ROUTINE PROCEEDING

[English]

INUVIALUIT REGIONAL CORPORATION

TABLING OF AGREEMENTS BETWEEN INUVIALUIT ON THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 67(2), I am pleased to table, in both official languages, the following documents:

(A) an amending agreement between the Inuvialuit Regional Corporation, representing the Inuvialuit and the Government of Canada, approved by Order in Council PC 1985-1144 to permit the Petroleum Incentives Program (PIP) to apply to Inuvialuit lands;

(B) an amending agreement between the Inuvialuit Regional Corporation, representing the Inuvialuit and the Government of Canada, approved by Order in Council PC 1987-26, which comprises of housekeeping amendments;

(C) an amending agreement between the Inuvialuit Regional Corporation, representing the Inuvialuit and the Government of Canada as represented by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development dated April 11, 1987 to provide a single efficient process whereby Canada consents to amendments to the Inuvialuit final agreement.

The appropriate legislation to enforce these agreements will be introduced in the very near future.

TRANSPORT

PRESENTATION OF THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the third report of the Standing Committee on Transport to which, pursuant to Standing Order 99(2), the committee requests a comprehensive response.

FRUIT AND VEGETABLE CUSTOMS ORDERS VALIDATION ACTS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The Hon. George Hees (for the Minister of National Revenue) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-96, an Act to validate certain customs duty orders relating to fresh fruit and vegetables.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I think you would find consent to proceed with this Bill later this day rather than at the next sitting of the House.

The same comment would also apply to the Bill on the Order Paper in the name of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux), entitled an Act to amend an Act respecting the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co., Limited, and also to the Bill on the Order Paper in the name of the Minister of Labour, entitled an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister of State has asked the Chair to seek the consent of the House that the Bill entitled an Act to validate certain customs duty orders relating to fresh fruits and vegetables be read the second time, rather than at the next sitting of the House, later this day. Is there consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I will deal with the other applications for consent as we get to each Bill.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-97, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? Later today?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

AN ACT RESPECTING THE HUDSON BAY MINING AND SMELTING CO., LIMITED

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-98, an Act to amend an Act respecting the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co., Limited.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? Later today?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CURRENCY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of State (Finance)) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-99, an Act to amend the Currency Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PENSION ACT, WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT AND COMPENSATION FOR FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs and Minister of State (Senior Citizens)) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-105, an Act to amend the Pension Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act, to repeal the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act, and to amend another Act in relation thereto.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? Later this day?

CANADIAN POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION COUNCIL ACT

On the Order: Private Members' Business—Bills

November 19, 1987—resuming debate on the Motion of Mr. Rompkey, seconded by Mr. Robichaud, for the second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-228, an Act to provide for a Canadian Post-Secondary Education Council.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, before you proceed to call motions which are presently on the Order Paper, I would advise the House that there have been discussions between the Parties. I think you will find unanimous consent for me to put the following motion immediately.

I move:

That, the Order for second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-228, an Act to provide for a Canadian Post-Secondary Education Council (Mr. Rompkey), be discharged and the subject thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Secretary of State.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the request of the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis). Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We appreciate the fact that over the weekend the Government has not had time to give us notice of anything it wanted to discuss on Orders of the Day. Therefore, it is impossible for us to arrange for debate. As Party Whip in charge of organizing my caucus, I find it difficult to arrange our duties in the House in an orderly and proper manner.

I would like to ask unanimous consent of the House that the motion dealing with the third report of the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology be considered as the order of the day until one o'clock, without prejudicing the right of the Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) in putting a motion under Standing Order 29, notice of which I believe has been delivered in due course. He would like to put that motion to you at this time. If there is unanimous consent, we could proceed that way and continue with the order of the day, which would be the third report of the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology.

Mr. Lewis Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity to consider my colleague's suggestion. I appreciate that a motion pursuant to Standing Order 29 comes after motions in the order of Routine Proceedings on the Order Paper.

There have been discussions among the Parties as to what would be the best way to conduct business this morning, in view of the fact that it is a Monday and it is difficult to schedule Members' time as well as airline flights.

I think it has been generally agreed that it would be useful to debate my colleague's motion on the third report of the Standing Committee on Research, Since and Technology after you have had an opportunity to consider the request of the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) for an emergency debate.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair should make it clear to Hon. Members what has been proposed by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and has been agreed to by the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) on behalf of the Government. The usual procedure would require that an application for an emergency debate not take place until the end of Routine Proceedings. Of course, if we have debate on the Hon. Member's motion now we will not get to that today.

The suggestion has been made and agreed to by the Government—but not by the NDP as of yet—that the Chair consider the application for an emergency debate by the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) at this time. Of course, this could only be done with consent of the House. I would ask for some guidance from the New Democratic Party as to its position.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, we would concur with that in the interests of the business going forward.

Mr. Speaker: I thank Hon. Members for their courtesy.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29

ATLANTIC CANADIAN SHELLFISH—PRESENCE OF TOXIN

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) rises on a matter which is of very serious concern not only to other Members, but especially to the Hon. Member. I recognize the Hon. Member for Egmont on that application. I would, as I did on Friday, remind Hon. Members, because I am sure others in the House will remind me to remind them, that the application should be a clear and concise statement, closely following the notice I received from the Hon. Member, and ought not to be the argument that might ensue later if the Chair were disposed to grant the emergency debate.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the concurrence of the House to move this motion today under Standing Order 29. It is a very important subject, certainly to the people of Atlantic Canada. Therefore, pursuant to Standing Order 29, I ask leave to propose a motion to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the bumbling and incompetence of the Government that has led to misinformation and confusion with regard to the safety consumption of Atlantic Canadian shellfish with disastrous consequences for the Atlantic Canadian fishery.

I present this motion today because on Friday, in a press release issued under the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) consumers were warned about a toxin in shellfish. In paragraph two of the release it stipulated that all mussels, oysters, clams and other shellfish, cultivated or wild, were included in this alert. This release was carried across the country and, indeed, throughout the world. It has done untold damage to our Atlantic shellfish industry, especially the lobster industry.

The release was not clear. It should have specifically spelled out—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I want to assure the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) and other Members from Atlantic Canada and other places, and their constituents, that the Chair is extremely aware of the matters about which the Hon. Member for Egmont speaks. However, again the Chair is constrained by the rules. I would ask the Hon. Member for Egmont to close off his application. I can indicate to the Hon. Member for Egmont that I understand perfectly his position.

Mr. Henderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I ask that this motion be considered today as a priority of the House because it is a very serious situation not only for consumers but for the producers of shellfish in Atlantic Canada. I hope that the Chair will rule in our favour.

Mr. Speaker: I have had a chance to consider with very great care the application of the Hon. Member for Egmont, as I considered with very great care a very similar application on Friday from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). Without going into any extensive discussion, may I say that the matter raised is, of course, serious. I think that would be agreed to by all Members of the House. However, under the circumstances and at this moment, it is not the disposition of the Chair to order an emergency debate.

I think there may well be other ways today to make inquiries, which I know the Hon. Member for Egmont will want to make, as he has every right to make, and I can assure him that ample opportunity will be given to the Hon. Member later on today to make those inquiries. The Hon. Member not only has a right to do so but I think Hon. Members would consider it a duty.

RESEARCH, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador) moved:

That the third report of the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology presented to the House on Tuesday, June 30, be concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to have the opportunity to comment on the third report of the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology on the space program.

The committee, as you know, Mr. Speaker, travelled across the country and heard a wide variety of views from Governments, universities and industry and made a number of recommendations, 24 in total, to which the Government has responded.

The committee noted, of course, Canada's history in the communications field and its enviable role and position and reputation in that field. In September of 1962, with the flight of Alouette I, Canada became the third country in space and we have continued to build on that success.

The first recommendation of the committee was with respect to Radarsat, which is, of course, only one of the examples of Canada's continuing lead in communications and in the space program. We recommended that that be given top priority and the Minister agreed and announced, I believe on June 25, that the Government of Canada had approved the Radarsat project. That project will go ahead.

It will be very important to the whole country, particularly my part of the country and, indeed, to farmers in the west and a whole variety of Canadians because it gives us the kind of technology to forecast, to see what is happening, to look ahead and warn, to provide all sorts of valuable information as to what is happening in the environment and to funnel and channel that information to interested groups, whether they be fishermen at sea, farmers in the field, or whomever.

I would note in passing that we still have not solved all the problems. We still have not gone as far as we should go, given the eminence of Radarsat, the advanced state of the technology and given the usefulness of that particular project. We still need to go further. We still need, for example, to be able to forecast accurately what is happening underneath the water. Radarsat will be able to look through the cloud cover but it will not be able to go beneath the surface of the ice or water.

One of our difficulties historically has been forecasting what is happening in the marine environment. The whole issue of mussels and shellfish in the Atlantic may be used as a certain case in point. Something else to which I would draw the House's attention is the difficulty in forecasting the activity among cod stocks. We have seen recently, within the past couple of years, that scientific proposals put forward in the 1970s may not be accurate now, and the fish we thought were there in the beginning may not in fact be there. I make the point that although we have gone a long way in Canada and can be proud of the work our scientists have done, there is still some way to go.

In recent discussions with Canadian scientists I was told that there is a certain initial breakthrough in the technology that will indeed look beneath the surface of the water and forecast what is happening with respect to marine life. That is very important. It will be of great consequence for Canada, particularly for the East Coast fishing industry if we can do that.

I make the point that Radarsat is a great achievement but there is still some way to go and I hope we will continue to work on that. Certainly the committee concurs in that as a top priority and the Government has responded in kind.

The other issue I want to deal with is the space station itself. Here I think there is a divergence of opinion between what the Government has done, and is doing, what I understood the committee to recommend and, certainly, the view of my colleagues in the Liberal Party. The Government historically has been negotiating with the Americans for a role in the space station, as have the Europeans and other countries. But that negotiation has been fraught with difficulties all the way along, mainly and primarily over the use of that space station.

We in the Liberal Party have taken the position all along that Canada should participate in the space station only if it is used for peaceful purposes and only if there is no military use of that space station. There is still no confirmation that that has been agreed to. There is still no confirmation, far from it, that the Government has reached agreement with the Americans that there will be no military use.

• (1130)

The recommendation of the committee was that Canada proceed with its participation in the space station project "provided that agreement be reached with the United States on military use of the space station". That is an equivocal statement, but the next sentence clarifies the intention of the committee when it states, "A minimum acceptable agreement would be the exclusion of weapons or weapons prototype testing from the space station". I interpret that to mean that there not be a military use. When the committee states that agreement be reached with the United States on military use of the space station, I think it was generally agreed that there not be military use. There still is no evidence that that is the case.

First, what is the definition of military use? That has changed. In the beginning we talked about international peaceful purposes. I am reading from an article in Aerospace Canada International in May, 1987 which states:

> Recent reaffirmation by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) that the manned space station will be used for "peaceful purposes consistent with international law" has, for the time being mollified Canadian taxpayers who will contribute more than a billion dollars for the space station's Mobile Servicing Centre (MSC).

Recently the statements that are coming out of Cape Canaveral are as follows:

> The proposed text of a Canada-U.S. agreement spelling out Canada's role in an American space station project says the station will be civilian, not military, and will be used for peaceful purposes in accordance with U.S. law . . .

Well, is it international law? Is it U.S. law? What do we mean by military use, military purposes? Who decides what the definition is? Is it in accordance with international law? Is it in accordance with U.S. law? We do not have a clear definition of what is military use.

All along the position of this Party has been that it must not be used for star wars purposes or for any link with SDI. The Government has stated that it does not want to get involved on a government-to-government basis with the SDI project. But in any number of cases, including allowing Crown corporations to bid on projects associated with that effort, and now in negotiating with the Americans for the possible use for military purposes, it seems to me that the Government is allowing itself to get in by the back door.

The Government must be clear for the Canadian people. Is the Government for SDI? Is the Government for star wars, or is it not? Is the space station project going to be used for military purposes, or is it not? The Government has to come clean with the Canadian people. As I stated, the position of this Party is very clear. We are against the SDI project, we are against star wars, and there must be absolutely no involvement of the Canadian Government in that particular project.

There is an article in the paper today which states that if any military use is made of the space station, the Government will possibly get its money back. I do not think that is good enough for the Canadian people. It is another indication of waffling, equivocation, and the smoke and mirrors that has gone on with this whole issue of military purposes or not military purposes. I do not think it is good enough to say that if at some point it is used for military purposes we will get our money back. The Canadian people do not want to approach it on that basis. They do not want to invest in any activity that will be used for military purposes.

The fact that now there is an agreement to get our money back if it is used for military purposes again suggests that the possibility is there that it will be used for military purposes. If it was not going to be used for military purposes, why would the two Governments have to agree to give Canada its money back should that happen? There is evidence again that there is a grey area here that has not been clarified, and that has to be done.

Mr. Weinberger told us that they were going to plough ahead, and that they were willing to go it alone if the other countries did not agree. Therefore, the position of the United States has been clear all along. It has been a top priority with the President and his Cabinet as enunciated by Mr. Weinberger. The intention of the Americans has been clear. The Canadian Government has not, in our opinion, taken the type of tough stand that it should. It has not sought and obtained the necessary clarification with regard to the use of the space agency. That is one area.

The other area is the allocation of funds in the whole space program. The space station will be costly. For a long time we debated in committee whether that amount of money was justified. We came to the conclusion that essentially it was. Basically, Canada really did not have an option; that this space station was where the action is in terms of the future, in terms of research and development, and that Canada had to get involved. I do not have to remind you, Mr. Speaker, of the type of spin-offs that we have had already from the space program in ordinary consumer products. We have to make that leap ahead. But I make the point again that it is only for peaceful purposes, it is only on the condition that there will be no military use of that space station.

Let me return to the allocation of funds. It is a lot of money that we are committing on behalf of the Canadian people. We felt that not enough money was being allocated to basic research conducted in space. The committee recommended that 15 per cent of the budget be allocated to basic research in space. The Government declined to go along with that, and has maintained an allocation of 9 per cent of funds devoted to space research. We do not think that that is good enough. As I said before, if this is the cutting edge, if this is where the action will be, then the real pay-off in the long term to Canada and to the world will come from the type of research that is carried on in space. We are going to put up a servicing mechanism, and that is all to the good, but as one scientist stated a while ago, "We do not want Canada to simply become the garage mechanics of outer space". We have to focus on the type of research that is going on in space.

The committee recommended that 15 per cent of the budget be allocated to that. The Government has declined to go along with that. If I may say so, I think that is indicative of the general reluctance of the Government to emphasize research and technology. I wish to make this point in this particular context. Holding the line at 9 per cent of the budget in outer space is simply going along with the thrust of the Government generally. The fact is that the commitment of the Government to R and D has been consistently cut back over the past two years.

In the last election, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) pledged well over 2 per cent of GNP to R and D in this country. What do we have now? About two months ago we saw it slip back from 1.5 per cent to 1.3 per cent. At the moment 1.5 per cent of GNP in this country is allocated to research and development. That is not good enough when one considers that the Government's intention is that we enter into a free trade agreement with the United States which will radically change this country and the businesses in this country.

Who will survive? Who will be the winners and who will be the losers under free trade? The winners will be those business, and particularly those small businesses that have done, are doing, and are in possession of the latest R and D. There is no question about that. That is where the action will be, and to a large extent, that is what will determine the survival and prosperity of Canadian business. Yet at the same time we see the Government advocating entering into an open competition with U.S. firms, and a lack of commitment to R and D.

I will not even talk about training, because you would rule me out of order, Mr. Speaker. It is not possibly relevant in this particular debate. But I do think that the issue of R and D is relevant.

If we are going to enter into this trade agreement, there has to be a strong commitment to research and development. Without that, Canadian firms and Canada generally will not survive. This latest example of not giving due priority to basic research and the space station is more evidence of the lack of commitment of the Government.

Finally I want to deal with the space agency, and I know that it is a controversial area. I do not want to get into where the particular agency should be located. There are people who think that it should be in Montreal, and there are people who think that it should be in Ottawa. However, it should be; that is the point.

It has been over a year since the Throne Speech and since the Government announced that it was to go ahead with it. It is an important step forward. It is something that must happen and should have happened a long time ago. If we are to be serious participants in space, we must get our act together. We must be co-ordinated. There must be a Canadian space agency to pull the threads together and to do some over-all co-ordination.

However, the Government chose not to take the occasion of the committee's report to announce that it was going ahead with the space agency, not to mention where it would be located. I think it missed an opportunity there. I call upon the Government to screw up its courage, to take its fate in its hands, and to announce that there will be a Canadian space agency. Obviously it will have to announce at the same time where it will be located. However, wherever it decides that it will be, it will be a political decision for the Government to make. It is the Government, and it must make that decision.

What I am pointing out today is the important necessity of coming forward with that decision if Canada is to be a serious participant in the space program.

Other recommendations were made by the committee, but I have referred to the main ones. I want to conclude by indicating that it is very important for the Government to clarify that there will not be any military use of the space station if we are to become involved with it. It should come forward and say that it will immediately establish the Canadian space agency.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, in the course of his remarks the Hon. Member alluded to the difficult decision which the Government must make to situate the space agency. Over the last few months we have been told by several Ministers that the decision was forthcoming one day, that it would be coming forward within the next few weeks, or that the decision was imminent. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Mazankowski) told us in the House that all the documentation and research had been available to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and that it would be a political decision on his part.

Being from Ottawa—Vanier, being from the National Capital, the Hon. Member will know that I feel strongly about the nerve centre of that agency and that it should be close to the decision-making process, that is, close to Cabinet, close to Ottawa. I would like to see it in the national capital area.

Since the Hon. Member is very well informed on the subject, I would like to ask him whether he would share some views with us. There has been debate in Montreal and in Ottawa, and I am sure members of the committee had a chance to discuss where they would like to see it located. I should like to ask him if the committee made a recommendation to Cabinet on where the agency should be situated, that is, the headquarters of the agency.

We have heard that maybe it is on, maybe it is off, maybe the decision is forthcoming, maybe it is not forthcoming, maybe Montreal, maybe Ottawa, maybe half way between Montreal and Ottawa for all I know. The other day they announced a space garage, that the money is to go into building a space garage. Maybe the agency will be in a space garage somewhere between Ottawa and Montreal. It is getting a little tiring for the workers and their families who depend upon that decision. I am just wondering whether the committee discussed the issue, and if not why it did not do so. It would help the Government to make a decision.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I thought the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) was a friend of mine. It is at times like this that you learn who your friends are, Mr. Speaker.

The committee discussed it, yes. It heard extensive representations on the part of both Montreal and Ottawa. We decided very clearly and unequivocally—there was no question about it—that it could not go in Goose Bay. We came to that absolute conclusion. However, apart from that option there were other options open.

Obviously there were arguments on the part of Montreal, because that is where a lot of the firms are and where a lot of the work is carried out. Edmonton was peripherally considered, as a matter of fact as an adjunct to the mall, recognizing the kind of technology which is going on in submarine warfare in the West Edmonton Mall. It was a clear indication of the eminence of that city in science and technology, but it had a peripheral kind of influence.

Clearly Montreal had an argument to make because of the firms located there and because of the kinds of activities in the area of high level and very excellent research that have gone on there.

However, Ottawa is the capital of the country, whether or not we like it. It is the capital of Canada and headquarters of many national organizations and agencies are located here. The point was made, of course, that it was not necessary to have access to a great deal of technological competence for the agency, in that the agency was an administrative arm. In theory we could have it anywhere—Goose Bay, Edmonton, or even Ottawa. Ottawa qualifies from that point of view, even though it is not the leading edge of the research industry in this particular area.

The bottom line is that the committee made no recommendation to the Government on location, but it made a very strong recommendation that there should in fact be a space agency and that it should be here and now.

Mr. Tupper: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) for raising this resolution this morning and for priorizing in the House a matter of imminent importance to Canada. It deals with science and technology, and in the sense Canada's future involvement in space is paramount for all of us. I think it is appropriate that we should be discussing the matter this morning. I notice that the Hon. Member's remarks, in review, related to the space station, space science, and to the space agency.

A few days ago I was delighted in the House when the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) came out in support of the space agency being located in the national capital area. We have been waiting a long time to hear a voice from the Liberal Party on where the agency should be located.

I know the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador is the science critic for the Party, and he does an excellent job. He is really a splendid colleague to be associated with in the whole science forum. However, I must put the following to him this morning so that we put the matter to rest.

About 10 days ago his Leader announced in the City of Montreal that the Liberal Party in fact favoured the space agency going to Montreal, and I believe it was last week that we also heard from the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier in the House. I have to put this question to my friend for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador. In the Liberal caucus is he arguing that the national capital have the space agency or does he support his leader in this regard? I want to make it absolutely clear this morning across the land that in this House and in my own caucus I support the space agency being in the national capital.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I am finding more friends all the time in this Chamber. I did not know I had so many.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rompkey: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is an outstanding Member of Parliament. He has looked after the wishes and the interests of his constituents for years. As evidence of that, he is sitting in this Chamber as one of the longest serving Members of Parliament. He has been looking after his constituents' interests consistently on this issue and on others, but on this issue for the past several years. He is doing his job as he should and he is doing it well.

I appreciate my colleague's words and I return them. He was an excellent chairman of the committee and I was sorry to lose him. During the whole course of the hearings here I was an English major trying to think about science and technology with no adequate background at all and I relied very heavily on the kind of scientific background we had on that committee. I have to say to my colleague that he is very unequivocal today. He is making a very strong pitch and staking out his ground. As chairman of the committee he certainly did not advocate that the committee take that position or stake out that ground.

