and New Brunswick received over $20 million.

Could the Prime Minister explain why Newfoundland and Labrador has been short-changed in this way? What does he propose to do about it?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is very selective in the numbers at which he chooses to look in terms of what the Government has done for the Province of Newfoundland. Maybe he is forgetting the earlier energy accord that was reached with the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador. He does not mention that.

He should also look at the rate of unemployment in Newfoundland and Labrador which is still high but has come down a tremendous amount since the Government took office.

The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency has been set up in Atlantic Canada to be dealt with by Atlantic Canadians in trying to address the fundamental problems of the economy in Atlantic Canada. We are going to work with Atlantic Canada. We are going to work with Atlantic Canadians. We are going to give the agency a chance to work, and hopefully we will see good results in that area of the country.

EQUITY BETWEEN PROVINCES

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister is ignoring the fact that there is also an accord in Nova Scotia and all kinds of other government programs. This is the principal agency which the Government says will look after regional development.

In view of the concerns Dr. Savoie expressed in his report about the potential problems of political control of this agency, which have been ignored by the Government, will the Minister not admit that in the past and in the legislation that has been proposed he has failed to put sufficient safeguards in place to ensure equity among the provinces in regional development programs?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, there is one thing that Atlantic Canadians can be sure of, and that is that while my socialist friends in the NDP go into Quebec and say that they will take away the contract from the New Brunswick shipyard, this Government will not take that contract away from Atlantic Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Valcourt: I can tell the Hon. Member that the rhetoric of the NDP does not hold at all in Atlantic Canada.

PETITIONS

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of various municipalities in Prince Edward Island.

They are protesting that the Mulroney Government has sold out Canada and received nothing in return. Canadian industries are still not protected from U.S. trade laws. The United States obtained everything that it wanted in key sectors, especially agriculture, energy, auto trade, financial services, and investment.

Whereas the jobs of thousands of Canadians are threatened and the Conservative Government has not provided for any adjustment assistance for Canadian workers, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to denounce the Government for signing the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement on October 4, 1987. As in duty-bound your petitioners ever pray.

I have two petitions which I will table under the same heading.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have seven petitions which I should like to table today. It is my duty to do so, because these petitions were signed by Canadians who would like to make their views known.

The petitioners state that whereas the Mulroney Government has sold out Canada and received nothing in return, whereas Canadian industries are still not protected from U.S. trade laws, whereas the United States obtained everything it wanted in all key sectors, especially agriculture, energy, auto trade, financial services, and investment, and whereas thousands of Canadian jobs are threatened and the Conservative Government has not provided for any adjustment assistance for Canadian workers, wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to denounce the Government for signing the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege and responsibility of tabling a petition which points out that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement between Canada and the United States and that, in fact, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of his bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised.

Furthermore, the trade agreement negotiated by the Mulroney Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership effectively, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, or to equalize opportunities among the regions.

Given all that, the petitioners call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada to decide in a general election whether or not they want a free trade agreement between Canada and the United States.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which indicates that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised, and that the trade agreement negotiated by the Mulroney Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership effectively, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, or to equalize opportunities among the regions.

The proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

The proposed trade agreement not only denies Canadians secure access to the U.S. market, which was the key objective in the negotiations, but threatens a loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

Therefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour and privilege to present a petition signed by constituents in Thunder Bay—Atikokan, residents of the West Fort area, the Ogden east end area of Thunder Bay, and the community of South Gillies, a rural community southwest of the City of Thunder Bay.

These petitioners are very concerned about the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. They are concerned that it threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership effectively, to develop our energy resources, et cetera, et cetera.

They complete the petition by calling upon Parliament to dissolve and to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

• (1510)

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition duly certified by the Clerk from a number of Canadians living in Montreal and elsewhere in Quebec who complain that the Government without any mandate from the Canadian people and having promised that it would defend Canadian sovereignty during the negotiations on free trade has, in fact, undermined Canadian economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership.

The Government has also failed completely in the major objective of the negotiations, which was to secure access to the American market. The deal threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

Therefore, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national election.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition certified by the Clerk of Petitions. It was not signed strictly by members of the Canadian Labour Congress, it was signed by Canadians from other parts of this country. It expresses their concern with the fact that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine its ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

The petitioners also believe the proposed deal will deny Canadians secure access to the U.S. market which was the key objective in the negotiations. They also believe it threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

The people who have signed this petition call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade arrangement during a national general election.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and honour to present a petition signed by Canadians from Thunder Bay, Ontario, who are concerned that the trade deal negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty and thereby Canada loses its power to determine its own economic and social policies.

These petitioners, therefore, call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada to reject or accept this trade agreement during a national election.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed from Tuesday, January 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House agrees with amendments 8 and 13(e) made by the Senate to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, but disagrees with amendments 4, 5(a), (b) and (c), 6(a) and (b), 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13(a) because this House believes they contradict the principles of the Bill for the following reasons:

Amendment 4 would exclude only criminals and war criminals from the refugee determination process, but would allow terrorists, spies and subversives to pursue a claim to refugee status, notwithstanding the fact that Article 33 of the UN Convention would permit the removal of these latter individuals to their countries of nationality or permanent residence, even if they were determined to be Convention refugees.

Amendment 5(a) would eliminate the authority of the Minister to direct a ship to leave or not to enter Canadian waters. This amendment would reopen a significant gap in Canada's ability to control its borders.

Amendments 5(b) and (c) arise out of Senate amendment 5(a), which is not acceptable, and are therefore inappropriate.

Amendments 6(a) and (b) would reverse the policy on which the Immigration Act, 1976 was based, which policy was not changed in the Bill as passed by this House. The amendments jeopardize the possibility of successfully prosecuting persons who profit from organizing illegal migration and from counselling fraud among refugee claimants.

Amendments 9 and 10 would restrict the ability of peace officers and immigration officers to act quickly to search for evidence of major offences under the Immigration Act, 1976, in exigent circumstances, where lives are at risk or where evidence with respect to those offences may be lost or destroyed.

Amendments 11 and 12 would restrict the ability of peace officers and immigration officers to execute search warrants which have been duly authorized by a justice of the peace, by denying explicit authority to break open containers where it is reasonably believed evidence will be found and by limiting the authority to execute these warrants at night.

Amendment 13(a) would reduce the initial period of detention without review from seven days to forty-eight hours, which would allow insufficient time for the gathering of information to substantiate allegations or to identify the individual, particularly when large groups of undocumented persons arrive at one time.

And that this House agrees with the principles set out in amendments 1, 2(a), 3, 7 and 13(b), (c) and (d), but would propose the following amendments:

Amendment 1 be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 22 and 23 on page 1, and substitute the following:

(c) to deter those who assist in the illegal entry of persons into Canada and thereby minimize the"

Amendment 2(a) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 29 to 39, on page 4, and substitute the following:

Amendment 3 be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 7 to 12, on page 5, and substitute the following:

Amendment 7 be amended to read as follows:

"Add, and immediately after line 6, on page 10, the following:

95.21 No proceedings for an offence under Section 95.1 or Section 95.2 shall be instituted except by or with the personal consent in writing of the Attorney General of Canada or Deputy Attorney General of Canada."

Amendment 13(b) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 1 to 22, on page 21, and substitute the following:

(2) Where, with respect to a person detained under subsection (1), the Minister certifies in writing

(a) that

(i) the person's identity has not been established, or

(ii) the Minister has reason to suspect that the person may be a member of an inadmissible class described in paragraph 19(1)(e), (f) or (g), and

(b) that an additional period of detention is required to investigate the matter referred to in subparagraph (a)(i) or (ii), the person shall be brought before an adjudicator forthwith and at least once during every seven-day period thereafter, at which times the adjudicator shall review the reasons for the person's continued detention."

Amendment 13(c) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 23 to 47, on page 21, and substitute the following:

(2.1) Where the Minister has issued a certificate under subsection (2), the Minister may amend the certificate to which the detention relates to include any matter referred to in subparagraph (2)(a)(i) or (ii), following which the person shall be brought before an adjudicator forthwith and at least once during every seven-day period thereafter, at which times the adjudicator shall review the reasons for the person's continued detention.

Amendment 13(d) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 48 to 50, on page 21, and lines 1 to 18, on page 22, and substitute the following:

(4) Where an adjudicator who conducts a review under subsection (2) or (2.1) is satisfied that reasonable efforts are being made by the Minister to investigate the matter referred to in subparagraph (2)(a)(i) or (ii), the adjudicator shall continue the person's detention.

(4.1) Every review under subsection (2) or (2.1) of the detention of a person suspected of being a member of an inadmissible class described in paragraph 19(1)(e), (f) or (g) shall be conducted in camera.

(4.2) Where

(a) the Minister is of the opinion that any evidence or information to be presented by or on behalf of the Minister at any review under subsection (2) or (2.1) of the detention of a person referred to in subsection (4.1) should not be disclosed on the grounds that its disclosure would be injurious to national security or to the safety of persons, and

(b) a request therefore is made by the minister, the adjudicator shall order that the review or any part thereof be conducted in the absence of the person and any counsel representing the person.

(4.3) Any person excluded by an order under subsection (4.2) from the whole or any part of the review under subsection (2) or (2.1) may apply to the Chief Justice of the Federal Court or to a judge of that Court designated by the Chief Justice for the purposes of this subsection to have the order quashed and sections 36.1 and 36.2 of the Canada Evidence Act shall apply, with such modifications as the circumstances may require, to such applications.

(4.4) Unless quashed, an order under subsection (4.2) shall, with respect to the person to whom the order relates, apply to every review under subsection (2) or (2.1), or part thereof, at which the Minister is of the opinion that any evidence or information to be presented by or on behalf of the Minister at the review, or part thereof, should not be disclosed on the grounds that its disclosure would be injurious to national security or to the safety of persons.

(5) Where the adjudicator who conducts a review under subsection (2) or (2.1) does not continue a person's detention under subsection (4), the adjudicator shall make the appropriate order under subsection 104(3).

(6) An adjudicator who conducts a review under subsection (3) shall make the appropriate order under subsection 104(3)."

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We do not deny the Government's ability and right to introduce any legislation for debate that it wishes, however, I think it should be pointed out that there was a House Leaders meeting yesterday. The Government indicated the order of procedure for today which did not include Bill C-84. The Government has also changed the legislation to be considered for the rest of this week.

In the interests of working together to make sure that we deal with the legislation of the House in an orderly manner so that Members are in a position to be here and also serve on their committees, which they have to as Members of this Parliament, it is important that the Government not change the legislation of the day at the last possible moment in such a way that it hampers the ability of Members of Parliament to act. It also takes away the whole concept of House Leaders getting together to try to make sure that we as Members of Parliament know what is going on, and thus are able to work on legislation in a way which benefits not only ourselves but other Canadians who are interested.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I hear my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). I think the record of this Government in trying to facilitate the work of all Members is comparable to any other in history. In fact, it is certainly better than most.

The House Leaders' meeting, as my friend suggested, occurred yesterday afternoon at about 3.30 p.m. There was a sense of anticipation of a different order for today. Members will recall that when the House Leaders' meeting was taking place Bill C-84 was before the House.

Members will also recall that the Speaker ruled last summer that the matter contained in Bill C-84 was pressing and urgent. The House was called back from summer vacation to deal with it. There was some hope in the government caucus that because we are now dealing with amendments proposed by the Senate which were laid upon the Table last year in the month of December that all Members would have had a chance to review and think about the amendments. The government response has been presented to the House. It would, indeed, have facilitated this very urgent matter if we had concluded it yesterday. We then could have proceeded with the planned Bill.

As the House will know, many Members wanted to speak on the Bill. I do not know how many have the intention to speak today, but this is an urgent and pressing matter. It deals with the security of the nation, the issue of detention and a problem which is not disappearing but is growing. It has been the subject matter recently of many front page stories. Members, I know, have been studying this issue for a number of years. We all have opinions and some of our opinions are widely different.

I do not know what is being gained by the Opposition in filibustering such an urgent matter. I think it is time for the House to decide and time for the House to send the matter back to the Senate. Hopefully the Senate will agree with the will of the elected people of the country and take our suggestion in return. The Government Order for today, because of the urgency of the matter, is Bill C-84.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I want to concur with the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). I want to point out that the legislation which is listed in today's Projected Order of Business is Bill C-33. As I understand it, we were only advised in the last hour or so that the order of business had been changed. If it was the Government's intention to change the order yesterday at the close of business, debate closed on this Bill at 5 p.m., there was plenty of time to advise Members of the House. I understand that was not done. There would not have been time, however, to print a corrected version of the Projected Order of Business which Members receive in their offices first thing in the morning.

I would like to comment about the urgency of this matter. I understand that the Government Leader in the other place, after the tabling of the Senate report which followed some two months of study and the appearance of many witnesses before the Senate committee, congratulated Hon. Members for their expeditious treatment of the matter. There does not seem to have been on the part of the Government House Leader the same sense of urgency.

I would like to mention, in reply to the Member who spoke about filibustering this important subject, that the Government's response to the Senate report was only given to us yesterday afternoon by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard). This is a complex subject which deals with many legal and constitutional matters. It is only appropriate that Members of this House be given an adequate opportunity to debate this Bill prior to sending it back to the other place.

• (1520)

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to belabour the issue, but the Parliamentary Secretary, in his reply, tried to indicate that we were filibustering Bill C-84 and that the Government was surprised that debate took place yesterday. He indicated that the Government somehow expected that Bill C-84 would be dealt with yesterday. That is obviously not the case. The Government itself has scheduled Bill C-84 for debate on Thursday and Friday of this week. Obviously it expected the debate to continue.

I do not understand what the Parliamentary Secretary was getting at. Obviously, the Government did not expect the motion to be passed yesterday afternoon, an hour after the various House Leaders had met. It knew the debate would continue. The Government had planned to debate the motion later this week.

The point is that that motion was not the business planned for today. It does not help the House when legislation is changed at the last minute, causing problems for all Hon. Members and especially those who have very heavy committee assignments.

The Parliamentary Secretary said that the Bill had to be rushed through the House of Commons and that it was pressing legislation. The Parliamentary Secretary well knows that it was not the Government's intention to have the House sitting on January 27, 1988. Indeed, it had proposed that we extend the Christmas break until February. I do not see how the Government can be in that much of a rush with this piece of legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his comments. As Hon. Members know, of course, it is the Government's prerogative to decide the order of business and the Government may change without any notice whatsoever the Projected Order of Business we receive every morning.

Yesterday during debate on Bill C-84 there was an amendment moved by Mr. Marchi which the Chair took under advisement. The Chair is now ready to rule that the amendment is indeed in order, so the Chair will put the amendment to the House. Mr. Marchi, seconded by Mr. Berger, moves:

> That the message of the House of Commons to the Senate be amended by:
> a) deleting, in paragraph one, the reference to Senate amendment 4;
> b) deleting paragraph two;
> c) adding to paragraph nine a reference to Senate amendment 4; and
> d) adding after amendment 3 the following:
> "That amendment 4 of the Senate be amended by deleting the said amendment and by striking out line 16 on page 7 of the Bill and substituting the following therefor:
> "(2)(c) and against whom a deportation order has been upheld by the Board; or""

Debate will now resume on the main motion and on the amendment of Mr. Marchi.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in order to deal with the question of filibustering, I think you would find the Government willing to forgo further government speakers since the opposition spokesmen have already voiced their opinions on this motion and have expressed their parties' positions. I think we could shorten the debate if the Opposition would be agreeable to holding a division this afternoon. We could deal with the legislation here and now and send the message back to the Senate.

If the Opposition is not disposed to do that, I would be prepared to speak. I see that the spokesperson for the Liberal Party is saying no. I take that to be a signal that we are to carry on this afternoon at least.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is correct that I signalled no on behalf of my colleagues, but in no way should the record show that that means that there is any filibustering as suggested by the Parliamentary Secretary. I think that was a cheap shot. If he has thoughts and wishes to deposit upon the floor of the House of Commons, I would welcome his doing so. Otherwise, he should sit down and allow other members from my Party and from the NDP who do have worth-while recommendations on this very sensitive Bill to speak.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair must find that a matter of debate and give the floor back to the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen).

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I did not notice any cheap shots going across the floor.

Yesterday, the Minister tabled a motion which was in fact a message to the Senate responding to its message to the House about Bill C-84. In that message, the Minister pointed out that the Government was prepared to accept some of the amendments the Senate had proposed and to reject others. In fact, the Government has accepted almost 50 per cent of the Senate's amendments, but we certainly will not accept all of them.

I was present yesterday when the opposition spokesmen addressed the House and I think it is now time to underscore the Government's position on this matter. First, we must underscore the fact that Bill C-84 is not immigration legislation. I heard an awful lot of language in the opposition speeches purporting that Bill C-84 deals with immigration. In fact, it does not even deal with refugees, it deals with fraud in the refugee system. It is detention and deterrence legislation. I think it is important to clarify for Canadians that we are not dealing with immigration legislation, even though many people may have confused those two issues.

There was a time when we did not have to deal with this matter at all when we dealt with immigration. I was a member of the Green Paper committee which sat in the summer of 1975 and toured across Canada debating the 1977 Bill which became law in 1978. I think there are only three Members left in the House now who sat on that committee, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and I.

The 1977 Bill did not deal extensively with fraud in the refugee system, because at that time very little fraud went on. In fact, there was very little refugee movement at that time. There were fewer refugees around the world and there was much less international movement. Finally and much more importantly, society at that time was much more orderly and held a much more law-oriented view of a process like refugee determination.

Since mid-century we have been seeing the results of a new definition of morality. I remember going to the University of Washington in the 1970s and watching the tumult on the university campus. Everything was being challenged. The most popular philosophers of the day were Sartre, Camus and Marcuse. Those philosophers had at least one thing in common. They had an existential view not only of life but of the individual, of man, and expressed the importance of the individual and his right to self-expression as the most important thing in life to that person and, by extension, to society. Self-expression and self-authentication were the most important things. To that extent, there was no longer any inherent or absolute morality.

Tangentially, this meant that every law not only could be challenged but had to be challenged. If we were to disagree with a particular piece of law we would be dishonest to ourselves if we did not challenge it. We would be denying our own morality if we did not challenge what we thought was wrong.

There accumulated a whole generation of people who challenged everything. They challenged the law, the authority and the Government. I am not saying that some of that was not necessary. It was necessary to make some improvements, but it became a point of morality and of personal integrity to act in that manner.

When I was on the campus of the University of Washington, I saw a crowd of students and off in the distance a police car. I watched the crowd pick up stones and throw them at the police car. The policeman had not arrested anyone. He had not even challenged anyone. However, it was just because the police car was there that it had to be challenged. I remember sitting in the library watching, I am sure, off-campus people coming through and pushing books off shelves. They were wantonly destroying university property. I remember them challenging the administration just because the administration was there. It was not that what the administration had decided was going to radically affect everyone's life. It was because the university administration was there and everything it decided had to be challenged.

We educated a whole generation of students that if we did not challenge everything we were being untrue to ourselves. A mentality developed which said that disobeying the law was a point of morality. For example, burning draft cards in the U.S. was a point of morality because it offended a government regulation, a government administration. Police were pigs. Authorities were the establishment. Government was authority and automatically wrong. Universities at that time cultivated a culture whose raison d'être was to oppose. Individual morality was more important than community values or the rule of law.

I raise that because the people who went to school in those days have now become professionals. In some cases they are lawyers. They may be teachers or doctors. They have come through the system with a mind-set and a way of looking at the world that has its own repercussions. That philosophy is now an international commodity. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) may laugh but it is true.

Mr. Keeper: What have you got against universities?

Mr. Friesen: I used to teach at a university so it cannot be all that bad.

We are now at the point where that kind of mind-set is an international commodity. On every front when it comes to refugee policy, or immigration policy for that matter, we see this kind of mentality. It manifests itself in declarations made by bogus claimants. It does not matter what you say, just as long as it might be acceptable and will get you into the country. Lying becomes a way of life if it will help you get into the country. The incidents of the last few weeks ought to underscore that.

We are redefining what constitutes a refugee. That redefinition is not supposed to be done by Canadians, it is supposed to be done by so-called refugees, you see. If you are facing economic deprivation in your country, then you are no longer dealing with refugees in a political sense. You have economic refugees and you are redefining for Canada what constitutes a refugee. If you have committed a crime, a capital offence in your country and are therefore afraid for your life, then you are entitled to call yourself a refugee because if you stay in your own country and the law has its way, you might be either incarcerated or face capital punishment. You are entitled to call yourself a refugee.

The decision is no longer supposed to be made by the Government, it is now supposed to be made by the refugee. We are seemingly supposed to accept holus-bolus that if someone comes to our borders and says "I am a refugee", the Government and people of Canada are automatically supposed to say, "Okay, if you say so, we will accept the fact that you are a refugee". Or, if a lobbyist makes a representation on behalf of a refugee or a group of refugees, we are supposed to accept that lobbyist's word that this person or this group are refugees.

If there is one phrase which has recurred over and over again in these debates and in committee hearings and in Senate committee hearings, it is: "You will be sending genuine refugees back to a hostile country." That is the recurring phrase. I am asking, how do you know that they are genuine refugees? Unless they have gone through the refugee determination system, how do you know in advance that they are genuine refugees?

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) is a former Minister of Immigration and I think he will understand the complexity. I think he would agree that it is understandable that people might want to prejudge who is a refugee and who is not, yet that cannot be the final judgment.

The NDP is always worried about our sovereignty. If Canada is going to express itself as a sovereign nation, Canada has the right to determine who is a refugee and what definition we use. Is it going to be decided by law, or on a whim? Are we going to decide by an equitable and universal standard, or are we going to let every interest group decide who is a refugee? Is it going to be decided by a refugee determination process, or is it going to be determined or predetermined by a particular lobbyist?

I suppose we might say that is the process we are going through right now. We are defining the nature of a refugee, and what I cannot understand is that certain lobby groups and special interest groups, while they may have good intentions and the best interests of people at heart, feel they have a right to determine ahead of time who is a refugee.

The most important quality of a refugee determination system is fairness. It seems to me that to be fair it must be even-handed. In order to be even-handed it has to be done by law. We cannot have individuals, just because they feel harassed by an economic situation, deciding on behalf of the Government and people of Canada ahead of time what constitutes a refugee or deciding that they in particular are refugees. It must be defined by law, otherwise we live by exceptions.

As I said at the outset, we are dealing here with legislation that deals with deterrence and detention. As I also said at the outset, there is a kind of new morality out there that says it is okay to circumvent the law. In fact, in some cases it is a point of morality to circumvent the law. However, we are saying it is not okay to try and beat the system. It is not okay to organize fraudulent claims. It is not okay to bring boatloads of people into the country clandestinely. That is simply an effort to beat the immigration system by declaring themselves refugees. That is not okay.

The people of Canada have a right to decide who is a refugee. In order to be fair, the decisions must be made through a legal process, a refugee determination process which is fair. There are those who have decided that morality and ethical superiority legitimizes a fraudulent process of bringing people into the country. The Government has the right to say that it is unfair to the rest of the population to allow that to happen.

Therefore, I give notice that the Government is taking charge. The Government is going to determine what is right for Canadian people. The Government is going to be as fair and humane as possible to every genuine refugee. We will not tolerate fraud. We will prosecute those who deal commercially in human misery. We are determined to make the system work so that genuine refugees who are fleeing persecution and have lost their freedom can find haven in Canada as 500,000 have since the end of World War II.

Those who apply legitimately at our borders will get a fair hearing and, I might add, will not have to face the stigma of a label which has become anathema to a broad section of our society. There are thousands of people across Canada who now equate refugee with fraud. That is unfair to the refugee. It is our determination to restore dignity to the refugee, to ensure that when he applies honestly and legally to become a refugee in Canada he can do it with the dignity God has given him and which the Canadian people will respect.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat taken aback by the comments of the Parliamentary Secretary who said, toward the end of his speech, that the words "refugee" and "immigration" have adopted a bad name in this country. I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to do some soul-searching if he really wants to find the answer. He can start by looking at the record of his own Government.

A number of months have passed since the debate last summer and we can remove ourselves from the very heated and emotional exchange which Parliament witnessed. Why did the Government try to communicate to Canadians that the arrival of 300 individuals on our shores constituted a crisis and emergency?

We remember that only a few short years ago, led initially in 1979 by the then Prime Minister, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), and followed up by the Government of Pierre Elliott Trudeau, we in this country accepted a plea from the international community to pitch in and help with the Vietnamese boat refugee crisis. In two years we accepted 106,000 individuals into our country. I know that the Member will say that they came in in an orderly way and that we went to them. The fact remains that those Governments, in partnership with Canadians, had the progressive will to accept within our society 106,000 people who are all integrated into the main stream of Canadian life as we speak today.

If 300 people constitute an emergency and a crisis, how would the present Government or Governments of the past have been able to lead Canadians to help out 106,000 people above and beyond all the other programs of the Department of Immigration at that time?

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize that the most successful refugee program conducted in recent history was carried out under the Clark Government in 1979. It was successful because it was carried out partly by the Government and partly by the private sector. Social agencies, service clubs, and churches all across Canada sponsored a number of these people equal to the number sponsored by the Government. It was the finest display of government-private sector co-operation that we have seen in many years. That is why it worked. It was an initiative of the Conservative Government carried on by the succeeding Government. It was successful because the refugees came into the country in an orderly process, were sponsored in an orderly way and, therefore, cared for in an orderly way.

If the Member wants to do some research, he would find that the refugees who were sponsored by churches, service clubs, and other such agencies made the most successful transition into Canadian society of any refugees who came into Canada. It was a very good program.

He asks why the matter of 300 people coming in by boat is a panic. In itself it is not. However, the day after the Amelie discharged its passengers on the Nova Scotia coast that made television news and front page headlines and pictures in Bangkok. I do not have to draw pictures for the Member. It so happens that Thailand is sanctuary for one of the largest refugee populations in the world.

Three hundred is not a panic, but there are 15 million refugees in the world and another 60 million to 70 million economic migrants, all of whom have now heard about Canada as a safe haven. It is a panic if the signal has gone throughout the world via electronic media that simply by chartering a boat you can land on the shores of Canada and beat the system. That becomes a cause of concern.

I think the Hon. Member knows that most of the people who came on the Amelie spent a number of years in Germany. Some of them were already declared refugees. He knows that the United Nations Commission on Refugees says that if you have already determined refugee status in a country the next host country does not have to accept you as a refugee. If they had gained refugee status in the Federal Republic of Germany, how could they be declared refugees from there to come to Canada?

Mr. Marchi: That is why we have a process.

Mr. Friesen: He says that that is what the process is for. I thought that they had already gone through the process and were already declared refugees in Germany. It seems to me that that is the nature of the fraud with which we are dealing. They give the impression that they have been fleeing from oppression, when actually they are coming from a very hospitable country which, incidentally, harboured 100,000 refugees in 1986, with a bill of $1.3 billion U.S.

• (1550)

West Germany has been very kind to refugees. I might add that it is because of the experience of West Germany, France and other European countries, and the fact that they have been facing this kind of abuse, that they have restricted entry into their countries. As as result of that, those who want to migrate around the world and look for a best haven have seen Canada as a good place to go. That is why this legislation is necessary. There are many people, such as the captain of the Amelie, who are willing to take money from those who are suffering anguish, and truck in that kind of human misery. That is why it is a serious issue.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that when the original Bill was before the House earlier it was condemned by organizations, including church organizations, community organizations, ethnic and labour organizations representing millions of people.

The Mennonite Church, the Roman Catholic Church, the Anglican, United and Presbyterian Churches, the Quakers, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress, the Canadian Labour Congress are just a few of the organizations that found unacceptable the Bill that was debated months ago. They called for its withdrawal or at least for major amendments. They are reacting in exactly the same way, with exactly the same answers to what is before us today.

I have a document prepared by the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees. It is a document with the heading "Some Human Rights Aspects of Current Refugee Concerns" for discussion at consultations between non-governmental organizations and the Department of External Affairs in preparation for the forty-fourth session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights which will be held in the next couple of months.

In the section entitled "Human Rights Agencies Must Act to Ensure Refugee Rights", they state:

> It is a matter of deep concern for this department—

The Department of External Affairs.

> —to launch a centre which focuses on Canada's interest in human rights overseas into the same parliamentary session which could pass refugee related Bill C-84 at home.

They say that this Bill, the one the Government is still trying to enact:

> —is a flagrant attack on fundamental rights and freedoms in Canada.

I say to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary that he does not only have to explain, account for and defend to opposition Members what the Government is proposing to do—of course, he will say opposition Members of Parliament are raising objections and opposing this Bill for partisan political reasons—if he wants to deal with the real concerns of people, he must deal with the objections raised by all these very responsible organizations that do not take stands because of some political whim, but take a stand after they have given careful consideration to the facts and have listened to people from ethnic communities, the refugee community and the Government. They are as opposed to this legislation now as they were when it was originally brought in.

In fact, the Government has rejected all the serious amendments put forward for consideration by the other place. It simply said no and will continue to do exactly what it proposed in its original form. It is to those people that he should explain the Bill. He should go to his own community and explain it to his own church and other organizations in British Columbia that are opposed to this legislation.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I hope the Member will not presume to instruct me about the Mennonite Church. I have a fair degree of familiarity with it. As a matter of fact, I will be speaking to a group of them in a few weeks and will raise the matter with them, just to clear the record.

I suspect that the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry recognizes the names of many of these organizations that the Member has listed, because I am sure he met them either in groups or individually when he was Minister of Immigration, and was opposed by them just as much as they oppose this Government now. This tends to underscore what I said before, that there are groups that oppose the Government simply because it is the Government. If they are not drafting the legislation, it will be bad legislation.

The Hon. Member says that these organizations represent millions of people. I am sure they represent many people, but I can tell him as well that they do not necessarily represent the rank and file of the people whom they purport to represent. Simply because they have official positions in a particular denomination or a particular organization does not automatically mean that they represent the rank and file of those people. For example, I know that almost 50 per cent of the Members of the New Democratic Party across Canada support free trade, but that does not matter when the New Democratic Party speaks of free trade in the House.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin my remarks by recalling for a moment the short exchange that took place between the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), our immigration critic, and the Parliamentary Secretary, about the movement of refugees in the early part of the 1980s.

The common popular term or expression to identify those 100,000 people was "boat people". The reason they were called boat people is that they fled in small boats, such as sampans and other flimsy vessels, a country where there was violence, torture and intimidation. They crossed the China Sea to Thailand, Hong Kong, Malaysia, and other islands. They crossed the borders. They did not have documents, they did not have visas and they were not certified by a Canadian embassy office in Hanoi. They were escaping with their lives in the hope for a better future.

One of the most important issues raised by the Canadian Government at that time, at the United Nations and other places, was the support of a convention against countries like Malaysia and others stopping the boats from coming in. We said that this contravened the entire principle of the refugee system, which is that people should not be prejudged and turned away simply because they are on a boat. They should be given the right to land, to have their claim examined, and then to be moved on. One of the trade-offs, I remind the Hon. Member from Surrey, was that those countries said,"Yes, we are getting all kinds of people and we cannot handle them". So countries like Canada, the United States, Great Britain, France and Germany said they would help take the load. That began the movement of boat people.

• (1600)

In principle, what is different between the circumstances in 1979 and 1980 and what we are facing here? There is one difference. They are coming directly to our borders rather than stopping on the way, but they are still boat people. They are still fleeing terror and intimidation and they are still arriving without support and visas. But they are coming here for exactly the same reasons. How can the Hon. Member from Surrey say with pride that that is what our Government initiated when his Government of today is rejecting exactly the same principle?

He made another comment. He said that the initiative by the Government of the Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) was a great example of partnership between the church, service clubs, communities and the Government. I agree. The very same groups who were partners in 1980 this Government wants to charge with a criminal offence in 1987. How can the Government justify that contradiction? How can the Government say with any kind of honesty that the groups it encouraged to work with it, helping to settle refugees in 1979, all of a sudden are now "special interest groups" who are trying to flaunt the law? The groups who were successful in working with the Government, co-operating to find a humane way of dealing with a vast movement of people, are now all of a sudden nothing but fraudulent manipulators trying to beat the system, according to the Hon. Member from Surrey. They cannot have changed all that much in five years. The Member knows they are the same people. I worked with them. They opposed the Government to begin with because they dealt with the Department of Employment and Immigration which was continually opposing their interests. One of my objectives as a Minister was to try to turn that attitude around, to help make them partners, as opposed to having a Department of Immigration with its prime interest being to keep people out rather than bringing them in.

I want it to be said on the floor of this House that I respect the Inter-Church Committee, and the B'Nai Brith and the various refugee organizations, because they are doing something that is very much in the tradition of Canada. That is, to reach out and give of one's self without any ambition for personal redress.

There was an interesting time lapse of seven months since the emergency crisis of last summer. The Senate played a valuable role in exercising its responsibility as a Chamber of sober second thought. It took the legislation and gave it the time this House was not allowed to give it because of Government closure. What did the Senate find? It found some very important things. First, and I want to emphasize this, it found that this legislation contravenes the Charter. Let us recall the words of the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen) that we must obey the rule of law.

The rule of law applies as much to Government as it does to individuals. Governments cannot wilfully change the rule of law. They cannot go against rules they have accepted simply because it is in their political interest to do so. Time after time before the Senate committee there appeared totally independent commentators, such as Professor Beatty of Toronto, Professor Gibson of Manitoba and Professor McKay of Dalhousie University. I do not know what their partisan associations are, I do not know if they have any, but I do know them by reputation as being good legal scholars, and each of these gentlemen said that Bill C-84 is contrary to the Constitution of Canada.

As legislators we have a responsibility to try to uphold the Charter and the Constitution, and not let laws pass that deliberately and explicitly contradict the Constitution. I ask the Member from Surrey if that is not in keeping with his admonition to obey the rule of law? If there is any suggestion that this legislation is about to commit, in a sense, a most wilful act, because Government itself, which is supposed to be there to protect the law, is deliberately going to contradict the law, surely we in this Parliament, whether in the other place or in this Chamber, have the right to oppose it to the last ounce of our energy. We cannot let Governments break the law. The Member from Surrey is an accomplice of this Government in breaking the law.

How can a Government which loves to parade itself as being the upholders of law and order wilfully break a fundamental law of this country? And how can it do so with such audacity. It is saying it is doing it to protect Canada. We all know that what in fact it is proposing in Bill C-84 will do nothing at all to rationalize or expedite the refugee determination procedure.

What is the Government going to do the day this law gets passed, if it ever does, and all of a sudden it is faced with a series of court challenges against the Charter? Will that expedite the process? Will that make Canadians able to organize the procedures in a more effective way? Can they do that if in fact the whole system is gummed up for years in the courts? The Government has been told what is going to happen. There are all kinds of individuals and organizations which are prepared to take it to court because it would not listen. Is it somehow going to make it easier in dealing with a real problem to totally and completely bollix the system for years especially when, as we all know, there is an alternative?

There is another choice. It is not a matter of the Government saying it will deal with the refugee problem and everyone else saying: "Leave it alone". When I was the Minister in 1980, I established a commission to look into the problem of refugee determination. There were a number of recommendations that were then followed through and the system was refined. That was followed by the Plaut Commission and by a report from a committee of this House that again recommended a series of steps to refine and facilitate the system. There was an all-Party agreement that was rejected by the Government. It was not a matter of the status quo versus some kind of enlightened change. It was a series of changes which had the endorsement of all the groups which are now protesting. It was accepted by all the legal fraternity and sororities. It was a consensus of how to deal with the overload. The only people who objected were the officials and the Minister of the Department of Immigration.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, with respect, I think the Hon. Member is speaking about Bill C-55 and not about Bill C-84. I think it would be helpful if he spoke on Bill C-84.

Mr. Axworthy: That is not a point of order. It is a silly intervention, that is all. We are talking about the Government's attempt to wreck the refugee determination system. What we do know very clearly is that there was a willingness to co-operate. The Senate hearings are full of proposed amendments put forward by the Bar Association and others. The Senate itself, supported by both Liberal and Conservative Senators, made a whole series of recommendations, not to reject the Bill but to have it conform with the rule of law in this country, and the Minister rejects it again.

What is going on here? I think what is happening is not some isolated incident in dealing with the refugee problem. It is part of a general pattern in which this Government is taking on to itself a form of autocratic power. We see it in the pornography Bill and in the immigration Bill. We see it today on the decision to reject the recommendations of the CRTC on broadcasting. There is an increasing sense of divine right.

The Government thinks because it has 209 seats, because it has a powerful political majority, it can do what it wants. It can throw away all the rules and tramp across the country with hobnail boots and step on whomever it wants, especially if they are victimless refugees and there are no constituents out there to support them. The more helpless the people, the more the Government likes to trample upon them. It does not trample on the big corporations of this country, but boy they like to do it to people who have no ability to fight back. It is the worst example of a bully. The Government is becoming a political bully in Canada. As a result, it is destroying a spirit of tolerance and openness because people are becoming afraid.

That is not necessarily endemic of the Conservative Party. I think of people whom I used to admire from afar in this House; for example, Jed Baldwin, Gordon Fairweather, John Diefenbaker, and Arthur Maloney. They were Progressive Conservative Members of the Parliament of Canada who stood up for individual rights. They fought against Government abusing its power. They stood for a tradition of Progressive Conservatism which welcomed dissent and did not try to clamp down on it. They did not use the arguments that we have heard from the Hon. Member that because someone challenges a law and a rule, somehow they are a social or community pervert or misfit.

The Hon. Member stated that he was upset when he attended the University of Washington and saw students demonstrate. What were they demonstrating against? They were demonstrating against a legal system that suppressed the rights of blacks for 200 years. That is what they were rioting about back in the 1960s. They were protesting against an immoral war that their Government had carried out against the wishes of its own people. The riots were not because it was a fraternity party, it was because they felt that the Government was abusing its power.

Surely that goes back to the basic, fundamental natural law of a democracy, the right of people to oppose an autocratic Government. Yet there is a mind-set developing here that the Government, because of its huge majority, is acquiring a right to dictate and determine what the rules and laws will be. Of course, as we have seen in things like Meech Lake and free trade, the Government wants to entrench them in order that future Parliaments can never change them. The Government Members want to entrench their interpretation of society. They are welcome to it. The Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta has a view about morality and law and order. That is his business, but I ask him to be consistent. I ask him to at least be honest enough, if he is talking about a rule of law, to explain to me why the Government, of which he is a Member as a Parliamentary Secretary, is clearly contravening the Convention on Refugees established by the United Nations? It is clearly contravening the Charter of Rights of Canada. It is clearly going against basic principles that this country has recognized for decades about search and seizure, about the right to be heard in front of a proper tribunal, and have independent judicial or quasi-judicial tribunals in order that they will not be subject to political influence and manipulation.

Why is this Government, and why is he as a defender of the rule of law, tolerating, accepting, and becoming an accomplice in that type of violation of principles that his own Party and his predecessors have fought in Parliament to obtain? That is really what is happening in this country.

The Government is making this type of law dealing with refugees. I can tell the Hon. Member that in this case it will not work. Does the Hon. Member really think that by turning away a smuggler's boat that that will deal with the problem? The Hon. Member is somehow equating the types of larcenist individuals who are immigration smugglers with people who read Jean Paul Sartre and Camus. The fact of the matter is that there are larcenist people in the world, and there always will be. But if they are going to hire a boat and send it to a shore and then simply be turned away, the captain of that boat will find some way to dispense with that human cargo. He will already have his shekels and the money in his pocket. If the boat were confiscated, brought in, and the people in the boat were allowed the right to at least enter into the determination system to see whether they are legitimate refugees, then they would lose something valuable and all of a sudden we would have a deterrent to the smugglers and all the rest of them.

There is one basic thing that the Member does not understand. No one is trying to prejudge who is a refugee. But on the other side, the Government should not prejudge who is not a refugee. The Government should not prevent those who may have legitimate rights from coming to the border to apply for application. The people who are escaping torture in Central America or in parts of Asia have exactly the same type of problems in their own communities as they did in Vietnam in the late 1970s, or in parts of eastern Europe earlier than that, or in Nazi Germany in the 1930s. They are exactly the same problems. But the Government is reverting to where this Government was in 1930 when a boat of Jewish refugees who were trying to escape from Germany was turned away.

Mr. Friesen: This Government?

Mr. Axworthy: This Government is doing exactly the same type of thing in this Bill. There is not one whit of difference in principle in what the Government is doing. It is taking this country back 50 years.

Mr. Friesen: Who did it in the 1930s?

Mr. Axworthy: This country did it, and a Liberal Government did it, and I am ashamed of that. One of the things I tried to do as a Minister of Immigration was to rewrite that history. We tried to do that. Because a Government 50 years ago made a stupid and immoral mistake, this Government in 1988 should not repeat it. If the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta did not like what happened back in the 1930s, why is he becoming an accomplice to the same type of transgression in 1988? If he thought it was reprehensible then, it is more reprehensible now. Surely we have advanced our civilization, our openness and toleration for rights since that time.

I say to the Hon. Member to look at his own words and his own speech. He should look at what he believes, in terms of the rule of law, and ask himself why he is part of a Government that is contradicting everything for which he says he stands.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, the Member made a speech that could be used anywhere in the House. All that has to be done is change the names around a little and it is one that could be sold. The Hon. Member admired John Diefenbaker, Jed Baldwin, and others in the Party. I do admire Bob Andras, Donald Macdonald, and Martin O'Connell. I do not know if they would feel very comfortable in that caucus right now.

Since the Member has been fairly loose in rewriting history, I have to put on the record the fact that the Conservative Members on the committee in the other place did not vote for the amendments of that committee. None of them did. I want that put on the record because of what the Member has stated.

Mr. Axworthy: If the Member will look at the record, he will see that I did not say that they voted for it. I said that they supported those amendments. If one looks at the testimony, and the statements by Senators Spivak, Nurgitz, and others, it is clear that on that committee they did not vote against it. Presumably if they did not like it they could exercise their right, as members of the other place, to vote against it. In fact, they went along with that recommendation of the committee. I think that is to their credit and honour. I would only hope that Members of that same Party in the House of Commons could repeat and duplicate the same type of understanding and acceptance that their compatriots and colleagues in the other place have shown.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in this debate today. I think it is a very significant debate. It clearly exemplifies the inability of the Government to use its mighty majority to "Rambo" its way through policies that are obviously not supported by many Canadians. Quite frankly, if they were supported by a massive number of Canadians, Canadians who took the time to contact their Member of Parliament, or to lobby, then they would have gone through a long time ago. If there had been clear support, and if it had been clearly justified, it would have gone through. However, the opposite is the case. It is now over five months since the so-called emergency was declared and we were brought back to Parliament to debate the matter.

During the short time available to me I want to talk about the specific amendments which the other place has offered us, as well as my feelings about Canada and what we have been through in our very short life as a nation. Let me start about 80 years ago when we as a country turned away a boatload of Sikh refugees. I am not going to get into the game of which Party was in power, but we as a country, around 1908-1909, turned away a boatload of Sikh refugees who had arrived on the S.S. Kamagata Maru on our West Coast. They docked at Vancouver, were quarantined by the Canadian Government, and eventually sent back. When that boat got back to India, its original departure point, some of those Sikh refugees were killed by the British police.

Some 30 years later another boatload arrived. That one contained 900 Jewish refugees from Europe who attempted to enter Canada as a means of providing themselves with a safe place to live, one free not only from persecution but from death. I was ashamed last summer when I visited the memorial to the Holocaust in Israel to see the photographs of the people on the St. Louis that we as Canadians—and I emphasize "we as Canadians" because we tolerated the decision of our Government; it was our Government—turned away from our shores. We said to these human beings, "We don't want you". They eventually lost their lives to Nazism. We had a chance to take them in, to protect them, and to give them a new start.

Canada has recognized as its only honorary citizenship an individual who helped Jews escape from Europe by giving them passports to his country. We have honoured that man because we now recognize the goodness which was done by him in helping the Jews of Europe to escape.

In the last year we have helped to wipe the slate clean. We have allowed two boatloads of would-be refugees to land on our shores and to enter the process available under the law of Canada. Ironically one of those boatloads was from the same country which we refused more than 80 years ago.

As the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) so aptly pointed out, the Government wants us to turn back the clock. It wants to get us back to the point where we can stop those people who, for whatever reason, find themselves wanting to leave their country and wanting to come to Canada and find the only option available to them is a marine mode of transport. So what if we have the same number arriving at Mirabel on any given weekend by regularly scheduled airlines? So what if we have others from Central America, perhaps not as large in number, arriving by automobile, bus, or train via the United States of America? No, the Government is targeting this one mode of transportation because it is more visible and brings out a certain reaction in a certain element of society.

This is why we in the New Democratic Party have aligned ourselves with all major church organizations—not individual congregations but the governing bodies of the churches—the Law Society, and other groups and communities across Canada which have evolved around support for immigrants and refugees, which have helped them to become part of Canada and have helped to bring them to Canada. They have offered a Christian hand of fellowship or brotherhood to people whose life is not as good as our life is in Canada. That is why we opposed the original legislation.

I compliment the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) for the work he has done, not just in the past five months or the last year but over many years, in terms of fighting for refugees and immigrants, fighting for the process which is so needed in Canada to ensure that our laws are adhered to and that human rights are recognized as an ultimate priority. This is why we moved amendments. This is why a number of us spoke during the various stages of debate. This is why we support the amendments which have come to us from members of the other place.

While we in the New Democratic Party may have a specific view about the over-all value, if not the existence of the other place, we recognize that under Canadian law it exists and has responsibilities which its members have clearly taken seriously. They have listened to thoughtful Canadians, the same ones from whom we heard in committee and the same ones we quoted in the House. They have come to the same conclusion, that a number of elements within the Bill violate the Charter of Rights and go against the spirit of what Canada has evolved to be. They have sent back to us a check-list of amendments and have said: "If you change this, this, and this, we will find the Bill acceptable and, if we find the Bill acceptable, Canadians will find it acceptable". It is a modification of the process to ensure that the benefit of the doubt is given to those who come to our shores, to ensure that they are not turned away before they have a chance to state their case, and to ensure, on the other hand, that those who are not bona fide or are attempting for the purpose of monetary gain to violate the spirit and the law of the land are not allowed to do what they do—a balance, Mr. Speaker.

What have we had through the whole process? We have had the all-Party committee. We have had the Plaut recommendations. We have had the spirit of this House in terms of the two opposition Parties and individual members of the Conservative Party. We have also had the other place. Conservatives, Liberals, and those with an independent label in the other place have come together and said that the Bill must be changed. The primary thing is to make sure due process is followed, that individuals are not turned away on the high seas or left to the whim of the master of the vessel and those who pull his strings. They should be given a chance for a legal and fair hearing so that we in Canada under the powers we have assigned to our bureaucracy can judge them according to merit to determine whether they are bona fide and to determine if for some reason they are coming to Canada under pretences which would show they would not be good citizens.

• (1630)

We are quite willing to take somebody who has a little bit of hard cash so that he or she can start a new business.

Mr. Heap: Like half a million.

Mr. Angus: Like half a million. I come from the area where the phrase "What's a million" was coined by C. D. Howe many years ago. Up North it is like pocket change.

Seriously, Mr. Speaker, we are quite willing to take those who can buy their way into the country, but we are not as willing under this legislation to take those who find themselves for political or religious reasons having to escape a country. That is what a refugee is, someone who is seeking refuge. He or she is doing it because of the kind of Government he or she is living with and in a lot of cases Governments tend to be dictatorial.

Then there is the problem of violence. If you happen to be a labour leader in Central America, you are not exactly the most loved person. In the case of Canada people will complain about the Bob Whites, the Dennis McDermotts or the Shirley Carrs because of their involvement in society and with workers striking for legitimate rights. In Central America labour people fear for their lives because of the undemocratic nature of the Government of the day. There is documentation to confirm it. A lot of evidence about labour leaders being shot, tortured and beaten is available. No matter what the Conservatives think about Shirley Carr, they would never go that far—and I am not even suggesting they would even think about it. As a comparison to other societies where things happen, that is very real. People need refuge. Sometimes we do not quite understand the politics of a country.

Do any of us really understand the politics of India between the various groups with religious overtones and geographic relationships? I know from my trip to Israel this summer that the fundamentalism of the Jews in Israel, the fundamentalism of the Arabs in Israel, of the Arabs throughout the Arab world, is part of that volatile nature of the state. Who are we, predominantly a Christian society, to pass judgment on why people may feel they have to leave a country because of oppression? How difficult is it for us to judge specific merits if the authorities of a country we have to go to are the very people from whom people are running and who are forcing people out of the country if they want to remain alive? We need a process that will ensure that the laws of Canada apply and that the rights of individuals apply.

I agree that the current situation of five years to get some kind of decision is intolerable. Of course, there can be abuses. We on this side want to see that situation changed. That is why my colleague has argued for the implementation of the standing committee report based on Rabbi Plaut's report. We want very speedy process, one that will allow a reasonable period of time for determination, not giving the would be refugee a foot in the door that he or she has now in becoming totally involved in society, but one that allows for fair process.

This is a very important Bill. It is a Bill we want to see debated because we believe that the more people understand the specifics of the legislation and the specifics of the problem the better chance there is of the Government not turning the refugee clock back to 1938 or to 1909. We need to move forward and in a way to ensure that those who are forced to flee their countries can find refuge in Canada according to our laws, laws which should be just and fair. It should not be trying to play off refugees against immigrants as has been happening over the last four or five months, suggesting that people are queue-jumpers and they have to be dealt with. We know there is no queue. We had not even met our immigration targets in a number of years. Nobody has been displaced.

Mr. Friesen: What are you saying?

Mr. Angus: If there is any responsibility on the Government, not just the current Government but the previous one, it is the allocation of resources to ensure that staff are there to do the processing to ensure that all of those who apply as immigrants can have their requests processed fairly quickly within reason. The same thing should apply on the refugee side.

I would encourage the Government to reconsider the amendments which the other place has offered. They are printed for all to see so I will not go through them. I have made my points on this Bill.

I thank the other place for its careful consideration of the legislation. I think what the Senators have done is to give added strength to the work of the two opposition Parties in this House, reflecting a concern over the kind of refugee policy which the Government seems determined to implement even if it does mean lengthy court challenges and possible violations of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Quite frankly, I think it will be a sad day for Canada should this Bill pass.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend my colleague for his comments which have opened up some aspects of this discussion which are not possible for everyone to deal with in a 20-minute speech. I think it is very important that he has opened them up. One aspect particularly that he developed is the situation of trade unionists, co-operative leaders and other community leaders, school teachers and so on in El Salvador or Guatemala, Central America. The operation of the death squads subsided a little for a while but it is now on the increase again both during 1987 and into 1988 in both countries. Because of that terror, organized with guns provided by the United States, many of the people of both countries have fled, and particularly those who could be identified as grass-roots or community democratic leaders. He has made that point. However, I would ask him to extend the point a little further, if he will, as to how it is that those people, if they attempt to enter Canada, fall afoul of Bill C-84 or the other legislation which is the companion piece to it, Bill C-55, because many of them may arrive at Fort Erie, at ports of entry nearer to Thunder Bay or to Winnipeg or wherever, without a Canadian visa, a visa permitting them to enter into Canada. This is particularly important because of that clause in Bill C-84 which the other place sought to amend with the support of all the public representatives except, of course, the immigration officials.

These people who come to a port of entry with any assistance from a Canadian are considered to be entering illegally under the Minister's interpretation and therefore the Canadian is subject to a couple of years in prison or a bigger penalty if there is a larger group involved. I would ask the Hon. Member to comment on why it is that last year we did have thousands of such people coming to our border, the U.S.-Canadian border, without adequate documentation, or perhaps people in similar situations coming by air or even by boat without adequate documentation.

The question is, how does the Hon. Member respond to the position taken by this Government and by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary that those people must be kept out and that Canadians who help those people are penalized, even if it just means bringing them to a port of entry and saying to the immigration officer at the port of entry: "Here is a Salvadoran without a visa but who is in danger in his own country and is not allowed to stay in the United States and therefore is claiming refugee status"? How does the Hon. Member justify the person coming without a visa to Canada?

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague for the question and it is very apt because there is a very active Central American support group in Thunder Bay. Lloyd Jones who has been working very hard for many years providing support for refugees has raised this matter with me.

If for some reason you, Mr. Speaker, were a resident of El Salvador and thought that the death squad was about to show up at your door, usually in the middle of the night, you would take off. You would try to get out of the country.

It is a little difficult, when fleeing a country, to go by the Canadian Embassy in order to get a visa. When a refugee has escaped his country, he faces a catch-22 situation. He cannot go back to get a visa because someone will be watching the compound and noting who goes there, and if he is on a list, he will not be seen after he comes out. Because of the involvement of the United States Government in sponsorship, funding and weapons procurement, it is difficult to follow the suggestion of stopping off in Minneapolis and going to the consulate there to try to get a Canadian visa. The United States is not necessarily a safe haven. There has been at least one case in the last three or four months of an individual being refused at the Canadian border, sent back to the United States, a so-called safe haven, and then being deported by the United States back to the Central American country.

The intention of the amendment from the other place is to provide for a process whereby someone coming to a Canadian border, whether by car, on foot or by plane, can get documentation and have a review to determine whether or not he is a bona fide refugee. The amendment seeks to provide for that rather than having someone arbitrarily saying to a refugee: "No, you go back, we do not want you". Sometimes the answer depends on what side of the bed the border guard got up on that morning. We must have a legal process that is very quick in its response but is also very humanitarian.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I would like to pick up on the scenario the two Members from the New Democratic Party have drawn of a person who fears for his life in El Salvador wanting to come to Canada. Perhaps the Hon. Member could tell me if it is not true that the U.S. Government has agreed with Canada that any Central American in the United States who has applied for transit papers to Canada or has an application in process to come to Canada will not be acted on by the United States. I think he will find that that is true, and since it is indeed true, why would it be more advantageous for someone coming to Canada to apply for refugee status—I will wait until the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) has finished coaching the Hon. Member from Thunder Bay. Since the Hon. Member made such an informed speech on the subject, I am surprised that he needs coaching from the Hon. Member for Spadina.

Be that as it may, why would it be necessary for a refugee to come to a Canadian border point to see an immigration officer? What service could he get there that he could not get from an immigration officer at any consulate in the United States, and there are about a dozen or more consulates?

As a matter of fact, when the Mennonites appeared before the committee, they testified that they do not bring refugees to the Canadian border if they can possibly help it because they prefer to go through a consulate in the United States since it is better for the refugees. If it can be done at an office in the United States, the refugees can complete the process and be prepared for both education and work with a work permit already in place as soon as they arrive in Canada. The Mennonites felt that that was better for the refugees. Why does the Hon. Member say that it is better to come to the Canadian border than to go through the process at a consular office?

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member used the term "transit papers". To me, a transit paper is a document that allows an individual to go from border A which in this case would be the Mexican-U.S. border, to border B which would be the Canada-U.S border. Without having heard of transit papers in that context before, I must make that assumption. That means that a refugee must get transit papers at some place other than the United States or Canada, and that means that unless he can get them in Mexico, something that I doubt, he has to try to get them in the country from which he is fleeing. Again, my argument stands. In the middle of the night, a refugee will not shop around for papers, he will get out.

The Hon. Member should know that the consulate offices in the United States are heavily loaded with work. We have heard complaints that people cannot get work permits through the consulate office in Minneapolis without waiting for about four or five months. It is my understanding as well that there are quotas assigned to the offices. They can only process a maximum number of refugee applications or immigration applications each fiscal year, so that obviously has some bearing on the situation.

Perhaps the Mennonite community is able to work through its own church network to accommodate that process, and that is great. Yet there is a whole other group coming through the U.S. because they cannot afford to go around it or over it. They rely on volunteers to drive them a couple of hundred miles here and there, so it is just not a good process that is available to them.

• (1650)

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding that the Hon. Member is not his Party's immigration critic, I would like to commend him most highly for his eloquence on this subject.

One of the concerns we have put forward is that the Government wishes to convince Canadians that if this legislation is passed, the backlogs, the problems, the frustrations, and the loopholes in the refugee determination procedure will be over. From our viewpoint that is very dangerous because that will not be the result. One of the reasons for that is the traditions of this country as referred to by the Hon. Member and others. Another reason is the legal implications.

Every legal expert who appeared before the legislative committee of this House which studied this Bill, and every legal expert before the Senate committee which dealt with this Bill, overwhelmingly suggested that various clauses of the Bill run counter to the Constitution and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Therefore, if it is upheld after a court challenge it will in fact paralyze the policy and create havoc. The logical result is that Canadians will then really lose confidence in the system. In fact, there will be a hemorrhaging of confidence because of the strategy pursued by the Government to the effect that this Bill would be the cure.

I was wondering if the Hon. Member could perhaps comment on the legal ramifications of drafting legislation not in keeping with the law of this country as he sees it from his vantage point?

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his kind words and his question. Not only am I not the critic, I am not a lawyer either. A lot of us in this House are not lawyers, yet we draft legislation which becomes the law of the land.

There has been a fair bit of comment about the relationship between the clauses in this Bill and the Canadian Bill of Rights. There have been a number of legal rulings handed down that make it clear that components of this Bill are not in conformity with current law, the Constitution, or the Bill of Rights. Without getting into the specifics of that, I think if the Government wanted to ensure that it was right and the critics are wrong, and prevent a haemorrhaging of confidence as the Hon. Member suggested, it has the responsibility not to proceed with the Bill, not to send it back to the other place, but to submit it directly to the Supreme Court of Canada with a request for an early ruling. In that way we would have time to modify this legislation should the Supreme Court agree that it is in violation of existing law.

My understanding is that if this Bill passes into law and an individual is found in breach of this law and goes through all the procedures available, we are talking about two, three or four years, I am not sure, before we get a decision. The Morgentaler case, the decision on which will be announced tomorrow, is a case in point. For how many years has that gone on? Therefore, I encourage the Government to send this Bill over to the Supreme Court now and get a legal opinion.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my comments I would like to address myself to some of the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen), who spoke earlier this afternoon. He is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister responsible for this legislation and presumably should know whereof he speaks.

First, I take particular offence at the manner in which he misrepresented the arguments of honest people who are advocating a long-needed change to our refugee determination system. During the course of his remarks he referred to the fact that we are redefining what constitutes a refugee. What does he mean by that? He went on to explain that anyone, presumably, is entitled to call himself or herself a refugee. The decision would no longer be made by the Government. He asked questions. Are we going to let every interest group decide who is a refugee? I think I am quoting him correctly.

Why do lobby groups and special interest groups feel they have the right to determine who is a refugee?

That is a red herring and completely beside the point. There is no debate about the definition of a refugee, either in Bill C-84, or in Bill C-55. The definition of a refugee is found in the UN Convention of 1951. That is the definition used by Governments around the world to determine who is and who is not a refugee. Therefore, it is incredible that the Parliamentary Secretary would stand in this House and impute motives to well-meaning, honest people who have been advocating changes in our refugee determination system, and cast aspersions on their arguments.

He referred time and time again to special interest and lobby groups. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), referred to this aspect of his argument. At some time there was an honest attempt to make common cause with people who work with and are knowledgeable about refugees. That is an effort which was started when the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry was the Minister of Employment and Immigration and continued in the first days of this Government. However, since the election of 1984, and particularly since last spring when the Government tabled Bill C-55, all pretence at making common cause with these groups has fallen by the wayside.

• (1700)

Who are these interest groups and lobby groups? Are these people who would subvert the Government of Canada? Are these people who do not have Canada's best interests at heart? I imagine the Member is referring to someone like Rabbi Plaut, the author of an important report on our refugee determination system who himself was a refugee and should know something about what it is like to be a refugee and about the standards which our country should adopt in trying to determine who is a refugee.

Perhaps he was referring to someone like Nancy Pocock who is a member of the Inter-church Committee for Refugees and was featured in a television report around Christmas time. She has devoted many years of her life to helping dispossessed and needy people, refugees who find her home in Toronto a haven where they can go when they arrive in Canada to meet friends, learn about a new country, establish themselves, and get support and aid from Canadians. On the television show prior to Christmas about Nancy Pocock it was said that refugees fleeing from Latin American countries are given her name and telephone number. She may be the only person they know when they arrive in Canada but she is someone to whom they can turn for the help they desperately require when they arrive in our country. Are these the interest groups and lobby groups which the Hon. Member denigrates in his comments?

With regard to the numbers of refugees who are apparently coming to Canada, in his comments today the Hon. Member referred to 15 million refugees in the world. He has come down somewhat in his estimates since the debate last August when I heard him refer, on a number of occasions, to the five billion people in the world. He was suggesting that if we did not drastically revise our laws we in Canada were in danger of having some five billion people come to our shores. Today he is down to 15 million refugees. I suggest to this House that that is a gross misrepresentation of the actual situation.

I participated in a conference in Montreal in early December organized by the Canadian Human Rights Foundation on the issue of human rights and the protection of refugees under international law. We were reminded at that conference that most refugees are not coming to Canada or the United States. Only a small fraction of the 12 million to 15 million refugees in the world are trying to make their way here. Resettlement is an option for only a small portion of refugees.

Canada has many means to restrict the flow of people who come to our shores. The obligatory visas which are required for people from practically all refugee-producing countries is perhaps the most effective power which the Government has at its disposal to keep refugees away from our shores. That is not to mention, of course, the factor of geography. Canada is not on the border of any refugee-producing country. Therefore, it is impractical and impossible for most refugees to make their way to Canada.

West Germany had some 100,000 refugee claimants in the last year. Pakistan has probably two million or three million Afghan refugees on its border. Mexico has hundreds of thousands of Central American refugees, and Mexico is not exactly a wealthy country. How many Iranian refugees are on Turkish soil today?

Therefore, I find it reprehensible for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration to stand in this House and defend the legislation before us on the basis that there are some 15 million refugees in the world, and imply to Canadians that if we do not pass this legislation there is a possibility that these 15 million refugees will actually come to Canada.

I find it reprehensible also that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) and the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) have constantly harped on the danger of a public backlash against refugees. We hear that time and time again from spokespersons for the Government. There have been no attempts by the Minister to put the matter into perspective. There has been no attempt to compare Canada's situation with that of other countries as Rabbi Plaut did at the conference which I attended. He compared the number of refugees received by Canada to that received by a tiny country like Costa Rica. I believe that Costa Rica has had more refugee claimants in the past several years than has Canada with its great size and wealth.

I take offence also at the comments made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration in reference to the actions of the western European countries. I do not think that we have to set our standards by those of European or any other countries. Canada's situation is far different from that of many other countries. Over the past five or ten years, and certainly in the period since the end of the war to 1983-84, Canada established a reputation in the world in the area of refugee policy and resettlement of refugees. The Canadian people were awarded the Nansen Medal in 1985 by the United Nations because of the generosity that Canadian people have shown to refugees. How can the Parliamentary Secretary stand up in the House and justify the reprehensible actions of the Government and this illegitimate piece of legislation by referring to the situation in European countries? Should Canada not be standing up and saying that we will not follow this lead and will not decrease the safe havens that are available to refugees? Should we not be saying that we will not reduce or seek to limit our obligations but will stand up and demand that other countries respect the rights of refugees under the UN Convention?

• (1710)

As my colleague, the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), has suggested on a number of occasions, we could even take the bold move of suggesting to the United Nations that a conference be called to deal with this issue, which is again totally in line with the kind of leadership role Canada has played over the course of the past 35 to 40 years.

As I said in debate on this Bill several months ago, it is ironic, when we are considering Bill C-84 which would turn boats away from our shore, that we were awarded the Nansen Medal. I believe Nansen was a Norwegian explorer and humanitarian who, in the period after the First World War, began giving documents to displaced persons, refugees I believe from the Austrio-Hungarian Empire that disappeared as a result of the First World War. These documents came to be known as Nansen passports. Of course, the Nansen Medal was named after this individual.

Is it not ironic that in 1985 the people of Canada were awarded for our generosity to refugees a medal which was named after a person who gave visas and documents to undocumented refugees, yet in 1987, the Government proposes legislation that would put undocumented refugees in jail?

I want to deal briefly with another aspect of this legislation. Comments have been made about the aiding and abetting provisions of the Bill that would result in Canadians who are involved in church groups, humanitarian organizations and other groups like Amnesty International which help refugees, being put in jail for aiding the illegal entry of refugees or undocumented persons into Canada.

I also want to point to an aspect of the Bill that relates to the Government's power of search and seizure, which was commented upon by the Senate. Clause 103.03 of the Bill states:

> For the purpose of exercising the authority under Section 103.02, an immigration officer or a peace officer may, with such assistance as the officer deems necessary, break open any door, window, lock, fastener, floor, wall, ceiling, compartment, plumbing fixture, box, container or any other thing.

The Senate recommended that this provision be struck out because it argues that this kind of provision, which is similar to the powers in the Narcotics Control Act and Customs Act is excessive in relation to immigration matters. Yet the Minister of Employment and Immigration yesterday rejected this particular recommendation from the Senate. Canadians should know that this kind of provision can be used against them.

In conclusion, I hope other Members will join in this debate so that we may study the many contentious provisions of this Bill. Rather than playing some kind of ping-pong with the other House, as we have on other occasions, perhaps cool heads will prevail in this House and appropriate attention will be paid to some of the very sound recommendations made by the other House. Perhaps we will be able to arrive at a consensus, such as the suggestion during one of the previous confrontations with the other House of a conference between the two Houses to ensure that Canadians have greater respect for the laws that are passed by this Parliament.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) for his presentation in this matter which, as always, is a very thoughtful one.

I would like to ask him if he would comment a little further on a point that he touched. He spoke of the irony of having a law passed to make it an offence for Canadians to assist an undocumented refugee to come to Canada. The irony he referred to was in relation to the Nansen Medal given in the name of a person who had saved lives by giving documents to undocumented people.

He is speaking of a humanitarian tradition in the Nansen Medal and humanitarian action by people, many of whom are associated with explicitly humanitarian groups such as Amnesty, the churches and so on. I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) has gone on record many times saying, in effect, to the witnesses before the committee in August: "Oh, you are good people. We do not intend to prosecute you". He never defined whom he would not prosecute, but he was addressing certain people there. He meant, "You are the type we will not prosecute".

