This is absolutely true, and if you follow my argument you will understand. If a family earning $30,000 a year increases its income by $1,000, let us say they get such a raise in salary, the federal Government, thanks to the Hon. Minister of Finance, will get $310 of that amount in direct taxes, that is a 26 per cent tax rate plus a lowering of the child tax credit equivalent to 5 per cent. That puts the marginal tax rate at 31 per cent. However, if the family makes $100,000 a year, the marginal tax rate is 29 per cent, this means that the middle income family, with an income of $30,000, is taxed more, after the tax reform of the Minister, than a family with an income of $100,000 a year or more.

In other words, the taxation rate applying to each salary increase is higher for middle-income than for high-income families. Is this the fairness the Minister of Finance is talking about? Of course, Tory times are hard times. The Liberal Party opposed the three-rate income tax system proposed by the Minister of Finance because it is not progressive enough. As we said in our minority report on tax reform, this rate structure must be reviewed in order to reduce the taxation rate for middle-income families.

This is another area where the Government should have taken action. And once more, it is another area where the Government failed to act.

Mr. Speaker, having described the financial and tax situation of families and the poor, I now come to the very serious problem that Canada will have to face, that of the falling birth rate and the ageing of our population.

Mr. Speaker, this is one of the important problems now facing Canadian society. It is indeed urgent to find concrete and realistic solutions to what, in my opinion, is a real demographic crisis. Even though there are no miracle solutions, I am convinced that governmental authorities can act in a way that is not as limited as many think, but solutions must be implemented now. However, in this case as in all others, the Conservative Government is stubbornly refusing to act.

In an article published recently in the January-February issue of the magazine Options politiques, I expanded on this theme and I would like to take a few minutes to summarize what I said in the article. The first set of 1986 census data became available quite recently, and it shows that the growth rate of our population continues to drop. Between 1981 and 1986, the population of Canada increased by only one million, which represents an annual growth rate of only 0.8 per cent, the lowest rate reported in federal census data in the past 25 years. This decline is due to stagnating immigration levels and a drop in the birth rate. A decline in the birth rate automatically implies that we have an ageing population. In fact, if the number of births declines during a given period and immigration levels remain relatively stable or low, the proportion of elderly people in the population will necessarily increase. In Canada, in addition to a low birth rate and low immigration levels, recent advances in modern medicine have helped to increase life expectancy and as a result promote ageing of the population. When there is a higher percentage of elderly people, this tends to increase the tax burden on those individuals who are still in the labour force, if society wants to maintain the level and quality of services provided. This raises the issue of financing pensions and other social services for tomorrow's senior citizens, that is, for those individuals who today are between 40 and 45 years old. In addition, Canada's future economic growth depends partly on the structure of its population. A younger population will tend to generate an economy that is more dynamic, more risk-oriented and more adaptable to changing conditions. A stronger economy is better able to generate sufficient revenue to pay for the pensions and other services offered to tomorrow's senior citizens.

What can we suggest as a remedy to this disturbing development in our demographic make-up? When we analyze the situation, there are only two options: Increase the birth rate or increase immigration levels.

As far as immigration levels are concerned, and I am sure the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) and several other colleagues in this House would have more to say about this, two kinds of actions are necessary. First, we must let more immigrants and more qualified immigrants into this country, and second, we must start a public awareness campaign to make Canadians more aware of the benefits of immigration and more willing to accept new immigrants.

The other aspect of a policy that must be developed is the promotion of a better social and economic environment in which Canadian families can raise their children. We in the Opposition have proposed a childcare program to make maternity possible and easier for women who want children but cannot afford them. Within the limits of fiscal responsibility, that program would aim at increasing financial benefits to those men and women who have dependent children. Employers would establish on the work place childcare facilities for their employees. Finally, the whole array of family benefits should be reviewed, as we suggested earlier. The Tory approach to childcare is simply inadequate, because it is based on the maintenance of tax deductions. But the Government knows full well that deductions are unfair because the benefit is greater for the rich than for middle and low-income earners. What we need is a refundable tax credit, as we have proposed. Under the Tory tax deduction, only families in a position to substantiate their childcare expenditures with receipts can benefit, although the Government knows how difficult it is for couples who hire a babysitter for a few hours to get receipts from that girl, unless they are forged altogether. Also, because the deduction is not refundable, this means that a family with insufficient income to use the deduction gets absolutely no benefit. Again, the result of the Conservative approach is that only rich families can benefit. This is why we in the Liberal Party are proposing to change that deduction to a refundable income tax credit. This would be a first step in the implementation of a genuine childcare policy.

Whether they relate to immigration or child birth, my proposals are not revolutionary—they are practical proposals reflecting the ideas of the economist Alfred Sauvy, who summarized them in the dilemna "To grow or to age", and that also fight the myth viewing immigration as causing unemployment.

If I have taken so much time, Mr. Speaker, to paint this demographic picture of Canada, it is because I wish to underline the difference between what Canada will be if we do not take action and what Canada can be if we realize the consequences of its present demographic evolution and try to correct them. This is the only way to approach the problem of our aging population. Within ten years, people aged 55 and over will account for 23 per cent of our population. The pressures on health care, the lenghtening of waiting lists in homes, reception centres and home-care centres, the increasing poverty of people living alone, especially women, the decreasing reserves in public pension funds, the increase in mandatory early retirement, the shrinking of the tax base, a different view of the nature of recreational activities, all these things will radically change our approach to senior citizens.

It is useless to try to ignore the fact that a larger population of older Canadians will cost more in many ways. These costs can be shared. That is the problem. We have to act now because the higher costs will have to be shared by an increasingly limited and shrinking number of Canadian workers.

This is a major problem, Mr. Speaker, this is a problem which the Government does not mention, this is a problem we shall soon be facing. It will take time to correct it. It will take years, and we have to act now!

[English]

I would like to turn to yet another issue that the Minister of Finance barely touched upon in his Budget yesterday—the environment. Every Member of Parliament knows that solving the problems threatening our environment is a major priority for a majority of Canadians. The outcry following the recent failure of the Government to secure a successful treaty on acid rain with the United States is a sign of the importance of this issue in the minds of Canadians.

The one environmental measure that the Minister of Finance did introduce in his Budget yesterday was the restriction of the use of capital cost allowance write-offs for people investing in certain types of energy conservation equipment. He acted but it was in a negative way.

What could the Minister have done? He could have introduced accelerated tax write-offs on pollution abatement equipment to create jobs in a growing industry and help to clean up our rivers and our air. He could have introduced measures to assist municipalities in repairing and modernizing their sewage systems in order to reverse the trend of water quality deterioration.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, anyone who has walked about in a sugar bush recently knows that acid rain is an urgent problem. Some experts estimate that, within ten years, the maple syrup industry will have disappeared in Canada. Why not suggest an in-depth study of the organization and financing of the Canadian Forestry Service to increase the funds and human resources of the Service and quicken the pace of research on the problem of the wasting away of our sugar bushes? In the meantime, why not consider creating an emergency fund for the maple syrup industry to find and apply a method to re-establish the nutritional balance of the trees?

Mr. Speaker, as in the case of the other areas to which I have referred today, I am not suggesting anything revolutionary here. I am not suggesting anything impractical. Where are the ideas of the Mulroney Government?

[English]

I would like to turn now to the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement. First, I would like to recall the position of the Liberal Party. We are not philosophically opposed to reducing trade barriers. We are for freer trade on a world-wide basis. However, we do have very serious misgivings about this particular agreement.

As the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) recalled recently, we are against the Mulroney-Reagan agreement because it does not fulfil our minimum conditions and because it does not guarantee our access to the American market. It is clear that Canada achieved its present position in the international community by following non-discriminatory multilateral trading and negotiating principles which had the result, among other things, of reducing very substantially the levels of tariffs between Canada and the United States, and it helped to open the American market. It is by these principles that we should continue to be guided.

Turning to the agreement, in terms of its negotiating strategy, the Government has made a number of naive assumptions. It believed that obtaining an agreement with the United States would somehow magically exempt Canada from American protectionist sentiment. The reality is that Canada, under the Mulroney-Reagan agreement, is not exempted from the U.S. protectionist measures.

It also believed that we could get a quick fix instead of dealing multilaterally with GATT, that we would be able to negotiate an effective bilateral deal with the strongest economic power in the world and come out the winner. Did the government get what it wanted? Not at all. We do not have secure access to the U.S. market and the dispute settlement mechanism is nothing more than a review panel. It is still to be determined whether it is constitutional under American law. It applies American law and American practice to our exports. It does not change the law to which Canada is subjected in the American market. The countervailing duty on softwood lumber is still in place.

A recent report prepared for the Government of Ontario concluded that the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement failed to meet four basic criteria for effective dispute settlement. First, it does not impose legally effective limits on national laws and policy that deny market access. It is not binding. It is no more workable than what already exists. It denies participation by either the provinces or the private sector.

I would also like to touch on the question raised recently by the Governments of Quebec and Ontario. I refer to the respecting of provincial jurisdictions vis-à-vis this agreement. In a speech made in December, the Attorney-General of Ontario, Ian Scott, stated that the Mulroney-Reagan agreement is a serious intrusion on provincial powers. This is how he put it:

> Whether or not the agreement amounts to a constitutional amendment in any formal sense, it represents, in my view, de facto constitutional change".

He went on to say:

> The trade agreement purports to effect major changes in provincial power, regardless of whether the provinces consent. Ignoring the principles of federalism upon which this country was built, the federal Government has attempted to bargain away provincial powers.

[Translation]

Quebec as well is concerned about respect for its own jurisdictions. External Trade Minister Pierre Macdonald let it be known in November 1987 that some of the articles of the Mulroney-Reagan agreement failed to dispel uncertainties related to provincial powers.

As a matter of fact, agreement section 103 stipulates that Ottawa will see to it that all necessary measures are taken to implement the provisions of the agreement and ensure compliance on the part of governments of states, provinces and local administrations.

Mr. Macdonald argues that the problem will have to be scrutinized. For instance, American firms might buy hospitals in Quebec if the government were to privatize them, and nothing could be done to prevent that. The Americans would be entitled to the national treatment and might claim the same privileges as those of a Canadian firm. American companies might come and buy any Quebec financial institution, yet pursuant to the Mulroney-Reagan agreement the Quebec Government would not wield sufficient legislative power to intervene.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to relate an incident I witnessed in my professional and political career. I recall that in the mid-70s, when I was a Minister in Quebec, the insurance company La Prévoyance, owned by another company controlled by a well-known Quebecer who was close to retirement, was up for sale. The best offer came from an American. A number of Quebecers raised strong objections: La Prévoyance, then Quebec's biggest insurance company, was going to be sold to the Americans. We had the legislative power and we threatened to use it to stop this transaction. Following this decision by the Quebec Government, La Laurentienne purchased La Prévoyance, which marked the beginning of La Laurentienne's fantastic development.

If I mention this example, it is to emphasize that under the Mulroney-Reagan Agreement, if it is signed and enforced, the Government of Quebec and that of any other province will be unable through legislation to stop a firm which is a jewel in the economy of a province from being taken over by the Americans. And that is why I am saying that, in many respect, this agreement, as it is drafted, infringes upon the right not only of the provinces, but also of this House to adopt and implement legislative measures which reflect the political expectations of the public as expressed during an election.

Greater respect for provincial jurisdictions and trade promotion within our country will ensure Canada's future properity. It is in this direction that the Liberal approach is developing. We must first of all remove the barriers standing in the way of inter-provincial trade before considering an agreement of the kind this Tory Government is proposing.

[English]

Finally, how can the Government preach the virtues of its agreement with the United States when we do not have free trade between the provinces? Canada must have free trade between the provinces before real gains from international trade can be realized. The First Ministers Conference can and must be used to create a means of negotiating the reduction of the current barriers to interprovincial trade. This would encourage production efficiencies and assist the development of production facilities capable of supplying global markets.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity today to deal briefly with a problem which the Minister of Finance only mentioned in passing in his speech yesterday. I refer to the debt load of under-developed countries.

[English]

This is not simply a financial or economic problem, as many would like to believe, but also a political, social, and humanitarian problem.

In August, 1982 when Mexico declared a temporary moratorium on the repayment of its external debt, all western countries and commercial banks thought that it was only a passing problem. That seemed a reasonable assumption at that time and in that economic context. But the most recent report of the World Bank, which was tabled a few weeks ago, reminded us of a very sad fact. The problem of Third World debt, far from being resolved, is more serious today than ever before, and there are no signs of improvement around the corner.

The sum of Third World debt now exceeds one thousand billion dollars. I don't know, Mr. Speaker, if you can imagine what one thousand billion dollars means. I made a calculation, and it would take forty million dollars from each Canadian to pay that debt. If we put it in the American context, each American man, woman, and child, would need to put four million dollars each in a pot to pay this huge debt. It is not a small problem. It is a big and very important problem.

For many developing countries, the servicing of this debt is greater than their present export revenues. Moreover, the price of raw materials, the principal source of foreign revenue for many developing countries, still remains low, as many Canadian grain producers will tell us.

How do we work to resolve this serious problem without endangering the stability of our international financial system, and without hurting the often very poor populations of those debtor countries together with their fragile democracies?

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that Canada should be involved more actively in an effort to solve this problem. So far, who has ever heard the Canadian Government or the Prime Minister deal extensively with this very important issue of endebtedness throughout the world? Canada has, of course, wiped off the endebtedness of some African countries among the poorest in the world. That was praiseworthy tokenism.

The Minister of Finance has also compelled Canadian Banks to increase their reserves in case of payment default by these under-developed countries as a result of borrowing from Canadian banking institutions. Everybody knows, however, that although these reserves for the time being would protect Canadian Banks from a possible shock, nothing has been done to alleviate the debt load of these countries. Furthermore, our banks are not immune to the impact the failure of large foreign banks might have. Canada, like other developed countries, is sitting on a powder keg that may explode at any minute.

Mr. Speaker, I think that at the economic summit of seven industrialized countries it will be hosting next June in Toronto, Canada should propose a fresh approach or strategy. Such a strategy might be based, for instance, on the recommendations of the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs whose report was tabled only a few months ago. There are four points the Government should consider in preparing its strategy. First of all, it may be timely for Canada to suggest an international conference on the debt problem. I know many banks would object to this approach, but as I said earlier, the problem is both political and financial, and I feel that people who want to sweep the political problem under the rug to save the banks a few million dollars are viewing the problem through the wrong end of the telescope. Furthermore, the Conservative Government could make a firm commitment to increase development aid to 0.7 per cent of GNP by 1995, as the Leader of the Liberal Party promised last week in Vancouver. We all know that Canada spends only 0.48 per cent of its GNP on development aid.

Third suggestion: Canada could pressure other countries, especially the United States, to increase the capital of the World Bank so that the Bank and its branches could take over from the commercial banks the task of granting new loans to developing contries whose sources of financing have disappeared. Mr. Speaker, the problem is a very serious one. Because of the financial difficulties faced by developing countries, there is a real risk that these contries may not be able to pay the charges on their debt. Financing of future expansion of these countries has come to a complete standstill, with all the human problems that this implies and the political problems that this will cause.

That is why we must act now, and international agencies are in the best position to provide a solution. I believe that leaving this to the banks would be a grave political error. And finally, the Government might try to establish, in consultation with Canadian commercial banks, a series of innovative financial instruments as was done recently in Mexico, to provide relief for developing countries and especially to give them a chance to develop their economies.

• (1220)

[English]

These are some of the initiatives which the Government should at least be considering. We in the West are sitting on a time bomb. Canada can and should play a leadership role in trying to find solutions to problems such as the Third World debt before it is too late. The problems of the debt of the developing countries may jeopardize the world monetary system.

I strongly urge the Minister and the Canadian Government to use the economic summits of developed countries to play a leadership role in finding solutions to stabilizing our international system of payments and finding durable solutions to the debt of the Third World.

I will conclude that the Budget tabled by the Minister of Finance yesterday together with the former budget represents a real Tory approach to the management of the Canadian economy. I said yesterday, and I will repeat it again, it is a blueprint for a Conservative Canada, a Canada for the rich, a Canada for the wealthy regions but certainly not a Canada for the have-nots, a Canada for the poor and a Canada for the family. This is why I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson):

> That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "that" and by substituting the following: This House regrets that the Budget
> 1. Failed to redress the inequities of the tax system created by government policies put forward during the last three and one-half years;
> 2. Failed to put into place a regional development policy to compensate for the high interest rate policy of the Government;
> 3. Failed to put forward a credible plan to deal with the national debt that does not unduly punish lower and middle-income Canadians; and
> 4. Failed to specify a Canadian approach for dealing with the instabilities of the international monetary system.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair finds the amendment to be in order. Debate will proceed on the amendment with the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been the usual discussions and I think there is agreement in the House that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) will have approximately the same amount of time as the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) to speak in response to the Budget and to complete his remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member to complete his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, in a few months Canadians will be judging the Government's record in a general election. They will judge the Conservatives on the basis of their integrity, their competence and their fairness in confronting the problems of average Canadians.

Recent polls indicate that the average Canadian does not only question the Government's integrity but that three out of five Canadians question the Government's handling of the economy. Today's polls indicate as well that support for the Conservatives is falling again as people understand just what a lousy Government we have had for the last three and a half years.

Why is that, Mr. Speaker? Why is it that despite all of the Government's efforts, speeches and public relations paid for by the Canadian taxpayer the Government has continued to stay on the downside of public support? It is because Canadians do not feel that the Government has been fair, and they feel that the Government could and should have done better.

In economic terms the country is divided. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) warned this House last March about the emerging dangers of two Canadas, one rich and prosperous and the other under-employed. But the Finance Minister failed to heed that warning. The Budget he has produced is, as a consequence, a Budget of lost opportunities. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was so busy congratulating himself and his Government on their accomplishments that he forgot to see how far we still have to go.

For all of his self-congratulations, the average unemployment rate in 1987, according to the Budget documents, was 8.9 per cent. The Finance Minister forecast that unemployment in 1988 will be higher than in December and that economic growth is slowing down. But the Budget the Minister produced is like an accountant's report to an annual general meeting on Bay Street. Bay Street may need the Minister of Finance but this country does not need a Minister of Finance who thinks and talks like an accountant.

I want to say to the Minister that there are still 1.1 million unemployed Canadians out there. There are close to half a million part-time workers who want to work full-time but cannot find full-time jobs. There are one-third of a million discouraged workers who are no longer in the labour force but would be if the job opportunities existed. I say through you to the Minister that unemployment may have fallen in the past year but there are still eight provinces of ten where unemployment remains at the levels that prevailed in the 1981-1983 recession.

We have heard the Government say again and again that it was wrong to have unemployment at those levels and blamed the Liberal Government for what prevailed in 1981-1983. Why does the Government tolerate the fact that in eight provinces of ten the situation remains at levels that have not substantially improved?

I say to the Minister that he and his Government are not being fair to average Canadians with tax reforms. The Minister and his Government have not lifted a finger to correct the faults in the tax system, as they could have in yesterday's Budget. I say to the Minister through you, Mr. Speaker, that the Government and the Minister are not being honest about the potential impacts of the trade deal with the United States. I say to the Minister and the Government that the Government could have told the Bank of Canada that it was time to bring interest rates down in order to get the economy moving and to stop the Canadian dollar going through the roof.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Government had an opportunity in 1988. Despite the stock market crash in October, the economy is going strong, but for how long? One must be blind not to notice the first signs of a coming recession in the American economy, a recession that will probably affect the Canadian economy considerably. As the well-known saying goes: When the Unites States sneeze, Canada catches a cold. The introduction of a budget is a golden opportunity to act and set out a vision in which all Canadians will feel involved and not only a small select group, the old boys network, those who sit on the boards of large corporations. The Minister had a unique opportunity to turn to all Canadian men and women to build tomorrow's Canada, the Canada of the 90's. But he failed miserably.

That was the time for the Minister to show leadership about interest rates. At a time when the Canadian economy is only beginning to recover, the Bank of Canada puts on the brakes and through its policies brings on a most unacceptable rise in interest rates and the Canadian dollar. I am afraid the hope Canadians had of seeing their region become as prosperous as central Canada has just vanished. The Minister, the Prime Minister are to blame. Mr. Speaker, both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance had the choice of doing something for low-income Canadian men and women, for ordinary people, but true to character, they decided to do nothing.

• (1230)

[English]

The Prime Minister told the House last March that we are in the process of building two Canadas, one which is rich and promising and one which is underdeveloped and underemployed. Those words were lost on the Minister of Finance.

When I was preparing for this response to the Budget, I took the trouble to read my Budget reply of last year. I was tempted to deliver the same speech because nothing has really changed.

The fact that yesterday's Budget makes hardly any reference to regional disparities in Canada shows just how unaware the Finance Minister and his officials really are of the problems affecting real people from Vancouver Island to St. John's. There is no reference to the projected growth for the economies in different provinces and different regions of Canada. It is almost as if most of Canada did not exist.

The other day the Governor of the Bank of Canada came before the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs to inform us that things were overheating in southern Ontario to the point where he felt he had to put the brakes on through monetary policy. The Finance Minister puts a priority on growth in Central Canada as well. It is not good enough to have a Finance Minister from Mississauga and to have a Governor for the central bank from southern Ontario. It is time we had monetary and fiscal policies that served all of Canada and not just one region.

As my Leader said a few months ago, Canada cannot be strong if its regions are weak. Since the Progressive Conservatives came to power in September of 1984, close to one-half of the job creation in Canada has come to one province, Central Canada, the Province of Ontario, which has less than 35 per cent of the population. As an Ontario Member of Parliament, I welcome the fact that there are more jobs today in this province than there were in 1984. However, as a politician who is concerned about the whole country, I want to say that a policy of growth in one province will breed resentment, a sense of unfairness and a sense that there is something fundamentally wrong in the country. That is what the Conservatives are doing by concentrating on just one province. That kind of disparity breeds resentment and that is not the kind of policy on which to build a nation.

[Translation]

The Government itself in the November 1986 Throne Speech stated that regional employment income disparities were an unacceptable reality. So why accept it in this Budget, Mr. Speaker? In its 1987 annual report, the Economic Council of Canada emphasizes that we must fight unequal economic growth, support tax measures that can strengthen regional economies, and that a priority economic goal for Canadians is to achieve a fair distribution of growth, employment opportunities and social services.

Mr. Speaker, last year the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development in its report on Canada, stated in the same line of thought that one of the most striking aspects of the 1986 growth was the very acute regional disparities in economic growth; and that despite such differences being a familiar aspect of the Canadian economic environment, they were especially acute last year.

Even the Government appears to think that something must be done. In May 1988, the taskforce set up by the Federal and Provincial Ministers responsible for economic growth stated in their report that efforts to strenghten the economic structure of less privileged areas will require a proactive role on the part of the Government, in co-operation with the private sector, supported by resources and a will to innovate and to experiment, both at the policy and program development level.

[English]

If the Economic Council of Canada, the Throne Speech and the OECD all say that we should be acting to fight regional inequalities, then where is the Minister of Finance? The Minister of Finance and his Government are going in the exact opposite direction spelled out for them by all of these experts and authorities.

Far from responding to the need for innovative new programs in the regions, the Conservatives have cut $3 billion from spending on regional economic expansion programs since 1984. The Conservatives made announcements all over the place. They announced an Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, a Western Diversification Fund and FEDNOR for northern Ontario. This is marvellous because of the jobs that are being created by the Progressive Conservatives in the forestry sector because of the trees that will have to be cut and the paper that has to be made to churn out the press releases on which they make these announcements. However, does it go beyond that? The answer is no, it does not.

As my colleague from St. John's East has pointed out, in the year and a half since the Atlantic Opportunities Agency was announced, regional development spending in the Maritimes has been drying up. New money is not being spent. At best, the agency will have some $200 million per year. You and I know, Mr. Speaker, what is actually being prepared. The Government did not want to make announcements right now so that it could come up with its lollipops and freebies at the time of the next election campaign in the hopes that it could deceive Canadians into putting a rotten Government back into power. Canadians can see through this Government. They know that they could not trust the Conservatives over the last three and a half years, and that that will not change between now and the next General Election.

I would add that the situation in western Canada is even less advanced. Legislation to establish the Western Diversification Agency has not yet been considered in Parliament. Is that a sign of priority or is it a sign of a Government which wants to use smoke and mirrors in place of real programs to get the economy of the regions back on track?

What are we talking about? The plain fact is that in every province except for Ontario and Manitoba unemployment is still at the levels of the 1981 to 1983 recession. The regional disparities that opened up during the depression are not closing up, and in dollar terms are actually increasing. Unemployment rates remained at unacceptably high levels in most parts of Canada for last year.

The average unemployment level for last year was 18.6 per cent in Newfoundland, 13.3 per cent in P.E.I., 12.5 per cent in Nova Scotia, 13.2 per cent in New Brunswick, 10.3 per cent in Quebec, 6.1 per cent in Ontario, 7.4 per cent in Manitoba, 7.3 per cent in Saskatchewan, 9.6 per cent in Alberta and 12.0 per cent in British Columbia. We still have a long way to go, and that, I say to all Hon. Members, is an understatement.

This is not just an East-West problem either. Even in Central Canada, my Province of Ontario, there are serious disparities. Homelessness is chronic in major cities of Ontario. Food banks have become a way of life for thousands of people from Vancouver to St. John's. In my City of Ottawa, there are food banks just a 10-minute walk from the House of Commons. There is a record demand for housing at reasonable cost and it has not been met. Unemployment has risen to around 14 per cent in Windsor according to people there, and 17.9 per cent in the Gaspé.

[Translation]

The unemployment rate is 14 per cent in the lower St. Lawrence area. And in Northwest Ontario it is 9,8 per cent.

So we have regional disparities not only between provinces but within the two most prosperous provinces in Canada.

Although the youth unemployment rate remains between 12 and 13 per cent, the Government reduced by $300 million the job creation and other programs for the young since 1984.

• (1240)

[English]

If we could get to the hearts and souls of the unemployed we would find worse. We would find the continued discouragement and despair of people who suffer from unemployment. I wonder what they thought as they watched the Minister of Finance last night. What would they have thought had they gone to that jolly gathering of the Minister's invited guests who had a small glass and celebrated three and a half years of Tory prosperity in certain parts of this country. That prosperity does not reach to the average family and people in many other parts of the country. I wonder if the Minister ever thought of himself in this way.

Across Canada two-thirds of the adult population over 15 participate in the labour force, but that participation was only 56 per cent in New Brunswick and less than 50 per cent in Newfoundland. If you assume, and it is a fair assumption, that two-thirds of the adults in those two provinces want to work if the work is available, then the unemployment rate in New Brunswick would have more than doubled to 26 per cent, and to around 38 per cent in Newfoundland. On the same basis the unemployment rate would have been around 19 per cent in Nova Scotia and close to 14 per cent in Quebec.

Let us not fool ourselves; we must let the Minister know that we have not arrived at the economic recovery target. He cannot rest on his laurels now. We have barely begun the job that needs to be done.

To make matters worse, Canada may still face serious consequences from last October's stock-market crash and the slowing of the U.S. economy. The Economic Council of Canada and other forecasters have been revising their forecasts downwards. Even the Minister of Finance expects that unemployment in 1988 will exceed last December's rate. The crash may have particular impact on consumer and business spending this year, and consumer spending is starting to decline now. The savings rate has dropped to the point where most savings are made through contractual instruments such as RRSPs. Bankruptcies are on the rise again and certain cities are beginning to suffer from a downturn in the automobile industry which has been a bell-wether for economic downturns in the past.

Faced with that situation it is not right or fair that the Government of Canada should stand on the sidelines. It does not help people in Rimouski to know that Mississauga has full employment. This is a big country, regionally diverse and traditionally committed to a sense of sharing and social justice. That means we need initiatives from the Government, not just rhetoric about how well we have fared over the last three and a half years.

What can be done? My colleagues and I have said on every Budget to date that this country must make a commitment to full employment which is every bit as serious as our commitment to economic growth or combating inflation. As countries like Austria, Norway and Sweden have demonstrated, that commitment can be delivered in a variety of ways, but it will not be fulfilled if it is not made. My Party is proud to make that commitment to full employment. We believe a Canadian Government must do everything in its power to translate that commitment into reality.

It is unacceptable that the Minister of Finance tolerates unemployment rates that will continue at recession levels into the 1990s.

Ms. Jewett: Like Maggie Thatcher.

Mr. Cassidy: Maggie Thatcher has just allowed television into the House of Commons so the people of England know just what kind of Prime Minister she is. Perhaps we need to find some way to look into the hearts and minds of members of the Conservative Government to know why, when it comes down to the crunch, they line up with stock brokers, investment bankers and big business, and ignore the needs of average Canadians from coast to coast.

As I said, it is unacceptable that we have a Minister of Finance who will tolerate unemployment rates at recession levels in much of Canada into the 1990s. We need to embark now on a full employment strategy and I want to talk about some of the things we should be doing.

We should have a commitment to diversification, and secondary processing of resources in local communities across Canada, based on local needs with local input into the decision-making process. We need a partnership with the federal Government which will tie government assistance and tax incentives for investment to commitments to job creation and regional development. We need a specific commitment to increase national spending on research and development to levels achieved in other industrial nations, in conjunction with the provinces, universities and the private sector.

We had that promise from the Progressive Conservatives before the 1984 election but everyone knows what they did when they came into office. They slashed the National Research Council, and cut research and development spending to the point where it has hardly grown as a proportion of the GNP from 1984 to the present.

We need a commitment to use federal procurement and planning arrangements with major corporations to achieve specific goals of job creation and regional development.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, on this side of the House, we have proposed initiatives such as a community initiative fund that would help community development groups, small businesses, co-operatives and other community organizations launch initiatives for job creation in their own areas. In that context, it is my belief that we must welcome the announcement in the Budget of economic incentives to co-operation by national labour-sponsored venture capital corporations, that are similar to the support now given to the Quebec Solidarity Fund. This is one of the few positive measures in the Budget tabled by the Minister of Finance.

[English]

We have proposed specific programs to help young people receive adequate training and education and help diversify single-industry communities based on specific resources. For the last four years Canadian municipalities have been trying to get the federal Government to give attention to their plight and the deterioration of municipal infrastructure in every part of Canada. Federal cost sharing in this area can be targeted to areas of high unemployment and will have specific, positive results in such areas of basic service as water treatment, sewage, non-profit housing and land servicing. Yet the Government rejected those pleas.

Last year our housing industry operated at a very high level but it was not providing housing for Canadians of low and modest incomes. This year housing starts are forecast to drop by some 20 per cent so there is ample capacity in the industry to support housing as a tool of economic development in areas of high unemployment. The opportunity is there. Why does the Government not seize it rather than ignoring it?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the future holds gigantic technological changes in store for us. The technological turnaround requires Government support to help the industries which must face this new technology and which are now in full expansion. The workers also need incentives, and one of the ways in which a country such as Sweden has been able to maintain full employment has been through its adjustment policies for workers and its commitment to ongoing training for workers, areas in which Canada is lagging far behind.

The response of our Government has been to cut back funds for the Canadian Jobs Strategy instead of giving as much priority to human resources as to corporate resources.

[English]

In short, the problem of moving to full employment is not that the tools or programs are lacking, it is that the will is lacking and the Conservative Government and its Minister of Finance are too wedded ideologically to market oriented policies to accept the need for a mixture of policies that suit a mixed economy that will take us to full employment.

That is not all that needs to be done now. If Canadians are to be convinced that their Government is fair, then the tax system announced last December by the Minister of Finance has to be overhauled. The Finance Minister did not talk about these tax changes in his Budget but they are just as much a part of his fiscal policy as is the one cent a litre tax which he is imposing on motorists to pay for child care exemptions and for the loss of tariff revenue under the Canada-U.S. trade agreement.

Every time the Minister gets up I reckon I should have run to the gas pumps before he did so because every time he gets up he raises sales tax. It is $50 a year for the average family this time. It is $350 in sales tax that the Minister has increased on petroleum products since 1984. This is a Government that lost an election over an 18-cent-a-gallon tax increase on gasoline in 1979.

The Government has moved in one area. It has been a bit sensitive on the change in the manufacturers' sales tax, albeit on an interim basis. We welcome the new proposals and will study them closely. The initial reaction appears to be more positive than the initiatives taken by the Government in the White Paper which came forward last June. However, I want to remind the House of the basic unfairness of a tax system in which Canadians with incomes of over $100,000 a year will be the big winners and Canadians with average incomes will be continually worse off than they were in 1984.

We estimate that the tax increases on the average family, that is one earning $35,000 with a couple of kids, will be almost $1,400 since 1984, with the increases on booze which came in last December and with the increase on gasoline which came in yesterday. The average tax cut which that family will receive is about $310. That means that under the Conservatives they will get propaganda about tax cuts and an actual tax increase of $1,125 over three and a half years. Moreover, any benefit that the average family receives from tax reform will be eliminated over two or three years because of gradual deindexing.

Last December's figures show us where the real winners are. Some 180,000 families with above average incomes of over $100,000 a year are the ones who should be salaam-ing to the Minister of Finance for the favour he has done them because they will get tax cuts averaging $4,165 per annum apiece. The total value of the tax cuts to those big hitters is about $750 million. That is twice the total value of the tax cuts that the Minister has given to 2.8 million taxpaying households with incomes below $15,000.

If the Minister of Finance had his tax priorities straight he could have taken that $750 million and used it to ensure that no Canadian with income below the poverty line had to pay a nickel in income tax. I suggest that that should be a priority for the Government rather than giving $750 million to people on big incomes. The Finance Minister boasts that he is taking 850,000 Canadians off the tax rolls. He does not mention that they got peanuts and the real benefits went to his buddies on Bay Street.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I can also mention the fact that it is especially in Quebec that the tax on gasoline will hit hard. Indeed, I remind Hon. Members that Quebec has the highest gasoline prices in North America, and we shall now be paying one cent more thanks to the Minister of Finance.

[English]

The issue of tax fairness is one that strikes home to every Canadian family whether they live in Toronto, Moncton, or Kamloops. It is not only an issue of what people are paying now but also an issue of what they will pay when stage two of tax reform comes into being and the new national sales tax comes into force.

The Finance Minister has told this House that the present manufacturers' sales tax is "fundamentally flawed, it's hidden, it's arbitrary, it's capricious, it hurts our economy, it is costing us jobs". So what does he do? He is prolonging it and putting temporary measures into force on November 1 of this year.

Since 1984 these Conservative increases in sales taxes have taken $750 out of the pockets of average families in sales and excise taxes alone. Now the Government says that stage two will come in. The Minister says "Trust me, I'm not going to raise any increased taxes from this particular tax". However, he is not coming clean and he is not being honest with Canadians who want to know what the impact will be on them.

What rate will the new tax be set at? We do not know. Now that the Minister has grudgingly agreed to exempt food, what is the nature of that exemption? How much is the sales tax credit going to be? Will it be adequate for average families or only for people who are on very low incomes? What will be the cut-off? We do not know. An election is coming and Canadians have a right to know what the Finance Minister is proposing.

On top of that, the Finance Minister failed to mention the fact that a third of the existing manufacturers' sales tax is borne by business as a cost of business inputs. There is a general sense that it makes sense to take that cost off on exports in line with what other countries do. This is why many countries have moved to a form of cascading tax or value-added tax. However, I want to know what that means under the Finance Minister's new regime in terms of additional burden that will be borne by the average individual taxpayer. A Government that was truly fair in its tax policy would have increased the tax burden fairly as between those three major sources; that is, personal tax, corporation tax, and sales taxes.

The Government has done the opposite. According to estimates for 1988 corporation tax will have risen by only 28 per cent since 1984-85; personal income tax has gone up by 55 per cent, and sales tax revenues to the Government of Canada have gone up by 96 per cent to $27 billion—they have doubled. If a third of that burden is transferred now from business to individuals does that mean that another $9 billion in tax load will be shifted from the corporate sector to individuals?

We have a right to honesty from the Government in terms of what its tax plans really are. The Government does not believe in indicating honestly and openly what it intends to do. Earlier this week in the House of Commons my Leader pointed out how large corporations are continuing to escape paying their fair share of corporate tax, leaving average Canadians holding the bag.

I want to cite this to you. In 1986 Alcan Aluminum had income totalling $220 million. It did not pay tax but got a tax credit of $32 million. In the same year Brascan had profits of $187 million according to The Globe and Mail. It got a tax credit of $2.3 million with no tax payable. Hees International, another holding company, had $170 million of income and no taxes were paid. Power Financial had $132 million of income and received a tax credit of $1 million. Bramalea, a real estate company, had income of $51 million and no taxes were paid. In 1987 Cadillac Fairview had $95 million worth of income and got a tax credit of $12.4 million.

When is this going to stop? When will we see major corporations paying their share the way that my friend from Yorkton—Melville pays his share of taxation every year, the way that my constituents in Ottawa Centre pay their share of taxes every year? Why is it that the average Canadian pays year after year while major Canadian corporations go year after year without paying a nickel in tax?

Last October StatsCan released some figures which showed that the corporate income tax system is particularly favourable to large profitable corporations. According to StatsCan "the corporate income tax system is systematically biased toward concentration. It is structured so that larger firms are about to grow relatively faster than medium and small-sized firms". The StatsCan study said that the White Paper changes to corporate income taxes would change this situation only modestly.

We need to see that system changed. If the tax system is not fair, then in the end that unfairness will breed resentment and resistance. It will undermine the willingness of Canadians to co-operate with the Government, to build for the future, to comply with a voluntary system of tax collection. If the tax system is not fair the revenues that could be collected to help create jobs and create fairness between different regions of Canada will stay in the hands of rich taxpayers and rich corporations.

That is why my Party says that this is one area in which we can take a leaf from the book of the United States. Despite having a conservative Government, a Republican Government in Washington, despite having a reactionary President, President Reagan, the United States has put in its recent tax reform a minimum tax of 20 per cent on American corporations in Canada. Moreover, an American corporation whose subsidiary in Canada does not pay tax may well wind up paying minimum tax in the United States on taxes that were not paid in Canada. That is fundamentally wrong. In this case if it is good enough for the Americans it is good enough for Canada. We need a minimum tax on corporations and we need that minimum tax now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I presume that the Hon. Member will continue after Question Period.

Mr. Cassidy: With the co-operation of the House, Mr. Speaker, I would be quite willing to continue now and conclude my speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there agreement to that effect?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cassidy: I believe that was agreed to previously, Mr. Speaker. The report of the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee on tax reform recommended a minimum margin tax on financial institutions, another form of minimum tax. That would have permitted a number of needed improvements in the tax system proposed in the White Paper. However, the Minister of Finance rejected that minimum margin tax and chose to put the interest of the banks ahead of the needs of average Canadians. He was wrong.

We should move now to roll back the de-indexing which has taken place in the tax system so that it does not systematically discriminate against average Canadians. Average Canadians support a progressive tax system. It is wrong to have cut into taxes on upper income earners so sharply when the Government should have redistributed income to average Canadians. The Government could have repealed the folly of capital gains tax exemptions which have given some Canadians tax exempt income that exceeds what an average family may earn in five or ten years, or even in a lifetime.

I plead for a sense of accountability. The current deficit is $29.3 billion and is not coming down by very much every year. The Government of Canada spends close to $30 billion every year in tax expenditures. That never enters into the Government accounts or into the estimates. It simply trickles out the back door, largely to friends of the Government, friends of the Minister of Finance, people who think like him. That is wrong. If we had full accounting for those tax expenditures we could remove some of those unneeded loopholes, tax benefits and privileges and use the money for economic development, regional expansion and to reduce the deficit.

A fair tax system would cut taxes for average Canadians and would generate the resources to help put in place a policy of full employment and regional fairness.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, one of the major aspects of justice in a society is the way in which we deal with the problems of families with young children. This Budget contains the series of measures for child care to help families with young children introduced and announced by the Government last December. However, this is basically insufficient. In his Budget, the Minister says that 200,000 new spaces in day-care centres will be created over the next seven years thanks to Government initiatives. However, the measures to create these places are absent from this Budget. Indeed, if you look at the implications of this Budget, you will find that only $40,000 have been put aside to support family expenditures for child care.

[English]

The money being spent on child care by the Conservatives does not begin to replace the funding taken out of family benefits since they were elected. If all elements of family benefits were to be re-indexed, the cost in 1991 would be around $1.6 billion, which is $500 million more than the Conservatives are planning to spend on child care after seven years. Far from putting money into child care, they are taking it out.

Mr. Speaker, the Government can do more to create a fairer and more equitable economy. Since last year, the Bank of Canada has been following a very restricted monetary policy and the Government has stated several times that its objective is to bring down the inflation rate to zero. Thus, the monetary policy for which the Government is theoretically responsible goes directly against the objective of full employment.

The Conservative Government could have created many more jobs if the Bank of Canada was not set on maintaining high interest rates to fight against inflation. Instead of putting forward a fair program for the average Canadian who is affected by the high interest rates, the Minister of Finance firmly supports the policy of the Bank of Canada.

[English]

On behalf of New Democrats, I say that it is time for the Minister and the Government to take control of monetary policy rather than leaving it exclusively in the hands of the Bank of Canada, whose dedication to fighting inflation blinds it to all consequences of an overly tight monetary policy. It is time to bring the interest rates down. They can be brought down by one per cent or 2 per cent, which I and my Party believe should be done now.

There are many reasons why we should bring interest rates down. It is not a dollar be damned policy, because there is an option available now. The dollar has been driven too high because of the tight interest policy of the Bank of Canada. Economists such as Michael McCracken have made it clear that we have that option, yet the Minister of Finance ignores it. In fact, in his Budget he forecasts higher interest rates on the national debt and forecasts that real interest rates will be rising from 4 per cent last year to 4.6 per cent, when they should be falling. The cut in rates would help the average consumer.

There was an increase in bankruptcies last year which has been aggravated by the increase in interest rates. High interest rates have increased the cost of capital in Canada for business to the point where the differential is now 30 per cent to 35 per cent in terms of the cost of investment for businesses investing in Canada. This is at a time when the Government says Canadian business will have to be competitive in order to go head to head against American firms as a result of the Government's blind devotion to free trade.

There has been extensive and probably excessive foreign borrowing. One of the reasons is that high rates were put in place to support the dollar. William Macness, Vice-President of the Bank of Nova Scotia, recently called for a reduction in interest rates to end our foreign borrowing habit.

Premier Bourassa recently stated that the dollar has become too high, and pointed out that the increase in the dollar in the last two years amounts to an 11 per cent or 12 per cent increase in tariffs on Canadian goods being sold in the United States.

My friend, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), reports that farmers and livestock producers in western Canada are feeling the pinch now as the cost of their exports to Americans are beginning to rise to the point where they are no longer competitive, thereby reducing their returns. We cannot afford to let that continue.

A cut in interest rates would have a direct effect on the federal deficit. The estimate in the Budget is approximately $2 billion. Since the deficit could be brought down by $2 billion or more if the Government were not paying such high interest rates on the deficit, the Minister is partly responsible for the high deficit which is proposed.

The Economic Council of Canada said that a cut in rates would be the most important single job generating initiative that the Government could take. Let me remind the Minister of Finance that we do not have full employment in the interior of British Columbia, in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island. There is no full employment in Chicoutimi, Windsor or in many parts of this country. I suggest that to put on the brakes because things may be starting to overheat in Toronto is essentially unfair to 90 per cent of the population of this country who are not in that zone of affluence. They should not be held back because of the policies of the Bank of Canada. It is time to bring those interest rates down.

Let me move to the question of the trade initiative. I suppose it was predictable that the Government would congratulate itself as the Minister of Finance has done. I wish, however, that he and his Government would be more honest with Canadians rather than looking at the future through rose-coloured glasses.

This Government embarked on its trade negotiations to bring an end to unfair American trade laws affecting Canadian exports. The Government failed. It came up with a deal in which Canada and the United States will spend the next seven years talking about the issue of U.S. trade legislation which originally took us to the bargaining table but in which we have no guarantees of making any progress. We know what is going to happen. I saw it in my newspaper the other day. The Prime Minister was at a high school in eastern Ontario speaking to some students. There was a picture of the American eagle reaching down to claw the head of the Prime Minister. Little did he know what was happening. Little do Canadians know what is happening. Those unfair trade laws will come back to haunt us.

I remember that just a year ago the Prime Minister told us we would have 500,000 new jobs because of the trade deal. The Economic Council then said it would be 360,000 jobs. Now they are saying that might be 10 years or 12 years down the road. The Department of Finance says it is 120,000 jobs. Who are we going to believe? I am not really sure. I do know that 120,000 jobs represents only 10 per cent of the number of Canadians who are currently unemployed.

Yesterday the Minister of Finance told Canadians how well he thinks the economy is doing. The Governor of the Bank of Canada tells us how much we are in danger of the economy in southern Ontario overheating. What are those two men really saying? If things are going so well, why does Canada have to beg the United States for a trade deal which will tie the hands of future Canadian Governments and which will affect our sovereignty and our economy in so many ways? Why is the Minister of Finance so insecure about his Government's ability to manage the economy? If I can put it another way, why is he so dedicated in an ideological way to a way of thinking about the economy in which governments have no role, the market is supreme? He will Americanize the Canadian economy rather than letting Canadians run Canada's economy in Canada's way for the benefit of average Canadians from coast to coast.

Original disparities will not disappear as the Prime Minister has tried to tell us. In fact, they may even increase. I took the pains to look at regional disparities in the United States, thinking that with two centuries of free trade between the American states they surely would not have the problems we have here in Canada. Yet, I found that the average per capita personal income in the State of Connecticut in 1966 was about $19,600, but in Mississippi in the same year it was only $9,716. In other words, in Connecticut average incomes were double the average per capita income in Mississippi. What is happening? How could these disparities exist?

I guess I was wrong, but perhaps the Minister of Finance is wrong as well in trying to claim that disparities in Canada will disappear if only we get free trade. Mississippi has no trade barriers in its dealings with any of other 49 states of the United States, yet the income there is one half the level of Connecticut and barely over one half the level of other states such as Massachusetts, New Jersey and other prosperous states in the United States.

What is the disparity here in Canada? Interestingly enough, in 1986 the disparity between Ontario and Newfoundland was $18,740 versus $11,380. That is unacceptable. But Ontario was two thirds higher than Newfoundland, not double. We have done better in this country without free trade than the American states have done in the United States with free trade.

A number of my colleagues of Scottish origin got together to celebrate Robbie Burns night. I might remind them that Scotland has been engaged in a free trade agreement with England for some three and a half centuries now, the longest free trade agreement existing anywhere in the world. Do the disparities still exist between Scotland and England? You bet they do. Can the Scots take measures to get their economy going the way they would like to do? No, they have become a tributary and colony to the United Kingdom of Great Britain, Northern Ireland and Scotland at Westminster, and have been unable to govern for themselves. Is that the future for our country? I am afraid that with our Minister of Finance that is the direction in which we are going.

One of our forecasts has come to pass in this particular Budget. Canadians are not going to go scot free. Someone has to pay for the tariff cuts that are in the trade deal. The Minister of Finance acknowledges that because every time one drives to the corner store to pick up a newspaper to see how one's stocks are doing on Wall Street, an extra gasoline tax will be paid. If one drives to the United States to get those goods the Minister of Finance says will be tariff free, one will be paying gasoline tax.

It is interesting that Canadians in the next two years will pay $515 million in added gasoline tax in order to receive $525 million in tariff cuts. It is more or less equal. In other words, we do not get a free lunch from the Tories. Canadians are going to pay. Our cost of living is going to show that if the cost of goods in the stores come down, the cost of taxes paid by Canadians will go up in equal measure.

The real question is what tools will future Canadian Governments have to direct the economy after the trade deal goes through, if it does? Where is the adjustment program that Canadian industries will need? They were not announced in this Budget. Where is the assurance that the new regional development agency will not run smack into American interference through trade laws which have not been changed? There is no such assurance.

We are taking on an American option in terms of the way we are running our economy. At the same time we are facing some very severe problems. I noticed this week that the Campeau Corporation, now based in Toronto, has run into state legislation in Delaware and Ohio to block its takeover of the Federated Stores. It is a $4 billion or $5 billion takeover which is currently being undertaken.

In other words, when a Canadian company goes to the United States as the Minister of Finance wants it to do, as part of the spirit of the trade deal, and tries to establish a foothold in an important industry, the retailing industry—and bear in mind there is meant to be national treatment between the two countries in retailing and other services—the Government of the United States does not say anything. It is leaving the dirty work to the State of Delaware and to the State of Ohio. There is a very real danger that whatever the wisdom of that particular deal, it will be blocked by state action and you can bet your bottom dollar, Mr. Speaker, that Clayton Yeutter, Ronald Reagan and the other American authorities, will not intervene to ensure that that particular deal can take place.

The Americans are beside themselves. They are transfixed with the fact that Canadian companies are starting to acquire a modest proportion of the United States economy. That will continue. At the same time they have negotiated that there is no restraint at all on American investment coming into Canada.

The ironic result of national treatment will be that those Delaware takeover laws will apply to American takeovers as well. What will happen as state after state takes action to keep the Canadians, the Germans and the Japanese out, is that American companies will look to Canada for takeover targets because the takeover market in the United States is tied up.

What we are seeing now in the economic arena is that Canada for three and a half years has been a laboratory for orthodox economics and neoconservativism. Economic doctrines with chief similarity is to put the market first and to put workers and human fulfilment last. The New Democratic Party considers that the task of economic policy is to put people first ahead of orthodox abstractions and statistical aggregates such as economic growths, profits, and so on.

We are not alone in this view. In the past four years there has been an increasing witness from Canada's churches saying exactly the same thing. When Pope John Paul was in Toronto in 1984 he argued that the needs of the poor take priority over the desires of the rich, the rights of the workers over the maximization of profits, the preservation of the environment over uncontrolled industrial expansion, production to meet social needs over production for military purposes.

The Catholic Bishops of Canada have delivered the same message, and the United Church of Canada in its 1984 resolution on the economic crisis argued likewise, as it expressed support for social and economic policies across the world dedicated to justice, that the needs of the poor should have priority over the wants of the rich and that Canada needed a national program for full employment.

We should not lose sight of the basic purpose of economic organization which is to create goods and services for the population and to provide fulfilling employment for the men and women in the labour force. Our society, through Government, makes an important contribution to the success of the economy and to the success of any enterprise through laws, customs, education, training, health and social services, infrastructure and so on. Let us not turn our backs on that important contribution. Let us not ignore the role of Government for ideological reasons. Let us continue to see Government work in partnership with average Canadians, with Canadian enterprises, with Canadian unions and with voluntary organizations across this country.

I resent the criticism which has been directed to my Party from time to time suggesting that New Democrats are centralists and protectionists and mercantilists and interventionalists and so on. What we have talked about consistently is quite simply that we recognize that change and adaptation to change is going to be a central element in any economic strategy over the next decade. No Party can ignore it or pretend it does not exist. However, in adapting to change, human factors and regional factors must have an important priority for any government in Canada. That goes particularly for a social democratic government, which I hope takes office in this country very soon.

I believe that most Canadians would want that to be so because that kind of collective tradition is something which is deeply rooted in the fabric of Canadian life and Canadian government from the time that Sir John A. Macdonald built the great Canadian railroad back in the 1870s.

The difference between the New Democratic Party and the other Parties in many of our economic policies is that we acknowledge the need for government participation or leadership in the economy. We are not afraid to look for government intervention or involvement where it is needed and useful. Other Parties seem to decry such intervention in theory but in practice they also resort to it. Even the United States which decries such intervention practices it through such means as its defence budget. We are seeing the same thing now with respect to defence contracts here in Canada.

When I say that we need vision and leadership from the Government I think that that is an entirely appropriate role for the Government to take. I think that governments can and should plan. After all, individuals plan, companies plan and universities plan, as do municipalities, private organizations and businesses. Why should Government not plan as well? What is more important than to have a vision of the late 1990s, where we want to be in 10 years, and then decide how we will get there?

My vision and the vision of my Party includes full employment for every Canadian in every region of Canada, balanced economic development in regional fairness, a country which is technologically and economically competitive, major increases in manpower training and formation that affect every working man and woman across the country, programs for young people to enable them to take their place in the workplace, major increases in research and development, and a reworking of our tax system to lift the tax burden on the poor and make this system more equitable.

We want to see a better balance of work and leisure so that we do not have 90 per cent of the population working and 10 per cent involuntarily at leisure because they are unemployed.

We want to see greater participation for every Canadian in decision making, a form of economic democracy, a full recognition of the equality of women in our workplace and in our society, a more rational international agreement around farming, farm products and agricultural trade, equality and opportunities for minorities, and a true basis of non-discrimination and of social justice.

We want to see a maintenance of the social safety net so that in terms of income and in terms of social opportunities every Canadian can continue to benefit.

We want to see a national day care system that covers every Canadian family.

We want to see cultural development that enables us to continue to maintain and assert our Canadian identity, a substantial increase in Canada's aid to less developed countries, and a world in which Canada increasingly and more confidently asserts itself as a middle power with the unique and distinctive view of its interests and the interests of the world based on where we are in the North American hemisphere and of our interests as an independent nation, not just as a subsidiary of our great neighbour to the south.

We want to see advances to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade in sorting out non-tariff barriers, advances in dispute resolution with the United States and other major trading partners, more diversification of Canadian trade, and a shared direction in monetary policy so that we no longer have a Minister of Finance who says, "I am sorry I cannot do that in terms of bringing interest rates down. I cannot give that direction because the Governor of the bank says that he will resign if I tell him what to do".

We want to see a more open style of budgetary and economic management that would prevail both in Ottawa and in the provinces.

Sometime in the next year we expect that there will be a general election.

[Translation]

—election through which Canadians would be supposed to judge this Conservative government's record for the last four years. The record will show whether or not the government has delivered the goods following the commitments made during the 1984 election campaign when they promised to be open, honest and fair and to clean up the patronage practices used by the Liberals under the previous Liberal administration. On all those counts, Mr. Speaker, Canadians now don't trust the Conservative government.

[English]

But average Canadians will also have to judge the Conservatives on their economic record. Has the Minister of Finance put Main Street first or Bay Street? Was it in the interests of average Canadians that the Government brought in the tax-free exemption on capital gains? Do ordinary Canadians benefit when major corporations such as Alcan or Brascan make substantial profits and pay no tax? Does a single parent in Vancouver or a mechanic and her family in Hamilton benefit when the biggest tax cuts go to company presidents and high-priced lawyers and consultants earning over $100,000 per year? How does recovery of jobs in Mississauga help people who want to work in Newfoundland but who face levels of unemployment that have hardly changed since the recession? What will the Government be able to do to help hundreds of thousands of Canadians whose jobs will be affected by the trade agreement if it is ratified?

This Budget is not fair to the average Canadian. It does not bring tax fairness. It fails to come to grips with the increasing impact of high interest rates on the Canadian dollar and on the Canadian economy. This Budget is not fair to those parts of Canada, eight provinces and the territories, that are still suffering unemployment at recession levels. This Budget is not honest or open in telling Canadians what the trade deal will really mean.

If there is a Conservative election manifesto in this Budget, then so be it. We will oppose the Government on this, its election platform, with pleasure. However, now is not the time to stand pat. Now is not the time to do nothing. Now is not the time for these lost opportunities.

It is for all these reasons that I therefore move the following amendment to the amendment to the Budget motion moved by my friend, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau):

> That the amendment to the motion of the Minister of Finance be amended by adding immediately thereafter the following words:
> "and this House further condemns the Government for introducing a Budget that ignores the real economic needs of the country in which over 1.1 million Canadians are unemployed and eight out of 10 provinces and the territories continue to experience employment and income disparities equal to those of the 1981-83 recession; for increasing the tax burden of average Canadian families to a level of $1,125 over the 1984 level through yet another increase in gas taxes; for failing to bring fairness to the tax system through the elimination of costly tax breaks and the introduction of a corporate minimum tax that would ensure fair and regular tax payment from those 60,000 profitable corporations that will pay no tax following Conservative tax reform; for maintaining a policy of high interest rates begun by previous Liberal governments; and for failing to introduce a system of universal child care that would assist average Canadian families and create jobs."

As I said, this was a Budget of lost opportunities. The Government had the option to be fair to the average Canadian. It failed to fulfil it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will reserve on the admissibility of the amendment to the amendment and make a decision immediately after Question Period.

It being 1.30 p.m., I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m.

At 1.30 p.m. the House took recess.

SOCIAL WELFARE

SOCIAL PROGRAMS—THE HOMELESS—GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, for the second year in a row the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has presented a Budget without even referring to the homeless.

The Conservative Government has slashed so deeply into its social expenditures that the most destitute Canadians are no longer protected by our social programs. Everywhere throughout the country—Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver, Winnipeg, Ottawa or wherever—men, women and entire families are homeless. They sleep in the streets near warm air vents, under bridges, or in abandoned buildings from which they are often ejected.

Once again the Minister of Finance has shown that his Government does not have the political will to come to grips with the problems of the most underprivileged in our society. Our Budget deficit is important, our human deficit even more so! This Government gives priority to wealth over the well-being of Canadians who are homeless or live in slums.

Mr. Speaker, it is inconceivable that in times of economic renewal we should see so many homeless people for whom we have no programs designed to help them get back to a normal and productive existence.

That is telling evidence of political failure and the worst scandal ever witnessed under this Government.

HISTORIC EVENTS

ANNIVERSARY OF INDEPENDENCE OF LITHUANIA

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, 70 years ago on February 16, 1918, Lithuania became an independent democratic nation. That treasured status perished when Soviet troops invaded the Baltic states in 1940. Lithuania remains occupied by the Soviets to this day.

In spite of Soviet threats of reprisal bordering on martial law, Lithuanians in Vilnius and Kaunas are planning peaceful flower-laying ceremonies on February 16 at historical and national sites to pay tribute to the brave and independent spirit of their nation.

The Lithuanian community in Canada is issuing a protest to the Soviet Union in an open letter to Mr. Gorbachev, appearing in Canada's national newspaper, indicating their dismay and abhorrence of the oppressive measures announced by Soviet authorities.

I call upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to use all available measures to maintain pressure on the Soviet Union until its illegal occupation of Lithuania is ended and Lithuania once again takes its rightful place among the free and independent nations of the world.

Lithuanian Canadians invite all freedom-loving Canadians to join with them in commemorating the spirit of independence and in demonstrating their desire for liberty and justice in their homeland.

THE BUDGET

CRITICISM OF PROVISIONS BY CANADIAN COUNCIL OF SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) recently spoke of two Canadas, one rich and one poor. In yesterday's Budget we saw only too clearly that his Government is interested only in the rich people in Canada.

At a time when the number of people receiving welfare in cities from one end of Canada to another is at a record high, at a time when more people are homeless since the dirty thirties, at a time when more and more people are depending on the charity provided by churches and community groups through food banks, we saw a Budget which continuously ignored those problems and those people.

How else can we explain the post-budget statement issued by the Canadian Council of Social Development which points out that in this Budget there is no increase in the federal minimum wage, now the second lowest in the country at $4 an hour; no increase in the refundable tax credit for low income earners hit by the gasoline tax increase; no increase in aid to regions such as Atlantic Canada which has less than 3 per cent of the jobs that have been created since 1984; no increase in help to Canadian families living below the poverty line, although they now number 851,000, up from 745,000 in 1980.

The Government could have helped all these Canadians yesterday. It is an indictment of its priorities and its record that it failed all of them once again.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

WELLAND CANAL REHABILITATION PROGRAM

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, the Welland Canal section of the St. Lawrence Seaway is closed for the winter, but it is by no means idle. During this winter's shut-down period, work began on the Welland Canal rehabilitation program which will see $175 million spent on the waterway over a seven year period. This was announced by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) in November, 1986, in response to urgent calls for repair work following the blow-out at Lock 7 the year before. So far this year $1.5 million has been spent on the rehabilitation of Lock 7 located in the city of Thorold. Recently a contract for more than $3 million was awarded for repairs on Lock 4.

Those are only two of the many contracts awarded this winter, contracts which have put more than 600 people to work in the Niagara region. The rehabilitation program demonstrates the federal Government's commitment to the future of the Welland Canal and to a strong economy in the Niagara region.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

EARLY RETIREES—UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE DEDUCTED FROM BENEFITS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, individuals who opted for a preretirement leave plan at the Cape Breton Development Corporation in 1974-75 are being requested, in accordance with the law, to have unemployment insurance premiums deducted from their benefits. This deduction has not been requested of individuals who, in recent years, have been receiving compassionate disability benefits from the Cape Breton Development Corporation, or other early retirement benefits such as the MILAP program. The question that must be put is, why the difference?

Revenue Canada states; "The Devco preretirement leave plan was designed purposely to have the workers affected to continue to be employed under a contract of service to Devco in order that they be eligible to continue to earn entitlement of various benefits, more specifically, Canada Pension Plan. With very few exceptions, income from employment for purposes of one of the acts mentioned above is income from employment for the purpose of the other".

The circumstances have changed. It seems to me that what took place many years ago is no longer applicable in 1988. I hope that the Government would see that this matter is somewhat discriminatory. If the Government changes the ruling of Revenue Canada, the preretirement workers would be happy, management of the Cape Breton Development Corporation would be happy, and it would also save the Government of Canada a lot of money.

I call upon the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) to reconsider his previous decision in light of these facts.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

IRRADIATION OF FOOD—NEED FOR MAJOR INFORMATION PROGRAM

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, food irradiation is a process whereby all elements are exposed to electron or X-Rays. In September 1987, the Federal Government announced the thrust of its policy on food irradiation and labelling of irradiated food.

S. O. 21

There is concern, however, that irradiated food may lose its nutritional value and contain radiolytic substances as yet not fully identified or studied.

So far, Canada and the United States have authorized the irradiation of foodstuffs such as potatoes, onions, wheat, wheat flour and spices.

Consumers are afraid of irradiation. The Government should launch a public debate and inform Canadians, through a wide information program, as a condition to the acceptance of irradiated food by consumers.

FINANCE—RULES OF THE GAME

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): In his Budget speech yesterday, Mr. Speaker, this Government's Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) confirmed, along the lines of previous years, the game plan for Canadians, both for those who benefit from the redistribution of wealth through the State, and those who participate in the production of this wealth, our businessmen.

To those who are on the receiving end, we guarantee the financial resources of the Government to the senior citizens, the chronic benefit recipients, the young and the unemployed. To our lenders, we will pay $32 billon.

To businessmen, we guarantee an increased control over our expenses, still lower interest rates, a tax system to promote business and investments.

Mr. Speaker, that is a fine climate for all Canadians. The Government is teaming-up with businessmen and ensuring the protection of Canadian citizens.

FINANCE

TAX INCREASES—EFFECT ON AVERAGE FAMILY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, when it comes to playing with numbers the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has more moves than Wayne Gretzky and more tricks than Harry Houdini. The following is a list of tax increases that the Conservative Government has imposed on the average Canadian family.

In 1984 an increase in oil and gas prices cost the average family $200 per year; the increase in unemployment insurance premiums cost the average family $102 per year; the sales tax increase cost the average family $150 per year.

In 1985 the elimination of the federal tax reduction cost the average family $100 per year; modification of indexing cost the average family $115 per year; the cut in family allowance cost the average family $22 per year; cigarette and alcohol tax increases cost the average family $75 per year; sales tax changes cost the average family $150 per year; gas tax increases cost the average family $50 per year.

In 1986 the 3 per cent income surtax cost the average family $170 per year; the sales tax increase cost the average family $150 per year; cigarette and alcohol tax increases cost the average family $20 per year.

In 1987 the gas tax increase cost the average family $150 per year; sales tax changes cost the average family $15 per year; cigarette and air ticket tax cost the average family $35 per year.

In 1988 the gas tax increases will cost the average family $50 per year.

The grand total is $1,124.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

INDUSTRIAL ECONOMY OF EAST MONTREAL

Mrs. Carole Jacques (Montreal—Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I want to say today in the House that I sincerely deplore the inane remarks made last week by the two leaders of the opposition concerning the economy of Montreal East.

As the elected representative of that area, I want to inform them that Montreal East's economy is doing just fine. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the industrial economy of that area is simmering with excitement. I could summarize the situation by saying that Rivière-des-Prairies Industrial Park is full, that the Pointe-aux-Trembles one is also full and that a third industrial park in my area is being considered together with the City of Montreal East. I suggest, therefore, that things are not as bad as all that in Montreal East.

Moreover, 2,500 jobs have been created since we came to power, and 2,500 others have been maintained, including those at the Gulf Refinery and at Bombardier. These are concrete evidence, and no one should claim, as the leader of the socialist party did last week, that Montreal should be declared a "designated area".

Moreover, the Liberal Leader, Mr. Turner, had the gall to ask Canadians to elect him Prime Minister by promising a $50 million fund to help the industries, when he knows full well, as the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) does too, that it is only a matter of days before the CREEM report recommendations are implemented.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

SUPERVISION OF PAROLEES IN TORONTO—OPERATION OF HALF-WAY HOUSES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, residents in Metropolitan Toronto are justifiably alarmed and angry about substandard parole supervision at half-way houses in their community. They have had enough and they want action.

Recently a convicted rapist was released on a day pass to Montgomery House, a privately run half-way house. He was subsequently charged with first-degree murder in the brutal death of a young woman. Unbelievingly, the half-way house did not notify the police until 14 hours after this particular inmate went missing. The inexcusable delay in notifying the police put the public at greater risk.

The half-way house in question is one of several in Toronto operated by a private agency, Operation Springboard. It was the decision of the Conservative Government to privatize half-way houses. We objected to this move. Privatization of half-way houses has put the public at greater risk. The private sector has no business supervising parolees, let alone dangerous parolees. This is the job of the Government of Canada. This is the job of professionally trained parole officers.

I call on the Government to terminate its contract with Operation Springboard immediately and to resume control of all half-way houses in Metropolitan Toronto. Further, I call upon the Government to ensure that dangerous inmates are not released on parole without proper supervision, to assure the safety of residents.

WINTER OLYMPIC GAMES

TRIBUTE TO WORK OF ALL AGENCIES AND VOLUNTEERS

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, almost 10 years ago Calgary had a dream, a dream to host the fifteenth Olympic Winter Games. That dream has come true in the most striking of all settings, the Canadian Rockies and the vital and lively city of Calgary which I am so proud to represent.

On the eve of what undoubtedly will be the most successful Winter Games in the history of the Olympic movement, I want to congratulate the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) and the Government of Canada for their major contributions toward this success.

Not just Calgary, not just Alberta, but the whole of Canada can be proud of the state of the art facilities constructed on time and on budget. Credit must go also to the organizing committee, known to most as OCO '88, and to the many volunteers who have been so generous with their time and efforts.

I could not leave out the Torch relay race across Canada organized by Petro-Canada. This has truly aroused the patriotic spirit of Canadians right across the country.

I invite all Canadians to come and see the world's tallest Olympic Torch, the Calgary Tower, and to support our superb Canadian athletes.

Here is to the fifteenth Olympic Winter Games, and here is to Calgary!

EFFECT ON ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the Budget presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is for Atlantic Canadians a do-nothing Budget. The Government has seen fit over the past three years to cut its commitment to regional development. It has increased taxes to the point where the average Canadian family is paying $1,000 more in taxes than three years ago.

And what of unemployment, Mr. Speaker? What of the jobs, jobs, jobs the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised Canadians in the last election? The Government tells us one thing, but the jobs are not finding their way into the Atlantic provinces. Indeed, the unemployment rate in all four Atlantic provinces is worse today than it was in 1981 during the height of the recession.

In 1981 the unemployment rate in Newfoundland was 13.9 per cent, today it is 19.6 per cent. In P.E.I. the unemployment rate in 1981 was 11.2 per cent, today it is 18.3 per cent. In Nova Scotia the unemployment rate in 1981 was 10.2 per cent, today it is 13.5 per cent. For New Brunswick the unemployment rate in 1981 was 11.5 per cent and today it is 13.7 per cent.

With the Government's response, Mr. Speaker, it is no surprise that the Organization of Economic Co-operation and Development in its report last August noted the starkness of regional growth disparity—

Mr. Speaker: I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

NEEDS AND PRIORITIES OF REMOTE REGIONS—GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, in his Budget speech yesterday, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) indicated that he was going to adopt a new approach to regional development. For the past 23 years, the Abitibi and Témiscamingue regions have been waiting for such an approach by the federal Government to regional development, an approach which would take into account the needs and priorities of remote areas.

On December 22, 1987, the Hon. Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State responsible for Science and Technology (Mr. de Cotret) stated in Sept-Îles: "The global economic development plan which we are proposing for the peripheral areas of Quebec is consistent with the regional development policy of the federal Government which is determined to support the development efforts of Canadians in less privileged areas." Today, Mr. Speaker, thanks to the enormous effort made by the Minister, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Conservative Members representing these great areas, justice will finally be made.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

IMPORTANCE OF BILINGUALISM IN CANADA

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to urge the Prime Minister of Canada and the Cabinet not to give in to requests made by thirty-odd Conservative Members who are against the Bill on bilingualism. I should like to urge the Prime Minister and the Cabinet to hold their ground before these people who do not want francophones outside Quebec to be served in French in federal institutions, and who do not want anglophones in Quebec to be served in their own mother tongue in that province.

Mr. Speaker, I should also like to denounce the argument of these 30 Conservative Members who claim that anglophones are mistreated because of Bill 101. First, Mr. Speaker, this measure is a federal Bill. We are to vote to improve French and English services in every federal jurisdiction, and Quebec will know how to deal with Bill 101. I would ask these Alberta Conservative Members to make sure that Mr. Piquette will be allowed to speak French in the provincial legislature.

PIPELINES

VANCOUVER ISLAND NATURAL GAS PIPELINE PROJECT—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE URGED

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, almost eight years ago the Liberal Government of the day promised to fund two major energy projects in Canada, the natural gas pipeline between Quebec and the Maritimes, and a natural gas pipeline from the B.C. Lower Mainland to Vancouver Island.

The Q & M line was built at great effort and great cost. Now the Province of British Columbia has selected a new route for the Vancouver Island pipeline, and earlier this week it requested federal financial assistance.

This request should be seriously considered by our Government and responded to at the earliest possible date. Vancouver Island remains the only densely populated area in Canada without access to natural gas. Building the proposed pipeline would benefit consumers, industry, and the workforce. It is British Columbia's turn. The Vancouver Island natural gas pipeline is a project whose time has come.

THE BUDGET

QUERY WHERE $3 BILLION WENT

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday in his Budget speech, the Minister of Finance was more concerned about the past than the future. In his remembrance of things past, he forgot to mention all the taxes that put such a heavy burden on Canadian men and women.

Mr. Speaker, in his document The Fiscal Plan, the Minister tells us that the Government's revenues for fiscal 1988-89 will be $3 billion more than was forecast last June for the same fiscal year. In spite of increased tax revenues, despite of the fact that the Minister announced an additional tax on gas yesterday which will raise $300 million, in spite of the fact that he announced a sales tax increase which will raise two million—

An Hon. Member: Two million!

Mr. Garneau: —two hundred million dollars, in spite of the fact that no new programs were announced in the Budget speech, the deficit has remained the same.

I want to ask the Minister of Finance where the additional $3 billion went?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think if the Hon. Member had reflected on what precisely was in the Budget and what the Budget was about, he would have understood that this was a reporting of the various measures that have been announced by the Government as well as some of the changes that have taken place. Particularly in response to the Member's question, the increase in interest rates over what had been anticipated is a large part of the increase in expenditures.

As the Hon. Member is well aware, we have identified priority areas such as science and technology, regional development, child care, defence, oil and gas, and not least the problems in the agricultural sector. We have addressed these problems, but we have been able to do this in a fiscally responsible way so that we can keep on our budget track.

BANK OF CANADA—INTEREST RATE LEVEL

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I have not found anything in the Budget Papers explaining how much money the Government could spend on the nuclear submarines or the other things about which the Minister just spoke.

To come back to the rate of interest, due to the fact that the Minister spoke about the importance of the rate of interest as debt servicing in terms of total government expenditure, why does the Minister not sit down with the Governor of the Bank of Canada and work something out to get the interest rate down? The spread between the interest rates in the U.S. and Canada is higher than it was a year ago, 275 basis points today compared with 170 last year.

Why does the Minister not talk to the Governor of the Bank of Canada to convince him to lower the rate of interest? He would then be in a position to lower his own expenditures.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is kind of amusing to us on this side of the House to be preached at by representatives of the Party that shoved interest rates to 22 per cent and 25 per cent in the early 1980s. I think the Hon. Member is well aware of the fact that interest rates are three percentage points lower than they were when we came to office. He is also aware that they are about 1 or 1 and a quarter per cent lower than they were last October, and the interest rate went down today by about one-eighth of 1 per cent. We are making good progress.

SPREAD BETWEEN CANADIAN AND UNITED STATES INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, if this Party had committed any sins, September 4 of 1984 settled that. The Minister's Party is in power; it is the Government. The Minister knows that interest rates are too high.

I will repeat my question. Why does the Minister accept that the spread between the interest rate in Canada and the U.S. is at 275 basis points? This pushes the Canadian dollar too high and affects our competitiveness with the United States. Still the Minister is complaining about the large expenditures due to the debt servicing. Why does he not sit down with the Governor of the Bank of Canada and discuss this matter in order to try to get the rate of interest at a proper level?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I meet with the Governor of the Bank of Canada on an ongoing basis. We usually meet once a week, and talk on the phone at other times. There is very good consultation and dialogue between us at all times.

I have said in the past and I will say again that it is very important that we head off the problem of inflation and do not let ourselves fall into the mistakes of the past, the mistakes of the 1970s and the early 1980s when inflation got away from us—not us, from the previous Government. When inflation got out of control, we saw interest rates going to 20 per cent and 25 per cent. That is the problem we are trying to avoid. We have shown good progress, as I indicated, by getting rates down three percentage points since we came into office, and 1.5 or 1 and a quarter percentage points since last October.

The Hon. Member must look at the over-all economic performance of the country within this whole background. We have created 1,158,000 jobs. We are number one in economic growth of the G-7 countries, the major industrialized countries. We are number one in employment growth. We are number one in productivity.

EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I think Canadians are finally beginning to see the first real evidence of the costs of the proposed continental trade deal between Canada and the United States. On page 34 of the Fiscal Plan, hidden in the bowels of all these figures, there is the heading: "Changes due to major policy actions", half a billion dollars lost on tariff revenue because of the trade deal, half a billion dollars of increased revenue due to the gasoline tax increases. Every time someone fills up a tank, he will be paying another $5 in direct federal taxes, while half a billion dollars has gone out of the consumers' pockets to pay for the Prime Minister's trade folly.

Why is the Minister of Finance asking Canadian consumers to bear the costs of the ill-begotten initiative of this Government?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think there is a certain little something that the Hon. Member misses about this. Lower tariffs equal lower prices for consumers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Yes, we are seeing the real evidence of the free trade agreement with this Budget. We are seeing the first indications of lower prices to consumers. We are seeing the first indications, through those lower prices to consumers, of additional economic growth which will create more jobs in Canada. That is what the trade agreement means to Canada.

EFFECT OF AGREEMENT ON CONSUMERS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand a copy of the Minister's own document which says that over the life of the agreement, the 10-year phase-in, the best possible scenario is a 1 per cent reduction in the cost of living for consumers. Yet if we go ahead with this reduction, it will mean a $2.1 billion loss in revenue. If the Minister of Finance persists in raising taxes on Canadians, that will mean $220 out of every consumer's pocket, wiping out any benefits he has put in his document. It is all gone.

Why is it that once again the Government has hidden the real costs of the trade agreement? Is what it really intends to do to slap the consumers with the cost of its stupid scheme?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, how can we be hiding the figure if it is there in black and white in the document?

Mr. Axworthy: Didn't hear it in your speech. So you admit to it, do you?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member is playing cutesy with some numbers here, but I think he should look at the record of the Government which created 1,158,000 jobs over a three and a half year period. We will be increasing jobs as a result of the trade agreement and I am glad the Hon. Member acknowledges that there will be that increase in jobs. We will also be increasing—

Mr. Axworthy: Within the margin of error of the computer, Mike.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Perhaps the Hon. Member would let me answer questions, because I think Canadians who are watching television would want to hear the answers. We will also see from tax reform an increase in economic performance and jobs as a direct result of the Government's policy. There is a package here, a package of policies embodying trade, tax reform, regulatory reform, privatization, and training programs for individual Canadians, all of which are designed to produce a healthier economy, more jobs, more opportunities and a greater future for Canadians.

CORPORATE MINIMUM TAX PROPOSAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Since the Government was elected in 1984, all the tax changes up to and including yesterday's Budget have meant a net increase in taxes for the average family of just over $1,000. To quote the boss of the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister, he said, in somewhat of a different context, that politicians have options or choices.

Since the Minister of Finance had an option yesterday before he brought in his Budget to get additional revenue by increasing for the fourth time taxes on a litre of gasoline, or by bringing in a minimum tax on corporate profits like the U.S. already has, why did the Minister of Finance choose once again to attack the ordinary Canadian consumer?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about a corporate minimum tax. I think he must acknowledge the fact that tax reform will result in Canadian corporations paying $5 billion more in taxes in the next five years. That is a clear resolve and a clear shift of the tax burden from individual Canadians to the corporate community.

The Hon. Member is very well aware, as I have commented to him previously in the House, why a corporate minimum tax does not work. It is because—the Hon. Member is laughing. Over a cycle, corporations pay taxes, but if they lose in one year they expect to make up that loss from their profits in another year, and if they were not allowed to make those losses up they would find that they would be laying off people and some of them would go out of business. That is the point the Hon. Member does not recognize. It is the businesses in the regions of the country and the businesses that are the weakest which are the ones he wants to put out of business.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, what we recognize, what the U.S. Government recognizes, and what many European Governments recognize, is that when corporations make profits they ought to pay taxes just like everyone else.

EFFECT OF TAXES ON FAMILIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not comment on the figure I used this time. Will he confirm that, according to his officials' calculations and including the effects of yesterday's Budget, the average family in Canada is paying over $1,000 more every year compared with when the Conservatives were elected in 1984, and only the richest 2 per cent of Canadians will be paying less? Will he also explain to Canadians that that is the Conservative view of economic justice?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No, I will not confirm those because I think the Hon. Member is playing with numbers again. What I will confirm is that under tax reform 85 per cent of Canadians will be paying lower taxes. Some 90 per cent of Canadians over 65 will be paying lower taxes. Some 850,000 Canadians in low-income brackets will find they will not be paying any taxes. That is the result of tax reform.

SOCIAL JUSTICE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows perfectly well that since 1984, the average family has to pay more. That is the situation, as the Minister is well aware. Nevertheless, since the last election, the Conservatives have increased personal income tax, they have raised the tax on gas, they have increased sales tax, and at the same time wealthy Canadians have had their taxes reduced. Is that what the Conservative Party calls justice?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, many of those whom the Hon. Member would classify as wealthy Canadians are paying a lot more taxes as a result of tax reform. I will also tell him that since 1984 a lot of things have changed.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have seen interest rates drop three percentage points. If the jackals on the other side would just cool it a little bit they may learn something. That translates into $1,200 more take home pay for a person renewing a $50,000 mortgage. That is a clear increase in the capacity of Canadians to consume goods.

As well, 1,158,000 more people are working today. The Hon. Member has to acknowledge that there is a package of programs here which are designed to work, and they work better than the Hon. Member said in November of 1984 and May of 1985. He knows what is coming. The Hon. Member said Conservative Party policies were going to result in 200,000 people losing their jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Instead, 1,158,000 more are working today.

REMOVAL OF INFLATION PROTECTION FROM TAX SYSTEM

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. His decision in 1985 to remove full inflation protection from the tax system built in not only an automatic tax increase every year, amounting this year to $750 million, but also a decrease in benefits used mainly by young parents with young children and slender incomes. Can the Minister justify that?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is another example of how the opposition Parties pull out one element of an economic package and do not look at the over-all objective. I think the over-all result is very clear. I was in the Hon. Member's position in the previous Parliament. I noticed that Canada was number seven among the Group of Seven industrialized countries in economic growth. We were number seven in employment performance. We were number seven in productivity. We are now number one in those categories.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PAYMENT OF TAXES BY FAMILIES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's policies mean that a one-earner family with an income of $30,000 and two children will this year be paying an additional $1,200 in taxes. What has that got to do with the figures he just gave us about being number seven or whatever?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Tell her whatever, Mike.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in tax reform we have a couple of one-earner families with two children under 18, earning $20,000, and they are going to pay $585 less in taxes. At $25,000 it would be $710 less tax. At $30,000 it would be $590 less tax.

The other point I should have made in reply to the previous question is that we have made some adjustments. We introduced a refundable sales tax credit for low-income earners. We increased the size of the child tax credit. We accelerated payment of that credit so that people do not have to go to tax discounters. We increased the spousal allowance. We brought in a child care program which increases the child tax credit for low-income earners. Hon. Members do not like to hear it all. We have also increased allowances for veterans.

There is a wide range of policies we brought in to offset some of the impact of the changes we have made.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

REGIONAL DISPARITIES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. He just mentioned jobs. I do not think we have any disagreement with that. He has cited the record. However, I think that—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Good!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Wait for it.

Ms. McLaughlin: However, the Minister will have to acknowledge that there has not been a fair regional distribution of those jobs over the past four years. Given that eight out of 10 of the provinces still experience unemployment equal to the 1981-83 recession levels, why did the Minister not introduce measures to decrease regional disparity and increase employment throughout the regions?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Oh, a reversal of Cassidy!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, something was handed to me before Question Period which I was quite shocked by—

Some Hon. Members: The polls!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —because it was implied that it was something I said. I quote: "The top priorities would be to keep the economy running well in areas where it is running well now and, generally speaking, that means central Canada. It is particularly true in the automotive industry."

I looked at that and said that does not sound like me. Who said it? I looked more closely and—Ed Broadbent said it!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: Deny it, Ed.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yukon.

Mr. Charest: You better talk to her, Ed.

Mr. Speaker: I think I am obliged to advise Hon. Members that in the last several days I have received complaints from both sides concerning the use of Hon. Members' names instead of addressing them as they ought to be addressed in this Chamber. I ask all Hon. Members to comply.

• (1440)

REGIONAL UNEMPLOYMENT—USE OF CORPORATE TAXES

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, one thing we know the Minister does not want to talk about is jobs in the regions. We can understand why, because since 1984 the Government has cut back regional development by $3 billion.

Is the Minister saying that he is happy with unemployment at 19.6 per cent in Newfoundland, 11.4 per cent in B.C., 9.7 per cent in Quebec, and 13.7 per cent in New Brunswick? Why not use tax revenue from minimum corporate taxes on profit-making corporations to create jobs in the regions?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I apologize. It was the Hon. Member for Oshawa who said that the top priority would be to keep the economy running well in central Canada.

We have to get a better perspective on how we are dealing with these regional problems. Canadians have to learn that politicians should not be speaking out of both sides of their mouths. The New Democratic Party voted against $127 million going into the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Riis: It's dishonest to say that.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): They voted against $101 million going into the new Western Diversification Fund.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): They voted against $456 million going into the Regional Industrial Expansion Program.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Ms. Mitchell: You don't care about answering the question.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): What about Sinc Stevens' law bill?

Mr. Broadbent: That's why you're at 27 per cent, that kind of answer.

FINANCE

CORPORATIONS—NON-PAYMENT OF TAXES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance as well and I, too, wish to quote the record. The record shows that since the Government came to office in 1984 individuals have paid tax increases of $29 billion whereas corporations paid only $2.2 billion. Furthermore, the increase in gasoline tax brings the cumulative increase to 23 cents a gallon. That is the record of the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Dingwall: We will do the same with the Minister of Finance as we did with the Hon. Member for St. John's West. We will boot him out.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member will put his supplemental question.

Mr. Dingwall: Would the Minister of Finance explain to Canadians the fairness of hosing Canadians as he has been doing since he came to office, and why he allows 60,000 profitable corporations to go on without paying any taxes? Explain the fairness.

Mr. Foster: Hang your head and resign.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said a lot of things in his preamble and I will not describe the accuracy of them. However, I will just draw attention to the fact that the Hon. Member represents a riding in Cape Breton where a number of the companies which are marginally profitable are not paying tax because they enjoy the benefits of the Cape Breton Investment Tax Credit.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Is the Hon. Member saying that we should withdraw the Cape Breton Investment Tax Credit? Is he saying that we should put in some form of minimum tax which will nullify the benefits of the Cape Breton Investment Tax Credit? Is he saying that we should do this and remove the incentive which has created upwards of 1,000 jobs in Cape Breton for the people whom he purports to represent?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for a short supplemental.

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance should have the courage of his convictions and admit that unemployment in Cape Breton this month was 21 per cent as a result of his policies.

The Canadian Automobile Association said: "Canadians are now paying more than 50 per cent more than Americans for gasoline". The Canadian price is 53 cents a litre and the American price is 35 cents a litre. The Association says: "Clearly, transportation-related industries in Canada will be unable to compete with their American counterparts as we enter a free trade era".

I ask this elitist Minister of Finance to explain to the people of Canada why he discriminates against the transportation-related industries in the country? Explain, Mr. Finance Minister.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, many of the companies—

Mr. Tobin: You're running on empty, Mike.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Perhaps the Hon. Member's colleague would allow me to answer the question.

A large proportion of the industry about which the Hon. Member speaks uses diesel fuel. The provision of yesterday did not include diesel fuel.

The Hon. Member may cherry-pick if he likes, but the key question which he must answer is why, under this Government, 1,158,000 jobs have been created, and why we are number one among the major industrialized countries while, when he was sitting on this side of the House supporting the previous Government, we were number seven.

SETTING OF INTEREST RATE POLICY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is about a just interest rate policy and is directed to the Minister of Finance, who apparently is not listening to a growing number of Canadians who are upset about the increase in interest rates.

If the Minister choses to ignore my Party's advice, perhaps he will listen to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers Association and the Premier of Quebec who have also advised the Minister to ask the Bank of Canada to lower interest rates in this country.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member is now quoting the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. This is probably the first time he has ever done that.

I commented on this question in the House on Monday as well as today. I have said that it is important that we acknowledge the impact which inflation can have on an economy if it gets out of hand. We are trying to stop the increase in inflation before it gets out of hand by getting inflation down, so that we do not cause the problems which led to the very high interest rates in the 1970s and early 1980s. That is the fundamental reason.

I point out to the Hon. Member, as I have done in the past, that interest rates are 3 percentage points lower than they were when we came into office They are 1.5 percentage points below what they were last October, and today the Bank of Canada rate is down about an eighth of a point.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have no problem quoting the Chamber of Commerce when what it says makes sense for the manufacturing economy of the country.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER DIRECT BANK OF CANADA TO REDUCE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, why is the Minister taking a stand of allowing interest rates to go up when the rate of inflation in Canada has been stable for some four years and when the Canadian inflation rate has actually fallen below that of the United States?

Why is he taking this stand when the high interest rates are raising the value of the dollar to the point where it has put us at a 10 per cent disadvantage in terms of sales to the United States and other markets because of the increase in the value of the dollar?

Why will the Minister not take his responsibility and direct the Bank of Canada to bring interest rates down and keep them at a reasonable level, rather than allowing them to go up as they are now?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member wants to stand there and wave his magic wand and say "This shall happen". The Hon. Member ignores something which he has probably never understood—the market-place. What is causing the increase in the level of the Canadian dollar is the fact that there is a good amount of investment capital coming into the country because people see this as a good place to invest. People see that the economy is going to be stronger.

Mr. Axworthy: Takeover money.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry is blabbering away. I want to draw to his attention that from 1976 to 1986 the dollar went straight down. Since we have been able to get our policies introduced and to get them to take hold, we are starting to see some strength in the Canadian dollar. That is a direct reflection of the strength of the Canadian economy, which is a direct reflection of the strength of the Government of Canada's economic policies.

IMMIGRATION

SITUATION OF LONG-TERM ILLEGAL IMMIGRANTS IN TORONTO

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Immigration. The Minister will know that there are thousands of long-term illegal immigrants living and working in Toronto whose children are not attending school for fear of detection and deportation. The Minister will also know that many of them are subject to intimidation, abuse, and blackmail by unscrupulous immigration consultants.

• (1450)

Will the Minister tell the House what criteria exist to land these immigrants, what measures are being taken to prevent their children from becoming illiterate, and what progress he can report on the prosecution of unscrupulous immigration consultants?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for bringing this very serious matter to the attention of the House and for the dedicated manner in which he has been consulting with the concerned citizens.

It is an unfortunate situation for which the parents are responsible. They are here illegally.

We have a mechanism for those people who have been here a sufficient length of time whereby, on the basis of how well they have been established, their motivation, and adaptability, together we can regularize their situation on a case by case basis, using humane and compassionate criteria. If they are accepted under those guidelines, of course the children are automatically accepted for school.

As far as the unscrupulous counsellors are concerned, every incident that is brought to our attention is immediately referred to the RCMP for investigation. There are presently six cases before the courts and it is certainly inappropriate to comment on those cases.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

BILL C-72—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Alarming reports from the Tory caucus concerning the official languages legislation, Bill C-72, are being circulated in the press and other media. All too many Conservatives are calling for the Bill to be withdrawn.

On the one hand there is the Back-bench Committee demanding that the Bill be killed while, on the other hand, some of the Quebec Tory back-benchers have threatened to pick up their marbles, and go back to their first love, the PQ Party, if any changes are made to the Bill.

Will the Minister clarify the situation? He is quoted in the press today as saying that he will review proposed changes to the Bill while, two paragraphs later, saying: "No changes will be made to the Bill". Will the Minister tell us exactly where the Government stands on Bill C-72?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, when I introduced this Bill I pointed out that I was representing the Government's view and, I believe, the view of the vast majority of Members of this Parliament. I pointed out that this Bill was the essence of fairness and one which represented tolerance in our country and the best instincts that Canadians should have with respect to the question of official languages. That is the position we take as a Party and as a Government.

We do in fact consult with our caucus members with respect to concerns they have about legislation. We should not be ashamed of this. I am quite happy to defend this legislation and discuss it with our caucus members.

My colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister, who is also President of the Treasury Board, has a very significant role in the operation of the Public Service and delivery of services in Canada.

As far as I and the Government of Canada are concerned, this Bill is a fair Bill and I trust that it will receive the overwhelming support of Members of Parliament in this House.

RAPID ADOPTION OF BILL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it is quite true that the Minister has received the support of official language minority groups, the Leader of the Opposition and many other groups and individuals, but there is one group that is digging in its heels, a group of dinosaurs in the Conservative Caucus which does not want the Bill to be passed.

My question is this: Is the Government, is Cabinet prepared to go ahead and proceed with the Bill as quickly as possible, or is it going to give in to pressures and agree with its backbench dinosaurs who want to destroy official languages in this country?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I find the terminology used by the Hon. Member unhelpful. If there are improvements that can be made to the legislation, naturally we are prepared to listen to suggestions from all sides of the House. That should not preclude members of the government Party from having an opportunity to make the same observations. The Hon. Member himself has some suggestions that he thinks would be improvements to the Bill. Are we to close our minds to his suggestions at all?

Mr. Gauthier: No.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He says no. I can only tell him that we in this Party and this Government are proud of the initiative in this legislation. When the Hon. Member tells me that there are 25 Members of the Liberal Party who want to speak on it, it does not sound to me like he is very anxious to rush this matter through Parliament.

FOOD AND AGRICULTURE ORGANIZATION

ACCUSATIONS MADE AGAINST CANADA

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. There are reports in many of the nation's papers today that Canada has been criticized by the Information Officer of the FAO for delaying payment of our assessed contribution to the FAO. The report also indicates that Canada has engaged in character assassination during the recent election campaign for the new Director General of the FAO.

The FAO plays an important role in addressing world hunger. The starving in Ethiopia are one example of the critical needs which must be addressed. Will the Minister explain this delay in payment of our contribution and the accusation of character assassination?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have seen those reports in Canadian newspapers which, in the case I have seen, was written by a very reputable Canadian reporter. I think that is extraordinary behaviour on the part of an official of a United Nations organization. Various Canadian Governments, including this one and our predecessor, have been very concerned about the management of the Food and Agriculture Organization. This kind of incident demonstrates exactly why we are concerned.

I have written Dr. Saouma this morning indicating that I expect his apology.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

STATEMENT OF MEMBER FOR WINNIPEG—ASSINIBOINE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. He and the Minister of Justice are aware that our party and the Liberal Party very strongly support Bill C-72 dealing with official languages which was introduced by the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine was reported as saying that the bill will be referred to a committee of the Conservative Party, my question is this: Could the Deputy Prime Minister give the House and the Canadian people the assurance that such will not be the case, because it would be a cause for great concern to our party and most Canadians.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there is no committee as the Hon. Member has suggested. I have undertaken to meet with Members who have expressed some concerns about certain aspects of the Bill.

The Minister of Justice has very clearly outlined the position of the Government. If improvements can be made, whether they come from this side of the House or that side of the House, they will certainly be entertained.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MEMBER FOR WINNIPEG—ASSINIBOINE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, just to be precise, I ask the question not just as a Canadian but as a western Member of Parliament. In light of the fact that the Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine has said the Bill "will be completely redrafted", I want assurances from the Deputy Prime Minister that the Bill will not be watered down, will not be redrafted, weakened or gutted in any way.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has been a Member of the House for a long time and knows that once a Bill is introduced in the House it becomes the property of the House and cannot be redrafted.

Mr. Andre: The question is out of order.

Mr. Mazankowski: Really, the question is out of order.

As I stated, if there are improvements that can be made to the Bill, whether they come from this side of the House or that side, of course they will be entertained.

QUÉBEC REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT AND NEEDS OF EAST MONTREAL

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, Mr. Gérard D. Lévesque, the Quebec Minister of Finance, indicated that he was very disappointed with the budget presented by the Federal Government because there was nothing in it for families and especially for regional development in Quebec. Could the Minister of Finance explain to the Canadian people why he failed to announce anything concrete in his budget to promote regional development in Quebec and to meet the needs of Montreal East? Why no announcement?

An Hon. Member: Good question!

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe that regional development spending has increased from $490 million to $807 million since we came to office. Furthermore, my colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology, has begun a consultation process in which he is consulting with people in various regions of the Province of Quebec to understand how a program specifically targeted to Quebec could be designed. This is taking place now and should be completed shortly.

QUERY WHY GOVERNMENT CHOSE TO ATTACK WHOLE BODY OF CANADIAN TAXPAYERS RATHER THAN THE RICH

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Minister of Finance's reply will not satisfy his Quebec counterpart. Moreover, the latter deplored the fact that Quebec consumers will have to pay $70 million more because of this gasoline tax increase. The Minister is well aware that over the past four years, as my Hon. friend said a while ago, he has managed to beat all gasoline tax increase records: 23 cents a gallon! Which means that working men and women will have to pay $275 more for gasoline. Could the Minister explain to us why, instead of taxing the rich, he has chosen to tax the gasoline used by working men and women, thereby affecting also poor families using our public transit systems? Why did he choose to attack the majority of Canadian taxpayers instead of the rich?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about records. This Government has beaten all records in job creation. There have been 64,000 jobs created in the Hon. Member's city, the city of Montreal, 64,000 in a 12-month period. That is progress.

Mr. Rossi: Answer the question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is getting the economy working, and it is getting the economy working through a broad economic program—

Mr. Rossi: Answer the question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —that governs a number of elements of economic policy—

Ms. Copps: Bring back Crosbie.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —which probably is over the head of the Hon. Member.

Ms. Copps: Come on!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my hon. colleague, the Deputy Government House Leader, for the usual statement of Government business. In particular, I would like him to tell us exactly what day second reading of Bill C-72 will resume. Also, could he tell us what his plans are for calling Bill C-30 on National Parks?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that today we will continue the Budget debate. Tomorrow, following discussions with both House Leaders, we will commence debate on the Borrowing Bill, Bill C-109.

There will be the week's recess, and when we return on Monday, February 22, the Budget debate will continue, with the first vote possible, if in fact the Opposition does force a vote. Tuesday, February 23, we will have the Budget debate and continue on throughout that week.

With specific reference to Bill C-72, it would be of assistance to the Government if my hon. friend could tell me just how many more speakers the Opposition has—

Mr. Gauthier: We have only had four.

Mr. Lewis: —and we will then continue with that. I will have to check on Bill C-30 to see exactly where we are on that. I would also indicate to the House that the Government expects to table the 1988-89 Main Estimates on Tuesday, February 23.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, is the Government in a position to give any indication when it might call Bill C-30, the National Parks Act? I will get back to my hon. friend as to the number of speakers. We have had only four so far. I do not see any reason why the information he seeks would prevent him from saying whether Bill C-72 will be called again for second reading on Wednesday, Thursday or Friday of the week we are back.

Mr. Lewis: With respect to both questions, first, I will have to check with the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) vis-à-vis Bill C-30. With respect to Bill C-72, the week we return we expect to have a full and complete Budget debate, keeping the debate all within that week, and thereafter we will discuss and co-operate with members of the Opposition on the business of the day.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with the other Parties with respect to going back to Presenting Reports from Standing Committees. I received the consent of both the other two Parties and, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to present—

Mr. Gauthier: You have to have unanimous consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I presume there is unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

STRIKING—FIFTIETH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling the Fiftieth Report of the Striking Committee. That shows how busy the Striking Committee is.

If the House gives its consent, Mr. Speaker, I intend to move concurrence in this report later this day.

EMERGENCIES ACT—PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the legislative committee, I would like to report Bill C-76, an Act to provide for emergency preparedness and to make a related amendment to the National Defence Act, to the House.

STRIKING

CONCURRENCE IN FIFTIETH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I would like at this time to move that the fiftieth report of the Striking Committee presented to the House earlier this day, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Mr. Garneau (p. 12860).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Prior to the adjournment at 1.30, the Chair received a subamendment by Mr. Cassidy, seconded by Mr. Riis, which the Chair does find to be in order. It reads as follows:

> That the amendment to the motion of the Minister of Finance be amended by adding immediately thereafter the following words:
> "and this House further condemns the Government for introducing a budget that ignores the real economic needs of the country in which over 1.1 million Canadians are unemployed and eight out of ten provinces and the territories continue to experience employment and income disparities equal to those of the 1981-83 recession; for increasing the tax burden of average Canadian families to a level of $1,125 over the 1984 level through yet another increase in gas taxes; for failing to bring fairness to the tax system through the elimination of costly tax breaks and the introduction of a corporate minimum tax that would ensure fair and regular tax payment from those 60,000 profitable corporations that will pay no tax following Conservative tax reform; for maintaining a policy of high interest rates begun by previous Liberal Governments; and for failing to introduce a system of universal child care that would assist average Canadian families and create jobs.

The debate will continue on the subamendment.

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, after hearing the subamendment read, I would like to suggest that I may have something to say about some of those comments and mis-suggestions the subamendment sets forth.

The Budget debate provides us with an opportunity to examine not only the Budget, the financial reports and working papers of the Government, but it also gives us an opportunity to examine what the Budget represents, namely, the course of action and policy that we as a Government have implemented and will continue to implement.

The Budget presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is a status report of the record of the Conservative Government in terms of its economic performance as well as an outline of our plan to meet economic responsibilities and opportunities in the future.

What does that status report say? It tells us that our economy performs well with the Conservative Government, that business performs well and that we can create an environment to ensure that our ideas and our workers are competitive in world markets.

The Opposition says we should have made this a more glamorous budget, that we should have brought in many changes. We have no reason to introduce sweeping budget provisions in an economic climate that is performing exceptionally well. We do not need to change something that is obviously working. The fact that it is working is reflected in the unprecedented statistics on job creation in this country. Since the last election a total of 1,156,000 jobs have been created. Some 53,000 of those jobs are in my Province of Alberta. More than half of the total jobs are for women. Some 85 per cent of the jobs are full time. In fact, between 1984 and 1986 more jobs were created in Canada than in France, Germany, Italy or the United Kingdom, countries that have more than twice our population.

The record is indeed impressive. It is more impressive when we consider the reaction of the Opposition to previous Budgets, economic policies and implementing legislation of the Government. The Members of the NDP have shown through their voting record that they are philosophically opposed to repeating our strong economic performance should they ever be elected to government. They voted against the repeal of the National Energy Program. They voted against the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption for farmers. They voted against the expenditure of $92 million for drought relief for western farmers. They voted against providing the Western Diversification Fund with an initial $100 million. They voted against legislation to compensate the uninsured depositors of the two western banks. They proposed amendments to the Income Tax Act to block our establishing a minimum tax on upper income earners and to block our establishing sales tax credits for low income earners.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is important for you to know, Mr. Speaker, and I do not think there was any intent on the part of the Hon. Member to mislead, but the point that the Hon. Member fails to make in terms of the NDP voting was that we were voting against that package because it included the moneys for the lawyer for the Hon. Member for York—Peel (Mr. Stevens). That was the only way that we could bring attention to this critical matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not think it is clearly a point of order but rather a matter for debate.