The position the committee took was to make no recommendation to the Government on location. It is important that Canada have a space agency. We must and should have one and we should have it now. But the committee, including the Hon. Member, made no recommendation to the Government as to where the agency should be located. That is a political decision for the Government to take. The Conservatives wanted to be in Government. They are in Government and they are stuck with it. Joey Smallwood used to say that the benefits of being in Government are much greater than the benefits of being in Opposition. One of the benefits of being in Government is taking decisions. I call on the Government now to take the decision on the location of the space agency.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate. The Hon. Minister of State for Science and Technology.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, as you know this year Canada celebrates its twenty-fifth anniversary of involvement in space. This debate this morning is most timely because critical decisions have to be made. I too want to join in expressing my appreciation to the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) for taking the initiative to move concurrence in the report which the standing committee of the House of Commons has tabled.

Let me point out how important it is that we have for the first time in Canadian history a Standing Committee on Science, Research and Technology. I thank the committee for its work.

This debate without doubt will provide us with additional information needed to take Canada forward into the 21st century and to identify the role the new frontier of space will play in this journey. I must say I did enjoy, as I always do, the intellectual gymnastics among Members of the Official Opposition, some of whom are in favour of a space agency in Montreal, while others are in favour of the space agency being in Ottawa. As usual, the Official Opposition is in favour of the people.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) announced last week that his Party will support the Montreal location and the Hon. Member in the House this morning from Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) says he is strongly in favour of an Ottawa location. As I pointed out, I will take this useful advise into consideration before announcing the location of the space agency which we think has to be in the best interests of the over-all Canadian space program.

As I said, we celebrate 25 years involvement in space. It was on September 29, 1962 when Canada positioned itself as the third nation in the world next to the United States and the Soviet Union in space on a new frontier with the launch of Alouette I, a research satellite. That was followed by a second Alouette satellite. The Alouette series was followed by the ISIS series, another research satellite and then the launch of the Anik A series early in the 1970s. In 1976 we had the Hermes satellite which really paved way for the next Anik series of satellites. There were three more, all of which were in the communications area.

We were not only the third nation to establish a presence in space but the very first to establish and position a geostationary communications satellite for commercial purposes.

The success did not end there, Mr. Speaker. As you know we assumed a certain leadership role in the development of space robotics. We built the Canadarm which was launched with such incredible success as part of the shuttle system. It is our intention to build on this technology.

We co-operated with the United States, France and the Soviet Union in the so-called SARSAT cosmos series of satellites which are intended for search and rescue. These satellites have saved literally hundreds of lives since first being deployed. Now, of course, we are developing and deploying the next Anik series, Anik E. What a proud record for a nation our size. We are also in a prominent position having earned prestige and respect as a result of our initiatives in these areas.

It was natural for us when we assumed our mandate in 1984 to build on the record of those who were far-sighted and visionary in 1962, to move Canada toward the next generation of communications facilities and move closer toward what some people call mankind's last frontier.

In May of last year we announced our comprehensive space program. We identified the challenges that lay ahead and also the opportunities. Our comprehensive space program which is the topic of the committee's report is predicated on a number of very basic principles. The first is that the program has to be designed in a way which is sensitive to Canadian needs. We in Canada have always been fascinated with the need to bridge distance and to communicate with one another. We have built communications and transportation infrastructures and we have become the best in the world in communications technology. It was for that reason that we moved into space with these technologies to keep pace with the trends and developments taking place. We assumed and maintained an important leadership role in this area.

It is also important to practise responsible custodianship of the vast territory over which we claim sovereignty and the resources we have inherited. Here too we have used the new technologies to improve our practices. That is why we have used the Radarsat program.

The next generation of remote sensing is so important to us because it will do all of the things the Hon. Member outlined it would do. It will permit us to improve the control of our sovereignty over our resources, to have proper forecasting of weather for crops and to have ice surveillance on the oceans. Who knows, I am as visionary as my hon. friend is about what the Radarsat program and future research might develop. For instance, many people have the idea of the transparent sea, and it is hard to imagine what that would mean to the management of our ocean resources and fisheries. As well, the military implications of this are really quite exciting. All of these things must be included in a comprehensive program.

Second, like all of our science and technology initiatives, the space program had to be designed to overcome some of our historic problems. One of these historic problems is our dependence on traditional resource industries. Our space program had to be designed to help us revitalize our resource industries and use the new technologies available to make them more efficient and productive and to add greater value to the products that are delivered.

There is the historic problem of regional disparity. The space program had to be designed to deliver benefits to all regions of the country in a fair and equitable manner.

The third major principle upon which the program is built is the commercialization of our space-related products, activities and research. As important as it is for our prestige, it is not good enough to simply fly our flag in space. It was a source of pride to all of us to see the Canadian flag printed prominently on the Canadarm every time the shuttle took off. However, it is even more important that the technology that is developed for space and the research that is done find quick and efficient diffusion into applications for more conventional uses.

The remote manipulation technology which underlies the advanced robotic system that is the Canadarm is equally applicable underground in mines, under the oceans and inside nuclear reactors, wherever there is hazard to human presence. Already we have seen the application of this technology in those areas. It is important that that technology is quickly diffused and commercialized.

The fourth principle is international co-operation. We will continue to put a very strong emphasis on that. As Hon. Members would readily understand, we are not able, with the limited resources we would have, to develop by ourselves a system such as the launch system or the space transportation systems that underlie the shuttle technology. We will continue to rely on the co-operation of other countries. In fact, even the most powerful of nations in the world finds that to be very important now.

There is more and more international co-operation in space as we develop and contemplate new and exciting prospects. This we have learned to exploit in a peaceful way. Of course, that is always the underlying principle of Canadian participation in international efforts as we exploit the benefits of space.

Finally, the program had to be designed to inspire young Canadians and future generations of Canadians to take up science and technology-oriented careers to help us through the space program and provide us with the exciting benefits that flow from it. Science and technology must be made an important element of our culture.

We think that our space program meets all of these principles it was designed to meet. The space station is an example of this. The Hon. Member made reference to it in his remarks as being one of the items with which the committee had to deal. The space station program is a civilian program for peaceful purposes and 13 European countries, Japan, the United States and Canada are partners in it. That gives Hon. Members an indication of how exciting this project is. These countries will all co-operate in common facilities at the station and will work together in a peaceful way to exploit the new technologies that will flow from that enterprise.

There is no doubt in anyone's mind, and the committee came to that conclusion, that the space station will perhaps be the single largest repository of new technologies and ideas that will be generated in the early part of the next century. It is critically important. Yes, it is important to us that the concept on which the invitation to Canada was based is maintained. It is important that it remain a civilian and peaceful exercise. We shall not have it any other way. I was in Europe a month ago and found that Switzerland, Sweden and the other European countries will not have it any other way, nor will the United States have it any other way. We have this assurance and I can further assure the Hon. Member that the MOU that has now been negotiated will provide additional safeguards to ensure that our strong position in this area is respected. I was in Washington last week and I am in a position to provide Cabinet with some recommendations on that which it would have to consider.

Our space program is designed to improve our communications infrastructure and custodial practices over our natural resources. The space station is perhaps the most adventurous of the three main components of the space program and is designed for the purposes I have stated. The program will provide many, many more future-oriented jobs in all regions of the country.

The prime contractor, Spar, has been relied on in the past to act as the chosen instrument of Canada in a private-sector way. It has now rearranged its corporate structure to include companies in all regions of the country in the space program. MacDonald Dettwiler in Vancouver, British Columbia, will be the partner for British Columbia. SED Systems of Saskatoon will be the partner for the Prairies. The IMP group in Halifax will be the partner in the maritime provinces, and of course, CAE of Montreal which has built all the simulator systems for the various projects in the past will be the Quebec component of the new private-sector space consortium, and information will be exchanged. The program will deliver a balanced regional presence throughout the country.

Already the space-related private sector is one of the fastest growing sectors in the country. Already 3,500 Canadians work directly in the space-related industry and the industry has in the last few years experienced a rather spectacular growth factor.

I am pleased with the work that has been done by the committee. It produced an excellent report. Again, I thank the Hon. Member for bringing it before the House. We have a sort of mutual admiration society. The committee did endorse what we proposed and committed to do, though there were some minor concerns expressed. I think those concerns were allayed in the Government's response to the committee report. The committee produced an excellent report in which it expressed strong support for the federal Government's objectives in space—to build on Canada's expertise in space, to maintain Canada's precision and international co-operation, to ensure that maximum economic and social benefits are obtained from the applications of space technology, and to ensure that Canada maintains a position of excellence in the world-wide scientific exploration of space.

The committee endorsed the principle of a balanced and co-ordinated program—a balanced a program in terms of funding between the various components and in terms of the importance ascribed to space technology as compared with other science and technology initiatives; a balance between pure research and applied research; a balance of the various components of the program.

The space program has additional components. There is the space science program and the astronaut program. This must all be kept in proper balance in order to ensure that at the right time we will have sufficient highly-qualified personnel to take advantage of the benefits which we expect to flow from the program. The regional balance and international balance of which I spoke is important.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, we are the only country outside Europe to be a member of the European Space Agency. That gives an indication that we do not intend to tie all our efforts to the United States. We have been recognized as good partners with the Swedes and even the Soviet Union. Of course, we maintain our membership in the European Space Agency to ensure that the products which will result from the research and development that is undertaken finds application and commercial use in other parts of the world as well.

There must be a proper balance between research and the transfer of technology of which I have spoken. There must be co-ordination between the various departments of government. The Department of Communications, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and the Departments of Forestry, Fishery, and Agriculture all have an important stake in the benefits which can be delivered through space-related activities. The program must be balanced with the fluid international trends which we experience every day.

That is why the Government has responded in such a positive fashion to the committee's report. The report has raised some concerns about the balance of spending for space science and the transfer of technology to the space user program. I agree with those concerns. I can assure the committee, as I have to their report, that in the time leading up to the turn of the century the balance they have suggested may well be achieved.

The committee suggested that another $200 million a year should be put into the program to help us commit to the Radarsat program. As the Hon. Member has already stated, in June of this year we announced the Radarsat program. Of course, the program still depends on our partners in that program, the United Kingdom and the United States, being able to mount the necessary commitment and provide the resources which they would be expected to contribute. My friend has pointed out the importance of the Radarsat program to the oceans. As I said, I share his enthusiasm.

Our space effort in the past has earned us recognition and prestige throughout the world. It is a source of pride for all Canadians as they travel throughout the world to be told how much we are recognized and appreciated for our work in this critical area. It has helped us turn adversity into opportunity. I believe that whenever Canadians learn to do that, whenever we commit ourselves to building on our strengths and bridging the obstacles presented by our vast regions and intemperate climes, we will become the best in the world. Our space program has shown that. Our program for the future will keep us in the fast current which is sweeping mankind toward a new frontier and a new age.

I again thank the committee for its excellent work and the Member for bringing this matter to the attention of the House today.

Mr. Greenaway: Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the Minister on his reply to the committee report. I, too, found the report very interesting. It proves the worth of the efforts of myself and other Members for so many years to get a full committee assigned to research and development. The report deals mainly with the space agency and that line of research and development.

Would the Minister comment on a problem which we have faced for years in Canada, that being that we cannot seem to produce enough qualified researchers in almost any field? We know that we cannot solve our R and D problems by throwing money at them because we do not have the personpower to handle the modern day problems which we are trying to tackle with regard to R and D. Could the Minister comment on what the Government is doing to try to remedy the age old problem of graduating more masters and Ph.D.s in various disciplines in Canada?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Cariboo-Chilcotin raises a very important issue which immediately jumped out at us as we considered the longer term future of science and technology in Canada. We discovered that the pressures were so great and the challenges so immense that it will literally require a fundamental restructuring of many of our institutions and programs which are designed to keep us in the fast current.

We discovered that our educational system, not only the university system but the high schools and even the primary schools, are not properly orientated toward the new age which is now beginning—the information society, the technological revolution. It is perhaps partly a cultural problem which is providing us with the greatest obstacles in this area. There are not enough women in the natural sciences and engineering. Fifty per cent of the population is shut out. We looked into the high schools and primary schools and found that around grade eight there is a cultural barrier keeping women from entering these areas. These barriers must be broken down and bridged.

The first major thrust in our innovation program, apart from the space program, is public awareness and culture building. We take that very seriously. As you know, we had a national forum on post-secondary education. We now have councils of Ministers under the new concept of co-operative federalism which are addressing themselves, on a priority basis, to these critical issues. The Hon. Member is quite right that unless we do we shall not be able to respond properly to the challenges and opportunities which exist.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, in October of 1986 the Government announced its intention to create the space agency by legislation. Is it still intended that legislation will be brought forward? When will that legislation come forward? Why have the delays now gone on for some 14 months? Why has the Government undertaken such lengthy delays? Can the Minister tell us where the headquarters of the space agency will be? If not, when will that decision be announced?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I assume that the NDP now wants to get into this debate and give me advice on where the agency should be located.

• (1220)

Yes, we have announced that there is a need now as we put more and more of our assets into space and into space programs. Both Opposition Parties agree that this is the proper way to proceed. It will be important for us to develop a central agency to better manage and co-ordinate our activities, not just domestically with the provinces, who have an important role to play, but to manage our international obligations under the treaties we have.

There will be an agency. It will be established with legislation.

The question about when it will be established is asked every day. I can tell the Hon. Member that I was asked that question the day before yesterday, and I was asked yesterday. I can tell him that today I am a day closer than I was yesterday and two days closer than I was two days ago. I cannot tell him when.

As far as the location is concerned, it will be in the place best suited to strengthen our space program. It may well be in Chetwynd, British Columbia, which would be an excellent place, or Montreal, or Ottawa. I can tell the Hon. Member that it will be some place, but it is not the most critical decision we have to make in the next two or three weeks in terms of the space program.

Mr. Tupper: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the Minister and the Government have endorsed this very valuable report. The committee made 24 recommendations and, as I recall, the Government accepted 21 or 22 of those recommendations as presented. I believe that is a rather remarkable achievement.

The two committee recommendations which the Government did not accept include the area of space science, on which the Minister commented this morning. The other dealt with another aspect of the space agency.

I want to put a question to the Minister concerning that aspect. There was unanimous advice across the country that the space agency should be established. However, the committee received advice that the space agency, as the administrative body, ought to have research laboratories in its own jurisdiction so that the agency would have at its elbow expert opinion for such things as granting contracts, directing research and so on. That was recommendation No. 13 of the report, which stated that the agency should have under its jurisdiction all of the federal Government laboratories involving space or space science.

The Minister has accepted part of that recommendation in the sense that the agency should have some laboratories under its surveillance, but maintained the caveat that there should be some departmental activity. Would he expand on that recommendation No. 13 and state which labs he would see coming to the agency and which labs he would see staying in the departments? I hope that is not a premature question.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, that is perhaps one of the reasons why there has been somewhat of a delay in putting the agency in place. As I said earlier, we want to be absolutely sure that the program is properly balanced and co-ordinated.

We want to be sure that the line departments, such as the Department of Communications particularly, and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, will be in a position to continue their critical role in research and development in the areas for which they are responsible and to serve them in the best and most efficient way.

There is no doubt that such research and scientific work that goes on in these departments will have some implication in space. Therefore, the question is whether one transfers it all to the agencies or establishes the agency in a way that helps to co-ordinate the various roles of these departments. We opted for the latter.

Not all of the laboratories and basic research facilities will be transferred to the agency, but it will be strong enough in terms of its capability to play this co-ordinating role, to oversee contracts and develop a strong scientific base on which we launch our major projects.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have a short comment and question for the Minister. The NDP's position as to whether it should be in Montreal or Ottawa reminds me of the saying, "If you ask some of their friends, they say it should be in Ottawa. If you ask other friends, they say it should be in Montreal". When we asked the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) where it should be, he said, "With my friends". No one knows exactly where it should be because they have not been very clear on that issue.

The Minister said that 13 European countries and Japan would participate with Canada in the space program. Of the 13 European countries and Japan who have given their undertaking, how many of those would have the space station in the capital of the country, and how many have their space agency headquarters outside the national capital of the country?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I can give the Hon. Member the answer right now. The 13 European countries that are participating with the space agency enterprise are members of the European Space Agency. That agency has its headquarters in Paris, which I just visited recently. It is not the capital of Europe.

Not all the 13 countries have a space agency. Therefore, it is not very helpful to use Europe as an example. It is not helpful to listen to the Liberals because they are in both camps, and the New Democratic Party has not stated any position at all. I guess it is up to me and my colleagues to eventually decide the best situation for Canada.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, during the course of his remarks the Minister said that we have a commitment from the Americans that there will be no military use of the space station. He went on to say that if there ever was a military use, we will get our money back. I suggest that it is something like telling the Trojans that we will help them build their horse as long as they make a commitment not to use it for military purposes, and if they do, we want our money back. The point is that it will be too late to get the money back. The money back guarantee at that point is certainly not very effective.

How can the Minister have a commitment not to participate in military use of the space station and at the same time have a money back guarantee if they do? Does that not reflect equivocation, doubt and uncertainty? When is a decision going to be made one way or the other; yes it is going to be military or, no, it is not? When is there going to be a clear and unequivocal position on that?

With respect to the space agency, is it not true that NRC is going to be the headquarters of the space agency? Does it not have it now and is it not going to keep it? Has not the decision in fact already been made? And is the game that is going on now not verbal pyrotechnics, but no more than that?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is very imaginative and generous in interpreting what I said. I did not say that we will walk away and get our money back, "if". I share this information with the Hon. Member. The fact is I was in Washington last week to look at the text which had been negotiated and to remove a couple of minor irritants that had to be discussed at a higher level. The military aspect has not changed from the time the President and our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) agreed to co-operate with this enterprise. Yes, some concern has been expressed by the defense department in the United States, something which was all very public, that a large expenditure such as that should produce some benefits for the military. Our European partners have raised some concerns, as did we. How do we interpret this concept of international law?

The problem we are facing right now, and I share it with the Hon. Member, is that we will provide a mission critical element to the enterprise because we will be the first on site. Our equipment will literally assembly the station and then service the various elements of the station. So the contribution the Europeans and Japanese are making are different from ours. It is, therefore, necessary, if we are to keep to the timetable of the launch of 1994, that we make our commitment at this particular time to move into Phase C and Phase D of the enterprise. So we now want to go into a phase where we actually go into design and manufacture of the various components. The Americans insisted, "We cannot wait for the Europeans. They have more time than you have.

We have to have a decision now". What I think the Cabinet will be considering will be a participation in line with the invitation. It will be a civilian peaceful exercise. We have built into this concept of a dispute mechanism, which has been bandied around and which is now part of the free trade deal, and we have built certain safeguards into the MOU, which I will be recommending to Cabinet, that would permit us in the event—never mind militarization, which would be one aspect—that we do not like the management regime agreed to by the Europeans and Japanese, if we do not like any aspects of this thing later on, to perhaps sell our assets to the other partners. It may well be a situation where we get this thing up there and the cost becomes so horrendous we can no longer participate. At that point we would like to be in a position to say, "Look, this is our contribution. Here are the drawings. Would you kindly compensate us? We can no longer participate in the enterprise". I think it is a major accomplishment to have these safeguards built in because our main objective was to safeguard and protect all the elements on which our comprehensive space program is based and, in the main, our Canadian interest. I think the recommendations I will be making to Cabinet will do all of that.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have been asked to participate in this debate as a former science critic for my Party. I left that position prior to the creation of the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology, although I supported its creation. I think, in the context of parliamentary reform, it is very useful to see that the committee is taking its responsibilities seriously and has come up with a report which has a good deal of substance and demonstrates why we should have had such a committee a very long time ago.

Unfortunately, our science critics are absent because they did not anticipate that this debate would take place today. I would have to say to my colleagues in the Chamber that in a week when we were meant to be debating free trade, I find this debate on space policy helpful, but not as relevant as it should be. I, for one, regret that we have not begun this week, as we were told by the Government we would, to deal with the free trade accord which was made public only last Friday and which apparently the Government is still determined to sign in one week of parliamentary time from now, that is, two weeks after we adjourn on Friday.

I do want to speak about a number of the elements in this report. I commend the committee for the fact that some of its criticisms revealed it really did take issue with a number of the priorities put forward by the Government with respect to its science program, in particular, the committee's emphasis on the need for the remote sensing program, the Radarsat program, to go forward as a priority, and its criticism of the Government which is quite blunt. The committee feels that the 1986 space plan fails to strike an appropriate balance, that Radarsat should have the highest priority of the three major programs, that is, the space program and space station and communications, because Radarsat best fulfils the stated objectives of Canada's space program.

It cannot be much clearer than that, particularly as we know how to read between the lines. This was a committee which had a majority of members of the Government, yet even the government Members had grave misgivings about the degree to which we are putting all of our eggs into one basket, namely, the space station, rather than other areas of space science and research and development.

I will put this in some context by first pointing out that the Government's commitment to establish a space agency was announced in October, 1986, at the time of the Throne Speech. Second, I cannot recall the exact date when Canada made the commitment to the space station, but I believe that commitment was made during the period up until June of 1985, because that is when I ceased being the science critic for my Party, and I can recall commenting on it at that time. So we are now looking at a decision which is some three years old. Yet, a great deal has happened since that time, which I think confirms some misgivings that many people have had about the degree to which we are putting so much of our emphasis into this particular project.