The recommendation from the other place is that the decision to prosecute should be limited by requiring the written authorization of the Attorney General. The recommendation following that of the Government was for the Attorney General or the deputy. However, it is not clear yet what is the application of the Minister's statement that "you would not be prosecuted because we know you are doing good work".

I would like the Member to comment on two aspects of that. First of all, has he a comment on the quality of the law, perhaps even on what might be the quality of the law in the eyes of the Supreme Court in light of the Charter, quality of the law which can only be administered by having someone say, "Oh well, certain people would not be prosecuted because we know they are good people"?

Secondly, can the Hon. Member comment on whether he thinks it would be possible to define the law so that it would not be necessary to use such unlimited discretion as the Minister has suggested?

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member was asking me about the question of equality of the law, whether prosecuting only some people under the law as opposed to others would somehow violate the equality provisions of the Charter. I think that was the gist of his question. I would really hesitate to offer an opinion immediately without having had the opportunity to reflect on it.

The second part of his question is whether the law can be more closely defined. It seems to me that this is exactly what the other House did when it said that what the Minister is really aiming at is to try to prohibit the clandestine entry of illegal immigrants or migrants, if you will. When a person working with a humanitarian or refugee aid group helps a person by bringing that person to the border, to Canadian immigration officials, whereupon that person would claim refugee status, there is no attempt to hide or circumvent Canada's laws and regulations. What those people are simply doing is knocking on our door, asking for protection. As I understand the United Nations Convention we have an obligation then to examine whether or not that person has a legitimate claim. It would seem to me that it would be a very easy way out of the problem if we made it a practice that we seek to prohibit the clandestine entry of illegal immigrants.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, let me begin by congratulating the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) who not only spoke passionately today about what he holds dear, but has certainly given his strength and commitment throughout the process, going back to the summer and, of course, before then.

To a certain degree, I suppose above and beyond the technical aspects of the debate, the legal ramifications, in part we are talking about a piece of legislation that, to a certain degree, will reflect a certain temperament of our country. In the end, it will also be a fight and struggle for Canadian public opinion. Canadians will ultimately decide what aspect of this debate should merit their support.

When we talk about the piece of legislation in that perspective, we are talking about Canadians having to decide between a political Party that wishes to turn back boats indiscriminately as opposed to escorting them in. We are talking about a choice between locking people up and detaining them on suspicion and hunch as opposed to a discreet way of doing it. We are talking about the option of putting people in prison or fining them for aiding the plight of refugees as opposed to rewarding them because they are assisting the Government. I suppose we are talking about whether we will have immigration officers running around like Rambo, breaking down doors and entering any premises, again simply on a hunch. We are talking about those two sides of the equation, and I was wondering, from that perspective, because of the temperance and moderation Canada and Canadians have displayed in the past, if the Hon. Member for Laurier could perhaps address some of his comments on that subject?

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, in order to have a rational debate, we have to debate fact, not fiction, which suggestion has been offered up time and time again by members of the Government and by the Minister in a rather underhanded attempt to manipulate the public. The Hon. Member referred to public opinion. How can we have an educated public when the Government of this country is disseminating false information? We had an example of that in the speech of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) yesterday in which he said, as reported at page 12299 of Hansard:

> The Senate also wants to limit the powers of search and seizure to day-time hours and to confine warrantless search to instances where lives are at risk. If we accept the amendment, we will seriously hamper the ability of our officers to apprehend and prosecute those who organize groups of illegal migrants. Transborder schemes would be conducted mainly at night so the perpetrators could escape Canadian jurisdiction if something went wrong.
> This proposal means that in winter months when darkness comes early—

The Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) knows about that. In Labrador winter comes earlier than it does in the capital.

> —the time of day during which effective action could be taken would be greatly reduced. What could we say about the North where sometimes there is one hour of daylight a day?

Just think, there would be only one hour of daylight in order to conduct searches. Well, of course, that is not what the Senate said at all. The Senate proposed an amendment that a warrant issued under Subsection 1 shall be executed by day, and it continues to say, unless the Justice of the Peace by a warrant authorizes execution of it by night. The Minister says he would have no power to execute a search warrant at night if he accepted the amendment of the Senate. But that is not what the other place said at all. It said that if it is necessary, if a case can be made to a Justice of Peace, a search warrant could be executed at night. So we have another example of misinformation put forward by this Government continuously to the Canadian people.

I can only go back to the remarks I made previously, that a person who is supposed to be in a responsible position, by virtue of that position has a duty to pay careful attention to the words and the facts he puts before this House, and I am referring, of course, to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Friesen). He stood up in this House and talked about the millions of refugees who could end up on Canada's shores if we do not pass this legislation, without attempting to put Canada's situation into perspective. He attempted to compare our situation to that of other countries without providing Canadians with the information of various types of controls the Government has at its disposal such as visas. How can we expect the public to be informed? How can we expect to have an intelligent debate?

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate once again. This legislation has been with us for some time.

I want to say up front that the manner in which I would characterize the Government's actions with regard to Bill C-84, legislation to amend the refugee determination process, is that the Government is being opportunistic with this legislation. It is playing petty politics and seeking to stir up favourable public opinion. It is making a cheap grab at headlines and simply going for quick results in the public opinion polls. I see the actions of this Government with a very jaundiced eye.

Those statements can be backed up quite convincingly. On the one hand the Government has chosen the option of playing politics with the refugee determination process. On the other hand, there is the option of the status quo, leaving things as they are, and doing nothing. The Government has accused the Opposition of advocating this. I wish to look at those two approaches to the refugee determination process. I also want to examine the notion of whether there is any other way to come to grips with this problem.

First, I have stated that this Government is playing politics with the refugee determination process. It is trying to whip up public sentiment and gain public favour by appearing to be the strongman with regard to the refugee determination process. I came to that conclusion for the following reasons.

I remember the time last August when the media were full of people approaching Canada by boat. Concerns were raised about whether someone was going to get into this country illegally, or whether someone was going to get into this country illegitimately, or through the back door. Among immigrant communities the fear was raised that while they were waiting for years to have their relatives come into this country to reunify their families, others were simply chartering a boat, jumping on it and being able to come into Canada without any difficulty whatsoever, and that this was somehow a major loophole in our law. This was on the television screens and whipping up public feelings of unfairness.

The Conservative Government was at the bottom of the public opinion polls, and during the summer recess it broke an agreed upon calendar that was negotiated as part of parliamentary reform that the House would not be sitting in July and August. The Government tore up that calendar, threw it aside, and made a grab for the headlines. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced that there was going to be an emergency recall of Parliament in order to put a stop to this abuse of Canada's refugee determination system and our immigration laws. So the Prime Minister made this grandstand.

The irony of ironies is that as this grandstand was made, a number of weeks later when Parliament still had not been recalled journalists and other people began to ask questions. The House Leader of the Government was asked why Parliament still had not been recalled for this so-called emergency. The response was that government Members were working on other things and they were too busy to have written the letter to the Speaker to ask for the emergency recall of Parliament. What a farce. There was this great emergency and they did not have the opportunity or the time to sit down and write a letter.

Eventually the letter was written, unfortunately. Parliament was recalled in August, 1987. Presumably this emergency legislation had to be put in place immediately in order to deal with a crisis. Did it get passed? Did it become the central focus of an emergency parliamentary session? No. Not at all. We are still dealing with the legislation today and we are into 1988. The year 1987 has come and gone. The headlines and the television screens of 1987 are in the past. And we are still dealing with this legislation.

The Government had a summer session of Parliament. In fact, it became the fall session and then the ongoing session. We dealt with all sorts of legislation touching many subjects. What an emergency. The Government breaks the calendar that was established through negotiations in this House as part of the parliamentary reform system, an emergency session is called, and that session deals with a variety of legislation. It never comes to grip with the legislation that the Government said was an emergency and had to be passed within hours, days, or weeks. Clearly that was no emergency whatsoever. It was a publicity stunt, a grab for the headlines, and an attempt to stir up public emotions and gain favour.

The Government has been playing politics with the refugee determination system. It has been playing politics with many Canadian families of various ethnic origins who are recent immigrants to Canada, for example, the Portuguese, the Filippinos, and people of all racial origin who have become Canadian citizens and who are working very hard to bring their family members to this country in order that they can live as one family rather than having some relatives in this country and brothers and sisters in another country. The Government is playing with those people's feelings. They were saying to those people who have been waiting for years to bring their son, daughter, brother, sister, mother, or father to this country, "Here are those people chartering a boat and entering Canada instantaneously".

Even while the legislation was introduced, the Government promised that it would ease up on the family reunification process. It would make it easier for families to be reunified and for relatives to come into this country in order to ease the frustration of the members of the ethnic communities in this country. Has the Government done anything substantive in that area? The Government has changed a few regulations, for which it deserves credit. But by and large the members of the ethnic communities in my riding are still waiting in frustration for their relatives to be allowed into this country and for their families to be once more unified.

I challenge the Government, which promised a more generous attitude toward family reunification, to live up to that promise and make it possible for relatives of Canadians to join their family members. If the Government were sincere in its approach to the whole refugee determination system, it would act expeditiously with regard to a more generous approach on family reunification.

I characterized the Government's approach to refugees as cheap politics. Tit for tat, the Government has characterized our position as a "do nothing" approach, an approach where we would simply stay with the status quo. In fact, some Members on the government side have suggested that we would not have any real control over the determination of refugee status and the entry of refugee claimants into this country, and it would simply be at the pleasure of the persons who decided to call themselves refugees. They have suggested that if anybody outside the country were to put on the hat and say "I am a refugee", given the position of the Opposition they would just waltz into the country; there would be no controls. That is the image which the Government has been seeking to propagate in terms of the position or posture taken by the opposition Parties.

Is the only alternative to the Government's hand-fisted approach to refugee determination a wide open, no control, status quo approach? I should like to suggest that it clearly is not, even though some government Members would like to convince the public that it is.

Rabbi Plaut, for example, has conducted a thorough and comprehensive study of the refugee determination system and has offered an alternative way of handling the whole question. A parliamentary committee studied the refugee determination system, found it wanting, and offered positive alternatives as to how the system could be reformed. Clearly there are alternatives to the hand-fisted way in the which the Government is approaching the refugee determination system. It is not a question of either accepting the Tory way or no way. It is not a question of accepting the Prime Minister's way or there will be no controls with regard to refugee status. Clearly the Government has been seeking to propagate that false alternative.

The refugee determination system needs to be reformed. People on this side of the House clearly recognize that. When it takes up to five years for a decision to be made with regard to refugee status, there is something wrong with the process. Clearly the process becomes open to abuse and one which invites abuse. The refugee determination process needs a complete house cleaning. It needs to be re-thought from top to bottom.

I want to come to what I think is the central point of the debate on Bill C-84 to amend the refugee determination process. The Government is playing politics with the issue, is seeking to curry public favour, and is accusing the Opposition of having a status quo policy or a hands-off approach to refugee determination. Those are not the only alternatives. In fact there is a middle way, a way of facing up to the challenge by providing genuine leadership which would reform the refugee determination system so that it combines human rights and fairness—fairness with regard to the process by which people enter the country and become Canadian citizens and respect for human rights, respect for the Canadian tradition of generosity when it comes to people whose lives are in danger. This is the balance which must be struck. On the one hand we must respect the human rights of global citizens who come to our shores and indicate that their lives are in danger, that they need sanctuary, protection, or a haven. We must respect their human rights and their right to a fair hearing. At the same time we must respect the sentiment of Canadians that nobody should be able to abuse the refugee determination system as a way of coming into Canada through the back door, as a way of jumping the queue, as has often been said on the other side of the House, or as a way of getting in here as a quick fix. Canadians have a right to demand that fairness apply with regard to entry into this country. We must combine those values and concerns, and that is a challenge of political leadership.

Governing a country is not an easy process. If it were, I guess the Conservatives would be in office longer than we expect them to be. Governing is a difficult art. It requires the balancing of legitimate concerns. If it were simply a one-way street in which all we had to take into account was one set of priorities, maybe the Conservatives would still be at 60 per cent of the polls. We recognize that running the country is a difficult process and that the concerns of people must be balanced.

The first thing the Government should do in turning around this legislation is to change its strategy. It should accept the challenge of political leadership and accept the challenge of combining a concern for human rights with a concern for fairness in the process of entering the country. If it did that, perhaps it would not have to worry about its position in the polls. In fact, Gregg, a famous Tory pollster, has said in public—and it has been printed in the newspapers—that what Canadians want is leadership based on principle and based on compassion.

The Government has also failed to live up to its own past history. When it came to the boat people coming out of southeast Asia, we had a very admirable program. Canadian families from one coast to the other were able to sponsor boat people and to assist in their settlement in the country. They made it a successful program. It solved a refugee problem and allowed all Canadians to live up to and participate in the humanitarian tradition of which the country is duly proud.

The Government has failed to live up to its own past behaviour and has sunken to a new low. It has also failed to meet the challenge of leadership on this planet in another sense: as long as we have great disparities in incomes, conflicts, and a lack of democratic procedures in the world, we will have a surplus of refugees. The Government ought to look at international development in order to come to grips with the whole question of refugees, not just bring in a Draconian piece of legislation.

In summary I want to say that when I look at the piece of legislation I see a Government which is playing politics with the refugee determination process. It is trying to play the tough guy. It is trying to be John Wayne and hopes to have the same popularity as the movie star had. What we need is real political leadership, not playing at politics.

I have indicated that there are real alternatives. Rabbi Plaut studied the question in depth and found ways, as did the parliamentary committee, to combine our concern and respect for human rights with our interest and respect for Canadian public opinion when it comes to demand for fairness in the process of entry into the country.

It is time for the Government to turn around, withdraw the legislation and accept the challenge of providing real political leadership in Canada rather than simply playing to the nearest camera.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper). I congratulate him on articulating a number of different fronts which I believe his Party and members of our caucus have come to maintain. I think within the Member's remarks he hit the nail on the emotional head. One of the most offensive parts of Bill C-84 is the provision that now creates a new offence for those who aid and abet and genuinely assist refugees coming into Canada, namely, the churches, the many volunteer organizations, the immigration assistance and relief agencies, your average Canadian, and those who have been engaged, not in this past summer but for years, in trying to enhance the plight facing so many people. That perhaps typifies what is wrong with this legislation. That one clause says it all.

If you were to canvass Members of this House, including government Members, and you asked them whether they actually agreed and applauded the creation of this new offence, I am not sure that you would get an honest response. If this law is brought against a priest, he could face a fine or a prison sentence for having helped a refugee from Guatemala who may not have had the proper document upon entering the country. But the Government has said, "Do not worry. We are not going to charge a priest. We will not put in prison a priest who may have helped a refugee".

You simply cannot go on what the Government's intentions are or what the Minister of the day believes he will do. We must be guided and concerned with what is available under the law. If the Minister, as he has done, suggested to Canadians that he will not prosecute a priest, a nun or a layman who assists a refugee, then our question has been consistently, why create legislation and a law if you do not want to execute that law at some point?

Based on that comment, I would like the thoughts of the Hon. Member concerning the creation of that new offence. Will he also comment on the Government's suggestion that it will not bring the penalty into force, in certain circumstances?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I must say the question is very topical. We have had discussion in this House about the danger of people breaking a law and then not being charged, this whole business about creating a new offence and then the Minister saying, "I won't charge you because you are a good person. It is not you whom I intend to charge". That is a dangerous step to take. We want the law to be respected. We must draft good laws. If we draft crude laws and have to be very delicate in the way they are applied, then we are going down a very shaky road. The Government has already started down that road. The legislation before us today is legislation that many groups in Canada and many legal scholars have said with good reason that it would not stand up to the Charter of Rights. Clearly what we want is a Government that will draft good legislation, that will create good laws and that will live by laws. The first law is the most fundamental of all, namely, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

When a broad section of legal opinions says to the Government that the legislation it has drafted will breach the Charter of Rights, the Government ought to go back to the drawing board and find a way to draft legislation that will respect the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We have seen the red light that tells us, "Don't race through here because if you do you are liable to have a terrible accident and lives may be lost". Clearly the Government is making a significant mistake in creating this new offence. People will be put in jeopardy. Church members working with refugees, particularly those who are these days working with people from Latin America, should not run the risk of facing new penalties with the simple assurance that the Minister does not intend to prosecute them.

Clearly it is not adequate to put a very heavy law on the books and then for the Minister to say, "I don't mean to apply it to members of churches who are doing humanitarian work. I just want to apply it against the bad guys". The Minister must draft legislation that will protect human rights and will not put people who work with the churches at risk. Legislation must not put at risk Canada's reputation as a country which allows sanctuary for those who are genuinely fleeing dictatorial regimes whose own lives are at stake.

The answer to my colleague is simply that the Government is making a fundamental mistake. We hope that if this debate continues long enough perhaps the Government will wake up. We know that there are noises being made by the right-wing back-benchers of the Tory caucus. Perhaps the humanitarians on the back-bench will rise up in anger and tell the Prime Minister to wake up and tell the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to back off and bring forward good legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There are only 30 seconds left. Shall we call it six o'clock?

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT—ACTIONS OF FORMER COMMISSIONER—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: On Monday, January 25, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) raised a matter relating to the actions of the former Commissioner of Canada Elections, Mr. Joseph Gorman, in rendering a decision after an investigation into alleged breaches of the Canada Elections Act by the Hon. Member for Frontenac (Mr. Masse).

The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap argued that the decision of the Commissioner not to charge the Minister "diminished the public's respect for the House of Commons and for Members of Parliament" and, further, that this failure to charge was contempt of this House.

[Translation]

Let me first refresh Hon. Members' memories about the provisions of the Standing Orders of the House on the required notice.

Standing Order 20(2) clearly provides as follows:

> —any Member proposing to raise a question of privilege, other than one arising out of proceedings in the Chamber during the course of a sitting, shall give to the Speaker a written statement of the question at least one hour prior to raising the question in the House.

• (1110)

[English]

Former Speakers have been clear on this. The purpose of the rule is to save the time of the House so that the Speaker, in advance, can look into the situation or matter being brought forward. The notice should be complete enough so that the Chair is as fully informed as possible of the matters to be raised.

With respect to the issue brought forward on January 25 by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap, when some time was obviously taken to prepare the arguments in advance of raising them in the House, the notice could have been given earlier and could perhaps have been more explicit. I merely caution all Members in this respect, and I do so in the interests of the good functioning of our proceedings.

I come now to the specific issue dealing with the actions of the former commissioner, Mr. Gorman. While he is not an officer of Parliament in the usual sense of that expression, he is an official who is appointed by and reports to the Chief Electoral Officer who is an officer of Parliament. Mr. Gorman was appointed Commissioner of Canada Elections under Section 70 subsection (3) of the Canada Elections Act. Under subsection (4) of Section 70 the commissioner is given certain authority, namely, the power to give or withhold consent to prosecution under that Act. The House of Commons, indeed, Parliament gave him that authority.

In the argument presented in the House, it was clear that Mr. Gorman was exercising powers given to him under the Act. The exercising of powers given to an official under an Act cannot be a matter for the Speaker to rule on unless there are circumstances which amount to a breach of privilege or a contempt of Parliament. In this case there is nothing before the Chair to support a claim of breach of privilege or contempt. Thus, there is no role for the Speaker in this case.

I would remind the House that it is not the duty of the Speaker to judge the actions of public officials in the fulfilment of their duties. It is my duty only to determine whether or not sufficient evidence has been presented to judge if there has been a prima facie breach of privilege or a contempt of the House. In this case, I do not find that either has occurred.

During Question Period in the past several days the suggestion has been made that the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure should look into this matter. As all Hon. Members know, standing committees now have permanent orders of reference. In the case of the privileges committee, the process followed by the Chief Electoral Officer and his officials, in particular, the Commissioner of Canada Elections, could be looked into by the committee. However, only the committee can decide to look at this matter. It is a decision for the committee to take, it is not one for the Speaker.

I would caution Members that no charge of misconduct has been laid against any public official or any Member of the House in this case. The committees powers are limited to studying and reporting on matters relating to the process and procedure under the relevant statute. Again, this is a decision for the committee to make, but my reading of the statute did not discover any provision for review by or appeal to a committee of this House of the decisions or specific cases made by an electoral commissioner. Having said that, the committee should not be shy of reviewing the process and procedures that Parliament has enacted.

[Translation]

This is an important question to which the House has devoted a lot of time during the oral question period. However, with all due respect, I cannot conclude that a case has been made for the Chair to rule that the actions or omissions of the former commissioner constitute contempt of the House or a breach of privilege.

[English]

Let me close by thanking the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap, the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) and the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hawkes) for their contributions.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish to thank you on behalf of the House for your very reasoned judgment. I want to signal that the Government is content for the matter to be examined by the Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure so that the committee can examine the mandate of the commissioner and the decision making process. We would hope that this can proceed as soon as possible.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also want to thank you for the work you have done in making your decision. I was glad to hear the Minister, speaking for the Government, say that the Government is willing to have the committee go forward on this issue. I hope the chairperson of that committee will call a meeting quickly so arrangements can be made. I know our representative on the committee will be available for a meeting to be called very quickly.

I think it is also important that the inquiry not be restricted to just Mr. Gorman. I think there may be other people who have to be called on this topic to get the complete picture.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Official Opposition, I want to thank you for your most informative ruling on the question of privilege. I have noted the statement of the Government House Leader to the effect that the Government wants to see the Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure go into this matter. Obviously our representative on the committee will be ready to do his duty with respect to the work of the committee. We hope that the Government will make it clear to its members on the committee that they should not be constrained in how they look into this question.

I want to observe that if and when the committee goes into this matter this does not mean, as far as the Official Opposition is concerned, that it is no longer appropriate to raise the subject in the course of the House of Commons Question Period in so far as we are also dealing here with the matter of the responsibility and accountability of the ministry to the House of Commons and the people of Canada. This remains an issue for the House through the Question Period or otherwise even though some aspects of the matter may be under study by the Elections and privileges committee.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I could respond to the latter point which the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) has made. I do not think there was anything in my ruling suggesting that appropriate questions ought to be precluded. The Chair always has to consider questions in their context which, of course, I will continue to do on behalf of all Hon. Members. I want to reiterate that, provided the questions are appropriate, the ruling in itself does not preclude them.

PRIVACY OF MEMBERS' OFFICES—ALLEGED BREACH

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I rise this morning on a question of privilege regarding a matter of the breach of the rights of three Members of Parliament as it relates to the privacy of their physical offices.

As you are aware, the Board of Internal Economy approved a pilot project for the installation of personal computers in, I believe, about 30 offices on the Hill. Three of those computers were installed in the Office of the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), the Whip, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), and the Chairperson of the NDP caucus, myself, the Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan.

We are entering a new age, Mr. Speaker. I think we have to ensure that the rules that have applied to the old ways also apply to the new. The day before yesterday an employee of the House of Commons, the Oasis group, entered my office, that of the Member for Churchill, that of the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap and perhaps the offices of other Members of Parliament who are participating in the pilot project. The impression was given to staff that the individual was interested in determining the usage of the equipment and the software contained therein. They purposely removed a software program from the computers in a systematic way without indicating to either staff or Members their reason for doing so. I want to be very clear; I am not suggesting that the removal was unnecessary, but I am complaining about the manner in which it was accomplished.

Perhaps I could use an analogy. I think it is the common understanding in this House that if we received documentation, for example an Oasis manual which explains how a particular program is to work, and I had my staff place that manual in a cardboard file and place that file in a filing cabinet, no employee of the House of Commons would even think of walking into my office, going to that filing cabinet and removing that documentation. In fact, the Oasis staff were removing the electronic file that had been installed in the computers in my office, in the office of the Hon. Member for Churchill and in the office of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap.

I think it is important that we ensure that from here on in, regardless of why the information was installed in that computer and why it needed to be removed, such information will only be removed with the explicit permission of those responsible within the offices. In other words, we should treat electronic material no differently than we would treat what we refer to as hard-copy material. Electronic information must be handled in the same manner.

In addition to this unauthorized removal of the software which was basically the instructions for one of the programs, a number of other files were accidentally erased.

I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to review the rules of the House of Commons as they apply to the offices of Members to ensure that, from here on in, employees of the House of Commons are not allowed to remove electronic information from computers installed in Members' offices. Let us remember that the Board of Internal Economy has authorized the installation of personal computers in all Members' offices here on the Hill. It is a matter that is important to all Members of the House of Commons.

It is important that we establish that the rules and procedures that have applied for years to our normal files apply to our electronic files. I would ask you to examine the issue, Mr. Speaker, and my staff, the staff of the Hon. Member for Churchill and the staff of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap as well as ourselves would be more than willing to provide any additional information we can.

Finally, it is irrelevant why the information had to be removed. It is the process that I am concerned about.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that the Hon. Member would move the usual motion in the event that I would find that there is a prima facie case of privilege?

Mr. Angus: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened with some concern to the intervention of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus). There may be other Members who can relate similar experiences. If that is so, I would invite them to call my office immediately.

What has taken place may well have been done in the greatest innocence, but I will most certainly look into it. An electronic file is just as much a file as any other file. I hope that we will find that the answer is innocent enough, but certainly the practice is not to be condoned. I will report back to the House at the very earliest opportunity.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 78, I do now leave the chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole.

SUPPLY

CONSIDERATION OF SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (D)

House in Committee of the Whole for consideration of an item of the Supplementary Estimates (D) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1988—Mr. Paproski in the chair.

Resolved—That a sum not exceeding $803,903,000 be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1988, as follows: Vote 35D—Agriculture—Grains and Oilseeds—Operating expenditures and the grants listed in the Estimates, $803,903,000.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Chairman, we are here today on behalf of Canadian farmers as a result of an announcement made by the Prime Minister in Ottawa at the Agriculture Outlook Conference in December. Perhaps I could say a few words about the circumstances that have led us to this motion in the House.

I think most Canadians are aware that we are in the middle of a very serious international grains situation. International prices have fallen dramatically over the last three or four years. Canada is a major player on the export market. In the case of wheat, about 80 per cent of what our producers grow must be exported. As international prices fall, it becomes a very difficult situation for Canadian grain producers.

The result has been that many farmers, especially on the grain and oilseeds side, are in some considerable difficulty. This has shown up in all sorts of areas. Prices have dropped pretty dramatically and in some cases as much as 50 per cent in the last two and a half years. I think all of us can relate to that. If we were to have our incomes or salaries cut by some 50 per cent over the last two and a half years, all of us would realize the dramatic effect that would have on the way we operate our businesses or our households.

There is no question that we are facing a very difficult situation. In many ways it is an international war, but in this case it is an insidious and undeclared war that is seeing casualties show up in the agricultural communities.

As a Government, we have responded in three areas and with three distinct policies on a consistent basis since the very serious situation developed. First, we have taken a deliberate policy of showing support for our agricultural sector. This has shown up in many ways. We have reduced the amount of tax payable by Canadian farmers. When prices fall, input costs must be cut, and that is the normal reaction of any business. Part of the input cost is associated with taxes and the Government has reduced the amount of tax payable on farm fuel. That has resulted in a saving of over $200 million to grain and oilseeds producers since the inception of that program.

Second, the Government has made a direct injection of cash. A year ago, many will recall that $1 billion was made available to grain and oilseeds producers right across Canada under the auspices of the Special Canadian Grains Program. Some 30 per cent of that money was put into the hands of farmers prior to the beginning of the last seeding season. That money was in the hands of farmers in February and March, 1987. The money we are talking about today will be in the hands of farmers in a similar period of time, except in this case we are making 75 per cent of the money available as an initial payment and those cheques will be going out prior to the end of March, whereas a year ago we made available 30 per cent of the over-all payment.

That is a substantial amount of money. Under this program alone approximately $1.5 billion will go to farmers in this fiscal year. That is an unprecedented amount of direct cash support for Canadian farmers, but we face an unprecedented situation.

I think that most farmers, if given a choice, would much prefer to receive their income from the market-place, but unfortunately one could make the case that the international market for grain and oilseeds products is not a market-place. We have to do what we can to support our farmers.

It is even more important that we support our farmers because they are not in difficulty because they are inefficient producers, because they produce an inferior quality product, or because our grain industry has a bad reputation for not fulfilling commitments or executing contracts when we say we will. We are in difficulty because of some foolishness going on in an international subsidy war, largely between the Americans and the Europeans. It is very important that we provide cash and assistance to our farmers in a very difficult time.

The third thing the Government has done is to follow a deliberate policy of selling. Many of us will remember that when we were in a similar situation in the late 60s and early 70s a decision was taken to try to back away from the market and not sell at low prices. The ideal was that if you do not sell when prices are very low the market forces will increase price and you will then be able to sell. That resulted in Canada taking a decision to decrease its production as a result of what was then called the Lower Inventory for Tomorrow Program. In the early 70s Canada cut its wheat production by almost half as a result of a policy encouraging farmers not to produce.

We have taken the exact opposite approach. We think that to back away from the market would send the wrong signal to the Europeans and Americans. We think that our farmers are much better off to sell as much as we can even though the prices are very low. We are better off to sell even at low prices than to back away from the market and not sell at all. If you have grain in your bin and do not sell it, you get nothing for it. If you have grain which you sell, even at a low price, you have some cash flow.

The result has been that in the last three years Canada has increased its share of the world wheat markets. That sends a signal to our competitors, namely, the Europeans and the Americans, that if Canada is able to match the price internationally we are then able to make sales on balance better than our competitors because there is no doubt that we have a very high quality product. Second, our country's reputation for being a reliable supplier and not using food as an embargo, as the Americans have done a couple of times in the past, has allowed us to increase our market share in the last three consecutive years. As I have said, we have been successful in maintaining and increasing our market share.

The fourth thing we have done is one of the most important aspects. We have taken a very aggressive role internationally to try to bring about a solution to the international trade war. The Prime Minister made agriculture part of the discussions at both of the last summit meetings. There is already indication that it will be part of the upcoming summit meeting in Toronto. We have taken a leading role in raising agriculture at the GATT discussions which are now under way. In many other areas internationally, where we have had an opportunity, we have raised agriculture as an issue.

I think most farmers would agree that if there is to be a lasting solution to the very depressed international prices it has to come about internationally. We have to back away from some of the trade-distorting subsidies which are causing problems. We must back away from some of the trade barriers that are preventing the free flow of agricultural goods. If we continue the way we are a country of 25 million people will find it very difficult to compete with a country the size of the United States with a population of 235 million or 240 million and with the European community with a population of over 300 million. The federal Treasuries in those communities are much larger than our Treasury.

If we are successful internationally, which must be the real solution to the problem, we will find that a Canadian farmer is able to compete against an American farmer and a European farmer, as opposed to the situation, now wherein a Canadian farmer has to compete not only against the American farmer but against the American Treasury, and not only against the European farmer but against the European Economic Community Treasury.

That is the situation we face. It is a very serious one for Canadian farmers. When we think about grain and oilseeds production we tend to think about the western provinces. That is not entirely the case. Ontario has more farmers than has any other province in the country. Ontario produces as much grain as does the Province of Manitoba. In point of fact, if you list the provinces in order of grain production you find that Saskatchewan is the largest producer, then Alberta, then Ontario, and then Manitoba. There is also grain production in other parts of the country. Therefore, it is not only a western or regional problem but genuinely a national problem and the Government has approached it as such.

The Supplementary Estimates with which we are dealing today confirm the commitment which the Government has to this very important industry at a very difficult time. Passing these Estimates will enable us to put some $800 million into the hands of Canadian farmers by the end of March which will be very useful in terms of encouraging and assisting farmers to seed crops this spring. Additionally, we will be proposing some amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act which we think will be useful in terms of providing support. There are many other things which we have done on the fiscal side. I am happy to be here this morning on behalf of the Government dealing with this very important issue for Canadian grains and oilseeds producers.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to have an opportunity to say a few words with regard to Supplementary Estimates (D), and I guess there will be a Bill flowing from that, which essentially provides the funding for the Special Canadian Grains Program in the fiscal year of some $800 million. These Supplementary Estimates result directly from the United States' farm bill and the reduction in the world price of grain. Clearly this past two and a half or three years has seen a devastating situation in the grain or agriculture price wars that have been going on in the international markets. We not only see the U.S. setting its loan rate so low that it pushes the world price of grain to a very low level, but it is providing as well an Export Enhancement Program which drives the price down even further. It is really a destructive policy.

Our Government has paid only passing attention to that policy because it has been involved in the free trade negotiations and has pretty well abandoned any criticism of the U.S. Farm Bill which without doubt has had a more devastating impact on Canadian grain and oilseeds and other cash crops than any other single piece of legislation passed in any Parliament or legislature in the world.

The Government should have been making stronger representations and fighting harder to see that the impact of this legislation is reduced. The Minister likes to talk about how the Prime Minister raised this matter at the Venice Summit last June. Certainly he did, but the President of the U.S. shot him down as soon as he did and the whole issue was thrown out far as any real action being taken by the U.S. administration is concerned, and the world price of grain continues to drop.

Unfortunately, the Minister had not done his homework and was unable to tell the Standing Committee on Agriculture a week or so ago how much further the U.S. farm bill will rachet down the price of grain in the coming crop year. There seems to be some indication that it will be reduced and it would be nice to know exactly what the impact will be.

Although the Government made a massive payment this year of $1.1 billion, that is only $100 million more than last year and the coverage is wider so the return to farmers will be lower. Yet the price of grain is 20 per cent lower this year than it was last year. Essentially, farmers are receiving approximately the same amount of money from the Special Canadian Grains Program when prices have dropped by 20 per cent and input costs have continued to increase. It is an extremely serious situation and will probably be worse in the coming crop year.

The tragedy in this does not apply only to the U.S. Government and its spending of some $25 billion or $30 billion on subsidies, in effect reducing the world price of grain. It applies to every grain producing country of Europe, as well as Australia, Argentina, and other prominent grain producing countries.

We were amazed that the Government of Canada should sign a trade agreement which the U.S. Government, immediately abrogated with respect to agriculture. According to that trade agreement Canada's interest were to be taken into account. Yet after that agreement was signed the U.S. aggressively went after Canadian customers using its Export Enhancement Program in violation of the agreement. There was supposed to be a standstill clause in that agreement to the effect that neither country would take action which could jeopardize approval of the agreement. Clearly that provision does not apply to the Export Enhancement Program.

There is considerable concern across the country with the program itself. I have a statement from the Ontario Soya-bean Growers' Marketing Board concerning a one-cent per bushel subsidy producers were to receive. The Chairman of that Board, Owen Dobbyn said that:

> The program was supposed to be equitable for all grain and oilseed producers and not influence the farmer's planting decisions—In fact, last spring Agricultural Minister John Wise told farmers not to base their planting decisions on government programs but on the returns they could expect from the marketplace.
> This one-cent per bushel payment for soybeans is telling soybean growers they made the wrong planting decision—they should have planted the crops which received a higher subsidy rate.
> Next spring farmers won't know which crops to plant. Should they look at market prices or plant the crops receiving the greatest subsidies?

Unifarm of Alberta took the Deputy Prime Minister to task at a meeting in Edmonton in early January. During a question period at their annual meeting delegates wanted to know why a proposal developed by western members of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture was not used by the federal Government when setting up the Special Canadian Grains Program. An article in the Western Producer says:

> At the heart of the complaints was a fear that the $1.1 billion program will not be market-neutral.
> —when interviewed, Unifarm President Ralph Jesperson was highly critical of the program.
> "If Members of Parliament and individual farmers have the ability to overrule us, it makes a mockery of the Government suggesting 'come up with a proposal through cnsultation and we will follow it,'" Jesperson said. "It's an aggravating situation."

Clearly, there has been much criticism of the program in that regard.

• (1150)

Concern was also expressed about the fact that at the same time the Prime Minister was announcing the special grains program, he was cancelling some $750 million of debt under the Western Grain Stabilization Program. Those who do not come under that Act believe that any additional subsidy or assistance should have been provided on a universal basis. The Western Grain Stabilization Program operates on the basis of those who have opted into the program.

I would like to know whether the Minister is contemplating any assistance for those who are not subject to the Act. One would normally expect this to be a universal program, but it is not in this case because the Government has cancelled some $750 million of the debt under the Western Grain Stabilization Program.

Those are some of the concerns that have been expressed to me since the program was announced. When the Prime Minister announced the Special Canadian Grains Program for this coming year, he outlined a long list of other programs which the Government will continue. He announced the amount of funds that will be lost by the Farm Credit Corporation with regard to farm fuel assistance. Clearly, that whole situation in the farm debt crisis is being ignored or covered up by the Government. The Farm Credit Corporation has been in a state of crisis for the last year. Its equity position slipped below $124 million of deficit in the last fiscal year, with arrears of some $345 million in the last fiscal year.

It is estimated that in the fiscal year 1987-88, its deficit in equity will be minus $300 million and its arrears will balloon to over $405 million. The Government is either ignoring the farm debt crisis or attempting to sweep it under the carpet.

The chairman and the vice-chairman of the FCC were let go in early December. They have been proposing recovery programs for that farm debt crisis for over a year but the Government accepted none of them. It brought in a new chairman and vice-chairman, neither of whom is a farmer as I understand, but more oriented towards Treasury Board and the Department of Finance.

Therefore, we must question the future of the Farm Credit Corporation because the assistance provided for in this Bill is clearly inadequate to salvage thousands of farmers facing serious financial difficulty.

There is great concern in the agricultural community that the Government is planning to wind down the FCC just as it did with the Farm Improvement Loans Act. The Minister brought in that legislation on an urgent basis last June, telling the Opposition and the New Democratic Party that we must pass this legislation immediately because the life of the Farm Improvement Loans Act was coming to an end. That Act had provided some $300 million a year in loan guarantees for farm loans that were used for equipment, livestock, improvement to farm operations and so on. Yet seven months later, those amendments and the extension of the Farm Improvement Loans Act has not even been proclaimed.

The agricultural community is very concerned about whether the Government is planning to privatize or wind up those programs. We are still facing a farm debt crisis. Studies show that over 50,000 farmers out of some 170,000 who have sales of more than $20,000 a year are either insolvent or in serious financial difficulty. I hope the Government will take the problems facing Canadian agriculture with the farm debt crisis seriously because it does not seem that any action has been taken in the last 12 months, except to announce studies and replace staff.

We want these funds to be made available for the coming planting season. I was in Saskatchewan and Manitoba earlier this week, where many farmers told me that with the reduction in the price of grain by some 20 per cent this past crop year they will not have adequate funds, even with this program that will provide an average benefit of $7,000 per producer, to even plant a crop. This program will be helpful to those who are in a more favourable position, but it certainly will not help many farmers facing the prospect of lower grain prices in this crop year and even worse in the coming year.

During our exchange in the committee I hope the Minister will be able to respond to those questions which have been raised by the farming community during this terrible crisis which has befallen them in the last two or three years.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Chairman, it is remarkable to hear the Minister concede this morning that we did not face an international market situation. He also indicated that this was an unprecedented situation for Canadian farmers.

At the outset, I want to stress that this is absolutely the case, not only in western Canada but in Ontario, as the Minister pointed out, and with respect to many farmers in Quebec.

[Translation]

The agricultural community in Quebec is faced with a lot of problems, and this is something which should also be looked into.

[English]

Yet, given that unprecedented situation of a serious set of problems which have built up, the Government is coming before us and essentially patting itself on the back, saying that it is doing as much as can possibly be done. Of course, it says that it regrets the situation but is doing everything it possibly can. That is simply because, in this case, it is throwing $800 million at the problem.

• (1200)

We support, in fact, again and again in this House we called for much earlier announcements so that farmers could plan with some security knowing what was going to face them in terms of financial help this coming year. Yet it was not until far into the crop year that actual announcements were made. That suggests to me and to my Party that there is no strategy. There is no broad understanding of the difficulties farmers face, and there is no broad response to those problems coming from this Government. Instead, we see a series of ad hoc actions which, although they are discussed with farmers, are not in themselves worked out with the goal of solving the long-term, very serious and, as the Minister has said, unprecedented situations faced by farmers.

As someone who represents a constituency which includes a great many farmers, that is the message I hear. It is a message which says very forcefully to me that the Government, despite the concern which farmers recognize on the part of the two Ministers—now the three Ministers who are involved in this subject area—is not addressing the problem with sufficient urgency. It is not being addressed with sufficient comprehensiveness. It is not, therefore, being addressed with sufficient seriousness.

The farmers in my constituency look, for instance, at a situation which faces them in which it is clear, despite the comments of an ambiguous sort from the Minister of National Revenue, that tax audits continue to be an active part of the program of the Department of National Revenue with respect to farmers, even though those farmers face what the Minister himself says is an unprecedented situation.

We have a set of debt review boards established. Yet those debt review boards do not have within them the capacity to actually work out solutions which would lead to the potential write-downs of some debt or a potential packaging of combinations of debts with the FCC and with individual banks. There has not been given to these debt review boards that kind of power, despite the urgent necessity for that kind of capacity in order to intervene in the debt situation which exists for many farmers throughout this country.

We have to recognize that the debt situation of farmers as it stands in 1988 is at the heart of many of their difficulties. That debt situation is not something which was caused by them. It was something which was established by a foolish decision of the previous Government to permit interest rates to rise to absolutely ridiculous levels, and because the banks imposed this rise in interest rates on those farmers who had taken out loans with them. That is eating up much of the support being provided through this first and second round of deficiency payments which have been allocated and which are being discussed here today.

We have to raise very serious questions. Why the lack of a comprehensive approach? Why is there a lack of a broad strategy? Why is there this continual last minute recourse to ad hoc situations and ad hoc support, which is necessary and which we have called for, but which does not satisfactorily deal with the basic problems with which the farm sector is faced?

I have to say also, as a representative of one of two counties in Ontario which produce the bulk of soybeans, that the derisory one cent allocation for soybean producers is something which has hurt the Government far worse than had it decided to simply leave soybeans out of the program entirely. I would not, of course, recommend that. Instead, I would recommend a support for soybeans which would provide some kind of equitable recognition of the cost of production after stabilization payments have been taken into account. That would give a fair return to soybeans in comparison with corn and wheat which, in my part of Ontario, is very often grown together, as is the case in Kent County as well. That inequity simply has to be addressed by the Government in the Bill it will eventually bring in and the regulations which that Bill will permit to be established.

I would like to conclude by saying that all of us who represent, at least in part, farm constituencies, recognize that the problem farmers face is not an easy problem. It is a problem which requires action at the national level, at the international level and at the provincial level. But we also have to see the urgency of this problem as something that pushes us to try to deal with it in a much more comprehensive way and, therefore, in a much more serious way. Farmers are, of course, thankful for the ad hoc support, but they are not thankful for the delays with respect to announcements of programs. They are not thankful for the inequities which affect a commodity such as soybeans. They are not thankful for the failure of the Government to do what it said it would do before it was elected, that is, to establish a comprehensive and effective program to put the family farm back on a firm basis.

Certainly, as far as my part of Ontario is concerned, and as far as much of western Canada is concerned, the family farm is still very much at threat. Part of the reason for this is due to international programs and the policies of the United States. However, another part of it, too, has to do with the fact that the Government has not adopted a strategy. It has not tried to make a strategy to deal with the problems that face farmers, in particular, the debt problem which is something that represents a large failure on the part of the Government. It is something that farmers will recognize and pay back in terms of support for other alternatives in the coming election.

I believe that if the New Democratic Party were to form the next Government, we would adopt such a comprehensive policy. However, I hope that whatever Party forms the Government it will have a comprehensive across-the-board strategy to deal with the whole set of problems which farmers have been facing. That would be better than the continual ad hoc, last minute and, for that reason, unsatisfactory approach to the problem which farmers face.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, I wish to take this opportunity to say a few words about the matter that is before us today, particularly since I come from Manitoba, a province in which agriculture plays such a major economic role. While I represent an urban area, I feel that most Manitobans have a direct and vital interest in agriculture. I hope that by contributing to this debate we can light a fire under the Government to increase its sense of urgency with regard to agricultural problems.

I wish to say right off the mark that I feel that the Government has failed the test of leadership when it comes to facing agricultural problems and when it comes to resolving the crises that are facing farmers today. Let me be clear that today in the House we are facilitating the Government's efforts to make a payment of $800 million under this special agricultural program.

In terms of the over-all picture of the crisis that is facing agriculture I want to say something about the Government's responsibilities and its failure to meet the test of leadership.

What types of problems are farmers facing today? What situation do we find in agricultural Canada? What type of a situation do we find among grain producers? The situation is at a crisis point. It is critical. If we were talking about a patient in the hospital we would be talking about life and death. This is a situation which requires not cosmetic surgery but immediate and radical surgery in order to bring the patient back to health.

Farmers are facing debts which threaten their existence. The number of bankruptcies is rising. Those farmers who can continue to farm have no disposable income. They are living in poverty. The prices for their products are falling while the costs of production continue to rise. From the point of view of farmers, they are in a critical situation. Critical situations demand fundamental and radical solutions.

What is the Government doing? Today it is moving and today it deserves credit. It is making available an additional $800 million that will be going to farm producers. This will provide some $5,000 or $6,000 to each producer. Thus it is helpful and the Government deserves some credit for taking some positive action.

Is it enough? Will it resolve the fundamental problems that have put the farmer in the crisis situations that they are facing today? Will it ease the poverty of farmers? The answer to those questions is a resounding no.

I wish to mention a couple of other areas in which the Government has tackled the agricultural question and failed in the test of leadership when it comes to resolving these problems. One such area has to do with the international negotiations in which the Government is involved. In this respect it is approaching the problem with band-aid solutions when what is required is radical surgery.

The Government takes credit for the fact that agriculture is on the agenda of GATT. Just because it is on the agenda does not mean that it will be resolved adequately. It does not mean that the agricultural war in subsidies between the European Common Market and the United States, which is hurting our producers, will be resolved. We have all gone to meetings at which items of vital concern to us are on the agenda and we have all walked away from such meetings disappointed because our problems were not resolved. Simply to have the item on the agenda is not enough.

The trade deal of the Prime Minister has a section which deals with trade subsidies. I opened the trade deal up to read those words carefully, because when we were holding hearings with regard to the trade deal an agricultural group came before us in support of it. I thought then that there must be a resolution to the problems of farmers in this trade deal. When I read the words of the deal I saw that it was a promise to deal with agricultural subsidies, a promise and nothing more. We have had promises before. We have had inflated promises before from the Prime Minister. If there is one thing that our Prime Minister is famous for it is his inflated promises.

To deal specifically with the American-Canadian relationship, we have had promises with regard to acid rain. Those have created no concrete results. Here again we have promises that the Government will deal with the problems facing agriculture, but they are nothing more than promises.

To sum up what the Government is doing with regard to agriculture, it is taking a band-aid approach to a festering sore. It makes available some short term payments which are welcome and which are necessary but, then, a starving man will always accept a slice of bread. The Government has said that the problem of the grain subsidy war is on the agenda at GATT. Yet it has not enunciated any convincing strategy for resolving the problem at that level. The Prime Minister's trade deal has a promise for some time in the future to deal with subsidies, but there have been no results.

I want to deal with a final aspect of the crisis in agriculture and the failure of the Government to meet the test of leadership in resolving the problems of farmers by looking at them from the point of view of what is required. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, the farming community is in critical condition because of the subsidy war between the United States and the European Economic Community in agricultural matters. We need peace in the agricultural subsidy war, and we need this country to live up to its potential in international negotiations.

Former Prime Minister Pearson won the Nobel Peace Prize for his international negotiations, for having brought peace to a conflict in the Middle East. Let us reach for that potential once again and apply it to international trading relationships as they affect agriculture.

Primarily the Prime Minister is running for public support on the basis of a free trade agreement which he negotiated on the international scene. He is claiming to be a great negotiator and a great conciliator. Let him apply those skills to agriculture. Let him bring peace to the agricultural war on subsidies which is critically hurting our farmers.

I want to sum up by simply saying that in my view—and I am sure it is the view of most farmers—the Government has failed the leadership test when it comes to resolving the problems in agriculture. I say "leadership test" because leadership would find solutions to problems to resolve the situation so that we do not have to live with them every day.

The Government has found band-aid solutions, which means that the sore continues to fester. It has yet to demonstrate in its actions an awareness that farmers are faced with a crisis today or that the farming community is in critical condition. What the Government has done so far is palliative, and what is needed is fundamental, radical surgery. We want a solution to the problems facing agriculture. We want the Government to show strong leadership and to take initiatives which will resolve the trading war that is hurting our farmers, rather than having the Prime Minister cosy up to the American President and singing "When Irish Eyes are Smiling", while they are selling out Canadian agriculture.

Mr. Mayer: What would you do? Tell us your policy. What would you do?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, I hear a voice over there. I would welcome the Minister standing in the House and explaining why he is supporting a trade deal with the United States which fails to resolve the problems of agriculture and at the same time protects the nuclear industry. Why does he take strong action when it comes to the nuclear industry and sell out farmers? Why is he supporting a trade deal which fails to resolve the subsidy war that is destroying agriculture in Canada? I challenge the Minister to answer that question. He can only yell from his seat.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the Minister could respond to a couple of questions.

Clearly there was strong criticism of the Government's mechanism for establishing the Special Canadian Grains Program by Ralph Jesperson, the President of Unifarm in Alberta, when he debated it with the Deputy Prime Minister a couple of weeks ago. Could the Minister outline the reasons for rejecting the proposal made by members of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture from western Canada to base the acreage on seeded acreage rather than use planted acreage for several years? I think the argument was that the seeded acreage for this crop year encouraged farmers to do what one of the Minister's colleagues on the government side has described as "recreational seeding". Be that as it may, this responsible group recommended another basis for providing benefits rather than the one adopted by the Government which seems to encourage the planting of greater acreage and potentially could lead to abuse.

Essentially that same argument or a similar one was made by soybean growers in Ontario. Of course the incredibly small payment of one cent per bushel was a strange arrangement.

Could the Minister tell us why the current year seeded acreage arrangement was used when some farm groups, especially those in Alberta, were recommending planted acreage over a period of several years?

Another aspect is that about 15 per cent of farmers who are not members of the Western Grain Stabilization Program have indicated concern that some $750 million of debt was cancelled from that program. They feel that that should have been done on a universal basis. There may have been other reasons for the Government cancelling that debt rather than just to benefit farmers. For instance, how much debt can be paid through a contribution of $1 by the farmer for every $2 by the federal Government to a plan where the premiums paid by farmers at the present time are $600?

Could the Minister respond to those two or three issues which have been raised by various farm groups?

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member raised a question about Unifarm. I was not at the meeting, and I have not had a chance to talk with anyone who was there. I am going by the press reports as is, I assume, the Hon. Member. I have two or three things to say in that regard.

We did not ignore the so-called CFA proposal. It was not strictly a CFA proposal per se but it was under the auspices of CFA. We used its suggestion on the price side, that we use the 1985 prices as compared with 1987 prices. If the press reports of Mr. Jesperson, the President of Unifarm, are accurate, I do not accept them at all.

If we are to make something market neutral, we must include the reality of what is out there. The reality is that there are special crops and there is summer fallow. In fact we took the CFA proposal and enhanced it.

We have a situation in western Canada—and that is what we are talking about—where there are about 80 million acres of cultivated land, of which approximately 18 million acres are in summer fallow. I would take the exact arguments the Hon. Member makes and turn them around. If we had not included summer fallow, which is a reality to the extent the acreage payment is an incentive for people to do something, it would encourage so-called "recreational seeding". You could have people, if they are going to get $12 or $15 an acre, taking a drill, running in a bushel of oats calling it seeded, or running in a bushel of wheat per acre and calling it a seeded acre and then collecting the payment on it. By including special crops, by including summer fallow, in my view, you make it as market neutral as you possibly can.

• (1230)

We certainly did not ignore the CFA proposal. We took it as a foundation and a fundamental and we built on it. We had many discussions with farmers in the Prairie region on this very issue. We talked with them about what they thought of summer fallow and what level would be reasonable in terms of their costs of working an acre of summer fallow as opposed to seeding an acre of wheat or barley. What was the split? We got figures from 25 per cent to 40 per cent or 50 per cent. Hence we made a judgment call and included summer fallow at the rate of one-third of the amount of money that an acre adjacent to it would get if that acre were seeded to wheat, barley, canola or whatever.

To recap, Mr. Chairman, we took the CFA proposal, added to it and, in doing so, made it much more market neutral. Outside of Mr. Jesperson, to whom I have not spoken and to whom I would like to speak to on this issue—perhaps I will have a chance—I have not heard any criticism that we are including summer fallow and special crops.

The Member talks about soybeans and the soybean growers concern. There is no question about that. We must accept the fact, as the Hon. Member did when he spoke, that the main problem we are facing is a result of the U.S. farm Bill which came into effect in 1985. What we are trying to do in this program is address the hurt or the drop in the market-place since 1985. The reason there is a very small payment for soybeans is that in 1985 the crop returned $244.95 a tonne. Those are the figures. We estimate that for the 1987 crop, producers will receive $243.80. In other words, it is $1.15 a tonne less for the 1987 crop than what they got in 1985. If the Hon. Member follows what is going on in prices, prices for soybeans in Ontario now are considerably higher than that.

They are in the $260 a tonne range. Everyone says "Look, we want to get our income from the market-place" Soybean growers for the 1987 crop will get, by our estimates, very, very close to what they got from the market-place in 1985, hence, no payment.

If you are going to establish some of these programs that have criteria, surely you have to base them on what is going on in the actual market-place and make your payments based on those kinds of criteria. That is what we have done. Every other producer should be so lucky. What if we went to people who grow wheat or barley and said "There isn't going to be much of a payment because wheat prices are back to the 1985 levels, what would you sooner have, the support that is coming from the Special Canadian Grains Program or the same prices you got in 1985?" Everybody would say "Give us the 1985 prices". Very simply, when you look at the figures, you will see the point I am making.

The third point the Member raised is the WGSA. People chose either to be in the program or out of the program in 1976. They had to make a deliberate choice. People who chose not to be in the program and now see part of the deficit being written off, I think, have a very legitimate and valid concern. They say, "Look, the rules have been changed part-way through the program, part-way through this crop year". The rule change being that the Government has decided to write down part of the deficit by $750 million. Producers outside of the program with some considerable justification say, "We don't mind the fund making payments on the basis of money that goes in from the producer and the Government the way the plan was originally intended to operate, but when the fund gets into such a large deficit—"the Hon. Member knows the numbers and I am going through this very quickly because it will take 10 to 15 minutes to explain this thoroughly and I am sure the Member understands that"—it risks becoming totally insolvent. The Government does not want to see that happen. The producers that are a part of it do not want to see it happen. So the Government stepped forward, and we have to say thank you to the Minister of Finance for the $750 million which is not an insignificant amount of money, with which we are going to write down the deficit. Producers not part of the program say that they should have part of it. They have a very legitimate concern. We say that we will also alter the rules for then, the producers, who are not part of the program for the 1987-88 crop year.

We will be bringing forth amendments quite quickly—I cannot say we will guarantee this but I do not see any reason why we will not have the amendments in the House and well along at committee stage and hopefully we will be able to pass the Bill as quickly as we can, so the producers who are not part of the plan now will have a chance to join it as of August 1, 1987.

Between 10 and 15 per cent of producers are not in the plan. They will also have a chance to join on a much more attractive basis than they had as of the beginning of this year. Considerable more benefit will go to them in the present crop year than had they joined August 1, bearing in mind that they are outside of the plan now and there is nothing in the legislation that allows or gives them the opportunity to have any benefits from the present plan.

Third, we want to open the plan up so that more producers can contribute more crops, virtually all of the specialty crops, so that we get away from just the major crops. On that basis, it becomes more market neutral. The amendments we are talking about are quite substantive. To give you some figures, Mr. Chairman, the amendments we are talking about, depending upon how many producers join, will see as much $80 million to $100 million going to producers who are not now part of the Western Grain Stabilization Plan.

I have had producers approach us who say they want to have the plan retroactive to 1976 when it first started. I do not think we can accomplish that. That, in my mind, is not legitimate or fair-minded. What we can do and what we are proposing is to give people who are not now part of the plan an opportunity to be part of the payments for the present crop year. I know this will not satisfy everyone and it will not go as far as some people would like, but it certainly will be a considerable benefit to producers who are not part of the plan. Obviously, the last thing we will have to do is raise the levy.

To clarify that, if I heard the Hon. Member correctly, he is not accurate in what he says about the levy. It is not two for one. The producer contributes a percentage of his gross sales. He contributes presently 1 per cent of his gross sales to a maximum of $60,000 which means the most any producer can contribute is $600. The Government contributes 2 per cent more than that, so the Government contributes 3 per cent. If we raise the levy, for instance, to 4 per cent, the Government would contribute 6 per cent. It is on a percentage basis as opposed to one for two or one for three. We are looking at raising the levy rate to help keep the deficit down.

Let me make one more brief response, if I may, in answer to some of the concerns raised by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre. The Member can stand up in the House and say that he does not like our policy, but he should not accuse us of not having a policy because we certainly do. What that tells me is that speakers this morning from the New Democratic Party do not understand what the Government has been doing in long range policies as far as agriculture is concerned.

Just to make the point, we have policies. New Democrats may not agree with them but they are very simple and fundamental. I will send the Member a copy of the initiatives that we announced on December 15 because they are quite substantial in commitment. It is approximately a $3 billion commitment which covers many auspices. It is not only cash injection, it is down the road research, soil conservation, market development; the whole thing. The fundamental facts of Canadian agriculture are that 50 cents of every dollar a Canadian farmer takes in comes from trade. That is a fact. We cannot close our borders and sell all our product to Canadian consumers. We produce in abundance. We live in a very, favoured part of the world. Our farmers do a fantastic job for the Canadian consumer. They are very competitive internationally, but they cannot be competitive if we cannot agree to play by and abide by some trade rules.

The most fundamental approach that any Government can take on behalf of Canadian agriculture, if it understands it at all, is to attempt to put some order in the international trading system. Again, we may be accused of using a policy with which the NDP does not agree, but to say that we do not have a policy shows a fundamental ignorance on the part of the NDP of what Canadian agriculture is all about. Hence, the emphasis on the trade deal with the United States.

For the Hon. Member's information, the agriculture critic of his Party is a farmer who comes from the middle of Saskatchewan, Humboldt—Lake Centre, an area of Canada that produces some of the highest-quality product in the world. With this trade deal with the United States we are attempting to give that Hon. Member as a farmer, and his neighbours as farmers, an opportunity to sell that high-quality product in other markets in the world without trade-distorting barriers, whether they be subsidies or non-tariff barriers. That is why we are so concerned about the GATT negotiations.

The Hon. Member is absolutely right when he says that there are no guarantees that simply because agriculture is part of the agenda there will be progress or a solution. On the other hand, we can guarantee him totally that if agriculture is not on the agenda, something which has been the case in the past, there will be no progress.

Having said that, I believe that considerable progress is being made. However, we should understand that the most fundamental policy any Government of Canada can have on behalf of agriculture, understanding that 50 cents out of every dollar a Canadian farmers earns comes from trade, must be to provide some sanity in the international market for agricultural commodities.

As an example, there is, roughly, a $2-billion hog industry in Canada and $800-million of that is exported. That means that 40 per cent of it is exported, and of that amount about three-quarters goes to the United States. Why does it not make sense to try to work out some trading arrangements with the United States so that we will know on what basis we will be able to trade with the United States? That is fundamental.

Our approach is a multi-faceted one. First, we are supporting the farmers, and everyone knows that is for the short run. We are negotiating as hard as we can internationally to bring about some sanity so that farmers can trade with some security of access to markets. In the meantime, we are selling aggressively, using the fact that we have some of the best quality grains and oilseeds in the world.

I would argue that we have one of the best gene pools for livestock, beef cattle and dairy cattle in the world. We produce quality animals. The fact is that our climate allows us to produce those things. I could go on to list, for all the commodities, the opportunities that exist internationally. However, if Canadian agriculture is to survive on a long-term basis and be the vital part of Canada it has been in the past, it must trade. We are attempting to get some international rules for trading under the leadership of the Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister could advise the House if the present formula for payments under the Special Canadian Grains Program which he has outlined in some detail meets the criteria the Government is developing to meet the requirements of the OECD countries. It is my understanding that the OECD countries want a formula for deficiency payments which is totally market neutral. Obviously Ralph Jesperson and the Unifarm organization in Alberta do not think that this is neutral enough. The Minister, however, says that it is. I would be interested to know if it meets the criteria the Government is using for that.

There is a great deal of concern in the agriculture community about how that formula is drafted. Farmers do not like welfare so they do not want a formula that is not related somehow to production. Obviously that is why the Minister is using this particular formula. At the same time, we should not be encouraging recreational seeding.

Would the Minister be willing to table in the House or with the Agriculture Committee the formula which is being proposed for the OECD studies? Second, I appreciate the Minister's comments with regard to the Western Grain Stabilization Act, but there has been great concern among farmers who are not a part of it. They see a special payment of $750 million being made and they claim it should be paid across the board rather than just to people who take part in the Western Grain Stabilization Act.

Will those people who have applied during the previous crop year, 1986-87, be eligible, as I took from the Minister's comments, to be taken into the fund under the proposed amendments as of August 1, 1987? Will they be eligible for payments during the 1987-88 crop year or will it be the following year? Will it be on a full participation basis or will they be eligible for only a portion of the program?

It seems to me that we should move to strengthen the Western Grain Stabilization Act approach to stabilization, rather than going through the Special Canadian Grains Program, while at the same time maintaining the upper limit at a level which does not end up seeing many very large farmers receiving very large payments.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member is talking about two ways the OECD has of measuring subsidies, the producer-subsidy equivalent or the trade-distorting equivalent. The simple answer to his question is yes. I would suggest, and it very fundamental, that if the Special Grains Program only pays on seeded acres, farmers would have to seed to be eligible. That is an incentive to produce. However, if we pay, in addition to seeded acres, for summer fallow, that is neutral in my opinion. We believe, after much discussion with producers, that the percentage that goes to summer fallow is reasonable when balanced with what is paid on an acre of seeded crop. If we pay on all cultivated acres, it is production neutral. The farmer will get assistance if he does seed a crop and he will get assistance if he does not seed a crop.

The simple answer to the Hon. Member's question is yes, it is helpful as far as the OECD is concerned. I think the Hon. Member can understand that the answer is yes, subsidies that do not encourage production are acceptable.

Although that is taken into consideration when we decide what to do to support farmers, it is certainly not the main consideration. We do our very best to establish policies we think will be helpful to Canadian producers and at the same time bear in mind their international consequences. The main concern is with what goes on domestically.

Very briefly, in response to the question about the WGSA, producers who applied to join prior to July 31, 1987, last crop year, then will also have more benefits under the amendments we are proposing than they would have had without the amendments. Everyone that joins the plan under the amendments will be eligible for benefits for the 1987-88 crop year. We are not looking at bringing them into full participation in the first year, but it is quite attractive and does not have a 10 per cent penalty. There are some things in the present Act that we can use to make joining quite attractive to producers presently outside the program. The proof of how attractive it is, is that we anticipate it could result in the distribution of another $80 million to $100 million to people presently outside the plan.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I report the resolution?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Mayer: thereupon moved that Bill C-108, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Public Service for the financial year ending March 31, 1988, be read the first time.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time.

Mr. Mayer: thereupon moved that Bill C-108, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Public Service for the financial year ending March 31, 1988, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the chair.

On Clause 2—$803,903,000 granted for 1987-88.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we could have a copy of the Bill? I think it would be nice if the Minister had one, too, since he is carrying the Bill.

I would like to ask the Minister if he could tell us what date the cheques will be sent out to farmers for the first two-thirds of the payments under the Special Canadian Grains Program?

I would also like to ask if the same kind of appeal arrangements will be available under this Bill as were available last year so that farmers who are not satisfied with the decision regarding payment will be able to appeal to a body of their peers? Will the same or strengthened arrangements be provided in that regard?

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Chairman, I would be happy to provide the information. The application forms for people living outside the Wheat Board region were in the mail last week. We anticipate initial payments in the Wheat Board region, and I think the Hon. Member understands the difference because we are using Wheat Board figures out of permit books on the initial payments for the Wheat Board area, being in the mail February 26. We anticipate the initial payment for the other parts of the country being in the mail and in producers' hands prior to the end of March. The final payments will be out at the end of May, the beginning of June, basically the same time frame as last year.

As to whether we will be using an advisory committee, the answer is yes. This is not really an appeal process. The advisory committee will not be the final arbitrator. It will look at individual cases, get the facts, make its best judgment and, on that basis, make recommendations to the Government on how to proceed. The advisory committee was a very useful committee last year and it will be used on the same basis for the present program.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I still do not have a copy of the Bill. I was given another Bill. I assume the Chairman of the Committee has a copy. I think at least one Member on each side of the House should have a copy of the Bill before us so we know what we are approving. We have the Estimates and that is fine.

While that is being provided, I wonder if the Minister can clarify something. It was my understanding that we had more than an advisory committee last year. We had an actual appeal committee. If a decision was made that a farmer felt was unjust, he could appeal the decision.

Mr. Hawkes: Point of order, Mr. Chairman. There has been a little bit of confusion about provision of the Bill. I wonder if we might just have unanimous consent not to see the clock so we can finish things before the normal hour of adjournment?

The Deputy Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Chairman, in response to the Hon. Member for Algoma, that was not the way the committee functioned last year. I guess you could say in one sense the committee heard appeals or concerns from producers. However, that was not the process which resulted in action being taken. We are trying to make the plan as effective as we can and we want to accommodate as many producer concerns as we possibly can. Everyone should understand that the review committee will be hearing appeals and, on the basis of what they hear, they will make representations to the Government as to how to proceed with those appeals.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Clauses 3, 4, 5 and 6 agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I think it is extremely bad form to be proceeding with a Bill which is not available to Members of the House generally.

The Deputy Chairman: I agree that that should not happen. I regret that the Hon. Member has not received a copy of the Bill. I am sure he will receive it later today.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, on the same point of order, I just want to echo my colleague's comments that we should have the legislation before us.

Mr. Foster: I hope that the Minister or the Chairman of the Committee can give assurances to Members on this side of the House that the Bill includes exactly what was in Supplementary Estimates (D). Otherwise it is really a sham for the House to be operating on this basis without having the Bill before us. I hope you can give us that assurance, Mr. Chairman, because I am not sure that the Minister has a copy of the Bill either.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Chairman, without trying to belabour the point, I have to agree with those sentiments. We are talking about a major expenditure of money. This is a very important issue which no one wants to delay. It is important that these appropriations be approved so that we can get the process under way.