Mr. Dorin: The fact remains that Members of the NDP have voted against virtually any measure that has attempted to reduce the deficit. They have voted against measures which would have helped regions in the country to develop, not just Ontario. They are obviously concerned about the interests of Oshawa because leader comes from that city.

After the 1984 economic statement the NDP and the Liberals estimated that between 50,000 and 100,000 jobs would be lost. After the May, 1985, Budget they predicted a loss of 125,000. Clearly those predictions were wrong. Not only were they wrong, they were out by over 1 million.

We can assume that the predictions and the rhetoric that we heard in the speeches this morning are more of the same attempts to suggest that they do not believe that the private sector, if encouraged by strong economic indicators and solid government policies, will expand. Members of the Liberal Party and Members of the NDP seem to believe that the only employer in the country is the Government. They seem unable to accept the strong economic growth we have enjoyed as a result of Government fiscal responsibility.

There have been increases in the number of jobs in all parts of Canada. Employment has increased in every single province. Employment has not increased to the levels that we would like in some regions, but every single province has seen an increase in the number of jobs.

Although they formed the Government for an extended period of time, the Liberals did not manage to come close to the kind of record we have had during the time that we have been in office. We created an average of 28,900 jobs every month between 1984 and 1987. During a comparable period under the reign of the Liberals the average was 7,709 jobs. Gross inflows of direct foreign investment doubled between 1984 and 1987. Housing starts last year were at their highest level since 1977. The inflation rate has been in the 4 per cent range, the most stable price environment since 1971. Obviously, the economic performance is very solid.

I mentioned that this Budget is a status report on the effectiveness of the Government's economic policy. But it is also an outline for our intention to stick with those policies. It is also a statement on how we reconcile all that we would like to do with all that we can realistically afford. That is where we are different from the opposition Parties. We draw a distinction between the desirable and the practical. We recognize that everything has a price. In some cases, we are willing to pay the price; in others we are not.

We raise money without being unduly onerous. We spend money without being frivolous. We develop policy without being unduly intrusive.

It is this difference in approach that makes this Budget a realistic effort to balance the needs of the country with the need for fiscal responsibility. In fact, fiscal responsibility has, since the election of the Government, finally become part of the process of making Budgets. It should have been a consideration all along, but it was not.

The previous Government saw fit to increase the deficit to the point where the flexibility of the Government was severely restricted. It attempted to solve the problem by ignoring the source of it. Increasing the deficit allowed it to provide the programs it wanted. Presumably the NDP would adopt a similar strategy if it ever had the opportunity to do so. The opposition Parties have opposed virtually every measure taken by the Government to reduce the deficit. They have called for new expenditures which will lead to higher deficits which will lead inevitably to higher interest rates even though they hide behind a cloak which suggests that they are seeking lower rates. If most Government spending goes to debt servicing, then it is ill equipped to respond to international pricing situations, to increase social programs or to handle internal administrative difficulties.

In 1984 the federal deficit was $38 billion, up from $14 billion just three years before. The national debt was growing at a rate of 26 per cent per year. If we had continued to pile public debt up at that rate, it would be more than $100 billion higher than it is today. But we stopped that trend. In fact, we reversed it.

For the first time in the post-war period the deficit has fallen for four years in a row. There are those who would say that we have not gone far enough, and I might be included among those. There are also those who would say that Government spending is too high,and I might be included among those as well. No, we have not yet solved the problem of deficit Budgets but we have been addressing the problem. We are committed to fiscal principles which bring a reasonable balance to the financial situation.

We have set out a plan and we are sticking to it, which is far more than either of the Parties opposite have proposed or implemented. Because we are reducing the deficit we are increasing our funding flexibility and our ability to respond to the needs of Canadians. We set priorities that respond to the needs of Canadians in areas such as child care, science and technology research funding, and economic diversification in the regions of Canada. The economic and social record of the Conservative Government is clear. What we have done for the economy speaks for itself. This Budget and a number of fairly recent policy announcements have made our plan for the future very clear. Just as the Budget generally reflects our commitment to balancing fiscal responsibility with social responsibility, it also confirms our commitment to meet the challenges of the future. It sets out a plan for the future on the issues that we feel should be given a priority.

Child care is an important issue, both for its social and its financial implications.

Ms. Mitchell: You are doing nothing for child care.

Mr. Dorin: Any number of options are available, from doing nothing to implementing the NDP's $11 billion universal system. The first option overlooks social responsibility. We are committed to full participation in the labour force.

Ms. Mitchell: Why don't you read our report? You might get the facts straight.

Mr. Dorin: —especially during a period of economic growth. I hear the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). I read the report of the standing committee of which she was a part.

Ms. Mitchell: Does it say anything about $11 billion?

Mr. Dorin: I have supported the report. Sitting here in front of me is my colleague, the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher) who was a member of that committee. It was a very fine report. I accept the principles and the commitment of the majority of Members who wrote that report.

The fact of the matter is that the second option, the option presented by the New Democratic Party, overlooks fiscal responsibility. Even more important than money it ignores that it is the right and the responsibility of Canadian parents to choose the way that they want to raise their children.

We have introduced a policy which reconciles the social needs for child care and parental choice with fiscal responsibility.

There are three components of that child care strategy. They are direct tax assistance to parents, federal-provincial funding, and a research fund. This strategy will give two kinds of assistance to parents with children under the age of six years.

First, those with receipted child care expenses can take advantage of an increased income tax deduction. Second, the refundable child tax credit will be increased by $200 per year for children under six years of age. This is a 40 per cent increase and will benefit about 75 per cent of families with young children. Although the delivery and operation of child care services is the responsibility of provincial Governments, the federal Government has committed $3 billion over the next seven years. We believe that if parents choose to place their children in day care, we should help to make those spaces available.

We have also created a research fund. There must be better ways of educating and caring for young children, and the fund is dedicated to finding them. How we raise our children now will have a great deal to do with how they serve and prosper in our community in the future. We provided funding to encourage the study and development of new child care services and arrangements. This addresses the short-term problems of women who want to continue in or enter the workforce. It also addresses the long-term problem of how we will provide for our children and educate them to function in a world that we cannot yet see.

Preparing ourselves as best we can for future challenges and opportunities underlies not only this but other government priorities. For example, we know that science and technology will play a critical role in our future development and prosperity. Our ability to compete in future markets will require the efficient use of technology. We have introduced a program focusing on industrial innovation and technological diffusion, the development of strategic technologies, and the effective management of federal science and technology resources. We have also refined the special tax treatment that research and development receives.

To ensure that we are prepared both technologically and socially for the changes that will be brought, we have made a $1.3 billion commitment over the next five years for university centres of excellence and science and engineering scholarships. The centres will establish networks of researchers and scientists across the country to conduct world-class research. The scholarships will assist an estimated 2,500 university students in science, engineering, and related disciplines.

This funding is important for several reasons. Science and technology does not only affect engineers and scientists. Whether we are consumers who purchase devices to make our work easier, whether we work in a plant that assembles those devices, or whether we are in an industry that relies on technology for production or extraction, we are affected by technology.

Science and technology will also determine how we compete in our future trading markets. Our products and their efficient manufacture will require ongoing improvement and innovation. If we are not the originators of those innovations then we risk losing our competitive edge by having to buy them from others. We are supplementing our Government's spending with a realization that, if we do not encourage science and technology in the short term, we will pay dearly over the long term.

We are also addressing a problem that should have been addressed long ago, namely, economic diversification in the regions of Canada. We will help westerners, and others—but I speak particularly about westerners because I am a westerner—use science, planning, innovation, and talent to better balance their economy.

The West has enormous wealth and vitality founded on the resources of agriculture, forestry, mining, and energy. However, it remains vulnerable to the uncertain demands of international markets and the fluctuation of prices for its products. This leads to boom and bust cycles which have had damaging effects upon our employment growth and social stability.

The Government has established an investment fund of $1.2 billion to encourage developments of strategic importance to the West. We have made a solid commitment to the western economy and westerners. In my riding there are many projects of which I am aware that have either been announced or will have imminent announcements.

We have also made a solid commitment to taxpayers. This Budget reflects that. Now that the first stage of the tax reform process has been completed it will mean that 85 per cent of all households will pay less income tax, and 90 per cent of seniors will pay less tax. Tax reform will lower over-all tax rates and broaden the tax base. This is the fairest way of ensuring that taxpayers in similar circumstances are treated in a fair manner.

The benefits of tax reform will be felt by most Canadians, first through lower personal rates and again in the form of an enhanced economy. The average tax reduction per household is $490. This money can be spent or invested, either of which will help the economy.

These policies show a clear understanding of the implications of government action, and an understanding of what makes the economy work. We do not accept the NDP solution of "spend, spend, spend", or the Liberal solution of "talk, talk, ignore". Rather, we examine the problems, we look at the means of solving them, and we act in a realistic, responsible manner.

Some are saying that this is a "nothing" Budget. From one point of view that is true. The Minister of Finance has taken the politics out of financial management. For those who are seeking hand-outs, goodies, media events, and winners and losers, indeed this is a "nothing" Budget. The glitz and gloss, the smoke and mirrors, too often used in the past to deflect attention from the Government's economic performance, are removed. For those seeking an accounting of the Government's economic and fiscal record and its outline for the future in the broader sense, they can take satisfaction that this Budget presented by the Minister of Finance achieves all of that and more. It presents a solid record and a reasonable and a responsible plan for the future.

The Budget shows that both our record and our plan are strong. Members on this side of the House can be proud of that record. Those Members on the other side would applaud if they could go beyond the narrow partisan interests and rhetoric. Most of all, this is a record and a plan that all Canadians can look to with satisfaction and with confidence in our abilities to respond to future challenges and opportunities.

Mr. Riis: I have a very quick question for my hon. friend. While I do not particularly agree with anything that he had to say, I do want to pose a question to him on a matter that he referred to indirectly on a variety of occasions, that is, the 60,000 corporations in this country.

There are 60,000 profitable corporations in Canada that last year paid no income tax whatsoever, in spite of their profits. For example, Cadillac Fairview, had profits of $95 million, and it paid no income tax. Union Carbide of Canada had profits of $28 million, and it paid no income tax. Brascan of Canada had profits of $187 million and it paid no income tax. Alcan-Aluminum had profits of $220 million and it paid no income tax. Power Financial Corporation had profits of $132 million and it paid no income tax. I could go on and read 60,000 of those corporations, Mr. Speaker.

In terms of the fact that once again in this Budget Canadians got nailed by an increase in the gas tax, which over the last four years of Conservative Government has cost the average family an increase of $1,100 in new taxes of one kind or another, does the Hon. Member personally believe that it is right to have a tax system in this country where 60,000 profitable corporations year after year get away without paying a single cent in income tax? As a matter of fact, many of those corporations actually get tax credits.

Mr. Dorin: In response to the question of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), I can say that he has had a lot of experience on the finance committee. Part of the time that he was there we were members together on that committee. The Hon. Member knows very well that in many ways what he says, while technically could be argued to be correct, by and large is incorrect.

For example, the Hon. Member will know that of those 60,000 supposedly profitable corporations, the largest number are farmers and small businesses. The reason for that is that they are in cyclical businesses. One year they will have a profit of $100,000, and the next year a loss of $100,000. We allow them to average those profits and losses.

The Hon. Member will know that over time they all pay a share of tax, but in any given year it is correct that a corporation may have a paper profit because perhaps for three years prior they have had major losses and they may be on the brink of financial disaster.

Is the Hon. Member suggesting that we go to those small businesses, or any business that is on the brink of financial disaster—

Mr. Riis: Brascan?

Mr. Dorin: —and turn to them and say, "Now that you have finally had a good year after five years of losses we are going to put you out of business by taking that little bit that you have made, put your employees out of business, and put you under"? Is that what the Hon. Member wants?

Ms. Mitchell: The Hon. Member needs to check his facts. He stated that the NDP was proposing the spending of $11 billion on child care. That is absolutely ridiculous. He is quoting the Katie Cooke report. It is time that he read our report. Does the Member realize that the NDP proposal for child care would have cost less than the Conservatives' proposal for child care and our proposal would have produced many more licensed quality child care spaces in a short period? For example, we would have put in about $600 million per year and over five years this would have achieved 200,000 spaces. The Government's proposal is to spend $5.4 billion, not $600 million a year, but $5.4 billion over seven years. It would take seven years to create 200,000 spaces which is the number of spaces that are created without the Government getting involved in the first place. I think the Member is quite uninformed about child care proposals.

As far as the Budget is concerned, does the Member not think it would make more sense, rather than having a child care expense deduction doubled which benefits only wealthier people who pay taxes and does nothing for low-income people or average income people who pay no tax, to take the lost revenue, which is something like $270 million this year because of the child care tax in the Budget, and put that into day-care spaces? Why not agree with that? It is crazy to say the Conservatives' proposal for child care is positive. It will not create anywhere near the number of spaces needed.

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, I think I can answer the Member's question fairly simply. The Member is correct that the $11 billion figure is the one that evolves out of the Katie Cooke report. Nonetheless the models—

Ms. Mitchell: Why do you say it was the NDP?

Mr. Dorin: I was going to say in answer to her question, if the Member can wait a moment, that nonetheless the models are essentially the same.

Ms. Mitchell: They are not.

Mr. Dorin: We can presume that the predictions of what the NDP would spend are about in line with what the New Democrats have said in the past when they predicted that 100,000 jobs would be lost while one million have been created. We can take a grain of caution when we hear that the New Democrats are predicting that they can operate this program for less than what the Government has proposed.

In fact, what the NDP has proposed is a state run and operated system, universal, but the Government chooses where to send your children, the Government chooses who will train them and how to train them and what the standards will be. I want to have the right, as a parent, to choose whether or not to take advantage of day care and to choose whether or not to have a neighbour or a friend look after my children. I want the right to choose whether to go to a private centre or a non-profit centre. Those choices are allowed in the proposal put forward by our Government. They are not options allowed under the NDP version. Under our proposal they are allowed because we offer a tax assisted benefit to the users through increasing the amount of deduction allowed. We also offer an increase in the refundable child tax credit—and it is refundable—to people with small children. It is a program and a policy which addresses the needs of young children and people with young children but it does it in a way which will allow people to choose what form of child care they prefer.

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Speaker, I was listening to the comments of the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin). He mentioned briefly the regional growth of jobs. Perhaps he could refer to page 30 of Canada's Economic Prospects where the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said:

> There was also much greater regional balance in employment growth in 1987 . . . As a result, the unemployment rate has declined in every province, particularly in some of the Atlantic provinces and in British Columbia.

There is an accompanying graph on page 30. Would the Hon. Member comment on regional growth and jobs?

Second, being from an oil producing region, perhaps the Hon. Member would tell us what is the effect of the resource allowance calculation which has been taken off oil mining plants. As the Hon. Member knows, being a chartered accountant, it had a double dip with the write-off of both the resource allowance and the royalties.

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, I will not take a long time to answer the first question which is a relatively complicated one. As the Member mentions, the Minister in his documents attached to the Budget provided a graph which shows the growth of jobs across the country in percentage terms. There are reasons why they vary. We know that the industrial part of the country has done well. We know that the resource producing sections have not done as well but they are now recovering. Certainly in my own province the oil industry has come back, not as much as we would like it to, but we are seeing new developments. Last week there was one announced in forestry. There are more on the way. We are starting to see some of the positive effects shifting to the regions, and I pointed out that every province has seen increased employment over the last three years.

In response to the Hon. Member's second question, I have not had an opportunity yet to evaluate the exact impact of the tax change, but the underlying principle of what the Member is saying is that it puts oil producers who produce oil from oil sands and those types of projects essentially on the same basis as oil producers who produce from conventional oil sources, regular oil wells. That is the underlying principle and there are some technical changes in that regard which I have not yet examined. I could advise the Hon. Member later if he is still interested.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin).

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, today we are once again discussing the Budget that was brought down yesterday. It has brought us more taxes, more debt, nothing for the average Canadian, and a makeshift child care program for our families.

[English]

It is Budget day once again. It is time to look at which promises the federal Government has kept and which promises it has broken. One thing the federal Government has done is to allocate $5.4 billion to a new national strategy for child care. This sounds very impressive, but if we look closely at the program we see that the Conservative Government has actually cheated the less privileged children in Canada. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised affordable quality child care for all Canadian children. On December 3, 1987 he broke that promise.

[Translation]

Today, if we take a closer look at this strategy, we see no improvement in maternity benefits, no incentive to establish daycare facilities at the place of work, no measures to help communities deal directly with the issue of providing daycare services. Federal subsidies will not be tied in any way to quality of service or fair access. The new program does not recognize the real extent of the need for daycare and makes no long-term commitment in this respect. The program deprives low-income families of certain funds set aside for them under the Canada Assistance Plan and makes these funds available to the provinces who will be free to channel them to the income group of their choice. Children between the ages of 6 and 13 represent 57 per cent of our population, and these children are not covered under the program. The new strategy sets a ceiling on daycare services that did not exist before.

I heard the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin) say earlier that parents would have a choice, but I wonder what kind of choice that will be because there are not enough spaces, and furthermore, the program was designed for families who are well off. It was not designed to be available to families on low and average incomes.

[English]

The government program allocates $3 billion of the $5.4 billion to a federal-provincial cost-sharing program. This is with the objective of creating 200 new day-care spaces. There is a problem here. Only 10 per cent of eligible children under 13 years of age have access to licensed child care now. There are over one million children who need child care spaces and the Government is not meeting even one-quarter of this demand.

Over the last five years child care spaces have increased by 19 per cent per year. If this increase were to continue for the next seven years without this new program introduced by the Government, we would have 900,000 new spaces in 1995. Instead, we will have 400,000 new spaces.

[Translation]

So the Government is stalling. It restricts the number of new spaces for daycare instead of creating incentives and responding to the existing need.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party asked for a quality program. It also wants funds for staffing daycare centres. Today, however, very few new spaces will be created and very little money will be spent to guarantee the quality of the program because the federal Government has failed to set any standards. It has not provided anything in the way of supervision as to how the money will be used, how it will be spent and what kind of daycare services will be established in the various provinces.

• (1540)

The provincial Minister of Health and Welfare from Newfoundland once called child care services a breeding ground for juvenile delinquents. With some provincial Governments demonstrating an attitude like that, I do not know why the Government feels comfortable giving away blank cheques to the provinces. How can the provinces possibly guarantee quality child care?

[Translation]

What do daycare centres cost today? Most of us are aware the cost ranges from $4,000 to $8,000 per child per year.

The Liberal Party said it finds these costs excessive, because we know most families cannot afford to pay that kind of money.

[English]

The costs for these spaces should be divided between the federal Government, provincial Governments, employers and parents.

[Translation]

Parents should not pay more than a pro rata of their earnings, because all parents are in the same boat now and the famous CAP program which was to be extended to make it accessible to low and middle income families has not yet been considered by the Government.

[English]

Unfortunately, the Conservative Government did not listen to our pleas. Instead of creating universally affordable spaces, the Government has put $2.3 billion into new tax deductions. That means that those who can afford to pay $5,000 a year for child care can now get a $4,000 deduction. Those who cannot afford to pay $5,000 a year do not get anything back for child care.

In the Government's Budget, we see that it has projected $40 million in revenue for the increased child care tax deductions and $170 million to $340 million in increased revenue is peanuts. The Government obviously does not expect many parents to take advantage of these new deductions. This is because few parents can find receipted child care or, if they do find it, they cannot afford it.

Sixty-seven per cent of mothers with young children work full time. Two hundred extra dollars per year in child tax credits will not help these women find child care or pay for it.

[Translation]

This year, they have a $100 deduction, which does not even represent $10 per month per child.

[English]

The Government seems to have forgotten that over a million children live in poverty in Canada. Big tax deductions will not help them. Creating 200,000 new spaces will not help them enough. Giving money to unsympathetic provincial Governments without setting national standards will not help them. The Prime Minister certainly broke a big promise last December.

[Translation]

Without talking about the number of jobs which could have been created with a good cable system, Mr. Speaker, several studies have shown that it would have been possible to create 200 000 new jobs. Which means that these 200 000 taxpayers would have helped the economy of this country recover.

[English]

This year, children did not get any help from the Government. I would now like to look at what the Conservative Government has done for women in this Budget.

Last year, the Government initiated negotiations with the United States for the purpose of signing a free trade agreement. It is universally agreed that, if the Federal Government gets this agreement, the manufacturing and service industries will be greatly affected and that many jobs will be lost because of the Reagan-Mulroney Agreement. Canadian industries will again have to face very stiff competition from the Americans and several of our industries will go under.

We are well aware that the industries which will be most affected are the clothing, textile and footwear industries, which are female labour intensive. We know that women represent now more thant 63 per cent of the labour force in these industries. Most of these women have not finished high school; many are immigrants who do not speak either French or English; many are old and have held the same jobs all their lives. For most of them, finding new jobs would be very difficult.

[English]

The Canadian Labour Congress predicts that 250,000 women will lose their jobs. An Ontario study predicts that 100,000 women will face unemployment in that province alone. A Quebec study estimates a loss of 30,000 jobs.

In the service industry, women make up 83 per cent of the labour force, but we are facing big competition from the United States. Services are the fastest growing American export. How do we expect to compete?

During the time the Conservative Government has been negotiating this trade deal, it has cut its spending on job training by 23 per cent. The Government knows that many jobs will be lost but it has made no move to help. It has cut the job-training budget by $500 million since 1985.

Under the Canadian Jobs Strategy, funds were shifted from the public sector to the private sector for on-the-job training. It has been found that employers have favoured men over women as trainees. There are no controls in place to monitor employers or to evaluate the work skills acquired.

There is little federal funding allocated to language training for male immigrants. There is almost no funding allocated to language training for female immigrants. The Government seems to assume that female immigrants will be provided for by their spouses or will take jobs that do not require language skills, in other words, menial labour.

Some programs under the Canadian Jobs Strategy are targeted at women. The Job Development Program gives training to women who have been unemployed for eight months or more. The Job Entry Program requires that women be unemployed for two to three years before they qualify. Any woman who cannot afford to stay unemployed for that long cannot profit from this training program.

Training allowances are still less than minimum wage. How can a woman who supports a family afford to get job training if the Government gives her no financial aid? Government programs are entirely insufficient to help women with unemployment and relocation under free trade.

• (1550)

The Prime Minister promised women help to integrate into non-traditional sectors of the economy. The Conservative Government just announced it is allocating $8.8 million for this. That is $8.8 million to help 51 per cent of the population. Is the Government joking? Does it believe it will accomplish anything with such a small amount of money? The Prime Minister spent $1 million on a trip to Asia in 1986. Does he not think women in Canada deserve more than $8 million? Thanks to the Conservative Government, women and children face a dimmer future over the next few years. Now we must look at the family as a whole.

And it is not any better, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

The Government claims it has made a fairer tax system by broadening the tax base and lowering personal income tax rates. I do not believe it is fairer at all. This is an anti-family tax policy.

[Translation]

We know that families in the 1990's are quite different from those we knew ten years ago. There are over one million poor children in Canada. Of all Canadian families, 13 per cent are single parent families whose heads are mostly women. And half of them earn less than $10 000 a year. The Government should do something to help these families, but just now it is doing nothing. We must keep in mind that in Canada today, 29 per cent of couples are living on one salary.

[English]

The Conservative Government said it has lowered income taxes. In reality, individuals paid $22 billion more in income taxes in 1987 than they did in 1984. The Government says it is reducing personal income taxes by $5 billion by 1993. It took only three years to increase taxes by $22 billion, but it will take five years to decrease taxes by $5 billion. What kind of fairness is that?

In fact, the public debt has risen by 66 per cent between 1984 and 1988. The Minister told us he had to increase taxes to bring down the debt. Now a family with two children pays $1,200 more in taxes than it did in 1984, and our debt has increased. Where is all that money going?

We know that $2.5 million went for the Shamrock Summit in 1986; $15 million went to increase the personnel budgets of cabinet Ministers; almost $3 million went to new uniforms for the Armed Forces; $10 million went to expenses surrounding Simon Reisman's free trade negotiations; and $2 million was spent on the Stevens inquiry.

The total increase in taxes for an individual has been in the area of 68 per cent, while it has been only 28 per cent for corporations. The Government spends money like water but forgets the plight of families when giving hand-outs. The Government partially deindexed family allowances and the child tax credit in 1986. That means that tax credits would grow only if the inflation rate exceeded 3 per cent. That represents a hidden tax increase of $700 million per year, so taxes will increase in 1988 without the Government doing or saying anything. Because of this deindexation, the family benefits package will decrease in value by $1.5 billion by 1991. As we have seen, child care deductions increased from $2,000 to $4,000. Instead of using that money to create new spaces and set up a child care tax credit that will benefit all families, the Government continues to help higher-income families.

The Government also introduced higher sales taxes on many consumer goods. This tax is regressive because everyone must pay it regardless of how little they earn. Sales taxes have been raised on gasoline, snack food, air transportation, long-distance phone calls, toys, wallpaper and paint. Those things are not luxuries, they are things that all families need and use. How can the Government say the system is fair when low-income families benefit so little?

The Government will continue with these injustices if it is elected again. It has promised a new sales tax after the next election.

[Translation]

And I will spare you the taxes the Government intended to impose on food, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Finally, let me point out one last inequity in the tax system that must be corrected immediately. A common law couple with a child is allowed, under the present system, to claim the full personal tax credit of $1,020 for their child. A married couple can claim only $65 in child tax credit. I find this unfair and unequal. It must be changed. Either common law couples must be forced to claim only the child tax credit or the credit must be increased to $1,020 for all families.

Thank you, Mr. Prime Minister, for being so consistently unfair to lower and middle-income families.

[Translation]

When the committee on tax reform was meeting, one of the things that were requested was for separated wives not to pay the full tax on the alimony payments they get. It was then proposed that taxes be paid only on half of that amount to take into account the fact that the former wife has to care for the children. The present system is unfair. If someone is entrusted with funds to keep and manage for someone else, he does not have to pay taxes on these funds. The woman in that case is not free to spend the money as she wishes. Therefore she should not be required to pay taxes on the payment she receives for the children.

The Government is proud of its good administration. It says that thanks to its leadership, the country's economy is thriving. I have to admit, Mr. Speaker, that industry and business are doing very well. But what about our country's silent majority? What is happening to middle and low-income families? What is happening to our children? What are they getting? Very little, Mr. Speaker! As a matter of fact, they have to pay more taxes and are getting poorer. We were hoping that tax reform would bring changes but once more, we were disappointed. Although the child tax credit was increased, many low-income families and all middle and high-income families will be receiving less total benefits for children due to the decrease in the child tax exemption and to the partial deindexation of family allowances.

With the Confédération des organismes familiaux du Québec, one wonders whether having a child or children is not as important to society as it was in the years prior to 1985. Families do not seem to be able to afford their children any more. Is that the kind of society, the kind of choice we want to make in this country? Of course not.

[English]

We have seen that the Government has done little to help women and children and families. After stalling for half a year, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) produced an inadequate child care program. It continues to help children who already have child care while doing nothing for children who do not.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said there is no need for new job training programs. He said that after admitting that 25,000 jobs will be lost every year under free trade. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) also claimed that he is saving the taxpayer money, yet we are paying more taxes now under a more regressive tax system than we were in 1984. Finally, it is the Prime Minister who made all these promises before his election in 1984. It is the Prime Minister who has not lived up to any of these promises.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate my hon. colleague for her speech, much of which I certainly agree with. In fact, I thought for a minute it was one of my NDP colleagues talking as she was saying so many wonderful things.

The Member and I were on the Special Committee on Child Care, as was a Member on the government side who is in the House today. I agree with her that the Budget does absolutely nothing for child care. In fact, instead of putting money into child care they are really taking it out. For over three years the Government promised that it was making child care a priority. Yet, we still have no up-front money in the Budget to get on with child care. Does the Member agree that this was nothing but a lot of pre-election rhetoric, that the Government did not want to put any money into child care spaces anyway?

The Member referred to the doubling of the child care expense deduction and said that this is a regressive measure. I agree completely. We feel very strongly that that is the case because it applies to higher income families who pay taxes and gives nothing to lower income families. I think of students, single parents, and the working poor who do not pay taxes at all. Those are the ones who are finding it so hard to find money for child care services. I agree with her that this is a regressive measure.

If I understood the Member correctly, she was talking about some kind of a child care tax credit which would benefit families and would not be regressive. Certainly tax credits are not as regressive. However, if there is only a certain amount of money, does the Member believe it should be used for a tax credit or would it be better to put any available money into funding so that we can begin to have more quality child care spaces for children who need them?

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, I wish the State could pay the entire cost of daycare, because I feel that today there is an urgent need for this service in Canada. However, I also think we have to consider certain expenditures and what the economy will bear. So our Party proposes that people who can afford it should pay, and that the service should also be available to families on low and average incomes, who would be charged according to their ability to pay. I remember that when I sat on the Special Committee on Daycare with my colleague, a number of couples told us they would have no objection to sharing the cost on this basis. So while I think that the Conservative Government is doing very little for daycare, I must admit that although I would prefer the Government to pay the full cost, I do not think that today, considering families are prepared to do their share, the Government should bear the entire cost. I think there was only one point on which we disagreed.

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I would first like to make an observation. The Member for Outrement (Mrs. Pépin)— —just made a very progressive and very positive speech, so much so that the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) said she was almost "like the New Democrats". I wonder why and perhaps the Hon. Member would like to answer a serious question of a general nature—the Liberal Party in the Opposition leans more to the left, and on the Government side more to the right?

It never fails. I remember after John Diefenbaker was elected and Lester Pearson was the Liberal Party Leader. There were some conferences in Kingston, and we saw a Party that was more like a Socialist Party, but after the next election, it started leaning towards the Conservatives. Why?

Why are you more to the left when you are in the Opposition, more like a Social-Democratic Party, and after the elections, we see your Party leaning more to the right, like the Conservative Party?

Mr. Speaker, in fact, it is probably just another Progressive Conservative Party. But this is a very serious question.

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, since I am a first time Member, I cannot answer for what my party has done in the past, but had there been, in fact, a greater number of new Members, men and women, with ideas leaning more to the left than to the right, perhaps the party would have taken a different orientation at the time.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, if, by chance, this party was elected in the next election, would she remain to the left, would she remain a progressive Member or would she follow the lead of the old guard liberal presidency and slide to the right?

Mrs. Pépin: I believe there is room for everyone in the Liberal Party. However, Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that with regards to a program such as the one on child care, which is being announced prior to an election, we shall implement it if we return to power.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In accordance with Standing Order 66, I wish to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid)—Environmental Affairs—Niagara area study—Request for release; the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp)—Trade—Free trade—Elimination of marine transport sector—Government position/Situation of shipping industry; the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Trade—Import controls on U.S. dairy products/Canadian position.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Wednesday, February 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke-Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government and the amendment of Mr. Garneau (p. 12860) and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Cassidy (p. 12883).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux).

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as a new Member of the House, I am pleased to take part today in the budget debate. I must admit the exchange we have just heard was so interesting I am tempted to give my colleagues more time to settle the basic issues of their coalition.

On a more serious note, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on the budget my colleague, the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), tabled yesterday.

By this budget, Mr. Speaker, the Government wants to emphasize how important it is for Canadian workers to participate fully, as equal partners of the business community and governments, in building a strong and prosperous Canada.

[English]

In building a strong and prosperous Canada the reduction of unemployment is an obvious priority. In this regard the Government's record of job creation is eloquent enough proof of our commitment to the working men and women of Canada.

The Governemnt proved it could create jobs. We have created more than 1 million new jobs since September 1984, and the unemployment rate has been constantly declining. As a result, Canadians have many more opportunities and can be confident in their future.

Regarding the unemployment rate decline, I want to stress the role played by small and medium-size businesses that have shown dynamism and entrepreneurship, were not afraid to face the competition on national as well as international markets and to which we owe the creation of so many new jobs.

During the last three years and a half, our economic advances have been splendid and, by and large, Canada achieved better results than all other large industrialized countries, and that economic success, Mr. Speaker, is translated in a large number of concrete achievements.

Let me point out as an example the mortgate rates that are three points lower, allowing homeowners to save $1,200 a year on a $50,000 mortgage amortized over 25 years.

As far as workers are concerned, Mr. Speaker, what we see currently is a positive behaviour, an increasingly evident will to help strengthen the economy. This is a change the Government supported, and of which I am personally quite proud.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance announced that Canadians who invest in national venture capital funds sponsored by labour unions will be entitled to Federal income tax credits.

Our economy needs venture capital to support its growth, and this is especially true in the case of job-creating small businesses and of the high technology sectors. More recently, we saw that venture capital could also help secure endangered jobs, thanks first and foremost to the labour movement.

I am referring of course to the Solidarity Fund of the Quebec Federation of Labour to which the Canadian Government contributed $10 million in addition to granting its shareholders generous, 20 percent income tax credits. The Solidarity Fund, Mr. Speaker, has now more than $135 million in assets and a membership totalling more than 43,000. More than 6,000 jobs have been created or preserved because of investments in some 40 businesses in Quebec. The results obtained to date by the Solidarity Fund show that such funds can be used to preserve and create jobs for Canadian workers across the land.

Through its Solidarity Fund, the QPC has shown, in the face of general skepticism when that initiative was launched, that workers can be active and aggressive partners in the national economy.

We all must listen to them, and to business managers, Mr. Speaker. Their ideas deserve to be examined. This is what we have been doing, and this is exactly what we intend to keep on doing. The tax measures announced yesterday will enable labour unions to get involved in the establishment of venture capital funds and, as far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I would have no hesitation in encouraging them to get involved in that area.

Because of the success of the Quebec fund, the Government introduced in yesterday's Budget tax incentives for investment in national venture capital funds sponsored by labour organizations. This new tax measure will make a federal tax credit of 20 per cent available to individuals who purchase shares of a national labour-sponsored venture capital corporation. Funds raised will have to be invested in active small and medium sized businesses with at least 60 per cent of the funds invested in risk capital.

Individual investors will receive a 20 per cent federal tax credit on their first $3,500 invested. For example, a worker who invests $1,000 in a national fund will receive a federal tax credit of $200.

Thanks to this measure, unions will be encouraged to establish national venture capital funds whereby a worker's savings may be channeled into business enterprises that need capital to maintain or create employment. Such funds allow workers to take part in job creation and economic development through equity ownership. The enthusiasm that the Quebec workers have shown for such funds is evidence of the willingness of workers to co-operate in strengthening and developing the economy. I am confident that this success in Quebec will be repeated across the country as the labour movement plays an even larger role as an essential partner in Canada's economic development.

Initiatives such as labour-sponsored venture capital funds are typical of the new spirit of constructive co-operation that is having a beneficial impact on the very positive labour climate which we enjoy in Canada. It is important to note that over 90 per cent of collective agreements in Canada are settled without strikes or lock-outs. The past year, for example, was one of the most peaceful in a decade, with only .09 per cent of estimated total working time affected by work stoppages. That is to say, only nine days per 10,000 worked were lost as part of the collective bargaining process.

Labour organizations such as the Canadian Federation of Labour and the Quebec Federation of Labour have publicly stated their support for replacing confrontational labour-management relations with more co-operation to meet common challenges. Many important members of the business community, such as the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Conseil du Patronat du Québec, and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association have echoed these statements.

There are indeed numerous examples of constructive labour-management relations outside the collective bargaining process in all regions and sectors throughout Canada that are real success stories. Investors at home and abroad are beginning to take notice. The high degree of labour-management co-operation which exists on the Canadian labour scene is no doubt one of the most important factors in the excellent performance of the Canadian economy.

We are currently investigating avenues to develop further co-operative initiatives in the work place. I am confident that such initiatives, as well as the fiscal measures announced in the Budget, will help the labour movement contribute fully to economic progress and prosperity in this country.

I am also pleased to report that we have had and are continuing to have fruitful discussions with provincial Governments on how best to proceed with a program to help older workers affected by major lay-offs. The Government is concerned about the special problems faced by these workers, who often have little or no chance of competing effectively in the job market. Accordingly, I will be making an announcement with regard to the program for older workers' adjustment in the near future.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I believe that labour, business and government should work together to find new ways to cooperate, in order to bring economic and social progress in Canada.

[English]

This can take many forms: Worker participation in the corporate strategic planning process, regional and sectoral union-management dialogue, or worker investment in business.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the Government is moving on all fronts. Since 1984, we committed ourselves to a new direction in order to bring economic renewal in Canada, and we have continuously been innovative in the pursuit of our goals.

Mr. Speaker, I am confident that the new fiscal measures related to venture capital funds, announced by my colleage, the Minister of Finance, will have a significant impact. I am convinced that they will lead to a wider participation of workers in the economic growth of the country. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that they will bring an economic climate favourable to the creation of new jobs and a continuing growth of our economy.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question? The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) on debate.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I thought it might be wise to raise a question or comment for the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) at this time.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I appreciated the speech from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux), but—

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that you were the person who had the honour to drop the puck last night in the great hockey game between the MP's and NHL Old Timers. I was disappointed that the Minister of Labour did not participate as a player, but at least he participated by being in the players' box and cheering on his team. Of course, we would not have done as well if it were not for the lone New Democrat flying the left wing flag.

The Minister of Labour is one of the more progressive members of the Progressive Conservative Party. Is he not somewhat embarrassed from time to time by the fact that since his Party took power in 1984 the taxes on individual Canadians have risen by some $1,000 to $1,200? That is quite a substantial sum for ordinary taxpayers in this country.

[Translation]

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) agrees with the Minister of Finance who raised the personal income tax of Canadian families $1000 over three years. This is not fair for ordinary Canadians, for the average Quebecer. Does the Minister of Labour also agree with the fact that we have, in Canada, 60,000 corporations which have paid no tax whatsoever to the federal Governement? Is he in agreement with such a fiscal system, a system which is so reactionary? I know, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister is a progressive, but does he agree with his Minister of Finance who is more of a reactionary than a progressive?

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, if we are going to talk about reactionaries, I must point out the very reactionary and probably extraordinary performance of my honorable colleague who indeed played brilliantly in last night's hockey game. As for me, I already indicated that I could be there next year as a mediator to make the referees stick to the rules so that the game goes more smoothly. However, I must say that it was still a very good game. I must thank not only all the participants on the ice but also the many spectators who attended last night's great display of talent.

To get back to a more relevant issue, Mr. Speaker, namely the Budget tabled by my honorable colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), if it is reactionary to reduce the amount of income tax paid by eight out of ten households, to eliminate income tax entirely for some 850,000 low income earners, to reduce the amount of income tax paid by almost nine out of 10 Canadians aged 65 or more and to greatly reduce the amount of income tax paid by most families with children, then I don't mind being called a reactionary.

Mr. Speaker, as far as the economic performance of the Government is concerned, I think that during Question Period today, the Minister of Finance was able to answer many of the unfounded criticisms put by my colleagues over there, including that regarding the 60,000 firms who apparently, according to these Hon. Members, do not pay any income tax. On the one hand, I must simply underline the fact that if they were penalized, some of those businesses, for instance in Cape Breton, would obviously be unable, as was stated by the Minister of Finance, to create the jobs they have so far created, in particular since we came to power, and they would have to face some very serious problems. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, I believe that businessess that do create new jobs—which is the motor of the economy—need to be helped as much as possible, and the Minister of Finance has clearly indicated that this must be looked at on a yearly basis so that when losses did occur, there had to be some kind of recovery in order to maintain the jobs that had been created and to create new ones.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to participate in the debate on the Budget presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) last evening. I think it is fair to say that the Budget presented to us was really a do-nothing, stand-pat Budget. I think government Members themselves will admit that the Budget certainly did not take any great new initiatives. From the Government's point of view it was a reporting to the nation as to where the state of the economy stands.

I think it is fair to say as well that government Members feel that the statement was a statement of economic progress, that there was no need to take new measures, that the economy was doing well, the deficit was being brought under control, and as far as the Government is concerned, this is exactly where the national economy should be. In essence, the Budget Speech of the Minister of Finance was one of confirmation that the economy is sound. Of course, we in the Opposition beg to disagree. We will point out that everything is not fine in Canada's economy. There are many men, women and children who live their lives at times in not so quiet desperation. There are over 1.5 million men and women in this country who do not have jobs. They are out looking for jobs but cannot find any. We have hundreds of thousands of Canadians who are living in abject poverty. They are uncertain as to where their next meal will come from. I have personally been involved in studies which have occurred in my riding of Regina East on hunger among the children of Regina. It is a real problem. In the breadbasket of the world, so to speak, Saskatchewan, there are young children who go to bed hungry at night and a lot of anti-social behaviour such as petty theft and break and enter are the result. These are economic crimes committed because of economic desperation.

Certainly Regina is not unique. Every major city of this country has the problem of children and young people going to bed hungry. We talk about Canadians earning low incomes who live below the poverty line, the working poor, who find it extremely difficult to meet the mortgage payments and food bills every month and who have little left over to go to a movie and buy some popcorn and a soft drink. These people live in extreme economic scarcity. Therefore, for us to assume that everything is well and that all the Minister of Finance has to do is to bring in a Budget extolling the record of the Government, in essence saying: "No new initiatives are needed", I think is living in a fool's paradise. It indicates to me that the Minister of Finance and his Government are out of touch with the reality that so many Canadians must face day in and day out.

It is obvious that the wealth and prosperity spoken of so eloquently by the Minister of Finance in his Budget does not exist across this country. Yes, there are pockets of economic activity where there are low rates of unemployment, but even in those pockets, the working poor have to face horrendous costs for housing, transportation and food. The price of housing in Toronto is just exhorbitant, and one wonders how people who work at the local doughnut shop, the clerks at the Bay or Safeway stores, with their meagre incomes, can even afford a small room somewhere, let alone be able to buy a modest home to put a roof over the head of a family they hope to raise. That is an impossible dream for those Canadians. Yet when we talk about the economic plight of millions of Canadians, at the same time these very Canadians are living in a land of plenty.

We live in a country with an abundance of resources and wealth, a country with vast tracks of fertile lands, huge forests, mineral deposits and sources of energy. We are indeed blessed as a country and as a people. There are few places on the face of this earth which have as many advantages as this country. We are one of the best educated peoples in the history of the human race. We have a sparse population. Thus we do not have the tremendous problem of population overcrowding. We live in an age of technological wonder. Our ability to produce is unheard of in the history of mankind.

Yet despite all the wealth, all the advantages and all the technologies that we have today there are people in the country who go to bed hungry. Surely, we have to ask ourselves as Members of Parliament, as leaders and representatives of the people, why something so drastically wrong is going on here. Something is not working right. Why is it that with all this wealth and with all this tremendous technological ability and trained population we cannot put it together so that basic human needs are met? Something is wrong.

I think Canadians from all political Parties assume that their Government will give some leadership in bringing together the resources, the technology, the capital and the human ability so that we can have an economy that functions and at the same time satisfies the basic human needs of its citizens. So when we have a Government that brings in a Budget that, in essence, says, "Everything is all right, Jack, there are no problems here to solve," I think we have a Government that is not living up to its duties as a Government. We have a Government that is not providing leadership, and as such it is a failed Government with failed opportunities. Surely, this is the best way to describe the Budget. It is a Budget of failed opportunities.

There is no doubt that as Canadians and as members of the human race we are living in an age of tremendous social, economic, political and technological change. We are indeed all of us living in a very insecure time. We are living in a time, an age, when one receives an education and assumes that with that education and the skills that one has acquired one can go out to get a job and earn a living and that that will enable one to secure enough income to raise a family. But this is no longer true, not even for the best educated. We do not live in that security any more.

Experts tell us that the young people of today must realize that they will have to be retrained two or three times in their lifetimes, that what they have been trained for might very well become obsolete. This does not refer just to mechanics and blue-collar workers but to white-collar workers and to managerial people as well. The ground that we occupy continues to shift. So it is with nations and national economies. Areas in which a nation have been strong all at once become obsolete. Its strengths become its weaknesses. There are tremendous economic shifts and changes.

I will not stand here and pretend that I have the blueprint and the solution. Nor will I suggest that the NDP has all the solutions and the blueprints. I do not think that any political Party or any ideology in this day and age can meet the challenges and the unpredictability of this age of change. However, some things are essential if societies are to remain viable to technological, economic and political changes. One of the most important requirements is flexibility, the ability to be able to adapt.

Historically, we know that those species that were not able to adapt to change in climatic conditions became extinct. So it is with human institutions. Those human institutions which cannot adapt will become extinct. Their societies and their communities which depend upon them will be harmed. Unfortunately, when we look at the Budget presented to us last night we see that it does not display any flexibility. It is an ideological statement. It is full of the rigidity of a certain particular ideology, the ideology of the right, the new darling of the intellectuals. It is the new ideology of Ronnie Reagan and Margaret Thatcher—the new right. The notion is that if the state would just leave things alone, the natural order of things, especially the market-place, will create the jobs, the wealth and the distribution of that wealth and everything will be fine. The thought therefore is, "Let us just keep our hands off".

We see that notion expressed by the Government day in and day out. We see it in its moves to privatize, to deregulate and to help the corporate rich. It is the old trickle-down theory. I have used this remark in every Budget Speech that I have delivered since the Government came to office. It is the old trickle-down theory according to which if you give the horse a lot of oats, eventually the sparrow will get some. That is the philosophy of the Government. Let the rich enjoy their riches. Let the corporate sector increase its profits and eventually those riches and profits will be reinvested in new plants and equipment which will create new wealth and new jobs.

That is how the theory works, or at least how it is supposed to work. But it has not worked in that way. It has not worked in that way in the United States. Nor has it worked in that way in England. It is not working that way in Canada. The sparrow does not get the oats.

A great deal of the wealth that the Government has encouraged through its tax system and the special breaks that it has given the large corporations do not get invested in new plants and equipment. What happens is that a great deal of it is invested offshore, in major takeover bids south of the border. That is not creating jobs in Canada. A lot of it is used for corporate takeovers in Canada. That does not create new wealth or new jobs.

When we look at the figures for the last decade in respect of what has occurred in England, in the United States and now in Canada we see a tremendous concentration of economic wealth in fewer and fewer hands. Multibillion dollar empires and corporations are being formed. They gobble up their competitors and smaller corporations. They are being encouraged and fed by special tax considerations.

The trickle-down theory has not worked. All it has done is to create economic monoliths that are able to destroy the democratic and political will of elected Governments, so powerful have these economic giants become.

We see the results of their political power in the type of budgets and tax proposals that the Conservative Government has introduced. In this respect I refer you, Mr. Speaker, an article which appeared in the Report on Business of The Globe and Mail of January 8, 1988. The article is entitled, "StatsCan paper says income tax system biased toward corporate concentration". I quote:

> An analysis of about 20,000 corporate income tax returns for 1983 "seems to indicate a . . . fundamental and pervasive bias toward concentration," says the study by Michael Wolfson, director of the agency's social and economic studies division.
> That assessment likely won't be significantly modified by Finance Minister Michael Wilson's tax reforms, Mr. Wolfson indicated in an interview from Ottawa.

The statistics are there. We are seeing greater and greater economic concentration and wealth aided and abetted by tax policies of this Government. When the Minister of Finance stands up and claims that his tax reform proposals will create equity and fairness, one has to laugh and say to him, "Minister of Finance, what are you talking about? Even your own Budget Papers show that 60,000 very profitable corporations in the country will still not pay one cent of tax. Do not talk to us about fairness. Please do not try to peddle the big lie here".

It is obvious that the government policy is one of encouraging the rich and the powerful to become richer and more powerful in the mistaken belief or hope that somehow that wealth will trickle down and create jobs and prosperity for all. That has not occurred.

As the Budget is caught in its ideological stricture and bias, at the same time it fails to address the concerns of everyday Canadians; those Canadians who have to meet the mortgage payment and pay the food bills, those Canadians who are concerned about their jobs and their future, those Canadians who have teenage sons and daughters going through the educational system and who wonder what will happen to them and what type of jobs will be available to them as they get out of the school system, and those Canadians who live in an economic insecurity. There is nothing in the Budget for those Canadians, nothing at all.

As the world goes through economic changes, and as we in Canada attempt to plot our course for the next decades, we cannot but become aware of what is happening south of the border, particularly with the trade deal negotiated and signed by our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States. It will tie our economy even further into that of our neighbour, the giant south of the border. That giant has some very serious problems.

The United States has gone through some economic prosperity in the last number of years. But if one looks behind the scenes, one will see that it is a very fragile prosperity. It is a prosperity that is essentially based on the war machine. The United States has run up an accumulated deficit of well over $1 trillion. Total U.S. savings only meet 90 per cent of the interest rate on its accumulated deficit. The United States must maintain a high interest policy and, therefore, a strong U.S. dollar in order to attract capital into the United States in order to service its debt.

That cannot be done for too long without running into problems. The Americans are now running into problems because they realize that the strong U.S. dollar has priced them out of the world market. The Americans are caught in a catch-22 situation. On the one hand they have to lower the value of the U.S. dollar, and lower their interest rate in order to become competitive again. While that is being done, the United States is not able to attract the capital in order to service that accumulated deficit and debt. At some stage, the United States will have to deal with that very serious problem, and it will run into some very serious adjustments. Those adjustments will be painful for it, and they will be painful for us.

Part of the solution must be a reduction in the arms race for both the Soviet Union and the United States. The useless expenditures on the death machine are economically destroying our economies. If it were not for the arms race and the expenditures on that, which are around the same level as though we were in a war period, interest rates could come down to where they historically should be, that is, 2 per cent or 3 per cent above the inflation rate. That is where the interest rate should be. It should be around 6 per cent, not the present 11 per cent and 12 per cent.

We pay for the arms race with every house or car that we buy. Every time we borrow money from the bank we are paying for the arms race. Perhaps the silver lining of the October crash was that the national economies are beginning to recognize that they have reached the financial limits of the arms race. They cannot continue to have a defence budget that grows and grows. Hopefully we have begun to reach the limits and nations will recognize that they have to bring down their expenditures on arms.

I note that the time allotted to my remarks has expired. In my remarks, I wished to give a bit of an overview of the world economy, as I see it, the role that Canada can play in that world economy, and also the failings and the shortcomings of the Government's Budget. I hope in the question and answer period, especially in answer to questions that government Members might have, I might be able to inform them of what I think a budget should be.

Mr. Nickerson: I will give the Hon. Member that opportunity, Mr. Speaker. He and other members of his Party have gone on at great length about all this poverty that is supposed to exist in Canada, and perhaps four years ago there was quite a bit of this.

The policies and the solutions of his Party and his colleagues in the Liberal Party seem to be to tax the people who are out there working for a living, tax them even more and get more money from all those people who are working hard and making $30,000, $40,000, or $50,000 a year, and then hand this money out via the state to other people in order to improve their lot. Whereas, what we have been doing is to make sure that jobs are available for people in order that they do not have to rely on the state. We have created more than one million new jobs since we took office in 1984.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member, does he not think that this is one tremendous accomplishment? Does he not see that that has significantly reduced the levels of poverty in Canada, and the levels of hardship in Canada? Does he not think that we are on the right track with those employment-creating policies?

Mr. de Jong: I thank the Hon. Member for his question. First, he is quite wrong when he suggests that we propose to increase taxes on those Canadians who earn $20,000, $30,000, $40,000, or $50,000 a year. In fact, far from it. We have objected to the fact that his Government has increased taxes on middle-income Canadians by around $1,000 per year since 1984 when the Government was first elected. We see the unfairness in the system, and we also see that there is definitely some possibility of raising some extra revenue from the large corporations.

For example, in 1983, the last year for which I have seen statistics or figures, none of the banks paid any taxes. A teller at the Royal Bank of Canada paid more dollars and cents in taxes than the Royal Bank of Canada. The Royal Bank of Canada made more than $360 million in profits, and it paid not one cent of tax. We feel that that is unfair, and that there are some sources of revenue that could reduce the deficit and at the same time help to create employment in this country.

As the Hon. Member pointed out, some one million jobs have been created. I welcome that. But we have to remember that the previous Liberal Government started to attack inflation and tighten up on interest rates. Indeed, inflation was wrestled to the ground, brought under control so to speak, but it was done at a tremendous social cost. Canada experienced more social hardship than any of the other OECD countries. Our unemployment rate shot off the ceiling. When some economic recovery started to occur, it was good to see that jobs were created and we were able to bring one million people back into the labour force. Surely the Hon. Member will not stand up in his place and suggest that 8.3 per cent or 8.4 per cent of unemployment in the workforce is an acceptable level. It has to be unacceptable, surely, and much more needs to be done to bring down the unemployment rate to a decent level. A stand-pat Budget will certainly not do that.

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, could the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) clarify his suggestion that we were spending too much money on defence and that we should cut back on this type of expenditure? Is the Hon. Member stating the New Democratic Party's policy that Canada should withdraw from NATO? Does he personally support the policy that Canada should withdraw from NATO?

Mr. de Jong: That is a very good question, Mr. Speaker. First, when I spoke about arms expenditure, I spoke about it in a global sense. I said that perhaps the silver lining in the October crash was that both superpowers began to realize that there are limits to arms expenditure. When you have a global arms expenditure annually of a trillion dollars—in other words you are taking one trillion dollars out of the world economy every year—you have to recognize that this puts a scarcity on available capital for all sorts of other projects. I was calling for an end to that global madness.

Let me now come to the other question about NATO. I think Canada's role has to be as a peace maker. That is the most important role. I am not all that hung-up on whether we are in or out of NATO. My major concern is how best we can fulfil our role as an international mediator and peacemaker. That is the bottom line. In the global sense, for the survival of the human race we have to get away from the insanity of the arms race before we destroy ourselves.

Canada has a unique role to play. Whether we are necessarily in or out of NATO is beside the point. The most important point is that we have an independent foreign policy, that we have the respect of both superpowers and in that position we can play an activist role, not a defensive role or a secondary role but an activist role in helping to achieve and get a process going of world peace and disarmament. Economically we have to be able to do it. In terms of sheer survival of the human race, we have to do it.

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, could the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) comment a little further on the comment of the Hon. Member for the Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) that this Budget reduced poverty. I believe the statistics still indicate that one in five children in Canada are living in poverty and the gap between the rich and the poor is increasing. Could the Hon. Member from Regina comment on the observation of the Member from the Western Arctic about the Budget?

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I could deliver a major speech if I had time just on the comments of the Conservative Member for the Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). His assertion that we would tax the middle class was very wrong. I am surprised that the Hon. Member for the Western Arctic would suggest that poverty has been eliminated in this country. I have seen poverty in the northern communities, particularly in the native communities. Poverty is not just in the North. I visit reserves in my riding and the housing conditions in which some people live are terrible. I cannot stand in this place and say there is no poverty in this country. There is shameful poverty in this country.

In terms of the Government's record, when you look at figures from 1984 to today, you begin to realize that 98 per cent of Canadian families are paying more in taxes and only 2 per cent of those earning $100,000, $150,000 and $200,000 a year have a net reduction in the taxes they are paying. It is the middle class and the lower income Canadians who are paying more taxes today than in 1984. The Government does not like to use the figures from 1984. It talks about tax reform and says that because of tax reform some 800,000 Canadians will not be paying tax. That is true compared to the times before. However, if you compare it to 1984 before the Tories got in, none of those people were paying tax back then. The Tories put them on the tax roll. With tax reform they have taken them off the tax roll, but because the Minister of Finance did not put back full indexation, those very same Canadians will eventually come back on the tax rolls again. The Conservative Government has put the poor in a revolving door. They are off the tax rolls. The Tories put them back on and then have taken them off. The fact that there is not full indexation means that those very same Canadians will be back on the tax rolls again. Perhaps at some future date, if this Government remains in power, which I doubt, they will be taken off and then put back on again. Stop jerking the poor around.

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be able to participate in this debate regarding the Budget, especially because, as most Members here know, I represent a riding with a lot of poor people.

I have heard during this debate how the Government has not been assisting the people and the regions of the country that are poor. Let me add that I am not going to concentrate on specific economic policies but, rather, on specific areas in which the Government has provided assistance to the poorer regions. Assistance does not apply to the North only, but also to other regions such as Newfoundland, the Yukon and other remote areas of the provinces.

Perhaps I should start by pointing out some examples. We have the child tax credit. There have been housing deductions for people in remote areas. There has been assistance in the areas of income tax. Something which had not happened for many years is the revamping of the defence forces in northern Canada. The Government has made commitments regarding the building of ice-breakers and there is provision for air defence, the building of nuclear submarines to replace the outmoded diesel submarines. Some people still feel that the old diesel submarines are able to protect us from Russian submarines or other submarines with nuclear capabilities. But diesel submarines have to be recharged every so often.

First I will talk mostly about the child tax credit and how it applies to the people in the North and in other remote areas. People with incomes of from $15,000 to $23,000 per year will be eligible for the child tax credit. At least 50 per cent if not more of the people living in the Northwest Territories fall into that category, particularly those who live in the eastern half of the territory where there is not much employment because of the boycott on furs and seals and other animals on which the people used to rely for their incomes.

Because of the provisions that make these people eligible for the child tax credit, every spring and every fall many households will be able to look forward to being able to afford either a snowmobile or an all-terrain vehicle. Many people may feel that these are mostly recreational vehicles. In fact, the United States was trying to ban the import of Japanese-made all-terrain vehicles, considering them to be too dangerous. This machine has been adapted to the situation in the North and has become indispensable. It has been adapted for use in making a livelihood in the spring, the summer and the fall months. People look forward to receiving their child tax credits so that they may buy or at least be able to make a down-payment on something which might seem to people in the South to be a recreational vehicle.

Another thing which will be very beneficial for people living in remote areas is the ability to deduct housing costs. In the case of a family with one worker, that deduction would be $400 per month, and for the two-income families, which I should add are rare, it will be $225 per month per person. This will be helpful to many people.

In the past, I talked about how employees of both the federal and territorial Governments were able to go to the North to work. Of course, I understand that in many regions like Newfoundland, employment opportunities are not too great, but there is still a need to work. People who live in eastern parts of Canada have moved to the West to work. The same is true of the Northwest Territories and other remote areas where Governments have provided the majority of the highly paid jobs.

Before a deduction of this kind was introduced by this Government for people who live in remote and Arctic areas and northern regions, the people who worked for the two levels of Government were able to collect benefits such as subsidies for housing. However, those who lived in public housing, usually permanent residents, were not in a position to obtain any such money. Now those who work for the two levels of Government are complaining that they are being penalized as a result of this housing tax credit because even ordinary people will now be able to claim those deductions.

Perhaps while I am talking about housing, I should mention another very successful program initiated by the Government of the Northwest Territories, the Home Assistance Program. An individual who wishes to build a house, depending of course on certain qualifications like a regular job, a certain amount of income and the ability to prove that a home will be completed within a certain time period, is given materials to build his or her own house so that the pressure on public housing will be relieved. This program has become very successful. In fact, in my small home town community alone, a community with only about 1,200 or 1,300 people, there were 35 applicants. Already the community has at least 20 private homes that were built under this program. Under the program, people are expected to build homes at their own expense along with their relatives, their friends and whomever they can pay.

The housing tax credit has been encouraging this kind of self-sufficiency in many areas of the North. When I travel, I am sometimes surprised to see older Inuks who do not speak English building homes, sometimes alone. They are still able to put up their houses in a sufficient period of time. Many of these programs are helping the people in remote areas.

Another deduction which will be coming into effect this taxation year will be the holiday travel assistance. Prior to this year, only government employees who came mostly from southern areas of Canada were assisted in taking holidays. These people moved mostly to southern Canada because their families were in Toronto, Winnipeg or Vancouver or they went to Hawaii or other southern islands. They were the only ones who could receive holiday assistance. Many of the people who live permanently in the North who are now beginning to work for both the territorial and federal Governments do not go South for their holidays. Rather, they go around to other communities. Because travelling in the North is very expensive, assistance to northerners would have been welcomed. However, the way it started out was that assistance in travelling south from the N.W.T. was provided for, but travelling within the N.W.T. was going to be tax deductible. That was seen as unfair. However, this has now been rectified.

Perhaps another area in which the Government has provided assistance to people in the North especially has been controversial at times. I know that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) are not too happy with the defence initiatives of our Government, but many people who live in the North are happy that the Government is starting to recognize the importance of the Arctic to people living in the provinces. We are now living in a situation in which no place on earth can be considered remote or inaccessible, especially for nuclear missile-carrying submarines of various countries. Yet here we are still relying on diesel-powered submarines. Canada has one of the longest coast lines in the world, and for a major part of the year in the North there is a lot of ice between the Arctic Islands and in the North West Passage.

Even though I have been travelling through the northern areas of Canada for a good part of the last 10 years, when I travel now I still cannot really get used to the immense distances. Therefore, when I listened to the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition saying he would scrap nuclear submarines if his Party got into power, I thought perhaps they had been bought by the Soviets. We know it is about time that Canada recognized the importance of longer range submarines, especially since the Government indicated that the only thing nuclear about our submarines will be the propulsion system. We would still be using conventional weapons and it would be mostly for the protection and enforcement of our sovereignty in the Arctic.

There are a lot of islands and a lot of ice in the Arctic, and some areas never become free of ice. I am sure anyone with enough intelligence should realize that there may very well be enemy submarines going around that area. That is why I was very disappointed in hearing last weekend that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, and now the NDP, do not want our country to acquire longer range modern submarines. The money is not going to be spent in the North but in the southern provinces.

The same applies to the ice-breaker. It is not going to benefit specifically any northern workers other than exercising Canada's sovereignty in the North. The majority of jobs are going to people living in the South so taxpayers will not be giving a disproportionate share of the money to the North. All the North will see is the finished product. Therefore I do not see why the two opposition Parties would be against Canada acquiring nuclear submarines.

Finally, while I do not have the time to talk specifically about the North Warning System and the upgrading of our radar in the Arctic, perhaps I should indicate that about two weeks ago both the American and Canadian Armed Forces were able to intercept some Soviet bombers. I know that all they are doing is testing the system, but the fact that our countries were able to intercept those bombers is an indication of the importance of Canada remaining committed to the defence of and sovereignty over the Arctic.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the Hon. Member from the Arctic for his comments about people in his constituency and the sensitivity of some of their problems. I would like to ask him a very general question about the Budget before the House today.

I think the Hon. Member realizes there is still a lot of poverty in his riding, as there is in mine, despite what has happened. It seems to me one way of getting rid of a lot of that poverty is to impose taxes on some of the corporations who do not pay taxes today. Records show that some 60,000 corporations at a minimum are not paying any taxes whatsoever. That is a lot of companies. A lot of them are making a lot of profits. It seems to me at least some of them should be paying tax. I would like to know whether he would agree with the idea we are advocating of a minimum corporate tax.

I remember the election campaign where his leader, following the lead of our great leader from Oshawa, suggested there should be a minimum tax on individuals. The leader of the Conservative Party said: "Well, Ed, that's a pretty good idea and I support that". So he took the lead from the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) and introduced a minimum tax on individuals. Not as tough as I would like, not as effective as I would like, but after all he is a Conservative and he thinks he should leave some money for his wealthy friends. However, we at least have a minimum tax on individuals.

I wonder if my friend would agree that we should apply the same principle to corporations and use the money to help some of the poor people who live in his riding, my riding, indeed all the ridings across this country. Would he agree with that great principle and suggest to his Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) a minimum corporate tax?

Mr. Suluk: Mr. Speaker, I think all Members of the House would agree that taxes must be spread evenly and fairly among everyone. I would like to indicate to my hon. friend that I can say with sincerity that I do not have any rich corporate friends, therefore I do not feel obligated to be either for or against giant corporations. I would just like to indicate in general terms, that, compared to the very abject poverty that people in remote areas experienced over the last 20 or 30 years especially, there really cannot be any comparison. After all, compared to people living in Third World countries our poor are rich. I am not saying that we have no poor people. We have a lot of poor people. I represent people who live mostly on tea, biscuits, bannock, and maybe occasionally frozen meat. Of course we love frozen meat and I am not saying that we lack heat and so on. However, compared to the past 30 or 40 years, I do not think that the poverty in native areas would be as great as that in other countries.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, just to follow up on that, would the Member comment on whether or not he favours a minimum corporate tax? I understand that he does not have any wealthy corporate friends. He is not like his friend from Western Arctic who, of course, is a very wealthy man and has a lot of very wealthy corporate friends. A lot of big money goes into his campaign and he is, therefore, against a minimum corporate tax. I can understand why because he represents big, wealthy friends, not only in his riding but in other ridings of the country.

However, I know that the Member from the Eastern Arctic is much more a man of the people and understands the people much better than does his friend from Western Arctic. I know that he does not have wealthy friends and that his voice, as one who really represents Inuit people, would be very effective if he were to stand in the House now and say that he wants a minimum tax on corporations.

I know that wealthy oil men like my friend from Calgary North, who is sitting there reading his paper, are against a minimum corporate tax. He, too, is an extremely wealthy man with all kinds of friends in the corporations and he would be campaigning against that.

However, I wonder if my friend across the way who represents ordinary people, a lot of poor people, would not get up in the House and say that we need a minimum tax on corporations so that the rich will pay their fair share and that we can use that money to help ordinary folk. I know that will put him in direct opposition to the Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) who stands in the House and defends his wealthy corporate buddies, but surely the Member does not do that.

Mr. Suluk: Mr. Speaker, because I come from the North I believe that at times I can be different. There are a lot of things which I would like to get from the Government and do not get. I do not think that for me to agree to having a minimum corporate tax would cause a major controversy within my Party. Without any shame or other negative feelings I can say that I do agree with the Member.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, speaking as the Member from the wealthy West, I would like to ask my colleague from the not-quite-so-wealthy East what have been the results of the economic policies of the Government as far as he can see in his area over the last three and a half years. Has he noticed a significant change in the level of economic activity in that area? Would he conclude that people there may be better off than they were in the times of the Liberal Government three and a half or more years ago?

Mr. Suluk: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend from Western Arctic for his question. I believe that there have been many improvements over the past three and a half years. The deregulation of the airline industry, for example, has been beneficial to the North even though it is not 100 per cent deregulation and is supposed to apply mostly south of 60. However, part of the principle has been applied in the North and First Air has expanded its routes across the central Arctic from east to west. That has provided a few more jobs. You must understand that any job increase, whether it be 3, 10, or 50, is major.

In addition, there have been encouragements in the defence area. For example, it has been announced that there will be increased activity by the Armed Forces in Nanisivik near Arctic Bay which is near the Northwest Passage. I am sure that many of the people living in that area who would have become unemployed due to the closure of the mine will now be able to stay longer and look forward to more jobs.

In addition, there has been some mining activity in the southern Keewatin area north of Manitoba. They are looking forward to a lot more activity this coming summer. There is less aversion to participation in non-renewable resource jobs. These are only three or four examples which I provide for my hon. friend.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a lot of interest to the Hon. Member and to the questions which he was asked. I am wondering how a Tory Member can defend the net effect of all the budget changes which the Government has introduced, some of which are called tax reform, over the last four years. How can the Member account to his constituents, who, as he has indicated, are ordinary Canadians and a lot of whom are living close to the bottom, whose taxes over the four years have been increased very substantially?

I grant that in the last Budget there was a little bit of a dip, but that dip does not restore people to the tax levels that they were paying when his Government came to office. What does the Member tell people in that situation?

Mr. Suluk: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to say that I do not have much difficulty with that because people in my riding see that they are now receiving a lot more benefits. The income that many of us receive is fairly large, at least to me, and I do not mind paying my larger share of taxes. I believe that people who are fortunate enough to earn higher incomes should not complain about paying their just share.

With regard to the one-cent-per-litre increase on gasoline, people in my riding are used to larger increases in the cost of living. This is small potatoes as far as many people are concerned.

There is no point in exaggerating situations in Canada. The people in my riding are more practical in that if they have food on the table they know they are a lot better off than people living in Third World countries.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in this debate on the Budget tabled by the Hon. Minister. I must say I will not speak only to what has been announced by the Minister since it was a phoney and ludicrous performance on his part; one wonders why he bothered to advise the Canadian public that he would table his fourth budget. With the coming election, Canadians were entitled to much more information and corrective action to do away with the unfairness brought about by the latest budgets of this Government. But unfortunately, we have been played a genuine masquerade and had that budget been tabled on April 1, it would have been the biggest April fool's trick ever played on Quebecers and Canadians by this Conservative Government.

The only thing new in the Minister's speech last night might as well have been announced to some Chamber of Commerce in St-Elsewhere since in doing so, the Minister would have saved us one cent on gas taxes. He could have spared us the trouble of monopolizing the entire Parliament and the huge amount of money accounted for by these budget documents which, as everyone knows, will meet with the same fate as those background papers on free trade, that is to be used as toilet paper, since there was nothing worth mentionning in the Minister's announcement yesterday.

Let us see now the other side of the picture. The Minister has used one of the Prime minister's favorite tactics last night, which is to tell half-truths and refrain from making any kind of assessment of four years of Conservative Government.

On the one hand, we should keep in mind that the first budget speech of this Government was delivered on November 8, 1984. That budget was then followed by the famous one of May 23, 1985. Then there was another budget on February 26, 1986. On February 18, 1987, there was a speech in the form of a budget, but not a budget for fiscal reform. On June 18, 1987, there was another one and, yesterday, February 10, 1988, still another one. That makes in all four budgets, two budget speeches. All that paperwork! What has the Government done? First, it has started with its budgetary statement of November 8, 1984, hitting the people hard with a sales tax increase. It started right away to break the promises made during the electoral campaign and, in its usual concealing manner, it started to increase or create new contributions, and people needed passports and so on. It started in a concealing manner with a statement, but it started indirectly and surreptitiously to tax the people.

Everybody remembers that, during the election campaign, the Prime Minister had promised, with one hand on his heart and the other on the Bible, with the full support of all Tory candidates, that he would hold the universality of social programs as a sacred trust. As soon as he came to power, he made every effort to forget about it. Right away, he changed his mind—the Minister of Finance. Later on, under pressure, the Government backed down. But then, on the 23rd . . . Before that, the Government had said: "Listen, we are going to carry out a reform of the social programs. The Minister of National Health and Welfare—with his angelface, he looks like a monk—tabled his Blue Paper and announced a reform of our social programs. Senior citizens should not worry, for we are not going to touch them for lack of time. Canadian families should be assured that all the changes are not meant to reduce the deficit. Everybody said: We are again going to believe him, and so on.

On May the 23rd, 1985, we were hit hard. Like with a sledgehammer. What happened? In spite of all his promises, the Prime Minister was going ahead with a partial deindexation of Old Age Security pensions, a desindexation of personal income tax, and a deindexation of family allowances. His promises were long forgotten! Now it is different! What is the Government doing, because it is directly attacking the population as a whole? At the same time, the Government decided to exempt the most affluent from paying income tax on as little as half a million, to the delight of Government members.

The Government felt that it had to change the colours of uniforms and he paid about $60 million to add a little blue here and there. Just $60 million, and unfortunately it had to get rid of these uniforms because they stank. The material was no good. Just $60 million wasted. At the same time, it decided to reduce the family allowances paid to Canadian families.

At the same time, there were the banks . . . Reichman . . . Gulf, that was not serious, but what really mattered was to cut the deficit by reducing social programs. The older people in Canada were receiving so much money, it was terrible! They had to give some back.

Now I remember, at the time the Conservative Members supported the Minister of Finance who was saying that all elderly Canadians agreed with him.

But then these people walked on Parliament Hill and Mrs. Denis was heard to say: Whoa, Charlie Brown, you lied to us! The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stepped back. He had to step back. He was forced to admit that he was mistaken and that he had misled the people. The Government backtracked on that one as a result of the work done by senior citizens and by the Official Opposition.

But that was not all he did at the time, he had begun by boosting prices, he went in for indirect taxes in a big way. He really stepped hard on people, no holds barred. He began by saying: Indirect taxes, you see—so right off the bat the Government came up with 26 tax increases or new taxes.

And another time the sales tax went up 1 per cent. They did not waste any time. Now talk about gasoline, a real catastrophe that one. Most people have to buy gas. Good, up 2 cents a litre. Apparently we had the champion defender who was supposed to get a hammer lock on Petro-Canada, but the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) is nowhere to be seen these days. It became quite clear that he did not carry much weight with this Government, another 2-cent increase right then and there.

So the Government said: Alcoholic beverages, people drink them, let us tax that too! But let us spare the rich with capital gains tax exemptions, we have to protect the interests of the Prime Minister's chums.

All of a sudden the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) discovers that kids like candies, the only ones he seems to have missed. I went after older people, I went after family mothers, but children cost money, it does not make sense, they are getting to be a drain on rich people.

Can you imagine, Canadian children are a financial drain on wealthy people! Well, we will see to that. Let us slap a tax on candies, chocolates, soft drinks. Then he suddenly realized there are pets in Canada. Now, what have we here? Pet food is not taxed? Let us do just that, tax it. People suffer from impaired vision, it does not matter, we tax them all!

And then again he said: But what about lumber, thermal insulation, stoves, building materials? Fair is fair, let us tax everything! This is ridiculous, we simply cannot let rich Canadians go belly up!

And our "little darling Brian" was nervous. Then he realizes that the sick, those who have a cold, at a time like this, do not pay any tax to have a cold. Well, he is going to tax drugs. And he does it in a big way, he takes the list of drugs and puts a 10 percent tax on it.

He realizes that all the instruments for dental surgery . . . here again people who have a tooth pulled do not pay a tax. This is nonsense, this cannot be. Wealthy people will lose ground. Let us put a tax on that.

Mr. Speaker, we are not talking about aspirins or syrup but medications for people with cardio-vascular illnesses, or diabetes; for them it was a matter of survival. Diabetics need that to eat. And now there is a tax on that, Mr. Speaker.

Once again, we had to lobby as we did for old age pensions, to put pressure on the Minister, and then he got scared, he was afraid to see another Mrs. Denis come here. Before the House resumed in August, he announced that he was backing down on four measures.

But it still remains that today, when you buy aspirin, you have to pay the Brian Mulroney tax. It is everywhere the same, and we already have a dozen of taxes.

Don't worry, Mr. Speaker, it was only in May 1985 and we really got the shaft. As I will tell you later, the Prime Minister deindexed family allowances and the child tax credit, and he decreased the ceiling for families. The Minister suddenly decided that families with a $15,000 income were rich and had to pay taxes. But what about those with an income of $100,000, those poor rich people? The Minister had only given them an exemption of half a million dollars. These people have to plan their retirement. Can you imagine? People were not entitled to invest more than between $3,500 and $5,000 in a tax deductible RRSP. That is not enough for the rich. No, sir!

Ordinary workers were on the same footing as company presidents. That is unthinkable. The Minister therefore decided to raise the limit to $15,000.

But, Mr. Speaker, the taxpayers have to foot the bill for this tax deduction of up to $15,000, and it is certainly not someone who earns $15,000 a year who can save that much money. It cannot be done! This tax deduction was not for my own friends, but for those of the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister.

The Minister then said: We shall raise the limit to $15,000. Do not worry, my wealthy friends, you will be safe not only today, but also in the future; you are going to have a good life. With a basic income of $25,000 and a ceiling of 18 per cent, you can put aside $4,500 tax deductible for your retirement. However, someone with an income of $100,000 is entitled to put aside $15,500 to save on taxes, and the workers and the poor have to pay more taxes to make up the difference. This is why we end up with people who earn $100,000 a year and who succeed in not paying any taxes thanks to all those tax shelters, and if they have a child, they can even claim the child tax credit.

Now, our dear Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister can be happy! On February 26, I was going to say that he was still charging up the ice, to use a hockey metaphor, because he was not going to stop there. He was already riled at having had to back down on old age security pensions and medication for the chronically ill. Then he came in with a new budget, and he was off again: Another increase in the sales tax, another tax increase on tobacco and alcohol. Then there was air transport, and let us not forget gasoline!

When the company president drives to work, his employee might tell him: You can afford to pay one cent more a litre for gasoline, because this only means $55 a year. However, it means $55 for both the company president and the employee who sweeps the floor at the plant. But a company president can put it on his expense account, and it does not reflect too much on his income; since he already got a capital gain tax exemption, he will not protest. As for the poor worker, this tax increase is not noticeable; he is deluded into believing that his tax schedule has been lowered by $10 and might be happy about it, except that the Minister is taking $40 or $50 from him in a stealthy way, and he is the one truly happy.

He wants to keep changing up the ice and hopes for a big score. But in the meantime we learned of a few scandals. At that time, the Prime Minister, because he was riding high in the polls, was doing fine and feeling like king and master, and because we were only 40 here in the Official Opposition, he thought he could do anything. But he learned that some people can stand up to him, and our bush league Prime Minister had to back down.

But on February 18, the Minister of Finance was not about to change attitude. So he took another look at the list to see if there was anything left that was tax free. Well, he found out that kids were enjoying snacks like chips, pop corn, cheese products and pretzel without paying tax. That could not go on. He went at it with a sledge hammer and smacked a 11 per 100 tax on those items. The same with ice cream and what have you. He did not miss any: pop corn and salted nuts . . . Could you believe it, the unsalted nuts were taxed, but not the salted ones. He thought people were cheating him. And he still wondered whether or not a few other things had been left untouched. Once you start taxing, you might as well go all the way. So he slaps another cent a litre on gasoline. Another wham: whether unleaded or leaded, gasoline is taxed, everything is to be taxed. What about cigarettes? Another 4 cents tax. If we are going to do it, let's go—people smoke, 4 cents there. Turning to air transportation, let's go—everything is taxed.

And each time, the Government goes on, and what we are losing is fiscal havens. We remember that there was the right for young couples to provide for their future, put money aside and get a tax deduction—those were young couples without too much money—in order to buy a home. That's for the young? Well, let us take that away, no problem! Now what are we going to do next? Cut down on job-creation programs—let's go! Student challenges, Katimavik, our Saint-Benoît? well, Katimavik, this is something good for the young, let's take that away! The same goes for job-development programs, sections 38 and others. Again the Government made cuts there because it involves the people.

But we must remember that when those two Western banks failed, to get that $1 billion no demonstrations were needed, no survival committee. One phone call to the PM's office, and the whole billion was there. Even for those who had one or two million. But when real people are involved, things become more difficult.

People tell themselves: They will change some, at some point. Normally, a Government is a bit greedy, and during the two first mandates it says: I am going to take everything, and later I will let go some.

So there they come with a Budget, not a tax reform Budget because that will come on June 18. At that point we expect there will be something else. But no, they realize there are some items they forgot to tax. Think wallpaper was not taxed, so "full spin" as the saying goes. And it is taxed. Suddenly they discover telephones, telexes, something that makes no sense. And they slap a tax on that. Then there is the cable. Why do people have the cable? Listen now. Average people watch that. If someone is rich, he has a large antenna. So people who use the cable are taxed another 10 per cent. Five to eight, that is a shame in Canada. That produces $1 billion in revenues, then $1 or $2 billion, that is something. And they know that the fellow earning the minimum wage will never see $1 or $2 billion in his whole life, so it goes down well. But week after week, the poor who earn the minimum wage get poorer, while the rich get richer.

There is more. It came to light in that reform there was no tax on baloney. There was no tax on bread. So he said: What are we waiting for, let us tax bread, milk and butter! It was fortunate the Liberals went on another crusade, had petitions signed and organized a movement everywhere. Then, all Conservatives said: Indeed, that makes sense. We succeeded in making him back up on that. Imagine another case, that of an older factory worker. The company closed down and the worker, at the same time he was receiving his pension payments, was eligible for unemployment insurance. Back to Saint-Benoît-du-Lac. That did not make sense to him and with our national Flora, he decided: As of now, we will not allow that. You, older workers, will be cut off. You will not be allowed to get unemployment benefits. You will go look for a job because you are protected, you contributed on your salary to a pension fund to which your employer contributed also. If you invest that money in a RRSP, you fall into a different category. You are my chums. You can withdraw the same amount from a RRSP. That is different. You are then entitled to full benefits.

There again, we had to fight, fall behind our lieutenant, then our leader gave the signal: Let us go! We were on our way. We succeeded, after fighting for 17 months with the help of the people of Quebec City, Sainte-Marie, Montreal, Sorel, to force the Government to give the money back to 46,000 workers who made their decision. They had lost their jobs at a time the old regulations applied, but then secretly, during the holidays, on January 6, the Government had changed the rules and told them they were no longer entitled to the benefits.

We have won half the battle, but even now, I look at the people in Sorel who will lose their jobs because of the decisions of the Conservative Government, at the Vickers and CIP workers, at all those older workers throughout Canada whose company is closing and who are not entitled to full unemployment insurance benefits. This does not bother the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney). They are not his friends. They are not part of the capital gains tax exemption gang. Therefore, nothing is done about them.

All of this happened at the same time. There was another group covered by the early retirement program implemented by the Liberal Government to cope with technological change. I am talking about the textile and footwear industry. In that case, the Minister of Labour said: Let us get rid of that program and do something else. The Minister of Finance said: Let us have a new program. The old program was financed in full by the federal Government through the Unemployment Insurance Fund, but the Minister of Finance said: I am putting a stop to that. Then, he went to the provinces and told them: We shall give people a little less because they are getting too much. You know, this is the equivalent of unemployment insurance. It is not the same as welfare. We are giving people too much, and we should not be that generous. We shall give them less, but you will have to pay 50 per cent.

However, the negotiations are not going well. Not a single province is willing to accept that. On the other hand, at this very moment, 600 people, 60 per cent of them in Quebec, would be eligible for benefits, but the Government has cancelled the previous program though the new one has still not been implemented.

Mr. Speaker, my time is nearly expired, which is unfortunate as I have a lot to say. I am nearly through. I then thought: This is it; he has hit just about everyone. People were thinking: Now he will do something; he will correct the injustice, because during the first three years, they just put money in their own pockets. Then, I thought: They are all rich, they will leave something for the poor. Well, no, he had forgotten something. He said: Let us tax gasoline. As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, a tax of one cent a litre on gasoline means $55 more. This means $55 more out of the pockets of the workers and even of people on welfare. As for those who take the bus, the tax on gasoline means that the price of public transport has to go up. The Government has been able, in a roundabout way, to take for itself 23 cents a gallon in under four years. Just imagine!

I hope there will be no other Budget, because otherwise people will get scared. In less than four years: 23 cents a galon; it will cost a worker as much as $255 per year to get to work! The people on social welfare, the senior citizens all pay through indirect taxes. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is delighted with the results of a poll published today. He said: when we started in 1984, we ranked very low, and now we rank very high among seven nations of the world. He forgot to mention one thing: we are not working for the other countries of the world. Canada ranked very high in 1984, but now he is ranking third, which is low. That is what will happen when election time comes. Then, Mr. Speaker, it will be the other side of the coin. The other side of the coin is that he has imposed indirect taxes: 26 new taxes or tax increases! Be careful, Mr. Speaker, if ever he finds a way to tax sex, he is going to do it. It's about the only thing he has overlooked so far and I should not be suprised if he had someone working on this.

Mr. Speaker, there are the indirect taxes which people are paying on gasoline and other things, and there is the Government's record on Quebec. Its record in Quebec is a lack of action, the conservative legacy and the language Bill.

Mr. Speaker, I had hope some Tory Members would be here to ask me questions. If they want me to quote figures and tell them on what page . . . This is not a figment of my imagination, these are documents signed by Michael Wilson. That's the Minister of Finance, he is still here. Having said that, I should be delighted to answer questions.

[English]

Mr. Belsher: Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the Hon. Member from Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). There were a few words in his speech which caused me to prick up my ears. I want to make sure that we get an idea as to how accurate many of his statements were as he went along on his long tirade.

When I heard the word baloney I thought, "Here is a descriptive word we can use—

Mr. Nunziata: He said, "Mulroney".

Mr. Belsher: I wondered if he was speaking about the fullness of himself. Or can I describe his speech as being full of baloney?

Nonetheless, the Hon. Member talked about the bailing out of a couple of banks. These were two banks that we were all saddened to see were in serious difficulties back a few months ago in Alberta. He talked as if the banks were still there, as if we had taken them over and they were still functioning. Nothing could be further from the truth. The money that was spent on these two bank failures went to the depositors. The Hon. Member has distorted the truth. The money went to the credit unions and to other depositors. It was the small people who were being protected. There were certainly some who had deposits of over $60,000, but nonetheless the money went to the depositors and not to the banks.

It is a sad day when Members stand in their places and give out information as it were to sell their own line and treat it not as truthfully as they might. I would like the Hon. Member to explain what he means when he says that the paying out of the depositors was really a bailing out of the banks.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, this is really too bad. I realize the Hon. Member was trying to insult me, but whenever the Prime Minister does that, it means I was right and he has to eat crow, as they say.

I would like to answer the question about the banks. First of all, the Bank Act was about helping depositors with more than $60,000 in their accounts. I don't know many people in Sainte-Marie with more than $60,000 who don't know that if they put it in the bank, their money is not insured. So people who did, like municipal authorities, should have had their knuckles rapped because they did a poor job for their ratepayers. But why didn't the Government publish the list? I don't care if the union . . . I'm not under contract to the Conservatives. You guys defend the rich whether they are right or wrong. As far as I'm concerned, if the union is wrong, I'll come out and say so. We are here to defend everyone, and we don't go according to how fat their billfold is. We believe in being fair to everybody. And why didn't your Government publish the list, if it had nothing to hide? Since you seem to think you know the truth, why this game of hide and seek? You said I was wrong, but I have the documentation right here, and what I said is true. Why are you on the defensive? You don't even know what you are talking about. You said I was wrong when I said it was the wealthy who were . . . You don't even know who was on the list of people who were reimbursed. So why don't you rise in your seat and ask your own Government about this, before approving $1 billion in taxpayers money, money paid by senior citizens. Why don't you ask where the money is going before handing over $1 billion?

That is why today . . . I know that even if it happened to be the union that put over $60,000 in a bank without making proper enquiries, it should be penalized for poor management. The City of Montreal had the money in the bank. When the authorities saw what was happening, they withdrew the deposits. Which means that we had some good administrators in Montreal at the time. And who was responsible for that mistake? The Conservative Government, because it should have told the truth when we had the initial debate on the bail-out.

Mr. Lopez: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has been known for quite sometime as a two-bit comedian, but he has demonstrated today that he is also a no-good lowdown demagogue. Yet, perhaps I should congratulate him on his excellent memory. He has just made the same speech he made in 1979, to the extent of quoting the same series of taxes, gas prices and so on. The House will remember that in 1979, members of the opposition managed to defeat the Conservative Government on a proposed gas price increase of 18c. a gallon. The House will also remember that a few months later, as the Government, they had managed to increase the price of gas, not by 18 cents a gallon, but by as much as $1.50 a gallon. I am wondering today if he is not trying to play the same trick on us, demonstrating the same hypocrisy and the same untruth. They claim that they are trying to defend the poor and the orphans, when in fact they are trying to use the same strategy to fool Canadians by saying that the price of gas is too high. I believe that during the 1984 election campaign, Canadians were paying for gasoline more than they are paying today.

I still have in my file the bills I had collected for my election expenses, and Heaven knows I did not spend much. But I still have them, in case someone would want to find out just how high the price of a gallon of gas was compared to what it is today. It was much higher than today. In spite of inflation, in spite of all the administrative mistakes they seem to blame on us, the Conservative Party, in spite of the fact that the economy has improved, the number of jobs has increased by I do not know how much for it is quite a lot, compared with the record of the Liberal Party, which was not much because it was negative. I just cannot figure out by how much, because there were fewer and fewer jobs, and with us, it is always more and more jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie if his Party is again trying to pull the same trick?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, my answer is that we cannot resort to the same strategy used in 1979. It is true that the strategy is to blame the Government about the tax on gasoline, but the one thing I must say about the Government of Joe Clark at the time and about Mr. Crosbie is that at least they had come to the defence of elderly Canadians. They did not deindex family allowances. They did not deindex old age security pensions. What I said earlier are not falsehoods, it is right there in the Budget. If you go to the trouble of reading the details you will see that the 26 taxes were levied by your Minister, by your Government. This has to be the worst Government ever in our history, worse than Diefenbaker's, worse than Joe Clark's. I think I am speaking the truth.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—NIAGARA AREA STUDY—REQUEST FOR RELEASE

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, on November 30 of last year I asked the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) about the release of a report commissioned by Environment Canada, which report indicated that in the Niagara Region, the cancer mortality rate was 3 per cent to 5 per cent higher than in other regions of Ontario. Further, it stated that birth defects in the Niagara region were similarly over and above the Ontario average.

• (1800)

At the same time, since the report was said to have called for major initiatives, I asked what corrective or remedial action would be formulated, or what is being planned to put into place a program of action to finally clean up the Niagara River and the Great Lakes water basin with its untold number of pollutants? No one really knows how dirty or deadly the water is in the Niagara which flows through our beautiful portion of the country.

The report that was released is a 105 page report prepared by Environment Canada researchers, Tom Mair and Anne Sudar. It is a compilation of approximately 300 previous reports or studies on this same matter of toxic wastes and pollutants.

The Minister responded that the report synthesizes much of the existing information on the effects of toxic chemicals in the Great Lakes. He went on to criticize the report for lacking scientific rigour. Nevertheless, one of the authors of the report is said to stand by his indicators and the findings that he states are true, that in the Niagara region, human cancer rates are higher than the provincial average.

It might be of some use to my colleagues in the House for me to outline some of the pertinent aspects of this report, and illustrate why this is of such great concern to the Niagara region, and to the four million people who live around the Great Lakes and use that source for their water drinking supply.

The authors have taken findings from numerous studies showing the Niagara River as one of the most polluted areas in the Great Lakes region and, linking this to Health and Welfare statistics, they indicate that the Niagara cancer rate is 5 per cent higher for men, and 3 per cent higher for females than elsewhere in the Province of Ontario.

What makes it more difficult is that Environment Canada now wants more proof that toxic chemicals affect human welfare and health, and so Environment Canada is prepared to contemplate still another study with a view to nailing down scientific evidence which relates chemical contamination to human health.

In addition, the Niagara region's own health unit released a study a year ago showing that rates of cancer within the Niagara Peninsula are on a par with other parts of the Province of Ontario, except for the numbers of breast cancer among women. This creates a confusion that needs remedying.

I recognize that the relationship between toxic contamination and human health issues is a very complex one. However, there is a time for study and a time for action. Studies carried out for years have only confirmed what local residents have believed for some number of years. Every summer there are notices on our beaches banning swimming and warning those who use the beaches of health hazards should they enter the water. The message is clear. We know that the problem exists, we want solutions and remedies.

Countless environmental agencies, governmental and private, have studied these toxic wastes for years. There is no doubt that much more can be learned, but we are already sufficiently aware that humans are part of the environmental structure and are negatively affected by the toxins in our waters. The residents of the Niagara region have believed for years that the pollutants pose a genuine threat to their health and welfare. They look to us, not only for an assessment of the problems, but for the remedial solutions.

The Great Lakes Water Quality Board, a panel of environment experts, warned that pollution in the Great Lakes is so severe that it seems to defy not only resolution but definition. At least 362 worrisome synthetic substances have been identified in the Great Lakes, including pesticides, industrial chemicals, heavy metals and radioactive substances. Our Canadian Government has a record of acting against pollutants or hazardous materials before all cause and effect findings have been determined and catalogued. Surely enough research has been done in these hundreds of studies to establish the next step in the clean-up of the Niagara, the next step on the road to improving health, not only for the residents of Niagara but for all residents living in contaminated areas.

By reason of a local press comment to the effect that we in Ontario are now losing the pollutant battle, that press release went on to say that we have in the past blamed the State of New York for a large amount of the pollution discharged into the Niagara River, but Ontario's share has increased in the last two years from 11 per cent to 22 per cent. This is enough to give us some cause for concern and recognize the need for immediate action.

I call upon the Minister of the Environment to initiate programs, not studies, and urge him to fight with some determination to make Canada a healthier place in which to live and the Niagara a cleaner place for those who therein dwell.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to respond to the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) on behalf of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan).

I wish to compliment the Member from St. Catharines, a distinguished Member of the House of Commons, who has indeed pursued an outstanding career in representing the constituents of St. Catharines.

Concerning the Member's question which relates to the region represented by the Hon. Member, the Niagara-St. Catharines region, the report Toxic Chemicals in the Great Lakes Basin Ecosystem: Some Observations, was released on November 30, 1987 and is available upon request to the two authors.

Our Government shares the concerns of the Hon. Member, who I know is very interested in this issue about toxic contamination of the Great Lakes ecosystem. Indeed, much of our work within Environment Canada is devoted to finding solutions for the complex problems that we face. At the same time, it is crucial that any information the public receives is based on scientific investigation. This is particularly true concerning the complex relationship between pollution and human health. I can assure the House that the Government of Canada is striving to meet this need, although that link is difficult to make on scientific evidence currently available.

The report to which the Hon. Member refers is a compendium of information selected from available literature in a wide range of scientific fields. It was subjected to a thorough review by a number of scientific experts within the Government who concluded that many aspects of the paper were not defensible on scientific grounds. Environment Canada has accepted the recommendation that based on scientific inadequacies, the report should not be endorsed by the federal Government. However, due to public interest in the report and the fact that the information it contains is available publicly, it was agreed that the authors may make the manuscript available upon request.

While the Government could not endorse this report, I recognize that the authors clearly pointed out a gap in our scientific knowledge of toxic chemical contamination in the Great Lakes ecosystem. That gap is in our knowledge of the effects of toxic chemicals and is most evident when we attempt to address the impact on the health of Canadians living around the Great Lakes basin.

I would like to assure the Hon. Member that the Minister of the Environment in co-operation with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), is rectifying this situation immediately. In January of 1988, just last month, the Department of the Environment began to produce a report tentatively entitled Chemical Pollution of the Great Lakes, which will review what is currently known about the presence of chemicals in the Great Lakes aquatic ecosystem. This work is being undertaken by a team of senior scientists from the National Water Research Institution in Burlington and will result in a report to be produced in March of 1989.

Work on a second report to summarize the effects of toxic chemicals in the Great Lakes ecosystem has also begun. Environment Canada, Health and Welfare and Fisheries and Oceans have formed a task force and are currently formulating terms of reference. The report should be available in June of next year. This study will review what is known about the effects of toxic chemicals on Great Lakes aquatic biota, terrestrial wildlife and humans along the Great Lakes basin.

Canadians must have access to a full and accurate scientific evaluation of the impact of toxic chemical contamination on their environment and their health. These studies will help us answer, with more scientific rigour and clarity, the relationship between toxic chemicals and the natural environment. Even more important, they will push our knowledge even further to make the links between a degraded natural environment and human health.

Adjournment Debate

TRADE—FREE TRADE—ELIMINATION OF MARINE TRANSPORT SECTOR—GOVERNMENT POSITION/SITUATION OF SHIPPING INDUSTRY

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to a very important statement, but you will allow me my seven minutes, I trust.

On December 9, I asked questions in the House about the treatment of the shipping industry of Canada in the trade agreement being arrived at with the United States. I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to explain to the House and to the Canadian people why the Government had agreed to eliminate maritime shipping from its trade agreement. The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) gave an absolutely non-committal response to that, but only days later, Canadian Sailings, which provides a very useful service to people in the industry, was telling us what had been rumoured for some time to be the case, which was that the maritime section had been struck out.

The maritime provisions the Government was trying to negotiate with the U.S. extended only a limited distance into that enormous system of protection which the shipping industry in the U.S. has established over the years. It would have allowed Canadian vessel operators the same treatment as U.S. operators should any changes be made in the future in U.S. shipping laws. The Jones Act, the term we give to that whole system of protection, would have been allowed to continue, but the strength of the American industry against Canadian hopes was evidenced by the fact that even that possibility of change for the future was struck out. The Canadian shipbuilding and shipping industries were understandably disappointed and shocked, and expressed their opposition to the trade deal with the U.S. as a result.

I also asked the Government about rumours that the agreement would require the import into Canada of Alaskan oil in American vessels, although the copy of Hansard at which I was just looking has me saying Canadian vessels, and I want to correct that. The free trade agreement has provided for the import into Canada of up to 50,000 barrels a day of Alaska crude oil, but from the lower 48 states, which means that that oil will have to get to the lower 48 states from Alaska in American vessels and then be shipped into Canada. That is just one piece of evidence of what protectionism can do to us. I presume the Parliamentary Secretary will be happy to address that.

This is an indication of the difficulties Canada faced in negotiating with the United States. It is an indication of the protectionist system which the Government is attempting to deal with, but the end result of that action is what I want to comment on in the minutes left to me.

I note that earlier in the fall, the Vice President for Marketing and Planning of Canada Steamship Lines commented on the situation of the Canadian shipbuilding industry and particularly of his own company, a leader in the industry. Here was an argument for free trade in transportation and in shipping specifically. He declares:

> There is a compelling argument for free trade in shipping from the shipper's point of view. The most immediate beneficiaries of free trade in shipping would be U.S. shippers and receivers who would realize lower rates and Canadian shippers who would be serviced by a stronger shipping industry that eventually would result in lower rates and more jobs.

He went on to provide several reasons for the strength of the Canadian industry, not least of all the fact that Canadian shipping lines have had a general trade in which they have not been tied to any one company. They have had to go scouting for work in the Canadian grain trade and other business. As a result, the Canadian industry is far stronger than the American industry. The strength of the industry was revealed in his suggestion that we should have a North American shipping Act. This would achieve, I dare say, a kind of continentalism in Canadian and American shipping. That assertion is really quite far-reaching and very much in keeping with what many American industries and interests wanted to obtain, though not the American shipping industry.

I think it is worth having that suggestion before us as we realize what happened in the trade agreement is the triumph of just that sort of continentalism in other areas and in ways detrimental to Canadian industry and the Canadian economy. If Canada Steam Ship Lines thought it would do well in that kind of context, it seems pretty clear to us that for many other industries in Canada that is not going to be the case.

In contemplating what happened, we recognized that when the Government sought secure access to the American market, which was its ultimate goal, it failed to get it but did make enormous concessions on the way. I say quite advisedly that many authorities have looked at it and are convinced that the dispute settlement mechanism, of which the Government tries to make so much, will do all too little to protect us against the depredations of American trade law. The first industry that experiences that under the new regime, if the agreement is passed, will know that our Government failed.

The concessions made were so far-reaching that you will appreciate why I and my colleagues are particularly opposed to the deal. Take foreign investment. Mr. Hall, of the Dominion Marine Association, actually called for control on foreign investment in the Canadian shipping industry in order to ensure that Americans do not buy control. He wants amendments to the Canada Shipping Act to achieve that. In the deal negotiated with the U.S. there are checks on what the Canadian Government can do in the way of controlling foreign investment. That is one area of our concern. The way in which the Foreign Investment Review Agency was gutted by the Government when it took over in 1984 was part and parcel of that sell-out to the U.S.

With respect to energy, it is clear that the Americans had the ultimate goal of getting a continental energy market, access to Canadian resources, and control over the pricing.

That resource is one more piece of evidence of the success the Americans had and the way in which we sold out.

On point after point—culture, the limits we face on film distribution companies, the checks to Canadian sovereignty, economic and social policy—it can be seen why we oppose it. However, in its own peculiar way the shipping industry demonstrated how the Canadian Government had failed in its dealings with the Reagan administration.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish I had half an hour or even seven minutes because I could go through my friend's speech and counter his arguments point by point and show him that he is just simply wrong. The free trade agreement is going to let Canadians, in a North American context, create wealth so that our children and grandchildren will have the same kind of access to post-secondary education, sound health programs and good basic education that we had as a result of tariff reductions since the 1940s.

However, this gives me the opportunity to ponder out loud on how remarkable I find it that a member of the NDP would be complaining that an industry has been left out of the agreement which the NDP does not want to get into in the first place. That is an incredible irony. They simply cannot have it both ways.

As we all know, the transportation sectors were excluded from the free trade agreement. That exclusion was simply a consequence of the U.S. administration not being able to get beyond the very powerful maritime lobby which has worked to the disadvantage of American competition around the world. Not getting into this agreement hurts the Americans far more than if they did get into it.

As the Member will know, the negotiators were successful in obtaining U.S. agreement to eliminate tariffs over a period of 10 years. Those tariffs to be eliminated include the U.S. 50 per cent tariff against repairs being made to American ships in Canadian shipyards. The elimination of this tariff means that U.S. ships can in future be repaired in Canadian yards and offers more work and jobs to shipyards from Versatile on the West Coast to the Newfoundland dry docks. I might add that a number of these shipyards have already indicated their satisfaction with this initiative and the potential it holds for them in the future.

Next, let me point out that during the negotiations Canada reserved the right to replace its own 25 per cent tariff against U.S.-built ships entering our coasting trade with another measure—a quantitative import restriction against U.S.-built ships—for as long as the U.S. Jones Act keeps Canadian ships out of U.S. waters.