We have seen since then a continuing series of cut-backs in the National Research Council made by the same Government that says "Is it not wonderful what we are doing in space?" It is kind of a bread and circus as type of approach in which the Government tells us it is going to do great things in space but at the same time it savagely attacks the National Research Council. It has totally failed to put into place a program to ensure that Canada achieves the levels of spending on research and development that the Conservatives promised during the course of the 1984 election campaign. We have seen no meaningful means of that taking place. We have seen instead a series of programs that have also had the effect of cutting back federal funding to the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council and other research councils, which have been told to go with their begging bowl and get money from the private sector to make up for what Government is not prepared to come up with.

As I said a moment ago, the key recommendation in the report, it seems to me, is the finding of the committee that balance is lacking in terms of the Government's program. Second, what I think is key is the committee's concern about the military use of the space station and this rather ineffectual announcement that Canada will take away its chips if it finds that somehow the United States has taken the space station and used it for military purposes, as clearly the hawks in the Pentagon would like to do, despite any agreements having been made right now. Third, there is the whole question of the overrun and the degree to which that could very quickly gobble up any amount of money in Canada's space budget, and the Government's failure to come to grips squarely with that particular issue and its inadequate response in the November 27 response to the committee whose report, of course, had been tabled some six months earlier. I note that because in the next five years space station spending will take up more than 25 per cent of the budget according to the figures the Government has made public. But the 20-year commitment makes the situation look a good deal more radical than that, and the 15-year commitment to the turn of the century.

In that period of time it is estimated that the space station will consume some $697 million of federal funding in Canada. Radarsat is estimated to cost approximately $236 million, according to the committee's own figures; the mobile satellite, the communications satellite program will cost $151 million; the European Space Agency will cost $122 million; the astronaut program will cost $55 million; space science in general will cost an additional $70 million on top of what is already being spent. All those figures added together total approximately $1.3 billion which is being committed by the Government to space science over the course of the next 15 years.

What is interesting and disturbing is that the American estimates for the space station have gone completely off the rails. Where they stated it would cost $8 billion, they are now stating it will cost $14 billion. I suspect, after the tragic failure of the Challenger program a year or so ago, the deaths of the astronauts involved at that time, the necessity to put the space shuttle program on hold, and the delays that is having for the space program in general, that we will see further costly delays and cost overruns in the American space program.

If one takes the increase from $8 billion to $14 billion and applies that to Canada, we are talking about an increase in the cost of the Canadian element of the space station from $700 million to possibly $1.3 billion. What is instructive about that is that that is equal to the total space program that has been enunciated for the course of the next 13 or 15 years. On top of that, the carrying and operating costs for Canada's participation in the space station are estimated to be a possible $30 million a year. That is more than is currently being spent on all of space science here in Canada. That, too, raises some very serious problems.

This one prestige project—the opportunity or the hope that the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle), or the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), can go and wave as the satellite goes aloft, or cut a ribbon at Cape Canaveral, or something like that—is quite profoundly distorting Canada's space program.

The committee itself found a great deal more benefit in many ways from Radarsat. The committee stated that Radarsat fulfils all the relevant objectives of the Canadian space program; that it would build and expand on Canada's expertise in remote sensing; that it would maintain Canada's position in international co-operation on the peaceful uses of space, particularly because it would be a Canadian-led project; that it would provide substantial economic and social benefits for Canadians, and not only through the sale of hardware or of expertise.

It was pointed out that much of the hardware for Radarsat would probably be located or built in Ontario and Quebec, but that the resource management data would benefit every region of the country, particularly the remote regions where resources are most often to be found. Second, Canada and Canadians as a whole would benefit from Radarsat because of its ability to reinforce Canada's claims to sovereignty in the Arctic, particularly in those areas of the Arctic which are frozen ice and not land.

It is quite clear that it is a lot cheaper and probably more effective for Canada to exercise its sovereignty by satellite in the Arctic wastes of the northern part of this country than it is to put eight or ten nuclear submarines up there at a cost of somewhere over $8 billion, the cost of a space station project in its entirety.

I recognize that in its response the Government has committed its approval to the Radarsat program, subject to the conclusion of agreements with our partners in the United Kingdom and in the United States, and that is welcome. But I note the priorization which the committee itself indicated to the Government—it is a Government-dominated committee so I suppose it could not reject totally Canada's participation in the space station. Clearly it indicated where it thought the priority should lie.

I also note the committee's concern over the possible military spin-offs from the space station program. I for one am disturbed at the inadequate response given by the Government on this particular question.

The committee stated in its recommendations that there should be agreement with the United States on the military use of the space station. When one looks at the committee's report in more detail, it specifically states, "Overt military use of the space station is unacceptable to the committee". What has the Minister got? He has an agreement in the Memorandum of Understanding which he will shortly submit to Cabinet that, if the Americans try to do something that is too overtly military in the space station, then we can ask them to buy us out. Is that not ridiculous?

In other words, we have not got the specific commitment that Canada should have sought and insisted upon, that before we participated in the space station the Americans clearly and unequivocally promise they will not use the space station as a part of the star wars program.

Scientists have told me that the star wars program is probably impossible in scientific terms. I suspect that that is probably true. Computers cannot be built for it, and it cannot be done. Nonetheless, that assurance should have come from the Americans rather than this rather awkward situation where we might get our money back if we find that we are not particularly happy with the way the Americans are using the space station. That seems to be what the Government is pursuing at the present time.

In addition, the committee indicates that experimentation dedicated to the development of weapons systems including the Strategic Defense Initiative should not be performed on the space station. What does the Government state in its response? It states that it would be inappropriate to discuss these conditions about military use in detail. However, the Government has made its position very clear with respect to the possible military use of the space station.

The Government wishes to ensure that any military use of the space station is consistent with international law, and with the treaty obligations of all participants in the space station. The Minister of State for Science and Technology is nodding, Mr. Speaker. I would like to know what are the treaty obligations.

Secretary Gorbachev and President Reagan met in a summit last week, which was welcomed by people from around the world, but on the question of the Anti-ballistic Missile Treaty which effectively governs experimentation in space that might be used for the SDI, for star wars, they went away agreeing to disagree. They simply stated that both countries would respect the treaty obligations.

It is interesting that Canada should parrot that particularly word which we know is used by the right-wing hawks in the Pentagon as a code word for saying, "We will do what we please and damn the ABM Treaty", and the Government seems to be going along with that particular interpretation.

In addition, with respect to cost overruns, the matter that I have already raised, the Government states and I quote, "The issue of dealing with cost overruns is related to the over-all issue of maintaining a balance within the Canadian space program". The Minister is certainly correct on that front. It goes on to state that, "It is not feasible for any Government to give assurances in advance that cost overruns in one project will not affect other programs". In other words, since the largest amount of money in the space program has been committed to the space station, therefore, cost overruns in that station are likely to gobble up money that should have been allocated in other areas.

I also note with a certain amount of concern that the committee recommended in recommendation no. 10 that the use of Radarsat for arms control surveillance and verification was proposed only as an alternative and not as a primary purpose of the Radarsat program, as I believe it should have been.

Perhaps the Minister's Department could have co-operated with the Department of External Affairs on this particular question, because I would like to have seen Canada, as part of our space program, find the necessary funds, perhaps $50 million or $100 million was all that might be required, in order to offer to the United Nations an international satellite program that could come under the control of the United Nations for arms control surveillance and verification. Canada would be prepared to build and offer that to the United Nations, hopefully with partners, but we would be prepared to do it on our own if partners were not forthcoming. That is not there, and I am very sorry about that.

I note that the Government's response to this particular question is that it will continue to pursue the potential applications of remote sensor technology for the verification of arms control agreements. That is all very nice, but there is no sense of commitment there.

A few months ago I turned on the television and got hooked on the reruns of the television series "Space", which I hope the Minister has also seen. It was very well done. It was based on the James Michener novel. The Minister may recall one of the very touching scenes of a young man, a high school student, in a small town somewhere in the mid-west of the United States. He became excited about space because of his exposure to a world ranked astronomer whose observatory was located near where the young man and his girlfriend lived. They eventually became very much involved in the program and were central figures in the fictional but semi-realistic presentation of Space.

The Government has given the most wishy-washy set of responses on this particular area of which I can conceive in respect of the desperate shortage of scientifically trained manpower or womanpower for Canada's space programs. The Minister's response to recommendation No. 17, which calls for a study of the training and supply of space scientists and engineers, is that the Government shares the committee's concerns in this area and has a study under way to identify future personnel requirements. The Minister says that this is a necessary precursor to any study of the training and supply of space scientists and engineers. Once a demand study is completed, the Government will decide the need for and nature of a follow-on supply study.

It is time to stop studying and to start supplying, particularly if we bear in mind that it takes something over 10 years between the time a high school graduate enters a university program and the time that the graduate is a competent and fully trained space scientist. We are talking about people from this year's graduating class who will not in fact begin to engage in an active and constructive way as fully trained space scientists until the year 1998 or thereabouts.

I know the comments with regard to that question which were made by some of the witnesses who appeared before the committee. For example, Professor Rostoker of the University of Alberta said that the lack of career positions in the space sciences over the past 15 years has led to a significant drop in the number of young people prepared to pursue a research career in that particular area. He concluded: "It is my opinion that the scientific community of space researchers in Canada is in no position to effectively participate in major new initiatives such as space station".

In my contacts with the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council I have heard exactly the same testimony again, again, and again. It is not only the Government which is at fault, it is the previous Government, the Liberals as well. They have systematically choked off post-doctorate fellowships, support for academic research, and support for the kinds of programs which would help to encourage and develop space scientists. It is this Government which stopped the Black Brant rocket experimentation in Manitoba. It is this Government which shut down one of the observatories in Algonquin Park as part of its cut-backs to the National Research Council. It is pure hypocrisy for the Government then to turn around and say that there may be a problem. If the Minister were honest about this, he would recognize that the problem exists and has existed for some substantial amount of time and should have been addressed before now.

[Translation]

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about the Space Agency. As I said in my comments to the Minister, I am very disappointed that after eighteen months, the Government has yet to establish the Space Agency and announce where its headquarters will be located. I believe the choice is now between Ottawa and Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, as a Member from the Ottawa area, I obviously support the choice of Ottawa as headquarters for the Space Agency. I realize, however, that as the centre of the aerospace industry, Montreal with its surrounding area has every reason to claim the Space Agency should be located in the Montreal area.

Mr. Speaker, when my Leader spoke at the University of Montreal not long ago, he stated in no uncertain terms that Montreal was a logical choice as headquarters for the Space Agency, since the city and surrounding area is the centre of our country's aerospace industry.

[English]

While I have supported putting the space agency headquarters here in Ottawa, I must say that that is not the primary question for me as an Ottawa Member who is concerned about research and development in all areas. I look at hundreds of positions in the National Research Council which have been shut down. I look at people with promising scientific careers who have not been taken on. I look at people who had another eight or ten years of productive scientific work ahead of them in the NRC who have been pressured into taking early retirement.

I look at that kind of tragic waste, which has been a product of the Government, and I say to myself, if I had the choice of having the space agency headquarters with 30 or 50 people in it in Ottawa, or having had a Government which dealt fairly with scientific research and development in the capital region, particularly in respect of the National Research Council, I would opt for fair treatment of the NRC. I think it is criminal what the Government has done to the National Research Council. I think it is criminal that the Government and Ministers like the present Minister have not been prepared to speak up on that particular issue and to come to the defence of the National Research Council. The NRC is to be commended for the fact that it is now stepping in to fill the gap because of the Government's inaction in terms of the location of the space agency—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

Mr. Tupper: Mr. Speaker, the report with which we are dealing in the House today and introduced by the Hon. Member for Grand Fall—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) is entitled Canada's Space Program—a Voyage to the Future. The report has been widely sought. If members of the public would like to get copies of it, they can do so by writing to the clerk of the committee.

Effectively the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) ended his presentation this morning, or his critique if I may put it that way, by dealing with the National Research Council on the one hand and the space agency on the other. That was a really noble endeavour, but as an Ottawa area Member I think it is very important that the space agency be located in the national capital area. In his comment the Hon. Member said that he—and I hope I quote him correctly—"had supported the space agency" being located in the national capital area. I have two very simple questions for him, because it is awfully important that all Ottawa area Members be unanimous on the question of where the space agency should be located.

First, does the Hon. Member support the space agency being located in the national capital area today? Second, what is the position of his Party on the location?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I realize that time is short. I said en français that I did support and do support having the space agency headquarters in the capital region. I also pointed out that my Leader, when he was speaking at the University of Montreal the other day, indicated that in fact there were many reasons why Montreal was the logical place for it to be located. This is why I spoke specifically about the degree to which the scientific community in Ottawa has been chopped by the Government.

I would cite the fact that the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper) has not resigned or broken ranks with the Government on the criminal cuts in the National Research Council. If the space station is located in Montreal by his Government, we will then be in a position where not only is Ottawa losing a space station but it has also lost an enormous amount of important scientific activity through the National Research Council. Yet, Ottawa area members of the Conservative Party have failed to prevent that from taking place.

Mr. Greenaway: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to draw to the attention of the Hon. Member that over the last three years funding to the NRC has increased by 21 per cent. I think he is leaving the impression that the budget of the NRC has been cut and that it is suffering. It is not. It is being well looked after, and I think it is a much stronger organization than it was even a year ago.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, in 1984-85 hundreds of jobs were forced to be cut within the National Research Council because of the cuts imposed by the Government. Many of those cuts were achieved by attrition. Not only were scientific careers interfered with, but a great amount of important work by the NRC was in fact cut. Those cuts have yet to be restored in terms of effective operation of the NRC.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—APPLICATION OF SALES TAX AND IMPORT DUTIES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) has done her best to deceive Canadians about the Government's trade deal with the United States with regard to bringing goods into Canada without paying duty, sales tax, or without limits on the amounts. She said in a recent speech that she had been asked if free trade meant you could bring anything you wanted back from the United States without paying duty, and the answer was yes.

The problem with this statement by the Minister is that it is simply not true according to government officials, and it is quite improper for her to mislead Canadians this way, especially those who live in border cities like Sault Ste. Marie, Canada.

The 12 per cent sales tax will still apply to imports from the United States; the $100 limit after a 48-hour visit will still apply; duties will not be reduced if the article imported is not made in the United States. The reduction in duties where they exist on U.S. manufactured goods will take place slowly over a 10-year period on many items.

The Minister and the Government should stop deceiving Canadians about the trade deal.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

PUBLIC SERVICE—INCREASED HIRING OF DISABLED PERSONS

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, for many years I have been interested in the welfare of the handicapped. While at Carleton University I urged the university on many occasions to develop the institution in such a way that it would make the entire university more accessible to the handicapped.

Last spring I introduced a Private Members' Motion in this House seeking certain tax concessions for the handicapped. That motion, regretfully, was talked out. I am pleased to note that when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) presented his White Paper on tax reform many of the proposals I made were incorporated.

Last week I particularly welcomed the announcement by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) that the federal Government will hire an additional 2,700 disabled persons over the next three years and will proceed with plans to make federal government programs and services more accessible to the handicapped. This will bring the number of disabled persons in the Public Service by 1991 to 6,900.

The Government has also approved a number of measures to enhance the Employment Equity Programs, and some $3.7 million will be provided to improve counselling services and to ensure that technical aids for the handicapped are available in the workplace.

The handicapped deserve everything with which society can provide them. This Government, sensitive to their needs and requirements, has taken a very positive step forward.

SOVEREIGNTY

CANADIAN ARCTIC—PROPOSED CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the deal to allow American ice-breakers in the Canadian Arctic will soon be signed, we are told by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). We are assured that this agreement which does not assert our sovereignty acknowledges it through the back door by giving permission to be informed by the United States—hardly the brave words and strong stand taken by the Minister in 1985 when he assured us that the policy of the Government was to exercise full sovereignty over the Arctic and that, in his words, "we will accept no substitute". Further, on March 23, 1987, we were told by the same Minister that "our sovereignty is not negotiable".

We are not reassured. We appear to have a treaty which indeed accepts a substitute for clarifying Canadian sovereignty.

The trail of broken promises is littered with questions.

Will this treaty prejudice Canada's case with the International Court should we pursue this avenue? Is this agreement a prelude to guaranteeing commercial marine traffic through the passage? What is the tie to the trade agreement? Does this mean exports of Alaskan oil to Canada negotiated in the trade agreement will be moved via the passage rather than the West Coast? Is this a case by case approval for the movement of ice-breakers or, indeed, a blanket approval?

Credibility is strained. Canadians have a right to know. I call on the Minister to bring this treaty before Parliament before it is signed. Arctic sovereignty is too crucial to be given away by benign acquiescence.

THE FAMILY

TRIBUTE TO SCHOUTEN FAMILY

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart), and myself wish to honour Mrs. Karen Schouten and her late husband Fred. Fred Schouten, 36, died suddenly of a heart attack, a mere two months after daughter Gabriel, and one day after his second wedding anniversary. For Mrs. Schouten this was a double blow.

It was the Schoutens' courageous decision to allow the birth of Gabriel even after they discovered that baby Gabriel would be born with a partial brain. Baby Gabriel was kept alive for three days and her heart was transplanted into another baby who was born with a poor heart and, in the process, brought hope and happiness to another family.

This decision was based solely on the unselfish desire to see another life take hold, and by that action Gabriel made the ultimate contribution toward another human being. The actions of this family demonstrate to the entire world just how precious life is, and they exhibited a love for life beyond expectations. It clearly shows that abortion is not the answer to malformed babies. By their unselfish action the Schoutens have left the world the true meaning of life and love.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROPOSED ALL-NEWS CHANNEL—APPOINTMENT OF JOAN DONALDSON AS DIRECTOR

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the CBC's all-news channel will begin operations next September and it promises to be an important addition to programming choices for Canadians.

According to the CBC's Chief of News and Public Affairs, the channel will have a mixture of news, weather, sports and documentaries. It will focus on regional, national and international events from a Canadian perspective, as well as including repeats of some of the most worth-while of the public affairs programs, such as The Nature of Things and The Fifth Estate.

The CBC has also announced that Joan Donaldson, a very experienced and able broadcaster, will head up the all-news channel, and she is uniquely qualified for this task. Ms. Donaldson began her career as a journalist, has taught journalism at Ryerson and the University of Western Ontario, and has worked as an editor on Radio National News. She has recently been active on a committee aimed at making CBC programming all- Canadian by 1990, and has spent the last four years in training and developing regional news.

I know my colleagues will join me in congratulating Ms. Donaldson and wishing her well in her new challenge, and in congratulating CBC on its choice of this outstanding woman as director of this new all-news Canadian service.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—SASKATCHEWAN PREMIER'S VISIT TO OSHAWA

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Grant Devine, Premier of the great Province of Saskatchewan, recently visited Oshawa, Ontario, with a delegation of business, government, and youth representatives.

Our Premier was very impressed with the city of Oshawa and what the United States investment in General Motors and other companies has done for the area. He noted that the City of Oshawa is one of the few municipalities with a surplus of $57 million, which pretty well tells all about its prosperity.

Probably the most interesting aspect of the visit was that Oshawa residents were still Canadian. There was no "yo'all" expression, no Americanism, but a retaining of Canadian culture and, above all, Canadian sovereignty.

Premier Devine even went so far as to state that he did not want more United States investments than the city of Oshawa but would settle for as much for the Province of Saskatchewan in the free trade agreement. Premier Devine thanked the people of General Motors and Durham Manufacturers Association for the royal treatment he and his delegation received.

LABOUR RELATIONS

PRINCE RUPERT GRAIN HANDLERS' STRIKE—CALL FOR APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, a proposal has been made by the National Farmers Union which could re-open the Port of Prince Rupert for grain exports. I met with Art Macklin, Vice-President of the NFU this morning, and he confirms the following: One, Mr. Justice Emmett Hall is prepared to act as a mediator in the dispute while the workers return to their jobs while mediation is in progress. Two, Henry Kancz, business representative for the grain workers Local 333, has confirmed that he is receptive to the appointment of Justice Hall and will recommend that the striking members return to work while mediation is in progress.

Since the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) and the Minister of State for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) have been aware of this proposal since Friday, I urge them to pursue this matter with vigour and appoint Mr. Justice Emmett Hall so that a resolution can be found for the workers who have been three and a half years without a contract, and get the farmers' grain moving to market.

Is it the grain companies or the Government that are holding up a resolution to this matter?

CANADA-U. S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF ONTARIO PREMIER

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am disturbed at recent comments on the weekend by critics of the Canada-U.S. trade deal. Their criticisms are completely unfounded. It is interesting that the Premiers who are against this trade deal are from the Liberal and NDP ranks. I suggest the critics are playing political football with the future prosperity of our country.

Take, for instance, the comments of the Premier of Ontario on Saturday. He stated he had not yet read the final trade text but, even without reading the pact, his mind was made up in spite of the study his own Treasurer and senior Cabinet colleague released that showed the trade deal is very good for Ontario and the Canadian economy.

The Premier has commented today that the whole deal is coal. His comments are made with an open mouth and a closed mind. I can tell him that the residents of Ontario and the Canadian people are expecting more than these uninformed statements. They are expecting intelligent debate. They want to know the facts, know of the benefits this trade deal will bring them, and not the hollow rhetoric of the Liberal Premier.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENTS—STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Government claims that it wants to talk about the trade deal but, in fact, judging by its representatives who are going across the country, if they are any indication of the calibre of the debate, it is pretty disgusting.