I will give the Hon. Member whatever assurance I can that the Bill is in total conformity with the Supplementary Estimates as they were printed. I see no reason for anyone to doubt that, but to agree with what has been said, it would be much better for all of us, as far as the process is concerned, if we knew exactly what we are dealing with. It is a major and fundamental issue. I do not think anyone wants to delay it. Surely we should be able to have the proper paperwork done so that we can proceed in an orderly fashion.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, we obviously want to facilitate the passage of this legislation. I will accept the assurances of the Minister that the Bill is in conformity with the program and with the Supplementary Estimates. I will leave it to the Chairman to look more deeply into how we arrived at a situation in which we have no legislation but are between a rock and hard place in terms of allowing this legislation through the House.

The Deputy Chairman: I could rise and report progress of the Bill and then come back at three o'clock, have Hon. Members receive a copy of the Bill, and resume Committee of the Whole. If that is agreed, we will carry on in that way. Members have the assurance of the Minister that the Estimates are the same as the Bill. I am left to the discretion of Hon. Members.

Mr. Foster: I think we should complete the work of the committee at three o'clock.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, I think you have found a practical solution to a very difficult problem.

Mr. Hawkes: On the same point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think it is important to have some provision. I assume that when we recommence at three o'clock we would still be in Committee of the Whole. Would that be your intention, or have we gotten to the stage where the Bill is actually reported to the House and we are in report stage?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am rising to report progress of the Bill and that will finish it until three o'clock.

Mr. Hawkes: Can I assume, Mr. Chairman, that we would be in report stage so that if there was a problem with the actual appropriation Bill in that it deviated in some way, we would have a mechanism available at report stage, under unanimous consent, to correct a figure or some such small error and would move then immediately to third reading without debate if there were no such errors and would take a voice vote? Is that what the Opposition has in mind?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, that would be in conformity with my proposal that we report progress and return to Committee of the Whole when we have the Bill before us at three o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I rise and report progress?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

The Deputy Chairman: It being one o'clock p.m. I do now rise until two o'clock this day.

At 1.07 p.m. the House took recess.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

METROPOLITAN REGION OF QUÉBEC—PROMISES MADE BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Quebec City region no longer seems to have a strong spokesman in the Conservative Government. Issues are left to stagnate, and promises made by the Hon. Member for Langelier (Mr. Côté) and Minister responsible for the Quebec City region are not kept.

Where is the federal subsidy of $200,000 promised in 1986 for setting up an arbitration centre attached to Laval University? Where are the $600,000 the federal Government promised for the high tech industrial park at Ste-Foy?

Why has the federal Government failed to take any measures to guarantee the future of the Inter-Port Corporation responsible for the economic development of the harbour area? Why have surplus funds from Rendez-vous 1987 yet to be distributed among regional agencies such as Carnaval de Québec and the Festival d'été de Québec, as promised by the Minister responsible?

Recently, Mr. Pierre Racine, President of the Chamber of Commerce and Industry of Greater Quebec City, expressed his concern, saying it would be a great disappointment if the federal Government failed to keep its promises.

Why does the Minister responsible for the Quebec City region, the Hon. Member for Langelier, make promises he cannot keep? Why is he dragging his feet? People in and around Quebec City were used to having strong men in Ottawa to defend their interests, but compared with Jean Marchand, Gilles Lamontagne, Pierre Bussières and Charles Lapointe, the present Minister is a lightweight.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

CREATION OF CENTRES OF EXCELLENCE—PLEA ON BEHALF OF UNIVERSITY OF SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, it is important to realize that the future productivity of our nation is dependent on our ability to use science and technology with increased effectiveness. This makes the recent announcement of the additional $1.3 billion commitment to research and development important to all Canadians.

Despite the constant criticism from those who expect the Government to support most research budgets, the Government has chosen the right direction by providing our universities with much needed R and D funding and scholarships.

The creation of centres of excellence, combined with university scholarships, will help expand the pool of human resources necessary for the continued development of this country. Those businesses and industries which strive for continued success will provide opportunities for Canada's young scientists and researchers. I am hopeful that a centre of excellence will be established at the University of Saskatchewan to allow all Canadians to share in the world-class research now being done there.

I see the allocation of these new R and D funds as the beginning of a new direction for science and technology in Saskatoon, as well as across the country.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

ALBERTA—HEALTH CARE CRISIS

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, in 1983 the Province of Alberta took the right to strike away from the nurses of Alberta. The Alberta Hospital Association capitalized on this anti-strike legislation by cutting back nurses' wages by 3 per cent.

At the same time the Conservative Government in Alberta has been severely underfunding health care and starving hospital budgets, a situation which is exacerbated by the diminishing federal share of health care dollars. Hospitals are so underfunded in Alberta that there are 290 vacant nursing positions which the hospitals cannot afford to fill.

Instead of promoting a less expensive, preventive approach to health care, Tories prefer to pass regressive legislation which takes away the right to strike, and then scapegoats the traditionally female profession of nursing. This is responsible for creating the present health care crisis in Alberta.

There are no more dedicated professionals than underpaid nurses who work very hard in caring for the patients. The nurses of Alberta are supported by Albertans and by editorial comment.

Bill 44 should be repealed, and the Government of Alberta and the Government of Canada should fund health care adequately so that patients will have adequate care and nurses will be paid what they are worth.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—INCREASED AWARENESS IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, Canada has not given up the fight against acid rain. None in this House are pleased with the recent American proposals to curb acid rain. The proposals fall very short of what I expected.

However, as the Hon. Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) said in the House on Tuesday, the Government has been successful in raising the profile of this serious pollution problem in the United States.

Our program aimed at American tourists coming to this country has been successful in making a majority of Americans aware of our concerns.

The determination of the Minister has resulted in some progress. Congressmen like Gerry Sikorski and Robert C. Smith are but two of the friends we have within the American system. Senator George Mitchell is another good example. A Senate committee in the United States recently passed one of his Bills to combat pollution and reduce it greatly.

This Bill, teamed up with the concerns of many political leaders in the United States, will likely result in some intelligent action being taken on this problem.

The next eight months are extremely important. Some 60 cities in the United States are liable for sanctions under the Clean Air Act. I am sure everyone in Canada wishes to see the Hon. Minister of the Environment continue the good work he has done. We hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) keeps the pressure on the President as well.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORTING GOVERNMENT BEHAVIOUR—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, it would appear after yesterday's announcement that the Government is in a dilemma about the all-news channel going to CBC. It seems the belief of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is that the CBC is too negative in its reports on his Government, so I propose an easy solution.

The Prime Minister should give the CBC and all other media some good news to report. He should stamp out the many ongoing scandals and get on with serious legislation. Does the Prime Minister not realize that it is the unsavory land and money scandals, the confusion on free trade, the threat of a tax on food, the rise in drug prices, issues of conduct and questions of ethical standards, which provide nothing but well founded negative coverage?

It is clear that as long as the Government continues its present bizarre and dubious behaviour, it will take an all-news channel just to keep up with the daily revelations. My real concern is that the Right Hon. Prime Minister should not have further damaged his credibility by interfering with the decision by the CRTC, which was arrived at through fair and open competition. Let his Ministers and other Conservative Members get down to serious work and don't shoot the messenger, just change the message.

FREE TRADE

POSITION OF SOCIALISTS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, what is the matter these days with the Socialists? They used to be vindictive, arrogant and negative in their attitudes to the Free Trade Agreement, but today we hardly hear them anymore. Have they noticed, by any chance, that Canadians want free trade? Did they notice that in Quebec, Premier Bourassa's Liberal Government is one of the most fervent defenders of the Free Trade Agreement? Did they notice that the aspirant Leader of the Official Opposition in the National Assembly is a staunch supporter of free trade?

Mr. Speaker, if they were really serious when they spoke out against free trade, why today's silence? Why the about-face?

Mr. Speaker, Canadians must ask the Socialists, and they must tell us, why they have nothing more to say about Quebec and free trade.

Did the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) receive orders from Bob White? Was he gagged, just as he gagged the Member for Ottawa—Centre (Mr. Cassidy) the day before yesterday? I really don't know, Mr. Speaker.

WILDLIFE

GREAT BLUE HERONS—EFFECT OF DIOXIN CONTAMINATION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, last year not a single egg hatched from a 52 nest colony of great blue herons at Crofton, British Columbia. Fragments of the eggs were found to have traces of dioxin. On Monday the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) provided information on testing of shellfish from waters around pulp mills at Crofton and Nanaimo. The lab confirmed an earlier study released by Greenpeace showing traces of dioxin in shellfish at the Harmac pulp mill.

The Department of National Health and Welfare has assured Canadians that the level of contamination is well below the level of risk. We await the findings of the Department of the Environment as to the affects on wildlife.

The issue of dioxin contamination is not new, but not until late last fall did the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the Department of the Environment initiate a national program to determine dioxin levels around Canadian pulp mills. It was only because of the publicity for the Greenpeace study that the single testing lab of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans pushed the B.C. samples to the head of the line.

Since the Greenpeace report was released, MacMillan Bloedel announced it would stop dioxin contamination near company mills by March 31, by using a different process. I applaud the action MacMillan Bloedel has taken. However, I wonder if it would have found the substitute sooner if the federal Government had given this issue a higher priority and had begun testing sooner.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON ENERGY INDUSTRY

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, Canada's free trade agreement with the United States is good for our energy industry. Canada will be a reliable supplier if the United States is a reliable customer. Both countries will share their energy supplies in the event of an energy shortage. This is not a new idea. It builds on our long-standing commitment made through the International Energy Agency, a commitment based on the reality of interdependence and the disastrous global consequences of energy shortages.

Both countries remain free to determine whether and when to allow exports, and may continue to monitor and license exports. The agreement will not stand in the way of Canada following its own energy policy since current restrictions on foreign takeovers have been retained. Provinces retain the right to control their resources.

• (1410)

Additional development of our petroleum resources could require well over $100 billion to the end of the century. Trends in energy supply and demand indicate that we are entering a period in which megaprojects will dominate domestic energy production. The agreement provides potential investors, be they Canadian or foreign, with assured access for energy commodities to the North American market as a whole. Our ability to implement a strategy of assistance for megaprojects is on a case-by-case basis.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the free trade agreement is good for the energy industry, and it is good for Canada.

PENSIONS

NECESSITY TO WITHDRAW BILL C-33

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Government announced that it intended to proceed with the second reading stage of Bill C-33, whose purpose is to make certain amendments to Public Service pension plans. Fortunately, it changed its mind. I am very glad it did, because to me, this Bill discriminates against public servants, who, as we all know, pay a substantial share of the cost of indexation and of the pensions themselves.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to take full indexation and the requisite guarantees away from retired public servants. I am in favour of pension indexation. I am in favour of providing the elderly with better protection against poverty. I am for sound management of public pension funds. I am for an employer-employee management committee that will discuss and administer pension plans, but I am against Bill C-33 because it is unfair and discriminatory.

Bill C-33 should be withdrawn altogether. All Conservative Members should rise in their seats, one after the other, and tell us where they stand on this issue. And for the love of God, protect retired public servants! Say you are against Bill C-33!

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

ADVISORY BOARD—CALL FOR SUPPORT BY MEMBERS

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I stand today in response to recent comments by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) regarding the creation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. The criticism of the Hon. Member is completely unfounded. I deplore the fact that he would want to play partisan politics with an agency that is so important for the economic future of the Atlantic region.

It is true that Savoie reported that some members of the region's business community expressed concern that past regional development efforts in the region had, on occasion, been tailored for partisan political considerations. To prevent this in the future, Mr. Savoie recommended the establishment of an advisory board to guide the work of the new agency. The Government responded by setting up an advisory board of 19 individuals from Atlantic Canada of all political and professional stripes who are now sharing their expertise for the benefit of Atlantic Canadians.

I urge the Hon. Member and all Members of Parliament from Atlantic Canada to leave partisan politics aside, for if there is one issue which requires the full support of all elected officials in Atlantic Canada it is federal regional development efforts in the area.

Atlantic Canadians want this agency to succeed. Its chance of success will be enhanced only if each and every Member puts his shoulder to the wheel and offers co-operation to make it work.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

POSITION OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) referred to the goon squad which was able to bring the Government to heel with respect to the CBC all-news channel. It is an appropriate description for the people who were involved in getting the Minister in charge of communications to do the high-wire act that she did yesterday.

We have to wonder whether this is not the first of a number of occasions on which we will see this same goon squad overrule things which should be left in place. I am thinking in particular of whether or not the next Minister to be the victim of the goon squad will be the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) who, we know, has been under a lot of pressure to change the legislation which he tabled in the House with respect to national parks and their preservation. We know that the goon squad wants to put condominiums all over our national parks. Will this be the next thing to which we will be subjected as a result of the Alberta Tory caucus?

THE SENATE

CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF ELECTED INSTITUTION

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, Canada needs a Triple E Senate. Note: our excellent Immigration Ministers and MPs gave up part of their summer to streamline our immigration laws, and then the other place dilly-dallied for weeks even though the vast majority of Canadians want this legislation.

Again, in a report by a Senate committee on terrorism the following sentence appears:

> —Those groups that have recently been, are currently viewed to be, or could in the immediate future become sources of domestic terrorism in Canada include—extreme elements of anti-abortion groups—

• (1415)

Anti-abortion and pro-life groups are the very antithesis of terrorism. Hundreds of splendid Canadians labour to stop the murder of thousands of unborn babies, and this committee slanders these Canadians.

This Senate is responsible to no one. A Triple E Senate would require all Senators to answer to the people for their actions. How much longer can Canadians stomach what is going on in the other place?

PUBLIC SERVICE

PENSIONS—WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-33

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, it now appears that the Government has seen the light and abandoned its wrong-headed Bill C-33 to de-index public service pensions. Apparently the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) announced earlier today that the Tories had withdrawn the infamous Bill.

Why did they do so? The answer is quite simple. The PSAC, the Public Service Alliance of Canada, said yesterday that it would work diligently to defeat any Member of Parliament who voted for the Bill. This has scared Tory Members of Parliament in such a way as to render useful the old recycled free trade publications, and they are now, of course, toilet paper. Free trade will be useful after all in this issue.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

MINISTER'S POSITION ON 24-HOUR ALL-NEWS CHANNEL FOR FRANCOPHONES IN QUÉBEC AND OUTSIDE QUÉBEC

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) is to be commended for taking a clear stand on the proposed all-news tv channel, and for considering the impact this would have on Francophones both in and outside Quebec. It is too bad the Government had to point out to the CRTC and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that our country has two language groups. By her comments, the Minister was simply confirming the specific cultural identity of Francophones as recognised by a Conservative Government.

Mr. Speaker, we can expect a partnership between the CBC and private broadcasters to produce some very promising and innovative approaches, while respecting the culture of our two founding peoples. What must be done now is to put in place a new broadcasting policy for this country, since the present legislation no longer meets today's needs, the proof being this whole controversy about all-news services.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

FORMER COMMISSIONER OF ELECTIONS' LETTER—REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINISTER'S LAWYER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has gone a little too far this time. Yesterday he acted like some character from a Grade B gangster movie.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He issued a veiled threat against the Deputy House Leader of the Liberal Party; read it in Hansard. He demanded that people respect the independence of the former elections commissioner, and then he maliciously attacked him. Then, finally, he tried to compare my political career to his scandal-ridden Government.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I have searched for a lot of words that would escape your scrutiny as not being parliamentary, Mr. Speaker, but what I will say is that that performance yesterday was unworthy of the office of Prime Minister; that is what I will say. I want to tell him that those tactics won't work and the truth will eventually come out—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate very much to interrupt the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, especially on a lead question. However, I must remind Hon. Members that, no matter how intense they may feel, there must be some self-discipline on pejorative preambles. There are, of course, lots of places to argue the consequences of a response of a Minister, or lack of response.

I would ask the Right Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I will abide by that ruling and draw to your attention that the Prime Minister typically launches these counterattacks after my third question so that we cannot get back at him on the same day.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Can the Prime Minister explain why his Minister of Energy told reporters that he had just skimmed that letter from the former elections commissioner and then stuffed it in a desk drawer for two years, when lawyer Jean Guilbeault from Montreal says that he was consulted by the Minister on the context of that letter?

When are Canadians going to get the whole truth from this Government?

• (1420)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend, of course, in regard to that question will have to, I suppose, address it to the Minister. In regard to any conversations which the Minister might have had with his own attorney that is something that he would want to talk to him about if he cares to raise it in the House.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, it is not my responsibility to talk to the Minister about what happened to the letter. Who is running the show in this country? It is the Prime Minister's responsibility to find out what happened to that letter.

[Translation]

COMMISSIONER'S LETTER—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION VIS-À-VIS MEMBER FOR FRONTENAC

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, apparently, the Minister did not mention the letter to the Prime Minister. He claimed he put the letter in his desk drawer and left it there for two years. The Minister said he merely skimmed through the letter. However, a Montreal lawyer told reporters that the Minister had consulted him about the letter. The question is not only why the letter was written but why the Prime Minister was not aware of the letter. Why did he attack the former Commissioner of Elections yesterday, and why are there several versions of what the Minister did with the letter?

Is the Prime Minister going to tell us the truth about what the Minister did with the letter and fire the Minister for failing to speak frankly to his boss, the Prime Minister of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition wonders why I did not know. As the Minister pointed out, I had not been told. I answered that question yesterday when I said I read about it in a newspaper article. Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer these important questions, but the Official Opposition will have to give me a chance to do so. This is an important matter, and I want to answer as accurately as I can. I can say that I was advised of the matter in the circumstances I mentioned yesterday.

The second point raised by the Leader of the Opposition concerns the Commissioner's decision. Under an Act of Parliament, when a complaint is filed concerning a Member's conduct, an investigation is conducted by an independent official, in this case the Commissioner. That is what happened here. The Commissioner has full discretionary powers either to lay or not to lay charges against the Member. Upon completing his investigation the Commissioner decided not to lay charges against the Hon. Member for Frontenac. That is what I was told. That is public knowledge, and I acted accordingly.

Regarding the hypothetical situation also referred to by the Commissioner in his letter, I suggested yesterday that this matter should be considered by a parliamentary committee and that Mr. Gorman should be invited to appear before the Committee to answer questions as appropriate. I think it is quite normal and proper to proceed in this way.

[English]

NON-RECEIPT OF LETTER BY PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, there is one part of that response of the Prime Minister with which I agree. We would all like to know why the commissioner wrote the letter. Agreed, he had the discretion to proceed or not to proceed. But that is a very unusual letter. Was he under pressure? Why did the RCMP officer conduct a second investigation? Was he under pressure? Why were only some people charged and not others?

• (1425)

Mr. Speaker: Again, I hesitate to interrupt. The difficulty we are getting into is that those questions seem to me to go directly to the internal workings of an independent commission headed by an officer of Parliament. The commissioner himself is not an officer but reports to the officer, the Chief Electoral Officer.

My difficulty is that there may be entirely legitimate inquiries in that regard, but my concern is the procedural problem with respect to the matter, because those questions that go into the internal workings of the commission are not matters that ordinarily would be permitted under our rules as questions to the Ministry itself. That is what is giving me my difficulty with the questions raised in the preamble.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I will abide by the judgment you have made and will put a question to the Prime Minister.

Why does the Prime Minister not even now have a satisfactory explanation for why he did not receive a copy of that letter, either from the Minister or from other sources, and what does he have to tell the House of the different versions the Minister of Energy has given as to what happened to the letter when the Minister received it? That is something the Prime Minister should have within his own knowledge and be able to share with the House, regardless of the independence of the role played by the electoral commissioner.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition asks if I have a satisfactory explanation for not having received a copy of the letter. Yes, I do. It is because the Minister did not give me a copy of the letter.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Did you ask him why he didn't give you a copy of the letter?

Mr. Mulroney: I explained that and I explained all aspects relating to it yesterday. The matter has been gone over very, very carefully. I am asked a question. I have given the right hon. gentleman a reply.

With respect to questions that he might want to ask the commissioner—

Ms. Copps: You should ask them.

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East says they are questions that I should ask the commissioner. To do that would be to violate the fundamental independence of the commissioner who is an officer of Parliament. If I did that, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East would be attacking me for trampling on the rights and independence of Parliament.

Yesterday, I conveyed as well the view of the Government that this matter quite properly could and should be handled by a parliamentary committee. I understand that there are discussions ongoing with House Leaders in that regard and I would—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): No, there are no discussions.

Mr. Mulroney: I am informed that there are discussions. Perhaps my right hon. friend would want to correct that, but that information has been given to me.

I point out to my right hon. friend that he began by raising some concerns and his final question contained insinuations and veiled suggestions almost of obstruction of justice by members of the Government and the Commissioner. There is the double standard. The Leader of the Opposition asks for understanding and fairness for himself and his members but cares never to give them to anyone else in this House of Commons.

[Translation]

MASSE AFFAIR—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION VIS-À-VIS MR. GORMAN

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has just told us that it would not have been proper for him to communicate with the Elections Commissioner as Mr. Gorman is an independant officer of the House. However, yesterday, as reported in Hansard, he was quite willing to criticize strongly the Elections Commissioner by saying:

> —(he) put in that comment which Le Devoir properly referred to this morning as une lettre empoisonnée which violates the fundamental rights of a Member of Parliament and a fundamental right of any Canadian.

I simply want to ask this to the Prime Minister: How can he make such a scathing comment about this independant officer of Parliament when, for several days, he has been using Mr. Gorman's comments to justify his decision to keep the Minister in his Cabinet and to defend the indefensible behaviour of his Minister?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Because, Mr. Speaker, as there was no specific charges laid against him, the Hon. Member for Frontenac, was unable to defend himself as a Canadian citizen is entitled to do. There is a legal mechanism which allows an independant authority to decide whether or not to press charges. There is no mention of the possibility that, if no charges are laid, it can be suggested that they should have been, because in such a case, the Minister or Member of Parliament is left without any means of defense, which would violate the rights not only of the Hon. Member for Frontenac, but also of the Hon. Member who has just asked the question.

I underline the fact that there was no attack against the Commissioner. The Leader of the Opposition a few moments ago and the Leader of the New Democratic Party yesterday said, I think, that this is an unusual letter. It is indeed a statement of position and a rather unusual letter. The letter shows an understanding of the basic difficulties facing Members of Parliament. I wish to emphasize the fact that we have to comply with the law, as not doing so would be unfair to all Members of Parliament.

• (1430)

REQUEST THAT MINISTER BE REMOVED FROM CABINET

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to return for a moment to the ever-changing version of the facts as expressed by the Minister of Energy. First he said he did not find enough time to read the letter because he was summoned to the Prime Minister's Office where, obviously, he did not find enough time to talk to the Prime Minister about the contents of the letter. Yesterday we learned that he found the time to phone Montreal PC lawyer Jean Guilbeault and recite the contents of the letter to him. Yesterday the Prime Minister, in defending his decision, said this:

> —I did the right thing in inviting the Minister to rejoin the Government of Canada, on the basis of information I had—

Now that he knows more about the subject and that the Minister hid the facts both from him and the people of Canada for more than two years, will the Prime Minister not review his decision and send the Minister to the back bench where he will have ample time to finalize his ever-changing version of the facts?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will go back to the facts that I mentioned yesterday. The Hon. Minister stepped aside from Cabinet in September of 1985 when it appeared that an investigation might be initiated against him. He properly stepped aside and was on the sidelines for two months. During that time a full investigation by the appropriate officer of Parliament took place. That officer of Parliament concluded that charges ought not to be the issue. That was conveyed to the Hon. Member for Frontenac.

I am not astonished or offended by the fact that when he received that information he conveyed the verdict to his lawyer. I am not offended by that. I think most people would with some joy advise their attorney with whom they had just gone through the two months that that took place.

I was advised of the decision of the independent commissioner of Parliament and that decision, clear and unequivocal, was that no charges would or should be laid against the Hon. Member for Frontenac. That caused me to believe exactly what it said, that the man is a Canadian citizen, had been the object of an investigation, had then been cleared, and was entitled to a clear name and an honourable reputation like any other Member of this House.

COMMUNIQUÉ ISSUED BY CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Chief Electoral Officer himself, if I remember correctly, in a communiqué issued on this subject, said it was not his office that cleared the Minister. There were inappropriate or otherwise conclusions drawn from the statement issued about whether the Minister was cleared. That is a major difference.

The Prime Minister just said he is not surprised that the Minister consulted his lawyer. A lot of us would not be surprised. Regrettably, the Minister himself said that was not the case. The Minister said all he did was to skim the letter and stick it in a drawer. On the other hand, Mr. Guilbeault, who was acting as his lawyer in this matter at the time, said something different, namely, that the Minister telephoned him, read out the contents, obviously to be consulted.

Whom does the Prime Minister believe in this matter, Mr. Guilbeault or the Minister? They both cannot be telling the truth.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first I want to refresh my hon. friend's memory about the communiqué that was issued. It was a news release issued on November 28, 1985, and it said the following:

> The Commissioner of Elections Canada, Joseph Gorman, today issued the following statement:
> "I have reviewed the results of the investigation which I received at 1300 hours on Thursday, November 21, 1985, as well as the recommendations of independent counsel which I received at 2030 hours on November 26, 1985. I have decided that no charges will be laid against the Hon. Marcel Masse or his official agent, Jean Morissette".

That was the statement conveyed by the only officer of Parliament capable of making that determination and advising the House of Commons and the public.

I also indicated in response to questions by my hon. friend exactly what I was informed of and in what circumstances. In light of the information which has been discussed I expressed the opinion, and it is only an opinion as a human being, that one involved as a parliamentarian in the trauma of stepping aside from his cabinet responsibilities for a period of two months while an investigation is going on, finding out that this is the result of the investigation, that indeed he is not going to be charged with any offence of any kind, I am not astonished or offended by the notion that at some point in time he conveyed that judgment to the attorney who defended him throughout the process.

I was not there on that day and I am not capable of telling my hon. friend what thoughts went through the mind of the Hon. Member for Frontenac, what emotions he experienced. I imagine the emotions were deep, as they would be with any human being confronted with this kind of reality.

The important matter was that the only official of Parliament charged with making this determination made one favourable to the Hon. Member and he conducted himself appropriately in those circumstances.

STATEMENTS MADE BY MINISTER AND BY MINISTER'S LAWYER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I say with respect that the Prime Minister did not deal adequately with either part of my question. He said earlier that the Commissioner of Elections cleared the Minister. I said that was not the case. They were the Prime Minister's words, not mine. That office made it very clear that it did not clear the Minister, including what the Prime Minister read in the press release. They said no charges had been laid. However, that office knows very well that what was said in the letter was that the Minister participated in breaking the law and presumably was relying on the Prime Minister and the Minister himself to draw the proper conclusion from that, which they did not do.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Incredible assumption!

Mr. Broadbent: I want to ask the Prime Minister to deal with the second part of the question because it is very important with respect to the integrity of the ministry and the Minister in question.

The Minister said in the past 24 hours that he skimmed the letter, then he stuck it in a drawer and did nothing else. His lawyer said something flatly to the contrary that cannot be ignored. His lawyer says he was consulted on the phone. I want to ask the Prime Minister to deal with that issue seriously now.

Does he believe the Minister was telling the truth or does he believe the Minister's lawyer was telling the truth? Which?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend wants to display his forensic talents he can do so before the committee of the House of Commons. The Hon. Member raises a matter involving another Member of Parliament. The matter has been considered here. The suggestion is that it be considered by a parliamentary committee. When the Minister returns the Hon. Member may want to interrogate him—

Mr. Broadbent: I cannot under the rules.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Oh, you can so. Go to the committee.

Mr. Mulroney: The Member says that he cannot under the rules. He can in the committee. If the matter is referred to a committee and is considered, then surely the Hon. Member's concerns can be satisfied by properly pursuing this with the man who can give him the answers.

• (1440)

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER QUESTION MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, with respect, the Prime Minister said earlier that there were House Leaders' discussions about this committee. There has been no such House Leaders' discussion. I have consulted with our House Leader and there has been no such discussion as the Prime Minister mentioned. The Prime Minister knows that under the rules we cannot ask the Minister questions in the House pertaining to an event which took place when he was a Minister in a different Department.

The Prime Minister has still not answered the question which, with respect, Sir, I think the Prime Minister has to answer. Has he determined, by asking the Minister himself directly, what the truth is? Has he asked the Minister in the past 24 hours: "Was Mr. Guilbeault telling the truth or you, Mr. Masse, are you telling the truth"? If the Prime Minister has not asked that question yet, why has he not?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raised the question of House Leaders' discussions. The Hon. Member will know that when Mr. Speaker rendered his decision earlier this morning I attended the House specifically to commence discussions. I indicated at that time that the Government was pleased to have the matter considered by a committee. The Hon. House Leader for the Opposition replied and the Whip for the New Democratic Party replied. There have been House Leaders' discussions.

The Hon. Member will know that there are two ways of sending this to committee. One is by a specific reference and one is by the committee deciding how it wants to handle it. We are up for discussions.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I had hoped the Prime Minister would answer the question which was directed to him. On the procedural matter I had information from my House Leader. However, I will accept that there has been some disagreement on the point of the House Leaders' discussions.

Would the Prime Minister please answer the last question I put to him?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is just a little too easy. The Member just made a flat statement in the House that there had been no discussions. Now we find out that there have been discussions.

Clearly, if the hon. gentleman wants an answer to any given question he will want to give me an opportunity to refer to any transcripts which might exist of conversations on which he is basing such thundering denunciations. Let us examine them carefully and we will provide Members with whatever answers are available.

Mr. Blaikie: Answer the question.

Mr. Mulroney: Surely my hon. friend would want me to proceed on the basis of transcripts of the conversations and not on the basis of what somebody may have said in whatever circumstances.

ETHICAL CONDUCT OF MINISTERS—PRIME MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister indicated earlier that he considered there to be only one official in Parliament who could deal with the question of the Minister's conduct in relation to the Elections Act and he referred to the Elections Act official.

How does that square with the statement which he made and the position he took in the conflict of interest guidelines wherein he said that the responsibility for the ethical conduct of his Ministers would not be sloughed off to other officials, other members of the Government, but that he would be responsible as Prime Minister for the ethical conduct of his Ministers? Has he discharged that responsibility in relation to this particular Minister?

Allegations have been made and not answered. Conflicting evidence has been presented about what the Minister said and what he did with his lawyer. Where is the Prime Minister with his responsibility for the ethical behaviour of his Ministers?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is a statute that governs the conduct of Members of Parliament in respect of election activity. That statute, passed by Members of this House, provides for an officer, in the event of a charge being laid or an accusation being made, to investigate charges relating to a Member of Parliament. It also provides thereafter, pursuant to the evidence, for charges being laid against a Member of Parliament unless the commissioner comes to the conclusion that the allegations do not sustain the laying of a charge.

Charges were made after the last election and investigations were conducted of members of all political Parties in this House. Pursuant to the law the commissioner conducted investigations and arrived at conclusions with regard to whether to lay charges, yes or no.

In the case of the Member for Frontenac or the case of the Member for Hamilton East or others—

Ms. Copps: Leave me out of this.

Mr. Mulroney: —the decision was not to lay charges.

Ms. Copps: I was cleared.

Mr. Mulroney: That was specifically made clear. Only the officer of Parliament could make that adjudication and determination, and he did.

That determination was conveyed to me, not the opinion that somebody might have had or somebody thought possible. His responsibility is to lay charges, yes or no, failing which there is an invitation extended by the House to explain anything else.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER REVIEW FACTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is an Elections Act; there is also a Criminal Code. Does that mean that the Prime Minister can leave the responsibility for Ministers' ethical behaviour code to the police because there is a Criminal Code; to the elections officials because there is an Elections Act? No.

He said in the conflict of interest guidelines that there was an ethical standard which, I took to be higher than the Criminal Code and higher than whether prosecutions can be sustained under the Elections Act for ethical behaviour by Ministers, and he has failed to discharge the responsibility he assumed.

Whatever the Committee on Elections and Privileges decides, when will he review the facts in issue and make a decision about whether that Minister is ethically fit to remain in his Cabinet?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion of my hon. friend is truly an invidious one. It places any Member of Parliament in an unacceptable position.

Ms. Copps: Some Prime Minister, some leader.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the braying of the Member for Hamilton East is unhelpful to the House and precludes the possibility of a sensible exchange of views on an important matter.

Mr. Marchi: Adjourn the House.

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Member says "Let's adjourn the House". Let us not adjourn the House. Let us refer this matter to the parliamentary committee so it can be—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I know the suggestion is meant to be helpful but I do not think there is any need to adjourn the House. I would ask Hon. Members, when the Right Hon. Prime Minister or other Ministers are replying, to give the usual courtesies and allow the questions to be answered.

MINISTER'S INTEGRITY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and relates again to his responsibility as the Prime Minister. He knows that there is a discrepancy between what Mr. Masse has said to be the truth and what Mr. Guilbeault has said to be the truth.

Is it not the responsibility of the Prime Minister to look into this matter and find out whether the Member, whom he made the Minister of Energy of this country, has the credibility and integrity to tell the truth to the people of the country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's Leader has already referred to the letter in question as an unusual one. That is an understatement, for the very simple reason that under our system of British common law charges are either laid or they are not.

Charges are recommended under this statute by an independent officer of Parliament. The independent officer of Parliament came to the conclusion that Mr. Masse should not be charged. In the course of conveying that formal opinion he also put out a point of view on a provision of the statute.

I cannot explain why that was done in a manner in which I believe would make it difficult for any Member of Parliament to defend himself or herself, because no charges were laid. The only person who can tell you why he did that, may I say respectfully, is Mr. Gorman, which is why we have suggested that this go to a parliamentary committee so that my hon. friend can ask Mr. Gorman. Once Mr. Gorman has responded, perhaps we can consider the matter again.

STATEMENTS MADE BY MINISTER AND BY MINISTER'S LAWYER

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the questions that have been asked in the last couple of days have dealt with why the Prime Minister was not informed by the Member for Frontenac about the contents of that letter. The Member for Frontenac said that he put it underneath his laundry, that he just skimmed that letter.

Mr. Guilbeault, who is not just Mr. Masse's lawyer but a PC lawyer and the PC representative on the ad hoc committee with regard to the Elections Act, a very significant person, is saying that Mr. Masse is not telling the truth.

Is it not important to the Prime Minister to find out whether or not Mr. Masse, the Minister of Energy, is telling the truth or not?

• (1450)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, just to show the carelessness of the accusations and the reason why I hope we will be very prudent in the assessments of statements, my hon. friend just said that Mr. Guilbeault said that Mr. Masse is not telling the truth. That is a falsehood. Mr. Guilbeault said no such thing and the Hon. Member has just done a grave injustice to both Mr. Guilbeault and Mr. Masse with this statement.

I have responded to a serious question by the Leader of the New Democratic Party who asked about a statement by Mr. Guilbeault. I have indicated that I will look at the transcripts of what was said and respond to my hon. friend once I have done that.

The important consideration, if you believe in justice, is that the reputation of someone who has not been accused of a crime or accused of an offence is being tarnished on the floor of the House of Commons. He is being subject to attack, innuendo and character assassination, but cannot defend himself in the absence of a formal charge which is fundamental to the nature of our system of justice. All I am saying is to either charge the Member of Parliament or not. If you have any problems with it, cause the man who has the concerns to come before the House of Commons or a committee thereof and explain why. Surely that is fundamental and elementary to our system of justice.

RAILWAYS

CN—LOSS OF JOBS AT JONQUIÈRE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Transport).

Last Friday, Canadian National employees at Jonquière were told seventeen positions in their shop would be cut.

This is the second time in less than 20 months that Jonquière is paying for CN's rationalization policies. Do CN authorities realize that between 15 and 20 per cent of their revenue in Quebec is generated by the Saguenay—Lac Saint-Jean area? Do they realize that although we only have about a hundred jobs out of a total of 8,000 in the province, 28 per cent of those jobs will be cut? Does the Crown corporation believe the regions should bear the brunt of its rationalization policies?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member for Jonquière is aware, Canadian National is a Crown corporation operating on a market basis and must operate as efficiently and competitively as possible.

As a member of this Government, I also regret that this rationalization plan has led to lay-offs in regions like the one you just mentioned.

However, I can give the Hon. Member the assurance that the company's rationalization program is national in scope and that its purpose is certainly not to victimize the regions.

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—REQUEST FOR MEETING OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. We welcome today's historic decision of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Since the present abortion law is now judged to be fundamentally unfair and contrary to the Charter of Rights, will the Minister convene an early meeting of provincial Attorneys General in consultation with Health Ministers to work on the implication of this historic judgment?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member that this has been a far-reaching decision of the Supreme Court of Canada and certainly brings to our attention the new realities under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms of our country and the role of the Supreme Court of Canada in defining the limitations and the abilities of legislatures at all levels of government to deal with important issues.

I have not had an opportunity to examine fully the judgment, as I am sure is the case with the Hon. Member. I will want to examine the matter carefully with my officials.

Certainly, as a Government I am sure I, with my other colleagues who have responsibilities in these areas, would propose to talk to the provinces. There is an important provincial element in this question with respect to health services. Naturally we will talk to our provincial colleagues with respect to the implications of this particular decision.

WOMEN'S ACCESS TO HEALTH SERVICES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. In view of today's decision I am sure the Minister agrees that women should have access to a full range of reproductive health services wherever they live in Canada. Will she press the Minister of National Health and Welfare to allocate adequate resources to make this a reality, including the reinstatement of funding for planned parenthood?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, like my colleague, the Minister of Justice, I have not had an opportunity to go through all this judgment. It has been an issue on which the women of Canada have not had a consensus, as others have not. We are continually pursuing with the Minister of National Health and Welfare matters that are of concern to women about their health and every stage of women's reproductive life. I would expect that process to continue.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

LICENCE AWARDED TO CBC FOR ALL-NEWS TELEVISION CHANNEL—QUERY WHETHER FUNDS WILL BE PROVIDED FOR SERVICE OF SAME QUALITY FOR FRANCOPHONES

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications said one of her concerns is to have the same type of news service available in French. Too bad she didn't think of that before.

My question is this: If the same type of service is offered but must be financed through subscription fees like the All News Service, and considering that the number of subscribers on the French side is much smaller than on the English side, is the federal Government prepared to provide financial assistance to ensure the same quality of service is available on the French side?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the position taken by the Liberal Party, and especially by the Party critic. On Monday, in her speech on official languages, the Hon. Member endorsed the concept of services in both official languages, French and English, and their availability across the country. However, now that we are pointing out the absence of a French service to the president of the CBC, the Liberal Party objects. Mr. Speaker, this is another case of the Liberal Party throwing its principles overboard on this issue.

[English]

COST OF FRENCH LANGUAGE SERVICE

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, it is really too bad that the Hon. Minister does not understand my French and cannot even understand the translation—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: All of us who have learned later in life the second official language of our country may sometimes have difficulties, but I do not think it is appropriate to comment upon it in the Chamber. I am sure the Hon. Member would want to withdraw that part of her preamble.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, if it was offensive it was because I really presumed the Minister understood the good will and interest I have had in French.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Finestone: I withdraw, Mr. Speaker. Instead of using my supplementary, I will rephrase the question in English so the Minister clearly understands.

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw. Order.

Mr. Speaker: It does not matter to the Chair which language the Hon. Member uses. Both are equally acceptable in this country and in this place. However, whatever language the Hon. Member uses, I would ask her to put her question.

Mrs. Finestone: My question is quite a simple one. If a French quality service is designed to meet the needs of French-speaking Canadians across this land, as we hope it would be, and if financing is required because there are less subscribers in French than there are in English, does the Minister plan to enable that financing through public funds or does she plan that the private and public sector in this case shall share the cost?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, what my hon. friend talks about was not done in respect of the Olympics. However, I was waiting for the Leader of the Opposition to rise immediately and reprimand his own Member for the offensive remarks made about the Member for Kingston and the Islands who, in respect of bilingualism and every other national policy, has been a model of tolerance for all Canadian citizens. What you said is a disgrace, and the Liberals should be ashamed of themselves.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CITIZEN OF INDIA—REQUEST FOR CONSULAR ACCESS TO INDIAN HIGH COMMISSIONER

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Solicitor General. It has come to my attention that Kamal Ratti, an Indian citizen under arrest in Canada, requested consular access to the Indian High Commissioner alleging that he was being severely mistreated in Millhaven Penitentiary, but that this request was not passed on to the Indian High Commissioner because it was administratively inconvenient.

What steps is the Government taking to ensure that Canada lives up to its own obligations under the Vienna Convention, so that we are on firmer moral grounds when we ask that our citizens who are under arrest in foreign countries be protected?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in response to my hon. friend, who has had a long interest in this matter, I am informed that on November 13 the Indian High Commission was informed by CSC headquarters and Millhaven authorities that consular access would be granted. The Indian High Commission proposed November 20 as a scheduled visit to one Indian national and, due to circumstances prevailing at the time in Millhaven, the Millhaven authorities could not guarantee the visit would take place on the proposed date.

A meeting took place between the Indian national and the consular agent from the Indian High Commission on December 3, 1987.

CANADA LANDS COMPANY

MIRABEL—USE OF FUNDS BY FARMERS' UNION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to whichever Minister is delegated today to answer for the Mirabel land scandal. On Tuesday, in answer to a question on the issue at hand, the Minister of Public Works said, and I quote from page 12295 of Hansard:

> In the areas of—agricultural renewal a structured and controlled process was put in place in accordance with Treasury Board terms and conditions and regularly monitored—

Given that Mr. André Bouvette of Mirabel said:

> The farmer's group did not have to explain to the Government how it chose to spend the money. The Government gave the money to the farmers' union to spend as it saw fit.

Which is it? And what measures did the Government take to ensure that money that was to go into farming went into farming instead of paying for trips to the desert to study agriculture in Israel?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise the House that both trips were at the invitation of the Quebec Department of Food, Fish and Agriculture and the Quebec Farmers Union. The corporation was invited to participate and assist in market development.

The Togo trip resulted in sales of agricultural machinery, tractors, and the largest export contract of mineral water in Canadian history.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the mandate of the Canada Lands Company is to sell vacant land back to farmers. What does that have to do with travelling to Israel?

[Translation]

METHOD OF DEALING WITH FARMERS AND SPECULATORS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): I should like to direct my supplementary to the Prime Minister. Knowing as we do that 40 per cent of the deals benefited speculators, a good many of them friends of the Conservative Party, can the Prime Minister explain why speculators got the same treatment as Canadian farmers with respect to buying back the lands? How come speculators are treated the same way as Canadian farmers?

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, we would like to explain to the Hon. Member that one hundred million dollars in lawsuits against the previous Liberal Administration were dropped, that 95 per cent of the land has been returned to the people, that an investment of more than $20 million from the private sector has resulted, and that personnel at Mirabel has been reduced by some 80 per cent since 1984.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, before you proceed to the next order of business, I wonder if I could ask the Government House Leader for the usual statement on Government business?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, provided we are able to complete the Bill before the House today, we would then proceed to Bill C-84, that is the response of the Government to the Senate amendments. If that is not completed today, we will continue on that tomorrow and through Monday until it is completed.

We also have up for discussion on Monday, Bill C-60, which is at report stage. We hope we can complete that. After that, we are looking at trying to deal with Bill C-105, the Rail Safety Act.

SUPPLY

APPROPRIATION ACT NO. 5, 1987-88

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-108, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1988—Mr. Paproski in the chair.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I understand that immediately prior to the recess there was some discussion as to availability of a Bill for reading by the House. I do wish to advise the House that earlier this morning, during routine proceedings, a copy of that Bill was delivered to the Table for printing purposes.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee was interrupted at one o'clock p.m., the question, shall I rise and report the Bill, was before the committee. Therefore, the question is shall I rise and report the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill reported and concurred in.

Mr. Wise (for Mr. Mazankowski) moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the reason I am rising on third reading is that this is the first opportunity the committee has had to see the Bill which we dealt with this morning in committee. While it is true the Bill only implements the provisions within Supplementary Estimates (D), I think it is well that we not move too precipitously with the details of the Bill until we have a chance to consider it at third reading.

On first blush it seems to be in conformity with Supplementary Estimates (D) which provides for $803,903,000 for the Special Canadian Grains Program which was announced back in December. I think it is important that future occasions like this, where we are dealing with the spending estimates of a Department, that the Bill be made available first thing in the morning so that Members can have the opportunity to peruse the Bill to ensure that it is in conformity with the estimates.

The estimates have been before the House for a week but this particular Bill was not made available until the report stage of this Bill just a few moments ago. There is at least one Member on our side who wants to have an opportunity to say a few words with regard to the Bill. The Bill has only been before us since three o'clock.

It is important that the legislation be expedited. The agricultural scene of the country today is the most difficult since the 1930s, especially in the grains and oilseeds sector, as well as in the cash crop areas. Thus it is important that this legislation be expedited, but not to the extent that we pass it without even having the Bill before the House. This is the first time I have experienced that circumstance, something we saw this morning during the debate on second reading.

I want to see the matter expedited. I hope the Government will be processing the cheques and sending them out to farmers so that they can get on with their cropping this spring and so that some of the pain of this most difficult time will be eased by this Special Canadian Grains Program.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I just want to make note of the fact that we have the Bill before us now, Bill C-108. The whole procedure with the Bill has been a comedy of errors. Clearly, we on this side of the House want to facilitate the passage of the legislation allowing for $800 million to go to farmers. We intend to continue through with that commitment.

I must say that the legislation would already have been passed had it been available to us sooner. It now seems that we are adding another laugh to this comedy of errors in that the Liberal caucus seems to be sneaking in another speaker in the circumstances of the absence of the Bill, another speaker who could have been here this morning. I assume that eventually the legislation will pass and that the farmers will receive their money. It is too bad that all speakers from the Liberal caucus were not here this morning and that the Bill was not here either.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, this is debate on third reading of the Bill. Notwithstanding the fact that Members of the NDP are trying to scuttle debate and stop those who are interested in agriculture and who represent a large number of farmers, as I do in my constituency representing 2,000 dairy farmers I will not make any apologies to anyone, least of all the New Democrats or socialists—I intend to speak on third reading of this Bill about agriculture in the House of Commons.

Agriculture is the mainstay and the livelihood of the constituency which I represent—

Mr. Keeper: Were you asleep this morning?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was present this morning. Members may recall that some difficulties arose with respect to the printing of the Bill. I believe that the Bill was with the Table at the appropriate hour before we began this morning. Something did seem to go wrong and the Bill was not printed and available for distribution. This became apparent at approximately 1 p.m. at which time we reached a series of agreements. The Hon. Member who has the floor might not be aware of those agreements. However, I can recall being on my feet and asking specifically if what we were agreeing to was adjournment at that time, after having unanimous consent not to see the clock so that we could finish in all stages, to recommence with the Bill at 3 p.m. with the intention of finishing off report and third reading stages, with one codicil; that is to say, that the Minister assured us that, indeed, the Bill as printed was in accordance with the Supplementary Estimates and unless there was an error of some kind which needed to be corrected we would proceed without debate.

That was the unanimous sense in the House at that time. I tried to be very specific on that point before giving my consent to adjourn the House at noon. I thought that that was the spirit and the intent—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would like to bring to the attention of the House the fact that there was a copy of the Bill at the Table. Hon. Members received copies of the Bill at 2 p.m. I agree with the comments of the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), but the House cannot prevent anyone from debating a Bill at third reading. If there is an agreement then it is up to Hon. Members to agree among themselves to respect that agreement.

Is the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, yes, I am rising on a point of order. When we rose at one o'clock or thereabouts we simply agreed that we would rise and report progress from committee and complete the Bill after Question Period. There was no commitment or understanding that Members would not be permitted to speak on third reading. That is simply not the case.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) has the floor. We should allow him to have his say.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, of course it is not that the Liberals are trying to delay this Bill. It will be passed today unless it is filibustered by the Tories, the NDP or by some other people. It will surely not be by us—

Mr. Keeper: Who are the other people?

Mr. Boudria: There are independent Members in the House.

The Liberals are very interested in the Bill. The proof of that is that in our Party both the critic and the associate critic are speaking on the Bill. The Members of the New Democratic Party who hold those positions are not speaking on this Bill. Thus we can see instantly the different level of interest that there is between the various political persuasions in the House.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member is casting a slur on this caucus. We were well represented here this morning in the debate. He was the one who was not here to participate in the debate—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I hope that the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell will commence his remarks on the debate. Does the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) have a point of order to raise?

Mr. Langdon: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As I understand the rules of the House, it is not appropriate to indicate anything with respect to the absence or the presence of Members—

Mr. Rossi: Tell that to your Member.

Mr. Langdon: I think it is also important to say that the interest in this Bill which has been shown by the two official spokesmen for agriculture in this Party has been reflected in question after question throughout the last eight months.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell has the floor.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that we have now finished with the points of orders that were really not points of order. We all know that one cannot comment on the presence or absence of Members, and I did not, as you know, Mr. Speaker. I only commented on people who had or had not spoken on the Bill. I know that all Members were here this morning, as I was, because all Hon. Members are always deemed to be present in the House. When they are here it does not necessarily mean that they always participate in debate. Nevertheless, we were all present here this morning, I remember it very well.

Having said that on behalf of those of us who were present, whether we spoke or not, I would like to add a few comments on the Bill. I hope that this time the NDP will not mind if I speak since it is, of course, the duty of Members who represent agricultural areas to speak on legislation that is important for the agricultural community. That is the reason I chose to speak this afternoon.

The Bill we have before us today, as my colleague from Algoma and my other colleague from Winnipeg North Centre have indicated, was brought to the attention of the House quite late. Given that this is an agricultural Bill, I would suggest to the Minister and to the Government that it has the sympathy of all Parties in the House. However, the Government should not make a habit of abusing the generosity and co-operation which are always present in the Opposition. Even though we are on the opposition side of the House, we are always helpful to the Government, as much as possible. The Government should not abuse that and bring forward Bills which necessitate the unanimous consent of the House because they were not brought to our attention in the required amount of time. As I said previously, the Opposition is always willing to co-operate in order to provide good government to the country.

• (1520)

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Very limited numbers of people participate in House Leaders' meetings representing the Parties. It was for the convenience of opposition Members that today was the day adopted. Many days were discussed, including days last week, and there were some problems because of the commitments of other people. Indeed the Government put out the Estimates some time ago and the Bill gives effect to the Estimates. It is a well-known procedure which occurs in the House all the time.

I think the record should be clear that the Government accommodated the Opposition in terms of today being the day for debate. The Government met its obligations in terms of the presentation of the Bill at the appropriate time and in the appropriate way.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I wonder what standing order that particular interjection falls under. Obviously the answer is none of them.

I will continue my remarks. There has been usual, good co-operation on the part of the Opposition in order to assist Canadian farmers. As much as I support the bill, it is important to note that it does not solve the Canadian agricultural financing problem. However, in a small way it assists farmers in distress. It is important to note that many Canadians have indicated that present farm problems just will not go away. They have been with us almost since the Government has been in office, by strange coincidence.

In large part the difficulties which farmers are experiencing are due to the predatory practices of the United States administration and its farm bill, the infamous bill which was designed and adopted with the purpose, as all Canadians know, of lowering the prices of Canadian agricultural commodities. It was passed by the U.S. Congress and signed into law by the President of the United States right in the middle of the free trade negotiations with our Government. Some $70 billion U.S. were placed by the United States Government to displace our Canadian markets. However, there is no point in being overly partisan about the issue, even though the Government has messed it up, as well as other things.

I should like to refer to some media reports. For instance, a story appeared in the December 26, 1987 edition of The Globe and Mail entitled "Farmers' paradox: going bust in good times", which refers to some of the goings on in agriculture for the year 1987. In quoting an official of the Department of Agriculture, the article reads:

> "Apparently, there is a paradox here," said Brian Perkins as he went over a mass of confusing evidence he has collected on the industry.

The article went on to indicate:

> A director-general in the policy directorate of the federal Department of Agriculture, he has spent considerable time with his staff trying to reconcile the two opposing views, and his conclusions show the complexity of the farming business.
> Consider first the view that farmers are well off.

Of course we know that that is an erroneous view. The only reason they sometimes appear to be well off is that they are involved in a business which requires many assets. In many cases the assets are financed extensively. However, even for people in the agricultural industry who have assets which are not financed quite as much, the fact is that they have low incomes. It requires a large amount of assets in order to produce that low income, which has created some of the problems we see in the agricultural industry at the present time.

Another article entitled "Grain farmers glad to see end of 1987" appeared in The Edmonton Journal. Darlene Rude of Canadian Press was interviewing a gentleman by the name of Harvey McEwen, a 35 year old Saskatchewan farmer. Here is what he had to say according to the article:

> "I'm glad it's over," he said from his 400-hectare farm an hour southeast of Regina, where he raises wheat, Canola and a small herd of cattle.
> While livestock producers enjoyed another prosperous year, grain farmers like McEwen found little to celebrate as prices continued a downward slide, dropping 25 per cent in the summer.

That downward slide was caused in large measure by the U.S. farm bill. It has created downward pressure on prices in the agricultural industry.

Wayne Easter of the National Farmers Union said that the $1.1 billion payment to grains and oilseed producers was not enough. I will quote from an article which is attributed to Mr. Easter.

> Wayne Easter, who was in Prince Albert Wednesday to speak on free trade, said the payment, which was announced earlier in the week by Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, should have been at least $2.6 billion if the industry is to maintain its share of the work marketplace.
> "It's an investment in the future," he said.

I do not want to take up any more time on this issue, but in summary I want to say that although the funds that have been appropriated in today's Bill are indeed necessary and required by farmers—and as I said earlier, that is why the Opposition has been so co-operative with the Government across the way—it is still a fact that the funds appropriated are insufficient for the present agricultural situation.

We could deal with other sectors of farming which are in distress right now. The lack of funding available to the Farm Credit Corporation over the past year has been apparent. Last year it was unable to assist farmers in my constituency and elsewhere.

We could also discuss today issues involving the negative effect of free trade on much of the agricultural industry, an industry which has been savaged by the Conservative Government in its wrong-headed free trade initiative. I am sure that there will be other opportunities for myself and others to tell the Government what we think of its free trade initiative and the negative effects it will have on agriculture.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, although the measure under consideration today is inadequate in terms of assistance to Canadian farm producers, we have decided to support it because, to some extent, it will help the agricultural sector, particularly grain and wheat producers in Canada. Still we point out how very important it would be for the Government to create the kind of climate likely to bring agricultural prosperity back in this country. One way to create this climate would be to put an end to the war of subsidies between the European Common Market and the United States of America. This war has been going on for a long time in the case of the European Economic Community and, in the case of the United States, since December 1985 when the famous U.S. Farm Bill was adopted.

I hope this Bill will be adopted today just so we might bring some relief to the Canadian agricultural community.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed, from Wednesday, January 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House agrees with amendments 8 and 13(e) made by the Senate to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, but disagrees with amendments 4, 5(a), (b) and (c), 6(a) and (b), 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13(a) because this House believes they contradict the principles of the Bill for the following reasons:

Amendment 4 would exclude only criminals and war criminals from the refugee determination process, but would allow terrorists, spies and subversives to pursue a claim to refugee status, notwithstanding the fact that Article 33 of the UN Convention would permit the removal of these latter individuals to their countries of nationality or permanent residence, even if they were determined to be Convention refugees.

Amendment 5(a) would eliminate the authority of the Minister to direct a ship to leave or not to enter Canadian waters. This amendment would reopen a significant gap in Canada's ability to control its borders.

Amendments 5(b) and (c) arise out of Senate amendment 5(a), which is not acceptable, and are therefore inappropriate.

Amendments 6(a) and (b) would reverse the policy on which the Immigration Act, 1976 was based, which policy was not changed in the Bill as passed by this House. The amendments jeopardize the possibility of successfully prosecuting persons who profit from organizing illegal migration and from counselling fraud among refugee claimants.

Amendments 9 and 10 would restrict the ability of peace officers and immigration officers to act quickly to search for evidence of major offences under the Immigration Act, 1976, in exigent circumstances, where lives are at risk or where evidence with respect to those offences may be lost or destroyed.

Amendments 11 and 12 would restrict the ability of peace officers and immigration officers to execute search warrants which have been duly authorized by a justice of the peace, by denying explicit authority to break open containers where it is reasonably believed evidence will be found and by limiting the authority to execute these warrants at night.

Amendment 13(a) would reduce the initial period of detention without review from seven days to forty-eight hours, which would allow insufficient time for the gathering of information to substantiate allegations or to identify the individual, particularly when large groups of undocumented persons arrive at one time.

And that this House agrees with the principles set out in amendments 1, 2(a), 3, 7 and 13(b), (c) and (d), but would propose the following amendments:

Amendment 1 be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 22 and 23 on page 1, and substitute the following:

(c) to deter those who assist in the illegal entry of persons into Canada and thereby minimize the"

Amendment 2(a) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 29 to 39, on page 4, and substitute the following:

Amendment 3 be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 7 to 12, on page 5, and substitute the following:

Amendment 7 be amended to read as follows:

"Add, immediately after line 6, on page 10, the following:

95.21 No proceedings for an offence under Section 95.1 or Section 95.2 shall be instituted except by or with the personal consent in writing of the Attorney General of Canada or Deputy Attorney General of Canada."

Amendment 13(b) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 1 to 22, on page 21, and substitute the following:

(2) Where, with respect to a person detained under subsection (1), the Minister certifies in writing

(a) that

(i) the person's identity has not been established, or

(ii) the Minister has reason to suspect that the person may be a member of an inadmissible class described in paragraph 19(1)(e), (f) or (g), and

(b) that an additional period of detention is required to investigate the matter referred to in subparagraph (a)(i) or (ii), the person shall be brought before an adjudicator forthwith and at least once during every seven-day period thereafter, at which times the adjudicator shall review the reasons for the person's continued detention."

Amendment 13(c) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 23 to 47, on page 21, and substitute the following:

(2.1) Where the Minister has issued a certificate under subsection (2), the Minister may amend the certificate to which the detention relates to include any matter referred to in subparagraph (2)(a)(i) or (ii), following which the person shall be brought before an adjudicator forthwith and at least once during every seven-day period thereafter, at which times the adjudicator shall review the reasons for the person's continued detention.

Amendment 13(d) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 48 to 50, on page 21, and lines 1 to 18, on page 22, and substitute the following:

(4) Where an adjudicator who conducts a review under subsection (2) or (2.1) is satisfied that reasonable efforts are being made by the Minister to investigate the matter referred to in subparagraph (2)(a)(i) or (ii), the adjudicator shall continue the person's detention.

(4.1) Every review under subsection (2) or (2.1) of the detention of a person suspected of being a member of an inadmissible class described in paragraph 19(1)(e), (f) or (g) shall be conducted in camera.

(4.2) Where (a) the Minister is of the opinion that any evidence or information to be presented by or on behalf of the Minister at any review under subsection (2) or (2.1) of the detention of a person referred to in subsection (4.1) should not be disclosed on the grounds that its disclosure would be injurious to national security or to the safety of persons, and (b) a request therefore is made by the minister, the adjudicator shall order that the review or any part thereof be conducted in the absence of the person and any counsel representing the person.

(4.3) Any person excluded by an order under subsection (4.2) from the whole or any part of the review under subsection (2) or (2.1) may apply to the Chief Justice of the Federal Court or to a judge of that Court designated by the Chief Justice for the purposes of this subsection to have the order quashed and sections 36.1 and 36.2 of the Canada Evidence Act shall apply, with such modifications as the circumstances may require, to such applications.

(4.4) Unless quashed, an order under subsection (4.2) shall, with respect to the person to whom the order relates, apply to every review under subsection (2) or (2.1), or part thereof, at which the Minister is of the opinion that any evidence or information to be presented by or on behalf of the Minister at the review, or part thereof, should not be disclosed on the grounds that its disclosure would be injurious to national security or to the safety of persons.

(5) Where the adjudicator who conducts a review under subsection (2) or (2.1) does not continue a person's detention under subsection (4), the adjudicator shall make the appropriate order under subsection 104(3).

(6) An adjudicator who conducts a review under subsection (3) shall make the appropriate order under subsection 104(3)."

And the amendment of Mr. Marchi:

That the message of the House of Commons to the Senate be amended by:

a) deleting, in paragraph one, the reference to Senate amendment 4;

b) deleting paragraph two;

c) adding to paragraph nine a reference to Senate amendment 4; and

d) adding after amendment 3 the following:

"That amendment 4 of the Senate be amended by deleting the said amendment and by striking out line 16 on page 7 of the Bill and substituting the following therefor:

"(2)(c) and against whom a deportation order has been upheld by the Board; or""

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I notice Members on the Government side are in a hurry, but that should not keep us from expressing our views in the House on legislation as important as Bill C-84.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to provide some background on Bill C-84 and remind Hon. Members and Canadians that we came back during the summer because there was an emergency—remember? There was a national emergency because one morning, a hundred or so refugees were found on the shores of Nova Scotia. Once the House had been reconvened to introduce this Bill, the Government took its own sweet time, giving various excuses for the subsequent delay. The result is that today, in January 1988—I am sure you will agree, Mr. Speaker, that between August 1987 and January 1988, there was no national emergency, and if the Government intended to amend the Immigration Act, if it intended to table a new immigration policy for this country, it could have done so during our regular session without rushing things, without the phony excuse that we were faced with a national emergency in this country.

Mr. Speaker, Canada and Canadians are known for their tolerance. This country has opened its doors to millions of people from all parts of the world who have made this country a multicultural mosaic where they feel at home, a country that is free in every sense of the word. The Conservative Government has tried several times to change this tradition at some very difficult moments in our history when refugees arrived at our borders without going through the normal process. Granted, in several cases these were phony refugees, but in many cases they were genuine.

Mr. Speaker, it was these circumstances that the Government tried to use in August 1987 to create a so-called national emergency so that it could recall Parliament.

If we want to set up a system to stop phony refugees from entering our country, we should realize it is equally important to make sure that genuine refugees can enter this country.

Over that long period of time, Mr. Speaker, the Opposition Parties, as well as various Canadian groups and individuals have begged the Minister of Immigration and this Tory Government to amend Bill C-84 in an effort to uphold this great Canadian tradition of tolerance, to maintain our great open door policy for genuine immigrants and to preserve our reputation as a tolerant country where all citizens of the world who fear for their lives can find here a secure heaven. This way we could continue to show leadership and thus urge all the other countries of the world to hold an international conference, thereby making sure that all those who are persecuted everywhere in the world would not give up hope of coming to a country such as Canada.

Mr. Speaker, of course there are abuses. As in any society, there are abuses: abuses of the unemployment insurance scheme, abuses of the income tax legislation, abuses of the Transport Act. Abuses are everywhere. We are all human and there are people who will take advantage of the system. It is indeed our responsibility, as Parliamentarians, to try to improve our system, to do the utmost to limit the number of possible abuses. But the fact that there are abuses does not justify closing all doors and adopting legislation which is not consistent with the traditions and aspirations of Canadians.

When, having adopted Bill C-84, the Parliament of Canada and this Tory Government with its enormous majority sent it to the other place—I mean, the Senate—the Senators decided to fully discharge their constitutional responsibility and to examine this Bill like any other Bill. They heard witnesses who had come from every part of Canada to make sure that this Bill was consistent with our traditions and our Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

After a while which I would describe as short, without delaying unduly the whole process or using delaying tactics not to be accused of filibustering, a charge this Tory Government has made often recently—the Senate sent back this bill to the House with a few reasonable amendments which would make it possible for the Government to correct the deficiencies which existed in the original Bill C-84.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Senators were not the only ones to propose these amendments. The whole Senate did, which means both Parties represented there. They said this to the Minister: We are proposing a few amendments which we believe are reasonable. We believe that these amendments will improve this bill and make it more consistent with the Canadian tradition and our Charter of Rights of Freedoms.

Mr. Speaker, when we consider the amendments the Minister accepted and those he rejected, we really wonder whether—

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine), on a point of order.

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I heard the Hon. Member mention the results of the vote in the Senate on this Bill. He said that the Conservative Senators voted with the Liberals.

When the Bill was examined in committee, one of the Conservative Senators voted with the Liberals. When the Bill came before a Committee of the Whole, I think the House ought to know—because he did not say what he should have said—

• (1540)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order, it is a point of debate. If the Hon. Member wishes to ask the Hon. Member a question or make a comment, it would be fine to do so after the speech. I do not consider that to be a point of order, and the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) has the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I have great respect for the Hon. Member, and just to set his mind at rest, I did not say the senators voted. I said the Conservative Senators did not vote against, in other words, they did not block the Bill. That means they agreed. You could call that tacit agreement.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would just like to bring to the attention of all Hon. Members that it is not customary to state in this House what goes on in the other place. I wanted to bring that to the attention of the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) and also to the attention of the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano).

[Translation]

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, we will try to focus on the Bill, but I am sure you realize this is quite difficult, since the proposed amendments come from the other place.

Mr. Speaker, I was saying that the purpose of these changes was to amend a Bill that was tabled in the House in August 1987 to cope with a so-called national emergency.

Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, it is now January 1988, and Canada is facing neither war nor famine, there is no revolution, and at the time all we had was a hundred or so refugees who arrived one morning on the shores of Nova Scotia.

To get back to the amendments, Mr. Speaker, I would like to discuss the matter of ships whether the Minister has the power to turn back ships. Of course, last summer, at one time the Minister spread rumours that there were boatloads of refugees coming to Canada. Those rumours proved to be no more than that.

So I wonder how we are going to board all ships approaching Canadian shores and make sure everybody on board has a passport and the right papers. Wouldn't it be more convenient, once a ship arrives in a Canadian port, to have legislation so that if there are refugees on board we can take legal steps, confiscate the ship, put the captain in prison, all of which would act as a deterrent to others. On the other hand, if a ship is prevented from entering Canadian waters or a Canadian port, what is going to prevent it from doing what happened this summer, when the ship's captain put his refugees ashore in small boats, at night while no one was looking? In that case, will the Canadian Government at least consider increasing very substantially the surveillance of its shores?

Mr. Speaker, I think the amendments are reasonable. I think the Government and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) could have accepted these amendments and thus have a piece of legislation that would reflect Canadian tradition and conform to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. However, although the Minister accepted a few amendments because he really had no choice, he said no to all the others because they allegedly changed the substance of the Bill and he could therefore not accept them.