We are making changes in Bill C-52 to keep the pressure on the Americans to reduce and get rid of the Jones Act because it would be in their own best interest. However, that very narrow but powerful interest group in the United States is keeping the administration from doing something which is for the national good. The national interest in the United States is being perverted by this very narrow but powerful lobby group from the northeast.

In conclusion, the Government has done more for the shipping industry in the last three and a half years than has ever been done in any comparable period before. With the recently announced $2.7 billion contract for six more naval patrol frigates we will see 14,000 person-years of work over nine years in this important Canadian industry.

Around the globe nations are cutting back on their ship-building industry by 40, 50, and 60 per cent. Canada is doing that to a far lesser extent and we are doing it in a much more civilized way.

TRADE/IMPORT CONTROLS ON U.S. DAIRY PRODUCTS/ CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on February 9 I asked a question of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) with regard to whether or not the import controls which have been placed on dairy commodities such as yoghurt and ice cream would effectively cut out American imports of these commodities from the Canadian market. This has been a matter of great concern to Canadian dairy producers with the removal of tariffs because there were no import controls.

The Minister said, in effect, that they would be able to keep the levels of imports under control but he did not indicate exactly what that level would be. It is my understanding that about $1 million worth of dairy imports from the fluid milk stream such as yoghurt, ice cream, and other milk constituents have been imported into Canada in the past. There is great concern that with the removal of Canadian tariffs under the trade deal there will be a flood of cheap American produce into Canada. Under our supply management system our producers are paid some $48 a hectolitre while I understand the American price is approximately $30. There is a great disparity.

My concern was heightened during the Minister's answer when he said that the Government will put these dairy commodities on the import control list and will now have to negotiate the level of imports.

In a letter written on February 5 by Lloyd Bentsen, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee who will be overseeing the free trade agreement, he made it clear that the U.S. Senate is extremely upset with the Canadian Government putting these import controls into place. He said that the free trade agreement has been violated by this and that it breaks the spirit of the agreement..

He threatens that Canada will not be exempt from the omnibus trade Bill if these restrictions on imports are in effect. There is real concern about whether or not there will be any controls put in place. Clearly, there will be a permit system, but I doubt that there will be effective controls in light of the threat of the U.S. Senate Finance Committee.

The Minister also talked about putting in place Section 710 in the free trade agreement, which allows for supply management and so on. He did not mention that Section 710 of the agreement is subject to Section 703 which provides, as Senator Bentsen states, for the freest possible removal of all tariff and quota barriers between the countries.

It is clear that when a company like Labatt buys out two of the largest dairy operations in New Jersey and New York State, as it did last fall, it is expecting the market to be wide open and a whole Canadian supply management system to be destroyed.

This was reinforced when, in the last couple of months, Peter Pocklington, who supported the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in the leadership race of 1983, bought out Palm Dairies which operates throughout western Canada. It is clear that he expects the borders to be wide open for dairy commodities and that supply management and marketing boards will be eliminated so that prices will be much lower.

When those two large companies move toward acquisition of the entire dairy industry and operate in the United States, as Labatt is planning to do, they obviously foresee the marketing boards being eliminated. That will be a tragic day for Canada.

Our marketing boards and supply management system has given our producers an excellent source of income. It has provided a controlled situation where consumers receive a good product at a fair price and our dairy industry is given a sound basis on which to operate. That does not exist in the United States, which has a terrible system. There is overproduction to the point where over one million head of cattle had to be killed in the last two or three years in order to reduce production.

I hope the Government will change its mind, will control imports and maintain the supply management system that has been so beneficial to our entire dairy industry throughout Canada for many years.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first, let me thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), for giving the Government, for the third time this week alone, the opportunity to offset the falsehoods and fear being promoted by some of those opposed to the free trade agreement.

I am pleased to assure the House that an Order in Council has indeed been passed to add several dairy products to the import control list. The items include ice cream, ice cream novelties, ice milk, ice cream and milk mixes and yoghurt. As the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has already stated, there are a number of steps we must follow to meet our obligations under the GATT before the import control measures can take effect. The Order in Council is the first step and we are in the process of following the other necessary procedures. These include notifying our trading partners of the items we have placed on the import control list. We are also required to consult the major suppliers, in this case the United States and the European community, regarding the import levels to which they will be restricted.

I reiterate that the Government of Canada is following all the procedures required under international trade agreements to ensure that, to use the words of the Hon. Member for Algoma, "a flood of cheap surplus dairy commodities" will not enter Canada.

I can further assure the House that the markets for the dairy products in question will continue to be supplied almost entirely by Canadian dairy producers.

Imports of these products, both now and in the future, represent less than 1 per cent of the Canadian market for dairy products. That means that more than 99 per cent of these dairy products consumed in Canada are, and will continue to be, produced by our own Canadian dairy industry.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock.

The House adjourned at 6.32 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1988-89

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-109, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a Legislative Committee.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members are aware, the Financial Administration Act requires that statutory borrowing authority must be obtained from Parliament in order for the government to increase its outstanding debt. Specifically, Part IV, Section 36 of that Act requires that "no money shall be borrowed or security issued by or on behalf of Her Majesty without the authority of Parliament". This refers to new money only rather than the refinancing of existing debt since Section 38 of the Act provides continuing authority to borrow funds to repay maturing debt. Thus, statutory borrowing authority must be obtained from Parliament to permit the government to implement a regular debt program to meet its financial requirements.

Section 39 of the FAA, however, provides for the Governor in Council to authorize the borrowing of money if it appears that funds will not be sufficient to meet disbursements from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. This action is designed for short-term, temporary use only as the term of the borrowing may not exceed six months and each such borrowing requires approval by the Governor in Council.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to outline for the House the terms of the borrowing bill. The bill is structured to establish the principle that borrowing authority each fiscal year will be equal to the financial requirements plus a non-lapsing reserve. Given the uncertainty over the exact timing of the passage of the bill, it is also structured to ensure that the amount of authority available is always equal to this amount, regardless of when the Bill is passed. I will go over each clause in the Bill now.

Paragraph 2(1) of the Bill requests borrowing authority in the amount of $25.3 billion for fiscal 1988-89. This amount is equal to the $22.3 billion in financial requirements forecast in the budget plus a $3 billion non-lapsing reserve to cover contingencies such as a further build-up in official international reserves during fiscal 1988-89. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, you will see that The Fiscal Plan tabled this week is very clear in that respect.

Paragraph 2(2) states that all unused borrowing authority granted by the Borrowing Authority Act 1988-89, to the extent that the unused authority exceeds $3 billion, will be cancelled on March 31, 1989. This paragraph preserves the government's non-lapsing reserve to be carried forward into the next fiscal year and also ensures that $3 billion is the maximum amount to be carried forward.

Paragraph 3 states that any borrowing authority granted last year by the Borrowing Authority Act 1987-88 will be cancelled on March 31, 1988 or on the date that the new bill comes into force, whichever is later. Thus, this paragraph prevents the non-lapsing reserve granted for earlier years from accumulating but ensures that cancellation takes place at a time that is not disruptive to the implementation of the regular debt program.

Paragraph 4 ensures that if the new Bill is passed after March 31, 1988 and part of the non-lapsing reserve granted for 1987-88 is used, this amount will be deducted from the authority granted for 1988-89 and thus the total amount of borrowing authority available for the new fiscal year is not increased.

The borrowing Bill for 1988-89 is basically the same as the one for last year. As I said earlier, the amount requested is equal to the financial requirements plus a $3 billion non-lapsing reserve, once again, the same as last year. The new clauses, which I outlined above, simply ensure that these are the amounts available, regardless of when the bill is passed.

For the information of Hon. Members, Mr. Speaker, I would now like to review how the borrowing authority granted for the current 1987-88 fiscal year had been used to the end of January. For 1987-88 a total of $25.8 billion was granted, made up of $21.3 billion, an amount equal to the financial requirements forecast in February 1987, a $3 billion reserve and $1.5 billion provided a separate supplementary borrowing authority Bill for 1986-87. This latter amount was carried forward to enable $600 million of Treasury bills issued pursuant to Section 39 of the FAA in the 1986-87 fiscal year to be rolled over in the current fiscal year and to cover the delivery of $900 million of Canada bonds delivered in April, 1987 but sold in March, 1987 pursuant to Orders in Council granted in March, 1987, charging the issue of these bonds to borrowing authority granted for 1986-87.

To the end of January, domestic and foreign borrowing programs had used about $14.8 billion of the authority granted for 1987-88. Of this amount, about $7.8 billion was charged to the marketable bond program and $9.7 billion to the issue of Canada Savings Bonds. Over the same period the amount of Treasury bills outstanding was reduced by about $2.5 billion and about $0.2 billion of outstanding foreign debt, on balance, was redeemed. The reduction in the amount of outstanding Treasury bills to the end of January was the result of the large CSB sales last fall and the consequent need to reduce cash balances to more normal levels. Over the remainder of the fiscal year, net Treasury bills sales are expected to pick up substantially to finance the government's borrowing requirements. Over the fiscal year as a whole, the amount of borrowing authority remaining at the end of March, 1988 is expected to be somewhat less than $3 billion. Thus, foreign exchange transactions, which to the end of January had increased official foreign exchange reserves from the beginning of the fiscal year, and had to be financed through the sale of Canadian dollars, are expected to have used a portion of the reserve granted for 1987-88.

However, as Hon. Members know, these foreign exchange transactions have been large and volatile in the past and the situation could change considerably before the end of the fiscal year.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind Hon. Members that it is most important that the government be in a position to maintain an orderly ongoing debt program and to minimize uncertainty in the capital markets. Expeditious passage of this Bill will help to achieve these objectives.

[English]

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, we are here today to debate borrowing authority Bill C-109 after the presentation of a quite extraordinary so-called Budget which in fact was 95 per cent electioneering and self-congratulation on the part of the Government, with remarkably little content. The Government is asking us to give it authority to borrow over $25 billion but the Estimates will not be coming forward until about 10 days from now, so that we are being asked to approve a blank cheque with no idea of how this money will be spent. Certainly the Budget we saw yesterday gives us very little idea of how the money will be spent. Therefore, when the Parliamentary Secretary asks for such an important Bill to be passed quickly, he is asking for something that is totally unrealistic. The Official Opposition will be responsible. We certainly will not hold up the Bill unduly but we want to see the Estimates and we will want to have some careful examination of Government spending plans.

A well-known journalist wrote the other day that the trouble with the Budget, which is a paean of praise to the ruling Party, is that it strains credulity to the limit. Wrapped around one simple fiscal measure, a gas tax increase, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has managed to work a whole Tory election manifesto. Its message, repeated endlessly in numbing detail, is that those we elected in 1984 have been better financial managers than those before them.

Mr. Nickerson: They have!

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): He continues that if the Government of the day is going to produce a Budget that is 95 per cent electioneering guff and 5 per cent serious content, it is setting itself up for a few querulous voices to be raised in dissent. I think most of us would agree except we would say that it is not only querulous voices that will be raised in dissent but voices of reason which will be asking for the facts that were not in the Budget produced the other day.

The Government is asking for authority to borrow $25.3 billion, too much for a Government which has not delivered on its promises to Canadians not to raise taxes and to lower the deficit. The Minister of Finance, in his budget speech, said the deficit had been reduced to $29.3 billion. However, this is the result of a lot of smoke and mirrors. Some very creative accounting has been used to create the illusion that the public debt has been lowered when in fact it is higher.

The second point I want to repeat is that the Main Estimates will not be tabled until February 23, 1988, so we are being asked to vote on this Bill on faith. This Budget does not inspire confidence. In fact, the Budget brought down Wednesday, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) pointed out, is not even a proper Budget. A Budget usually sets out a Government's philosophy, policy and plans, but the Government wasted time and energy to produce a package of self-serving, self-congratulatory, repetitious rhetoric on what the Government is alleged to have done for Canadians since 1984.

Not one of Canada's economic problems has been solved. This budget puffery and self-congratulation is an insult to poorer Canadians, older workers, senior citizens, the unemployed and the homeless. The Government has left those people out of the Budget and misled those Canadians it hoped to reassure with its puffed-up rhetoric.

I want to return to the illusory $29.3 billion deficit which in fact is probably closer to $32 billion or $33 billion. One of the accounting tricks used is that of accelerated remittances. Canadian employers who must deduct income tax, unemployment insurance premiums and Canada Pension Plan contributions from their employees and remit those deductions to the Government have been steadily required to do it more often. Starting January, 1987, instead of remitting the deductions once a month they became obliged to remit them twice a month. That gives the Government a once-only increase in cash flow of $1.6 billion. The figures look better at the end of the financial year because the Government has one additional fortnightly payment, but that is not a real saving.

Subsequently the Government moved to require employers to remit weekly, a further one-time increase in their cash flow, but not a real reduction in expenditures in any way. The Government has also postponed certain expenses such as spending on defence. In addition, the Government has given itself a six-month interest free loan in that although certain income taxes have been reduced as of January of this year the payroll deductions do not in fact take effect at the new rate until July. Therefore, employers are still remitting to the Government at the old unreduced rate. That gives the Government, in effect, an interest-free loan for this year of something in the order of $1 billion.

No less an authority than the Bank of Montreal said in one of its recent publications that if you take away all this creative accounting the public debt should be about $4 billion higher than the figure quoted by the Minister of Finance of $29.3 billion.

The Government has raised taxes at a rate higher than that of any Government since Confederation.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa Carleton): Who caused the debt?

Miss Nicholson: Many of these taxes were built into the system and will continue in a hidden way year after year. For example, the deindexation of benefits and the deindexation—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa Carleton): That's old news.

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite is apparently rather impatient to get into this debate. Perhaps you would be kind enough to reassure him and tell him when he is scheduled to speak, although he does not usually make speeches other than when he is sitting down.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa Carleton): Who listens.

Miss Nicholson: As I was saying, the Government has raised taxes more than any Government before it since Confederation. It continues the process. The Budget we heard on Wednesday had one additional tax measure which showed. I will return to the hidden ones, but the one that showed was another one cent a litre increase in gasoline tax effective April 1, 1988. In all, that makes an increase of 23 cents a gallon since 1984.

We also heard the announcement about the new rules for calculating federal sales tax, another band-aid mechanism that will not end the problem of disparity in tax rates across industries and the bias against exports.

The Minister has been holding forth about manufacturers sales tax for a long time. He has described it as a killer of jobs. Nevertheless, he keeps increasing the base and the rates. He tells us that at some date in the future he will replace the manufacturers sales tax with a new consumption sales tax. Meanwhile, as he inveighs against it, he increases its use.

I want to describe briefly some of the increases in taxes which we have seen since the Government came in. Some of them are built in so that they increase year after year. The most important one, of course, was the deindexation of the tax system. This continues year after year. At the same time as the Government reduces the payments for family allowances, child deductions, and spousal allowances—tax measures that are particularly useful to young families with young children—the personal exemption on income taxes has had indexation removed from it. This means that there is built-in forever and ever a steady increase in the tax system. This year alone it is worth $750 million to the Government although all the self-congratulation in the Budget speech did not mention that.

The Minister criticizes the manufacturers' sales tax so much, but look at the way he has used it since he came to power. On October 1, 1984, it was increased from 9 to 10 per cent. On January 1, 1986, it was increased from 10 to 11 per cent. On April 1, 1986, it was increased from 11 to 12 per cent. The impact on tax revenues was a $3 billion gain to the Government as a result of those.

On July 1, 1985, we saw the sales tax extended to candy and soft drinks. On July 1, 1987, we saw the sales tax extended to fast food and snacks. Those two measures netted the Government $460 million. On January 1, 1988, we saw sales tax increased from 8 to 12 per cent on paint, wallpaper, and toys. That measure gets the Government $60 million a year. The increase in gasoline excise tax of 2 cents a litre on September 3, 1985, brought the Government $900 million a year. The one cent a litre increase on January 1, 1987, and the one cent a litre increase on February 9, 1987, each brought the Government $450 million a year. That is before yesterday's increase.

We have seen progressive increases in air transportation taxes since May 1, 1986, which have netted the Government $55 million. There have been increases in duty on alcohol and tobacco; the first May, 1985, the second February, 1986, and another in January, 1988.

The Government continues to increase taxes while not lowering the public debt. On January 1, 1988, we had a 10 per cent tax on long distance telephone calls and cable television services. That will bring the Government $945 million a year. We saw the elimination of the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan in May, 1985. The Government gained $105 million from that. We saw a permanent 3 per cent surtax on all taxpayers applied on July 1, 1986, and that continues. Many people think that it ceased at the same time as the 5 and 10 per cent surtax on high income earners ceased in December, 1986, but not so. That surtax is still in place. The Government has taxed Canadians to the hilt but is not reducing spending.

Let us look at some examples of what the Government spends its money on. We saw the bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland Bank, and the cost of the Estey Commission set up to examine the Government's poor decision, $1.6 billion and climbing.

• (1030)

The cost of the Stevens inquiry was $2.3 million. New uniforms for the Armed Forces amounted to $2.7 million, which is not an expense anyone would grudge if they were good quality, but we hear complaints that the uniforms smell.

The salaries and office expense of Canadian trade negotiator, Simon Reisman is $10 million over three years. However, in order to promote this deal there is a $12 million campaign to persuade Canadians of the value of something which is quite questionable.

The budget for Cabinet Ministers' staff doubled under the Government. The new cost is $15.1 billion a year.

The Shamrock Summit in Quebec cost $2.6 million. While I am sure the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) sang nicely, I question whether it did anything else for Canada.

Office renovations for Conservative Ministers have come to $107,500 since they first took power. Redecoration of certain Ministers' offices amounts to $425,201.

We then come to the Prime Minister's travels. A trip to Asia in May, 1986, cost $1 million, including $3,500 for the butler and maid, and $150,000 for the sound and video equipment. The Prime Minister's trip to New York cost $62,225, including $13,000 for motor vehicle rentals. The Prime Minister's trip to Paris for the francophone summit cost $492,000—-

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Who paid for that?

Miss Nicholson: The French Government paid for the PM's hotel Bill of $28,000, in answer to the Member opposite.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The French Government paid for it.

Miss Nicholson: There is $492,000 minus $28,000 that still must be accounted for.

There was a shadow aircraft flying alongside the Prime Minister's airplane to Baie Comeau in July and to Toronto in August, which cost $1,900 an hour. Executive jet bills run up by the Conservative Government in the first 45 days in office amounted to $345,000. I could go on and on with the list. The fact is that the Government's behaviour in office does not inspire confidence and certainly does not justify it coming in without the Estimates, asking to have its borrowing Bill passed on faith.

Since the forecast for the 1987-88 fiscal year was last given in the June, 1987 White Paper, budgetary expenditures have grown by $1.1 billion, in spite of the fact that almost $1 billion less than anticipated was paid out in unemployment insurance benefits. There is $2 billion in increased public debt charges from a government that undertook to reduce the public debt.

Both the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said before and after they came to office that taxes would not be increased, yet taxes and spending have increased at an almost unbelievable rate.

The Minister congratulated himself generously in his Budget Papers for the fact that some aspects of the economy are better than expected. These congratulations do not belong to the Government. The improved state of our economy in some respects is due to the fact that we are in the sixth year of recovery from a cruel and almost unbelievably harsh world-wide economy. Of course, the Government inherited certain sound building blocks from the previous government which had managed an extraordinarily difficult recession in a way designed to reduce, as much as possible, the hardship on Canadians. Furthermore, the Government has benefited from a change in Canadian habits. Canadians used to be great savers but are now consuming more. The Government and the economy have certainly benefited from increased consumer activity.

In summary of my criticisms of the Budget and the Government's performance to date, I suggest that we have a Government that has taxed and spent. Taxes are increased and the public debt is increased. It is a Government that has not shown much concern for low and middle income Canadians. It has been particularly hard on young families with children, who are bearing the brunt of most of the Government's policies.

Since 1984 individuals have seen both their personal and sales taxes increased by $29.3 billion, or 68 per cent. Corporations have had their taxes increased by 28 per cent, or $2.6 billion. Even after so-called tax reform, 60,000 profitable corporations still pay no tax. Yet what does this mean to the average family? A family of four with a single earner and an income of $32,000 has faced a total tax increase since 1984 of $1,200 per year. There is very little for the average income family to correct the inequities of previous Budgets and the White Paper exercise in tax reform.

The Government has taken some steps to increase the lot of the very poorest, those with incomes of under $20,000 a year, but those with incomes between $20,000 and $40,000, especially if they have children and there is a spouse who is not working outside the home, are carrying the main brunt of the Government's policies.

With all those conditions, I think it is absolutely ridiculous for the Government to come in with a request to borrow over $25 million with no Estimates and ask us to vote for that Bill today on faith. When we see the Estimates on February 23 and have some idea of exactly how the Government proposes to spend the money that Canadian taxpayers have had extracted from them, we will be in a better position to decide on this Bill.

The Government continues to boast about the job creation figures. Those figures have, of course, improved, as they should have in the sixth year of recession. We still have over a million Canadians unemployed and the Government appears to have abdicated its responsibility to them. Programs for job creation are steadily being cut. We are told that the economy is so good people should be able to find jobs without any assistance from the Government. That is true in certain regions. It is certainly not true in all parts of Canada and it is certainly not true for the young, whose unemployment rate continues to be twice the national average, and for people over 50 who are displaced for any reason and who find great difficulty getting into retraining programs.

We have a Budget before us that addresses the future in an entirely inadequate way in at least two respects, first, in its treatment of the deficit, which has been less than honest and, second, in its forecast for the Canadian economy, which is all smoke and mirrors.

In the tone of incredible self-congratulation which runs through these Budget books, we find the Minister is even comparing himself with the Olympic athletes. He invites all Canadians to emulate the Olympic athletes gathered in Calgary. He stated their commitment and quest for excellence must be what we as a nation bring to the task of building our economy. That is a fine sentiment. Is the Minister prepared to put some action behind that sentiment?

Two years ago we had a budget that told us that the deficit would come down in stages, to $27.9 billion in the fiscal year 1989-90, $25.8 billion in 1990-91 and $23.5 billion in 1991-92. That was what the Minister said. It was in his papers. He is now showing a $28.6 billion deficit for 1989-90 and, as I said, that also depends on creative accounting. The real figure is probably nearer $32 billion.

The Minister of Finance in his Budget papers also included one thick document entitled The Fiscal Plan, but it gives no detailed figures after the next two years. What kind of planning is that? We used to have a five-year plan. In fact, we were led to understand there would be a five-year forecast. This document tells us, without giving us any detail, that by 1992-93 the deficit will have shrunk to $19.5 billion. It does not tell us how this will be achieved. It is another statement of faith.

Furthermore, the Minister talks about an improving employment situation but traditionally we have needed to see 3 per cent growth in the economy just to stand still in terms of job creation. The Minister anticipates 3 per cent growth or better from now until 1993, but other economic forecasters see lower growth, more around 2.5 per cent. So it goes, on and on.

Unfortunately, the Department of Finance projections appear so rosy that one has to take them with some skepticism. There are very few solid figures in any case. There is a great deal of puffery. We have five documents, in all about 18 inches thick, to announce one tax measure, an increase of a penny a litre on gasoline and one cut of $300 million in Government services somewhere—we are not told where. We have to wait for a Treasury Board announcement to see when, where and how. For those two announcements we received about 10 pounds of paper, essentially of a self-gratulatory description—less than accurate—of the Government's term in office. This Budget is an electioneering document prepared at the expense of the taxpayers. It is less than honest.

On the basis of that, and no Estimates, we are being asked to give the Government borrowing authority of $25.3 billion today. I am sure you can see, Mr. Speaker, that while the Government has to be able to transact its business—even if we think it is transacting it less than efficiently, as a responsible Official Opposition we will certainly not hold up the borrowing authority indefinitely—we do want to see the Estimates. We want to scrutinize the expenditures. We want a little more time to examine the tables which were published with the Budget papers, such as they were. The information was limited. Some of it is contradictory. My Party will have other speakers today on this Bill, but we will not be holding up the Bill unduly. However, we certainly would want to see the Estimates before it is passed.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to speak on Bill C-109, an Act to provide borrowing authority. As the previous speaker said, we do not have the official Estimates so we do not have the details of exactly how this money will be spent and exactly where the cuts will be in the non-statutory programs as outlined in the Minister's Budget this week. Therefore, it is very difficult to comment on the $25.3 billion which is being sought under this borrowing authority Bill. We are aware that it is necessary for the business of the Government to carry on, but the only indicaters we have from the Government of where it is intending to go with this was in the Budget speech this week.

I would like to make a few references to the Budget and to look at a few areas where, perhaps if there had been more targeted spending, more efficient spending, the need for authority to borrow so much would not be required.

My Party along with many Canadians, waited with great excitement and anticipation for the Budget which came out this week. We expected strong measures to attack many of the issues of the day, such as regional disparities and cutting the deficit. This borrowing Bill certainly indicates that we need to continue to pay our debts and that the debts are not going to go down by very much.

Some of us had hoped that this Budget would take a strong stand, that we would be able to reduce our deficit by realigning some priorities the Government has outlined in previous papers, for example, by rejecting huge expenditures of billions of dollars for such large ticket items as nuclear submarines, which are of dubious value. Perhaps we could look at something more realistic and more in line with what is really needed for the protection of our sovereignty and the defence of Canada.

We had hoped to see some innovative measures which would have increased tax revenues thereby reducing the need for such a large amount of borrowing. Increasing the number of taxpayers increases the amount of revenue. We had hoped to see very strong measures to attack regional unemployment which would have put the over 1 million unemployed back to work, thereby increasing the number of taxpayers.

We have not seen the Estimates so we do not know exactly how all of these funds will be allocated. What we saw instead in the Budget is lost opportunities. It fails to raise tax revenue from corporations and it fails to get people back to work. In the Budget we see that the Government has decided to hold its course.

At first, when we looked at the Budget many of us thought it was a sort of ho-hum, couch potato type of Budget. There was nothing in it worth getting up off the couch to turn off the TV and watch. When one considers the amount of money that the country is having to borrow under this Bill, we know that we are in very serious trouble. The biggest problem will be the legacy left for the next Government after this obvious pre-election Budget. Of course, Members of the NDP are pretty worried about, that given that it is most likely that we will form the next Government.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party has raised some very serious concerns about the trade agreement and economic union with the United States that this trade agreement causes. When we look at the Budget we can see what we are losing in revenues, which relates to the amount of money we have to borrow. Lost revenues obviously necessitate the borrowing of more money. In looking at the Budget we see that the Government has estimated it will lose $55 million in revenue owing to the bilateral agreement in 1988-89. On top of that we will lose $460 million in 1989-90 because of this bilateral trade agreement.

Jane Taber of The Ottawa Citizen in an article yesterday estimated that these losses will continue to increase as a result of the trade agreement. She estimates that they will increase to about $2.5 billion by 1999 when the deal will be fully implemented.

Under the seemingly benign heading of "Changes due to economic and other factors" the Government also projects a loss in revenue from unemployment contributions by $15 million in 1988-89 to a whopping $440 million in 1989-90. I might be pretty new to the House but it seems to me that what that says is just what Members of the New Democratic Party have been saying all along, that is, that the Government anticipates a significant decrease in employment in the next two years.

In this respect we have to consider again the trade agreement and the economic union with the United States. If this were not the case then why would contributions to unemployment insurance decrease? They can only decrease because people are not working or because they are making lower wages.

If one looks carefully at this one part of the Bill, one will see that we are projecting very high losses in revenue from the bilateral agreement and that obviously the Government is anticipating significant decreases in employment up until 1990. This causes us to observe that the trade agreement with the United States looks less free each day. This borrowing Bill confirms that it is not so free, which leads me to my next point.

The Budget fails to meaningfully address regional disparity. If the Government had come up with proposals to attack some of the problems connected with regional disparities, there may have been less of a need for such a high amount of borrowing. In this respect I want to give some concrete examples with respect to the number of people unemployed.

I am talking here about the 19.6 per cent of the people of Newfoundland who are unemployed, the 11.4 per cent of the people of British Columbia who are unemployed and the 9.7 per cent of the people of Quebec who are not working. I am talking about the 13.7 per cent of the people of New Brunswick who are not working. These people are not paying any taxes. This is why I say that the Government has lost the opportunity to bring forward some innovative measures to raise revenue.

Despite the Government's self-congratulatory comments on how many jobs it has created, that is of little comfort to the almost 20 per cent of Newfoundlanders who are unemployed. There was an important statistic left out of the Government's self-congratulatory message. According to Statistics Canada, there were more bankruptcies in Canada in 1987 than in any year since 1984. In 1987 the largest number of people and businesses went bankrupt, any they were not paying any taxes. The number in this respect was 24,348. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, the effect on families and individuals of those bankruptcies? We only see the statistics. We do not see what is really happening to the families and to those people the statistics represent.

There was an opportunity to really attack regional disparities, to ensure that people everywhere would be working, and working meaningfully. One of the best ways to bring this about would have been to ensure that the economic development programs that exist for the regions were included in this measure. We have to raise a question about that. In its regional policy, as outlined by the Minister, the Government mentions three things; the Western Diversification Fund, the Atlantic Opportunities Fund and the Northern Ontario Fund. So far those are nothing but names. We do not see what they will be doing. These programs do not address the needs of northerners, or the needs of many others in the northern parts of other provinces who are often in equally disadvantageous positions. Southern Ontario seems to be presented as a place that is really making it, where everyone is doing well. Even in southern Ontario in some places, such as Windsor, the unemployment rate is 14 per cent.

I see that my time is up for the moment, Mr. Speaker. I would like to continue my remarks later if I may.

• (1100)

Mr. Speaker: It being eleven o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 19(4) the House will now proceed to Statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 21.

IMMIGRATION

PRESENCE OF CONVICTED AIRCRAFT HIJACKER IN CANADA

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, this week in Montreal the Government is sponsoring a conference on airport terrorism. This follows a very good initiative launched many years ago by Pierre Trudeau. Ironically, at the same time there is a terrorist present in Canada who got here through a series of bungles. While the Government is attempting to deport him, or stating that it is, it is not following the most expeditious means at its disposal to do so. I have asked questions about this matter and received pretty unsatisfactory answers.

I am wondering why the Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has not taken the initiative of charging this individual, under Section 6 of the Criminal Code, with the offence of hijacking. This is a relatively new section of the Act. Because that individual has been charged and convicted in another country, he has not been dealt with within the meaning of the treaty because he did not serve his full sentence. I would hope that the Attorney General would consider that recourse.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

NEED TO RETAIN CN IN ABITIBI

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on March 19, 1975, journalist Armand Beaudoin wrote an article in l'Echo Abitibien under the heading: CN's lousy service—Merchants up in arms, in which he said: "At CN, the whole attitude has become so negative that nobody knows what is happening. We think the people responsible for this situation are in Montreal."

Things are the same today, Mr. Speaker. We are all fighting to keep CN in Abitibi. CN could increase its market share by 28 per cent. CN is viable in Abitibi-Témiscamingue.

Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the President of CN, Mr. Lawless, to appoint immediately a permanent district manager in Senneterre. We also want to see Mr. Lawless in Senneterre a few weeks from now, to meet with Mayor Denis Sawyer and members of the Senneterre town council, a meeting that will be attended by the federal and provincial Members for Abitibi East, Rouyn-Noranda, Abitibi West and Ungava, and by the Abitibi—Témiscamingue regional development committee for railway transportation.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ANNOUNCED SHUTDOWN OF PRINCE RUPERT STATION CFPR

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, while the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) undertakes the extraordinary step of having Cabinet review Allarcom's all-news channel bid, and Canmet's entry into the telephone market, CBC Radio is shutting down its award winning station CFPR-Prince Rupert and the Minister refuses to do anything.

According to the recent Task Force on Broadcasting Policy, the per capita cost of providing local news coverage to all under-serviced areas in Canada amounts to a mere 10 cents per year. The Mulroney Government has hacked and slashed the CBC budget to the point where, in order for the good people of the British Columbia interior to receive improvements in CBC Radio, another region of British Columbia, the northwest, must suffer.

The Broadcasting Act of Canada states that CBC must serve "the special needs of geographic regions". Surely closing CFPR in Prince Rupert, and reducing local northwest B.C. reporting to ad hoc broadcasts through Prince George, violate the intent of the Act and the intent of Parliament.

The B.C. northwest and the B.C. northeast are distinct geographic regions. They can both be served more effectively by CBC, and while I will be putting pressure on the corporation to stop plans to shut down CFPR, I also call upon the Minister of Communications to display a commitment to extending public broadcasting. If resources are to be slashed to the CBC it in turn cannot meet its legislated responsibility to the people of B.C.

I urge the Minister of Communications to wake up and realize what her Government's continued attacks upon public broadcasting mean to the people who live in the regions of Canada.

EMPLOYMENT

DIFFICULTY IN ATTRACTING SKILLED MINING PERSONNEL

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, mining narrow veins calls for a high degree of skill and judgment on the part of the individual miner. Until the recent gold boom Canada had concentrated on large scale mining so now we have a shortage of conventional miners. Recently Cornish miners have had to be imported into Nova Scotia. In my riding, mine managers tell me of their great difficulty in attracting skilled personnel.

High wages are now being offered in the mines, and I would encourage young people to look to a career in this industry.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), recognizing the problem, has designated "hard rock miner" as a "shortage occupation" and, as such, eligible for training assistance under the Skills Shortages Program. This will certainly help.

MONTREAL

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, they say the best speech is a short speech. Bearing that in mind, I think the time has come for the Government of Canada to declare that Montreal is "spatial". Enough of this shilly-shallying and procrastination. Montreal is not special but spatial.

BANKS AND BANKING

CHARTERED BANKS—FUNDING OF FOREIGN LOAN LOSSES—INVESTIGATION SUGGESTED

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, preliminary analysis of the 1987 profits in Canada of major banks and trust companies indicates that the profit per hundred dollars of Canadian assets administered reached all-time highs, some 35 per cent greater than the previous record.

All Canadians know that our chartered banks experienced massive losses on foreign loans in 1987. However, none cut dividends, unlike in the United States where the big money centre banks still face strong regional competition.

The finance committee and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) should consider an investigation under the Competition Act to see whether large Canadian banks are acting together to fund their foreign loan losses on the backs of Canadian consumers.

WINTER OLYMPIC GAMES

OPENING OF GAMES IN CALGARY—GOOD WISHES TO ATHLETES—GRATITUDE TO ORGANIZERS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, we have reason to be proud today, because tomorrow the Winter Olympics open in Calgary. After months of careful preparation, the big day has come at last. The world's best athletes are now in Alberta, and we wish them all the best of luck.

To all those in Calgary who worked so hard to organize this international event, we say: Thank you!

[English]

I want to take a few moments to mention the many thousands of other ordinary people who rarely get recognized at a time like this, and whose dedication has allowed these athletes to excel. I refer to the coaches who labour long and hard, often early in the morning or late at night, especially the minor league coaches who help to teach the basic skills and transform our children into future champions; to the parents who sacrifice so much, and who underwrite so much of the cost of developing the skills our athletes need to challenge the world; and to the thousands of others who organize the leagues, run the track meets, and provide the infrastructure we all need.

All of those people have contributed to the Olympic Games. They are their games, and they should be truly proud of them. Once again, best wishes to our athletes who, we know, will represent us and themselves to the best of their abilities. They are truly champions in our hearts.

DISASTERS

SINKING OF OCEAN RANGER OIL DRILLING RIG—ROYAL COMMISSION'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, Monday, February 15, 1988 will mark the sixth anniversary of the sinking of the Ocean Ranger in the wintry Atlantic off the east coast of Newfoundland. On that evening 84 men lost their lives.

The Royal Commission into this tragedy noted that "the loss of the Ocean Ranger was caused by a chain of events which resulted from a coincidence of severe storm conditions, design inadequacy and lack of knowledgeable human intervention". The Royal Commission produced 136 recommendations aimed at preventing a similar tragedy. The federal Government and oil companies have quickly acted on quite a number of those recommendations, but many remain ignored to this point.

Today, six years after the sinking of the Ocean Ranger, individuals who work on drilling rigs off eastern Canada are still at terrible risk if they must abandon the rigs and take to the sea in storm conditions.

John Parsons, an engineer hired by the Newfoundland Government to examine safety in offshore drilling, has stated that the existing lifeboat escape systems remain appallingly inadequate. Mr. Parsons has suggested that an independent safety division be created with wide powers of enforcement within the Canada-Newfoundland Offshore Petroleum Board to minimize conflicts between the drive for energy self-sufficiency and the need for safety for people working on the rigs.

As bad as the Ocean Ranger disaster was some six years ago with the loss of 84 lives, what would be worse is if we failed to heed the advice and the lessons that we should have learned six years ago at the cost of 84 lives, and at a cost of $15 million for a Royal Commission to make recommendations to ensure that those who work in the harsh wintry conditions of the Atlantic, and elsewhere in offshore rigs, are safe, and that we have done everything humanly possible to protect them.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, a credible organization, has published the results of a poll of 904 members, 60 per cent of whom have fewer than 100 employees. What do its members think of the present economic climate? Eighty-seven per cent: Very good. About the impact of our policies announced in Spring 1985? Seventy-seven per cent: Very good. The political impact of our Government? Sixty-three per cent: Very good. Degree of satisfaction with federal policies? Seventy-one per cent: Very good. The Chamber of Commerce says that the most important factor for business development is first of all, fiscal stability. We have delivered on fiscal stability. Second, continuity and a fair corporate income tax system. We have delivered. Third, keeping interest rates under control, and we delivered on that as well. Fourth, reasonable labour costs, and our policy of letting the laws of the market place prevail has given Canadians reasonable labour costs. That is our economic message, Mr. Speaker!

ETHNIC AFFAIRS

BLACK HISTORY MONTH—TRIBUTE TO OUTSTANDING ACHIEVERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, February is Black History Month, a worth-while time to reflect upon the magnificent contribution to our nation of Canadians descended from the nations of Africa.

Great black Canadians of the past include Matthew da Costa, who arrived in Canada with Champlain in 1605; William Hall of Nova Scotia who was the first Canadian to win the Victoria Cross; Mary Ann Shadd, lawyer, teacher, fiery editor, and abolitionist in 19th Century Upper Canada; Portia White, the great opera singer; and Delos Davis, the first black King's Counsel in the British Empire.

These giants paved the way for those who excel today: Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario and former Member of Parliament Lincoln Alexander, author Austin Clarke, jazz pianist Oscar Peterson, Order of Canada recipients Carrie Best, William P. Oliver, and Alton Parker; Juno Award winners Dan Hill, Lillian Allen, and Billy Newton-Davis; the fastest man alive, Ben Johnson; one of the fastest women alive, Angela Issajenko; and such leaders as provincial ombudsmen Daniel Hill, Gordon Earle, former Nova Scotia Human Rights Commissioner George McCurdy, and former British Columbia MLA Rosemary Brown.

The list of achievers is endless and bears witness to the historic mission of black Canadians to strive for the attainment of the highest democratic ideals—liberty, justice, and equality—despite the obstacles of discrimination and bigotry that sadly exist. Yet, this month reminds us that, no matter how long the struggle, they have overcome.

Of course I want to add to the list the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy).

AIRPORTS

HAMILTON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—INTRODUCTION OF DAILY FLIGHTS TO JOHN F. KENNEDY AIRPORT

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to report that, after months of working and waiting, Air Crosby Control has given us a final clearance and Hamilton's International Airport is about to take off.

The approval of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) today for Pan Am Express to operate three flights a day to John F. Kennedy Airport from Hamilton potentially makes our airport one of the great airports in the country.

It is a major and welcome initiative by the Mulroney Government to help relieve the congestion at Toronto International Airport.

I am delighted to have received the assistance of political representatives from four levels of government and all three Parties in our area in convincing Transport Canada to give this much needed vote of confidence to Hamilton's airport. The Hon. Members for Niagara Falls, Hamilton West, St. Catharines, Brant, Haldimand-Norfolk, Erie, Welland, Lincoln, Burlington, Halton and even Hamilton Mountain and Hamilton East, and many others helped.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that we are not supposed to mention Members by name, but I will say: "Bless you, John Crosbie; thank you, Prime Minister Brian Mulroney".

THE BUDGET

A POET'S WORDS

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is here, because as we reflect upon the effects of the Mulroney-Wilson Budget and tax reform package, I would like to remember the words of Frank Scott who once wrote:

> Low income individuals and families pay a higher proportion of their incomes in all kinds of taxes than those with higher incomes.

The poem was entitled Cent ans d'injustice and was written in 1967. Some 21 years later we can only add:

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

ONTARIO GOVERNMENT—SUNDAY SHOPPING—ABDICATION OF RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Government of Ontario and its so-called saviour has abdicated a major responsibility to the municipalities—Sunday shopping. What a cowardly, shameful decision on behalf of the people of Ontario.

The Supreme Court of Canada has said that Ontario has the authority to legislate Sunday closings, and Ontario has refused. That is not leadership. That is a cop-out.

Church leaders, business leaders, politicians, and ordinary Ontarians are banding together to form the Coalition Against Opening Sunday Shopping. The Ottawa-Carleton Board of Trade Chairman, Tim Whitehead, and its President, Lisa Hopkins, have sent a clear message of opposition to Queen's Park. They have all got my vote. This is an outrageous decision.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

WHITE PAPER—REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women has recently written to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) saying that in light of the new spirit of co-operation between the U.S.S.R. and the U.S.A., it is asking him to withdraw the Department of Defence White Paper. It says:

> Instead of re-affirming our differences with the Soviet Union, escalating further the very dangerous arms race, and increasing our economic military burden, we are asking you to adopt a more rational, humane, and effective policy.
> Already, we can see a decline in government services as people live on the streets and line up for food. As the accompanying chart shows, far more jobs are created in responding to human needs in Canada and around the world than in military production. We also do not believe that more weapons make us more secure. We prefer non-provocative defence and nuclear free areas, particularly a nuclear free Arctic verified by all the Arctic nations.
> The deployment of expensive nuclear-powered submarines we believe endangers the fragile ecosystem and violates the spirit if not the letter of the Non-Proliferation Treaty. The cost of one submarine could radically improve life for the one million Canadian children who live below the poverty line.

THE ECONOMY

RESPONSIBLE MANAGEMENT OF GOVERNMENT FINANCES—REDUCTION OF DEFICIT

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, nothing is more basic to a strong framework for private sector growth and job creation than responsible management of government finances.

In 1984 the federal deficit and national debt were almost out of control. The Government's first priority had to be to get government spending under control. We have done so.

This week's Budget maintains the course of consistent adherence to fiscal principles first set out in November, 1984. We are achieving the fiscal targets we set ourselves. We are achieving steady year to year declines in the deficit. The reduction projected for 1988-89 will be the first time in the post-war period that the deficit has declined four years in a row.

Canada's strong economic growth, coupled with the Government's fiscal program, has created the capacity to carry forward the Government's commitment to priority programs.

The Government is committed to ensuring an economic future that provides challenging opportunities for our children and economic security for all Canadians.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

EFFECT OF INTEREST RATE POLICY

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance is probably aware that, while his high interest rate policy might suit Central Canada, it is extremely harmful for the remote regions, where the major problem is not inflation, but unemployment. Yesterday, the chief economist of the research firm Data Resources joined the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in asking for lower interest rates.

Here is what I want to ask the Minister of Finance: Does he intend to resume his discussions with the Governor of the Bank of Canada to try to convince him that the current interest rate policy is not necessary and that it affects mostly the remote regions of Canada and is especially harmful to the unemployed in those regions?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I have responded on a number of occasions to that particular question. What I should say to the Hon. Member is that interest rates are down 3 percentage points from what they were when we came into office. They are down about one and a quarter to one and a half per cent from what they were in October of last year. The bank rate came down an eighth of 1 per cent yesterday.

In response to the Hon. Member's concerns about the regions of the country, let me say to him that we must have one monetary policy for the whole of the country, but fiscal policy can be addressed directly to particular regions.

Let me just read what we have done for Newfoundland, to pick one province. The transportation and highways ERDA agreement, $112 million; the pulp and paper ERDA agreement, $38 million; forestry resource development, $33 million; Channel of Port aux Basques water supply, $6.5 million; Newfoundland offshore development fund, $225 million; Goose Bay airport redevelopment, $93 million; the FBI equity injection of $77 million; Terra Transport and other transportation—I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Finance says that he could go on and on. I have no doubt that he would have.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides.

INCREASED GASOLINE TAXES

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, probably 75 per cent of the things the Minister just mentioned were signed by the previous Government. It is a very hard fact that the Newfoundland rate of unemployment is three times higher than the Ontario rate of unemployment.

Not only does the high interest rate policy of this Government hurt the regions but the new excise tax on gasoline will increase transportation costs for all Canadians, particularly for industries established in remote areas, and will hit low-income Canadians very hard. The new sales and excise taxes both will have increased the price of a gallon of gasoline by 27 cents. Why is the Minister doing that to the poor regions of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member threw a few little zingers into his preamble. First, the vast majority of the things I read out were things that were signed by this Government with the Province of Newfoundland. A very limited number which were signed by the previous Government have been improved upon by this Government.

As I have indicated with the list of initiatives taken by the Government, we have demonstrated by our actions that we are concerned about the high level of unemployment in the regions of the country. The Prime Minister himself has met with the Premiers of the provinces involved and they have, between themselves, generated a number of initiatives. The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is clearly directed at improving the regional disparities in Atlantic Canada. The Western Diversification Fund is another example of this.

The last point the Hon. Member made is beyond me. How can he have the gall to stand up in the House and talk about gasoline prices when the previous Government, which he supported, was responsible for a doubling of gasoline prices during the years 1980 to 1984? That Hon. Member should be sitting in his chair with his head hanging in shame.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, 27 cents per gallon in three and a half years is quite an achievement, and the Minister will get the gold medal in Calgary for that for sure.

[Translation]

HIGH UNEMPLOYMENT RATE IN CERTAIN REGIONS—GOVERNMENT STRATEGY TO HELP WORKERS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, after six years of economic recovery, as the Minister of Finance himself stated in his Budget speech, which recovery began before he was appointed Minister of Finance, the rate of unemployment in the regions is even higher than before the economic crisis of 1981-82.

Mr. Speaker, the policies of this Government are creating two Canadas, and I would like to ask the Minister of Finance what strategy he will propose, as it is quite clear, in spite of what he said, that unemployment in Newfoundland is still three times as high as in Central Canada. The same is true in the Gaspé and several other regions. Our colleague said yesterday that the unemployment rate in Cape Breton is now 22 per cent. What new strategy will the Minister of Finance propose to help the workers and businesses of those regions?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had not prepared that question before the House sat, he probably would not have asked it because I answered that question as part of my responses to his first and second questions.

I should point out to the Hon. Member that the unemployment rate is down in every province of the country compared to the rate this time last year. That is very real progress. It is down in every province of Canada, with the exception of Prince Edward Island where it is marginally up since we came into office in September of 1984.

Again, there has been very clear progress. As I have indicated to the Hon. Member on many occasions in the past, we have generated an over-all economic policy which has resulted in Canada being first in economic growth, first in employment growth and first in productivity performance of the major industrialized countries. Because we have that growth and that economic performance, we have been able to provide the resources through the Atlantic Opportunities Agency, the equalization programs, the Atlantic enterprise purchasing program, the Newfoundland Development Accord and the various highways agreements. That is the clear message that people in other parts of the country are understanding, contrary to the understanding of the Hon. Member.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—COMPLIANCE BY MANITOBA PROVINCE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. On Wednesday I asked the Prime Minister a question concerning the U.S. administration's threat to demand compensation or redress if there was not full compliance by the provinces with the continental trade program. Today we have word that the Province of Manitoba will now introduce legislation that will void parts of the agreement, and the Province of Ontario is prepared to do the same.

The Government cannot duck the question any longer. The Government has put itself in a constitutional box between the provinces and the U.S. administration. It is heading toward a constitutional crisis. The Government must take a position on this matter and Parliament deserves an answer.

What is the Government going to do? How is it going to respond to the U.S. administration's demand that it pay compensation if provinces do not comply, because those provinces have no intention of complying?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister dealt with that question quite fully. As far as the current issue he has raised is concerned, I want to remind the Hon. Member, as he knows, that never before in the history of an international treaty has there been so much consultation and dialogue between the two levels of government. Right from the very beginning this issue was the subject of numerous First Ministers' Conferences and bilateral meetings. Generally speaking, the provinces were indeed involved in this in every respect.

I think the Hon. Member should know very well that since the free trade arrangement will be good for all regions of the country and good for all the provinces, rather than joining forces with the provinces which are expressing reluctance with certain elements of it, he should show some leadership at the national level and should encourage all provinces to become party to this agreement. He should do that rather than getting on the bandwagon trying to destroy what is a good agreement for all Canadians and a good agreement for every region of the country.

THE CONSTITUTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, that kind of answer simply will not wash any more. The fact is that the Government has put this country in a position of being subject to major intimidation by the United States administration which is demanding compensation or redress. In other words, the Americans will up the ante on the agreement. Several provinces say that they cannot go along with this and, while there may have been consultations, there was no approval.

When will the Government clearly spell out how it intends to deal with the dilemma it finds itself in with the constitutional crisis we are heading for and the major revisions of the agreement that will be required by the Americans under the circumstances if there is no provincial compliance? That is a very serious question and it deserves a proper answer, not the kind of ducking and weaving we have had so far.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there is no ducking and weaving. The Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister have indicated very fully that Parliament has the authority to exercise its power and it will do so consistent with tradition and convention.

I find it rather strange that the Hon. Member always tends to sidle up to the provincial Government of Manitoba. I suppose that puts him in favour of the increased insurance premiums, the payroll tax, the income tax and all those other unpopular measures the NDP Government of Manitoba is engaged in. If you're with them, join them!

TAX REFORM

REQUEST THAT MINIMUM CORPORATE TAX BE INTRODUCED

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance about fairness in taxation. The Minister has acknowledged that some 60,000 profitable Canadian corporations will pay no federal tax this year after his tax reform.

• (1130)

Is he aware that in 1986 companies like Hees International with profits of $170 million, Brascan with profits of $187 million, and Alcan Aluminum with profits of $220 million, paid no corporate tax? Is he aware that in 1987 companies like Cadillac-Fairview with profits of $95 million and Bramalea with profits of $51 million paid no federal corporate tax?

Why will companies like this continue to get a free ride after 1988? Why will the Minister not bring a minimum corporate tax into force?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is on the finance committee, and he is well aware that corporate tax reform addresses many of these problems which resulted in profitable companies not paying income tax. That is being dealt with in stage one of tax reform and I know the Hon. Member is going to give us his full support to get that tax reform provision through. The result will be that $5 billion in additional taxes will be paid by corporations over the next five years.

[Translation]

CORPORATIONS—IMPOSITION OF MINIMUM TAX—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same Minister.

The Minister says his tax reform will increase corporate tax revenue. Does he realize that in the United States, tax reform has resulted in an increase in corporate tax revenue which, in relative terms, is twice the increase we will see in Canada, and that this is largely due to the fact that the United States has a minimum corporate tax?

Why is the Government reluctant to introduce a minimum corporate tax in Canada, which would introduce additional revenue that could be used in new measures to create jobs and eliminate regional disparity in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me give the Hon. Member some examples of the type of company that would be caught by the type of minimum tax he is proposing.

First would be a medium-sized research and development firm, say in Manitoba, that gets tax credits for investing in research and development to help improve its competitive position. Second, is a start-up business in Cape Breton that takes advantage of the Cape Breton investment tax credit in an area of the country that the Hon. Member is quite aware suffers from high levels of unemployment. A third example would be a resource-based company in northern Ontario which receives tax advantages for further developing its resource base and enhancing growth, again in a region of the country suffering from higher unemployment. The fourth example I would give him is that of a small manufacturer in British Columbia which has reduced its taxes, say in 1986, because actual, real losses incurred in previous years.

If the Hon. Member follows his thinking through he will put many of those companies out of business, costing many jobs in regions of the country which, out of the other side of his mouth, he says he is in favour of supporting.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the Minister but I do not recognize in his list companies like Hudson's Bay, Cadillac-Fairview, Seco-Camp, Repap Enterprises, Wardair, or Total Petroleum. Those are not companies in the categories the Minister has talked about because they are making hundreds of millions of dollars in profits and not paying any tax at all.

STATISTICS CANADA REPORT—EFFECTIVE RATE OF CORPORATE TAX

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that just last fall Statistics Canada produced a report which indicated that major profitable corporations in Canada had an effective tax rate of only 11.5 per cent, half the rate paid by average Canadians in their personal income tax? Average Canadians pay tax every year and these corporations get a free ride. StatsCan judged these large corporations would see only a "modest" change through the White Paper.

Why will the Minister not take advantage of the revenues which the American tax system collects by having a minimum tax on corporate profits so that they pay every year?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the companies that he referred to and I think that we have dealt with each case, either in tax reform or through other measures which we have taken to close loopholes in the tax system that allowed this to happen, whether it was real estate companies, tax loss trading through limited partnerships, or investment tax credits that companies were able to take advantage of in the past. In each of these we have dealt with the cause of the problem, not just applied a band-aid solution as he is proposing. We have caused a change in the nature of the corporate tax system that will deal with it in a fundamental way. That is surely the right way to deal with the matter.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CONFLICT OF INTEREST CODE—STATEMENT ISSUED BY ASSISTANT DEPUTY REGISTRAR GENERAL

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, it is now five days since the Assistant Deputy Registrar General, Jean-Pierre Kingsley, without any explanation whatsoever, issued a statement exempting political loans or advances from provisions of the conflict of interest guidelines. Mr. Kingsley, who is ultimately accountable to the Prime Minister and not Parliament, has refused to give either the public or Parliament any rationale, based on a reading of the conflict code, for Monday's, to put it politely, amazing statement.

Why is it that Elections Canada officials, in the case of the Minister of Energy, are being threatened with dismissal by the Hon. Member for Durham—Northumberland unless more information is forthcoming, yet in the case of the Prime Minister and Mr. Kingsley, the Government is perfectly content to leave Monday's statement totally unexplained? Can the Deputy Prime Minister explain that double standard?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member persists in engaging in a witch-hunt. Those questions have been answered fully by the Prime Minister on a number of occasions and I have nothing further to add.

REQUEST THAT OFFICIAL BE DIRECTED TO PROVIDE EXPLANATION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Durham—Northumberland spoke to the press yesterday, it is well publicized, threatening officials of Elections Canada with dismissal, saying they will be looking for jobs unless more information is forthcoming on the decision they took. Surely it is reasonable for Members of Parliament to expect that same information with respect to a decision affecting the Prime Minister.

Mr. Kingsley so far has refused me personally, reporters and others, any additional information. Because he is a civil servant accountable to the Prime Minister, not an independent officer of the House, surely the Prime Minister would direct Mr. Kingsley to provide a rationale, based on a reading of the conflict code, for the statement he made on Monday.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister acknowledge that fact, realize this issue will not go away, and take action this afternoon so that all of us may know why such an extraordinary flip-flop occurred from Friday to Monday, and which sections of the code we can refer to in order to understand the amazing statement read on Monday by the Prime Minister?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to take issue with something the Hon. Member for Durham—Northumberland may or may not have said, he can certainly do so. He knows the proper course of action he can follow.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, on the same matter, Section 38 of the code reads: "Where a public office holder does not comply with the code the office holder is subject to such appropriate measures as may be determined by the designated authority, including, where applicable, discharge or termination of the appointment".

Is it not a fact that the designated authority in this case is the Prime Minister himself? Therefore, can the Deputy Prime Minister explain to us how the Prime Minister gets out of this conflict where in fact he is the judge and jury on his alleged violation of his own code?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members opposite want to prolong this issue. It has been debated inside and outside the House for some time. The statement by Jean-Pierre Kingsley, Assistant Deputy Registrar General, concerning the Prime Minister's arrangement with the PC Canada Fund, clearly speaks for itself. I ask the Hon. Member to reread it. He has made a full explanation. It is here and can be tabled in the House, and I would be very glad to table it. I am not sure what more they want.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister knows full well that that official is under control of the Prime Minister.

PROFESSOR'S SUGGESTION THAT PRIME MINISTER RESIGN

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, writing in The Globe and Mail today Professor Ian Greene, who specializes in constitutional law and public administration, suggested that the Prime Minister should resign and that there should be an independent investigation, perhaps by a judge. It is very serious.

Has the Government considered the possibility of having an independent investigation with regard to the Prime Minister's loan as opposed to the loan of the former Minister of Supply and Services?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to comment on any hypothetical conclusion that may be arrived at by an instant expert. I do not know what his qualifications are. Perhaps he does not know the difference between a service club and a political Party. If that is the case, I am not surprised at some of the conclusions he has arrived at.

PUBLIC SERVICE

BENEFITS ACCORDED PUBLIC SERVANTS BY AIRLINES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the President of Treasury Board. Frequent flier plans offered by competitive airlines give out free tickets and even hard cash. In the case of public servants travelling at taxpayers' expense benefits should accrue not to the individual but to the Crown. What is the Government's policy on this matter? What system has been put in place to ensure compliance?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, yes indeed there is a policy in existence. Employees have been made aware that they may not accept benefits arising from the performance of their duties which are offered by third parties. When employees are offered benefits in the form of cash, equivalent vouchers, or discount coupons as a reward for patronage of a particular carrier or hotel, these vouchers shall be remitted to the Department with the employees' travel claims.

PORTS

DEVELOPMENT OF MONTREAL PORT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State (Transport) and the Minister of Transport, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The executive of the Port of Montreal is about to announce a program for the expansion of the Port of Montreal, and we in the Liberal Party fully support this program. However, a number of socio-economic groups in Greater Montreal would like to have more information and more openness with respect to this expansion project, not only on the financial side, but also on environmental issues.

Could the Deputy Prime Minister give the House the assurance that all socio-economic groups in Greater Montreal will have access to all the documents used to prepare this proposal? Furthermore, when the announcement is made in the next few weeks, could the people be consulted before the decision is finalized, to ensure that the program provides sufficient safeguards for the people of Montreal?

[English]

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge—Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to refer this question to the Minister because I am not up to the moment on it. Had the Member given me some prior advice I would have been happy to have dug out the information for him. I will bring it to the attention of the Minister and we will get back to the Member as quickly as possible.

OLD PORT OF MONTREAL—QUERY WHY PROVISION OF FUNDS DELAYED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister responsible for Supply and Services or to the Minister for the Treasury Board, and concerns another important project for Greater Montreal. I am referring to the Vieux-Port. I think the Minister is here today, and as we all know, Quebec City received funds to develop its Vieux-Port. We saw that in the case of Mr. Côté! We know that Toronto and other regions received funds to develop their harbour front areas. Could the Minister inform the House, and this is what the Vice-Chairman of Montreal's Executive Committee would like to know, could the Minister inform the House why the City of Montreal has yet to obtain the sum of $130 million for the expansion and development of the Vieux-Port? Why the delay, when all other cities in Canada have received the necessary funding?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Old Port of Montreal has been involved in a consultative process for the past two years with regard to questions relative to the environment and long-range planning for it. There are three levels of government involved; the provincial and the municipal as well as the federal. Discussions are ongoing in this regard and hopefully some conclusion will follow reasonably soon.

CHILD CARE—EFFECT OF PROVISIONS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and is with regard to what the Budget is not doing for child care. The regressive Budget doubles the child care expense deduction for higher income working parents but does nothing for lower income parents, students, and single moms who pay no taxes at all and need child care desperately.

Is the Minister's idea of tax fairness to discriminate against the lower income parents who can least afford child care with its very high fees? Would it not have been much fairer to take the $210 million that he is losing this year on tax revenues in the child care sector and allocate it for direct funding to good quality child care services so that all parents can benefit and fees will be brought down?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question illustrates a difference in philosophy between herself and the Government which has provided, through the increase in the refundable child tax credit, for low income families which have children under the age of six. We have provided, through the increase in funding, for the development of 200,000 additional quality care spaces.

Ms. Mitchell: You have not.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That will come in legislation to be presented to this House shortly following discussions with the provinces.

I believe that the program put forward on behalf of the Government by the Minister of National Health and Welfare is a much more balanced program and provides a much broader response to the needs of Canadian working women and other women than would the more narrow approach which the Hon. Member would follow.

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDING

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, this shows how little the Minister and the Government know about child care. One hundred dollars to a parent in the home is not generous and there is no way he can think it is.

We need funds for child care. There is nothing in this Budget which responds to the three-year-old promise of the Prime Minister that the Government would help expand quality affordable child care services. Why is there nothing in the Budget for direct services?

I might also mention that the 200,000 new spaces that are supposed to be provided over seven years is only the amount of increase that would have happened had they done nothing.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that may be the Hon. Member's opinion.

Ms. Mitchell: It's research.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It is not the opinion of a number of other people in the child care field.

We have put forward a child care program which amounts to $5.5 billion—

Ms. Mitchell: Amounts to peanuts.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —over a seven-year period. This illustrates again a fundamental difference between the New Democratic Party and the Conservative Government.

Ms. Mitchell: It certainly does.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have said that this is a child care policy which the country can afford. The Hon. Member said that $5.5 billion is peanuts. We on this side of the House do not believe that $5.5 billion is peanuts.

That demonstrates that the Hon. Member would have the deficit go right up through the roof and pay no attention to the impact which that would have on interest rates, and therefore on jobs and on the ability of the same working women about whom she is so concerned to gain a job. That is the difference between New Democratic Party members, who are spendthrifts and have no interest at all in controlling spending, and us.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROPOSED NEW TORONTO CENTRE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. He knows, or should know, how seriously the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation needs the new broadcasting centre in the city of Toronto. This is a project which was launched by the former Government and relaunched by this Government. There are now rumours that the project may not be proceeding.

Would the Minister assure us that the project on Wellington Street in Toronto, which was relaunched by the Government, is proceeding and will proceed?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the Hon. Member that this matter is receiving all the attention it deserves. This is a very substantial undertaking and it deserves the full consideration which is now being given to it.

REQUEST THAT PROJECT BE CONTINUED

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, that is not very reassuring from a Government which has socked it to Toronto and socked it to the CBC in a number of ways. I would appreciate it if, rather than some vague statement, the Minister would say that the project, which the Government has been supporting until recently, will continue and will proceed.

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the Hon. Member refers to. There has been no indication of any change in the attitude of the Government.

• (1150)

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POWERS OF PROVINCE TO PASS LAWS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I want to return to what we consider a serious confrontation coming between the provinces and the federal Government over this trade deal. Despite the pressure from the U.S. spokesmen this week, will the Deputy Prime Minister confirm that Manitoba has the right to pass laws in its jurisdiction with respect to areas such as recreational land and others until such time as the trade deal is in effect in 1989?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is a bit behind the times when he talks about confrontation between the federal Government and the provinces. That was an era of the past, during the days of the Liberal administration when they spent more time fighting with the provinces than working and co-operating with them as this Government has done.

The Hon. Member knows that there is nothing in the free trade agreement that takes away authority from the provincial Government to pass legislation dealing with property and civil rights.

Mr. Langdon: I hope that actually says to the Province of Manitoba that it is quite right for it to proceed as it wishes.

PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, instead of dealing with generalities, will the Deputy Prime Minister stand in the House and make it very clear that the points that Manitoba wishes to put forward to protect its people are perfectly proper and within its jurisdiction?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if it is the position of the provincial Government of Manitoba to turn away investment dollars that bring in jobs, if it wants to increase taxes, impose payroll taxes, and increase automobile insurance and all those things that deter investment and business activity, it is within its God given right to do so.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF GOVERNMENT'S POSITION REGARDING OPPOSITION'S ALLEGATIONS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and has to do with the excellent economic message he conveyed to Canadians for the fourth time last Wednesday. He confirmed in his message that nine out of ten elderly Canadians will no longer pay taxes. He confirmed in his message that our Government will continue to assume its financial responsibilities with respect to senior citizens. Mr. Speaker, I should like to know how he can reconcile our firm commitments with the Opposition's demagogic allegations, particularly those of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important for Canadians to understand that the tax reform will mean lower taxes for nine out of ten individuals aged 65 or more. For example, a single person with an income of $25,000 will pay $435 less in taxes. For a couple aged 65 or more and with an income of $25,000 the tax reduction will amount to $665.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, another policy of the Canadian Government will have a major impact, and I am referring to pension plans. The Canada Pension Plan, RRSPs and the old age security regulations have been improved so that Canadians will be better prepared for retirement.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT—REQUEST FOR MORE ASSISTANCE

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister will know that, speaking in front of the Montreal Chamber of Commerce, in 1984, the Prime Minister promised to double the national scientific effort within his first term. Now, figures from Statistics Canada are not showing any increase but rather a slackening in research and development. My question to the Minister is this: Why has he not taken advantage of his recent budget to stimulate research and development in the private sector and to repair the harm his efforts have caused up to now?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make a few comments about that. First, in January the Prime Minister announced $1.3 billion in additional spending for research and development in order to encourage the development of excellence throughout Canada, with additional moneys being spent on science and technology.

Second, I make specific reference to that, as well as to the fact that Canadian companies have the best tax regime of the major industrialized countries. That is very clear. I think the Hon. Member is well aware of that.

Third, the Government has increased its funding for research and development. I believe the current level is in the order of $4.2 billion of direct spending on research and development. We are committed to research and development and we have put our money where our mouth is.

Mr. Berger: Those are hollow words from the Minister of Finance.

LEVEL OF SPENDING ON RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the Minister that if research and development spending had gone up to 2 per cent of Gross National Product, for instance, it would have appeared in red letters in his Budget and we would have heard wild applause from the Tory backbenches.

Research and development spending has not gone up, but declined as a percentage of GNP. Does the Minister not think that the decline in R and D spending is a matter of concern to this country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Government has indicated where its priorities lie by increasing the amount of funding—

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Member is waving some papers at me. I do not know what are on those papers—

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Let me say that it takes two to tango. It is important for the private sector to respond, and one of the primary objectives of the conference on research and development which the Prime Minister chaired in January in Toronto was to encourage a change in attitude on the part of Canadians in general and on the part of Canadian companies.

The Hon. Member referred to hollow words. They were facts, which I will give to him again. This Government has increased total spending on science and technology by 6 per cent. The granting council budget will be $1 billion higher than the previously approved levels. As I indicated to him, the tax regime in Canada is better than any of the other major industrialized countries.

We are clearly indicating through our actions, through our words, and through the leadership that the Prime Minister is providing, that science and technology are a very important part of the future of our country.

PROVISION OF MONEYS TO GRANTING COUNCILS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Minister of Finance. The fact is that the rate of expenditure on science as a percentage of GNP has fallen and real expenditures by the Government have fallen. The words of the Government are never clear. We had the Prime Minister and the Budget indicating a $1.3 billion increase in R and D expenditures over the next five years, much of which, in the Prime Minister's words and in the Budget, were specified for centres of excellence and merit scholarships.

The Minister of State for Science and Technology now says that some portion of that will go for the granting councils. Will the Minister of Finance tell us if money is to go from that $1.3 billion to the granting councils? And will it go to the basic budget? Or will $400 million of it go into the overruns for the space program?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer to those questions will come in the fullness of time. We have indicated the $1.3 billion of additional spending that will be dedicated to science and technology. I will not go through the litany of other indications of the commitment of this Government to science and technology, but when the decisions have been taken for the specific recipients of the $1.3 billion, the Hon. Member will be the first to know if he is in the House when an announcement is made.

LORTIE REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, that litany will be very short if we left out fora, general discussions and rhetoric. The scientific community is waiting for an answer from the Government. Will the Government respond to the Lortie Report and fulfil the promise of the Minister of State for Science and Technology and put money into the granting councils as the Prime Minister's own advisory council demands that it do?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Well, Mr. Speaker, I indicated just a few minutes ago with respect to the granting councils that the budget will be $1 billion higher—

Mr. McCurdy: That's not an answer.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —than over the previously approved levels. Clearly that indicates what this Government has done and what it intends to do with the commitment it has made to science and technology.

Mr. Berger: What is the bottom line?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): There is no question that with the Prime Minister's leadership as the chairman of the National Advisory Board on Science and Technology, with his chairmanship of the conference in Toronto last month, we are clearly getting leadership that was totally lacking from the previous Government—

Mr. Berger: What is the bottom line?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —and was indicated by where the Liberal Party stood—

Mr. McCurdy: Where is the money?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —as well as the New Democratic Party—

Mr. McCurdy: Where is the money?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —on thwarting a major initiative to encourage science and technology in the pharmaceutical Bill. Both Parties voted against that. Both Parties voted against 4,500 jobs for science and technology. Both Parties voted against the $1.3 billion in additional funding from the private sector.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There will be one question from the Hon. Member for Algoma and one question from the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville.

REQUEST FOR REINTRODUCTION OF EARNED DEPLETION ALLOWANCE FOR MINING INDUSTRY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance as well. The Minister knows his Budget contains no new assistance for regional development even though those regions of our country, without exception, the resource regions, have higher unemployment today than they did in 1981 after six years of growth in the country generally.

Will the Minister reinstate the earned depletion allowance for mining that has provided hundreds of millions of dollars for mineral exploration and development, as well as thousands of jobs, in those resource rich areas of our country which are still suffering from high unemployment? Will the Minister reconsider, change, and bring back that incentive for mineral exploration and development?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot let go by some of the totally misleading statements made by the Hon. Member in his preamble. This Government has increased its funding on research and development from $490 million when we came into office in 1984-85—

Mr. Foster: Exploration and development in the mining areas.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member is not going to get away with his interjections. He talked about regional development in total.

We have increased the budget from $490 million to something over $800 million, and that is before the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Program, the Western Diversification Program, the Northern Ontario program and the Quebec program, take hold. In addition, in 1988-89 the Member will see in the Estimates that are coming up in the next couple of weeks that there is a further commitment to research and development there.

As it relates to the flow-through shares, we have responded and improved the provisions for flow-through shares from what had been announced in the June tax reform statement, when I made my statement on the position of the Government on tax reform in December. We have improved the regime for flow-through shares. I have indicated to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Timiskaming, that I am prepared to meet with people from the industry, and arrangements are being made for that right now.

I do want to caution the Hon. Member that one of the key reasons for the concerns of people who have been recipients of the benefits of flow-through shares is the state of the securities markets today. There has been a major drop in equity financing. That has affected flow-through shares as well as all other forms of equity financing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The last question, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VICTIMS OF CIA FUNDED BRAINWASHING EXPERIMENTS— CONTRIBUTION TO MEET LEGAL EXPENSES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I am sure he is aware that yesterday the Secretary of State for External Affairs announced that some $20,000 would go out to each of the nine victims of a CIA-funded brainwashing experiment that took place in the Allan Memorial Institute in Montreal in the late 1950s and 1960s.

In light of the fact that in May, 1986, a report by Mr. Cooper, who is a former Conservative Member of Parliament, recommended that the federal Government make an ex gratia payment of $100,000 to each of the victims, why did the federal Government send out only $20,000 to each of those people?

I am sure the $20,000 is appreciated. However, in light of the fact that $100,000 was recommended by the Minister's own report, why is $20,000 being sent out instead of $100,000? Or do we consider the $20,000 as only the first installment?

Motions

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this assistance is being provided to help these individuals defray their expensive legal costs. I find it rather strange that the New Democratic Party would take issue with this—

Mr. Nystrom: No, no!

Mr. Mazankowski: —when it was its own Leader that asked that a financial contribution to defray the huge legal costs be made. He certainly did not ask for an exorbitant amount but simply asked that consideration be given. The Leader of the New Democratic Party himself asked for precisely the kind of assistance we are now offering. I find it rather strange that the Hon. Member would take issue with it. This was done with the full knowledge that this is a very difficult situation. We hope it will help in some way to assist these individuals in defraying their huge legal expenses.

TABLING OF INFORMATION ON GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, last week I undertook to provide information to the House pertinent to the federal Government's contracts involving companies associated with Mr. Laberge. I am today prepared to table the preliminary analysis of the information which has been gathered to date, in both official languages.

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL TRADE TRIBUNAL ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Stewart McInnes (for the Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-110, an Act to establish the Canadian International Trade Tribunal and to amend or repeal other Acts in consequence thereof, be now read the first time and be printed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

FISHERIES AND OCEANS—AUTHORITY TO TRAVEL

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I think Your Honour would find that there would be unanimous consent for the following motions. I will deal with them one at a time. They are to be placed immediately and to be voted on.

The first motion is as follows. I move:

That the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans be authorized to travel to British Columbia from February 22 to 26, 1988 inclusive for the purpose of their ongoing study of the condition of aquaculture in Canada, and that the necessary staff accompany the committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) (Mr. Lewis) have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

JUSTICE AND SOLICITOR GENERAL—AUTHORITY TO TRAVEL

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I have also had consultation with the Parties with respect to the second motion. I move:

That the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General, and necessary staff, be authorized to travel within Canada for the purpose of continuing their ongoing study of sentencing, parole and correctional facilities, and visiting correctional facilities and holding public hearings in the following regions and during the following weeks:

(i) British Columbia—week of February 28, 1988

(ii) Toronto - week of March 20, 1988

(iii) Prairie Provinces—week of April 17, 1988

(iv) Québec—week of May 1, 1988

(v) Atlantic Provinces—week of June 5, 1988

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) (Mr. Lewis) have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO TRANSPORT OF PLUTONIUM OVER NORTHERN CANADA

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty under Standing Order 106 to present petitions signed by 150 residents of Eskimo Point, Rankin Inlet, Spence Bay, and Fort Simpson, Northwest Territories.

The petitioners are concerned about the possible detrimental environmental effects and the contribution to nuclear proliferation that might be occasioned by flying plutonium over northern Canadian territory as is proposed in the U.S.-Japan agreement.

Therefore, the petitioners pray and call upon the Parliament of Canada to recognize the dangers of such flights and to say no to the transport of plutonium over northern Canadian territory.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and responsibility to present a petition duly certified.

It is from a number of Canadians who point out that the very fabric of Canadian sovereignty is threatened by the proposed Mulroney-Reagan trade deal, that the Government has no mandate to negotiate a deal, such as this with the United States, that the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal would reduce Canada's ability to plan the economic, social and cultural programs that we need, and that the deal would integrate Canada further into the North American defence industrial base.

Therefore, they ask the House of Commons to ensure that a national debate take place on the trade deal and that this debate results in a national general election before the agreement is finalized.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): I have a petition duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions. It is from Canadians living in Toronto and in Halifax.

They are concerned with the trade deal negotiated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) with the President of the United States because the Prime Minister had no mandate for that deal. In fact, he even promised that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised. Yet he has signed a deal that weakens the economic and political sovereignty of Canada by removing the power of the Canadian Government effectively to control foreign ownership, or to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, or to equalize opportunities between regions. It also fails to secure for Canadians access to the U.S. market which was the key objective in the stated negotiations.

Therefore these people call upon Parliament to dissolve, to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

PORNOGRAPHY—SUPPORT FOR BILL C-54

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a number of petitions on two different topics. The first relates to Bill C-54, the anti-pornography legislation. It is from a number of residents of Robsart, Consul and Swift Current, Saskatchewan.

The second petition is from a number of residents of Swift Current, Saskatchewan.

They express their concern that pressures exerted by various permissive minority groups may cause Government to waterdown and weaken this legislation. The petitioners support the Bill which will make it illegal to manufacture, import, sell or rent pornographic material as defined in the Bill.

They call upon Government to pass Bill C-54 without dilution in the belief that the Bill gives recognition to the inherent dignity of individuals, particularly women and young people.

BLOCK AVERAGING OF INCOME

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have a further petition from a number of residents of Eastend, Saskatchewan. They note that farmers and fishermen for many years have enjoyed the right to block average their income and that the Minister of Finance on December 16, 1987 indicated his intention to eliminate block averaging.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to take the necessary steps to retain block averaging for farmers and fishermen as recommended by the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs in its report on the White Paper on Tax Reform, Stage I.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all the questions on the Order Paper be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1988-89

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-109, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) has the floor.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to continue my comments on Bill C-109. Before Question Period I was discussing the idea that the necessity for such a large borrowing Bill would not have arisen if there were some indication in the Minister's Budget that there would be innovative measures to deal with regional disparity. For example, the Minister did not mention in his Budget speech that the Government has cut back $3 billion in regional development since 1984.

Looking at the current Budget from the perspective of regional development, which I am interested in because of the area I represent, it indicates that there will be $3 million cut in non-statutory programs. It is not defined in the Budget just exactly what these non-statutory programs will be. The non-statutory programs deal with the operation costs of federal Government subsidies to industry, payments to Crown corporations, capital spending, grants and contributions. This leaves the field wide open as to where the Government might decide to make these cuts.

My concern is that because we do not have the Estimates and we do not have any specifics about where these cuts will be, certain areas of the country, in particular the regions to the east, the north and the west which are most vulnerable, could be seriously affected by these cuts in non-statutory programs. Vulnerable is defined as those with the least votes in this instance.

As an example I mention a particular program in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories that has led to increased economic activity there. I refer to the economic development agreement with such sub-agreements as the one that deals with tourism. This has helped the small lodge owner to increase and to develop their businesses. It has enabled them to do some advertising to bring in the tourist dollars. This is but one example of the economic development agreement. These are non-statutory programs and it is therefore of great concern to us that these not be programs from which the Government will choose to cut. I refer to programs which stimulate investment in development in the more isolated regions of the country. These are vulnerable programs and give us great concern. They are the ones easiest to cut because of the fewer number of voters.

I would also point to programs oriented to the aboriginal people, the Native Economic Development Program and the special ERDA which have helped people in those aboriginal communities to develop small business and become self-sufficient, which should be an objective of all of us. We will be looking closely to see if the cuts in the non-statutory programs do in fact increase regional disparity, which is a very important issue for all of us across Canada.

I mentioned earlier in my remarks that it is my view and my Party's view that in presenting this Budget there were places where the Government could have looked to raise revenues. We have heard much about the increase in the corporate tax, and the corporations that do not pay taxes. One area where the Government systematically looks to raise revenues is from the pocket of the ordinary taxpayer. The Government has projected that this will be done again with the one cent increase on gasoline. This seems to be a repetitive theme, and that is part of the problem with this Budget and why under this borrowing Bill we are asked to approve such a large sum. All of the ideas of the Government are repetitive; there is nothing innovative or new.

For example, there was an increase in the tax on fuel in November, 1984 which amounted to almost 10 cents a gallon at the pumps. In the May, 1985 Budget there was an increase of two cents per litre or nine cents per gallon at the pumps. On June 27, 1985 there was another increase of one cent per litre on gasoline. In February, 1987 there was another one cent per litre increase, and in February, 1988 another one cent per litre. It seems to me that the Government is in a rut, and there must be other ways that I will suggest where that money could be raised.

I wish to say a few words about how this one cent per litre on gasoline affects the more isolated regions, regions like my own, the Yukon, the Northwest Territories, northern parts of the provinces, and the Atlantic provinces. That is where this type of tax hurts.

For example, in the far north our costs are very high. Our cost of living is anywhere from 30 to 50 per cent above that of Edmonton. An increase in fuel prices, even excluding diesel fuel, which I understand is excluded, really affects small business, or the person who has to make deliveries around the territory, where he or she may travel 1,000 miles to make a delivery. It is a serious problem for us. Every increase like this to the cost of living for the northerner is an exponential increase compared to that for people who live south of 60. It is still tough on them, but for us it is doubly tough.

Another aspect of the fuel tax is the thinking behind which the Government decides to raise revenue. Perhaps, as much as anything, this sums up the philosophy of the Government, and it is something that Canadians taxpayers will want to take note of. This one cent per litre tax will apply to aviation gasoline for propeller aircraft, for example, the Twin Otter, and the small aircraft used by bush pilots and charter companies, not only in the North, but in many small areas throughout Canada. However, the tax will not apply to jet fuel. Everyone knows that the revenues that could have been raised from jet fuel would be far in excess of those raised from taxing the small one or two person business or the small airline. This is an example of how the Government once again wants to hit the little guy, but it is hands off the jet set.

Northerners and those who live in more isolated areas are much more severely affected by these measures. for example, a simple thing in one sense like one cent on a litre of gasoline, will have very serious affects for a number of families and small businesses.

Another example of how the Government might have looked at some innovative measures that would reduce the need for the $23.5 billion that we are asked to approve on this borrowing Bill is to look at its priorities and its development.

In the Yukon the Alaska Highway is our one vital and key link for transportation, investment, and development. If that highway is not in a reasonable condition, and we are not asking for a four lane highway but a reasonable highway that can be travelled, our tourism and our ability to attract investment are significantly impacted. What is this Government's priority? It is to cut the budget by 50 per cent for this highway, our one link to the outside.

We heard the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) say, "If you want to develop constitutionally, become self-sufficient". We are being told to become self-sufficient at the same time as funds are being cut which would have helped us to increase our self-sufficiency. It does not make sense, and that seems to be the thrust of much of this Budget.

The other area I wish to mention is what I referred to as the peekaboo sales tax philosophy of the Government. In the Budget report the Government talks about future reforms of sales tax. Anyone can read between the lines on that one. Between the lines it says, After the election, we will tell you what will happen. We have already felt the effects of the 10 per cent increase in the telecommunications tax. That again hits the isolated regions and the people who have to maintain contact with southern Canada for professional, business and family reasons, particularly in the riding that I represent. How does this help development? How does this help to raise revenues in order that we do not have to borrow as much as we do at this time?

I do not want to appear ungrateful, because I did note in the Budget that there was a removal of duties on model glider kits and burial shrouds. That will benefit northerners as well as other Canadians, and we are certainly pleased that this innovative measure has been taken at this time.

The introduction of the northern allowance was another way that the Government could have redressed some of the disparities that I have mentioned.

If the Government had made this a tax credit rather than a tax allowance, lower income and lower middle income people would have benefited to the same degree as higher income people. Certainly, it is a good measure, and I am not criticizing the measure, but it is a half measure. If it could have been made a deduction more people would have benefited, more people who now pay very high housing costs would benefit. But again it is only directed to those with higher incomes. The people with lower incomes have the toughest time raising their families in the North.

What about the other innovative measures that we have seen from the Government on raising revenues? Since the Government took office in 1984 personal income taxes have gone up a whopping 38 per cent, while the tax paid by corporations has increased only by 28 per cent. This leads me to one of the glaring inequities of the Government's philosophy of raising revenues.

We know that there are 60,000 profit making companies which still pay no tax. Last year there were more than 500 Canadians listed as making more than $200,000 a year who paid no tax. This is not very much comfort to the single parent who is raising two children, for example, on earnings at about the poverty line, somewhere slightly under $20,000, and has found her taxes going up each year from 1985 to 1987. Total taxes dropped from about $1,800 in 1987 to $1,355 in 1988 thanks to tax reform. However, the 1988 amount is still higher than the tax bill paid by that same single parent of $1,200 in 1984. It will be very difficult to explain to that person how the Budget will help her and that there is sound rationale for the amount of borrowing we must do at this time.

As we have said before, a minimum corporate tax would certainly have served to address some of these issues and to raise revenues in a fair manner and consistent with what we in the New Democratic Party feel, that is, that the burden of taxation should be spread across society, not just applied to the average person who is trying to raise his or her family. Each time a new Budget comes out, we see that that is who has been hit.

I should like to refer to one comment in The Budget Speech of the Minister which I think is quite important. It reflects on the amount of money that he is seeking approval to borrow. The revenues projected in the Minister's Budget are based on a very optimistic and rosy view of the economy. The Government says that in 1989 the rate of economic growth is expected to rebound with consumer expenditures buoyed by refunds from tax reform. I have just mentioned the situation of a single parent. It may be that the shareholders of companies that do not pay taxes will be out buying a bit more. It is a very hopeful scenario and, as a Canadian, I hope it comes true. However, we must look at what is realistic. It appears from the Government's figures, as I mentioned earlier, that there will be reductions in unemployment insurance contributions. We can expect more unemployment and reduced incomes. If they are making and contributing less, how can they possibly consume more?

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association and other investment counsellors have a less optimistic outlook for 1989. We hope that they are wrong, but perhaps they are looking at the Government's own figures and predicting more unemployment than the Government wishes to predict. Obviously many hopes and dreams are built into the Budget, and we will see what will happen.

I want to support my Party's point about minimum tax for corporations. What the Budget shows is that we must look at how to realign our spending priorities and our revenue raising priorities. There is a possibility to do that. It is not something that is pie in the sky; it can be done. We have certainly made a number of suggestions in that regard.

In summary, I want to refer to what is in the Budget for different groups, for example, women and families. There are increased travel costs. We see that money has been put into regressive tax measures which do not help average families who need child care. We do not see increased child care spaces so that those members of families who want to work know that while they are working their families are in safe, quality child care, and that the children of the future receive the break they need. We do not see anything in the Budget for these people.

I would also like to refer to what is not in the Budget for aboriginal people. We know that the first nations have many problems such as poor housing. They have a need for economic development, a need to receive assistance to establish a good economic base, and a need for social programs. We do not see any recognizable, targeted measures for aboriginal peoples.

What about the North? The North is only mentioned once in the Budget in reference to the northern allowance being excluded from the tax preferences which are subject to minimum tax. Certainly that measure is consistent with the principle of recognizing the extra financial burden of living in the North, but in fact it will only affect those with incomes of over $50,000. It will not affect the average northerner or the average single parent who is trying to pay for child care. Some men and women are looking for and want jobs. They do not want part-time or temporary ones. They want full-time jobs that are meaningful so that they can contribute to Canadian society, which will raise tax revenues and help decrease the amount of money it would be necessary to borrow.

Surely the deficit is of concern to every Canadian. However, I am suggesting that a rethinking of priorities is needed. We must all work toward reducing the deficit, but corporations and taxpayers alike should share the burden. At the moment individual taxpayers are carrying an unfair share of the burden. All the Budget does is underscore that with a one cent tax on fuel and a decrease in certain programs.

Do we really need to spend billions of dollars on nuclear submarines? It seems to me that that is a very good question. Often child care people and defence people are fighting it out for the money. Spending on nuclear submarines, which fortunately the Government has said it will not use for any offensive purpose, is a very skewed priority and does not contribute in a meaningful way to our economy, to the North where many of these submarines would be located, or to reducing the deficit about which we are all worried.

Perhaps the Budget was designed to do nothing. In some ways it meets that criterion. Some people have called it a pre-election Budget. I guess it was a pre-election tranquilizer so that we would not notice some of the more serious ramifications of the philosophy behind the Budget. Once again they will make sure that the little guy pays. They are not going to tax jet fuel. No, they will not touch the jet setters, but they will touch the small guy or the small business. On reflection, the Minister has not really presented us with a "do-nothing" Budget, in that it is an indication of the Government's philosophy and priorities with which my Party and I have great difficulty agreeing. We do not feel that it addresses the major outstanding issues in Canada today.

On that note I should like to conclude by saying that Bill C-109 under discussion today is simply a reflection of the state we are in, the necessity to approve the borrowing of a large amount of money without knowing—we do not have the Estimates—exactly to what it is said to be directed and without knowing who will be vulnerable to the proposed cuts in the Budget.

The Government must take a serious look at its priorities. I can assure its Members that in the next election Canadians will be watching very carefully.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau).

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes to comment on Bill C-109, legislation that, if passed, will allow the Government to increase the national debt by $25.3 billion during the financial year starting April 1.

Mr. Speaker, the charge on a loan of $25.3 billion, if calculated according to the medium and long-term interest rates in effect today, will cost over the next financial year, and I am referring to 1989-90, a total of $2.5 billion. If interest rates continue to rise, this may well entail additional expenditures that will spread to future budgets.

Mr. Speaker, at the end of this financial year, Canada's national debt will have reached nearly $300 billion. Nobody has ever had that much money in his bank account, let alone his billfold. This is a lot of money, a little over $12,000 per Canadian man, woman and child. This money is largely owed to other Canadians, but nevertheless, the federal Government has to pay a certain amount of money annually just to pay the interest on the national debt, and these annual expenditures are now as high as $30 billion per year. This means that every Canadian man, woman and child would have to pay an average of a little over $1,000 per year in taxes just to pay the interest on the national debt. Obviously, when we realize that children, for instance, and some people who may or may not be in the labour force do not pay income tax, this is an enormous burden.

Mr. Speaker, on the Government side there is a tendency to say that the deficit and the debt we have today were created by the previous Government.

I would like to take a few moments to argue this point. The Conservatives are saying: "When you Liberals were in power, you had deficits, and now we are trying to deal with them". I may remind the Conservative Government that although we had quite substantial deficits in 1981, 1982, and 1983, it was because the world economy, so not just Canada but the entire Western world, was in an economic recession. It was the worst recession since the Great Depression in the thirties.

I hear businessmen, merchants say: "Deficits are always bad". Here is my usual question to those business people: What would you have done in 1982, 1983, 1984, when the recession caused high unemployment, what would you have done had the Government decided, in order to avoid any deficit, to cut most social programs, unemployment insurance, etc? Clearly, the first victims would have been people in need, but the second victims would have been merchants, businessmen, industries producing the goods that were bought by people who, even though they were depending on unemployment insurance or welfare thanks to that State intervention, had the financial resources to buy some consumer goods, which allowed a hurting economy to go through that period. Now, and this is what I am blaming the Conservatives for, if it is acceptable to accumulate deficits in times of economic depression and large unemployment in order to help unemployed workers survive a difficult period, this had practically no justification any more once economic renewal ensured that the rate of growth of the economy had gone up, and especially when after six years of economic growth, we found ourselves in a situation that is just as bad and even a lot worse than the 1981, 1982 and early 1983 recession.

Mr. Speaker, looking at the figures, we see that this Conservative Government promised wonders but did not deliver. Let me recall that during the elections, the Conservative Party made a lot of promises. Maybe two or three people referred to the deficit, but one of them, the Leader of the Liberal Party of Canada, Mr. Turner, raised the problem during the election because he knew the depression was improving, renewal had started since the middle of 1983 and this concern had to be addressed if we were to get out of the depression. But the Conservatives promised wonders. What did they promise for instance?

I shall now read what the Conservatives had promised. I have quoted this a number of times, but as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) seems to indicate that I am quoting out of context, I went back to Hansard, and instead of reading only one sentence, I shall now read an entire paragraph to show that the Conservative Party had made very firm commitments to the Canadian people when in Opposition.

The population believed the promise made by the present Minister of Finance, who was then a member of the Opposition representing the Etobicoke Centre riding. On March 6, 1984, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre stated what follows in this very House, and he may even have been sitting in the seat I now occupy myself.

I shall quote him in English, as the text I have before me is in English.

• (1240)

[English]

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was in Opposition and made a speech about the Budget, he asked himself questions and answered his own questions. He said:

> Then the question is: How would you cut; would you cut by raising taxes or by cutting government spending? Again the answer is very clear. We would cut spending. We would not raise taxes. Tax levels in Canada are already too high. Spending cuts are important for another reason. If we raise taxes, we provide more funds for politicians and bureaucrats to spend.

Can you imagine that, Mr. Speaker? When the Minister of Finance was in Opposition, not only did he say that a Tory Government would not increase taxes but he said that the reason for that was that the taxes were too high. I think I agree with him about that. He also said that raising taxes would give more money for politicians and civil servants to spend.

After three and a half years of this Tory Government, can we say that the Minister of Finance and all the Tory backbenchers who repeated his words during the election campaign lived up to their promises? Certainly not.

I have said on other occasions and will repeat once again, because it is so important in this debate, that this is a question of credibility. Can we trust this Government? Can we trust this Minister of Finance? He said in 1984, a few months before the election, that he would not raise taxes and that he would cut expenses. That was a commitment he made on behalf of his Party. Probably many Canadians thought that his Party was serious.

After three and a half years of administration by a Party which said it would not increase taxes, here is the list, not an exhaustive list but just a few examples, of the broken promises. Those broken promises go to the heart of the question of credibility. Can we trust this Party if it now says that it will not increase taxes in the future? Can we believe it? Are we prepared to vote for this Party? When this Party says it will cut the deficit completely or will reduce it to the level of $20 billion, can we trust it now? It lied to us in the past. I believe that when it does that once, it can do it again.

Here is the list of the new taxes imposed by this Government which said that it would never increase taxes to cut the deficit. Soon after it was elected, on October 1, it increased the federal sales tax by 1 per cent, from 9 per cent to 10 per cent. On January 1, 1986 it increased the manufacturers' sales tax by another percentage point to 11 per cent. On April 1, 1986, there was another increase of 1 per cent to 12 per cent. That is three increases in less than two years in the manufacturers' sales tax.

This Government which said it would never increase taxes increased the manufacturers' sales tax by 3 per cent and now more companies have to pay sales taxes, thus increasing prices to the consumers. The first extension to it was on July 1, 1985, and the second on July 1, 1987, for an additional half a billion dollars.

The sales tax increased from 8 per cent to 12 per cent on paint, wallpaper and toys on January 1, 1988. There was an increase in the gasoline tax, and the Minister deserves the gold medal for the gasoline tax.

The Tories say that when the Liberals were in power they increased taxes on gasoline. I ask the Tories, do they know why? It was part of a policy to Canadianize companies in the oil and gas industry, to make sure Canadians owned the resource, not foreigners. It was to make sure Canadians manage their own economy and to be both les locataires et les propriétaires. We had a policy to make sure Canadians own their resources but the Government cancelled that policy and retained the tax on gasoline. Not only that, it increased the tax to an almost unbearable level.

On September 3, 1985, that Government and that Minister put in place a two cent per litre tax on gasoline and diesel fuel. They added another cent on January 1, 1987. Another cent in February, 1987. Can you imagine, 4 cents in a very short period of time. A few days ago they added another cent to reach 5 cents per litre. Translate that into a gallon. A lot of Canadians are more aware of the Imperial system than the metric system. People my age understand the gallon but have difficulty with the litre. My children have no problem but I am getting old and I have a problem; that is why I want to translate it into gallons. Five cents per litre is 23 cents per gallon. When we take into consideration the 3 per cent increase in sales taxes, it adds up to 27 cents per gallon.

Can you imagine, in three and a half years that Party which said publicly it would help the resource industry, help the gas and oil producer, has increased the price of gasoline by 27 cents a gallon. I was not a Member of this Parliament in 1979 when the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) tabled a Budget on behalf of the Tory Government which included a tax increase of 18 cents a gallon tax. The Government was defeated on that increase. If a Tory Government was defeated over an 18-cent tax increase, can you imagine what will happen with 27 cents?

That is not the end of the broken promises. That Minister, who said on March 6, 1984 that he would not increase taxes, has increased taxes on tobacco on four different occasions; the first was on May 24, 1985, for $340 million, the second was on February 27, 1986, for $150 million, the third was on February 19, 1986, for $75 million, and the fourth was on January 1, 1988, for $175 million. For a Minister who said he would not increase taxes, that is quite a record.

That is only on the consumer side, though there are a few others. After having increased sales taxes, enlarged the base of the sales tax, after taxing gasoline, tobacco and alcohol, he had to look for something else. He decided Canadians were making too many long-distance calls and added a 10 per cent tax on those starting January 1, 1988. When you live in Toronto or Montreal you can reach two or three million people without making long-distance calls. The population is large and for your monthly fee you can reach millions of people. However, if you have the luck to live in remote areas like the Gaspé or the Northwest Territories you have to call long-distance much more than when you live in Toronto or Montreal. This 10 per cent tax on long-distance calls has a big effect on people living in the regions. The Government will raise close to $1 billion through that tax every year.

As well, on the consumer side, the Government has decided to shift the sales tax to the wholesale level and the same rate of 12 per cent will raise a lot more money than the 12 per cent at the manufacturing level. So much for consumption taxes.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, apart from consumption taxes, there have been income tax increases as a result of discounting the first 3 per cent of inflation. Without saying a word about it, without passing any legislation, without referring to it in his Budget speech, the Minister of Finance will take this year just under $750 million from Canadian taxpayers. This was not mentioned in the Budget speech. It is not without reason that I stated in my comments that the Minister of Finance had not kept his promise. Not only did he fail to do so by adding new taxes in each successive Budget, but he has also failed in his promise in a roundabout way, through the back door, by partially deindexing income tax tables, which is bringing the Government $750 million a year without a single word being said about it!

Mr. Speaker, there have been a whole series of measures: The partial deindexation of family allowances, the partial deindexation of the child tax credit, lowering the ceiling for the child tax credit, and so on. Mr. Speaker, I would like the Minister to explain something to me. When you add up all those measures, you get something like $22 billion in tax increases. Why is it, after having increased taxes by $22 billion and after the six years of economic recovery mentioned by the Minister, that he still needs to borrow $25.3 billion for the coming fiscal year?

If I were involved in a boxing match, Mr. Speaker, I would tell the referee to keep his eyes open, that someone is hitting me hard, for this Minister has increased the taxes. He claims that he has cut Government expenditures and that he has to seek $25.3 billion in borrowing authority. Yet, Mr. Speaker, we do not have the estimates, only total figures. We do not know just how much will go to this or that department or agency. We have nothing of that.

Mr. Speaker, we are certainly not going to let the House adopt Bill C-109 unless we get at least some information about the manner in which this Tory Government intends to spend not only the money it is now borrowing, but also all the old and new taxes which the Government is collecting every year. That is why we will certainly continue this debate as long as possible, because we believe that a Bill authorizing the Government to borrow $25 billion is important enough for us to wait until the estimates are tabled, I imagine, sometime at the end of this month.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he has any ideas thus far about where the Government is going to get the money for some of the programs it announced but which are not shown in the budget papers? Over the past year it has announced $1.3 billion for research and development, and defence expenditures which could go as high as $12 billion to $16 billion even though they are supposed to be phased in over five years. Those are not described in the Budget papers. The borrowing authority Bill before us requests $22.3 billion for financial requirements forecast in the Budget plus a $3 billion contingency allowance.

Has the Hon. Member any idea of how this $3 billion might be expended or how the Government can make it stretch to include all the other things announced, or does he anticipate that we will be seeing a lot of supplementary estimates and perhaps a supplementary borrowing authority Bill before the election?

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) for her question. I would be in a better position to answer the question if I knew when the election will be called. In my response to the Budget speech I talked about the slush fund for which Tory Members were crying. Just as I mentioned it, there was a lot of noise on the government side. I think I touched upon a very important aspect of the debate.

I am not suggesting that the $3 billion will be used for that, but we are informed that some of the Tory Members are trying to get information on what they can pay at the municipal level to help build roads or bridges. They are suggesting to the mayors that they may have a $5 million slush fund for the riding. That smells of election time.

In the old days the Minister would come clean with the Canadian people and the House and announce the programs from the ministerial benches. However, this Government has decided to go the sneaky way, just as it did with the deindexation of personal income tax. The Government is going through the back door, saying that it will have a lump sum of $3 billion and will see whether it cannot use part of it for a slush fund to help Tory Members buy their elections.

However, there can also be other reasons for this $3 billion. In any Budget there is provision for things which are very difficult to budget for. However, the Government has announced close to $2 billion worth of new programs and there was nothing in the Budget about them. That is why we say that it would be imprudent for any member of this Parliament to adopt Bill C-109 before we see the Estimates. Then we will know into what programs the money will go. It may be easy for us to entertain you, Mr. Speaker, for a few hours more on this same matter.

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, all through the self-congratulation of the Budget papers the Minister said that he is on the right track in reducing the public debt. I wonder whether the Hon. Member who has just spoken had occasion to look at the November-December issue of the Business Review of the Bank of Montreal. That issue stated that far from being on the right track the deficit is in the process of going completely off the rails. That article suggested that if it were not for the creative bookkeeping used in the Budget papers, the 1987-88 Budget might in fact be almost $4 billion more than the figures presented to us.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I did have a chance to look at this report and I referred to it in my response to the Budget speech. As well as the Bank of Montreal saying that, La Presse of February 11——under the byline of Mr. Alain Dubuc, refers to these accounting devices used by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). This article by Mr. Dubuc reminded me that shortly after being appointed Minister of Finance—something my friend the Hon. Member for Trinity (Mrs. Nicholson) will certainly remember, he decided to change the accounting procedures across the board. Not only did he do that, but he changed also the manner in which the tax collectors remit the money to the Government. Before that, they had to do it every month; now, it is every 15 days; from now on, they will have to remit it every week.

If this Government were unfortunate enough to get reelected, I suggest it would ask them to do it on a daily basis. Mr. Alain Dubuc compared the situations and said: "The deficit in 1988-89 would be $31 billion compared to $36 in 1983-84", which means that on an identical accounting basis, following six years of economic growth, after having increased taxes by $22 billion, the deficit has been reduced by approximately $3 or $4 billion. It is surprising enough for a Government which had used deficit reduction as its favorite campaign theme.