• (1410)

Last week there were press reports that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), the Minister sent by the Government to represent the Government's view, made comments about me and about other women. When I raised the question of surrogate parenting, the Minister said before a public meeting the following:

> No wonder her book was entitled Nobody's Baby. Apparently, our Canadian womanhood is in severe danger they'd have to creep around the country with their knees crossed if Sheila is correct that this danger—

The Minister also called himself the father of Canada's anti-pornography legislation, but said before the St. John's Board of Trade that he loves pornography himself but he wants to protect the people from it. He went on to tear after a nun who happened to speak out against the trade deal.

I would like to ask if this Minister is representing the Government. If he is not representing the Government, he should resign and get himself off the speaking circuit. If he is representing the Government, it is a disgusting, anti-woman, sexist, anti-—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member could put a question another time.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

ALBERTA—ATTRACTION OF INDUSTRY FROM MANITOBA

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, business growth and job opportunities are being snuffed out by a New Democratic Government in Manitoba. According to The Winnipeg Sun, the warm business climate in Tory Alberta is pulling Westfair Foods and 400 head office jobs away from the wintry blasts of Manitoba's New Democratic Government. A representative of Westfair is quoted as saying:

> We felt unwelcomed here, the provincial Government of Alberta wants us there, they would see us as a valuable part of their economy . . . Manitoba Government takes the attitude that if you are a certain size they may expropriate you or drive you out of the province.

The reason for this is simple. Payroll taxes are now at 2.5 per cent. There is a regressive final offer selection for labour disputes. There have been increased telephone rates, increased hydro rates, increased Auto Pact rates, and government service rates have increased by 20 per cent. When Westfair and 400 jobs go, how can this Government say it is standing up for Manitoba?

I have a solution. Industry Minister Vic Schroeder should go. No, Mr. Pawley should go. No, the New Democratic Government of Manitoba should go and call an election before the rest of Manitoba's businesses leave. He is not standing up for Manitoba. He does not know what standing up for Manitoba is.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

LOW-LEVEL RADIATION HAZARDS—RE-EVALUATION OF NUCLEAR INDUSTRY URGED

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, research reported in the press today confirms what a growing number of experts have been telling us for years, which is that the hazards from low-level radiation have been greatly underestimated. New standards for acceptable-dose risks must now been determined at roughly half the levels previously allowed.

For Canada, this means a serious reassessment of our entire nuclear industry, from mining and processing to nuclear reactors through to waste disposal. The whole atoms for peace hope may prove to have been a sad mistake as even low-level exposure can mean cancer deaths, mental impairment, and genetic deformities.

Note that I am not even talking about a meltdown, nuclear war, or a disaster on the scale of Chernobyl, but simply about low-level, long-term exposure. The people of Canada and their Governments must now re-evaluate the nuclear option against the alternatives of safe, renewable energy and the promotion of conservation. We must have the courage to ask the really tough questions, be prepared to admit we were wrong in the past, and resolve to act in the interests of the health of Canadians and our environment in the future.

INCREASE IN SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, last January 19 the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) told the House that "the 15 per cent export tax on Canadian softwood lumber being shipped to the U.S. will throw thousands of forest workers out of work, and imperil Canadian sovereignty." His Liberal colleagues agreed with him and, of course, the NDP said the same thing that day, predicting again that the sky would fall.

It is now 11 months later. Let us turn to a recent study issued by the International Woodworkers of Canada. The study says that "the massive job losses that were predicted simply have not occurred. It has had a minimal effect on production and employment. In fact, almost 900 million more board feet have been produced this year—and 600 sawmill jobs were added in British Columbia between January and September of 1987."

This is just one more example of the phoney doom and gloom the opposition Members have been spouting for three years now.

They predicted that our deficit reduction measures would cost 60,000 jobs, but we have created almost a million jobs.

They predicted that the export tax would cost hundreds of jobs, but hundreds of jobs were created. Now they are feeding us the same drivel about free trade. Once again the Progressive Conservative Government of Canada will prove the Opposition wrong.

1994 COMMONWEALTH GAMES

GOVERNMENT'S OBLIGATION TO RESPECT CRITERIA IN MATTER OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, we all know that the Winter Games will soon open in Calgary. All Francophones outside Quebec remember they almost missed out on the right to have the Games televised in their own language. The situation was caused by the fact that the Olympic Organizing Committee ignored federal language criteria when negotiating its contracts.

In the House, I asked the Minister of Communications at the time to take steps to ensure there would be no recurrence of this kind of situation. He replied that he agreed and that my suggestion was an excellent one.

Since the 1994 Commonwealth Games have just been awarded to Victoria and the Government has decided to investigate this choice, I want to take this opportunity to ask the Government to lay down firm guidelines to ensure that the Commonwealth Games will be held with due respect for Canada's linguistic duality, in terms of public facilities, national advertising, contract negotiations, and the broadcasting and televising of the Victoria Games.

MODIFIED ACCRUAL ACCOUNTING—EFFECT ON FARMERS

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, the sensitivity of the Government to western agriculture is well known. A $1-billion special grains payment, a capital gains tax exemption, a $200-million annual farm fuel tax rebate, and a $1.4-billion western grain stabilization payment in the past year are just a few examples of a Government that is committed to prairie farmers.

There is, however, one current issue that has caused some concern to farmers across Saskatchewan. It is the issue of modified accrual accounting as contained in the recent White Paper on tax reform. Most farmers agree that there should be a clearer definition of a real or bona fide farmer. There is also broad agreement that the profitability requirement should be re-examined as the White Paper undertakes to do. However, it is not the best time to suggest a new and different accounting formula during this period of depressed grain prices and uncertainty in the farm community. After giving this matter a great deal of thought, I would ask that the Government reconsider the proposal to bring in modified accrual accounting.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ANNOUNCED INTENTION TO SELL TELEPHONE COMPANY SUBSIDIARIES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, Canadian National has announced its intention to sell off two of its telephone subsidiaries, Terra Nova Tel in Newfoundland, and NorthwesTel in the Northwest Territories and Yukon. This is to be done in order to reduce its outstanding $3.2 billion debt.

Important to the telephone subscribers in the service areas is CN's commitment that there will be no decrease in levels of service or increase in tariffs charged. Employees are to be protected in that any new owner will be required to honour existing labour agreements and pension benefits.

NorthwesTel ought to be sold to private investors and certainly not to a provincial Crown corporation. It would be improper for Alberta Government Telephones, for example, to own and operate a telephone system outside the Province of Alberta.

If privatization is handled correctly, it could result in improved service and lower prices to telephone users in both the Northwest Territories and Yukon.

TRADE

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY DEBATE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I have been expressing concern for months that the Government would attempt to ram the final text of the Prime Minister's trade deal between Canada and the United States through Parliament without giving the Canadian people the proper time to review, investigate, and study the deal, and without giving the House a proper opportunity to debate it. The Prime Minister has always told me that this would not be the case. He knows that the House will apparently adjourn in four days and that, some time in the next four days, he wants the House to debate the issue in a meaningful way. This is an issue that is fundamental to the style of Canada in which many of us believe, and is certainly fundamental to Canada's future.

Will the Prime Minister give me an assurance today, and I believe that his credibility and his word are on the line, that he is prepared to tell the people of Canada that there will be time for a full public review of this deal through committee hearings and a full, meaningful debate in the House of Commons before he signs the deal?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is patient I am sure that he will see, on the Order Paper tomorrow morning, a resolution which will allow Parliament to debate this very important issue. I hope we will have the support of the Opposition in bringing the debate forward tomorrow in order that we can have a good debate this week.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver—Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I was hoping for a reaffirmation of the commitment of the Prime Minister that he would allow the people of this country sufficient opportunity to review the text and examine how it affects their futures, their jobs, their professions, and their businesses, and allow the House of Commons sufficient time to review the matter properly.

CONTROL OF RESOURCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The Prime Minister claimed on the weekend that people already had a good understanding of this matter. Well, I would like to know what his understanding is of the instruments of this Agreement. Could the Prime Minister explain why, under Sections 408, 409, 903, 904, Canada's provinces are deprived of their jurisdiction over their own energy resources? Can he explain why we, as Canadians, can no longer cut energy exports to the United States if there is a shortage or other crisis? And can he explain why these rules not only apply to energy but to all our nonrenewable resources, including water?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has made some very serious factual errors. There is nothing in the document that would deprive the provinces of their jurisdiction in the energy sector. There is nothing in the document that would undermine the provincial or federal governments' authority to reduce energy exports. In fact, these provisions are to become effective pursuant to an international agreement signed thirteen years ago by the previous Government. The Leader of the Opposition has raised a number of points. I may draw his attention to the fact that his points were dealt with very satisfactorily this morning in the newspaper Le Devoir, where the reference is to an historic challenge, and the conclusion "that the Government was right and that this will increasingly be borne out by events. Le Devoir, like most Quebecers, endorses the Free Trade Agreement as being in the best interests of Quebecers and Canadians.

EFFECT ON REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): With respect, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the Prime Minister has read the deal he intends to sign. He talks about the international energy agreement which applies to stocks. This agreement applies to all resources, renewable and non-renewable, not only processed but in the ground. It is the most far-reaching agreement any country has ever signed. We have really made ourselves a resource reservoir for the United States by virtue of this agreement.

The Prime Minister has repeatedly promised the country that regional development would not be covered by this agreement. Yet nowhere in the text is there a specific exemption in favour of regional development. Indeed, precisely the opposite has happened.

I want to refer the Prime Minister to page 115 of his deal where it says that the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, PFRA; the Agriculture and Rural Development Act, ARDA; and the Economic and Rural Development Agreements, ERDA; are defined as subsidies within the meaning of the agreement.

They are, therefore, covered within the future scope of the agreement although the Prime Minister said they would not be.

Why does the final text not reflect the Prime Minister's assurances given to the less favoured regions of Canada that regional development would not be touched? Why did the Prime Minister not protect the regions of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I say in English that which I just had occasion to say in French. My hon. friend's preface is loaded with flaws and inaccuracies which thwart any truth at all in the subsequent question which he tries to put forward.

He asks me whether I read the deal before I signed it. I read it all right. He did not read it before he announced he was going to tear it up. There is the fundamental difference.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the important question of regional development was very carefully considered by the negotiators and by the Government throughout. It has been totally protected—

Some Hon. Members: Where?

Mr. Mulroney: —as an instrument of economic growth in Canada—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Your nose is growing.

Mr. Mulroney: —which is one of the reasons 19 associations endorsed the Free Trade Agreement this morning as being profoundly in Canada's national interest. They include the Automotive Industries Association, the Canadian Association of Equipment Distributors, the Canadian Agricultural Policy Alliance, the Canadian Chemical Producers Association, the Canadian Construction Association, the Canadian Export Association, the Mining Association of Canada, the Retail Council of Canada, the Tourism Industries Association of Canada, and the Trust Companies Association of Canada—everybody except the Liberal Party of Canada.

FISHERIES

SHELLFISH HEALTH WARNING—EFFECT ON LOBSTER AND SHRIMP INDUSTRIES

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Last Friday the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Minister of National Health and Welfare issued a joint press release alerting Canadians not to consume shellfish from Atlantic Canada. "Shellfish" means lobsters, crabs, and shrimp—all crustaceans, as well as molluscs, which include mussels, oysters, and quahogs.

My understanding is that the release was withdrawn after a few hours, but not before terrible damage had been done to the industry, especially the lobster and shrimp industries.

Why did the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans allow his name to appear on that erroneous press release which was so damaging to the fishing industry? Does the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans not know the difference between a scallop and a mussel, or a mussel and a quahog?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the gentleman and the House must recognize that on Friday—and I have given the times when the information came to me—Canadians had been hospitalized. One Canadian had died because of the toxins. Evidence showed that the problem was no longer geographically contained. In addition, for the first time we had a clear indication that species other than mussels were involved.

I therefore took a health decision. In fact the Member's Leader, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, said in the House on December 8 that public health must always be a priority. It was on the basis of that priority that the decision was taken.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, health must always be a priority but that erroneous press release included lobster, shrimp, and other products which had nothing to do with the problems which were at hand.

REQUEST FOR RESIGNATIONS OF TWO MINISTERS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I am not questioning the character of either the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans or the Minister of National Health and Welfare. However, I am questioning the judgment of those two Ministers which had such a devastating effect on the shellfish industry in Atlantic Canada.

Will the Prime Minister do the honourable thing today and ask for the resignations of both the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Minister of National Health and Welfare? Those two Ministers are totally incompetent and should be fired today.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in answer to that question, decisions were taken on the basis of investigations relative to mussels and the information that I received on the morning of the Friday in question. The Member says that there has been damage done. The alert went out at eleven o'clock of that day, at 12.27 on the CP wire. It included lobsters and shrimps and scallops—not by this Minister, and at 12.46, in fact 19 minutes later, it already was corrected.

The greatest damage is that we cannot clear up a health problem. We have not yet found out what the toxin is or what anyone else is facing. I think that what is important is that the health of Canadians be first protected. The Member cannot have it both ways, arguing one day this way and one day that way.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON HEALTH MANAGEMENT SERVICES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister and the Minister for International Trade have persistently said that, short of the selling of wine, provincial jurisdictional authority is not impinged upon by this agreement. Of course that is not the case. Many provincial areas are affected. The more we look at the agreement, the more we discover.

Will he now acknowledge that management services, virtually right across the board in the health field, are also included in this deal? These include hospitals, nursing homes, ambulance services, home care services, health clinics and a variety of other medical services, all of which are clearly within the health field and clearly within provincial jurisdictional authority.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if my hon. friend is asking for a legal opinion. Perhaps he could ask the courts in that regard at the appropriate time. I have my opinion. He is entitled to his.

Surely he is not trying to contest the right of the federal Government of Canada and the Parliament of Canada to negotiate treaties on behalf of all Canadians. That is exactly what we have done. It is a treaty that we deem to be in the national interest, and surely as a national parliamentarian there ought not to be any suggestion, certainly not in this House, that the right of this Parliament should be frustrated in that regard.

Mr. Broadbent: The question is about Canadian health services which we now discover will be included in this deal.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is not a matter of legal opinion. If he looks at the document and the attached tables he will find that health service are clearly spelled out. Why has the Government not only acknowledged privatization in the health mangement services field, but gone beyond that by indicating that not only are these services for mangement to be open to the Canadian private sector, but private American companies will now have the right to intrude right across the board in the management of our health services? Why has the Government taken this totally unacceptable step in this deal?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know that my hon. friend is bereft of argument, but I am sure that upon reflection even he would agree that this is the silliest thing he has raised in this House in a long, long time. In one question he includes the privatization of the health services field. These are scare tactics of the worst kind.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What about the marines invading Manitoba?

Mr. Mulroney: It is typical of the latest comment by the NDP in Manitoba where a Cabinet Minister said that, if we had free trade, the marines will invade Manitoba.

Mr. Broadbent: The problem is the level of ignorance shown by the Prime Minister about his own deal. It is absolutely astonishing. If he reads the deal he will find out that what I said is absolutely true.

HEALTH SERVICES—THE AMERICANS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My last question is directed to the Prime Minister and is very specific. Security services are specifically excluded from the Agreement. Why didn't the Government do the same for health services? Why this sell-out of our health services to the Americans?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can hardly call this a question, and I am surprised the Leader of the New Democratic Party would ask this kind of question. One question was asked about services that are not included in the Agreement.

[English]

"cultural industries are specifically excluded, Government provided service such as health care, education and social services including child care and child welfare services, all transportation modes", et cetera, et cetera, et cetera.

My hon. friend knows full well—

—as was obvious from his question that this particular point was examined by many others, including the director of Le Devoir this morning. All are very concerned about provincial interests and have an historic mission to protect provincial rights, and they support the Agreement because it is not only in the interests of Quebec but also in the interests—

Mr. Broadbent: Read the document!

Mr. Mulroney: He is asking me to read the document. It really is a shame, and I am sure Quebecers will agree, that the Leader of the New Democratic Party spoke out against the Free Trade Agreement before reading it. It really is a shame for Quebec and for Canada.

[English]

HEALTH

ISSUANCE OF SHELLFISH WARNING—REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In response to the question by my colleague, he claimed in the House this afternoon that the decision to issue the ban on all shellfish, including lobsters, did not emanate from his Department. I have in my hand a press release which states: "Health and Welfare Minister Jake Epp and Fisheries Minister Tom Siddon announced today an alert is in force on all shellfish from Atlantic Canada".

The Minister will know that his Department changed its story approximately 10 times on Friday as to what was in and what was out. Lobster was in, lobster was out. Mussels were in, other shellfish were out.

Does the Minister not recognize that the Canadian public can have absolutely no confidence in any of his health warnings right now because he has misled, us so many times, and that he should take the only responsible course and resign?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, no, I have not misled and I did not deny the health warning. Again, it is just one of the examples of her active imagination, saying one thing quite different from what I have said in the House.

I am saying to the Hon. Member that the health warning was put out for very good reasons, which I have given. I ask the Hon. Member: from her point of view, was the health warning not justified?

MINISTER'S CREDIBILITY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister changed his mind ten times in one day. First lobsters were in, then they were withdrawn. How does the Minister expect the Canadian people to trust him when they know he changed his own story ten times last Friday? How can Canadians be expected to trust a Minister who deceived the House and deceived the Canadian people several times over?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that is not correct. The Hon. Member says: "Changed 10 times". That is also not correct. I think it is about time that her statements, which so often have proved to be incorrect, be given the scrutiny that they deserve. The only question that came forward from the hours that I gave was on the matter of scallops. It was not the others. It is about time that she stay with the truth.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It is clear that the Canadian people and the Canadian fishing industry have lost complete confidence in the Minister. First, the Minister delayed issuing health warnings and during that period people were hospitalized and died.

This weekend he created even more confusion with mixed messages which have seriously threatened the shellfish industry of Atlantic Canada and indeed the broader fishing industry of Atlantic Canada.

As the head of the Government, does the Prime Minister not agree that the only way to restore confidence is to have a full public inquiry into this matter and, pending the results of this inquiry, to accept the resignation of the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I did not delay health warnings. That is incorrect, that is false. I did not. That was discussed last week, and that is the case.

Second, in terms of the issue, it was very clear that on the Friday, as I indicated before, in view of the investigation on mussels and the additional information that came forward on the Friday, the health warning was put forward. As I have said to her and others, the only part was on the matter of scallops and nothing more.

Ms. Mitchell: I can tell you that people who watched him on television last week had a very different perception from the one he is trying to create today. Five days is a long time to wait when there is a risk to health.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER SEEK MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister, not the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will he do the honourable thing, as Leader of the Government, supposedly, and insist that a full hearing be conducted and the Minister resign while the hearing is taking place?

• (1440)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, again, the Hon. Member is incorrect. That is not the case at all. I said last week, and I am saying again this week—my story has not changed one iota—when I was informed, and I have the memo right in front of me, which was on the Monday of the 30th, additional work was done. I received the information on December 1, and that is when the health alert was given. It was nothing different. That has been the story last week. That is the story this week. I would ask the Hon. Member, if she wants to look at other people's reputations, then base hers as well on what is said in this House.

LABOUR RELATIONS

AIR CANADA STRIKE—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTERVENE IMMEDIATELY

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Labour.

The disruption of Air Canada's services has been a great inconvenience to the Canadian public, but with the holiday season approaching, the situation is getting even worse because of the large number of people who are trying to join their families. What started as a series of rotating strikes has turned into a general lock-out as a result of a decision by Air Canada's top management. Now, Air Canada is a Crown Corporation, owned by Canadians and managed on their behalf by the Government.

I would like to ask the Government to intervene and to instruct Air Canada to suspend its lock-out immediately until mid-January, so that thousands of Canadians can join their families, and also to instruct both parties to continue their negotiations during this moratorium. Is the Government prepared to take this step?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well we have already intervened in this conflict, and I am referring to last Friday when I appointed Mr. Bill Kelly as mediator.

I can inform the Hon. Member and this House that Mr. Kelly has been very busy meeting with the parties since yesterday, and, Mr. Speaker, I dare say we all hope the parties will act responsibly and negotiate a settlement as soon as possible, so that all Canadians will be able to travel in this country without any trouble.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ASK AIR CANADA TO SUSPEND LOCK-OUT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, mediation, although started too late, is a great thing. I agree. I have been calling for it. I would like to say that this is not enough for people who are stranded, who want to make sure they will be able to reunite with their families. I am asking the Minister to move in and instruct Air Canada to suspend, between now and mid-January, the lock-out it has imposed so as to give some sort of guarantee to Canadians that they can go home and meet with their families at Christmas and on New Year's Day, like we all want to do.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think every one agrees there is great inconvenience being caused to a lot of travelling Canadians right now in this country because of this dispute between Air Canada and its employees. Nevertheless, and I have said this to my hon. colleague in other disputes before, there is a Canada Labour Code which is being applied right now. The parties have both used legal means in order to impose economic pressures on one another. We have moved as quickly as we could in this particular case.

I would like to remind my hon. colleague that in the last conflict he was accusing us of moving too quickly.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I never said that in my life. How could you act too quickly?

Mr. Cadieux: This time we have followed the dispute very closely and I think that the parties, who know their responsibilities and who are with the mediator right now, hopefully will come to a settlement within the next hours.

TRADE

CANADA—U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—INCLUSION OF HEALTH CARE FACILITIES MANAGEMENT SERVICES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I want to quote directly from page 203 of his vaunted agreement which includes the various services, which are part of what we have agreed to in free trade with the United States. One item, and I quote directly, is health care facilities management services. In view of that very direct quote, does the Prime Minister in fact deny what the Leader of my Party said, that the health care management system of this country has been laid open by this agreement which has been set forth?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Hon. Member, the Hon. Member knows that under the agreement, Canada has the full right to have whatever health system it wants. That has been established very clearly through a long period of history going back to the Hospital Act as well as the medicare Act and confirmed by the Canada Health Act.