[English]

Therefore, we cannot support the action of the Minister in refusing these amendments. We believe that the amendments were necessary in order to keep the Canadian tradition of tolerance and to open our border to those who are in danger.

Yes, there are abuses. There are abuses in the immigration law, there are abuses in the tax law, there are abuses in the transportation laws and there are abuses in the environment laws. So what? Do we arrest everyone? Do we reject completely the unemployment insurance system because some have abused it, or do we try to improve the system and ensure that no one abuses it or that those who abuse it can be prosecuted in a fair and legal way? That is what the other place is trying to tell us. It is not filibustering anything. It is trying to ensure that we in this House pass a Bill that reflects the Canadian tradition and our Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The Government has accepted some more minor and technical recommendations. This has signalled a recognition on its part that the Bill was overkill. The flexibility proves it erred in drafting the Bill and has vindicated the position we have articulated throughout the debate on Bill C-84. That was not only our position but it was the position of many Canadian groups, churches, unions and people who every day work with refugees.

Let me touch on another point that was part of these amendments which were rejected by the Minister. Let me give the House an example of what sometimes happens to us in our role as Members of Parliament. What will we do if one day someone knocks at the door of my riding office and is desperate, telling me that his life is in danger? Am I to ask him for proof that his life is in danger? I would look at the person and say that I think he is telling the truth and would decide to help the person get refugee status.

If, after investigating all the facts, the Immigration Department finds that that person was not telling the truth, am I to go to jail because I helped someone in need, believing and trusting that person who, I thought, was telling the truth? Is that not the Canadian tradition? Is that not what Canada is all about?

Why do we have to close all the doors? If, in 1968 when I came to Canada, the doors had been closed, I would not be here. Perhaps my colleague would not be here and maybe your parents would not be here, Mr. Speaker. Canada would not be the same. Why are we changing something that is so fundamental to Canadian life? That is what we have been telling the Government since August when the Government called Parliament back by saying that there was an emergency. Since then, we have been debating it, and now even the other place is.

Regardless of what government Members or members of the NDP say about the other place, I think it is very reasonable and sensible. They gave us a message. They tried to tell us not to make mistakes and change the Canadian way. I say, let us make those amendments to the Bill and we are going to have a law that reflects and represents Canadian aspirations, Canadian traditions, the Canadian way, and then our kids for generations to come can be proud.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have about three minutes left. It is important that we as Canadians continue the tradition of our predecessors and show other countries that Canada is a just and free country, and that when a person arrives at our borders and is telling the truth and says that he needs help and needs a place to live, he should be allowed to stay. Since there are people who take advantage of the situation and are trafficking in refugees or abusing the system, we should have legislation that provides for severe penalties in those cases, Mr. Speaker. However, penalizing someone who was acting in good faith to save someone else's life is certainly not the right way. It is not the Canadian way, to let a person who just wanted to help save another human being's life be penalized because that other person abused the system and did not tell the truth. I think the person who failed to tell the truth should be penalized, not the person who was trying to help him. I think that is a very fundamental point, Mr. Speaker. This is part of our Canadian tradition and should remain so.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I was listening carefully to the speech by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano). He spoke very eloquently and I may say very emotionally about the subject of immigration and refugees.

• (1550)

I would like to ask one question of my colleague and it concerns the question he raised in his speech, namely the legal implications of this legislation. One of the overriding, if not the overriding, responsibilities of this Chamber and its Members is to draft legislation in keeping with the Constitution, which is our basic law, and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We have been told by virtually every legal expert who appeared before the legislative committee dealing with this Bill that it is so seriously flawed that as soon as it hits the books every lawyer worth his or her salt will be challenging it in the courts. It was the same story in the Senate committee. Many of those experts predicted that the court would agree that it is flawed.

That sets up the possibility of a very dangerous situation developing. The Government is conducting a public relations campaign to try to convince Canadians that somehow this legislation will take care of all our problems. The Government is saying not to worry, from this day forward our problems with the refugee determination system will be cured. What, then, is the Government going to do if a court strikes this legislation down because it violates the Charter? That will obviously paralyze the policy and again throw it into chaos.

Could the Hon. Member perhaps share with this House his thoughts on what that will do to the confidence of Canadians in the law, as well as causing increasing frustration and anger among people who have been misled into believing that the problem was solved only to find it worse than before?

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague for reminding me of this aspect of the legislation and the overall public relations framework the Government has been building since last summer. You will recall that we were called back in the middle of the summer recess because there was a national emergency. One morning we found around 170 refugees on the Nova Scotia coast. Years back we received thousands of refugees and there was no emergency, but the Government is trying to convince Canadians that there is an emergency now. It said there was something drastically wrong with our system and the only way to solve it was to call Parliament back to deal with this Bill, which gave the false hope that it would solve all the problems. Yes, our immigration and refugee policy needs to be amended, but not in this fashion.

I agree with my hon. colleague that the possibilities are very high that this legislation will be challenged in the court, so that this exercise is useless. We go back to the beginning and those people who should be penalized, those people who take advantage of the system, those people who charge a fee to bring in false refugees, will increase their activities and we will be in a worse situation than we were last summer.

Therefore, I agree with my colleague that the amendments proposed by the other place should be accepted so that this legislation is at least in accordance with our Constitution and Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It can then be put in place and we hope the Government will continue to look at our refugee policy so that Canada can continue its traditions, which are very well accepted by the rest of the world.

• (1600)

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) quite correctly pointed out the false hope which this administration was trying to generate by trying to fabricate and create a crisis which only existed in the wild imagination of the people on the other side. A measure of that false hope can be seen in the changes which the Government has made in response to the report from the other place. That is to say, even though those changes are to the more minor aspects of the legislation, the Government still made changes which it was not prepared to make last summer.

After a few months had passed and government Members had an opportunity to reflect on what they had done, I think they recognized that they had erred and that the legislation was overkill. I would like to commend the Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou for his observations.

The other aspect was that of creating a new offence for religious institutions, other organizations, and individual Canadians who help with refugees who may not have documents to come to this country. I find that very offensive. Could the Member go into some detail on what he thinks about this particular aspect upon which he touched very briefly?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow a very short response by the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano).

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, if before a refugee comes into Canada he has to wait to ensure that he has all the documents to prove he is a genuine refugee, I do not think he will ever make it to Canada. Therefore, it is important that our system allow refugees to come to Canada so that they can be safe, and we can then verify whether they are genuine refugees.

With this legislation we will close all the doors. We will even tell boats not to come near us, to get away because they are not allowed to come. I do not know what measures we will use to accomplish that. Is the Minister going to call in the Army to start shooting? We shall see. Let us hope that we never go that far. This is how ridiculous this thing is getting. It is paranoia. Let us allow any refugee who comes here to come in. We can check them and if they are real refugees they will be welcome because that is our tradition and policy. If they are not genuine refugees they should be looked after and we will ensure that those who profited from bringing them here are penalized. Instead of turning the boat away we should confiscate the boat, arrest the captain, and ensure that the next captains know about it so that they will not take the risk of losing their ships.

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard concerning the Senate amendments to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, and the amendment of Mr. Marchi (p. 12340).

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take a few minutes to deal with the legislation put forward by the Hon. Member for Roberval (Mr. Bouchard), the Minister for Employment and Immigration, which legislation is aimed primarily at stopping the massive entry of bogus refugees into this country. As you know, faced with repeated instances of refugee groups coming to this country, we had to recall in August 1987 the House of Commons in order to prepare our legislation aimed at stopping human traffickers, those who offered for financial gain to bring people into Canada, to have them enter illegally. A stop had to be put to that kind of traffic with an aim, first to protect their victims, second to ensure a greater degree of security to Canadians and to protect the interests of Canadian taxpayers who for all practical purposes foot the bill each time there is a massive influx of people by sea or air.

That whole legislation was prepared with a view to maintaining a hospitable climate for legitimate refugees and people who want to enter Canada in order to later live here legally. Those considerations are an integral part of the legislation.

Our proposal received massive support from the people—there were only a few objections.

The opposition comes mainly from the coalition, what we now call the Liberal-Socialist coalition, a coalition described by the Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner), because they claim that at the next election, if there is a coalition of people from the left, this will help sink us lower into debt, as those people from the left did during the last 20 years under Liberal rule.

We therefore face an opposition from a coalition of Liberals in partnership with their Socialist comrades. Those people always refused to support the introduction of our Bill to the Senate.

We introduced it recently to the Senate, and it came back. Because in the Senate they also decided to oppose democracy.

Some 120 years ago, Mr. Speaker, this Chamber was given authority to legislate. And since last year the Senate, which is dominated by Liberals, Grits, friends of the former Prime Minister—perhaps enemies of the current Leader of the Opposition—has increasingly opposed legislation from the House of Commons, defying the Canadian Constitution, defying democracy. Curiously, the Senate should be the keeper of democracy—

So, they opposed our legislation, they sent it back. As they did when we proposed Bill C-22 concerning the Drugs Act. It was a non-ending struggle against the Senate. Liberal senators travelled across Canada, as they did with this legislation, in order to listen to Canadians, to hear them repeat the same things. Canadians agreed with Bill C-22, but the Senate, supported by the Liberal caucus—and I see that some members of the Liberal caucus are here now—defied the House of Commons on Bill C-22 and continues to defy it on Bill C-84, with the support of some of the Members from Quebec. For instance, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) was quite happy to delay passage of Bill C-22, which could create thousands of jobs in the Montreal region.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to expedite passage of this Bill because there are now 30,000 claims for refugee status in Canada. In 1987, 30,000 applications were made. We have to speed up the processing of these claims, but to do so, the Members of the Liberal-socialist coalition must help us move matters forward, and it is especially important for the Liberal caucus and its questioned and questionable Leader to advise Members opposite of the urgency of this legislation. There are still two parties in the Opposition; the coalition is not a fact yet.

It would also be appropriate to tell the public about the position of the socialist party as concerns this Bill. Their lack of interest is obvious as there are not very many of them in the House to discuss this Bill. However, what is their position? What have they been saying?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. I would hope the Hon. Member would not bring attention to attendance in the House. There are people outside this Chamber who are watching the proceedings on television. There could be Members outside. Attendance should never be brought up in debate.

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I would like the socialists to explain their position. They want to maintain the right to claim refugee status in the legislation, even in the case of a recognized terrorist.

However, as you know, Mr. Speaker, last week, these same socialists demanded that the case of Mr. Mohammad be settled immediately. They were screaming: "Crucify him! Send him back immediately! Rid the country of that individual!" Yet, these same people now ask that the right to claim refugee status be maintained for terrorists in this particular Bill.

I would therefore like the Leader of the socialist party, of this whole group of comrades, to tell us where he stands. Does he want us to settle quickly the case of terrorists or would he prefer us to keep them in Canada? The fact is that the socialist Leader is an opportunist. Last week, it was convenient for him to say: "Crucify him!" Yet, this week, the same man should not be crucified. This week, we should set up a system which would delay the processing of each claim from recognized terrorists. That is the socialist party, Mr. Speaker. They are inconsistent. They say one thing one day and another the next. They are chameleons. I find it surprising that the Liberals would want to try to get into bed with the socialist party. This is a questionable alliance, Mr. Speaker, but their Leader himself has mentioned the possibility. This is unfortunate because it will make the left stronger and emphasize its leftist tendencies in Canada, which is not good for our businesses.

I find the position of the socialist Leader on Bill C-84 surprising. He has two positions. He wants to keep the terrorists, but when one of them makes the headlines in the newspapers, he gets crucified. It is the same for the Meech Lake Accord. In Quebec, the socialist party says that it finds the Accord quite acceptable. Elsewhere in the country their position is different. Concerning Bill C-22, they spoke against it in the rest of Canada, but they would not say so in the Province of Quebec. That is still their position.

When we prepare our budgets we want to reduce expenditures, but they are against that. If we suggest a new tax they are against that too. Just where do they stand? When talking about the foreign policy of the socialist party . . . I am glad to see the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) is listening to me. When talking about the foreign policy of the socialist party—

Mr. Rossi: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: Unless I am mistaken, Mr. Speaker, the Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) is talking about everything but Bill C-84. He is referring to Bill C-22 and talking about all kinds of bills except Bill C-84. I think he ought to be more knowledgeable and stick to Bill C-84.

• (1610)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe the Hon. Member was just coming to Bill C-84. Does the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) wish to raise a point of order?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to let the Hon. Member continue to speak about anything he wants because he displays his ignorance with every subject he mentions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is no point of order. That was a point of debate. The Hon. Member for Levis (Mr. Fontaine) has the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I only wanted to focus on the contradictory positions taken by the socialist party. I simply wanted to explain . . . You did say that people outside the House of Commons are listening to us. I wanted to explain to them that the socialist party does not have a position on anything, a position which relates to a philosophy and a strategy. They come up with a new position every day, and I was about to explain how they see the position of Canada with respect to NATO: some of their Members said we must withdraw, others said no, we have to stay.

We heard the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre say that some of the Atlantic Canada shipbuilding contracts ought to be cancelled, yet within 24 hours his leader gave him a dressing-down about that. Not long after the leader himself was on the carpet before Bob White, because Bob White happens to be their boss, the man who pays them with the workers' union dues. So Bob White told the Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) to tone down his opposition to free trade because now they see that the people are getting more enthusiatic about this issue, and coming out too strongly against free trade might prove to be an albatross come election time.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Members of the Liberal-socialist coalition to co-operate with the Government. More specifically, the Liberals ought to reconsider their caucus directive and get the senators to work more closely with the House of Commons, and especially to show more respect for the democratic system under which we live. That is the way the Senate should approach the Bill introduced by my colleague from Roberval, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard). This measure is good for all Canadians, a measure to welcome people who want to come to Canada on a permanent basis and who are prepared to show respect for our customs and our laws. The Bill ought to be adopted as soon as possible, in the best interest of Canadian taxpayers and of people who seek legal entry into this country.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said that those who oppose passage of this Bill are part of the Liberal-socialist coalition. Among the organizations that opposed the original Bill and still oppose the present Bill are the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, the Canadian Council of Churches, the Anglican Church, the United Church, the Presbyterian Church, the Salvation Army and the Mennonite Central Committee. Does he include the leaders of all these organizations as part of the Liberal-socialist coalition?

I also have a comment with respect to the terrorist whose continued stay in Canada is being challenged. Does the Member not realize that when a person wishes to come to Canada as an immigrant or refugee he or she is asked a number of questions, including whether that person has ever been convicted of a crime and served a sentence for that crime? If so, they are almost automatically excluded from the right to come to Canada.

This terrorist who came to Canada lied about his situation. He did not give the security forces who examine applications the information that he had been involved in a terrorist activity, had been arrested, charged, tried and convicted.

While there must be a hearing, of course, he has obviously violated the law. He has lied and obviously cannot stay in Canada. I do not know any responsible politician from any Party who would argue that he should be permitted to stay in Canada. Why is the Member critical of the fact that our Members, along with Members from every Party have said that this man should be deported as rapidly as possible?

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) asked two questions. The first one had to do with representations from various Canadian church federations. I was here on Parliament Hill last summer to listen to the representations made by a number of Canadian churches. We realized that there was a powerful Liberal-socialist coalition lobby, a powerful lobby with a lot of misleading information about our bill. After the spokesmen for the various churches had a chance to listen to Conservative Members they changed their position and now they understand the purpose of this measure. The only people who are still raising objections—other than the odd exception—are those who belong to the Liberal-socialist coalition here in the House.

As to the second point, you mentioned a refugee named Mohammad. He is not a refugee, he is an immigrant who made false statements.

The fact that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North referred to this immigrant prompts me to ask the question again: Where does his leader stand, where does his Party stand, suggesting as they do that the man be given the right to claim refugee status even though he was a terrorist when he came to this country? The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North did not respond to this question, but that is what we wanted to have, a clear answer and a definite position on the part of his leader, the comrade from Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question and comment period has expired. Debate. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

• (1620)

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, any Bill which deals with immigration or refugees, brought in by any Government whatsoever, would have to lead to very vigorous debate and discussion because the people of Canada are as divided on these questions as they are on any question. It is not surprising when we have over a million Canadians unemployed that many Canadians believe we have permitted too many immigrants to come into this country. They believe this has resulted to a large extent in this unemployment problem. Those people who believe that will not listen or pay attention to any study—and many have been done—which indicates that immigrants bring more benefits to the country than difficulties and that immigration has not been a factor with respect to the large number of unemployed in Canada. There are people, such as the former Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of British Columbia, and a former senior official in the Department of Immigration, who opposed the legislation we passed in the 1960s and the present legislation because, under the provisions of the legislation, under the regulations, a substantial number of people have come to Canada as immigrants or refugees who are non-white and these people believe, and I completely reject their belief, that we ought to maintain our white civilization, as they call it.

I am not surprised we have a great deal of debate, some of it pretty emotional, any time we talk about changing our immigration laws. Let us get the record clear. The Bill brought forward by this Government months ago has been thoroughly analysed, discussed and debated by thousands of Canadians. The fact is that many organizations representing millions of Canadians expressed their opposition to the provisions of this Bill and to its objectives when the Bill was first introduced, and they expressed those same objections when the Bill was being discussed and debated in the Senate. They approved in the main the amendments moved in the Senate which were rejected almost entirely by the Government. As I said on an earlier occasion, I have never in my 25 years as a Member of Parliament seen such a unanimous reaction and opposition to this Bill as we have seen in the last year. Let me put on the record the names of some of the organizations which have expressed their opposition to this Bill.

The organizations include the Canadian Ethnocultural Council, which represents most of the ethnic groups and peoples in this country, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress, the Canadian Labour Council, and the Canadian Council of Churches, which takes in the major non-Catholic churches. Included among these are the Anglican church, the United church, the Presbyterian church, the Mennonite Central Committee, the Salvation Army, the Quakers and the Baptists. We have the World Relief Canada which acts on behalf of 23 of the evangelical Protestant denominations. Last but not least, and I wish the Hon. Member who spoke a few moments ago were still here, we have the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops. To suggest that these organizations—which are almost all, if not all, non-political—are part of some kind of Liberal-socialist coalition, and participating, therefore, for partisan political reasons, is, of course, so ludicrous that one wonders why any Member would make such a suggestion.

It is not that they want anyone to be permitted to come into this country as a refugee. They recognize, as everyone does, that there is no way in which any Government in Canada, regardless of its political persuasion, could permit all the people who want to come to Canada as immigrants or refugees to do so.

This is one of the best countries in the world in which to live. We have one of the highest standards of living. We are one of the most democratic countries in the world. Of course, people from nearly every country in the world would like to come to live in Canada. Of course, no Government could permit everyone who wants to come here to do so. We know, and these organizations which oppose this particular piece of legislation know, that there are many people who come to Canada claiming refugee status who are in fact not refugees but who come here for economic or other reasons.

We know that any Government would have to pass legislation which would permit sensible screening and inquiry with respect to the application. However, that is not what this Bill does. This Bill ignores the recommendations made by the organizations which I have listed. It ignores the recommendations made by Rabbi Gunther Plaut, who was appointed by the former Liberal Government to do a study of the whole question of refugees and how we should deal with their applications. He tabled his report after the Conservative Government took office. He made a number of very sound and sensible, humanitarian proposals. The Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration held a whole series of hearings. That committee, as every committee of this House, included a substantial majority of Conservatives. They made a number of very good recommendations. Those recommendations were almost entirely ignored by the Government in the drafting of the Bill.

The United Nations High Commission for Refugees has said that this Bill violates our agreement with the United Nations with respect to how we deal with refugees. The Government has demonstrated conclusively that it does not have a policy which is based on any kind of principles. The best illustration of that fact is how the Government dealt with two groups of people who claimed refugee status in very similar circumstances.

The first case involved the case of the Tamils who arrived by boat on the coast of Nova Scotia and who claimed refugee status. They were welcomed by the Government of Canada. They were assured by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that they would be treated in a friendly way. The assumption was made, very properly, that they would be granted refugee status.

One year later another similar group of over 100 Sikhs under similar circumstances arrived on the shores of Nova Scotia. This time they were given the cold shoulder. We were told that they were not genuine refugees and that they would not be granted refugee status quickly and easily. Why? They were in the same circumstance as was the earlier group. The Government listened to what it thought was the feelings of Canadians. It came to the conclusion that the Canadian people had had enough and that they wanted to get tough with so-called refugees. The Government felt that Canadians did not want to let these people in. Thus the Government changed its position and brought in this legislation.

Groups which have opposed this type of legislation have made it clear that they want the Government to deal with refugee claimants fairly, humanely, honestly and expeditiously. They have not said that every person who claims that he or she is a refugee should be permitted to stay in Canada. The Government has demonstrated its inability not only to adopt the policy based on any principle but to deal with cases which arise quickly, fairly and expeditiously.

I remind Hon. Members that several years ago there were hundreds of Portuguese flying into Canada claiming refugee status. They claimed that they were Jehovah's Witnesses and as such were being persecuted and prosecuted in Portugal. That was obviously and patently untrue. It took the Government months before it made a simple decision which would have stopped such nonsense. All it had to do was to put in place a regulation stating that people wishing to come from Portugal had to have a visa, one which they could obtain from the Canadian Embassy in Portugal. The Government did not do that.

A similar situation occurred when hundreds of people came to Canada from Turkey claiming that they were being prosecuted and persecuted. This occurred at a time when Turkey was moving to a more democratic system of Government. They did not appear in Canada when Turkey was under military rule, when people were being arrested, imprisoned and worse. Again, the Government took forever before it insisted that people coming to Canada from Turkey had to have a visa.

The Government has demonstrated that it does not know what to do and how to deal with refugees. It has failed to do it and continues to fail to do it. As I indicated to my friend in the case of the terrorist, of course, he cannot be a genuine refugee. Of course he cannot be permitted to stay in Canada, because he was involved in a terrorist activity. He was arrested. He was charged. He was tried and convicted. He was sentenced. He served time in prison. He hid all of this from the Canadian authorities in the Department of Immigration and officers in the security service when he was asked to give information about his record. It is obvious that the Government in bringing forward this Bill has brought forward a Bill which is deficient in most of its major provisions.

What should there be in this Bill? What is wrong with it? There is no provision for any meaningful appeal process. Given the decision that the Supreme Court of Canada made today on the question of abortion, and although I am not a lawyer, I am certain that if and when this Bill passes there will be appeals to the courts by people who wish to be granted refugee status because there are provisions in the Bill which violate the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms which is now part of the Constitution. This is something with which the Canadian Bar Association agrees.

There is no provision in the Bill for humanitarian or compassionate cases, something that exists in the present Act. This Bill puts emphasis on whether the applicant for refugee status stopped in a safe third country. What that means is that we in this independent country of Canada will permit to an alarming extent the type of decisions we make was to be made by another country.

There are thousands of people who are in the United States as refugees who have come from Chile or some of the Central American countries such as El Salvador, Nicaragua or other countries with respect to which the American Government refuses to recognize refugees under its laws. Since those people have moved from the country where they used to live to the United States, which is a safe third country, when they come to our country under the provisions of this Bill they could be denied refugee status. This is so not because they are refugees coming from the countries which they have left because of political persecution or other reasons but because they were already in the United States, which is a safe third country.

I wish to tell Hon. Members that in the United States members of a number of churches, including the Roman Catholic Church and the Mennonites, who have been involved in helping these refugees whom the United States consider to be illegal have been charged with offences under American law as interpreted by the Reagan administration. They have been taken to court and found guilty of aiding people who are illegally in the country. If this Bill is passed, it will mean that Canada could be co-operating with that type of action which is being taken by the United States. I want to tell Hon. Members that I certainly intend to have no part in that kind of situation.

Let me conclude by saying what I indicated earlier. The Government has rejected many of the proposals of the parliamentary committee which dealt with this question. As I also indicated earlier, a majority of the members of the committee were Conservative Members. They proposed in their report that there should be a swift and fair system of refugee status determination. They also proposed that a refugee claimant should be sent directly to the refugee board without a lot of immigration procedures, and that the board could decide on that status having been trained and authorized to do so. The Immigration Department could take over from there and either admit the person on refugee grounds or, if there are no other humanitarian grounds, expel the person from the country. According to the committee, that would have required only four months, not the years it presently takes. The Government rejected that.

Members of the committee suggested that there should be an immigration adjudicator who would be a member of the refugee division, to examine the eligibility and credibility of the claimant. That person would not judge the merits of his or claim, but only whether he or she could be safe in another country through which he or she passed and should be removed to that country, or whether the country from which the claimant is fleeing is in fact one which does not produce refugees. That suggestion was rejected by the Government, as were almost all others.

When the Bill went to the Senate, hearings were held on it. With the exception of representatives of the Department and the Government, I understand that virtually all other submissions by witnesses as individuals or organizations pointed out the faults in the Bill and called for amendments, which were approved in the main by the Senate. Some of the most responsible organizations in the country, including the churches, the Labour Congress, and the Canadian Bar Association, have called for those amendments. As I have indicated, those suggestions embodied in the amendments have almost entirely been rejected by the Government.

I want to say again, as have other members of the New Democratic Party, that we opposed the original Bill and that we continue to oppose what is contained in the present motion.

Mr. Blaikie: I should like to make a comment, Mr. Speaker. One thing which amazed me about the Government's response to the criticism of this Bill has been its complete unwillingness to admit the unjustified nature of putting a great many church people in the situation in which it is going to put them by passing this legislation. It makes no distinction, as I understand it, between those who aid and abet or help someone, who they believe is a legitimate refugee but may not have the appropriate documents, and people who, for money or for other less justifiable reasons, knowingly bring people into the country who do not have documents without any conviction that they are legitimate refugees. The Government has not made that kind of distinction. It did not make it when it first brought in the legislation.

It has, for reasons which are completely mysterious to me, resisted any attempts to clarify the legislation in a way which would make it possible for a great many otherwise law-abiding, decent Canadians, most of whom are active in one Canadian church or another, to work actively within a network that sometimes extends through the church all the way down to Central America, for instance, and to help people who are legitimate refugees get into the country. They do not smuggle in these people in that sense. They do not do anything clandestine. As soon as a person comes to this country, they take that person without documents directly to the nearest immigration office and say: "We have reason to believe that this person has a legitimate refugee claim". Everything is above board and everything is on the table, yet these people are to be classified as criminals under this legislation.

For the life of me I cannot understand why the Government will not make a distinction between those kinds of people and the people who everyone agrees should be curbed by the law, people who are organizing one scam or another for getting people into the country who do not have, and no one believes to have, a legitimate claim to being a refugee.

I do not know whether the Government is planning some kind of persecution of the churches in Canada. One starts to wonder after a while just what is coming down the road. the Minister says that that is not what they have in mind and that they would not do that sort of thing. If that is so, then why not clarify the legislation so that it would not be possible for them to do it? I just do not understand.

I think it is one of the more reprehensible aspects of this Bill alongside its reprehensibility in respect of the way it treats the human rights of refugees.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I should just like to advise the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) that I gave him an extra five minutes on debate, so I hope he will complete his answer and we can continue with debate.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) for his remarks. He has highlighted a very important point.

The Government does not seem to understand that there is a tremendous difference. The captains of the ships which brought the Tamils and the Sikhs to Canada did it for the money they made, and they should be prosecuted to the full extent of the law. There is a vast difference between them and the people about whom my colleague has just spoken.

In Winnipeg there is an interchurch committee on refugees. I know some of these people. They are prominent in the Anglican Church, the United Church, and the Roman Catholic Church. They help people who get into Canada to establish themselves. They provide them with clothing, if needed, and help them to find home and eventually jobs. There is a Mennonite living in the Town of Morden. There is no more a Tory area of Canada than that part of Manitoba. Although I never discussed it with him, I am 99 per cent certain that he voted Conservative in the last election. He spends a good deal of his time and effort in helping people who come to Canada as refugees. They come here, having been helped by other churches to get from Central America to Canada. He and the people in Winnipeg have made clear that, although under the provisions of the Bill they could be prosecuted and sent to jail for helping people without proper documentation who come here as refugees, they will continue to do the work they have done because they believe it is right and proper.

The present Minister says that the Government has no intention of prosecuting such people. I believe him when he says that. However, when he is no longer the Minister and another Government is in power, that legislation, if passed, will be on the books and a Government could prosecute and send to jail people who help refugees. It is for that kind of reason that we are so determined to oppose the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments have now terminated. Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), I should like to make an announcement.

DISPOSITION OF PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have received written notice from the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) that he is unable to move his motion during the hour provided for Private Members' Business on Friday, January 29, 1988. ## IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Marchi (p. 12340).

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in examining this issue, I am very happy that my colleague, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), is here. From the perspective of the Liberal Party he has been leading the fight.

In an analysis of what I have to say, even after the amendments that have been accepted by the Government, Bill C-84 is a very bad Bill. I think we have to look at the political context. If we recall last summer, some of us were working in Hamilton on a by-election and others were lounging on beaches across the country or enjoying their vacations with their families when we were called back to Parliament allegedly to deal with an emergency issue. It was an emergency issue that in my estimation the Government trumped up in response to a situation which saw a number of refugees coming to Canada by boat. Rather than following the recommendations of the refugee study that had been conducted by Rabbi Gunther Plaut, the Government chose to ignore the whole issue during the three first years of its mandate and then, all of a sudden, came forward with emergency legislation in late summer which was supposed to deal with an emergency situation. It was so urgent that the Bill dragged on and on and the Government did not move ahead as quickly as it said it would.

In the meantime, what we have seen is certainly a great degree of public concern about some of the policies that touch immigration in Canada. I think those are valid concerns. But unfortunately I believe the Conservative Government has been exploiting those legitimate concerns of Canadians about having a fair and equitable system. It has been mixing apples and oranges, if I can use the analogy. The Government has been mixing apples and oranges because it has been reaching out claiming somehow that the opposition Parties have been delaying passage of legislation which would improve the situation.

Mr. Horner: Haven't they?

Ms. Copps: In fact, what we have been trying to do is to continue the long tradition that we have in Canada of reasonable laws to deal with immigration in an open way and to deal with refugees in a sympathetic way and in a manner which has been historical in our country.

You will recall that Canada is the only country that as a nation has been recognized internationally for its contribution to those people who fled from Vietnam by boat, the so-called boat people. We were recognized internationally because, among all other nations, we reached out from our pocket books, as church groups and from our hearts as individuals and decided to mount a massive campaign assisted by the Government to permit legitimate refugees to settle in Canada. We have had a long and proud tradition of accepting not only immigrants who come to Canada through the normal application process, applying from their native countries, but we have also had a long and cherished tradition of accepting the stateless, the homeless and people who have nowhere else to do. I think this is a tradition we want to continue. That is why we cannot support the Bill currently before the House in the terms of Bill C-84.

There are two major flaws to Bill C-84. I think it is important we discuss them. At first blush I do not think the public, not even the politicians, always understand the nuances of the difference between an immigration policy and a refugee policy. In my own riding I spent a lot of time trying to assist people who would like to bring relatives from other countries. They look at people who come by boat and say, "Hey, this person is somehow getting ahead of me. He is jumping the queue. He should wait, stand in line and take his turn". But we know quite clearly that there are two streams for entry into Canada. One is the immigration process. Every year, through the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), a number is established for immigrants who want to come to Canada from other countries. I personally believe that the number we establish generally is far too low. My friend the critic from the riding of York West may correct me but I believe on average we usually accept somewhere in the neighbourhood of about 200,000 people who emigrate from other countries. In my own case I was privileged to be able to sponsor a spouse from another country. That is the process that we have in place for general immigration and for family reunification. These are objectives that should be lauded.

On the other hand we have always recognized as a people that there are difficult political situations and different kinds of immigration solutions. Hence we have established a process to permit refugees to come to Canada in a way that is different from the way in which we assist the normal immigration process. For example, if you are required to flee your country with only the shirt on your back to save your life you cannot always apply with the proper documentation. I have friends in Hamilton who fled from Vietnam and I was involved with a group who sponsored them. They came to Canada with only the shirts on their backs. They literally left Vietnam in the dead of night, escaping a rule that was not acceptable to them, and they came to Canada and were accepted as refugees. They did move ahead of the normal immigration process because they did not have a homeland. They were stateless people, floating around in a boat.

While, on the one hand, you could argue that we should assist the Government in its objective to make sure that people who come to Canada and claim refugee status are legitimate refugees, but, on the other hand, how can we allow that process to be established if we pass a law which says we will turn the boat away?

Let us examine that for a moment, Mr. Speaker. You will remember this very sad story in the Second World War of the boat full of Jewish refugees that went from port to port and country to country getting turned away at every place. Hopefully, as Canadians, when we turned that boatload of Jewish refugees away, we learned a lesson. We said that in the future if a person or a group of people come to our shores and wanted to claim refugee status, we owed them the responsibility of due process.

If we turn a boat away, which is the intention of the Government's amendment, in violation of U.N. conventions, not only are we denying due process but we are assisting the very people whom, we claim, we want to put out of business. If I were the captain of a boat, a mercenary, and I wanted to drop a boatload of refugees or alleged refugees off the shores of Canada and I knew Canadians would turn the boat away, I would drop the people off farther offshore so that I was not in Canadian waters and I would get away with it. Captains of boats are receiving cash on demand, payable in advance. The boat owner is often running, probably having skimmed millions of dollars from refugees or would-be refugees who have sought passage on the boat, and is scot-free in another country merely because he drops refugees outside the 200 mile limit. The refugees or would-be refugees may drown, they may reach our shores and they may be dealt with in the due process at that time.

• (1700)

We are suggesting what we think is a more reasonable amendment, that would be, to throw the owner in jail, seize the boat and dispose of its assets for the Crown. That will make the boat owner realize that he cannot rip off would-be refugees and exploit the poor and homeless. That is why we are proposing these amendments.

I realize that my time is up so I will resume tomorrow.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member will have 10 minutes left in debate plus 10 minutes in questions and comments.

It being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--BILLS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North) moved that Bill C-264, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (instruments and literature for illicit drug use) be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am here this afternoon to begin debate on second reading of what I feel is a very important Bill which I introduced for first reading on September 14, 1987. I do not have to tell you about the problem that exists in Canada, Mr. Speaker. I know that you as a long time Member of the House know that there is a very, very serious drug abuse problem in Canada, a problem which affects all Canadians but mainly young Canadians. It is the young Canadians I am trying to protect by bringing in this Bill.

This problem has been discussed many times in the House in recent months. I do not think that any one of the 282 Members of the House would refute its importance. We all know the social and economic cost of drug abuse. I could quote reams and reams of statistics showing that drug use is on the rise. Drug seizures by police forces in Canada measured in kilograms show that in 1981, 38.528 kilograms of cocaine were seized. In 1986, that figure was 102.686. In 1981, 7.154 kilograms of heroin were seized, and in 1986, the figure was 44.482. It is on the rise and we know that. We are facing a very, very serious problem.

Many people have studied this problem. The Health and Welfare Committee studied it at length and came to certain conclusions and recommendations. I think it is time some action was taken on them.

As a Member of Parliament, and I think I am fairly typical, I have commiserated with parents of young people who were in foreign jails for attempting to smuggle cocaine. I have talked with them and tried to console them. I have tried to arrange consular visits. Recently I was with the Justice Committee in Kingston and spoke with a young woman in the women's penitentiary there. She was 35 years of age and told me that she started on drugs when she was 15 and had been an addict since. It had led her to the women's penitentiary. She cried when she spoke to me.

I do not think there is anyone in the House who does not know of a family in his or her community who has been touched by drug abuse. I think that this is the most serious situation we face. How can we expect to be a country that can compete with all other industrialized countries in the world on a free trade basis when our youth are subjected to drugs?

Most of these drugs are cultivated elsewhere and are brought into Canada. There is a constant supply of them. If there is no demand for them, the supply will cease. Sometimes it is very difficult, but if we could educate our children to say no to the supply that constantly exists, brought in by unscrupulous people, the supply would dry up because the demand would not be there. Sometimes, though, adolescents do not have the self-assurance or self-confidence to say no to things like this and therefore become involved.

I would like to tell the House where the inconsistency arises. Everyone knows that cocaine and heroin are illegal substances. At the same time, there are stores across Canada that sell drug paraphernalia. Believe me, there are not just one or two of them but hundreds of them. In Ontario, there are 300 and in Alberta there are 100. There are some in the Yukon and they are moving into the smaller communities as well.

How can it be that a substance like cocaine is illegal while at the same time it is perfectly legal to sell drug paraphernalia anywhere in Canada, down on Rideau Street, on Yonge Street in Toronto and in Mississauga, I am sure, although I have not looked? These shops are called head shops by the youth. This comes from the word "pothead". In the 1960s, drug addicts were called potheads.

There are head shops where one can buy all of the drug paraphernalia one needs. We know that cocaine is illegal and that crack is made by mixing cocaine with caustic soda and water and boiling it. I do not know exactly how it is done, but it is a very dangerous drug. It has to be smoked in a pyrex pipe with a screen. These pipes can be purchased in these stores. There are many things including dispensers for cocaine and razor blades that do not fit any razors that are used to line up and mix cocaine. These can be bought anywhere.

Parents Against Drugs was the organization which so effective impressed me with the seriousness of the problem of drug paraphernalia in Canada, and that is what we are here today to debate. This Bill is a very small, concise Bill. It calls for an amendment to the Criminal Code of Canada to prohibit the sale of drug paraphernalia. I believe it is a good Bill.

I believe that there are shopkeepers who have drug paraphernalia on their shelves who, if they come to realize the heartbreak and misery these paraphernalia bring to the youth of Canada and their parents, will take them off their shelves and will replace them with something else. However, I also believe that there are unscrupulous people who do not care if they leave a trail of heartbreak behind them. They are in it for the money. They set up these shops next to video arcades where young people happen to be and they glamorize drug use. They sell products which tell the youth of our nation that drugs are the greatest thing that ever happened and that without drugs they cannot get along. These shops must be closed.

If I may, I would like to refer to the testimony of Assistant Commissioner Heaton of the RCMP before a Standing Committee of this House. He said:

> I think if we are really serious about the drug problem, there is probably no better place to start than to look at the drug paraphernalia. At a time when we put forth preventive education of our young people as a priority, there is an industry that thrives in this country delivering a completely contradictory message. We permit retail outlets that are called "head shops" to operate, and they distribute literature, equipment, and material to facilitate and enhance the use of illicit drugs. The paradox of such an industry is all too obvious. It relies on the message of drugs and their glamour for youth, and it delivers a message that really is directly opposite to what needs to be taught.

● (1710)

I do not think anyone in this House objects to closing these shops. Every one of the 282 Members must know that if we are going to combat drug abuse effectively we must get on with it.

We have had calls for the banning of head shops by witnesses from the RCMP, the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police, the Ontario Association of Chiefs of Police, Alcohol and Drug Concerns Inc., Parents Against Drug Abuse, the Ontario Secondary School Principals Council, the Ontario Association of Home and School Associations, Youth Alcohol and Drug Community Action, and many others. I believe this is something the Government must do during this mandate.

I would like to pay special tribute to Mrs. Joan Gitterman of Parents Against Drugs who wrote me a letter asking me to become involved. I have spoken at banquets and meetings of that organization and, believe me, I think every Member of this House should vote in favour of this amendment to the Criminal Code.

The Bill is only two pages and I will read the explanatory note:

> The purpose of this Bill is to prohibit commerce in illicit drug paraphernalia. At present, although narcotics and certain drugs are outlawed, literature glamorizing their use and devices and kits facilitating it are freely available in so-called "head shops" and elsewhere.

If an addict came to a town and did not know where to get a drug supply, where would be the obvious place to go? I think he would go to a head shop where he would be directed to where he could get a supply of the drugs he needs.

We have in Canada today an outrageous number of addicts. In Alberta, the province you represent, Mr. Speaker, there are over 2,000 heroin addicts alone. There are over 2,000 in Metropolitan Toronto. These lives are being wasted. These are people Canada needs and I would hate to see any more of our youth brought to the use and abuse of drugs because of these head shops. I call on every Member of this House to stand in his or her place and vote with me to bring about the abolition of the sale of drug paraphernalia and thereby cut down on drug abuse in this country.

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-264, introduced by my friend the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner), addresses an issue which is both important and delicate. The purpose of this bill is to prohibit commerce in illicite drugs paraphernalia. At present, although narcotics and certain drugs are outlawed, literature glamorizing their use and devices and kits facilitating it are freely available in so-called "head shops" and elsewhere. I intend to deal quickly with the problem of drug abuse in Canada as well as those connected with the sale of drug paraphernalia. First of all, I want to congragulate the Hon. Member for his interest in this matter. All those presents realize the importance of the drug abuse problem in Canada.

I certainly feel very strongly about the drug abuse problem in Canada. Such recent events as the announcement by the Government of a national strategy against drugs have caused me and many Canadian people to ponder the general issue of drug abuse.

We are aware that the drug abuse problem in Canada is both complex and old; it includes the use of illicit drugs as well as the uncontrolled consumption of alcohol and prescription drugs. The social cost of drug abuse on individuals is enormous. The detrimental effects of drug abuse on individuals, families and communities through highway accidents causing injuries and death, and threaten the security of the work place.

I will emphasize that over the past years, the most monstrous and frightening crimes were commited following the use of drugs.

Concerning illicit drugs, we know that a great many Canadians are using them socially. This habit has taken such proportions, especially among the young people of high school and college age, that the use of some of these drugs, especially marijuana, is almost part of the social mores.

The number of users has increased in spite of two decades of severe penalties, a strict enforcement of the legislation and increased police powers. This has brought many people to conclude that current legislation have been unable to discourage the use of drugs. The present penal system, as established under the Narcotic Control Act as well as the Food and Drug Act, prohibits the use, distribution and production of narcotics, controlled drugs and restricted drugs.

All offences created by those statutes are indictable offences or hybrid offences, that is offences that could be prosecuted by way of indictment or by way of summary conviction.

The penalties are very serious and include a maximum seven-year imprisonment for drug possession, life imprisonment for drug trafficking and possession for trafficking purposes and a maximum seven-year imprisonment for growing common opium poppy or marijuana, that is cannabis.

Aware of the problem, the federal Government announced in May last year a five-year action plan against drug abuse that involves $210 million. The federal plan will bring new resources to fund initiatives in the area of public information, treatment and rehabilitation, law enforcement and research at the international, national, provincial and community levels.

The work of police forces and federal and provincial government agencies has not been in vain. We see the trends in illicit drugs usage change. For instance, young people seem to use fewer and fewer illicit drugs. A recent study by the Addiction Research Foundation of Ontario looked at alcohol and drug usage by Ontario teenagers in 1987 and the trends observed in that area since 1977. It considered the consumption habits of 4,267 students of the seventh, ninth, eleventh and thirteenth grades. Researchers have found that consumption had gone down between 1985 and 1987, which confirms the trend first noted in 1979.

The amendments to the Criminal Code proposed by my hon. colleague for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner) are well-intentioned. However, this anti-drug paraphernalia Bill is very vague. It refers to the devices generally, but without describing them or giving a complete list. Such lack of precision would only cause serious problems to the police officers responsible for enforcing the proposed amendments. I recognize that the battle has not yet been won although there seems to be a downward trend in drug use. We have to remain vigilant as concerns the problem of drug abuse and continue the fight against illicit drugs in accordance with the guidelines of the federal action plan against drug abuse. In this regard, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has announced a review of the whole issue of illicit drug paraphernalia. The results of this review should be known later this year. This is why I believe that consideration of the Bill introduced by my hon. colleague should be delayed until the results of the review being carried out by the Minister of Justice are known.

[English]

Mr. Jim Caldwell (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner) for presenting this Bill. We all realize, from his speech and from his past interest in this subject, the seriousness with which he presents it. The Member speaks with some authority. He represents one of the biggest urban ridings in Canada and I am sure he has come in contact with many people experiencing this problem which we have, especially in our urban areas. The Member also speaks with authority as a former law enforcement officer. He had a distinguished career with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

With all of that in mind, we must take this Bill very seriously. It is not a trivial matter as some people may perceive it. At one time or another we all come in contact with the problems which drug abuse has created in our society. We often perceive it to be a teenage problem, but that is not the case because it is not only teenagers who are involved with drugs today. There are people who are not yet teenagers who get involved with drugs.

As the Hon. Member for Mississauga North pointed out, while head shops do not sell drugs, they certainly give the indication that that is what that paraphernalia will be used for. As he pointed out additionally, while they do not sell drugs, I am sure that if you wanted to find out where drugs were sold they would be among the better places to find out. I am not saying that all head shops perform that service, but they are in the business of selling paraphernalia which will be used in the selling and glamorization of drugs.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga North has introduced this Bill to amend the Criminal Code. The purpose of the Bill is to prohibit commerce in illicit drugs paraphernalia. As we all know, although narcotics and certain drugs are prohibited, books and other literature glamorizing the use of these drugs and devices and kits facilitating the use of these drugs are presently freely available in what we call head shops in many of our major urban areas.

The introduction of this Bill is very timely. As you know, the issue of drug abuse is a very serious one on which the Government has recently taken a great deal of action. You may recall that not long ago the Government announced its national drug strategy whereby it indicated its very real intent to come to terms with the drug abuse problem in the country. The issue of drug paraphernalia is closely related to the whole problem of drug abuse.

Many of us are aware that several states in the United States have adopted anti-drug paraphernalia legislation. Accordingly, for the next few moments I would like to outline some of the actions that U.S. authorities have taken.

Accessories for drug use include pipes, water-pipes, rolling papers, clips, mirrors, razor blades, and a host of gadgets to aid in the preparation, storage, and consumption of controlled substances. These items first became commercially available on a relatively small scale in the mid-1960s in boutiques and record stores. As the popularity of paraphernalia grew, so did the number of stores that sold them. Some shops began to appear that carried nothing else. These stores in particular came to be known as head shops. There were several thousand of them in the United States in the early 1970s.

While the paraphernalia industry grew, opposition began to be voiced by concerned parents, religious leaders, and government officials. Initially the resistance was weak and much of it disorganized. As long as shops were small and relatively inconspicuous they attracted little attention, but by the 1970s head shops could be found in suburban malls and in respectable neighbourhoods.

The first organized group to oppose the paraphernalia industry emerged in Georgia in 1977 under the name of Dekalb Families in Action. They argued that the entire industry was in conflict with the government policy of controlling drugs and that head shops give young people the impression that drug use is socially acceptable. Similar groups organized in other parts of the country and pressed local Governments for ordinances prohibiting the sale of drug accouterments.

Between 1977 and 1979 many municipalities and three states passed laws prohibiting the possession and distribution of paraphernalia. These first statutes were inevitably struck down as being unconstitutional. In May, 1979, the White House requested that the Department of Justice's Drug Enforcement Agency attempt to develop a constitutionally permissible approach to the control of paraphernalia.

The DEA's response to the White House request was to develop a model drug paraphernalia Act. Hearings were held before the House Select Committee on Narcotics and Drug Abuse control in November, 1979, to review the model Act. The committee concluded its review by finding that the paraphernalia industry contributed to the flagrant and harmful use of drugs and found that the model Act was necessary to eradicate the paraphernalia industry.

However, it was suggested that the problem of drug paraphernalia would be better addressed by state and local government initiatives. Because many state and local anti-paraphernalia laws had been struck down as unconstitutional, the DEA developed the model Act which could then be adopted into the state anti-drug statutes.

I would like to go over some of the basic provisions of the American model Act. First, it provides a comprehensive definition of the term "drug paraphernalia" with specific descriptions of the most common forms of paraphernalia. It outlines the relevant factors a court or other authority should consider in determining whether an object comes within that definition. It makes the manufacturer, advertisement, delivery, or use of drug paraphernalia a criminal offence. It makes the delivery of drug paraphernalia to a minor—that being a person under the age of 18 years—a special offence.

The Act it defines clearly what conduct is prohibited regarding the manufacture, advertisement, delivery, or use of drug paraphernalia and specifies what criminal state of mind must accompany such conduct. It also provides for the civil seizure and forfeiture of drug paraphernalia.

In addition, local Governments in the United States have also taken the initiative by adopting zoning and licensing regulations that bar sales of drug paraphernalia to minors, limiting the type of advertising and display of drug paraphernalia items, and controlling where head shops can be located. Such regulations are similar to those governing pornography shops and adult theatres.

I will cite some examples of the municipal exercise of this jurisdiction. A Philadelphia ordinance requires zoning board approval to open a head shop within 1,000 feet of a school, church, or library. In Massachusetts there is an ordinance which requires current paraphernalia merchants to be licensed and prevents new stores from offering the merchandise. In Illinois there is an ordinance which makes it unlawful to sell or display paraphernalia in premises in close proximity—that being 1,500 feet—to any public or private school, daycare centre, nursery, church, synagogue or any place of worship, park, or liquor licence seeker.

Alternatively, municipalities in Florida and New Jersey adopted anti-paraphernalia ordinances that include bans against the promotion or advertisement of drug paraphernalia. Given the wide-ranging initiatives that have developed at the local government level in the United States, it is encouraging to note that the Supreme Court of Canada has recently ruled as constitutional a provincial prohibition of nude dancing that was a condition of issuance of a liquor licence. This case would appear to endorse local government initiatives to regulate illicit activities without falling into constitutionally prohibited areas.

I hope that municipalities across Canada have taken a good look at this decision to assess their competence to deal with the problem of drug paraphernalia merchants. I am sure that the study group that is being created by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) will also be looking at this new development.

• (1730)

At the same time as U.S. legislative initiatives were developed, the industry that was involved in the manufacture and distribution of so-called neutral products that could be adopted for use in the ingestion or storage of controlled drugs adopted a responsible position of self regulation. The Suggested Paraphernalia Industry Guidelines stated that smoking-related products and other novelty items should not be advertised or merchandised with any reference or illustration involving: the possible illegal use of the products; any illegal drugs or substances; or claims that the product can increase the strength or effectiveness of illegal drugs or substances.

The retail seller of smoking-related products and other novelty items should: post signs prominently indicating "smoking-related items not sold to minors"; require proper identification if a customer's age is in question; instruct sales personnel that customer requests for specific illegal products such as hash pipes, marijuana rolling papers, cocaine spoons, should be courteously turned aside while indicating that pipes, rolling papers and other novelty items are available.

This is a short review of the experience that our neighbours to the south have had. It is clear that the road to creation of legislative responses to the problem of drug paraphernalia has not been smooth. Given the extent to which American constitutional jurisprudence is being accepted in Canadian courts, it is appropriate to review their initiatives and judicial responses.

I want to compliment the Member for Mississauga North for bringing this to our attention in the Chamber. I hope the Government takes his initiatives seriously. All of us realize that there is a problem and I emphasize again that these head shops are there for only one purpose. We know why they exist and, as far as I am concerned, it is time the Government took a serious look at the Hon. Member's Bill, and, if not pass it, do something in this particular area.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed due to the work of a thoughtful and concerned Member that this Private Members' Bill is introduced dealing with the paraphernalia used in the consumption of illicit drugs. I want to congratulate him for his foresight.

I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak in support of the Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner) who has introduced this amendment to the Criminal Code. The purpose of this Bill is to prohibit the sale of drug-related paraphernalia.

Presently, the sale of such material is not prohibited by any specific provision of the Criminal Code, Food and Drugs Act or Narcotic Control Act even though the sale, possession and use of illicit drugs is clearly prohibited.

This obviously leads to a perceived contradiction relating to the federal Government's approach to the drug problem. On the one hand, illicit drugs are rigorously controlled by law, while on the other hand, the accessories used to consume or otherwise ingest these drugs are being allowed to be openly marketed in stores across Canada. I believe that is a frightening situation and, accordingly, I am very sympathetic with the underlying motives of my colleague in introducing this Bill.

I want to take a few moments to discuss the broad problem of drug paraphernalia and the drug problem on the whole.

During the past 50 years public pressure to control drug abuse has waxed and waned. In the 1960s and 1970s, marijuana use appeared to receive a degree of acceptance in some quarters. Later, cocaine took on an unprecedented fashionability, again in some quarters. While heroin continued to be feared and loathed, attitudes were still sufficiently permissive that the controlled distribution of synthetic opiates such as methadone to confirmed addicts became acceptable.

Head shops, purveying intriguing and attractive paraphernalia for the storage, preparation and ingestion of drugs, emerged as symbols of the apparent acceptance of drug use. Therein lies the danger.

Thus, the paraphernalia industry is a merchandising outgrowth of the phenomena of the expansion of so-called recreational drug use in the United States and Canada over the last 25 years. The industry's history really begins in the counter culture movement of the United States during the mid 1960's, which most Members will recall. Its development parallels the emergence of "alternative lifestyles" which were reflected in the credo developed by the "guru" of the sixties, Dr. Timothy Leary who encouraged the youth of North America to "tune in, turn on and drop out". I wonder how many lives were destroyed with that simple misguided philosophy.

Much of this counter-prevailing attitude was fostered by a substantial degree of disfavour with the involvement of the United States in the Vietnam conflict. Anyone old enough will remember the spill-over effect of this conflict into Canada. Clearly I recall it because much of the spill-over effect was felt in Kootenay West. The occupation and destruction of equipment at the computer centre of Sir George Williams University in Montreal in 1969 is a classic example which comes to mind. It was a time of considerable malaise in North America. It was a time of social confusion and absence of direction.

Extensive use of marijuana, cocaine and other drugs has created enormous social, health and legal problems. There are factions that proclaim the dangerous consequences of all non-medical drug use as well as those that advocate the legalization and availability of all substances. I would certainly oppose the use of these dangerous drugs.

Other lobby groups for the reform of marijuana laws have been active. In certain American states, civil fines have been substituted for criminal penalties resulting from possession of small amounts of marijuana. There are persuasive studies to show that the use of marijuana may be more harmful than thought 10 or 20 years ago. Yet it continues to be a cash crop in my riding, referred to as "Kootenay Green".

One of the more visible repercussions of the drug revolution has been the multimillion dollar industry that has developed to supply the equipment used to grow, process, store, conceal and use illicit drugs and to profit from the demands of their customers. The manufacturers, most of whom are in the United States, and retailers of these implements associated with so-called recreational drug use are new entrepreneurs who acknowledge, thankfully, the precarious nature of their prosperity and unfortunately capitalize on their connection with illegal activities of the illicit drug industry.

"Paraphernalia" is not a precise term. Even when limited to drugs, paraphernalia can refer to equipment for legal or illegal administration of legal or illegal substances. For example, hypodermic needles can be used to inject medically approved drugs as well as illicit substances such as heroin. Alligator clips that have a legitimate use in the electronic and hobby industry are also perfectly suited as a "roach clip" in the smoking of marijuana cigarettes. A kitchen spoon becomes drug paraphernalia when used to snort cocaine and cook heroin. There is a great deal of difficulty, therefore, in defining exactly what is drug paraphernalia.

The industry that manufactures, distributes and sells the drug paraphernalia has limited itself to the creation of an enormous and varied number of products primarily related to the two most frequently used drugs, marijuana and cocaine. A minor interest has been shown in equipment to grow psychedelic mushrooms and to cultivate opium and various herbs, spices and teas. Generally, the paraphernalia industry does not involve itself in the selling, displaying, advertising or in any way glamorizing implements for making, storing, or administering so-called hard drugs. This includes syringes, "cookers", needles, gear for making veins more prominent and thus more easily injectable, powder-like substances for diluting narcotics, purifying equipment, and the like. However, there are complaints of products such as free-base kits for use in cocaine consumption that demonstrate a willingness on the part of these enterprises to enter the hard-drug field.

In any event, we must consider what to do in relation to any use of paraphernalia associated with all illicit drugs. What has not been mentioned so far in this debate is that the use of these syringes and needles for the injection of drugs often means, in the drug addict community, a sharing of the needle or syringe. It is in that fashion that the deadly virus, commonly referred to as AIDS, is transmitted. So, apart from the application of some of this paraphernalia for the sole purpose of taking drugs, there is, as a consequence, in some parts of our society, a very terrible risk of the continued escalation of the virus AIDS.

The Drug Paraphernalia Model Act which was developed by the American Department of Justice, which was expected to deal with the broad problem of drug paraphernalia, has been subjected to a considerable number of court challenges. The rationale behind these court challenges is really quite simple. The description or definition of "paraphernalia" is excessively vague and imprecise, thus, the model Act runs afoul of the U.S. Constitution's Fourteenth Amendment's guarantee of due process. The problem is clearly stated in the judgment of the United States Court of Appeal, Seventh Circuit, in 1982: He reads:

> The difficulty that has plagued draftsmen of drug paraphernalia ordinances is how to control traffic in drug-related equipment without also proscribing wholly innocent conduct. Mirrors, spoons, pipes and cigarette papers are all multiple-purpose items. A statute that has no ambiguities will reach only the most obvious items of drug paraphernalia, while a statute that casts a broader net may be too vague.

While the United States Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of a similar definition of paraphernalia in a regulatory scheme requiring the registration of paraphernalia sales, the court has not ruled on the model Act's attempt to prohibit and criminalize the paraphernalia trade. The national drug strategy announced by this Government in May of last year, I hope will resolve the problem. It is a multi-faceted attack on the drug problem in Canada. The development and funding of innovative approaches to the demanding side of the problem by means of education programs, including media communication, are now operating for all to see. In addition, I am hopeful that the specific use of drug paraphernalia which is now being addressed by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) will add further enlightenment to the process.

Drug paraphernalia availability is a matter that concerns all the citizens of Canada. It concerns this Government, and this Government, in my view, will act upon it in a responsible way to the satisfaction of responsible Canadian citizens.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to praise the concern expressed in this Bill by its proponent. I think it can be said that most Canadians share his concern about the issue of drug abuse in Canada.

I would just like to say that it is important to recognize that quite recently a report of the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare entitled Booze, Pills and Dope was released, which dealt with the issue before us today. Given what has been said in reference to this Bill, I think it is important to refer to the report because a good deal of what is said reflects a stereotyping of drug abuse. In oral testimony and in briefs presented to the standing committee, witnesses expressed special concern about the extent and severity of the abuse of alcohol which, it became clear from those representations, is the most widely abused drug in Canada, to the extent of around 95 per cent. Perhaps there is an error in focus here. In fact, we seem inclined to ignore the real problems, and those problems, in addition to alcohol, would include the over-the-counter sale of legal drugs that are abused far more than marijuana or cocaine.

I would like to point out that a great many recommendations were made in our report which, by the way, had the unanimous agreement of representatives from all Parties with no one dissenting. I would just like to say that there are a number of recommendations one might have hoped would have become the subject of a Private Member's Bill. If we are to refer to the issue of drug paraphernalia, I think we should take note of the recommendation and commentary which was made with respect to drug paraphernalia in this report. The development of legislation aimed at banning drug paraphernalia is a difficult task as in most cases items of drug paraphernalia also have legitimate and non-drug applications. It was therefore recommended that instead of attempting to outlaw the ordinary items used in connection with drug use, some legislative attempt be made at dealing with the issue of head shops.

The standing committee recommended that the Minister of Justice, in co-operative efforts with his provincial counterparts, develop legislation to close head shops, commercial enterprises whose principal business is the sale of drug paraphernalia and items which describe their use and which advocate the use of illicit drugs. With respect to Bill C-264, I have to say that its drafting is almost bizarre. It is so poorly drafted that if it were to pass, I would have to suggest it would call Parliament into disrepute. It would outlaw as an instrument for illicit drug use:

> —anything designed primarily or intended under the circumstances for consuming or to facilitate the consumption of an illicit drug;

Literature for illicit drug use would also be outlawed. That means any printed matter describing or depicting and designed primarily or intended under the circumstances to promote or glamorize the production, preparation or consumption of illicit drugs. According to this suggested legislation the following items would perforce be outlawed; cigarette papers, razor blades, pipes, water pipes or otherwise, syringes, hypodermics, electrical clips, bobby pins, cigarette holders, glass tubing, rubber tubing, cigarette machines, mortars and pestles, and I am told by some, even twenty dollar bills, brand new, of course.

Let us also consider the history of literature with respect to drug use. Under some circumstances as described in this Bill, we would outlaw the following literature; A Rebours by Joris-Karl Huysman, Kubla Khan, A Vision in a Dream by Samuel Taylor Coleridge, Ulalume by Edgar Allen Poe, The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, Alice in Wonderland, by Louis Carroll, Tropic of Capricorn by Henry Miller, Naked Lunch by William S. Burroughs, On the Road by Jack Kerouac, Howl and Other Poems by Allen Ginsberg, Beneath the Underdog by Charles Mingus and The Collected Works of Billy the Kid by Michael Ondaatje, winner of the Governor General's Award for Poetry in 1971.

This legislation is a sloppy bit of draftsmanship. It should not be accepted as such. However, that does not mean that we reject the notion that an effort should be made to ban head shops. There is a possibility that that approach would have some merit. But, of course, it is outside the jurisdiction of the federal Government. It resides at the provincial level and at the municipal level.

I would commend to the Minister of Justice that, in lieu of this Bill being enacted, means be explored, with the other levels of Government, to bring about a practical attack on the matter of drug paraphernalia as it can only be done through legislation aimed at head shops.

I would like to make one more plea. If we are going to deal with the issue of drug abuse, then let us be conscious of the fact that, although it conjures up all kinds of fears and visions of kids smoking dope on the street, the real issue in Canada is not the abuse of marijuana or of cocaine, however dangerous it may be, but the abuse of alcohol by all too many without full cognizance of the dangers involved in its use and the tragedy that has been costing so many lives. If we want to do some good, then we should read the report entitled, Booze, Pills and Dope. Let us act on that. If we follow the recommendations in this report which reflect the knowledge of those who have been involved in the issue of drug abuse then we might indeed make some material progress.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be able to participate in this debate. I want to begin by saying that I agree with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), that there is a lot wrong with this Bill. That is to say that it could be extended to a degree which, as we have seen from American experience with similar Bills, would make it totally unworkable. Such items as hairpins, safety pins, books and ashtrays, as well as many other products which are innocently used in one character can be not so innocent when used in another. There will always be a problem to ensure that the subject matter is covered precisely in a Bill so that our criminal law is as clear as possible.

While it is possible to draft the Bill in a better fashion I think there is a good idea contained in it. It would be constructive to see this Bill move forward, perhaps with similar Bills which are on the Order Paper. In this way a committee could look at the issue to see whether it is possible to define with some precision a class of products whose identification with drug use is so close that it would be fair to criminalize their sale.

I would like to achieve that result because I believe that a very peculiar signal is being given by the existence and character of head shops to people across the country. We were told by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) about one year ago that there was a drug epidemic in Canada. Perhaps that was an exaggeration. Perhaps it was a bit of grandstanding by the Prime Minister. However, when we look at it we ought to be prepared as a society to do what we can to deter drug use.

Head shops are hard to explain to young people when trying to tell them that the use of hard and soft drugs is undesirable and that they ought to try to avoid their use. I want to use the criminal law not only to deter harmful conduct but to a certain extent send a signal about our views as a community on drug use.

At the present time we are looking at Bill C-51 which deals with the smoking of tobacco which is also a harmful drug. It is not a mood-altering or mind-bending type of drug but it is harmful and a killer. While considering this Bill we are also entitled to look at the use of drugs, hard and soft, and the type of paraphernalia that is associated with their use. I am not sure whether such a goal is attainable. The burden is on the mover of the Bill, on those who favour it and witnesses who come forward to convince us that we would not be launching a witch- hunt and criminalizing the use of innocent products. If a means could be found, I think it would be desirable to stop sending such a signal out and to take steps to see that we stop tolerating the use of hard and soft drugs by permitting easy access to products uniquely associated with their consumption in one form or another.

I would like to remind the House, and perhaps it has already been done, that a parliamentary committee looked at drug abuse. It made a unanimous report. That report included support for legislation of this type. It was a very general recommendation and I do not like general amendments to the Criminal Code. I want specific amendments to the Criminal Code. However, I have in mind as a goal the improvement of the signal that we are sending to young people about drug use.

I would like to conclude by saying that if one wanted to challenge me I know that making these products illegal will not stop drug use and perhaps not even reduce the access to drugs or to associated products by those who are looking for them. One cannot reduce the amount of smoking that goes on in society just by banning ashtrays or matches. That is something which no sensible person would suggest. But in this case I think there is a signal being sent out at a time when young people make their minds up about whether they want to try these products before they are addicted to them. Before they become the socially in-thing for them and their set to do I would like them to get a proper signal from the community that we oppose them.

This is a Private Member's Bill. I am only speaking for myself. However, I know that a great many of my colleagues in the Liberal Party share these concerns. We would welcome further study of the Bill in an attempt to try to find a proper descriptive formula for classifying products which could be banned, something which we are trying to do in the area of tobacco smoking.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed that we call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When this Bill is next debated, the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) will have the floor.

The hour provided for the consideration of Private Member's Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2) the order is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—ARCTIC CO-OPERATION—PROPOSALS MADE BY SOVIET UNION LEADER

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it was on October 1 of last year that Mikhail Gorbachev, the leader of the Soviet Union, made a very major speech in Murmansk in the far northwest of the Soviet Union on the Kola Peninsula, a town which is familiar to certain Canadians. It is evident that a great deal of thought and preparation went into that presentation. There were a number of new policy initiatives contained therein.

What Mr. Gorbachev was trying to do on that occasion was to take a polar view of the world rather than the view which is more familiar. He was trying to look down on the world from the polar region so to speak. He made six major points in his presentation.

• (1800)

The first two dealt with defence issues and contained a lot of the normal rhetoric which one expects. It is quite clear that the people in the Soviet bloc do not trust us in the western bloc any more than we really trust them. We would both like to work toward disarmament and a lessening of tensions, but at the same time we both want to keep our defences up. He made reference to a northern nuclear free zone at some point in time. He realized that it could not happen overnight, and he suggested methods by which this might be achieved over a number of years, or how we might start discussions toward that end. It is somewhat ironic that this proposal came from the Kola Peninsula, one of the most heavily armed parts of the world, which is literally bristling with arms. His ideas might carry a little more weight were the Soviet Union to cease and desist from sending their Bear H. bombers over to my riding.

Also he proposed in the defence field possible restrictions on naval activity in certain northern waters, or at least mechanisms leading toward that end, such as agreements on notification of naval manoeuvres and the possibility of having observers when those manoeuvres take place.