This is why I said earlier that the debate is important because it proves one thing. It proves that the Conservative Party does not deserve our confidence after the solemn commitments they made: first they promised they would not raise taxes and, second, they promised they would lower the deficit by slashing expenditures. After three and a half years we can see for ourselves that the deficit has remained roughly at the same level through six years of economic growth, and that taxes have gone up considerably. To that extent I believe it is a question of credibility. I should think this is why polls show that their Party's popular support has dropped to 27 per cent. Come next election, people will vote for the Liberal Party because they have already indicated in the latest poll that it would get 41 per cent of their support. To put it another way, if an election were called their Party—it has failed to honour its election promises—would vanish from the front benches.

[English]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I rise on behalf of the New Democratic Party to speak on this particular Bill. This Bill seeks to borrow the sum of $25.3 billion over the next fiscal year. The figure comes from $22.3 billion in the Budget, which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced on Wednesday, and a contingency fund of $3 billion on top of that for a total of $25.3 billion.

In my speech I will combine my remarks on this Bill and on the Budget since they are intertwined. I will also put forward the views of my constituents in Vancouver—Kingsway. However, that riding is to be eliminated in redistribution and if the election is held after July of this year, that riding will no longer exist. Therefore, I will also try to articulate the views of people who live in the area of Port Moody—Coquitlam in Vancouver, those wonderful people in the riding in which I will run if indeed we go on the new boundaries. Many of the same problems are shared by those people. Indeed, the people of Port Moody—Coquitlam share problems with many people all across the country with the present economy and the present policies of the Government.

We in the New Democratic Party believe that the Government's 1988 Budget is a Budget of lost opportunities. It was not the time to stand pat but a time for action. The Minister of Finance had a real opportunity to move to greater regional fairness, to stop the rising interest rates, and to make the tax system fairer. The latter is of particular concern because, except for the large corporations which do not pay any taxes at all, Canadians pay taxes which are taken right off the top of their wage packets. They are the ones who wanted a fairer taxation system. Instead, the Minister of Finance chose to have a stand-pat Budget that does little for the average Canadian family.

The Budget provides for an increase in the gasoline tax of one cent a litre, which will cost the average family $50 a year. I want to begin by referring to that gasoline tax. Since I have been the New Democratic Party energy critic for some seven years, I have seen a seemingly endless increase in this tax. The Government appears to consider the Canadian motorist as a milk cow because it seems to add another cent a litre gasoline tax in every Budget in order to raise another $3 or $4 million from the motorist.

I visited Toronto last weekend where, we are told, the economy is booming. It is one area of the country where the economy seems to be pretty high, but once one scratches the surface and considers the average family, one sees that most families cannot afford to live in downtown Toronto but must live in the suburbs and drive to work. The same situation is faced by many Canadians who live in the larger cities, including Vancouver where many people live in the Coquitlam area and must drive to work. One of the problems there is that they need additional rapid transit to help them get to work.

While the Government put a tax on gasoline, there is no quid pro quo, an earmarking of $300 million, for example, to upgrade the rapid transit system.

Some of the local mayors in the riding of Port Moody—Coquitlam, particularly the mayor of Port Moody and the mayor of Port Coquitlam, have been advocating that Canadian Pacific Railway permit the upgrading and the use of its lines, with some help from the federal Government, to support a rapid transit system into Vancouver. This would save money and travel time for their residents.

However, what action did the Government take? It added another cent a litre tax at the pump without earmarking that money for improvements. Many Canadians live close to the border and know that our price for gasoline is almost double that in the United States. There are two reasons for this. The first is that the Government continues to add taxes at the pump, to which provincial governments add the so-called ad valorem tax.

The second reason is that oil companies make too much money and have too great a profit margin on their gasoline. The five big companies that control the gasoline market in Canada represent a classic oligopoly. They continue to increase the price of gasoline, sometimes at the same time as the Government increases its tax. We may see the oil companies tag on an increase to the price of gas as a result of this recent tax.

Eventually Canadian motorists and consumers will say that enough is enough. We in the New Democratic Party suggested that one approach to energy policy would be to reinvest money as a result of an additional cent a litre tax at the gas pump into such things as rapid transit or possibly to help small Canadian-owned oil companies by establishing a floor price for them, for example, so they will still be in existence when we experience our next energy crisis. This would also prevent the oil industry from being taken over completely by the multinational oil companies, as is happening now.

The Government continues to increase gasoline tax. This is the fourth increase since the Conservatives were elected in 1984 and the cumulative impact has been $350 for every family that uses a car. This Budget gave the Government an opportunity to correct the unfairness in the tax reform package of last year. However, the Government did not take advantage of that and the result is that in 1988 the average family will be paying more than $1,100 in additional taxes than in 1984. Only the richest 2 per cent of taxpayers will pay less.

The rich will get a break and the middle class, who are basically assuming the tax burden in this country, will be paying an additional $1,100. During Question Period today the finance critic for the new Democratic Party, the Hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), asked questions about a minimum corporate tax. Even Ronald Reagan can do that, so why cannot the Government in Canada impose such a tax?

Let me give some figures which we have compiled. Under the Conservative tax regime, the following very profitable corporations paid no taxes in the most recent year for which such information is available. In 1986, Alcan Aluminum had profits totalling $220 million and even received a tax credit of $32 million. Brascan had profits of $187 million in 1986 and received a tax credit of $2.3 million. Hees International had profits totalling $117 million in 1986 and did not pay any taxes. In 1986, Power Financial had profits of $132 million and received a tax credit of $1 million. Xerox Canada had profits totalling $115 million in 1986 and received a tax credit of $10.8 million. In 1986, Total Petroleum, on profits totalling $40 million, received a tax credit of $2.2 million.

In 1986 Wardair had profits of $70 million, with no taxes paid. In 1986 Pacific Western had profits of $39 million with no income tax paid. Repap Enterprises had profits totalling $34 million in 1986, with no taxes paid. Union Carbide had profits of $28 million in 1986, with no taxes paid.

Bramalea had $51 million in profits with no taxes paid. In 1987, Cadillac Fairview had profits of $95 million and received a tax credit of $12.4 million. In 1987, Carena-Bancorp paid no taxes on profits totalling $37 million. In 1987, the Hudson's Bay Company had $50 million in profits and received a tax credit of $15.7 million. SICO Camp had profits totalling $43 million in 1987, with no taxes paid.

The average worker in this country has taxes taken directly off the pay cheque. I talked to a crane operator recently who got a terrific job and made $2,000. He received a cheque of $1,000. He does not get a tax credit because it comes directly from his cheque. That is what the average Canadian family is saying is unfair.

The Government continues to resist meaningful tax reform in this area. The Minister of Finance had an opportunity to bring in a minimum corporate tax that would ensure that all profitable corporations pay their fair share. It is not meant to tax them out of existence, but to have them pay their fair share.

The revenue generated from such a tax could be used for such things as regional development. Yet, with this Budget, 60,000 corporations will continue to pay no tax.

That raises the other problem of regional development in this country. There are essentially two Canada's. One is the area in the Golden Horseshoe in Ontario which has a booming economy, even though there are housing problems. The second Canada includes the rest of the country where the boom has not arrived. My own province has an 11 per cent unemployment rate. That is too high.

In an afternoon news broadcast in my province yesterday, it was reported that the school board received permission to apply to the federal Government for funds to feed hungry children. Hopefully, there will be no more hungry children in the schools. There is desperation in our province. We have food banks in Vancouver. Some people are better off, but many people are still unemployed. It affects the vast majority of people in the workforce as well because it is difficult for them to move from one job to another or to seek higher wages. It is difficult for them to make any kind of changes at all. It is difficult to commit themselves to a high interest, long-term mortgage to buy a house because they may get dumped from their jobs, and it is very difficult to find another job in the labour market in British Columbia.

The Budget also ignores that half of the jobs created since the Government came to power have really been in one province with about one third of the population of the country. The Government is well intentioned in trying to create jobs. We all want to see that. But when the Government throws out figures of how many millions of jobs it has created, it should remember that those jobs tend to be in a certain region of the country. We are not against that, but we want to see some regional fairness. Second, the jobs which have been created tend to be lower paid jobs in the service industry. One should realize the kind of jobs the Government has created.

My Party and I believe that Canadians were looking for fairness in the Budget, but nothing is offered to close the growing disparity between people in central Canada and those in the outlying regions of Canada, in the east, west and north. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) warned us last year that we are in the process of building two Canadas, one which is rich and promising and one which is underdeveloped and underemployed. It seems to me this warning remains true today. But the Minister of Finance has lost the opportunity to do something about it.

Major improvements in job creation, I believe, are being held back because of the preoccupation of the Bank of Canada with interest rates. In order to get the economic growth to continue in the regions, we need a policy of regional fairness and development and we need a policy of lower interest rates.

The Economic Council of Canada has said that a cut in interest rates would be the single most job creating initiative the Government could undertake and that it would provide for far better growth for the economy than the proposed trade deal. Economists like Michael McCracken of Informetrica have argued for lower rates to stimulate the growth and counter the possibility of economic decline following the stock market slide in October. But the Finance Minister continues to support the stance of the Governor of the Bank of Canada and has done nothing in his Budget to stimulate regional growth or lower interest rates which are, in my view, the most pressing economic problem in Canada.

The Canadian dollar has gone up so the Minister need not worry. He should forget about the old argument that we have to keep interest rates high to get foreign capital to come in and keep our dollar from falling. The time is right now to lower interest rates. That would help suburban families, the kind of family who lives in Port Moody or Coquitlam, who could afford a house and have more money left over because they would save on their mortgage payments.

I would like to conclude by addressing two further matters, first, the trade deal because it is tied in with the Budget. I cannot go into great detail about it, but I would say that many people in British Columbia were hoping that the trade deal would provide some answers for them. Many still assume that the deal provides the answer they wanted, that is, access to the American market. There would be unrestricted access to the goods and raw materials of British Columbia to the American market. But I say to them and to you, Mr. Speaker, that the fault with the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal is that it does not secure that access. In fact, it was a bad deal. Congress can still put countervails on our shakes and shingles and potash. It can still interfere with our logging and wood product exports. That is going to happen after the trade deal. So we have to ask ourselves, just as Canadians in British Columbia are asking themselves, what did we gain from this trade deal when we look at what we supposedly gained, access to the American market, which we did not, and compare it to what we gave up? We have entered into a continental energy policy. We have given away all our ace cards, all the control over our resources. I think it is a bad deal. That is a developing debate in British Columbia.

What we are going to need instead is for Canadians to do it on their own with a regional development program and a Canadian national development project so that we can provide full employment in this country. We in the New Democratic Party have put out a paper written by my friend, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), our trade critic. It is called "A Time To Choose, the New Democrat's Trade Option in Canada". I do not have time to go through it right now but I will say that we believe there are other ways of keeping what we believe in strongly, of stimulating the economy and providing jobs, than joining in an economic union with the United States, which will ultimately lead to a political union.

I mentioned some corporations which did not pay taxes. I mentioned the gasoline tax which is hosing the consumer again. I want to conclude by going through some figures to show what has happened to the average family since this Government took power. I am talking about an average family with two children earning an income of $35,000.

In November 1984 in the Government's economic statement there was an increase in the oil and gas prices. That cost $200, unemployment insurance premiums another $102, and sales tax increases another $150. That totals $450. In May of 1985 we had a Budget. There was an elimination of federal tax reduction. That was $100. Indexing was modified for $115. There was a cut in family allowance payments, $22.50. Cigarette and alcohol increases cost $75. Sales tax was broadened, which cost $150. There was another gas tax increase, $50. That was another $512.

In 1986 we had another Budget. There was a 3 per cent surtax, $170, a sales tax increase, $150, a cigarette and alcohol tax increase, $20. That is $340. In 1987, another Budget with another gas increase, $50, sales tax broadened, $15, cigarette and air tax increased, $35. So we are up to about $80 there.

On June 18, 1987, the tax reform comes in. There are changes in the tax categories, so we have to subtract $310. Now we have this Budget with the increase in gasoline tax, another $50. All this totals $1,124.50. That is the increase for the average family since this Government took office. I challenge the Government to deal with that and I challenge the Government to go to the country and face the average Canadian family who wants to see some fairness in taxes and in regional disparity. The Government should make this the kind of fair system that Canadians have come to expect.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a brief comment and ask the Hon. Member to respond to it. I want to express my satisfaction with the Hon. Member's speech. He clearly outlined the problems that the one cent per litre increase in tax on gasoline would present to the people in the suburban areas of Vancouver, an area he represents, as well as people living in other large cities.

I would like to point out how it really hits areas such as the one I represent in Prince Edward Island, which is a rural area, where farmers and fishermen and those who can find jobs have to drive 30, 40 and 50 kilometres one way to and from their work or their place of shopping. Indeed, just to attend church services these people have to drive that many kilometres. An automobile is not a luxury anymore in those areas. It is a necessity. It is something that the citizens of the country have to rely on.

Another point that came out in the Budget was that farmers and fishermen will be exempt from this one cent per litre increase. I would like the Hon. Member to comment on this point as well. It is a very misleading statement because farmers and fishermen are also consumers. While they are exempt in terms of their on- farm activities and their fishing industry activities, they are still consumers. They still have to travel miles to and from their shopping areas and to all the other activities that they as ordinary citizens have to do.

I just want to set the record clear today. It is not quite right to say that farmers and fishermen are exempt. While they are exempt in their own farm activities, they are not exempt anymore than anyone else when it comes to their ordinary daily lives. Will the Hon. Member please make a comment on that point?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member with respect to farmers and fishers. He is exactly right. He also brings out the point that Canadians drive to work. In that respect I mentioned the suburbs. But in some cases such as in Prince George, British Columbia, if someone has to drive to a mill it is often out of town. In Pouce Coupe people have to drive to their work there. I will not advocate cheap gasoline prices. I think the American prices are too low. There is room for some taxation there and there will be some. The Americans will eventually get around to it.

There is also an argument for conservation when consumers have to pay a great deal for gasoline. Environmentalists will make that argument. There has to be a bit of a trade-off. I often find that the environmentalists who make that argument live right next to the Bloor Street subway line in Toronto. They do not live in Prince George where they would have to drive 30 miles to the mill. So we have to need a fair saw-off if you like.

What is happening is that the Government has reached the point where the consumer, the motorist, has become a milk cow. In every Budget it seems that there is another one cent per litre tax imposed. When I was energy critic, I used to know what I was going to say even before the Budget was tabled. I did not even have to see it. If someone asked me to comment on it, I could say that this is what they will be doing to the motorists. It was right all the time.

I think that at some point in time the Government will see rebellion from the motorists who will say, "Look, it is just too much". Motorists may be prepared to pay more if they thought that the money was going for something, not just for a Tory slush fund for an election or a pay-out here to let Grant Devine win an election. If they thought that it was earmarked for energy development, for conservation, for regional development or for rapid transit then they would probably agree to it. But the consumers, including the fishermen and the farmers, will not be fooled anymore. They will start to rebel on this point.

The former Minister of Finance, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) had a nasty experience when he tried to hose Canadians at the pump too fast. This time the Government is stretching out the agony. Canadians will be in agony nevertheless at the pumps. They will rebel at this point.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member on his comments on the Budget and on the borrowing Bill. I notice that he was concerned with interest rates and with the need to reduce interest rates. I also noticed that he made reference to a program of the NDP, our Party, as an alternative program, particularly emphasizing regional development.

I am wondering if the Hon. Member would comment further on the regional development program, including how that relates to the matter of lowering the interest rates. What is the connection between lowering the interest rates and building up regional development in a way that the trade deal with the United States would not do?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, there a number of matters that could be included there. High interest rates make it harder for us in British Columbia to compete with the United States. The cost of financing our new investment now is 30 per cent higher than it is in the United States. Thus companies are locating south of the border rather than in Canada.

There have been a number of bankruptcies as a result of the high interest rates. The number of families who could not afford mortgages to buy homes has meant that economic development has not progressed because of the high interest rates.

The Government has to make a decision. Does it choose between ordinary Canadians who would benefit from low interest rates or does it protect its friends, whether it is in the oil industry or a certain group of Canadians who feel that inflation is the big problem and they want those particular investments protected? With our policy, which advocates lower interest rates, it would stimulate development. It would use the Government and not leave everything to the so-called free market. It would use the Government in partnership with private industry. It would use the tools of the Government to help in regional development to encourage it rather than putting all our eggs in the American basket. This would give us an independent economic policy and an independent foreign policy as well as an independent cultural policy.

Those are all part of our vision of Canada. We in the New Democratic Party think that that is the real alternative for Canada. We think that the place to start is in the economic arena. We will keep up pressure on this. The Government should tackle the Bank of Canada on the interest rates and force them down. It seems to us that this would be to the benefit of ordinary Canadians. The economy needs this or else we will go into another economic slump.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has given a good answer to the question of how lowering the interest rates would benefit the regions of Canada. Can he be more specific about the region in which he has his representation, that is, within British Columbia?

What I have in mind is that in downtown Toronto, which I represent, we have two kinds of banks. We have the banks on Bay Street, which are the beneficiaries, as he said, of the high interest rates. We also have the food banks a little further away from Bay Street where the people who do not benefit by the high interest rates have to go to eat if they are out of work. I believe in British Columbia they do not have bank head offices, but they do have some food banks. I understand there is a seriously high rate of unemployment in British Columbia.

I would ask the Hon. Member if he has examples of how lower interest rates could be used by people in the free market, as well as with the aid of Government, to meet directly the employment needs of some of the people of British Columbia.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. Our big problem in British Columbia is that we have not diversified our economy which is still concentrated in mining, forestry and so on. We also export raw materials. When those industries are all right we have boom times, but when times are bad that is when we have bust times.

Increasingly, with other competitors across the world, those good times will not come back. We have to diversify our economy. We have to produce some of our mining machinery at home and sell it to the world. Similarly, with our forest industry, and so on. We have to develop some type of manufacturing industry to provide for our local people, and to use our raw materials and export those raw materials, especially to the Asia-Pacific market. There is a regional strategy for the Pacific region that makes sense.

It cannot be done when high interest rates are skimming off money and investment, and basically putting it in the hands of the big banks on Bay Street. We know that the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) are basically two boys from Bay Street, both corporate lawyers who represent the interests of the big banks and the big companies. Whether it is a Liberal or a Conservative Government, that is why we will always have high interest rates and policies that will not be for regional development. With the policies that we prefer, led by lower interest rates and by encouragement for regional development and stimulus in using the powers of the Government of Canada, we can have development in the riding of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), and we think we can also have it in my riding in British Columbia.

If there was a New Democratic Government in this country, there would be a fair system of taxation, and there would not be one food bank left in the country.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in the debate today on Bill C-209, which is an Act to provide a borrowing authority, I am somewhat amazed that the Government would expect those of us in the House, and Canadians in general, to accept the fact that it was going to ask to borrow $25.3 billion without even telling us what it is for. When most individuals in this House, and most Canadians throughout the land go to a bank, they do not get a blank cheque until they have some reason for borrowing the money. We should not be offering the Government a blank cheque until we have seen the Estimates and know exactly where it intends to spend this $25.3 billion.

Debate on this Bill coming directly after Wednesday's Budget heightens my disappointment with the performance of the Government, its spending, and taxation proposals. The Budget is certainly one of missed opportunities. It could certainly have done some good for Canadians in promoting job creation and in fairness, the types of things that we think would be fair and equitable from a balanced Canadian view, and which would enable people to live with a great deal more security in this country.

Through this Budget, the Tories have demonstrated their lack of deep commitment to the cultural community activities. Today that is what I wish to focus on in attacking and asking the Government to take a look at where it will be spending the $25 billion extra that it will borrow. I want to know where it will be put, and in particular I would like to address the whole area of the cultural community. That is a very large constituency. They are the people who help to define us, explain us, and speak to us and for us in a very significant way.

I wish to point out that, for the cultural sector of our society, the November, 1984 economic statement presented us with $122.5 million in major cuts to all levels of federal expenditures. If that wasn't bad enough, and indicated their strong and deep commitment—if you pardon the sarcasm—to the cultural industries, let us take a look at what was done in May, 1985. I guess the Government was embarrassed because that community was spared any further cuts. However, in February, 1986, the Government started to repay for some of its sins of omission and it gave an allocation of $75 million over the next five years through dedicated programs. In 1987 there was absolutely no attempt at restoring the Government's earlier cuts. Now in 1988 in this Wilson Budget, we are told that there will be further reductions of $300 million in annual expenditures, but we do not know exactly where.

We do not have any details or explanations. The question is, will it be straight cuts and reductions across all programs and agencies? Will that be the fair approach, or will the Government pick and choose its friends, its winners and losers, or will certain agencies and programs be singled out to receive higher cuts? I think that Canadians will have to look very carefully at these Estimates and find out what the BBC boys and girls will be saying.

When I say the BBC, I am talking about the Back Bench Club who have some very interesting views of society. I would say dinosaur views.

Let us look at one particular area that seems of concern. The Government announced its intention to remove the provisions in the Income Tax Act that currently apply to the withholding tax to payments for the use in Canada of film and video tapes used in connection with news material gathered by foreign sources in our television programming.

At first glance this provision does not seem dramatic. It is the removal of a 10 per cent tax which provides the Government with somewhere around a million dollars. We do not have the actual figure. But this action will allow broadcasters an opportunity to obtain foreign news cheaper than at present.

Was this provision one that would assist the private sector in its bid for an all-news licence? I wonder if this was instituted as part of a side deal made with the Americans during the free trade talks in order that we could gather in more and more information from an American perspective. It is not American bashing, Mr. Speaker, that I am concerned about. It is the assimilation of American lifestyle, thinking, and action as the only way to look at the world. We are not Americans. We are Canadians. We have our own perspective. We have our own sense of what is right and wrong. That is what we want to see on our film screen. When we turn on the television set to watch the news, we want to see Canadian news from a Canadian perspective.

By removing the 10 per cent tax on films and videos that come from the United States, instead of encouraging an indigenous Canadian industry to flourish, in essence the Government has not contributed in any way to Canadian culture. It has only promoted the whole eyes and ears of Americans focusing in on Canada, absorbing their perspective, their viewpoints from their history and from their values. If that is a contribution to Canadian culture, then I believe that it is not the way that one would want to serve Canadians and Canadian values, and particularly Canadian sovereignty.

If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was asking to borrow $25.3 billion and he included some expenses for some of his Party's commitments, then perhaps it would not be so discomforting or incompatible with the verbiage and the rhetoric to which we have been subjected since 1984.

Let us take a look at what the Tories had to say to us during the 1984 election when they made those wonderful strong commitments to Canadian culture. I would remind all Members who were Progressive Conservative candidates that six commitments were made in this area, together with the 360 some odd that were made in general.

The first was to maintain federal funding of cultural agencies in line with inflation. The second was to provide real growth in federal contributions to the cultural sector. The third was to look for other sources of funding for the arts councils and the cultural agencies such as tax credits. The fourth was to look for further financial assistance for the cultural sector by widening the sorts of enterprises which qualified under investment incentive criteria. The fifth was a thorough examination of cultural agencies such as the CBC, Telefilm, and the National Arts Centre. That was done through the Nielsen study and a few other studies, which I will come to. The sixth was the commitment to traditional arm's length relationships between Government and the cultural agencies. Let us see how the Government met its promises, its rhetoric, and its commitments.

First, in respect of the maintenance of federal funding and the provision of real growth, neither of these commitments has been met. In fact, the reverse has happened. In the 1984 economic statement there was a total loss of $122.5 million to the sector, and cultural agencies parliamentary appropriations have not kept pace with inflation to this day. In 1987 the National Arts Centre received an actual 4.1 per cent decrease in real terms in its parliamentary allocation. In 1987 the Canada Council received a .1 per cent decrease in its appropriation. The CBC, our major cultural agency, suffered a staggering decline of 13 per cent in its spending since this Government took office. The amount of money available to the CBC today is only 87 per cent of what it was in real terms when this Government took over.

Instead of trying to stab it, snub it, or snuff it, I would suggest that the CBC be looked at and accredited with the incredible growth and development of all arts and cultural personalities and products in the country. Where else was there to grow and to be a national instrument which encouraged the development of Canadian talent in all sectors of cultural interest and all key support sectors such as film crews, editors, writers, creators in every field?

In that sense we can forget about the first two commitments. Let us turn to the third and fourth commitments, incentives to new funding sources. To this I can only say that instead of looking for new sources of funding, once again they have chipped away at existing provisions. This time it was at the 100 per cent capital cost allowance for films, which was finally enabling risk capital in a productive way. I have heard some people say that they were producing schlock or high art. Well, we should have the right to do all that here in Canada. If there are people who have the ability and foresight to see that this is a very good industry for Canada, they should be encouraged to do so. Instead the 100 per cent capital cost allowance for films was reduced to 30 per cent. That is no incentive. We can do better with mining shares.

Along with this situation we have the Government's inability to produce Canadian film legislation that will recognize Canadian film rights and give us an indigenous industry. This cut, along with some of the other things the Government has done, is putting the nail in the coffin of ever being able to develop a film industry indigenous to Canada. It is bending to American will, the voice of Jack Valenti whispered strongly into the ear of Ronald Reagan.

Turning to the fifth point, they wanted to do a thorough examination of cultural agencies such as the CBC, Telefilm, and the National Arts Centre. Well, they have done that. The former Minister of Communications certainly went out of his way on this promise. Let us remember the task forces—the task force on broadcasting at a cost of $2.8 million, the task force on national museums at a cost of $425,000, the task force on funding of the arts at a cost of $833,000, the task force on the film industry at a cost of $134,000, the task force on the National Arts Centre for $319,000, and the task force on the status of the artist at a cost of $50,000. Of course these are in addition to the Nielsen task force. In three and a half years of Conservative Government, there have been six major task forces and many other studies undertaken at a total cost in excess of $4.5 million.

What have been the results? Not only did the task forces make very credible suggestions to the House for consideration and action, but the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture tabled approximately 11 reports in the House. We have talked to the federal museum policy, the National Archives issue, and the Canadian broadcasting policy, but the Government has not cared to look at a single issue that we addressed. They have been ignored. If some of the Government's borrowing funds go toward meeting the needs addressed in the $4.5 million worth of study, not to speak of the cost of running the parliamentary committees and the open hearings we have had, at least then I would feel that we were a little better protected.

What about the last commitment, the commitment to the traditional arm's length relationship between government and cultural agencies? If the recent interference in the CRTC licensing of the CBC all-news service is arm's length, then I would suggest that the shoulder is moving down to the wrist. We have seen the most interventionist action ever in respect of the independent Board of Directors of the CBC, careful research, open hearings, and decision making of the quasi-tribunal members of the CRTC.

If, instead of spending some $11 billion or $12 billion on nuclear submarines, the Government could have taken action in a few really concrete ways, we would have had something more exciting to present to the cultural sector.

I have a few suggestions for the Minister of Finance before he prints his Estimates for artists and individual creators. I would suggest that the Income Tax Act be amended to define the term "professional artist" in line with the criteria set out in Revenue Canada's interpretation bulletin IT-504 and to define such other related terms as might be required. The standing committee made this recommendation to the Government as has the arts community over past years. The basis of the recommendation indicates that we should recognize artists in a defined class. We should not leave them to the whims of the court. They should be given special recognition under the Income Tax Act, and the definitions in IT-504 should be used as they are acceptable to the arts community and to Revenue Canada. They could certainly be used to have force of law protection for the artists instead of having them subject to whims and interpretations which are not always fair and well guided.

For the Government to do this would not be very difficult. The work has been done. The definitions are there. Current administrative criteria and recasting them for inclusion in The Canada Gazette would entail no new policy decisions. It would just be an adoption of new language which is seemingly difficult for the Department of Justice to put together. However, none of it is really that technical. From the point of view of the arts community, this approach would mean that the definitions would have status and would have far more authority than mere administrative guidelines. Further, the applicable guidelines could be cited in a court and could then be used in decisions which might be difficult to arrive at under present guidelines, if they were embodied in the statute.

Frankly I find unacceptable the removal of the right of professional artists to use block averaging and the modified accrual basis of accounting. In June the Government proposed abolishing all averaging provisions. Mr. Speaker, are you indicating that I have one minute left?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Today.

Mrs. Finestone: I will finish this thought and I will continue with pleasure the next time the matter is before the House. Also the Government proposed to erode significantly the ability of farmers to use the modified cash basis of accounting. It was able to do that for farmers and able to allow them to block average up to another five years with blocks starting in the 1987 taxation year. Unfortunately the rationale for abolishing averaging was based upon the argument that since there were only three tax brackets under the proposed system, averaging would not be needed. However, minimal calculations indicate that taxpayers in general and artists in particular with fluctuating incomes will fare much more badly under the new system than those with stable incomes.

The arts community feels strongly that it needs some sort of averaging system in the name of equity, but the Government has not seen fit to take any concrete action. I would be pleased to return to these issues; thank you very much.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

[English]

PEACE-MAKING

ADVISABILITY OF ESTABLISHING TAX CREDIT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, in pursuance of a stated policy of peace and peace-making, the government should consider the advisability of establishing a 100 per cent tax credit which would allow residents of Canada who pay income tax, to transfer a portion of their tax to recognized Canadian or International agencies which conduct peace research, peace education or development projects aimed at promoting peaceful understanding in regions of conflict, such credit to be 100 per cent of the amount so transferred up to a maximum of the percentage of the national budget allocated to defence which is projected at 9.39 per cent for the coming year.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on Motion No. 112. The effect of this motion would be to allow Canadians who pay income tax to transfer the portion of it which normally would go to defence purposes to a fund or series of funds that would be recognized by the Government and devoted to peace purposes, peace education, peace research or some kind of development program that would encourage the peaceful resolution of conflict in other parts of the world. This is the third time I have raised a motion similar to this for debate in the House of Commons.

Is is an idea that will some day be turned into reality. I hope that someday we will be able to turn it into reality in this House of Commons, perhaps even today if Members opposite are willing to consider this on its merits.

It is an idea that is being considered by people around the world as an alternative to the unacceptable measures of militarism which are not leading to peace and security in the world today. It is an idea that we recognize is never particularly popular with the Government. It was not acceptable to the Liberal Government—

Mr. Dick: Has anybody passed it in the world yet?

Mr. Manly: Nobody in the world that I am aware of has passed it. That does not mean that it is not an idea that has merit. The fact that nobody before Galileo and Copernicus recognized that the world was round did not mean that it was flat, did it? The fact that nobody in the world has passed this yet does not mean that it is not a worth-while idea.

There are two reasons behind this motion. First, it is to give effect to the concern of Canadians for freedom of conscience. Freedom of conscience is recognized in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Second, it is to provide an alternative to militarism. I would like to speak about both of these in turn.

Freedom of conscience is the first freedom that is guaranteed in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Yet we have never really defined what it means to Canadians. There is no question of conscience that is more central to people in Canada or anywhere else in the world than the relationship of individuals to the state, particularly with regard to the question of waging war.

This particular relationship of conscience has a long history. Dr. Jerilynn Prior is one of the people who is in the forefront of the struggle for freedom of conscience. She has appeared before the courts on this issue and has laid before the courts a document entitled Peace Testimony of the Society of Friends, a declaration the harmless and innocent people of God called Quakers presented to Charles II in 1660. This declaration reads:

WE UTTERLY DENY all outward wars and strife, and fightings with outward weapons, for any end, or under any pretence whatever; this is our testimony to the whole world. The Spirit of Christ by which we are guided is not changeable, so as once to command us from a thing as evil, and again to move unto it; and we certainly know, and testify to the world, that the Spirit of Christ, which leads us into all truth, will never move us to fight and war against any man with outward weapons, neither for the kingdom of Christ, nor for the kingdoms of this world.

This declaration made before Charles II was backed up by the lives of the Quakers, the Society of Friends, who refused to go to war. Many of them were willing to go to prison rather than to go to war.

There are other historic peace churches including the Mennonites and the Hutterites who have had a long history of refusing to be involved in militarism. Canada has recognized that right over the years, particularly during the First World War and the Second World War when we recognized the status of conscientious objector. People who, on the basis of conscience, declared that they could not go to war were able to register as conscientious objectors and were put to some other useful work in the world. These people made a great contribution. No one can accuse them of cowardice or of not being good citizens. Rather, they are the very best of citizens because they see that good citizenship entails acting within the dictates of one's own conscience. They refuse to let their conscience be commanded by any state.

We are now dealing with an extension of the principle that people should not be forced to go to war against their conscience. We extend that to the principle that they should not be forced to pay for war or militarism against their conscience. In order to give effect to that, there is an organization called Conscience Canada which, over the last five years, has set up a peace tax trust fund in which people are encouraged to put that portion of their taxes which would normally go for defence purposes. Over the last five years, some 370 people have placed over $109,000 in that trust fund.

Perhaps we could get a better idea of what these people are thinking if I read from letters written by some of them. Mr. Wolfgang Blach of Montreal writes:

> I am doing this because I cannot agree to participate financially in the preparation of war, even indirectly through taxes. I also hope that this will press your government and mine to legislate provisions which would make this procedure official. Until that time I have to base my action on the Charter of Rights' freedom of conscience guarantee.
> Proposals to this effect have already been tabled in the House of Commons. It has not been taken seriously, probably because it came from across the floor. Please do not play war games in the house. If you think the proposal is inadequate, suggest amendments, but I urge you to at least consider such a bill with all the seriousness this non-partisan issue warrants.

Another letter came from D. Craig Summers of Kingston, Ontario, who writes:

> Nuclear weapons scare me. They have made our continued existence on Earth more precarious than when there were none. The present push by our "neighbours" to the south for a Star Wars safety shield also escalates our danger. Furthermore, the testing of US submarines at Nanoose Bay, BC, and the production of Cruise Missile components at Litton Industries in Toronto exemplify Canada's involvement in preparations for mass destruction. This is unacceptable, and the list goes on and on.
> Peace and international security will be found in equally sharing the vast resources of our earth, not through the most powerful nations coercing people into paying for military systems which threaten to destroy all of us, in order to maintain their political advantage and control. By paying taxes to the military, I feel as if I am killing people myself. In good conscience, I cannot allow my taxes to support such madness.

Dr. Jerilynn Prior who, as I mentioned earlier, is involved in a test case before the courts right now, said:

> As a person of conscience who would refuse to fight in a war on moral and religious grounds, I also refuse to pay for war on the same grounds. My constitution allows me freedom of conscience.

• (1410)

As I mentioned earlier, this is an international movement. It involves Canada, the U.S., Australia, Japan, and a number of western European countries. The people involved are not seeking to evade their responsibilities as citizens of nations where the peace tax movement is growing. Rather, they want to meet their obligations as citizens in a way that does not do violence to their conscience.

Second, I want to speak to this motion as an alternative to the growing militarism of our world. There is no reference in the motion to questions of conscience. It is an open-ended motion and if the Government wants to take a very strict approach to this, it could bring in legislation that would make a peace tax credit available only to people of conscience who, on that basis, could not pay taxes that would be used for military purposes. It would be a measure that limited a peace tax credit only to people who objected on the grounds of conscience. That would be a noteworthy first step which I would welcome. Indeed, I would prefer to see a much more open proposal from the Government. There are people like myself who are not opposed on the strict level of conscience to any payment of taxes used for the military. I am not opposed to that personally. However, I am concerned about developing alternatives to the growing militarism that we see in Canada and around the world.

One of the concerns I have about the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement is found in Article 2003 which exempts so-called essential security interests from the provisions of the deal. What that means is that Canadian programs to help the different regions, economic programs for the Maritimes, for example, or the North, can and will be subject to American pressures and could be ruled to be unacceptable subsidies. The American tradition of providing help for the regions through defence procurement contracts will be completely exempt from the provisions of the deal. That means that if Canada wants to offer some kind of help to its regions, it is going to be more and more pushed into taking the same approach and using military procurement contracts and defence industries as the one acceptable way under this trade agreement of getting aid out to the different regions.

This is one more way in which we see the growing militarization of the Canadian economy. We can see the same sort of thing on a global scale. In an address as President of the United States, Dwight D. Eisenhower said:

> Every gun that is made, every warship launched, every rocket fired, signifies, in the final sense, a theft from those who hunger and are not fed, those who are cold and not clothed.

He continued:

> This world in arms is not spending money alone; it is spending the sweat of its labourers, the genius of its scientists, the hopes of its children.

If anyone knew the reality of war it was President Eisenhower. He had been Supreme Commander of the Allied Forces during World War II. He spent his life in the American military. Yet he thought it necessary to warn about the danger of the military industrial complex and point to the danger of growing militarization.

We can look at what that kind of militarization does to the world's economy. The Brundtland report entitled "Our Common Future" has a whole chapter on peace and security. It points out that in 1985 the world spent well over $900 billion for military purposes. Today it would be over $1 trillion, or more than $2.5 billion a day. The report says:

> The real cost is what the same resources might otherwise be used for:
> An Action Plan for Tropical Forests would cost $1.3 billion a year over the course of five years. This annual sum is the equivalent of half a day of military expenditure world wide.
> Implementing the UN Action Plan for Decertification would cost $4.5 billion a year during the last two decades of this century—the equivalent of less than two days of military spending.
> One of the greatest environmental hazards in the Third World is lack of clean water for household use, contributing to 80 per cent of disease. The UN Water and Sanitation Decade, although given only a small fraction of support needed, would have cost $30 billion a year during the 1980s. This is the approximate equivalent of ten days of military spending.
> To supply contraceptive materials to all women already motivated to use family planning would cost an additional $1 billion per year on top of the $2 billion spent today. This additional $1 billion is the equivalent of ten hours of military spending.

That is a distortion of world spending and it does not bring peace or security any closer. Quite the reverse. In the meantime, these other urgent needs are being neglected.

Surely there has to be some way for individual citizens to stand up and say to Governments that this stupidity has to stop. That is what this peace tax is all about. Militarism does not contribute to global security but to global insecurity. The intermediate missile agreement under which the U.S. and Russia agreed to scrap missiles contributed more to the peace of mind of the people of our world than all the billions of dollars spent to create those missiles in the first place. They are destroying something they built in order to guarantee peace in the world, yet the destruction of those missiles is the best move toward peace we have seen in recent years. Surely we should be able to grasp the irony of that situation. Yet we madly continue on this thrust to spend more money on militarization.

Veterans Against Nuclear Arms have emphasized the need for our world to develop an approach to common security. They have pointed to the folly and futility of our Government's policy of purchasing nuclear submarines. This is just not the answer to Canada's security needs. We need alternatives. No Party and no Government has a monopoly on stupidity or folly. Whatever Party is in Government, there has to be some provision so that individuals across Canada can suggest alternatives. That is what this motion does. It gives people a chance to vote with their money for some reasonable, sensible alternatives to growing militarism.

In conclusion, some people have raised the floodgate argument. If we have a peace tax provision, they say, it will open the door to all kinds of other special interest groups who will want an exemption from the tax. I would like to suggest two answers to that. First, we are talking about specific legislation for the peace tax. How many other issues would arise causing this particular kind of crisis of conscience? Perhaps one or two, I do not know. However, let them be debated and treated on their merit. Let us treat this issue on its merit.

Second, what would be so wrong in building flexibility into our tax system? We already do it for businesses. We do it for political Parties which get tax credits. We do it for charities. Why not for issues of conscience? We are talking about a policy of small steps where the people of Canada who believe in this approach would want to take the small step of working with some peace group to develop alternatives to militarism. In place of the present system I urge the Government to recognize the rights and conscience of the Canadian people and to recognize the contribution they could make to Canadian security if this measure was enacted.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to express my views on the motion of the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly), especially after having heard his arguments and comments on the motion. I might start with the suggestion that a 100 per cent tax credit be given to individuals, so that they can contribute part of their tax to peace organizations. Maybe we could start by having a look at the present tax system which allows charitable donations up to a maximum of 20 per cent of taxable income. Starting in 1988 the new system will allow a tax credit of 17 per cent on the first $250 given and 29 per cent on any amount above that.

As you know as well as I do, Mr. Speaker, for Canadian taxpayers a tax credit is preferable to a deduction, I would even dare say "more profitable". We know that charitable organizations will profit from these tax credits the same way they were benefitting from deductions. I would venture saying that peace is an objective, if not the first at least a secondary one, of several charitable organizations.

We also know that, if they so wish, Canadian taxpayers can contribute to the United Nations. There again, such contributions will be treated the way I mentioned. There is no doubt in my mind that the basic principle behind the United Nations, and its main objective, is the promotion of peace. So I think that Canada is very well covered in that respect.

I heard my colleague talk about extending that amount to peace organizations and maybe two or three other about which we do not know yet but they will eventually be identified. At the same time, he asked for more flexibility into the Canadian tax system. Instead of flexibility, Mr. Speaker, I believe that when introducing his tax reform last December, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has brought us more simplicity. If ever this Governement or this Parliament decided to strike a peace tax, plus other taxes concerning the two or three other elements that my colleague talked about, saying he did not know what they were but that, at some point, suggestions would be made to that effect, we would embark in a tax system that instead of being simplified would be once again far more complicated, and that is precisely what we do not want and precisely why we have been presented a corporate and personal tax reform.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the previous Liberal Government used to enjoy bringing into every Budget seven or eight new measures that would further complicate the system, and introducing into the Income Tax Act all kinds of social measures, measures affecting culture, regional development and so on, none of which would properly fit in an income tax legislation.

Mr. Prud'homme: As a future Minister, try to be more generous.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to see that my colleague—and I will not say that he is the only Liberal Member present in this House, but my colleague the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) is listening with interest to what is being said and is eager to take part in the debate. I therefore invite him to join the debate—

Mr. Prud'homme: As a future minister, you might show some degree of elegance!

Mr. Vincent: —I am inviting him, Mr. Speaker, to join the debate immediately after I have completed my comments on the motion by the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly).

Mr. Speaker, as I was mentioning, the Income Tax Act is meant to raise money, however distasteful that may be; I know that it is not something you like, and I do not like it either! However, income must be collected so that it can be redistributed to Canadians.

The Act is not meant however to foster cultural or social development—that is not the purpose of the Income Tax Act. There are departments and ministers of the Crown working just for that purpose, with budgets just for that.

Mr. Speaker, once again, we are opening a door without knowing where it will lead us. Even my colleague mentioned that there might be other sectors, two, three, four or five, and for what purpose? Mr. Speaker, I do not think that this is something we can afford.

And there is the other question which my colleague has not discussed and which I would have liked him to address: How would these organizations which promote peace be defined?

Mr. Speaker, you can readily appreciate that confronted with this kind of question the Canadian Parliament would be hard pressed to define "organization representing or promoting peace".

There are 282 Members in this House, Mr. Speaker, and I am convinced that if they were asked to come up with a definition there would be just as many answers. You can imagine the mess we would be in!

Again, Mr. Speaker, keeping in mind the fact that you may make a tax deductible contribution to United Nations-registered charitable organizations and claim a tax credit beginning in 1988 . . .

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure of meeting with 120-odd students from Trois-Rivières' Kéranna School. These young girls came to Ottawa to see their Member of Parliament, of course, and we exchanged views concerning weapons, Cruise missiles and other issues of great interest to them. I told them that Canada's policy is to promote disarmament. I think that Canada is making a worthy contribution to support disarmament on the international scene, and hopefully time will come when people the world over will be talking about peace.

That is pretty well along the line of the motion introduced by the Hon. Member. We have accomplished a lot of work on the international scene, and we will continue to make progress in that field.

The Hon. Member advocates a special tax or a deduction for peace, it does not matter how he calls it, but the system is already in place. When it comes to disarmament Canada has made a name for itself in international quarters, Mr. Speaker, and I would suggest that we should not make any attempt to change a system which operates quite well and gives good results.

Mr. Speaker, instead of adopting the motion I think it might be a good idea to enquire whether the Hon. Member might have questions or comments concerning the point I have just raised.

[English]

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the proposal put forward today by the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) has an amazing principle involved with it. What he is really saying is that the Government should have the right to set tax rates and to determine how much might be payable by any one taxpayer. It is that taxpayer who is to determine how that money is actually to be spent. The taxpayer will instruct the Government how his or her tax dollars are to be spent according to his or her wishes.

The administrative problems alone, Sir, would be almost insurmountable. This is against the very purpose of the state's existence.

Why we as human beings have arranged our affairs so as to have various countries, varies states and provinces is so that we can undertake collective action on behalf of us all. In the perfect scheme of things, I suppose one would not need the state. The state would wither away, as has been suggested by people at certain times. But the simple fact of the matter is that, particularly for reasons like national defence, we need the institution of the state. I will return to this idea a little later in my dissertation.

If we were to let the Member get away with his suggestion this afternoon, what about the other side of the coin? Can we apply it vice versa? The Government of Canada spends a lot of money in the promotion of peace right now. A lot of our diplomatic efforts are designed for that end. We spend over $1 billion on things like CIDA to try to promote peace and development throughout the world. What if someone objected to that and said they did not want their money spent on diplomatic peace initiatives or on CIDA, but preferred to have their tax money spent on armaments? Would we allow that? It is exactly, precisely the same argument.

In the very unlikely event that the NDP ever forms the Government of Canada, which I do not think will happen, what would happen? As I understand it, one of the first things that the NDP would do is institute a system of abortion clinics throughout Canada, paid for by the state. This is the goal that the Hon. Member supports. I do not know how he squares that with his conscience, but it is something that I could not support, in my conscience.

He spoke at length about freedom of conscience when he proposed his motion. If, God forbid, the NDP did come into power and did institute that, would it be possible for people to refuse that their taxes be used for that purpose and to declare that they want their taxes used for research on better methods of birth control? Is that what the Hon. Member or the New Democratic Party wants?

I understand as well that if the New Democratic Party ever got into office they would like to implement nationalization programs. I understand they would like to nationalize banks and oil companies. That is completely contrary to the way I think, but should I, as an individual whose view at that time would not represent the majority, be able to say that I do not want my tax dollars used for that purpose? I do not think the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands would agree with that.

Let us consider the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for a moment. I understand it uses about $800 million a year of taxpayers' money. Not all of us like all the programs that are put on CBC.

Mr. Prud'homme: Talk about the motion.

Mr. Nickerson: I am talking about the motion, precisely those principles that are contained in the motion. If the Hon. Member would care to listen more attentively he would find that out.

Should it be possible for someone to say: "I don't want certain of my tax dollars to be used by CBC to put Archie Bunker on TV because I would rather look at something else". Is that what the Hon. Member is suggesting? I am sure that he would say no. In a way, perhaps the answer to a question like that should be yes. I think there is a way that can be accomplished.

This leads me to the second point of my argument. I said before that the Government and the state is, of necessity, an instrument of coercion. It has to be in order to perform its function. It is important in areas such as national defence that all should bear a fair share of those necessary expenses.

However, when it comes to things like broadcasting, it seems to me that in those areas this is not necessary. If we have a free market in the maximum of areas, that is where we can have our individual choice. In my opinion, the state is involved in far too many things. The state should remove itself from many areas of human endeavour where it intervenes at present. That is how we can get an individual choice and have the concept of one dollar, one vote.

If the state was not involved in broadcasting a person could use his or her tax dollars that presently go toward the CBC to subscribe to the pay TV channel of his or her choice. In my opinion, that would be a good idea rather than letting the CBC and the state decide what is good for us to watch. People, themselves, can then choose. If people had the real choice, I wonder how many would prefer that their donation go to REAL Women, for example, rather than the National Action Committee where many tax dollars are spent at the present time.

How do we maximize individual freedom of choice, individual freedom of conscience as the Hon. Member supposedly would want to do? In my opinion, it is by minimizing the presence of government. That is the difference between the Conservative philosophy and the socialist philosophy. If the Hon. Member was really true to what he is saying, he would be running over to join us on this side of the House rather than sitting there with his socialist friends.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I must say that the considerations on this important subject have also given us a general overview of all other issues that attract the concern of Canadians.

I would like personally to congratulate the Hon. Member who presented this motion. The Hon. Member is a practical man, and he realizes his motion will probably never be implemented.

However, my reason for commending his proposal is that the Hon. Member gives us an opportunity to air our thoughts and consider some very important current issues. I agree there is a vast difference between his views and the views of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) who spoke earlier.

[English]

He said that is the difference between Conservatives and socialists. You may say that there is a difference between a progressive and a conservative. I do not understand why we should put abortion in this debate because to go through an abortion is such a painful and agonizing decision for a woman. I do not see why we should put that into a debate of the kind we have this afternoon, even though I totally disagree with the people who, after the Supreme Court judgment, celebrated with champagne because they won. I do not know what they won. I think this question is too painful to celebrate the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada.

• (1440)

On the subject matter raised by the Hon. Member, I want to say that I am extremely interested. That is why I stayed this afternoon.

—because the Hon. Member has once again given us an opportunity to reflect—as I am very fond of doing myself—on issues that should be very important to us, and I am referring to peace and security.

The Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent) said that Canada made its mark thanks to similar initiatives. I knew Mr. Pearson. I was elected under Mr. Pearson. I was elected under Mr. Trudeau. I am not a disciple of either man, even if I was a Member of Mr. Pearson's Government, but I have great respect for these two great Prime Ministers who have left their mark on the people and the youth of my generation by stressing the importance of these concerns.

In fact, I was Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and National Defence which had the privilege of reporting to the House on the last day the previous Liberal Government was in power. On Mr. Trudeau's last day as Prime Minister, I had the honour of reporting back to the House—in time, I may add—on a Bill he was very anxious to see adopted, and I am referring to the Bill to establish the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security. I would urge Hon. Members to read Hansard, both for the remarks made by the Hon. Member—I will call her Ms. Jewett, because you know I don't like calling people by their riding, although I realize it is against the Standing Orders—and for what Mr. Trudeau had to say that day.

So if young Canadians would like to read an interesting debate, they should look at what was said on June 27, 28 and 29, 1984. These are approximate dates, Mr. Speaker. These debates led to the establishment of the Institute for Peace and Security. For the benefit of the Hon. Member who spoke before me, I would say this proves that the previous Government was concerned about both security and peace problems in the world.

I do not see why the Hon. Member should be blamed for forcing us, on a Friday afternoon when most Members have already made a hasty return trip to their ridings, I hope, not on holidays . . . I for one will be in my riding all week . . . but to meet with our constituents during the mid-winter break. Like you, Mr. Speaker, I will go to my riding, but I know one thing, namely that the issue is important enough to justify my staying here late into the afternoon, to force us together openly in front of Quebecers who are listening to me——in front of Canadians who should be interested in this question of peace and security and how to achieve it. So I am certainly not going to blame the Hon. Member for obliging some of us to reflect on how we could help to find a solution to the problems of tomorrow.

We live in a world of pure madness where more and more and more we believe we can create jobs by spending billions of dollars on ammunition. When we talk about a few million dollars, a few hundred thousand dollars, we should reflect on how to use the money to find solutions so that people in the world can live with each other. We must find solutions in the Middle East so that the Palestinians can also be recognized as men and women with a passport, so that Iran and Iraq can stop this unbelievably stupid war provided so gently by the billions of dollars of armaments they buy in the west.

Therefore, I will not blame the Hon. Member for obliging me to reflect on how we can find a solution. He is putting forward a very good resolution. He knows it will not take place, I regret to say, but at least he is putting something forward. He is obliging us to reflect and admit that the world is going crazy. Money, money, money. Nuclear submarines. Everyone says they want them built, but one person will say to build them in Quebec and another will say to build them in the Atlantic provinces.

As I look at my hon. friend from western Canada, the Hon. Member for Capliano (Mrs. Collins), who I know would like to participate in the debate, I think she would say: "No, no, they should be built in my part of the country". But there should be some young people who say: "You politicians, instead of asking where will they be built, is there not one of you who will say, should they be built?"

[Translation]

That is important to me, Mr. Speaker. You see, they argue to find out who will build more and more, always more and enough to kill one another 1,000 times over. Well, I like people who say: Is there no alternative, could we not get together and try to find fresh approaches just so people will get better acquainted? I am one of those who passionately believe in what Mr. Gorbatchev is trying to do—and many of my colleagues will probably be shocked. Mr. Gorbatchev is advocating a major policy of glasnot, a policy of openness. I have very cynical colleagues in all political parties who tell me:

[English]

All this is bluff. I said last night to someone from the Soviet Embassy that if it is bluff, I call his bluff and we will see. If it is bluff, if it is not genuine, there will be politicians who will revert to the good old days of the cold war. But a Member of Parliament on a Friday afternoon before adjournment asks us to reflect on a proposal that is quite complicated—he must admit that himself. In order to force us to reflect, he has to propose something. This is what the Hon. Member has done. We could attack each other and be partisan about it. I did not want to answer Hon. Members who spoke point by point because, after all, we live in the British parliamentary system where people can and should have strong views on many issues. I, for one, instead of being partisan, want to thank the Hon. Member who made me stay here on a Friday afternoon, although in good company. Your company, Mr. Speaker, is always delightful, and I include the staff, the young pages and all my colleagues. I will reflect with the Hon. Member. We will pursue our journey toward a better understanding of the world in order to achieve a better world. That kind of proposal is the kind of proposal that deserves at least to be studied, and I thank the Hon. Member.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have a chance to speak in support of this motion. I recognize that the time is running short, and I will do my best to leave a share of the time for the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) who, I understand, also wishes to speak.

The first point I wish to make is simply to reiterate the focus of this motion, which is 100 per cent tax credit to be transferred to a recognized international agency for peace. If it were enacted, this would be a democratic decision supported by a majority of Parliament, if it so decided, presumably with the backing of a majority of people in this country, and channeled into things that were recognized as peace activities. It would not be the whim of a private individual. However, what this proposal does is to raise a principle of the individual conscience, and of the right of the individual, which has a long history in western culture and in what we call our democratic tradition

In 1709, for example, the Quaker colony of Pennsylvania was ordered by the British Crown to provide funds toward the cost of an invasion of what we might have called French Canada. The Quaker colony of Pennsylvania refused to provide the money. I do not know the details, but I would imagine that in 1709 some Canadian lives were not lost because the Quaker colony of Pennsylvania refused what was then a lawful order of the monarch of Britain. What happened to the Quakers when they did that, I do not know. A couple of generations later there was a revolution in the Thirteen Colonies. I believe that Canada benefited because those Quakers disobeyed the British monarch.

Earlier there is the tradition that St. Hugh of Lincoln disobeyed one of the most famous British kings, Richard the Lion-Hearted, because Richard wanted money to go and make war against France. Whatever money St. Hugh of Lincoln did not give to Richard the Lion-Hearted, although he was disobeying the law and the king, probably saved some lives. We do not know whose ancestors those were, but I am glad that he did it. I am glad that there are those examples, and there are many others in history.

They have continued to the point where Archbishop Hantausen of Seattle in the United States has been charged with refusing to pay his taxes. He looks out of the window of his archiepiscopal office at the Trident submarine in the bay in front of him and he states, "That is offensive to human beings and to God. I will not give my share of my money to finance such an offence". He is breaking the law, but he is prepared to suffer for it. I thank God that there are people like that. Some people are in a position to do that directly. Many of us with tax deductions do not know how we could do it if we so decided, but at least this suggests the beginning of a development of that principle.

I want to move on to point out why people in a modern society may feel that the only equivalent they have to refusal to bear arms—which is a tradition that we do honour. We do exempt people who conscientiously refuse to bear arms—and why others say that their way of being forced to share in the killing is through their taxes.

This week many of us had the benefit and the pleasure of meeting with Veterans Against Nuclear Arms. This is an organization of Canadian veterans, many of whom served with distinction as officers, some of whom were decorated in World War II and in other wars.

They have asked us to consider the principle that the defence paper of the Hon. Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) leads us into serious errors, for example, when it talks about having stable mutual deterrence through nuclear weapons. They point out that, with the airborne sea-launched and ground-launched long range cruise missiles, the Trident II and Typhoon submarines, the MX missile, and the planned Midget Man missile, the BI bomber, and so on, we do not have stable deterrence. We have more and more unstable deterrence. The refusal to help in building those is an act in defence not only of the safety of some foreigners, it is an act in the defence of the safety of Canadians. We would be the meat in the sandwich if there was a nuclear war.

The Veterans Against Nuclear Arms have also pointed out that the defence policy proposed completely ignores the United Nations. It abrogates blind support of NATO, ignoring the fact that NATO in its foundation undertook to be subordinate to the United Nations. One of the principles in its charter is that differences shall be negotiated rather than settled by force. That peaceful principle of negotiation has been ignored by NATO, and the United Nations is ignored by Canada's defence policy.

This week those veterans spent their time coming to Ottawa to remind us of some of our basic peace traditions. I believe that, whether they agree or not with this peace tax proposal, they are recalling us in the same way as did the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly), and the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). On one point, I would even agree with the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). If somebody stated that they did not want their money to go to an abortion clinic, but that they wanted it to be spent on family planning education or family planning facilitation, I could accept that. I think that that would be a sound way of allowing serious differences of conscience on important matters.

I hope that this peace tax proposal will be given serious thought by Members of Parliament on all sides.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): In the few minutes left this afternoon to speak on this Private Member's Motion, I would like to make a few comments. In putting forward the motion, the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) deals with two different issues. The first would allow for individual taxpayers to reallocate some portion of their income tax which would ordinarily go for defence purposes, and instead give it to peace organizations or those involved in overseas development.

In that respect, I cannot agree with the motion. We are all in agreement with finding ways to promote peace around the world. For many of us, that was one of the underlying reasons that we wanted to serve the Canadian public and be part of the parliamentary process. To provide a system such as the peace tax, as the Hon. Member proposes, would, in my mind, lead to financial chaos.

In our parliamentary system, usually once every four years, Parties put forward their programs, and suggest what their priorities will be and how they plan to allocate funds during the time that they are in office. The public is then aware and participates in a whole variety of ways in the development of legislative processes, as we had with the Budget yesterday, and that is the way that we decide on these types of issues and on the appropriate priorities.

I know that my hon. colleagues from another Party will have different ideas about how we should allocate tax money and have different priorities, as perhaps would Members on this side of the House. But to allow individual taxpayers to make their own decision, to have a shopping list on the income tax form where they check off if they believe in agricultural payments, or that they do not like this item, would not be a workable solution.

The recent court decision mentioned by my colleague upholds that point of view. In that decision, Federal Court Justice George Addy stated that this type of approach would lead to chaos. He told Dr. Jerilynn Prior:

> There are practical obstacles to allowing Prior to withhold payment of taxes for defence purposes.
> One can easily envisage government actions and policies—to which certain taxpayers and possibly a great number of taxpayers might conscientiously and out of deep and sincere moral and religious convictions, consider to be totally wrong, reprehensible, unjustified and even evil—

Justice Addy further stated:

> One such issue on which public attention is being focused today is the extremely divisive question of whether public money should be expended for abortions.
> If each taxpayer who might be conscientiously objecting to this policy was entitled by law to withhold a percentage of income tax, complete chaos would result and orderly government would break down.

Justice Addy went on to say:

> —even if someone found that Prior's freedom of conscience was infringed by paying taxes for military purposes, the infringement would probably be justified as reasonable under Section 1 of the Charter, which guarantees the rights set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

Certainly, in my mind, this is an instance where that provision would come into play.

I had hoped to have a chance to talk about my own view of peace-making, but perhaps there will be a further opportunity to debate that issue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

WAR CRIMINALS

TABLING OF TEXT OF DIPLOMATIC NOTES AND MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table, in both official languages, copies of the text of diplomatic notes exchanged between Canada and the Netherlands. I am also pleased to table copies of a Memorandum of Understanding between Canada and Israel, in both official languages, as well as in Hebrew.

These agreements will enable Canadian officials to gather evidence in the Netherlands and Israel, and both include the conditions recommended by Mr. Justice Deschênes to ensure the obtaining of such evidence in accordance with Canadian procedures and safeguards.

XV OLYMPIC WINTER GAMES

REPORT BY MINISTER ON PREPARATIONS AND PROGRESS

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I rise today with pride to report to the House of Commons the progress of the XV Olympic Winter Games in Calgary as well as a review of the preparations which led to making these games the most successful winter games in the history of the Olympic movement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: To begin with, the success rests with the fact that from the very beginning there was a partnership formed, a partnership between the federal Government, the provincial Government of Alberta and the City of Calgary, very much along with the private and corporate sector from coast to coast, all under the terrific direction of the organizing committee known as OCO '88. This partnership led toward preparing and developing the best facilities, the best organizations and the best infrastructure that any games have ever seen.

The commitment on the part of the Government of Canada was $200 million in non-tax revenue dollars, and I want to make that very clear. We have been able to raise those non-tax dollars from such events as the sale of commemorative Olympic coins world wide, an agreement with provincial lottery organizations, the obtaining of the seignorage from the circulating dollar coin and so on.

The biggest aspect of raising these funds is the sale of the Olympic commemorative coins. As a result of the tremendous respect of the Royal Canadian Mint, we are selling those coins in Japan, in the United States, in western Europe and all over the world. We are bringing those currencies into Canada to build facilities in Calgary, not only for these games but for the use by Canadians for generations to come. We are proud that we have been able to contribute as a federal Government toward the success of these games without costing the taxpayer one red cent. We have contributed toward the success of the games, but beyond that, as well we have contributed toward making a legacy which will go on for generations, leaving an economic benefit which began even before the games began.

Very briefly, before the opening ceremonies took place on February 13, the economic benefits of the preparation of the Calgary Olympics was an influx of new dollars, $1.3 billion, into the Gross Domestic Product of Canada. This not only affects Calgary and Alberta but the whole country, because obviously when preparing for the games one must provide services and products from coast to coast. Even before the games began, there was a benefit of $1.3 billion and the creation of some 27,000 person-years of employment. These facilities, which were constructed on time and under budget, are the best state-of-the-art technology facilities ever to be constructed anywhere in the world. They will be used after the games, not only by high performance athletes from Canada and around the world, but by the public at large because this is a people-oriented Olympics.

In fact, I believe that the success of the federal Government's involvement in the preparation of these Olympics was best summed up by the Auditor General, who very seldom has praise for anything, who in his most recent report concluded that the federal Government's financial management of its involvement in the Olympic Games was, in an unprecedented manner, well managed. In fact, he suggested that it was done in a brilliant fashion and that all Canadians can be proud of the accomplishment of the Government and the people of Canada in preparing the facilities for the games.

In addition to the federal Government's contribution of $125 million to the facilities it contributed another $45 million toward the organization of the games, also non-tax revenues, and most important, and for the first time, we have established from non-tax revenue sources a $30 million endowment fund. The proceeds of the endowment fund will be used to operate these facilities in the future so that there will be no burden on the taxpayer to operate those facilities after the games.

In a nutshell, Mr. Speaker, that describes the preparation of the facilities and the games themselves. I have had the opportunity as a Canadian to participate in the Olympics, both as an athlete and as a television commentator for many years. One of the things which I felt was wrong in previous Olympics in other countries was that the spirit of the games was restricted to the host city. I felt it was very important to try to spread the Olympic spirit to every community across Canada.

When I presented that proposal to Cabinet it was unanimously supported and we came up with the Celebration '88 program in which Members from all sides of the House have participated with much enthusiasm. Celebration '88 leading up to the games gave every Canadian the opportunity to participate in some way, shape, or form in the Olympic spirit within their own communities. We developed an educational package for our youth which all the provinces distributed to the elementary schools. We developed with the communities at the community level special Olympic community events.

Most important of all, I suppose, are the ceremonies to recognize those people in every community who contributed in their way, be it as a coach, a sponsor, an athlete, a volunteer, or an official. This has given all of us in the House of Commons an opportunity to recognize individuals within our own communities for the contributions they have made to sport and to the community based on the Olympic program.

The heart and soul of this program, of course, was the torch relay. I need not remind Members of the tremendous emotion which came from the hearts as Canadians came out on the streets to watch the torch go through their communities. I do not believe that in my lifetime I have seen such emotion pour out of Canadians from every walk of life as it did during the torch relay. That emotion, of course, has been carried into Calgary for the games. There is no doubt in my mind that the Celebration '88 program with the torch relay produced perhaps the most unifying effect that this country has seen in decades, if ever.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: So the torch moved to Calgary on February 13 for the beginning of 16 days of celebrations that will live on in this country forever. It is not only 16 days of celebration of sport, Mr. Speaker, it is 16 days of celebration of culture, a celebration of the arts, a celebration of youth coming together from all parts of the world in harmony and in peace, all in the spirit of the Olympic movement. That is what the games are all about.

I can say, as a former athlete and, more important, as a Canadian, that when the Canadian team walked into McMahon Stadium on February 13 my chest swelled out and my heart pumped a little faster. The pride and emotion of the 60,000 people in that stadium and the 1.5 billion people watching Canada through the eyes of television put Canada right on top of the heap worldwide and brought something into Canadian hearts and minds which was long in coming.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: When young Robyn Perry, the 11-year old Calgarian figure skater, ran up the steps to light the cauldron it was beyond words. That young Canadian was the symbol of the youth of the world, symbolizing what the Olympic spirit means, not only to sport and not only to Canadians but to the youth of the world.

The games began with a people-oriented event and as we approach the last few days of the Olympics we see that it is indeed a people-oriented Olympics. More tickets have been sold and more people have participated than in any previous Olympics. In fact, ticket sales have zoomed to well over 1.5 million. The highest level of sales prior to these Olympics was in Sarajevo, Yugoslavia, four years ago when 435,000 tickets were sold. In Calgary over 1.5 million tickets have been sold and the events are jam-packed. The medal ceremonies every night in the downtown plaza attract an average of 50,000 people. The 70-metre ski jump was watched by over 70,000 people. The enthusiasm has spread to every corner of Calgary and is spreading to every corner of Canada and the world as well.

I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate, on behalf of the Government of Canada and on behalf of Parliament, not only the organizers of the games but the thousands and thousands of volunteers who made this people-Olympics a reality. The volunteers come from every walk of life. The other day I was driven in a car by a volunteer who is a company executive whose salary is probably $250,000 a year. Yet, for the duration of a month, he volunteered his time and services to make the Olympics a success. Calgarians and Canadians have opened up their homes and their hearts to the world. We have shown the world that we can compete. We have shown the world the warmth, hospitality, enthusiasm, friendship, and generosity that Canadians are all about. Right now the world is envious of this tremendous success.

Finally, none of this could happen without the athletes. Our athletes have contributed so much of themselves in their young lifetimes. I speak as a former Olympian and I know that you give up all of your normal life as you prepare to represent, not only yourself—that is secondary—but your family, your community and, most of all, your country. The greatest Olympian Canada has ever had is Gaetan Boucher with his tremendous courage. We are so proud of him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: The spirit of Brian Orser and the determination of Karen Percy symbolize the Canadian athletes' commitment and spirit to compete on behalf of themselves and Canada. We are all very proud of their achievement and efforts.

Perhaps this is a little bit out of line with what we should or should not do in this place, but if I may through you, Mr. Speaker, I would like to convey also our thanks and congratulations to the parents of these athletes. They have made it possible for them to give of their lives to the sport, to Canada, and to the Olympic movement. You happen to be one of those parents, Mr. Speaker, and we were very proud yesterday when your daughter, Anna Fraser, represented Canada so dramatically in the aerials in free style skiing.

Mr. Jelinek: We thank you for your efforts and I hope, sir, that through you we are able to pass our thanks and congratulations to all the parents of our Canadian athletes who are making us so proud.

I wish it had been my idea to come forward with the parents program that Labatt's, one of the official sponsors of the Olympic Games, initiated in order to bring the families and the parents of our Olympic athletes to Calgary. Labatt's, as well as all the sponsors associated with the Olympic games in Calgary should be congratulated.

If I sound a little emotional and a little over enthusiastic, it is because I am. I come from a country where many of our freedoms were taken away. My parents had the wisdom to choose this country which gives Canadians hopes and aspirations, opportunities and freedoms that no other country can match. It is because of these opportunities, because of these freedoms, because of these hopes and aspirations that we can share with the rest of the world the tremendous accomplishments that Canadians have brought to themselves, to Canada and the Olympic movement.

The spirit of the Olympics is the desire of mankind to come together in friendship and harmony in order to bring peace and a better understanding to all parts of the world. The Olympics is far more than just a bunch of skiers going down a ski slope, or a bunch of skaters skating in circles. It is through this Olympic spirit that we can make the world a better place, not just for ourselves but for our children and grandchildren.

The Calgary Olympics have contributed toward that goal. We as Canadians can be very proud of this tremendous accomplishment on behalf of peace and freedom everywhere around the world through the eyes of the Olympic Games.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I voice on behalf of the Official Opposition our congratulations and continued support to Canada's athletes participating in the XV Winter Olympics now being held in Calgary.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it was Baron Pierre de Coubertin who in 1896 brought the world a proposal for restoring the Olympiads of Ancient Greece. As we all know, the first Winter Olympics were held in Chamonix, France, in 1924. At the time, the Winter Games were only a kind of mini-Olympics, but today, the Winter Games have achieved the same status as the Summer Olympics.

[English]

Mr. Gordon Douglas, a legislative assistant to one of my colleagues, was in France last week. He told me that he had the opportunity to see the Calgary Olympics through the eyes of the world and that the coverage and prestige of the Olympics was extensive and a compliment to us as a nation.

Half-way through the international games, all Canadians can be proud of the dedication, determination and sportsmanship exhibited by our athletes in competing against the world's best. The outstanding Silver Medal figure skating performance of Brian Orser of Penatanguishene, Ontario, was breathtaking to watch. The Bronze Medal downhill run of Banff's Karen Percy was equally breathtaking and the tens of thousands who turned out for the awards ceremony last Friday is a reflection of Canada's pride in her performance.

Mr. Speaker, occasionally I try to ski and, while I enjoy it, I do not do a very good job. I had very special admiration while watching a famous skier you know very well, your daughter Anna Fraser, who came in fourth in free style aerial skiing. As far as I am concerned, of course, she was No. 1.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: I must say that as one who tries to ski I was somewhat green with envy in the hope that someday I could be able to ski one-tenth as well.

Canada's men and women curling teams won medals in their demonstration sport. The Gold Medal to the women's team and the Bronze Medal won by the men's team reflect Canada's continuing international domination of this very popular sport.

I want to speak briefly about the Best Ever fund, some $25 million that was injected toward assisting our athletes. Today I read a newspaper article which indicated that the funding had not been a success because, in the opinion of the writer, the results were not as they should have been. I want to respectfully disagree with that. I suggest that just keeping up with the other countries that are ever improving their own athletes—we have certainly kept up so far, with the best days yet to come—is a tangible measure that the Best Ever fund had and hopefully will continue to have in the future.

One should also outline the exceptional performance of our disabled athletes in the women's and men's giant slalom. They are indeed reasons for excitement and admiration by all of us.

Mr. Speaker, in 1976 I had the privilege of being one of the bearers of the Olympic Flame. I carried the torch between Ontario and Quebec, at Cumberland, Ontario, when the Torch crossed the river into our neighbouring province. For me it was a very special privilege, as a Quebecer by birth and a Franco-Ontarian by adoption, to provide the link between the two provinces by carrying the Olympic Torch.

This year, like everybody else I put my name in for the draw for bearers of the Olumpic Torch, but I was not as lucky as in 1976. I can't say I lacked political pull, but I didn't have the luck of the draw, Mr. Speaker.

I was lucky just the same, because the Olympic Torch stopped in my riding in Casselman, Ontario, and I want to thank the officials and directors of Petro-Canada for making it possible for my riding to take part in the Olympic Torch relay.

I would like to say a few words about Celebration '88. The Minister said earlier that many Members took advantage of this event to involve their communities in the program. I am one of those Members. In my case, Mr. Speaker, fifteen municipalities in my riding participated. I personally met with municipal authorities, and during the holidays, my senior assistant, André Tessier, met with all municipalities to encourage as many as possible to participate. In fact, especially thanks to the excellent work done by my assistant, a lot of these municipalities did in fact participate.

Saturday evening I was visiting the municipality of Plantagenet South, a very small one in my riding, where I had the privilege, on behalf of the Government and on behalf of our country, of giving six Celebration '88 medals to local volunteers.

Mr. Speaker, volunteers have worked in our communities for decades. Today, thanks to Celebration '88, we have a way of expressing our recognition for the major contribution they have made. I therefore would like to congratulate the people who initiated the Celebration '88 Program, and if the Minister himself is responsible, I want him to accept my congratulations. If it was one of his officials, I hope he will transmit my congratulations to the person concerned, because Celebration '88 is an excellent program and one that was long overdue.

In addition to medals, Celebration '88 also gives Members a chance to hand out merit certificates. These are signed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Member concerned. I have handed out about nearly 300 certificates in my own riding, Mr. Speaker, the names of the recipients being provided by the various municipalities. I must say it does not happen very often that my name and the Prime Minister's appear on the same document. When we realize 300 of these certificates have been handed out in my riding, it becomes an exceptional performance indeed. I want to congratulate the Minister on this initiative as well, because there are certainly more than six individuals per municipality who deserve recognition. So for the others, we have the certificates, which probably did not cost that much to make, but which are nevertheless a token of appreciation, by the various governments, of the work done by all these volunteers and all those who have been working for years to help their communities.

The Calgary Winter Olympic Games would not be the international success that they are without the hard work of the thousands of volunteers who have assisted. The Minister enumerated cases of individuals who have given up so much of their time. He has referred to company executives, for example, who took their time to participate as volunteers in the Olympics. Many individuals who participated as volunteers probably had to make tremendous sacrifices to do so. Some of them used hard-earned dollars that they could have used for themselves, but instead they chose to spend their own money in order to assist others and to participate in the Olympic movement. Those people deserve our congratulations indeed.

These men and women also deserve our congratulations for ensuring that the Calgary Winter Olympic Games are a meeting place of nations in friendly competition. They are indeed, as the Minister has said, the best Olympic games yet.

Mr. Speaker, I was Opposition critic at the time Parliament passed the Bill authorizing the Royal Canadian Mint to manufacture the Olympic Coin. I am proud that our Party supported this initiative, and I am delighted to see how successful this program has been.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to extend my congratulations, also on behalf of my colleagues, to the athletes, the volunteers, the organizing committees and the City of Calgary.

[English]

The only thing we can wish for and perhaps even pray for today and tomorrow is a bit of a cold snap and some snow.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Olympics is a dream, a dream come true for the young athletes who are participating in the games. It is a dream come true for the world in that we are able to carry out an international activity in a co-operative spirit, and a dream come true for Canadians. We are hosts to the world and to the best in the world.

[Translation]

Today, we are proud to be Canadians.

[English]

We are proud to be Canadians.

I want to mention three things about the Olympics. I want to talk a bit about the athletes and about the politics of the Olympics and I want to say a few words about Olympic journalism.

To one who has only recently adopted the practice of exercise, in fact in the last few weeks, the Olympics is an Everest that requires super human dedication, commitment and capacity to mount. I am inspired by the young people who are participating in the Olympics and by the young Canadians who are at the Olympic games. To be at the Olympics, simply to be there and to be a part of the games, is an attainment, the fulfilment of a dream. It is the culmination of a long process of dedication and of sacrifice by athletes and by their families. To be at the Olympics, whether one wins a medal, places high or low—simply to be there—is a world class attainment.

We have much to learn from these young people about setting goals of excellence and about attainment. Yet we also have winners. There are those who find themselves in the winner's circle. Karen Percy was our first medal winner. She broke through to make Canada a winner. Brian Orser performed at the absolute epitome of athletic excellence. Many others including Linda Moore, Penny Ryan, Debbie Jones, Lindsay Sparkes, Ed Lukowich, John Ferguson, Neil Houston and Brent Syme are participating. Canada and its athletes are in the winner's circle.

I want to say a bit about the politics of the Olympics. I heard the Minister say that the Olympics would not cost the taxpayers one red cent. Of course, as a taxpayer I am glad that no additional burden will be put on my shoulders, but I do hope that this does not mean that the Government is blind to a few other lessons that are to be learned from this.

In this Olympics there has been an appeal for private dollars. I must say that that is a good policy, but experience has shown that this works with popular sports like skiing. However, what about the less well known sports, the sports which are yet to gain a popular following? Is there not here a role for public dollars? What about the long-term development that is needed in order to lay the base for Olympic performance? Who will pay for the facilities and the coaching when the camera lights are no longer shining upon the arena? I hope the Government is not blind to the fact that there is a role for public dollars and that there is a long-term developmental process that must be supported. I hope the Government will see this rather than simply be restricted by some sort of ideological blinders.

Another aspect of the politics of the Olympics has to do with the Lubicon Indians. I hope that when the television cameras have left Calgary the Lubicon will be remembered. As native people, we have a dream too. We have a dream of justice. We have a dream of being treated fairly. When the cameras are gone from Calgary the Lubicon must be remembered, and the federal Government and the provincial Government must act to resolve that injustice. The federal Government and the provincial Governments must act to resolve that injustice.

I have another perspective on the Olympics which I want to share with Hon. Members. It is with respect to Olympic journalism. I have been surprised, shocked and hurt by some of the reporting I have seen concerning the Olympics. I have seen what I would call political reporting being transferred to the covering of the games. It is fair ball to savage the Government and to ask loaded questions before TV cameras of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). It is all right to perform a hatchet job on Ed Broadbent, Brian Mulroney, John Crosbie or John Turner. I want to say that when it comes to our young athletes, they should be left alone.

I find it incredible when I see in the paper a picture of Karen Percy, who broke through at the Olympics to make Canada a winner, with a reporter saying, "She didn't win a second medal". What kind of reporting is that? Brian Orser performed at world peak, yet a reporter came up to him with the cameras on and said, "We have good news and bad news for you. The good news is that you won a medal. The bad news is that you came in second. What do you have to say?" That may be all right for the battleground of politics, but it is one shabby way to treat our Olympic athletes.

Gaetan Boucher is world reknowned for his achievements. What did the media do to him? They put his picture on the front pages and wrote, "How come he only came in ninth?" The man had enormous courage to compete, in light of the record that he has behind him. He had the courage to put his world record at risk. I say to members of the media, clean up your journalism. If you want to be rough and tough and ask loaded questions, stay in the political arena but leave the athletes alone. This is a celebration of excellence. It is a celebration of participation. Let's have a little civility in the treatment of our athletes."

The Olympics is a dream. It is a fulfilment of a dream for Canada. It is the fulfilment for the athletes who are participating. They are there because they have dedicated their lives to achieving a goal, that is, to get to the Olympics and then to perform there.

There is a lesson to be learned about winning and losing. Even if one does not achieve the gold, one has won because one has done the best that one could do. One has pushed oneself to the limit and grown and developed. That in itself is an achievement. That in itself makes one a winner.

Today, all Canadians celebrate the dream of the Olympics. Today we are proud to be Canadians.

PETITIONS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by a number of Canadians who indicate that the Conservative Government has no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States.

They point out that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised. They point out that the trade agreement negotiated by the Mulroney Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interest of Canadians, and to equalize opportunities between regions.

They state that the trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States. The proposed trade agreement not only denies Canadians secure access to the U.S. market, which was the key objective in these negotiations, but threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs.

Therefore the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed Mulroney trade agreement during a national general election.

REQUEST FOR UPGRADING WOOD MOUNTAIN BRANCH LINE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition from a number of residents of southern Saskatchewan along the Wood Mountain railway branch line. They are residents of the Wood Mountain district, McCord, Ferland and Mankota, Saskatchewan.

Whereas money had been allocated for the upgrading of branch line to hopper car standards, and whereas the Minister appears to be considering redirecting funds toward compensation for removal of these lines, and whereas the Wood Mountain line has been in the permanent network and was on schedule for upgrading in 1988, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to take the necessary steps to ensure that the moneys so allocated are used for upgrading the branch line and that the schedule for upgrading be carried on as planned for the 1988 season.

This petition is signed by over 1,000 residents of southern Saskatchewan.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 222, 233, 240 and 251.

[Text]

CSC—ESCORTED TEMPORARY ABSENCE

Question No. 222—Mr. Nunziata:

1. How many inmates in the federal correctional system have applied for an escorted temporary absence to (a) visit a dying member of their immediate family (b) attend the funeral of an immediate family member?

2. In each case where the application was rejected, was this for (a) security reasons (b) cost reasons (c) other reasons and, if so, what reasons?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): 1(a) and 2(a) (b) and (c). The correctional service of Canada (CSC) does not keep information on escorted temporary absences that have been denied. Therefore, it is not possible to provide accurate data on applications. However, the following number of escorted temporary absences were granted:

| Fiscal Year | Illness in the Family | Death in the Family |
|---|---|---|
| 1987 to Dec. 4 | 85 | 117 |

In assessing a request for an escorted temporary absence, the CSC must consider the security of the public, the distance to be travelled, as well as staff availability. The Correctional Service is sensitive to such requests and makes every effort to grant escorted temporary absences. Inmates are informed in writing or the ressons for the denial of requests and they may appeal the Warden's decision.

SAFE CONTAINER FOR TRANSPORT OF PLUTONIUM

Question No. 233—Mr. Caccia:

1. Has the government, or an agency thereof, developed standards or criteria for a safe container in which to transport plutonium in an airplane and, if so, what are they?

2. If such standards do not exist, are they being developed and, if so, (i) by whom (ii) when will they be ready?

3. Will standards or criteria be adopted from other jurisdictions and if so, from which jurisdiction(s)?

4. What are the specifics of the standards or criteria under consideration for adoption?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows:

1. and 2. Yes, there are standards and criteria for the safe containment, during transportation, of radioactive materials including plutonium. These are minimum regulatory safety standards for all radioactive materials and can be augmented by other limitations, terms and conditions, depending upon the specifics of a proposed shipment.

Under the Atomic Energy Control Act, the AECB is empowered to regulate the transportation of "prescribed substances", which include radioactive materials like plutonium.

The Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act also applies to all handling, offering for transport and transporting of "dangerous goods", by any means of transport. The AECB and Transport Canada jointly administer the regulation of the shipment of dangerous goods, like plutonium, through an Inter-Departmental Memorandum of Agreement on the Transport of Radioactive Materials.

The AECB administers the Transport Packaging of Radioactive Materials Regulations. These regulations establish the standards and criteria for the certification of packaging designed to contain plutonium for transport by any means of transport, including air. In any examination of the ability of a proposed container to meet the packaging performance standards of the regulations, the AECB is also empowered to consider any health, safety or security concern and to impose other limitations, terms and conditions on the use or the transportation of a package containing radioactive "prescribed substances".

Copies of the regulations are available, upon request, from the Radiosotopes and Tranportation Division, Atomic Energy Control Board, 270 Albert Street, Ottawa.

3. The above standards and criteria are based on those which have been developed by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). Canada, as a founding member state, participates in the work of the IAEA in the continuous evaluation and development of criteria and standards dealing with the safe transport of radioactive material. At present, the IAEA is examining proposals dealing with shipments involving high consequence/low probability accidents; these proposals apply to shipments of radioactive materials, such as plutonium shipments by air and other means of transport.

4. There are no other standards or criteria, specific to plutonium, which are under consideration for adoption. However, there is a revision to some of the IAEA standards affecting radioactive materials. This revision has not yet been adopted internationally and the AECB is presently examining them for incorporation into Canadian legislation.

TRAUMA CAUSED BY LOSS OF AIR-INDIA FLIGHT

Question No. 240—Mr. Nunziata:

As a result of trauma caused by the loss of Air India Flight 182, how many (a) passenger agents (b) mechanics (c) flight attendants (d) baggage handlers (e) other airport workers at (i) Vancouver International Airport (ii) Pearson International Airport (iii) Mirabel International Airport underwent psychological counselling?

Hon John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Only workers in category (e) belong to Transport Canada. The counsellors for Transport Canada report that none have provided the inquired about services to Transport Canada employees.

GRANTS TO ORGANIZATIONS WITHIN METROPOLITAN TORONTO

Question No. 251—Mr. Redway:

Since September 4, 1984, did the Privy Council Office make grants and/or loans to persons or corporations, non-governmental organizations and governments within Metropolitan Toronto and, if so, in each case, in what amount and for what purpose?

Mr. Len Gustafson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): No.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement Government Orders will be extended by 37 minutes beginning at 1 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Thursday, February 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre):

That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

And the amendment of Mr. Garneau:

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "that" and by substituting the following: This House regrets that the Budget

1. Failed to redress the inequities of the tax system created by government policies put forward during the last three and one-half years;

2. Failed to put into place a regional development policy to compensate for the high interest rate policy of the Government;

3. Failed to put forward a credible plan to deal with the national debt that does not unduly punish lower and middle-income Canadians; and

4. Failed to specify a Canadian approach for dealing with the instabilities of the international monetary system.

And the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Cassidy:

That the amendment be amended by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

"and this House further condemns the government for introducing a budget that ignores the real economic needs of the country in which over 1.1 million Canadians are unemployed and eight out of ten provinces and the territories continue to experience employment and income disparities equal to those of the 1981-83 recession; for increasing the tax burden of average Canadian families to a level of $1,125 over the 1984 level through yet another increase in gas taxes; for failing to bring fairness to the tax system through the elimination of costly tax breaks and the introduction of a corporate minimum tax that would ensure fair and regular tax payment from those 60,000 profitable corporations that will pay no tax following Conservative tax reform; for maintaining a policy of high interest rates begun by previous Liberal Governments; and for failing to introduce a system of universal child care that would assist average Canadian families and create jobs.

Hon. Jean Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): If you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, with the permission of my colleagues on both sides of the House and especially with the complicity of my colleague the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mr. Jelinek), I too should like to take a few minutes to underscore the resounding success of Calgary's 1988 Winter Olympic Games and tell you just how very proud all Members on both sides of the House stand. As a matter of fact, I am sure you are personally pleased this morning to see that the week is off to a good start.

It is certainly not a frequent occurrence to see Members on both sides of the House rise in their seats and speak so eloquently on a subject that is so dear to the hearts of Canadian men and women.

As one of the Ministers responsible for Celebration '88 in Quebec, I can say, because I was there, how delighted our various communities were to take part in the Olympic Torch relay, and that it was a tremendous success. Quite frankly, I don't think anyone realized how successful this initiative would be.

At home in Sherbrooke I listened to the opening ceremonies of the Winter Olympic Games in Calgary, and I was very impressed by all those young men and women who represented our ethnic and regional communities across Canada, and I must say they gave us a feeling of great pride.

Closer to home, in the Eastern Townships, we also have reason to be proud since we sent quite a few participants to Calgary, including Marie Claude Doyon, whose performance in the luge event was truly excellent. Everybody in my office took a few minutes during the afternoon to watch her performance on television. We sent her a telegram with our warmest congratulations, as soon as the results were known.

We also have Mr. Rozon and Mr. Langlois who have made a name for themselves, both nationally and internationally, in free-style skiing. They are a source of great pride for us in the Eastern Townships. In fact, this should not be surprising since this is André Viger country, and so they are just continuing a great tradition.

I would like to take this opportunity to join my colleague, the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mr. Jelinek), the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), my colleague in the New Democratic Party and all Members in this House, in expressing this message and sharing this feeling of great pride.

However, I am afraid that is just about it as far as compliments are concerned, since we have had more than our fair share of compliments and praise for one week.

We are just back from a week's holiday, and perhaps I should emphasize this was only a holiday from Parliament, because I know the Hon. Member for Beauce (Mr. Bernier) said when we entered the House this morning that he was in his riding the whole week, working according to the strict schedule he set for himself when he was elected in 1984, which means that we have been listening quite a bit to the people we represent.

Personally, I spent the week in my own riding, Sherbrooke, and aside from a few short trips to Montreal on business, I had plenty of time to meet the people of my riding every day, something I am fond of doing. In fact, for us, happiness is, as the Hon. Member for Beauce and I were saying this morning, to be with the people in our ridings, and they had a number of things on their minds.

One of the most important issues which is being debated in Sherbrooke, because we had the opportunity and the privilege to welcome the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), was of course his budget which reflects the economic performance of the Government. This is why I think that it is an excellent opportunity for me this morning to state my humble views on the matter. To take stock of the situation, I think it is important to go back to 1984 when our party was trying to get elected and to remember what was specifically said during that campaign.

I think what all Canadians have remembered from 1984 can be summarized in one word, Mr. Speaker, that is «change.»

It is true and I think that members on both side of the House . . . and I see that my colleague from Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) is shaking his head , everyone agrees that we spoke about changes in 1984 and the necessity of those changes in Canada.

Now, it is important to remember why we dwelt on such a change. And I am ready to go . . .

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

• (1150)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Bourassa.

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I do not want the Minister to say that the member of Bourassa is shaking his head approvingly . . . or to suggest indirectly to the Canadian people and to my constituents . . . Yes, the Tory Minister is laughing. I do not want to be misunderstood, because the Minister is one of my good friends, but I shook my head in a very negative way.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret, it is not a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: I think that it is a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): You may be able to ask him a question or make a comment later. The Minister of State for Youth has the floor.

Mr. Rossi: It's not a question, Mr. Speaker. He's misleading.

[Translation]

Mr. Charest: To clarify the matter, Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Bourassa is right in pointing out that when I . . . To put an end to that, Mr. Speaker, I have no wish to burden you with that clarification. Since it was I who said it, I have no intention of implying in any way that the Hon. Member for Bourassa agrees with my speech, or perhaps part of it. He will have an opportunity to ask questions and make comments, if he so wishes, that is his choice.

Finally, to return to where we were in 1984, there were references to changes. Let us recall the context then, and in the main it is still the context that is prevailing today.

In 1984, Mr. Speaker, the world around us witnessed many changes. I think we must first list those changes. The global economic axis was changing, moving from the Atlantic to the Pacific and this is one reality that had to be addressed in 1984. Then we had the increasing importance of the service sector in the global economy, representing as it does some 25 per cent of the global GNP, which is reflected in Canada in that, among others, 75 per cent of jobs in this country are currently in the service sector. This is quite a radical development, considering especially that in 1945, Mr. Speaker, only some 40 per cent of jobs in Canada were in the area of services, as compared to 75 per cent in 1986. So already in 1984 that was quite a radical change.

In addition, there was the emergence of the newly industrialized nations. I am referring here to Brazil which, by way of an aside, is going through quite a dramatic period, but which anyway can be characterized or labelled as one of the emerging nations among developing ones. South Korea is another example, Mr. Speaker, of industrializing nations. There is also Japan's current importance as one of our markets.

Among those new realities, there was also the relative decline of the United States, because other industrialized nations were emerging and the American trade deficit was whipping up protectionist trends in the United States. And this is a reality that is of very close significance to us Canadians, because some 80 per cent of our two-way trade, meaning both exports and imports, are with the United States. So this is of some significance to us as a nation.

One thing is clear in all this, and I believe that everyone can agree, namely that we could not accept the status quo. There had to be a change, and this change had to be rather comprehensive. What we have accomplished during the last three years is quite noteworthy. I am certain that Members on the other side will tell us that they do not agree with such or such an initiative, but no one can deny the fact that this Government has made a number of very important structural changes.

Among other things, this Government has provided Canada with a new trade policy. This is the first time such a thing has happened since 1879, when Sir John A. Macdonald developed in this House what was then called the national policy. It is the first time since 1879 that the Canadian Government has attempted to develop a comprehensive trade policy on two fronts, first by pursuing our interests within GATT, and second by deciding to negotiate a free trade agreement with our neighbours to the South, the Americans, to try to provide some stability in our trading relations with the United States as they account for 80 per cent of all our exports.

This is a basic change for Canada. We also established a new Department of Industry, Science and Technology, recognizing the need for Canada to acquire, develop and apply new industrial technologies if we want to remain competitive, while keeping in mind the fact that Canada is an exporting country, even though other countries are more dependent on their exports for their Gross National Product. Everyone agrees on this point, including the Liberals, the NPD and ourselves. We all agree that we are an exporting country and want to remain an exporting country. We do not necessarily agree on the means to do so, but we do agree on the basic facts.

I therefore assume that we also agree on the industrial consequence of such a choice, this consequence being that we have to acquire and apply new technologies. This is why this new Department was created.

Canada being made up of regions, we also developed new regional economic development policies based in large part on the principle that the local people are always in the best position to manage their own economy and make their own decisions. This is why the federal Government decentralized its administrative machinery to manage its regional economic development programs. This was done in Western Canada. It was also done in Eastern Canada, in the Atlantic region. It was also done for Northern Ontario. We re-established the Laprade Fund in Quebec, and there is also the Eastern Plan.

Mr. Speaker, Canada is a country made up of regions, and so these very tangible and very real instruments have been made available to enable the regions to implement better management standards and look after their own administration.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, people are wont to forget a basic fact, namely that this Government has been sponsoring a new employment policy. The employment planning strategy was the result of the First Ministers' Conference held in Regina in 1985, a historic conference where the federal Government, the provinces, the private sector, labour unions and a host of interest groups in our society co-operated and reached a consensus on a new employment planning strategy geared to our country's current priorities.

We have three major priorities. First we concluded that from here on in we had to emphasize training under our employment programs, that it was no longer good enough to sponsor job programs only to keep people busy, that we had to take a further step and do more for these people by making training facilities available to them in an attempt to determine whether they would be employable. We wanted these people to look forward to regular work instead of going from job programs to unemployment benefits or yet other work programs.

Mr. Speaker, the second priority of the employment planning strategy was to concentrate on people who had been out of work for twenty weeks or more, because it stands to reason that they are the ones who find it more difficult to rejoin the labour force.

And, thirdly, Mr. Speaker, under the employment planning strategy, we have also sought other partners, because jobs creation should not be the concern of only one government in Canada, nor that of only one industry, but it should be the concern of all those involved, namely the private sector, the unions, the non-profit and public organizations at every level, whether municipal or provincial. That is why we wanted to include as many partners as possible.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, people have a tendency to forget that this Government has also administered this country along principles which are our own as Progressive Conservatives; hence our deregulation, privitization, tax reform and deficit control policies. That is a management strategy which properly reflects the philosophy of our party, a philosophy which we had clearly enunciated in 1984. Having received the full support of Canadian voters during the 1984 election, we performed exactly as we had promised.

In our opinion, it was important to administer the country along these principles for the following reason: In view of foreign factors which influence us and cannot be denied, as evidenced by the recent stock exchange crash.

Clearly, nobody can deny that events occurring outside of Canada have a serious impact on us. If Canada wants to meet head-on the new challenges confronting us, and occupy the place it deserves, if we want to solve the new problems, the Govenment's organization must be flexible enough to meet these needs. More than ever before, Mr. Speaker, people involved in business or trade unions at every level should develop the necessary flexibility to meet as quickly and efficiently as possible the challenges confronting us, which is not easy. The only way to do it as the Federal Government, on the basis of our Progressive Conservative philosophy, is to try to lighten the Government machinery to make it as flexible as possible. Some people will say to us: Well, the Government is opting out. Personally, Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with such a conclusion. If the Government was in fact opting out, why did we produce, for instance, a national policy on child care? Is that the way a government willing to opt or back out behaves? Not at all, quite the contrary! My goodness, it seems to me an initiative as important as this one is evidence of a government's dedication to its citizens and its intention to make its presence felt. But instead of being inhibiting, of being an obstacle, that presence should rather facilitate change and allow to manage it better, and on a personal basis, leave individuals free to decide on their own without trying to guide them in their choices or impose choices on them.

Beyond all that, Mr Speaker, as a country, if we wanted to meet those challenges, we had to be able to prepare better for the great changes we are going through; we also had to bring reconciliation within Canada. It is with some joy, I think, that all Members of this House witnessed the signing of the Meech Lake Accord, debated it here, and were finally able to recognize the significance of the national reconciliation which we owe in part if not totally, I must say, to the efforts of the Prime Minister. It will no doubt remain one of his most magnificent achievements.

What is the purpose of all this? That question must be asked. We did all that. In 1984, we promised change—external factors are urging us on, we produced for Canada new policies on trade, investment, regional economic development, and employment. We achieved national reconciliation. But what was our goal? I think it is becoming clear that, for this Government, what we want for Canada is a new role in the world. What we are trying to do is redefine Canada's international role. We wish to achieve this objective in a context where Americans and superpowers generally are less powerful—not because they get poorer in absolute terms but because other countries get richer. Such a new balance would provide Canada, as a country, with an absolutely outstanding opportunity.

It would mean a stronger position for us to influence world affairs so that they reflect increasingly our Canadian values.

There are concrete examples of that. That will and those hopes and wishes have made it possible for us to hold the Sommet de la Francophonie. It is the Canadian Government and our Prime Minister who made that summit possible and the leadership role we have in that regard is by no means an accident. It is no accident either that Canada, which is a North American country, plays a leadership role in the Commonwealth. And it is no accident that we signed a free-trade deal with the U.S. while pursuing our leadership role within GATT. It is no accident, Mr. Speaker, that Canada and this Government have a new national defence policy that recognizes our commitment to NATO while emphasizing Canadian sovereignty over the Arctic. And it will be a great moment in our history when the Prime Minister welcomes the leaders of the Group of Seven nations next June in Toronto, which is now said to be a "world city"? At last, they got the same status as Montreal, if I may be more provincial in my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, you are aware of the fact that Canada plays a more important part in the world, and there is a reason for all that. Our underlying motivation is the following: as a Government and as a country on the everchanging world scene which gives us an opportunity to play a more significant part, we want to promote our own values, our own views about the environment for example, our great traditions of tolerance, social peace within our community, of justice and equity. In conclusion all this reflects how Canadians behave in their everyday lives: their stand on multiculturalism and bilingualism. This is part of our country, this is what Canada and Canadian men and women are all about. And by occupying a greater place in the world, with a little luck and a little conceit too, admittedly, we hope to make the world where we live in closer to our own image.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest). The Minister made reference to the positive program as far as child care is concerned that his Government promised. Indeed, there have been promises over three years, perhaps four, that there would be major action taken regarding the very urgent crisis in Canada and the need for many more licensed quality child care spaces for our children, particularly those of working parents. Yet in this Budget to which the Minister is supposedly speaking he really has not acknowledged that. Aside from doubling a very regressive tax measure, there is nothing in the Budget to show the Government's commitment to increased funding for child care spaces. This is a very desperate need.

Would the Minister explain and clarify that? His statement did not give the real picture. Why is there nothing in the Budget to begin making some impact on the child care crisis in Canada? I am talking about increased licensed quality spaces, with a decent rate of pay for care givers and affordable fees for children across the country?

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I can only presume that the Hon. Member may not have accepted the way in which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has presented his Budget. The Minister acknowledged that the Government is not required, nor is it necessary to wait for a budget in February each year to act on certain specific issues. It is the approach of the Government to decide what issues merit some importance and some policy direction and to enter into consultations, do the ground work and present issues as they are ready. For that reason, maybe the Hon. Member should feel happy that the Minister of Finance did not wait until February, 1988 to put forward the child care policy that was put forward, which is a very substantial policy and means that we will be spending over $4.5 billion in four years.

Ms. Mitchell: None of that money is in this Budget.

Mr. Charest: The Hon. Member says there is nothing in this Budget. The Hon. Member, her Party, the NDP, the socialists, say that $4.5 billion is not enough money.

Ms. Mitchell: It is not in the Budget.

Mr. Charest: Maybe the Hon. Member has a fixation about budgets and rituals. She feels that something must be in the Budget for it to exist. I can only say to the Hon. Member that Canadians know the item will be reflected in their tax forms. There will be a $4,000 child tax deduction. That did not require the Minister of Finance to wait for some major day in February to put forward his policy. It is as simple as that. We have put forward our policy, consistent with the commitments that we made in the 1984 campaign on child care policy under the leadership of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). In 1984 we made a very clear commitment that we would strike a parliamentary committee, study the matter and make a proposal. We did exactly that. We came forward with a very substantial package.

Ms. Mitchell: Where is the money?

[Translation]

Mr. Charest: If you allow me, Mr. Speaker, I will review some aspects already announced that the Hon. Member seems to ignore, although he says the Budget did not contain anything new.

You do not have to put anything in the Budget if, for example, you already announced, a few month previously, a national strategy on day care. It includes a new fiscal aid to families with young children, which will cost $2.3 billion; an increase in the tax deduction, now up to $4,000 per child 6 years old or less, or with special needs; a gradual increase of up to $200 per year in income tax credit for children 6 years old or less, for low or medium income families, Mr. Speaker.

Nobody can say it does not exist, nobody can say it is not true.

The deduction ceiling of $8,000 for children more than six years old has been lifted, that deduction is $2,000 per child. A Canadian Day Care Act—the federal Government will spend up to three billion dollars. The new cost sharing agreement with the provinces will allow the creation of up to 200,000 quality day care spaces.

Mr. Speaker, when that program was announced I was home, in my riding, and during the television news, the Hon. Monique Gagnon-Tremblay, who represents the provincial riding of Saint-François and is the Minister responsible for the Status of women, said publicly: it is a good program. The ball is now in the court of the provincial Government, we are pleased with what the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is proposing today.