What the Hon. Member is trying to put forward to Canadians is the matter of management. Surely, he knows, coming from Ontario, that there are a number, for instance, of nursing care homes which are in private hands and privately managed. He also knows, for example, that there has been one example in Ontario in terms of public management of a hospital. For him to try to make the quantum leap from a health system to the argument on the point of management, I think he should re-examine what in fact he is trying to do.

OMISSION OF DAY CARE SERVICES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): That is precisely the point. These health care services are under provincial jurisdiction and that is the point my Leader was making in his opening statement. We left out in this same document quite explicitly day care services. Why did we not similarly leave out services in the health care field, if the Government does not want to see health care handed over to the United States?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, of course, health care is in provincial hands under the Constitution. All of us recognize that. Surely, keeping in mind the five principles of the Canada Health Act, for example, public administration and universal access, the provinces have scope within that Canada Health Act to have the kind of administration of the health care system, the hospital system, they want. The same thing with day care. What the hon. gentleman has in mind is one system only. Surely today, when 40 per cent of day care spaces are in the commercial section—

Mr. Broadbent: Day care is out of the Act.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —the provinces have made the decision as to what is best. The New Democratic Party so often wants to stand up here and say provincial rights and at the same time hope that from a national point we impose—which we cannot constitutionally do—issues and directives which in the health care field or day care system are totally within provincial jurisdiction.

NATIONAL PARKS

NEGOTIATIONS TO ESTABLISH GRASSLANDS NATIONAL PARK IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. It concerns the ongoing negotiations between the Government of Saskatchewan and Canada for the establishment of the Grasslands National Park in southwestern Saskatchewan. The negotiations at various times have reached an impasse over oil and gas exploration rights and also over jurisdiction with respect to river beds. Can the Minister tell the House the current status of the negotiations? And when can Canadians expect an announcement concerning the establishment of this new national park for generations to come?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, over the course of its mandate to date, this Government has established three new national parks, Ellesmere Island in the high Arctic, Bruce Peninsula in Ontario and South Moresby in British Columbia. We have completed, or are in the process of completing, two additional ones. We are now turning our attention as a major priority to a sixth, the establishment of a national park called Grasslands in Saskatchewan.

In that connection, I will be meeting Wednesday with the deputy premier of Saskatchewan on Wednesday, who will, I hope, be resolving with me all outstanding issues, including the ones to which the Hon. Member has made reference. After that meeting, in the next few weeks, I expect to be in a position to put forward some specific proposals to my cabinet colleagues to resolve this very important national question.

FREE TRADE

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF CLAUSES AFFECTING FARMERS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister. In his litany of supporters, the Prime Minister of course did not refer to the agricultural community, because he broke his promise and reneged on his commitment to them. The question I want to ask the Prime Minister, if he read the agreement, is as follows: In Article 710 he sought to make the agricultural community feel secure by saying that GATT Section 11 could be invoked. On the other hand, he has also negated that section in Article 703 where the Government signed a clause aimed at improving access to respective markets by eliminating or reducing import barriers with respect to agricultural products.

Here is my question to the Prime Minister: How can he justify including this clause in the agreement after having stated that agriculture would not even be covered by the agreement?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, had the Hon. Member been able to listen to Mr. Bernard Landry Friday night when he commented on the impact of the agreement articles on agriculture he would have heard him say that it is indeed a truly remarkable gain for Quebec farmers, that these articles have been greatly improved, and that Mr. Landry, like the spokesmen for the Quebec Government, Mr. Macdonald and Mr. Pagé—

Mr. Lapierre: How many cows does he have?

Mr. Mulroney: He says: How many cows does Mr. Macdonald have? Mr. Macdonald is the Quebec Government External Trade Minister and, next time I see him, I will tell him the Hon. Member for Shefford is interested in his cows!

THE AGREEMENT—FAMILY FARMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was unable to quote a single farm source to support his position.

My question is this. After promising farmers they would be protected and first, that they would be excluded from the Agreement, he is now doing a job on farmers in this very Agreement. His Minister of State (Agriculture) has promised to add certain products to the quota list, but according to Section 48 of the Agreement they can't do this. Consequently, is the Prime Minister prepared to admit to farmers that as a result of this Agreement, the family farm is about to become an endangered species?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am truly appalled to hear a Member of this House address an important issue with such a show of hysterics and bad faith.

I have already referred to the contributions made by Mr. Bourassa and Mr. Pagé. I mentioned the comments of the Hon. Bernard Landry, former Minister of Finance with the Parti Québec Government. And since the Hon. Member raised the issue, I would like to mention someone else's opinion . . . If the Hon. Member will allow me—there was an editorial this morning in Le Devoir on the same question . . . he does not seem to take Le Devoir seriously, or the Liberal Government of Québec or the PQ for that matter. He doesn't take anyone seriously except his cows.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member should listen to the following statement that appeared in Le Devoir: "In the agricultural sector, Quebec obtained a specific reference to Article No. XI of GATT which gives it authority—" with respect to "—imports. Dairy producers may rest easy: supply management programs are not affected by the Agreement and are judged to be in line with GATT". Le Devoir, like all leaders of public opinion in Quebec, except for the Liberal Party here in the House, and in fact all Quebecers are in favour of the Agreement, especially the provisions on agriculture, and it is time the Hon. Member stopped talking about his cows and told Quebecers that the Liberals in Ottawa are going to approve their choice.

PRINCE RUPERT GRAIN HANDLERS' DISPUTE—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT APPOINT MEDIATOR

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour.

The Minister is aware that the National Farmers' Union has proposed a method to get the grain moving through the Prince Rupert terminal. The proposal is that, if the Government will appoint Mr. Justice Emmett Hall as mediator, the union is prepared to return to work immediately. Mr. Justice Hall has agreed to accept such an appointment.

Is the Government proceeding with the appointment of Mr. Justice Emmett Hall as mediator in the Prince Rupert grain terminal dispute?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): As my hon. colleague knows, Mr. Speaker, a mediator was appointed in this particular dispute on March 20, 1986. But that, notwithstanding, I will take his request into consideration.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Since the National Farmers' Union proposal appears to be the simplest and the surest way to get the grain moving through the Prince Rupert terminal, since you have known this—

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that the Hon. Member wishes to place his question in the appropriate manner. Perhaps he can continue the question.

Mr. Hovdebo: Why has the Minister not proceeded with this appointment?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): As I have already indicated, Mr. Speaker, there was already one mediator in this particularly dispute, but I will take that suggestion under consideration.

AIR CANADA STRIKE—SUGGESTED SUSPENSION OF WORK STOPPAGE

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour, and it is a supplementary to a previous question on this subject.

Very often in a labour dispute all the attention is given to the two adversaries, and none to the consumers, such as the thousands of Canadians who are understandably concerned about their Christmas travel plans.

I ask the Minister, if there is no settlement in the work stoppage of Air Canada by Friday of this week, will he direct his mediator, William Kelly, to discuss with management and labour the possibility of suspending the work stoppage over the Christmas season, as a service to their fellow Canadians?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Considering all the inconvenience that this particular dispute is causing, I am hopeful that there will be a settlement before Friday.

TRADE

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister is no doubt aware of the insulting comments—insulting to the women of Canada—made by the Minister of Transport last week in St. John's, and in other cities in Canada, as part of the Government's so-called campaign to sell its free trade initiative.

The Minister of Transport's belittling comments about the women of Canada are as insulting as Ambassador Simon Reisman's remarks last month that some of those who oppose free trade can be compared to Nazis. Regrettably, the Prime Minister refused to demand an apology from Ambassador Reisman last month. Today I wish to ask the Prime Minister, on behalf of the women of Canada, whether or not he will demand an apology from the Minister of Transport?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there have been no insulting comments made in connection with the women of Canada by myself, so the premise of the Hon. Member's question is entirely wrong.

I did have some comments to make on some things said by several women here in Canada, one of them the Hon. Member for Hamilton East who made the extraordinary statement that the opening of Canada's service industry to the Americans could allow them to expand their growing surrogate mother industry into Canada in search of babies for export.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Crosbie: I satirized this attempt by the Hon. Member to arouse needless fears because, of course, the free trade agreement has nothing to do with, and certainly will not permit the surrogate mother industry to establish itself, by force or whatever, in Canada. In responding to that, I certainly was satiric.

I also answered several other inaccurate statements made by that Hon. Member, including the statement she made last week in Vancouver that the agreement would have a five-year termination clause; she was positively sure of it.

Ms. Copps: I didn't say that all.

Mr. Crosbie: It turned out it has a six-month termination clause. That is how accurate the Hon. Member's Party has been in this free trade debate.

MINISTER'S HUMOUR—REQUEST FOR APOLOGY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, banner headlines in The Sunday Express in St. John's suggest that some people were insulted.

The Minister's comments that he "doesn't give a damn" what the member for the National Action Committee on the Status of Women in St. John's thinks, or Sister Lorraine Michael of the Catholic Social Action Committee, bespeak of more than just responding to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

What is in question here is not the Minister's use of humour, which is well known in this House. What is in question is the Minister's brand of humour.

I ask the Prime Minister whether or not he thinks it is acceptable for the Minister of Transport, speaking on behalf of the Government of Canada in selling free trade, to use a brand of humour that essentially says, "Now we have consulted the boys, it doesn't matter a whit what the women of Canada think. We can proceed unanimously without consulting the women of this country".

Given those types of comments, and I ask the Prime Minister to check the record, will he seek an apology from the Hon. Member for St. John's West? This is not a laughing matter.

• (1500)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the actual headline of the story from which the hon. gentleman gets his question—he lacks imagination to research his own—says: "Crosbie's 'scandalous' remarks have several women up in arms". Who are the women who are up in arms?

The Hon. Member for Hamilton East whom I trimmed in a debate in Vancouver last week, and several other NDP representatives—

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, this is not funny.

Mr. Crosbie: —one of whom appeared before the House of Commons committee representing the Coalition of Citizens Against Pornography and said that free trade would make it more difficult to enact and enforce Canadian anti-porn legislation. These are the people who are protesting, the people who make these silly, jejune, and false statements.

HEALTH

SHELLFISH PUBLIC HEALTH ALERT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It has to do with the mussel mix-up of last week. Prior to last Friday the Minister, on the question of the mussels, was as communicative as an oyster. Last Friday it was as if the magpies had taken over in his Department and, as a result, considerable confusion has been created in the shellfish industry in the country, resulting in some threats to the producers and the distributors of shellfish in Atlantic Canada.

What steps will the Minister or his Government take to restore the confidence of consumers in the shellfish industry?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to answer the question of the Hon. Member. As he possibly knows, an operations centre was established which is headed through the Department of Health and Welfare. The 1-800 number was put into place. Additionally, all product is being taken off the market. We hope that that will be completed by today. Procedures are being put into place so that new products coming on to the market are totally within the keeping of health and quality requirements. That is being backed up by research, I believe now in 13 labs in a number of countries, relating to the toxin which still has not been isolated, as well as inspectors throughout the industry, as well as through Fisheries and Oceans, and also the assurance to the industry.

My overriding consideration has been health. I think, though I do not get into or haven't talked to the industry—it is not my role—for the industry as well it is best. Once there is a clean bill of health for them as well, that is the best news for them in relationship to this incident.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CONSIDER COMPENSATION FOR PRODUCERS AND DISTRIBUTORS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. In view of the fact that there is another concern which particularly small producers and distributors have, that is the one of compensation, would the Minister and the Government consider compensating producers and distributors? In light of the fact that this particular incident had more to do with the mix-up last Friday and the various statements with respect to shellfish and the toxin, it is completely out of their control. Would the Government consider compensation?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in relation to the toxin first of all I, possibly more than anyone else, would like to have an answer on that as quickly as possible. We are working to that end.

In respect to the industry, I think what is important for the Minister of Health is to make sure that the research and the investigation are complete, and I think that any assessment in respect to all other issues can then take place after that.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

PRESS RELEASE—INITIAL REPORT OF BAN ON LOBSTERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Why did medical evidence justify a press release from his Department and that of the Minister of Fisheries at noon on Friday banning lobsters, all shellfish, and yet 45 minutes later that ban was lifted?

I ask the Minister: did he read the press release before it was issued to ensure that it was accurate? Won't he admit that what was negligent on one weekend was a panic the next weekend?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, and I have explained the week previous. With regard to the alert on shellfish, I think what the right hon. gentleman has also to accept is the definition of shellfish. I won't go into that specifically, because I think if he would check with Fisheries and Oceans he would find the difference. But I go back and I say to him this: I think it was important as I have given the information in respect to the number of people who had been affected by the toxin—the one death and the 14 who were hospitalized at the time—the matter that a second species was discovered to be toxic, and that we had not contained the issue to the geographic area prior to that Friday.

I come back to the words that he used in the House on the eighth, as I have always used those words myself, that is, for me my over-all consideration was health. Surely if that was valid last week, it was valid last Friday and it is valid today. I say to the right hon. gentleman that he can have whatever views he wants, either of this Minister or of this Government, but one thing he cannot change is, because it suits him politically today, to say something differently from what he was saying last week.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the House that the Question Period has ended. Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) I understand that the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) has a question of privilege and it may well be that it is the same question of privilege. Could I have some indication of that?

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, I think we are dealing with something very serious.

Mr. Speaker: I have asked a question of both Hon. Members. Can they tell me if the question of privilege which the Hon. Member for Hamilton East wants to raise and the question of privilege which the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain wants to raise are the same?

Ms. Dewar: I would think so.

Mr. Speaker: I get an indication that that is so. I will hear the Hon. Member for Hamilton East first and then I will hear the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED DISPARAGING REMARKS BY MINISTER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, you will know that in fact the issue of the comments raised by the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) was originally brought to the attention of the Speaker last week when I returned from British Columbia where I participated in debate with the Minister.

I think it is important to read the Minister's remarks into the record. His opening comments were: "Mr. Chairman, fellow debaters"—and this is from a member of the Government who is representing the Government on the trade debate—"it appears that Sheila's broom is not working today.

We hope she will be here shortly". In fact, the Minister was well aware of the fact that I was not going to be arriving on time. The Minister went on to say, in the context of the debate and questions surrounding what is on and what is off the table on the trade deal: "No wonder her book was entitled Nobody's Baby. Apparently our Canadian womanhood is in severe danger. They would have to creep around the country with their knees crossed if Sheila is correct", and then he was booed on his remarks. In fact, he was booed right out of the auditorium.

At that time I really had no intention of raising the issue in the House because I considered the source of the comment and it really was not worth raising.

Mr. Shields: Are you kidding?

Ms. Copps: However, subsequent to that, the self-same Minister went to the St. John's Board of Trade where he made similar ignorant comments—

Mr. Thacker: Stop whining and sniveling.

Ms. Copps: —about myself, about a Roman Catholic nun, about Canadian womanhood in general, and in particular he made very disparaging remarks about the fight against pornography. He said—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Earlier today the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) put some questions to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) with respect to some allegations about what the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) had said and the Hon. Minister of Transport replied.

The difficulty I have with respect to a question of privilege is that, at least up until this moment, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East is referring to alleged comments made outside the Chamber which, whatever one may think of them, I do not think come within the scope of privilege. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East may have reference to something said in this Chamber, and if she is getting to that I will hear it and then I might have to rule on it.

I would ask the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) to keep in mind the procedural difficulties the Chair may be in. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) on a point of order?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, just a few moments ago the Hon. Member for Lethbridge (Mr. Thacker) referring to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) said, and I quote, "Get out of the kitchen" or, "Go back to the kitchen".

Some Hon. Members: He didn't say that.

Mr. Nunziata: Yes, he did.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Nunziata: Stop lying.

Ms. Copps: He said go back to the kitchen.

Mr. Shields: He said get out of the kitchen if you can't stand the heat.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps if all Hon. Members, until they are recognized, constrain their desire to get into this debate we might be able to sort out the issues and I might even be able to settle the matter to everybody's satisfaction.

The Hon. Member for York South—Weston is rising on a point of order. What exactly is the point of order?

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, just a few moments ago—and I would ask you to check blues to confirm what we heard on this side of the House—the Hon. Member for Lethbridge (Mr. Thacker) said to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) to get back to the kitchen.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nunziata: —and he ran away. I would ask you to review the blues to determine whether or not those were the words spoken.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member may or may not have said that. I certainly will look at the blues to see whether there was anything said which was out of order. In the meantime, I am hearing the comments of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East and I will recognize her again.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, seek the guidance of the Chair because I do not want to belabour the point. I can take the kind of personal insults which the Minister of Transport levels on a regular basis. I can take it and I can certainly dish it out.

Mr. Crosbie: Crybaby.

Ms. Copps: At the same time when the Minister of Transport representing the Government of Canada is sent out on a speaking tour which goes from one coast to the other and makes ignorant disparaging remarks—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): How is this privilege?

Ms. Copps: —about Canadian women, I think there should be some recourse in terms of Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: I certainly understand the point of the Hon. Member. The Chair is, of course, bound by procedural matters. I have to advise her that there are ways and means to ask the Government to respond to this sort of thing. The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) did just that in Question Period. There may be other imaginative means.

The difficulty the Chair is having is that I cannot bring this problem within the scope of privilege. No matter how serious the issue may be, as I say, I have to advise the Hon. Member for Hamilton East that her point does not come within privilege.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) has some remarks. I would ask her to keep in mind the same strictures to which the Chair must subscribe.

ALLEGED RIDICULE OF WOMEN BY MEMBERS

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I do think it is a point of privilege—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order.

Ms. Dewar: —I would hope that—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) is rising. She has said that she thinks she has a point of privilege. I will hear whether the Hon. Member has or has not a question of privilege. Surely in this place she has every right to be extended the usual courtesies while she attempts to make her point. The Hon. Member.

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon in response to some questions some Hon. Members from the Government ridiculed and laughed at questions asked. It is not just an Hon. Member who is being ridiculed and criticized in this Chamber but it is the women of Canada—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Don't be so presumptuous.

Ms. Dewar: —which is something that is very distasteful not just to myself but I am sure to the majority of the Members of this House. I would ask you whether it is possible, by way of privilege for the women of Canada to demand the same kind of dignity from Members of the House of Commons as the men constantly require. I think those comments made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) in laughing at reproductive technology this afternoon in this House are an insult to the women of Canada.

An Hon. Member: That is a fraud.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member may very well be offended and, for that matter, people outside or inside this Chamber may be offended but I have to say to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) that privilege is a narrow thing in this Chamber. As I have explained on other occasions, and I remind Members and also the public watching and listening, that when something has been done which limits or interferes with the capacity of an Hon. Member from carrying out his or her duties as a Member of Parliament that may very well be privilege. It is not privilege just because there are strong differences of opinion expressed in the Chamber or even certain comments which may be disagreeable in the Chamber. It can be privilege if, as I say, the attack on any Hon. Member in whatever way is such that the Hon. Member cannot carry on his or her duties.

In this case, while the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain have expressed their feelings on the matter, those feelings may or may not be understandable, given the context, but I have to say to both Members that what has taken place here in an unofficial exchange across the Chamber does not go to the narrow point of privilege and, as your Speaker, I cannot so rule.

The Hon. Member asks what other recourse she might have. That other recourse is to proceed along the lines of what the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) did today. There is the usual political recourse outside of this Chamber when an Hon. Member can express views about any other Hon. Member. I think both Hon. Members have made their points. I find that under the circumstances the matter is not a question of privilege.

I will hear the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) but I would ask him to be conscious of the fact that I have ruled that the matter does not constitute a question of privilege.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I am conscious of your ruling. I just wanted to say that the circumstances of my remarks which have offended these Hon. Members opposite are not correctly put on the record.

I said nothing at all about the women of Canada. Nor did I say anything insulting to the women of Canada. I addressed myself to remarks made by two or three women, one of whom happens to be the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) who had made a particularly silly statement about the free trade arrangement, that it would open up Canada to a tremendous expansion in the surrogate mother industry with Americans coming up here to search for babies for export. I responded to that and to several other remarks made by women who support the NDP in St. John's, Newfoundland. At no time did I say anything insulting to Canadian womanhood. I have too much respect for the women of Canada to believe that their views are represented by these two Hon. Members here who apparently want to be treated equally but then whenever anyone debates lustily with them they want to bring up charges of sexism, whatever that is, or call upon their sex to save them and give them a special and peculiar status—

Mr. Speaker: I hear the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) rising on a point of order. Perhaps all Hon. Members would just hear the Chair for a moment. There will be a cut-off point and it is coming very rapidly in this exchange because this is getting into debate. The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, given that I raised this issue today in Question Period I hope you will afford me a few moments as you have the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie).

Mr. Crosbie: Why?

Mr. Tobin: To respond because I raised this question. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) should note that it was not the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) or the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) who raised the matter today in Question Period, it was the Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin). No one disputes the right of the Minister of Transport to defend himself or to put another view in any debate nor does anybody dispute the Hon. Member's right to use humour. I submit that all Hon. Members have enjoyed it on occasion. However, it is this particular brand of humour which, I submit, belittles all the women of Canada that is in question.