What I really want to talk about is the other four proposals in the non-military field. There was a proposal concerning co-operation in developing the natural resources of the North—oil, gas, and minerals in particular. There were offers made of possible joint business projects which might take place in the northern part of the Soviet Union. There was a proposal for a joint Arctic Scientific Council. The Soviet Union, Canada, the United States, Finland, Sweden, and Norway would be the logical participants, together with Greenland and Denmark, of course.

There was a suggestion that social sciences might be discussed as well as the physical sciences. Usually scientific co-operation with the Soviet Union has dealt with the physical sciences and engineering. They have been extremely reluctant to discuss the social sciences, history, ethnology, or that type of thing because they have their ðwn views on those particular subjects. It does not seem that they want those views contaminated by some of the views which we have in the West. It is a new initiative to talk about co-operation, especially in the field of the social sciences.

Another point was co-operation on environmental protection, which is important in the North—both water or marine protection and the necessity for having clean air in the North. A lot of contaminants seem to gravitate toward northern areas.

He proposed an extension of the system which is in place in the Baltic Sea where I understand there is a commission comprised of the seven states that border the Baltic Sea and where they co-operate to reduce environmental pollution in that particular body of water.

He suggested the possible opening up of northern sea routes with lots of ice-breaker protection, et cetera. He suggested the possible opening up of the Northeast Passage along the northern coast of the Soviet Union, which would go hand in hand with what we have in mind with the opening up of the Northwest Passage at some point in time. On January 11 we concluded an agreement with the United States of America toward that end, co-operation on navigation in arctic waters. These were important proposals that were made in Murmansk. I know, because I was in the Soviet Union with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) some years ago, that there are existing agreements dealing with scientific and cultural exchanges. These are good and are working reasonably well. There is no reason that we cannot improve upon them, extend and invite more countries to get involved, the other northern countries, Scandinavia, the United States, et cetera.

• (1805)

There has been a fair amount of diplomatic follow-up on this speech by Soviet diplomatic staff here in Ottawa. Shortly after the speech had been made, I had the pleasure of meeting with the Minister Counsellor from the U.S.S.R., Mr. Alexei Makarov. He impressed upon me the importance of this speech. I think that a formal response should be forthcoming from the Government of Canada to address some of these points that have been raised. I hope that can take place in the not-too-distant future.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the proposals contained in the speech made on October 1, 1987, in Murmansk by Secretary General Gorbachev were recently developed further in a speech given by Soviet Premier Ryzhkov in Oslo on January 14. However, in our opinion, the Soviet Premier added but a few new elements to the speech of Mr. Gorbachev.

As indicated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in his speech of December 9 at the Norway-Canada Conference on Circumpolar Issues, we wish for the development of a pacific cooperation between the countries of the Arctic Basin, and we are therefore heartened by the statement made by Secretary General Gorbachev in Murmansk on October 1. We have especially noted his suggestion of co-operation in the areas of energy, science and environment."

We are pleased to learn that the Soviet Union is interested in the establishment of an Arctic Scientific Council, a project in which Canada, Norway and other countries are involved.

He also added this: We have especially noted his interest in the development of cultural ties among Northern people. We hope that the Soviet Union will accept for the first time to participate in the Inuit Circumpolar Conference in 1989, as well as the Inuit Youth Camp in 1988, which will be hosted by Canada.

However, we have asked for more detailed information about what the Soviet's interest means for all practical purposes. Moreover, we shall continue to pursue our own objectives and defend our interest in the Arctic.

Our military capabilities in the North are all defensive and will remain so. The nuclear submarines which we are buying will help identify and oppose all ennemy naval activities in the Arctic, especially under the ice cap. However, the comments made by Mr. Gorbatchev and Mr. Ryzhkov do not reflect the actions of their Government. Contrary to Canada and other Northern countries, the Soviet Union has an enormous concentration of military power and weapons in the Arctic. Especially in the Kola Peninsula region where is stationned a large part of its fleet of submarines equiped with strategic missiles. The denuclearized northern zone proposed by the Soviets would not effect these forces. We believe that negotiations first and foremost offer the best hopes of a reduction, to an acceptable level, of nuclear arms and a better balance of conventional forces.

CANADA LANDS COMPANY—ALLEGED FAILURE TO FILE ANNUAL FINANCIAL RETURN—REQUEST THAT ANNUAL REPORT BE PRESENTED BY NEXT MONDAY AT LATEST

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise with regard to a question I asked on December 9, 1987 about the Government's mismanagement, incompetence and possible corruption relating to the disposition of lands in the Mirabel Airport area. This is in connection with resales of land to former farmers, former tenants, the farmers being the original owners and to land speculators, many of whom as events have unfolded are Tory Party organizers or Tory Party supporters.

I asked a tough question not only because of the allegations which have come out, some of which are already the subject of lawsuits relating to the company, but because the Mirabel Land Corporation had failed to file its financial statements. According to the Auditor General, it was the only Crown corporation which had failed to file its corporate statements during the time and on time as provided.

• (1810)

The Canadian people have seen a lot of scandals associated with this Government. Some of them are before the criminal courts, some of them have been dealt with by special inquiries. This one is in part already before the courts in a civil suit.

I would like to remind the House what this civil suit is about. A farmer whose land was expropriated claims that he was offered his land back provided he would flip it to a Tory organizer who operated a quarry. When he agreed to flip the land at a small mark-up which was settled in an agreement he was asked to keep secret, he consulted his Member of Parliament, and the media tell us that his Member of Parliament told him to keep his mouth shut and not complain or he would not get the land. When the land was transferred, not only did he get the 80 hectares of which he had originally been expropriated but he got 320 hectares, I believe, and so it went throughout the entire scandalous disposition of this land.

I want to give the Government more opportunity than the ordinary Question Period provides to explain itself. I do not think the explanations that government Members have been giving so far are washing. The explanations they are giving involve alleged improper sales or improper conduct on the part of the Liberal Government, the preceding Government, in the way this project was put together. One can see that that is not a logical defence.

There is no reason for what was done before this Government took office in connection with land deals to excuse the type of conduct and behaviour we are criticizing in the House of Commons. However, government Members have not even gone so far as to explain why they consider the conduct of the former Government scandalous.

When we were the Government, one thing we did have was a pretty vigilant operation. The people who are now in Government were the Opposition. In that entire period, I cannot recall, with all the efforts they made to damage the Government of the day, to find scandals and to force Ministers to resign, anything arising from this that at the time was used to successfully or otherwise damage us.

I suggest that the kinds of defences and explanations government Members have been using—

Mr. Nickerson: How can you say that with a straight face?

Mr. Kaplan: The Hon. Member will have a chance to answer, and I am looking forward to hearing the kind of answer that will condone or excuse the type of behaviour that we on this side of the House have been criticizing. I do not think that the Canadian people care to hear government Members defend their reprehensible behaviour in the Mirabel Land Corporation by making allegations about the former Government. Government Members are big boys and girls. They owe it to the Canadian people to have ethical standards in their own Government, and I would like to give them the opportunity to try to explain or defend the reprehensible conduct that is now a matter of public record.

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the question the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) asked in the House on December 9, 1987 contained two items: one, the filing of the annual report, and two, the so-called dismissal of the board at that time. The Hon. Member stated that the Canada Lands Company had broken the law by failing to file its Annual Financial Return statement by last June. The Minister explained previously that discussions with the Auditor General were being concluded and that he would have the information tabled at the first opportunity. The Minister tabled the financial statements on December 14, immediately following his receipt of the required Auditor General's accompanying letter. The entire annual report of the corporation was then tabled on January 18, 1988, when the House reconvened.

It is obvious that you cannot close a corporation's books for the year while the auditors are there and you cannot have the financial statements finalized until the auditor's report is complete. So to say that the company broke the law is rather misleading. Perhaps the timing requirements of the Financial Administration Act in this regard are a bit too rigid and should be looked at. The point is that the Minister provided the House with all information and fulfilled all of his statutory obligations in this regard at the earliest possible opportunity. That is fact.

The Member might want to note that under the previous Liberal Government, which he said administered the country so well, the financial statements for the years ending 1982 and 1983 were not tabled until mid-1984, unbelievably late by today's standards. They were not considered late by the Liberals then because they had not bothered to have any such legal requirements. It is clear that the Opposition's record on these matters is poor.

What is of more importance is that the board of directors was not "fired by the Government" and replaced last summer, as alleged by the Hon. Member for York Centre. It has been well established over past weeks that the Minister made several improvements over the past months in certain administrative practices of the corporation. Various audits and reviews did identify minor deficiencies, but basically the corporation's record is a very good one. The corporation has done extremely well since 1984 in bringing a just and equitable solution to a terrible Liberal legacy.

One of the actions the Minister took was to make three new board appointments in July, 1987. This was in response to the observation of the Auditor General that all the members of the board consisted of officers of the corporation. The new appointments were made to broaden the board's representation to include the federal Public Service and the private sector. The appointments were not made in criticism of the then board members, but to eliminate any possible perception of a conflict of interest.

The direction of the company was not changed in August, 1987, as the Hon. Member suggested. Unlike the previous Government, which only got itself deeper and deeper into trouble, never resolving anything, the corporation under this Government was well along in implementing real solutions. Real progress had been made and justice delivered. A difficult concept for the Hon. Members to understand, it would seem, but true nonetheless.

SHIPBUILDING—INQUIRY WHEN SIX FRIGATES WILL BE BUILT/REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF FINANCE MEET REPRESENTATIVES OF SHIPBUILDING INDUSTRY

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, on November 4 I asked questions in the House relating to the Canadian shipbuilding industry. I asked about the awarding of a second contract for the construction of six patrol frigates for the Canadian Navy. I also pursued removal of the exemption from duty of large fishing boats, a policy of the previous Liberal Government which has been continued by the present Government. The answers were quite unsatisfactory and reflected the failure of the Conservative Government to develop policy for the shipbuilding industry. In my few minutes this evening I want to address the importance of proper and open planning to the shipbuilding industry in Canada, a need which the Government has failed so lamentably to recognize, it seems.

The plight of the industry of course needs little elaboration. There is very little commercial work to be done other than repair of vessels. There is a great deal of unemployment in every community where a shipyard or a related facility has long been in existence. The only possibility that exists under the present Government's inactive policy is that government work may, as was true in the last days of the Trudeau Government, provide some opportunity for employment in a variety of shipyards. The question is: How many yards will be able to use government contracts in order to keep men at work and keep those companies in operation?

In this context, I want to express my astonishment at the Government's decision just days before Christmas past to award the second half dozen patrol frigates entirely to the Saint John shipyard. That was truly an incredible decision which went against all the expectations aroused in Quebec and which betrayed, I assert, the assurances given to the people of Quebec. It created an enormous amount of ill feeling up and down the St. Lawrence Valley against the present Conservative Government. In response to the Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) on November 4, 1987, in specific relation to the matter of the frigate contracts, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Côté) said:

• (1820)

> We will continue to defend the interests not only of Quebecers but of all Canadians as well.

That is one of those famous statements which deserves to be carved in stone up and down the St. Lawrence Valley with regard to that particular contract.

It is particularly repugnant to Quebecers to see one particular enterprise, the Irving interests in Saint John, receiving this very large contract to the detriment of the provincially owned Marine Industries Limited with yards up and down the St. Lawrence.

The other point that I was determined to make had to do with the refusal of the Government to consider a removal of the exemption of large fishing boats from the payment of duty. That exemption is now justified to be removed. The fishing industry is in good shape and there is a possibility that construction of large vessels for the fishery could be carried on in Canada in Atlantic yards for which the Government seems to have such tender feelings.

The refusal of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) even to meet with Marine Industries early in 1987, when planning was going forward on the Budget that he brought forward last February, is simply incredible. It indicates the blindness of the Government in one particular area where commercial work might be developed for Canadian yards. In the Minister's absence again, unfortunately, I want to make the point again that that is one of the items which the Government should be looking at as it considers the Budget for 1988.

In this context, although undeclared, we have seen a policy of rationalization which means closure of yards. It has been most obvious in Ontario where the Admirable Yard, a century old in Collingwood, had to be closed. As a result, ship building and ship repair operations in the Province of Ontario are now entirely controlled by one company. I note again that when the Minister was responding to my question, he spoke of the need to provide healthy competition in order to encourage regional development. There is no healthy competition left in the Province of Ontario.

Rationalization along the St. Lawrence became obvious to us first in the spring of 1986 when a letter came to the attention of the public which made it clear that there was to be a rationalization which is now being carried through under the compulsion which the Government, by its lack of policy, has imposed on the industry. As a result of that, building will be carried on only at Lauzon. Sorel may be involved in the construction of modules for vessels. Vickers is completely out of the maritime industry under this policy. That is the consequence of the lack of policy which the Government has had.

The possibility that there will be naval work of sorts is still an entirely open question. The Government's determination to build a certain number of nuclear submarines will soak up incredible amounts of public funds. Will we see the patrol vessels and minesweepers built which could provide work in other yards? Surely it would be far better to have conventional submarines at less cost and other vessels including perhaps another half dozen patrol frigates.

In conclusion, we need a process of open dealings with the industry and consultation with the public, workers, and management in order to establish the policies which could put shipbuilding on a sound basis and continue it with prosperity into the 1990s.

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the concerns raised by my colleague from Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp). The Government's strategy regarding shipbuilding and repair is clear and precise. We have two primary objectives which guide our policy, the rationalization of our shipbuilding industry and regional development. The awarding of the frigate contract to Saint John Shipbuilding proves the Government's commitment to these objectives.

We are all aware of the considerations that led to the announcement that took place in late December. In reaching this decision, our Government took into account that in 1983, Saint John Shipbuilding Limited had obtained the prime contract through the competitive bidding process. Thus the Government did not have to draw up a new contract, it simply added a modification to the old one.

Over the course of the past four years a great deal of time, energy and money has been invested in order to develop installations and expertise and to improve the over-all administrative structures necessary to execute the work. During a period of fiscal constraint, we have endeavoured to avoid repeating unnecessary expenditures and to take advantage of what we already possess. It is evident that these reasons of economy, efficiency and expertise helped determine the Government's decision.

Similarly, the design, construction and integration of the weapons-control systems—work amounting to approximately $800 million—will be carried out, as in the case of the first six frigates, by Paramax Electronics of Montreal.

The award of the frigate contract again demonstrates the Government's firm commitment to making procurement work for the economic development of Canada as a whole. For example, the sub contracts that will go to other companies will bring industrial benefits to many regions of Canada. Part of that contract will be handled by a firm in Hamilton adjacent to my riding in Ontario. It is estimated that in the second phase of this project 50 per cent of the benefits will go to Atlantic Canada; 24 per cent to Quebec; and 26 per cent to Ontario and western Canada.

Calculated over the entire life of the 12-ship project, the breakdown is slightly different: 37 per cent to Atlantic Canada; 33 per cent to Quebec; and 30 per cent to Ontario and western Canada. Over the course of the next nine years, the construction of the six patrol frigates will represent the equivalent of 14,000 person-years of employment, with more than half of the jobs going to workers in the Atlantic region alone where employment opportunities are most welcome.

Our Government is pleased that the Atlantic region will benefit so much. At the same time, we are pleased with the benefits in which all Canadians will share.

In closing, the announcement of the patrol frigate contract to Saint John Shipbuilding confirms their status as a centre of excellence for Canadian shipbuilding.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed from Thursday, January 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House agrees with amendments 8 and 13(e) made by the Senate to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, but disagrees with amendments 4, 5(a), (b) and (c), 6(a) and (b), 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13(a) because this House believes they contradict the principles of the Bill for the following reasons:

Amendment 4 would exclude only criminals and war criminals from the refugee determination process, but would allow terrorists, spies and subversives to pursue a claim to refugee status, notwithstanding the fact that Article 33 of the UN Convention would permit the removal of these latter individuals to their countries of nationality or permanent residence, even if they were determined to be Convention refugees.

Amendment 5(a) would eliminate the authority of the Minister to direct a ship to leave or not to enter Canadian waters. This amendment would reopen a significant gap in Canada's ability to control its borders.

Amendments 5(b) and (c) arise out of Senate amendment 5(a), which is not acceptable, and are therefore inappropriate.

Amendments 6(a) and (b) would reverse the policy on which the Immigration Act, 1976 was based, which policy was not changed in the Bill as passed by this House. The amendments jeopardize the possibility of successfully prosecuting persons who profit from organizing illegal migration and from counselling fraud among refugee claimants.

Amendments 9 and 10 would restrict the ability of peace officers and immigration officers to act quickly to search for evidence of major offences under the Immigration Act, 1976, in exigent circumstances, where lives are at risk or where evidence with respect to those offences may be lost or destroyed.

Amendments 11 and 12 would restrict the ability of peace officers and immigration officers to execute search warrants which have been duly authorized by a justice of the peace, by denying explicit authority to break open containers where it is reasonably believed evidence will be found and by limiting the authority to execute these warrants at night.

Amendment 13(a) would reduce the initial period of detention without review from seven days to forty-eight hours, which would allow insufficient time for the gathering of information to substantiate allegations or to identify the individual, particularly when large groups of undocumented persons arrive at one time.

And that this House agrees with the principles set out in amendments 1, 2(a), 3, 7 and 13(b), (c) and (d), but would propose the following amendments:

Amendment 1 be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 22 and 23 on page 1, and substitute the following:

(c) to deter those who assist in the illegal entry of persons into Canada and thereby minimize the"

Amendment 2(a) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 29 to 39, on page 4, and substitute the following:

Amendment 3 be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 7 to 12, on page 5, and substitute the following:

Amendment 7 be amended to read as follows:

"Add, and immediately after line 6, on page 10, the following:

95.21 No proceedings for an offence under Section 95.1 or Section 95.2 shall be instituted except by or with the personal consent in writing of the Attorney General of Canada or Deputy Attorney General of Canada."

Amendment 13(b) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 1 to 22, on page 21, and substitute the following:

(2) Where, with respect to a person detained under subsection (1), the Minister certifies in writing

(a) that

(i) the person's identity has not been established, or

(ii) the Minister has reason to suspect that the person may be a member of an inadmissible class described in paragraph 19(1)(e), (f) or (g), and

(b) that an additional period of detention is required to investigate the matter referred to in subparagraph (a)(i) or (ii), the person shall be brought before an adjudicator forthwith and at least once during every seven-day period thereafter, at which times the adjudicator shall review the reasons for the person's continued detention."

Amendment 13(c) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 23 to 47, on page 21, and substitute the following:

(2.1) Where the Minister has issued a certificate under subsection (2), the Minister may amend the certificate to which the detention relates to include any matter referred to in subparagraph (2)(a)(i) or (ii), following which the person shall be brought before an adjudicator forthwith and at least once during every seven-day period thereafter, at which times the adjudicator shall review the reasons for the person's continued detention.

Amendment 13(d) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 48 to 50, on page 21, and lines 1 to 18, on page 22, and substitute the following:

(4) Where an adjudicator who conducts a review under subsection (2) or (2.1) is satisfied that reasonable efforts are being made by the Minister to investigate the matter referred to in subparagraph (2)(a)(i) or (ii), the adjudicator shall continue the person's detention.

(4.1) Every review under subsection (2) or (2.1) of the detention of a person suspected of being a member of an inadmissible class described in paragraph 19(1)(e), (f) or (g) shall be conducted in camera.

(4.2) Where (a) the Minister is of the opinion that any evidence or information to be presented by or on behalf of the Minister at any review under subsection (2) or (2.1) of the detention of a person referred to in subsection (4.1) should not be disclosed on the grounds that its disclosure would be injurious to national security or to the safety of persons, and (b) a request therefore is made by the Minister, the adjudicator shall order that the review or any part thereof be conducted in the absence of the person and any counsel representing the person.

(4.3) Any person excluded by an order under subsection (4.2) from the whole or any part of the review under subsection (2) or (2.1) may apply to the Chief Justice of the Federal Court or to a judge of that Court designated by the Chief Justice for the purposes of this subsection to have the order quashed and sections 36.1 and 36.2 of the Canada Evidence Act shall apply, with such modifications as the circumstances may require, to such applications. (4.4) Unless quashed, an order under subsection (4.2) shall, with respect to the person to whom the order relates, apply to every review under subsection (2) or (2.1), or part thereof, at which the Minister is of the opinion that any evidence or information to be presented by or on behalf of the Minister at the review, or part thereof, should not be disclosed on the grounds that its disclosure would be injurious to national security or to the safety of persons.

(5) Where the adjudicator who conducts a review under subsection (2) or (2.1) does not continue a person's detention under subsection (4), the adjudicator shall make the appropriate order under subsection 104(3).

(6) An adjudicator who conducts a review under subsection (3) shall make the appropriate order under subsection 104(3)."

And the amendment of Mr. Marchi:

That the message of the House of Commons to the Senate be amended by:

a) deleting, in paragraph one, the reference to Senate amendment 4;

b) deleting paragraph two;

c) adding to paragraph nine a reference to Senate amendment 4; and

d) adding after amendment 3 the following:

"That amendment 4 of the Senate be amended by deleting the said amendment and by striking out line 16 on page 7 of the Bill and substituting the following therefor:

"(2)(c) and against whom a deportation order has been upheld by the Board; or""

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, before I finished speaking yesterday I was beginning to make the points about the two major flaws that we see in the Bill as proposed by the Government.

The first flaw dealt with the decision to incorporate an amendment which would see a boat turned away at the point of entry into Canadian waters. The reason we believe that that particular amendment is seriously flawed is two-fold. First, we may in many cases see legitimate refugees who are turned away without even been given the right to a hearing. We may see a situation similar to what we as a country experienced in the Second World War when shamefully we turned away a boatload of Jewish refugees without giving them any kind of a hearing. As a country, it is not the kind of precedent that we would like to set.

The second flaw is that it permits the shipowner, who is the real mercenary, the rip-off artist, the trader in human flesh, to drop refugees outside the 200 mile boundary thus putting potential refugees at risk of drowning. But that individual will already have cash at hand. He is paid before the people get on the boat. He will drop the refugees outside the 200 mile limit and be gone. He will be laughing all the way to the bank.

If we are going to introduce an amendment, we want to get at these shipowners to discourage them from trading in human flesh. One way would be to accept the Liberal amendment. This would make sure that those refugees who come to Canada are given due process and a fair hearing while the shipowner who trades in human flesh will have his boat and assets seized, will be put in jail and have his boat sold off.

Mr. Hudon: Good.

Ms. Copps: Yes, good. That is exactly what we would like to see happen. Unfortunately, in Bill C-84 as it presently exists there is no provision to seize the boat and throw the owner in jail. The boat will be turned away before it actually enters Canadian waters. The Hon. Member will understand that that particular measure will prevent potential legitimate refugees, like the boat people, like the Jewish refugees in the Second World War, from coming to Canada and getting a fair hearing. In the meantime, it will still permit the ship owner to cash in on human flesh. He will be able to take his hundreds of thousands of dollars, drop the refugees outside Canada's territorial waters, and disappear.

The Bill as proposed does not deal with the issue of shipowners who are trading in human flesh. If the Government accepts the Liberal amendment, this would permit the seizure and the sale of the boat, if it is determined it is in Canadian waters illegitimately, and the imprisonment of the ship owner. That is the route we should take.

• (1010)

By turning away a boat, we are violating a UN Convention which provides for due process. We could be turning away legitimate refugees without giving them a fair hearing. Canada is the only nation in the world that has been recognized internationally for its open and generous attitude toward stateless and homeless people. I do not think we want to see that reputation thrown out of the window by incorporating in law a provision which violates the United Nations Charter.

The second part of this Bill which is seriously flawed was not addressed by the Government, either through amendments that had been proposed in the House of Commons by the Liberal Party or amendments that had been proposed in the Senate by all Members of all Parties, including the Independents and the Conservatives. The amendment we would like the Government to accept deals with people who assist and aid refugees.

The Government has introduced legislation which provides that anyone who, without remuneration, out of the goodness of his or her heart, assists a stateless person who may not have proper papers is potentially in violation of the Immigration Act. In many cases, people who flee their homelands for fear of their lives and for the safety of their families may not have proper documentation. The Government wants to implement a measure which would tell any church group, priest, nun or religious person that if he or she tries to help a stateless person who does not have proper papers, he or she could be guilty of a violation of the Immigration Act. We think that is wrong.

Not only do we think that is wrong, Conservative Members in the other place felt so strongly about this issue that they returned a unanimous report condemning the Government for refusing to amend that clause we are discussing today. Not only are the Conservatives in the other place and the Opposition in the House of Commons opposed to these two Draconian measures, many others are as well. For example, Nancy Pocock who works with the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees, has said:

> If my Government tells me it is a crime to help these people, I will have to say I am obeying a higher law and I am going to continue to help them when they need me.

George Cram of the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees, hardly the subversive trader in human flesh the Government alleges it is trying to curb with this legislation, has said:

> I do not want to be guilty of committing an offence for doing humanitarian work. I do not want to feel inside myself that what I am doing is illegal, and I do not want to be liable for prosecution. The offence is what you are creating, not the prosecution.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, both the Liberals and the Conservatives in the other place tell us there are two major flaws in the legislation as tabled by the Government. First of all, we have the section prescribing that all ships are to be turned back without allowing the refugees on that ship due process. In that case, Mr. Speaker, ship owners or those who trade in human flesh are not being affected at all. They are not being affected since they already have their money and they can let the refugees disembark at sea.

Mr. Speaker, we suggest the legislation be amended to give the authorities the right to seize the ship and sell it, with the proceeds of such sales going to the Crown, and to jail the ship owner who tries unlawfully to bring people into Canada. This reminds me of the situation in 1979, when we had the so-called "boat people" leaving Vietnam under cover of night. I have several friends who went through this process, and I was part of a group that sponsored them.

At the time, some of these people were unable to leave with the proper documentation, and according to the Bill as it now stands, the fact that I helped people who were without the proper documentation because they were obliged to leave Vietnam under cover of night, would today be a crime. And the same applies to all members of religious groups who try to help people who are stateless or have to leave their country. Although they receive no money, no remuneration for what they do, they will be violating the law by helping refugees.

Mr. Speaker, Canada is the only country in the world that has received international recognition for the role it played in helping people who were leaving Vietnam. We received that recognition because we opened our homes and our hearts to refugees who had no place to stay and who were in fact stateless.

And now we have Bill C-84 and these two measures which, in fact, mean that we do not give due process, we do not give a hearing to people who arrive on ships, even if they happen to be genuine refugees. We are going to turn them back as we turned back the Jews during the Second World War, without giving them a chance to tell their story to our officials and explain how they had to flee their country without the proper documentation.

Second, according to the Bill, Canadian men and women—whether they are priests, nuns, or members of various churches—who try to help people who do not have the proper documentation because they had to flee their country with only the clothes they had on, may be committing a crime by helping refugees who lack proper documentation.

Mr. Speaker, this is so ridiculous that even Conservative senators in the other place objected to the Bill's recommendations out of hand. Both the Liberals in the House of Commons, and the Conservatives in the other place have unanimously rejected the Bill as it now stands.

We already know the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) accepted a few amendments because he realized that the Bill as tabled last summer was an overly hasty attempt to react to a situation.

[English]

Last summer when the Minister brought in the legislation it was a knee-jerk reaction. He realized that in part, because he did agree to certain amendments which would clarify some of the procedural matters dealing with the Bill. However, he refused to amend the two fundamental clauses of the Bill, and I will tell you why he refused to amend them, Mr. Speaker. I know that this will be provocative, but I hope it will assist Conservative Members in their deliberations on this Bill.

The Government is attempting to use refugees to score political points by whipping up a public frenzy on an issue which is very poorly understood by Canadians. The Government is attempting to use refugees to improve its own standing in the popularity polls. If the Government is not attempting to use refugees in that way, then I challenge it to bring forward two amendments.

First, we should give refugees the right to a full and fair hearing, and that means all refugees, whether alleged or otherwise. If they are proven not to be refugees, they will be deported. That is the law of the land. Second, we should ensure that those people who in the legitimate course of humanitarian good, whether they be members of church groups or are doing it because of a personal commitment, try to help those people who are stateless and homeless, who do not have proper documentation, are not considered criminals. With those two amendments maybe the Government will stop using this issue as a political football and stop exploiting refugees.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member is very exercised about the Government's strategy on this issue. I would like her to explain to the House why she believes this is part of an electoral strategy by the Government rather than a sincere piece of legislation.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, when the Government originally introduced this legislation it was supposed to be a response to an "emergency". It was such an emergency that here we are seven months later and the Government did not choose to bring it back for several months. The Government brought in two Bills and this is one. The other Bill was the more reasoned approach.

I believe the reason the Government brought this Bill in last summer, a Bill with very invidious sections dealing with the refusal to grant due process to prospective refugees as well as the refusal to allow Canadians the right, under the auspices of church organizations and private groups, to engage in assisting stateless and homeless peoples, is that it looked at the issue and saw how many people feel. I know people, and I have them in my riding, who see someone coming to Canada without using the normal immigration process and thinking somehow they are getting ahead of everyone else. What they do not realize, and what I alluded to yesterday, is that we have two streams of people coming into this country. One stream is the stateless and homeless; that process is accepted and endorsed by all Canadians. All Canadians believe in it. The other stream is normal immigration.

Because the immigration process is so tight right now, and because there are so many good people who are not allowed to come to Canada because of quotas and other rather severe restrictions, those who are waiting to be reunited with their families feel that somehow if we accept refugees we are lessening their opportunity to have their relatives and friends come into the country. That is not the case, but you have to be a student of the Immigration Act to even understand the nuances and differences.

Unfortunately, most of us when we read the papers tend to have a knee-jerk reaction to the question of someone arriving here by boat. Persons arriving by boat may indeed be a legitimate refugees who could face death if they went back to their own country. We should not be going after the refugees who may be legitimate and who should have the right to due process. We should be going after the shipowners who are simply attempting to exploit people by accepting money for passage. They will be off on the high seas and the people we will be going after are those who may need our help and a home in Canada.

I think the Government is trying to cover up its own incompetence in dealing with the question of immigration by isolating certain instances and trying to get the public whipped into a frenzy on an issue which is very poorly understood. The Government has a responsibility to clear up the two-track system, one being refugees and the other normal immigration, and deal with the real culprits, the traders in human flesh, not simply those who may be legitimately seeking a new home.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to represent Canada at an executive counsel meeting of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees the first week of October, 1987. I had the opportunity there to discuss this issue with representatives of most of the nations in the world who are involved in providing significant support for refugees. Perhaps even more importantly, I also had the opportunity to meet with the legal affairs division of the UNHCR. As a consequence of that in depth discussion about Canadian law and the law of other countries, I have been able to go on public platforms in Canada and assert that the legal protection for refugee claimants under Canada's new legislation, a combination of Bill C-84 and Bill C-55, will be a standard to which the rest of the world can aspire. I have said rather flatly that there is no legal system in the world which will come close to matching Canada's new system in providing legal protection for refugee claimants.

I simply want to ask the Hon. Member this. If she believes in what she has been saying to this House today, will she have the courage to stand in her place and name a single country in this whole world that will provide better legal protection to refugee claimants than the projected Canadian system—one country, I challenge her?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member obviously does not understand the Bill we are discussing. If he did he would know that the precise point he is alleging, protection for refugees by way of due process, is being denied to people who come by boat. The provisions of Bill C-84 require that the boat be turned away before those people have a chance to be considered as prospective refugees. That is the very point that makes this Bill completely unacceptable. That is the reason it was rejected by those in the UN who are knowledgeable on the question of refugees. That is the reason we have to reject this Bill. It is a blight on a very laudable Canadian record around the world in accepting and welcoming bona fide refugees to this country.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that no country was named by the Hon. Member opposite. It is also interesting to have been involved in discussions with those legal experts and recognize that the specific wording of the clause which the Hon. Member tries to bring to the attention of the House and the Canadian people says that a boat can be turned away when the Minister is satisfied that the health of the passengers will not be compromised, their safety will not be compromised, and their rights and Canada's obligations under the Convention will not be compromised. Those are prohibitions on the conduct of the Minister to make sure that the rights of refugee claimants are respected.

Once again I say to the Hon. Member, name a country that will have better legal protection for refugee claimants. Name me one in the whole wide world.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has just admitted the difficulties with this legislation. He said that the people who are on that boat will not be given individual due process. He just said it is up to the Minister. If the Minister is under political pressure and feels like turning the boat back, it is going to go back. These people, who could be bona fide refugees and who should have their cases heard individually, are going to be denied that due process. They will not be given the kind of protection which has been afforded to every refugee claimant in Canada and that will be afforded under certain clauses of Bill C-55, which is not the Bill we are discussing today.

Bill C-84 was a knee-jerk reaction by the Government at a time when a boat was coming towards Canada. Frankly, I do not want to leave due process and the protection of prospective refugees in the hands of a Minister who may be responding to political pressure in the way he did last summer when he introduced this piece of garbage we are now considering.

• (1030)

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to join in this debate on the proposed Senate amendments to Bill C-84. I am not pleased, however, because of the Bill itself, which I join with members of my caucus and many other Members of the House in opposing as an attack on Canadian humanitarianism and a reaction to some of the darkest tendencies in the Canadian nation—a desire to close the doors on refugees. That is a very partisan and political move of the worst sort.

I want to speak with satisfaction on amendments which would make it possible to improve this Bill somewhat. If the Government is determined to go through with it, let us have at least the removal of some of the elements of the Bill which would interfere with the desire of so many Canadians to provide refuge to persons who are in danger of life and limb in the countries from which they have fled.

I want to recognize the observations of the critic on immigration in our caucus, my good friend the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), who spoke very well earlier this week in support of the proposed amendments. He indicated what the strategy of the Government has been. It is worth spotlighting some of what has happened on this matter earlier before considering the particular amendment which is before us this morning, that being Amendment 4 from the Senate.

As my friend indicated, it took a little while for the policy of the Government to become clear. In the first months of this Parliament the Commons Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration was at work considering the question of how to treat refugees and considering an important document, a report commissioned by the previous Government which Rabbi Gunther Plaut produced. This report was in the best tradition of Canadian humanitarianism. The committee of Members from the government caucus and the two opposition caucuses, in lesser numbers, worked together on consideration of that report making representations to the House, and, consequently, to the Government and Canadian people, on how refugees should be treated.

It became clear later that at the same time a task force on saving money in the Government and on the efficiency of government operations was at work. That task force was under the direction of the then Deputy Prime Minister, Erik Nielsen. It became clear when that report was released later that a very different agenda was being pursued at the highest levels of the immigration department and within the Government itself. That agenda looked to the saving of money. It was suggested that some $60 million could be saved and it became clear that a good deal of that could be saved in the area of immigration by tightening up in particular ways.

As my friend the Member for Spadina indicated, the Government never responded to the report of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. That report recognized the contributions and recommendations of Rabbi Gunther Plaut and called on the Canadian Government to improve and streamline the system for refugee determination. It called upon the Government to provide resources so there would be enough people to carry through the process of determination, get rid of the backlog, and ensure that Canadian humanitarianism was manifested in procedure as well as in principle, so that persons would have their status recognized at an early stage and could consequently settle down to life among the Canadian people. The Government, which was preoccupied with its agenda of the Nielsen task force, never commented on or reacted that report of the committee.

In the summer of 1986 refugees arrived and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself spoke in a commendable way on the traditions of Canadian humanitarianism. In the summer of 1987 more refugees arrived by boat on the Atlantic coast. We observed the most remarkable night-against- day turn by the Prime Minister as he began to pander to very different tendencies, those of the minority that is prepared to close the door, the minority which fears refugees, particularly from the southern hemisphere, the minority which wants still to have a white Canada as some Canadians have always wanted. Playing to those tendencies, to prejudice in Canada, some of the best hopes that had been manifested by Ministers of the Government earlier were suddenly contradicted.

Late in the year I spotlighted a statement made by the Minister for Employment and Immigration who, speaking in the spring, promised a campaign against racism. He recognized that the way to deal with racism, prejudice, and discrimination in Canada was to deal with the ignorance on which they feed. During the summer the Government pandered to ignorance and stupidity and the Minister for Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) has not launched such a campaign. The Government has been strangely silent in developing race relations policy in the area of multiculturalism.

That failure is directly related to this most unfortunate decision to play to Canadian prejudice generally, to bring in legislation, and to allow individual case situations to be made known to the Canadian public. These leaks are still going on. There has been controversy in the House, appropriate or otherwise, in the last weeks on certain cases. How could that controversy occur if it were not that individual files were being made known to the media? It is clear that information is leaking out from the immigration department. That is surely being done quite deliberately to continue pandering to Canadian prejudice.

Not only do we have silence as far as a campaign against racism is concerned, but the Government is allowing officials to pander to those feelings by putting out partial information and allowing the press to build up the kind of anger that can develop among people when they think that something terribly wrong has been allowed to happen.

This kind of attack on Canadian humanitarianism is not just an attack on the expression at the national level, where the Inter-Church Committee, for example, has been eloquently leading, supported by lawyers who have been working in the immigration area for years who know the shortcomings of the system, who want improvement of it, and who certainly never expected that the Government would bring in the kind of vicious legislation which we have before us. It is not an attack on a national activity or on people active in particular in the City of Toronto where so many persons wanting to put refugee claims forward first appear.

In the City of Thunder Bay in northwestern Ontario, many miles from Toronto, only a few score of persons are accepted each year as government-sponsored refugees. In my community the expression of Canadian humanitarianism through the Friends of Refugees organization and through members of the Thunder Bay Multiculturalism Association has been one of the most heartening expressions of Canadian humanitarianism. This movement was fostered and developed in the mid and late 1970s by the Government itself. When people from Vietnam were coming to Canada great encouragement was given to individual Canadians, groups, and churches in particular, to undertake the work of providing refuge to people, supporting them in Canada, and assisting them to become established. That work has been brilliantly successful.

In my own church in Thunder Bay, St. Paul's United Church, I have been contributing for a year or more in support of a refugee project. I mention that without wanting to arouse envy anywhere else because I could name other churches in the City of Thunder Bay that are very active.

I hesitate to single out names, but I think of the efforts of Lloyd Jones in Thunder Bay and on the national level and of Mel McLaughlin and others in the Friends of Refugees organization. These are manifestations of the best desire of Canadians to allow our rich country to provide the refuge that people from other parts of the world need.

What have we seen in contradiction to this from the Government? We see a particularly refusal to recognize the legitimate problems that exist in immigration. Our caucus realizes that illigitimate refugee claims are made occasionally and procedures are necessary to deal with those. However, there is not the kind of clandestine entry in those cases on which the Government wants to focus. There is not the lack of documents, very often in those cases. Usually someone outside Canada is involved in aiding in the offence of sending bogus refugees to Canada who very often arrive with legitimate documentation. These people who arrive from Portugal, Brazil or perhaps Turkey would not be caught by the Government's legislation.

• (1040)

Those people who arrive from Central and South America, where they have been made refugees by the civil wars that rage in a number of those countries, are the owner who arrive without documentation, because they would not be able to obtain the visas or other papers to make them legitimate entrants to Canada. These people are very often regarded in their own countries as subversives and may well be shot by the death squads in a number of those countries. These are the people who will be caught, and those who assist them in coming to Canada, recognizing that the United States is much less sensitive to the legitimate refugee claims of these persons, could very easily be caught by this legislation and end up with their vehicles confiscated, facing fines and conceivably prison terms.

The Government, which has broken its word on so many other matters, gives us asssurances in the House that it would not act or authorize prosecutions against such persons. That is simply not acceptable. The Government does not have the credibility with this Parliament and the people of Canada to be trusted with such promises.

Therefore, speaking on behalf of constituents, friends and persons whom I admire very much in Thunder Bay, I oppose what the Government has put forward and support the amendments put before us from the Senate, and specifically the amendment put forward by the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) dealing with amendment No. 4.

Let me note the significance of the amendments put forward by the Member for York West in regard to Central America. When the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) visited Central America recently, he made a number of observations on the situation. Probably the most remarkable and controversial was his suggestion that those involved in the contra effort against the Sandinistas in Nicaragua might be allowed entry into Canada, to allow refuge to these freedom fighters of President Reagan.

Of course, one must explain this somewhat. These people are counter-revolutionaries, the henchmen of the Somoza regime in Nicaragua. They are the people who exploited the Nicaraguan people until the people were successful in the Sandinista revolution in overthrowing that dictatorship, supported so long by the United States. They achieved a government which, if not for the war, would have made the kinds of advances for Nicaraguan people that the Cuban revolution has made over 30 years on that island. However, the American government has chosen to support these henchmen of the Somoza regime.

The President who should be an example of truth to the so-called free world has allowed his integrity to be completely destroyed by attempting to turn these counter-revolutionaries in Nicaragua, who worked for that previous dictatorship, into freedom fighters. That has been one of the abominations of the 1980's, and has only been intensified every time the President speaks about strengthening democracy in the 1980's, as he did in the State of the Union Address. That is an abomination when American money is destroying property, slaying Nicaraguans and being used to destroy the efforts of aid workers from other countries to support the Nicaraguan people in rebuilding their revolution.

In El Salvador death squad members in the El Salvadorean military, in this case supporting a government that is fighting a revolution, had launched an attack on a restaurant, killing several Americans, among others. According to a recent report, it had been determined at a trial that these death squad members had been involved in a political act. When we see the murder of off-duty Americans, of civilians and persons in a social setting by members of the El Salvadorean forces being regarded as a political act, surely it is not possible to argue against the reality of circumstances that create refugees who have every right to the safety that Canada can provide.

The Hon. Member for York West, in his amendment specifically dealing with amendment No. 4, is focusing on a matter of enormous importance, an amendment which would not preclude from the refugee determination process persons who might be security risks. That focuses on a particular item in which the legislation the Government has put forward is in fact a contradiction to the United Nations convention on refugees.

In this respect the Parliamentary Secretary was posing questions to the Member for Hamilton East (Ms Copps) in which he wanted to find some country that was better than Canada in providing refuge. I am not an expert on this internationally and would not be able to name a country which is better, although I think it would be a terrible judgment on the western world in our time if there is no country that has better law than Canada. It would be a terrible judgment on the whole western world if western humanity has sunk to the level of violation of U.N. convention which the Government proposes to put forward.

The U.N. convention allows persons, even those who may be security risks, to put forward a claim for refugee status. Of course, it allows governments to provide safety and that person may have to be detained, but the point is that even those who might be security risks have the right under the U.N. convention to have their claim to refugee status considered.

When the Government refuses to accept amendment No. 4 from the Senate, which is designed to maintain that right, it loses any right to talk about morality, to praise Canadian law and to raise comparative standards. That is simply illigitimate as long as the Government takes the vicious stand it has on amendment No. 4 from the Senate.

I speak in support of the resolution by the Liberal critic and in support of what the Senate has attempted to do in upholding Canadian traditions against a House of Commons tragically dominated by a Conservative majority that is prepared to abandon the best Canadian traditions in order to appeal to the worst tendencies among some Canadians.

• (1050)

Mr. Hawkes: I wonder if the Hon. Member would like to share with the Canadian people the information in his possession about the proportion of people inside the country who are found to be in violation of immigration law and, therefore, go to inquiry? What proportion, once they are caught by enforcement officers, all of a sudden claim to be refugees? They have plenty of time to lodge a claim before they become in violation of immigration law. They are already inside the country. I wonder whether or not the Hon. Member thinks we should continue to have a legal system which allows people, simply by saying those words, to be virtually non-removable from the country, to have extended stays going in to two, three, four, five, years.

The Hon. Member has brought up Motion No. 4. Does he think that Motion No. 4 in reality is a good idea because of the number of situations of the kind I mentioned? First, does he know the statistics? Does he know how many hundred people a month suddenly make this claim when they are caught by enforcement officers?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I believe in speaking bluntly and honestly about these things. I do not know the number. I suppose the former chairperson of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, who withdrew from that position for whatever reasons, would know the number. However, knowing the number is far less important in this matter than recognizing why there might be such appeals.

Of course, the reason they occur is because the previous Government, and the present Government, have not wanted a good refugee determination system. Those Governments have allowed a cumbersome system to bog down. They have clearly refused to put the people into the system who are required. Again, I do not have the dates at my fingertips, but months passed. Recommendations had been made for increased numbers. If my memory serves me correctly, it had been clear in the country a long time before that more people were needed in the immigration review, refugee determination context in order to carry out the process properly.

This Government, even worse than the previous Government, refused to put the resources in place. It was worse because the situation was perfectly clear. It was obvious the process was bogging down. It would be obvious to anyone looking at the system that when one gets into a situation where it takes two, three or four years, whatever it may happen to be, that is a cruelty in itself. It is administrative cruelty by the Canadian Government to the person applying. To allow that to happen is one of those failures of Ministerial direction and responsibility; refusing to make the system efficient. If the system were efficient, no one would be able to do more than extend the time by perhaps three or four months. Perhaps half a year would be the most that would be gained by making such a claim. It is only the failures of Government administration that has opened the door to such an opportunity. If people abuse it, it is an indication of administrative weakness.

What is an abomination to the Canadian people and Canadian morality and humanitarianism is to allow the system to bog down and allow abuses to develop. Abuses will always develop when systems break down, but to then use those abuses in order to strike a vicious law, which the Canadian people in other circumstances would not want, is an abomination to the Canadian people. I am disappointed in the Parliamentary Secretary, who was a good chairperson of that committee and who, I think, has a humanitarian sense, for raising this kind of issue with me and with the Canadian people. It is shameful.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, it is a bit astonishing that Members opposite can complain so vehemently when they have not taken the time to learn a little more about the problem. Every month there are about 750 to 800 people in the category I mentioned who are afoul of the law and are caught up by the enforcement officers of Employment and Immigration Canada. These people are already inside the country and suddenly make the claim to be refugees. Three-quarters of the people that are caught suddenly make the claim. That is a significant part of the problem.

The Member brings up the issue of delay. This Government brought forward the Plaut report, which was set up by the previous Government. The committee dealt with it and reported to the House by the end of December 1985. The Government announced changes by May of 1986. Legislation was brought back to this House last May in the form of Bill C-55. Both Parties in Opposition refused to move it quickly to committee. They filibustered rather consistently. Yesterday the Senate began hearings on Bill C-55. It is better than three-quarters of a year since the solution was presented to the House and we still do not have the changed system.

It defies reality and defies common sense to attempt to tell the Canadian people and Members of this Chamber that the Government is delaying the correction necessary. The Government is eager. I wonder if the Hon. Member might commit to us here right now that Bill C-84 will finish today and go back to the Senate? We operate on a five-day week in the Parliament of Canada. This has been the subject matter of debate for the fourth solid day, simply on Senate amendments. I wonder how much longer the Hon. Member and his Party intend to delay the legislation and then attempt to blame the Government for delay? The delay lies on the other side of this Chamber.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a further comment on what the Parliamentary Secretary has the gall to say, although I recognize that in his job he has to do that. The Parliamentary Secretary says that 850 to 900 persons a month are doing this. That is an indication of how serious the consequences of administrative failure have been.

He knows perfectly well that in a parliamentary system, with two Chambers, it takes time to pass law. It is not my right to say anything about what will happen today. I do not control the House. Neither does he, and nor does the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard). I suppose the Government deserves credit for publishing it rather than suppressing it. Let me give it that credit. But what are the dates the Parliamentary Secretary was suggesting?

The Government was formed in September of 1984. The Plaut report came forward early in 1985, I believe. The committee had considered it through to the end of 1985. That is a year and three months into the life of this Government. Proposals for action came from the Government in the spring of 1986. I remember debating some of those. Action could have been taken in the fall of 1984, because I think it was needed. It was clear at that time that action was needed, but action was not taken until the spring of 1986. That was almost two years into the life of this Government.

The Parliamentary secretary pointed to the legislation that was put forward not in the spring of 1986 but in the spring of 1987. Another year had passed. Then, of course, in the summer it attempted to capitalize on the situation and here we are almost six months after that particular attempt. The Government has let all this time pass when it could have been dealing with its administrative shortcomings and getting on with it.

SUPREME COURT

JUDGMENT ON ABORTION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Supreme Court rendered a judgment on abortion. I should like to single out three individuals who opened this debate 20 years ago: Dr. Lise Fortier of Montreal, Marion Powell of Toronto, and Dr. Peter Gillett of Montreal.

[English]

The Supreme Court of Canada rendered a historical judgment yesterday. It struck down a law that treated women unequally. The judges found this law unconstitutional because women in some provinces were found to have more choice available to them concerning their reproduction than women in other provinces. Under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms every individual must be treated equally. Therefore, this law must be changed so that all Canadian women have access to the same services and options across the country.

• (1100)

I call on the Government to introduce legislation in the House that will recognize that women must be treated equally across Canada. I also call on the Government to recognize that the Supreme Court of Canada has given the federal Parliament the role of regulating how, when, and where these services will be made available and how we will balance the competing interests in this issue.

Now that we have been given this trust, let us proceed cautiously and wisely. Let us recognize that all women must be treated equally and have the same options and services.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PENSIONS—CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-33

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday the Government decided at the last minute not to proceed with debate on Bill C-33, the Bill which would have deindexed future pensions for 250,000 federal government employees.

Bill C-33 is a bad Bill. It is out of step with the trend toward indexation in the private sector. It is unfair to all those federal employees who have been paying extra contributions since 1973 so that their pensions would be fully indexed.

My colleagues and I plan to oppose the Bill with every tool at our disposal. A delay of the Bill is not good enough, however. The current situation creates uncertainty for federal employees which should be ended now.

S. O. 21

I call on the Government to announce that it is abandoning its proposal to deindex federal employees' pensions and to consult with the Public Service unions so that the other parts of the Bill which would give civil servants direct input into the management of their pensions can be implemented quickly.

I urge my Conservative colleagues from the national capital region to stand up and to join the New Democrats to say publicly that Bill C-33 is a bad Bill and that the proposal to deindex federal employees' pensions should be scrapped.

SPORTS

TRIBUTE TO KOOTENAY WEST ATHLETES

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I stand in the House to commend the people of Kootenay West, the home of champions.

In the past we have had many outstanding athletes from Trail, Rossland, Fruitvale, Nelson, and surrounding communities, each of them excelling to national and international sports fame.

Last Sunday, the City of Castlegar held the first Celebration '88 activity in Kootenay West. An overwhelming number of people congregated for a torchlight parade and a special dinner which singled out the family of Canadian ski hero, Felix Belczyk. Felix, ironically, decided to make his own statement from Switzerland where, on the same day, he won the World Cup super giant slalom ski race.

I commend the Belczyk family and the Kootenay West community for the strong support given to local athletes. I thank the committees, athletes past and present, and the people of Kootenay West for making the Celebration '88 events a resounding success.

To Kootenay West—it is still our turn!

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

TRIBUTE TO DRUGS DIRECTORATE EMPLOYEES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, Canadians can, in large part, be assured of the safety and effectiveness of drugs sold in Canada because of the good work of the Drugs Directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Last year approvals were issued for 640 prescription drugs, 1,700 non-prescription drug products, and about 150 veterinary drugs. The Canadian Drug Identification Code Book contains information on the some 17,000 drug products sold in Canada.

In addition, the Directorate conducts programs to reduce the misuse and abuse of dangerous drugs, inspects drug manufacturing plants, and undertakes drug research.

Canadians are well served by the competent and professional public servants in the Drug Directorate.

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—FUTURE ROLE OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada yesterday reflects the polarized nature of the debate on abortion. The judgment was rendered with seven of the Justices sitting. It was a 5-2 decision. Of those who sat on the majority there were three separate sets of reasons for judgment.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has suggested that it is now up to the provincial legislatures to deal with the issue of abortion. In my respectful submission the Supreme Court of Canada made it clear that Parliament must act now to bring in legislation that will comply with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

I hope that the Government of Canada will assume the responsibility to ensure that whatever legislation is passed will comply with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It is not fair to pass the issue off to the provincial Governments.

The Supreme Court of Canada made it very clear that Parliament does indeed have a role. For those who suggest that abortion should be totally unregulated, that is not the right course to take, in my view. I hope that the Minister of Justice and the Government of Canada will deal with this issue as soon as possible.

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION HAILED AS VICTORY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, it is the view of the New Democratic Party that the exact opposite should be the case to what the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) has just proclaimed.

In its historic decision yesterday, the Supreme Court of Canada made absolutely clear that the country's abortion law, Section 251 of the Criminal Code, is a violation of the life, liberty and security of the person guaranteed in Section 7 of the Charter.

The words of the Chief Justice could not be clearer. He stated:

> Section 251 clearly interferes with a woman's physical and bodily integrity. Forcing a woman, by threat of criminal sanction, to carry a fetus to term unless she meets certain criteria unrelated to her own priorities and aspirations, is a profound interference with a woman's body and thus an infringement of security of the person.

In the words of Madam Justice Bertha Wilson:

> Section 251 of the Criminal Code, which limits the pregnant woman's access to abortion, violates her right to life, liberty and security of the person within the meaning of Section 7 of the Charter—

The decision is clear. Let the Government not attempt to fudge it or circumvent it in any way, or try to limit this great victory achieved by the women of Canada.

POLITICAL PARTIES

NATO—POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt—Saanich): Mr. Speaker, this weekend, in what promises to be a real Donnybrook, the New Democratic Party will review its defence policy, especially with respect to Canada's participation in NATO. Many Canadians will recall that the NDP released a defence policy paper this past summer reaffirming its policy of withdrawal from NATO. However, the unpopularity of this policy, as noted in the polls which the NDP so avidly read, has called for a review of the policy.

Canada now waits with bated breath for an answer. Will pragmatism win out over principle? Will New Democrats seek salvation through polls? Are we seeing the emergence of a new New Democratic Party? Or is it something more sinister?

Perhaps the NDP defence policy is all that stands between the long awaited NDP-Liberal coalition. Will members of the NDP in their unseemly haste to jump into bed with an already amorous Liberal Party shed their principles at the door? Will the fruits of this union be an Old Democratic Party or a New Liberal Party?

Stay tuned next week for the dramatic conclusion of this political Peyton Place.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

BILL C-33—UNFAIR REPORT ON MEMBER'S POSITION

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have been in the House for three years and five months. I have always worked clearly and consistently on behalf of all my constituents on all matters. I have granted hundreds of interviews and have been treated fairly and professionally in most of them.

However, yesterday, the CBO radio Morning Show displayed a despicable, unfair, inaccurate contempt for my personal integrity and privacy. Because I politely refused more than once to grant an interview concerning the current status of Bill C-33, CBO Morning concluded that I did not know anything about the Bill. This is simply untrue.

On February 6, 1986, I arranged the first meeting ever between Ed Halayko, Chairman, Armed Forces Pensioner's Association, with the then President of the Treasury Board.

I spoke on Public Service pension indexation in the Adjournment Motion of June 17, 1986. I met with Don Love and Lou Tenace from Treasury Board on January 17, 1987, to discuss Bill C-33.

In January, 1987, I received a long response concerning Bill C-33 from Pierre Gravelle, Associate Secretary, Treasury Board, and Jack McKinnon, President of ESSA.

In February, 1987, I received a response from the then President of the Treasury Board to my letter of January 14, 1987.

I wrote Mr. Bernhardt, President of FSNA. I wrote Mr. Butt, President of the Air Traffic Control Association.

This CBO reference implying that I did not know anything about Bill C-33 is a disgusting display of incompetence, ignorance, and a total lack of journalistic integrity.

INDUSTRY

CLOSURE OF FIRESTONE PLANT IN HAMILTON

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): I guess we will fix that by fixing the CBC.

Mr. Speaker, 66 years ago today Firestone opened in my riding. This weekend Firestone will close. For the record, I wish to say that I think the Minister's handling of this issue has been incredibly incompetent, inept, and uncaring.

This week I received a letter from the Minister, who fled to France, refusing to deal with the dossier, and refusing to meet with individuals who had expressed an interest in buying the plant. The Minister sent me a letter in which he stated that he facilitated the payment of $400,000 odd in severance pay to the workers. Because of the Government's changes to the unemployment insurance legislation, and the fact that if people receive severance they do not receive unemployment insurance, that may work out to a paltry $9 per worker.

After sitting idly and doing nothing while 1,200 jobs in my riding disappear, the federal Government has the gall to brag about paying out a total sum of $9 to each of those workers. Many of those workers have 20, 25, and 30 years of service. It seems to me that a Government that was prepared to pay over $6 million to an American company for training and retraining, another $6 million in duty remission for a total of more than $12 million, should be pathetically embarrassed by suggesting to the same workers in Hamilton, who have lived and supported our community, that they will receive $9.

APPLICABILITY OF CANADA LABOUR CODE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Federal Court of Appeal rejected Canada Post's attempt to pretend that postal services should be under provincial jurisdiction. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I found the actions of Canada Post rather strange. Here we have a federal Crown corporation arguing that it is not federal. It took the Federal Court to inform Canada Post management of something that is obvious to Canadians. Postal services have always been the responsibility of the federal Government, and Canadians want that to continue.

Canada Post simply did not want to work under the laws as set out in the Canada Labour Code. Management at Canada Post do not want to accept the provisions of the Canada Labour Code when it interferes with their business plan. They do not want employees in franchise operations to be paid a living wage, or to give them the protection of a union contract.

Yesterday the Federal Court of Appeal refused to allow Canada Post to create an employment ghetto in the Post Office. Once again Canada Post's sacred business plan has been dealt a fatal blow. Again Canadian workers, especially women, are grateful that the Canada Labour Code does protect workers in this country.

RESULT OF CO-OPERATION BETWEEN PRIVATE ENTERPRISE AND THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, today I should like to commend the Ultramar Canada board members who, with their employees, associates and senior management, in co-operation with the Laval University research centre, made a breakthrough in environmental protection. Henceforth, wide open fields where unrefined products used to be dumped will be a thing of the past. Congratulations to the Ultramar team, for in future they will be using this muddy substance in an industrial process called "pyrolysis".

My riding stands to benefit from private sector employment opportunities created by Ultramar Canada. Within two years the company expects to build a plant in Saint-Romuald to recycle its products.

Through the free trade agreement my Government makes it possible for Ultramar to boost its sales on the American market. A stiff tax of 80 cents on each barrel of refined petroleum will be phased out over five years. This amount represents 4 per cent of refining costs.

Mr. Speaker, that is the outcome of co-operation between the private sector and this good Government.

STATUS OF WOMEN

INCREASE IN MANAGERIAL AND PROFESSIONAL EMPLOYMENT

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, one of the important objectives of the Government has been to promote economic, social, and legal equality for the women of our country. Recent reports show that our policies are indeed working in promoting economic opportunities for the women of this country.

In only 40 months, 528,000 new jobs have been created and filled by Canadian women. Of greatest interest is that 55 per cent of those jobs have been in the managerial and professional sectors. Now, almost 30 per cent of the 5 million working Canadian women are employed in these high income sectors of our economy. Another exciting fact is that there has been a 42 per cent increase in the jobs for women in the natural sciences. Women are truly breaking down traditional barriers.

These figures show that the economic policies of this Government, low interest rates, less government interference, promotion of free trade, and encouragement of the small business sector, are working for the country as a whole, but in particular are ensuring a bright future for Canadian women.

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Barry Moore (Pontiac—Gatineau—Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize today the importance for such ridings as Pontiac—Gatineau—Labelle of the Community Futures Program. This program is directed at peripheral communities which are faced with high unemployment.

The Federal Government has already allocated $600,000 to help the operation in my riding of local development assistance committees under its Canadian Job Strategy . Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to indicate that within this framework, additional credits of over $312,000 have been allocated by Employment and Immigration Canada. The greater part of this amount will provide 30 unemployed people in my area with income support to help them develop their skills and become autonomous workers.

Through its involvement, our Government is helping workers become more efficient, which in the long run can only have positive results by making our region and Canada as a whole more competitive at the international level.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

OPPORTUNITY FOR GOVERNMENT TO TELL CORPORATION TO ACT AS A GOOD CORPORATE CITIZEN AND RESPECT CANADIANS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, Canada Post has again demonstrated its arrogance and lack of consideration for ordinary citizens and their local representatives by announcing the closing of the Laval Post Office without giving advance notice to the mayor of Laval, the employees and unions.

Over the past few months, Mr. Speaker, we have seen Canada Post impose three day suspensions on employees who had forgotten to punch out and in before and after their lunch break. Instructions were issued warning Canada Post employees not to speak out openly against their employer.

Mr. Speaker, basic rights such as freedom of consultation are completely ignored by this Crown Corporation. I suggest the time has come for this Tory Government to assume its responsibility and instruct Canada Post Corporation to act as a good corporate citizen and respect the Canadian public.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—REQUEST THAT PARLIAMENT DEAL WITH ISSUE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question or two for the Minister of Justice.

I know that the issue of abortion is an extremely difficult one for many Canadians. I remember well in the House of Commons, when I had the responsibility of bringing in the 1968 legislation, the agonizing and anguished debate that that provoked in the House of Commons and across Canada. I thought at the time that we had brought in a reasonable and, indeed, the best accommodation between two radically polarized views of the issue.

We now have the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I respect the Supreme Court of Canada, and I accept its decision striking down that law.

Yesterday and this morning the Minister implied that the issue is now up to the provinces. I do not agree. For instance, in the last 24 hours the actions of the British Columbia Government demonstrate to me how unfair it would be to slough off the issue to the provinces, because all Canadians must be treated fairly and only Parliament can decide the substance of the issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): As difficult as this issue is, can I have the assurance from the Minister of Justice that, while undoubtedly the provinces need to be consulted, Parliament and not the provinces will set the rules on how this matter will be dealt with on a national basis in the future, and that it will be dealt with in the very near future by Parliament?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the question from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. It is a serious issue, and one for which the Government takes its responsibilities very seriously.

As the Right Hon. Member well knows, the responsibility with respect to this matter in the criminal law section has been seriously impacted by the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada on a constitutional basis. The status quo position has been rendered in effect unconstitutional.

• (1120)

My response has been that we do take this seriously. I am looking very carefully at the implication of the judgments constituting the majority as well as the minority decisions of the Supreme Court in order to distill the legal implications of this decision.

As far as our responsibilities are concerned, we intend to provide the leadership that is required on this issue. There is a substantial provincial involvement and implication in these issues in terms of their responsibility for the delivery of health services. Accordingly, it would be my intention to work in the interests of Canadians, who are now asking for advice with respect to today's situation, in a position of leadership with our provincial colleagues so we can have, and provide all Canadian citizens right across the country with a uniform approach. That is the commitment we make at this point in time. In addition, we will be dealing with this matter on an urgent basis.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Parliament, as the Minister knows full well, has the power by using the non obstante clause to bring in legislation which overrides the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. But I have said in this House, and I repeat, as Leader of the Liberal Party, that we will not agree to any such exclusion of the Charter as a solution to this problem.

Whatever anyone thinks of any Supreme Court of Canada decision, we should not undermine, in our view, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Can I have a guarantee from the Minister of Justice that his Government will rule out using the non obstante clause to get around the Supreme Court of Canada decision?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think it is fair to say that the non obstante clause would only be used in extraordinary circumstances by any Government. I am not in a position to make a policy statement at this point. We are, of course, looking at the implications of the decision. All I say to the right hon. gentleman is that we are now in a new reality with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in Canada. We are now seeing in different cases, particularly in this instance, the impact that the Supreme Court of Canada rulings will have on the capacity and abilities of Parliament to deal in certain legislative areas.

What I can tell the right hon. gentleman is that I do not contemplate the use of the non obstante clause on the part of the Government with respect to this issue.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY STUDY OF ALL ASPECTS OF HUMAN REPRODUCTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I repeat, I accept the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada which has struck down the legislation I had the honour of presenting in the House 20 years ago.

The Supreme Court has declared that Parliament retains the right to protect the fetus, at a given point. It is a question we have to consider. The Supreme Court is in fact obliging us to consider the whole issue of human reproduction in a far broader context, and we must deal with the implications of the Supreme Court's decision very soon.

Will the Minister of Justice immediately order a parliamentary study of all aspects of this very complex question, including artificial insemination, surrogate motherhood, in vitro fertilization and all the new technologies and the ethical issues as well? Is it not time that we, as parliamentarians, considered all these aspects?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate suggestions from the Opposition. It is clearly an idea which the right hon. gentleman puts forward that can be advanced by his House Leader with our House Leader and the House Leader of the New Democratic Party to examine the appropriate role of House of Commons committees.

I can only say that these issues, as far as the Government and our Party are concerned, are under active consideration and scrutiny at the present time. My colleague, the Minister responsible for the Status of Women, has taken a particular leadership role in this area. There is an inter-departmental task force now carefully examining all these issues that have been discussed by the right hon. gentleman.

As I indicated in my first response to the right hon. gentleman, I think that in view of the circumstance we find ourselves in today, in light of the Supreme Court of Canada decision, that there is a responsibility on all of us to look at this matter in a serious and urgent way. We are prepared not only to give leadership in the areas that the hon. gentleman has indicated, but to try to work with the provinces in a co-operative way, as we have been able to do on so many issues, to get a consistent approach concerning the situation today.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

FORMER COMMISSIONER OF ELECTIONS' LETTER—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, if there is an Acting Prime Minister in the House, I would like to address a question to her or to him relating to the Masse affair.

The Prime Minister yesterday, and in preceding days, had been telling us about the important responsibilities of the Elections Commission and offered an official of the Commission to answer questions to a parliamentary committee. But that commission and that process do not relieve the Prime Minister from the responsibility he has for the ethical standards of his Ministers. In his letter on the conflict of interest guidelines the Prime Minister said that he would not shirk his responsibility and there was nothing:

> —which would relieve me and my colleagues of the necessity of exercising judgment.

I want to ask about that judgment. What was the Prime Minister's judgment? What did he do when he saw in a letter from the elections official:

> Proof in the dossier demonstrates that you participated in an infraction against Section 62 of the Elections Act.

That was speaking about the Minister of Energy. What judgment was made by the Prime Minister pursuant to the conflict of interest guidelines, and what was the process when that statement came to his attention?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, these questions have been raised over and over again this week. They have been answered.

I would like to mention one thing about Question Period. Something that Question Period does is to establish the priorities of a Party. Day after day we have seen opposition Members standing up and establishing their priorities. Those priorities are not with employment, they are not with trade, and they are not with social programs. The opposition Parties have not raised these issues because they have no constructive proposals to put forward. That is why they keep raising this subject which has been referred to a committee.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I think the highest priority of the Official Opposition and that of the Canadian people is to have a Government which they can trust.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, what is the point of the conflict of interest guidelines? What do they mean if Ministers are held only accountable by the Criminal Code and only accountable by other standards that apply to the rest of the House of Commons and to the rest of Canadians? Why do we have conflict of interest guidelines, and what do they mean?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, for some days we have been saying that this matter should be referred to a committee where the proper witnesses could appear and answer, in detail, the questions raised.