She must have been satisfied, she probably did not complain the day after the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) presented his budget in February, and—to say there was nothing—

Mr. Speaker, if she was then not complaining, I fail to see what the Hon. Member would have to complain about all of a sudden.

Mr. Speaker, an assistance fund for projects—

[English]

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think it is an abuse of this question period to talk it out and to allow for only one question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think it was a very important question and a very important answer. When the Minister finishes, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) for a very short question or comment. The Minister has the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I understand my colleague is anxious to put a question, so I will be quick.

An assistance fund for special projects of about $100 million; an assistance fund to carry out demonstration projects, research, public education programs to improve the quality of services. To carry through projects centred on new needs in profit or non-profit child care. A federal financing share of 75 per cent in the provincial capital cost for non-profit day-care centers during the initial period—yes, but my colleague is shouting from the other side of the House: That is not in the budget! That is not in the budget!

All I can say is this: It is not in the budget because we acted on it before the budget. What do you want? Do you have anything against the procedure? For something to exist in your own mind must it absolutely be included in the budget? I am sorry, you will never be satisfied because, really, you will never be content, whatever we do. All I am saying is that all other Canadian men and women are pleased.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague.

I would like to know why he did not mention that his government's Budget has increased taxes for ordinary families, for middle class families in this country, and that his government, since it has come to power, has increased taxes for families. Why has he not mentioned this? At the same time, the government has let large corporations free to pay no income tax; a large number of Canadian corporations pay no income tax.

Why does he leave this situation unchanged while at the same time making families pay more taxes?

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for Winnipeg North Centre for his question, and I would like to commend him for his excellent French. Of all Members in this House I heard since I came here three years ago, he certainly is in my view one of those who made the most progress, to a very impressing degree. I sincerely commend him.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know, because the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) mentioned it in his Budget, that as a result of the tax reform put forward by this Government, 850,000 Canadians will be completely eliminated from the roll of federal taxpayers. It therefore seems to me that this is one initiative of real significance to many Canadian taxpayers who, thanks to this Government tax reform, will no longer pay income tax, Mr. Speaker.

There you have a major part of your answer. Eight families out of ten, Mr. Speaker, will be paying less income tax as a result of the tax reform. Among those 65 and older, nine out of ten will be paying less income tax as a result of the tax reform.

It would seem that these are quite important answers to your questions. Thanks to the initiatives put forward by this Government, including tax reform, those people will be paying less tax, and the balance between individual and corporate taxpayers will be much fairer. But I would like to take a moment perhaps to make a brief comment, because I feel the Hon. Member is not giving the whole picture when suggesting that large corporations pay no tax, nothing at all. I would simply like to refer to one problem, which he no doubt will find is food for thought. How does he explain on the one side for instance his party's policy, that at least of some Members of his party who go to the constituency of my colleague for Abitibi and suggest that flow-through shares should be kept at all cost, the tax credit on flow-through shares that clearly favours people with income? How can they in the same vein blame us for taking action there and go on to say: People should pay more tax, or they are not paying enough! That to my eyes is an amazing contradiction. Perhaps he could shed some light on that!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is over. Debate. The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell).

• (1220)

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have a chance to put on record some thoughts with regard to this Budget and the Government. The Government promised fairness, honesty, and equity to Canadians and has not delivered. As many of the media commentators have said, this is not so much a Budget as an attempt by the Government to change the agenda of the country which has been unfortunately so absorbed with the many scandals and failures of the Government. It is attempting to convince Canadians that it is really not all bad and to praise itself in a pre-election period.

We are very disappointed, as I am sure most Canadians who have studied this Budget are, about the lost opportunities which have been epitomized in this Budget. The Budget will do nothing for average Canadians. In fact, it contains some regressive measures for them including an increased tax on gas which could cost families about $50 a year extra. In particular, it does nothing to try to deal with the very serious problems which still exist in ridings such as my riding of Vancouver East where there continues to be a very high incidence of poverty and a very high rate of unemployment.

We believe that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had a real opportunity to move to greater regional fairness, to stop the rise in interest rates which is a very major factor in our economic growth and development, and to make the tax system fairer, which is something the Government has been promising us over and over again. However, there is no attention paid to these things in this Budget.

The Minister also promised to implement the national child care program which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) have been promising for years. If I sounded very angry when asking questions of the previous speaker, it is because I was angry. It is all very well to talk about promises which have been made as if they have been fulfilled. However, there is no child care for most families across the country right now. Nothing has been put forward in this Budget to help to increase the number of licensed quality child care spaces.

The Member can talk at great length about promises, but that does nothing for families with young children who have needed and been promised child care facilities for a number of years and will now obviously have to wait until after an election. This sounds to me like a lot of election propaganda again. Therefore, the Budget is very unfair.

One of the things about which we are particularly concerned is that it is really building two Canadas. You will recall that the Prime Minister warned us a year ago that "we are in the process of building two Canadas, one which is rich and promising and one which is under-developed and under-employed". Speaking of one who comes from an under-developed and under-employed region of Canada, and certainly from a constituency which has a high rate of unemployment, I could not agree more. I am very disappointed that during the Minister's last period in office—because he is on his way out, as is the Government—he has done nothing to try to fulfil promises of regional fairness.

The Budget ignores the fact that unemployment in British Columbia, in seven other provinces, and in the North is still at the level which prevailed during the 1981, 1982, and 1983 recessions. Through one of the job development projects we recently did a study in my riding of Vancouver East. I sent the study to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard). That study showed that in Vancouver East 27.5 per cent of those actively seeking work cannot find jobs. Not all of those statistics show up at the unemployment office, but that is the real rate of unemployment. That is an intolerable situation. I happened to mention that to a colleague of mine from a northern riding who said that there are communities in his riding within which the unemployment rate is over 50 per cent, particularly native communities.

We should have a policy of full employment. We should have a Government which will make this a top priority rather than only talking about how unemployment has gone down in central Canada. We should be working on full employment across the country. This Budget and the trade deal with the United States will not assist in this kind of equality.

The Government had an opportunity to correct unfairness in the tax reform Budget of last year but did nothing. The result is that the average Canadian family will be paying more than $1,000 in additional taxes than in 1984. I stress "families" because families are being penalized more than are those who do not have children. Only the richest 2 per cent of taxpayers will pay less. As a further consequence of this Budget, 60,000 corporations will continue to pay no tax. That group could have been paying taxes to provide revenue for the programs which are necessary, including a much more generous program for child care.

Nothing was done to reduce the interest rate levels which we think would help considerably to develop economic diversification and deal with unemployment. Canadians were looking for fairness but nothing is offered in this Budget to close the growing disparity between people in central Canada and in Canada's East, West, and North, and the disparities between rich and poor which will remain indeed they are increasing. I will expand on that a little later.

Are these the policies of fairness which the Government promised? If they are, the voters and citizens of Canada are sorely disappointed.

I would like to refer very briefly to a couple of analyses of the Budget which show that the rich have won control over Canada's tax system. I will not go into this in detail.

• (1230)

The Institute for Research on Public Policy said that the richest people in the country are the big winners, no matter how you slice it. They went on to say that 1988 personal income tax reform will increase the disposable income of Canadian taxpayers, with the biggest gainers in the top one per cent, but leaves the majority worse off than in 1984.

Linda McQuaig did an analysis in her book entitled Behind Closed Doors. She looked at the total Conservative approach to tax reform and concluded, again, that the tax system keeps moving away from the ideals of fairness and equity and that, in fact, the system has created measures where the poor and middle class keep paying more tax while the rich end up paying less.

As critic for social policy, I want to focus on aspects of the Budget that have an impact on families. Average families have already suffered under the economic policies of the Government, particularly as they relate to tax measures. They have seen a considerable loss in family benefits, which I will explain in detail later.

They are still paying high taxes and have been hit hardest by the sales tax. Families raising children must buy many more consumer goods and spend most of their money for essentials. The sales tax hits family consumers much more than single or higher income people.

The Canadian Council on Social Development has made some profound statements based on their analysis and the analysis of the National Council of Welfare. They state:

> One segment of the Canadian population which has not advanced during this government's term is families with dependent children . . . Families with children have lost ground compared with other Canadian households. The effects of partially deindexing all family benefit programs and tax credits in conjunction with tax reform measures will mean that a one-earner couple with two kids and an income of $30,000 will pay $1,439 more in total income and federal consumption taxes in 1990 than in 1984, after adjusting for inflation.

This is compared to a similar couple with no kids who will pay $979 more. What kind of equity is that?

The CCSD also stated that minimum wage workers under federal jurisdiction have fared particularly badly. This includes the working poor group who have lost about one-third of their income to inflation since 1980. The CCSD went on to say:

> The 50 per cent increase in 1986 prevented the situation from deteriorating further but the federal minimum wage rate still rates second from the bottom compared with all provincial rates.

They go on to summarize:

> Major new measures were not announced in the Budget. But continued deindexation hits families with children much harder than it affects adults without children. This is a most regressive way to raise revenue for deficit reduction.

The Budget also announced continued reductions in non statutory programs, amounting to $300 million. There is very little detail in the Budget Papers about what programs will be affected by this Budget reduction measure. Non statutory programs include very many small but important programs such as social housing programs, training programs, programs for women, as well as family support programs.

As pointed out by the CCSD, the benefits for a family of four have decreased and are about $300 less for low income families earning less than $20,000, about $900 less for those in the $30,000 income bracket and about $1,300 less for the middle income family. There is no question that there are many hidden penalties in the Government's changes to family benefits.

The House will recall that the primary change to child benefits was the partial deindexation of family allowances. The House will recall the debate on that issue. The children were unable to organize the way seniors organized in order to re-index pensions, so the Government proceeded to deindex family allowances while re-indexing pensions.

The increase in the child tax credit will be partially deindexed, by 1988, however, so that the threshold level will go down, fewer people will be eligible for the child tax credit and the amount will decrease.

The reduction of the child exemption, which has also been deindexed is particularly hard on the middle income family. These are subtle changes which particularly affect average income families.

As far as low income families are concerned, tax reform has not alleviated the increasing poverty of these families. There should have been a major increase in the child tax credit and it should have been fully indexed.

The sales tax hits poor families very hard because they must spend most of their welfare income on basic essentials like clothing, food and rent.

While child poverty has decreased dramatically, the tax measures even for poor families means $300 less in child benefits. We need an income security reform program, which is something that none of the Government programs have addressed. I have attempted to raise this question of poverty with the Minister of National Health and Welfare on a number of occasions.

It is misleading to suggest that poverty has gone down. While poverty among elderly people has decreased because old age pensions have risen—a Liberal initiative incidentally—child poverty has increased. It is a deplorable fact that one in five children in Canada goes to school hungry. We cannot even obtain a food program in Vancouver in order to assist poor children. It is deplorable that this country should depend on institutionalized food banks as a way of looking after our children. This Budget does little to help the situation at all.

Let me discuss the impact of this Budget on women. A press release issued by the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women summarizes this very well. It states that the Budget does not deal with child care needs. They are very concerned that the federal Government is placing emphasis on deductions rather than on credits. Of course, deductions favour those who pay taxes and completely exclude those who do not pay taxes. This means that poor families do not have access to this tax measure.

They go on to state that deductions give greater benefits to higher income earners, and are an inappropriate use of tax dollars for child care. We agree with that.

They raise a very interesting point which I do not believe has been brought up in the House, that the proposals contained in the Budget related to alimony and maintenance payments run counter to the Council's recommendations in this area. They state:

> We see no reason why a non-custodial parent can deduct amounts spent in support of children, while a custodial parent has no such right.

Why should fathers—mothers in a few cases—who are usually the higher income earners receive all the tax benefits while the mother who is struggling and is lucky if she receives those maintenance payment, does not have any tax benefits. The CACSW recommends that child support payments should be deductible by the lower-income earner, the spouse who is assuming care of the children directly.

• (1240)

The CACSW also talks about the $300 million a year for non-statutory spending. It feels that this could hit women's programs particularly including programs that prevent wife battering. Job creation and labour adjustment programs for women maybe jeopardized as well. It talks about the fact that 850,000 low-income people will be taken off the tax rolls by tax reform proposals but the Government does not mention, nor did the Minister who spoke recently, that at least one million low-income Canadians have joined the ranks of taxpayers over the past six years as a result of the limitation on indexing of the tax system. Again, the poor people are paying taxes and the wealthy people and corporations are paying very little or none.

The CACSW is concerned about indirect taxes and particularly about future changes proposed to the sales tax which again will have a regressive impact on women. The heaviest burden will be put on those least able to pay.

Finally, I would like to concentrate my remarks on the question of child care. We all know how important this program is. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that this would be a major social reform of his Government and he said close to three years ago now that there would be a major investment of money into quality child care spaces for families who need child care and who need it at rates they can afford to pay. However, that is the part that seems to have been forgotten by the Government's child care proposal.

We hear about regressive tax measures. The tax measures in this Budget will double the child care tax deduction for those who pay taxes from $2,000 to $4,000. That is nice for people with those kinds of expenses. This helps higher-income people who pay taxes, families with two professional parents. However, what about single mothers and low-income parents who desperately need to get into the workforce and have no benefits at all? They have been left out of that scheme. There is not even a tax credit for them.

Another program that is costly to Government revenues is the token, almost insulting payment of $100 this year to a parent who stays at home. No one can tell me that the value of a homemaker who raises his or her own children is recognized by that. It would have been much sounder to have increased the child tax credit considerably for lower-income families.

As I mentioned to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), we are concerned that the Government is losing some $210 million this year in tax revenues as a result of these regressive tax measures but there is nothing in the Budget that will fulfil the promise, and it is only a promise, to put money directly into child care services. That is the first priority. Even families with increased tax deductions will have no guarantee that they will be able to find licensed, quality day care spaces for their children. Even if they do find the day care spaces, the fees will be high and the wages paid to care givers will be atrocious. Child car workers in Canada are paid approximately $15,000 per year in many instances, and that is an absolutely deplorable salary for trained professionals who are doing one of the most important jobs anyone could do by helping to raise a generation of children.

We are very disappointed that the Buget reinforced the regressive measures again.

An Hon. Member: Time.

Ms. Mitchell: Is my time up, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow the Hon. Member another half a minute if she would like to conclude.

Ms. Mitchell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I have made my point. I would urge government Members to think of the children of Canada, the one in five children who are poor and the majority of young parents who are in the workforce or want to get into the workforce and need to work to survive but who do not have adequate care for their children and whose children indeed are at risk in many inadequate baby sitting arrangements.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague. I take note of the fact that Budget statistics indicate that corporate profits grew faster than other economic indicator. Corporate profits rose by 25.6 per cent over the last year. At the same time, corporate taxes rose by only 15.3 per cent.

I would like to know if taxes for average Canadians rose by less than their income rose. Are they being treated the same as corporations are being treated? Are there any Canadian families whose incomes rise more than their taxes?

The Budget indicates that 60,000 profitable corporations will continue to pay no corporate income tax. I wonder if my colleague is aware that in 1986, Alcan Aluminum made profits totalling $220 million but did not pay any taxes. Instead, it received a tax credit of $32 million. Does my colleague know that in 1986, Brascan, on profits totalling $187 million, received a tax credit of $2.3 million? The list goes on and on. I hesitate to read into the record all 60,000 examples.

Does my colleague know of any families in her riding whose incomes have risen by more than their taxes have risen under the Conservative Government? Are families being treated the same as corporations?

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. colleague has put onto the record some extremely significant figures. I hope he will expand on them when he makes his speech later in the day.

I can think of only one kind of family in my riding whose incomes went up higher than their taxes did. Families on welfare might have gotten a few dollars per year more and pay no taxes at all. However, those families have used up all their income by the second week of the month and then have to line up at food banks because they have nothing to eat. Their children go to school hungry. I am sure there are not very many children of the management of Alcan and Brascan who find themselves in those situations.

If we had the income from fair taxes paid by 60,000 corporations, we could increase welfare rates and ensure that there are more child care spaces. We could ensure that children in Canada are not going to school hungry.

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be talking about the Budget, today. When we were elected, three and a half years ago, our greatest challenge was restoring financial stability and returning some credibility to the management of public finances. In 1984, the federal deficit and the national debt were out of control. The deficit was in excess of $38 billion, whereas three years previously it was only $14.9 billion. Over the same period, the national debt had doubled and was increasing at an average rate of 26 per cent per year. If we had continued at the same pace, it would be, today, $100 billion more than it is, which means $16,000 more for every family of four in the country.

Once the Government has lost control of its finances, everybody suffers. The interest rate applicable to mortgages, and consumer or business loans goes up. Confidence in the economy goes down, growth slows down and job creation decreases.

Mr. Speaker, our capability of providing the programs and services that Canadians need and want was in jeopardy. We believe Canadians want to leave their children and grandchildren a positive heritage, rich in opportunities, rather than a crushing debt and shattered expectations.

The only way to deal with that situation was to propose a short-term fiscal plan, providing for a sustained reduction of the deficit, and stick to it. That is exactly what we have done. We took a series of initiatives to put our finances in order by reducing federal spending and increasing revenues. Our first priority was to regain control of public spending.

In the four years before we came to office, program spending had increased at an average annual rate of 14 per cent, far in excess of the rate of inflation and enough to double spending in about five years.

An Hon. Member: Who wrote that?

Mr. St. Julien: Since 1984, we managed to cut the average annual rate of increase in program spending to just 3.5 per cent, less than the inflation rate. We achieved this record because we have put in place a new, disciplined approach to the management of government and its finances.

We promised that we would each year cut the deficit. We have done so. We indicated that the control of expenditures would be the main source of deficit reduction. Such have been the case. For the current fiscal year, we predicted that the deficit would be cut to $29.3 billion and, according to the Finance Minister (Mr. Wilson), that target will be met.

Mr. Speaker, we had promised to respond to the needs and priorities of Canadians in a fiscally responsible way. That is exactly what we did. When we took office in 1984, the country was in need of a sound financial management. This still is today and will remain in the future a foremost necessity. We must and will hold to our fiscal principles.

Firstly, we will reduce the growth rate of the national debt to that of the economy by 1990-91. Secondly, the annual deficit keeps declining steadily. In view of the forecasted decrease for 1988-89, it will be the first time ever since World War II that the deficit has declined four years in a row. Third, we are reducing Governement's financial needs to a considerable extent. Fourth, we are achieving most of that reduction through reduced spending and disciplined management.

With constant abiding by our fiscal principles and with structural improvements fostering economic growth, we managed to remain on the same financial course we have marked out since 1984.

Mr. Speaker, I would not miss that opportunity today to allude to a unique fact in Canadian history. That is the billions of dollars of Canadian taxpayers' money the Liberals have wasted. In September 1987, the Auditor General of Canada, Mr. Ken Dye, stated that because it took too much into consideration the political situation in Canada, the former Liberal Government had wasted, without any legitimate reason, billions of dollars of Canadian taxpayers' money.

The Ministry of Finance was made aware, in early 1984, that something was going wrong with the fiscal deduction program for scientific research. That warning was issued several times in the middle of that year. But that Department did not move because the Government was to go on an electoral campaign.

Had the Department of Finance stepped in earlier, according to Mr. Dye, it could have saved considerable amounts of money, something in the order of billions of dollars.

That controversial fiscal deduction program thus became the most costly fiscal disaster in the Canadian history. When announcing that program, in 1983, the former Minister of Finance, Mr. Marc Lalonde, predicted that it would cost only $200 million to the Government.

However, the program that was cancelled by the Tory Government shortly after the elections reached $3,9 billion. Up to $1,9 billion of that amount may have been lost as the result of frauds. There were some frauds where businesses and individuals claimed deductions without proceeding with any research. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the program was to provide generous tax deductions to encourage companies and individuals to invest in research and development. According to Mr. Dye, the Department of Finance should have had some misgivings from the beginning when there was an avalanche of registration forms as soon as the program was enforced in January, 1984. However, Mr. Lalonde was confident that the program would be effective. In L'actualité of February, 1987, journalist Paul Morisset wrote: "It is the theft of the century." In October 1984, the Tory successor to Marc Lalonde, the Minister of Finance, Michael Wilson, put a sudden stop to the whole matter. It was his first official act. However, it was already too late. In nine months, the bill had almost reached $3 billion, a tenth of the national deficit, enough to build more than 50 hospitals in Canada. According to the Minister of National Revenue, almost a dollar out of three was wasted, a billion disappeared through frauds and bankruptcies without being used for research.

Mr. Speaker, it was the worse fiscal fiasco in the history of Canada. How could such a disaster happen again? This question should be raised again at a time when Canadian taxpayers are filing their income tax returns and the government is launching its tax reform. I will give you a few examples, Mr. Speaker.

In Calgary, a businessman received $30 million; he bought two office buildings, a Jaguar and a 160-acre ranch before he vanished.

Another example, Mr. Speaker: in Kitchener, Ontario, half a dozen foreign businessmen got $2.5 million to build high-technology mini-submarines. They left with the money but without a forwarding address. The plans submitted to officials were drawings of submarines from the Second World War!

One last example, Mr. Speaker: in Montreal, the Department was investigating three companies implicated in dubious transactions totalling between $15 and $20 million and involving the same individuals. In this popular scheme, the whole building is claimed as an R and D expense while only one room out of 10 floors is used as a laboratory. Or a contractor erects a $4 million building, gets $8 million from the owner and submits a $30 million invoice for tax purposes.

Then there were some tax evaders who paid university professors from $5,000 to $10,000 to write serious-looking proposals. The bigger the projects, the more dubious they tended to be. But there were two big problems: first of all, the government was signing blank cheques. It was giving out tax credits without really checking and before research started. The claimant only had to fill out a short form. The Department of Finance officials wanted a flexible system free from red tape.

The other problem, Mr. Speaker, were the quick flips allowed under the program. In short, the investor paid the money and got half back the next day to make a 5 to 10 per cent profit in 24 hours without any risk! Three quarters of the money invested in the SRIC Program was used for quick flips.

In an interview, Marc Lalonde stated: "Obviously, there were some abuses . . . " It is clear that the law was not tight enough. But out of $3 billion, $2 million went to research. I say: "Hear, hear!"

Mr. Speaker, it is not one but 1.9 billion that have been lost because of cheating. Who is responsible for all that mess? The Minister is always responsible for his programs, said Marc Lalonde himself. I never believed in blaming my officials.

From early June 1984, less than five months after the official announcement of the tax credit, he had more than enough evidence that the program was going off the deep end. He had the power to stop everything and to save hundreds of millions of dollars to the tax payers. He preferred to swagger.

Mr. Speaker, why is it that the then Prime Minister of Canada and present leader of the Liberal Opposition did not put an end to these tax frauds? Why is it that the Opposition parties do not ask today that a Royal Commission be created to examine these frauds? I will conclude here on these tax frauds, Mr. Speaker, since I could speak on that all day long.

To continue, Mr. Speaker, there is another budget related issue which is of great interest to me and to Northern residents. Last February 11, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) said in this House: "I have had the opportunity to visit—the area of Abitibi, of Val-d'Or, and I am always amazed at seeing that Members of Parliament for that region do not protest more vehemently against the decisions taken by the Minister concerning the elimination of flow-through shares." Unfortunately, the Hon. Member is misinformed about what I do. In any case, when he went to Rouyn-Noranda for the annual meeting of Quebec prospectors in 1987, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides arrived at night fall and left that very same evening. Where was he last December 20, when a meeting was organized to save flow-through shares? I was the only federal Member of Parliament there.

Mr. Speaker, at the end of 1986, the Quebec Government lowered the maximum deduction from 166 and 2/3 to 133 and 1/3 per cent. This initiative, coupled with the minimum tax introduced in 1985, made mining inflation hedges less attractive, but the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides and his Quebec Liberal colleagues have remained very silent about this cut back in Quebec.

In any case, I am still working to maintain flow-through shares and I have made public statements on that issue both in Ottawa and in my own constituency.

The major difference between the Hon. Member for Lavaldes-Rapides and myself is that he was in Abitibi only for a few hours, as a tourist.

In the Budget speech of February 10, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said the following about regional development:

> We are also implementing a new approach to regional development—

—in Canada and Quebec—

> —an approach that will be more responsive to needs and priorities in the regions. It will draw fully on the ideas and the initiative of people living in the various regions as we work to achieve more balanced development across Canada.

There is now a plan for the Atlantic region, one for Western Canada and one for Northern Ontario. The Government has also announced its intention to respond more effectively to the real development needs of remote and less prosperous regions in Quebec. For this purpose, an in depth consultation process will be undertaken with the people of the regions, representatives of local business and of the provincial Government.

I am very happy at the announcement made by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) at a press conference in Sept-Îles on December 22 about the five-year economic development plan which the Mulroney Government will be implementing to stimulate regional initiative and eliminate once and for all regional disparities.

Indeed, until the mid 80s, Quebec peripheral regions had been neglected by the Canadian Government. The federal regional development efforts in Quebec were strongly concentrated on the more industrialized regions in the southwest region of the province. Eastern Quebec was the only outlying region whose development was managed under a distinct, multisectorial and multi-year program, based on the analysis of the strenghts and the weaknesses of the regional economy and on the determination of the most promising development lines.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, North West Quebec, the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean and the North Shore, as much as the Gaspe—Lower-Saint-Lawrence and Magdalen Islands, had then and still have particular needs. Economic development there is more costly and more difficult to manage than elsewhere. These isolated regions, far from the marketplace with their scattered and very mobile population, their total reliance on natural resources whose development is subject to the fluctuations of international demand and foreign competition, allow us to look into the development problems common to those vast economic areas which represent close to 90 per cent of Quebec territory.

Therefore, as of the Fall of 1984, the new government team headed by the Hon. Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Mulroney) put the outlying regions of Quebec among its regional development priorities. The sub-agreements concluded in 1985 under the Canada-Quebec Economic and Regional Development Agreement, although essentially sector-oriented, have led to major financial commitments in the outlying regions, particularly to enhance mining and forest development and to strenghten transportation infrastructure. Major national policies, such as the free-trade agreement with the United States, have created more favourable conditions for the development of Quebec resource areas. Ad hoc actions, such as the establishment of a federal penitentiary in Port-Cartier and financial support for the paper mill in Matane, were also intended to promote employment growth in those regions.

For this new plan to be realistic, Mr. Speaker, namely to overcome the regional development problems experienced in those areas, it should aim at accelerating long-term growth by mobilizing local entrepreneurs, by stimulating the development and the processing of our natural resources, by promoting excellence and technological development, by encouraging diversification of our regional economic stucture, by promoting the full integration of regions to Canadian and North American economies.

The new global plan will aim at four fronts: Eastern Quebec, the North Shore, Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean and Northwest Quebec. Each will have its own funding to ensure that development initiatives meet the needs of each area.

The plan would last a minimum of five years because a regional development effort cannot have any structuring and durable effect unless it is sustained and coherent. Previous experience clearly reflected that peacemeal and short-term solutions give poor results.

For each of the targeted areas, the development plan would be articulated around five major fields of operation in the master plan consistent with the major concerns of the Federal Government and of the area with regard to regional development, namely technological research and development, business development, the development of natural resources, of human resources and infrastructures.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that when I arrived in Abitibi in 1984, the unemployment rate was about 22, 23 and 25 percent in my constituency as in most of the towns and villages. We now have the lowest unemployment rate ever, 6.6 per cent, unheard of! We owe that to both federal and provincial programs, to the two levels of Government, to the private sector, to our employers, and to all workers in our region.

We have to keep this economic renewal going, for we all recall that the rate had invariably hovered around 20 and 25 per cent in previous years. We did find a formula, we now have flow-through shares, a very complex matter as we all know, but I do not hold back in my statements in Ottawa or in my riding. Between now and June our Government will have to take a much closer look and make a change, come up with a new formula to help our Quebec prospectors.

We also have a sector where two military bases are to be closed down, including one at Senneterre where people are experiencing troubled times. The federal Government and the Government of Quebec must synchronize their efforts to give additional assistance to Senneterre.

We know that our Government launched a community development program under which they were allocated $200,000 over the first two years to set up an office. And again recently, last week in fact, we earmarked $1.3 million to include both projects in the community development program.

In my riding we have three other projects, specifically in Amos, Matagami and Chapais-Chibougamau.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest we will have to work very hard to sustain such economic growth and keep unemployment down to 6.6 per cent. That is precisely what our Government will do to keep the economic renewal going.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Questions and comments?

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, in his speech the Hon. Member stressed the problems we had with the former scientific research tax credit.

He knows perfectly well that this tax credit was introduced to help high tech companies that always have trouble obtaining risk capital.

The companies themselves asked for this kind of program to help them obtain the initial financing they require to develop new products.

As I said before, the Hon. Member stressed the problems that arose as a result of this program, and he failed to mention, or mentioned only briefly, that the program did help develop a lot of good research that will benefit Canadians and the Canadian economy, and will increase innovation in the private sector.

He may also be aware that companies are now asking for a similar program to be introduced, but with adequate controls. I don't know whether he attended the National Conference on Science, Technology and Innovation, where the private sector was very emphatic about the need for setting up such a program with the control mechanisms that were lacking in the former program.

However, I would like to ask a question about the Government's present program which was introduced by the Conservative Government, and I am referring to the refundable tax credit in the 1985 Budget. In fact, the tax credit as such already existed, but this Government increased the refund available under the program. The Hon. Member must know that the program is having quite a few problems because of very tight restrictions imposed by Revenue Canada. I may refer him to an article that appeared in Le Soleil on February 16, under the heading: Revenue Canada discourages research. This was in response to a CP press release which referred to Revenue Canada's rigorous approach that was discouraging R and D in advanced technology.

The article followed a survey of 212 companies conducted by the Canadian Advanced Technology Association. The survey revealed that many companies had to wait for as long as twelve or eighteen months before receiving their tax credit refund. I am aware of some very serious situations where companies have had to close down because of the long delay involved in getting their refunds, and it is not just the delay but the incertainty about whether or not they actually will obtain a refund. In many cases, Revenue Canada will not accept the research expenditures incurred by many of these companies as such. There is some confusion about the definition of "research".

Is the Hon. Member aware of these problems? Could he inform the House what he intends to do to ensure the program meets the needs of Canada's private sector?

Mr. St. Julien: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to reply to the Hon. Member for Laurier. The House is aware that he represents the smallest riding in Canada with an area of five square kilometers, and that I represent the largest of the ten provinces in Canada with an area of 740,000 square kilometers. In other words, there are 60,000 people in his riding, while there are 102,000 in mine.

But to return to the Hon. Member's question about the difficulties companies are experiencing when trying to get reimbursements for their research activities, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that after the 1983-84 scandal of the century, and I refer here to the article which Paul Morisset wrote in L'Actualité in 1987 about the shortfall of $1 billion.

Mr. Rossi: Who are you to talk about scandals?

Mr. St. Julien: He mentioned the part played by lawyers and accountants:

> There were other expenditures. The Department of National Revenue has indicated that some $350 million in honoraria were paid to lawyers, accountants and brokers of all sorts.

—that is to say—

> These middlemen received in fees from 1 to 2 per cent of the value of the transaction, which were charged to the research companies thus reducing by as much their research and development budgets.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that when the time comes for allowing tax credits or shelters, it is important for the Department of Finance and the Department of National Revenue to investigate whether research activities have really taken place.

The newspaper continues in the same vein:

> Auditor General Kenneth Dye, the taxpayers' watchdog in Ottawa—

—at the time—

> —compared the Members of the House with a team of engineers trying to develop a car which is not a gas guzzler: "They think they have succeeded, but the engine seems to swallow up as much gas as before.

They just cannot understand, until they discover a large number of very small and well-hidden holes at the bottom of the gas tank. Much too often the same thing happens with tax expenditures. Revenues are leaking, something the Members of the House realize only when it is too late".

To return to the Hon. Member's question, Mr. Speaker, it is understandable that the Canadian Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) should tell his officials to check every application for refunds thoroughly before authorizing them.

• (1310)

Because the tax shelter problem had reached a critical point in Abitibi-Témiscamingue, departmental officials had to carry out investigations to discourage abuses.

Mr. Speaker, you know what happened in 1983 and 1984. It is because of what happened then that we have to carry out investigations today—

Mr. Rossi: Investigate the scandals!

Mr. St. Julien: To my Hon. friend who is urging us to investigate the scandals, I need only remind him of the greatest robbery of the century. We will hold a royal inquiry on this. But the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) is right. We must carry out strich and precise controls before allowing any refund now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments is now over. Debate. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I welcome the opportunity to participate in the budget debate. The Budget which the Government has brought down really says a lot to Canadians. It tells us a lot about the Government's priorities and policies.

To any ordinary citizen the budgetary papers may look like quite a pile of paper. Of course half of it is in English and half is in French. Previous Budgets consisted of larger stacks of paper. It was very difficult for opposition Members to go through them in a matter of a few hours. Therefore, we have the lock-up which allows some of our representatives to be briefed for many hours.

This Budget is a flimsy one. This Budget does very little. This Budget shows that the Government is bankrupt of ideas. This is a "do-nothing Budget". This Budget is an excuse for a budget. This Budget is not really a budget.

Budget day just came along and the Government said, "Oh, we have to produce a budget. The Minister of Finance has to buy a new pair of shoes. He has to get his picture in the papers showing the good soles on his shoes and he has to say something". The Government managed to put together a speech which did not say anything. It talked about all the good things the Government has done. It painted a rosy picture of the economy. However, in the final analysis, this is no budget whatsoever. It certainly does not respond to the concerns and needs of ordinary Canadians.

I have spent some considerable time meeting and talking with people in their homes. I must say that they delivered a message to me which I feel a responsibility to deliver to the House and to the Government. Canadians want to know if anybody is listening to them. They want to know if anybody will speak up for them. They would be curious to know if anybody on the government front-bench is speaking for them. In a nutshell Canadians have said, "Enough is enough. We are taking home less pay. You are increasing our taxes. You are a burden on our backs. Get off our backs; enough is enough".

I want to touch on a few aspects of the Budget and to talk about taxes on corporations. I want to talk about Canadian families and I want to say a few more things about what the Budget tells us about Conservative policy and about the Mulroney Government's approach to Government.

First, with regard to corporations, I noted earlier today, and I want to note once again, that statistics from the Budget indicate that profits for Canadian corporations have gone up by some 25.6 per cent. I do not know any families in my riding whose income has gone up by 25.6 per cent. Most people in my riding and most Canadians across the country have a hard time getting an increase of 3 per cent. They get 4 per cent if they are lucky. Corporation profits have gone up by 25.6 per cent which is the biggest rise of any economic indicator.

Although I am a New Democrat, I do not begrudge corporations their profits. I must say though that when they do make profits they ought to be good corporate citizens and pay a fair share of the taxation burden which Canadian families have to pay. Why is it that when corporations profits go up by 25.6 per cent their taxes only increased by 15.3 per cent? What happened to the other 10 per cent? Which ordinary Canadian family can say to us "My income has increased by 25 per cent over the past year but my taxes have not kept pace?" The people in my riding are telling me that their taxes are going up faster than their incomes. They are fed up and they are saying "Get off my back, Brian Mulroney. We are sick and tired of farcical tax reform which promised lower taxes but is resulting in increased taxes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will not interrupt the hon. gentleman again during his speech but I would like to bring to his attention that we call the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) the Right Hon. Prime Minister and we call the Government the Conservative Government. The Government should not be headed by an individual's name. That point has been brought to the attention of Hon. Members before. The Hon. Member has been here long enough and he knows that he should not be doing that. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) has the floor.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I respect the Chair and I know most Canadians call the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) by something other than his name, and I would not want to break with that habit.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The comments of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) of the New Democratic Party are either supposition or fiction. They fly in the face of your admonition to him of a moment ago.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Exactly. This is why I bring to the attention of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre who has been a Member for a number of years that he should not do what he is doing. I recall that Mr. Speaker said "I think I am obliged to advise Hon. Members that in the last several days I have received complaints from both sides concerning the use of Hon. Members names instead of addressing them as they ought to be addressed in this Chamber". I would like the Hon. Member to comply with that request. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre has the floor.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I will refer to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as the Right Hon. Member, and I will not repeat my earlier comment, at least in this context, even though it is based on fact.

Mr. Belsher: Use the title or take a walk.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I hear over here "Use the title or take a walk".

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member who is now speaking on behalf of the New Democratic Party, the Member from Winnipeg North Centre, seeks repeatedly by his choice of words to refute the admonition that you gave to him from the Chair.

Mr. Keeper: It is not true.

Mr. Belsher: It is.

Mr. Keeper: It is not.

Mr. Belsher: It is. You just said it by your own words.

Mr. Brisco: He wants to avoid the truth.

Mr. Horner: There are three right hon. Members in this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre has the floor.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I will come back to the point I made earlier. Corporate profits in this country have gone up by 25.6 per cent while their taxes have gone up by only 15.3 per cent. At the same time under Tory rule 60,000—not 60, not 600, but 60,000 corporations in Canada continue to pay no taxes on their profits. We are not saying that we should starve corporations, but we are saying that when corporations make profits as members of the community they ought to pay taxes.

I want to point out to Hon. Members who jump up to their feet on points of order that they ought to deal with this question. Do they know that in 1986 Alcan Aluminum on profits of $220 million, rather than paying taxes received a tax credit of $32 million? What ordinary Canadian family can get a deal like that? In the same year, Brascan, another Canadian corporation, on profits totalling $187 million paid no taxes but received a tax credit of $2.3 million. Brascan was given money. In 1986 Hees International, on profits totalling $117 million paid—guess what—no taxes. Power Financial earned profits of $132 million and received a tax credit of $1 million. The list goes on. While the profits of corporations mount, their taxes do not keep pace but ordinary Canadian families are being asked to pay more and more.

What Canadians want to know is just who is this Conservative Government listening to? Who does it care for? What does its policies tell us about who the Government is interested in and who it is serving? What are the priorities of the Government? The Government's actions speak louder than its words. Its actions indicate that it bows and scrapes when it comes to large and powerful corporations, large and powerful private interests, but when it comes to ordinary families, the Government lays on the tax burden. The Government does not hear the calls for help and relief from ordinary Canadians.

I do not know whether Members in this House know, or whether Members of the Government side know, but certainly the people in my riding know that the Budget which the Government brought down and the previous budgets it has brought down since its election have hit the middle-class family the hardest. Middle class Canadians have reached the end of their rope. We hear them saying "We have no more disposable income. Four or five years ago we used to have a few dollars in our pockets. We had some change and some discretionary income. That has now gone." The Conservative Government continues to raise taxes, continues to increase the burden, and still has not heard the pleas of ordinary Canadians for relief.

I want to quote a little documentation in this regard just in case someone may doubt what I have to say. I hope that the jolly Members on the other side will get up and join this debate and explain these taxation policies. The Canadian Council on Social Development says:

> One segment of the Canadian population which has not advanced during this government's term is families with dependent children.

What is a family without children? Those are the people who have not advanced under the present Government. The Canadian Council on Social Development goes on to say:

> Starting with the 1985 Budget and continuing through to the tax reform proposals, families with children have lost ground compared with other Canadian households. The effects of partially deindexing all family benefit programs and tax credits, in conjunction with tax reform measures, will mean that a one-earner couple with two kids and an income of $30,000 will pay $1,439 more in total income and federal consumption taxes in 1990 than in 1984, after adjusting for inflation. By comparison, a similar couple with no kids will pay $975 more.

That certainly does not jibe with the music we hear from the Government which talks about income tax reductions. The reality is not the Government's rhetoric but rather that taxes are continuing to increase, particularly on the backs of Canadian families.

Why is that when Canadians' incomes are being held down, when they have a difficult time getting a 1, 2, 3, or 4 per cent increase, their burden of taxes continues to increase while at the same time corporate profits soar and their taxes lag behind the rate at which their incomes increase? Who is the Conservative Government interested in? Who is it listening to? Is there anyone on the front bench of the Conservative Government who is willing to speak up for ordinary families or are they all going to repeat the party line?

There is one other aspect of the experience of ordinary Canadians which I want to bring to the attention of the House and the Government. I will quote again from the documentation of the Canadian Council on Social Development to show a reality which this House must acknowledge and which ordinary Canadians know from their own personal experience by looking at their pay cheques. The document reads:

Trends in average wages and salaries between 1983 and 1987 also reflect the lower pay attached to Canadian jobs. In real terms, workers today take home on average $8.60 a week less than in 1983.

The income of the average Canadian family is dropping at the same time as the Government continues to increase the burden on Canadian families. It is the middle class family, the average Canadian family, which is being hit the hardest. Everyone is losing, whether they are poor, working class, or middle class, but the average Canadian family is being hit the hardest. It is time for this to stop. It is time for the Government to stop coddling the corporations while slamming the families of the country. It is time for some fairness in the taxation system rather than the sham of tax reform which the Government presents to the Canadian people.

I have one message for the Government which comes directly from my constituents, and that is, enough is enough, get off our backs. The Government is supposed to serve people and not to hurt them. Leave the average Canadian family alone.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, in the one minute that I have I will tell the Hon. Member that the employees of Cominco Limited in Trail are very interested in the welfare of that company and in the profits. They are well aware of the massive deficit which that company carried into last year. They are also aware of the profits it made. They base their salary and wage demands in the bargaining process on profits of the company and not the losses.

That same company with that profit is now spending $260 million Canadian on a new lead smelter. It is spending $6 million on a two-part project for germanium. It is spending $28.5 million on other projects, all of which will do two things; generate new jobs, and clean up the environment and useless by-products which were such a hazard in the past. There are two sides to every issue. This Member is prepared to give only one side.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member will have eight minutes to reply after three o'clock. It being 1.37 p.m. I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1.37 p.m. the House took recess.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES—ELIGIBILITY OF ONTARIO COMMUNITIES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, in December last the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced a special tax reduction package for residents of northern and isolated areas. Several communities in the constituency of Cochrane—Superior are unable to claim these deductions on their 1987 income tax returns. I submit that the reason for their exclusion is extremely narrow in concept.

As the regulations now stand, they do not reflect the realities of northern Ontario. For example, there are communities which score high on points for geography, population, access, and they lack many services but because they are just a few kilometres short of the required 320 kilometres from a major centre they are out of luck. Surely a community which otherwise is over qualified for the tax reduction should not be left out in the cold because of a few kilometres.

Accordingly, I have asked the Minister of Finance to make distance a part of the point system. In this way, on the one hand the communities in question would be included, and on the other hand the system would not be open for abuse. I therefore urge the Minister of Finance to introduce the appropriate changes to the regulations without delay.

TRIBUTE TO ORGANIZERS AND PARTICIPANTS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, Olympics 88 have brought plaudits from all over the world to Calgary, Alberta and Canada. The opening show and each event that followed were sparkling, scintillating, glittering, wonderful, miraculous, marvelous, prodigious, spectacular, fabulous, thrilling, fascinating, beautiful, exquisite, enchanting and inspiring. A small boy clapping his hands and with shining eyes put it best when he shouted: "Boy! That was real cool!".

The hundreds of volunteers, the committees, the performers, the athletes and all others who contributed should share the glory and the credit. The athletes, men and women from all over the world, of all colours, religions and creeds, each competing for the Gold, thrilled us as winners and losers congratulated each other in real sportsmanlike style.

To the Hon. Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek), Mayor Ralph Klein, Frank King and all others who carried the responsibilities of this world event, Canadians say: "Thank you for the best Winter Olympics the world has ever seen".

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES—COMMISSION OF INQUIRY URGED

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the Government recently released its comprehensive list of prescribed communities which qualify for northern residents tax deduction.

The result for many ridings is a complicated patchwork of have and have-not residents whose tax returns bear no relation to the principle of fairness and to the need for a northern tax allowance.

Northerners pay more for virtually everything, from gasoline and home heating fuel to transportation and cable television services. In almost every case, they therefore pay more in fixed taxes.

At the same time northerners do not have access to many of the public services accorded to residents in the south. Whether we speak of colleges or universities, subways and baseball stadiums, northerners do not receive the same benefits for their tax dollar. Northerners do not deserve to be sliced and diced into a checkerboard of so-called remote and non-remote communities. I call for the creation of a commission of inquiry to examine this matter, and I look forward to representing all my constituents before the committee.

However, the tax season is upon us. The only fair way to help northern taxpayers this year is to designate all communities in Tier 3 ridings as isolated and remote.

LE CERCLE NATIONAL DES JOURNALISTES

SIXTIETH ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATIONS

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, this week marks the 60th anniversary of the Cercle national des journalistes du Canada à la Chambre des communes et au Parlement du Canada. In honour of this event, tomorrow the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) will inaugurate the Cercle's mini-museum and an exhibition: "Aperçu: Phoenix sur la Colline" at the Public Archives of Canada, a photographic account of the Parliament Centre Block fire in February 1916.

Wednesday, plaques honouring the founders of the Cercle, The Citizen and Le Droit will be unveiled during a special ceremony. Former employees and representatives of the founding newspapers and former presidents of le Cercle will be among the guests.

The week's festivities will conclude on Friday and Saturday with a musical review of press and politicians over the years.

Mr. Speaker, sixty years of journalism in Ottawa, including radio and television as well as the written press, is something to celebrate. Congratulations to one and all!

CANADA POST CORPORATION

RECOGNITION OF RESPONSIBILITIES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, last week we heard that the last postal strike cost Canada Post $70 million. While the Corporation is trying to close down rural post offices and depriving thousands of Canadians of home delivery, Canada Post, thanks to its arrogant policies, spent a total of $70 million during the last postal strike alone, and it seems that a few months before, the first mail carriers' strike cost another $30 million. Mr. Speaker, $100 million was wasted on strikes that failed to solve any problems at all. On the contrary, the situation keeps getting worse, and labour relations at Canada Post have become extremely tense.

I think the Government should recognize its responsibility and instruct Canada Post to treat its employees like human beings, to sit down at the same table and act responsibly. Mail delivery is everybody's business, Mr. Speaker, not just that of Canada Post. The Corporation should publish its figures so that everybody can see for themselves what is going on.

IMMIGRATION

REFUGEE STATUS GRANTED TO TERRORIST IN 1977

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, recently Canadians have learned that another extremely dangerous terrorist was admitted to Canada in 1977. The individual from Argentina is presently serving a prison term for drug trafficking.

What is of major concern is that this individual was granted refugee status by the Refugee Appeal Board, when this body had in its possession the evidence which made this individual inadmissible to Canada.

This is not the first time that this Board has made decisions which may be detrimental to Canada. One wonders how many other individuals who could severely jeopardize the lives of innocent Canadians have been admitted to Canada.

The Minister should undertake a review of all cases which were considered to be high risk, but were given approval by the Refugee Board. Remember that the terrorists know no boundaries, and that Canadians have already experienced terrorist acts. The Air-India tragedy is a reasonable example.

With the Olympics now in progress and the economic conference slated for June, a review is urgent. The safety of Canadians must always be the primary concern of the Government.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SUPERMAILBOXES—OPPOSITION OF SCARBOROUGH CITY COUNCIL

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, today Scarborough City Council is standing up to Canada Post. It is saying no to the so-called supermailboxes in spite of implied threats of poor service.

Canadians want to know when the Government will stand up to Canada Post. We know that the Tory Government and Canada Post have embarked on a policy of eliminating door-to-door service in new areas. When will they turn to existing areas and eliminate service there? Are they building a case for eliminating door-to-door service in all urban areas? What happened to the concept of fairness? Why does one neighbourhood receive service while another does not? Why are senior citizens and handicapped people required to use these boxes rather than have mail delivered to their doors?

It is time for the Government to stand up to Canada Post rather than leaving the job to Scarborough City Council.

POLITICAL PARTIES

ROLE OF UNIVERSITY RECTOR

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to acquaint the House with a rather funny situation: Mr. Rémy Trudel, who is Dean of Quebec University in Abitibi-Témiscamingue, has officially joined the NDP ranks in anticipation of the forthcoming election.

Moreover, while still exercising his duties, Dean Trudel spends his time travelling everywhere in Quebec as the big whig responsible for recruiting candidates for the socialist party. He should resign his position as Dean in Rouyn-Noranda. What is he waiting for? Is he not in a conflict of interest situation, Mr. Speaker? In his position as Dean how could he objectively analyze the university assistance programs implemented by the Government?

Mr. Speaker, is Dean Trudel using his generous expense accounts to travel everywhere in Quebec sowing the seed of socialism in our province? I suggest the Quebec Government should examine the current status—an embarrassing one, to say the least—of the Dean of Quebec University in Abitibi-Témiscamingue. If he wants to fight against the Government of Quebec and the Government of Canada, he should give up to someone not politically involved his comfortable and well-paid position at the expense of Quebec taxpayers.

The House is aware that the NDP is a political party which operates at both provincial and federal levels at the same time. The Socialists who are Members of the NDP are not in a position to give anybody a lecture on conflict of interests and honesty.

HEALTH

STUDY SHOWING LEUKEMIA INCREASE IN PERSONS LIVING NEAR NUCLEAR INSTALLATIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, a British study conducted last summer reveals a higher incidence of leukemia and an increased number of leukemia-related deaths among children and young adults living near nuclear installations.

The National Cancer Institute in the United States announced that a similar study will be conducted there in the next nine months, to find any hot spots, or areas with an unusually large number of cancers.

A spokesman for Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, Mr. Mac Keillor, is reported to have said that no Canadian research is being undertaken, that the British study is outdated, and that it has been refuted by other studies. This statement is disturbing, considering the fact that the findings of the British study are significant enough for the U.S. National Cancer Institute to conduct a similar study. We therefore urge the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to wake up and launch such a study in Canada because we cannot afford any delay.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

BEEF CARCASSES—PRICES CHARGED BY PACKING HOUSES

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, in September, 1987, the federal Department of Agriculture changed the grading of beef carcasses so that a half inch of back fat lowered the grade from A1 to A2. Department meat inspectors have done a good job and have graded according to the new rules. It appears that the packing houses are taking advantage of both producers and consumers by charging retailers the same price for A1 and A2 beef carcasses.

• (1410)

The difference in price varies from five cents to eight cents per pound, or about $30 to $50 per animal. Packers do not pay for the hide, liver and other saleable parts of the animal. Surely the producers should get the benefit refunded to them if the meat packers are not going to pass this lower cost onto the consumers.

CRIMINAL CODE

APPLICATION TO AIDS CARRIERS ADVOCATED

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, Canadians have a long way to go yet before we know fully how to deal with the epidemic of AIDS. However, one thing is becoming clear. For a person who has AIDS or is knowingly a carrier of it, there should be a special duty to avoid communicating it to others.

In The Ottawa Citizen over the weekend, I read another story of a person with AIDS knowingly giving blood. I think it ought to be drawn to the attention of police departments across the country that criminal negligence is defined in the Criminal Code and well covers this type of situation in which wanton or reckless disregard for the lives and safety of other persons is shown. I would urge the police to use this section of the law to enforce a higher duty of responsibility on those who have AIDS or who are AIDS carriers than they presently seem disposed to use.

RAILWAYS

BRANCH LINE REHABILITATION PROGRAM—OMISSION OF WOOD MOUNTAIN SUBDIVISION

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, last Friday elements of the 1988-89 rail branch line rehabilitation program were announced. Unfortunately no mention was made of the Wood Mountain subdivision, a 65-mile CP line between Ogle and Mankota in southern Saskatchewan.

Elevators on this line have been handling some four million bushels of grain annually. The alternative involves trucking grain distances of 30 miles or more over difficult terrain.

Many past studies, including the Prairie Rail Action Committee's, have supported retention and upgrading of the Wood Mountain line, as have the grain companies and the railway. As part of the permanent rail network, users have been led to believe that upgrading to hopper car standards would continue, some $3.4 million already having been spent for this purpose.

Area residents cannot help but be concerned with what appears to be a change of plans concerning this line. They ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to review this entire matter and to consider reinstating the Wood Mountain subdivision in the 1988 rehab program.

NATIVE PEOPLES

SUBSTANDARD HOUSING CONDITIONS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, once again I am required to rise in the House to point out how the federal Government is neglecting its responsibilities to our native people. I have often risen in this place before to complain of the housing that our native people are offered by the federal Government. My constituents and I are fed up with these conditions and we demand that they cease.

Native people in northern Canada live in substandard housing because of rules set by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. These rules are entirely out of line with conditions in the North. They do not allow for the types of costs that occur in the North. The system does not offer the necessary flexibility to these isolated communities and there is simply not enough money available to correct the horrendous conditions that exist, or even to maintain what is already there.

Housing provided by the Department of Indian Affairs is deplorable, inadequate and a national disgrace. The backlog in needed houses ensures that the problem will not be solved in this century. Now is the time for action.

In Manitoba the provincial Government has been working hard to ensure that adequate housing is available to native people. Once again I call upon the federal Government to improve its commitment. It is time for the federal Government to act to correct this horrendous situation.

ETHNIC AFFAIRS

BLACK HISTORY MONTH—RECORD OF SERVICE TO CANADA

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, this month is Black History Month in North America. Many believe that blacks have been in Canada for only about 20 years. In fact the first blacks came to New France in 1628. Blacks were among the United Empire Loyalists who settled in Canada 200 years ago and they distinguished themselves in both the War of 1812 and the Upper Canada Rebellion. From 1820 to 1865, almost 50,000 fugitive slaves obtained their freedom in Canada by way of the famous underground railway.

The first black Canadian doctor was born in Toronto in 1837. A black Canadian woman published a newspaper in Chatham, Ontario, in 1850. A black Canadian served as a Toronto alderman for 13 consecutive years from 1894 to 1907, and a black Canadian lawyer was appointed a King's Counsel in 1910.

Today there are approximately 263,000 black Canadians. They did not just arrive. They have been Canadians for over 350 years and they continue to make an outstanding and growing contribution to our country.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LANGUAGE TEACHERS—GUARANTEED TIME FOR PREPARATION OF COURSES

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, Treasury Board officials insist that language teachers should give every week up to 37.5 hours of instruction, thereby denying them any time to prepare their classes. Such a situation does not exist anywhere else in this country. In fact, this is a repressive measure against a professional group which is much too visibly involved with spreading bilingualism within the Public Service. This is a largely Francophone group the members of which are mostly women.

The Government claims that it wants to save money! There is nothing to say against that, for bilingualism, like the Treasury Board itself, will never be cost efficient. The greatest benefit we can expect from them is a greater measure of justice in Public Service job accessibility to reflect national unity.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I would like to know when and how the Government intends to introduce legislation implementing the Prime Minister's trade deal with the United States. Last week representatives of President Reagan and leaders of the Congress agreed that American legislation on the deal would be drafted jointly by the administration and the Congress. Then in a letter from the U.S. trade representative and the Secretary of the Treasury to the leaders of the Congress dated February 17, the President's cabinet members said the following:

> Obviously, the President cannot make an absolute guarantee that he will be bound to legislation that has not yet been drafted, just as you cannot guarantee Congressional approval of such legislation.

It is therefore obvious that neither the administration nor the Congress knows yet what will be in the legislation. Can I have a commitment from the Prime Minister that he will not try to push legislation implementing that trade deal through the House at least until Canadians have had an opportunity to see what the administration and the United States Congress come up with?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that the Leader of the Opposition would have been eager for an opportunity to debate and oppose the legislation. Now he is apparently asking for some delay and that we not bring it forward. I suppose that would give an opportunity for someone to return from Washington to report back on the latest Liberal position in respect of this important trade matter.

I can tell my right hon. friend that the legislation appropriate to Canada is now being drafted and it will be tabled at an appropriate time.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, some of my colleagues indeed were in Washington last week getting more information from the Congress and the administration than we ever get from this Government.

PROPOSED U.S. OMNIBUS TRADE BILL

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we also learned that the American Congress is currently considering two versions of a massive omnibus Trade Bill that will have a dramatic effect on Canada. Nowhere in either version of this prospective legislation is there so much as a word exempting Canada from the protectionist provisions of that Bill.

Does the Prime Minister have a guarantee from the President or from the leaders of the Congress that Canada will be specifically exempted from the American omnibus trade legislation? If he does not, what is the point of proceeding with that deal and implementing it in the House of Commons when the country can be dramatically affected in a negative way by this omnibus trade legislation?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the predictions of cataclysmic events by the Leader of the Opposition very rarely occur, either predictions of economic growth or job creation in Canada. I suspect he will be equally off the mark in regard to trade.

We have our obligation, having concluded a sovereign agreement, to bring forward appropriate legislation, and we shall. The Americans have a similar agreement. It is my understanding that they shall do likewise,, and at an appropriate time my right hon. friend will be able to deal with the facts as opposed to speculation coming from one of his travelling salesmen in Washington.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is because we want to deal with facts that we would like to know what is in that legislation as it is negotiated by the Congress of the United States and the President. We will want to know whether Canada will be exempted from the omnibus trade legislation. Without that the trade deal will not be worth the paper it is printed on. The Prime Minister knows that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AMERICAN SUSCEPTIBILITIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, last November the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion committed the federal Government to establish a duty remission program for the textile industry.

Given the resolution adopted by the Conference of American Governors, now we know that the governors along with American officials and a number of American congressmen do not want the Canadian Government to help the Canadian textile industry because that will have an impact on the American industry.

Is the reason why we do not have a program to help our textile industry the fact that the Prime Minister is afraid to provoke a negative reaction on the part of the Americans?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should advise the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that the Government has a number of programs in place to help the clothing and textile industry. We have been in discussions with members of the industry which pre-date the signing of the trade agreement back in October. These discussions are continuing in ways that will help the industry retain and improve upon its competitive position. When there is need for further announcements those announcements will be made.

TEXTILE INDUSTRY—DUTY REMISSION PROGRAM

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Will he assure the House and the textile industry that the Government will go ahead and keep its promise to the industry to have a duty remission program to help it and its workers, even though going through with such a program will mean that the U.S. Congress will not approve the Government's trade deal?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I guess I can make the same comment as the Prime Minister has made. The cataclysmic, apocalyptic views of the House Leader of the Liberal Party are probably as well placed as those of his seat-mate. The Hon. Member should understand that there is provision within the free trade agreement for duty remission schemes.

As I indicated in my previous response, there have been discussions going on with the industry for a number of months, since well before October. Those discussions continue. When there is a need for an announcement to be made it will be made.

IMPLEMENTATION OF CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that even though the Government's trade agreement is not yet implemented our trade policies are already being made in Washington.

The majority report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade on the initial version of the trade deal, a committee with a majority of Conservative members, recommended to the Government that it not proceed to implement its trade deal with the United States unless the Government was absolutely certain that Canada would not be subjected to the omnibus Trade Bill which remains under consideration in the U.S. Congress.

Why is the Prime Minister unwilling to accept the clear recommendation of a committee with a majority of his own Members and to give an undertaking at this time that the Government will not proceed with legislation to implement this trade deal with the United States until we are absolutely certain that Canada will not be hit by this omnibus trade legislation?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that I have dealt with that question very specifically on a number of occasions. Both the Minister for International Trade, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade, and myself have answered it very carefully.

I know that my hon. friend would like the free trade agreement—and this is clearly consistent with the desires that he and his seat-mate were expressing in Washington—to run into some problems elsewhere so as to relieve the Liberal Party of the obligation of taking a position in regard to it. I can assure my hon. friend that he will not have that luxury. We will bring it in. He will be forced to stand up and to vote either for or against, and the Canadian people will hold him responsible.

TEXTILES

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—PROTECTION OF JOBS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. There are 86,000 workers in the textile sector, and 80 per cent of them are women. In keeping with an article in the Canada-U.S. agreement, the Government promised job protection to textile workers. Would the Prime Minister assure the House of Commons today that the Government intends to honour this specific commitment?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that that is really the same question. The Hon. Member is coming at it from a somewhat different direction than that of the Leader of the Opposition and his colleague, the House Leader. We have indicated quite clearly that we are continuing the discussions with the industry in helping it maintain and improve its competitive position and improve the ability of the industry to create jobs in Canada. Those discussions are continuing, and they involve a number of Ministers of the Government.

As I said in response to a previous question, when an announcement is ready to be made it will be made.

GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to pursue what the Minister has said and what he said earlier in answer to the Leader of the Opposition. He said earlier in Question Period that the Government had been negotiating a special arrangement before this deal was entered into. The Minister will know that since October the Government made a very specific proposal, one that the Canadian industry is well aware of, and about which the Minister who is directly responsible said in the House about two weeks ago is consistent with the terms of the agreement.

Since then, incredible as it may seem, it has been reported that the Canadian Ambassador in Washington has now joined with American Governors and a number of American Senators in urging Canada to scrap this protective measure for our workers in the textile industry.

I want to ask the Minister, who apparently is answering either for the Prime Minister or for the Minister for International Trade today, to confirm the report that the Canadian Ambassador has made this request. Will he assure the House that that request will be denied and that the Canadian Government will adhere to its original commitment to the textile workers?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have indicated quite clearly by including in the terms of the free trade agreement a provision which allows for duty remission schemes. That commitment is there, which is what I have indicated. A number of Ministers and myself are discussing it with the industry. It is a matter that is under discussion in order to try to improve and to assist the industry to maintain its competitive position and to create the jobs that both the Hon. Member and I are very much in favour of creating. Those discussions are continuing. As I have indicated, when there is a resolution of those discussions announcements will be made.

GOVERNMENT DISCUSSIONS WITH INDUSTRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is frequently quite forthright in his answers, whether one agrees with him or not. He does answer the questions. But he ignored two specific questions that I put to him.

First, will he confirm that the Canadian Ambassador in Washington has requested that the Government scrap its proposal, which proposal has been discussed or outlined in detail to the Canadian industry? Will he tell the House whether or not the Canadian Ambassador has done that?

Second, will he assure us that the specific proposal with respect to the duty remission scheme which has been discussed since October will be kept in place so that Canadian jobs in this industry will at least be protected in a way that is consistent with the accord that the Government has negotiated with the United States?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make it quite clear that what we will be doing will be consistent with both the spirit and the terms of the free trade agreement. The Hon. Member is attaching a good deal of precision to the discussions that have been going on. I should say to him that we have not reached a stage where there is that degree of precision. There are a range of things that are being discussed.

As I have indicated, when we have reached some resolution of these discussions, then there will be an announcement.

AIRPORTS

TORONTO INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—TERMINAL 3 PROJECT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister knows that major competing bidders on the Terminal 3 project at Toronto airport have raised serious questions about the fairness of the bidding process carried out by Transport Canada.

Both Ken Field of Bramalea Ltd., and James Bulloch of Cadillac Fairview have publicly raised questions about the $70 million in government loan guarantees made available to the successful bidder, Huang and Danczkay Ltd.

Given the serious nature of the questions that have been raised about the bidding process on a project worth $381 million, is the Minister prepared to put a freeze on negotiations to conclude a final contract with Huang and Danczkay pending a full investigation of the questions regarding the fairness of the bidding process carried out by Transport Canada?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I look at the same newspapers as the hon. gentleman, and I have not seen any serious questions raised about the procedure. The procedure was one of the most open and aboveboard ever used by any Government in Canada.

A committee of permanent civil servants headed by Mr. Warrick, the former manager of the Toronto airport, was in charge of the call of the proposals for the whole procedure. They made a recommendation. Four groups put in proposals, and they recommended what they said was the best proposal, after their three weeks of analysis.

Everyone was given the same chance to make a proposal and to bid. They came to me then and I approved their recommendation. I did not go against their recommendation. I did not try to overrule their recommendation. I approved their recommendation. They had very first-class advice from private consultants, the Bank of Montreal, Monenco Associates, and so on.

Mr. Tobin: CCI.

Mr. Crosbie: There have been no serious questions raised with me. There are no serious questions.

We have already gone before the House of Commons Standing Committee on Transport on December 17. The hon. gentleman was not there. This matter was discussed.

Mr. Tobin: I am not the critic.

Mr. Crosbie: I do not care if the hon. gentleman is the critic or not, I am just saying that he was not at that meeting. The matter has already been before the Standing Committee on Transport. We are quite prepared to go back. The hon. gentleman can give as much innuendo as he likes, and dig as much as he likes. He will find nothing in that decision that in any way can be attacked.

Ms. Copps: That's what Sirois said.

ALLEGATION MADE BY UNSUCCESSFUL BIDDERS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, John Lundrigan, a former Newfoundland Conservative MP; Chester Burt, a former aide to the Minister of Transport; Paul Curly, a former national director of the Conservative Party, and Frank Moores, a former Conservative Premier of Newfoundland, now with a well-known consulting company in that town, all have one thing in common: they all acted for or represented the successful bidder, Huang and Danczkay, the bidder that received this $381 million contract from the Minister's Department.

Given that not opposition Parties, but the chairman of Cadillac Fairview, and a senior executive of Bramalea Ltd. have stated that they did not have information that was available to the successful bidder, and given the seriousness of that allegation on a project worth one-third of a billon dollars, does the Minister of Transport not believe it to be prudent, responsible, and appropriate to put a freeze on concluding the final contract arrangements with Huang and Danczkay and to make public all of the information that was given to all four bidders as part of the tendering process? Why will he not do that?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what group, except from what I see in the paper, had who representing them, because it did not matter to me a fig who they had representing them.

I met with all the developers on May 7, 1987. I said, "Don't any of you make the serious mistake of attempting to have a lobbyist approach me or anyone connected with this project".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Well, you can go to the developers and ask them.

In addition to the personages that the hon. gentleman mentioned, Falconstar, for example, which was a losing bidder, is led by Donald Matthews, a former President of the Conservative Party. Imagine how the hon. gentleman would be gesticulating and going on with trumped up fury if this proposal had been awarded to Donald Matthews, President of the Progressive Conservative Party at one time. They had Public Affairs International representing them, a consulting company originally started by a group of Liberals. We do not go around attacking them and character assassinating them simply because they at one time were Liberals.

GOVERNMENT GUARANTEED LOANS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport on the same subject. When Mr. Warrick appeared before the Standing Committee on Transport on December 17, 1987, the question was asked:

> Are you telling me the firm that won is not supposed to receive any financial help from the government?

Mr. Warrick answered:

> Yes, sir. They are not getting anything from the Department of Transport—
> A total of about $4 million in capital works is all we have committed to, and that was the same for everybody.

I would like to ask the Minister, were all the four bidders, tenderers, or proposers made aware, before they submitted their proposals, that there would be government guaranteed loans available? Were they all told that, or not?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): That is certainly a very penetrating question, Mr. Speaker. The position is the following. Each developer, in the request for proposals that went out, was asked to deliver their financial plan. Each one of them requested certain comfort to be given to them in one way or another.

For example, here is one of the proposals that suggests that a pool of funds be created by an increase in the general terminal fees in all terminals in order to cross-subsidize the new terminal. We said no, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Tobin: It's not the same, John.

Mr. Crosbie: No, that was $5 million a year direct funds to them that the users would pay. It certainly was not the same. It was far worse.

Ms. Mitchell: That's what you get when you privatize.

Mr. Crosbie: Each developer asked for some form of comfort from the Government, and the loan guarantee arranged in this case was the least onerous. That is the professional opinion of the committee which I accepted, which Treasury Board accepted, which everyone associated with this has accepted, except perhaps some sore heads outside the House who did not win with their proposal and therefore go around behind people's backs making slanderous accusations.

POSITION OF DEPUTY MINISTER

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister if he would advise the House if the application by the Deputy Minister of Transport, Mr. Withers, for an exemption from the conflict of interest guidelines has been approved, and just exactly what are those exemptions?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, with respect to Mr. Ramsey Withers, this gentleman has just completed 40 years of highly distinguished service with the Government of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Chief of the Defence Staff, Deputy Minister of Transport for the last five or six years, the soul of honour and rectitude, but some people will stoop at nothing to try to get at the Government.

Mr. Benjamin: I just asked a question, that's all. What are you getting excited about?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Ramsey Withers has complied with every dot, comma, and full stop of the conflict of interest regulations. He had absolutely nothing to do with the decision with respect to the third terminal at Toronto airport.

Mr. Benjamin: That was not what I asked you.

Mr. Crosbie: He was not on the committee. They made the recommendation. I approved it, Treasury Board approved it, and he had nothing to do with Government Consultants Ltd. before that time.

Mr. Benjamin: Did he get an exemption?

Mr. Crosbie: He has complied, I am informed, with the conflict of interest rules.

I would vouch for Ramsey Withers lock, stock, and barrel, any day of the year.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

NATIONAL AUTOMOBILE POLICY

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. It relates to the troubled automobile industry, the largest industrial segment in our country.

Faced with a capacity of over-production in the near future, a decrease in sales to the United States under the Auto Pact, and the lack of a level playing field clearly setting out the rules of the game particularly between offshore manufacturers and North American manufacturers, may I ask the Minister when we might expect the national automobile policy which was promised to us before the end of December, 1987?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, many of the elements of the auto policy are already covered under the FTA. I mention here issues such as access to the U.S. market, the future of the Auto Pact, the future of duty remission programs, the common rule of origin, bilateral tariffs, and used cars. Those issues which still have to be dealt with are under consideration.

In the coming months, after consulting with the industry, I will be able to bring forth a comprehensive auto policy.

AIRPORTS

TORONTO INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—TERMINAL 3 PROJECT—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO UNSUCCESSFUL BIDDER

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to go back, with the Minister of Transport, to the so-called "soreheads" and "poor losers" who did not win the contract. One of them, Mr. Ken Field, is quoted as saying, far from what the Minister said in one of his answers earlier today about everyone being given the same chance, that he was told that this type of financial assistance, the $70 million loan guarantee, would absolutely not be available, yet it was to the winning bidder.

The simple question for the Minister is this. Is that correct? Was in fact a financial consideration available to the winning bidder about which the other three were not informed? That is the only question.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not know, but perhaps I do not make myself clear. In the request for proposals each developer was asked to put in his financial plan. In their submissions they each asked for some type of financial comfort.

The Wang and Danetsky group asked for a form of guarantee that would protect them against some unexpected loss because of general economic depression or something like that, flight landings at Toronto airport, which would mean that the project could not be viable, for a guarantee in that connection. That is what they asked for. Another group asked for a pooling of funds that I just mentioned and certain other things.

They were each invited to put in their financial plan. Mr. Field will have to defend for himself what he thought or did not think. That is in all the documents.

Tomorrow afternoon in Toronto, the committee in charge of this project is having a full session with the press or anybody interested, if they are really seriously interested, to go over the whole thing in complete detail. They will do that before the standing committee of the House of Commons.

Everyone was treated fairly and equally. Some were smarter than others. Some asked for a less onerous financial provision than others did, and the winning bid was one of those—was the least onerous.

FINANCIAL COMFORT QUERY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, when the Government decided that it was prepared to put some financial comfort on the table, were the other bidders, other than the successful bidder, told of the financial comfort that was available? Surely the Minister would be prepared to stand up and indicate clearly his answer, which seems to be no.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this arrangement, which is somewhat complicated as one might imagine with a 300-odd million dollar project, has been vetted not only by this committee of permanent civil servants, but by their financial consultants, the Bank of Montreal, Touche Ross, and so on.

Mr. Kaplan: It is a good deal. I am not saying that it is not a good deal.

Mr. Crosbie: Then it went through my Department. It was approved by me, which I think should be noted. I did not approve it just lightly. Then it went to Treasury Board, where they went through it with a fine-tooth comb. They came to the conclusion that this was the best offer and that this guarantee was reasonable.

The guarantee is only to come into effect if there is a sudden, tremendous drop in landings of aircraft at Toronto airport. All of the last two years indicates that there is to be a tremendous increase, so the guarantee is never going to be needed, but it is there to give comfort to those who lend money to the project.

It was the least onerous of the four, as confirmed by Treasury Board, as well as by this committee. What more? Why do you keep asking?

TELEFILM CANADA

FORMER EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR'S RESIGNATION LETTER

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. It concerns the whole question of political interference by her Department.

The first item I would like to address concerns the serious allegations raised by the former Executive Director of Telefilm. Mr. Pearson's letter of resignation paints a disturbing picture of a vital cultural agency rife with infighting and political witch-hunts carried out by the Tory appointed Chairman.

What is the Minister now doing to put a stop to the gutting of this important cultural agency? Is she prepared to establish an independent inquiry to get to the bottom of this mess?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned the letter from the former Executive Director of Telefilm Canada. Perhaps I should just read from his letter, because he said: "I would wish to convey to you my sincerest appreciation for your support". Not once, have you, nor your senior staff, ever interfered in any decision. or decision-making process related to the administration of moneys".

He goes on to say: "I must also note for the record the distinguished contribution of your party in the area of film and television production. From September 1984, the Progressive Conservative government has lived up to their commitments to strengthen Canadian production with dedication and effort."

That is from the letter of the former Executive Director of Telefilm Canada.

Mr. de Jong: We could certainly look at other parts of the letter as well. I assume the Minister will be tabling the full letter at three o'clock.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

TREATMENT OF DECISIONS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. It concerns another case of political interference by her Department.

The February 20 edition of The Financial Post details another example. Apparently Department of Communications officials, acting with the full knowledge of the Minister, have worked closely with Bell Canada Enterprises since 1986 to find ways to get around a CRTC ruling.

The Minister has now sought to overturn more CRTC rulings in 20 months—

Mr. Speaker: I know the Hon. Member has a question, which I think could be asked without reading extensively from the newspaper.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, given the fact that the Minister has interfered with CRTC decisions more in 20 months than did all her predecessors in the last 20 years, my question is a very simple one. When will the Government and her Ministry stop interfering with CRTC decisions?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I think you will know that legislation provides for the Government to review, to adhere to, or to change decisions of the CRTC. That is in the legislation.

Any Government has that right. I may say, because the Hon. Member raised a question about Call-Net the other day, that once again we have reconfirmed the decision of the CRTC.

TRADE

EXPORT OF CEDAR PRODUCTS—LOOPHOLE IN REGULATION

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade. It relates to the shake and shingle industry in my riding.

As a result of a request I made in the House of the Secretary of State for External Affairs on May 26, 1986, regarding a prohibition on the export of raw cedar logs, bolts, blocks, and blanks, the Minister for International Trade brought in an Order in Council in June, 1986.

Today, we find that there is a legal loophole in the Order in Council and that there is a serious threat to jobs in the shake and shingle industry in British Columbia.

My question for the Parliamentary Secretary is this. What action is being taken on this very important matter?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been brought to the attention of the Government. I can tell the Hon. Member that steps have been taken to ensure that the B.C. Government and federal controls are updated to control this practice.

These measures should be in place very shortly. What has happened is that some exporters have found the loophole in the Order in Council and are exporting blanks and boards to the United States and, in doing so, are also exporting jobs. We are stopping this practice immediately.

Mr. St. Germain: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mount Royal.

TELEFILM CANADA

FINANCIAL CONDITION OF CORPORATION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, at Telefilm Canada there is a crisis of leadership, a crisis of credibility, and a crisis in financing. It is rather strange. Film producers are having trouble—

Mr. Speaker: I have just refused a request for a supplementary question from a government member, and I would ask the Hon. Member who has now been recognized not to be overly long on the preamble and to put the question.

Mrs. Finestone: Film producers are having trouble securing financing, while the Government has had no trouble raising and increasing the salary of the newly appointed Chairman, Mr. Sirois, from $13,300 to $64,225.

• (1450)

Last October the Minister received a detailed letter from Peter Pearson addressing the direct crisis as a result of intrusion into the administration, programs and spending by Mr. Sirois, the appointed new Chairman.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mrs. Finestone: My question to the Minister is—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Finestone: Is it true that she did not read the letter, as her staff has alleged? Was she at least aware of what the Executive Director, Mr. Pearson, was alleging with respect to gross interference? Didn't she think it was important to see—

Mr. Speaker: It would seem that the Hon. Member has a list of questions. I will take the ones that she has put and invite the Hon. Minister to respond.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, certainly I saw the signed letter of resignation from Mr. Pearson. I responded to it and issued a press release at the same time.

May I also say that I agree with the Hon. Member that there was financial difficulty in Telefilm last year. We moved quickly to do something about it. In July of last year, Telefilm reported that it felt it would not spend its funds to the tune of $53 million. Three months later the Executive Director reported that Telefilm was overcommitted to the tune of $48 million. I may say it was because of that that the auditors were brought in, a new interim management team was put in place, and for the first time cash flow management systems have been put in place. I am very happy to report to you, Mr. Speaker, that fiscal stability and fiscal management have been restored to Telefilm.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, that is a direct whitewash.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mrs. Finestone: The Standing Committee on Communications and Culture has proved that those statements about the $48 million were inaccurate. The Minister knows that, and the Minister has been trying to cover up.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member can put her question without getting into an argument. Please put the question.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, the question is pretty obvious, seeing how on September 30 of last year there was—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister put an end to the rumours which are creating financial risk to this industry and creating a black mark against the name of someone who did not earn that black mark? Will she call for an investigation into the Telefilm financing, or does she plan to be judge and jury to the whole thing?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Of course, Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I would ever convince this Member but I would like to quote from a letter from the interim Executive Director of Telefilm Canada dated February 19, which reads:

[Translation]

—you will certainly be glad to learn that essentially most of the financial situation of the corporation will now be on a sound basis, and that management have been able to resume normal operations. This is why we are confident we will be able to complete with success the necessary review and restoration program so as to end the current fiscal year without unduly affecting next year's appropriations.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

DRUG PRICE INCREASES IN ONTARIO

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Last year when the Government changed the Patent Act to give multinational drug companies greater patent protection, the Minister assured Canadians and this House that drug prices would not be allowed to increase at a rapid rate. We now know that in Ontario alone since January 1 some 1,100 drugs have increased in price at an unacceptable rate.

What assurance will the Minister give to Canada's elderly, the sick and the disabled, that that kind of price gouging will not be permitted by the Government?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows or should know, there is absolutely nothing in Bill C-22 that could cause the price increase in drugs. He is well aware of that. Even the most severe critics were aware of that. His attempt to show that these price increases in Ontario somehow relate to Bill C-22 is an exercise in mischief, as he well knows.

I should also point out that it is within the constitutional authority of the Government of Ontario to prevent those price increases from going through if it chooses.

I should also point out that 55 per cent of those price increases that were higher than the cost of living were for generic drugs, not for brand name drugs. In addition, if the New Democratic Party had not filibustered Bill C-22, the Prices Review Board would now be in place exercising downward pressure—

Mr. Speaker: A short supplemental. The Hon. Member.

PROTECTION OF CONSUMERS AND MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, what we have heard is just a load of nonsense. The Minister knows that we told the Government during the debate that there was nothing in the Bill to control prices yet the Minister did nothing about it.

Since it is the same brand name manufacturers which are now producing generic drugs to drive Canadian manufacturers out of business, what will the Government do to protect not only Canadian consumers but Canadian manufacturers and Canadian jobs?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's first question was that prices have risen too high and that that is costing consumers. His second question that drug manufacturers are selling drugs at prices too low, and that that is harming generic companies. That was the substance of the Hon. Member's second question.

If the Hon. Member is suggesting that some company or companies are engaged in predatory pricing then he ought to refer the matter to the director of the Combines Investigation Branch because that is an illegal activity.

An Hon. Member: That is your job.

Mr. Andre: If the Member is making that accusation, let him make that accusation of criminal activity and let him defend it.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

ESCAPES BY PAROLEES FROM HALF-WAY HOUSES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It concerns the serious problems with parole supervision in half-way houses.

The Minister knows that another dangerous inmate escaped from a half-way house on the weekend. That makes four dangerous inmates who have escaped from half-way houses in the last few weeks. Will the Minister immediately order that all dangerous inmates be returned to prison pending a full public inquiry into the operations of the National Parole Board and half-way houses?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member well knows, immediately following the first incident I ordered an inquiry under Section 12 of the Penitentiaries Act. This independent inquiry is being chaired by Miss Jane Pepino, a lawyer from Toronto, who is also chairperson of the Metro Toronto Police Commission.

I understand that the inquiry has been completed and the report is presently being typed. I expect that it will be given to me shortly and I will act on it in a very expeditious manner.

REQUEST THAT DANGEROUS PAROLEES BE RETURNED TO PRISON

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General knows that that particular inquiry is looking into one particular case involving inmate Stanton.

In view of the other escapes from half-way houses in Metropolitan Toronto, indeed, throughout the country, will the Minister immediately order all dangerous inmates—and I am speaking only of the dangerous ones—to be returned to prison pending a full public inquiry into the operations of the National Parole Board and all half-way houses in Canada, in order to ensure the safety and security of residents?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the Hon. Member that I too am very concerned about the safety of residents in the area and generally citizens of Canada.

The terms of inquiry that were given to Miss Pepino's committee are extremely broad. They do not deal just with the escape from a particular half-way house but deal with a very broad range of matters, including the management of half-way homes and the kinds of people who should be there. I expect to receive that report this week and will act upon it very expeditiously.

• (1500)

Mr. Speaker: Given the time, I will ask the Hon. Member for Vancouver East to ask a single question, followed by the Hon. Member for York East.

ABORTION

ACCESS TO SERVICES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Health. The B.C. Government has adopted procedures resulting in unequal access to abortion services in that province. The medical profession predicts an increase in infection, haemorrhaging, and even death, as a result. As well, the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women has called on the Government to ensure that all women have access to abortion and reproductive health services. In view of all that, is the Minister now prepared to admit that the Canada Health Act is being violated by such unequal access, and what is he prepared to do about it?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asked me questions about this issue earlier and my answer remains the same. I say to her that she should cite not only one province with respect to the present situation. One could look at a whole range of provincial responses both before the January 28 decision and after.

The other point I would make, as I said earlier, is that members of the Cabinet are looking at various options—

Ms. Mitchell: Waffling again, Jake.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): We are not waffling. I think we should take the kind of responsible approach the Government is taking—

Ms. Mitchell: No guts.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —rather than the position she takes which I understand is also opposed by some members of her own caucus.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

VIOLENT OFFENDERS—RETENTION IN PRISON

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General and concerns escapes from half-way houses.

One year ago last summer Parliament was recalled in order to pass a law to allow the National Parole Board to ensure that violent offenders could be kept in prison for the full length of their sentences. On four separate occasions recently violent offenders have escaped from half-way houses in Toronto. Will the Minister tell this House why Parliament was recalled one year ago if the law is virtually meaningless, and how can I and other Canadians be expected to have any confidence whatsoever in the National Parole Board?

Mr. Thacker: The NDP and the Liberals filibustered it.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that indeed the provisions of Bill C-67 are being enforced. Approximately 350 inmates have been reviewed and approximately 25 per cent have been gated, to use the phrase, and kept in prison. Another 25 per cent have been let out on one-chance supervision. The provisions are being enforced and it is my belief that it is working extremely well.

POINT OF ORDER

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF QUOTED DOCUMENT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, in response to a question I addressed to the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) she quoted from a letter and I wonder if she is prepared to table it.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I was about to follow up the point by offering to table the letter in the House. I am glad to do so.

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government and the amendment of Mr. Garneau (p. 12860) and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Cassidy (p. 12883).

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at 1.37 p.m.—

—there were eight minutes left in the question and comment period following the speech by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

[English]

I will now recognize Hon. Members who wish to continue the question and comment period.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I was replying to a question.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) has the floor.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I was about to reply to a question when we broke for lunch. I am not sure that the Hon. Member is here now, but he asked that I address the question of Cominco with regard to my comments on taxes.

Budget statistics show that corporate profits grew faster than any other economic indicator in 1987. They were up by 25.6 per cent over the previous year. Corporate taxes went up by only 15 per cent. At the same time, while personal income was creeping up, taxes on personal income rose by a full 16 per cent. I then pointed out to my hon. colleague that in 1986 Alcan Aluminum received a tax credit from the Government rather than paying taxes on profits totalling $220 million. I then referred to other companies, including Brascan, Hees International, Power Financial, Xerox Canada, Total Petroleum, Wardair and PWA. The list goes on.

I assume from the question that my hon. friend was saying that Cominco made a profit during the years I referred to. Assuming the company made a profit, then I assume he is saying as well that they paid no taxes on that profit. I have no information in that regard and if my hon. friend does I wish he would table it in the House. If that is what he is saying, is he also saying that companies that make profits ought to pay no taxes, that that is the Conservative policy simply because those companies provide some employment?

I am wondering if he is aware of the experience in South America over the last little while with respect to the production of nickel. While nickel prices are soaring, the company exploiting the resource in a South American country right now has said no to taxes. We give you jobs, they say, and that is enough. Is that the standard of corporate behaviour that my Conservative colleague is recommending for Canada? Does he expect us to get down on our knees to corporations just because they provide employment?

I just want to point out again that I did not mention Cominco, but I have mentioned other corporations that made millions of dollars and profits and paid no income tax while at the same time the burden of taxes on ordinary Canadians is increasing.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to my colleague. I suggested to him that the income tax mess on the corporate side started back in 1972 or 1973 when a Liberal minority Government, in bed with the NDP, developed policies based on a set of principles which have caused us increasing difficulty and deficits and so on.

My question is, how does the Hon. Member reconcile the attitude of his Party in Question Period today on the textile issue, which is consistent with Shirley Carr and the CLC's position, with his Party's policies on external affairs dealing with the same issue? How does he reconcile the contradiction?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I must say that my friend has failed to elaborate a contradiction. He has certainly left me, and I am sure most of those watching the debate today, completely baffled. We are consistent in our position of speaking up for ordinary Canadians. We are saying that Canadian jobs should not be put at risk because the Conservatives want a platform for the next election, the Mulroney trade deal. We are saying that while ordinary Canadian families are hit hard by tax increases, large corporations which make millions of dollars in profits should not go scot-free. We are speaking to the interests of ordinary Canadians. I ask the Hon. Member to do the same thing.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, it is nice to have such confirmation of the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). We have been saying in our fiscal plan since 1984 that previous government policies, supported by his Party, produced an undue tax burden on individuals and far too little on corporations. This Budget addresses that concern. It moves us one step closer to commercial corporations paying a fair share of tax.

I am absolutely astonished, given previous comments made by this Member of the House, that he has not read his own Party's policy documents relating to external affairs and the repercussions and implications for Canadian jobs of the position his Party is taking, specifically in the textile industry.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I am, of course, happy that my colleague on the other side of the House is taking the time to read our policy statements on economic initiatives. I am sure that if he does that consistently he will be a much better informed Member of Parliament and may even make a positive contribution to this House.

I want to make it clear that the Budget which the Government brought down, as thin as it was and as do-nothing a Budget as it was, still managed to raise taxes to ordinary Canadians. In fact, because of the trade deal the Government negotiated with the United States and because of the loss of roughly $500 million of tariff revenues, the Government had to raise sales taxes in the Budget.

The Government is placing greater and greater burdens on the backs of ordinary Canadians. Ordinary Canadians are saying that enough is enough. They want the Government to stop putting the burden on their backs and to develop a fair taxation system. They want the Government to stop letting its friends get off scott-free, to stop letting the large corporations which make millions of dollars of profit get off with paying no income tax.

Even President Ronald Reagan has had the courage to impose a minimum income tax on large corporations. Why can a Canadian Government not assure Canadians that profitable corporations will pay some tax and that all of the burden will not be put on the backs of ordinary Canadian families?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I would feel much better about the level of debate if the Member opposite would acknowledge that there will be a minimum tax on banks, as an example, something which his support of the Liberal Party over 15 or 20 years did not accomplish. Of course individual Canadians through income tax and sales tax are paying more tax. After all, after three and a half years of Conservative Government 1.25 million more Canadians have jobs today and are in a position to pay tax and buy things. Of course that produces more tax. Leave us in power for another 10 years and we will have two million or three million more Canadians with jobs in a position to buy things and pay tax and the whole country will be better off.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow a one-minute rebuttal.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I resent this broad generalization that we support the Liberal Party. What kind of garbage is this? It is the Member's Party that supported the changes in the Bank Act moved by the Liberal Party. It is the Liberal Party which supports the Conservative Party on changes in the Bank Act. Stop this tomfoolery of saying that the NDP supports the Liberal Party. That simply is not true.

While the Member takes credit for jobs, let him also take credit for the fact that the weekly income earned from jobs is dropping and people are earning less. Let him also acknowledge the fact that taxes under his Government to ordinary middle class families have increased.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In that spirit of debate, questions and comments are now terminated.

[Translation]

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I am standing in my place today to address certain issues which were omitted by the Minister of Finance in his Budget, more specifically with regard to the homeless and those who live in inadequate housing. I have risen on several occasions in this House to remind the government that in 1987, the International Year of the Homeless, over 100 000 people have slept in the streets in this fine country of ours. This situation is unacceptable in a country as rich as Canada and one where winters are so harsh.

Since the right hon. leader of the official Opposition has made me housing critic, I have been monitoring the results of policies put forward by this government, mainly because this Government had promised so much before the 1984 election. I have before me, Mr. Speaker, the Government's campaign commitment as stated in the manual for Tory candidates entitled "Pocket Politics '84", with regard to those who are the most in need in our country. In the area of social programs, the Conservative Government promised assistance to Canadians who are unable to meet their own needs. The Government's intentions were made even more interesting by the fact that it announced at the same time a new orientation of its efforts in the area of housing, to assist the poorest and the neediest. According to the new policies announced in 1985, the Government regrouped planning activities at the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation under three different headings: market housing, social housing and housing assistance. Actually, the Government also used this opportunity to transfer to provinces the administration of some programs, under the pretext that program delivery would be improved.

We in the Liberal Party always have had reservations as to the wisdom of that move. Indeed, my colleague for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) always questioned the move, and rightly so. What the Government did is not simply an administrative decision to improve program delivery, but as we now realize, it abdicated its responsibility as a Federal Government to exercize leadership, and to determine criteria and policies in the face of problems of a national nature such as the homeless.

The Government also imposed budgetary cut back on the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation, to avoid what the Conservatives called wastage.

Before going any further, I would like to indicate it is the opinion of the Liberal Party that no further cuts should be made to the Corporation's operating budget. It is our view that any additional cut would jeopardize the Corporation's ability to fulfill its basic mandate.

This Budget is important also in that the Minister of Finance already informed the House of his intention to implement his famous tax reform. The reform's second stage could impact negatively on home building. New provisions for a yearly tax on land developers will lead to increased costs that will have to be borne by tenants and new home buyers. This is the view of a number of groups such as the Canadian Home Builders' Association who are concerned with that new tax, and more still by the way it will be implemented. At any rate, the Standing Committee on tax reform already has been made aware of that problem. This is an example of a counter-productive move by the Government.

This Budget is a clear statement that the Conservative vision of finance is loaded. Because we now see that the Government has not reached its goal of helping the most in need.

Let us pore over the results together. The International Year of Shelter for the Homeless was meant first to awaken us to that still serious problem in developing countries, but it had a boomerang effect in making us aware of the phenomenon in developed countries, Canada included, unfortunately. The Government's response, in 1987, was to organize studies and conferences on that phenomenon. That was done in September 1987. Six months later the Government has not yet solved the problem. It could at least show leadership and bring all parties around the same table, so they could acknowledge the report and make sure the federal Government will find someone to look after the homeless. The federal Government must take the lead and identify policies, responsibilities, the various levels of government and the necessary funding of various parties in that issue.

In the United States, two examples show that despite a budgetary deficit, it is still possible to put into place measures to solve the problem of the homeless. One example comes from the Government of the United States and the other from the State of Massachusetts. First, in the remarks of Congressman Lyndy Boggs before the National Social Service Conference of the American Salvation Army, we read the following, and I quote:

[English]

Federal level of response to homelessness has had an important and probably critical boost from the energetic urging of the new Speaker of the House of Representatives— representative Jim Wright of Texas. In the first days of the 100th Congress in January, he visited a shelter for homeless men in the District of Columbia, met with Mitch Snyder, the well known advocate for the homeless, and spoke out with urgency and compassion about the need to act quickly in support of a bill that would provide $500 million for shelters and an additional measure providing emergency food aid.

The House passed that Bill, H.R. 558, on March 5, 1987, by a vote of 264 to 121.

[Translation]

Everything is possible to those determined enough who also consider housing as a necessity of life. The Americans went even further. There is the following in that same speech, and I quote:

[English]

This Bill represents the fact that the federal government does have a moral and legal obligation to feed, clothe, and house homeless people who are in every community across this country both urban and rural.

[Translation]

That obligation does not seem to exist in Canada. There is more. The Chairman of the Banking Committee, Mr. St. Germain, added, and I quote:

[English]

—this is only a preliminary response and an emergency one at that. The failure of the Administration and the Congress to continue to provide the absolutely essential housing assistance to low and moderate income people has directly resulted in the homeless situation that we see in all our communities.

[Translation]

A few Tory Members must be thinking that this poor Liberal Member is making up stories and does not understand the need for deficit reduction. This same need for deficit reduction argument is also invoked in the United States. Fortunately for our neighbors South of the border, on the housing issue, good sense prevails, and we can understand that it is sometime necessary to forget about budgetary deficit when dealing with Canadian men and women who have no roofs over their heads.

Lyndy Boggs also stated:

[English]

The program cut-backs in recent years due to the federal budget deficit and policies of the current Administration have, I am afraid, contributed to the problem of homelessness. Other problems such as economic distress in certain parts of the country as well as widespread de-institutionalization of the mentally ill have also played a part in creating the problem we now face.

[Translation]

Do you believe that the situation in Canada is quite different? It would be unwise to extrapolate and say: Such being the case in the United States, such must be the case also in Canada. There are several things in both countries which are different, including our social security systems which are quite superior to those in existence in the United States.

What should be emphasized here is the initiative taken by the House of Representatives which has clearly established the American administration's responsibility for homeless people in the United States, declaring at the same time: No matter the extent of our deficit, it is more important to provide a roof over the head of each American citizen.

The experience carried out in Massachussett is also quite convincing, because it demonstrates what can be done where there is a political will.

The Governor of that State had established a committee made up of people involved in providing shelters for the homeless to determine first how to provide emergency shelters to the homeless, and second how to develop strategies aimed at ensuring the social rehabilitation of the homeless in this New England State.

In the United States, there is, on the one hand, a federal administration which is faced with a huge deficit and, on the other, the State of Massachussett's Government which has no deficit at all. Both Government have decided to deal, together with the interested parties, with the problem of the homeless and to do so openly.

In Canada, during the International Year of the Shelter for the Homeless, various conferences were held, and funds for short term or emergency facilities were collected.

But if we do not address the long term problem, these measures will be nothing but band-aids which will not solve the problem. I am aware that it is difficult to address this problem, but nobody expects miracles. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) missed a fine opportunity to demonstrate to us that his Government has the political will to remedy the situation.

I do not question the need for the Government to reduce the deficit, but I feel there are items in the Budget which are more important than others, including the need for a home. The Government should behave like every ordinary citizen who makes cuts in his personal budget because of dicreased revenues. Such a citizen would reasonably cut such items as entertainment; he would put little or no money in his saving account; he would not change his car every year and would postpone his trip down South.

However, he would not forego the amounts needed for food, clothing and housing. He would not cut back on health care either since he has access to health insurance anywhere in Canada. He might cut back on food, find a less expensive appartment, pospone the purchase of luxury clothing items, but he would always make sure of having the strict minimum. But what does the Canadian Government do?

It says that, for all practical purposes, the budgetary deficit has to be brought down by all means available, and this includes ignoring the fact that 100 000 Canadians are homeless. The Government also ignores all the problems related to that fact.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government is discriminating against the homeless. When our fellow citizens in Alberta were hit by a tornado and a few communities were razed to the ground, we immediately took action to help those who needed it the most.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is there any difference between losing your home because of a tornado and losing it because of a lay-off, family violence, a series of misfortunes or your inability to cope with them?

The result is the same: You find yourself without a home.

Why this lack of interest for the homeless? This issue is extremely important. There is no discrimination against the sick. If someone has spent his entire life smoking and having activities which were harmful to his health, will he be refused treatment because he was not careful? Of course not. When it comes to meeting basic needs, there can be no discrimination.

Yet, in its Budget, the Government hides behind budgetary cut-backs to justify what cannot be justified, its abandonment of poor Canadians whose only home is the street. They cannot even receive their welfare cheques as they do not have an address.

Mr. Speaker, is the Government as hard on itself as on the homeless? Apparently not. It applies a double standard. If we add everything up, we see the true face of this Government. If you add the $1.6 billion used to bail out the CCB and Northland Bank, the cost of the Estey Commission, the cost incurred in moving the jail to Port Cartier and, worst of all, the judicial expenses for the defence of a previous Regional Development Minister who keeps pretending he is innocent despite the evidence to the contrary, you readily realize that the Government is not working for the poor. On the contrary, the cuts made at the expense of the needy are used to finance the Government's gigantic blunders.

In fact, every social program in the housing area is under attack. Among the most striking needs is housing for the native peoples. In a press release commenting the last Budget, George Erasmus, head of the First Nations Assembly, stated that the non-statutary cuts of $300 million were geared to native people programs. These cuts did not affect the Defence nor the External Affairs budgets, which were exempted. Chief Erasmus took this opportunity to underline the fact that with a submarine costing $1 billion, the First Nations could build 16,333 houses, while creating 200,000 full time jobs on the reserves and house 68,000 persons there.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, where do we place our priorities at a time of budget restraints? Is it to put a roof over the head of our fellow Canadians or to give us the luxury of a nuclear submarines fleet? I realize that while this comparison may look ridiculous to some of our colleagues, it points to the main question: Where are the true priorities of this Government that claims it wants to help those who need it most?

Now, who are the homeless? Who do we deprive of a roof over their head and of the possibility of reintegrating our society? They are mothers such as Mrs. Heather Walker who was forced to place her two daughters with Toronto's Children Aid Society before going to the St-Michael Hospital to get psychiatric help. Mrs. Walker, a 30 years old woman who received no financial support from her husband, was living with her two little daughters in a 7 by 14 foot bachelor apartment. She was paying $400 a month for that bachelor furnished only with a small desk, a chair and two small tables. The place was infested to such a point that cockroaches would crawl over the little girls' body while they were asleep at night on the floor. One can imagine the bad effect of such an environment on the health of those two children, one of which has now developed suicidal tendencies. Unable to afford a healthy home large enough for their needs and at an affordable rate, this family is now materially apart, mentally affected and on the verge of becoming homeless. And their story is one of the many paths to a homeless situation.

Let me remind the House that 22 percent of the homeless in Canada are women in a difficult situation. They are either old, head of a single parent family or sick. I would also point out that many homeless are persons with psychiatric problems who were released from institution for all sorts of good common sense administrative reasons which were to save us large amounts of money. But we only forgot one thing, that is to provide proper accommodations for them. Now they are left alone and distraught on the street.

Last Fall, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) talked about the case of a homeless woman who was attacked in the Jeanne-Mance Park in Montreal during the night, while sleeping. A few days later, she died as a result of her wounds.

Another example mentioned to the house by my colleague the Hon. Member for Bourassa was the case of Kenneth Ryan, 42 years old, who lived in Halifax and became homeless as a result of difficulties which he could not solve. He too was found dead early September, also victim of an attack apparently.

The homeless are at the mercy of everything. This is an aspect that we, Hon. Members, in the safety of our homes, cannot realize. Without fixed address, there is no welfare cheque, there are no walls to protect you from the wind, from the cold, from the rain or there is even less protection from individuals who will shamelessly rob you of the little you own.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) stressed in a statement he made in this House on September 15 last that 57 percent of the homeless in the province of Manitoba were natives.

The Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Grondin) also mentioned the case of young homeless people. According to a study about young drifters in Montreal made in 1985, in the 18 to 30 age group, one in two had previously lived in a foster home or in an institution; 80.3 percent do not have any contacts with their families and are generally faced with two serious problems: alcohol and drug abuse as well as mental illnesses; 23 percent of those studied had already been hospitalized in psychiatric wards. There are many suicide attempts, and it is of course very difficult to keep a job in those conditions.

In an article published in the Mail Star, we learned of the plight of two teenagers without a home, Bill, 15 and Eric, 16.

They were fleeing from family problems and were lured by a possible job in a large center. We are told that Bill has not been sleeping for 36 hours and talks now with difficulty, which reveals extreme fatigue. Examples are numerous. All across the country, each case is more dramatic than the other.

Sometimes, government decisions have contributed to the problem, the renovation of popular neighbourhoods of Vancouver for Expo 1987 being a real example of that. Sometimes, people have had a hard life and could not or would not cope with it. In either case... Mr. Speaker, you are signalling me that my time is over. I will conclude momentarily.

There are, clearly, in the problem of the homeless, things that the federal Government can change. Homeless people and those who help them are not expecting miracles and are not asking much. They want the Government to show leadership in the coordination of policies and solutions, in bringing together, at the same table, all the people involved with this problem. We have to start talking to one another.

It is important to allow all the participants— municipalities, provincial governments, voluntary agencies, the homeless themselves—to seek and find the problems that can be solved and to do it as quickly as possible, before they become even more serious than they already are.