If the Member would put aside his partisanship, come to his senses and realize that we live in 1987, he would quietly come to his feet and submit an apology for any insult that was felt by the women of Canada, not by specific Members of this House who can defend themselves because they are here. If he did that, perhaps this matter could be closed and done away with. That would be the proper, acceptable thing.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has heard representations and comments on both sides of the House. It may very well be a matter of considerable debate between others, but it is not a question of privilege. It is the view of the Chair that the interests of this place are not advanced by proceeding with further points of order on this question.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to ask if I could lay upon the table copies of a motion. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 84(1)—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister of State is, I think, technically out of order. He would require consent to continue. I see the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). Perhaps he could assist the Chair.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I know, like any Member of the House, that there are times of the day for tabling of documents. We passed that time this morning around eleven o'clock. If the Minister was not in the House to table his document, he should have at least come to us to tell us of his intent to table something and to consult. Maybe we would agree with him if we knew what he wanted to do, but to have Ministers come in any time of the day to table documents will not be in order as long as I am Whip of this Party.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) could assist the Chair and the Chamber by indicating just what it is he wishes to table.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to consult. Indeed, I always try to make sure proper consultations occur and, if they have not, I do apologize. I understand the point the Hon. Member is making.

It is a copy of a Ways and Means motion to amend the Excise Tax Act.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can assist Hon. Members. Standing Order 84(1) reads:

> A notice of a Ways and Means motion may be laid upon the Table of the House at any time during a sitting by a Minister of the Crown, but such a motion may not be proposed in the same sitting.

I would hear from Hon. Members, but I think on the face of it that the Hon. Minister of State, if it is a Ways and Means motion, is in order. My difficulty is that I did not know for what purpose the Hon. Minister was rising.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, just to clarify that point, I understand the point you are making. I understood the Minister to say that he had a document to table and that is why I took exception to his tabling of a document. However, if it is a Ways and Means motion, of course a Minister can table that at any time.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister of State seems to have gone over all hurdles and may now proceed with his Ways and Means motion.

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to my hon. friend.

Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 84(1), I have the honour to lay upon the Table copies of a Ways and Means motion to amend the Excise Tax Act and, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 84(2), I ask that an Order of the Day be designated for the consideration of the said motion.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, briefly, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) mentioned another Member's behaviour during Question Period. By the time that was done the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) had left the Chamber because of other responsibilities. I would like it to be on public record that he was not in the Chamber and, according to our customs, might indeed want to reply at the earliest possible occasion, something which was not possible because he was not here.

Mr. Speaker: I have indicated to the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) that I would look at the "blues", and if I find that there is something there that has transgressed our rules or in some other way is, under our rules, a matter with which I have to deal, I will return to the Chamber with it. If that should come about, I of course would make arrangements for any Hon. Member who might be affected to address the Chair. I think that that is where we can leave the matter at the moment.

POINT OF ORDER

TABLING OF EXAMINATION OF FINANCIAL STATEMENTS AND ACCOUNTS OF CANADA LANDS COMPANY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am seeking clarification from the Chair. It was our opinion that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) was to ask at this time for the consent of the House to table a document regarding the examination of the accounts and the financial statements of the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel;, this was to have been done at three o'clock. I notice that the Minister is not present in the Chamber. Perhaps the Deputy government House Leader could assist us in determining if the document is still under embargo at this time because I understand that it has not yet been tabled. Will the Minister table it at some other time? Is the document free from embargo if that is the case?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been no communications with my office that the Minister was to do that in the House at three o'clock. He may be doing it, as the phrase goes, through the back door. In any event, I will check to see exactly when and where it is his intention to table it. I am sure the Hon. Member will be made aware of it as soon as possible.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there are three Bills which the House will be proceeding with this afternoon. It is my understanding that we have consent to refer all three Bills to the Committee of the Whole House and to deal with all three stages of each Bill this afternoon. I think you will find consent for the Bills to be introduced and the motions put in that manner.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there such unanimous consent?

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it is the intention of the New Democratic Party caucus to give speedy passage to these pieces of legislation and we do agree to having them go to Committee of the Whole and to be dealt with at all stages today.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I understand that there have been consultations between our Party and the other Parties on this procedure. I see that the official critic for this Party has just entered the Chamber. I will hand him the document and he can skate around the issue if he wishes, but I think we will support that.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-97, an Act to amend the Labour Code, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to the Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the proposed amendments to Part III of the Canada Labour Code which, as Hon. Members know, regulates conditions of work for several hundred thousand Canadian workers subject to federal labour jurisdiction.

The proposed amendments which were prepared after consultation with concerned employer and labour groups are designed to rectify a problem which has arisen in the every-day application of the Code and which concerns the pension, health and disability benefits of many Canadian workers. I would now like to take this opportunity to outline the nature of the legislative changes and the problems they address in the hope that Hon. Members on both sides of the House will see their way clear to pass these important and useful amendments as expeditiously as possible.

We are proposing to repeal subsections 59.52(2) and (3) as well as subsections 61.4(2.2) and (3) of Part III of the Code in order to replace them with a more comprehensive text concerning the accumulation of pension, health, and disability benefits by employees who are on child care or sick leave under the Code.

Mr. Speaker, for a better understanding of the problem the proposed amendments are intended to rectify, we should go back to June 1984. At the time, Mr. Speaker, this House adopted a series of amendments to all parts of the Canada Labour Code, including Part III.

The amendments were concerned with child care and provided that parents subject to federal labour jurisdiction could take twenty-four weeks unpaid leave in addition to the seventeen weeks of maternity leave provided under the Canada Labour Code at the time.

[English]

The legislative changes passed in 1984, with the support of all Parties, were both progressive and forward-looking in keeping with the Code's reputation as a trend setter in the field of labour legislation. For instance, the amended Code permits both natural and adoptive parents to benefit from the 24 weeks of child care leave, and it is possible for a female employee to combine both child care leave and maternity leave for a total of 41 weeks of unpaid leave.

Employees who take advantage of these child care and sick leave provisions are entitled to return to their original position.

[English]

The amendments of 1984 also provide that the pension, health, and disability benefits of employees absent from work under the Code's child care or sick leave provisions continue to accumulate during their absence. The Code stipulates that in order to benefit from this provision employees must continue making any monetary provision normally required of them.

As I mentioned, these progressive amendments were approved on both sides of the House and came into force on March 1, 1985. Since that time, however, it has become obvious that an amendment is necessary in order to correct the following problem concerning the accumulation of pension, health, and disability benefits by employees during child care and sick leave.

The problem is that while the law requires employees to make their normal contributions in order to continue accumulating these benefits, it does not specifically require employers to continue their contributions. In the absence of such a legislated obligation some employers are requiring employees to assume more of the costs of benefits during leave than when the employees are at work.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this practice is contrary to the publicly stated intent of the law and contrary to departmental policy. Although legally, it does not constitute an offence, this practice has led to many individual complaints and to pressure by unions to have the law amended.

[English]

In considering the problems that this situation can create for employees we must remember that the Code provides for unpaid child care or sick leave. Although collective agreements may provide some form of pay during this leave, and although women on maternity leave can collect unemployment insurance up to a certain number of weeks, it is obvious that most employees who avail themselves of the Code's provisions on child care and sick leave must cope with a period of more restricted income. It may also be a period of increased expense because of the birth of a child or because of medical expenses.

Yet, as the law now stands, it is precisely during such a period of budgetary restriction that an employee can be told by an employer that if he or she wishes to accumulate benefits under the company pension plan, for example, they must pay both the employee's and the employer' share to the pension fund.

The amendments of 1984 were never intended to allow such a situation which, as I said earlier, is contrary to the publicly stated intent of the law and contrary to departmental policy.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to remedy the problem and put an end to this unfair practice. We intend to amend the Canada Labour Code so that it clearly requires an employer to continue payment of contributions to pension, health and disability plans for employees who are on child care or sick leave, such contributions being at least equal to those paid when the employees are at work. Should employees not contribute to the plans while on leave, the employer's obligation would cease.

[English]

As I mentioned earlier, this clarification of the employer's responsibility in this area can be accomplished by replacing a few subsections of the present Code with the text contained in the Bill before us. Hon. Members will note that the proposed amendment to subsections 59.52(2) and (3) would clearly require an employer to continue the payment of contributions while an employee was on leave of absence for maternity or child care purposes. On the other hand, since employees have the option not to avail themselves of the Code's provision and not to make contributions during their absence the Bill provides that in such a case the employer's obligation to contribute would cease.

The Bill also proposes to amend Subsections 61.4 (2.2) and (3). This amendment would have the same effect as in the case of Subsections 59.52(2) and (3), but would apply more specifically to sick leave.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, we are justly proud of the Canada Labour Code and the progressive provisions it contains with respect to sick leave and child care leave. However, there is a flaw which the proposed amendment is intended to rectify.

[English]

Therefore, considering the importance of these amendments to so many working men and women in Canada, and considering that Hon. Members on both sides of this House share an interest in establishing and maintaining equitable labour relations, I ask for the support and co-operation of all my hon. colleagues in ensuring quick passage of this Bill.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the support and co-operation for which the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) is asking will be forthcoming. In my opinion, Bill C-97 is a worthy piece of legislation. We believe that the right of an employee to contribute to a pension, health, or disability pension fund is a sacred entitlement. The Labour Code sees it that way but, unfortunately, because of a loophole in the Code, certain employers have been able to circumvent the law and escape their responsibility to contribute the employer's share to a pension fund when, for example, an employee is rightfully on sick leave or maternity leave. Bill C-97 will close this loophole, which we believe is the right thing to do.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) had already told me about his intention to introduce Bill C-97 to fill some of the gaps in the existing Labour Code. All employees contributing to a pension fund, a fund which protects them in case of illness or disability, expect to be able to continue their contributions and especially see that the employer as well makes his contributions to these funds when the employee is off because of illness or on leave to look after children, the most frequent occurrence being what is commonly called maternity leave. Unfortunately, clear though the intention of the Labour Code may be, it did have a loophole which made it possible for certain employers to evade their responsibilities. The measure under consideration is clearly intended to ensure that the employer will continue to pay his share of the contributions to these plans which protect the employees, provided of course the employee himself pays his contribution. Therefore we believe this measure will clarify certain sections of the Labour Code, and with that we agree.

This Bill reaffirms the spirit of the Labour Code and adds something that was missing in certain sections. This is why I do not intend to keep the floor much longer. I think the Bill is short but well drafted, a measure we were waiting for and which will certainly be welcomed by all working men and women throughout the country who contribute to various plans so as to be covered after retirement or in case of illness. To that extent we support this Bill, Mr. Speaker, and we hope it will go through all stages in the House of Commons as soon as possible.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise to give our support for this legislation. On a number of occasions in the House I asked the Minister to bring this legislation forward. On those occasions, as well as in private conversations, the Minister indicated that he would move with speed. I want to congratulate him for that.

This is one time when we knew that the law contained an unintentional flaw when it was passed in 1984. It became apparent that some employers would use that loophole in order to deny benefits to people who are on maternity leave, child care leave or sick leave.

We welcome this legislation. Again, I congratulate the Minister for moving quickly in this matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-97, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code. Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1:

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, I have one question. When does the Minister intend to have this Bill proclaimed?

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, hopefully as quickly as the Senate is prepared to look at the legislation. We should proceed as quickly as possible.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 1 carry?

ACT RESPECTING THE HUDSON BAY MINING AND SMELTING CO., LIMITED

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-98, an Act to amend an Act respecting the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co., Limited, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to address the House concerning the proposed amendments to the Act respecting the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co., Limited.

These amendments concern a subject which, I am sure, is of great concern to all Hon. Members, namely, the health and safety of Canadian workers.

Mr. Speaker, the importance of safety and health in the workplace cannot be stressed often enough. The statistics are eloquent. In 1985, the last year for which figures are available, 768 Canadians lost their lives on the job and 16.2 million working days were lost as result of accidents. The cost, both direct and indirect, works out to about $14 billion, a very high price to pay for this country, both in human and financial terms.

This tragic and intolerable situation demands that we make every effort to ensure efficient, modern and effective regulation of safety and health in the workplace.

The amendments which I have proposed will make an important contribution to protecting the lives and well-being of employees of the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company in the Flin Flon mineral area of northern Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

I want to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to explain the reasons for these amendments and give a short history of the problem we are anxious to solve.

[English]

As you may know, the Flin Flon mineral area is a large, vaguely defined region situated mainly in Manitoba but extending into Saskatchewan, with the majority of employees and mining operations located in Manitoba. Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting mines and plants straddle the border between the two provinces.

Because of the interprovincial nature of the enterprise, mining operations in the area were brought under federal labour jurisdiction by the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Act of 1947.

However, as we all know, mining is an occupation with many specific hazards not found in other types of work. As a result, specific regulations are required to deal with all the special occupational safety and health problems in this industry.

Therefore, the problem in the Flin Flon mineral area is that Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting operations are under federal jurisdiction, and federal occupational safety and health legislation has applied. However, for many years each of the provinces has tried to apply its own mining occupational safety and health legislation.

The result has been a degree of overlap and even a certain amount of confusion, so that protection of the occupational safety and health of company employees was not as effective as it should have been.

[English]

Provincial Governments, industry and unions have stated concern regarding this situation and their strong preference for any arrangement that would permit one uniform set of provincial occupational safety and health legislation to apply.

In order to eliminate all possible confusion, and to give Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting workers the benefit of a single uniform set of rules in this all-important area of occupational safety and health, I propose the following measures, which have been developed after extensive consultation with the provinces, the company and the unions; first, amendment of the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Act to provide that Manitoba occupational safety and health statutes and regulations will apply to all Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting operations in the Flin Flon mineral area on both sides of the boundary between Manitoba and Saskatchewan; second, the Flin Flon mineral area will be defined in a Memorandum Of Understanding between the parties involved; third, inspection in occupational safety and health services will be provided by the Manitoba inspectorate.

A letter of agreement will cover this issue. The details relating to this element are now being discussed with the Province of Manitoba.

Since a very small proportion of the company's operations and jobs is located in Saskatchewan, that province is willing to let Manitoba statutes apply on its territory. Current mining operations in Saskatchewan will be terminated in a few years.

Finally, I should add that Manitoba recently passed a new series of updated mining regulations. These regulations are the result of a tripartite consultation process and provide good protection in terms of occupational health and safety in contemporary mining operations.

[English]

This Bill, which has the support of the Provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, the company and the unions, provides an effective resolution of this long-standing problem, ensuring a high standard of occupational safety and health protection for Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting employees. The proposed Act will come into force on a date to be fixed by order of the Governor in Council. This will be the earliest date that will provide for, first, the finalization of the letter of agreement with the Province of Manitoba and, second, a clear transition to the administration by the province.

This Bill will help achieve better protection for the well-being and, indeed, the very lives of Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting employees in Manitoba and Saskatchewan. These workers daily face occupational hazards in order to earn their living and contribute to the economic well-being of our nation. They have a right to be protected by efficient, modern occupational safety and health regulations designed for their industry and their needs. I urge Hon. Members on both sides of this House to co-operate in passing these amendments as quickly as possible.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, in saying a few words on Bill C-98, I will say it is a lucky day for the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux). He is going to get two pieces of legislation passed quickly, which goes to prove that sensible legislation can pass rather swiftly in this House.

The Minister is right again that the situation that prevailed in the Flin Flon mineral area had to be settled. It was difficult for the people to understand who had jurisdiction, and which statute would apply with respect to occupational health and safety, the Saskatchewan statutes or the Manitoba statutes. A solution had to be found.

I think the solution the Minister has been able to negotiate with the parties involved, including the two provincial Governments, is the right one. I am going to try to stay away from what the Minister said because he has described the situation very faithfully.

The schedule lists a number of legislations and regulations that will become standard for the area after the Bill is passed. Could we, for example, accept what has until now been the practice that the Elevator Act of either one province or the other would apply? Surely not. In this case, the Acts to which I will refer are Manitoba Acts. For example, with respect to the Fires Prevention Act, if a fire starts in an operation, they will want to know which fire marshal has jurisdiction over the area. This was not clear until now. From now on the Fires Prevention Act, a statute of Manitoba, will apply. The same thing with the Gas and Oil Burner Act, the Manitoba Hydro Act, the Steam and Pressure Plants Act, and the Workplace Safety and Health Act.

The regulations which derive from these pieces of legislation are also listed. Surely one expects that when situations that are likely to be covered by these Acts arise, one knows exactly what statute applies. This is what this Bill will do. It will clarify the whole situation. I think it is a fine piece of legislation that deserves quick passage.

I will conclude by saying that I believe the Minister has depicted the situation in sufficient terms. I also want to give the floor to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), in whose riding the operations are located. I am sure he will be able to add to what I have been able to say so far. I am rather certain that he will also give his approval to this piece of legislation.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I think this is the second time I have been introduced by my Liberal colleague before I rose to speak. It is true that the legislation does affect my own riding. I must say I am very happy to see this piece of legislation come forward. It has been something I have had the opportunity of working on ever since I became a Member of Parliament in 1979. I do congratulate the Government for doing this.

It has taken a lot of work by the unions and company involved, by the two provinces, the federal Government and the officials of the Department of Labour to have this legislation come before us. I would like to congratulate all the people involved.

The mining communities which are affected by this legislation are in northern Manitoba, as one would expect. They are far from the services the federal Government is able to offer in the area of occupational health and safety. Nearby communities with mines come under provincial legislation and those services are readily available. That has been the genesis, the reason for this legislation.

I do have one concern with the legislation and that is something I will deal with when we go into clause by clause study in a few moments. I must say it does make sense to assign this responsibility to the Province of Manitoba. Most of the current mining is being done on the Manitoba side, and on the Saskatchewan side it has actually been a reducing operation with the passage of years. We also have in the Flin Flon mining area more mines being discovered over the years and it is actually an expanding area. Therefore, more and more of the employment is being done on the Manitoba side.

As the Minister did, I would also like to point out that Manitoba legislation is very progressive when it comes to occupational health and safety. That has been the result of tripartite work by employers, employees, and the Government over the years. This legislation does meet the needs of people and it is good legislation for the miners in northern Manitoba. Again, I would like to thank the Minister for moving forward with this very necessary and very progressive legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the Chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-98, an Act respecting the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co., Limited.

Shall Clause 2 carry?

On Clause 2.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, my question relates to the fact that the workers' compensation will not be affected by this legislation. It does seem important that, if we are in a situation where the occupational health legislation of the Province of Manitoba is going to apply, we should also have some clarification on what the Government intends to do with regard to workers' compensation.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, this is a very important question. But as my hon. colleague suggests, the workers' compensation is under provincial jurisdiction. Consequently, I would suggest that both provinces would have to address that particular issue possibly in dealing with our discussions on the administrative arrangements. I do not believe that federal jurisdiction has any power at this point with respect to that particular issue. I would suggest to the provinces that they should address this very sensitive issue in the administrative arrangements.

Mr. Murphy: I was wondering if the Minister would be offering his good offices to make sure that there is some action taken on the workers' compensation issue. It is something that is important. I know that in some of the earlier discussions that took place there was a belief that the workers' compensation would be included in this legislation.

Mr. Cadieux: Again, I do not think that we can address this particular issue in this legislation because of the jurisdiction. But I will surely raise that particular question, which is very important, and it has to be dealt with by the appropriate authorities. I will definitely offer my good offices to raise the question with the appropriate provinces, and hopefully convince them to deal with it in their arrangements.

PENSION ACT, WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT AND COMPENSATION FOR FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR ACT

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs and Minister of State (Senior Citizens)) moved that Bill C-100, an Act to amend the Pension Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act, to repeal the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act and to amend another Act in relation thereto, be now read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, once again it is my pleasure to introduce legislation to this House which will be of benefit to Canadian veterans and their families.

Bill C-100 is omnibus legislation which will remove deficiencies that have been revealed within the existing legislation. We want our legislation to be fair and equitable to all veterans and their families, and Bill C-100 will erase injustices that have inadvertently been allowed to exist.

Spouses of former prisoners of war have been particularly affected, and that is why I am proposing that the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act be repealed, and that our POWs and their dependants be covered in the future by the Pension Act, as they were from 1971 until 1976.

I say this, Mr. Speaker, because I believe that Parliament on several occasions intended benefits in the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act to parallel those in the Pension Act. Unfortunately, as there were two separate pieces of legislation, this did not always happen. Repeal of the Act will reduce future chances of this happening.

This legislation puts forward 12 amendments in all, but as many are of a housekeeping nature, my comments will concentrate on the more major items.

As I suggested a moment ago, the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act has been lacking in a number of areas, and I am proposing amendments to correct this. We will be improving areas that have been of concern to organizations such as the National Prisoners of War Association, the National Council of Veteran Associations, and the Royal Canadian Legion.

Hon. Members will know, Mr. Speaker, that we compensate former prisoners of war for their time spent in captivity. Also, as with all veterans, former prisoners of war may be entitled to compensation for any disability they sustained during the time of their service.

It is my belief that Parliament's intention had always been to recognize this dual entitlement in the calculation of survivor benefits. Indeed, this was the practice followed by the Canadian Pension Commission until 1986, when it was determined that the legislation, as written, did not include prisoners of war who had not been in receipt of a disability pension. Repealing the Prisoners of War Act and placing prisoner of war benefits in the Pension Act rectifies this situation and means that for all future applicants, dependant and survivor benefits will again be in step as intended.

Similarly, it was found that the POW legislation did not permit the Canadian Pension Commission to combine rates when it had to calculate survivor benefits. Prisoner of war compensation and disability compensation must now be determined independently, and this reduces the payments being made to a number of widows. The amendment before the House will allow the commission to return to its traditional methods and cap the maximum at one full survivor's pension.