I may point out that when the Member talks about support and the way in which people look at Parties, surely he has to ask himself, why members of his own Party are now moving away from backing their Leader to backing someone else. Is it because there is a question of trust?

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—FREE CHOICE BY WOMEN

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. The whole country saw and was impressed with the remarkable decision by the Supreme Court of Canada yesterday which clearly came down on the side of individual liberty and choice. Although the decision was clear, all its implications are by no means clear. Certainly given the statements that have already been made by some provincial Governments, there is some clear misunderstanding.

• (1130)

I would ask the Minister of Justice if the Government is taking measures to make it abundantly clear, from British Columbia in the West to Newfoundland in the East, that the question of an abortion is now to be a matter of serious but free choice to be reached by a woman on her own, presumably after consultation with her physician.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party has asked me to give assurances that we will work with the provinces to try to make sure that the appropriate approach is taken in light of current realities. I have already reiterated that position on a number of occasions and have said that that would be our intention.

I think it is important, in light of the decision of the Supreme Court, that we do make sure that Canadians are best served within the federal and provincial jurisdictions. The question raised by the Leader of the New Democratic Party does bring attention to the fact that there is a substantial and significant provincial role in the delivery of health services. This is one of the reasons we are looking at the implications of the decision handed down by the Supreme Court of Canada, a decision which was not made by one person speaking on behalf of the court; rather, there were three different approaches which, I think the Hon. Member will agree, require careful consideration of the implications of the decision and precisely the state of the law in Canada today. That is what we are in the process of doing.

We are in fact very carefully reviewing the state of the law. I am in fact discussing this matter with my colleagues in Cabinet with respect to the response and different areas of responsibility. We will in fact be in communication with provincial authorities to try to bring a consistent and appropriate approach to this matter across Canada.

HOSPITALS—RETENTION OF THERAPEUTIC ABORTION COMMITTEES QUERIED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, one aspect of the complex decision that was reached that is not complex and is clear is that the Supreme Court of Canada has said that the decision to be reached on the question of abortion is to be made not by some committee from which a woman must get approval but by the woman herself as a free citizen in a free country. Again, will the Minister make sure that all provincial Governments understand that that is so?

In relation to that, since there were some signs yesterday that some hospitals still planned to maintain therapeutic abortion committees, will the Government make it abundantly clear in light of this decision that the very existence of those committees is incompatible with the Supreme Court decision?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can only say that the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada speaks for itself. This is now a matter of the law of Canada.

The fact is that the Supreme Court of Canada has addressed itself to the criminal law provisions concerning abortion. It has determined that those provisions are now unconstitutional. In the course of its decision, it goes on to reflect upon the basis of its decision and that takes a number of approaches, as the Hon. Member knows. It deals with the right of the woman in matters of abortion, and there is reference in a part of the decision to the right of the foetus, something which I think is important to consider as well. There is other litigation before the Supreme Court of Canada dealing specifically with that particular issue which is being conducted by a former New Democratic Party cabinet Minister, who will be heard by the court again specifically on that area of the question.

I am saying to the Hon. Member that it is a complex issue in its legal implications. We want to make sure that everyone fully understands the legal implications and we intend to act in a way which is in the best interests of the Canadian public.

[Translation]

OPPORTUNITY FOR DISCUSSION WITH PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, this is indeed a complex decision. Yesterday, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East asked some questions about this problem and she did not get a very clear answer. Today, my question for the Minister is this: Does the federal Government intend to discuss all the aspects of this decision immediately with the provincial governments in order to clearly establish what the law is in this area in all provinces?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, without being facetious, I thought that the answer was clearer than the question. Yesterday I indicated that we certainly would be involved with discussions with our provincial counterparts.

Mr. Broadbent: Tout de suite?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Tout de suite, absolument. I do not know how quickly we can act, if we can act more quickly than we are now acting. We are in the process of giving this matter the most serious consideration. As soon as the decision came down, I was immediately in contact with cabinet colleagues with different responsibilities in this area.

We take the matter seriously. It is a serious question. There are divergent points of view in Canada. One of the positions that must be considered is that we want to make sure that our actions are based on the strict and proper interpretation of the law, so I have been working very hard to make sure that a full understanding of this complex issue is had by all of us at the federal government level so that we may share our point of view with other jurisdictions which have responsibilities as well.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—ADJUSTMENT PROGRAMS FOR AFFECTED WORKERS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Earlier this week, the Minister of State for Privatization said that special adjustment programs for workers and companies hurt by the Canada-U.S. Trade Agreement were not necessary, but in response the Premier of Nova Scotia said that she was wrong. The Premier said that her statement does not in any way coincide with what the Prime Minister has said publicly and with what he said to the Premiers and what he said in a letter to the Premier of Nova Scotia.

Who is right? Will there or will there not be special adjustment programs for companies and workers hurt by the free trade agreement?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, what was said this week is entirely consistent with what has been said in the past. We have an employment program, the Canadian Jobs Strategy Program, which is highly flexible and has $1.6 million. It is highly flexible in meeting any labour adjustment needs in the community. We have said that we believe that program will be sufficient for those rare cases where there might be some adjustment arising from free trade, remembering that so many opportunities will come out of free trade that, as every independent study has shown, there will be more jobs.

What I said in my speech, what I said in the House, and what has been said many times is that if there is a need for something further, we will of course make sure that people do not get hurt. We have said that. We have also said that we have established an adjustment advisory committee that will make recommendations and tell us whether it thinks we need anything additional. Surely that is a perfectly reasonable approach.

FUNDING OF ADJUSTMENT PROGRAMS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Premier of Nova Scotia does not think that it is a reasonable approach and he does not believe that that is what was told to him and to the other Premiers by the Prime Minister earlier this year. He thinks that special adjustment programs were promised, and, by the way, they were recommended by the Macdonald Commission and by many other commissions in this matter.

Is the Minister telling the House today that there will be no special adjustment programs for workers and companies and that we will have to rely upon the retraining programs that have been cut by 32 per cent since 1984, from $2.2 billion to $1.6 billion? Is she saying that that is all that will be available for Canadian workers and firms, contrary to what the Prime Minister promised the Premiers?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, when talking about funds being available, let me remind the Hon. Member that there are one million people working today who were not working when he and his friends left government office. The programs we established helped to meet the needs of Canadians in those circumstances. That is what we think Governments do, they develop programs that help people in changing circumstances. That is what we intend to continue to do.

• (1140)

We have a program that is working. We think it will apply to free trade where we expect adjustments will be small. We think there will be opportunities for people. If changes are required, then we will of course be considering them on the basis of the committee chaired by Mr. de Grandpré.

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—PROVISION OF SERVICES TO WOMEN WANTING ABORTIONS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. As he must know, there are women across Canada waiting right now for an abortion. Some have been waiting for some time. They are confused about what to do now. As the Supreme Court said yesterday, every delay increases risk for these women.

How will the Minister make it very clear to women and their doctors that women no longer need to apply through a therapeutic abortion committee, and how will he make sure they have the alternate resources available?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for that question. I tried to indicate in the course of my responses to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of her Party that this matter involves two jurisdictions. We have responsiblity for the Criminal Code, but there is a significant provincial jurisdiction with respect to the delivery of health services.

It seems to this Government that we would want to work with the provinces as soon as we can to determine the issues which have to be faced in this matter in order to have a thorough understanding that there will be a consistent approach across the country. This is the kind of approach the Canadian public want us to take.

The situation as it now stands is that the criminal law in this respect has been declared unconstitutional. We have to face that reality and we are prepared to give this matter serious attention, as I indicated to her Leader.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, is the Minister saying that a woman who is eight weeks pregnant now has to wait six months before the Governments get together and make some decisions? I was asking for some immediate communication to women and their doctors so that they know they have an alternative right now.

THERAPEUTIC ABORTION COMMITTEES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same Minister. Will he reaffirm that the majority of the Supreme Court judges said that therapeutic abortion committees caused unnecessary delays, were unfair and contrary to the Charter, and will he confirm that any province retaining this procedure is acting contrary to the Charter?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we take this matter seriously. We are acting expeditiously. I do not think it is the function of Question Period for me to be giving legal advice and interpreting a judgment for provincial authorities who have jurisdiction in certain areas. All I can tell the Hon. Member is that we believe we should work together with the provinces to make sure this matter can be resolved properly.

I am not here to dictate to any jurisdiction as to how they should carry out their own affairs. However, I think we can work co-operatively to make sure the best interests of Canadian women, the Canadian people at large, are looked after. I intend to work hard to do that.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY PROPOSAL TO PLACE DETECTION DEVICES UNDER ARCTIC ICE

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, in a speech to the Conference of Defence Associations, the NDP defence critic said that instead of Canadian submarines in the Canadian Arctic, the NDP would place detection devices under the ice-pack to detect intruding submarines. The data from these devices would be interpreted by Canadian Armed Forces in the North and then transmitted to the U.S.

My question to the Minister of National Defence is this. Is this policy consistent with Canada's obligations under NATO and NORAD, or is it simply an attempt by the NDP to hand over Canadian Arctic sovereignty to a foreign power, the U.S.A.?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there is a bit of noise in the room.

I will leave it to the NDP to sort out their policies without my assistance. I wish them the best of luck this weekend in trying to do so. We will all be watching with great interest.

The Government, in the White Paper, indicated it was our intention to put acoustic sensors under the Arctic ice. The difference between us and the NDP is that we want to have an enforcement capability. It is clear that someone's Navy is going to be in Canada's North. The real question that remains is whether Canada's Navy will be there, and we want Canada to have the capacity to go there.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF LAVAL POST OFFICE CLOSURE AND PROTECTION OF JOBS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in a press release, Canada Post announced it was closing the Laval post office, leaving 200 employees uncertain as to their future. Canada Post has once again shown its arrogance and its lack of respect for the parties concerned.

Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation is this: Why didn't Canada Post consult with the Mayor of Laval, the Member of Parliament for the area and the union? Why did Canada Post refuse to consider this reorganization as being caused by technological change and thus protect the jobs under Clause 29 of the Collective Agreement?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first, I understand that Canada Post did brief Members of Parliament from that area with respect to its plans. Its plans are very simple: to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of the operations in the Montreal area, and to make use of excess capacity in the other two plants in that area. The changes will lead to a more efficient Post Office, and the employees will be looked after under the terms of their contract which provides for job security.

I do not understand why the Hon. Member keeps insisting that each and every change in the administration of the Post Office has to be brought before the House of Commons. This is ridiculous and contrary to the advice of his own colleague, the Hon. Member for Papineau, a former Postmaster General, who says it is precisely because of that kind of political interference that the Post Office is in the mess it is in today.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister responsible for Canada Post does not want to play his role, he should resign.

LOSS OF JOBS—TRANSFER OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the proposed change in the Montreal processing plants clearly indicates that after it is done there will be 181 jobs lost. Yesterday Canada Post said that all the employees will be transferred to the other plants. Which document is true, the press release or this document I have here which was given to the union yesterday? This is a Canada Post document. Could he tell us who is telling the truth here?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I am quite certain the Hon. Member is not.

Mr. Boudria: You can't say that. Apologize.

Mr. Andre: Look who is asking for an apology, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Boudria: You can laugh all you like. It is not funny.

Mr. Speaker: There are a lot of different ways to express ourselves here, but I would ask the Hon. Minister to make it clear that he was not calling the Hon. Member a liar.

Mr. Andre: I think that was quite clear but I will repeat it, Mr. Speaker. That was not what I said, which I think an examination of the "blues" will confirm.

The question of job security and change is well covered by the existing labour contracts. The security offered by the Post Office to its employees is superior to that offered by any business in Canada. There is no job in Canada outside the Post Office that has the same kind of security protection with respect to change. The Hon. Member is simply inaccurate, and it is not true to suggest that the employees are at risk.

• (1150)

The Post Office is trying to manage the Post Office and increase its efficiency so that the mail is delivered on time and at reasonable cost. I think we ought to allow it to carry on with that job.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LANGUAGE TEACHERS' DISPUTE

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Treasury Board. The federal Government's language teachers are in a legal strike position because of their disagreement with the Treasury Board and their willingness not to accept a conciliation report which would increase their teaching load from 20 hours to 25 hours per week in a 37.5 hour work week.

Can the Minister advise the House what the status is concerning these negotiations? Does he think a resolution will be reached to avert a strike?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, the conciliation board report was a majority board report. It recommended the settlement that had been reached between the employees and employer in September. We are in agreement with the recommendation and would hope that we can settle on the basis of that report.

PROPOSED ALL-NEWS TELEVISION CHANNEL—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications who, in November, said: "It is not the role of Cabinet to make precise determinations as to which services should be carried, how these are to be delivered and their cable interrelationships." These are "the domain of our broadcast regulator."

This is a clear and unequivocal statement of principle that the Minister should be proud to have uttered. Would the Minister not, therefore, agree that the Cabinet decision with respect to the CBC news service, which she has since been in the process of carrying out, is a flat contradiction of that principle? Should she not, as a matter of integrity, resign?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, you will note that at the end of the week I am still here.

With regard to the decisions that were announced by the CRTC in November, the licence takes effect as of September 1, 1988. Any legally binding decision that the Government of Canada would make on any of the appeals would have to be announced in that period.

However, I did state some of the concerns which the Government has with the all-news TV channel. One of them concerned the fact that the all-news channel was to be solely in the English language. What do you, Sir, and members of the Opposition think the response would have been in the rest of the country if the announcement of a new channel had been that it would be solely in the French language? I do not really believe that would have been acceptable.

We are signaling to the CBC that we want any service to be available in both languages in the sense that one should take initiatives in the two languages of this country because, first and foremost, we are a bilingual country.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, that is a nice ex post facto and political rationalization for an action already established as the thrust of the Government from the back-benches of the Government. The fact is that the Minister gave clear directives and orders to the CBC as to what it should do between now and September 1. The Government has established its own parliamentary news service. It has prepackaged news coming from southern Africa and the Government has now taken this action with respect to the CRTC decision.

Is it that the Government is concerned about the kind of message that Canadians are getting, the kind of image projected by the Government? Are we seeing the first insidious steps toward the establishment of government control over the news?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry to see that the members of the New Democratic Party do not attach the same importance to service in the French language as we do. I think that is regrettable.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: That is exactly what the Hon. Member is saying. He is saying that if you signal to the CBC or anyone else in the broadcasting system that you expect services to be available in both our official languages, somehow or other that is interference. It is the policy of this Government that we have services available, particularly from Crown corporations, in both our official languages.

INDUSTRY

CLOSURE OF FIRESTONE PLANT IN HAMILTON—READJUSTMENT PROGRAM FOR WORKERS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible I would like to ask any Minister who is interested in the city of Hamilton to answer a question relating to the Firestone plant.

The Minister will know that this weekend the first victims of the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal are the 1,200 workers at the Firestone plant in Hamilton who will lose their jobs. You will remember quite clearly, Mr. Speaker, that negotiations for the sale of the plant broke off a day after the preliminary agreement was signed because the company that had expressed an interest knew quite well that without duty on tires there was no need to establish a tire plant in Canada. That is the reality.

We heard the Minister who was talking about an adjustment program this morning say that a committee has been set up. Can that Minister explain to the House why, in the case of the Firestone workers, the total federal contribution, over and above what is available in terms of any employment strategy, is potentially approximately $9 per worker?

Is that the kind of assessment and readjustment program that we can expect from the Government for workers across the country who will lose their jobs as a result of the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal? Is the Government's answer a $9 solution?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, it is most unfair and an insult to the workers of the Firestone plant for the Member to attribute the decision of the company to the free trade agreement. It has no relation whatsoever to the free trade agreement and the Member knows that.

She also knows that the Minister of DRIE has, by his intervention, brought together a potential purchaser and the company. They have had discussions, and unfortunately no deal has been made. We know that another potential buyer has indicated willingness. We have indicated to the company, the workers, and any potential purchasers that the Government is quite willing, should the private companies which are talking reach a deal, to be helpful. That has been the position of the Government and still is.

PROSPECTIVE PURCHASERS OF PLANT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, that is not the position of the Government as expressed to me in a letter which was delivered to my office this week after the Minister conveniently escaped on his trip to France. In fact this Minister has refused to meet with prospective purchasers of the plant. There is more than one party interested in purchasing this plant. Even I, in the Opposition, know of two prospective buyers.

Why does the Minister not know? Why is the Minister refusing to meet with prospective purchasers of the Hamilton Firestone plant when he knows that he has the responsibility to try to help save 1,200 jobs in Hamilton? Why was he prepared to give over $6 million to an American company and yet give Canadian workers $9 and say good-bye?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, one of the main reasons that the Minister would not meet with a potential purchaser is because he has no plant to sell. The Minister has indicated that if the company which has announced that it will close the plant can reach a deal with any company and has a business proposal to do so, he would consider it. That has been the position, and the Member knows that.

It is nice to try to score cheap political points in the House on the backs of workers who are losing their jobs.

Ms. Copps: Don't talk to me about cheap political points.

Mr. Valcourt: Maybe it looks good for her to do that, but the workers know better than that.

Ms. Copps: Don't talk about my record on this dossier which is a hell of a lot better than yours.

Mr. Valcourt: If a solution to this problem is to be found it will be found by the company with somebody in the private sector.

Ms. Copps: That's a farce.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

PENDING DECISION ON EXPORTS OF UNPROCESSED SALMON

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. At the GATT meeting in Geneva next week, Canada will try to get a postponement of the final GATT decision on restrictions on Canadian exports of unprocessed pink or sockeye salmon or herring. I understand that the United States is being very obstructionist in this attempt.

The following week in Washington there will be an attempt to have bilateral talks to reach a mutually satisfactory solution to this problem. Will the Minister assure representatives of the West Coast fisheries industry that they will be able to participate in the negotiating team, either as full members of the team or at least to be present in the room as official observers?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, this is a most important question. I can assure the Hon. Member, as I and my colleague, the Minister for International Trade, assured industry representatives in the month of December, that they will be fully involved in the development of Canada's response and our course of action as a result of the GATT panel recommendation.

There is no imminent timetable. Canada will not agree to a decision being taken at the meeting in Geneva next week and we are seeking, through multinational approaches to other members of the GATT council who have similar concerns, a remedy of this issue which would prevent the council taking a decision that is detrimental to Canada's interest. We continue to work with the American industry and Government. We are somewhat optimistic that a bilateral solution to the problem might well be found through the meetings to which the Hon. Member referred.

REQUEST THAT INDUSTRY REPRESENTATIVES BE PRESENT AT CANADA-UNITED STATES TALKS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister assure representatives of the fishing industry that in any bilateral talks with the United States their representatives will be present in the room either as participants in the negotiating team or as full observers? Will they be present in the room?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member knows that in international bilateral discussions of this nature the two parties concerned enter the room but they are not accompanied by representatives of industry, and I understand that will be the case. Nevertheless, the representatives of the industry, as in other important bilateral issues, will be fully consulted and taken into confidence in terms of the strategy with which Canada approaches these questions. Their objectives will be fully pursued by the Government of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise the House that, given the hour, there will be three single questions. The Hon. Member for Mount Royal, on a single question.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROPOSED ALL-NEWS TELEVISION CHANNEL—SUGGESTED PARTNERSHIP WITH PRIVATE SECTOR

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I will try to synthesize my questions into one. My question is directed to the Minister of Communications. In her explanation for delaying the CBC's planning on an all-news channel, the Minister asked the CBC to have a shotgun wedding. If the CBC consummates that marriage with a private sector partner, it will be changing the terms of the "contract", the decision of the CRTC.

The Minister also said that she is concerned about making that much needed service bilingual, with which we would all agree. I am sorry that she did not say that on time.

Is the Minister aware that the CBC proposal was for a non-profit service and that a partnership with the private sector now implies a partnership with a profit motive? Therefore, if you are going to change the service—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Minister can respond to the question at least as far as it has gone. Given the hour, I do not think I can let the Hon. Member go on any longer.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out before, we thought that in this period of time it would be both fair and appropriate to advise the CBC of the concerns we had about the present proposal.

I may say that when the Hon. Member raises the question of what she calls a shotgun marriage between the public and private sectors, this was the route that the CBC had gone in the first place. That was its first intention, so it is not something that comes as a great surprise to anyone but the Hon. Member.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we believe we should have both French and an English all-news channel.

TRADE

FORMATION OF UNITED STATES LOBBY TO DEMAND CANADA LOWER ITS PLYWOOD CONSTRUCTION AND IMPORT STANDARDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns international trade. Considering that a lobby has been formed in the United States to demand that we lower our plywood construction and import standards, the purpose being obviously to penetrate our domestic markets and take over our international markets, what does the Government intend to do against an attack that is contrary to the spirit of the trade agreement which is the Government's pride and joy?

[English]

Hon. Gerald. S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade, I will try to respond. There is no question that the American producers have been annoyed and feel that Canada's standards with regard to plywood, particularly plywood used by CMHC in housing construction, are basically a non-tariff barrier to their entrance to our market.

We are very much aware of that. Even through the CCFM, Canadian Council of Forest Ministers, we have been dealing with the standards issue. We do not share the view of the American producers. The issue is under consideration now by CMHC and a decision will be rendered forthwith.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICE

RESIGNATION OF DEPUTY COMMISSIONER OF CORRECTIONS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Solicitor General. Will he indicate to the House the reasons why Deputy Commissioner of Corrections, Mr. Gordon Pinder, resigned? If the Acting Solicitor General is unaware of the circumstances leading to Mr. Pinder's resignation, will he undertake to obtain the information and inform the House?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

PRIVILEGE

WITHDRAWAL BY MEMBER

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Yesterday I made a comment that upset the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) and other Members of this Chamber, which I certainly never meant to do. I have a sincere and profound respect for all Members of the House who make an effort to improve and increase their knowledge and competence in every area of our endeavours.

My remarks were never meant in any derogatory way and I hope all Members will accept my apology.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). I agree, and further more, Mr. Speaker, I regret that I am not perfectly bilingual, but I am still working on it.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard in relation to the amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, and on the amendment of Mr. Marchi (p. 12340).

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak on this Bill, but I am somewhat saddened that it is back here for ongoing debate. I would have hoped, along with our colleagues around this room who have an open heart and open mind, and along with the other place, which carefully studied this Bill that was sent to them under emergency circumstances last August, that we would have settled the whole issue and would now be in a position to move forward with respect to refugees who are leaving the lands of their birth and seeking asylum in other countries, certainly not always from their own choice. To become a refugee and to have to leave one's home country is no easy decision. They certainly are coming from places of turmoil.

I would like to point out that we were called back during a summer recess to deal with this Bill as an emergency situation because some boats landed off the coast of Nova Scotia. I would suggest that some people were very traumatized at what looked like an invasion by some one hundred and seventy some souls.

We had been calling on the Government of Canada for nearly three years to bring in comprehensive refugee legislation which would be seen as fair, expeditious and which would assist in the curbing of abuse to the system. There was no question that there was a need to curb the abuse which was taking place.

The Government had the good fortune to receive the wise counsel of Rabbi Plaut, who tabled the Plaut report. It had the wise counsel of a standing committee of this House which studied at great length complicated and heart-wrenching concerns and considerations which face refugees. When it brought this regressive and repressive Bill into the House it heard some very enlightened observations and some very concrete suggestions of ways to improve the thrust of this Bill to ensure that it would not be in contravention of international law and that it would not be in contravention of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

We also heard from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, and I will come back to that in a moment. We thought the Government would have welcomed all this wise counsel and would have adjusted the Bill, accepting the amendments which were put forth under great duress because there was not the kind of consultation we would have liked. In light of the fact the Government saw this as an acute emergency, the amendments were brought forward. Yet the Government did not accept those amendments. It pushed the Bill through the House with its massive majority. Fortunately, collectively in that other place, the Senators found reason to correct this Bill. They found reasons to make very strong recommendations for change. They unanimously agreed to send 18 recommendations back to this House, 18 amendments on a Bill that has been hanging around under a supposed emergency state since last August. The Minister saw fit to accept only four of those amendments which, in a sense, were for clarification or with respect to language. However, he rejected the others, the major ones. I gather that there were four language amendments and three other small corrections which were made to the Bill. When it came to the major recommendations we did not see any forward movement on the part of the Government irrespective of the careful and thoughtful consideration that had been given to the legislation in the other place.

The areas of the Bill which deal with its heart and soul, that were refused consideration by the Government, were those which addressed the powers of authority to detain identified refugee claimants for long periods without review. The second area was the right to turn ships back at sea if suspected of carrying illegal aliens. The third was with respect to the right to prosecute anyone, including church groups, who might be found to have helped claimants who did not seemingly have valid visas or valid passports.

Let us consider in what areas the Government chose not to accept the major recommendations. The first area which strikes me as being horrendous is the following. If we cast our minds back to ships being turned back at sea we could consider the Vietnamese boat people and the sight of people floating unprotected on waters. I cannot believe that the Minister did not take the counsel that was given to him on four occasions. He chose to ignore that counsel.

I have in my hand a letter sent by Mr. Jean-Pierre Hocké, the United Nation's High Commissioner for Refugees. The letter is from Geneva and dated August 12, 1987. The letter is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr.

Clark) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard). It states:

> I have the honour to refer to an amendment to the Immigration Act 1976 (Bill C-84) which the Government of Canada has most recently tabled in Parliament. My Office fully understand the Canadian Government's preoccupation regarding abuses of procedures for the determination of refugees status and related problems. Certain provisions of the proposed legislation, however, give rise to serious concern in as much as lack of procedural safeguards could risk exposing bona fide asylum seekers and refugees to forcible return to territories where their lives or freedom would be threatened (refoulement).

That has been described and explained as refoulement.

> This pertains in particular to Clause No. 8 of the Bill introducing a new Section 91.1 in the Act relating to the authority to direct ships to leave or not to enter the internal waters of Canada or the territorial sea of Canada, apparently without examination of passengers' status. The principle of non-refloulement to which Canada fully adheres as a party to the 1951 UN Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees and the 1967 Protocol there to enjoins any action on the part of states which may result in refoulement.
> The same principle requires the adoption of appropriate procedures to ensure observance with guarantees, no less effective than those available, to persons claiming refugee status in Canada. The adoption of such procedures would be consistent with the contents of Clause 1 Sections 2.1 (A) and (D) of the Bill which state—"to preserve for persons in genuine need of protection access to the procedures for determining refugee claims" and "—the fulfilment of Canada's obligations in respect of internationally protected persons".

The letter goes on to state:

> As you are no doubt aware the situations now being faced are not unique to Canada. Institution of the procedural safeguards referred to above would serve as an important example to the international community and help preserve the principle of asylum throughout the world.
>
> In light of these considerations I am confident that all persons who seek Canada's protection will be afforded adequate procedural safeguards against refoulement and that these will be incorporated in the operative part of the Bill in question.
> While these are my Office's initial reactions to the proposed legislation, my Representative in Ottawa may convey further comments on these and related important issues.
> Please accept the assurances of my highest consideration. Jean-Pierre Hocké, United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

I find it quite astonishing that with the remarks and the concerns brought to the attention of all by the High Commissioner and by Rabbi Plaut, reinforced by representations and presentations, that the Minister still stubbornly refuses to change that clause in Bill C-84. It would seem that the Government has truly not reflected. If it has reflected, and it has come to some very poor conclusions. It is beyond me how the Minister could not understand and accept that particular amendment. It is abhorrent to think that this would not be considered vital. To turn a boat back without knowing whether or not there are true refugees on board is inappropriate action. It is not what exists in the hearts and souls of most Members of the House of Commons.

How do we know who is on board? How do we know if they are really in need or not? How do we know from where they are really coming? How do we know their ages? How do we know the state of their health? How do we know the state of the boat? The unknown is a big variable in the consideration of this matter, something which the Government has simply not addressed in this Bill.

I suggest that a more intelligent approach would be to have sent out messages that we have no patience for people who deal in human flesh. We have no patience for people who will not respect the lives and the rights of individuals. We have no respect for smugglers and for people who are taking advantage of those in need. Those are the types of messages we want to get across. That is what Canadians would have said while saying, "We are open to accepting and understanding the plight of the refugee".

I would now like to deal with the question of fairness. Perhaps the Government does not think that fairness and equal treatment across the land is something that Canadians want. I think the Government has misjudged in that respect. People arriving on boats as legitimate refugees will be turned around in Canadian waters or outside our waters. I do not know how we will force these boats to turn around. I guess we will pull out our big guns, or perhaps our nuclear submarines will force them to turn around and go the other way. This will force, without much knowledge, the return of people to lord knows where. It will put them in jeopardy and danger.

However, if people in similar circumstances are lucky enough to board a plane and land at one of our airports then they will be given refugee status. They will be given some form of decent treatment. At least someone will look at their papers and do some checking. If they come by boat, they receive different treatment. I do not think that that is correct. That is not the type of system we want. We do not want a two-class, two-category system. In Canada there is one category and one class. The laws are the same for everyone, and everyone should be treated equally.

• (1230)

How do we discourage smugglers, ship captains, and owners of the boats? The manner in which to do that is to pull the boats into safe harbour, check and verify the condition of the passengers and find out if they are refugees, but at the same time take the captain of that boat, fine him, put him in jail, put him on trial, and confiscate the right to that boat. I guarantee in no short order the message will get out across the land and across the sea, "Don't go to Canada that way. You will be escorted directly to jail. Do not pass go. You are not going to collect 200 bucks", for those of you who know the old Monopoly rules. "The rules of the game in Canada are that you cannot bring people into this land by boat and be expected to be treated as a hero, or go free and turn around in order that your next friend can try to do the same thing and dump human cargo so that they are floating out in the sea, or they walk into a strange place, or they run away in fear".

That is not the way people are integrated into this society. Canada has been built with refugees. Often as I drive down the road in my particular riding I think of the Vietnamese boat people, and how proud I was to be among those citizens who sponsored a family and helped bring them to this country and saw to their establishment. I now know many of those children and see how marvelously they have adapted to this land, and how beautifully they have enriched our landscape by the tapestry that they have helped to weave to strengthen this country. They have been entrepreneurs and have brought economic prosperity to this country. More than 100,000 Vietnamese boat people came to this land. Other refugee movements have been given safe harbour in this country, for example, Polish, Hungarian, Czechoslovakian, and Sri Lanka.

Now we have two types of laws for how someone gets to this country, and two types of circumstances under which someone is considered as a refugee. That is thoroughly unacceptable. I find it unbelievable that the Minister was not prepared to change that aspect of the Bill.

The second aspect of the Bill that I find mind-boggling is that any group that enables, helps, guides, or counsels refugees, particularly those who might be here without valid visas or passports, will be prosecuted. I do not know where the Minister thinks these people who run away from persecution and possible death might go to pick up this valid paper. Do they say, "Just a minute, don't shoot me. I have to go and talk to the embassy and see if they will give me a piece of paper so I can be validated. Wait until I go and check my health. Wait until I have some tests". What type of crazy world does the Minister think we are living in? This is absolute hypocrisy.

We are either a country of receipt that is open to refugees who seek safe haven on our shores, or we are not. Certainly many of those refugees will not have valid papers at the time that they arrive. That does not mean that we do not want to get validation, or do proper checking. Certainly we do. There is a procedure and a manner in which to do that without misusing the force of the Government and misrepresenting the will of the Canadian people.

The question of the smugglers and how they should be treated, the question of turning back the boats, the question of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and his perspective, the question of documentation and how the lack of documentation should be handled, and how we can overcome the fact that it is no luxury to wait weeks and months for proper visas, are the types of questions that I strongly recommend that the House, through the Minister, re-evaluate, and please make the needed changes that have been so carefully considered by the other place, and accept those major changes to the unacceptable clauses in the Bill. That would certainly stand Canada well for itself, and for its best instincts.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for her speech. I wish to ask her about the relationship of Bill C-84 to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, particularly in light of the court decision yesterday that reaffirmed the primacy of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and of the obligation upon the House of Commons to ensure that legislation that is passed is in accordance with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

I wish to read a couple of statements that were included in the Senate report. In Reference re Education Act of Ontario and Minority Language Education Rights (1984), the Ontario Court of Appeal wrote:

> The judiciary is not the sole guardian of the constitutional rights of Canadians. Parliament and the provincial Legislatures are equally responsible to ensure that the rights conferred by the Charter are upheld.

The report also cites Mr. Justice Dickson writing for the Supreme Court of Canada in Hunter v. Southam who stated:

> It is the legislature's responsibility to enact legislation that embodies appropriate safeguards to comply with the Constitution's requirements. It shall not fall to the courts to fill in the details that will render legislative lacunae constitutional.

Would the Hon. Member care to comment on those statements from the bench in light of her concerns on Bill C-84?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, there is no question that my hon. colleague has made some very constructive observations. I hope that the Minister is watching his television set since he is unable to be with us at this particular moment.

It would seem that there is contravention of the Charter. Fair warning has been given to the House that as soon as this Bill is passed it is liable to be challenged by lawyers and taken to the courts. This means that we will be left with no legislation that will be in action and will answer the responsible needs to address a very serious issue that we have been talking about since 1983. It is now 1988. The Minister has been made aware that this Bill has legal holes in it. He is perpetrating a very serious error on this House, and prolonging responsible action and a responsible measure that will enable us to be effective in curbing abuse and in the receipt of legitimate refugees.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I commend the Hon. Member on her very direct and well-founded remarks on the subject of Bill C-84. I was particularly pleased to hear her remind Parliament of the communication from Jean-Pierre Hocké, the High Commissioner for Refugees and other matters relating to his communication.

One matter that has been rather understandably overlooked at times during the last year of debate around refugees, and the last half year debate around this Bill, is what effect this Bill and its companion Bill might have on other countries, directly or indirectly.

• (1240)

To the extent this Bill proposes a turning away of ships with the assumption that the ships will go somewhere other than Canada and their passengers will go somewhere other than Canada, the actions Canada takes obviously will have a very important effect on other countries in their treatment of refugees. In the past Canada has been considered a leader, acting on the executive of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, funding the work with voluntary contributions, setting a high standard and even preaching those high standards to certain other countries.

Would the Hon. Member comment on what she thinks may be the international effect, not only in Europe where some of these people might have embarked, but also in southern Asia, the Indian Ocean or the South Pacific if Bill C-84 is adopted with this provision for turning people away who may be refugees?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, it sends the wrong kind of a message. I am very pleased to hear the question from the very knowledgeable Member and colleague. Certainly he is well regarded in the international field and understands the implications of the kinds of messages that get sent out. This is not even a subliminal message. It is a loud, restrictive measure. Canada is seen internationally in much better light than we see ourselves. All you have to do is go to international meetings to see the high regard in which Canada is held. We are a role model in many ways. Our care, concern and compassion have been highly regarded and we have received international awards.

What is the message, Mr. Speaker? The message out there is that Canada has changed and is turning to a right wing narrow-minded perspective. Some of the right wing tendencies are now impacting on our standards in Canada. I think the Government is misreading the population. Over one-third of us are new Canadians and over one-third of us have built this land. We are all very proud of this extremely dynamic multicultural society. I suggest that what the Government did was wrong.

The Government has to explain its message and differentiate between the Bill on immigration, Bill C-55 and the Bill on refugees, Bill C-84. It has to make the population meet its own highest expectations, namely, to receive people well, to welcome them and to educate them that Canada is respectful to all peoples of this world when they arrive on our shores. We need to set the standards. This Bill does quite the contrary. It sends the wrong message, whether it is to southeastern Asia, middle Europe, South Africa or South America.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, it is my strongly held view that legislation is necessary to sort out bogus claimants from true refugees. It is the Opposition in this House who filibuster and who must bear the responsibility for the continuation of a situation in Canada where our security is at risk because legislation is inadequate to protect us. That is what Bill C-84 is all about. The Opposition must bear the responsibility for the filibuster, which is gradually eroding the generosity, the will and the commitment of Canadians to true refugees.

What has been brought forward to this Parliament, beginning last May, in legislative form is the required set of tools necessary to protect the security of the country and to continue in positive ways our reputation internationally in positive ways regarding what we do for refugees and immigrants. Every single day of continuation of this kind of filibuster is another little drop of water on the Canadian psyche and its willingness to be supportive of true refugees.

There is no question in international terms about the willingness of western countries generally, and Canada is part of that, to continue to be protective of true refugees. But that protection is at risk in a democracy because of the abuses to the system. Without the passage of legislation that allows us to sort out the abusers from the true refugees, we are helpless. The rest of the world is looking to Canada to provide leadership in the sorting task. Our Government is doing that.

I now have two questions for the Hon. Member. Does she and does her Party want to continue to be part of a filibuster which erodes that spirit about which she talks so much? If she thinks this legislation is so atrocious in its protection of true refugees, can she—her colleague could not earlier this day—name one country in the whole world where a refugee claimant will have a better sense of legal protection and help than will be true of Canada once we have the new Bill in place? I ask the Member to name me one country where a refugee claimant will have better protection than Canada. I challenge her to do that.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the filibuster, there is nothing like being aggressive when you are wrong. I find it surprising that the Hon. Member with his legal talents, and who I respect, would suggest that. What we are doing here today is trying to say, for goodness sake we need this legislation. We need to sort out the abuses and we need to be able to protect the refugees. For goodness sake, stop allowing this kind of a Bill to go through without the needed amendments because it will get hung up in the courts. We will be no farther ahead than we were before. This reference to filibuster should end. It is not a filibuster, it is the proper and appropriate role of the Official Opposition and every Member of this House to speak out when they think an error has been made that will create a change or a different direction than what one supposes is the will of the Government, unless that is not the will of the Government. Don't try to tag us with filibuster when an error has been made in either the timing, the scheduling or the content of a particular clause in a Bill. That is unfair and I call it dirty pool.

Second, the legislation is inadequate. That is what we have said, so fix it. It is not something that is not wrong so you don't need to fix it. It is wrong, fix it; it is broken.

I cited quite particularly for the Hon. Member and read into the record the letter from the United Nations High Commissioner to put the Member on guard and to remind him that we have signed conventions and international documents. We are not living up to those documents and there is concern at the United Nations. I do not have to prove to the Member, and I would not care if there was not another place on this whole earth—

Mr. Hawkes: There isn't.

Mrs. Finestone: —in this international village, it does not matter. What is important is what he does as a Canadian and what I do as a Canadian. I am not comparing Canada to any other place in this world because this is the best place in which to live. This is where we do live. This is where we want it to be right to live. Don't ask me to give odious comparisons. They are not relevant to the issue.

• (1250)

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments on Bill C-84. I listened to the Parliamentary Secretary attack the Opposition for what he called a filibuster. I do not accept that. We are dealing with legislation that is fundamentally flawed, legislation which the churches, the Canadian Bar Association and every single witness who appeared before the Senate committee, except government witnesses, indicated was fundamentally flawed and needed many changes. The Parliamentary Secretary has said that the Opposition is responsible for a filibuster, but we are doing our duty by trying to expose the flaws in this Bill. I think that is fundamentally wrong on his part.

I appreciate having this chance to make one last appeal to the Government to adopt a reasoned and humane policy toward refugees in Canada rather than to turn its back on those people. What we need now from the Government is leadership. Instead, it is creating fear and panic and then pandering to the very fear and panic the Government itself has created. We want a policy that is in accordance with our own Charter Rights and a policy that is in accordance with our international commitments.

A little over a year ago, we received from the United Nations High Commission for Refugees the Nansen award. That award did not go to the Canadian Government, it went to the Canadian people because of their attitude toward refugees. We have a good record and that good record was evidenced last summer when a boatload of refugee claimants landed in Nova Scotia. A woman met them with tea and cookies, a tradition of Canadian hospitality. That is the tradition of the Canadian people, but the Government seems intent upon destroying that good record and so this legislation, Bill C-84, as well as Bill C-55, are before us. Those Bills are undercutting our ability to receive refugees and are certainly undercutting our international standing.

I would like to say a few things about the importance of ensuring that Canadian laws conform with the Charter. Yesterday, we received the historic decision from the Supreme Court on the Henry Morgentaler case. That decision indicated that the Charter had to be obeyed and respected. The Charter is the fundamental law of Canada. It is not just a high-sounding statement of principle or desired goals, but is the fundamental law, and other laws must be brought into accordance with it.

The Senate report on Bill C-84 quoted the Ontario Court of Appeal's ruling in Reference re Education Act of Ontario and Minority Language Education Rights of 1984. The Ontario Court of Appeal said then:

> The judiciary is not the sole guardian of the constitutional rights of Canadians. Parliament and the provincial Legislatures are equally responsible to ensure that the rights conferred by the Charter are upheld.

If the Government will not do that, and obviously it is not with Bill C-84, then it is the responsibility of the Opposition and that is what opposition Members are trying to do by speaking on this Bill.

Mr. Justice Dickson, as he then was, writing for the Supreme Court of Canada in Hunter v. Southam of 1984, said much the same thing. He said:

> It is the Legislature's responsibility to enact legislation that embodies appropriate safeguards to comply with the Constitution's requirements. It should not fall to the courts to fill in the details that will render legislative lacunae constitutional.

We cannot look to the courts to do our work. If so, we abdicate the trust the people of Canada gave us in the last election, a trust this Government has betrayed in so many different ways.

Passing legislation like Bill C-84, legislation that runs counter to the Charter, is a mammoth hoax on the Canadian people, and an expensive hoax. This legislation will be struck down in certain important provisions. Then it will have to go back to the drawing board.

The Government has received clear indications from organizations such as the Canadian Bar Association that the legislation is flawed. Why does it not attempt to clean up the legislation rather than pretend that it will somehow meet the situation while it knows very well that it will not?

It is interesting that the Government has promised to establish an international institute on human rights. The Inter-Church Committee for Refugees had some interesting comments on Bill C-84. It said:

> Canada can only remain credible in the international human rights theatres if human rights are fully respected in Canada. The department cannot afford to remain aloof from policies and practices in Canada which threaten or undermine human rights.
> It is a matter of deep concern for this department—

The committee is referring here to the Department of External Affairs.

> —to launch a centre which focuses on Canada's interest in human rights overseas into the same Parliamentary Session which could pass refugee related Bill C-84 at home. This Bill is a flagrant attack on fundamental rights and freedoms in Canada. By relying on a questionable definition of emergency to justify its clearly excessive measures, it will lower the threshold for Charter Section 1 arguments. If Section 1 can be widely applied for such questionable reasons, the power of every other section of our Charter is reduced. Worse, other states will assume that if Canada does this, it can be considered acceptable.

Instead of having legislation that is in accordance with the Canadian tradition of openness toward refugees, instead of having legislation that is in accordance with our own Charter of Rights and Freedoms, instead of having legislation that is in accordance with the spirit of international covenants which Canada has signed, we have Bill C-84.

The Government attempted, both last summer when it first introduced this legislation and just this past week, to create a climate of panic and fear so that this legislation would be stampeded through the House of Commons. For example, just two weeks ago, we heard of the case of Mahmoud Mohammad, a convicted terrorist who came to Canada as an immigrant. This case suddenly surfaced in the press. The Government used it as an attempt to justify quick passage of Bill C-84.

There are two questions I would like to raise about this case. Why was the story about Mahmoud Mohammad leaked just as the Government was preparing to reintroduce Bill C-84? I do not know the answer to that question, but there is at least the possibility of a manipulated leak designed to create the climate of fear. We have seen the Government do that before and certainly it arouses that kind of suspicion in my mind.

Second, what does the Mahmoud Mohammad case have to do with Bill C-84? The answer is that it has absolutely nothing to do with Bill C-84 except in the mind of the Government which is trying to link that case with the passage of this Bill. Mohammad did not come here as a refugee. If Bill C-84 and Bill C-55 had been in place, he still would have come here. He arrived in Canada and was accepted as an immigrant because the Government did not properly apply its own regulations, regulations which were already in place. A convicted terrorist arrived in Canada after warnings had been issued because CSIS was having a shift change. To try to use this failure as a reason for putting in place the Draconian measures of Bill C-84 is unconscionable.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), quoted from a Winnipeg Free Press editorial of January 22 which said:

> These are the ministers who claim that Canada needs tough new immigration laws which could be used to send genuine political refugees back to face potential imprisonment, torture or death. Their action demonstrates that, far from draconian new laws, what this country needs most is the competent and honest enforcement of the ones we have.

Competent and honest enforcement of the present legislation, and perhaps some competency on the government side would help as well.

We all recognize that there is a need for tightening the refugee determination process. This has been recognized for a long time. It was recognized by the previous Government which did not take any action on it, but it did appoint the Plaut commission. When that report was brought in, in the early days of the present Government, it did not take any action. Instead, it referred the whole issue to the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration. When that committee brought in its report the Government did not take any action. It did not even respond to the report, although both the Plaut commission and the standing committee made some very reasonable suggestions that would have helped deal with the question of the backlog of refugees.

The churches made recommendations and the Government did not choose to act. As a result, the situation began to snowball. Canada began to get a reputation as a country where people could make bogus refugee claims and get away with it, certainly for a fair period of time. The Government chose not to act. Perhaps it felt it did not need to. As a result, we had a gradual buildup in the backlog until over 20,000 people are waiting for some kind of final determination of their status.

The Plaut report, the standing committee report, and the churches all recommended a process that would have been speedier, fair, with a reasonable appeal process, and would not have dragged on allowing people making bogus refugee claims to stay in Canada for four and five years. Instead, the whole process would have been through in a matter of some four months. If people were going to be staying here for only four months, it would not be worth their while to pay the very large fees to these unscrupulous refugee or immigration counsellors. However, the Government chose not to act on those recommendations.

Instead, last spring, Bill C-55 was introduced. It was not brought to the House for debate until June. Then there was just a few hours of debate and the House recessed for the summer. Then there was this panic notice that went out in the summer when 174 Sikhs landed in Nova Scotia. The House was called back for a so-called emergency, which I presume still exists, to deal with this issue. Both Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 were brought before us. There was no great emergency. There was a crisis which had gradually been building and which needs government action, but it did not develop suddenly last summer as the Government tried to pretend.

The panic reaction which the Government tried to create and manipulate is not, I submit, the proper climate for dealing with issues fundamentally affecting human rights. They affect human rights in Canada and Canada's standing in the world. They affect the fundamental position individual Canadians are taking towards some of the most disadvantaged people in our world. So much of the focus of the Government has been upon those who are unscrupulous and who do not deserve refugee status. We agree that action has to be taken against those people, but in doing so the Government is going to hurt some of the most disadvantaged people in our world. We are talking about refugees. We talk of them as something we want to push off to one side instead of saying, "Here are fellow human beings who need our assistance and who are speaking to the very depths of our humanity". Instead of responding in a full and free way, the Government is taking Draconian measures which are going to make it more difficult for Canadians to live up to the kind of reputation we achieved over the past 40 years when we received some 400,000 refugees into Canada. We know those refugees made a great contribution to Canadian life. Yet now we are closing the doors.

I want to look just briefly at the provision in this legislation for turning back boats. The Senate wanted to amend that provision, but the Government chose to keep it as it is. We have all heard many times about the disgraceful situation which took place in 1939 when a ship left Germany with 907 Jews and attempted to sail to different countries, including Canada, only to be turned away. That is the Canadian contribution to the Holocaust. We sent those people back to Germany where they faced extermination. That is a black mark upon Canadian history.

Since then we have not had a great many people who have attempted to come to Canada by boat as unsolicited refugees. In 1986 we had a boatload of Tamils who landed off the East Coast of Canada. In 1987 we had 174 Sikhs. That is hardly a major problem. We have a backlog of some 20,000 people in the system, yet the Government brings in this legislation dealing with boat people as though somehow it will solve the problem.

The fact is that the whole idea of people coming here by boat has some symbolism, so that people had the sense we were going to be invaded by an armada. I remember one of the Parliamentary Secretaries, the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen), talking about five billion people in our world, all of them perhaps coming to Canada. We had that kind of foolish attempt to create panic in the Canadian people. In comparison to the 20,000 backlog, the coming to Canada of boat people is not a major problem.

The Government's ability, under this Bill, to turn a boat back and refuse it entry into Canadian ports is not going to be any real deterrent to any of the people who are organizing these bogus refugee schemes. If the boat that landed in Canada had been seized and the captain arrested or imprisoned, and a stiff fine had been imposed, perhaps that might have been a little bit more of a deterrent. At the same time, by turning boats around and not allowing them to land in Canada, you reduce the possibility of genuine refugees being heard. We regret that, yet the Government has not seen fit to change it. In the past Canada has been concerned about other countries, such as some in Southeast Asia, for example, taking the same position which the Conservative Government is now taking.

• (1310)

In conclusion, this Bill undermines the principles of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It undermines the spirit of Canadian commitment to international covenants. It destroys the ability of Canadians to live up to the spirit of openness and generosity to disadvantaged people who come to Canada as refugees. It does not give the protection against bogus refugees which is required, and works against genuine refugees. I urge the Government to look again at this Bill and to bring in the policy which it says it wants to have, that is, a fair refugee determination policy which is humane and open.

Mr. Crofton: Mr. Speaker, New Democratic Party members in this House have stood and said that in their opinion there is no other country that has adequate protection for refugees and that anyone who gets here should not be deported because there is no safe place to which to deport them. It is alleged that Mr. Mohammad is a subversive—I say "alleged". Under Bill C-84, subversives will no longer be able to access the refugee determination system in order to delay removal from Canada. Without Bill C-84, individuals such as Mr. Mohammad will be able to make a claim and extend their presence in Canada for months and years even when the U.N. convention permits the deportation of subversives, whether or not they are refugees. With C-84 subversives will be quickly removed. Without C-84 they cannot be removed.

Each day of delay of this Bill increases the possibility that another subversive terrorist will arrive at our borders and we will still be unable to deal effectively with the risk which that person would pose to Canada and Canadians.

Exactly what is the NDP policy? Surely as Canadians we are entitled to determine who comes and to intercept the bogus claimants or security risks at the borders and turn them back. This legislation will allow us to do that. I have yet to hear anything meaningful from the opposition Parties on how we can accomplish what is clearly a Canadian need.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a number of comments in response to the Hon. Member's statement and question. First, with regard to the concept of no safe country, when we say that there is no safe third country we mean that you cannot say that any one country is safe for every particular group of refugees.

Mr. Crofton: So you are going to keep them all.

Mr. Manly: We are not saying we are going to keep them all. The United States is not a safe country for refugees attempting to enter Canada from El Salvador or Guatemala. Of 12,000 applicants for refugee status in the United States in 1982, 26 were accepted. That is the United States record on El Salvador. The United States is not a safe country for refugees from El Salvador. It may be for refugees from Poland, but it is not for refugees from El Salvador or Guatemala and they are sent back to those countries.

With regard to the issue of Mr. Mohammad, we are quite open to legislation which would deal with that kind of situation. We are not open to legislation which runs counter to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and our commitments to international covenants. With regard to saying that Canada cannot pick and choose who will be let into the country, we have certain obligations under international covenants to accept as refugees people who have well founded fears of persecution. Under the United Nations convention, if they pose a security risk, they can be sent to another country later. However, we have a primary obligation to the United Nations High Commission for Refugees and to our international conventions. We must honour those and Bill C-84 does not.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, there is a fundamental difference which emerges from time to time between Parties. The Government and the Opposition have a fundamental difference in goals with regard to this legislation and the companion legislation.

The Member brought up the issue of boats. I do not know whether he has had the opportunity to see refugees in various situations in West Germany, Denmark, or Holland. People there who make refugee claims do not have the same freedom of movement that we have in this country, but they are safe and healthy. They have food, they have shelter, and they have protection.

The Opposition is urging this House to send a signal to the people in those camps that they should take the risk of putting themselves in the hands of unscrupulous ship captains. These are not captains of passenger boats such as Members of this Chamber take on cruises. They go in the hold of a ship which may or may not be seaworthy and are under the care and control of a crew which may or may not be skilled, with or without doctors, with or without adequate food, and with or without adequate sanitation.

They would tell them to leave the safety that they have in Germany, Britain, or Holland and put themselves in this kind of boat with this kind of a crew and pay a big buck to tackle the North Atlantic. The North Atlantic is the graveyard of all kinds of ships including the Titanic and all kinds of fishing vessels.

I say that the Opposition is dead wrong. Nobody who cares about these people should attempt to send out a signal that they should leave that protection, get on a boat and put their life and health at risk to sail across the North Atlantic.

Yes, this country has a generosity of spirit for the true refugee who is fleeing oppression and needs our protection. However, it is wrong to signal to these people in trouble that they should put their health and safety in the hands of people like that.

Members will remember that two boatloads arrived on our East Coast. The ship's captain put them in lifeboats in the North Atlantic without adequate food, without adequate clothing, and without adequate shelter. That is how the Tamils got here.

A leaky tug with none of the things to protect health and safety brought the Sihks. The ship's captain brought that big ocean-going liner, not into a safe harbour with a wharf, but up to the shoreline in an area where people familiar with that part of the coastline would never have dared to attempt it. There were two boatloads. One was set adrift in the North Atlantic, and the second was put in a situation in which it could have capsized and all the people could have drowned so fast that it would have made your head spin.

This Chamber should send a signal to those desperate people in those conditions of safety not to put their lives in the hands of those kinds of people. That is the signal which this Party thinks is the best, most humane signal to send. That is why this Party and the members of it are so much in favour of this Bill.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I just want to reiterate to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary that the present legislation, Bill C-84, does not provide any real deterrence for organized smugglers. If the Canadian Government detects a refugee scheme, it can simply turn the boat around and send it back. It think it would be much more appropriate to have provisions which would allow for the seizure of the boat, the arrest of the captain, and very stiff fines. That would provide deterrents against illicit refugee schemes.

• (1320)

The other point is the whole question of encouraging refugees to come here. If the Government had listened to the Plaut report and the report of its own Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, and acted on them, there would be a speedy process so that people who came here and did not have a legitimate claim would be processed very quickly and sent back from where they came. That would act as an effective deterrent.

Instead, the Government has chosen a method that puts at risk genuine refugees who possibly arrive here by boat. It has taken Draconian measures that will not accomplish what it is trying to achieve.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, once again we are faced with this Draconian Bill, Bill C-84, which reverses Canada's longstanding policy with respect to refugees. In order to block a small percentage of fraudulent refugees, the Government has introduced these measures which will also prevent legitimate refugees from getting into this country. This is a case of massive overkill with respect to the problem.

I have been listening in this debate to Members from the government side suggesting that the opposition to this Bill is simply being made by the members of the Liberal and New Democratic Parties. What nonsense. One need only look at the list of those who have time and again come out against this Bill. It includes nearly all the churches in Canada, the Canadian Civil Liberties Union, the Canadian Jewish Congress, B'Nai Brith Canada, associations of students, labour unions and all the groups that work with refugees and immigrants. Above all, the report of the Senate which is before us in the form of this amended Bill is supported by the Conservatives in the Senate.

The Senate report to amend this Bill is a unanimous report of Liberal and Conservative Senators. Therefore, the suggestion that the opposition to this Bill is simply an opposition by Liberal and New Democratic Party Members here in the House is nonsense. There is overwhelming opposition to this Bill not only throughout the country but even by those members of the Conservative Party in the Senate who signed the unanimous report with respect to this Bill and sent it back to the House. We were recalled to the House in the middle of the summer adjournment in 1987 to deal with what the Government described as an emergency. They brought us back and asked us to deal with Bill C-84 immediately. Of course, the Bill required hearings and an extensive debate, not a filibuster. It demanded an extensive debate because the issues involved in the Bill were extremely serious.

After we entered the regular session in September, the Government had a higher priority for other matters and called in all sorts of other Bills. It did not consider this to be a high priority Bill, which did not justify the so-called emergency crisis for which we were brought back in the middle of August.

The Government has the right to call whatever Bill it wants every day. It simply did not call this Bill. Of course, it always wanted an agreement from the Opposition to dispose of it in one or two days. However, we would not agree to that because the issues are too important.

If the Government really put a high priority on this Bill, since it has the right to fix the business of the House, it could have continued with the Bill until it was passed. Rather, it called the Bill now and then, here and there, and finally it was passed through the House. The Opposition tried to amend the Bill and voted against it, but the Government passed it as it wished, in its still imperfect form.

The Senate has not defeated the Bill but has returned it with certain very specific amendments. The Government accuses opposition Members of filibustering the Bill and delaying a solution to the issues. The Plaut commission was appointed by the former Liberal Government prior to the 1984 election. The Plaut commission reported in June, 1985, after the election, and made very specific recommendations about what should be done to renew our refugee legislation and avoid the problems being experienced due to the large numbers applying, fraudulent claims and so on. However, the Government did not respond to the Plaut report or bring in immediate legislation.

We then saw the two reports of November and December, 1985, from the parliamentary committee on immigration. They essentially agreed with the conclusions of the Plaut report and recommended certain legislation to correct the abuses and prevent fraudulent refugees from coming to this country. Once again, however, the Government did not act on those committee reports which were unanimous reports from members of the Liberal Party, Conservative Party and New Democratic Party.

The Government did not even introduce its own legislation at that time as a response to the reports. The Plaut commission and the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration recommended a new, fast, efficient and fair system to deal with refugee claimants in order to weed out the fraudulent ones from legitimate ones, and discourage fraudulent claims in the future. Obviously, quick action on refugee claims, turning down those which are not legitimate, will discourage people from coming to this country to make such claims. Long delays of two or three years in making a decision encourage fraudulent claims, but the standing committee and Plaut report recommended solutions that were fast, efficient and fair. However, the Government did not act.

The Plaut report was issued in June, 1985. It took the Government almost two years, until May, 1987, to table its legislation, Bill C-55. Now it is accusing the Opposition of delay and filibuster when it took it nearly two years to present a Bill on this important issue.

We believed that Bill C-55, although we identified flaws and imperfections in it, was the Government's solution to this question. However, just a few months later, in the middle of the summer, it presented Bill C-84, with further changes. This merely indicates the confusion of the Government. Perhaps it will introduce another Bill next week if there is another boat on our shore.

It does not really know what the solution is. It told us that Bill C-55 was the solution, then presented Bill C-84 a few months later. Now a committee report from the Senate, including Conservative Senators, states that while they believe the problem must be solved, and do not want to admit fraudulent refugees in this country, they suggest the Government is engaged in overkill and will only harm legitimate refugee claimants.

I must remind the House that a former Liberal Government signed the International Convention on Refugees in 1969. As a result of signing that treaty, we committed Canada to accepting refugees as defined by the treaty. We committed ourselves to that. We put it into legislation in 1976 as part of the law of the land. If someone was a legitimate refugee, as defined by the international convention, we had to accept them. These are people fleeing their country because their lives are in danger because of their politics, religion, race, language or whatever. They come to this country and we are obliged to receive them. However, we have a right to determine whether they are true refugees in accordance with the definition. The problem was that due to the conditions of the world, there were almost 20 million refugees fleeing horrible conditions in various countries, and the numbers increased. Canada had to change its procedures to deal with those claims quickly.

Rabbi Plaut, the parliamentary committee, the Liberal Party and, I believe, the New Democratic Party, all want to solve the problem. We want to solve the problem so that those who claim refugee status get a fair hearing. Those who are fraudulent, of course, we can send back, but they have a right to a hearing. The Supreme Court of Canada has already made a statement on that point when it said we must not only review the documentation but that they have a right to an oral hearing.

I believe that if this legislation passes as it is, and many experts have already said this, it will be overruled by the Supreme Court because it is contrary to our Constitution. Certain amendments have been proposed to Bill C-84 by the Senate. These are amendments dealing with serious matters such as the penalties to be imposed against those who help refugees, the turning back of boats, and so on. These amendments by the Senate were approved unanimously by the committee. Let us make that absolutely clear. What is interesting is that the Government accepted some of the amendments suggested by the Senate. They were minor, but they were accepted. This indicates that the Government recognized that there were flaws in its Bill. Otherwise it would not have accepted any amendments. It accepted minor amendments from the Senate to improve the Bill, but points dealing with human rights and liberties, with the human condition of individuals, it has not accepted, despite overwhelming support for those amendments by all sorts of groups in this country.

I want to point out again that the numbers of refugees coming to this country today are not out of line with those who came to this country in previous years. I would like to refer to those numbers because I think Canadians should be reminded. In 1982, we accepted 16,900 refugees from three special movements. That was in addition to the refugees we accepted under ordinary movements. There were 16,900 refugees in 1982, 9,300 from Poland, 3,000 plus from El Salvador, and 2,500 from Iran. In the period of 1978-79 we accepted over 11,000 refugees from Lebanon. This was a special movement over and above those who came in on regular movements. In the period of 1976-77, we accepted over 9,000 Vietnamese and Cambodians. In the period from 1975-78, we accepted over 7,000 Chileans and Argentinians. In the period 1972-73, we accepted 7,100 Ugandan Asians. In 1969 Canada accepted 12,000 Czechs following the aborted revolution in Czechoslovakia. In 1957, when our population was much smaller, we accepted 37,000 Hungarians, following the aborted revolution in that country. After the Second World War in 1945, Canada accepted 186,000 displaced persons. At that time our population was only 15 million. What has happened to all those people, the Hungarians, the Czechs, the Ugandans, the Chileans, the Vietnamese, the Lebanese, the Poles, the Salvadorans and the Iranians? They settled pretty well in this country. They have made a contribution. They started businesses and built homes. They are consumers. Very few of them are getting in trouble with the law, probably fewer than Canadians like myself.

We see these people out there in our multicultural environment. We know they are there and we do not regret the fact that we accepted these large waves of immigrants. But because there were two boatloads of refugees who came to our shores, a relatively small number, the Government panicked in response to some reactionary Canadians and brought in this legislation. This legislation is unwarranted. Everyone has been telling the Government that, but it is not listening. Why do we have this situation in the world? I mentioned that we have approximately 20 million refugees in the world. Again, I remind the House that since 1945, which was the end of the last war, there have been 150 regional wars. Those 150 regional wars have resulted in 20 million deaths. Two thirds of those deaths were civilian and 16 million of those 20 million deaths were in the Third World. In addition to the deaths resulting from those conflicts, we also have a vast movement of refugees, particularly from Afghanistan, the Middle East, Indo-China, Iran, Sri Lanka, Central America and Latin America.

As I said earlier, Canada signed the international treaty with respect to refugees in 1969. We confirmed those obligations in 1976, putting them into law. We have committed ourselves to accepting legitimate refugees. We won the Nansen award a year and a half ago for our treatment of refugees, which is a tribute to Canadians in general. By adopting this legislation, we are throwing mud in the faces of those who presented us with that award.

I suggest to this House that if we are truly citizens of the world, we have a responsibility to help relocate and care for these refugees. As Canadians, we must ask ourselves if we are doing our fair share. The numbers we brought in in the past was not bad, but we have to ask ourselves continually, in the face of the tremendous crisis and tragedy we see in the world, are we as Canadians doing our fair share? Will be be doing our fair share by passing this Bill? Are we going to close our borders and shift the burden to someone else? Are we going to say: "Let the other guy do it. We have enough here by adopting the kind of measures in this Bill? No, we cannot shirk our responsibility. We cannot pass the buck. As I pointed out, since the Second World War, we have settled hundreds of thousands of refugees. We did it then and we can do it again.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I have a few questions for the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine-East (Mr. Allmand).

Yesterday, I heard one of his colleagues, the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano), who was referring to a position taken by the members of the Senate and said that the Conservative senators had voted the same way as the Liberal senators. I can inform the House that I corrected this mistake and in fact, the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou admitted he was wrong. What actually happened was this. There was some business in committee, where the Conservative senators took a position that was different from that of the Liberal senators. Subsequently, they preferred to send the Bill back to the House as soon as possible so that the Liberal senators would not hold up the Bill any longer. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine-East said three times that this is not what happened.

I wanted to tell him what happened, because I am sure they are not properly informed by their staff, their caucus and their contacts. I would also like to comment on his position, which probably coincides with that of the Liberal-Socialist coalition against Bill C-84. In fact, there was a similar coalition against Bill C-22.

I wish he would come out and tell the House that what he really wants is for the trade in phony refugees to continue and for Canada to be considered a haven for those who have made trading in phony refugees an institution.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, I am starting to wonder about the sincerity of the representations made by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine-East, because the same Member who today has opted for a policy of openness, even towards terrorists, of generosity and understanding, that same Member called my grandparents and parents here in Quebec terrorists. That same Member accused members of the Saint-Jean Baptiste Society of being terrorists, and he did so several times.

He is prepared to be generous to non-Canadians, to people who have been identified as terrorists, but he called my brothers, my parents and my grandparents terrorists, and he did so several times.

That same Member who today is supporting an open policy was one of the staunchest supporters of the War Measures Act, under which, at the instigation of his government, the privacy of the homes of Quebecers was violated in so many ways.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Hon. Member be a little less partisan in his representations and ask his caucus, with whom he agreed when he voted against Bill C-22 and against Quebec's economic interests, to be a little less partisan and get out of this Liberal-Socialist Coalition so that Canada can become a haven for refugees and is not considered by non-Canadians throughout the world as a place where money can be made by bringing over all kinds of people for an exorbitant fee.

• (1340)

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member speaks so much nonsense so often in the House that I rarely pay any attention to him. It is not worth while paying much attention to him. I must say that I have never described members of the Saint-Jean-Baptiste Society as terrorists. I have said that the present leadership of that society is narrow-minded and bigoted. I will say that over and over again as long as it maintains some of the positions which it maintains.

I recall when I was younger living in Sherbrooke, Trois-Rivières and Montreal and having very good relations with the people from the Saint-Jean-Baptiste Society. In those days they did not have that narrow-minded and bigoted approach.

With respect to coalitions, the Hon. Member keeps talking about the so-called socialist-Liberal coalition. I would be interested in examining the coalition between the Conservative Party in Quebec and the Parti Québécois and some very right-wing, almost fascist groups in that province. I get a great kick out of the Hon. Member trying to brand all of us over here as some type of communist horde.

He talked about his parents and his grandparents and other people in the Saint-Jean-Baptiste Society. I have never branded them as terrorists.