On January 25, 1987, the Liberal Caucus had the privilege to hear Theodore Sorensen who, for 11 years, wrote the speeches of John F. Kennedy. During the last 30 years, Mr. Sorensen had the opportunity to meet most American and Canadian leaders. That night he was asked to elaborate on what is leadership in a free society. He said that to be a good leader you did not have to be a good manager anymore, but also that it was not enough to be at the top to be a leader. He said, and I quote:

• (1530)

[English]

Effective political leadership is not a science but an art, requiring not calculation but judgment, not accurate measurements but wise choices.

[Translation]

I wonder, today, whether it is wise to ignore the problem of the homeless and I urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to think about that problem. I wonder why the homeless were ignored.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Since there are no more questions or comments, debate.

• (1540)

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, today we are discussing amendments that have been put forward by members of the New Democratic Party and the Official Opposition. The amendment put forward to the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the motion which is before the House put by the Official Opposition, states that we have failed to put forward a credible plan to deal with the national debt. It also states that we have failed to specify a Canadian approach for dealing with the instabilities of the international monetary system. They regret this. I point out that this is part of their preamble.

The amendment put forward by the NDP condemns the Government for introducing a Budget that ignores the real economic needs of the country and for the elimination of costly tax breaks. Members of that Party state that the Government should be condemned for maintaining a policy of high interest rates begun by previous Liberal Governments and for failing to introduce a system of universal child care.

I am very pleased to be able to speak in the House this afternoon. I welcome the opportunity to speak in support of the Budget recently tabled in the House by the Minister of Finance. This Budget clearly indicates that we are on the right track with regard to securing the economic renewal of Canada, a promise that was made in 1984 by our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Members on this side of the House are proud of the statistics that prove that in three and a half years of solid fiscal management the Government has turned our economy around and has put Canada into the top spot among major industrialized countries in terms of economic growth and jobs. As Canadians, members of the Opposition should also welcome this news.

In our Agenda for Economic Renewal tabled in November of 1984 the Minister of Finance stated, "First, we must put our own fiscal house in order so that we can limit and ultimately reverse the massive build-up in public debt and the damaging impact this has on confidence and growth." It is obvious that we have followed through with this principle.

In the four years ending in 1984-85 the deficit rose steadily from $14.9 billion to $38.3 billion. This was an increase of 150 per cent in just three years. In contrast, in 1988-89, the budgetary deficit will have been reduced for the fourth consecutive year, declining to $28.9 billion. In 1989-90 the budgetary deficit will be down to $28.6 billion. Relative to the size of the economy, the deficit will have been cut in half over this five-year period. We are still not satisfied, however, with what the deficit is going to be. There is much work that has to be done.

Of equal significance is the number of jobs that have been created in Canada as a result of increased confidence in the economy. Since the election of 1984 more than 1.1 million jobs have come about, and the unemployment rate has dropped to 8.1 per cent, the lowest level since September, 1981.

In my Province of British Columbia five times as many jobs have been created in the 40 months since we were elected than were created in total between the 1980 and the 1984 elections. The facts are clear—the Canadian economy has not looked this healthy in years.

Continuing on this path, the Budget includes a $300 million reduction in non-statutory spending by government Departments beginning in 1989-90. This will allow the Government to lower the deficit mainly through the control of expenditures.

In the most recent report of the Auditor General, Kenneth Dye stated that there have been significant improvements made in financial controls. He stated that the Government now has systems and procedures that provide essential financial controls. With expenditures by our federal Government exceeding $100 billion a year, protecting the public purse demands that the correct amounts be paid out to the intended recipients at the right time, he said. "A decade ago the Auditor General could provide no such assurance that this was happening. Today, I can do so," he stated.

The Budget reviews the fact that the average annual rate of increase in program spending has been cut to 3.5 per cent, less than the rate of inflation. When this is compared with the four fiscal years ending in 1984-85, when government spending increased at an average annual rate of 14 per cent, it is evident that we are on the right track.

From international comparisons of deficits, debt and interest payments it can be seen that there has been extremely promising news in controlling our deficit, particularly when we compare our figures with those of other OECD countries. Relative to the other OECD countries Canada has undertaken substantial actions to reduce its deficit in the last three years. The improvement in Canada's total government structural balance since 1985 exceeds that of the other countries. Our total government deficit as a proportion of the Gross Domestic Product in 1987 remained above the average of the G-7 countries.

At the federal level of government Canada has made extensive progress in reducing the deficit to GDP ratio. By 1988 this ratio is expected to be roughly equal to the G-7 average, in comparison to 1985 when the ratio was over two percentage points higher in Canada.

The word is out and the news is good. Canada's position in the international economic sphere is dynamic and well respected. An advertisement in The Sunday Times of London stated, for example:

> Toronto: The fifth largest stockmarket in the world. For years it has been closed to overseas investors, but now, in the post-Liberal era, it is opening up and changes in political and economic conditions are now combining to create some of the most exciting growth opportunities in the world.

The Government has worked vigorously for a new round of multilateral trade negotiations under the GATT. Our trade agreement with the United States is a major building block in strategy to continue to strengthen our competitive position. As our largest trading partner and with a population of over 250 million, as compared to ours of just over 25 million, it is evident that access to this market by our goods and services will boost our economy and help to create a tremendous number of jobs in many sectors of the economy.

Our NDP friends have said that we are not doing anything about child care. Nothing could be further from the truth. I might add that the amendments to the Income Tax Act are proposed to implement the taxation aspects of our Government's new policy on child care. The maximum child care expense deduction will be increased from $2,000 to $4,000 for each eligible child who is under seven at the end of the year or who has a severe and prolonged mental or physical impairment. In addition, the over-all maximum limit of $8,000 per taxpayer for child care expense deductions will be abolished.

With respect to the refundable child tax credits, as proposed in the tax reform, the maximum amount of this credit for 1988 is $559 per child. A new $200 supplement in respect of children six years and under for families with low and middle incomes, to recognize the contribution made by the parent who cares for the child at home, will be added to the refundable child tax credit, some $100 for the 1988 tax year and some $200 for subsequent years.

Prepayment of the refundable tax credit was limited to families whose net income did not exceed $15,000. Proposed amendments will increase this income level to a rate that is two-thirds of the threshold level. This means that for 1988 the threshold for basic credit is $24,090, and two-thirds of that is $16,060. Anyone earning less than this amount of net income will receive the payment. In other words, the level is being raised by $1,060.

For 1988 the prepayment will be $100, but in subsequent years the prepayment will include two-thirds of the $200 supplement. Also, in 1990 and thereafter the amount of the $200 supplement will be adjusted to reflect increases in the Consumer Price Index greater than three per cent.

When we look at child care strategy we see that we are committed to spending $5.4 billion over seven years. We estimate that this will create at least 200,000 new child care spaces.

The proposed Canada child care legislation is a new cost-sharing program with the provinces to create 200,000 new, quality child care spaces. It will provide cost sharing for both non-profit and commercial child care. We are proposing this legislation to facilitate and to promote rapid development in the non-profit sector. It will be cost-shared to the tune of 75 per cent federal and 25 per cent provincial.

Details of the federal-provincial financial arrangements will be negotiated with provincial and territorial Governments. The federal Government will work with the provinces to ensure the development and implementation of the necessary standards for quality in a jointly funded child care system.

Under the heading of new tax assistance to families with young children, over 1.3 million families with pre-school aged children will receive increased benefits through changes to the child tax credit or the child care expense deduction. For families with receipted child care expenses there is an increased tax deduction of up to $4,000 per child for children six years and under or with special care needs. For low and middle-income families there is a phased-in $200 per year supplement to the child tax credit for children six and under. For children over six years the tax deduction stays the same at $2,000 per year. The limit of $8,000 on allowable deductions per family will be removed.

There also is a special initiatives fund in the child care strategy. There is an estimated $100 million to promote research and development in child care, for example, in rural communities and for special projects that should be tried out.

Why did the Government establish this child care strategy? It is because child care is a priority issue for the Government and for Canadians. The Government promised Canadians a comprehensive child care system that would meet the needs of our families.

Last year I sat on the Special Committee on Child Care which had a mandate to examine the issue of child care and provide the Government with an indication of the needs of Canadian families.

This strategy could lead to as many as 40,000 jobs in the child care field itself and offer substantial training opportunities for child care workers.

I wish to take another few minutes to deal with cutting down loopholes in the tax system. I feel that the opposition Parties do the Canadian people a disservice when they fail to acknowledge the various things that have already been cut out. For instance, over the past three years a number of measures have been introduced to protect the integrity of personal and corporate tax systems. Some of those measures include the following.

The Government has put an end to the abuse of the scientific research tax credit, which cost the economy billions of dollars. The Government has eliminated tax shelters based on investments in yachts and recreational vehicles; eliminated the use of trusts to distribute investment income tax free; terminated the use of partnerships in corporate takeovers to increase tax deductions; introduced a minimum tax for high income individuals; and introduced measures which significantly restrict the ability of corporations to transfer losses and unused deductions.

There are still things that need to be done, but we are on the right track. Furthermore, the Government has said that there are income tax remission orders, but in an effort to enhance the accountability of those remission orders the Government has undertaken to do the following in the current fiscal year. It has undertaken to table in the House all income tax remission orders exceeding $20 million. The Government has also undertaken to provide periodic reports to Parliament of all orders and to publish all orders in the The Canada Gazette. This Government is not afraid to go to the people for accountability.

This afternoon it is my pleasure to say that I endorse what the Finance Minister has given to this House by way of his Budget address, and I deplore the two amendments put forward by the opposition Parties.

Ms. Mitchell: As my colleague will know, I was listening particularly to his comments on child care in which we both have a great interest. The Hon. Member referred to the special initiative fund for child care for research and development. I wish to ask him, in all sincerity, if he is not disappointed that this is not in the Budget. Can he explain why it is not in the Budget? Since it is completely within federal jurisdiction, why is it not possible to have that money there now in order that we can see some action? In that manner, all the groups across the country from which we heard witnesses would not feel so disappointed that nothing tangible is happening to help get some things going in the child care field. This would allow some special projects. For example, the Hon. Member mentioned some in rural areas, disabled children, multicultural needs, northern developments and native communities that we know have such a need.

The Hon. Member talks as if 200,000 spaces over seven years would fulfil the need. When we looked at that very closely, our projections indicated that, even under the present situation with no intervention, there would be that many created. It is really a very small amount. It looks as if it could be several years in the future before there is any federal funding for beginning those 200,000 new day care spaces.

Is the Hon. Member not disappointed that there has not been any action in helping to create the type of supply that we heard over and over again was so urgently needed, and which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised Canadians approximately three years ago?

Mr. Belsher: I welcome the question from the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). I know that she has a caring heart and wants to see the most done. However, I would point out to the Hon. Member that on December 1, 1987, the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) tabled his strategy report. He tabled a report of what he would be working with with each of the provinces. Those negotiations are presently taking place.

The Hon. Member is stating that, because there are no specific lines in this Budget that deal with child care, that that report is being ignored. Nothing could be further from the truth. That is the point that I am trying to get across.

Ms. Mitchell: Let's see the proof of it.

Mr. Belsher: The Hon. Member wants to see the money. We will be seeing the money come Wednesday when the spending Estimates are tabled.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare has made a commitment to the House. He has put in progress the line of communications of what he will be working with with each of the provinces and the territories. The Hon. Member wants to see a line that states that $100 million will be attached to the special initiatives. That will come in time. Some of those will happen in the present year of 1988.

I can tell the Hon. Member that this program is well in hand. The tax measures themselves have already been introduced to the House for part of that $5.4 billion, and the remaining part of it will take place on a gradual scale. This is taking place.

I say to the Hon. Member that the opposition Parties do a disservice when they say to the Canadian public that because the Budget did not have a line that spelled that out, suddenly it is not being looked after. There was money in the Budget for growth, and there will be more expenditures than there were last year. I can assure the Hon. Member that she will see results in this year.

Mr. Gagliano: I wish to take this opportunity to ask a question of the Hon. Member. Quite a few times in his speech he stated that the Government is on the right track. He also mentioned that the Canadian economy has not looked healthier for years. We still have an annual deficit close to $30 billion. Our national debt is 60 per cent higher than it was in 1984. We all agree that during the last six years there was a tremendous economic recovery. One does not have to be a statistician to add that something is wrong here. The economy was good for six years. Every Minister of the Government stands up in the House and says, "We brought the interest rate down". That is good. It means that it costs us less to finance our national debt. However, why is that not reflected in the reduction of the annual deficit? Every expert, after February 10, agreed that if there had not been a change in accounting methods, the annual deficit would have been $32 billion, as it was on March 31, 1984, just before the election.

We have had economic recovery for six years, and the national debt has gone up by 60 per cent. The national deficit, taking into account what I call creative accounting—

Mr. Boudria: Creative bookkeeping.

Mr. Gagliano: Yes, creative bookkeeping. We must remember that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said last year that instead of remitting payroll deductions once a month they must be remitted every two weeks, which automatically provided $1 billion. It did not change anything, but naturally the deficit looked good at the first of the year.

Could the Hon. Member tell the House what the Government did? I do not want him to say that they created jobs. Yes, they created jobs, but how many jobs did Canadians lose during that period of time? It is very nice to say that jobs have been created, but in 1974 there were 1.5 million unemployed people in Canada and today there are still 1.2 million unemployed. This means that with the economic boom, only 300,000 jobs have been created, but they are saying that they created a million. I mean, two and two make four. Could we have a more concrete explanation from the Hon. Member?

Mr. Belsher: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member makes much ado about there still being one million people unemployed. I acknowledge that one million people are still unemployed, but the point is that one million more people are working now than were working three and a half years ago.

Mr. Gagliano: They are not on the unemployment list. That is why.

Mr. Belsher: No, the Hon. Member is trying to work the figures to suit his own means. There are more people working now than there were in 1984. Some 80 per cent of the additional money being collected through the income tax system is from more people being employed and people having higher wages.

We started from a point where we had a deficit of $38 billion.

Mr. Boudria: No, sir.

Mr. Belsher: That was the 1984-85 year.

Mr. Boudria: You were in power most of that year.

Mr. Belsher: The Hon. Member will find—

Mr. Andre: It was based upon Lalonde's Budget.

Mr. Belsher: The Budget had been tabled many months before we came to power. It was already in place.

Cutting expenditures is a difficult proposition. Nonetheless, we have been doing it. On every target the Minister of Finance has tabled in the House since the fall of 1984 he has delivered.

The Hon. Member was quite right when he said that the accumulated deficit is still growing. Yes, it is, but it is growing at a much lower rate than it was. By the middle of the 1990s our Minister of Finance is projecting that we will reach a balanced Budget. The carrying charges on the accumulated deficit will be about $30 billion this year.

Everything the Minister of Finance has mentioned in the House with regard to setting targets, he has accomplished. I am willing to side with a Minister of Finance who has already delivered five successive times. He has risen in the House and has given targets on which he has already delivered.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have been in this place enough years and have been through enough Budgets to know that faces might change but the direction of Budgets and the priorities in them have not.

My colleagues and I have called this a Budget of lost opportunities. What would happen if one were to grant all the claims of the Government and to say that all its claims were accurate, appropriate, and everything else? What would happen if one were to say that, even though it stretches credulity? First we would have to take a look at what is happening in the economy across the country and at everything that needs to be done as a necessary investment on behalf of the people of the country and the country as a whole. We would also have to look at what has really happened over the last several years. We say that this is a Budget of lost opportunities because the Government has missed a golden chance to do that which needs to be done.

Everyone agrees that we need more employment and more revenues for the national Treasury. However, this administration and the previous one, at least in their last two years in office, were so hypnotized by the deficit that they proceeded to give it priority over anything else in the nation. They felt that a supreme effort had to be made to reduce the deficit.

We have been accused of being big spenders, debt loaders, and so forth. However, we must look at the history of my Party whenever it has been in government. We have always operated on the basis that every Government goes into debt most of the time, but we have always said—and we still say it—that a nation has different kinds of debts. There is constructive debt, what we have always called self-liquidating debt. There is destructive debt, what we call dead weight debt. Mr. Speaker, I would not want you to think for a moment, seeing as where you come from, that I am expounding some kind of Social Credit ideology. Far be it for me to say anything that would give credibility to that unlamented philosophy, but the fact of the matter is that when a nation goes into debt, the methods it uses to pay off those debts indicate its priorities.

Let us talk about the lost opportunities in the Budget. The Government had the opportunity to provide at least half a billion dollars a year more in housing of all kinds, even if it meant increased borrowings, which would have been constructive debt. As I have said repeatedly in the House over a number of years, in every city in the nation there is a waiting list as long as one's arm of people who need hospital beds, chronic care beds, and home care assistance. There are thousands of older homes of senior citizens that need fixing. There is a need for low income and co-operative housing. When one looks at housing, one realizes that it goes through the entire economy, all the way from the forest industry to the final forest products which are used in homes. It does not matter whether it is in the plumbing industry, the electrical industry or in all the other things that go into housing. The tens of thousands of people you put to work will start paying taxes. That is why we call it a self-liquidating debt. That kind of an investment—it is not a debt really but an investment—not only repays itself in a very short period of time, in two or three years, but it is a constructive kind of way to borrow and expend moneys on behalf of the nation as a whole.

In environment, we could put 100,000 young people to work starting yesterday with a few hundred million dollars a year just cleaning up our air and water. We have no right, none of us from any Party, as a nation to leave the kind of mess we are leaving for others to clean up. The longer we take to clean it up, the more it will cost. Here is a constructive kind of debt not only to clean up the environment but which will put people to work who will pay taxes.

Let me come to municipal works. There are tens of thousands of needed necessary projects in the plans and desires of municipalities all over Canada, urban and rural. I do not mean luxury hotels and shopping centres; I mean necessary and needed public works, some of which are so dilapidated and worn out that they are becoming a disgrace in our communities. That is an investment, Mr. Speaker. It is not a loss or a straight out expenditure. Again, the federal authorities should be providing the leadership and getting the provinces to join in. A consortium of three levels of Government could put another 100,000 or 200,000 people to work who pay taxes, and the debt will liquidate itself. So much of our debt—as my hon. friend mentioned when he was speaking about the billions of dollars we have to put out just to service the present debt—is what I call a dead-weight debt, that is, moneys that are paid in interest charges.

In my own area of transportation, we need to invest $500 million to $1 billion per year over the next six or seven years. I think of urban transportation. I think of improvements to the St. Lawrence Seaway. I think of what is not happening and should be, and I think particularly about western Canada, but the same is true all over Canada in our railway industry. I was at a meeting of some 250 to 300 rural people, mostly farmers and their wives in Minton, Saskatchewan, a community in the riding of my good friend, the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson), who were fed up and angry about two railway branch lines that the Government has still not finished rehabilitating, even though those lines are guaranteed in the basic network to the year 2000. Some $11 million was spent a few years ago getting the job started, and another $14 million is needed to finish it. That puts a lot of people to work. It also lives up to a commitment by the Parliament of Canada, this Government and the previous Government, on railway branch lines in Canada, particularly in western Canada. In order for our railway operations to move faster and more efficiently, we have to deal with a mundane subject like the tens of thousands of level crossings where several hundred people get killed and a few thousand get injured each year. A few hundred millions of dollars in investment is needed there. It is an investment, not an expense. The fact that this Government and the previous Government have thrown hundreds of millions of dollars away, down the drain, refurbishing old worn out rolling stock for VIA Rail is terrible.

The Conservatives talk about bringing some sound business practices into Government. If you were to go to a banker and say, "I am going to start up this railway passenger corporation. I have no money. The youngest piece of equipment is 25 years old and some of it is 40 or 50 years old. I want some money to fix up the equipment and to operate a national passenger train service", every banker in this country would laugh you out of his office. But what does the Government do? It refuses to order new equipment. Some of that equipment is to be refurbished for the third time since 1977. Talking about throwing good money after bad and talk about terrible business practices, that has to be it. I would not hire the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to run my chicken coop. If he calls that a sound business practice the way VIA Rail has been treated, then he does not deserve the portfolio of the Minister of Finance.

We have heard all the talk about employment and job creation and I have listened to government Members saying how many more jobs there are than there were four or five years ago. That is nice. But the Government would be in an even worse condition if that were not the case. Still, when you look at the whole country, unemployment in eight of the provinces is worse now than it was in 1984.

Mr. Redway: It is not. Be honest.

Mr. Benjamin: I think the Government and the Minister of Finance have to be reminded that there is more to Canada than Toronto and parts of southern Ontario. When you look at the different regions of this country, the provinces and the territories, and what has happened to unemployment in those areas, these fellows have nothing to brag about.

The other thing is that we need to lower the interest rate immediately by at least 1 per cent. As far as I am concerned, I don't particularly care what the value of the Canadian dollar is compared to the U.S. dollar. In fact, I hope the Canadian dollar goes down to 65 cents or 70 cents versus the U.S. dollar. I would follow the practices of Mr. Pearson and Mr. Diefenbaker. They slapped on foreign exchange controls, and hundreds of millions of dollars were not moving over the Canadian and United States border overnight for someone to make a fast buck on foreign exchange speculation. We had foreign exchange controls during the Second World War, the Korean War, in the middle 1950s, and in 1961, and we can have them again.

Mr. Andre: And they failed.

Mr. Benjamin: We can lower our interest rate, and if people who make a profit in Canada are not prepared to invest in Canada, then we should not let them ship the money out. It is as simple as that. If the country is good enough to make a profit in, it is good enough to invest in. This running off to other parts of the world is not what I call good citizenship.

This brings me to another item. The Government needs more revenues to reduce the deficit. I will repeat for about the twelfth time that there is a good, neat way to get some revenue, would you believe, of at least $3 billion a year? The amount of deferred corporation taxes on the books of Canada now is approaching $40 billion, spelled with a "b" as in Benjamin dollars. If you were to charge even a modest 8 per cent interest, which is lower than the bank rate, on those deferred taxes—

Mr. Redway: What would happen to unemployment in your riding if you did?

Mr. Benjamin: —you would not only pick up an extra $3 billion in revenue, you would be surprised how fast outfits like Inco, Canadian Pacific, General Electric and Bell Canada, all of whom owe $2 billion or more to the people of Canada which they will never pay, would start paying those taxes back.

Mr. Redway: They would be laying people off.

Mr. Benjamin: It is an interest-free loan, and I do not know how other Canadians can get an interest-free loan when they want to buy a home, start up a business, or keep their farm going.

The theory was that if you allowed these corporations to defer taxes they would reinvest that money in fixing up their plant, increasing production and creating more jobs. Great theory. We started deferring corporate taxes in the early 1950s, I think, during the Korean War, and we got lots of investment. Look at International Nickel and Canadian Pacific. They invested all right. They invested in Guatemala, Australia, Indonesia, and lots of other places. Oh, yes! If the Government is so anxious about the deficit, this is an area where it can raise some revenue.

The whole thrust of this Budget, the philosophy behind it and of every Budget I have seen in this place, particularly over the last five years, and most particularly since 1984, is what I call the bottom line syndrome; the so-called market forces and free enterprise principles; the market-place should govern. All that has done, as far as I can see, is to appeal to greed, selfishness, and mediocrity. It is the philosophy, imported from south of the 49th parallel, of: What is in it for me? How many fast bucks can I make and the heck with everyone else. If I can make a buck, I do not care. That is the philosophy behind this Budget and the four others before it.

Mr. Oberle: Oh, you have that all wrong. That is Bob White.

Mr. Benjamin: They talk about bringing business ethics to government. What these Tories have never learned is that you cannot bring business ethics into government. Look at all the trouble they got themselves into with their so-called business ethics. A lot of businesses have ethics they have not even used yet, especially the good ones. The ones they do use may not be illegal but they are the kind of ethics a back alley tomcat would use.

In a nation with all the needs I referred to earlier in housing, transportation, the environment, and municipal works, just those four areas alone, we still have tens of thousands of people lining up at food banks. When I was a kid they were called soup kitchens. Now some Tory wants to get up and tell me how great things are! Like R. B. Bennett and "prosperity is just around the corner". Really, it is a disgrace and a blot on this nation. Given the fact that tens of thousands of people are lining up at food banks and thousands of people do not have a home, we have no business sitting around here patting ourselves on the back, the Government or the Opposition. Let us get a fair tax system.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), when he was Leader of the Opposition, said on television to my leader, talking about a fair tax system: "You're right, Ed". That is what he said. We are still waiting. We have a system so intrinsically unfair that it will allow tens of thousands of profitable corporations to avoid paying taxes, and that surely means some kind of political chicanery, free enterprise robbery, and a betrayal of our nationhood. It is nothing less than that. If the Government does not put a stop to it, the day will come when another Government will. The people are not going to take that kind of nonsense any more. They do not deserve that kind of treatment, that kind of unfairness and lack of integrity and honesty, which is the opposite of what they thought they were going to get when they elected the Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I was most interested in the Hon. Member's comments, particularly with respect to the deficit and his feeling that more money should be spent rather than that an effort be made to reduce the deficit. I happen to have read an article in one of today's papers, The Toronto Star.

Mr. Boudria: An excellent newspaper.

Mr. Redway: That is right. The article is written by an economist by the name of Mr. Arthur Donner. To the best of my knowledge he has never been a great fan of this Government. I think I heard the Hon. Member and his leader quoting Mr. Donner with great vigour on occasion.

Mr. Benjamin: Never heard of him.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Donner has some interesting things to say and I would just like to read two or three of those comments and ask the Hon. Member a question.

First, Mr. Donner says that while most economists believe the Government should not need to balance its books in any particular year, nevertheless it should be able to do so over the longer term. He goes on to say that despite tax reform—and I think the Hon. Member was talking about a fairer system of taxes—Canada continues to have an extensive structural or non-cyclical deficit built into the system. That does not involve the question of putting people back to work and paying taxes and reducing the deficit. What that means is that there is just too much money being spent in relation to potential income.

Mr. Donner goes on and to say that the Canadian Government has gone about as far as it can go in controlling discretionary spending. If the structural deficit is to shrink further it will require additional taxes, perhaps via the soon-to-be-introduced national sales tax or via a reduction in transfer payments to provincial Governments or individuals. Nevertheless, he says, the structural or non-cyclical component of the deficit remains quite large. This issue will be on the political agenda of whatever Party wins the next federal election.

Bearing in mind that the Hon. Member seems to think his Party may very well win the next federal election—

Mr. Boudria: Don't exaggerate.

Mr. Redway: —I would like to ask him whether or not he truly believes that the way to reduce that structural deficit, which is going to be on the agenda of whatever Party forms the next Government, is either to call in all those deferred corporate taxes or else nationalize a bank in accordance with NDP policy.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member quotes a Mr. Donner. I never heard of him before.

Mr. Redway: I am shocked. He is a well-known economist.

Mr. Benjamin: The fact that he does so proves my case. He made reference to balancing the Budget over the longer term.

Mr. Redway: How long is your term?

Mr. Benjamin: We agree with that. I want to recite a little bit of history for my hon. friend.

• (1630)

In Saskatchewan we took over a Government that was bankrupt from a Liberal administration and before that a Tory administration. It was absolutely bankrupt and had a debt which we were never going to be able to get out of. We increased the debt in the first four years of office from 1944 to 1948. We increased the debt and took electricity to 60,000 farms. We brought in hospitalization and medicare. We rebuilt the whole highway system. We built hospitals and schools. We borrowed the money. We cancelled the seed grain debts and the farm relief debts and we put the people of Saskatchewan to work. By 1952 we had balanced Budgets and we had balanced Budgets every year thereafter. That was a bankrupt province.

We will have to clean up that mess for the third time. The Liberals got back in in 1964 and we got back in in 1971. We had to clean that mess up again. Now the Tories got us in debt in spades in Saskatchewan to the tune of $2 billion.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the Member who just made a very eloquent speech. He was sort of getting carried away at the end but I want to congratulate him on his speech.

My question pertains to rural Canada. I invite the Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Miss Bourgault) to pay attention because we will ask questions later. The Province of Saskatchewan has the highest concentration of rural residents of any province in the country. What does the Member think of the five-cent-per-litre or twenty-three-cent-per-gallon tax increase on gasoline since 1984? People living in rural communities, including those in my riding, in western Canada, and in the riding of Argenteuil—Papineau, have to pay the gasoline tax. There is no TTC, no Metro, no OC Transpo or any such method of transportation in the rural communities. In order to get to work or to go to the doctor, whether you are a farmer or anyone else, you have to pay the tax when the fuel is used for a motor vehicle driven on the road.

Could the Member also comment on the tax on rural Canada which is also called the tax on long distance phone calls? In rural areas across Canada in order to phone the doctor, the farm machinery dealer and so on, one has to make long distance phone calls. This unprecedented tax on free speech is now in the order of 10 per cent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) will have one minute to respond.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, one minute is a lot for the Chair to ask of me. I have always thought that sales taxes were mostly in the jurisdiction of the provinces and the municipalities. There has been a fair amount of invasion by the federal authority. Although we have always had some federal sales taxes and excise taxes at the manufacturers' level we are now into sales taxes at the retail level by the federal authority. Surely that is an area in which the provinces and municipalities need funding for roads, streets, and other things which they must build and maintain. I would personally rather see an export tax on the export of energy resources from Canada.

Mr. Boudria: You can't do that with free trade.

Mr. Benjamin: That has been sold out as well, but that would seem to me a proper place. They are our resources that are worth so much to us. That is an area in which revenue could be picked up.

There is a vast difference, not so much in what the taxes are but in what they are for. If the Government expended the revenues from a sales tax on gasoline on rebuilding the TransCanada Highway or providing toll free ferry services on the East and West Coasts and the nation as a whole shared in the cost of transportation, I would see some point in it. If federal taxes on gasoline were being spent on transportation by way of roads and ferry services one could forgive the national Government. However, the Government taxes gasoline, not for those services but to reduce the deficit and pacify the Yankees while we all pay.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, when you were a boy did your mother ever give you advice? I will bet she did, Mr. Speaker. My mother used to give me advice too.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Not enough.

Mr. Redway: When I was a boy she used to give me advice, and even later on she used to give me a lot of advice. I always listened carefully to what she had to say. I do not know what sort of advice your mother gave you when you were a boy, Mr. Speaker, but I will never forget one of the things that my mother said to me. She said that I should never, never accept the job of Finance Minister of Canada if it were ever offered to me.

She said that because she honestly believed that if I became the Finance Minister of this country I would be very much disliked. Actually, she used a somewhat stronger word than that and that is because that is the way she felt about it, as did her friends and most other people.

She was not talking, of course, about our present Finance Minister. She was thinking of some of the former ones such as Mr. J. L. Ilsley, Mr. Douglas Abbott, and Mr. Walter Harris, who in our household was known as "Six-buck Harris". Those are the sorts of Finance Ministers about whom my mother was thinking when she gave me that advice. She was not thinking about the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) because she did not know him. She passed away before he became the Minister of Finance.

It is interesting that, in spite of those comments which my mother made to me, which have always stuck in my mind, the present Minister of Finance seems to hold a great deal of respect in this country, unlike so many of his predecessors. That is in spite of the fact that he has now been the Minister of Finance for three and a half years. As you will recall, he brought down an Economic Statement in November, 1984. He brought down a Budget in February, 1985, a Budget in February, 1986, another Budget in February, 1987, and a Budget in this year, 1988. That is four Budgets by my arithmetic. There has been the Economic Statement and four Budgets. On top of that he brought out a White Paper on tax reform and an actual tax reform package.

Normally that sort of thing done by one person in the job of Finance Minister would get a lot of people upset. With all those shots that he has had at the taxpayers of Canada, if my mother's advice was correct, just about everyone in this country would be hopping up and down mad at our Finance Minister by this time. However, that is not the case. In spite of all that, he is still a very highly respected person. Daily we read fine comments about him by all sorts of commentators. As a matter of fact, just over the noon hour my French teacher had me read some passages from the Quebec press, en francais, and some fine things were said about our Minister of Finance. That suggests to me that there is something different about the present Minister of Finance from the kinds of Finance Ministers we have had in the past.

That is also quite surprising when one considers the problems that faced the Minister of Finance when he came into office. He had to deal with an economic situation in September, 1984, in which unemployment was extremely high.

I recall the time when I was campaigning during and before the 1984 election, knocking virtually on every door in my constituency. If there was one thing that struck me more than anything else, it was that virtually everyone at every door I knocked was touched in some way by unemployment. There was either someone in the household itself who was unemployed, or a relative, neighbour or friend who was unemployed. Virtually everyone to whom I spoke when I campaigned throughout 1983 and 1984, was touched by the economic recession which was its worst since the Great Depression of the 1930s.

Since September, 1984, there has been a very substantial change. I need not remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the unemployment rate across the country has fallen very substantially, from some 12 per cent down to 8.1 per cent. While I am concerned about the economic situation in Canada as a whole, I suppose it is quite natural that I be more concerned about my constituency where we have gone from a dreadful unemployment situation which approached that of the Great Depression to a condition of virtual full employment. The unemployment rate in my constituency in Metro Toronto is around 4 per cent and perhaps lower. Traditionally, economists have said that an unemployment rate of around that figure is virtually full employment, because there are always people who change jobs no matter how good the economic times.

That situation of virtual full employment in my constituency in Metropolitan Toronto is quite evident when one visits any of the businesses or looks in any of the store windows. Inevitably one finds help wanted signs in those businesses or sees help wanted advertisements in the papers throughout the area.

I do not suggest for a moment that this is a general condition across Canada, but it is a very substantial step forward and one for which I think the Government can take an enormous amount of credit.

This situation has not developed as a result of the Government creating jobs in itself. It has been brought about by the creation of a climate in which the private sector can create those jobs. In his address the Minister touched on a number of reasons why the private sector has been able to create those jobs. He referred to the deregulation that has taken place in energy, transportation, and financial services. He referred to the new Competition Act, modernizing our combines investigation laws that had not really been dramatically changed for some 20 or 30 years. The Government brought in the new competition laws, which again helped to set the climate for creating jobs and bringing about that dramatic change in the unemployment situation.

In addition, there has been privatization of many of the Crown corporations and undertakings. During the weekend we heard about problems in Manitoba where the Crown corporation administering automobile insurance has been accused of not operating fairly or properly. People are saying that this proves that Governments really should get out of the business of being in business and should leave that to the private sector. If that is the case under an NDP Government in Manitoba, it makes sense that the privatization that has taken place so far has also helped stimulate the economy.

Another area which has helped to set the climate for an improved economic situation is the change in investment policy through Investment Canada. We are looking forward to the tax reform package that the Minister of Finance presented to the House a few months ago. That is one aspect of the economic situation that has changed dramatically as a result of the policies of the Government and the Minister of Finance.

Inflation is another consideration. Prior to the 1984 election there was galloping inflation. During my days of municipal Government at that time, inflation was rising dramatically. I recall that we had to contemplate paying inflation bonuses to our employees to make up for that inflationary rate because we knew that they could not afford to exist on the wage rates they were being paid before that inflationary rate suddenly started to take off.

I recall that when we wanted to give an inflationary bonus to unionized workers in our municipality there was a great problem with management just giving that inflationary bonus without actually negotiating with the union. The unions were upset that management should be giving a raise to their members without actually having had a say in that as well. This is what happened prior to 1984 during that dramatic period of wildly escalating inflation.

The situation has changed since the Government has been in office. While inflation certainly has not disappeared, it has become stable, at a greatly lower rate compared to what it was in the years prior to 1984. We now have the promise of the Canada-U.S. trade agreement which will help to hold down prices and the inflation rate. For the first time a federal Government is implementing a positive policy that will deal with inflation and help to hold down prices. This is something for which people on fixed incomes have been crying for years.

I constantly receive calls and letters from senior citizens in my constituency complaining about even a modest increase in the inflationary rate we have now as compared to that in the early 1980s. I get these letters and complaints all the time. Now for the first time we have a Government which is taking some positive initiative to counteract that inflation rate through the free trade agreement.

We have heard in the House this afternoon about what the deficit situation was like prior to 1984. We know that when the Government took office, between everything the Government took in in the way of revenue and everything the Government paid out in the way of expenditures, there was a shortfall of almost $40 billion. As my colleague in the NDP said, that is "billion" spelled with a "b". That is a lot of money. That deficit has not been eliminated. No one is suggesting that for a moment, but the annual spending deficit is now at least $10 billion less than when the Government took office.

You and I know, Mr. Speaker, how hard it is to cut back on our own expenditures and to balance our own books when they get out of whack. We know very well that it ain't easy to cut back expenditures by $10 billion.

If we had continued with the economic policies we had prior to 1984, we would be in a state, as we were prior to 1984, of economic chaos. Many people ask what that has to do with the Government. Times are relatively good now. Things have improved, unemployment is down, inflation is down and the deficit is down. What does that have to do with the present Government?

People who ask that question, including the Leader of the Official Opposition and the Leader of the NDP, are the people who say: "Look, this is just a world trend we are following here, Canada is just tagging along on the coattails of everyone else. The Government has not done anything to create the situation, it has all happened on its own". However, you and I know, Mr. Speaker, that every single economic indicator in Canada shows that Canada is the leading industrial nation now. Our economy is the leading economy in the industrialized world. We are not following anyone. In fact, we are dragging everyone else along. We are the leaders. Some of that has to be due to the policies of the Government and of the Minister of Finance, and I think it is quite clear that that is the case.

Having said all that, one would wonder if I had not been trying to prove that my mother was wrong when she said that everyone dislikes Ministers of Finance and one should never be a Minister of Finance. On occasion we all hear people saying that we would be better off if we did not have some of the policies that had been followed during the last three and a half years. For instance, we have heard senior citizens say that they should have more money in their pockets, their pensions should be bigger and the economic policies that have been followed have had a bad effect on senior citizens. I was thinking about that too, and I just wondered what has happened to senior citizens over the last three and a half years. I wondered whether or not the Minister of Finance has been awfully tough on senior citizens.

I am not saying that all senior citizens are doing well, but when I thought about it, I thought, first, that the Old Age Security, the one that starts at age 65—you are a long way from that, Mr. Speaker, and you will not qualify for that for a long time—continues to be fully indexed. That has increased every year since the Government has been in office. Senior citizens who are receiving Old Age Security benefits certainly have more money in their pockets now than they had back in 1984.

Then I thought of the Guaranteed Income Supplement. That is the one that provides for those who have no income or limited incomes, and that too continues to be fully indexed. All of those senior citizens who receive Guaranteed Income Supplement payments are receiving more money now than they were in 1984.

Then I thought of the spouse's allowance, the one that is geared to income. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Government introduced an extension of the spouse's allowance. On top of that, there were improved benefits under the Canada Pension Plan, improved benefits under the Canada Assistance Plan, increases in the New Horizons grants, new senior citizens' housing, particularly in my riding, and new benefits for veterans and for veterans' widows.

When I look at all of those things, I have to think that although I believe my mother has always been right, if she looked at the performance of this Government and of the Minister of Finance today, I think she would have to admit as well that the record has not been too bad at all, in spite of the fact that this has been a period of restraint.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest, as I usually do, to the comments of the Hon. Member. His comments are usually entertaining and I often find myself agreeing with his kind of easy going way of putting forward the facts. However, I was following his comments very closely today and I must admit that I detected what I considered to be several factual errors in his presentation, errors which I feel ought to be pointed out to the Hon. Member. I think he ought to have the opportunity to—

Mr. Belsher: Are you saying his mother wasn't right?

Mr. Berger: Perhaps his mother wasn't right, that's correct. There were several factual errors in his presentation which I feel duty bound to present to the Hon. Member and ask him to reflect upon.

First, I recall that he said that prior to the 1984 election, Canada had experienced a period of galloping inflation. I think the Hon. Member would probably agree with me that that statement really requires a bit of qualification. I do not think it is entirely correct to say that just prior to the 1984 election, which is perhaps what the Hon. Member was implying, we had experienced a period of galloping inflation. It is true that in 1981 and 1982, Canada, like many other countries in the world, had experienced a period of galloping inflation. We had to raise interest rates in Canada to very high levels and, again, this was not something that was particular to Canada but it was common to many countries in the OECD, the United States, Great Britain, France, West Germany and the like.

In 1982 or 1983, the previous Government introduced the policy known as the six and five policy. Its goal was the reduction of inflation to 6 per cent in the first year of the policy and 5 per cent in the second year. As I recall, and I would put it to the Hon. Member, those targets were not only met but were exceeded to the point that in 1984, the rate of inflation, for probably the first eight or nine months of the year prior to the current Government taking office, had come down to below 5 per cent. I think it was four per cent or something in that neighborhood, if I am not mistaken.

A second error, if I may call it that, in the Hon. Member's presentation was when he referred to the fact that every single economic indicator shows that we are among the leaders. It is true that Canada's economy has performed very well in the past several years. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his speech indicated that we were in the sixth year of an economic recovery period. That in itself indicates that the recovery began prior to the present Government taking office. But one indicator which the Minister did not refer to in his speech was the indicator that is known as the percentage of the GROSS National Product spent on research and development. It is sometimes referred to as the GERD to GNP ratio. The Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) is in the House. Perhaps he could add a few words to this debate.

The GERD to GNP ratio, or the gross expenditures on research and development as a percentage of GNP, has come down in Canada since the last election. We are moving up toward the target that had been set by the previous Government of 1.5 per cent of Gross National Product. Again, the figures from Statistics Canada indicate that since the last election this indicator has dropped to approximately 1.3 per cent. It was getting close to about 1.4 per cent prior to the last election. I suggest to the Hon. Member that these are several areas in which he might wish to qualify, perhaps, the statements that he made during his presentation.

To conclude I would like to say that what we are probably seeing is a situation in which, superficially, our country is basking in a period of economic growth. I ask myself serious questions about what kind of a country we are preparing for our children and our grandchildren 10, 15 or 20 years down the road if we are not taking steps to invest in research and development which will provide us with the kind of competitive economy that we need to compete in a global market.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments and the questions of my hon. friend. I have to say that my mother lived through the Great Depression. One thing that she knew about was a devastated economy. If there was one lasting impression that she conveyed to me it was those impressions of a devastated economy during the 1930s.

The Hon. Member talked about the inflation rate and the unemployment situation prior to the 1984 election. He talked about how the former Government dealt with inflation. He is quite right, that Government certainly did deal with inflation. It dealt with it in such a way that it raised interest rates to 20 per cent or more. It bankrupted an enormous number of companies. The result of that was massive unemployment. It is this unemployment from which we are still struggling to recover.

The message that I have been trying to get across is the message that my mother conveyed to me. I wish to convey that message from her to you, Mr. Speaker, and to other Members of the House. This sort of thing is unacceptable. We need a Government and a Minister of Finance who know how to manage the economy properly. If there is one thing that can be said about the last three and a half years it is that the Minister of Finance and the Government have been doing just that, managing the economy properly. Thus we do not have either skyrocketing inflation or great depths of unemployment. What we have is a balanced and stable rate of inflation. We have a growing employment situation. That is good economic management.

You seem to be giving me the message, Mr. Speaker, that I should wind up my remarks. I would like to comment further on the other part of the Hon. Member's question. If you would like to recognize me after the next speaker has finished, Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to respond then.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired. The time allotted for questions and comments has now terminated. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) on debate.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to rise today to speak to the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) which he tabled on February 10. I must say that if Canadians are wondering what this Budget does for them as individuals and as families they will have to look long and hard. It is not surprising that the only measure that comes quickly to mind is yet another tax increase by the Government. This time I refer to the 1 cent per litre on gasoline to take another $300 million out of our pockets. I am sure that this increase bothers most Canadians as it bothers me when we go to fill up our tanks. The Budget will no doubt be remembered in history as a do-nothing Budget, although being able to refer to it as the last Conservative do-nothing Budget is somewhat comforting. No matter what one calls it the truth remains that despite the many significant challenges facing Canada the Minister of Finance had surprisingly little hesitation to say on budget day that Conservative policies and initiatives have worked and that holding the course was his plan of action as though there was nothing at all that he and his colleagues needed to do. Unfortunately, this is the wrong view of what is happening out in the real Canada. The Conservatives seem to be looking out of a rose-coloured window pane. I suggest most of it is centred on central Canada. They fail to see the numerous challenges facing us as a nation. The Government would do well to open the window and to peer out across the land to see what is really happening.

I put forth a challenge to the Government here today. I challenge it to do some checking and to take note of the many needs facing the country instead of sitting back with that everything-is-fine attitude it demonstrated so clearly in the Budget, proposing no new action plans to help those who need help, including relief and housing needs for low income families, displaced workers, illiterates or people in need of job skills retraining. I do not know where the Government went or with whom it consulted to discover that on budget day all it had to do was stay the course.

However, I put it to the Minister of Finance that his Budget was inadequate. Staying the course is not good enough for Canadians. Just buying nuclear submarines certainly will not answer the needs that we see in our society. Canadians expected more from their Government, more than mere attempts at cutting the deficit to please Bay Street, while placing the burden of the deficit battle on the backs of families and middle-income earners. Canadians have a right to better treatment than that.

One of the few actions the Government did take in the Budget was the writing of its own report card. However, as one would expect from a youngster permitted to write his or her own report card, he or she would probably tend to stretch the truth, play up the good news and downplay the bad news. In the same way I am afraid that the Minister of Finance has fallen victim to the same type of trap.

For example, the Government was quick to take credit for a fairly healthy economy, yet it failed to take notice of, or to take the blame for, the unequal distribution of the economic upturn among the different regions of the country. We still have widespread unemployment. The 1.1 million people who are unemployed are concerned, as are those who are underemployed.

The Budget also went to great lengths to paint a rosy economic future for Canada but, alas, in the days since the Minister of Finance put his brush to the canvas to paint this rosy scenario and take credit for having created it Canadians have seen a far different picture. Representatives from some of the nation's largest and most respected financial institutions have expressed serious misgivings about the Government's dreamy economic scenario.

As I mentioned earlier, the Budget contains the Conservative's pursuit of a lower deficit by placing an increased burden on individual taxpayers and families while thousands of corporations pay little or no tax whatsoever.

The Tory attempts at cutting the deficit on the backs of Canadians began not long after they came to power. I am sure that we all remember well the summer of 1985 when seniors were forced to descend upon Parliament Hill and confront the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) about his plans to remove inflation protection from their pensions. I would say that there is one rosy view that we can all take from that, and that is the fact that "grey power" is now in, and it is to the peril of any Government if it does not listen. From that point of view there is a rosy picture for all of us who are approaching those senior years.

An attack on income security for seniors, that is how the Conservatives have taken up the challenge of fighting the deficit, by showing complete disregard for the type of income security for seniors that a nation such as Canada, with all its wealth, has long held to be a basic tenet of our social fabric. Those seniors who have been planning and preparing for their retirement years in order that they can live all of their lives in comfort as planned were damaged by the Government.

It was no surprise that seniors reacted strongly to this early item on the Tory agenda. It came out of nowhere, and fortunately it was beaten back. Yet it stands to this day as a symbol of the Government's lack of sensitivity and compassion for Canadians at all points on the income ladder.

Since coming into office the Tories have hit Canadians with dozens of new taxes. It reminds me of something that Adam Smith said which reflects the Tory view of who should shoulder the tax burden in this country. Adam Smith concluded that, "There is no art which one Government sooner learns of another than that of draining money from the people". Draining money from the people, how about that for a Conservative epitaph!

The facts speak for themselves. Today individual Canadians pay a greater share of the total tax bill in this country than they did when the Conservatives came into office, while corporations pay an even smaller share of the bill. It's that simple; it's that unfair.

Unlike its campaign promise not to raise taxes, the Government has seen fit to hit Canadians with more than $22 billion in new taxes, and then claim that it was its own ingenious management of Government that led to a lower deficit.

Let us take a look at the tax bill that the Tories have sent to Canadians since they came into office. It began with three consecutive increases in the sales tax. Starting from the word "go" in October, 1984, probably even before the first set of Ministers had found their offices, the Conservatives hit Canadians with their first tax bite which would, with subsequent increases, take another $3 billion from Canadians.

The Tories have extended the tax on candy, soft drinks and snacks. The cost to Canadians is $460 million. To this, one can add another $60 million for increased paint and wallpaper tax. Imagine what this tax did to the redecorating bills at 24 Sussex! This adds up to another $0.5 billion out of the pockets of Canadians.

As we were reminded in the latest Budget, there have been the Tory taxes on gasoline. There have been three increases here as well, one for $900 million, another for $450 million, and one more for $450 million. As if that were not enough, there was another increase of $300 million in the latest Budget. The grand total for the tax on driving, the gasoline tax, is $2.1 billion.

At least another $700 million was taken by the Government by increasing taxes on alcohol and tobacco.

Then there is the tax on talking, which came quietly into effect on January 1, 1988. Long distance telephone charges are now subject to a 10 per cent tax. The cost to Canadians is $945 million.

Let us not forget the tax changes either, Mr. Speaker. Canadians have not been able to forget the deindexing of the whole tax system. The bill for that is $635 million. Killing the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan, which had helped so many young Canadian families get their start, was at a cost of $105 million to those families.

Temporary income surtaxes earned the Government $1.7 billion. A change in the tax treatment of dividend income earned the Government another $300 million.

These taxes that I have mentioned are only a sprinkling of the dozens of tax grabs by the Government, which total more than $22 billion from average Canadians, individuals, families, and seniors.

I feel that once again I should mention these tax grabs alongside the fact that so many thousands of corporations in this country are still paying no tax. It does not take long to see who the friends of this Government truly are.

If it is true that Canadians often vote from their pocket books, they will surely remember how the Government has treated them the next time that they go to the polls. If they do not, they might get what they deserve.

So far I have spoken only about the taxes that the Government has introduced. What we do not have the numbers on as yet are the costs to taxpayers of one of the worst of the Tory tax proposals, a tax on food. In my view, the idea symbolizes the cold-hearted Conservative view of Canada that nothing is sacred in the deficit battle, not even food. That can be divided between the edibles and the inedibles, and I still think that it is reprehensible.

The tax on food met with significant opposition from many sectors of our society because of its regressiveness. This tax would cost the same to a $200,000 a year person, for example, the bank president we heard so much about from the Prime Minister as it would to a senior on a fixed income, or a single parent family. The idea is ludicrous. What were the Conservatives thinking about when they came up with that particular tax?

Fortunately, the Government did see the light and it rejected the idea outright. It took an awful lot of reading into the record here in the House, and a lot of noise outside for the Conservatives to be sensitized to this inhuman approach. With its mere suggestion of a tax on food the Government demonstrated its insensitivity to the needs of Canadians across the income spectrum.

It has taken a good deal of time to sample the Government's record of increasing taxes on Canadians. From the pockets of hard working Canadians more than $22 billion has been taken by the Minister of Finance. On February 10 the same Minister stood in his place and told the House that all the Government needed to do was to "stay the course". That does not sound to me like a plan of action. Staying the course certainly will not help the 3.7 million Canadians who are living below the poverty line in this country, nor will it bring any comfort to the 851,000 families existing below the poverty line. The suggestion of staying the course and offering no plan of action is an affront to the many Canadians who have a right to look to the Government for leadership. I am truly saddened by the Government's inadequate response to the despair being experienced in this country. I suggest again that the Government wake up to the reality of the difficult situations in which so many Canadians find themselves.

The Government has, with little hesitation, drained billions of dollars from the pockets of Canadians. Yet after 3.5 years in office it found it in itself to deliver a do-nothing, stay-the-course Budget with no new initiatives or measures to assist the needy who are among us.

While on the subject of taxes, I would like to take this opportunity to address the Government's tax reform package. If we drop all the optics, we know that Canadians have yet to see the whole tax reform package. Some would say that what we have seen so far is the good news on tax reform, although I would argue that one has yet to see the bad news side, the national sales tax. What we have seen so far is the Minister of Finance offering to return to Canadians $5 billion over the next five years under his tax reform plan. What Canadians will remember is the $22 billion that the Government has already taken. In my books a reprieve of $5 billion on an increase of $22 billion sounds an awful lot like a tax grab and not a tax reform.

I would like to suggest that there exists a real world out there, the challenge facing many Canadians and challenges that the Finance Minister saw no need to address in this Budget. I am sad to say that we have been treated with a cavalier indifference since the Conservatives came into office. Poverty is at the heart of most of our social problems in Canada: ill health, crime, poor housing conditions, and family violence. The Government cannot continue to say that the poverty gap will be closed as economic conditions improve. The "trickle down" theory of economic growth simply does not work in the world in which we live. I would add that, when we speak of the poor in Canada, we are not referring to the unemployed alone. Indeed, we must also consider the working poor to be part of this category. It remains a fact that well over half of Canada's poor families do earn an income.

We need a program to address the serious needs of the working poor, a program of income supplementation for families who were hit hardest in the Government's 1985 Budget and tax reform package by the deindexing of family allowances, the reduction of the threshold level at which parents become eligible for the child tax credit, and the slashing of the child exemption.

This do-nothing Budget also marks the passing of another missed opportunity for the Government to introduce its long promised older workers' adjustment program. It has been two years since the previous labour adjustment benefits expired. With each passing day we have displaced workers facing growing despair. Many of them are unfortunately falling into the discouraged worker category of people who have given up looking for jobs because they believe none are available. The 1.2 million figure for unemployed people is certainly not a true reflection of all those who are unemployed. I call upon the Minister of Finance to go back to the drawing-board and find the missing pieces of his Budget, the ones that will address the problems of the chronically unemployed.

We need a strategy in Canada which incorporates job skill training, income supplementation, and tax credits, all tied to job creation. The Government has failed to fulfil the leadership role Canadians had every right to expect. It demonstrated this failure no more clearly than in the Budget of February 10.

The Minister failed to address a very significant area in his Budget. Since the Conservatives took office in 1984, the youth of the nation has been sadly neglected. This is unacceptable, for we all know that our young people are our most valuable resource. It is an undeniable truth that expenditures on their behalf are investments in the future not only of our young people but of our nation. Despite a huge influx of young people into the job market, the Conservatives have slashed and cut when it comes to programs aimed at giving them a boost.

Cuts to Challenge programs stand as a symbol of the Government's inattention to the needs of our youth. In 1985, $3 million was cut from the program, leaving a $205 million allocation. This is a lot of money, but obviously the program had come to be considered very worth-while. However, the very next year, 1986, there was an additional $17 million cut to $186 million. By 1988 we had seen plans to cut it back another $6 million to $180 million. The real irony is that in all the time since the Conservatives came into office the demand for this kind of youth program has only increased.

What is worse is that the cuts to the Challenge programs are but one example of the low priority the Government has placed in the future of our young people. I could give other examples, such as the 1985 freeze of the Canada Student Loans Program and a cut of $5 million; the cancelling of the Young Workers Exchange Program and a cut of $3 million; and the 29 per cent cut in the funding of on-campus Canada Employment Centres for students to $4 million to which soon to be graduates and summer students look for help and information about where to find jobs.

What is completely incomprehensible is that we have not likely seen the end of bad news for youth programs, for indeed one of the few commitments of the Minister of Finance in his Budget was a further $300 million cut from programs. We have yet to see where they will hit but, if the record shows us anything, youth programs are certainly not safe from the Conservative wield of the axe. These youth cuts symbolize in a straightforward manner the Government's unwillingness to help directly our youth get off to a strong start. Its attitude seems to be: let the market-place take care of that. I say again that that is just not good enough for Canadians, not only young Canadians but every Canadian who wants to see our youth develop.

One thing included in the Budget was the Government's detailed plans for a national child care program. We in the Official Opposition fully support the fundamental idea, that is, the provision of more child care spaces for Canadians across the country. However, there is a great deal of concern among experts in the field of child care that the Conservative child care proposals will actually result in less money going to child care over the next seven years than would have been available had the Tories taken no action at all. They argue that what the Government has labelled as an increased commitment to child care is in fact a hidden long-term capping of child care expenditures. To be honest, they have called it much worse, but I need not repeat those kinds of words in this place.

These concerns may very well reveal that the Tories have found their perfect public policy—package initiatives that actually cut program spending but find a way to gift wrap the package in grandiose style and try to make it look like an increased commitment.

In participating here today in the budget debate, I cannot help but wonder what Canadians are thinking about the Government, a Government that swept into office in 1984 promising not to raise taxes but has overseen the largest tax grab Canadians have ever known. I hope Canadians will remember that the present Minister said on behalf of his Party, while sitting on this side of the House, that they would cut spending and not raise taxes, that tax levels in Canada were already too high. The Prime Minister repeated those promises soon after the 1984 election. I am sure Canadians are wondering where all this good will has gone and what has happened to the promises. These words and promises are coming back to haunt the Conservatives, and well they should. Canadians will not soon forget the Government going back on its word, and its failure to live up to the commitments it made before the election.

I take this opportunity to point out today that many Canadians are feeling a sense of unease and frustration about the Government's record, a record which will establish the Government in history for its failure to show strong, credible leadership on the many challenges facing us as a nation. Nothing was clearer than when the Minister stood and said: "We will stay the course".

It is appalling that a modern Canadian Government, after three and a half years in office, taxing Canadians more than they had ever been taxed before and fighting the deficit on the backs of families and middle-income Canadians, can come forward with a Budget with no pledge of action for addressing priorities such as the income gap between the rich and the poor and regional disparities.

I suggest that there are real challenges out there, and it is too bad the Minister's Budget has not dealt with them.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I noted that the Hon. Member for Westmount (Mrs. Finestone) mentioned that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had called this a "stay the course" Budget. I could not help but look at the Budget Papers, particularly Table III on page 88 of The Fiscal Plan, whereby this "stay the course" Minister has increased sales and excise taxes from some $12 billion when he became Minister to the current level of $19 billion. He has increased personal income tax from some $26 billion or $27 billion to more than $37 billion. Unemployment insurance contributions have gone from something in the area of $7.2 billion to $9.5 billion. However, the Minister has stayed the course on corporate income tax, which is still somewhere in the $9 billion range.

Does the Hon. Member have some comments about this since it seems that the Minister kept his promise at least to his corporate friends? Could she perhaps tell us why he was unable to stay the course and had to raise taxes by some 15 per cent to 30 per cent for people who are simply wage earners and pay income tax or ordinary consumers who must pay great increases in sales tax?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I think I addressed that issue in my comments. It becomes pretty obvious that the Minister and the blue Tories looked at the upper income level, treated them with great favour, and forgot about the rest of the people out there who put some confidence in them and obviously put them into power, thinking that they were going to undertake proper corrective measures. Unfortunately, I guess they were cheated with their choice of government.

During a very good era of economic prosperity, world prosperity, Canada has been a leader due to some very careful planning over a long period of time. Businessmen plan ahead. The Government has just spread the net very wide, picked up large numbers of people to pay taxes who never paid them before, and found ways to gouge middle and low-income people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) a very short question.

• (1730)

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my very distinguished colleague and I want to congratulate her for her remarks in so doing. She is an expert on communications matters as the opposition critic. Will she further expound on the issue of the 10 per cent tax on long distance telephone calls? Does she agree with me that this tax is particularly unfair to rural Canadians who have to make long distance phone calls for such basic things as phoning hospitals, doctors and other very important calls? Does she not agree with me that this tax is totally unfair and reprehensible?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for allowing me a short response. This is another smoke and mirrors action. The Government supposedly reduced taxes and then increased them. Yes, Canadians of all stripes, particularly those in outlying areas, will suffer as a result of this tax on talking.

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to take part in this debate this afternoon on a Budget which demonstrates that the long-term plan laid down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in November, 1984 is working. His policies were right then and the Government's policies are right now.

In 1984, the Government brought to office a vision for a stronger, more prosperous Canada now and into the next century, a vision that was rooted in our belief in Canadians themselves, their capacity to innovate and produce, their desire to excel, and their determination to build greater opportunities for the future. To make this vision a reality, we set out our agenda for economic renewal to transform the economy so that it could meet the challenges of a more competitive world. We have put in place a wide ranging series of actions that complement one another. We have revitalized the private sector and positioned Canada's economy to meet the challenges of international competition in the 1990s and beyond. We have restored fiscal responsibility by reducing the deficit and cutting the growth of the national debt. We have implemented priority programs and we have helped regions and sectors hurt by unexpected developments in the world economy.

The driving force behind productive growth and job creation is a dynamic private sector. To encourage this dynamism, the Government has taken far-reaching measures to modernize the regulatory environment for business. We deregulated the energy and transportation sectors. We opened financial markets to global opportunities and stimulated greater competition in financial services. We have modernized our competition policy, our copyright and patent legislation, providing better protection for the public interest. We also privatized some Crown corporations where it was clear that public ownership of part of the market-place was no longer justifiable or necessary. We created Investment Canada to encourage and welcome investment capital from abroad and to keep Canadian investment capital here, investment that is creating jobs for Canadians.

The Government has also taken far-reaching measures to reform the federal tax system. We are making the tax system fairer for individual Canadians and we are making it more effective in supporting growth and job creation. We are creating a system that helps our businesses and industries to compete in the world. On January 1 our reforms to the personal and corporate income tax systems went into effect. The key to these reforms is our belief that lower tax rates are the best possible tax incentives for productive activity. For individuals, three federal tax brackets are replacing ten. To make the system fairer we are converting personal exemptions and many deductions to tax credits. We are reducing and eliminating many special tax breaks that permit upper income earners to avoid paying their fair share. The results are compelling. More than eight out of 10 households will see their personal income tax reduced. About 850,000 lower income Canadians will have their income tax reduced to zero. Almost nine out of 10 Canadians aged 65 and over will have income tax reductions. The vast majority of families with children will pay noticeably less personal income tax. For the corporate sector, many special tax breaks are being eliminated or reduced to permit lower tax rates. This will mean that the corporate tax system will be more competitive with systems in other countries. There is much more to be done, Mr. Speaker, and we will replace an archaic federal tax system with a new system that will be effective in supporting growth and job creation.

We have been working with the provinces and others to develop the most effective means of implementing this new system, particularly the opportunity to have an integrated national sales tax. So far, our progress with the provinces has been encouraging, but we have more work to do.

Another key element of our strategy for the 1990s is to secure improved access to world markets for Canada's exporters. We are working, as you know, Mr. Speaker, to resist the forces of protectionism wherever they are found. That is why we worked so vigorously for a new round of multilateral trade negotiations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. Our free trade agreement with the United States is a major building block in the Government's strategy to strengthen Canada's competitive position in the world and to enhance the prosperity of our people. The free trade agreement will provide greater opportunities for economies of scale in Canadian production and marketing. It will encourage greater productivity and stimulate innovation. It will lead to a more efficient and lower cost Canadian economy.

The economic benefits of the free trade agreement will start to be realized shortly after its implementation on January 1, 1989. Consumer prices will continue to decline, expanding the purchasing power of Canadians. Investment in plant and equipment will expand as Canadian firms move to take advantage of their enhanced access to the huge U.S. market.

The phase-out of tariffs in the free trade agreement will not only mean lower consumer prices, they will give our industries an advantage over the rest of the world in the U.S. market. They will allow integrated North American industries to become more competitive against overseas competition. They will also end a major barrier to value-added processing prior to export, something we sought in the last round of GATT negotiations. The agreement also achieves important new progress in the area of government procurement by expanding the opportunities for suppliers of goods to government markets. The further opening up of government procurement means a new $3 billion market for Canadian business, with the potential for further liberalization in the GATT or future bilateral negotiations.

I would like to say a word about productivity and how it relates to the free trade initiatives, to the economic performance of the country and the economic leadership of the Government. As you know, Mr. Speaker, improvements in productivity brought us the surplus which transformed the western world from agrarian to industrial and then to post-industrial society. In our periods of most rapid productivity growth, government services and our personal wealth increased the most rapidly. Since 1973, a period which coincides with the growth in the Canadian deficit from zero to its current levels, Canadian productivity grew very slowly. The result? A sharp jump in unemployment; increased levels of poverty in the country, specifically in the regions; slow growth in personal income, and growing pessimism about our ability to compete with the rest of the world.

If Canada is to increase its national wealth, we need to go beyond our own borders, to sell our services and our products to the rest of the world and to make a profit on the deal. Canadian business cannot, with our small population and fragmented domestic market, grow quickly enough to create the new wealth we need as a nation. Because our markets are small, per capita production in Canada has not matched that in the United States. American industry, of course, can afford to specialize and invest in huge production runs. By the nature of the size of our domestic markets, Canadian productivity begins with a disadvantage, and that is why our output per worker has traditionally been lower than that in the United States.

Can Government help increase productivity? I think the answer to that is yes. It will not do it, however—and I think the record is clear on this—by coddling Canadian industry, by providing it with endless protection against the reality of world competition.

Canadian workers are generally productive, but Canadian managers have tended to be unimaginative and cautious, turning to Government for protection at every ripple in the international economic system. Canadian manufacturing managers in the past have seen threats where they should have seen challenges and opportunities.

There are things the Government can do to improve our economic performance and our chances of creating new wealth. I think the Minister, in his budget speech, spoke about our record of accomplishments to date, a record of which we can be proud. Free trade is part of that record. It is one opportunity, and only an opportunity in my view, not a sure thing, for Canadian industry to improve its productivity. Our productivity is at present 9 per cent behind the American level. If we had unrestricted access to the American market, making use of the same economies of scale which have given them an advantage over us in the past, the best of our companies would be much better off. There is good reason to believe that our productivity and per capita wealth would exceed American levels.

I want to return briefly to the free trade agreement which is such an integral part of this Government's economic strategy. I want to refer in particular to the energy sector where we have secured access for our hydro, uranium, oil and gas exports to the lucrative U.S. market. This is a critical step, as you would know as an Albertan, Mr. Speaker, in ensuring our own energy security. After price, economies of scale made possible by secure access to the U.S. market are the most important factors in allowing us to develop our huge hydro, tar sands and frontier resources. If we do not develop those supplies, we will be the ones who are increasingly reliant on offshore supplies.

In other areas of the agreement we have built on the GATT Standards Code, attacking some of the most devious non-tariff barriers to trade like artificial health standards. We have also created greater certainty for Canadian and U.S. investors. We have retained the right to review significant direct invest proposals. Current restrictions in key sectors remain. The special status of our cultural industries has been entrenched. Perhaps just as important, our own investors will be protected from potential U.S. restrictions. That is clearly important when you consider the extent of our own investment in the U.S. In fact, few Canadians understand that for the past decade we have invested $3 in the U.S. for every $1 invested here by Americans. At the current rate, that means we will soon have as much invested in the U.S. as they have up here, despite the fact they are 10 times our size.

Even more important for future investment patterns is the greater access for Canadian-made goods made possible by the agreement. Increased access for Canadian imports will limit the need for our companies to jump U.S. trade barriers and set up shop in the U.S. We believe it will also allow third country investors to contemplate Canada as the location for their North American facilities.

The economic record of the last three and a half years is one of which we can be proud. The Canadian economy is growing stronger, more dynamic, and better able to compete. In those three and a half years since we set out our agenda for economic renewal, our progress has been dramatic. Over-all, we have done better than any of the other major industrialized nations. We have been number one in economic growth since 1984. We have been number one in employment growth. More than 1,150,000 jobs have been created since we came into office. The great majority of those jobs are full-time in occupations with above average salary levels. The unemployment rate today is the lowest in six years. Economic and employment growth last year was more evenly balanced among the regions. Mortgage rates are three percentage points lower, saving home owners $1,200 a year on a $50,000 mortgage amortized over 25 years. Housing starts have reached a 10-year high. Business is confident. The pace of investment has increased sharply. Consumers are confident. Consumer spending has continued to grow steadily. We have built a solid record of progress, a record of how our policies and initiatives have worked in building the framework for the economic success we now enjoy.

For 1988 the economy is on course for a sixth consecutive year of expansion. The outlook for 1989 is even more encouraging. Canadians have good reason to look forward to the next decade with confidence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. It being 5.45 o'clock p.m., it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings pursuant to Standing Order 84(6) and put forthwith any question to dispose of any subamendment which is before the House.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre), seconded by Mr. Lewis, has moved:

That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

In amendment thereto, Mr. Garneau, seconded by Miss Nicholson (Trinity), has moved:

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"this House regrets that the Budget

1. failed to redress the inequities of the tax system created by Government policies put forward during the last three and one half years;

2. failed to put into place a regional development policy to compensate for the high interest rate policy of the Government;

3. failed to put forward a credible plan to deal with the national debt that does not unduly punish lower and middle income Canadians; and

4. failed to specify a Canadian approach for dealing with the instabilities of the international monetary system."

In amendment to the amendment, Mr. Cassidy, seconded by Mr. Riis, has moved:

That the amendment be amended by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

"and this House further condemns the Government for introducing a budget that ignores the real economic needs of the country in which over 1.1 million Canadians are unemployed and eight out of ten provinces and the territories continue to experience employment and income disparities equal to those of the 1981-83 recession;

—for increasing the tax burden of average Canadian families to a level of $1,125.00 over the 1984 level through yet another increase in gas taxes; —for failing to bring fairness to the tax system through the elimination of costly tax breaks and the introduction of a corporate minimum tax that would ensure fair and regular tax payment from those 60,000 profitable corporations that will pay no tax following Conservative tax reform;

—for maintaining a policy of high interest rates begun by previous Liberal governments; and —for failing to introduce a system of universal child care that would assist average Canadian families and create jobs."

All those in favour of the amendment to the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed to the amendment to the amendment will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Cassidy), which was negatived on the following division:

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1988-89

A message from Her Excellency the Governor General transmitting Estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1989, was presented by the Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council) and read by Mr. Speaker to the House.

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to table in support of the Estimates, Part I, the Government Expenditure Plan. In addition, I have tabled with the Clerk of the House, on behalf of my colleagues, Part III of the Estimates consisting of 78 department expenditure plans. These documents will be distributed to members of the standing committees to assist in their consideration of the spending authorities sought in Part II of the Estimates.

Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 83 I move:

That the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1989, laid upon the Table earlier this day, be referred to the several Standing Committees of the House as follows:

Since the list is rather long and there is a detailed allocation of the Estimates to the committees, if it is agreeable with the House I would ask that the list be printed in Hansard as if it were read.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: List referred to above is as follows:]

THE ESTIMATES

OUTLINE BY MINISTER OF GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table the Main Estimates for 1988-89, which total $119 billion. These estimates support what my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), said in his recent Budget speech about the fiscal intentions of this Government.

We are firmly committed to restraint through good management of the public's resources while responding with positive actions to introduce new initiatives in high priority areas. These Main Estimates are consistent with the planned expenditure levels outlined in the Budget earlier this month.

Our total spending plan for 1988-89, which includes these Main Estimates and reserves for Supplementary Estimates, totals $132 billion. That is 5.5 per cent above planned spending in 1987-88. If we exclude public debt charges and look at program expenditures, the growth is only 4.3 per cent.

The average annual increase in budgetary expenditures of 4.9 per cent over the last four years contrasts sharply with the average increases of more than 15 per cent in the preceding five years. Excluding public debt charges, we are looking at an average increase of 3.7 per cent versus 14 per cent in the previous period.

The Main Estimates increase by 7.7 per cent over the comparable 1987-88 level. This growth rate is accommodated within the over-all 5.5 per cent growth in planned budgetary expenditures.

The growth in Main Estimates is larger than that targeted for total spending for the year because the Government has built a greater portion of its new spending initiatives into the Main Estimates than it was able to last year, leaving fewer resources for in-year adjustments through Supplementary Estimates in 1988-89.

These Main Estimates provide for a number of new initiatives that the Government has announced over the past few months to respond to the pressing needs of Canadians. They include $306 million for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, $312 million for the western diversification office, a $197 million increase for other regional development initiatives such as that for northern Ontario, $296 million to complete the $1.1 billion special grains program for the 1987 crop year, and $40 million of the $210 million to be spent on the National Drug Strategy over a five-year period.

The Government has recently announced a number of new initiatives which are not included in these Main Estimates. Further endeavours in the area of science and technology and increased programming for the elderly will appear in Supplementary Estimates over the course of 1988-89.

The Government's child care strategy will be built into estimates following further discussion with provincial governments and the passage of legislation. Funding for all of these is incorporated in the $132 billion expenditure plan within the growth of 4.3 per cent in program expenditures.

Apart from the new initiatives, I would like to outline briefly where the growth in estimates has occurred. Public debt charges are $3.9 billion or 13.7 per cent higher than last year. This burden can be lightened only over the long term through good fiscal management and continued reductions in the level of the deficit.

As well, we are providing an additional one-half billion dollars to the provinces to help finance health, educational and welfare services.

In addition, direct transfer payments to the provincial and territorial governments will rise by almost $1 billion under equalization and other programs.

Direct payments to elderly Canadians will rise through an additional $860 million in old age security payments and a further $134 million in Guaranteed Income Supplements.

Thus, of the $8.5 billion increase in these Main Estimates, $3.9 billion or 45 per cent is accounted for by public debt charges and $2.4 billion or 28 per cent relates to increased expenditures for large social programs, including support for health care and education and the direct support to the provinces and territories which I have just mentioned.

The Main Estimates can be divided into two categories: statutory and voted expenditures. The statutory items, totalling $78.5 billion, are programs whose spending is covered by separate legislation. Public debt charges, to which I have already referred, account for $32 billion or 40 per cent of that.

The remaining $46.5 billion includes over $20 billion in transfer payments to individual Canadians and more than $20 billion in transfers to provincial governments. Elderly Canadians receive about three-quarters of all the transfer payments to individuals.

Payments to the provinces provide funding for health care, post-secondary education, and welfare assistance and enable provinces to provide their residents with a reasonable level of public services at reasonable comparable levels of taxation.

In addition to those cash payments, the Government provides assistance to the provinces in the form of tax transfers which, in 1988-89, will exceed $9 billion, bringing total financing for health, education, social assistance and other public services to some $30 billion.

The other $41 billion of these Main Estimates, which Parliament will be asked to authorize through the appropriation Bill, reflects a wide variety of expenditures across all departments.

These voted appropriations include $10 billion out of a total Defence spending budget of $11.2 billion, most of the regional development expenditures through the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, the Atlantic Opportunities Agency, the western diversification office, as well as the special grains program and other recent initiatives such as the Drug Strategy.

Over the past four years, voted appropriations have risen on average by less than 3 per cent a year in comparison with an average of almost 13 per cent through the early 1980s. This low rate of growth, maintained over four years, reflects our real achievement in managing government more efficiently and sustaining fiscal restraint. Public spending is firmly under control.

As Hon. Members are aware, the estimates also set out the person-year authorities allocated to departments and agencies. In May, 1985, the Government introduced a plan to reduce the size of the Public Service by 15,000 person-years over a five-year period.

We began in 1986-87 with the reduction of some 5,500 person-years. This was followed by a further 3,100 last year and over 1,900 for 1988-89. While we have downsized the Public Service by more than 10,000 person-years, as of February 12, only 634 of the employees affected had actually been laid off.

Over the remaining two years of the program, the Government will reduce its person-year authorities by about one per cent each year and I fully expect that the redeployment efforts which are integral to the workforce adjustment policy will continue to be successful in relocating affected employees.

I want to stress that these Main Estimates reflect this Government's efforts to maintain a balance between spending restraint and the introduction of new initiatives aimed at responding to the needs of the average Canadian.

In accordance with the normal procedures of the House, these estimates will be referred to the appropriate standing committees which will have ample opportunity to review the estimates and report to the House. In June, we will again discuss the estimates in the House before the passage of an appropriation Bill granting full supply.

As my colleague, the Minister of Finance, emphasized, we established a financial plan in 1984, and we have stuck to it, reducing the deficit, controlling expenditures, eliminating waste and duplication, and scaling down the burden of Government.

Within this fiscal framework we have found the necessary resources to meet our policy commitments on regional development, defence, child care, science and technology. We will continue the same prudent course in 1988-89.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (1120)

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, as I rise today to comment on the Treasury Board Estimates and on the Minister's statement, I simply want to say that of all the Estimates that I have seen brought down in this House, none have been brought in to paint over the cracks in the plaster more so than these Estimates today.

We were talking about fiscal responsibility, and the Minister has sat down after making what he thinks are some very constructive comments and which he hopes will wash. The fact of life is that since the Government came to power in September, 1984 the national debt of this country has increased by 66 per cent. Indeed, it has increased by $116.6 billion in 3.5 years.

The Government campaigned in 1984 on fiscal responsibility, and it is still talking in that tone today. For example, in the Government's June White Paper on Tax Reform, it stated in the Estimates that it would only cost $30.1 billion to service the national debt. The Government has since found that it will cost another $2 billion to finance or carry the national debt, because it has not been keeping interest rates under control in the manner in which it has been telling the Canadian public that it has been doing so. The Canadian dollar is increasing in value, but Canadian interest rates are going up.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and members of the Government have bragged in the House about keeping interest rates under control. Today the Canadian public must come up with $2 billion more in interest rates alone simply because the Government has not been able to keep its financial and fiscal responsibility under control. That is a fact of life.

Six months ago the Government announced that it could finance and carry the national debt for this year for $30.1 billion. Today it will cost $32.1 billion, only six months later. The Government talks about keeping interest rates down and it has failed to do so. What I have just mentioned is the proof.

The Premier of Ontario wants to see interest rates kept down. Premier Bourassa, who has been friendly with the Prime Minister in certain cases, wants to keep interest rates down. The Prime Minister is letting down the Premier and the Province of Quebec. The Canadian Chambers of Commerce and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association all want to see the Government keep interest rates down.

Mr. Mazankowski: What did you do when interest rates were at 23 per cent? You have a lot of nerve.

Mr. Hopkins: The Minister asks, "What did you do?" A little while ago very self-righteously he mentioned that he was comparing it to the early 1980s. That is what I mean by the facade that the Government carries on. The Minister knows full well, as does every Canadian, that in the early 1980s there was one of the greatest recessions that this world has had since the 1930s—under a Tory Government at that time—and that is a fact of life too.

Mr. Mazankowski: Blame someone else.

Mr. Hopkins: Let us talk about the details of the expenditure plan tabled today by the Government. What about the reserves in this money not allocated for 1988-89? When one takes a look at that, one wonders just when the election call will be. In the envelope on specific reserves the Government has labelled $1.7 billion. As you know, Mr. Speaker, since you are a long-time Member of this House, in general reserves the money can go almost anywhere. What a nice slush fund for an election campaign. Under that envelope the Government has allocated $2.5 billion. The Government talks about fiscal responsibility and it has sitting in the reserves, in the slush fund for the next election, a total of $4.2 billion.

Mr. Boudria: Shame!

Mr. Mazankowski: It was 6.1 last year. What are you talking about?

Mr. Hopkins: One must ask, is this an election year? What are the goodies? Where is all the fiscal responsibility that we heard about in 1984, and in the rhetoric of this Government ever since 1984?

Mr. Boudria: Talk about Sinc Stevens.

Mr. Hopkins: There is another one, Mr. Speaker. My hon. colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) says to talk about the Hon. Member for York—Peel (Mr. Stevens). I just happen to have that as my next comment.

On page 24 of the Estimates on the Privy Council under the commission of inquiry with regard to the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, the Hon. Member for York—Peel, we see that the Government has paid out $2.9 million for that commission of inquiry. That is for one investigation into one Minister in the Government, and the Government talks about fiscal responsibility. We built the Pembroke and area airport for almost that amount of money. Some community is going without another airport or without something else because of the $2.9 million that this Government has spent on the Hon. Member for York—Peel, the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

The Government talks about down-sizing the Public Service. For heaven's sakes, let's be realistic and honest with the Canadian people. The Government down-sizes the Public Service one day and the next day it hires people back on contract to do the same work that the people did when they were on staff. If the job is not done properly, what happens? Someone else has to come along and finish the job and there is an overcharge. While the Government is attempting to down-size the Public Service it is contracting work out just as fast.

I could talk about agriculture, and I am sure our critic on agriculture would want me to mention that it is obvious that the Government is in the process of finally destroying the Farm Credit Corporation.

Mr. Boudria: They are dismantling it.

Mr. Hopkins: They are dismantling it. There is no question about it, it is right here.

Let us talk about all this great work on national defence. I have never seen such a sham in my life. The Government has made a commitment to increase the National Defence budget by 3 per cent annually in real terms. The Government has only done that once in the four years that it has brought down Budgets in this House. Only once out of four years, and in the other three years it did not meet its NATO commitment. Yet here is a Government that talks about doing such great things for national defence.

We heard a lot about the reserves lately, and I want to read a comment here from the Winnipeg Free Press about neglecting the reserves in the Armed Forces. The article states:

> When Defence Minister Perrin Beatty introduced his white paper last June, he said, of Canada's reserves: "They have been gravely neglected in recent years. We intend to see these citizens—soldiers, sailors and aviators—receive the recognition they deserve and we will give them a priority that they have not had for several decades."

They have certainly been given a priority, Mr. Speaker, because the article further states:

> Evidence of this new priority was received by reserve units in Winnipeg this week. They have been told that in the coming year they will have to get by with 12.5 per cent less training time than they had this year.

On research and development the Government talks about all the money that it has put out in special programs in research and development. I have figures which show, despite all their rhetoric, that they have actually spent less on research and development than was being spent before.

• (1130)

The Government is not keeping its commitments in that regard. It has downgraded all major research facilities like NRC, NSERC, Science Council, Medical Research Council, agriculture, and forestry. It has downgraded them, cut them by $75 million over the last three years or four years. Then it comes along with a $112.7 million increase and says, "What great people are we".

However, what government Members forgot to mention was that they had cut $60 million from AECL and $70 million from the reserves, which means that they have actually put $93 million less into R and D than they are claiming they did, that they promised to do, and that in fact was there before.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words about the Estimates that are before us and about the possibility, as the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) has said, of spending $132 billion in the next fiscal year. I want to make two major points. They are questions of fairness about how the Government is planning expenditures in 1988-89.

First, Mr. Speaker, I think you would be very interested in Part I of the 1988-89 Estimates, "The Government Expenditure Plan". If we look at the record of what the Conservative Government has been doing, we see that the Government is now spending more money in terms of percentage of its expenditures on the public debt than it was some four years ago. Back in 1984-85 some 20.6 per cent of government expenditures was on interest on the national debt. Some 24.6 per cent of the expenditures of the Government now will be on our national debt. This is an increase of 4 per cent, from 20.6 per cent to 24.6 per cent since the Conservative Party took office in 1984. It is the largest expenditure in any single envelope in the Government of Canada, and it is an increase of some 4 per cent. It is very, very high.

There has been argument in the House about why interest rates in the country should be brought down. If interest rates could be brought down we would save an awful lot of money. If interest rates were to drop by only 1 per cent, the Government of Canada would save $1.4 billion per year. Over four years, with a drop of 1 per cent, the Government of Canada would save some $9.5 billion.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, now that one-quarter of the Government of Canada's expenditures are being used to pay off this country's deficit, to the interest on the deficit, we have now spent about $32 billion of the Estimates for next year.

Mr. Speaker, if the interest rate were to be reduced by 1 per cent, there would be another $4 billion for the Government to spend on Canadians in just one year, and in four years there would be a total of $9.5 billion more.

[English]

If the Government would bring down the interest rate, we could use that extra $1.4 billion next year, or the $9.5 billion in four years, for regional development programs.

Second, since the Conservative Party has come to power, the amount of money, in terms of a percentage of the national expenditure, has gone down in regional development. Back in 1984-85, according to the Estimates, some 13.6 per cent of the expenditures of the Canadian Government went to regional development and economic development in Canada. In 1988-89 it will be down from 13.6 per cent to 10.3 per cent. That is a drop of some 24 per cent in the envelope for economic and regional development, a drop of some 24 per cent. That is not good enough.

If one were to exclude the Special Canadian Grains Program, a program which is very useful in western Canada, for the other regional and economic development programs, the expenditure drop is even greater in terms of a percentage of what the Government spends. It then goes down to some 10 per cent of the national Budget. We are now spending 10 per cent of the national Budget on economic and regional development, compared with 13.6 per cent when the Conservative Party took office some three and a half years ago. It is a drop of 26 per cent in terms of the over-all share which regional development is getting from the Conservative Party across the way.

I make the argument very simply this morning that the Government should be spending a greater share of the expenditures of the people of Canada on economic and regional development.

In the last year some 47 per cent of jobs created in Canada were created in the Province of Ontario. I am very pleased that the Province of Ontario has a lot of job creation, but even in Ontario the vast number of these jobs are located in the area around Toronto. The unemployment rate is high in Windsor. It is high in northern Ontario. There are problems in the City of Hamilton and problems in other areas. Some 47 per cent of the jobs are being created in one province.

What I am arguing today is that we must allocate a greater share of the national expenditure to regional and economic development so that western Canada, the North, parts of Ontario, Quebec, and the Atlantic provinces, share in the economic recovery. Is that too much to ask of the Government across the way?

I repeat the point that when they came to power three and a half years ago, 13.6 per cent of expenditures went to economic and regional development. Now, some three or four years later, they are budgeting for only 10 per cent if we do not include the Special Canadian Grains Program. It is 10.3 per cent, if we include the grains program, for regional and economic development.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, federal spending on regional economic development programs has dropped substantially by about 24 per cent, I believe—programs that are vital to Quebec, to western Canada, to the North, to the Atlantic Provinces and to Northern Ontario. This Government is now spending less, percentage wise, then it was spending four years ago on regional economic development. This is unfair to our regions here in Canada.

[English]

In addition to an interest rate that is too high, which means that we are using some 25 per cent of our money to pay off the national debt; in addition to spending a diminishing share of our national money on regional economic development, I also notice, in terms of fairness, that the Government estimates that it will be spending less on contributions to native economic development programs. I see the Minister responsible in the House. I wonder, in terms of fairness to our native, Indian, and aboriginal people, why the Government across the way is cutting down by about 8 per cent or some $6.25 million its contributions to native economic development programs.

We do not have fairness to our native people. We do not have fairness to the regions of the country. Finally, we do not have fairness in the Estimates in terms of older workers. There will be no new adjustments or designations of regions or industries for older workers. As a result of the February 1986 Budget the labour adjustment benefits program is gone, and older workers who were eligible for training are no longer getting the money they need in order to retrain. The new program which was announced, a program for older worker adjustment, still must receive some provincial-federal agreement, and therefore money is not being spent in that area. Thus older workers who are thrown on to the labour market have nowhere to turn in terms of retraining.

In conclusion, what we have before us today are the Estimates which will see us spending a greater and greater proportion of the Government's money, the taxpayers' money, the people's money in paying off the debt. The reason is that the Government across the way—and I am sure you share my concern, Mr. Speaker—has allowed the interest rate to get too high. If it would bring down the interest rate, we could save money and we could use that money in terms of regional economic development programs. This would be better for average Canadians or ordinary Canadians. It would mean more fairness for each and everyone from one part of the country to another.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we need and the Government of Canada needs new policies like this one.

I understand that in the Estimates, there is nothing at all to show an allocation of moneys for child care services. This, of course, was promised by certain Members across the way as recently as yesterday. That is another broken promise by the Government across the way which shows that it is a Government for the wealthy, for millionaires, for big shots and for big corporations. Years ago, my grandfather used to say that Tory times are tough times for ordinary Canadians, and they certainly are. It is the Party that brought us into the Dirty Thirties and it is the Party that once again is bringing regional inequity to this country.

EXTERNAL RELATIONS

REPORT OF MINISTER ON HER TRIP TO AFRICA

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I have just returned from Ethiopia. I appreciate this opportunity to report to Members, at the earliest possible moment, on what is happening there, and what role Canada is playing . . . More specifically, to share with you some of my findings . . . and some of my feelings.

Whenever I travel to Africa, it is always a privilege to represent the Government and the people of Canada. Mr. Speaker, I am very proud of what we are doing in Africa.

And I was relieved and pleased to see many positive things in Ethiopia—our close cooperation with the people of that country . . . the deep involvement of local people in the struggle for development . . . and encouraging signs of progress in the fight against famine.

[English]

My trip allowed me to meet with a wide variety of our partners. I met people from Canadian NGOs such as the World University Service of Canada, Canadian Physicians for Aid and Relief, the Sudan Interior Mission and McGill University as well as Ethiopian officials and senior representatives of United Nations agencies including Michael Priestley who is the special representative of the Secretary General of the United Nations, and the resident representative for the United Nations Development Program.

[Translation]

I had the opportunity to visit the north. At Mekele, I saw the food airlift in operation, and at the nearby settlement of Wukro, I watched the food being distributed.

What I saw in the north was, above all, the color brown—rough terrain, terrible roads, barren land, parched soil . . . everything brown, and incredibly dry. The earth, boiled and baked by the sun, was mere dust, dry and dead. But I also saw a very effective airlift hard at work, with Belgian hercules, Russian antonovs, small planes and helicopters all working together effectively.

I saw unloading operations at Mekele, and it was inspiring. Up to twenty big planes come in each day, bearing up to twenty tonnes of food per plane—much of it Canadian grain. I saw the hardworking teams of about eighteen Ethiopians who meet each plane and unload that twenty-tonne cargo into trucks, by hand, in as little as twelve minutes. Anyone who witnessed their energy and efficiency, under trying conditions, would never speak lightly about people not trying to help themselves.

At Wukro, I saw a well-organized food distribution effort, which was operating very smoothly. Non-governmental organizations—particularly médecins sans frontières belges—and the relief and rehabilitation commission were working closely together.

The names of recipients were recorded, village by village, on a register . . . and checked off as the people collected their rations—thirty kilos per family member, enough for two months.

This time, Mr. Speaker, unlike 1984-85, people are taking the food back to their village—walking as far as fifty or sixty kilometres—rather than gathering in huge feeding camps at the distribution site.

[English]

Three years ago when famine struck, we saw images of despair and scenes of human suffering that haunted our minds: men and women reduced to skeletons and, the ultimate horror, children dying on camera. This time, though lives are certainly at risk, the condition of the people seems much better. In general, they appear to be in fair physical shape and in good spirits. It was encouraging to note that this time there is an organized baby-weighing program to detect signs of malnutrition.

Famine relief was not the only way I saw food aid being used. It is also serving the cause of longer-term development. Specifically, we visited a food-for-work project also at Wukro. Three thousand people are working with hand tools building earth dams about six metres high and 200 to 300 metres long. These dams will turn depressions in the terrain into reservoirs to hold the run off when the rains do come. The work of these 3,000 people is paid in food which keeps 3,000 families going, and at the same time, these people are creating a basic system to irrigate more than 70 hectares of land.

[Translation]

I also went south, to Wanda Genet, and then to Awassa to visit a Canadian-sponsored water project. Mr. Speaker, I can report seeing much that gave me a feeling of relief—and of hope. I saw excellent cooperation between Canadians and Ethiopians—real involvement of the local communities in the projects—and fine work by NGOs (notably the Vancouver-based Hope International). True enough, I had seen evidence of these things in the north, too . . . But in a setting where hostile nature and civil strife made progress virtually impossible.

In the south, the same factors, working in a more benign environment, were producing visible progress. I was very impressed by the degree of organization and determination shown by the Ethiopians. Their concern for the longer term was quite obvious—in, for instance, their creation of a water training institute. The most striking thing about the trip to the south was the physical contrast with conditions in the north. Brown gave way to green. We saw fertile land again. And we realized that, compared to the dry, brown north, other parts of Ethiopia have much better agricultural and water potential.

I am grateful to have had the opportunity to see for myself, first-hand, some of the realities of a most difficult and often tragic situation. I learned some valuable things—some of them cause for concern, others cause for hope and even a degree of satisfaction.

First, overall conditions are much better than in 1984-85. A good basic organization is in place to cope with the present emergency. In general, it is working effectively—although there are places, such as Korem, where it works less well.

Enough food is flowing into Ethiopia to prevent famine. Transport within Ethiopia, however, is another matter—in fact, a critical problem. The roads, where they exist, are poor to start with, and some are now impassable because they are increasingly unsafe. There are not enough trucks—many have been destroyed. There is not enough fuel—there is, for instance, none in place at the moment for the airlift. Planes have to detour to Addis Ababa to refuel, making the airlift even less efficient and more expensive as a way of carrying food—and yet it's the only way to stave off disaster.

Mr. Speaker, I learned yet again about the vital work being done by NGOs, and about the excellent level of cooperation with and among international organizations. I learned, once again, how much the world relies on the international committee of the Red Cross, which is playing a key role in this complex situation.

• (1150)

I saw with my own eyes that some parts of the country have extremely limited capacity to support life while other parts are fertile and productive. The rationale for Ethiopia's resettlement program, whatever the political motives, was undeniably visible and plain as day; brown dust in the north, green land in the south.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I was, and I remain, very concerned over persistent rumours of the use of force in the recently renewed resettlement campaign—even of shootings of people reluctant to move. Independent observers have attempted to verify these rumours on site—but so far there is no conclusive evidence to confirm or to refute the disturbing stories.

I took every opportunity to make the position of Canada—and the international community, for that matter—crystal clear. I have been assured by the Ethopian government that Ethiopia's official policy, in the resumed program, is for voluntary resettlement only.

[English]

I can testify, Mr. Speaker, as a firsthand witness that Canada is playing a valuable and significant part in helping to avoid a huge tragedy in Ethiopia. We did much in 1984-85. We are doing still more this time, and the Government of Canada will always be ready to aid the victims of disaster, whether the disaster is natural or man made. I can report that Canadians, along with people from many other countries, are doing marvellous work under the most difficult conditions, and I feel obliged to say that our continued help and support is a matter of life and death to millions of people whose future hangs on a precarious, knife-edge balance.

These few words can express only a fraction of my thoughts and feelings as I saw, briefly, the ordeal of the people of Ethiopia and the spirit of their struggle to survive and move ahead.

[Translation]

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I will just mention that, on leaving Ethiopia, I proceeded to Bamako, to take part in the fifth bilateral consultation between Canada and Mali. I was able to visit one of the many excellent grassroots projects under way there, and to have good discussions on the difficult problems facing Mali and the other countries of the Sahel. And the meeting allowed me, on African soil, to assure the people of that country and that continent, once again, of the continuing concern and support they can count on, from the government, the parliament and the people of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, first, I want to say that I regret that I was not in receipt of a copy of the Minister's address until a very short time before the House began. Such an important subject deserves a worthy commentary from our Party and I do regret that we did not receive the text of this speech until such a late hour.

However, having said that, I want to express on behalf of our Party and of all Members of the House our sincere appreciation to the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Landry) for having herself gone to see firsthand the circumstances and the problems facing the people of Ethiopia and the problems facing those who are trying to do something about the tragedies that are taking place. Her visit is to be commended. We also appreciate her report in the House making it the business of all of us to be concerned about the events taking place in Ethiopia.

We are also proud of the role Canada is playing. The Minister pointed out that we are taking a very vigorous role. Our NGOs as well as our government officials are actively trying to do what they can. It was also stirring to hear the Minister tell us that many countries from around the world are working together. Instead of seeing our allies coming together to fight against other nations in war we see them coming together from both sides to war against this tragedy of hunger and famine. Those are all positive things. I hope my comments will be understood in the context of my congratulations to the Minister and also in the context of being pleased to hear the positive aspects of her report.

We have much to be thankful for that things are not in the same state and condition they were several years ago when famine struck Ethiopia and the world was caught quite flat-footed and fairly unaware. The media brought to our attention so effectively and valuably the horrors and starvation facing the Ethiopians. Now that the media aroused us to that kind of common concern, questions must be discussed and I want to raise these questions in the House as part of our concern.

We are told by the Minister that right now enough food is flowing into Ethiopia to prevent famine, that is, enough food is on hand. But the Minister goes on to point out that the problem of trying to transport the food to where the people are is horrendous. It appears that the solution is not to take the food to where the people are where their homes are, where their communities and traditions are but rather to bring the people to where the food is, namely, at the depots. That seems a little strange. It is quite obvious that one clear reason is that there is drought in the north and in the areas of Eritrea and we know that in northern Ethiopia as the Minister pointed out there is brown dirt, drought and, therefore, famine, and in the south it is greener.

Regrettably there are other dynamics at play. We know there is a guerilla war going on, a revolution, or a fight for independence, whichever way you want to put it and on whose side you happen to be sitting, but the people in Eritrea and Tigre are people who are concerned about their own independence and their ability to have freedom and to have their own way of life.

This war which goes on between the Government of Ethiopia and the rebels, or the people who are seeking independence, is also tragic. In the course of this war which has been going on for many years we know that people have been brought forcefully, resettled from the north, into Ethiopia in order to take away the bases of supply for the rebels. We know that horrendous violations of human rights have taken place—some would even say a form of genocide in years gone—on the part of the Ethiopians against the people in that area in their so-called resettlement efforts. The Minister, however, is assuring us today. She says she is hopeful that this will not take place in future resettlement patterns, and I am hopeful as well. But we are confronted by a serious question as to whether these resettlement programs can be really said to be only a matter of trying to deal with the matter of bringing the people to the food and away from the drought areas, or whether also there are certain other factors in place that involve military and other political concerns on the part of the Ethiopian Government.

What is the Minister and the Department of External Affairs going to do about these problems? Have we in the West, the more affluent countries with much wealth and power, really done enough in advance? Canada has such great abilities in transportation. Have we in the past tried to ensure better transportation systems? Is there anything we could have done about it? That is a very important question in light of the danger of starvation and the tragedy of resettlement which is at hand.

What are we doing to monitor the human rights situation of these people? The Minister says that there is a voluntary resettlement program. How voluntary can a resettlement program really be when army trucks drive up to a community and load people up telling them that they are going south or they will starve, that there will be no food coming in? How voluntary is such a resettlement program? How much choice do they have? That is another question we must ask ourselves searchingly.

Can Canada, with all of its ability in the field of helping out, not use some of its influence to monitor the human rights of those people? What program do we have in place to monitor human rights?

There is an underlying question. What is the Department of External Affairs doing in terms of diplomacy to try to bring the world together. We can bring food together in such a wonderful way, but what are we doing to bring the world together through the United Nations or other ways to solve quickly the tragic war that is taking place in Ethiopia? Are we showing the same kind of energetic leadership as we are showing in the field of humanitarian concern to try to bring about a solution to this tragedy in Ethiopia? Can nations as powerful as the United States, the Soviet Union, Canada, France, Britain, China and India not bring a quick solution to the suffering that is caused in large measure by the tragic problems which exist as a result of the guerrilla war and the constant conflict? Can we not step in more energetically?

These are the kinds of questions which I think Canadians would want to address to the Minister. In appreciation for her report and in thanksgiving for the things that are being done, we yet have to ask these questions searchingly. We hope to hear from her further in response.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of my colleagues, the Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) and the Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), I am pleased to rise today on behalf of the New Democratic Party to respond to the Minister's statement.

With respect to the specifics of the latter, I would like to start by saying that we on this side of the House are genuinely concerned by the prospect that millions of Ethiopians are again facing starvation. Canadians must respond. The question is how.

[Translation]

When we try to fight famine in Ethiopia, we must realize that famine and the political situation are very closely linked. Granted, drought and gradual desertification are the main causes, but it is also true that the victims of these natural disasters are too often manipulated and used as bait both by the Government and the rebels who are locked in a struggle to control the country. We, and in fact all Canadians find this state of affairs abhorrent.

Hunger knows no politics, and we cannot let food be used as an instrument to control people. The Canadian Government and the international community must state clearly to the two forces who are locked in confrontation that Ethiopians who are dying of hunger must not be used as hostages.

[English]

Canadians believe that the larger and more serious problems of hunger and starvation cannot be ignored and must be addressed. In this respect Canadian aid programs need to consider two interrelated problems; what can be done to alleviate the critical hunger crisis facing Ethiopia today, and what can we do to alleviate the longer-term problems at the root of the current crisis?

Insofar as the immediate crisis is concerned, we believe that Canada must continue its emergency food and medical relief efforts in order to avoid another tragedy like the one we witnessed in 1984-85. I am sure everyone in this House would share that sentiment. Where the problems arise, however, is in ensuring that our humanitarian aid reaches those most in need rather than being used for political or military purposes.

I would have hoped that the Minister would have had more concrete measures to report in this regard. In particular, she should have outlined to this House and to the Canadian people what action the Canadian Government is prepared to undertake to ensure that Canadian and, indeed, all humanitarian aid is guaranteed free and unhindered access to the needy in all parts of Ethiopia; that relief convoys are clearly identifiable as such and that verification procedures are implemented to ensure that such convoys are not used for military purposes; that food assistance and logistical support are not used directly or indirectly for forced resettlement and villagization programs; and that food relief is not misappropriated for military forces. I think the Minister's statement would have been more useful and reassuring to Canadians if she had addressed some of these substantive issues.

With regard to the longer-term undertakings necessary to try to reverse the current cycle of famine and starvation in Ethiopia, we believe that we need to move away from the current large mega-project approach and focus more of our attention and money on smaller local aid programs geared to the population's needs and capabilities. This shift in emphasis has been under discussion for some time and I think it would be helpful, for both Ethiopia and other nations, if the Minister would finally announce the long promised new CIDA policy that so many have for so long been waiting. Unfortunately, this new policy appears to have become bogged down in Cabinet. I would like to take this opportunity to urge the Minister and her cabinet colleagues to finally outline to this House and to the country what new and hopefully decentralized CIDA policy they have in mind.