This will be of particular benefit to widows of prisoners of war who had been in receipt of pension and compensation which, when combined, yield a total of 48 per cent or more. For example, a widow of a POW who had been receiving 25 per cent compensation and 25 per cent pension will currently receive a survivor benefit of half the 25 per cent compensation and half the 25 per cent disability pension. This amendment will permit the commission to add the two percentages and pay the higher full widow's pension instead of two proportionate pensions.

We are also proposing that the married rate should be paid for one full year following the death of a spouse. This puts our POW benefits in line with those that already exist for disability pensioners.

Hon. Members will recall that a similar amendment was made in Bill C-28, passed in February, 1985. I said then that it bordered on the inhumane to reduce a widow's income within a month of the veteran's death, and I feel exactly the same about the benefits paid under the POW Act. This amendment will keep these benefits in pay for a full year following the POW's death and thereby give the widow an opportunity to adjust to her changed circumstances.

I am sure that all Hon. Members will enthusiastically support another measure which will introduce further compassion into our legislation. The House will recall the plight of those Canadians who were held prisoner in North Africa during the war. These veterans had been unable to receive prisoner of war compensation because there was doubt as to whether they had been detained in enemy territory. Eventually, and happily, this matter was resolved, but not before these veterans had been denied compensation for many years because they did not meet the strict criteria.

Now we want the Canadian Pension Commission to have the discretion to grant POW compensation in specially meritorious cases such as the ones which came forward from veterans held prisoner in North Africa.

This flexibility already exists in the case of disability pensions and has enabled such deserving people as the veterans exposed to nuclear radiation in the 1950s to make application for pension.

I have confined my remarks to the more important amendments contained in this legislation. All amendments, however, are designed to improve the existing legislation for veterans and their dependants.

Veterans and their families are very special Canadians, and I am confident that all Members fully appreciate the fairness of this legislation, just as I very sincerely appreciate the support the Bill has received from all sides of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to say that the Liberal Party agrees with this Bill. I compliment the Minister on bringing it forward. It is in keeping with the historical and traditional policies of Parliament that we look after our veterans and their survivors because we owe it to them.

The Bill today is a very humane act. It recognizes or reminds us once again of the realities of war. It also reminds us of the consequences of war. In many ways, as the Minister has said, it is a housekeeping Bill, but it is a very necessary Bill and the amendments are very important to the people who will benefit from them.

As the Minister stated, there has been legislation which intended to do many of these things but because of technicalities did not work in the way Parliament intended it to work. This Bill will repair those things.

The Minister also mentioned that it will repeal the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act. What it really does is transfer the responsibilities or the purpose of the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act to the Pension Act, so that the amendments to the Pension Act, when passed, will apply to both veterans who were not prisoners of war and those who were prisoners of war. Hence, prisoner of war benefits will become part of the Pension Act. It makes the legislation more simple. It creates less red tape for veterans, their survivors, and their dependants who qualify for the benefits mentioned herein.

Today we hear many people talk about the cost of social benefits in Canada, but I want to point out that in the Bill the Minister brought in today all the benefits that benefit people in a very sincere and humane manner will cost less than $3 million. If we say it slowly, it sounds like a lot of money. However, if we consider the number of people who will benefit from it, it is not a lot of money. In fact, if we want to use a comparison, let us say that this Bill will cost Canadians slightly more than a present day, modern, heavy-armoured, battle-line tank. I think that is a good comparison to make since today we are talking about veterans' benefits.

It will reinstate payment of prisoner of war survivor benefits where the deceased veteran was not in receipt of a disability pension. This technicality arose in 1986. If a prisoner of war was being compensated for the fact that he had been a prisoner of war, he and his survivors did not qualify for other benefits. In order for his survivor and dependants to qualify, he had to be on disability pension as well, or singularly on disability, whatever the case may be.

As a result, compensation for being a prisoner of war is valid now for continuation of a pension. The disability and compensation factors will both be tied into the Canadian Pension Commission after the legislation is passed. The particular amendment will enable the Canadian Pension Commission to return to its traditional procedures. In other words, it will deal with both compensation and disability at the same time.

Another important facet is the fact that the Bill re-authorizes the combining of the rate of disability pensions with the rate of prisoner of war compensation payable to a deceased veteran in determining a survivor benefit and will cap it at one full survivor's pension instead of two. It will also entitle the survivor to a full widow's pension, which is an extremely important point.

A very important amendment in this Bill on which I want to compliment the Minister authorizes payment of the married rate for one full year following the death of a spouse or veteran. This brings the Prisoner of War Act directly into line with the Canadian Pension Act. The authorization of these payments for one year following the death of a veteran when his spouse and dependants will be receiving a full income from the veterans pension is important because that time is very difficult. It is a period of transition when they need to carry on and adjust to the future. This amendment adds a great deal to the humane attitude to veterans legislation.

You had to be a prisoner of war for 30 months on a continual basis before qualifying for any compensation under the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act. Now you can add one, two or three imprisonments together to get a total of 30 months. That is only fair. A person who was captured two or three times went through much greater ordeal.

There is another technical amendment. These sorts of things pass by legislators when Bills are drawn up. If a person was captured on February 1—and the legislation in the past said that you required three months to get a prisoner of war pension—you would require only 89 days to qualify for that pension, but if you were captured on July 1 you would require 92 days to qualify. Those of us who handle a lot of veterans' cases run across these inequities from time to time.

Another important part of this Bill authorizes the Canadian Pension Commission to grant compassionate prisoner of war compensation in cases of special hardship where an applicant is otherwise unqualified. The Minister in this case today mentioned prisoners in North Africa who were considered to be outside the enemy's territory. I think what this legislation recognizes and should recognize is that in times of war we know no boundaries. Boundaries can change from day to day. You cannot really say that because it is not in actual enemy territory, you are not in enemy territory. How would you be captured if you were not in enemy territory or vice versa? That is a good amendment.

In bringing all this together today I think again that the historical tradition of Canada and Canadian Governments over the years has been to provide for veterans, survivors and their spouses. This is a great responsibility that must never be forgotten. We must look after families of those who have died in defence of freedom and those veterans who came home incapacitated, unable to provide for their spouses and families. That is our job here at home and one that we must continue.

I know that the Minister today has a great feeling for his job, as did the Hon. Dan MacDonald when he was in this House. He understands it is important that veterans be made comfortable for the remainder of their lives. That is the least we can do for the service they have given to this country. He understands it is important that veterans be made comfortable for the remainder of their lives. That is the least we can do for the service they have given to Canada. Therefore, we must be reminded at this time that present day Canadian nationalism was really born on the battlefields of Europe, of the world and also at the negotiating tables that brought World War I and World War II to a close, not forgetting the Korean War later on. Only if we ourselves in this Parliament look after normal lifetime responsibilities that would have belonged to those veterans who did not return and only if we look after the lifetime responsibilities of those who returned incapacitated, can we really say that we are remembering them. That is the job of every Canadian, not just at the cenotaph on November 11. They may have been maltreated while in prison or wounded in war, but it is the job of Canadians as a whole to remember them by looking after those who returned incapacitated, their spouses, families and dependants.

The Minister mentioned various organizations. I would like to pay tribute, on behalf of my Party today, the Liberal Party of Canada to organizations such as the National Prisoners of War Association, one of which is the renowned Dieppe Prisoners of War Association; the National Council of Veterans Associations; and the Royal Canadian Legion, which has some 1,700 branches across Canada. People in these organizations have continued to champion the causes and brought forward representations to the Government of Canada to amend the legislation so that we as parliamentarians can better carry on the job of supporting our veterans. Of course then we have the Canadian families who are directly affected by things that arise by way of technicalities and legislation that do not apply to their individual cases. We owe it to them too for bringing their ideas forward to us.

To all those people I want to say thank you today. I appreciate that the Minister has brought this legislation forward in the historical and great traditions of Canada as a caring nation on behalf of its people for those who sacrificed their lives or health for our country. Last August I had the privilege of attending the ceremonies in Dieppe with the Minister along with many other veterans in remembering that horrendous day, August 19, 1942. It brought home the fact that there should be no complaint or disagreement among political Parties in Canada to support legislation benefiting those who were killed or wounded in such battles all over the world on Canada's behalf. They fought for all of Canada. Therefore, all Canadians, regardless of their political stripe, should defend spouses and dependants of veterans at a time of need.

Thank you for giving me this time to say a few words on this Bill, Mr. Speaker. Again I congratulate the Minister for bringing this legislation forward today.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to say that the proposed legislation before the House, Bill C-100, has the full support of the New Democratic Party. My remarks will be extremely short. It is crucial that this legislation be passed in all stages today because it contains quite a number of improvements for prisoners of war, their dependants and their widows.

I have been a member of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs since I came here in 1980. At practically every appearance before the committee of the Royal Canadian Legion, the Canadian Council of War Veterans' Associations, the National Prisoners of War Association of Canada, as well as of the wives and widows of the members of the National PWO Association, we heard a litany of complaints dealing with various pieces of legislation affecting prisoners of war and veterans' benefits.

I must take this opportunity to compliment the Minister. Since I have been here, he has been one of the most responsive Ministers of Veterans Affairs. He has managed to clear up most of the petty, niggling little problems which should have been rectified long before this. Even though they may seem like small problems to us, they are huge problems to the people who rely on those benefits for an adequate and decent standard of living. I believe that the Minister should be complimented for that, and I know, speaking for myself and, I think, for other members of the Veterans Affairs Committee from all Parties, he will receive the continued support of that committee for the work he does on behalf of veterans and their families.

This is not to say that the Minister and I do not disagree from time to time. We certainly do disagree, and of course that is what we are all here to do.

Some of the other issues the wives and widows of members of the National Prisoners of War Association raised with the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs at a meeting on June 18 have not been addressed by this legislation. However, I have had a discussion with the Minister and he has assured me that he will be pursuing the concerns which those individuals raised with the committee over the next short period of time, and of course, knowing the Minister, I accept that he will do so. We look forward to the moment when we can improve the legislation affecting veterans, their families and prisoners of war even further.

That is about all the time I wish to take on these amendments. I think they speak for themselves. We are not talking about a large amount of money. I think it amounts to about $3 million over the next five years. In terms of total government expenditures over that same five-year period, we are talking about peanuts, but that amount of money represents a substantial improvement in the lot of POWs, their families and their dependants. It is an extremely important move, even though it does not seem to be such a massive amount. It is the least we can do to help the people to whom we owe so much to live a decent life in Canada, and I think this legislation goes in that direction.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to rise to speak to Bill C-100, given the eloquent words of the Minister and the two opposition spokesmen who have already addressed themselves to this Bill. Nevertheless, I feel compelled to rise.

I listened with great interest to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees). As Hon. Members know, the Minister is a man of few words and a man of considerable talent. He has done a considerable amount of good for the Veterans Affairs Department, but I submit that he is also a man of some modesty. When he rose in his place to introduce this Bill to the House, he described it as a housekeeping measure. I want to say to the Minister that I fundamentally disagree with him. This Bill is substantially more than a housekeeping measure, and I say that with great respect.

Hon. Members on all sides of the House will recall that some months ago, CBC Radio did a Sunday morning program about people who were prisoners of war in Laghouat, Algeria. There are some several dozen of them across Canada, including about half a dozen in my own Province of Newfoundland. These people spent years in a prisoner of war camp. Jim Templeton from St. John's went in there weighing 180 or 190 pounds and came out weighing 130 pounds. Some of them saw their colleagues shot and killed while trying to escape the camp. So that we are clear as to whether or not it was a prisoner of war camp let me say that it was administered by the Gestapo.

Mr. Benjamin: And the Vichy French.

Mr. Tobin: And the Vichy French. However, because that camp was located in Algeria, a nation with which we had not formally exchanged a Declaration of war, under the terms of the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act as defined in the legislation of 1976 or 1977, the Government was unable to find that these men had been prisoners of war.

The situation was brought to the attention of the Minister. Indeed, I raised it myself on a number of occasions in the House. The Minister, without argument and without hesitation, acknowledged that, given the circumstances involved, it was indeed not a grey area, it was not a question of a judgment call, but it was clear that these Canadian veterans had been prisoners of war in the most brutal sense of the word and that they had suffered greatly in their service to the nation.

I am saying this because the Minister is somewhat modest and would not say it himself. He was able to find a way, through the use of historical documents, to bring benefits under the old Act to these people who had been held prisoners in Laghouat, Algeria. The many people who were involved in this case rejoiced and indeed gave due respect and thanks to the Minister for his action.

Some of us who were involved in this matter were concerned about other prisoners of war about whom we do not know yet who suffered under similar conditions. We wondered if there would be an historical document somewhere, as there was in the case of Laghouat, which would allow us to recognize those others. In the case of Laghouat, a technicality was used to recognize that at least during wartime, the prisoners were held in enemy territory. What if there is no such technicality for the others?

Today the Minister is bringing in Bill C-100 and at the same time repealing the Former Prisoners of War Compensation Act. This new legislation brings the plight of those people under the discretion of the board, something which was not available before. The Minister has ensured that in future, when people who have suffered the same kind of treatment as those who were held at Laghouat, Algeria, come forward, we will not have to search for a technicality in order to give them simple justice.

Let me say, as one who is not a member of the Veterans Affairs Committee, as one who does not normally participate in these debates, but as one who brought the conditions of former prisoners of war to the Minister's attention, that I think the change the Minister has made to ensure that all legitimate prisoners of war are compensated is an important one and goes far beyond simple housekeeping. In fact, it is an entrenchment of the principle of simple justice in Bill C-100.

There is no question that justice and fairness do not have price tags and cannot be measured in dollars and cents. It struck me, as I know it struck the Minister as we discussed the matter, that in the case of Laghouat, those people were less interested in receiving financial compensation for being recognized as prisoners of war than they were in receiving the dignity of recognition for the price they had paid in the service of their country. They asked for recognition that they had indeed served Canada and paid a price as prisoners of war—not as interns at some resort, but as prisoners of war. That was their first interest.

The Minister has given to all of those in similar circumstances, not only benefit of a pension provided under the Pension Act—which is important and not to be belittled—but their dignity. That is what they asked for first and foremost. For that I heartily congratulate the Minister of Veterans Affairs today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) I would like to remind him that the Bill is to go through all stages before Private Members' Hour.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I guarantee you that that will happen. When have I ever caused you any trouble? Perhaps in other places, but not with you.

I will keep my remarks brief. I would like to congratulate the Minister on this legislation. I want to appeal to him as well. The Minister is making some corrections of errors of omission or commission and giving some recognition to veterans and their survivors. I hope he will address himself to two further areas.

By the way, I enjoyed watching the brief exchange between our honorary member at the Clerk's Table, the former member for Winnipeg North Centre, and the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees). The honorary member at the Table carried on the fight for veterans in this place along with the Hon. Minister since 1942. I would like to carry on the fight which my former colleague carried on with previous Ministers of Veterans Affairs.

The first appeal I would like to make is with regard to the Spanish Civil War veterans. Several thousand of them fought the Fascists in Spain between 1935 and 1938. Most of them volunteered for the Canadian Forces in 1939 and fought in the Second World War. In fact, for some of them it was a third war. They had been in World War I, the Spanish Civil War, and then World War II.

As I am sure the Minister knows, there are only about 200 of these veterans left of the several thousand who served, and a few surviving widows. I had a Private Member's Bill before this House for many years, to which precedessors of the Minister responded, in the bureaucrats of the Department, that they were mercenaries. The Minister and I know that that is not true. Most of them paid their own way. They were all volunteers. None of them made any money. Some of the 200 who are left served as prisoners of war, and a few were even tortured by the Fascists in Spain.

All they really want is recognition as veterans. I doubt whether very many, if any, are looking for any benefits. They only want recognition as veterans. The handful who are left are now in their 70s, 80s, and 90s I think that recognition long past due is deserved. I hope the Minister, unlike at least five of his precedessors with whom I have dealt, will recognize that.

In this Bill the Minister is dealing with the criteria for the awarding of decorations. Over the last couple of years I have been working with him on the case of a veteran who served for five years overseas. This veteran did not spend the 160 or 180 days on continental Europe, which is the criterion for the 1939-45 Star, because so much of his time was spent in England and Ireland. I did not know that England and Ireland had been moved out of northwest Europe, but the Department of Veterans Affairs has done so. This veteran manned anti-aircraft guns for the Canadian Forces on the south coast of Britain. There is no way that that was not the front line. The criterion for the 1939-45 Star should be changed to include England and Ireland.

Another case has come to my attention recently, about which I will be writing to the Minister. I will tell him now that it is with regard to a person who was in the RAF for approximately five years. He served in England with RCAF squadrons, but a lot of the time was spent in Canada as an instructor. All he would like to have is the War Medal or the 1939-45 Star as recognition of his service with the Canadian Armed Forces in World War II.

I plead with the Minister to review the criteria for those medals. I want to plead, for the umpteenth time in this place since 1968, for recognition of the veterans of the Spanish Civil War. If the few survivors who are left are entitled to a few tens of thousands of dollars, let us give it to them.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the Hon. Member, who I know has always taken a very sympathetic and energetic interest in veterans, that the case of the Mac-Pap is now before the Committee on Veterans Affairs. I can assure him that we will review the findings of that committee very sympathetically indeed. I am sympathetic to the case and will do everything I can.

With regard to the other matters which the Member brought up, I am sympathetic to practically all the representations which are brought forward on behalf of veterans because they are such deserving people. I am sometimes tied down by the cold hand of the law. However, I have been able to work around some of the problems and I can assure the Hon. Member that I will work around any problems that I can.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs has so often said: "If it can be done it will be done".

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the Chair.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-100, an Act to amend the Pension Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act, to repeal the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act and to amend any other Act in relation thereto.

• (1650)

Clauses 1 and 2 inclusive agreed to.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, Section 3(1) at page 2 of the Bill states:

> There shall be a commission to be known as the Canadian Pension Commission, consisting of not fewer than eight and not more than 14 commissioners, not more than 10 ad hoc commissioners and such number of temporary commissioners as the Minister considers necessary.

Will the Minister advise us what effect, if any, this Bill will have on the terms of appointment of present members of the Canadian Pension Commission, and will any be added or subtracted?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that it does not have any effect on present members of the commission.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 3 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 4 to 22 inclusive agreed to.

Schedule A agreed to.

Schedule B agreed to.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, the Minister is to be congratulated for carrying this Bill through quickly this afternoon. Does he have any time schedule for the formal proclamation of this Bill?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, just as soon as is possible. It is something that is very much overdue. We will bring it in with the greatest possible speed.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Title agreed to.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a couple of words to thank those who have taken part in this debate this afternoon. I want to thank them very much for their extremely able representations and remarks in the debate today. It was a very constructive debate.

I appreciate their support and the kind things they had to say about me. They are not deserved but very much appreciated. I thank them all.

It has been a very good afternoon. We will be bringing more legislation forward as soon as we can find other corrections to make.

Bill reported, concurred in, read the third time and passed.

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING ACT

The House resumed from Monday, November 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Nickerson that Bill C-211, an Act to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the Bill was last before the House, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Binns) had the floor.

Mr. Pat Binns (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise to speak to this Private Members' Bill, Bill C-211. Indeed, it is a Bill that has been before the House a number of times. It has been debated in the House for two hours and is now being debated for its third hour this evening.

This Bill was introduced previously as Bill C-235, and was identical in purpose to Bill C-211.

Previous speakers in the debate have indicated the need for the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation and the spirit of co-operation among the federal, provincial and territorial Governments. The Bill was conceived so as to bring order in the marketing of freshwater fish while at the same time increasing returns to fishermen. The financial success of the corporation has been highlighted. Today, however, I would like to focus briefly on the effects of the Bill. It is time to take stock of these arguments and ask what this Bill would really accomplish if it were to pass.

In previous debates, the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) has said that the Bill would really gut the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. If we look at the text, it will repeal the definition "participating province" from the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act, repeal Part III of the Act, and repeal the schedule to the Act.

Part III of the Act which the Bill proposes to eliminate is, no doubt, the "gut" to which the Hon. Member referred. It concerns the regulation of interprovincial and export trade, the duties and powers of the corporation, including the orderly marketing of fish, increasing returns to fishermen, and promoting international markets for and increasing interprovincial trade in fish. It also concerns the agreements respecting participation, which include that aforementioned co-operation among Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario and the Northwest Territories. This section of the Act refers to agreements between the Government of Canada and these provinces for matters such as the sharing by provinces with the Government of Canada of any losses by the corporation, and functions relating to interprovincial trade in fish.

Thus we have a corporation established by the collective will of the participating provinces and the Government of Canada.

The Bill before us will commit the Government to repeal unilaterally this area of participation and co-operation. If passed, it would also remove the area of jurisdiction of the corporation and basically render it inoperative in the sense of federal and provincial territorial agreements which were signed to establish the corporation itself.

It is important to note that the Bill has been drafted but the provinces and the Territories have not expressed their consent at this point to the Bill in its present state. Therefore, we have to ask in fact what is the provincial reaction to Bill C-211. I would like to refer to that briefly because in the last couple of months all four provinces have cautioned us to treat the Bill gently or not to touch it.

Saskatchewan, clearly indicated its opposition to the Bill in a letter written by the Minister of Parks, Recreation and Culture for Saskatchewan. In his letter he stated: "Saskatchewan is committed to a unified marketing effort through a strong freshwater fish marketing corporation". He went on to say: "I do not support Bill C-211 and feel that it would be inappropriate to consider such legislation without consultation between all participants".

In a similar vein, a letter from the Minister of Forestry, Lands and Wildlife of Alberta said:

> I understand that the single-desk marketing control provided by the present act is essential to the overall continued, successful working of the corporation. Consequently, I am not supportive of the principles which the Bill puts forward.