With respect to the Senate, my understanding is that the Senate did not vote against the report of the Senate committee. Some Senators may have abstained or let it go through for one reason or another, as the Hon. Member described. However, the same position was not taken in the Senate as the Conservative Party, the Government, is taking in the House of Commons, at least not with respect to the entire Bill. The Senate is directing its attention to parts of the Bill. They brought in amendments with respect to the section on returning boats and the section on aiding and abetting refugees. There were other technical amendments to the Bill, some of which were accepted by the Government.

The point is that the report of the committee was unanimous. Perhaps the Conservatives in the Senate just let it go through. I am not sure what technicality took place there but Conservative Senators did not launch an all-out attack in favour of the Bill and against the Senate report, as the Opposition in this House is doing. As a matter of fact, I have spoken to some Conservative Senators who are embarrassed with the measures that are in the Bill, whether or not they tried to fudge their feelings by doing what they did. The point of the matter is that the Senate did not launch the kind of attack against those amendments and in favour of the Bill as is happening in the House. It is their right to do so and I think the Hon. Member should understand that.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a brief question. First, I want to say that I respect not only his good remarks on this subject but the work that he has done over the past 21 years. At one point he spoke about the large number of people being displaced by the some 150 wars that have occurred since the Second World War. I would ask him if he has a comment on what Canada should be doing internationally to address the problem of those massive movements, since some of the government speakers say that they are afraid all of those millions of people want to come to Canada tomorrow, in effect, which is why they have to put up these high walls.

I would like the Hon. Member to comment on what might be done in a co-operative way between Canada and the other countries of the United Nations to share the burden occasioned by those disturbances and the burden that is constituted by the large numbers of people who feel that they have had to leave their homes, shared in a way so that it would not be unduly borne by any country, whether it is Canada with some tens of thousands or Pakistan that has something in the order of 2 million or 3 million refugees from Afghanistan.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks a very legitimate question. To consider Central America alone, and the Hon. Member and I were part of an all-Party delegation that visited Salvador and refugees in Honduras, as far as I can see, and I think he would confirm this, the overwhelming number of people who are displaced by wars and conflict would rather return to their own countries. They are more at home in their own countries. They are familiar with the climate. They have friends and relatives there. They grew up there. It is only through the worst of circumstances that they are forced to seek refuge in another country.

What is it that prevents them from going back to their countries in many cases? It is the fact that there is economic manipulation and exploitation in El Salvador. For example, for a long period of time a small percentage of the population controlled the country to its own economic, social and political benefit. There was a virtual dictatorship. If we want to help as Canadians then we must help to solve the underlying causes that lead to those conflicts and those wars in those countries. The response is certainly not a military one.

I was very disappointed when the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) recently went to Central America. He ended up giving a very small amount of additional aid to Nicaragua, which all aid agencies say is a model in trying to deal with the problems of underdevelopment, but gave a much larger amount to Honduras, which is impeding the implementation of the Central American peace treaty and is serving as a base for the Contra revolutionaries to attack Nicaragua. Yet our Government gave more to that country than it gave to Nicaragua.

In answer to the Hon. Member's question in a nutshell, the answer is for Canada to help with the underlying economic and social problems. We could do much more there. I have always felt that even under my own Government we were not doing enough. We have to do more if we want to change the conditions which lead to people fleeing their countries. If things were great in those countries, or at least improving, and if these people were being treated fairly and justly, then they would not want to be refugees. We should direct a great deal more of our attention there if we do not want all these people flooding our country, as the Conservatives do not seem to want. If they would pay more attention to solving the basic problems then they would not have boatloads of people on their doorstep.

Mr. Crofton: I was interested in the remarks of the Liberal spokesman. He seemed to state that somehow the Government has shown a lack of concern for distressed peoples around the world. Indeed, he knows perfectly well that the contrary is the truth.

Except for our native people we are all immigrants or refugees in this country. The Conservative Party does not need lectures from the Liberals about what a refugee is or what a distressed person is since our ranks are of equal numbers as far as these experiences are concerned. The Hon. Member showed interesting passion and emotion in his remarks. I suggest that a great deal of it was misdirected.

He was referring to the people who have come here. Indeed, we have said many times that we need an immigration policy and immigrants. We need to treat them properly. But we must have some sort of rules in place by which to judge the authenticity of people who wish to come here. These rules are clearly not in place now. The rules that we are proposing to put in place are in step and meet the requirements of the United Nations.

Surely, as parliamentarians, from time to time we have an obligation to convey fact and truth to the Canadian people. I suggest that what really is a filibuster from the opposition Parties is a blatant political play, recognizing that the majority of people in Canada have come as refugees and immigrants. He seemed to suggest that, because we wish to try to put some kind of rules in place, somehow we are prejudiced against these people. This is quite untrue. Equally untrue is the suggestion today by members of his Party and the other opposition Party that because one wishes to assist a refugee one will immediately be charged with a crime. That is patently false. We have said that Canadians are obliged to respect the law. Any Canadian citizen who knowingly circumvents the law, or aids and abets someone else in circumventing the law, is open to charge. That is certainly a philosophy that is held by the Conservative Party. If that is not the philosophy of the other Parties, I am most interested to hear from them. Surely all Canadians have to obey all the laws, and not pick and choose the ones that they will obey.

• (1350)

Mr. Allmand: It is not correct that the Opposition would have been critical of any measure brought forward by the Government to solve this problem. As I previously pointed out, the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, which has a majority of Conservative Members, put forward two reports to deal with this problem, and two reports suggesting a solution. The Conservative Members together with the Liberals and members of the NDP on that committee were unanimous in their recommendations in putting forward solutions.

Mr. Hawkes: They were never unanimous.

Mr. Allmand: My recollection is that they were unanimous. Perhaps they were not unanimous on some of the recommendations, but they were virtually unanimous. The principal recommendations were agreed to by the Conservative, Liberal, and NDP Members. If the Government had adopted the recommendations contained in the report of that committee, the majority of whom were Conservatives, we would have said that that was fine. But they did not do that.

With respect to the first point of the Hon. Member, I am sure that there are cases where the Government and Conservative Members have shown sympathy and have adopted the correct measures. I was pleased yesterday when the Secretary of State for External Affairs announced further aid to the southern African states in their attempt to deal with economic and social problems. I thought that that was a good move. For one reason or another, the Government did not do the same thing in Central America, and it is not doing the same thing in this Bill.

I do not accuse the Hon. Member of being of bad faith, but I ask him to look again at what has been recommended by all the groups in Canada that are concerned with this issue. Obviously, there are parts of Bill C-84 which are wrong and should be corrected. The government Members are not listening, and that is unfortunate.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I must say that it is not with any great pleasure that I rise this afternoon once again to debate Bill C-84. It seems to me that it is deplorable that we have had to do this so many times with a repetition of many of the same points, and the same points that have been made by many responsible groups across Canada. Again today we are repeating ourselves.

Of course, we felt that it was a very impulsive response to incidents last summer which instigated this Bill to amend the Immigration Act in the first place. In my view, it was not necessary to take such a punitive and hysterical approach to a boatload of people who arrived on our eastern shores. It certainly was not necessary to respond in the manner in which the Government did. I remember last summer in Vancouver how Conservative Members, and I regret to say even the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins), was saying, "We have to get back to the House. This is a crisis". In turn, that type of response encouraged more and more people to become inflamed about a situation that it was not necessary to become so inflamed about.

I know in my riding it resulted in many phone calls that had a racist tone. I very much regret that, instead of dealing with this in a positive manner, we were almost feeding into it by the way the Conservatives whipped us all back to Ottawa and said that we had to deal with this great crisis. That was on August 11, 1987. Here we are in late January, 1988, still dealing with this, and there does not seem to me to have been any great crisis at all.

The other thing I wish to say is that the Government has been stubborn and persistent in not making the changes that were obviously needed. The Government let the Bill go to the Senate, and now we have to go through this round again. Perhaps the Government did not want to listen to those of us in opposition. Perhaps the Government did not feel that we were being non-partisan in our comments. As Canadians, most of us do feel that the immigration and refugee policy is a humanitarian issue. It is not a partisan issue. We want to be sure it is just, and in the interest of both refugees and immigrants, as well as in the interests of Canada.

If the Government was not willing to listen to us, why did it not take very seriously the same type of comments that were coming from many independent groups across the country, people who had probably far more expertise than most of us in the House? In my riding there are refugee settlement groups, and groups of volunteers with a great deal of experience and commitment. Those groups have given much of their time without pay because they feel so strongly about this. They have spent a great deal of time helping to reach out and assist refugees or potential refugees and to provide support groups once they arrived in Canada.

Those groups certainly criticized this Bill in the same manner that we did, and in the same manner that the Senate has now done. Across the country there were immigration lawyers with great expertise who stated that many aspects of this Bill contravened the Charter of Rights. I understand from the analysis that the Senate has done that this is still the case. Yet, apparently the Government does not accept this.

Many church groups and humanitarian groups appealed on this matter. People, like Rabbi Plaut, who indeed has great expertise, have been trying for years to reform our immigration policy in order that we could handle it more effectively and not have the type of chaotic situation that we had last summer, and still have. There were many recommendations from Members of the House, and ones that were presented very seriously.

It was not always easy to take the opposition side last summer. This was an issue that people felt very strongly about. The Government's interpretation of the so-called crisis did not help people to look at it in a rational and objective manner.

Since last summer, I have met with a number of groups. The concern about this Bill and Bill C-55 has continued in many meetings that I have attended. In Vancouver East we have a great number of immigrants, people arriving from many different countries, for example, many countries in Asia, the South Pacific, and from Spanish-speaking countries in Central and South America.

Many groups have formed in support of immigrants and refugees. I recall a very large meeting that was held at the native education centre in Vancouver. It was very interesting to note that the native people were the ones who hosted this meeting, yet it was a meeting of people from a range of backgrounds who were very worried about Bill C-84 and Bill C-55. At that meeting there was a woman from the United States who was a refugee support person. She was helping refugees who wanted to come to Canada to get to the border. She was extremely concerned, especially with regard to Salvadorans and Guatemalans. She was quite convinced that they would be forcibly sent back to their countries and not allowed to come into Canada. She had no way of helping them once they got to that state either.

• (1400)

There was a very senior representative of the Anglican Church, I recall. I know the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) would know about this. This representative has been in the forefront of helping refugees not only in Canada but worldwide. Senior people of his church had been meeting and taking very strong positions. They were very concerned about these Bills. There were lawyers from Simon Fraser University who had a great deal of expertise. I was particularly impressed with native leaders who said, "This is unfair. We don't want people to be treated in this way". Most groups who were there formed a coalition to oppose these Bills, and I hope they will continue to oppose them because both Bills are contrary to many things that most Canadians believe in.

Why do we oppose Bill C-84? Again, we have said this many times, but I want to repeat it. The New Democratic Party strongly opposed Bill C-84 in the Commons when it was here in the last round. It is monstrously unfair both to refugees and to Canadians who help refugees. It violates our Charter of the U.N. Convention on Refugees. I heard a Member from Vancouver Island a moment ago saying that the Bill does not contravene any of the U.N. conventions. This, however, does not seem to be the opinion of other experts. The Senate held hearings and heard some 37 witnesses after the Bill was passed in the House of Commons. There were lots of complaints about how much time the Senators were taking. It is unfortunate the Senate had to make all the amendments because the Bill should have been amended more strongly when it was here in the House. That is the House of Commons' job. It is our job as parliamentarians, elected to this House, to be responsive. It is the Government's job to be far more responsive and to integrate amendments that are valid and amendments that were proved to be matters that offended the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The Government accepted very few amendments. The Minister of Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), in particular was extremely obstinate and stubborn. I do not like to say that about anyone but I am afraid that this is the way he appeared to me. He was determined to push this Bill through, that he was right and the public of Canada was wrong.

As I said, the Bill went to the Senate. The Senate held hearings and heard 37 witnesses, many of whom appeared at the legislative committee in the Commons on Bill C-84. All of these witnesses, except immigration staff—and one knows to whom they are accountable—criticized the Bill and opposed it, all 37 of them. The Senate made 13 amendments before it adopted the Bill. As Members know, these have been set out in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate for Tuesday, December 15. The 13 amendments remedy nearly all of the objections made by the witnesses. We commend the Senators for that job. We do not think it is their role. We think that job should have been done here in the House. All of those amendments were ones which the New Democratic Party had spoken to and had presented in the House.

These amendments remedy those parts of the Bill considered to offend the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Surely that is a standard against which to measure policies that are implicit in this Bill. Why on earth is the Government so obstinate in not accepting amendments that are trying to make this Bill concur with the requirements of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms? As I understand it, if this Bill is tested again in the courts it will be back to square one and there will be a need for changes once more. The government knows what the criticisms are. Why would the Government not try to make the Bill conform completely to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms? That is why we have our Charter of Rights. If the Government rejects all or most of these amendments in its coming motion to the Commons, we feel that we must oppose it.

May I quickly just review what the amendments are without going into any detail and as well review the Government's response? Amendment 1 clarifies the purposes of the Bill as opposing clandestine entry rather than smuggling. Then we have the whole question of security certificates in Amendments 2 and 3, which restore the right of a person accused of being a security risk to hear the case against him or her except where a judge decides that that would endanger national security or the safety of persons. Then there is the right of claim to refugee status covered by Amendment 4 from the Senate. This restores the right of a person accused of being a security risk nevertheless to have his refugee claim determined so that even people who may be a security risk have the right to due process. This would keep Canada's obligation under the U.N. convention relating to the status of refugees intact and enable the person, if deported, to have U.N. assistance in finding a safe country other than the one he or she has fled.

Another point is that of turning ships around. This seems to me to be the one most impractical and illogical. I was appalled when I heard the comment from the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner)—and again I was surprised he was so impulsive when he gave his reaction—that he agreed that ships coming to our East Coast should be sent back to sea without people having a just hearing. I notice that his critics thereafter took opposite points of view.

Mr. Manly: He changed himself.

Ms. Mitchell: He has changed himself. We are getting accustomed to that flip-flop approach. It is a little hard to know what the Leader of the Official Opposition means when he changes so readily.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Manly: Everyone in the House agrees.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Mitchell: The question of turning ships around was dealt with by the Senate in Amendment 5. It requires a ship suspected of bringing in illegal refugees to be brought to port in Canada and the occupants dealt with according to Canadian law. My colleagues have spoken to this several times today. It seems only logical not to leave people drifting at sea but to bring them ashore and, if necessary, increase the penalties on the captain of the ship, which would be a deterrent to any kind of illegitimate sponsorship. But claimants to refugee status should have the opportunity to be processed the same as other refugees. Who is to know there are no refugees on the ship? We will never know unless they get to shore and get processed.

I get very emotional about that because I have heard repeatedly in British Columbia the story of the Japanese ship in, I believe, 1913 which brought many Sikhs to Vancouver who were suffering religious persecution and wanted to settle in Canada. It breaks my heart that here was another case of deplorable injustice. The authorities in Vancouver turned that ship away. The people did not have water or adequate food. It was a terrible tragedy for the Sikhs who were on that ship.

Amendments 6 and 7 deal with aiding and abetting. In the Senate's view this is restricting targets on only those who intentionally encourage false refugee claims or who assist clandestine entry.

• (1410)

The whole question of search, seizure and forfeiture is dealt with in amendments 9 to 12, which would ensure that this part of the Bill would allow search, seizure and forfeiture only on reasonable grounds and with reasonable procedures. This is in keeping with Section 8 of the Charter.

Finally, detention for identification or security is dealt with in amendment 13 which would provide for the independent review of the detention of persons held for identification or security purposes. Again, this is in compliance with Sections 7, 9 and 10 of our Charter of Rights. Why is the Minister not listening?

The Government has given these amendments only token recognition just to be expedient and to try once again to settle this urgent matter that brought us all back to the House last August. It has accepted in principle only Amendments 1 and 2. It rejected Amendment 2(b) dealing with security certificates, and it also rejected Amendment 4. It has accepted in principle Amendment 3, but I do not think I will take the time of the House to go through all the amendments because they are well documented.

We agree with the Senate. We agree with all the points it has presented. We think it is justified because the Government must surely comply with the Charter of Rights. Again, I cannot see why the Government was so stubborn that it ignored these very same arguments when we brought them up before.

I see that my time is almost up. We have such a proud history of immigration and refugee settlement in Canada. Many years ago I worked with Hungarian refugees who came through Vienna and settled in Canada. I know that many of us have worked with refugees in our own communities. In Vancouver, Polish seamen jumped a ship and were welcomed as refugees almost immediately, but of course they were from an Eastern Bloc country. There seems to be no problem with people from those countries. There are many Latin American people who have come to British Columbia and other parts of Canada and are having much more difficulty. I cannot understand why there is this double standard and why we would even consider deporting people back to countries like Guatemala and El Salvador where there are death squads, killing and police states.

I fully support my Party's position on this matter. We do not agree with the Government which, in essence, has refused to accept the important amendments of the Senate.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, during the three and a half years I have been in the House, I have heard people in the Socialist Party talk about El Salvador, Honduras, Guatemala and Costa Rica. Why don't they talk about Canada? Weren't they elected to the Parliament of Canada? I think they should give an account of themselves to their constituents in their respective ridings and of what they have been doing in the House of Commons to help Canadians.

That is their duty and that is their mandate received from their constituents. Mr. Speaker, I suggest they give an account of themselves to their constituents and talk a little more about Canada.

As far as the Bill now before the House is concerned, it is clear that the Socialists heard the Liberal Leader's message about forming a Liberal-Socialist coalition against our Bill, a coalition that is becoming increasingly widespread, causing a shift of all malcontents in Canada to the extreme left.

Earlier, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine-East (Mr. Allmand) responded to my remark about this coalition. We said we had a coalition with the PQ opposition party. We in the Conservative Party do not have a coalition with the PQ opposition, but today, there is a coalition for free trade that enjoys unanimous support in Quebec, including the support of the aspirant leader of the Parti québécois and of one of the Hon. Member's fellow Liberals, Premier Robert Bourrassa. And today, Mr. Speaker, I think we should be proud of the fact that for the first time in Canada's history, a premier of the Province of Quebec, a Liberal—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am reluctant to interrupt the Hon. Member, but I think we are getting away from the subject and the speech by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-East (Ms. Mitchell). The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine).

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I got carried away by one of our outstanding achievements, and I will continue my comments on the position taken by the comrades of the Socialist-Liberal Coalition. I ask them whether they still want Canada to be a haven for those who trade in phony refugees. They have no objection. They will let Canada be a destination for traders in phony refugees. So if they agree with that, let them keep their coalition, let them continue their common cause with the Senate and let them keep urging the Senate to defy democracy, something that has not been done in 120 years. Let them go on defying democracy! Since that is what they want, they might as well do it. Canadians will tell them what they think in the next election, Mr. Speaker!

[English]

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, that was quite a harangue. It is hard to tell just which part of it I should respond to. I feel like going into a harangue when that Minister—when that Member who will never be a Minister—tells me, if I understood him correctly, that I do not speak up for my constituents or for Canadians. That I take as a great insult, and I think my constituents would as well.

By far the majority of the people of the constituency of Vancouver East have come from other countries. The Hon. Member spoke of Latin American countries. There are representatives of 42 Spanish-speaking countries in my riding. Well over half of my riding is comprised of people of Chinese origin who came from many different parts of the world. There are Italians and Portuguese and more Koreans than in any other place in Canada.

I can tell the Hon. Member that I work hard for my constituents and I have for the nine years I have been here. I will not sit down and take the kind of comment he just made.

If I understood the Hon. Member, he asked if we want Canada to be a refuge for false refugees. Now, that is inane. Do we want Canada to be the kind of country that bars people from having a chance to be refugee claimants? We do not. That is a democratic right. How will we know who the refugee claimants are and whether they are legitimate or not if they do not have a chance to make their claims and go through all the procedures that are justified in a refugee-claimant system?

I wish that many more people could come to Canada under regular landed-immigrant status. Of course, there are poor and deprived people, many of whom have talked to me, who have come from other countries and will probably not be judged as legitimate refugees because it is a very narrow definition. What will happen to those people? They will go back to their countries, I suppose, but they will never get to Canada by other means so we have to look at other ways of opening the door.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the Hon. Member's speech. I would like to make one comment with regard to the last question. I do not know of any Member in this House who does a better job for her constituents than the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). She does not need to take a back seat to anyone in that regard.

I wonder if the Hon. Member would care to comment on the story in today's Globe and Mail which says that Canada has begun discussions with several countries to find out if they would be willing to accept people turned back by Canadian officials under the proposed refugee determination law. Canada, the country that won the Nansen award from the United Nations High Commission for Refugees two years ago for support for refugees, is now turning to other countries and asking them to take people we will turn away. I wonder if the Hon. Member would care to comment on that?

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I certainly would. I think it is absolutely disgraceful that this is the reputation we are beginning to have under this Conservative Government. Even the Liberals were better than the Conservative Government in that respect. There were lots of things they did not do that we will do much better when we get into government next year.

It is deplorable that we are getting an image of intolerance in the world. We sometimes pat ourselves on the back too much about having been very humanitarian and taking a lot of refugees. We have taken hardly anyone. For example, we did not take anyone from Hungary who was sick. We left them to the Austrians to look after. So many of the Indo-Chinese refugees are still there and will never be accepted here because we do not accept people who have a bit of history of mental illness or some other problem. We are not that great, but I can tell you that the Conservative Government is giving our reputation a black mark.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity at this fairly late hour in our Friday session to speak on Bill C-84 and the Senate amendments. I guess I start off with a feeling of astonishment. After months of debate here and in committee where I was involved, we are still debating the issue and facing a filibuster. This is the end of the fourth day of debate on this issue this week and it is obvious that the opposition Parties are trying to draw out the debate.

I would like to ask them this question. Are they prepared to take the responsibility for the refugees who are not legitimate and who are continuing to come to our borders? Bill C-84 has not yet received Royal Assent, we do not have the legislative tools we need, so are they willing to take responsibility for those people?

I am sure they are aware of the really astonishing numbers. In 1980 only 1,600 people claimed refugee status. Obviously it was not a problem. However, because of world problems and changes which have taken place, we were faced with 30,000 people claiming refugee status in 1987. We know that on average 70 per cent of those people are not genuine refugees. Even of the remaining 30 per cent, about half already have protection in some other country. They are coming to Canada basically to improve their economic status. That is understandable, but that is not the purpose of the refugee system.

We have a backlog of thousands and thousands of people in the refugee system, 70 per cent of whom are not genuine refugees, and they should not be here. Under the rules we have set down, by all international criteria, those people should not be here. It is not fair to them or to genuine refugees who are being held up because of the backlog. It is more difficult for them to get on with their lives and the whole thing is blatantly unfair.

I found it interesting that my friend from Vancouver East accused me in her remarks of inflaming the situation. Last August, when we had a boatload of people coming to our shores off Halifax, I, like many of my colleagues, as well as my constituents, concerned about maintaining the integrity of the refugee system, called for the recall of Parliament and tough new legislation to remedy the situation. That was not inflaming the situation. That was a legitimate concern expressed by millions of Canadians across this country and Members in this House who wanted something done about the situation.

I am appalled that for month after month we have been faced with this obstructionism. Even this week, as hundreds of people come to our borders, this situation is creating false expectations. It is cruel. It is inhumane. Members of the NDP may claim they are the Party of humanity and genuine compassion, but I do not agree. This is unfair and I ask them, as I did last summer and last fall when we debated this Bill, let us get on with it, get the rules in place so people around the world will know what they are and will not come here under false pretenses.

We are sometimes accused, because of Bill C-84 and its companion, Bill C-55, which is still in the Senate, of lacking compassion. That is not true. Neither are Canadians lacking in compassion. The record shows very clearly the exact opposite.

We are a country of immigrants. My father emigrated from England around 1917. I am sure the parents of most of the people in this House, in fact many Members themselves, have come here as immigrants. We have a long-standing reputation for tolerance and compassion. I think that is so important. I care about it so much that I do not want to see it undermined because people are getting frustrated by what they feel is abuse of that genuine sense of tolerance and compassion. Unfortunately, that is what I have seen happen over the past months. People feel that Parliament is not dealing quickly enough with this issue.

We have a comprehensive system of aid for refugees. I have dealt with refugee organizations in Vancouver, Mosaic and others, who do excellent work. We as a Government have continued with the funding required to assist those groups. We received the Nansen Medal in 1986 for our response to refugees. The measures we have in Bill C-84, to my mind, do not negate that tradition. They deal with a new reality which requires different measures than were required in the past. What we want to do is to respond to genuine refugees. Over the years we have been very effective, but in recent years that effectiveness has been reduced because of the acceleration in the number of people who arrive here claiming refugee status when they are not refugees.

We all know there are people who try to use the refugee system to profit from those who want to come to Canada. We heard the stories last summer. We saw examples even last fall. It was evident that these people had been counselled to come to Canada, after paying money to someone in their own country, and claim refugee status. It was very evident that they were not genuine refugees. They were economic migrants looking for a better life. That is fine, but it is not fair that they should jump the queue. There are of course many people who would like to come to Canada in the regular immigration stream, but we have rules, regulations and quotas and people have to follow the rules or else you get these outbursts of frustration and antagonism which I have seen in many parts of the country about our over-all immigration system. I do not think it is fair, but because people feel the refugee situation has gotten out of control they damn the total immigration system.

Obviously we have to deal with these unscrupulous swindlers. We have to have measures in place which will ensure that they do not get off scot-free as has happened in the past. Bill C-84 will put many of those measures in place. Those kinds of people abuse our system for their own benefit. That in itself has reduced our ability to deal with genuine refugees. Because of the massive numbers already backlogged in the system, frustration has been caused to those who want the system to help the genuine refugee. That is what this Bill is directed toward.

There are thousands of people experiencing life-threatening dangers who came to Canada as refugees. They include people displaced by World War II and the refugees from Uganda who arrived in the early 1970s, many of whom are on the West Coast and have been wonderful citizens. They include more than 100,000 Indo-Chinese refugees who arrived here between 1970 and 1985 and thousands of refugees from Central and South America brought to Canada under special measures. Canadians welcome these unfortunate people with open arms. On behalf of Canadians we now seek to protect the meaning of "refugee status" because it seems to have taken on a new meaning and has caused confusion.

As I mentioned, in 1987 almost 30,000 people arrived in this country claiming refugee status. The dramatic jump which took place between 1985 and 1987 means that there are 44,000 people at one stage or another of the process. Because of the Charter of Rights and an appropriate desire for the rule of law, it is a long system with appropriate checks and balances.

In Bill C-55 we have introduced some changes to tighten up and streamline that system so that decisions can be made more quickly. We know that among those 44,000 there is a large number of economic migrants. It is pretty hard for them to get on with their lives if they are here under the pretense of being genuine refugees but are really economic migrants. If they are deported at the end of the process, they could have wasted anywhere from two to five years of their lives. That is not fair to them.

We have heard stories of this and the Government looks awful because it deported them, but they did not follow the rules, they were not genuine refugees, and I think the expectation of citizens of this country is that under those circumstances they should not stay. Therefore, they must once once again go through the process of displacement. That is an extremely unfortunate outcome of a situation in which we are not able to pass laws and deal with situations appropriately.

In the past year and a half we were confronted with two very highly publicized incidents of irregular arrivals on our shores. It was these two incidents which caused the outburst and reaction. I am not sure that most Canadians realize that approximately 500 people per week come to Canada claiming refugee status. Because of the media attention which surrounded those two incidents they brought the issue to the fore of people's minds and demanded a response from the Government.

I do not want myself or my colleagues to be misunderstood on this issue. Canadians want to help genuine refugees. Through government sponsorship and dedication and thousands of private sponsors, church groups, and other organizations, we maintain a compassionate tradition. Millions of dollars are spent helping refugees adjust and settle when they arrive in Canada. We also show our commitment through international organizations to assist refugees. Food aid is a major component of economic assistance and service to refugees, both through the Government and the voluntary sector. There have been many programs during the past three years which are very important in that regard.

We understand the anger of Canadians over the blatant abuse of our refugee system. As borders around the world shut down Canada becomes more vulnerable to such abuse. Bill C-84 protects genuine refugees and legitimate immigrants. This legislation is carefully aimed at a very small minority, the smugglers who bring people in illegally and the conspirators who take advantage of the generosity of Canadians and the desperation and gullibility of would-be migrants. Canadians have been angered by this abuse of our system and horrified by the traffic in human misery which it generates.

We do not want to deny protection to those in genuine need. It is time to redefine just whom we want to help, to make it clear that our refugee policy exists to aid refugees, and that within this policy the person who claims refugee status must merit it. As well, we must make it clear that people who flaunt Canada's immigration laws will not get away with it. They must be shown that they can no longer be allowed to make a mockery of our country and our genuine generosity.

As they say, there is no one more angry than a person wronged. We have been very genuine in our generosity and when our generosity is abused it does cause a backlash. People really went out of their way and are now being taken advantage of. We must ensure that that does not exist in our country.

I hope that my colleagues in both opposition Parties see the importance of this Bill and move quickly to give it final approval. The Senate has recommended various amendments. We have accepted some of the amendments, either in whole or in principle, but 11 of them we cannot accept. The Minister has gone through them one by one as could I. I have looked at them carefully and was involved in discussing them in committee. They just would not make sense. They would undermine the Bill and would not allow it to accomplish what I believe it should accomplish.

For example, Canadians do not want people who have committed a serious crime in another country to have the right to make a refugee claim. That is the kind of thing about which they are angry.

We must be able to turn ships away. The Minister has agreed to an amendment which would provide for this only in exigent circumstances. The responsible Minister will have to be involved in such a decision, so safeguards are included. However, we have ensured that this will be in compliance with our obligations under the convention and will take into account the safety and health of the passengers.

This would obviously be an extraordinary measure. However, in those extraordinary circumstances where the information is clear that a boatload of persons will be arriving on our shore and the evidence is that they are not genuine refugees, the Minister must have those powers. It is obviously a deterrent power which we hope we will not have to use. We hope that it will send a signal to the international community and that it and the accompanying increased fines will stop such carriage of people around the world.

The Senate made other suggestions on limiting search and seizure to daytime hours. That is unrealistic in Canada. In the North there are no daytime hours in the winter-time. We would be totally stymied in dealing with a plane coming into the Arctic. We would not be able to use search and seizure methods for almost six months of the year. People would only make entry at night-time. It just does not make any sense if we seriously want to deal with the problem with which we are dealing in Bill C-84.

Those amendments put forward by the Senate are not acceptable. They would seriously undermine the objectives of this Bill. I believe that the most important thing which we must accomplish through this Bill and the accompanying Bill, C-55, is to reassure the Canadian public that this Parliament, including all Members on all sides, have a genuine concern about maintaining the basic integrity of our refugee system. with the provisions of this Bill we will indeed have in place the necessary safeguards to ensure that that occurs.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) urged haste in passing this legislation. Let me remind her that the Plaut report was tabled in 1985. Instead of acting on it, the Government referred it to the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. Rather than act on the recommendations of the standing committee, which would have provided for a rational and reasoned system that would have dealt with refugee determination, the Government procrastinated and did not act.

When it finally acted, it was not in the humane and reasoned manner as prescribed by Rabbi Plaut who said that declaring a claimant to be a refugee is not a privilege we grant but a right we recognize. Instead, the Government took some very negative measures that will cause much difficulty for legitimate refugees.

I would like the Member to deal particularly with the section dealing with aiding and abetting. It does not distinguish between people who are working with refugees, many of whom do not have proper documentation since that is part of the fact of being a refugee, and those unscrupulous immigration agents who use the refugee process as a way of getting people here. The Government is using a scatter-gun approach, and many people in church groups and refugee aid groups are very concerned, with good reason, that this legislation can be used to target them for their activities which the majority of Canadians believe are perfectly legitimate.

The Government says that it has no intention of targeting those people, but has not brought in the kind of amendments that would exempt them. Surely if the Government is in the process of writing legislation it should be able to do so in a way that will target more specifically the kinds of people at whom it is aiming, and not take the scatter-gun approach that will harm innocent citizens who are working to help genuine refugees in Canada?

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, while I might feel that we did not act soon enough, when we took action I think it was entirely responsible and appropriate. I realize that my colleague may not agree and may have wanted a different response, but that does not mean that it undermines our response. I believe our response is the appropriate one and indeed protects genuine refugees while dealing appropriately with the problem of deterring illegitimate refugees.

I am sure the Hon. Member heard the Minister when he spoke earlier this week. Furthermore, we had a long discussion in committee about the question of those who work for humanitarian organizations involved in assisting refugees to come to the border. It was certainly my view, shared by my colleagues, that one cannot differentiate in law between different groups, attempting to indicate that one group is better than another.

The Minister is handling that situation by agreeing to the proposal that in all prosecutions under the provision that deals with clandestine entry, consent in writing of the Attorney General of Canada will be required before prosecutions are undertaken. As he stated, this measures adds substance to the Government's undertaking that a person who violates the Act in the cause of rendering needed humanitarian assistance to refugees will not be prosecuted.

I thought my colleague would be very pleased by that commitment of the Minister. It seems to me to deal very appropriately with the concern we heard at committee without in any way watering down or changing the offence which I believe would have created so many loopholes that we would have been right back to square one.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) for her response to the Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) in the matter of the Attorney General's permission. However, I would ask her to consider whether it is not an unsatisfactory and even an unfair writing of the law to write the law so that it describes the actions of thousands of Canadians, including for example, a person who recently won the Pearson Medal for Peace, Nancy Pocock, for a good many kinds of peace activity but in the last half dozen years primarily doing the very thing that is described in the Act, namely assisting undocumented persons to come to Canada.

She has been scrupulously legal. I am not talking about whether she has status. I am not talking about whether she is a Member of Parliament, whether she is a member of a church, whether she is ordained, whether she is a nun. It is not a question of who it is, it is a question of what the person is doing. Is it in accordance with the law or not in accordance with the law?

As the law is written, there is no distinction between what she does when she goes, say, to Fort Erie and conducts a Salvadoran refugee claimant across the bridge and, at the first step into Canada, takes him to the immigration office and says, "This Salvadoran without a visa is claiming refugee status in Canada. He has grounds to say he cannot return to Salvador and it will not be safe for him to return even to the United States". Of course, that becomes the matter of the Immigration Department, to put the process in motion to determine whether his claim is justifiable.

But that has been regarded entirely as a legal action up until Bill C-84 was introduced. People have been praised for that and praised for it by the Minister, by Members of the Government and, as I say, by orders of the Peace Medal and the Governor General who presented it.

Surely it is unsatisfactory to say that that is illegal, but to suggest that on a sort of person by person basis, if the Attorney General or his deputy likes the colour of her eyes he will say: "We won't prosecute you", surely it is necessary in law to say what it is that we are objecting to, and surely what we are objecting to is the attempt to deceive or to cheat, that is to get a person in, as one Hon. Member said a few moments ago, by circumventing the law. That suggests hiding, sneaking, smuggling, coming in secretly or dishonestly with lies or by evading the proper officials.

Surely it is necessary to distinguish between the person who evades or seeks to evade and a person who seeks not to evade but to go directly to the appropriate legal authorities. Will the Hon. Member not accept that a law is much more workable when it does not require the Attorney General to exempt the majority of Canadians who are condemned under that law?

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I recall this provision. Of course, we had a great deal of discussion on it.

The Senate has recommended a change in the wording. The original legislation used the word "smuggling", which I noticed the Hon. Member used as well. There were many problems with that word but we were unable to find anything better. I presume the Senate arrived at the word "clandestine".

The Minister said he will consider using the word "illegal" which will give it some consistency, making it those who organize illegal immigration who would be in contravention of that section and subject to prosecution. They will be subject to prosecution, with the caveat that the Attorney General would have to consent.

• (1450)

Mr. Heap: That is not in the operative section. That is only in the introduction.

Mrs. Collins: I do not believe the Hon. Member has the floor.

Mr. Heap: No, but you should not be misleading the House.

Mrs. Collins: If the Hon. Member wishes the floor, I am sure he can comment at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I ask the Hon. Member to conclude.

Mrs. Collins: I think the point about which the Hon. Member was concerned was how do we distinguish those who are in the practice of helping, and the Hon. Member mentioned a person. I do not think we can have a law which says that someone who is conducting something illegally but is doing it for good purposes is not in contravention, whereas someone else is. That does not seem to be workable. We cannot make that distinction. I think the provision the Minister has put forward, requiring the consent of the Attorney General, will look after that problem in an appropriate manner.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to participate in this debate once again today. One would have wished that the Government would have seen the light after all the controversy it has caused with this Bill and would have decided at least to heed the recommendations of the Senate and the recommendations that opposition Members have suggested in a very positive way.

Let us remember where we come from when we are discussing this Bill. First, we know that in 1983 or 1984 it became apparent that the number of applicants to become refugees was increasing at a substantial rate. The Government appointed a commission under Rabbi Gunther Plaut and the commission produced a report in 1985 which made certain recommendations to the Government. Meanwhile, the flow of refugee claimants coming to this country was increasing at an accelerated rate. The intensity was increasing dramatically as time went by.

In 1986 there was again a marked increase in the numbers of refugee applicants, to the point where last summer we had somewhere in the order of 18,000 people claiming refugee status in the space of a year. One day last summer, Canadians discovered that 174 people had landed on the coast of the Maritimes. What was the first reaction of Canadians when that happened? It was the usual reaction we expect, the reaction of tolerance and kindness which we have displayed historically to newcomers to this land. The first gesture, I believe, by Canadians at that time was to offer sandwiches and tea to these new people. I was proud that first day. However, that pride was very short-lived.

I saw not long afterwards messages coming from the Government side which seemed to feed on that unfortunate small element of intolerance that is ever so present in any society. With the encouragement, in my view, of the Government, people began to resent the arrival of these people. The whole incident was not even taken into context. I said moments ago that 18,000 people had made application in one year and that on one day 174 of them arrived. We must realize that not a week goes by in which we do not have 174 applicants. But this incident created national attention because they arrived all at once in a manner I described initially, and then in another manner which was not as pleasant, at least not pleasant for me as a Canadian to see.

The Government then took its next step. It decided this country was being invaded by refugees. It asked the Speaker to reconvene Parliament to deal with this so-called crisis. Initially, of course, the Speaker was reluctant to accept this proposition but, of course, it is not the Speaker's role to govern and for that I do not criticize the Chair. It is the Government's role to govern. The Government called back the House and brought forward Bill C-84, which has everything to do with satisfying the right-wing element and very little to do with assisting the refugee process, tightening it up or making it better for our country.

What this country really needed was to have a new refugee policy some three years ago at the time when both opposition Parties asked for it. But the Government did not produce it. It initially had the report and it did not do anything with it. It referred the matter to a parliamentary committee. The parliamentary committee made a report and the Government did not do anything with that. The Government acted swiftly when the issue became something we saw on national television that day last summer.

[Translation]

What the Government, what the party in power today should have done three years ago is take steps to ensure that competent staff was in place when people arrived in Canada and applied for refugee status. Instead of waiting two years to determine a person's refugee status, we should have a policy aimed at determining that status within four to six weeks. If that were the case, Mr. Speaker, a person who applies for refugee status and is sent back to his country four to six weeks later will not be as likely to come right back if that person was making a false claim. On the other hand, people with valid claims would always have the assurance of being allowed to settle in this country, and I think that is what we all want. We want to separate those who make phony claims from those whose claims are genuine. Unfortunately, the present Bill is not satisfactory in this respect.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if you could ask the House whether there would be unanimous consent perhaps not to see the clock? If the Opposition has essentially said all it wants to say on this Bill, we might not see the clock for five minutes and be able to finish debate today rather than continue the filibuster.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Boudria: I will speak to that point of order. There are a number of amendments to deal with. A vote cannot even be taken on one of them, let alone on all of them, until Monday. So that proposition by the Member is not only ridiculous, as one would expect it to be, but it is not even workable. Obviously, I refuse to give my consent, and I see it is almost three o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is three o'clock. Therefore, this House stands adjourned until Monday at 11 a. m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 3 p. m.

PETITIONS

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition signed by residents of Edmonton, Alberta. These petitioners are concerned that the trade agreement negotiated by the Government threatens the political and economic sovereignty of Canada by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control such things as foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians and to equalize opportunities between the regions.

Therefore, these petitioners pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement.

OPPOSITION TO TRANSPORT OF PLUTONIUM OVER NORTHERN CANADA

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour and duty to present petitions from 100 residents of Whitehorse, Yukon, Iqaluit, Northwest Territories, and Mississauga, Ontario.

These petitioners wish to register their objection to the proposed plutonium flights over the Canadian North, recognizing the potential devastating environmental and nuclear proliferation risks.

Therefore, these petitioners pray and call upon the Parliament of Canada to recognize the danger of such flights and to say no to the transport of plutonium over northern Canadian territory.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have three petitions from Canadian residents of Ontario—my province—who want to file a common grievance, namely:

That the Mulroney Government has sold out Canada and received nothing in return, whereas Canadian industries are still not protected from U.S. trade laws, whereas the United States obtained everything it wanted in all key sector, especially agriculture, energy, auto trade, financial services and investment, whereas thousands of Canadian jobs are threatened and the Conservative Government has not provided for any adjustment assistance for Canadian workers.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to denounce the Government for signing the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and indeed pleasure to rise pursuant to Standing Order 106 to present a petition on behalf of a number of constituents who are concerned that the recently signed trade deal signed by our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States would have a fundamental impact on Canada's economic, cultural and political independence. They believe that such an agreement implies the loss of jobs in many sectors and regions of the country, Therefore they are requesting that the Parliament of Canada obtain a clear mandate from the Canadian people through a national debate on the alternatives available to Canada, and they believe that this debate should result in a national election prior to the final signing of any agreement.

• (1110)

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present yet another petition signed by Canadians expressing their concern with the free trade agreement between Canada and the U.S. They believe it would have a fundamental impact on Canada's economic, cultural and political independence, and they consider that such an agreement implies the loss of jobs in many sectors and regions.

They therefore call upon the Parliament of Canada to obtain a clear mandate from the Canadian people through a national debate on the alternatives available to Canada, and that this debate result in a national election prior to any such agreement.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from a number of Canadians from Toronto and other areas, similar to the petitions my two colleagues have just presented. The petitioners say that the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could I ask Members to use the same wording as that used by the Hon. House Leader for the NDP and not refer to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) by his family name but rather by his title. It was done a few times and I am sorry to interrupt that particular Member.

Mr. Waddell: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the trade deal signed between the Right Hon. Prime Minister of this country and the President of the United States.

Mr. Blenkarn: Now you are learning.

Mr. Waddell: I am learning. Go to the election and you will learn, too.

The petitioners say that this trade deal would mean the end of Canada's economic, political and cultural independence as a country. They also feel jobs would be lost and they dare the Government to call an election before signing and completing such a historic trade deal.

Miss MacDonald: It is signed, Ian. You have been away too long.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and responsibility to present to the House a petition signed by Canadians living in Montreal and surrounding areas.

The petitioners feel that because the Conservative Government had no mandate to conclude a trade deal with the U.S., and whereas the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised, and the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the U.S., and whereas the proposed trade agreement not only denies Canadians secure access to the U.S. market, the key objective in these negotiations, but threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement through a national general election.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present on behalf of a group of approximately 50 citizens living in the communities of Choiceland and White Fox in the constituency of Mackenzie a petition which suggests that the Government did not have a mandate to sign a free trade agreement. That proposed agreement affects Canada's economic future and undermines our ability to develop the economy we wish. They call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement in a national election.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed from Friday, January 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House agrees with amendments 8 and 13(e) made by the Senate to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, but disagrees with amendments 4, 5(a), (b) and (c), 6(a) and (b), 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13(a) because this House believes they contradict the principles of the Bill for the following reasons:

Amendment 4 would exclude only criminals and war criminals from the refugee determination process, but would allow terrorists, spies and subversives to pursue a claim to refugee status, notwithstanding the fact that Article 33 of the UN Convention would permit the removal of these latter individuals to their countries of nationality or permanent residence, even if they were determined to be Convention refugees.

Amendment 5(a) would eliminate the authority of the Minister to direct a ship to leave or not to enter Canadian waters. This amendment would reopen a significant gap in Canada's ability to control its borders.

Amendments 5(b) and (c) arise out of Senate amendment 5(a), which is not acceptable, and are therefore inappropriate.

Amendments 6(a) and (b) would reverse the policy on which the Immigration Act, 1976 was based, which policy was not changed in the Bill as passed by this House. The amendments jeopardize the possibility of successfully prosecuting persons who profit from organizing illegal migration and from counselling fraud among refugee claimants.

Amendments 9 and 10 would restrict the ability of peace officers and immigration officers to act quickly to search for evidence of major offences under the Immigration Act, 1976, in exigent circumstances, where lives are at risk or where evidence with respect to those offences may be lost or destroyed.

Amendments 11 and 12 would restrict the ability of peace officers and immigration officers to execute search warrants which have been duly authorized by a justice of the peace, by denying explicit authority to break open containers where it is reasonably believed evidence will be found and by limiting the authority to execute these warrants at night.

Amendment 13(a) would reduce the initial period of detention without review from seven days to forty-eight hours, which would allow insufficient time for the gathering of information to substantiate allegations or to identify the individual, particularly when large groups of undocumented persons arrive at one time.

And that this House agrees with the principles set out in amendments 1, 2(a), 3, 7 and 13(b), (c) and (d), but would propose the following amendments:

Amendment 1 be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 22 and 23 on page 1, and substitute the following:

(c) to deter those who assist in the illegal entry of persons into Canada and thereby minimize the"

Amendment 2(a) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 29 to 39, on page 4, and substitute the following:

Amendment 3 be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 7 to 12, on page 5, and substitute the following:

Amendment 7 be amended to read as follows:

"Add, and immediately after line 6, on page 10, the following:

95.21 No proceedings for an offence under Section 95.1 or Section 95.2 shall be instituted except by or with the personal consent in writing of the Attorney General of Canada or Deputy Attorney General of Canada."

Amendment 13(b) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 1 to 22, on page 21, and substitute the following:

(2) Where, with respect to a person detained under subsection (1), the Minister certifies in writing

(a) that

(i) the person's identity has not been established, or

(ii) the Minister has reason to suspect that the person may be a member of an inadmissible class described in paragraph 19(1)(e), (f) or (g), and

(b) that an additional period of detention is required to investigate the matter referred to in subparagraph (a)(i) or (ii), the person shall be brought before an adjudicator forthwith and at least once during every seven-day period thereafter, at which times the adjudicator shall review the reasons for the person's continued detention."

Amendment 13(c) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 23 to 47, on page 21, and substitute the following:

(2.1) Where the Minister has issued a certificate under subsection (2), the Minister may amend the certificate to which the detention relates to include any matter referred to in subparagraph (2)(a)(i) or (ii), following which the person shall be brought before an adjudicator forthwith and at least once during every seven-day period thereafter, at which times the adjudicator shall review the reasons for the person's continued detention.

Amendment 13(d) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 48 to 50, on page 21, and lines 1 to 18, on page 22, and substitute the following:

(4) Where an adjudicator who conducts a review under subsection (2) or (2.1) is satisfied that reasonable efforts are being made by the Minister to investigate the matter referred to in subparagraph (2)(a)(i) or (ii), the adjudicator shall continue the person's detention.

(4.1) Every review under subsection (2) or (2.1) of the detention of a person suspected of being a member of an inadmissible class described in paragraph 19(1)(e), (f) or (g) shall be conducted in camera. (a) the Minister is of the opinion that any evidence or information to be presented by or on behalf of the Minister at any review under subsection (2) or (2.1) of the detention of a person referred to in subsection (4.1) should not be disclosed on the grounds that its disclosure would be injurious to national security or to the safety of persons, and (b) a request therefore is made by the Minister, the adjudicator shall order that the review or any part thereof be conducted in the absence of the person and any counsel representing the person.

(4.3) Any person excluded by an order under subsection (4.2) from the whole or any part of the review under subsection (2) or (2.1) may apply to the Chief Justice of the Federal Court or to a judge of that Court designated by the Chief Justice for the purposes of this subsection to have the order quashed and sections 36.1 and 36.2 of the Canada Evidence Act shall apply, with such modifications as the circumstances may require, to such applications.

(4.4) Unless quashed, an order under subsection (4.2) shall, with respect to the person to whom the order relates, apply to every review under subsection (2) or (2.1), or part thereof, at which the Minister is of the opinion that any evidence or information to be presented by or on behalf of the Minister at the review, or part thereof, should not be disclosed on the grounds that its disclosure would be injurious to national security or to the safety of persons.

(5) Where the adjudicator who conducts a review under subsection (2) or (2.1) does not continue a person's detention under subsection (4), the adjudicator shall make the appropriate order under subsection 104(3).

(6) An adjudicator who conducts a review under subsection (3) shall make the appropriate order under subsection 104(3)."

And the amendment of Mr. Marchi:

That the message of the House of Commons to the Senate be amended by:

a) deleting, in paragraph one, the reference to Senate amendment 4;

b) deleting paragraph two;

c) adding to paragraph nine a reference to Senate amendment 4; and

d) adding after amendment 3 the following:

"That amendment 4 of the Senate be amended by deleting the said amendment and by striking out line 16 on page 7 of the Bill and substituting the following therefor:

"(2)(c) and against whom a deportation order has been upheld by the Board; or""

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to this Bill and the amendment because I think it goes to the future direction of the country. I am very saddened to think that the Government did not appreciate some of the amendments unanimously agreed to by the Senate. I say that because they were very much in line with the amendments presented by my Party.

Canada signed a UN convention in order to protect refugees all around the world. This Bill directly contradicts that Convention. The people who have made presentations both to the legislative committee as well as the Senate committee understand what is involved because they have been very much involved with refugees. They understood the purpose of the amendment which suggested that instead of turning boats back we would look at securing the people who were on the boats and giving them an adequate opportunity to prove whether or not they were refugees.

With this Bill as it stands, we are right back to the kind of situation that existed in 1939 where, to our disgrace, we turned a boatload of Jewish refugees back to Europe at a time when they were being so badly persecuted. The result was that many of them ended up in concentration camps where they were killed. That is the kind of thing we are leaving ourselves open to now if we do not amend this legislation. Certainly there have been judges right across this country, and around the world, who have looked at this Bill and are very concerned at the direction Canada is taking.

We have always been well respected in the international arena and people have felt that Canada was a place that dealt with some sense of fairness and compassion with those who had no place to go. Certainly since we signed the convention 20 years ago we have tried to respect it. Sometimes not as much as we could, but this Bill ensures that we will be seen as not having been sincere in the first place. Certainly the Bill does not respect the Convention.

I am also concerned about the fact we have not listened to those who have worked very intensively across this country, the church groups and others, and who have said how important it is to make sure of the security and safety of people's lives. We are now just ignoring all of that.

When I looked at the proceedings of the Senate committee it was interesting to see that many of the people who made presentations there had also made presentations to the legislative committee. It seems to me that there is a consistent feeling in the country about this issue and people are taking every opportunity to make the Government sensitive to the fact that this Bill takes us in a direction we have never gone before and one we do not choose to take.

It is important that we recognize that the western world is taking a minimum number of refugees in comparison to the total, and Canada is now saying that it is going to take less than that. We are going to be very selective. We are not going to worry about the fact that people have had to flee without proper documentation. We are not going to worry about that; unless they are properly documented they cannot get in here. It really does not make any sense at all.

There are people who have worked as volunteers at great risk to themselves in order to help those who have escaped to our country in fear of their lives. What we are saying now in this Bill is that those people who are reaching out a hand of compassion are now liable to become criminals in their own country. That certainly does not make any sense. We know that the situation in the world has not eased. The refugee situation has worsened. There are very sensitive areas from which people are fleeing. Some have been taken out of their beds and from their homes in the middle of the night. Some of their families have been able to escape across borders and been able to reach Canada. We are now saying that those people are not entitled to an adequate hearing.

The United Nations and many groups within Canada are recommending a process for refugee determination and an efficient appeal process. That would allow people to be designated. If we are concerned about safety and security with regard to certain people coming into the country we have the ability of deportation. We are also able to take the time to find them safe refuge in another country before deporting them. I refer to countries such as Chile. We know that if we send people back to that country their lives will be at risk. In taking that attitude toward other people's lives we are being very crass. We are saying that unless they can go through the bureaucratic procedures they will have no refuge in Canada. It does not matter whether they are fleeing for their safety or have no access to any other refuge. This is a disgrace and will be a blot on our history.

I am very surprised that the Government is recommending such legislation because it was very critical when we actually turned a boat around in 1979. The ability to do that exists again. We do not want that kind of thing to happen. We want to keep our reputation in the international community as a caring country. Many of the people who came here after the Hungarian chaos in the 1950s became good citizens of Canada. They built a base in our communities and gave their loyalty to Canada. They realize that if Canada had not accepted them as refugees at that time they would not have lived.

This legislation says that refugees who have experienced great chaos in their own countries will no longer be welcome here. They will not be given time to seek out adequate legal counsel. We are closing doors to people who have not had the opportunity to get the proper documentation. We are saying that refugees who have crossed other borders with false documentation cannot be designated. That is not the kind of thing we want to do.

I am very concerned that in addition to attacking people who could come to this country we are attacking Canadians who, through their generosity and voluntarism, are helping these people. We are telling church groups, community groups, and families whose relatives want to come to this country that if they are helping these people to get through so that they can be identified, they are part and parcel of the problem and can be criminally charged. That is totally unacceptable.

Many of the amendments proposed by the Senate are part and parcel of the amendments which our Party recommended. It was very interesting that all the groups which made presentations suggested the same kinds of amendments. There is no doubt in my mind that the immigration laws were in chaos and the whole procedure had to be streamlined. We needed designation of refugees and designation of immigrants rather than having them all part and parcel of the same pool with regard to numbers and quotas. We need people with expertise in refugee designation.

It would not take much longer than six months to go through that process in a humane, fair, and just way. Instead, we are bringing in a very restrictive Bill which will stop people from being designated. We will be sending them back, probably to their deaths in many cases, because they do not conform to our terms of reference for admittance to this country.

Surely a country like Canada, with so many resources and so much freedom, should be the first to give people a fair hearing and ensure that we provide a safe haven for any refugee whose life is in danger. Anyone who comes to our borders and claims refugee status should be given a hearing and an opportunity to compile their case. They should be entitled to a fair and honest appeal process. With the legislation before us we are telling the volunteers and church groups right across the country that we will have none of that. We will tighten the immigration laws to the extent that we will be so selective as to probably admit to Canada only white people who have half a million dollars.

It is a disgrace to set such criteria for admittance to the country. However, the larger problem will be in the long term. We know that our country is not renewing its population with its own birth rate. We will be admitting into this country people who will be very self-serving and without a sense of a pluristic society.

Up to now we have built a country with a mosaic of which we have all been very proud. The refugees who have sought haven here have made a tremendous commitment to the country and have helped us to understand the international scene and to have compassion because our roots are all so different. I would like to think that because of the mosaic we have in this country we have built a pluristic society which understands the enrichment of different cultures coming together, not in confrontation but in understanding of each other.

The volunteers, community groups, and church groups are recommending that the system be made more efficient but that the doors not be closed. They say that they want our country to continue to be a refuge for people who cannot find a safe refuge anywhere else in the world.

If every country is so restrictive on this issue the problem will become much more serious everywhere. If this legislation is passed it will probably be the most restrictive anywhere in the western world. I am particularly concerned about that because, in addition to putting people's lives in jeopardy, we are losing our international credibility as mediators and peacekeepers in the international field. We are saying that people coming to our shores must be treated in a very legalistic and non-compassionate manner and that if they do not conform to our system they will be turned around.

• (1130)

I was most shocked by the fact that we could actually turn boats around at sea. Furthermore, it has been suggested that the Coast Guard be authorized to take this action. The Coast Guard is not trained in immigration policy and is not supposed to decide who can enter our country. The Coast Guard's function is much different from the immigration policy they are being asked to follow now. It does not make any sense that the Government is putting that kind of pressure on those people by delegating that kind of responsibility to them.

We could see the same thing we saw in 1939 when boats were turned back. I do not think there is anyone in the House who is not embarrassed about or does not regret that action in 1939.

That incident should be a lesson to us to avoid legislation that seems to condone such action.

I hope the Government seriously considers that this legislation is restrictive. It is not a coincidence that many of the same groups have appeared before both the parliamentary committee and the Senate committee, at a great cost to themselves. The Senate committee was unanimous in its amendments. The Government should get the message that this legislation is unacceptable to Canadians. The more that Canadians learn about this legislation the less acceptable it becomes.

On behalf of Canadians now and Canadians in the future, I plead with the Government to withdraw this legislation which could become a scar on our history. We want to have a proud history that shows that we honour and take responsibly the conventions we sign. This legislation does not do that, and it must be opposed. If the Government is unwilling to accept the amendments it should withdraw the legislation.

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity this morning to take part in the debate on Bill C-84. Immigration policy has always been a priority for the Liberal Party. The Liberal Government left a very solid foundation, and thanks to this legacy, the Conservative Government has been able to maintain and enhance our prestige on the international scene. However, Mr. Speaker, I find it hard to understand some of the measures being proposed in this Bill. In any event, I want to start by considering the immigration issue, first in terms of the world situation and second, in terms of the role Canada has to play.

The world situation. For over two centuries, people on this planet have been seeking independance and throwing off the bonds of their oppressors, thus becoming sovereign. We saw this phenomenon in Europe during the nineteenth century. At the time, the industrial revolution was accompanied by a number of popular uprisings. The monarchy, the Czars and other forms of government gave way to governments with a popular base, in many cases democratic governments. We have all read about the French Revolution, the popular uprising in Germany, the painful transition from monarchy to parliamentary system in England, and, even closer to home, the American Revolution next door. All these events produced a host of refugees trying to escape oppression in their native countries. At the time, many newly liberated European countries wanted colonies in order to expand their markets and sources of raw materials. Thus, England founded its empire, as did France, Holland, Spain and Germany. Many of the colonies were located in Africa and Asia. Subsequently, these new colonies also wanted to manage their own destiny and become the sovereign nations they were entitled to be. We remember the Congo, Algeria, and more recently Mozambique, all of which wanted their freedom as a nation. They achieved their freedom at great cost, and, as in the nineteenth century, the process was sometimes very violent. Every time, a stream of refugees was the result.

There are two other major upheavals that disrupted this planet, and I am referring to the two Great Wars. We all remember that these wars produced a large number of refugees. Not long ago, we saw many refugees arriving in Canada from Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos, and today, we all are very much aware of the situation of Blacks in South Africa and their experience of the violence of a discriminatory regime.

We are priviledged to live in country like Canada where peace prevails in a democratic system. That is not the case on the international scene. It is a jungle where each country tries to get what it can. The United Nations contains the seed of an international political system. Until the people of this earth reach a common agreement, based on co-operation and good will, and take action accordingly, nations will continue to violate the basic principles of human rights, and refugees will roam this planet, seeking a safe haven from the pain and suffering to which they have been subjected.

One country that is an oasis for all these refugees, is, as you may have guessed, Mr. Speaker, Canada. The Liberal Party led the way in this respect, under the leadership of Louis St-Laurent, Lester Pearson and Pierre Trudeau. Unfortunately, with Bill C-84 we may be sending the wrong signals to the international community. What the Conservative Government is about to do with Bill C-84 is exactly that. We know, for instance, that it is very difficult for people living in Central America to enter the United States.

I wish Government Members would understand that we agree there is abuse in the system and that we should deal with the problem. However, the Government's aggressive approach has blown out of all proportion a problem that could have been dealt with quite simply. Earlier, I talked about what causes the refugee phenomenon, and I did so to explain why any action taken by Canada must be seen within a broader context. When we focus on very narrow issue of refugees who abuse the system in Canada, we tend to forget the problem is much broader and far more complex. Canada has often been very generous in assisting people in difficulty throughout the world. I am thinking, for instance, of the plight of Ethiopia. Our aid has made it possible for many Ethiopians to stay in their country. Our approach internationally should be a preventive one. We should work on eliminating the situations that generate refugees. In fact, this perspective is entirely in the Liberal tradition which has always encouraged aid, peace making and mediation.

So far, a lot has been said about Bill C-84, but very little about the persons concerned by this Bill. Who are these refugees? I will give an example of a family I happen to know. This family was living in Chile at the time of the 1970 coup. The police came to their home and knocked on the door. The wife had time to take her two little girls and run to the back of the house. The policemen came in through the front door and took the husband, a university professor. His wife and their two children barely had time to escape through the back door.

The husband was executed. His wife fled to Canada with the children. They arrived without papers, still dazed, and then had to cope with adjusting to a new country, new customs, a new language, the children without their father, the wife without her husband.

There are hundred of stories like that. There is an Indian saying: To understand another person, one has to walk a mile in his moccasins. In other words, one has to put oneself in the other person's place.

I suggest Hon. Members put themselves in the place of the refugees who enter this country and are faced with the new measures proposed by this Government in Bill C-84. Imagine a family that just crossed the Atlantic and faces a Coast Guard officer who has to decide whether they are genuine refugees. Imagine a refugee who is unfairly denied refugee status and cannot appeal the decision. Would you want to be treated like that?

If you were sent back to your own country, to certain death, what would your reaction be?

My colleagues have given all kind of reasons why Bill C-84 is unsatisfactory. I wonder what the present Government's real objectives are. In 1974, we had 200,000 immigrants. In 1986, we had only 87,000. In addition, the number of family-class immigrants dwindled from 51,981 to 12,798 between 1984 and 1986—10,000 fewer. This Bill was introduced after 300-odd people landed on our shores. As underscored by my colleague from York West (Mr. Marchi), over the two years when the boat people came here Canada became home to 106,000 individuals. I must therefore conclude that the Conservative Government has locked the immigration door and has no intention of welcoming immigrants: it is making a federal case out of 300 people arriving here, whereas a Liberal Government did let in 106,000 immigrants in 1979 and 1980.

The message sent out by the Conservative Government has already registered. In her release dated August 17, 1980, CLC President Shirley Carr noted that "during a recent tour of Central America CTC representatives were approached on a number of occasions by labour union supporters who expressed dismay over the fact that Canada seems to be discarding the humanitarian principles to which it had subscribed for years and years".

Like my Liberal colleagues, I believe this Bill eliminates the right of appeal, it is contrary to the spirit of the United Nations covenant and, first and foremost, treats churches and humanitarian institutions like criminals.

Religious organizations do not want to find themselves on the wrong side of the law. Such organizations made it possible for that Chilean woman and the two children to escape from their country.

Do my Conservative Party colleagues really think that a person fleeing under death threats can walk in a Canadian consulate or tell the nearest police officer: "Just a minute, I want to leave the country, let me get a Canadian visa". No way, we must remember that her husband was killed to realize the futility of such a gesture.

With this legislation the Conservative Government wants to close one of the very few ways open to these refugees, namely religious institutions and organizations.

Do Conservatives Members fail to see that people working for religious organizations have a law which is much more basic than any civil law or any government law? The law of these religious organizations, their belief in a superior being, is infinitely fairer than any human legislation. Their conscience tells them to disobey civil laws if these laws show no respect for human decency.

The Senate amendment would help clear up that situation. As a matter of fact I fail to understand the logic of the Conservative Government. It shirks its responsibilities and lets churches come to the assistance of the most destitute people in our society. In 1987, the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless, some religious organizations went to the rescue of homeless in Canada. What this Tory Government is saying is that since there is a shelter problem for the homeless, let charitable organizations take care of it. But with this legislation, it is saying to them: Do not take care of the shelter problem of the homeless elsewhere in the world. It is illegal. The Government of Canada is now deciding what is charitable and what is not.

Let us make no mistake about it: Refugees are people who are both without home and without country. Where is Canada when the time comes to stand up and be counted? During the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless, we organized a world conference. We spent money for all sorts of conferences, studies, projects. Bill C-84 clearly demonstrates that this Government is involved in a window-dressing job, a PR campaign, and that it does not understand anything of the problems the homeless are facing both here and elsewhere in the world. What is in store for religious organizations are jail terms when, for the same charitable purposes, they try to help citizens of the world who are seeking an oasis of peace.

I suggest that, seen from this angle, the Senate's amendment should be fully reconsidered or altered to take into account the positive and necessary contributions of religious and charitable organizations in this context. This brings me to deal with the relevancy of the Senate's amendment concerning the forcing back of boats.

I am concerned about the Government's refusal of this amendment for two reasons. First of all, the passengers of such a boat would be denied any recourse, which is a blatant violation of our judiciary system. Also, and as a consequence, what the Tory Government is saying is: Not in my backyard! In other words, we do not want this problem in Canada. That is where Canada is missing the boat. Not only would this approach not prevent smugglers from continuing their trade, as the Official Opposition critic explained, but Canada would be sending a very clear message to the international community: Don't count on Canada any more. Is that the price Canada must pay to be part of the group of industrialized nations, the Group of Seven? Or is Canada giving up its role as a world leader in this field?

Mr. Speaker, the Government is always saying we should be opening up new markets by being competitive and developing our technology. That is how a nation is measured, but there are other ways as well. Canada has always been a leader in immigration. In fact, Canada was the world leader. Why is the Conservative Government trying to downgrade this country to the level of other countries that are economically well off but fail miserably in terms of their immigration policies and the way they treat other people on this planet?

I therefore urge the Government to adopt the Senate's amendment concerning the provision for turning back ships, or to at least amend it so that refugees will have legal recourse.

Canada's message to other nations must be clear: "The buck stops here".

We will not let refugees be literally shipped from country to country without giving them some legal recourse. We will not accept a replay of the kind of situation we saw during World War II, when a ship with Jewish refugees was refused entry by Canada and several other coutries.

The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) mentioned in the House the provisions of this Bill that will probably be considered to be unconstitutional.

Considering last week's historic decision on abortion by the Supreme Court I suggest that the Government make sure its Bill is indeed constitutional.

In concluding, I would like to make it clear that we, as Liberals, agree that any abuse of our system must be dealt with, but we do not agree this means destroying the whole system.

I may add that we, as Canadians, are privileged among the nations of this world, and that we have a duty to keep our doors and our minds open to the less fortunate on this planet.

If we look at the context of this problem and the long-term implications, the sight of 300 people arriving in Canada should not make us panic. I think that the suggestion by the Hon. Member for York West that Canadians should be informed of the many benefits that accrue to Canada as a result of immigration is a very positive one, in keeping with the best traditions of this House. The Hon. Member is to be commended!

Finally, Canada must continue to play a leading role in the world, co-operating with other countries in the search for a solution that respects human dignity.