The current cycle of famine and starvation places great strains on the aid community's efforts to address the longer-term structural, agricultural and environmental problems at the heart of the problem in Ethiopia. I would caution, however, that this dilemma should not be looked at primarily as a question of the allocation of scarce financial resources. In this regard we believe that our longer-term projects should not be allowed to suffer in order to find the funds necessary to respond to current or future hunger crises. Instead, I would argue that each and every famine situation requires an infusion of significant new funds to meet the immediate threat so that many of our longer-term projects can proceed relatively unhindered. Otherwise we are merely engaged in band-aid solutions that will ultimately do little to alleviate the suffering in Ethiopia.

[Translation]

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about the problem of the Ethiopian government's population displacement program. Initially, the purpose of the program was to move residents of famine-stricken areas to the southern part of the country where the land is more fertile. However, the program has become very controversial. The Ethiopian government's approach is clumsy and dictatorial. Its intentions are far more political than humanitarian. It seems that residents of the North are being forced to move to more southerly regions which, unfortunately, are not ready to receive them.

Last week, as the Minister herself reported, there were rumours that the Ethiopian army had shot twenty people who refused to take part in the program. The Minister must try and find out whether these allegations are true.

It is also said that camps in the North, the same camps that are receiving supplies from international agencies, are being used by the Ethiopian government as transit centres for its massive displacement programs. With all these allegations, the Canadian Government is in a very uncomfortable situation. Only two countries are helping to facilitate these moves, and Canada is one of them. With these persistent rumours, the question arises whether Canada should continue to help the Ethiopian government displace all these people.

Insofar as it concerns the Canadian Government sponsored resettlement programs in Ethiopia which are run by NGO's and not the Ethiopian Government, there seems to be evidence that the result has been an appreciable improvement in living conditions. However, other resettlement programs may not have been as beneficial.

In addition, irrespective of the relative benefit of any particular resettlement program, we cannot support the forced deportation of starving Ethiopians to resettlement areas, Canadian or otherwise. As such, I welcome the Minister's statement that any resettlement program must be strictly voluntary.

However, I must also point out that she has again failed to outline exactly what steps she plans to implement to ensure that resettlement to Canadian sponsored resettlement areas or any resettlement area is done on a purely voluntary basis. Without such a clear outline of practices, guidelines and verification procedures, I fear the Minister's statement may in fact turn out to be more rhetorical than real. Once again, the Minister should have been more forthcoming on specifics.

I want to join with my Liberal colleague in recognizing the fact that it is the war, insurrection, or revolution in Ethiopia that has caused much of the difficulty we face in ensuring that aid is properly distributed in that country. I join with him, as I am sure will others in the House, in asking the Government to pursue whatever means and agencies it can find, with other nations through the UN or elsewhere, to ensure that peace is brought to Ethiopia soon as a result of international co-operation in that regard.

PETITIONS

BLOCK AVERAGING OF INCOME

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present two petitions, one from a number of residents of Frontier, Saskatchewan, and the second from residents of the Piapot and Maple Creek districts in Saskatchewan. Both petitions concern the matter of five-year block averaging for farmers.

The petitioners note that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in December, 1987, indicated his intention to eliminate block averaging. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to take the necessary steps to retain block averaging for farmers as recommended by the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs in its report on the White Paper on tax reform, stage one.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions from residents of the City of Ottawa who note that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had actually promised in the course of bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised.

Whereas the trade agreement negotiated by the Mulroney Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interest of Canadians, and to equalize opportunities amongst the regions; and that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future—

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is it now permissible for Members to give speeches when submitting their petitions?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) will complete his petition, please.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): I appreciate that the presentation of petitions should be fairly brief. I am trying to do that.

Since the agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States, these petitioners call upon the House of Commons to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject this trade agreement in a general election.

DESIGNATION REGARDING NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege and the responsibility to present a petition, duly certified as conforming to Standing Order 106, signed by approximately 140 residents mainly of Fort Frances, Ontario. I am sure this will be the first of many such petitions.

These petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to redress the flagrant inequities that have been created between residents of different northern isolated communities by the introduction of the northern residents tax allowance whereby some communities are designated and residents receive tax breaks of up to $2,500 a year, while neighbouring communities, sometimes within a kilometre, are not designated. Of course this leads to significant inequities and grave economic distortions.

PROHIBITION REGARDING KNIVES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present several petitions from a number of citizens in Vancouver and the Lower Mainland. They state that the incidents of crimes including murder, robbery and sexual assault with knives is on the increase in all major cities across Canada. The federal Criminal Code allows citizens to carry knives for self defence, which often results in altercations where self defence is claimed.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to amend the federal Criminal Code to prohibit the carrying of knives by citizens in public places. The only exceptions would be those where a knife was an integral part of legitimate work or is being carried for religious reasons, such as with the Sikh religion.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a number of petitions from electors in the City of Windsor, the presentation of which I will make as brief as possible, commensurate with saving embarrassment to the Government concerning the signatories' plea that this Parliament dissolve immediately to permit an election on the issue of free trade.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions on the Order Paper be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall all questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I wish to inform the House that, because of ministerial statements, Government Orders will be extended by 60 minutes, beginning at one o'clock.

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Monday, February 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre):

That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

And on the amendment of Mr. Garneau:

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"This House regrets that the Budget

1. Failed to redress the inequities of the tax system created by Government policies put forward during the last three and one-half years;

2. failed to put into place a regional development policy to compensate for the high interest rate policy of the Government;

3. failed to put forward a credible plan to deal with the national debt that does not unduly punish lower and middle income Canadians; and

4. failed to specify a Canadian approach for dealing with the instabilities of the international monetary system."

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in the Budget debate. We know that the Budget recently presented by the Government is unfair to many Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, when the Conservative Budget was brought down on February 10, it marked a day in our country's history when the Government abandoned any pretence of closing the growing gap between rich and poor in Canada. The Conservative Government is cheering so hard for the haves in our society that it is unable to hear the cries of those who have not been able to benefit from an improved economy. And, Mr. Speaker, one of the regions that has not benefited from this improved economy is the very riding I happen to represent.

Mr. Speaker, the day after the Budget, the Reeve of Cambridge Township in my riding, who happens to be Chairman of the ITAC (Industry, Tourism, Agriculture and Commerce) Committee of the United Counties of Prescott and Russell, issued a press release containing his views on the Budget. Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, read the very brief contents of this press release which indicates how fed up the people of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell are with this Conservative Government, and I quote:

This morning, Denis J.A. Pommainville, Chairman of the ITAC (Industry, Tourism, Agriculture and Commerce) Committee of the United Counties of Prescott and Russell and Reeve of Cambridge Township, gave his views on the Wilson Budget brought down on February 10, 1988, in the House of Commons.

First of all, he regretted that the initial economic impact of the so-called Free Trade Agreement with the United States was mainly negative for rural regions like the one he represented. In fact, the one cent per litre increase in the tax on gas was a tremendous setback for sparsely populated regions, especially those without public transit. Once again, the 12.5 per cent who are unemployed in the area (more than twice the average rate for Ontario) will be handicapped in seeking re-training and opportunities to go back to work, now that owning a car is becoming increasingly expensive.

"Nevertheless, we are delighted that the Mulroney Government has shown it is prepared to increase the private sector's responsibility for economic renewal—

• (1220)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I must bring to the attention of the Hon. Member that we do not mention the "Broadbent Government", the "Turner Government", or the "Mulroney Government" in debate in the House. Hon. Members should refer to an "NDP Government", a "Liberal Government", or a "Conservative Government". The Speaker has brought this matter to the attention of the House on a number of occasions. I hope that the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) who has now been in the House for three years, will comply with the Speaker's ruling.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I accept your ruling and I thank you. I thought that it was accepted that when reading a quote from someone else the name of a Member could be mentioned. However, I will not continue to do so.

[Translation]

I continue:

—We are also encouraged by the sustained tax policy efforts of the Government to reduce the Federal deficit or at least to bring it down to more controlable levels.

Mr. Speaker, I quote again from the press release issued by the Chairman of my riding's ITAC Committee.

Mr. Pommainville continued to warn the Federal Government against an apparent desire not to encourage regional development. At a time when it is rumoured that the trade deal with the United States will gradually prevent Canada from favouring distant or disadvantaged areas, something it has always been forced to do especially because of our geographic and climatic conditions, it is high time for the Government to make major efforts to provide all Canadians with equal opportunities to benefit from the possible economic impact of these new markets. On behalf of the ITAC Committee and on behalf of the Joint Counties of Prescott and Russell, Mr. Pommainville deplored that nothing apparently has been done to extend such programs as the IRDP (Industrial and Regional Development Program) or at least to replace them, the result of which would be to institutionalize unemployment and social assistance in my area and therefore freeze in these economic replacement programs a significant part of the budget deficit; which would go against not only one, but two of the professed priorities of the Government itself, since any possible entrepreneur, without regional incentive, would surely establish his business in already existing regional municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, I have just read to you a statement prepared by the prefect of a major municipality in my riding and the ITAC Committee Chairman of the Joint Counties of Prescott and Russell. It is clear that the Chairman of the ITAC Committee is not at all happy with the Budget which the Minister of Finance tabled on February the 10th instant.

[English]

As you know, Mr. Speaker, and as I am sure many Members of the House know, Glengarry—Prescott—Russell is not a rich constituency. The western part of the constituency is made up mostly of civil servants. There are many farmers throughout the greater part of my constituency. There are small industrial towns in the eastern part of it as well. There are 25 municipalities and some 50 small towns.

The gas tax that was included in the Budget is most unfair to my rural constituents. They do not have a choice with respect to whether or not they should own an automobile. If one wants to work in a rural area then one has to find a means of getting to one's job. That means is usually an automobile. That automobile must have its tank filled with gas in order to run. People filling their tanks are now paying a higher level for gas than they have ever paid. This is from a Government which promised prior to the 1984 election not to increase taxes. Since the Government was sworn into office gas taxes have increased 5 cents per litre. That comes out to 23 cents per gallon.

The same Conservative Party under a different leader and under a different Finance Minister was turfed out of office in 1979 for attempting to raise gasoline prices by 18 cents per gallon. Just imagine what taxpayers would do to the Tories which presently form the Government if they had a chance to vote. They will soon, and they will turf them out of office.

I wish to talk about one other tax which is equally unfair to my constituency. It is the 10 per cent tax on long distance phone calls. If one lives in Plantagenet in my riding and wants to phone Ottawa or even Rockland to talk to the doctor, the medical clinic or to gain any type of assistance at all, one has to pay a long distance telephone charge. My constituents even have to pay long distance phone charges for contacting the local welfare office, if Hon. Members can imagine that. If that was not bad enough they now must pay a 10 per cent tax on the long distance phone calls they make. That is taxing free speech, that is what it is.

My constituents are not pleased with this tax. It is an unprecedented tax. No Government in the past has ever taxed long distance phone calls, no Government of either political party, be it Liberal or Conservative. Those Governments recognized that rural Canadians would be unfairly affected by such a tax. In my constituency it is not the basic rate of the telephone that is the problem, that $6, $7 or $8 per month in rural areas. The problem is with the long distance phone charges since almost every phone call one makes is a long distance phone call.

The Government said in its tax reform proposal which it brought in just before Christmas, something that was really another Budget in disguise, that it would tax long distance phone calls. "Not to worry," said the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), "we will not tax the basic rate". Who cares? For my constituents the problem is not with the basic rate, it is with the long distance phone charges which are too expensive already.

Some communities in my riding which are just on the outskirts of Ottawa have to pay long distance charges in order to phone the city. That is another matter and it is unfair. It is unfair for the people of Plantagenet, the people of Casselman, Clarence Creek and Bourget to pay long distance charges at all to phone Ottawa. To add insult to injury they now have to pay a tax on those long distance phone calls. Many of my constituents have corresponded with me about the unfairness of that tax and its impact on rural Canadians and small businesses.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister praised the so-called Free Trade Agreement, his own trade agreement, he told us and all Canadians willing to listen to him, and their number is getting increasingly smaller, that one of the great benefits of the Free Trade Agreement would be that the customs tariffs would go down and that Canadian consumers would be able to purchase products made in the United States at a lower price than those made in Canada. According to the Prime Minister, this was one of the major benefits of his trade agreement.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, we have learned differently in the recent Budget. The Budget or budgetary papers show that the bilateral agreement between Canada and the United States will result in a loss of revenue of about $460 million. In other words, because of the lower tariffs, the Government will lose $460 million in revenue.

At first glance, this seems like a bargain as Canadians will pay $460 million less. However, the facts disprove this. The Government has increased the tax on gasoline to collect an additional $300 million in revenue, which amount approaches that of the revenues lost because of the lower tariffs under the trade agreement.

Mr. Speaker, in other words, all Canadians, including the constituents of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, especially those in rural areas, will have to pay 1 cent a litre more in taxes on gasoline this year to pay for the Free Trade Agreement of the Prime Minister.

• (1230)

[English]

Let it never be said that this trade agreement is free trade. Every time we fill up the gas tanks of our automobiles we will be paying one cent more per litre in taxes to fill government coffers emptied by the tariff reductions under the free trade agreement. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said Canadians would benefit from lower tariffs, he did not quite tell the whole story. That is not surprising because it has happened before. However, this time Canadians are going to be mad because every time they fill their tanks they will be paying more, not just for services but because the Prime Minister gave them erroneous information. He told them they were going to be getting a deal, that goods would be cheaper, but all the Government is doing is transferring the burden to rural Canadians and those who drive automobiles.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Canadian taxpayers have certainly been treated unfairly by this Budget and by the previous budgets of the Conservative Government. For instance, since the coming to power of the Conservatives, taxes paid by Canadians have increased by 68 per cent.

Can you imagine! In 1988, with this new Budget, Canadians will pay 68 per cent more taxes than the day before this Government took its oath of office in 1984. If the taxes were applied equally to everyone, it would perhaps not be quite so bad. However, Mr. Speaker, the taxes of large companies have increased only by 28 per cent, or half the increase which applies to individual Canadians.

[English]

A one-earner family of four with an income of $32,00 a year is now paying $1,200 more in taxes. That family, not having had a salary increase at all for the last four years, actually end up with $1,200 less than before the Government came into office.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Budget of February 10 is a plan designed to create two Canadas and two solitudes: A nation of privileged Canadians who enjoy prosperity while the poorest and neediest will suffer even more.

My colleagues in the Liberal Party and myself believe that Canada is a generous nation and that all Canadians will reject the cynical budgetary plan of the Minister of Finance and the Conservative Party.

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by quoting from our Government's agenda for economic renewal which all Hon. Members will recall was presented to the House November 8, 1984:

> We have set four challenges:
> first, to put our own fiscal house in order so that we can limit, and ultimately reverse, the massive build-up in public debt and the damaging impact this has on confidence and growth;
> second, to redefine the role of government so that it provides a better framework for growth and job creation and less of an obstacle to change and innovation;
> third, to foster higher investment, greater innovation, increased international competitiveness and a positive climate for the birth and growth of new enterprise; and > fourth, to bring about these changes in a way that is fair, open and consistent with the basic sense of compassion, tolerance and justice that is characteristic of Canadian society.

Those were our four challenges after 25 years of Liberal profligacy, spending everything they could lay their hands on. Let us look at how we lived up to these commitments.

[Translation]

Our first commitment was to set our financial house in order. By 1985 the federal deficit and the national debt were practically out of control, and everyone suffers when a government loses control over its finances. It invariably leads to higher rates for mortgages as well as for corporate and consumer loans, economic faith vanishes, growth stops, and jobs get ever scarcer. That is what we inherited from the previous Liberal administration.

We believe that Canadians want their children and grandchildren to look forward to a promising and challenging future instead of saddling them with crushing debts and lost hopes.

The only way to prepare for this kind of future is to devise a medium-term financial plan geared to a steady deficit decline, and to stick to that plan.

[English]

That is exactly what we have done through a series of actions. Our first priority had to be to get government spending under control. In the four years prior to our coming into office, spending on programs had increased at an average annual rate of 14 per cent. Fourteen per cent! That is way ahead of the rate of inflation, enough to double spending in about five years. Since 1984 we have cut the average annual rate of increase in Government spending to just 3.5 per cent, less than the rate of inflation. We achieved this record because we put in place a new and disciplined approach to the management of Government and its finances.

We said that control of expenditures would be the main source of deficit reduction, and it has been. For the current fiscal year we said that we would cut the deficit to $29.3 billion, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has said that he will meet that target. Our Government has met every deficit reduction target that it has set. I need not remind Hon. Members of the very poor planning of previous Governments that never could meet a target.

We said that we would respond to the priorities and the real needs of Canadians in a fiscally responsible way, and we have done so. When we came into office there is no question that sound financial management was essential. It is essential now, and it will be essential in the future. It is a fact of life. It is a fiscal principle that we will adhere to.

First, we are reducing the growth rate of the national debt to no more than that of the economy by 1990-91, that massive debt that was accumulated under the Liberals. Second, we are achieving steady year-to-year declines in the deficit. The reduction projected for 1988-89 will be the first time in the post-war period that the deficit has declined four years in a row. Third, we are ensuring substantial reductions in the Government's financial requirements. Fourth, we are achieving the greater part of this progress through expenditure restraint and disciplined management. Our fiscal principles and structural improvements will ensure that we stay on our fiscal course.

Our next commitment on the agenda was to change the role of Government intervention in order to foster a climate for job creation. We recognize that the driving force behind productive growth, new jobs, is a dynamic private sector. In order to facilitate this growth our Government has undertaken many measures that have resulted in record job increases.

[Translation]

We have deregulated the energy and transport sectors. We have opened the financial markets to world-wide opportunities and emphasized even stronger competition in financial services. We have set up Investment Canada with a view to promoting and welcoming foreign investment in this country, the kind of investment which create jobs for Canadians.

[English]

For the corporate sector many special tax breaks thoughtlessly introduced previously are being eliminated or reduced, and tax rates are being lowered. That means our corporate tax system for small businesses and others will be more competitive with those in other countries. But there is, of course, more to be done.

We are going to replace an archaic federal sales tax system with a multi-stage system which will be effective in supporting growth and job creation, and it will be fair. We have been working with the provinces and others to develop the most effective means of implementing this new system, particularly the opportunity to have an integrated national sales tax. So far progress with the provinces has been good, but we do have more work to do.

Let us look at where all this has led—massive job creation. Let us look at the record. First, contrary to all the constant whining from the other side of the House, employment under this Government has risen in every single province in Canada. That translates into 1.156 million new jobs; people who are working today who were not working in September, 1984. Those are not only temporary or part-time jobs, as was the case with the previous Government. Eighty-five per cent of these new jobs are full time. The Liberals created only 87,000 full-time jobs in 55 months. Our Government has seen to the creation of 978,000 full-time jobs in only 40 months.

In my home town, if I may be allowed to discuss the City of Toronto and the good people of St. Paul's, unemployment is only 4.4 per cent and 181,000 new jobs have been created since 1984.

Ms. Mitchell: It is 27.5 in Vancouver East.

Mrs. McDougall: Employment has increased in every province in Canada. Those people are now working because of the new climate that our Government has created in this country. We do not create the jobs. We create the climate, and the private sector, the people and businesses of Canada—

Ms. Mitchell: Regional blindness.

Mrs. McDougall: —they are the ones who create the jobs, as they have done in every region of Canada since September, 1984.

I am particularly pleased because half of the jobs created have gone to women. There have been 611,000 new jobs, and I am sure that the Hon. Members opposite will be very pleased with that. Do I hear applause?

Ms. Mitchell: We know what kind of jobs they are.

Mrs. McDougall: I am about to explain that to the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, if she is prepared to listen.

A large portion of those jobs, 50 per cent, have been in managerial, professional, and administrative positions. I do not need to remind the women of Canada that their unemployment rate rose by 3.4 per cent under the previous Liberal Government, and most of those jobs were part-time. This is a solid record of progress. It illustrates how our policies and our approaches work.

Our third commitment on the agenda for economic renewal, Members may recall, was to create policies to increase our international competitiveness and innovation. That we have done in three ways. Earlier I mentioned Investment Canada, and that has resulted in new job opportunities for Canadians. It has been a part of the success that we have had since taking office. We are also moving on two other fronts of enormous significance to Canadians, first, the multilateral trade negotiations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and, of course, the free trade agreement with the United States.

Our Government recognizes the dangers in protectionism in other countries, and we are pushing hard for reforms to reduce protectionist policies in those trading nations involved in the GATT. It is important for our Government to continue to work hard to this end, but it is also important to remember that there are more than 90 nations involved in this process. It takes a great deal of time, a great deal of discipline, and sometimes some compromise among such a large number of nations. That is why we decided to pursue an agreement with our largest trading partner, the United States. The free trade agreement is a major building block in the Government's strategy to strengthen Canada's competitive position, not only with the United States but in the world, and to enhance the prosperity of our people.

Canadian producers will now have access to a market of 270 million people. Canadian consumers will benefit from more competitive prices on a wider variety of goods, and both countries will be able to appeal unfair trade practices to an appeal panel. Those are important breakthroughs in the world's largest trading relationship, and breakthroughs that are being watched with great interest by other trading partners in the world. They also mean greater opportunity and prosperity for Canadians.

There are many cases. There was one profiled yesterday in a Toronto newspaper, Mr. Speaker, the The Globe and Mail, where a manufacturing company in Guelph, Ontario will spend $9 million on capital expenditures next year to gear up for free trade. The company stated that the $9 million would not have been spent without this agreement. These are real opportunities, real growth, real industrial expansion, and this will lead to real jobs, despite all the noise and rhetoric from the other side.

Ever since October I have been travelling across Canada talking to many Canadians about free trade. I have been struck by the amount of support for the agreement from two particular groups, the first being Canadian entrepreneurs.

They are very anxious for this agreement. When I asked a friend why they were not out making speeches on behalf of themselves and their companies, he said that they were not doing it because they were too busy getting ready. The second group with which I am particularly impressed is our young people—the future of our country. They are embracing this arrangement with enthusiasm. They are enthusiastic about the opportunity to compete and to have a prosperous future. They want this agreement.

Finally, our fourth commitment on the agenda for economic renewal is to bring about these changes in a way that is fair, open, and consistent with the characteristics of our Canadian society. By creating more jobs, more opportunities, and better incomes, the Government enhances its ability to do more for Canadians and to have Canadians do more for themselves, and we have done more.

[Translation]

I am extremely proud of the national day care strategy recently unveiled by our Government, a series of initiatives through which $5.4 billion will be channelled towards our most precious resource, our children. The approach we took gives every consideration to the various options facing families, according to their own preferences and circumstances. By means of tax credits and other incentives we will help parents who want to avail themselves of outside day care services or who would rather provide such services at home.

We have also set up a $100 million fund for special initiatives which will enable us to establish new programs for children in particular situations, including smaller localities and rural areas. We will soon release more details concerning this program.

[English]

We have expanded the spousal allowance to widowed persons between the ages of 60 and 64 years. We have improved the Canada Pension Plan and veterans' pensions, and we have provided assistance to the disabled.

In response to the current situation facing agricultural producers, federal government expenditures in agriculture will increase from $1.2 billion last year to over $4 billion this year.

The Government has also taken far-reaching measures to reform the federal tax system, a system which had reached a dreadful state of affairs when we took over. We are making the tax system fairer for individual Canadians. We are making it more effective in supporting job creation and growth. We are creating a system which helps our small businesses and industries to compete in the world. For individuals we are replacing 10 tax brackets with three. To make the system fairer we are converting personal exemptions and many deductions to tax credits, and we are reducing and eliminating many special tax breaks.

The results are substantial. More than eight out of ten households will see their personal income taxes reduced. Some 850,000 lower income individuals will have their income tax reduced to zero. Almost nine out of ten Canadians aged 65 years and over will have income tax reductions. The vast majority of families with children will pay noticeably less personal income tax.

We will continue the course set out three and a half years ago, because we know that it is right and Canadians know that it is working. As the Minister of Finance stated in The Budget Speech, "there are no short cuts to achieving Canada's economic potential".

We are heading into a new century and, as we approach its last decade, Canadians—men, women, and young people—are ready and confident. Every time a key is turned in the door of a new business, a new home, or a new factory, that confidence is shown. We are seeing more of that every day under this Government. Every time a kid passes an exam, a young couple gets married, or a family chooses Canada as their new home, it is an expression of that confidence. As a country we do not take a back seat to anybody. Government policies must reflect the confidence which Canadians have in themselves and the pride they have in our country.

These initiatives and others like them are why Canadians elected a Progressive Conservative Government in 1984. It is the reason that I am very proud to be a member of the Government. It is the record on which Canadians will vote in the next election when they re-elect a Progressive Conservative Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to join this afternoon in the debate on the very thin budget speech which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) read on the afternoon of February 10. It was a speech full of election rhetoric and the kind of complacency which the Minister of State for Privatization and Regulatory Affairs (Mrs. McDougall) has just served up in her speech. It is the kind of pleasure people feel when they represent St. Paul's or other ridings in the metropolitan area, when they look around and see unemployment rates down to 4 per cent, when they think that all is well with the country and that their program is succeeding. They think that they simply have to stay the course and the Canadian people will re-elect them to serve up more of the high unemployment which so many regions of Canada still know, the kind of taxation which has been dumped on average and low-income Canadians over the past three years, and the kind of taxation which allows the Government to talk now about reduction of taxes for this same mass of Canadians.

Of course one can reduce taxes somewhat if one is loading thousands of dollars more on the average family. Of course one could achieve some reduction after having done so, but that is hardly real cause for complacency.

Government Members will regret the fact that election after election they served up that kind of inequity and that they ignored so much of the country in the way they have. We have commentators wondering these days whether they will make a serious try to win seats in the Metropolitan Toronto area. If they cannot win them there, they are certainly not going to win them in other parts of the country where they have done nasty things to people, ignored the regions, and neglected again in this Budget to recognize what the country needs, to take up the challenge, and to provide the kind of leadership the country wants.

What we have as a reality in much of the country is unemployment rates which are still, in eight of the ten provinces, very close to the levels they reached in the recession or the interest rate depression of the early eighties, from 1981 to 1983. There is no reason for complacency.

They have failed to come to grips with these matters or to take action for regions of the country which so desperately need it, other than press releases and the flackery of an Atlantic Opportunities Agency that is still not funded, a western development organization that is still more structure than activity, and a northern Ontario initiative that is still busy developing application forms.

This hiving off of responsibilities for the regions, which has marked the Government's policy over the last couple of years, deserves very critical and careful examination. I suspect that what it actually reveals is the constraint or the strait-jacket that the Government is taking on even before the free trade agreement has been passed by the U.S. Congress or adopted by the Canadian Parliament. It is a consequence of this action of tying Canada to the United States in so many ways.

I make that argument because we realize very well that the attack of the Americans—the American people, American industries, politicians, or U.S. administration—to facilitate the process carried out on Canadian industries was very often focused on development programs or regional development initiatives that encouraged those industries. The Government has accepted, in its free trade agreement, and not having had any success in that area, a five-year to seven-year process of negotiating its way through these matters. What the Government is desperately afraid of is that any kind of initiatives that it takes on these matters in the regions will be attacked by the American partner in this trade deal.

Recognizing that, what the Government has done is to put the responsibility on agencies, leaving them some money which will be in their control, not really in Ottawa's control; $3 billion has been pulled out of regional development reducing the amount that is actually spent in the hope that this will get us past the American attacks on government programs in Canada. The end result is that the Government is left hoping that the free market, to which it pays its respects time after time, the lower interest rates, for which it has precious little responsibility, will continue to allow the creation of jobs that has taken place over the last three years. Unfortunately that situation has not occurred in much of the country. In northern Ontario where my constituents live and in other regions, unemployment rates still remain very very high.

If we have a government that continues on the course which this Government has taken in the trade deal negotiation with the U.S., I do not see any way out. It only underscores our criticism of the deal, our opposition to it, and our need to find a different framework. We need desperately to come up with an economic policy that will allow us to achieve full employment in the regions of Canada and to move the country toward the balanced budget that all of us would like to see. If we are going to do that, we will have to move away from this preoccupation the Government has with deficit reduction; first and foremost with the loading on of higher taxes in a completely unbalanced way, and with the focus on the trade deal that I have already pointed out.

We might note that in all the advocacy for the trade deal which the Conservatives have put forward, the actual number of jobs we are supposed to get out of it over half a decade—or perhaps it is over 10 years—as a net result, is a very small number. One hundred and twenty thousand jobs is the net gain which is less than half of what lower interest rates allowed Canadians to achieve year by year since 1983. Fully realizing, even if the Minister of State for Privatization and Regulatory Affairs does not want to admit it in public, that there will be massive dislocations in the Canadian economy and thousands of jobs will be lost in the various industries with only the hope that the theoretical results to flow from freer trade will, in fact, bring us more employment, we are faced with the possibility that even the hope for 120,000 jobs as the net gain is a doubtful projection.

If one looks at all of that and recognizes the dislocations that will occur, the limitations the Government has accepted in the free trade agreement in dealing with those things, I can understand why the Minister does not want to admit that the Government should take action. The result for thousands of Canadians will be even more of the distress we have already known.

What should be have in these circumstances? I suggest we should be looking to opportunities within Canada as much as outside. Certainly Canadians want to trade. New Democrats are supportive of trade with the United States in our various industries, as is anyone, from the raw materials to the achievements of the automotive industry and high technology. But opportunities within Canada deserve to be emphasized, and challenges within this country as well. We want to look toward achieving full employment in every region and not be content with it in southern Ontario, particularly in the golden horseshoe and around metro Toronto.

We should be looking at a policy of fair taxation in which the burden of expenditure by the federal Government and other Governments is fairly distributed. Those who have the wealth and the income should shoulder that burden much more fairly than is now the case. Particularly looking at fairness, we should be looking to a rebalancing from individuals to corporations so that all recipients of income—and corporations so often receive income but do not distribute it—share in tax paying far more than is now the case. All should share in carrying the burden, meeting the challenges and seeing the promise of Canada achieved.

In this policy, we should be recognizing the importance of lower interest rates and pressing the Governor of the Bank of Canada to get those interest rates down. There are only the first suspicions of this developing these days, but the Bank of Canada is maintaining a policy of fighting inflation. The governor actually suggests reducing inflation to zero which strikes me quite incredible. A dynamic private sector uses price increases as one of its responses to the market. Achieving zero inflation will have incredible costs for Canadians, the kinds of costs which the United States federal reserve system imposed on much of the world in the early 1980s. If the Governor of the Bank of Canada is going to maintain that kind of course he will ruin the country.

Why would the Minister of Finance and the Government tolerate that? Are they again, because of the free trade agreement, encouraging the governor to keep interest rates high in order to have the value of the dollar appreciate? The dollar has increased in value by pretty close to 10 per cent in the last little while against the U.S. dollar. That increase of 10 per cent strikes Americans, who are competing with Canadian producers in their market, as a real advantage. Canadian products become more expensive. Those who saw the lower valued dollar at 72 cents, or whatever value it was in the last little while, saw that as a Canadian Government subsidy and could very well think that the Canadian Government, Mr. Crowe at the Bank of Canada and the Minister of Finance, are involved in raising the value of the dollar through higher interest rates to reduce one more subsidy, so-called, to Canadian industry. These are the kinds of charges by the United States that should be forthrightly met rather than yielded to.

It is all the more important to deal with this and to get those interest rates down when we recognize what lower interest rates have made possible in the last several years. As I suggested before, we have seen something like 300,000 jobs created by Canadians year by year for the last several years. The main reason is that interest rates have been at a reasonable level. The American authorities recognized that what they did in the early 1980s could destroy the world, bringing about a global depression, and they have backed off.

It has been possible to carry on housing construction again. Industries have been prepared to invest. We have seen new plants established and so on. All of these things have made a 300,000 person year increase in employment in Canada. It is that kind of possibility within this country which within one year gives us more jobs than the trade deal the Government holds out promises over a decade. That indicates the importance of lower interest rates and other domestic policies to achieve full employment.

The fact that we still have about one million Canadians unemployed, and there are still about as many people unemployed now as have found jobs over the last three or four years, is an indication of the challenge we find in the various regions of Canada. If we had the interest rate reductions that we should have, one or two percentage points now, to bring interest rates closer to American rates, such a reduction would have a significant impact. It would have an impact first on the Estimates of the Government, which were tabled this morning, and on the finances of the country. A 1 per cent drop in interest rates on government financial obligations would save the Minister of Finance over $1.3 billion in a year. That is certainly a saving to make when there are so many needs, so many calls on the Government, in various regions of the country. It would also bring the cost of establishing businesses in Canada closer to the American level. Interest rates that are 30 per cent to 40 per cent above American interest rates clearly represent a penalty on Canadian industry and it is the very opposite of a subsidy. This is an additional cost which Canadian industry faces when it wants to compete with American industry. There is a second very sound reason for reducing the interest rate.

Of course, over the last three years, Canadian consumers have played an important part in the return to some prosperity in certain parts of the country and in some reduction in the unemployment rate in various places including my community where housing construction has been an important factor. The fact that consumers have been able to buy houses again is surely a factor of lower interest rates. I would suggest, particularly after the crash of last October and the impact that has had on the North American economy and the U.S. economy particularly, an impact that is being felt in Canada bit by bit, it would be very important to have a reduction in interest rates.

I think these observations suggest to us that in the fiscal and monetary policies the Government is following in its Budget, the Minister of Finance failed to come to grips with the challenge. He is prepared to let the resource hinterland of the United States, which a continental energy deal would suggest, be a basic feature of his view of Canada. Of course, he thinks there will be more industrial opportunities thanks to the trade agreement, but no one can be really sure of that. There are many questions about that.

The possibility of a Canada that is well developed, prosperous and balanced, a country in which taxation is fair so that lower and middle-income Canadians do not bear the mammoth burden they do now, is a possibility toward which changes should be made. The Minister of Finance has failed to do that. He has failed to recognize the importance of supporting prosperity across the country, of building up all the regions.

He has failed to realize the importance of initiatives by the federal Government that would assist the movement toward full employment in northern Ontario, across the West, in Quebec and in Atlantic Canada.

I think of our infrastructure needs. One such need in particular has become very important for us in northern Ontario, and that is improvements to the Trans-Canada Highway which is now a quarter century old. Quite clearly, it is inadequate to the challenge, particularly in the context of trucking deregulation. The Canadian Government is supporting highway construction in every Province of Canada but Ontario. It is supporting construction on the Yellowhead Highway in the West, of all things, not even the Trans-Canada. It is under pressure these days in New Brunswick and in Ontario to take up the challenge of improving significant sections of the Trans-Canada Highway. We in northern Ontario have a quarter of the total kilometres of the Trans-Canada Highway.

A Government that is prepared to look to the market and thinks that agreements with the United States will do it, a Government that is prepared to be complacent about the rest, given the prosperity in the Metro-Toronto area, is a Government that ignores these particular challenges. It ignores the needs of the regions which, if met, could produce better employment.

I can think of other needs for municipal infrastructure. More particularly, in northern Ontario, some of the new Indian reserves should be developed, reserves on which the Government is refusing to spend any money. These are needs that would support the prosperity of the communities and move us closer to full employment. These are real Canadian needs. Meeting them would support the good health and the safety of the Canadian people. These are actions the Government should be taking. However, there has been no such action.

There has been an obsession with the market and with the U.S. tie-in. This obsession is likely to bring us incredible uncertainties over the next years, incredible dislocations and losses of jobs. Maybe there will be some net gains at the end, but there is no assurance of that. The Government has failed to recognize the challenges which face us. It has failed to take up those challenges. That is why in the regions of the country, province after province, this Government will be defeated in the next election so that other people who recognize the need to get on with the job will actually do it.

[Translation]

Mr. Ferland: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my socialist colleague from Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp). He says the Budget is unrealistic and does not reflect the real situation in this country. However, in his speech he failed to mention how his party, if it had to make the decisions and prepare a budget, would improve the lives of Canadians. I could find nothing in his speech that gave any indication of the approach his party would take. He says he would reduce unemployment, but he fails to say how. He says he would increase services to Canadians, but he doesn't say how. He says he would reduce taxes, but he doesn't say how. I would appreciate it if the Hon. Member, in the few minutes he has left, would consider this essential part he left out of his speech and inform Canadians what he would do if he were Minister of Finance and what kind of action he would take.

[English]

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for the question. In 20 minutes one can do so little. I think I did more than he has suggested, but I appreciate an opportunity to expand somewhat.

I was suggesting that we want to achieve a full-employment and a balanced-Budget Canada, a Canada in which we would be able to begin paying off some of the national debt rather than being obsessed with deficit reduction. We want to do that through a number of different actions. We want to reduce interest rates in order to encourage economic activity and reduce the cost of Government. I think I said enough about that so I will not expand on it.

We want to have a fair tax system, a tax system in which some of the burden is taken off individual Canadians. Once upon a time, within our lifetimes, as a matter of fact, the tax balance between individuals and corporations was more or less fifty-fifty. That was back in the 1950s. But over the years, particularly through the 1970s when the Liberals were in charge and the present Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was Minister of Finance, things began to go badly awry. Corporations ceased to pay as much as individuals. By now, of course, individuals pay four and four and a half times as much.

I would suggest that real tax reform would get things back into balance and would reduce taxes for individual Canadians. That real tax reform supports economic activity and allows corporations to achieve profits and pay the taxes, something which they might not like initially but which would be quite bearable, given the prosperity that would follow from tax reduction. After lower interest rates, that could be the most dynamic and explosive force the Canadian economy could achieve.

When we move toward full employment, we should get budgets that are closer to balanced. When the Auditor General's Office tells us that if the Canadian economy currently were in full employment, the Budget would still be in the red by perhaps $8 billion, we can see a measure of how unbalanced and unfortunate the Canadian tax system actually is. We simply have to come to grips with bearing the load in a balanced way, not by dumping it on individual Canadians as this Government has done even more than the Liberals did before. We need to get this into balance. Having achieved that, we would then spend our money carefully in order to encourage the move toward full employment, whether it be spent on infrastructure improvements or on post-secondary education and health. Year after year, we have seen pressures to hold back in those areas. After 10 to 15 years of inadequate funding in these areas, one wonders how many thousands of jobs could be created by doing these things properly.

These days, Ontario universities are very anxious because there is a 10 per cent increase in applications for next year. How can these applications be managed when the Canadian Government is not doing its share and the provincial Government is failing in the same way?

• (1320)

We have challenge after challenge to be met. As we do all of those things and also encourage trade within the country and realize the possibilities of energy goods across the country, rather than tying ourselves more and more firmly into the United States, I would suggest we could reach full employment, balance the Budget, and pay off the national debt instead of adding to it every year as Conservatives have been forced to do too. They have added $100 billion over their three years, plus, in power. That is hardly something to be very proud of for people who are obsessed with the national debt.

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) will stay around for a while, because we would like to explain some of the things he does not seem to have understood about public administration and the Government of this country.

Mr. Speaker, he started earlier by saying that it was a very thin Budget Speech, a Speech that lacked substance.

I can inform the Hon. Member that the Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on February 10, 1988, continued the policies in the first Budget brought down in early 1985.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member would like to recall the circumstances in which Canadians, in 1984, decided to elect a Progressive Conservative Government.

I remember what the people in the riding of Portneuf wanted in 1984. And I also remember the election platform we presented to Canadians and especially to the people in the riding of Portneuf.

Mr. Speaker, we all remember that before 1984, interest rates were very high, and the annual inflation rate was around 12 per cent. We had incredible chronic unemployment. Young Canadians could not look forward to starting a family like their parents did, because there just weren't any jobs. More plants were closing than new ones starting up.

Meanwhile, we would regularly see Liberal and NDP Members attending grand openings of nature paths and small parks they were setting up all over the place, all because of these people who were being given jobs under federal programs, the so-called "twenty-week" programs dreamt up by the Liberal Government.

My father used to say that when he was a young lad, they had Valcartier's 20 cents. Some Members may recall Valcartier's 20 cents from the Depression. People were given 20 cents a day plus a package of tobacco and cigarette paper, and that is how they managed to survive.

The Liberals invented the 20-week job. Obviously, the people who worked at these jobs had a much better chance of doing so if they had the right connections.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, in 1984 Canadians were fed up with this approach. They asked the Conservatives to do what was necessary to put the economy back on its feet and create a situation in Canada where Canadians would be able to participate in the development of their country.

Mr. Speaker, that is what we did, that is what the Minister of Finance has done, that is what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) did and that is what this Government has been able to do.

On February 10, the Minister of Finance may have brought down the least spectacular Budget this Parliament has seen in decades. We have not made any rash promises during the past four years, Mr. Speaker. Maybe not four, but almost four years. What we did was to put in place the mechanisms we promised, starting in September 1984.

Recently, I met people in my riding who asked me: "Mr. Ferland we have plans for a playground in our community. It would be good for the kids". I said: "Sure, but we don't have any money". They answered: "How come the federal Government doesn't have any money? You spend $100 billion annually. You must have $25,000 or $30,000 to help build a playground". But I said: "Let me tell you that our Government has reached the objective it set for itself in 1984, which was to revive the economy and renew the hopes and dreams of Canadians, something people had lost in 1984". So they said: "Now listen, we are developing this community and we need certain facilities". So I said: "Remember, in 1984 the Conservatives said: We have to make a choice between creating permanent jobs or building playgrounds. However, to create permanent jobs, first the economy has to be in good shape. To revive the economy, we have to deal with the deficit".

The former Minister of Finance, Mr. Lalonde, used to say that an annual deficit of $50 billion should be considered normal in Canada. I may remind you that the NDP never disagreed with this stand. In any case, you can put the Liberals and the New Democrats in a box, shake well, and one comes out green and the other comes out red. Philosophically, they are all the same.

So I told these people, Mr. Speaker: "We made a choice. We made cuts in the Government's discretionary spending, cuts totalling $4 billion the first year. The following year, in the second Budget, we cut $2 billion. Last year we cut $500 million. This year, we intend to cut $300 million in discretionary spending. Mr. Speaker, we have now cut a total of $6.8 billion in our Budgets, funds I am sure could have been used to make our backbenchers, especially, look good in their ridings. Of course it is nice for a Member to be able to tell an association or a group in his community: "We are happy to give you this cheque to develop your project. It will help the community and put people to work for eight or ten weeks". However, that is not what we had in mind in 1984, as Members of this Government. In 1984, our objective was to create permanent jobs.

When we were elected, there was a whole series of job creation programs, a total of 24, Mr. Speaker. There were all kinds of programs, except programs that provided for permanent jobs. We did some housecleaning. We eliminated 18 programs and kept six. My constituents are particularly happy with one of those programs, the Job Development Program. This government took the initiative in working with the private sector, the municipalities as well as with non-profit-making organizations in order to create permanent jobs. And it has succeeded, Mr. Speaker. In my riding, hundreds of workers now have a permanent job thanks to this Canadian government program. And I can tell you that people thank me for that. Members do not get thanks very often, but when people have been unemployed for one or two years they do not mind thanking you for helping them find a job by creating a situation conducive to job creation.

Speaking of job creation, Mr. Speaker, before 1984 in my riding plants closing and job lay-offs were almost a regular occurence. But since 1984, Mr. Speaker, the trend was reversed. Although one may want to criticize the performance of the Conservative government, one cannot deny what has been achieved in my own riding and which is there for every one to see.

Since 1984, we have seen 36 expansion projects and the creation of new businesses with the assistance of the Federal Government. And in my riding it was the work of only one department, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Opposition criticizes the work done by that Department but I can tell you that people in my riding are totally satisfied with the job done and they just want that Department to put even more money for development in my constituency. But from 1984 up to now the Federal Government has invested $4.056 million, thus allowing the private sector to carry out projects to the tune of $16,240,000. That is a lot of money, Mr. Speaker! Thirty-six businesses expanded or were established, and I don't mention those which did not need the help of the Government of Canada because they had enough financial backing to go at it alone, and also because as a result of the economic climate created by the Government throughout the country they could do it by themselves. They were proud to say that they did it all by themselves and they said so to the reporters. But what they don't forget to mention is the fact that if we are able today to invest without anybody's help, it is because of the policies implemented by the Conservative Government. But this is another objective, Mr. Speaker, that the people from Portneuf in my riding has asked us to reach.

The people were asking me to put pressure on my Government, on the Ministers to get action along those lines.

I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Governmeent delivered the goods and that we can be proud as Canadians to have such a good Government, managed by men and women who took over an administration which was really terrible and transformed it into an administration worthy of a country like Canada.

Considering how the New Democrats and the Liberals behave in this House, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if they really want fairness in Canada. In 1984, indeed, we stated that we wanted fairness for each and all in this country. The most recent example that I believe Canadians will remember, particularly those from Quebec, and I know that residents of Portneuf are still reminding me about it, concerns Bill 22. Who filibustered Bill 22? That Bill was precisely about high technology, about our future, about research. Members from the NDP and the Liberal Party say that we do nothing for research. Yet, we introduced Bill 22. The New Democrats supported it, and even though they are against the Senate, they supported the Senate as well. That is something, Mr. Speaker! I say they are whited sepulchres. What else can I say? We cannot use other terms for fear of unparliamentary language. So I shall refrain. Nonetheless, it is outrageous. It is outrageous for Canadians and especially for Quebecers, for what were the New Democrats and Liberals doing by filibustering Bill C-22? They were doing, Mr. Speaker, what the Liberals had always been doing: They were creating a strong central Canada and weak eastern and western Canada and forcing East and West to go down on their knees to central Canada, that is southern Ontario.

And that is what they have done, Mr. Speaker, for where were the copying companies? They were in Ontario, not in Quebec. On the contrary, we had in Quebec innovative companies. Hundreds of millions of dollars were contributed by the private sector and were not coming out of the taxpayers pocket, Mr. Speaker. But no! The research must be done in Canada but not by the private sector. It must be done by the Government. They would have Canadians believe that people are not the Government. Well now, Mr. Speaker, when I travel through my riding I say to them: You are the Government. You are the people from whom we get the money. We get the money from your pockets, we do not ask for your permission, but we are the ones who decide how it is going to be spent. That is reality.

Provincial and municipal administrations do exactly the same thing. All Government levels in Canada do that, but indeed they have to provide sound financial management. If we were to listen to the socialists—small-s and capital-S, minor red or green socialists—we would take even more money out of their pockets to be able to make bigger deals and thus appear to be even more important. Budgets would be much more impressive and the state would do even more. Still, Mr. Speaker, I am not convinced that the state managed by officials would do better with the money than the private sector or the individual who had to work to earn that money.

Why would these same individuals be against free trade? It just happened that way. I am sure the leader of the New Democratic Party does not come from Canada's most destitute region. I was told that the unemployment rate in his riding is something like 3 per cent. I certainly wish it was at that level in my riding, Mr. Speaker. In spite of the hundred of jobs which have been created, the unemployment rate there is still close to 12 per cent. "If it is good for Ontario", as the Portneuf people will say, "it is good for us too". The people in my riding are not afraid of the American market. We have papermills. We have sawmills and granite processing plants. We have cement plants. And do you know to whom our people are selling? To the Americans! And it is not in their mother tongue that they do! They have learned how to speak English and even American to be able to make themselves understood. They are not afraid of that. Quite the contrary, they are saying: "We are finally going to get the same opportunities as the people in Ontario". But we hear Premier Peterson of Ontario, supported by Mr. Broadbent, the NDP Leader, and Mr. Turner, the Liberal Leader, saying: "We are going to tear up this deal". Can you imagine that, Mr. Speaker? The Liberals and the NDPs are clearly demonstrating that they do not want to give a break to Canadians, whether they live in Western, Eastern or even Central Canada. That is unacceptable. It is as though the country had been governed for 75 years by a Liberal Government only for the benefit of Ontario. It is a fact that Quebec may have been slow understanding. It may have had to wait until the Conservative Party chose a leader from Quebec before it decided to trust him and elect him as Prime Minister in Ottawa with a Conservative Government. But I can tell you something, Mr. Speaker: Ever since a Conservative Government was elected in Ottawa, Quebec has had its fair share, as evidenced by... Who are the staundest supporters of free trade, Mr. Speaker? The Governments of Quebec, Western Canada, and British Columbia. Why?

Because they are aware that their people will finally have an opportunity to make deals with the Americans, to expand and find new markets in the United States without having to go through Toronto, because we must admit, even if the NPDs and Liberals are loath to say so, that free trade has existed for twenty years in Ontario. It has clearly existed there for twenty years. So if it has been good enough for Ontario... I remember the slogan: "If it is good for Ontario, it is good for Canada". But now, they have a new Premier... It was a Conservative Premier who was saying that then. Today, the Liberal Premier is saying the reverse: "If it is not good for Ontario, it is not good for Canada". It is funny! Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, if it is good for Canada, it must be good for Ontario, Quebec, British Columbia and New Brunswick. This is the case of the Free Trade Agreement. It is also the case of the Budgets introduced by Mr. Wilson in this House and of everything which the Governement of the Right Hon. Prime Minister, Brian Mulroney, has accomplished in the last three and a half years. This is what we have tried to do, Mr. Speaker, and it is not always easy.

I was reading an article today by Rodrigue Tremblay. He is not just anybody; he is very well-known in Quebec. This is what he had to say: Without free trade, there would be only one major centre, Toronto... The reason is quite simple: The St. Lawrence valley is now attractive to investors, and the region of Montreal becomes an ideal location to gain access to all North America, especially to the Montreal/Boston—New York—Washington/Chicagop—Toronto triangle.

I know that my time is almost up, Mr. Speaker, but I want to say that everything the Government has done was done openly. The Government had said in 1984 that it would be difficult, but that it would be done. The Opposition says that we have increased taxes. However, not a single Quebecer, not a single Canadian, even if he only has a grade one education, knows that a Governement cannot work miracles and that, when there are debts, they have to be paid. Those debts were not created by the Conservative Party, but by the mismanagement of a Liberal Government in partnership with the New Democrats. Together, they brought Canada to the brink of bankruptcy. What we have done, Mr. Speaker, is to give back some hope to our youth, to all Canadians so that they may develop this country and put it back on track. We have given them proper direction and we shall continue to do so. After the next election, Mr. Speaker, you and I will still be here in this House to protect Canada's interests.

[English]

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a couple of questions. If I heard him correctly, he said we want a Canada that is fair to everyone. I am sure there is unanimous agreement with that statement. Then he went on to give a few statistics on unemployment. He indicated that in Oshawa the unemployment rate was about 3 per cent. In his riding he said it was about 12 per cent. I would like to add that in my riding we did a study which indicates it is 27.5 per cent. Colleagues of mine have said that in the North and on Indian reserves it is over 60 per cent in some instances.

Therefore, I think all of us would agree that we just do not have a way of coping with unemployment which is really fair to everyone. Although I agree with him that a lot of jobs have been created and we are glad that the people of Oshawa and the golden horseshoe have low unemployment, we would like to see it right across Canada. Therefore, I would like to ask him what more he thinks his Government, or indeed any Government, can do to get rid of these regional disparities and do more for all Canadians.

Secondly, he referred to the NDP opposing Bill C-22. I think he was a little unkind in some of his remarks. The main reason we opposed Bill C-22 was because drug prices, particularly prescription drugs for the elderly and the chronically ill, will go up phenomenally. They have already gone up almost 200 per cent in some cases as indicated in a recent study in Ontario, I believe. I wonder if he thinks that is fair. Has he talked to seniors in his riding and does he know what they feel about drug prices going up to that degree?

[Translation]

Mr. Ferland: Mr. Speaker, I am always surprised to hear the socialists say that we are attacking senior citizens and that we do not take their problems into account, as though the socialists were the only ones to do so. There is no need to remind you that Old Age Security Pensions were not brought in by the New Democratic Party. As for the price of drugs, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) should know that, in Canada, drugs are covered by health insurance throughout the country. There is no question of attacking senior citizens. Absolutely not! Everyone knows that. In my constituency, senior citizens were certainly not scared by Bill C-22. This is because their drugs . . . In my riding, senior citizens tell me: There is no problem; our drugs are paid for, and if we cannot afford them, they will be paid by welfare. In any case, the drugs will be paid. So, where is the problem?

As for unemployment in Vancouver, this relates to what I was saying earlier.

It is beyond me that a Member from a part of British Columbia that is one area of Canada with a very high unemployment rate would accept that her party oppose the free trade agreement, which will enable British Columbia to enjoy the same opportunities Ontario has.

Mr. Speaker, I can hardly get it into my head that a Member from an area that calls itself underpriviledged, that claims to have unemployment problems, would oppose extending the same opportunities to her constituents, the same avenues as people have in Ontario. I find that amazing, Mr. Speaker.

I can tell you that in my province of Quebec, we support free trade and will work for the agreement's enactment, for its speedy enactment because in Quebec we want to have the same opportunities as Ontario—the same opportunities for high salaries, the same opportunities to find jobs. We want to ensure we can keep the markets we already have and will not be hit at some point by an untimely tax that would eliminate our jobs. Quite the opposite!

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, it is always a surprise that on the one side of their mouths the socialists would preach virtue and on the other side they will not practice that virtue. Because where I come from practicing virtue means doing what one preaches.

And if we are really to eliminate unemployment in Canada, we must provide our young and all our people with the best tools to do their jobs. If we do not supply them with the best tools, they will have less chance of being successful. And there is no reason for not having in this country the same opportunities from sea to sea, and I will constantly fight any politician, of whatever political stripe or persuasion, who wants to oppose the free trade agreement, because in my province, in my constituency, it is essential to the survival of small businesses and to ensure . . .

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired and questions and comments are now terminated.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to be able to speak in the debate on the Budget recently presented to this House by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). It is a very curious document because it says so little. One wonders what could possibly have been in the mind of the Minister in bringing out such a bland document, a do-nothing Budget, a non-event, really. Is he saying there is nothing to be done, that the situation is rolling along beautifully? If so, nothing could be further from the truth.

We hear negative comments from all over the country. The business community says the deficit is too high. People from all walks of life say the Government is not concerned about their interests. Certainly if there is one group that must be listened to it is lower-income Canadians. This Budget, like previous Budgets, increases the disparities between the wealthy and not so wealthy. It is a sad commentary on our times that a country as wealthy as Canada should be neglecting people and areas of this country which need assistance in developing their economic possibilities.

Just look at the tone of this Budget, not only what is there but what is not; for example, the child care program. The Government told us it would be bringing forward a child care credit which would apply equally no matter the income of the person claiming the deduction. But it did not do that. It created a deduction of $4,000, which will of course be more significant to wealthy Canadians than it will be to lower-income Canadians. A person in a 29 per cent federal tax bracket will be able to save as much as $1,800 under that deduction, yet someone in a 17 per cent bracket will save only $1,000. That is not what we were led to believe the Government was going to do. We were told one thing and the Government did another.

It seems as though the Government always drifts away from ordinary Canadians when it brings down a Budget or makes its economic pronouncements. Not only does the Government seem to ignore low income Canadians and areas in which economic difficulties are prevalent, it seems to make matters worse. That is not right.

What did the Government do with this Budget? It increased excise taxes. Who will that hit? It will hit the Canadian motorist. The excise tax on gasoline will be increased significantly. Since the Government came to power it has imposed excise taxes on gasoline amounting to 5 cents per litre, inclusive of the tax that was imposed in this Budget. That 5 cents per litre is equivalent to 23 cents per gallon. This amount is higher than the amount of excise tax proposed by the former Minister of Finance, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), which he was planning to impose in his Budget in December of 1979. He wanted to impose an 18 cent per gallon excise tax. The Government has increased the sales tax. The sales tax also applies to gasoline. There will be a 1 cent per litre increase, which is incredible.

What does this mean? It means that the average Canadian family of two adults and two children will pay $1,200 more in taxes today than it was paying when the Conservative Government was elected in September, 1984. This is not getting to the problem of ordinary Canadians.

The speaker who spoke before me talked about the unemployment rate and how the Government wants to see equal opportunities throughout the country. That is not happening. There are not equal opportunities throughout the country. In fact the opportunities for certain Canadians are becoming fewer and fewer. The Member who spoke before me talked about the unemployment rate being 8.1 per cent nationally. In Nova Scotia it is 12.1 per cent. The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) said that according to her own tabulations in her own constituency the unemployment rate there is 27 per cent. In my constituency on Cape Breton Island the unemployment rate is 21.1 per cent. It is higher by far than when the Government took office in 1984.

Yet what do we get from the Government? We get the general pronouncements with respect to its strong economic performance. This leads to the apology that perhaps this does not apply across the country, that there are certain areas the Government would like to see a little better off economically. That is all we get.

There is always an asterisk in the Budget about how it is too bad that certain areas of the country are not doing better economically, that certain people in certain areas are more prone to unemployment than people in more prosperous economic areas. That is just not good enough. The Government has been in power now for three and a half years. It is high time that something was done to correct the regional disparities, not making them worse than they were before.

We see continuing evidence that the Government does not care. It says that it will do something and immediately thereafter it says that it forgot all about it. It says these things for public consumption hoping that certain words, phrases or promises will stay in the minds of Canadians. Canadians might have been predisposed to think of these niceties when the Government was first elected, but they will no longer. They know that the words of the Government are hollow and that it does not mean anything that it says when it comes to helping low income Canadians and those living in areas of regional disparity.

What has the Government done? The Minister of Finance started off with his first statement which was not a Budget. It was an economic statement that he put forward in November, 1984, in which he started to slash programs, including programs that were very necessary for Canadians.

One thing that bothered me in the energy field—something which bothered me then and continues to bother me now—is that the Government slashed programs which helped Canadians save on their energy expenses. Why would a Government do that? That certainly hits low income Canadians. The Government did away with those programs and said that they had never served their purpose. In effect, the Government said, "We are going to get away from actually throwing money at Canadians. We are going to promote programs but we are not going to give away money". It was right about one thing, it certainly did not give away any money. However, it has not been promoting programs either.

The difficulty is that those programs were important to Canadians. Conservation was the most successful aspect of the former Liberal Government's National Energy Program. That program saved Canada 75 million barrels of oil per year. That is something important to consider. It is important to take the strengths of a program or of a country and to build on them, not to destroy them. Destroying them not only does away with the program but hurts the people who the programs were intended to help. In most cases those people are low income Canadians. Not only does this affect the ability of people to pay for their energy, it also affects their ability to stay in their own homes. The conservation program was important in terms of allowing senior citizens and low income Canadians to remain in their own homes.

That was not the only program the Government destroyed. It reduced substantially the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan. It also cut back on RAP which was an important program giving assistance to Canadians who wanted to stay in their own homes. Not only is my constituency an area of high unemployment, it is an older area as well. It is important that people who are in their homes are able to fund repairs for their homes because if they cannot then they cannot stay in their homes. They will be condemned. What will happen then? They will find themselves without a place to live or the Government must provide public housing. Today, public housing costs between $40,000 and $50,000 per unit. Where is the advantage to Canadians? Where is the advantage to the Government?

The Government promised jobs. It has made many statements. Yet in the Budget the Government does not say what it promises to Canadians. It does not give an accounting of what it has said, showing us what has been delivered on. The Government ignores that. It ignores the promises it has made. It has gone on to make new promises. It wants to make further promises, which of course it has no intention of keeping.

It is important that Canadians know that the Government is not resolving their predicaments at all. What the Government is doing is trying to see what is its best position before going into another election. In the upcoming election Members of the Government will run into a great number of skeptical Canadians. Canadians will no longer take the words of the Government at face value. They will not do that. They will be prepared to accept the promises of the Government, but they will be duly skeptical.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When debate resumes at 3 p.m. the Hon. Member will have seven minutes left in which to conclude his remarks. That will be followed by a 10 minute period for questions and comments.

It now being 2 p.m. the House will proceed to Statements by Members pursuant to S. O. 21.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[English]

ABORTION

RIGHTS OF UNBORN CHILDREN—CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, we now have the intolerable situation that there is no federal law in place to protect in any way the rights of the unborn.

Because the right to life is obviously the supreme and highest of all human rights, the recent decision by the Supreme Court of Canada places an urgent requirement, not only on the Government which has the lead responsibility, but also on each and every parliamentarian to see to it that good legislation is passed.

As Members of Parliament we now have at last a rare opportunity, at the invitation of the Supreme Court, to pass legislation to protect the life and the rights of the unborn fetus. I want to make it clear again that I personally am opposed to abortion. But while it is obvious to me that the process of life starts at conception, I am sure that the courts will continue to argue over the legal definition as to when a human life begins, and our legislation will have to anticipate this problem.

However, I am deeply concerned that the Government may decide not to act, or that it may delay. Even if it does bring in legislation, there are dangerous signs that it will imitate a number of other countries, by only limiting protection of the fetus until after a fixed time such as 20 weeks following conception. Such legal rigidity would be tragic because it would deny the full protection of the law to the fetus at an earlier stage. We cannot afford to delay as we are talking about the survival of human life. I call upon the Government to give us an immediate commitment to a timeframe for action.

S. O. 21

RIGHTS OF UNBORN CHILDREN—CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same subject which is an issue of urgent and pressing necessity. Since the recent Supreme Court decision striking down the abortion law, Canada has become the only civilized nation in the world which has no legislation protecting the unborn child.

Yet a recent Gallup poll of Canadians revealed that 53 per cent of Canadians want some legislation to protect the fetus. They are looking to the federal Government for leadership on this emotional issue.

I recognize and support the current Government on the process of consultation with the provinces prior to the introduction of legislation. Let us move with speed and deliberation. Let us take the lead and demonstrate to Canadians and to the world that we, as a nation, have the courage to balance the rights of women with the protection of human life. No group has unlimited rights.

Every civilized nation will ultimately be measured by how it treats it most vulnerable, those who cannot speak for themselves and who ask for nothing but a chance. I urge the Government to act with courage and compassion.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

CALL FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to insist on the resignation of the Minister responsible for aboriginal affairs. The Minister has broken the trust relationship with Canada's first citizens.

The 1973 ruling of the Supreme Court of Canada on the Nishga case brought Canada into negotiations on the comprehensive claim to the Nass Valley. The Minister has now crushed those negotiations and refuses to act in good faith.

Since 1940 the Lubicon Band has sought the respect and assistance of the federal Crown for the historic lands of the Lubicon people. The Minister has chosen to fund the Daishawa Corporation to log the very lands that the Lubicon seek, in contravention of Cabinet requirements for an impact evaluation. This is bad faith.

Since 1985 the Lytton and Mount Currie Bands have sought to meet with the Minister for assistance in preparing their case on the Stein Valley. Even today they are here in Ottawa and the Minister has refused to see them. This is bad faith.

The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of British Columbia has encouraged aboriginal people in British Columbia to stand up for their rights. The first citizens of Canada cannot put trust in a Minister who will not meet and who will not negotiate. Race relations are disintegrating in British Columbia as a result of the calculated budget cuts combined with accelerated pressure on the lands and resources.

The Minister must resign because these federal policies are forcing natives and non-natives into confrontation and, potentially, violence.

NATIVE PEOPLES

CONTRIBUTION OF THE CREES

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the article by Pierre Foglia published today in La Presse which deals with the James Bay Cree is contemptuous as well as slanderous towards this wonderful people which I have known personally for over thirty years.

Pierre Foglia should know that the white population of Abitibi has respect for this people which has greatly contributed to its economy, its knowledge of the North and its renowned arts and crafts. I have great respect for the Great Chief Matthew Coon-Come and all the chiefs of Cree communities which represent this great people.

We have here a remarkable people, recognized before the United Nations and in Geneva, and able to manage its own affairs. The Cree also have a mind for business and I might recall that they own 42 corporations and a profitable airline, Air-Creebec, in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I am apalled and indignant at the racism and baseness which transpire from every line in this article. For such ignorance and foolishness, I can only ask: Lord, forgive this "foolish—glia" for what he says!

SCOUTING

TRIBUTE TO BOY SCOUTS AND GIRL GUIDES MOVEMENT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, this week is National Boy Scout and Girl Guide Week. I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate all the boy scouts and the girl guides in the federal riding of York South—Weston.

On February 12 the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) and I had the pleasure of attending the first Weston Beaver-Cub and Scouts fund raising dance. We were extremely honoured that evening to have been made honorary scouts of Weston. Scout Leader, Mr. Kevin Breakey, administered our oath and gave us our scout scarves, which I am wearing here today in the House. I promised the boys that I would wear this scarf in the House today.

Yesterday, February 22, was Lord and Lady Baden-Powells' birthdays. Their birthdays coincidentally fall on the same day. Lord Baden-Powell was the founder of the Boy Scouts of Canada, and Lady Baden-Powell was the founder of the Girl Guides of Canada. Our Chief Scout of Canada is Her Excellency the Right Hon. Jeanne Sauvé.

The scouts and guides are a community oriented organization that unselfishly supports communities by such events as food drives for the needy and special projects for senior citizens. One of the major endeavours of the boy scouts is the "Trees for Canada" project. Over the past 15 years the boy scouts have planted more than 2 million trees across the country as a conservation project. Incidentally, 15 per cent of all funds raised on this particular project go to youth education in Third World countries.

The scouting oath is based on the following principles:

> I promise to serve my God, my Queen, my country and my fellow man and to be wise in the use of my resources.

I am sure that I speak on behalf of all Members when I say congratulations to all the boy scouts and girl guides in Canada.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

WITHHOLDING OF GRANTS IN LIEU OF TAXES TO MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the attention of the Ministers of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) and Indian Affairs (Mr. McKnight) ought to be directed to the problems being caused by the arrears, some going back to 1985, of payments of grants in lieu of taxes to municipalities in respect of land reserve for Indians within these municipalities.

People live on the lots in question, but title to the land is held by the Department of Indian Affairs. Grants in lieu of taxes are supposed to be paid by the Department of Public Works. If it does not pay, municipalities will no longer be able to provide services to the affected residents.

In northern communities such as Fort Smith and Fort Simpson where land so designated constitutes a large proportion of the total, the burden caused by non or late payment is extremely heavy.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, allow me to pose a question. When would a free trade agreement no longer be a free trade agreement? Doubtless, Mr. Speaker, your impeccable logic would conclude that if it were torn up it would no longer be a free trade agreement.

But, Mr. Speaker, Liberal utterings indicate a greater freedom in labile Liberal logic than that available to the rest of us, because there are Liberal voices who suggest that we are wrong. Perhaps we did not have the question right. Perhaps our question should have been, when is a commitment to tear up a free trade agreement no longer a commitment to tear up a free trade agreement? Perhaps the answer is when Liberal corporate donors say that such a commitment is to commit suicide. A conundrum to find an answer to which the Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) and the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) were dispatched to Washington, to find a new commitment perhaps to avoid committing financial suicide.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—PLIGHT OF UKRAINIAN YURI SHUKHEVYCH

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, the year 1988 is special to Ukrainian Canadians as it marks the millennium of Christianity in Ukraine. It also reminds us that, although the Soviet Government has claimed to have adopted a spirit of openness or "glasnost", persecution of Ukrainian Orthodox and Ukrainian Catholic clergy continues. As well, the Soviet Government has perpetrated numerous human rights violations, disregarding the statutes of the Helsinki Accord, to which it is a signatory.

An example is the case of Yuri Shukhevych who has been in prison for 36 of the last 40 years simply because he is the son of General Roman Shukhevych, the Commander in Chief of the Ukrainian insurgent army who was killed in 1950. Today Yuri Shukhevych remains in prison in very poor health.

Yuri Shukhevych's "guilt" lies not in commission, but in association. This is a travesty of human rights. Until the Soviet Government ceases human rights violations there can be no glasnost and no justice.

Lest we misinterpret the true intentions of the Soviet Government, I urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Government of Canada to pressure the Soviet Government for the release of Yuri Shukhevych and other prisoners of conscience in the Soviet Union.

We all want peace, but not without freedom.

CHALLENGE '88

ADMISSIBILITY OF CERTAIN INSTITUTIONS TO PROGRAM

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, again this year we are faced with the same problem: homes and institutions belonging to the Social Affairs network in Quebec cannot apply to the Challenge '88 Program. Last year we were told that these institutions could not participate in the Challenge Program but, at the last minute, an agreement was reached and, had we decided then to favour those institutions, we would have had to cut help already given to organizations or other institutions in various ridings.

I am wondering, Mr. Speaker, why, this year, as soon as the Challenge '88 Program was announced, the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) did not start to negotiate quickly with the institutions which are part of the Social Affairs network, instead of waiting until the last minute and, may be, announcing the same thing as last year.

AIRPORTS

HAMILTON AIRPORT—TEST FLIGHTS—EFFECT ON RESIDENTS' SLEEP

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, at almost exactly this hour in Hamilton City Hall, regional councillor Ann Sloat is delivering the same message to concerned residents of Ancaster as I am telling Hon. Members in this House.

The entire Hamilton-Wentworth area desires to get as much air traffic as possible into Hamilton Airport. The just announced Pan Am express service from Hamilton to New York is great.

What we do not need, as just one example of sleep disturbing activity, is a major airline which purchases giant airbuses from France and then test flies them, with 36 take-offs and landings from one o'clock to three o'clock in the morning.

I am fully supporting a midnight to 6 a.m. curfew on all flights in and out of Mount Hope, except for unforeseen circumstances, and that is the region's problem.

To enforce the curfew, I am urging Transport Canada to consider staffing the control tower 24 hours a day with round-the-clock surveillance to monitor all air navigation and to put an end to some strange nocturnal happenings up there.

We want full use of Hamilton Airport, not flagrant abuse of our airport.

Oral Questions

PRIVATIZATION

MERGER AND SALE OF ELDORADO NUCLEAR AND SASKATCHEWAN MINING DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, our billion dollar Minister of State for Privatization and Regulatory Affairs (Mrs. McDougall) has struck again. Perhaps the most disturbing part of the Minister's press conference yesterday in Saskatoon was her statement that the proceeds of the sale of a merged Eldorado Nuclear and Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation would go toward retiring the debt of the two companies.

What this means is that the people of Canada will be forced to assume $600 million in debt, and the people of Saskatchewan another $450 million, for a total of over $1 billion. The only people who will benefit will be those able to buy shares, not the ordinary citizens of Canada who advanced the hundreds of millions of dollars necessary to establish both these public enterprises.

Since both Eldorado and Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation have been presented to the public as viable, well managed companies, why do the purchasers need an additional public subsidy of $1 billion in order to be persuaded to buy?

Clearly the Government wants future high share prices and increased profits for its private sector friends. Under this proposal future profits will be paid for, in advance, by the Canadian public, thanks to the Conservative Government.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CONFLICT OF INTEREST LEGISLATION—POSITION OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the "BBC" is at it again. The Back Bench Committee, not content with its attempts to scuttle bilingualism in Canada, has now decided to stop the new conflict of interest Bill. Those remnants from the Neanderthal and brontosauras era do not want the new "ease the sleaze" legislation. They say: "It is not our fault if Tory cabinet Ministers cannot keep their dirty paws out of the public trough".

In 1984 the Tories won an election, not a lottery. Let us have the new Bill. We can live with the rules on this side of the House. The question is: Can the Tories do likewise, for a change?

HOUSING

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, the housing sector is given a very high priority by the Conservative government because many Canadians have trouble finding affordable housing. For example, in my Québec-Est riding, since September 1984, the federal government has allocated over $2 million to build close to 500 public and private nonprofit housing units. On top of that, our government spent, under the nonprofit housing program, $13 million on guaranteed loans for homeowners as well as $3 million on rental housing.

Whether they live in the city or in the countryside, Quebecers are very attached to their neighbourhood. Our policies, Mr. Speaker, are people-oriented. They are humane and respectful of individual liberties.

The Progressive Conservative party, Mr. Speaker, has revived the Canadian economy, thus guaranteeing our social initiatives for the coming years.

FREE TRADE

POSITION OF OSHAWA

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the Oshawa City Council has just endorsed our free trade deal by a majority vote of eight to five. This city is located in the riding of the socialist leader. The people of Oshawa, the elected members of this city, have passed a motion which flies in the face of the socialist leader, and they say to him that the free trade that has existed in the automotive industry since 1965 must continue. They stated that they do not agree with the position taken by the Hon. Member for Oshawa, their representative in Parliament. The aldermen of the city of Oshawa are elected by people who benefit from the free trade, from the Auto Pact. They know what they are talking about. Their member of Parliament does not represent them anymore, and he must resign, Mr. Speaker!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

AMOUNT OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In eight of ten Canadian provinces unemployment is higher today than it was prior to the 1981-82 recession. The Prime Minister, indeed his Government, has acknowledged that fact. For three years the Government has said that it is concerned about the uneven growth of the economy in Canada's regions, and for three years the Prime Minister and his Government have promised to increase regional economic development spending.

This morning's budget Estimates show that while the Government has been preaching the virtues of regional development, it has in fact been practising a policy of regional abandonment.

Will the Prime Minister now admit that, despite his promises of new regional development programs and new money for those programs, regional development spending in Canada has been cut by 20 per cent since the Government came to office in 1984?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to correct the false impression which the Hon. Member has left. For example, in September, 1984, when the Government assumed office, the unemployment rate in Newfoundland, his home province, was 23.8 per cent. Today it is 17.4 per cent. In New Brunswick it was 16.2 per cent. Today it is 12.5 per cent. In Quebec it was 12.9 per cent. Today it is 9 per cent. In Alberta it was 12.1 per cent. Today it is 8.8 per cent. There has been a significant drop in unemployment. As a matter of fact, it has dropped to its lowest level in six years.

With respect to DRIE, it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member has not examined the Estimates in a proper manner. He will find that in 1984-85 grants and contributions to support industrial development and regional development amounted to some $832 million. In 1988-89, according to the Estimates which were tabled today, it is $1.7 billion, or an increase of more than 100 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: The Estimates speak for themselves, and I invite all Canadians to read them. Comparing unemployment today with unemployment during the height of a recession is not the mark of a government accomplishment.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister announced the formation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and the Western Diversification Program, he promised that both these regional development programs would be funded with new money over and above existing levels of regional development spending.

On June 6, 1987, in St. John's, Newfoundland, the Prime Minister said:

> This is not a "topping-up"; it is not old money in a different guise. It is a commitment of new resources to a new agency for new programs in the Atlantic region.

This morning's Estimates merely indicate that the Government is playing a shellgame with Atlantic Canadians and with western Canadians.

I ask the Prime Minister, because I addressed his words and his commitment, how he squares his commitment to put new money into new programs with the reality of a $1.5 billion cut contained in this morning's Estimates in regional development programs. I ask the Prime Minister that question. I hope he has the courage to answer.

• (1420)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): The Prime Minister not only has the courage, he has the vision. That is why the unemployment rate has dropped to 8.1 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Instead of the Hon. Member relying upon his research assistant, he should read the Estimates himself for he will find—

An Hon. Member: He can't read.

Mr. Mazankowski: —that in 1984-85 under DRIE commitments, they amounted to just over $1 billion. That was the total envelope. Today with DRIE, the Western Diversification Initiative, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, the envelope has increased to $1.966 billion, or an increase of almost $900 million. Those are the facts, Mr. Speaker.

PRIME MINISTER'S COMMITMENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the tragedy for the Government is that Canadians can read and they do remember the Prime Minister's words. Let me quote again from a statement last June in the middle of a by-election in Newfoundland when he said, with respect to the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency:

> We begin with new money, a new mission, and new opportunity. Perhaps we could also add—and with the goodwill of the people of Canada.

Does the Prime Minister of Canada not realize that this cruel and cynical shellgame he is playing with the dollars in the regional development department does not generate goodwill, it generates mistrust by the people of Atlantic Canada and by the people of western Canada? Will he order his Minister of Finance to stand in his place and to restore the cuts that have been made in the area of regional development at a time when Canada's regions are seeing the development of two economies? Will he do that and keep his word given last year in Newfoundland?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed unfortunate that the Hon. Member does not listen to the answers. He had his questions prepared before he heard the answers. He is just reading.

Mr. Tobin: You don't listen.

Mr. Mazankowski: He talks about trust and commitment. He overlooks the fact that 1,156,000 new jobs have been created since the Government took office. He overlooks the fact that last year there were more new jobs created than at any time since Statistics Canada recorded the job-creation activity in this country, 611,000 jobs, of which 53 per cent of all jobs created have gone to women.

In so far as Newfoundland is concerned, Mr. Speaker, I refer the Hon. Member to page 12921 of Hansard for February 12, 1988, where the Minister of Finance pointed out:

> The transportation and highways ERDA agreement, $112 million; the pulp and paper ERDA agreement, $38 million; forestry resource development, $33 million—

These are all in Newfoundland, Mr. Speaker.

> —Channel of Port aux Basques water supply, $6.5 million; Newfoundland offshore development fund $225 million; Goose Bay airport redevelopment, $93 million; the FBI equity injection of $77 million; Terra Transport—

Some Hon. Members: More!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mount Royal.

TELEFILM CANADA

RESIGNATION OF FORMER EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, Jean Sirois, friend of the Prime Minister, has caused untold grief as Chairman of Telefilm. Yesterday the Minister was too clever by half. She tabled a five-page letter instead of Mr. Pearson's full 24-page letter of October 13 in which he says that Mr. Sirois, her political appointee, had overstepped his authority as well as abusing his expense account.

Why did the Minister hide the other letter? Why did she not give us the full story?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I tabled the official, signed letter that Mr. Pearson sent to me. I admit, of course, that there was a second letter. I may also say to the Hon. Member that the action I took on the difficulties in Telefilm would have been the same regardless of what letter I had received because we knew that Telefilm was in financial difficulty. We knew that there had been difficulties with management, and we moved immediately to ensure that there was an audit made of the finances of Telefilm, and that financial systems and a financial management team were put in place.

It is interesting to note that the film industry itself, the association representing some 200 film producers in this country, wrote to me and said: "We share your distress over recent attempts to make political mileage out of, what for us, was old news. We have been working with Jean Sirois in trying to get everything ready for a new Executive Director".

You see, Mr. Speaker, the industry wants the success story of Telefilm to be carried forward. It is people who are trying to disrupt it, such as the Hon. Member for Mount Royal, who are causing difficulty.

OVERCOMMITMENT OF CORPORATION FUNDS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, sticks and stones to me will not improve the television industry unless this Minister has a better commitment. I will send the Minister a copy of the letter I am talking about. I will also send her the other story which is absolutely disgraceful.

Does the Minister still stand by her response, and I quote, the response she gave yesterday:

> The executive director reported that Telefilm was overcommitted to the tune of $48 million.

Would she be prepared to correct her misinformation and acknowledge that it was Chairman Sirois on October 26 who made that unfounded announcement?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that we had been advised by the former Executive Director that there was probably going to be a lapse of $53 million. Then through the month of September we learned that that was not so. In fact the Department of Communications worked with the management of Telefilm to bring auditors into place to find out what the correct situation was.

The Hon. Member says that we have not done anything, in fact, to help out with this situation. May I say that that is not the view of the people in the industry. They write and say to me that: "Telefilm Canada is a success story"—they recognize that—"and will remain a crucial part of the success of the Canadian film and television industry. The membership acknowledges your role and your staff's assistance in the gains that we have made".

IMPORTANCE OF ACT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. I have here a copy of a confidential report from members of the Conservative caucus about the amendments to the bill aimed at improving the Official Languages Act. According to this report, some members of the Conservative caucus want to have 15 amemdments to that legislation, 15 amendments which would destroy the Official Languages Act. Would the Deputy Prime Minister assure the House of Commons that the Government has no intention to yield to their wishes thereby destroying Canada official languages Act?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have responded to a similar question in the House before. I have indicated that there are some Members who have expressed some concern about certain elements of the Bill. There will be a caucus held to deal with this particular issue.

As I said at the time, the Government has no intention of deviating from the principle of the Bill. I would be surprised that any piece of legislation, given the scope and magnitude of Bill C-72, would proceed through the House and committee without some amendment. If that were not the case, then I am sure the Hon. Member would be the first to agree.

The Government has no intention of deviating from the principle of the Bill. If there were some fine tuning and some clarification required, those suggestions will certainly be entertained.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the fine tuning, specifically with the intention of improving legislation that has in the past been supported by all the Leaders and all the Parties in Canada and has been accepted by the large majority of all Members of all Parties, is one thing but 15 amendments would destroy the Bill. That is completely unacceptable to the House of Commons, and I hope it would be unacceptable to the Government.

• (1430)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have just indicated the position of the Government. I do not know why the Hon. Member is getting so worked up. He has some pretty serious divisions in his own Party with respect to its policy on NATO. We do not go out exploiting that particular issue—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, we do once in a while, mildly.

Mr. Broadbent: I was about to say that the Deputy Prime Minister is an honourable man and normally quite candid.

REQUEST FOR EARLY VOTE ON LEGISLATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to return to what the Deputy Prime Minister understands, the House understands, and the country understands to be a very serious subject. Having heard that, according to him, the Government remains committed to the principle of the Bill that has been introduced, will he assure the House that his meetings with his own back-benchers will be concluded soon so that we can have a vote very soon in the House of Commons on this important matter of principle?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, that is a very interesting turn of events. If that is an indication that the NDP will not put up any more speakers and the Liberals will not put up any more speakers, I am sure we can move on this fairly quickly.

I appreciate the Hon. Member's interest. I just hope that he is a little patient. We are dealing with the Budget now, and when we have dealt with the Budget I am sure we will then be able to deal with this piece of legislation. It is a very important piece of legislation and we intend to proceed with it.

REQUEST FOR SPEEDY PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is with respect to the same report from the Back Bench Committee of the Conservative Party. If the Government is committed to the principles of the Bill and simply contemplates technical and fine-tuning changes, then certainly these should be done after second reading and after committee hearings at a committee of the House of Commons, and not in the back rooms of the Conservative caucus. Will the Minister make a commitment to proceed quickly with this Bill as requested by Alliance Quebec and by the Association des francophones hors du Québec and make changes as they are made in the usual way in this House?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I guess I can take from the Hon. Member's intervention that the Liberals are prepared to see the Bill pass very quickly. I am glad. That is a good indication.

The Hon. Member has been around here a long time. He knows that discussions go on in caucus. I certainly know that they have some differences of opinion in their caucus. Of course they have three different positions on literally every issue so it is easier for them to have a mild caucus.

These are some very important issues that have to be discussed. We intend to discuss them. We will deal with this issue. We intend to proceed with the Bill. I am glad we will have the co-operation of opposition Parties.

ADVERTISEMENT PUBLISHED BY ALLIANCE FOR THE PRESERVATION OF ENGLISH IN CANADA

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, these Conservative back-benchers have printed their criticisms of the Bill in detail publicly as has the Alliance for the Preservation of English in Canada which has taken out full-page ads in newspapers across the country. I would ask the Minister if he, with the resources of his Government, is willing to rebut publicly in detail those unfounded allegations and misinformation put forward by Conservative back-benchers and by the Alliance for the Preservation of English in Canada. Will he do that publicly in the newspapers of Canada just as they have done?

Mr. Speaker: I notice that the Hon. Member has not mentioned any particular Member by name, but I just want to indicate that it is not proper in this place to impute the motives of Hon. Members. That is getting pretty close to the bone. I just hope it does not get any closer.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can respond to the question put by the Hon. Member who asks whether the Deputy Prime Minister will respond to some of the criticisms that have been made. In point of fact, my hon. friend will be pleased to learn that the Deputy Prime Minister and nine other senior Ministers from western Canada signed a specific point-by-point rebuttal of criticisms of Bill C-72, which was published in a western magazine, and which we believe is a very eloquent and sensitive expression of a national point of view, very much to the credit of the Deputy Prime Minister and all the leaders of western Canada.

DEVELOPMENT OF DUTY REMISSION PROGRAM

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have here the November letter from the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion to the head of the apparel industry, and I would like to ask the Minister about that letter. It is very precise and says:

> —my colleague, the—Minister of Finance has decided to proceed with the development of an important duty remission program for the apparel industry prior to the June 30, 1988, deadline.

Since then various U.S. interests have said that the trade deal will not pass if we proceed in this direction. Suddenly, the Government has started to waffle. I want to ask the Minister if this is still a commitment, clear and forthright, of the Government, yes or no?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I will not quarrel with my hon. colleague's expertise on waffling. It is certainly not an area with which we are very familiar.

I can tell the Hon. Member that we did write to the industry and we did indicate to the industry that we were prepared to put a plan forward, a plan to be discussed with the industry in general, to see if we could not reach an agreement that would be accepted by all parties concerned. we do not feel that, in any way, that proposal is in contravention of the free trade agreement put forth, and the discussions are ongoing with the industry.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, there was a very precise commitment not to talk with the industry but to proceed with the development of this duty remission program. I quoted from the Minister's own letter. I ask him to give a direct answer, yes or no, is the Government still committed to the promise it made in November of last year?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I find it rather strange that the Hon. Member should suggest that the Government cannot consult with the industry on such a fundamental matter affecting the competitiveness of that very industry in which there are some concerns raised by different sectors of the industry about the issue. We are discussing it. We want to improve the competitiveness of the industry, and this is fully consistent with everything we have said to date. I really fail to see the point of the whole question.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

GOVERNMENT FUNDING AND POLICY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The people of Nova Scotia know that the Government of Canada is not committed to the coal industry of eastern Nova Scotia. First, the Deputy Prime Minister refused to include representatives from Atlantic Canada on his special committee on utilizing Canadian coal primarily for Ontario Hydro. More recently, one of his Ministers announced in the Estimates a $70-million cut for the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

I would ask the Deputy Prime Minister to explain to Canadians why the Government continues to preach about its concern for regional inequalities when in fact it is a barefaced untruth, and it is not committed to regional industrial development in Canada.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the basic facts are very clear about our commitment to regional economic development. In the Estimates that were presented today, including ACOA, the Western Diversification Office and DRIE, we find that expenditures for regional development total close to $2 billion. In DRIE alone there is an increase of $197 million. In ACOA there is obviously an increase of $316 million. There is $312 million for the western development initiative. We find that Vote 10, the vote for DRIE alone, has increased from $849 million last year to $1,084 million this year. If that is not a strong commitment to regional development, I do not know what it is.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. That commitment is similar to the one which the Minister of Finance made on February 26, 1986, to older workers in this country when he promised a new program. Two years have elapsed and there is not one red cent for older workers.

The Minister has refused to answer the question. Why has the Government cut in excess of 50 per cent—54 per cent to be exact—from the capital expenditure budget of the Cape Breton Development Corporation? If the Government is so committed to the coal industry it should put its money where its mouth is.

Mr. Crosbie: That's not a question.

Miss MacDonald: No one should have to answer that question.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for St. John's East.

LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING FOR REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Estimates tabled in the House this morning reveal the real truth about the Government's lack of commitment to regional development. They show that the percentage of expenditures for economic and regional development has fallen from 13.6 per cent in 1984 to 10.3 per cent today, a shocking decrease of 24 per cent in only four years.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister not admit that these figures show the abandonment of any real commitment to regional development, except for rhetoric?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member did not listen to my first answer to the Hon. Member earlier. The grants and contributions under the economic and regional development envelope have increased from $832 million in 1984-85 to—

Some Hon. Members: They went down.

Mr. Frith: Tell us about the Edmonton Mall.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Mazankowski: —from $832 million to $1.7 billion which is an increase of $868 million. That is a doubling, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. Member is referring, of course, to the fact that the dismantlement of the NEP under the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, through which the confiscation of revenue from western Canada was channeled through the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, reduced expenditures by some $4 billion. However, thanks to the dismantlement that transaction is no longer necessary. Even with that taken into consideration the envelope for regional development has increased by some 16 per cent.

The NDP gets up day in and day out and says that the Government is not committed to regional development. The NDP voted against every regional development initiative that we brought before the House.

ATLANTIC REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister announced last June new moneys in the amount of $200 million a year for Atlantic regional development. Will the Deputy Prime Minister not admit that this is a miserly commitment in a Budget of $132 billion for a problem which the Economic Council of Canada has called the most serious economic problem facing the country?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I challenge the Hon. Member to stand up in this House and tell the Canadian people why they voted against a $127 million fund for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, why they voted against $101 million for the Western Diversification Fund, or $465 million for additional funding for DRIE, or why they voted against $29 million to help native self-government and economic development. Let him explain that to the Canadian people.

Mr. Broadbent: Why do you mislead Parliament?

NATIVE PEOPLES

GENEVA RESOLUTIONS ON TREATMENT OF INDIGENOUS PEOPLES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question should properly be directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs but I will seek an answer from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I wonder if the Minister is aware that on Thursday of this week the United Nations Human Rights Commission will be voting on three resolutions which are very important to the aboriginal peoples of Canada and in fact to indigenous people all around the world.

These resolutions call, first, for the setting of international standards for the treatment of indigenous peoples; second, for an inquiry to be set up by the United Nations to look into how treaties are dealt with between nations that have indigenous peoples—and Canada has many such treaties—and, finally, that 1992 is to be set aside as the International Year for the Recognition of Indigenous Rights.

Can the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development explain to the House and to the aboriginal people of Canada why Canadian officials in Geneva are actively lobbying against these resolutions and trying to have their approval quashed?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the activities of officials in Geneva but I am aware of some of the concerns that have been expressed by aboriginal peoples in Canada to the United Nations and those concerns are being heard.

One of the reasons, I could assume—but I do not know—that officials may be putting forward a Canadian point of view is that under the UN Charter all existing avenues for redress in your own country must be explored before you go to the United Nations. In several cases in Canada, as the Hon. Member knows, there are court actions and other avenues of redress which aboriginal people have not followed to fruition and they are now pursuing their claims in other areas of jurisdiction. I hope they could be pursued in Canada.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, the Minister will realize upon reflection how inadequate that answer was.

REQUEST THAT OFFICIALS BE INSTRUCTED TO SUPPORT RESOLUTIONS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have been in touch in Geneva with the Grand Council of the Cree of Quebec. I have in my hand a direct intervention made before the Sub-Commission by a Canadian delegation.

Will the Minister arrange a meeting this week, possibly today or at the latest tomorrow, with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and will the two of them send a very strongly worded directive to the Canadian officials in Geneva and tell them to get behind these resolutions and give Canada's fullest support to the United Nations Human Rights Commission?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I should not have to remind the Hon. Member of the commitment of the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs to human rights, in Canada and around the world. Despite all the good intentions that my colleague may have, the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs does not have to consult with me or the Hon. Member. His record and that of Canada are well known throughout the world.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROPOSED TORONTO HEADQUARTERS—SCARBOROUGH SITE

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. Very soon the CBC is expected to present a plan to the Government for its proposed new Metro Toronto headquarters. Scarborough has offered a site which is part of Canada's most exciting architectural complex which would represent only 5 per cent of the cost of the proposed City of Toronto site.

Will the Minister assure the House that, in the interests of the Canadian taxpayer, the Scarborough proposal will be included in those considered by the Government?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, some two years ago the Cabinet gave the CBC the authority to call for proposals for the construction of a new broadcast centre in Toronto. I am sure we all recognize that the present facilities of the CBC there are inadequate.

I want to inform the Hon. Member and others that the CBC is in the process of finalizing the proposal that it will present to Cabinet. This will come before Cabinet by the end of March. I am certain that even though we have not yet received the proposal from the CBC, it will take note of what the Hon. Member has had to say.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—NISHGA COUNCIL'S CLAIM

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Since September 4, 1984, the Prime Minister has never once spoken out in support of what is apparently his own government policy to settle comprehensive aboriginal claims in British Columbia.

• (1450)

Since the only active negotiation is with the Nishga Tribal Council in the Nass Valley, and since there has been no progress on this claim since 1984, will the Prime Minister take this opportunity to endorse the policy of negotiated settlement and assure Canadians that the steps necessary to achieve settlement will in fact be taken now?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, under the leadership of the Prime Minister, my colleague, the Hon. Minister of State, implemented a new comprehensive claims policy after consulting with Indian leadership in Canada. We went forward after the implementation of that was announced in December, 1986.

Presently six claims are under active negotiation in Canada. I hope they can be settled. If we cannot come to a settlement on the six active negotiations, we will proceed down the list and attempt to conclude negotiations with those outstanding claimants.

The necessity of settlement really implies co-operation, which we have had from the claimant groups and hope will continue.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET INDIAN CHIEFS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development talks about co-operation. The Lytton and Mount Currie bands have been attempting to meet with the Minister of Indian Affairs regarding the Stein Valley since 1985, and have been refused. The Minister has refused to meet with them, including even today.

Will the Prime Minister take the opportunity to meet with Chief Ruby Dunstan and Chief Leonard Andrew who are here in Ottawa today seeking the Prime Minister's assistance and, if not, will he appoint a Minister of Indian Affairs who will meet with aboriginal people?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised by the prefatory nature of the comments of my hon. friend with regard to our commitment to aboriginal rights.

I had the privilege of chairing two First Ministers, conferences in Canada, seeking justice for our aboriginal people and seeking the appropriate constitutional amendment that would deliver that justice. We came extremely close to securing an historic agreement. We have to try again.

If I may say so, I, along with many others, was instrumental in working out an agreement that I believe was satisfactory to the native people and all the environmental groups with regard to South Moresby in British Columbia. That was a landmark settlement which very much favoured the aboriginal presence and economic development in British Columbia. We have introduced a number of comprehensive initiatives.

It is with a great deal of pleasure that I regularly meet with aboriginal leaders here and across the country. I have done so from the day I was sworn in and will continue to do so on a regular, ongoing basis. Any time that it is in any way productive, I will be happy to do so.

RAILWAYS

RAIL REHABILITATION PROGRAM—OMISSION OF WOOD MOUNTAIN SUBDIVISION

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It concerns the 1988 rail rehabilitation program in western Canada and the omission from that program of the Wood Mountain subdivision in southern Saskatchewan.

I believe the residents who are served by that line feel that there was a commitment in the past to upgrade that line to hopper car standards. Given that a number of studies, including the PRAC and Hall Commission, have recommended that full upgrading be undertaken, and given that over $3 million has already been spent to that end, will the Minister agree to review and reconsider the status of the Wood Mountain subdivision upgrading?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I understand the Hon. Member's concern in this matter. He has been very active in making representations in connection with it.

I will undertake to review the situation to see if anything can be done because I certainly do not want to annoy the hon. gentleman.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

THE PROMOTION OF BILINGUALISM AND LINGUISTIC MINORITIES—ROLE OF GOVERNMENT

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Earlier, the Deputy Prime Minister tried to minimize the split in the Conservative Party about Bill C-72.

Does the Prime Minnister know that in fact some Conservative dinosaurs want to deny the Federal Government the right to promote bilingualism and linguistic minorities?

Can the Prime Minister give us the assurance that in no circumstances such amendments to Bill C-72 will be accepted?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my friend's statement surprises me a lot. He talks about minimizing the dossier of Bill C-72 by somewhat accusing some Conservative Hon. Members of something they have not done.

But I did not make any comment, when 25 percent of the Liberal Hon. Members voted against the Meech Lake project, when 25 percent of the Liberal Hon. Members in Ottawa protested against the Meech Lake Accord, which is a real shame! I did not make any comments.

As we speak the Conservative Government is introducing historic and important amendments to enhance Bill C-72. They will be passed by Parliament, and I hope that when the Hon. member votes for Bill C-72, he will convince some of his colleagues to vote for the Meech Lake Accord.

COMMITMENT OF CONSERVATIVE CANDIDATES CONCERNING BILINGUALISM—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): It is clear the Prime Minister does not remember. He rejected an amendment moved by the Leader of the Official Opposition that would have guaranteed the promotion of bilingualism in Canada within the Meech Lake Accord.

Incidentally, I wish to remind the Prime Minister of the way one of his predecessors, Mr. Stanfield, dealt with Mayor Jones of Moncton under similar circumstances.

Will the Prime Minister have the courage to do the honourable thing and refuse, as leader of his Party, to approve the candidacy of these Conservative dinosaurs who would not accept bilingualism in Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member speaks of an amendment to the Meech Lake Accord moved by his leader. He is wrong. If my memory serves me right, his leader moved not one but eight amendments which would have had the effet of destroying the Accord. This is the tragedy suggested by the Liberal Party.

As to the protection of the rights of French and English-speaking minorities in Canada, I have no lesson to learn from the Hon. Member or his Party. We know how to protect minorities wherever they live in our country.

NATIONAL REVENUE

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES—REQUEST THAT REGULATIONS BE AMENDED

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue who will know that the list of communities eligible for the northern residents tax allowance excludes, on a seemingly arbitrary basis, many communities which are isolated and remote by any standard, and furthermore sets up major inequities between neighbouring communities.

In view of the patent unfairness of the regulations that his bureaucrats have put forward, will the Minister institute some rules that eliminate these divisive and destructive distinctions?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, my colleague raises a very timely question. He knows that indeed our Department administers this program which I think he will concede has brought a lot of tax equity to many Canadians who have not had it before. Nevertheless, he is correct that there are some anomalies in the legislation.

My colleague, the Minister of Finance, will soon be appointing a committee to explore some of the difficulties that may exist. In the meantime we will be glad to hear representations and where there are administrative accommodations possible, we will look into them.

APPLICATION OF AMENDMENTS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister. Will such recommendations be retroactive, and will they apply to communities such as Wabowden in Manitoba, 700 kilometres north of Winnipeg, or Nestor Falls where there is a four hour daily bus ride for high school students?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think my earlier answer indicated that the matter will be checked carefully by the committee or commission that will be appointed fairly soon. As I say, if there are problems with specific communities, I invite him to give me the details. If some administrative accommodation is possible, we will look into it.

• (1500)

Mr. Speaker: I should advise Hon. Members that there will be three more questions, one each for the Hon. Member for York South—Weston, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville, and finally the Hon. Member for Halifax West. That will end Question Period.

IMMIGRATION

DEPARTURE FROM CANADA OF CONVICTED TERRORIST

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns convicted terrorist Mahmoud Mohammad Issa Mohammad. Reports indicate that Mr. Mohammad was spirited out of the country last night en route to London, in co-operation with the RCMP and the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. We understand further that Mr. Mohammad is on his way back to Canada. Can the Prime Minister explain exactly what is going on and whether it is the Government's intention to allow Mr. Mohammad back into Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Government's policy with respect to Mr. Mohammad has always been very straightforward: to ensure that Mr. Mohammad leaves the country. We have initiated deportation proceedings. Mr. Mohammad's lawyers approached departmental officials last week and said that their client wished to leave the country on his own accord, and I may remind the Hon. Member that he is entitled to do so. They made their own arrangements, which included his final destination. The Government issued a Canadian ID card valid for one week, so Mr. Mohammad would be able to leave the country.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker: He left of his own accord. It seems that Mr. Mohammad, for reasons known to him and his representatives, is on his way back to Canada. Again, Mr. Speaker, that being the case, the Hon. Member should know that if a person has landed immigrant status, he has every right to return to Canada.

[English]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question also concerns Mr. Mohammad. In light of press reports this morning and this afternoon that he was on his way to Algeria via London and is now on the way back, would the Minister agree to make a full statement to the House today on this situation? Can he tell us the full extent of the involvement of the Government of Canada? For example, was the RCMP, CSIS or any other agency of the Government involved, outside of the one to which he made reference?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have already explained the case. I repeat that the Government's purpose is to ensure that Mr. Mohammad leaves the country. We have initiated deportation proceedings. Mr. Mohammad expressed the wish to leave of his own accord. We facilitated his departure, always in accordance with the regulations, and if Mr. Mohammad returns to Canada, we shall proceed accordingly. Hearings on deportation proceedings were being held, and we will simply continue these hearings.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I indicated to the Hon. Member for Halifax West that I would recognize him. Unfortunately, Question Period has gone on too long. I will certainly recognize him tomorrow. That is the end of Question Period.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Mr. Garneau (p. 12860).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) has seven minutes left for debate plus 10 minutes of questions and comments. Before he commences, may I say that I hope Hon. Members will continue their conversations behind the curtain.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, before I was interrupted for Question Period I was discussing the inadequacies of the Budget brought down by the Government, particularly with respect to the areas of this country which are undergoing economic difficulty, to those who are without jobs, and to a lot of those who are employed but who are not getting support from the Government in obtaining the type of job security they should have. I am pleased that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) is here because a lot of this relates to his Department and the difficulty people have had in trying to follow through on what the Government has said it is going to do.

To give an example, we have the recent closure of the coke ovens at the Sydney Steel Corporation. This closure was of course directly related to the strike because they were not due to close until June. There are now another 125 men out of work in an area where the unemployment rate is 21.1 per cent, according to Statistics Canada, but where the actual rate is considerably higher.

Ten years ago those men said they wanted some kind of pension security because the coke ovens, then owned by the Cape Breton Development Corporation, were sold to the Sydney Steel Corporation. They went from a federal Crown corporation to a provincial Crown corporation. When these men, who had been at DEVCO for about 20 years, went with Sysco, they expected their pension benefits would go with them. Yet they now find that that is not the case. Men who worked for DEVCO for 35 or 40 years now have about 15 years seniority so far as pension benefits are concerned, mainly because the federal Government failed to honour its commitment to those men. This is treachery of the highest order. It is not against the law but it certainly goes against the grain and the stomachs of the Canadian public. It cannot be allowed to continue.