The Senate's amendments and those suggested by the Hon. Member for York West are a step in that direction. I urge the Government to revise its decision and to accept those amendments.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member who has just spoken believes what she has said. I think that that belief system comes about as a consequence of not having the time or the opportunity to really examine in detail the legislation which is before us, as well as the situation which led to the need for its presentation.

I am becoming more and more disturbed. This is the fifth day of debate on this Bill. It is the fifth day of filibuster on a piece of legislation which brought us back to the House in an emergency session last summer. We are not really debating the legislation; we are debating suggested amendments made by the Senate.

The Minister has outlined for the benefit of the House the considerable difficulties that would be created in terms of our capacity to protect ourselves as a nation from terrorists, from criminals and from undesirable people if some of the Senate amendments were accepted. The purpose in returning to the House last summer was to bring forward this piece of legislation. It received careful consideration in committee. It certainly received careful consideration in the Senate. We are now in a filibuster situation in the House of Commons.

As a Calgarian, I am very aware that in some two weeks we will be into the Olympic Games in Calgary. Historically, the Olympics have experienced some unfortunate terrorist incidents. In the City of Toronto in the not too distant future world leaders will meet. These leaders are potential targets for terrorists.

As a result of benign neglect over many years Canada was left in an essentially defenseless position in terms of immigration law. We are trying to correct that. A minority of Members in the House through their behaviour and through the continuation of this debate are simply denying the majority of Members the opportunity to vote on whether or not the Minister has brought forward a reasonable response to the amendments of the Senate. There is still an urgent situation in the country to correct the situation.

I say to the Hon. Member that not only have I studied these matters over the last two or three years as Chairman of the committee, but during the hearings that were held daily we went into great detail about this situation. There was also a clause-by-clause study of the Bill in committee. Subsequently, I spent a week in Geneva at an executive council meeting of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. A great deal of my time there was spent with the legal experts of the High Commissioner's office who went over in some detail both Bill C-84 and Bill C-55, as amended. I point out to Hon. Members that what is before the House are not the original pieces of legislation but the amended versions.

I came away from there able to say on public platforms across the country that no one was able to bring to my attention the specific legislation of any country which provided more legal protection for true refugees than would be true in Canada once these amended Bills are passed. With our present procedures in place we do not have something to which the rest of the world can look to Canada as an example. These procedures are archaic and difficult. They cause a great deal of unnecessary and unwanted publicity for true refugees. I say that because people abuse bad law. We have bad law in place today and it is being abused.

What we brought forward to the House and what committees have worked very hard on is the creation of good law to which the rest of the world can look to. I simply ask the Hon. Member, if she feels that this piece of legislation is really so rotten, can she provide to the House the name of a single country anywhere in the world which will provide better protection to true refugees than will be true of the combination of Bill C-84 and Bill C-55?

Not only is the legislation which is before us not bad, it will be the finest legislation that exists in the world in terms of providing legal protection to refugees. I defy anyone in the House to stand up and give an example of one country that will do the job better than Canada will do it once this filibuster is over. It is time for the House to vote on this matter.

Mrs. Killens: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that I do not often speak in the House unless it is because I have something to say. Right now I feel it is important and my duty to say something because of the number of people in my riding who have come to my office with respect to this issue. I do not feel at all that I am taking part in a filibuster. I am carrying out my duty as a Member of Parliament representing the people of my riding which is Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Killens: The Hon. Member spoke of true refugees, which is precisely the problem. The Government is trying to tell me who is a true refugee. The Hon. Member asks me to name a country in which a true refugee is better treated than in Canada. The problem we have is with the definition of true refugee.

I will point out to the Hon. Member a case in my riding. I refer to a fellow who was living in Sri Lanka who is a university professor. In the middle of the night one night someone ran to his house telling him to leave because people with guns were coming. He fled through the woods with his family and learned from other people later on that that night his house was burned down, along with the other houses on the street. And he stayed in Sri Lanka he would have lost his life. His son was admitted into Canada as a refugee, but this gentleman of an older generation stopped in Spain. He taught in Spain for a few months. In order to join his son in Canada he then asked the Immigration Department in Canada for status. He is not fussy. I believe it is too late for him to be a refugee. He wanted to be a landed immigrant. He wants to have anything, but he wants to live in Canada with his son. Over the past two years he has been at many meetings, and he has sworn on the Bible many times that what he says is true. He now has a job in Canada. He is waiting.

• (1200)

I have a question for the Government, and perhaps my own critic could tell me the answer. I remember very well that Bill C-22 was retroactive to June, 1986. At that time the Bill was not even tabled because it had lost its way through the corridors of this House. It was retabled in November, 1986. But the law that we passed just before Christmas was retroactive to 1986.

I would like to know if Bill C-84 is going to be retroactive like Bill C-22? If it is, I fear for the constituent in my riding. What can I do for him? I had better hurry and attempt to settle this. I am now in communication with the Immigration Department. But I feel that I will not have done a good job as a Member of Parliament in looking after this very touching case. I am sure the Hon. Member knows what I mean when you have office hours in your riding and those people come in with a good case, and it is the red tape in the Government that prevents us from settling the problem for them.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have now concluded my remarks, but I hope I will get an answer to my question.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: On the sketchy details provided, I can see nothing in this Bill or the next Bill that would operate in anything other than the favour of someone who, for humanitarian and compassionate reasons and/or legitimate refugee status, was to seek that type of status in the country. The Bills provide a better world for refugees, and a better world for people who should be given humanitarian or compassionate grounds.

What the Member is overlooking, and the difficulty that the Chamber is having, is that from time to time all of us see individuals who we feel have not been handled well by the bureaucracy or by the legislation. What we do not see is the reality that each month 750 to 850 people come to the attention of immigration enforcement officers for breaking Canadian immigration law, and at the moment they are taken to inquiry by enforcement, they claim to be refugees. All of a sudden, miraculously 75 per cent of the 750 to 850 people a month make the claim to be refugees. They are not. Some of them are criminals. Some are illegal immigrants who have snuck across the border, or come in with false passports or false credentials. There have been cases in the public print. As a nation we must be worried when we have a law that does not allow us to protect ourselves.

I ask Members to not keep the individual so clearly in mind that they forget the nation. This Bill is a Bill to protect the nation. I urge that the filibuster stop and we go to the vote.

Mrs. Killens: As a solution, the Member seems to suggest that we could make an appeal on humanitarian grounds to the Minister when we have a special case. In the nine years that I have been in this House, I have only had one successful humanitarian case appealed to the Minister, and that was during a Liberal Government. At the present time I do not know how difficult it would be for me to reach the Minister on the other side. That is not a solution. The solution is to amend the law as presented by the Senate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With the last question, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, it is not so much of a question, but more of a statement in response to some of the allegations made by the Parliamentary Secretary. He likes to suggest that thoughtful, positive debate is a filibuster. I wish to remind the Parliamentary Secretary that the Government may have the largest majority in Canadian history, but that does not mean that it can run roughshod over Parliament.

Parliament was recalled during the summer to pass this Bill expeditiously. The Government felt that it could ignore the advice of all of the people who have expertise in this area, come in with a Draconian piece of legislation, and use its huge majority to jam it through the House of Commons. Thank goodness, in our parliamentary system that does not work. To a certain extent, there are checks and balances.

While I have personal views that are not necessarily positive about the other place, the fact that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) has agreed to make some changes to the legislation is proof enough that it was erred or seriously flawed. Because we are trying to propose ways and means of improving this legislation as responsible members of opposition Parties, the suggestion that this is a filibuster, I find unacceptable.

I remember Canada in 1979 pleading heavily with countries in Southeast Asia to accept the boat people as they were fleeing persecution. Canada was urging countries to be compassionate, to be humanitarian, and to provide a safe haven for those people who were fleeing what they perceived to be a very negative environment in their home country.

If someone feels that a ship approaching Canada is filled with illegal refugees, this legislation states that we will use our navy or our Coast Guard to force the boat to turn around and return to its port of origin. How on earth will anyone determine whether or not there are legitimate refugees on board? This is obviously a silly provision. I wish to remind my friend, the Parliamentary Secretary, that there have only been two cases in Canadian history where refugees have arrived by boat. This is simply one example, and there are many others, where my friends in opposition are attempting to explain to the Government that changes must be made to make this a reasonable and acceptable piece of legislation. I find it completely unacceptable that our responsible debates are called a filibuster.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to participate in this debate and present the views of my Party on Bill C-84 and the amendments that the Senate has proposed to it.

It seems obvious to me, and I think it must now be obvious to the Canadian people, that this whole issue and this whole legislation was phoney from the start. The Government never did have a reasonably founded apprehension that there would be large numbers of refugees arriving in Canada by boat. There never was any degree of reasonable apprehension that among those refugees there would be terrorists or criminals. There never was any evidence presented to Parliament or to any other forum to suggest that the recall of Parliament in August, 1986, was necessary. We had a phoney recall. We have a phoney Bill. We have a phoney problem based on a phoney analysis, and what I believe is a false apprehension.

One has to wonder if in fact this was done in order to help the failing election campaign of the Ontario Progressive Conservatives under their then Leader, Larry Grossman. If so, obviously it misfired.

This country won the Nansen Medal for its treatment of refugees over a period of some 20 years. The Government decided to tear up that record and that reputation in an attempt to generate some positive response from the voting public by undertaking a campaign that had as its targets those who were in the weakest position to defend themselves.

• (1210)

It has been argued, and argued by many authorities, that the provisions of Bill C-84 as originally proposed violate the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It has also been argued that its provisions violate the United Nations Convention on the treatment of refugees.

Many organizations have been critical of the Bill, and I should like to start by exploring one of the points which the Parliamentary Secretary was attempting to make. The obvious point of the Bill is to take action against Central American refugees and those who come here by water. They are the easiest to identify or to pick out. They generally have the least in the way of available resources to assist them in making a refugee claim.

The Parliamentary Secretary spoke of 750 to 800 persons per months arriving and making refugee claims. He knows that the majority of those people in fact have proper identification and that the majority of those people come from such countries as Brazil, Portugal, and Turkey. Normally they are in possession of, at least when they board the aircraft, purportedly proper identification in the form of passports or visas. What happens in the case of those people is that sometimes they get through. Sometimes the deception is detected, and then they go on an individual basis through the refugee determination process.

The very idea that a criminal, unless a highly unsuccessful one, a terrorist or someone who is a security risk to Canada would choose to arrive by the slowest, the riskiest, and the leakiest means possible, for example, a tramp steamer trying to sneak in under cover of fog to a coast that is in many ways hazardous to impromptu landings, is risible. For the Government to suggest by way of the Bill that that sort of landing constitutes a threat to Canada's security is frankly a deception.

Many criticism were levelled against Bill C-84 when it was first introduced. I think it is worth while repeating them. People who are the subject of a security certificate will be removed from Canada without the legal right to make a refugee claim. Another criticism was that turning boats around permits the operator to escape without a penalty. The boat could return however many times and be turned around. Obviously the sanctions proposed against groups who assist refugee claimants are unacceptable since many of them could come under the threat of such sanctions through inadvertence.

Only a few years ago we were encouraging the countries of southeast Asia to take in boat people who, obviously in the degree of desperation that led them to get on those boats, were refugees. We put passengers on those boats at risk if we simply turn the boat around at sea. We put them at the risk of the master of the vessel deciding to make some riskier approach or deciding to wreck the ship so that it cannot be turned around, whatever the risk to the passengers. We have no way, in such a case, of finding out who the people are, where they are coming from, what their reasons are, or whether in fact they are second-hand refugees, those who have been driven to desperation by the poor treatment they received in their original country of lodging outside their home country.

If people are dumped into the sea because a captain has not taken them back to the point of embarkation, apparently the Bill makes it an offence for a passing ship to pick them up. The Security Intelligence Review Committee is already overloaded. Also, the retention provisions are unnecessary and violate the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The rejection rate for refugee claimants has historically averaged from 65 per cent to 70 per cent, which is something we should bear in mind in considering the Bill.

With regard to the Senate amendments I could go on—and undoubtedly I will at a future opportunity—at some length about the legitimacy of the Senate and the legitimacy of Senate adjustments or amendments to Bills which go to the Senate Chamber. However, this is not the time or the place to question, as I certainly would, the legitimacy of the Senate. The fact is that the Senate has produced some reasonable amendments which address many of the major objections to the Bill. I must say also that the Government has had the sense in some instances to accept amendments which are worth while and frankly to take away some, though certainly not all, of the objectionable aspects of the legislation.

I do not think that some of the original stated objections of the Government in the Bill are such that many would object to them. It is clearly necessary to place an increased responsibility on transportation companies to know who they are transporting and to know exactly under what status or claim the person is boarding a vessel or airplane in order to come to Canada. I do not think that is something we find objectionable. It does not go contrary to Canadian traditions as does much of the legislation.

I am glad to see, for example, the Government accepting the Senate amendment which would permit a person who is the subject of a security certificate to be present during the presentation of the Government's case to the judge except where there are compelling reasons for exclusion. In today's environment of international terrorist activity against some states and institutions, I suppose we can conceive of a situation where a person's very appearance before the judge would have some risk to Canadians. It is not easy to do so, but nevertheless it is a possibility. Therefore, the acceptance of this amendment with the inherent flexibility for situations of extreme danger or urgency is at last something intelligent from the Government.

However, the Senate amendment which would remove the power to order a ship not to enter or to leave Canadian waters has been rejected by the Government. I can only see that as being a mistake. As I see it, the effect is that if Canada is able to communicate with a vessel that is within range of Canadian shores to make purportedly an attempt to land refugees, surely with the technology available or at the disposal of our Armed Forces and Coast Guard we have the obvious opportunity to apprehend the vessel at the very instant it enters Canadian waters or beaches on Canadian soil. Surely it is much better that we should know who is trying to enter Canada and why than that we should simply cast them adrift on the high sea, a practice which used to be known as marooning and of course implies the possibility of very high mortality among the victims.

Earlier I mentioned Canada's recent history because the two cases before this decade of ships full of refugees being turned away from Canadian shores are dark stains on the country's tradition of magnanimity and generosity to refugees. In recent history Canada has had a very good record in the treatment of refugees and of refugee claimants. That is a record which we should be seeking to sustain. Let us see if we can earn the Nansen Medal again sometime.

In terms of the measures in the Bill, which I for one do not find objectionable, the action to increase penalties on those who smuggle people into Canada or across borders for profit or gain is a very necessary control. However, characteristically the Government has lumped them together in Bill C-84 with measures which neither I nor my Party can support. Obviously preventing the entry of terrorists or criminals is a legitimate and worthy government objective. What we are saying about Bill C-84 is that it will have its hardest impact on those who are neither terrorists nor criminals.

• (1220)

In recent months, we have heard that the Government is seeking a safe third country for people who are turned away from Canadian shores. What does that tell us about what we have learned? I received a letter from a resident of Dollard des Ormeaux in Quebec who concludes by saying:

> I remember learning in school about how Canada turned away boatloads of Jews. Haven't we learned from the past?

Of course, those people did not go to a safe third country, they went back to a very dangerous situation indeed.

An example of comment in the press is that in recent years, Canada has been the most generous of western countries with regard to refugees and we have been congratulating ourselves endlessly about this. Perhaps we have, though it does bear repeating. It also bears repeating that not every person who comes claiming to be a refugee should be accepted as a refugee. Again, my belief is that before the advent of Bill C-84, we had adequate means to determine that.

We are after all largely a country, if not of refugees then certainly of refugees and immigrants. It is even stated by some ethnographers and historians that the aboriginal people of this country came to North America some 30,000 years ago via an ice bridge. That, of course, is now something that is beyond a reasonable determination, but apart from the aboriginal people of Canada, it is absolutely certain that all who have come here since, their descendants and those who will continue to come to Canada in the future, are immigrants all and in some cases refugees.

In the past, Canada's golden years of immigration included 1910 when over 400,000 people came largely from eastern Europe to settle the Canadian Prairies. We must truly recognize the contribution refugees have made to building the Canada we have, love and enjoy today.

There has to be a better way for the Government to get a judgment on the constitutionality of a piece of legislation than to submit it to Parliament and leave it to its fate before the courts. It has been said that a problem with Bill C-84 is that it may eventually be found unconstitutional, and I am sure there are lessons for all of us in last week's Supreme Court judgment as to what happens in such a case.

We are glad to see the Liberal Party now on side so far as Bill C-84 is concerned. We noted, of course, the comments in The Ottawa Citizen of July 18 of last year made by the Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner), but we are glad to see that the Liberal Party is also debating this measure with us in the House of Commons.

Mr. Belsher: Liberal-NDP coalition.

Mr. Dick: Filibuster.

Mr. Parry: This is not a filibuster, this is an opportunity for Members of Parliament to debate a serious question and to put their views on the record. I am sure that if those who are heckling in a rather half-hearted way want to have an opportunity to put their views on Bill C-84 on the record, they can have that arranged for themselves.

It seems to me that the Government is now, some six months after the phoney recall of Parliament, carrying on with pushing this legislation through in order to convince the House and the country that the Government is still the Government. I would like to put government Members' minds at rest. All of us who understand the democratic functioning of this institution and who indeed love and defend democracy acknowledge that they are still the Government. It is not something that we see as being in question or open to challenge, but since they are still the Government let them show that they can adapt to changing circumstances. Let them show that they are capable of admitting an error once it has been made, rather than only of pushing forward willy-nilly, regardless of the opposition to Bill C-84 which they can now see very well is not something that is centered in the caucuses of two opposition Parties in Parliament, but is widely spread and shared across this great country.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member will realize that this Bill passed the House some months ago and was in the Senate for a very long time. When it was considered by the Senate, amendments were made and then some of those amendments were accepted by the Government in an effort to put the Bill through. Now the Bill is back in the House with a Senate position that is not reasonable. The Hon. Member's Party continues to speak about the Bill. Surely a Government is entitled to get its legislation through in a six-month, eight-month or nine-month period. The continual discussion and support of the Senate by the New Democratic Party is really something to behold.

My question to the Hon. Member deals with whether it is his view and his Party's view that those who conspire to break Canada's immigration laws should somehow be relieved of real search-and-seizure proceedings and should now be entitled to be treated as other than offenders. This is bearing in mind that there has been all sorts of evidence of people paying $3,000 $4,000 and $5,000 and even up to $10,000 for phoney documentation that would allow them to get onto planes, and for the organization of phoney immigration by way of refugee claims into Canada. Is it not his Party's view that that kind of thing that tears apart Canadian sovereignty ought to be a crime and that people who commit that kind of crime ought to be subject to the full penalties set out in Bill C-84?

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his question, though the strawmen were falling with such speed during it that I had difficulty counting them as they went down.

The Hon. Member must surely have heard me compliment the Government on its reasonableness in accepting some of the Senate amendments. As far as the time taken to get the Bill through the Senate is concerned, I would contend, and I think anyone who looked at the record would support me, that the time taken in the Senate was a reflection of the fact that the Government chose not to try to use any degree of powerful influence on the Senate to get this through faster. Certainly that indicates that the Government's effort to get this through the Senate was not up to the emergency billing the Government gave this measure when it recalled Parliament.

As far as phoney claims are concerned, I would repeat the point I made earlier in my speech. The Hon. Member talks of conspiracy. He talks of thousands of dollars changing hands for false documentation. No one disputes that this happens. We are saying, however, that Bill C-84 is only tangentially related to that sort of thing.

The fact is that it is an absolute sophistry to say that 150 or 180 people on a boat were conspiring to break Canadian immigration laws. They obviously knew nothing of Canadian immigration laws. Those who do conspire by procuring false documents are indeed knowing offenders, but the fact is that the measures to control that sort of entry into Canada were largely pre-existing.

What we have here basically are measures which would put in jeopardy the very lives of people who are generally too poor, too ignorant and too desperate to even form an intent to conspire against Canada's immigration laws, and who in many cases are not really aware except in the most fuzzy and haphazard way that those laws exist and will be enforced.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talked about democracy. When his colleagues stand up and chastise the Government for listening to a "goon squad", they are chastising us for listening to Members of Parliament who represent their constituents. The NDP has a rather weird idea of what is involved in a democracy. It seems some of their ideas would be more in accord with a dictatorship.

The Hon. Member mentioned the provisions of this Bill dealing with boats. I would like to let the House know that I think the difference between a filibuster, which is what we are experiencing now for the fifth day, and an informed debate is the degree to which Members are truly informed and they lay information on the table germane to the issue.

In 1985, some two years ago, this Government took a world leadership position to develop a scheme which is referred to in the UN as RASRO, or the Rescue At Sea Resettlement Office. We are a signatory to that agreement. It encourages ship captains to pick up people adrift at sea in leaky boats and give them sanctuary on the ship. The captain is guaranteed that he can come to port and disembark those people. We took the lead in that initiative and we have an obligation under that treaty to resettle our fair share of those kinds of people.

That was concrete action taken by this Government with respect to boat people. What I hear the Opposition saying is that as we change Canadian immigration law, we should continue to leave in place provisions which would encourage the peddlers in human flesh to go to these desperate people, take their life savings, and cast them adrift in a leaky boat in the North Atlantic, one of the most hazardous oceans in the world. That is what they want us to do. Or, they would have us encourage those peddlers in human flesh to put those people on a great big leaky boat and take it to our shores, not a port or someplace with wharfs, but past the rocks and shoals and waves which threaten to capsize the boats.

I say to Hon. Members that if Conservative Members in this House were to give in to the Opposition, that is what we would be doing. We would be encouraging the peddling of human flesh by unscrupulous people and putting the health and safety of these people at risk. Members of this Party say no. You can filibuster all you want but we will do nothing to encourage further traffic in misery. We are trying to stop it.

The Hon. Member says terrorists and criminals have access to expensive suits of clothing, false passports, and so on. There is no evidence that anyone comes in and claims to be a refugee when in fact they are a terrorist, he says. That simply defies reality. Surely the Hon. Member has had the time to read the newspapers lately and recognizes that, for example, one of the Tamil boat people is wanted on a warrant in West Germany for making Molotov cocktails. Surely that is a current event. It is dealt with prominently in our news media. Surely he should be aware of it and should be careful that, as part of his filibuster and throwing false information on the table, there is no suggestion that those who are capable of harming the people of this country use the refugee system.

Surely the Hon. Member is aware that 10,000 people arrived at our borders last year seeking entry, mostly as refugees, with absolutely no identifying documents. Those are not all the people who arrived. Those are the ones turned over to the RCMP so we could try to find out who they are. Does he honestly believe that we should leave the law alone so that they can just walk right into the country, 10,000 a year, and we do not know who they are? Or, should we pass this legislation in order to have a way of detaining people so we can learn who they are and whether or not they represent a danger?

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I would like to briefly respond to those points by the Parliamentary Secretary. I say briefly because I am not filibustering and do not wish to. It might be said that the Parliamentary Secretary, by consistently misusing the 10-minute period for questions and comments, is aiding and abetting a filibuster. The fact is he does so when he puts on the record intelligent observations about RASRO and then follows them with what I can only say is a complete distortion of my comments and my Party's position.

If the Hon. Member refers to Hansard for today, he will find me saying that I approve of higher penalties for smuggling. However, when he attempts to suggest that the opposition Parties would like to see people coming in on lifeboats, I think he goes absolutely against what I said, which is that it is much safer and much more secure for Canada if these boats, once identified, could be apprehended when they land.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I am taking part in this debate because I consider that, although there is an urgent need for both our refugee legislation and our Immigration Act to be re-examined and updated, this particular Bill has flaws and needs a lot of work. I found it distressing this morning to hear the Parliamentary Secretary, who is normally a thoughtful Member and from whom one would have expected better, dismissing all the genuine concerns on this side of the House as filibustering.

I am going to begin by laying out what is still wrong with the Bill, what could be corrected relatively simply with some good will on the part of the Minister, and then return to some basic principles on which I think we can agree.

First, one must point out that the recommendations of the Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs were unanimous. Not only Liberal Senators supported the amendments before us, so did Conservative Senators. In this particular case the chamber of sober second thought did a rather good job.

The Minister, indeed, has admitted that his legislation was born in haste, because he has accepted some of those amendments. He has accepted that claimants may be in courtrooms when lawyers for the Government present a security or criminal intelligence report about them, unless the claimant poses a security or personal safety risk. This is surely an improvement on the original situation where a genuine claimant, who might be represented by a not very well informed or not very competent lawyer, was at risk, not knowing what had been said, and therefore not in a position to counter arguments. The state will still be protected because there is provision to exclude people when there is a clear and known security risk.

As to the question of threat of criminal prosecution against church workers or others who assist refugee claimants, the Minister is now prepared to guarantee that that will not happen without formal consent of the Attorney General of Canada. In other words, the church worker who in good faith tries to assist someone to make a refugee claim is now not liable to punishment as was the case with the original Bill.

• (1240)

The amendment which the Minister has refused to entertain and which I seriously urge he re-examine is the one which allows boats to be turned back on the high seas. Apparently the Minister considers that there is some deterrent value in this. Surely, on the contrary, there is an enormous risk in this. If an unscrupulous ship's captain on a leaky, poorly provisioned, and poorly staffed boat on the high seas in the North Atlantic is turned back by our Coast Guard officials, what is the deterrent to him? He takes his unfortunate passengers back and dumps them somewhere or other. He still has their money and so has not lost anything.

Surely a much more effective deterrent would be to bring that ship into port, confiscate it, charge the captain, and jail him if necessary. That would be an effective deterrent but, of at least the same importance, Canadian officials would be able to examine those people on board and determine whether or not they were genuine refugees. If they were turned back on the high seas we would know nothing about them and they could be genuine refugees. That is the reason I think that particular amendment made by the Senate should be regarded seriously. The Minister has turned it down out of hand. I hope he will reconsider because that is an important part of the opposition of my Party to this Bill as it now stands.

This Bill was introduced in great haste in response to the arrival of a boat carrying 150 refugee applicants to Nova Scotia last summer. The Minister has been saying ever since that he needs Draconian powers in order to deal with fake refugees. However, there are powers in the present legislation which are not being used. A lot of the fake refugee applications are coming from unscrupulous so-called immigration consultants and lawyers. Section 95(n) of the present Immigrations Act allows prosecution of those who would counsel or assist illegal immigrants. That section has not been used other than to prosecute the captain of the Amelie.

The most extraordinary abuses are taking place and the Government remains inactive. In my own riding four or five immigration consultants have set up shop. They charge fees for counseling people on making false immigration applications. They have links with travel agents in various countries. The Government knew about this for years before it finally acted. It has finally laid charges against three of them but there is no indication when those cases will be brought to trial.

The first line of protection for us is surely to prosecute the people who are organizing the scams. Many of the people who have made false refugee claims do not know our laws and have paid large sums of money to these consultants who have advised them that this is the way to come into Canada. The key way to stop this must be to deal with these fake immigration consultants and with employers who knowingly hire illegals at poor wages.

There has been for at least two years, to my knowledge, a lively traffic in social insurance cards and the Government is not on top of that. There are some remarkably youthful looking people working in Toronto with cards which show that they are 65. They do not look a day over 21 or 22 but the Government is not acting on that.

Returning to the immigration law itself, I think we would all agree that the law as passed in 1976 is more than due for amendment and updating, for a number of reasons. However, let us discuss first what everyone in this House would agree on. Canada's effort in formulating and administering refugee policy is an essential reflection of Canada's humanitarian interests. Canadians have shown that they have the capacity to reach out to those who are suffering persecution for reasons of race, religion, or politics, and to give comfort to the homeless and stateless. Not very long ago, in 1979, Canada was setting an example to the world by urging Southeast Asian countries not to turn away boat people.

The number of people on the move in the world is increasing. It is reckoned that at any time 70 million to 80 million people are on the move. According to United Nations standards some are genuine refugees, some are unhappy, desperate people moving because of threat of war, revolution or, very often, sheer poverty in their own countries, and some have the same motivation as have immigrants— the desire to create a better life and future for themselves and their children, but they lack the skills which would make them acceptable as immigrants under the normal legislation.

Clearly Canada cannot accept 70 million or 80 million people. We must have laws which balance the needs of those unhappy people who would like to come into our country with Canada's interests. We must have laws which protect Canada's sovereignty. When the 1976 Immigration Act was discussed in this House and in committee those many different interests were balanced carefully and thoughtfully by Members on all sides of the House.

The legislation which the Government has placed before us now wants to slam the door but does not address the other matters. For instance, as long ago as 1980 there was much discussion in the United Nations about the need to find better ways to settle refugees nearer their own homes, the need to find better methods of international dispute settlement, protection of human rights, and assurance of economic prosperity in other countries. These all form basic parts of any approach to refugees and I have heard no attempt in this discussion from the Minister or Members of the other sides to pull those factors in. We only hear that this is a piece of legislation to slam the doors.

We all know that there are abuses but this Bill does not adequately deal with them. Neither does it ensure that we maintain our traditional commitment to assisting refugees. This Bill makes no attempt to involve citizens. Consider, for example, the magnificent effort at the time of the Vietnam refugees when church groups and citizen groups became involved in assisting in the settlement of people. That was something of which we can be proud. Most of those people have gone on to become very good citizens who are contributing a lot to Canada.

We need to deal with abuses, but we certainly need to remember our traditional commitment to refugees as well. Unfortunately, this Bill does not do that.

I might also mention that part of the reason people are being encouraged by so-called immigration consultants to misuse the refugee application system is that it is so hard to qualify as an immigrant under the existing Act. On August 12, when the Minister introduced in the House his legislation to deal with refugee abuses, he added as a sweetener that he was proposing to ease the rules so that unmarried brothers and sisters could be sponsored. Nothing has happened since then.

On January 29, the Minister issued a press release, essentially saying, "Don't call us, we'll call you". He said, "We are in the process of amending the immigration regulations", but went on to say that it would take several months. Why did the Minister raise false hopes on August 12 if he had no intention of moving for the best part of a year?

The Parliamentary Secretary opposite is an able man whom I respect. I do not think this morning's performance was typical of him, but I do not know how he can justifiably criticize us on this side of the House, complaining that we have had five days of debate about amendments, when his own Minister has had eight months in which to produce a regulation change that he promised and which is still not in force.

The commitment of the Canadian people to assisting genuine refugees still exists. Canada has never lost by it. We have gained many thoughtful contributing citizens. Our commitment to deal with those who would abuse the system must be equally strong because those who abuse the system flood it and block it.

Presently, only 10 per cent of the enormous numbers of people applying for refugee status are qualified. This means that the other 90 per cent are so blocking the system that those 10 per cent who need to get a decision and get on with organizing their lives in Canada are prevented from doing so. They are held up by a cumbersome system, and that needs to be addressed. I have no quarrel with that, but this particular Bill is limited, and the provision about turning back ships is wrong.

I hope the Minister will reconsider that amendment. I also hope the Minister will move on some of the other areas that he will start prosecuting so-called immigration consultants in a more vigorous fashion, that he will deal with abuses using the existing provisions of the Immigration Act and the existing provisions against fraud in the Criminal Code.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to hear the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) say that this country should continue its commitment to true refugees and to their admission. I hope she would agree that that is precisely what this Government has done.

I submit that in the past three years and some months since the Government took office there have been more immigrants and refugees admitted to this country than in any similar three-year period for some time.

She directed our attention particularly to the admission of boat people from southeast Asia in 1979. I remind her that that was the initiative of a Conservative Government. It was an initiative that drew support from all sectors of our society. I was glad to be among those who arranged for admission and sponsorship of one of the boat people. I agree with her that many of them have become worthy citizens of this country, including the young man to whom I referred.

I was not as impressed when the Hon. Member opposed the clause of the proposed Act which authorizes the Minister to turn back ships that are suspected of carrying bogus refugees. Last August, when 174 would-be refugees landed on our shores, her Leader said that the ship should have been turned back. He rebuked the Government for not taking the kind of initiative that would have prevented the ship from landing.

It is not the first time that we have found there is some difference of opinion between the Leader of the Liberal Party and those who purport to follow him. However, I draw to the attention of the House today's gap between leadership and commitment.

I regret very much that there continues to be the reference to this clause that we have had this morning, as on other occasions. Normally the Hon. Member for Trinity is not a fearmonger and has not been so today, but I do regret that there has been no recognition given today, as on other occasions, to the fact that the Minister, having received such authority to turn back a ship, is enabled to do so only after having due regard to the safety of the vehicle and its passengers and to the convention. It is an authority that can be used only with restraint and due recognition to the safety of those concerned.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I have a quick question for the Member. As the Member knows, the Government has accepted a great number of the Senate amendments and has only refused one or two. One deals with security risks. The Member did not speak about that.

The Government's view is that if a person was clearly a security risk the Government could reject a refugee claim. Is it the view of the Liberal Party on behalf of which she speaks that the Government should accept security risks if the person makes a refugee claim?

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who has a wicked sense of humour is trying to get me to say something rather foolish.

My comments were directed to the section where I am very happy to say the Minister accepted an amendment, that would allow the claimant to be present when criminal intelligence information was presented about him, unless he was deemed to be a security or safety risk.

I said that I was pleased that the Minister accepted that amendment because it seemed to me to provide a degree of necessary protection for the genuine refugee, while at the same time providing the state with the degree of protection that allowed it to exclude a person if there were strong grounds for it.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If the Opposition is through filibustering, we on the Government side are prepared not to see the clock to perhaps bring this to a conclusion in the next five or ten minutes. I thought you might seek unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no unanimous consent.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1.00 p.m., the House took recess.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED TWINNING OF ROCKLAND, ONT., WITH SANTA MARTA, EL SALVADOR

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, on January 19, 1988, the Rockland Town Council in my constituency decided to pass a resolution in favour of twinning with the City of Santa Marta, Cabanas, El Salvador. This village was virtually depopulated in 1981 as a result of an attack that affected not only Santa Marta but the entire region. I am informed by SalvAide that 80 people were killed in that massacre and that civilians fled to Honduras in order to live in refugee camps. There, some 250 children died within the first six months as a result of the camp living conditions in question.

Finally, the people of that community decided to repopulate their community of Santa Marta. Despite insurmountable odds and with the support of the international humanitarian community, 1,645 returned to their homes in Santa Marta. When they returned they found their homes in ruins and the community practically non-existent.

The concrete demonstration of Canadian support, particularly of the people of Rockland, has ended the isolation of these people. They now have friends in Canada, thanks to SalvAide and the Town Council of Rockland under the distinguished leadership of Mayor Jean Marc Lalonde.

ENERGY

OIL AND GAS INDUSTRY—NEGOTIATION OF NORTHERN ACCORD

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Energy agreements with the West and in the Atlantic provinces have done much to heal the wounds left by the ill-fated National Energy Program. One region of Canada yet remains to be dealt with. The future of Canada, North of 60, depends greatly on the oil and gas industry and this is recognized by the Government as it seeks to negotiate the Northern Accord.

Revenue sharing and joint management will allow the northern Territories to play their full role in Confederation. The importance of the Northern Accord cannot be overstated.

APARTHEID

CONDITIONS IN GORONGOSA REFUGEE CAMP

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have just returned from two and a half weeks in the front line states of southern Africa, Zimbabwe, Zambia, Mozambique and Botswana. There I was lucky enough to go with ZIMOFA, the Zimbabwe-Mozambique Friendship Association, into the Beira Corridor. I visited a refugee camp called Gorongosa. Eight thousand people were forced into the camp by the camp's MNR South African supported bandits. At one point 10 people a day were dying of starvation, both children and old people, because the food cannot get through.

As I speak now, the Minister for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is in Lusaka with other Commonwealth Ministers, and I urge two practical steps on those Ministers.

First, we have to get food aid through and that means by communications and transport aid, what we call non-lethal military aid. The Minister should commit the Commonwealth to that right away.

Second, we should continue our good work through SADCC. I was able to attend the opening of the first project which was a hydro electric power project constructed by Canadian engineers.

I received a warm reception as a Canadian in southern Africa, but there are great expectations for canada to deliver more stability and peace in the front line states are one of the biggest blows that we and the Commonwealth can strike against the evil apartheid regime of South Africa.

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—PROTECTION OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, cries of the unborn are not being heard in Canada at this time because of last week's Supreme Court decision. I must express my extreme disappointment with the ruling that was handed down when five of our Justices thought it more important that every woman should have equal access to an abortion rather than have an abortion committee examine the validity of such a request.

In British Columbia there are already 25 abortions for every 100 live births. This is an appalling number, and it is sad when live fetuses are killed without any consideration given to their rights.

I call on the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and the Government to work quickly and carefully with the provinces to address how to protect the thousands of unborn humans who will continue to be murdered as a direct result of the Supreme Court decision.

Many Canadians feel that the issue of abortion is not just a legal one. It encompasses the whole idea of family and obligation. It is this that must be dealt with now.

FARM IMPROVEMENT AND MARKETING CO-OPERATIVES LOANS ACT

DELAY IN IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, last June 30 the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) asked the two opposition Parties to pass the Farm Improvement and Marketing Co-operatives Loans Act in haste. The Minister claimed that if we went through normal legislative channels farmers would not be able to get loans under the program, and that without the right to consolidate loans, thousands of farmers would be forced off their farms over the summer.

The legislation was not presented until the last day of the session, even though the Minister had months to prepare it. We rushed it through, user fees and all. Did the farmers get their loans? No way. The regulations had to be done over. Several Departments got involved. There were more delays. It will be proclaimed today, seven months later. There are more delays to come.

• (1405)

The banks say that their new forms cannot be in their branches until sometime next week. So much for the Minister's word. And what of his Ministry's competence? This is inexcusable. No more can we trust the word of this Minister.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

INVITATION TO DONATE GENEROUSLY ON OCCASION OF TENTH ANNUAL CEREBRAL PALSY TELETHON

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the annual cerebral palsy telethon will take place on February 6 and 7.

The 1988 telethon will be the tenth anniversary of this outstanding event, and I should like to tell the House that Normick Perron President Jean Perron of La Sarre will act as provincial honorary president in Quebec.

This is the first time the cerebral paralysis organization has a president from one of the regions, and all Abitibi-Témiscamingue residents are convinced that Mr. Jean Perron will successfully face up to the challenge.

I take this opportunity to thank the thousands of volunteers who, back home as everywhere else in Quebec, selflessly devote themselves to collect funds to fight against this terrible disease, cerebral palsy.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, as it befits the occasion, I urge all my colleagues and the people of Abitibi-Témiscamingue to be very generous with their time and money in support of this noble and humanitarian undertaking.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

SUGGESTED INTRODUCTION OF CROP SHARING ARRANGEMENT

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, the Farm Credit Corporation, banks, and the Saskatchewan Government are now western Canada's largest land holders. The trend is continuing at an alarming rate.

The Farm Credit Corporation is being rated as the poorest group to deal with in the debt review boards.

Over two years ago I asked the House why a system of crop sharing between farmers and the Farm Credit Corporation could not be instituted to help young farmers over the low price grain crisis which now appears to have bottomed out.

Some form of crop share must be instituted to keep young, responsible farmers on and owning the land. The Farm Credit Corporation must lead the way if the country is to keep western Canada as its main grain growing area. At the very least the Farm Credit Corporation should be leaving the home quarter as a base for these young farmers to rebuild on.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

NON-PROVISION OF PARENTAL LEAVE BENEFITS FOR MEN

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon at 3.30 the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) will finally have the chance to set the record straight with respect to parental leave. He will be visited by the man who has really highlighted more than any other person the discrimination in our current maternity benefits system.

This individual from Kitchener was faced with a situation in which his wife died in childbirth. As the remaining parent he sought parental leave to look after his child during the first critical weeks of the child's life. In fact, the child was suffering from meningitis, but because of the discriminatory nature of our current system regarding parental leave he could not receive those benefits.

Four parliamentary committees and one extra-parliamentary committee have recommended changing maternity benefits to include parental leave, to allow the choice to be available to either parent to take leave or not. This particular move would not cost the Government a penny. I ask the Minister at 3.30 to change the discriminatory nature of the law and to allow parental leave to involve both parents. Both parents should be involved in the raising of a child.

FREE TRADE

NEED FOR QUÉBEC LIBERAL MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT TO HEAR QUÉBEC LIBERAL PREMIER'S MESSAGE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, from Montreal last Friday, January 29, the whole Province of Quebec promoted our free trade agreement with the United States.

Quebec Liberal Premier Robert Bourassa solemnly made official the position of Quebec with respect to free trade. Given the importance of public and private financial institutions, and as a result of the success of governmental programs for funding private sector companies, Quebec companies are ready to seek a larger share of the American market.

Mr. Speaker, Quebec Liberal Members of Parliament must heed Liberal leader Bourassa's message, unless they would rather betray Quebec for the second time, as they once did in Victoria.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

COMPLAINT REGARDING PARCEL SERVICE IN KENORA

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are not being fooled by Canada Post's efforts instigated, aided, and abetted by the Conservative Government to convince them that the removal of postal services from post offices across the country and placing them in private businesses is in their best interests.

A growing percentage of our mail is now being handled in places where people do not give their undivided attention to it, as they are committed to running their businesses, and where the mail is placed in areas which are not secure. In many cases the locations of those outlets have changed with little notice, as exasperated operators give up this time consuming customer service.

An angry constituent of mine writes:

> Today I received in the mail a delivery notice from Canada Post to pick up a parcel.
> This parcel is my fur coat, but I don't pick it up at the post office—I must go to . . .

and the constituent names the store in a mall.

The constituent further states:

> What is happening to our postal service? Our money built this post office in Kenora yet we don't use it for incoming parcels, just outgoing. Why?
> I'm not the only person asking. One doesn't pick up groceries at a furniture store.

I could not have said it better myself.

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—CALL FOR CONSTITUTIONAL PROTECTION OF THE UNBORN

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, on January 28, 1988, the Supreme Court of Canada rendered its decision on the Morgentaler case by striking down Section 251 of the Criminal Code as being contrary to Section 7 of the Charter of Rights.

At the federal level this decision leaves Canada without any law on abortion from conception right up until the very moment of birth. At the provincial level there is now health care confusion with our provinces literally going in 10 different directions.

Throughout the country there is widespread ethical debate about the fundamental issue involved. Therefore, I call upon the Government to exercise its prerogative under Section 33 of the Charter through a notwithstanding provision as an interim measure.

Further, given that all seven members of the Supreme Court indicated that Parliament has the legitimate state interest in the protection of the foetus, I call upon the Government to establish in law that the word "everyone" in Section 7 of the Charter includes the foetus or the unborn child within its mother's womb.

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—PLIGHT OF THE INFECTED

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has just returned from a major international conference in London sponsored by the World Health Organization and concerned with the AIDS epidemic which will affect up to one million people over the next 10 years or so. The Minister has indicated that Canada will host a conference in Montreal one year from now.

It is very interesting that the Minister is willing to speak out and host things internationally in this respect, while he has done almost nothing at home. During the Christmas recess I had occasion to consult with leading West Coast authorities, and also received information from San Francisco. It is very evident that nothing is being done to help people who are already infected. They cannot even get through on information lines, much less get any projects considered. New drugs must be tested. Nothing is being done about that.

There is a complete lack of co-ordination between different cities, and the three major cities in Canada have considerable experience now. There is no network in place to exchange information. The National Centre for AIDS is not providing full assistance. The public at large must have mass media education.

IMMIGRATION

CALL FOR PASSAGE OF BILL C-84

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, the Opposition has wasted five days of debate on a few minor amendments to Bill C-84, an Act which is designed to control the abuse of our immigration system by stopping bogus asylum seekers.

Figures just released by the Immigration Department show that 26,944 individuals in 1987 asked for refugee status in Canada. This is an increase of 8,662 over 1986. In addition, only 30 per cent of those who claim to be refugees are confirmed as such. This makes the situation very serious.

With the Calgary Olympics on the horizon, and the economic conference scheduled for Toronto later this year, our immigration officers must be given the tools provided by this legislation to control our borders in order to prevent individuals, whose sole objective is to use these events to spotlight their cause on the world stage, from entering Canada.

I call upon the Opposition and their friends in the Senate to stop the filibustering of Bill C-84 and give the Canadian people the protection they deserve.

TRADE

PLANNED IMPORTATION OF NEW ZEALAND LAMBS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, sheep producers in Canada have been placed in a very uncompetitive situation as a result of lack of initiative by the federal Government. A firm from New Zealand has plans to import lambs, and en route across the Pacific to feed those lambs, and dump them on to the Canadian market.

• (1415)

This is a very unfair situation at a time when we on all sides of the House are attempting to develop the sheep industry, particularly the fledgling sheep industry in western Canada.

In an effort to provide our sheep producers with every support possible, I urge the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to rethink the lack of attention he has given to this particular issue and take steps to disallow the importation of New Zealand lambs in this fashion.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

MINISTER'S ELECTION EXPENSES—RCMP AFFIDAVIT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. In a sworn affidavit filed by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police it is alleged that the Minister of Energy personally arranged for unreported payment of certain campaign expenditures during the last federal election.

Has the Prime Minister asked the Minister of Energy whether the statements contained in this sworn affidavit of the RCMP are true?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can only assume that this was part of the evidence that was gathered during the course of the investigation. Mr. Gorman, having had the opportunity to study and examine this information, together with legal officials both from within his own Department and outside, came to a conclusion.

What we are suggesting is that Mr. Gorman, the Commissioner, made his judgment and used his discretion as he was so authorized under the Act, and obviously the Leader of the Opposition does not agree with his decision.

This issue has been raised on the floor of the House for a number of days. The Government has indicated its willingness to send this matter off to a committee so that Mr. Gorman can be called before the committee to explain the decision he had reached and to elucidate on all the points that have been raised, rather than picking out bits and pieces of information here, there, and everywhere, and trying to make a new story out of it.

I have just spoken to the chairman of the committee, and he indicated that tomorrow there will be a meeting at 3.30 p.m. I would suggest that Hon. Members use that opportunity to pursue this in its fullest.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, we will of course be interested in pursuing the reasons why Mr. Gorman wrote his curious letter, but whatever the committee ascertains and whatever judgment the committee may come to, it in no way discharges the Prime Minister's responsibility of responding to some known facts and personally ascertaining from his Minister whether those allegations or facts are true.

PRIME MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has always insisted here in the House that he is alone responsible for his ministers' conduct.

Here are my questions to the Deputy Prime Minister: Why is the Prime Minister trying to pass off his responsibility? Why did he fail to ask his Minister of Energy why he had kept silent about the letter for two years? Why did the Prime Minister fail to ask why his Minister of Energy and the legal advisor of the Conservative Party in Quebec contradicted each other in public? Why did the Prime Minister fail to inquire whether the statement made under oath by a RCMP officer was true?

These are public statements and the Prime Minister is responsible for ascertaining whether his Minister . . .

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have always known the Leader of the Opposition to be a fair and honourable individual who really—

Some Hon. Members: Right on!

Mr. Mazankowski: —and I find it quite unbecoming of him to cast aspersions upon the Commissioner and to charge an individual when he has not been found guilty under the provisions of the Canada Elections Act. He can draw whatever conclusions he so desires, but I would ask him, in the interests of fairness, in the interests of equity, and in the interests of dealing with a distinguished parliamentarian, whether he would want, as a minimum, to get all the facts out and to get Mr. Gorman's version of why he took the decision he did. I think therein we have the crux of the matter.

• (1420)

Mr. Gorman chose, after due care and deliberation, as he is so authorized to do under the Act, not to proceed with a criminal prosecution. All Hon. Members can ask questions. The members of that committee can ask whatever questions they wish of Mr. Gorman and I am sure he will provide enlightened answers. I would invite the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to wait for that.

PARKER COMMISSION REPORT—ETHICAL STANDARDS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Gorman may or may not feel free to tell the committee why he wrote the letter as to whether or not the Hon. Minister ought to have been charged. However, the Deputy Prime Minister is pursuing the same tactic the Prime Minister has attempted, namely, that unless a criminal charge has been laid or unless there has been a criminal conviction, nothing is wrong.

To cite the Chief Justice of Ontario—

Mr. Speaker: I think the Right Hon. Leader should put his question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether he agrees with the citation that I will read him from the Parker Commission which looked into the allegations against against former Minister of the Government. Does the Deputy Prime Minister agree with this statement which is found on page 27 where Mr. Justice Parker cites with approval commission counsel:

> "It is not enough—to show that you are not a crook . . . . More, surely, is expected of public office holders . . . .

Do the Deputy Prime Minister and the Prime Minister agree with the ethical standards the Chief Justice feels ought to be expected of cabinet Ministers, or does the Deputy Prime Minister disagree with those ethical standards?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition wants to cite selective quotations, perhaps he might be interested in what the law really has to say. It says that "no prosecution for an offence under this Act or for an offence under Section 115 of the Criminal Code in relation to anything that this Act forbids or requires to be done shall be instituted except with the prior consent in writing of the Commissioner".

The Commissioner has the discretion. He has the judgmental powers. After the gathering of evidence, the examining of evidence and the studying of evidence, he made the decision. If Hon. Members want to question that decision, they can do so till the cows come home. However, the fact still remains that under the provisions of the Canada Elections Act, his mandate was carried out. If Hon. Members decide that the mandate is ill-defined or needs to be changed, that is a perfectly legitimate question, but for God's sake let us have the evidence before drawing those horrendous conclusions.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER DISCUSS MATTER WITH MINISTER

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister repeats constantly that we have questions to ask of Mr. Gorman, and he is right, but there are also questions that we have to put to the Prime Minister when he decides to face the House of Commons again.

The Minister's election expenses drama unfolds in a very strange and gradual way. We learn of new facts every second day—

Mr. Speaker: I really think that the Hon. Member should put his question or else set a preamble upon which he wants to base it.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I am coming to my question, Mr. Speaker. As details come out piece by piece, the Minister looks worse and worse. I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he does not think that it is high time that the Prime Minister summoned his Minister to his office and had a frank discussion with him to try to determine what else the Minister has hidden from the Prime Minister and the people of Canada for more than two years now.

Mr. Speaker: I have said before that preambles ought not to include a charge, and I have also said that the Opposition has not only a right but a duty to inquire in difficult matters. However, it is very important that preambles are carefully disciplined so that they are appropriate. It is not appropriate to go beyond the particular point about which the Hon. Member wishes to ask, and imply that there are other things of which apparently as yet there has been no information before the House.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member came very close to imputing motives. I think one would want to look at the extract tomorrow morning.

• (1425)

What the Hon. Member is really doing is, on the basis of one signed affidavit, finding the Minister guilty of an offence. There is obviously more information than that upon which the Commissioner based his decision, using his discretion and judgment as he is authorized to do under the Act. I find it rather strange that the Hon. Member would choose to be that selective.

[Translation]

MASSE AFFAIR—QUERY WHEN PRIME MINISTER WILL MEET MINISTER

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians and Members of the House find it strange that the Prime Minister cannot make up his mind to meet his Minister to shed light on the allegations contained in the letter, affidavits and other documents. I suggest this is the Prime Minister's responsibility. He should not be satisfied with getting information drop by drop every day like this. The time has come to turn on the tap fully.

Mr. Speaker: I certainly regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his preamble is clearly argumentative. It is debatable. I must therefore seek the co-operation of all Hon. Members and ask them to direct their questions in the proper fashion.

Will you please ask your question!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question this instant. I should like to know when the Prime Minister will finally decide to meet his minister to discuss with him all the elements of this matter, in order to better assess whether his decision to maintain him as a Cabinet minister is justified. That is what we want to know. When?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think what many Canadians find very strange is that the Opposition continues to engage in character destruction rather than dealing with some of the very important issues facing our country.

The fact of the matter is that a mechanism has been set up to examine in detail all the pertinent points surrounding this issue. The Opposition were calling for a parliamentary investigation. We indicated we support that and will co-operate with the committee. I would hope the Hon. Member might be patient and go tomorrow to the committee, of which I understand he is a member, and perhaps he can outline what he would consider to be an appropriate way in which to fashion the hearing process. He might find the evidence that will be adduced during the course of the hearing to be very interesting.

[Translation]

QUERY WETHER DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER OR PRIME MINISTER DISCUSSED CERTAIN ALLEGATIONS WITH MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Deputy Prime Minister refers to the Prime Minister's responsibilities.

According to an article which appeared this morning in the Globe and Mail, there is an affidavit signed by an RCMP corporal which indicates that, two years ago, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources personally had asked Lavalin to pay some of the costs of his campaign, costs which were not included in his campaign expense statement. That is quite serious.

My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is quite simply this. Has the Deputy Prime Minister himself discussed this allegation with the Minister today, yes or no? Or has the Prime Minister discussed this allegation with the Minister, yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the NDP takes some satisfaction in quoting The Globe and Mail. I think we all read the article this morning. As I indicated to the Leader of the Opposition, this is part of the evidence obviously gathered during the course of the investigation and part of the evidence that was used by Mr. Gorman in reaching his decision.

I repeat, Mr. Gorman made the decision. He examined the information that was assembled and reached a decision. I can only assume there are other important and pertinent pieces of information that were taken into consideration as well.

I think the Hon. Leader of the NDP is being somewhat selective here by virtue of the fact that he has one piece of evidence with which he wants to find the Minister guilty of an offence. Mr. Gorman has a different version of the facts.

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I remind the Deputy Prime Minister that the Member for York—Peel is not a member of the Cabinet today, not because he violated the Criminal Code but because he violated the moral code of the Cabinet. That's the truth.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask Hon. Members to leave other people out of the exchange unless it is absolutely imperative to the question.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has told the House that he did not learn of the letter sent to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources some two years ago until about ten days ago. Presumbly he learned only this morning, as we all have, of the existence of an affidavit with very serious accusations.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister not think it is appropriate for the Prime Minister of Canada to get the Minister's opinion as to whether these serious allegations are true, rather than hiding behind the Criminal Code of Canada? Should the Prime Minister of Canada not be doing that?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we are going from the ridiculous to the sublime.

Mr. Broadbent: That's true, perfectly true.

Mr. Mazankowski: There is quite a difference because in this case a clear mechanism under the Elections Act was followed. The Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources did the proper thing. When there were suggestions that there was a contravention of the Act, he resigned from his portfolio until the process was completed. The mechanism in place dealt with this issue. The Commissioner rendered a decision. The Commissioner found that there were not sufficient grounds to prosecute and as a result the Member was cleared.

The Opposition are questioning the judgment and discretion which the Commissioner used. I suppose they are in their right to do so. However, I would ask them to direct these questions to Mr. Gorman when he will, in all likelihood, appear before the committee. I think that is the issue.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I say with seriousness that the Deputy Prime Minister is either trying to pull the wool over our eyes or in some other ways attempting to insult the intelligence of the House by his totally unacceptable and absurd answer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, who has responsibility for the ethics code of his fellow colleagues, whether he is prepared to make a distinction between the Criminal Code in Canada in its application to Ministers on the one hand, and higher moral standards which are laid out in a code of behaviour on the other?

If he stands by the higher code of behaviour and does not restrict it to criminal offences, why has the Minister not got on his feet today to make a statement in the House? Why has the Prime Minister of Canada not demanded that the Minister make a statement on the subject?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party does not like the answers he is getting. I regret also that he did not get his way when he wrote to the Minister earlier today asking him to make a statement. There will not be a statement made because we have established another process. That process is an inquiry or review under the provisions of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure which Hon. Members opposite asked for. Now they want something else.

Mr. Broadbent: We want both.

Mr. Mazankowski: Why do they not make up their minds for a change?

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—EXPORTS OF STEEL

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. The ink is hardly dry on the continental trade agreement which the Prime Minister signed with the President in early January and we already see how U.S. industry is using it as a way of trying to get further concessions from Canadian industries such as steel and textiles. Just this weekend the U.S. steel caucus in Congress was saying that Canadian steel exporters must limit their exports or there will not be Congressional approval.

I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, as spokesperson for the Government of Canada, what the Government intends to do to counter these clear acts of intimidation based upon the proposed continental trade agreement?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I find that interesting. I hope the Hon. Member is now supporting the free trade agreement. From his comments today I gather that he has changed his mind and is now supporting the free trade agreement. We will welcome that support very much.

At this time as part of our regular series of meetings with the Americans, the quarterly bilateral meeting set up under the presidential steel caucus, is ongoing. We are finding that steel exports to the United States from Canada are at a level which is basically agreeable to Americans and Canadians. The export monitoring program which we set up is going very well and we have no concerns in that regard whatsoever.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary has just described something which is not free trade but controlled, managed trade which is obviously not acceptable to the Americans. It is not good enough for representatives of the Government simply to hide their heads in a steel furnace and get themselves singed as a result.

PROVINCIAL COMPLIANCE WITH AGREEMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a further question to the Parliamentary Secretary. The chief U.S. trade ambassador, Mr. Yeutter, said this weekend that the United States will absolutely insist on full and total provincial compliance with the agreement by January 1 of next year or it will not be ratified.

Considering that three provincial Governments have indicated clearly that they do not intend to pass any legislation or to ratify the agreement, under what circumstances, under what rights, is the Government going to try to force the provinces to go along with its ill-begotten, misguided continental trade agreement, which the provinces at least know will sell out the country?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend should check with the Premier of the Province of Quebec who, the last time I checked, was a Liberal, and see what he thinks about the free trade agreement.

Mr. Axworwthy: He's as big a sellout as you are.

Mr. McDermid: I might also say that on the weekend Clayton Yeutter said that Canada got the best of the deal on the free trade agreement and that we will do very well by the free trade agreement.

As the Hon. Member knows, only a very small part of the free trade agreement requires provincial implementation as far as legislation is concerned and that is primarily in the area of the pricing of spirits. As the Hon. Member knows, there has been a GATT panel on that. We have negotiated a free trade agreement on that end of things. I think he will find that, although the Premiers have said they are opposed to it, in no way can they or will they scuttle the deal.

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—POSITION IN PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. The Minister said on Friday that his Government wants to work with the provinces to determine the issues which have to be faced on the question of abortion in order that there will be a thorough understanding and a consistent approach across Canada, and we agree with him.

However, since a preliminary clarification is urgently needed now, has the Minister arranged a meeting with his provincial colleagues for this week? Will he issue a public statement to clarify the public confusion which is rampant across Canada about access to abortion?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question from the Hon. Member. I indicated last week that it was my intention to deal with this matter as expeditiously as possible and to be in touch with the provincial Governments on this very important and sensitive issue.

Accordingly, on Friday I wrote to my provincial counterparts, the provincial Attorneys General, in order to obtain from them their views in a preliminary and more substantive fashion. I have asked them to consult with their Governments on the provincial level with respect to this matter on the broadest basis, and also to let me have the benefit of their initial points of view.

I am hoping that I will hear from all provincial Governments at a very early stage so that we can in fact address this matter and try to determine the course of action in the weeks ahead.

PROVISION OF ABORTION SERVICES BY PHYSICIANS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, surely the Minister now has an interpretation from his own legal experts regarding the immediate implications of the Supreme Court decision, the kinds of things which medical associations, women, and doctors need to know right away.

• (1440)

Will the Minister state publicly today that it is now legal for physicians to provide abortion services directly to patients? Will he at least say yes or no to that question?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the implication of the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada is quite clear. It has rendered the present provisions of the Criminal Code with respect to abortion under Section 251 unconstitutional.

The Hon. Member knows that this is a federation. There is a provincial responsibility with respect to the delivery of health services. There are other elements, including the criminal law, involved in this whole process.

If she has examined and received legal advice from the legal advisers of the New Democratic Party, she will know that there is clearly a very important provincial role and function in this whole question. I simply say that we are trying to take a leadership role on a national basis with respect to this issue, as I indicated on Friday.

The Hon. Member may not agree, and it may be the position of the New Democratic Party that they would intrude and attempt to direct in some way the responsibility of all the provinces in matters of health and delivery of health services. I am not sure that is the position of the Leader of the New Democratic Party in the issue. He nods that it is not.

It is a sensitive issue on which we are working very carefully. We will continue to work in the best interests of the Canadian public.

RIGHTS OF THE FETUS

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I applaud the Minister of Justice on his reply. However, I would also ask him if he would bear in mind the rights of the fetus when bringing up this question with his counterparts in each of the provinces.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, again I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. He has had a very substantial interest in this issue.

The decision of the court itself will make it clear that the judges, in the majority and in the dissenting judgments, have indicated that the rights of the fetus are an important consideration with the respect to the criminal law capacity of the federal Government.

There are different approaches taken with respect to this issue. There was no clear definition with respect to the full implications of the rights of the fetus. As I indicated on Friday, there is another case before the Supreme Court of Canada where that matter is more specifically addressed. The court may have an opportunity to address itself with respect to defining the rights of the fetus in Canada under the criminal law provisions.

RESPECT OF PROVINCES FOR COURT DECISION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Given the various and in fact differing responses of various provincial Governments with respect to the application of the Supreme Court judgment in terms of service delivery, given the important leadership role that should be played in this issue by the Government and the Minister, what action has he taken to ensure that the Supreme Court judgment is respected by the provinces, from British Columbia to Newfoundland?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member recognizes, as we all do, the sensitivity of this issue. I have no doubt, as the Justice Minister has indicated, that the federal Government has a responsibility to give leadership.

I am not in a position to put forward options at this time. I think it is responsible for the federal Government to look at the various implications. I have given instructions today to have a letter on the issue go forward to my provincial counterparts to ascertain their views as quickly as possible, which is similar to what the Hon. Member suggested.

Ms. Copps: I would be most happy if the Hon. Minister would table with the House a copy of that letter.

MEDICAL CARE SYSTEM—RESPECT FOR PRINCIPLE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in his letter has the Minister asked for guarantees that the principles of medicare will be respected so that services will be available across the country regardless of the various viewpoints of provincial jurisdictions? Will he guarantee accessibility and that the Supreme Court decision is respected across the country? Will he table the letter?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I hope I was clear in my first answer that I have given instructions today to prepare letters to be ready for distribution later today. I am not in a position to table the letter at this moment but would be pleased to do that later, at a convenient time.

As I stated in my first answer, the letter is straightforward. It asks the various provincial Ministers for their early views on the issue. That is as far as the letter goes.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GREAT LAKES—POLLUTION CLEAN-UP

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for the Environment and the Prime Minister, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the priority Cabinet is giving or not giving to the issue of the clean-up of toxic wastes from the Great Lakes.

We have new information that the Americans are basically getting close to us in agreeing to the problem.

We have an accord on clean-up, but Cabinet is not giving it high enough priority in order to promote it so that we will actually achieve that clean-up.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister assure the House that there will be some real action in this area, including containment, removal and destruction of those toxic wastes that affect the drinking water of millions of Canadians?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I can indicate on behalf of the Minister of the Environment that the Minister is well aware of the representations made by the Canadian Environmental Law Research Foundation on this question. He is continuing to work with his counterparts on the Great Lakes, as he has for some time under the Canada-U.S. Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. Amendments which he has made with counterparts in this group include new provisions for more comprehensive toxic controls, including contaminated sediments, atmospheric toxics, land run-off sources and ground water.

The Minister is placing increased emphasis on waste reduction by control at the source, and lake-wide management plans by which a schedule of load reductions for the Great Lakes is to be developed and implemented.

I might add that the Minister, with the support of all Members in the House, is developing a Canadian Environmental Act. It is presently before a legislative committee, and will provide additional measures of protection for the Great Lakes and other important areas of Canada.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, that is gobbledegook and does not go very far when the prime consideration is waste sites like Hyde Park, and when there are millions of people who have to drink the water. We have an accord in place but it has not been acted upon.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): My question was directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the priority Cabinet is giving this absolutely urgent environmental question. While it is fine to dot the "i's" and cross the "t's", unless there is the removal and containment to stop the ongoing leaching into the Niagara River and Great Lakes System and on into people's drinking water, all these other questions do not matter.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member has put her question.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I think all Members of the House and Canadians know that the Minister of the Environment of Canada for this Government has done an unprecedented job in raising international awareness of Canada's concern on such matters as toxins and contamination of the Great Lakes, and contamination of our atmosphere through his important leadership in the conclusion of the ozone treaty.

This Government has no apologies to make for the leadership the Minister is giving in Cabinet.

LABOUR RELATIONS

FEDERAL MINIMUM WAGE

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Approximately four months ago I asked when the federal minimum wage which had not been adjusted since May, 1986, might be increased. I was informed that a review was in progress.

A reasonable time having passed, I return to the subject and ask when the lowest paid workers under the federal jurisdiction might expect some justice?

• (1450)

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated at that to my hon. colleague, I will take his comments into consideration when we effect the next review which will be shortly. The review is presently under way. Obviously my hon. colleague's concerns will be taken into consideration.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

DENIAL OF PARENTAL BENEFITS TO FATHER—REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF LEGISLATION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. We were all touched with the case of Mr. John McInnis whose wife died shortly after the delivering a baby girl.

Mr. McInnis applied for unemployment insurance benefits under Section 30, pregnancy benefits, of the Unemployment Insurance Act. He was denied benefits.

In light of the fact that there is need to build some flexibility into Section 30 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, can the Minister stand and tell this House whether he is prepared to consider amending the Act? I can assure him that we on this side of the House will give that amendment speedy passage. Will the Minister stand in his place and promise such an amendment giving flexibility to Section 30?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will not make that promise today to my friend. With the co-operation of the Hon. Member for Kitchener I will meet Mr. McInnis this afternoon.

I am also touched by the case, but I think my friend understands that when we have to make an exception—and it could be the case at the present time—we have to consider what it represents for all Canadians who could be in the same or a similar situation.

I am aware that we could amend this legislation but I think we have to take the time to look at the case carefully to be sure we do not make mistakes for other Canadians.

INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION—TIME QUERY

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister.

In light of the fact that while the McInnis case has come to our attention there have been several other cases across the country, and since the Minister says he will consider and consult with his officials—we are very concerned about ensuring that Mr. McInnis qualifies and he doesn't go beyond the initial benefit period of the claim—can the Minister tell us how soon will he report to the House that he is ready to bring in a Bill to amend Section 30?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I requested from the Department some information about the case and about the different possibilities that we have.

I repeat what I said before. Other cases which could be referred to me could represent different approaches in terms of problems. I want to be sure if there is any answer given to Mr. McInnis that the decision we will make could be applicable to other cases.

I will not change the legislation 10 or 20 times because cases could be different. I think the Hon. Member will agree and that as soon as the information is available and we can move in some direction, we will make a decision.

POSITION OF BACK-BENCHERS CLUB