Of course, the country will rectify this in the next federal election but until then, the Government, particularly the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, should look into it once again. The steel workers have written to him about it and have not received an answer. I think the Minister should at least give them an answer on this very important question. These men remained in the same jobs, it was simply that the ownership of the ovens changed hands. Yet now they do not have seniority or their pension benefits. All they have is perhaps vacation rights.

Tom Kent, when he was President of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, promised those workers they would have their pension benefits and seniority, but that promise has not been kept. Therefore, I ask the Minister if he would be so kind as to look into this matter. As he can appreciate, it is a major concern in a very difficult time at the Sydney Steel Corporation. I hope also that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) would look into the promises and statements he has made with respect to the commitment to cleaning the tar ponds and Muggah Creek in Sydney. The commitments that were made by the Minister of the Environment have not been kept.

He also referred to the workers at the coke ovens. He said that when the coke ovens would be closed, which was supposed to be in June, there would be various benefits given to these workers, including job retraining. Unfortunately, because of the strike the closing was moved up to a couple of weeks ago. Yet we have heard absolutely nothing about this job retraining. These are things that should be remembered by the Government. These are initiatives which should be included in the Budget, not only because they are important in economically disadvantaged areas but because they are initiatives that have already been talked about and, in many cases, promised.

I ask that the Government look at the question of regional disparity to ensure that the people are not misled and that there are programs. I ask the Government to do this so that people will not be wasted. There are areas of the country in which there are shortages of manpower. Yet we have people who are not being utilized to their maximum benefit. That is a crime. A person only has one life. It is paramount that the Government do what it can to make the life of each individual as meaningful as possible. That is something that the Government should keep in mind. A great part of this meaningfulness has to do with a career that a person has which is not only for his or her benefit but for the benefit of their families as well.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member very closely. Will he share with the House any good news that he has about Cape Breton? We have heard many negative comments and yet only today I received three letters from different people on the Island, all of whom wrote about how encouraged they are because new industries are opening. The writers of these letters have pointed out that for the first time some people are showing a new confidence in that the Island is bettering its position. In short, many more people are now working.

Since the Hon. Member is from the area, will he share any thoughts on this issue? Is there not some good news from Cape Breton?

Mr. MacLellan: There is of course good news, as the Hon. Member has said. In particular I would like to mention the tax credit that was implemented when the Hon. Member was the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion which has gone a long way to encourage new industry to come to Cape Breton. There have been some benefits derived from that tax credit. Industries have located on the Island, particularly on the north side.

As the Hon. Member will appreciate, these industries require a lengthy lead time in order to set up to begin operations. In a great many cases we are not looking for large industries. We are looking for industries with 90 or 100 jobs. They are good industries. The problem is that while we have some new industries which, hopefully, will play an important part in the economic future of industrial Cape Breton, we are now at the point of losing jobs faster than we are gaining them.

What is happening? There will be about 35 new jobs at Magna, which will be followed by another couple of hundred new jobs in the next year, we hope. Last week the management of National Sea Products stated that it is reducing its work force at its plant in North Sydney by 100. Some 125 jobs were lost at the coke ovens just two weeks ago. A couple of years ago some 600 jobs were lost at the heavy water plant. A few hundred jobs were lost at the Cape Breton Development Corporation. The Sydney Steel Corporation, which employed 3,600 people about 10 years ago, now employs 1,200, minus the 125 jobs at the coke ovens. What I understand is that both the provincial and the federal level of Governments will mothball the blast furnace. Thus an industry that once employed 3,600 people will be diminished to 600. That is a drastic reduction in employment. The new industries coming in will not be able to replace the jobs that we have lost and are losing.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member acknowledges that the tax credits have been beneficial as far as the area is concerned. I suggest that some of the grant programs have also helped. I suggest that the guarantee that will be put in place under the Atlantic opportunities approach will help as far as borrowing is concerned, particularly the interest buy-downs.

The Hon. Member has thrown out certain figures with respect to rising unemployment. While I think that each Member of the House has great concern for the type of hardship that has been suffered over the years by the people of Cape Breton, in fairness the Hon. Member should acknowledge that Statistics Canada has shown that something over 2,000 direct jobs have been created in the last three years in Cape Breton. Directly and indirectly some 9,000 jobs have been created also. When we cite certain reductions we must also weigh the positive aspects, something that I think is encouraging. I hope that it will continue. Will the Hon. Member confirm what I have been saying?

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm what the Hon. Member has said. There have been jobs brought forward as a result of incentives and through other business practices. I would not say that they have been in the order of 2,000 jobs.

Another concern I have is that a great many of the jobs that have been created in industrial Cape Breton and other areas are not full-time jobs. For instance, full-time jobs with benefits at Sysco, the Cape Breton Development Corporation, the heavy water plants, the fish processing plants and smaller industries are diminishing. Many jobs that have been created are part-time jobs in fast food industries and department stores that do not have any benefits whatsoever. These are not jobs in which people can face the future. While it is important to have them and while it is much better than not having any work at all, it still does not give any kind of structure to developing an economic base in an area such as Cape Breton.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time allotted for questions and comments has now expired. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) on debate.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour for me to enter into the budget debate and to respond to some of the views expressed by Members on this side of the House as well as by Members opposite. I was glad to hear some of the comments made by members of the Opposition. They give us some indication as to the way that they see Canada and the way in which they intend to campaign for the upcoming federal election. It lets us see how they intend to make Canada a better nation, to use some of their words.

They seem to criticize the way in which Canada is going. In the next few minutes I intend to discredit their assertions that the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has not done a good job. I can prove that he has done a very good job. I hope to do that in short order. First, I would like to refer to the Budget Speech. I will not repeat many of the things stated by the Finance Minister, but I think that he made some statements that nobody in this House can dispute.

He indicated that this country has become number one in economic growth since 1984. That is compared to the other western nations, the Group of Seven. In the past three years the Finance Minister's Budgets have had a tremendous impact on in bringing Canada into that position. Members of the opposition do not like to admit it, but they cannot deny that all indications are that that in fact has happened.

Members of the opposition Parties do not stand up and mention much about job creation. They pick a little corner here or there, but they do not talk too much about the fact that the unemployment rate has dropped since 1984 over-all, nation-wide, by some 3.5 percentage points. The opposition Parties do not want to admit that that is an improvement, and one has to wonder why. The Minister of Finance referred to 1.1 million jobs more now than there were in 1984. With some kind of mathematical genius the opposition Members state that that does not mean anything, that it has no bearing. The opposition Members and the people who support that position should look at their neighbours who are working now who were not working before. They must have great difficulty, Mr. Speaker.

Let us talk about interest rates. I recall, and so will Members who were in the House then, the early 1980s and those devastating interest rates under a Liberal regime. The reduction of interest rates has encouraged savings on a $50,000 mortgage of $1,200 per year. That is a direct benefit to Canadians. There is now a realization of that fact by the New Democratic Party. Members of that Party are now standing up and making the statement that the interest rate should be reduced by one percentage point, and that will be their platform. During the next election I can guarantee that the New Democrats will walk around this country and state, "If we get elected, we will reduce the interest rates one percentage point". What they fail to understand is that the Government has already reduced it by approximately four percentage points. In fact, that has stabilized and a whole new economy is shaping up.

In his Budget Speech, the Minister stated that "business is confident. The pace of investment has increased sharply". We do not hear the Opposition on that point. He states that "consumers are confident". I think that that is very evident.

I wish to indicate the importance of the private sector. The Minister made a few statements in that regard. He stated that "the driving force behind productivity, growth and job creation is a dynamic private sector". Finally, more and more we have got Government out of business and we see the private sector handling it far more efficiently and effectively.

Even the New Democratic Party of Manitoba is getting out of some public corporations because it does not know how to run them. I hope that the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) hears this and hears it well. The New Democrats in Manitoba have a goose of a time running some public corporations and want to sell them. Why? Because Governments cannot do it as effectively as private business.

The Minister went on to state, "To encourage this dynamism the Government has taken far reaching measures to modernize the regulatory environment for business, reform the federal tax system, and secure markets for our exports". Those are all sound management practices, and no one in this country can avoid noting the potential growth for the future of Canada.

The Minister mentioned expanding trade. Some Members talked in a ridiculous fashion about ripping up the free trade agreement. Since then we have heard that even our trading neighbours to the south who have some difficulties with it are sure that the opposition Members, should they ever come to power, would not rip it up. They have not ripped up the Auto Pact. They would not do that. That is one form of a free trade arrangement.

One other area in the debate that I would like to enter into, and I heard some comments on it this morning, is that the Minister introduced a one cent a litre tax on gasoline. We heard doom and gloom about that increase of one cent per litre. Canadians will recall the many programs that this Government introduced that the opposition Parties condemned because the Government was not spending enough of the taxpayers' money. When the Minister had to raise a little revenue by adding one cent a litre to gasoline, the opposition Parties condemned that and stated, "How could people afford it?" I did a little calculation. If the average person was driving a medium-sized car and burned one tank of gas a month, some might burn more, some might burn less, that is about 50 or 60 litres. That is 50 or 60 cents a week. That adds up to perhaps $30 a year of additional revenue from Canadians, which is certainly not a tax grab. I wanted to point out those few facts when I referred to the Budget of the Minister of Finance.

I would like to mention what is really important, and what Canadians do not always have the opportunity to examine, which is the Auditor General's report on how Canada is doing financially. We do not hear the opposition Members on this issue very much. One wonders why. One can find the Auditor General criticizing the Government. That is his job. One can find the Auditor General praising what has happened.

I ask any Member who opposes this Government to compare the Auditor General's reports of the last three years with the previous fifteen years. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North might want to consider that. I will refresh his memory. The Hon. Member has been here a long time, and it must have shaken him to see the manner in which the Government spent money in the past, although he supported the Government of the day at almost every chance he could.

Let us take a look at what the Auditor General said in March, 1987, in his last report. I have here some selected statements from both sides. He stated, "It is a record of solid progress in managing the machinery of Government". That is something that I do not think one could find in an Auditor General's report in the 15 years prior to 1984. He went on to state, "When money had been expended other than for the purposes for which it was appropriate or without due regard for the economy and efficiency", he had some criticism. That is fair, because that is his job.

The most important point to Canadians in our effort to be an efficient Government, to create a climate for new jobs and businesses, is what he has to say about financial control. I wish to read that paragraph which states:

> Our study finds that there have been significant improvements made in financial controls. The government now has systems and procedures that provide essential financial controls. Departments have corrected the fundamental weaknesses identified in the 1970s.

Do the Members here remember the 1970s? I am sure that they do.

> With expenditures by our federal government exceeding $100 billion a year, protecting the public purse demands that the correct amounts be paid out to the intended recipients at the right time. A decade ago the Auditor General could provide no assurance that this was happening.

Are you listening out there? A decade ago the Auditor General could not give any Canadian assurance of the recklessness with which the former Liberal administration spent its money. It is plain. It is in black and white, and he now has a better feeling. "Today I can do so", he goes on to say, "the essential framework is in place. With some exceptions, financial controls are now working well".

There is one man in the House of Commons, the Hon. Minister of Finance who brought that back under control. I think he deserves a lot of credit for doing just that.

We have heard over countless past months ridiculous statements by Hon. Members opposite indicating, whenever the Government took an initiative, that it was never enough. The mentality over there is still one of spending without consideration of where the funds come from. I can prove that by referring to what some of those Members have said. As a matter of fact, just yesterday the Hon. Member for Regina West an honourable member of the New Democratic Party, had something to say about the Budget. I think Canadians want to know just where the New Democratic Party stands, and I think this long-term Member has expressed it in a way that would shock everybody. I would like to repeat part of his statements to the House. He said the following about Governments:

> We have always operated on the basis that every Government goes into debt most of the time,—

Can people imagine that a Government should automatically operate on the premise that it is going to be in debt, in the hole, broke? Is that what is their desire? A New Democratic Party spokesman said exactly that: "We believe that we should maintain the debt of the country, the debt to Canadians no matter where they are living", so that their children and their children's children some day will have to figure out how to pay for it. That is their philosophy in black and white. The Hon. Member went on to say:

> —we still say—that a nation has different kinds of debts. There is constructive debt—

My God, Mr. Speaker, he is classifying debt as dandy, constructive, and self-liquidating. It is a beautiful word, this debt package which evolved under the Liberals with the support of the New Democratic Party! We happen to have a Minister of Finance who is starting to clean up the waste in ridiculous government spending, and they criticize it.

Let us see what else the Hon. Member said:

> The Government had the opportunity to provide at least half a billion dollars a year more in housing of all kinds—

The very first thing the Hon. Member from the socialist Party said is that we should have spent another half a billion to a billion dollars on housing. That would have driven up the deficit some more. He went on to say: "even if it meant increased borrowings"; that is right, that we should just borrow some more money. If the people who are watching this program were even to think of electing a New Democratic Government, I assure them that he was very narrow in his idea of borrowing. He would have tripled that amount if he had ever got into power. He went on to say: "it is not a debt really but an investment". Is that not interesting? According to him, Governments should borrow billions and billions more dollars as an investment. That does not indicate an understanding of the previous billions of dollars that were borrowed and who should pay them back. Who should pay back this wonderful investment and, this wonderful investment that we borrowed, does it ever depreciate? I suppose it appreciates and they can find a theory for that as well.

Here is an idea: "we could put 100,000 young people to work starting yesterday with a few hundred million dollars a year". We could go out there, talk to the banks, and borrow a few hundred million dollars, and we will get a few hundred thousand young people working. Is that a great idea? He went on to say:

> There are tens of thousands of needed necessary projects in the plans and desires of municipalities—

There we go again—let us borrow a bunch of money and give it to the municipalities regardless of who has to pay for it!

The Hon. Member for Regina West also got into his own area. Imagine this individual. He said:

> In my own area of transportation, we need to invest $500 million to $1 billion—

It would be half a billion to a billion dollars just for the Hon. Member for Regina West. That is his idea of running the country, down the road. For his little neck of the woods he needs a billion dollars. My goodness, I really wonder where it will lead to.

He had some criticism, which I think was a little unfair, of the Minister of Finance. He said that he would not even let him run his chicken coop. I think, if the Hon. Member were in the House, that I could assure Canadians that no former railroader would become the Finance Minister, especially one from Regina West. He has a lot to think about after making the statements which he made in the House yesterday on what Canada ought to be doing and the way he perceives his Government would run it should they ever gain more than 30 seats in the House of Commons.

Mr. Harris: We have 32.

Mr. Holtmann: Then he started dividing up Canada and said:

> —there is more to Canada than Toronto and parts of southern Ontario.

He did not have to tell everybody in Canada that. We know that from where I come, and the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) knows that. He did not have to have one of his front-benchers tell him where the other parts of Canada were.

He also talked about unemployment and said that it was high everywhere else but there. It was not necessarily because the Hon. Minister of Finance is from Toronto or in fact dumped all this money into Toronto. I think it had a little to do with the auto industry and the growth of that industry. That in fact helped—

Mr. Langdon: In Toronto?

Mr. Holtmann: I see the Hon. Member wondering how the auto industry could help Toronto. He had better take a little lesson in economics and realize that a lot of corporate headquarters are there and that a lot of businesses which finance the auto parts manufacturing sector could even be in Toronto.

However, let us go on. Listen to this one, Mr. Speaker. Getting back to lowering interest rates, he said:

> As far as I am concerned, I don't particularly care what the value of the Canadian dollar is compared to the U.S.—

There is a fine statement from a New Democrat! He does not care where the Canadian dollar is. He should look at the Mexican peso; it takes about 2,600. I suppose, if he ever saw that happen, he would not care about the value of the Canadian dollar and how devastating it is when the dollar sinks, inflation sets in, and there is a tremendous backlash. Here is a Member who would like to maintain and help his Party become a force in Canadian politics beyond the 30 seats they have today.

Mr. Langdon: There are 32. You still can't count.

Mr. Holtmann: It is really shocking, and I am going to tell more Canadians about their problems.

All of a sudden he made the following statement:

> The Government needs more revenues to reduce the deficit.

Now the Government, all of a sudden, after he has added about $20 billion to $30 billion to the deficit in his speech, needs more revenues. I will tell the House what he decided. He decided that the Government would just go back to those corporations which, I think it was about three elections ago, they called corporate welfare bums. That is what they called them. In the last election they sort of dropped that because it was not working in their favour, in that a lot of these corporations were actually leaving Canada under the then administration and in fact were going broke altogether and they did not know what to call them at that time.

I see you signalling that I have three minutes remaining, Mr. Speaker. I would like to deal with another thing which was said by the Hon. Member for Regina West. He thought that an idea for finding revenue would be to put an export tax on energy resources from Canada. I suggest that he go to the Hon. Premier of Manitoba who would like to sell a lot of hydro power and suggest that he start taxing it as revenue on behalf of the federal Government. Even the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North would have a great deal of difficulty trying to sell that to his constituents, especially in view of the fact that they would like to export a lot of energy from the Province of Manitoba and that they are having a lot of difficulty doing it, as it is.

I will add something else which I think people ought to know about what a New Democratic Party could do and has done in Manitoba. They are going to follow the same lines as the federal New Democrats because they are married in harmony. The Province of Manitoba was not a "have-not" province; certainly some years ago it was a fairly successful province. It is finding itself at the low ebb of the provincial scale and is moving itself into such a desperate situation that in fact the province is in bad financial trouble. If I could just quote this, it says, "The Pawley Government has increased taxes by three times the rate of inflation since taking office". Will people ever know the truth? The socialist Government will increase taxes to the point where they will not be able to see what is to happen to them. The Hon. Member indicates that he wants to hear no more of this because he is afraid of what it will do to Canadians. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the Opposition, especially the Liberals when in office, would have given their eye teeth—my goodness, they would have given their false teeth—to have a Finance Minister do the kinds of things he has done.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe there will be some questions and comments for the Hon. Member.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to my friend from Manitoba. He criticizes former Governments because of the debts which they accumulated, and says that deficit financing is bad. I point out to him that in the period in which this Government will be in office, in which this Finance Minister will have brought down four or more Budgets, the debt of this country will have increased by more than $100 billion.

When we pass this Budget, the average family of four earning $35,000 a year will pay, because of previous increases in excise tax, sales tax, income tax, $1,000 more this year than they paid in the year in which the Conservative Government came to power. The only people who will not pay more tax, in fact who will pay less tax, are the high income people. I point out that over 250,000 Canadians who had income of over $200,000 a year in the last year for which we have information paid no tax at all. We have a large number of corporations which paid no tax, and I will give a few illustrations. Alcan Aluminum in 1986 had profits of $220 million and did not pay a cent in taxes. In fact, Alcan got a tax credit. Xerox in 1986 had $150 million in profits and got a tax credit. In other words Xerox paid no tax at all. Union Carbide in 1986 had profits of $28 million and paid no tax. Bramalea Consolidated in 1986 had profits of $51 million and paid no tax. Is that the Budget the Member wants the people of Manitoba to accept, a Budget in which they pay $1,000 more for each family than they did when this Government took office while the wealthy individuals and corporations pay no taxes at all?

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). He made the statement that since our Government came to power, the deficit has risen by an additional $100 billion. He is absolutely correct. I do not think the Government denies that. But we have changed the trend. Had he and his Liberal friends been in power—because they were in power together—the deficit would have been $400 billion to $500 billion by now.

Mr. Nystrom: Oh!

Mr. Holtmann: They say "oh". But they supported the principle of that kind of spending escalation. The New Democrats have still not made the point that they are not prepared to reduce spending but tax more. You cannot tax yourself out of a deficit. If they think you can, let them go back to the Province of Manitoba which is trying desperately to do that. The per capita revenue by a New Democratic Government in Manitoba in 1982 was about $2,117. What did the NDP Government do in the Province of Manitoba? It increased the per capita revenue by almost $1,300 per person. The NDP Government is still running the deficit higher and higher at a far greater rate than the federal Government is. As a matter of fact, in the Province of Manitoba, if Canadians are interested, the second highest expenditure by that Government is that of paying the interest on the deficit.

Mr. Nystrom: Same here.

Mr. Holtmann: No, sir. That is not the situation. Had we allowed the deficit to creep up at the rate it was going under the previous administration, no one denies the fact that it would not be $100 billion more but $400 billion more. That is the point which never seems to get home to those people. You want to stop the ridiculous spending of government, Mr. Speaker. The Opposition says, "Well, just tax more". Another member of the NDP says, "Spend more"; tax a few corporations". Let us see if he is right. According to the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) he figured he could find $3 billion instantaneously from those corporations which the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North suggested, by taxing corporations. How in the dickens can he do that and spend $10 billion or $20 billion when the Member for Regina West wanted $1 billion for his own riding alone? That is the point. Which way do the New Democrats want it? Do they want to spend 10 times as much money as this Government and collect a few extra billion dollars worth of revenue from these few corporations? I agree with the Member that they should not get away without paying taxes, but that will not solve the problem.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I just want to report having listened yesterday to the Leader of the Conservative Party in the Legislature of Manitoba take two positions and hold them at exactly the same time.

The first position said that it was necessary to spend in the last election campaign the extra reserves of Autopac to bring down rates because rates were too high in Manitoba. Yesterday he turned around and said no, that this was a serious mistake, the reserves should have been held and kept in check so that it was not necessary to keep the soundness of that program by seeing an increase in rates, an increase which is now sensibly going to be phased in over a reasonable period of time.

My question to the Member is a very simple one. It is a question which any economist would ask and which any normal person in the country would ask. What have we done in this country or what has Manitoba done compared to other provinces and what have we done compared to other countries? Our unemployment rate in Canada is 8.1 per cent. In the United States it is 5.8 per cent, far, far lower. We have in Canada not a successful situation but, in fact, a gap between the two countries which is greater historically than it has been since the Great Depression.

Can the Member tell me precisely what the unemployment rate is in Manitoba compared to that in Canada? The rate is, of course, much lower than in the rest of Canada. It has consistently been much lower than in the rest of Canada under the Government of Mr. Pawley, and that demonstrates the effective, businesslike, sensible and caring administration which has marked that province.

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to congratulate the Member for coming to the Province of Manitoba, spending some time in our provincial legislature and finding out just how precarious the present Government is with only a one seat majority that likely cannot last very long especially if one of the maverick back-benchers has his way.

Let us get on to the subject at hand. Right now the statistics indicate that the unemployment rate in Manitoba is almost a percentage point less than Canada's average of 8.1 per cent to Manitoba's 7.4 per cent, I believe. The Member is right. Those are the latest statistics. They might not be totally accurate, but the figure is somewhere around there.

Mr. Langdon: Six per cent.

Mr. Holtmann: No, no, it just came out today, I am sorry. It is 7.4. At least that is the last information I have. He may have heard it differently.

Let us get to the point. The Hon. Member mentioned that the United States traditionally has a significantly lower rate of unemployment than we have here in Canada. Yet he opposed every Reagan proposal and every capitalist idea from the country to the south. His Party turned against all that as a policy and would not want to emulate it. However, today he is saying that maybe we should be doing something the United States is doing. Where is the logic there? Either he likes what they are doing in the United States or he does not like what they are doing in the United States, but he should not start comparing their unemployment rate with Canada's if he does not like the administration there and the way it is bringing that about.

Mr. Langdon: But we are much higher than they are in unemployment.

Mr. Holtmann: That is right, but where were we four years ago? I think the Hon. Member will have to acknowledge that we have brought the unemployment rate steadily down. Maybe it is not acceptable to him, and I can assure him that it is not acceptable to us either. We do not argue there.

If anyone in his Party thinks he could come to power and bring the interest rate down to 2 per cent in four years, I think he could get elected tomorrow, but no one believes that. It has been proven by previous socialist administrations that that is not likely to happen. That is the point the Hon. Member ought to think about, not the fact that the United States is doing better than we are. I think we ought to congratulate the United States for that and trade with the Americans more. Perhaps we should open up our borders in the way we are planning on opening them up to reduce the unemployment rate in Canada to a more acceptable level. We have never denied that goal, and I am glad the Hon. Member has focused on it now.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, during the heckling, the Hon. Member across the way said that the second largest expenditure item in the country was not servicing the public debt. I would like to refer him to the Main Estimates, Part I. The biggest expenditure item is social development with 45.5 per cent of expenditures. The number two item is the public debt which amounts to 24.6 of our expenditures. When the Tories came into office, it was some 20.6 per cent. I would like the Hon. Member to correct the record because I know he would not want to mislead the people of Canada. This is by far and away the number two item. In fact, the number three item is way down at 10.3 per cent, economic and regional development.

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I did not have the selective piece of literature in front of me that the Hon. Member had. He might be correct that it is number two rather than number three as I had indicated. He happens to have a piece of literature that I do not have, and that is fair.

I think the point is made that a change in government will not necessarily automatically change the direction this country is taking unless it starts spending more money. The intention of Members opposite is to spend more money. NDP Members have proven their ability to spend far more than the Government has, and I think Canadians are cognizant of that. They want us to be very prudent and careful with how and where we spend this money and not just find it by automatically taxing a few corporations. Clearly there will never be enough to cover the amounts the NDP would like to spend on the various projects this Government announced.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, almost a year ago, on March 16, 1987, speaking in the House, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made the following statement:

> We are in the process of building two Canadas, one which is rich and promising and one which is underdeveloped and underemployed.

The Budget we are debating today simply accelerates the process described by the Prime Minister, the process of making disparities between the rich and the poor even more apparent.

Let me, for the benefit of the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann), put on the record some of the results of Tory Budgets. An average family of four earning $35,000 per year annually will pay $1,000 more in taxes this year than it did in the year the Conservatives took power. Until this Budget, that amount was $1,400 per family, but the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), realizing that we are coming closer and closer to an election, has in this Budget given back $400 of the $1,400 in taxes he had imposed on ordinary families until this year.

The only people in Canada who will benefit from this Budget, the only people who will pay less tax than they have paid until now, are the very few wealthy people at the top. According to the Government's own estimates, fully one-quarter of non-taxpayers, almost 9,000 in the last year for which we have records, will still go untaxed. Over 250 Canadians who had incomes of more than $200,000 and who paid no income tax in the last year for which we have records will continue to be able to pay no income tax.

At the same time as we sock it to ordinary Canadians and give tax cuts to the wealthy, the same situation is occurring in respect to Canada's largest, wealthiest corporations. In 1986, Alcan Aluminum made $220 million in profits and paid no tax at all. In fact, it got a tax credit. In 1986, Xerox Canada made a profit of $115 million and got a tax credit of over $10 million. In 1986, Union Carbide of Canada made a profit of $28 million and paid no taxes. In 1987, Bramalea Consolidated made $51 million in profits and paid no taxes at all.

I want to talk about some of the problems which this Budget ignores completely. First I would like to quote from the preamble of the 1966 Canada Assistance Plan legislation, legislation which was endorsed by all Members of Parliament from all political Parties which were represented in the House at the time. The preamble reads:

> —the provision of ADEQUATE assistance to and in respect of persons in need and the prevention and removal of the causes of poverty and dependence on public assistance ARE THE CONCERNS OF ALL CANADIANS—

The Canadian Council on Social Development points out in its analysis of the budget proposal brought forward which we are now debating that there is no provision in the Budget for increasing help to Canadian families living below the poverty line although the number of such people is now 851,000, up from 745,000 in 1980. That is the situation.

If one spends a little time in any city in Canada, from Newfoundland on the East Coast to Vancouver Island on the West Coast, one sees that the number of people who are so needy and desperate for help, the number of people who appear regularly at food banks operated by churches, native organizations and community organizations, is increasing rapidly from week to week. The number of charitable organizations which are handing out used clothing is increasing very rapidly. We are going back to the situation in the 1930s which most Canadians thought we would never experience again. Tens of thousands of people are having to depend on charity to meet their basic needs.

We have asked the Government to deal with that. We have asked the Government to meet with the provincial Ministers who deal with welfare and, if necessary, make studies which will indicate very clearly that the level of assistance paid to people in need is far below that which is needed for them to live with some dignity and in some comfort.

I have done this in Winnipeg. I know of the work which is being done by organizations such as the Stella Mission, Rossbrook House, the Salvation Army, and many other organizations. They tell anyone who talks to them that they do this because there is a need. Without exception, people throughout the country who are involved in such charitable works agree that they are doing this because the need is there, but they think it is a disgrace that in a country as wealthy as Canada charity is needed on an increasing scale.

None of these problems have been dealt with by the Government. The economies in most western industrialized countries have improved and unemployment in Canada is down, as it is in the United States. However, except for the unemployment levels in Ontario and parts of Quebec, unemployment levels throughout the country are as high now as they were when the Government took office.

It is not only the poorly educated and the illiterate who are unemployed. Skilled workers and people who had highly paid jobs in financial institutions are now unemployed. In eight of the ten provinces unemployment is still high and indeed in parts of the two provinces in which employment has grown the fastest there are still crisis situations. Northern Ontario and most of the Province of Quebec east of Montreal still have unemployment rates which are completely unacceptable.

What has the Government done about this? It has failed to ensure that our social programs keep pace in terms of increased funding with the rate of inflation.

The federal Government has refused to deal realistically with the federal minimum wage which has been frozen for some years at $4 an hour. That rate is the second lowest in Canada while it was once almost the highest. People who work for $4 an hour, even if they work full time, still live in poverty. The Government, which has been so generous to our major corporations and to a very small number of very wealthy Canadians whose incomes are very high, has partially deindexed many of the social programs which were built over almost 50 years. The Government has partially deindexed the family allowance, the child tax credit, and the income tax brackets.

The Government is happy to do this because it really believes that the state should do less for the people of Canada rather than more.

To certain people on the right, and that includes almost all the Conservative Members of Parliament, cut-backs in social services are necessary to diminish the expectation of ordinary people of what government should do. The Government wants to keep working people docile for whatever jobs and working conditions are provided. We have, therefore, seen a tremendous increase in the number of people who work part time. When you work part time, of course, you do not get benefits such as holiday pay, unemployment insurance, and pensions, which full-time permanent employees have come to expect to receive in their total wage packet for the work which they do.

We believe that one of the greatest challenges for our Party is to reverse these policies of neglect and uncaring and restate the purpose of our society so that all Canadians can legitimately expect to have jobs, adequate housing, and an education which will permit them to meet their needs and the needs of the country throughout the rest of the 1980s and the 1990s. There is nothing in this Budget which gives us any assurance that these objectives will be met.

I want to deal specifically with one of the major failures of the Government. In the first Throne Speech brought forward by the Government in 1984 there was a promise that the Government would make a major effort to deal with the disastrous situation of fully 20 per cent of the people of Canada being functionally illiterate. Hundreds of thousands of Canadians who are in the labour force or will be entering the labour force in the next few years do not have the education, knowledge, or ability to fill the jobs which are and will be available. These jobs will require a great deal more education than was required years ago because of the tremendous changes in technology which require a much more well educated workforce than we have had.

Numberless studies have been done about the situation of the tremendous number of Canadians who are functionally illiterate. To those studies we can now add a study commissioned by a business task force on literacy which operates out of the City of Toronto and which tabled a report several weeks ago which confirmed the finding of earlier studies that a fifth of Canadians are functionally illiterate. According to them, it is costing $10.7 billion a year to permit this terrible situation to continue. In fact, they calculate that of that $10.7 billion, $4.2 billion is the cost to business through industrial accidents, lost productivity and training expenses.

The Government promised in its Speech from the Throne after it was elected that it would take major steps to deal with this problem. A few months ago, at the National Conference on Scientific Research and Technology in Toronto, the Prime Minister reaffirmed that pledge. The Secretary of State has made similar statements.

However, when we look at the record we see that the Government has only given us more talk and no action. There are groups in every province in Canada working with people who are functionally illiterate. To a large extent, these are people who grew up in rural areas, native people and new immigrants. While they are attempting to help tens of thousands of these functionally illiterate people, the fact is that there are five million people in Canada who are functionally illiterate. There will be terrible consequences for this country in the near future if that situation is permitted to continue.

Canada is entering an era when the number of people entering the labour force will decline each year, yet there will be difficulty filling those jobs due to the increasing number of functionally illiterate people. All we have from the Secretary of State is talk and good will, but no money.

The record of the Department of Employment and Immigration, which was poor under the Liberals and is poor under the Conservative Government, is even worse. The Department has spent only a very small percentage of its total expenditures to train illiterate people simply because such a program does not bring quick results in terms of job creation. Instead, it has taken the easy route by training those already literate to become welders, machinists or computer operators because such jobs will be available soon after training is completed.

The Department has not faced up to the fact that if it does not help people overcome their illiteracy, it is condemning those people to live on welfare, unemployment insurance or accept the poorest, lowest paid jobs available. The then Liberal Government should be condemned for such an approach, and the Conservative Government should be condemned for continuing that policy. There is a major crisis on our hands in this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member's speech, but he is now four minutes over his allotted time. I am sure there will be questions and comments from some of his colleagues and he may have a few extra minutes to respond.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, does my colleague believe that the Government knows the meaning of disparity in this country? Hon. Members on that side of the House brag about the reduction of unemployment. However, we know that economic cycles come and go.

When we are talking about regional disparity in Canada, we are talking about the difference in the national rate compared to the provincial rate. For example, in 1949, before Confederation, Newfoundlanders earned, per capita, almost 49 per cent of the average Canadian income. Last year it was 55 per cent, so that we have seen a narrowing of the disparity by 6.7 per cent in 38 years.

At that rate, it will be another 250 years before Newfoundlanders earn the same per capita income as the national average. That is what we mean by disparity.

The gap in the unemployment rate in Newfoundland compared to that in Canada is very large. Will the Member comment on the fact that the attempt to narrow the disparity in this area has not been successful? Does this Budget make any real commitment to change that?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, most Canadians know about the disparities. Most Canadians know that in eight of the ten provinces the rate of unemployment is just as high as it was when the Government took office.

The Member for Selkirk—Interlake was proud of the reduction in the rate of unemployment. Of course we agree, but Conservatives do not admit that there are still over one million unemployed. There are many areas in this country where people still live in poverty. A good example is Selkirk—Interlake represented by that Conservative Member who is so proud of the Government. He criticized government deficits. If we have to keep the deficit down, there will be no money for the native communities in his constituency who live in such deplorable housing.

• (1620)

We have to face up to the tremendous disparities in incomes and services between wealthy parts of Canada such as southern Ontario, and the rural or isolated areas where there is not only a tremendously high rate of unemployment but where services, whether it be education, health or anything else, are still deplorable and disgraceful.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in my hon. colleague's comments, particularly with respect to the question of illiteracy. I know he is very concerned about those who have been unemployed because of this handicap. I wonder if he has any comments to make with respect to prevention.

I know that when the Special Committee on Child Care toured the country we heard over and over again that there are ways, involving a relatively small investment and by starting with children at the pre-school level, of preventing much of the dysfunctioning which occurs later in life. I am thinking particularly of the Head Start program which has been very successful in the U.S. Research has shown that children from disadvantaged homes, where perhaps their parents were illiterate, were helped to function much better and make much better use of school after having been involved in these enrichment programs. As a result, when they got to be teenagers there was a much lower rate of adolescent problems. They stayed in school longer, there were not as many teenage pregnancies or drug abuse. It seems to me that is an area of great importance and it would require an investment of only a small amount of money. Yet the Government seems to be looking for every means possible to delay in getting on with the child care program which should include enriched programs of this kind.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, there is no question that some other countries, such as the U.S. with its Head Start program, and Sweden, Denmark and West Germany, have had a great deal of success in overcoming problems such as illiteracy with programs designed specifically to help people in difficulty. I agree completely with the Hon. Member that one of the best things we could do would be to improve our child care system. We should have a day care system which would not only help young children begin to learn to read and write, but which would permit their parents, particularly in the single-parent families, to work or improve their education, or get training in fields with employment prospects. Of course, all these things can be and should be done but we have a Government intent on reducing the deficit and it is just not prepared to move on any of these ideas.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse)—North Atlantic Treaty Organization—Arms gap between NATO and Warsaw Pact nations; the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson)—Amount of tax collected by Government—White Paper sales tax projection; the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation—Shortage of affordable housing in Toronto.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Mr. Garneau (p. 12860).

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I count it a privilege to add a few comments to this budget debate. I would like to go through what has taken place, comparing it with where we have been in the past, and also take a look at the economic indicators as they reflect the performance of the previous Liberal Government and the present Government.

When this Government was elected to office three and a half years ago the biggest challenge facing us was to restore fiscal responsibility and then create a climate for a more dynamic, flexible, innovative and competitive economy, and to create jobs. The challenge was a large one, to say the least. The federal deficit and national debt were out of control. Between 1981 and 1984 the deficit escalated from $14.9 billion to more than $38.3 billion. The national debt had doubled and was growing at an average rate of 26 per cent per year. Likewise, government spending was out of control.

In the four years prior to our coming into office, government spending on programs had increased at an average annual rate of 14 per cent, far in excess of inflation and enough to double spending in about five years. If this trend had been allowed to continue, the result would have been catastrophic. The public debt would be $100 billion more than it is now, with the inevitable outcome of higher interest rates, fewer jobs, less growth and declining economic confidence.

Knowing that Canadians did not want to leave their children and their grandchildren a legacy of crushing debt, it was crucial that this Government act. Therefore, in November of 1984, barely two months into our mandate, this Government set forth a long-term economic plan in its economic statement. In the three and a half years since, and in each subsequent federal Budget, we stuck to this plan, convinced that it is the only way to fiscal stability and renewal. That is why we have, for example, since our first opportunity to tackle expenditures on April 1, 1985, reduced spending to an average annual rate of increase of 4.9 per cent. That contrasts sharply with an average of more than 15 per cent in the preceding 15 years under the Liberal Government. In fact, when one excludes public debt charges, we are looking at an average annual increase of 3.7 per cent under this Government, less than the rate of inflation. Compare that with the 14 per cent under previous Liberal Governments.

The contrast is even more dramatic when compared to the 23 per cent average annual rate during the current Liberal leader's term as Minister of Finance in the Trudeau Government from 1972 to 1975. When one looks at what took place during that time we find that a $481 million surplus was turned into a $4 billion deficit. The gross national debt grew by 50 per cent. Debt service costs grew by 85 per cent. Inflation doubled from 5.1 per cent to 10.6 per cent. Total unemployment climbed by 164,000. The Bank of Canada rate rose by 4.25 percentage points. If we tried to match that rate of expenditure growth we would be spending $226 billion in the coming fiscal year instead of $132 billion. That would be enough to push the annual deficit to $122 billion instead of the $28.9 billion for the fiscal year in 1988-89.

One need not take my word for these figures. With respect to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition's tenure as Minister of Finance the Auditor General said that he was:

> —deeply concerned that Parliament, indeed the Government, had lost or was close to losing effective control of the public purse.

He then went on to say:

> Federal management and control in the Government of Canada is grossly inadequate.

• (1630)

However, in commenting on the first two years of this administration the Auditor General said that his sense was that there is an interest in better accountability and better management. He then went on to say that he believed "Members of Parliament and the taxpayers of Canada should be heartened by genuine improvements".

Under the leadership of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) we have implemented a more fairer tax system which encourages growth and job creation and which creates a system that assists our businesses and our industries to compete in the world.

We have entered into an historic Canada-United States trade agreement in order to build a more open and adaptable economy. It will protect our high level of trade with the United States which comprises some 80 per cent of our exports, close to 90 per cent of the exports of Ontario. It will protect close to three million Canadian jobs that are involved in our trade with the United States.

We have implemented priority programs to assist regions and sectors hurt by unexpected developments in world economy such as the programs we have implemented for our farming community.

We have privatized 13 Crown corporations. We have deregulated energy and transportation sectors in order to reduce government intrusion into the market-place.

We have removed the ruinous National Energy Program.

We have opened financial markets to global opportunities and stimulated greater competition in financial services.

We dismantled FIRA and created Investment Canada to encourage and welcome investment capital from abroad, investment that is now creating jobs for Canadians.

Permit me now, Mr. Speaker, to look at the outcome of the Government's economic agenda. The international and national economic indicators speak for themselves. Among the seven major western countries in the G-7, Canada has been first in economic growth since 1984. We are first in employment growth in the G-7. On the domestic front, since the Government came into office, for the first time in the post-war period the deficit has declined four years in a row. More than 1,158,000 jobs have been created and 85 per cent of those are full time. The unemployment rate has fallen by 3.6 per cent to 8.1 per cent in January of this year. Youth unemployment has dropped from 18.3 per cent to 12.7 per cent.

The Bank of Canada interest rate has fallen by 3.76 percentage points. The chartered bank prime rate has fallen by 3.75 per cent. Direct foreign investment has doubled between 1984 and 1987. Housing starts and consumer spending are up 43 per cent and 37 per cent respectively since the last election. The inflation rate has been in the 4 per cent range for three consecutive years, which is the most stable price environment since 1971.

Economic growth in my own province, the Province of Ontario, has been nothing short of spectacular. Since the last election 547,000 jobs have been created, with the unemployment rate falling from 9.4 per cent to 5.6 per cent. Housing starts and retail sales are up by 122 per cent and 41 per cent respectively. Help wanted ads are up by 182 per cent compared to a 34 per cent decline during the Liberals' last mandate. In recent months in my constituency of Kitchener we have had either the lowest or the second lowest unemployment rate of any major Canadian city. Indeed, in December of 1987 the unemployment rate reached an incredible low of 2.9 per cent.

Let me look at what the Liberals and the NDP have been saying in all of this. What has been their response to the Government's economic agenda? In 1984, members of both the Liberal Party and the NDP said that our economic statement with its spending cuts would cost Canadians between 125,000 to 150,000 jobs. Later they said about the May 1985 budget that it would cost 150,000 jobs. In fact, while the Liberals and the members of the NDP have been predicting doom and gloom, some 1,158,000 jobs have been created. So much for the credibility of their statements compared to the facts and what has actually happened.

Indeed, if their voting record is any indication they have been doing everything possible to obstruct Canada's recent economic upswing. For example, both the Liberal Party and the NDP voted against the repeal of the disastrous National Energy Program. They voted against the dismantling of FIRA and increased foreign investment through the creation of Investment Canada. They voted against increasing the total amount of money that may be lent under the Small Businesses Loans Act. They were against the privatization of Teleglobe Canada, the sale of which has resulted in significantly lower rates for overseas telephone calls.

Further, the NDP voted against $456 million in additional funding for regional industrial expansion. It also voted against a legislated end to the postal dispute, the railway strike and the grain handlers' strike.

It is no wonder then that an article in the January 30, 1988 edition of the Calgary Herald is not alone in its estimation when it stated, "On the policy front neither the NDP nor the Liberals can compete". In that same month The Globe and Mail in an editorial column contrasted the solid achievements of the Government with the lack of any clear alternatives from either the Liberals or the NDP.

The Government's policies are right. They have been working. This latest Budget indicates that we are committed to making sure that they continue to work. Indeed, it is precisely because of the dramatic economic growth which has resulted from these policies that the Government has been able to make a strong commitment to some new programs. A case in point are the Government's various child care measures.

In December of 1987 the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) announced the Government's national strategy for child care. This policy will produce an additional 200,000 quality child care spaces over the next seven years. The Budget moves to implement the tax initiatives that are a part of this strategy. The initiative is also of great importance to Canadian families. It will help to eliminate a barrier to many women who work or who want to work outside the home. It is also a flexible program in that it also increases tax assistance to many who choose to work in the home.

As a part of the national child care strategy the maximum child care expense deduction will be doubled to $4,000 from $2,000 for children six and under and for all children with special care needs. For those not having receipted child care expenses a supplement to the refundable child tax credit of $100 in 1988 and $200 in subsequent years will be paid on behalf of each child six years old and under. The supplement will be prepaid each year on the same basis as the refundable child tax credit.

Likewise we are also ensuring jobs for Canadians in the future through our commitment to science and technology. At the National Conference on Science and Technology and Innovation in January the Prime Minister announced $1.3 billion in federal funding for the new science and technology activities over the next five years. These will include a national program of centres of excellence on university campuses and a program of Canadian scholarships in science, engineering and related disciplines.

The National Advisory Board on Science and Technology chaired by the Prime Minister bringing together 40 eminent Canadians from all walks of life has already held over 50 meetings in just nine months of work. As a result of the expert advice and constructive work of this board the Innovaction Program has been developed to focus science and technology in five critical areas: industrial innovation and technology diffusion; development of strategic technologies; effective management of federal science and technology resources; human resources for science and technology resources; and public education in science and technology.

Further, Canadian companies carrying out research and development receive strong support through the tax system. When deductions and tax credits for research and development are taken into account the tax incentives for Canadian firms to invest in research and development are among the most advantageous in the industrialized world.

The Budget must also be taken in concert with our initiative on tax reform and the changes affecting the income tax system introduced by the Minister of Finance on December 16, 1987. Those reforms will simplify the structure of personal income tax rates. There will be three federal tax brackets rather than ten, with the rates fixed at 17, 26, and 29 per cent. Personal exemptions and many deductions will be converted into tax credits, improving the fairness of the system, and there will be a reduction or elimination of many tax breaks.

• (1640)

As a result of these tax reforms, personal incomes taxes will be reduced for 9.7 million households, 85 per cent of the total. Income taxes will be reduced for 90 per cent of senior citizens. Approximately 850,000 Canadians, including 250,000 senior citizens, will have their income tax reduced to zero. Their personal income tax reductions will be reflected in payroll deductions and pay-cheques beginning on July 1, 1988.

As a result of the personal income tax changes, there will be a reduction of some $12 billion over the next five years from this source. This $12 billion will be paid by roughly equal increases through increases in corporate and sales tax revenues.

Furthermore, low income Canadians will continue to benefit from the refundable sales tax credit of $70 per adult and $35 per child. The refundable child tax credit for lower and middle-income families has been increased from $384 per child in 1985 to $559 in 1988.

In conclusion, as a new Government we promised that we would reduce the deficit. We have done so in each year since 1984. We promised to regain control over government spending and restore fiscal responsibility. I think the facts speak for themselves. Further, we promised to bring fairer and greater simplicity to tax reform. We are part of the way down that road.

In commenting on this Budget, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) complained that it is a conservative Budget. I am glad that he said that, because we had enough of Liberal spending irresponsibility when he was the Minister of Finance and when his Government ran the country into debt through uncontrolled spending. I compliment the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and I compliment the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for their responsible economic leadership. Under the Prime Minister's leadership fiscal responsibility has returned to Canada. We have only begun.

Therefore, I urge Canadians to look very carefully at the facts. I would urge them not to listen to all the personal attacks on government Members by members of the Opposition. I would ask them to look carefully at exactly what the Government promised and what it has done. We cannot allow either the Liberals or the socialists to become the Government after the next election. What this country and what our children desperately need is that this Government continue for another full term, because then we can continue this program of fiscal responsibility, of deficit reduction, and of job creation to make this country what it truly can be.

Mr. Fretz: I wish to tell you, Mr. Speaker, how much I appreciate the thoughtful and informative speech given to the House of Commons by the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer). The Member spoke about the lack of fiscal responsibility and the spending spree which the Liberals started with the appointment of the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) as the Minister of Finance.

Can the Hon. Member for Kitchener clarify for me when those years were? I recall that the Hon. Member indicated that there was a $481 million surplus. What was the deficit that that surplus led to as a result of the Leader of the Opposition's leadership as then Minister of Finance? If the Hon. Member could clarify that for me, I would appreciate it.

Mr. Reimer: In response to the question of the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) let me say that the years when the Leader of the Opposition was the Minister of Finance were from 1972 to 1975. As I sought to indicate in my speech, during those years when the Leader of the Opposition began as Minister of Finance there was a $481 million surplus. When he left after those 3.5 years as the Minister of Finance, there was a $4 billion deficit. That is the record of that Finance Minister.

I find it very difficult when he rises and makes some of the statements in opposition to what we are attempting to do. In fact, he was the person who began the very problem that we have now. He should at least acknowledge that fact, and at least acknowledge that we have begun a reduction program that is now in its fourth year of one year after the other of reduction.

Those are some of the facts that the people of Canada have to hear instead of the innuendo and the constant personal attacks on the character of various Ministers of the Government.

Mr. Harris: First, I wish to correct a statement that I put on the record a little earlier. I indicated that, at the rate of progress in Newfoundland's percentage of per capita income as compared to the national average, it would take 250 years at the rate of progress that we have been having since Confederation. That was a mistake. It is actually 288 years.

In 1949, before Confederation, Newfoundland's per capita earned income was 48.8 per cent of the national average. In November of 1987 it was 55.5 per cent. That is not progress over those full 38 years. That progress was reached by 1971, so there has been no change since then. Before Confederation there was an improvement of 6.7 per cent in the gap between Newfoundland's earned per capita income and Canada's.

My question for the Hon. Member from Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) whose riding and province is doing very well by the Canadian economy at the moment, is the following. In Newfoundland, do we have to wait 288 years to reach the level of economic development that his riding and others in Ontario share as part of the Canadian economy? If that is the case, how can the Hon. Member say that this Budget and the budget measures of the Government are enough for regional development?

Mr. Reimer: I reflect upon what the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) has stated, and I wonder if he would not mind commenting on how many of those years that he was talking about were in fact under a Liberal administration, both provincially and federally.

Mr. Harris: Too many.

Mr. Reimer: The Hon. Member is correct in stating that, in Ontario, and particularly in southern Ontario, things are going extremely well. But the national statistics show unemployment falling dramatically. It is true that nationally there has been an improvement.

When we as a Government try to bring in some programs, why do the Liberals, and particularly the NDP, since that is the Member's Party, vote against them? Why did they vote against $456 million in additional funding for regional industrial expansion? If the Hon. Member wants some assistance, which is being offered, why is he against it? Why is he not for it? Why is the Hon. Member and the NDP opposed to $306 million for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency?

Mr. Harris: Because of Sinclair Stevens' legal bills.

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) is not listening to my answer.

Mr. Harris: I am answering your questions.

Mr. Reimer: When we seek to bring in programs, and when we bring in regional development incentives, why is the Hon. Member against them? Why is the Hon. Member against the $306 million for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency? Why is the Hon. Member against free trade which will help his very area? Why is it that the Hon. Member for St. John's East and his Party are opposed to free trade?

• (1650)

When the committee of which I was a member toured Atlantic Canada, presentations were made to us indicating that free trade would clearly assist the Atlantic region, both in selling more of its resources and in the secondary manufacturing that would package some of the resources. Therefore, it would create jobs not only in the area of natural resources but also in secondary resource development.

Again I cannot understand why the Hon. Member for St. John's East raises these questions in this manner, nor can I understand why they are opposed to regional industrial expansion efforts, nor can I understand why they are opposed to freer trade.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) have a supplementary question?

Mr. Harris: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member who just spoke well knows that the budget Estimates to which he was referring and which our Party voted against contained in them a vote for legal expenses for an Hon. Member who was a former Minister of his Government, and that our Party and a vast majority of Canadians opposed the payment of them. This is why those Estimates were voted against as one block, not as a separate budget item as he insinuated in his comments.

I think that should set the record straight for the Hon. Member, and I would ask him if he would be fair and acknowledge that that is the case.

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, I accept the admonition of the Hon. Member in trying to be fair. I agree that we are asked to support measures which are in total and that we may not always agree with every individual part.

However, may I say for the benefit of the Hon. Member that some of that money was spent for the former Hon. Minister to whom the Hon. Member referred as a result of the shameful attacks by his own Party and by the Liberal Party and all the innuendo against that person. It forced us to look at the question and into a long court case to deal with the particular issue. I would think that they have to accept some of the responsibility for that cost.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, when I spoke on February 12 on the borrowing authority Bill, I commented that it was difficult to speak on a so-called Budget which was 95 per cent electioneering guff and 5 per cent content.

I have with me here today a Canadian tax letter issued by that well respected firm Peat Marwick, which also has some harsh things to say about the smoke and mirrors we have seen from the Government for some time. The Peat Marwick tax letter says in part, and I quote:

> By adroitly manoeuvring to accelerate remittance of payroll withholdings, personal income tax installments and federal sales tax collections, Mr. Wilson has been able to contain his budgetary deficit estimate for 1987-88 to $29.3 billion and budgetary deficit forecast for 1988-89 to $28.9 billion, still enormous amounts considering the over-all Canadian economy.

Later in the newsletter we read, and I quote again:

> —it is a legitimate reason for concern that, in the sixth year of an economic expansion, the budget deficit remains very high by historical standards and is expected to improve only slightly in the near term.
> This concern is accentuated by an element of sleight of hand in recent budgets. Budgetary revenues will have been enhanced by $3.9 billion through a number of once-only changes, including: > the acceleration of remittances of personal income tax source deductions by large employers
> the acceleration of quarterly personal income tax instalment payments
> the acceleration of federal sales and excise tax payments.

Because this issue really goes to the heart of the credibility of Government, I want to take a few minutes on it. When the finance committee was holding hearings on the White Paper on tax reform, a very well respected accountant said that he would have expected better from the Finance Minister than this kind of selective, creative accounting, which he described—I am quoting a well respected accountant—as being like kiting cheques, as he spoke of his disappointment in the Finance Minister from whom he said he would have expected better.

Let us look at where some of this has come from. In the document entitled Economic & Fiscal Outlook released on June 18, 1987, in a table on page 30, we are shown that the acceleration of source deductions and quarterly installments of personal income tax will bring in $1.1 billion in fiscal year 1989-90, while the acceleration of sales and excise tax payments for fiscal year 1988-89 was expected to bring in $1.6 billion.

What does this mean in plain English? It means that employers who withhold payments from the payroll for Canada Pension, income tax, and unemployment insurance, who used to have to remit it to the Government monthly, were first required to remit fortnightly, and a little later there was a further change and they were required to remit weekly. We have seen the same thing with the federal sales tax. Manufacturers are being required to remit it earlier; in some cases even before they have collected the tax from the sale.

This means that the Government's books look better once only, but this is not an ongoing source of revenue. This is the kind of selective bookkeeping which Peat Marwick criticized and which people coming before the finance committee on tax reform criticized. A Bank of Montreal newsletter a couple of months ago also criticized it. In fact, it reckoned that some of the selective bookkeeping might indeed have falsely reduced the deficit by as much as $4 billion.

Let us look for another instance where the Government has used figures rather creatively. In some of the earlier economic statements soon after the Government came to power, we were told that a cap would be put on the growth of fiscal transfers to the provinces. The Government got terribly incensed when this was referred to as a cut. "No cuts", they said, "we have merely limited the rate of growth by $2 billion". On February 26, 1986 we had a Budget where there was not a word about this cap on transfers to the provinces in the Budget Papers in Canada, but a glossy document, which was released in embassies abroad and which was given particularly a lot of exposure in the United States, claimed that the Government intended to cut these transfers. Reductions in transfer payments to provincial Governments for health care and post-secondary education were listed among the Government's so-called efficiency measures on page 6 of this particular document. So we have a Government which came to power on a promise of reducing expenditures, reducing the deficit and not raising taxes but it has done precisely the opposite.

• (1700)

Let us look at some specifics in this Budget, which I did not discuss in my speech on the borrowing authority. Again, it is a matter of the Government saying one thing and doing another. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has frequently criticized the manufacturers' sales tax. He says it distorts the economy; that it is a silent killer of jobs. But he has increased that same manufacturers' sales tax enormously since he came to power. He tells us that it is only a temporary measure, that when he puts in his new sales tax, the federal manufacturers' sales tax will go. Meanwhile he increased it enormously. I will repeat again some of the figures that I gave on February 12.

On October 1, 1984 we saw the manufacturers' sales tax increased from 9 to 10 per cent. On January 1, 1986, it was increased from 10 to 11 per cent. On April 1, 1986, it was increased from 11 to 12 per cent. The impact on tax revenues was a $3 billion gain to the Government as a result, this from a Government which came to power on a promise of not increasing taxes.

On July 1, 1985, we saw the sales tax extended to candy and soft drinks. On July 1, 1987, we saw the sales tax extended to fast food and snacks. Those two measures netted the Government $460 million. On January 1, 1988, we saw the sales tax increased from 8 to 12 per cent on paint, wallpaper and toys. That measure brings the Government $60 million a year. We have seen progressive increases in air transportation taxes since May 1, 1986 which have netted the Government $55 million. Then we have the excise taxes, to which I will return. Then there are the income taxes greatly increased by deindexation of personal allowances and other measures. The Government continues to increase taxes while not lowering the public debt.

I want to come back to the Peat Marwick newsletter because Hon. Members opposite have been objecting to figures and statements produced from this side, so I think if I quote a very well respected accounting firm's newsletter nobody can find fault with the accuracy of it. The newsletter is critical of the increases in the manufacturers' sales tax. We have some new ones here. Let me quote:

> It comes as no surprise that the Government has again turned its attention to federal sales tax in the current budget. The second stage of the 1987 tax reform proposals on the multistage sales tax appears to have becomed bogged down in pre-election jitters. While it does not appear to be safe to introduce a new tax in a potential election year, it pays to tinker with the grande dame of taxes—the 68 year-old federal sales tax.
> The proposal to shift the sales tax to the wholesale level for household chemicals, toys, games and sporting goods and records and tapes (to have been implemented January 1, 1988, then postponed to July 1, 1988) will not be implemented.

This was a matter on which the finance committee received many representations. The letter continues:

> The sales tax on pet foods, snack foods, candy and confectionery, microwave ovens, television and video recorders and players, moved to the wholesale level prior to 1988, will be shifted back to the manufacturer's trade level effective November 1, 1988. It is unclear what the tax disposition of affected goods will be where such items are held by a wholesaler at November 1, 1988. Transitional provisions should ensure the ability of wholesalers to pay tax only on the cost of goods on hand at November 1, 1988 when they are ultimately sold at a later date.
> Because of "structural problems' in applying the sales tax at the manufacturer's level on motor vehicles, cosmetics, health goods, prerecorded video cassettes and pet litter, these items will continue to be taxed at the wholesale trade level—

Concerning the manufacturers' sales tax, and I repeat, according to the Minister of Finance, the manufacturers' sales tax is destructive to the economy, destructive of jobs, yet he continues to increase it, to tinker with it and to apply it to more goods, to broaden the base and increase the rates. It is a very inconsistent position which is difficult to understand. One of the measures the Government considered was to introduce related-party taxing provisions. This was introduced in the June, 1987 tax reform papers. It was resisted. The finance committee received many criticisms of it, in response to which the Minister of Finance, sensibly, withdrew it. First, the provisions were temporarily postponed to July 1, 1988. Now it seems they are out of business for good. This is only one of the tinkering provisions which was so poorly thought out that it had to be quietly withdrawn. However, in its place the Government is proposing an alternative that looks cumbersome and may be equally unworkable.

I also want to point out that there is another measure introduced in this Budget which at first blush does not appear to have many revenue implications, but which, in fact, does. This Government has become very ingenious at introducing hidden sources of revenue. I refer here to the wholesale licence provisions under the Excise Tax Act. The Government is proposing changes in the method of licensing. Effective November 1, 1988 it is proposed that licence applicants will have to sell at least 50 per cent of their taxable goods under exempt conditions in any six month period ending in the 12 months preceding application. In addition, licencees will be required to file an annual report by February 15 in each year to account for exempt or taxable goods in the preceding calendar year. To retain a licence at least 45 per cent of their taxable goods must be sold under exempt conditions in any six month period ending in the reported year. If the licence is cancelled, because of not meeting these conditions, tax free inventory must be tax paid in six equal instalments over the coming year.

• (1710)

Security for these licences is being increased to a maximum of $100,000. The cancellation of such licences is expected to bring in a one-time $200-million revenue in the 1988-89 and 1989-90 fiscal years. This is another piece of smoke and mirrors, a one-time-only revenue that will be a considerable inconvenience to the people involved who have had less than adequate notice and less than adequate consultation about this change. It is creative bookkeeping for the Government, making its books look better. There is no indication that the Ministers care at all about the inconvenience to the people involved or about the essential lack of honesty in this kind of presentation.

Earlier I mentioned the excise tax. Indeed, it has been a great revenue producer for the Government since it came into power. We have seen a penny a litre now, two cents a litre then. In fact, since this Government came to power, it has increased gasoline prices by well over 18 cents a litre.

Effective April 1, 1988, the excise tax on gasoline and aviation gasoline will increase by one cent a litre. The fuel tax rebate for farmers, fishermen and other primary producers will also be increased by one cent per litre. Since Hon. Members opposite have become so indignant about the figures we use without attributing them, let me attribute this to an outside source. The newsletter of Peat Marwick says, about this final one-cent increase in gasoline:

> This cosmetic change will result in additional revenues of approximately a third of a billion dollars!

In conclusion, I did not want to repeat in this speech on the Budget the general criticisms I made when I spoke on the borrowing authority on February 12. However, I do want to stress again that this so-called Budget had about 5 per cent content and 95 per cent electioneering guff, it had self-congratulation and hidden tax grabs and it is indeed a sorry document.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. Since there are no questions or comments, debate.

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to join my colleagues this afternoon in sharing some feelings in the budget debate. As well, I wish to react to the environment within which we find ourselves, both locally in Lachine and in the country.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) declared in his budget message that our policies are right, our policies are working, we are committed to fiscal responsibility, we are committed to priority needs and we have a vision of the future. The Prime Minister's choice of Finance Minister must be compared with that of his predecessors.

Canada has benefited from the very settled, responsible, steadfast approach of our Minister of Finance over these past three and a half years. Four or maybe five times he has presented the House of Commons with an outline of what is important for Canada. In those first months of our responsibility as Government, Hon. Members will recall how serious was the concern for the exploding deficit that Canada was facing, billions of dollars being added year after year to our future debt to be passed on to our children and their children.

The Minister of Finance established a financial framework. We as Ministers were challenged to find the ways to reduce the demands of Government on the taxpayer, to reduce the deficit through expenditure reduction Department by Department. This was the exercise.

A special undertaking was established by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself when he appointed the then Deputy Prime Minister to lead a review of over 1,000 spending programs to which the Government was committed, to see which of them were essential, which were contributing to the national well-being as was their original intent. Many were either eliminated or reduced to bring spending into line.

The revenue increase was forecast along with increased tax in some areas. There is no question that because of the need to reduce the deficit, everyone knew we had been spending beyond our means for years and would have to pay the penalty. Having established that some of the reduction would come from increased revenues, the Minister of Finance and the Government committed themselves to expenditure reductions. I thought that 70 per cent of the total reduction of our deficit would be achieved through expenditure reduction. Instead, the figure was 80 per cent. Eighty per cent of the total reduction of our deficit today is due to the reduction of spending by the Government and 20 per cent has been the cost to the taxpayer in increased taxes.

Much of the increased revenues of the Government have come from the very policies which have established credibility for Canada as a place to invest. The more people we put to work through investment, the more revenues we have. Those people come off the UIC and social benefit doles and support programs and enter the working force, something which, by the way, makes them taxpayers.

I heard something particularly interesting about the quality of job creation. Members of the Opposition have argued that most of the jobs created by the Government have been low paid, minimum wage jobs in the service sector, a kind of sneer. They are dead wrong. Members of the Opposition have got it into their heads that the service sector consists of nothing more than hamburger jockeys at McDonald's and bellboys at the Holiday Inn. They are ignoring the fact that doctors, architects, engineers, public servants and nurses as well as bankers and stock brokers also work in the service sector.

If opposition Members were to look at job creation by occupational sector rather than by industry, they would learn that half of the jobs created between 1984 and 1987 were of a managerial or professional nature. These hardly qualify as minimum wage jobs. If other high-paying occupations such as construction are included, approximately two-thirds of the jobs created between 1984 and 1987 were in occupations with above average wage levels.

We have a right to be proud of our framework and of the results of sticking to the framework. Speaking as an engineer, a framework is a function of the strength of the structure. In a political sense, it is a commitment, obviously one acceptable to investors around the world. Canada is again becoming that place where people want to have part of the action. They want to join us in what we are doing. We are one of the most attractive places in the world to invest in and to live in, without any question.

The Prime Minister's choice of Finance Minister has resulted in a tenure second only, as I recall, to that of the present Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) who held the post for longer. However, it will not have been for that much longer because I do not think it will be long before the country will return this Government and that Minister of Finance for another round of responsible Government. If there were more in the audience, I am sure I would hear loud cheering.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Layton: There it is. Our Minister of Finance is a credit to Canada. He is a credit to the Government. He is a credit to fiscal responsibility as a theme and as an objective. He is a credit to all of his colleagues and a credit to himself for the way he keeps carrying a very difficult and challenging responsibility.

• (1720)

The requirement is to find new resources from within the framework. On each new spending proposition the Minister bringing forth that particular initiative is challenged to find the resources within his own Department or to work a deal with the other Departments affected in order to achieve the goals. Yes, there have been some criticisms of the performance and approach of the Government. Even from our own supporters the question may be raised as to why there are increased taxes. That is answerable because part of the cost of previous overspending is being responsible today by paying back the debt.

Why is the deficit so slow to be reduced? Why can we not take a bite into it and cut it right back? All of us who have a business background understand that it is a lot easier to spend than to save. We had got into such a habit of committing ourselves to expenditure that the process of changing a bureaucracy as large and as growing as that with which we were faced in 1984 was enormous.

Therefore, the cost of reducing the growth of the Government was likewise a major challenge. It is happening. From the $38 billion level that we faced in 1984 it is down to $28.6 billion, and will continue to decrease each year. Each decrease in the deficit carries with it a considerably reduced demand on the financing markets and all the time reduces pressure on interest rates.

What are the results, the impacts, of fiscal responsibility? The very first is reduced interest rates which are down from the enormous figures we used to see at the mortgage companies. When 20 per cent of an investment had to be paid off in interest none of our young people wanting to establish homes could consider it. Today they can talk in terms of mortgages at 10 per cent and less. There are major savings for consumers and home renovators. There is increased investment.

Mr. Rossi: Tell us where you can get a 10 per cent mortgage.

Mr. Layton: The financial community is supporting projects without the Government's support which used to be mandatory. Without a government grant nothing happened. Today we have left that to the market-place, with a tremendous advantage to all because of the administrative costs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am having a little difficulty listening to this great speech in the House of Commons. I would hope that other Members would be courteous to the the Hon. Member for Lachine (Mr. Layton).

Mr. Layton: Another major impact of fiscal responsibility is increased employment. Nearly 1.2 million jobs have been created since September, 1984. That is the highest increase per capita in any of the economic communities in the western world. Reduced unemployment goes hand in hand with that. People who used to look for part-time jobs are now enjoying full-time jobs. A major impact of fiscal responsibility is a reduced inflation rate which is staying close to 4 per cent. We have a much more stable economy and considerably increased confidence in ourselves and our country.

The Leader of the Official Opposition has argued that we have increased personal income tax by 68 per cent since we took office. Revenues are up mainly because of strong economic growth and job creation. Yes, there have been some tax increases because this Government has done what the Liberals have never done. It has taken on the fiscal mess that was left. Over 80 per cent of our deficit cutting actions are due to expenditure reductions. If we had allowed spending to increase at the annual rate of 20 per cent, which it did when the Leader of the Opposition was Finance Minister, we would have had to double this year's tax levels just to keep the deficit from increasing.

The method of the present Leader of the Opposition of calculating tax increases is to compare revenue levels in one year to revenue levels in another. If we apply this method to his record, we find that personal taxes increased by 76 per cent over the four-year period when the Leader of the Opposition was Finance Minister. If we had increased 1984 personal tax levels by that same amount, the average Canadian family would be paying an extra $1,000 in taxes this year.

The impacts of which I have spoken are also noticeable in my riding of Lachine, soon to become Lachine—Lac St. Louis with redistribution adding Lachine East back into the riding boundaries. This is a most practical arrangement as the four major Lakeshore communities west of Montreal, namely, Beaconsfield, Pointe Claire, Dorval, and Lachine, will be united as a single constituency with strong representation of our two linguistic communities and many of our ethnic minorities.

Economic recovery is evident in Lachine, a community which has been found by many Montrealers to be the most attractive place in which to live and to raise families. As a result, housing developments are booming in all sectors. Renovations and property development are being matched by commercial activity. Our towns are well administered and will continue to be attractive for investment.

One topic of specific concern to our community is the Dorval Airport. My colleagues will remember that not so many months ago a central issue for Montreal was how to serve the public with its international airports at Dorval and Mirabel. It was only after a period of considerable uncertainty and following extensive discussions, in which I was happy to represent the interests of Montrealers, that the Government developed and announced a policy some 15 months ago ensuring the future of Dorval Airport and the preservation of Mirabel for international and air cargo operations as they develop in the future.

In the last few weeks the Government has appointed an advisory council, which will be headed by Arthur Earle, a well known executive and past President of the Montreal Board of Trade, to study how the local community can take more and more control of the airport services which will be available to the public in Montreal. We are moving in the right direction.

As a point of interest, between 1981 and 1984, $15 million was invested in Dorval Airport. Since 1984, the capital investment has been $59 million. In the next few years it will be even greater.

The federal Government sold unused Dorval Airport land located on Sources Boulevard to the Cities of Pointe Claire and Dorval thereby creating the new Sources Industrial Park. Many new jobs will be created once this land is developed, one of the last high-tech development areas to the west of Montreal.

Dorval Municipal Golf Course, which has served for 40 years as a green space and buffer zone between the homes of Dorval and the airport operation, was threatened with closure, but this decision was reversed recently by the Government, thereby protecting the green space but also allowing for a cargo centre to be developed producing many new jobs.

The Department of Regional Industrial Expansion held a ceremony in Halifax recently called Canada Awards for Business Excellence. The two best companies in Quebec were from the riding of Lachine, namely, Production Sysper Inc. and Noranda Research. We are very proud of our high-tech facilities in the west of Montreal.

I have been privileged to visit a number of the plants, the two which I most recently visited being Pilon and DKL, both of which are competing and winning in the U.S. market in high-tech. The Department of Regional Industrial Expansion has helped finance over 35 firms since 1984 in the expansion of their facilities and produced over 1,750 jobs.

• (1730)

Since September 4, 1984, over $300 million worth of products and services have been purchased by the Department of Supply and Services from companies in the Lachine riding. This is an increase of 18 per cent over the previous three-year period, which is not bad considering that the Conservative Government has reduced the deficit growth rate.

There has been a major upgrading of the traffic facilities around Dorval, including the Dorval traffic circle. My colleagues from across the country may not realize that the West Island and Lachine are a major hub for the metropolitan area of Montreal because transport, whether by road, rail or air, comes and goes from my riding.

My speech this afternoon would not be complete if I did not briefly refer to Bill C-22 which proposed amendments to the Patent Act regarding pharmaceuticals. The majority of pharmaceutical companies in Quebec are located in the West Island region of Montreal. The benefits to our community now that Bill C-22 has been accepted will be substantial. Many of the 1,300 new jobs to be created in the Montreal area will be in my riding.

Perhaps a brief remark should be made on the recently introduced federal legislation regarding justice for victims of crime. This is a very real initiative on the part of a volunteer community, led by Sergeant Detective Menard, which has led to a considerable influence on our Government to bring forth legislation for victims of crime. Convicted criminals may now pay for their crimes, and most important, victims will be recognized and their needs and rights addressed.

I am also proud that citizenship court ceremonies are now held in the West Island, particularly in our riding. This is a first, and brings the citizenship court and its importance to where new citizens live.

Finally, for a number of years, once every month a representative from the Department of National Health and Welfare has come to the West Island to answer questions about old age security, pensions and family allowances.

In conclusion, the good will, confidence and assurance that I represent in my remarks this afternoon on behalf of my riding are based on our confidence in the Minister of Finance and the steadfast continuity and stability of his economic message and Budget.

[Translation]

Mr. Leblanc: Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Lachine (Mr. Layton) on his excellent speach. The Hon. Member is 62 and therefore a man of experience. He has a great deal of experience in the business world in Montreal, and I can assure him that what he said today about the Budget is true.

In 1984, the former Minister of Finance, Mr. Lalonde, forecast a deficit of $48 billion. That was his forecast. However, during that same year, we managed to reduce the deficit to $36 billion, which means $12 billion less. All this means is that the Minister of Finance was dead right.

There is something I would like to add to what the Hon. Member for Lachine (Mr. Layton) said about job creation generating revenue and increasing the federal Government's tax base. From 1980 to 1984, under the Liberal Government, the Montreal area saw a drop of 4,000 in the number of jobs. In fact, considering our mandate and the short time it took us to put the whole machine back in good working order, from 1984 to 1987, in just three years, we managed to make the Montreal area ... I say the Montreal area because the Hon. Member for Lachine is from the Montreal area. I am too, and I am proud to say we created 114,000 new jobs in this area in just three years after the Progressive Conservative Party was elected. Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance sees his task as a long term project, because the Minister's Budget is not just a year-to-year affair like the Liberals used to produce at the time. What we have is a long term Budget, a long term project so that business people can invest in long term programs. Nobody in business invests substantial amounts without knowing what kind of budget the Minister is going to bring down each year.

In fact, the Minister of Finance is to be commended for having opted for a long-term program to stabilize the Canadian economy. I would like to ask whether the Hon. Member for Lachine believes ... Personally, I think the forecast deficit of $28 billion is too high. I would even say that, considering the economy's rate of growth and the statistics we saw last month, the deficit, instead $28 or $29 billion, should be expected to be around $25 billion. What do you think, as the Member for Lachine?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Longueuil (Mr. Leblanc) has asked the Hon. Member for Lachine (Mr. Layton) a question. Would the Hon. Member like to answer?

• (1740)

[Translation]

Mr. Layton: I want to thank the Hon. Member for Longueuil (Mr. Leblanc) who is himself a businessman and a prominent citizen in a riding as substantial as my own, on Montreal's Southshore. The riding is well established and well known, and it is in very good shape today.

I could not agree more with what he said about the need to continue our annual deficit reduction program. I think $25 billion is a very promising goal, but I think we should bear in mind the many other factors that have an impact on the country's economy. I spent two years as Minister of State (Mines), and I feel that as far as the mining industry is concerned, the situation is very volatile, and that we must have programs available for the regions and various industries and sectors, like the mining industry, which may from time to time experience a negative cycle. But with that reservation ... I am very confident about your suggestion regarding the $25 billion and the fact that we should simultaneously reduce our annual borrowing needs and our debt.

An Hon. Member: The Hon. Member for Longueuil won't be around, that's why!

Mr. Layton: Yes, but he can hear me.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say I fully agree with the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Further questions? The Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe (Mr. Tardif).

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, the Government Member spoke at length about the need and the relevance of reducing the deficit.

Everyone will agree it is important to reduce the deficit. However, observers tend to agree that the drop in the deficit was not due to good management but to higher taxes.

My question to the Hon. Member is as follows: Why did his Government opt for reducing the deficit by savagely increasing taxes, and what is worse, taxes paid by consumers, by people on low and middle incomes, while the tax burden on corporations and big companies has shrunk dramatically?

Mr. Layton: Mr. Speaker, 20 per cent of today's deficit reduction is due to supplementary revenue, while 80 per cent is the result of spending cuts. I think this balance is justifiable and is acceptable to Canadians. I am confident that once Canadians have evaluated the situation, they will agree this is exactly the kind of balance they want.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Member have any more questions? The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

[English]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my friend a question about interest rates, a very important subject. There are people in this country who believe interest rates are too high. Indeed, they believe the Government, in the three and a half years it has been in power, by maintaining these very high interest rates, has cost Canadians some $2 billion through excessive interest payments on the national debt. My hon. friend knows that debt has increased by $116 billion since the Tories took office in 1984, a 60 per cent increase. He also knows that if we were to lower interest rates to a reasonable level through government action, we would save money because of the lower cost of paying interest on the national debt.

Is the Hon. Member in accord with the theory that interest rates could be lowered through certain fiscal and other monetary actions by the Government, therefore helping Canadians to increase economic activity and possibly reduce the deficit much faster?

Mr. Layton: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Ottawa—Vanier raises the question of whether the Government can simply save money by arbitrarily reducing interest rates. I think he will be as aware of the factors that go into interest rates as anyone in business. The only true interest rate which can apply in Canada is what the market will support. The system in effect today is that of maintaining a market base interest rate in competition with other markets around the world. It is no longer a case of Canada isolating itself and pretending that we can have a particular level of interest rates and dollar value. We are in an international market of instant communication. Money is moved instantly by computer around the world and we would quickly suffer if our interest rates were not as attractive as those of the Americans and Europeans.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period provided for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young).

[English]

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have an opportunity to say a few words on the most recent Budget which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has presented for our consideration in the House. I certainly can agree with the Hon. Member for Lachine (Mr. Layton) that the Minister is a very nice kind of chap. However, that does not mean we think his Budgets are always well thought out or that his competence in some respects cannot be questioned.

In preparing a few notes for today's debate I came across a statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) which he made in this House on March 16, 1987. He said:

> —we are in the process of building two Canadas, one which is rich and promising and one which is underdeveloped and underemployed.

I, of course, agree with that observation. However, where the Prime Minister and I would probably disagree is on the approaches that the Government has taken to correct that very true statement.

This Budget does absolutely nothing to correct the anomalies that he and others find in various parts of Canada today. Unemployment remains unacceptably high in most regions. The exception is in the area surrounding my own constituency in the City of Toronto. Certainly one hears of the very low unemployment rate in southern Ontario, Metropolitan Toronto in particular. What is not as well known is that the vast number of jobs created in a place like Metropolitan Toronto have actually been part-time jobs. Neither does the Government talk about the vast army of people who are not considered unemployed because they do not meet some statistical criteria set down by those who record unemployment levels.

There are all kinds of people in Toronto and elsewhere over the age of 50 who have become unemployed but are no longer considered unemployed because they are not collecting unemployment insurance. Yet they cannot find jobs. To those people it is meaningless when the Prime Minister and others talk about the number of jobs created in Canada since 1984. Therefore, I tend to caution people when they talk about the prosperity in southern Ontario. Much of it is not real at all, even though in comparison to other areas of the country there is no question we are better off.

I recall being in Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and New Brunswick about this time last year where unemployment among young people is just horrendous. You cannot go into the Atlantic region without coming out thoroughly depressed at the hopelessness of many of those young people. Once they come out of school there are no jobs for them down there. If they are going to find work they have to uproot themselves from their families and communities and move to places like Toronto. I do not think that anyone, by any stretch of the imagination, will say that this is acceptable in a country as rich as Canada is today, if it was ever considered to be acceptable at all.

Rather than make that situation better for those people, this Budget and previous Budgets have actually made it worse. When you look at what previous Budgets have done to the average Canadian family through increases in sales and personal taxes, you find it amounts to an additional $1,400 a year being taken away from those families. Even under so-called tax reform introduced by the Minister last year, the average family will still be paying more than $1,000 more in taxes under this Government than it did prior to 1984. While low and middle-income Canadians are paying more taxes, there are also people at the high end, 2 per cent of the population, who will actually be paying less than they were prior to 1984.

You will also be interested to know, Mr. Speaker, that some 60,000 profitable corporations will continue to avoid paying any tax despite the tax reform package that was introduced last year. Large corporations in particular are able to use tax incentives to the greatest advantage to reduce their tax loads to absolutely nothing. For example, Xerox Canada, Brascan and Alcan Aluminum paid no taxes at all in 1986, while Cadillac Fairview, Hudson's Bay Co. and Bramalea did the same in 1987. All of these corporations made millions of dollars in profits.

I wish to take Hon. Members back to the first Budget and the subsequent Budgets of the Government and deal with the impact that they had on an average family of two with two children which earns $35,000 per year. For example, the November 1984 Economic Statement, which was not classed as a Budget but which had the same effect, increased oil and gas prices by $100 per year for this family of two. It increased unemployment insurance premiums to $102 per year and sales taxes by $150 per year. As a result of that one economic statement this family's disposable income declined by $352 per year.

The May 23 1985 Budget saw the elimination of the federal tax reduction which resulted in a $100 increase in taxes for this family. There was a modification to indexing which amounted to $115. There was a cut in family allowance payments amounting to $22.50. Taxes on cigarettes and alcohol increased by $75 per year. The sales tax was broadened, which amounted to an increase in taxes of $150 per year. The gas tax increase in that Budget resulted in an increase of $50 per year. All these increases amounted to a $512.50 reduction in the disposable income of a family with an annual income of $35,000.

On June 27, 1985, there was an increase of 1 cent per litre on gasoline which was to pay for the Government's backtracking on the proposal to deindex old age pensions. That increased taxes by $50 per year for this average Canadian family about which I am talking.

In the February 26 1986 Budget there was a 3 per cent surtax which amounted to a $170 increase in taxes for this average family. Sales tax increases accounted for an increase of $150, while an increase in cigarette and alcohol taxes added another $20. This Budget caused this average Canadian family a decrease in its disposable income of $340 per year.

On September 18, 1986, the Government slapped another $50 on Canadians for gas tax increases. It broadened the sales tax base, which amounted to another $15. Cigarette and air ticket taxes went up by $35. All these increases accounted for an increase in taxes of $65 to $100 on the family about which I am talking.

On June 18, 1987, under the Government's tax reform package there were changes in tax categories which meant a reduction of some $310 for this family. Tax increases effective February 10, 1988, saw the gas tax increase by 1 cent per litre for an additional $50.

The Government is nickeling and diming Canadians to death. It can argue all it wants but there is no way that it can convince me that Canadians are much better off in 1988 than they were in 1984. Canadians know that they are not.

I would now like to illustrate what the Government is allowing the richest element in Canadian society to get away with. I have some figures with respect to this for the year 1986. On profits totalling $220 million, Alcan Aluminum received a tax credit of $32 million from the Government. In 1986, on profits totalling $187 million, Brascan received a tax credit of $2.3 million. Hees International, on profits totalling $117 million, paid no taxes at all. Power Financial, on profits of $132 million, received a tax credit of $1 million from this crew. On profits totalling $115 million, Xerox Canada received a tax credit of $10.8 million. Total Petroleum, on profits totalling $40 million, received a tax credit of $2.2 million. On profits totalling $70 million, Wardair paid no taxes at all. On profits totalling $39 million, PWA paid no taxes at all. Repap Enterprises on profits totalling $34 million, paid no taxes at all. Union Carbide Canada, on profits totalling $28 million, paid no taxes at all.

The following figures are with respect to the year 1987. On profits totalling $51 million, Bramalea paid no taxes at all. On profits totalling $95 million, Cadillac Fairview received a tax credit of $12.4 million. Carena-Bancorp, on profits totalling $37 million paid no taxes at all. On profits totalling $50 million, Hudson's Bay Co. received a tax credit of $15.7 million. Seco-Camp, on profits totalling $43 million, paid no taxes at all.

In contrast with those figures three weeks ago, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) made a grand pronouncement in Winnipeg that he was about to increase the funding for the New Horizons Program for seniors up to a total of $15 million annually by 1989-90. What the Minister did not talk about is what the Government has done to senior citizens under the New Horizons Program since it came into office.

In 1984, when the Government was elected, the Budget for this program was $17.3 million. In the next year this same Minister who now wants to increase the Budget to $15 million cut the funding by $5 million. In 1986, New Horizon Programs were being funded to the tune of under the $10 million mark. In this year's Estimates it looks as if the program will receive $8.8 million per year.

While the Minister was talking about increasing the funding for this program to $15 million in 1989 what he has not talked about is that he has stripped the program of $15 million over the last four years. He is now coming along and saying, "Well, we are going to throw some more money in here. It will look good to senior citizens. They will think that we are finally responding to their needs. Therefore, all the senior citizens will trot out and vote for us in the next election". The Minister is dreaming. Senior citizens know what the Government has done to them in successive Budgets. They have been around a long time. They bring a great deal of wisdom to bear. They have seen many Governments come and go. This Government will not be able to pull the wool over their eyes.

I see that my time has practically expired. May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member may call it six o'clock. He will have five minutes left in his speech when debate on the Budget resumes. I do not know when that will be. He will also have 10 minutes for questions and comments.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION—ARMS GAP BETWEEN NATO AND WARSAW PACT NATIONS

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, on September 21, 1987, I raised a question respecting the arms gap between NATO and Warsaw Pact nations particularly because of the agreement that was about to be reached with respect to short and medium-range missiles.

• (1800)

This question is one of the most important, demanding questions that could be raised with regard to national defence. We are not a neutral country. We are a member of an alliance, an alliance that establishes that an attack on one member state in the alliance is an attack upon all. That NATO alliance has been one of the major reasons why peace has been sustained in Europe since World War II. The effectiveness of the NATO deterrents has been established. For many years that deterrent has been based upon NATO having sufficient nuclear strength that any attack by the Warsaw Pact nations would have been futile, counterproductive, and self-destructive.

We have to face the fact now that, as the western nations, particularly the United States, are moving quite admirably in the direction of nuclear reduction, we are losing some of the deterrent capability of NATO. We are losing it because we have always been seriously and critically inferior to the Warsaw Pact nations. It is a question of doubt in the near future as to whether the NATO nations will have the deterrent effect upon the Warsaw Pact that they have exercised for 40 years.

One sees that when one considers the type of disparity between the NATO and Warsaw Pact nations. Let us consider the following. NATO has 53 divisions of combat groups; the Warsaw Pact nations have 72. NATO has 8,799 tanks; the Warsaw Pact nations have 24,200 tanks. NATO has 1,834 combat planes; the Warsaw Pact nations have 2,997 planes.

It is clear that, on the basis of conventional arms alone, NATO is critically inferior to the capability of the Warsaw Pact nations. This is particularly so in the instance of the Canadian brigade. We support this Government. That can be greatly encouraged by the way in which the Government has increased the force of the Canadian brigade in NATO. This increase has not only improved the morale of our troops there, but improved the respect with which Canada is held by its NATO partners.

Just consider these matters, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian brigade, in spite of it receiving an additional number of combat troops, lacks even a field hospital to care for the wounded, should we be involved in combat. The NATO brigade is depending on the civilian hospital at Lahr, Germany. The Warsaw Pact nations have guns that can destroy any Canadian tank with a single shot. On the other hand, the Warsaw Pact nations have tanks that no Canadian gun can penetrate.

Therefore, I raise this issue in the House this evening to encourage the Government to continue or even to escalate the efforts that it is making to increase and improve Canada's defence capability on this continent, and particularly in Europe. As Canadians we have always believed that it is better to have the conflict there. That is one reason why for 40 years we have devoted ourselves to participating in NATO. But we have to see that this is a critical question now. If NATO is to be effective, it must have sufficient capability to deter potential Soviet aggression. I am not looking only to the short term. We know for now Moscow has a Government that is more interested in other priorities. That Government may not last forever.

• (1805)

We may very well, before many years have gone by, see the Soviet Union under an administration that will be interested in aggression. For those in the House or in the public concerned about the moral dimension of this, I quote from a papal message to the United Nations Special Session on Disarmament in June, 1982, in which His Holiness said:

> In current conditions, deterrence based on balance . . . may still be judged morally acceptable.

I quote also from the Archbishop of Canterbury, speaking to the General Synod of the Church of England in 1983, when he said:

> I do not impugn the honesty or good faith of those who support unilateralism, but I believe there is also moral seriousness in the multilateral approach. It is a prime moral responsibility of a Christian to build peace in an immoral world. The way of negotiations and building new international institutions also demands moral courage and perseverance.

Deterrence has worked for 40 years. Let us be sure that it will continue to work.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to respond to my colleague, a person who all of us in the House know has worked extremely hard for Canada and her defence. Mr. Speaker, 1987 has seen dramatic progress in the bilateral negotiations on arms control matters between the United States and the U.S.S.R. Most tangibly, an INF agreement was signed at the Washington Summit in December. This agreement is an historic achievement for NATO and a tribute to the United States and allied steadfastness and cohesion in pursuit of a sound outcome.

Several aspects of the INF Treaty are particularly noteworthy as precedents for political future arms control agreements. First, the INF Treaty provides for asymmetric reductions with the Soviets eliminating more INF missiles than the United States. This is a useful precedent for other arms control agreements where NATO-Warsaw Pact imbalances exist, for example, conventional. Second, it establishes an unprecedented new and rigorous verification regime involving extensive on-site inspection. Third, by eliminating an entire class of U.S. and Soviet nuclear systems, it demonstrates the feasibility of a far more ambitious approach to arms control than was previously believed possible.

Finally, it shows that forced modernization and improvement programs and arms control agreements are not alternatives but constitute complementary elements in NATO's efforts at preserving security at a lower level of forces.

The possibility of an arms control agreement was foreseen in the defence White Paper tabled in the House last June. Effective defences complement arms control as elements of Canadian security policy. While conventional forces cannot entirely replace nuclear weapons, the elimination of NATO INF missiles places a higher premium on conventional defences and so makes the efforts to improve Canada's military contributions to the alliance all the more important.

At the same time, the importance of redressing the current imbalance in conventional weapons in Europe is a top priority for this Government, as well as for NATO as a whole. NATO is expending considerable energy and resources in force modernization and standardization efforts.

Our White Paper attempted to address this problem in part by consolidating our commitments in both land and air within NATO's central region. This will rationalize and make more effective our input in stabilizing the conventional balance.

Equally important, however, are the steps that we, as part of NATO, are taking in redressing the balance. We are currently engaged in exploratory mandate negotiations with representatives of the Warsaw Pact in Vienna. It is our hope that these preliminary talks will bear fruit, and that two new conventional arms control negotiations will commence some time late this year, or possibly early in the new year. These talks would address the conventional problem from two complementary directions. One would negotiate confidence building measures that would add a measure of predictability to military activity in the land mass of Europe.

I might add that these talks would build upon the already successfuly concluded Stockholm Conference which, in 1986, produced an agreement on confidence building and is currently under implementation.

The second negotiation would tackle the more difficult prospect of eliminating disparities in certain categories of conventional forces which are key for launching of surprise attacks and large scale offensive actions. We will try to establish a level of force which would remove the ability of one side to threaten the other, but would retain an ability to meet legitimate defences.

TAX REFORM—AMOUNT OF TAX COLLECTED BY GOVERNMENT—WHITE PAPER SALES TAX PROJECTION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, on December 17, 1987 I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) a question about the Government's proposed tax reform.

Before the 1984 election the Minister said in this House "We would not raise taxes. Tax levels in Canada are already too high". Since 1984 Canadians have seen an unprecedented tax grab, much of it from the pockets of low and middle-income Canadians. No previous Government has raised taxes at this rate. I detailed many of these increases in my speech on the borrowing authority on February 12, so I will not repeat the detail now. Since the Conservatives have been in office, they have increased revenues from manufacturers' sales tax by 67 per cent, from personal income tax by 45 per cent and from corporate income tax by 8 per cent.

The Minister has projected that personal income taxes will be reduced by about $11 billion over the next five years. In other words, over three years he increased them by $22 billion while planning to return $11 billion over the next five years.

Corporate federal tax revenues are expected to increase by about $5 billion. The federal manufacturers' sales tax revenues are expected to increase by more than $3 billion over the next five year period, although again, the Minister says that the federal sales tax is destructive of the economy. Yet he continues to increase it.

We are supposedly left with the figures I just quoted, with a more or less revenue neutral tax reform package in phase one. I say more or less because regrettably it does have a lot of smoke and mirrors in it. The Minister's own figures on page 30 of the tax reform 1987 Economic and Fiscal Outlook shows $2.7 billion are accounted for by accelerated remittances, personal tax instalments and sales and excise tax payments. Other authorities, and when I say authorities I refer to the Bank of Montreal's tax newsletter and Peat Marwick's more recent tax letter—where the amount of smoke and mirrors—that is my wording not theirs—assess it at almost $4 billion, and in another case at over $3 billion.

If we also look at page 47 of the White Paper, Economic and Fiscal Outlook, it appears that Canadians will have paid almost $17 billion in federal manufacturers' sales tax by 1990 as opposed to $7.5 billion in 1984-85.

The so-called Phase I of the Government's tax reform proposals is supposed to stand alone, but the Government has quietly introduced a major change in public policy here, namely, a shift from income tax to consumption tax. In Phase II, the Government proposes to abolish the manufacturers' sales tax. In its place we will see a multi-stage sales tax on goods and services. At every stage of the production chain, all the way down to consumers, each business will charge tax on its sales and receive a credit for a tax payable on its purchases. The consumers, however, as the last link in the chain, ultimately bear the tax. This new sales tax is supposed to take care of the $2.7 billion revenue shortfall. It is supposed to replace the manufacturers' sales tax and to allow for removal of the surtax on income taxes and allow a further decrease in income taxes. We are still, however, short of real clear figures.

Again, how much is the Minister expecting to raise by his new sales tax, bearing in mind that the Government has already, in its term in office, increased taxes to an unprecedented limit? How much does the Minister reckon that he can take out of the economy without risking provoking a recession?

• (1815)

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I listened with care to the remarks made by the Hon. Member. I would hope that in the interests of fairness and accuracy, she would re-examine some of the comments she made, particularly her opening comments with regard to an increased tax burden on lower and middle-income families. That really is not an accurate statement.

The Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) has asked if tax reform means that the Government will generate more sales tax revenues than that projected in the White Paper. When this Government came to office, it committed itself to a program of economic renewal and sound fiscal management. Since September of 1984, this Government has succeeded in bringing the deficit under control. Interest rates have fallen dramatically. There are over a million more people working today than when we came to office. Clearly, the Government's approach is working.

An important ingredient of the Government's program is comprehensive tax reform. Canadians want a fair and progressive tax system. They want a system that encourages individual initiative and one in which all high-income individuals and profitable corporations pay their fair share of tax. As well, they want a tax system that supports Canada's ability to compete in world markets, one that creates increased employment opportunities for Canadians.

In stage one of tax reform, we have lowered personal income tax rates and converted a number of exemptions to credits. As a result, and I hope the Hon. Member notices this, 850,000 lower-income Canadians will be relieved of paying any income tax. Eight in 10 households will see their income taxes reduced. The average decrease will be well in excess of $400 per year. These are real benefits to average Canadians.

Still more needs to be done. The Government believes that a fair sales tax should remain one of the key pillars of the tax system. However, the current sales tax is clearly no longer adequate, and I think all three Parties in the House would agree with that. The Government has therefore made a commitment to replace the current sales tax with a more broad-based multi-stage tax in the second stage of tax reform.

The new system will both encourage economic growth and, at the same time, increase tax fairness. Indeed, the new system will be fairer than any sales tax that has existed to date. Lower-income Canadians will benefit from the refundable sales tax credit which will be substantially enriched by hundreds of dollars. Middle-income families as well will benefit from further income tax reductions. As in stage one, stage two will be revenue-neutral to the treasury.

As we have said before, the rate will be determined by the need to generate sufficient revenues to replace the revenues from the current sales tax, to remove the income surtaxes, to provide a substantial enrichment of the refundable sales tax credit for lower-income Canadians and to fund further income tax reductions for middle-income families. Stage two of tax reform will not therefore generate any new net revenues to the treasury.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION—SHORTAGE OF AFFORDABLE HOUSING IN TORONTO

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I want you to think back a few years. Do you remember the very first apartment you ever lived in? I do not know about you, but I certainly do.

The first apartment I lived in was in a part of my community that is known as Thorncliffe Park. When Louise and I were married, we rented an apartment in that community. At that time, it was a newly developed community, virtually a new area. There were a lot of apartments available. We found a rather small apartment, a one-bedroom. It was not a big one-bedroom, but it cost us the grand sum of $100 a month in rent. That does not seem like very much today, but I can guarantee that $100 a month in 1962 was a lot of money.

• (1820)

In order to induce us to rent that apartment at that time, the landlord actually offered us one month free rent. In fact, other landlords in the same community were offering free trips to Florida just for signing a lease for an apartment there. That is really a thing of the past as far as Metropolitan Toronto is concerned. I have heard that in Montreal, for instance, they are offering as much as three months free rent for signing a lease, but that is not the case in Metropolitan Toronto these days.

At the moment, in fact, the rental housing situation is really drastic. The vacancy rate is less than 1 per cent, in fact it is 0.1 per cent. Do you know what it is in Edmonton, Mr. Speaker? I do not know either, but I do know that in Calgary it is 5 per cent. The vacancy rate is much higher in Calgary than it is in Metro Toronto at the moment.

The whole situation started to change in the early 1970s. Changes in our federal income tax, which prevented developers from writing off extra expenses and raised their taxes and rent control by way of the rent review process which the provincial Government implemented, combined to reduce the amount of rental housing that was built until there is now a real shortage of rental housing.

It is not only in rental housing that there is a problem in Metropolitan Toronto. There is a shortage of all sorts of affordable housing. For instance, the average price of a single-family home these days in Metro Toronto is somewhere around $200,000. A two-storey three-bedroom square plan house, the kind that my parents bought in 1939 for about $7,000, the kind that Louise and I paid about $18,000 for 25 years later in 1962, now sells for about $325,000 in Metropolitan Toronto.

That is incredible. In the first 25 years it went up by about $10,000 and in the most recent 25 years it has gone up $300,000. That is not affordable housing. Louise and I could not have afforded to buy a house like that if we were starting out today and, quite frankly, we could not afford to buy it right now, even on the enormous sums that you and I make, Mr. Speaker, as Members of Parliament.

Thank goodness that Louise and I have a house, but I wonder about our daughters, Kim and Andrea. Kim is finished university now. She is working but she is living at home with us again. She is back at home. Andrea is at university now but she will be through in a couple of years. What are both Kim and Andrea going to do and what are so many young people going to do these days? They will not be able to afford to buy a house like Louise and I did, my parents did, or my grandparents did, and they will not even be able to find an apartment.

Kim and Andrea are not alone. They are like thousands and thousands of other young people who are really stuck in the housing market in Metro Toronto. Besides young people there are middle-aged people, senior citizens, and people who have come to Toronto from other communities such as Edmonton and Vancouver. People have come to Toronto looking for work and they cannot find a place to stay either. As well, of course, there are people coming from other countries who cannot find places to stay either. There is just not any affordable housing available.

What about the 17,000 seniors, middle-aged people, and singles who are on waiting lists in the greater Metropolitan Toronto area for affordable housing of one sort or another? There is just nothing for any of them. What is the answer to this problem?

Of course, some responsibility must lie with the private sector, some with municipal Governments, and some with the provincial Government. You, I and the Parliamentary Secretary know that the federal Government has a responsibility to provide affordable housing for Canadians.

• (1825)

The Parliamentary Secretary will tell us in a minute what the Government will do about this. However, I do not want him to tell me that CMHC built 4,800 new units in Toronto in the last 18 months. I do not want him to tell me that CMHC is involved in construction or renovation of 15,000 homes across Canada, and I certainly do not want him to tell me that my daughters, Kim and Andrea, better live in Calgary, Edmonton or Vancouver and commute to Toronto to work.

I want him to tell me what the Government will do. That is what I and other Canadians want to know from the Parliamentary Secretary and the Government tonight.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, at the outset, the Member omitted one other chilling fact regarding the housing industry in areas like Toronto. It is that if there should be a reversal in the economy in the city, and a family has bought a $300,000 house which, a year later, is valued at $150,000 if there is a recession, they have lost a fortune. Alternatively, if they work for a company and are transferred to another part of the country, they may do well selling the house in Toronto and moving to Moncton or Vancouver. It may be difficult for a family which has to move from Moncton or Vancouver to Toronto, however.

I recall some eight years ago when the housing market was so hot in Vancouver. When the crash came, a number of people were very badly hurt because of an artificial market.

Is the Hon. Member asking the Government to get into the financing of the housing industry? I suggest to him that there are some financial institutions that would express concern about a government heating up the market too much with easy money by getting into the housing industry. That would not solve the problem in Toronto. If it becomes too easy to finance, the market could be heated up even further.

The Government has helped in social housing in places like Toronto, Vancouver, Winnipeg and Montreal. While people may choose of their own volition to move from the downtown area of Toronto to the suburbs, and are willing to pay the extra cost of housing, it is another matter if they are people who are disadvantaged in one way or another and are caught in the squeeze of the housing market in Toronto.

The Government has been involved, through CMHC, in what is called social housing programs where there is a subsidy for those individuals. That also comes under somewhat of a misnomer because it is called affordable housing. It may be affordable housing for the people who are renting because they pay 25 per cent or 30 per cent of their income for the apartment, but I suggest to the Hon. Member that it is very expensive housing for the taxpayer. When mortgages were running at 18 per cent, it cost the taxpayer some $500,000 for a flat in social housing during the life of a mortgage.

The solution is not easy. Simply pumping more money into that area in Toronto will not solve the problem. I believe that we must ensure that the market supply is adequate. If we believe in supply and demand, the market supply must be adequate in order to drive the price down. The market must provide quality housing and we must watch the contractors and the developers so that they are not gouging the public and taking unreasonable profits in that whole area.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.30 p.m.