The Provinces of Manitoba and Ontario have sent similar letters. The Government of the Northwest Territories has not in any way asked for an alteration of the mandate of the corporation. While speaking on this matter on November 2, the Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland) indicated that this Bill would not only get rid of the corporation against the evident wishes of the provincial Governments but, indeed, it would do so unilaterally and without prior consultation with those provinces.

I refer to these communications to show that this is not a partisan matter but a matter guided by facts, logic and common sense. I would also like to observe that this is an era which has seen milestone events in the progress of federal-provincial relations. Can we not take advantage of the expertise and the active involvement of the provinces in making the fisheries respond to the challenges now put before them?

These challenges are very real. They include new technology, over-participation and over-capitalization at the processing level. They include insufficient development of local markets and product substitution. Can we possibly expect our fishermen, who are spread over an area of five million square kilometres and who market 23 species of fish to different and varied markets, to face and successfully master these challenges by themselves?

Provincial officials and members of all three Parties in this House are not the only ones who think that the FFMC and its concept of a single-desk marketing system is working. The Senate's Standing Committee on Fisheries in its 1986 report on the marketing of fish in Canada concluded, after extensive investigation, that there was more to be gained by improving single-desk selling than by getting rid of it. The committee's report gives a glimpse of the opportunities and pitfalls which face the fishery. It recommends that the provincial and territorial Governments, in co-operation with the FFMC, co-ordinate their efforts to bring about a good balance of investments in harvesting facilities, and the number of participants in the western fisheries given the harvestable quantities of fish.

I would have to join my provincial counterparts, my colleagues of all Parties, the Senate committee and the vast majority of our fishermen in saying I believe that Canadian freshwater fishermen should not be deprived of this organization if they feel it has been effective for them.

I am not suggesting that the FFMC has no room to improve. In fact, I believe my colleague who has promoted the Bill has expressed very well that there must be changes to affect the livelihood and well-being of fishermen from the Northwest Territories. However, to cut the FFMC unilaterally and without further consultation with the provinces will destroy the co-operative climate we have forged among the provinces, the fishermen and the federal Government.

We know that the provinces and the vast majority of the fishermen continue to support the FFMC. Fishermen have just recently spoken through the chairman of the advisory committee pleading that Bill C-211 not be adopted.

As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann), said in this House on October 1: "Fishermen tell me they are getting quite a good run for their product and I think the facts bear that out".

Adopting Bill C-211 is not a simple change. The Bill would, in essence, unilaterally kill the corporation as it now exists. It would do so against the wishes of several parties, including the provinces. I would want to add my voice to those facts and to the wishes of so many others and say that it is probably better to improve the FFMC than to pass this legislation at this point in time. If we wish to change and improve the FFMC, we should look at internal changes which can accommodate the needs of fishermen from the Northwest Territories.

I would urge the Government to work with the Hon. Member to make those kinds of internal changes to the organization, in consultation with the FFMC, and I think we will find that the end results will be much better for the Government. In conclusion, I have to say that I will not be supporting this Bill.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have the opportunity to stand and speak on Bill C-211. A year and a half or two years ago, I had the opportunity to visit the riding of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) and the communities on both sides of Great Slave Lake. There is no question about it when the Hon. Member for Western Arctic says there is not total happiness and unanimity with respect to the value or otherwise of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. One can find that sentiment quite readily on both sides of Great Slave Lake, particularly on the lower side. There is no doubt about that at all.

Despite the sentiment that there were problems with the FFMC, I am not sure there is a unanimous view that it ought to be wiped out of existence. Having said that, let me say that I was very interested to hear the Parliamentary Secretary for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Binns) speak because I was not quite sure at all what the Government's position on the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation was going to be. In fact, if I were a betting man, and I am not, I would have bet a substantial amount of money that when the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, as he is wont to do, stood in his place to speak on behalf of his Minister, he would not have been urging those of us in the House who are interested in this matter to vote against the Bill which was prepared and supported by the Member for Western Arctic, namely Bill C-211, which would wipe out the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. I thought he was going to stand and encourage all of us to join him and his Minister in putting the thumb on the spread of communism in this country just as fast as we could.

Why would I say communism, Mr. Speaker? Because I did some homework. I went back to a speech given by the Hon. Member for Richmond—South Delta (Mr. Siddon), the same Member who is now the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, to see what his views were on this Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. The Minister's Parliamentary Secretary spoke on his behalf, giving his view that this is a useful, helpful and dynamic organization, that it might need some slight changes and tinkering but it is a good organization. This same Minister, speaking in his place in this House as a member of the Opposition, and a lowly back-bencher at that, said, with respect to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation in 1980

> I suggest what we have now is a system of monopolistic dominance in the fish marketing industry, in the prairie provinces in particular, which is a far cry from what I understand to be the principle of democratic socialism where free enterprise and the private sector can operate in competition with one another. What we have is virtual communism in all of its forms in the example and illustration of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation.

He went on to state, "I say it is the beginnings of communism in this country because it takes away from the individual the right to compete". Those were the words of the Hon. Member for Richmond—South Delta before he was the Minister of Fisheries and Ocean, and nothing but a lowly Conservative back-bencher.

I thought the Hon. Member for Richmond—South Delta was seeing red then when he made those ridiculous comments that a Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation was the symbol of growing communism in the country. The only joy I can take out of this futile debate today, once again about this Bill, is that, obviously, having heard from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, in the intervening nearly eight years since the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans gave this speech in which he described the Freshwater Fishing Marketing Corporation as communism he has seen the light and come to his senses, and that the spirit of perestroika has invaded his soul. Now he wants to give the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation a chance to survive, notwithstanding the heavy hand of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic who wants to put an end to this corporation.

You can well understand, Mr. Speaker, being a long-standing Member of this House who is held in high regard by all Members from all corners and all Parties, and with a good sense of the ridiculous, that I could not help but note that speech given by the Minister who called it communism eight years ago and who now so stoutly defends the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. May I say, it is an interesting conversion on the road to Ottawa to the Cabinet, to 24 Sussex, or the Governor General's residence.

In conclusion, I wish to read a copy of a letter dated November 23, 1987 to the Minister of Fisheries, the Hon. Member for Richmond—South Delta. It was written by Maurice Blanchard, Chairman, Fishermen's Advisory Committee, regarding Bill C-211. I wish to quote a couple of excerpts. Mr. Blanchard states:

By any industry measure, the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation is a success. It has shown steady growth and has just completed another year of record sales and record returns to fishermen. The Corporation has consistently generated profits over the past 15 years and has provided fishermen with a level of security that never existed in the past. This is not to say that all fishermen believe the Corporation is perfect. The fact is that even I and other members of the Advisory Committee have questioned the concept of single desk marketing at one time or another. But we did not really understand how the Corporation operates.

Now that we are fully aware of the strengths and benefits of single desk marketing, we have become supporters of the Corporation. This is not to say that we always approve of everything the Corporation does, but there are few issues that we have not been able to work out through reasonable discussion. Like the large marjority of fishermen, we believe that while not perfect, the fishing industry in this region has never been in better shape.

Mr. Blanchard went on to state:

As representatives of fishermen across the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation region, we ask that you and other Members of Parliament vote to defeat Bill C-211. If you have any questions or concerns, please feel free to contact me.

This letter was signed by Annie Bird, La Ronge, Saskatchewan; Helgi Jones, Gimli, Manitoba; Jane Mayo, Yellowknife, Northwest Territories—this is in the Member's own riding who wants to gut the corporation—William Quequish, Weagamow Lake, Ontario. I am from Newfoundland, and I forgive people for mispronouncing some rather famous parts of Newfoundland, so I hope they will forgive me for mispronouncing famous places elsewhere in the country. The letter is also signed by Joe Tsannie, Wollaston Lake, Saskatchewan; Raymond Dupres, Slave Lake, Alberta; Ed Isfeld, Winnipeg Beach, Manitoba; William Cordell, Pikwitonei, Manitoba; Elmo Helgason, Ashern, Manitoba; Bessie Irvine, Grand Marais, Manitoba; and Guy L'Heureux, Joussard, Alberta. I am sure that I mispronounced half of those communities, but it was in total innocence.

The point that I am trying to make is that the reason the Minister of Fisheries has come to his senses and no longer sees behind the doors of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation the spread, the germ, or the seeds of communism in this country is that he has obviously had an opportunity as Minister of Fisheries to visit some of those communities, or at least to speak to many of those people who are on the Minister's advisory committee. He realizes that one cannot take a few complaints, albeit sometimes legitimate complaints, legitimate proposals, or legitimate aspirations about an industry and the role that a Crown corporation plays in that industry, and use it as justification for wiping out that corporation.

I would urge all Members to defeat this Bill. I urge my good friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic, who represents such a dynamic, interesting, and important part of Canada not to waste the time of the House or his own valuable time with the continued reintroduction year after year of this Bill. It has about as much chance of passing as the Minister has of going back to his old and rather foolish views about the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose this Bill, and advise my colleague, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) that I was here in 1969 when we dealt with this legislation in its origins brought in by a Liberal Government, but Members of Parliament from the Conservative Party, the Social Credit Party, and the NDP supported it.

I have carefully read the speech of the hon. sponsor of this Bill, and I find it passing strange. He tried this in 1985 and he got nowhere, yet he still keeps batting his head against the same wall in spite of the overwhelming support by the massive majority of freshwater fishermen in western and northern Canada and northern Ontario.

I notice that his speech amounts to gutting this legislation. I do not know why he did not move a Private Member's Bill to repeal the whole Act, because that in effect is what his present Bill is doing. But in his speech earlier in the House on this Bill he stated that it would bring about the revival of co-operatives.

I wish to advise my hon. friend that we had a lot of small fishermen's co-operatives. At that time I was representing the constituency of Regina—Lake Centre, and there was a fishermen's co-op on Last Mountain Lake. Members of the co-op lived in places like Dilke, Regina Beach, Chamberlain, and Findlater. They also lived on the other side of the lake at Nokomis, Earl Grey, and places like that.

The trouble they had was not in catching fish, but rather, as a little co-op trying to compete in the international market and the domestic market in central Canada against the large fish dealers, Safeways, and the Hudson's Bay Company. They did not have a prayer. They did not have the resources to compete in the market. They recognized that they needed something in the way of orderly marketing and central desk-selling, to some extent modelled on the Canadian Wheat Board. Since 1935 there has always been a handful of grain producers and grain companies that have tried to undermine, undercut, and destroy the principle of orderly marketing and the Canadian Wheat Board. The same thing applies here.

This is a time to enlarge the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation and give it the tools to do an even bigger job processing plants in the North and in the northern parts of the western provinces.

Mr. Nickerson: Closing them down.

Mr. Benjamin: This is a time to give them the tools on equalizing transportation costs in order that those who are furthest away can get their product to market in central Canada, in the United States, or other parts of the world with some semblance of an equal opportunity and equal competition.

I remember that in 1969 Members of Parliament from northern Canada were citing how, because of transportation costs alone, they had to compete with freshwater fishermen in southern Ontario, southern Quebec and the northern United States who were already catching fish right next door to the big markets. If the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation does nothing else but pool those costs for the benefit of all freshwater fishermen, it would be doing a great service to those fishermen in northern Canada, northern Ontario and western Canada.

Of course we need more fishermen's co-operatives. What they should be doing in their co-operatives is pooling their individual resources and with financial support from their local communities, credit unions, banks, or whatever, to purchase things like boats, motors, nets, and insurance. There is a host of other things which could be pooled in a co-operative which would reduce their costs and provide them with a better return on their catches. To expect individual fishermen or small individual co-operatives to move into the big leagues of the international markets is to be totally unfair to them and can have no other result than to lower prices.

We had examples in 1969 and 1970 of fishermen getting two cents or three cents per pound in the territories, ten cents or fifteen cents per pound in Manitoba, and twenty cents per pound in northern Ontario. Why was this? It was because they were closer to the markets and had better transportation facilities. We have been through this once before. If my hon. friend cannot learn from some recent history, he will be condemned to trying to repeat it, which is exactly what he is trying to do now.

We must have stronger central marketing of primary products such as grain and grain products and fish and fish products. Primary producers, whether they are grain farmers or fishermen, have never been price makers. They have never been allowed to set a price related to their costs of production or to their geographic location. They have always been price takers. What happens is that buyers, in particular international buyers, play one area of the country against another. They will get fishermen in the Northwest Territories trying to underbid the ones in Manitoba or northern Saskatchewan. Fishermen have been through that before, and those who have been in the freshwater fishing industry for a while know what it was like then and do not want it to happen again.

If there are problems regarding certain species or certain lakes, they should be solved by the fishermen themselves meeting with the Freshwater Fish Marketing Advisory Board and with the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation where they can be resolved. If the corporation needs funding on a pay-back basis over a period of years at a preferred interest rate, let us give it so that it can do an even bigger and better job.

Let us look at the annual reports for the last five years which contain some of the things the hon. gentleman is complaining about. We see that 1987 was the best year they ever had. Initial payments and the final payments totalled $48.3 million. If my memory serves me right about catch in the annual report, it works out to about $1 per pound or whatever. In any case, it was the best year ever. All I can say to my hon. friend is: "If it is working, don't try to fix it". He does not need to throw out the baby with the bath water. He should be moving amendments to strengthen the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation so that it can do an even better job for all fishermen in the area which the legislation covers.

I am getting a little tired of seeing the true colour of the Tories. I am not sure whether my hon. friend even knows what supply side economics is, but let me put it to him this way. According to his theory in this legislation, fishermen supply the fish and the market economics tells them how little they will get for it. That has been the problem with the so-called theory of supply side economics. Producers must band together and work co-operatively through their own agency. The agency is there for them and for no one else. We cannot say that it is overburdened with bureaucrats. It does not have a big staff. In fact, it should have half a dozen more people who do nothing but sell freshwater fish and processed fish. There should be more of them doing that in central Canada, in the United States, and in other countries of the world. They need more staff, not less. They do not need friends like my hon. friend from the territories. As far as I am concerned, his legislation means that he is not a friend of orderly marketing to get better income for fishermen. He is also against the best interests of freshwater fishermen generally. He has proven that with what is in his motion. I am appalled that he would try to do it a second time. He did not learn his lesson the first time.

I hope the Government can assure us that the motion will be defeated at second reading, or that it will die in committee where it deserves a totally unnatural death. If the Government cannot give us that assurance, I am sure that we can get enough people to keep it going until five o'clock. Then I hope we will not get to it again until October, 1999, because that is all the motion deserves. I hope my hon. friend will take another look at what he is trying to do and will talk with fishermen all over the North. We not only have good fishermen along our northern lakes and rivers of the prairie provinces, Ontario, and the territories. We have first-class fish. In fact, if you will pardon me, Mr. Speaker, we catch fish that size in northern Canada and the northern parts of the provinces, and that is between the eyes. There is no problem about the quality of fishermen or the size and quality of the fish. However, there is a problem with a few Hon. Members in this place and a handful of disgruntled fishermen. I do not think the hon. gentleman from the territories is doing much to help them with their problems. All he is trying to do is to make them worse.

If there are problems, they can be solved through the fishermen's agency because it belongs to them, not to the Government of Canada. It was set up by Parliament for the welfare, good order, and benefit of freshwater fishermen. It was long overdue. I suppose that every year or two a couple of hon. gentlemen will come into this place and try to wreck what it took decades to build up. Instead of bringing in Bills to improve and strengthen the legislation, they will try to bring in legislation to kill it, and that can only be to the detriment and loss of freshwater fishermen in our part of Canada.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I do not deny the Hon. Member the right to bring this legislation forward during Private Members' Hour. It is his right. It is his prerogative as an elected Member of the House to introduce legislation and to seek the approval of all Hon. Members to ensure passage of the Bill.

As I understand it, the net effect of Bill C-211 will be to gut the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. I do not purport to be an expert on the responsibilities and functions of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, but I want to take this opportunity to take the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) to task for what might appear to some people to be a certain degree of hypocrisy. Let me explain why.

As the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) pointed out, the Minister, who was then a Member, one of many, a lowly back-bencher, made a speech on July 10, 1980. That is seven and a half years ago. What did he have to say? The Member for Richmond—South Delta, who is now the Minister of Fisheries, spoke about the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. If you bear with me for a moment, Mr. Speaker, I will quote a paragraph from his speech. It must have been a hot day, but he said:

> I suggest what we have now is a system of monopolistic dominance in the fishmarketing industry, in the prairie provinces in particular, which is a far cry from what I understand to be the principle of democratic socialism where free enterprise and the private sector can co-operate in competition with one another. What we have is virtual communism in all of its forms in the example and illustration of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. Complete monopoly powers are reflected in part III of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act to buy, sell, trade and engage in all handling of fish caught in freshwater areas of Canada. This monopolistic corporation comes complete with its mandarins and represents a significant drain on the public purse.

That is what the Minister said on July 10, 1980. You know that we in the Opposition are somewhat concerned about the Tory Members of Parliament who say one thing when it is convenient to say something on one side of an issue and then, at some later point in time, for whatever reason say another thing. We have documented Tory hypocrisy, if you will, over the last number of years. This is another example. The Minister said seven or eight years ago that this board consisted of mandarins and was virtually communistic. Now it appears that he has changed his mind. All of a sudden it is no longer communist. In fact, this corporation is so worthy of support that he is urging his colleagues to defeat a Private Members' Bill introduced by another Conservative Member of Parliament.

What caused the Member back in 1980 to refer to it as communism and today have a change of heart? We know that Mikhail Gorbechev was in Washington last week. We know that, together with Raisa Gorbechev, they were able to woo the American people and woo the world. There was glasnost, treaties and East meeting West.

The Fisheries Minister did not indicate whether it was that that caused him to change his mind. Canadians have a right to expect their politicians to do as they say and not do things they say they are not going to do. Is it any wonder that people call into question the credibility and honesty of the Conservative Government when, on the one hand, it calls the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation communistic and then, when it is convenient, says what a great corporation it is.

We know how successful that corporation is. Maurice Blanchard from the Fisheries Advisory Committee said, "We strongly support the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation and oppose Bill C-11 and any other moves that would weaken this organization. By any industry measure"—and I am quoting his letter of November 23, 1987—"the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation is a success. It has shown steady growth and has just completed another year of record sales and record returns to the fishermen".

I will not go on about how the corporation was established by a Liberal Government, except to say that I appreciate the fact that the New Democratic Party has, in effect, through the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) applauded the previous Liberal administration for establishing the corporation.

One could go on about the New Democratic Party and how it applauds the previous Liberal administration when it is convenient, but when it is inconvenient the NDP is quick to criticize everything Liberal.

In the spirit of Christmas I will conclude my remarks and take this opportunity to wish you, Mr. Speaker, a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year and to say to Hon. Members opposite that, hopefully, their New Year's resolution will be not to be as hypocritical as they were in the past.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I try as much as I can to erase in a way the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) from my memory, but he has done his usual bit.

With respect to the creation of this Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, I think the record will show that the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) referred to the fact that its creation was supported by all four Parties in the House of Commons at the time. It was supported because it was generally regarded as something long overdue, probably something which the Liberal Government of the day should have done some years before, having finally done it. The fact remains that there was then and there is now a consensus as to the value of having this Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation in existence.

I rise to speak because I have an interest in the Corporation. Its major processing plant is in my riding. I have had occasion to visit it a number of time. I even worked there for a short time one summer way back.

It has been interesting to have the comments of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) made back in 1980 read into the record. Not only was that interesting but I do not know what the Hon. Member for York South—Weston was doing when he was admonishing him about being inconsistent. I am thankful that the Minister has changed his view and that he is not as stupid as he was in 1980. I am thankful that finally he seems to have grown a brain cell or two when it comes to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. The fact that the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) is still on the same level as the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans was in 1980 is something to be regretted. I hope that the difference between what the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans said in 1980 and what he says now is not hypocrisy but a sign of some development, education, a coming to appreciate reality. I hope that is the case.

Might I also say that it makes me nervous that we can still have Conservative back-benchers moving these kinds of Private Members' Bills. It makes me nervous because we are in the middle of a larger debate in this country right now which will start tomorrow concerning the free trade agreement.

A contentious issue in the free trade agreement has been the role of marketing boards and orderly marketing. It makes me nervous, and it should make all Canadians nervous who are attached to the principle and value of orderly marketing, whether it be the orderly marketing of grains through the Canadian Wheat Board or the orderly marketing of fish through the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board, that the Government, which assures them that the role of marketing boards is not at risk as the result of this free trade agreement, is a government that has in its caucus people like the Hon. Member for Western Arctic and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. In 1980 he said that the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board was an example of communism. That is part of the problem with the context in which reassurances are given by the Government with respect to how much it wants to protect orderly marketing in the free trade agreement.

We know that within the Conservative Party, there are long-standing enemies of orderly marketing. There are people over there who have always despised orderly marketing. Yet these are the people from whom we are supposed to accept reassurances that they have gone out of their way and done everything possible to protect orderly marketing in the free trade agreement.

We know full well that, at least on the public record, Members like the Hon. Member for Western Arctic are still trying to kill the principle of orderly marketing. There are many others who are perhaps not as—I do not know exactly what quality to ascribe to the Hon. Member for Western Arctic, but I will be polite and say, people who are not as persistent and up front about their beliefs but nevertheless are looking for every opportunity that presents itself to erode one of the fundamentals of the Canadian economy, the principle of orderly marketing.

Enough said about that. We hope that we can dismiss this Bill this afternoon and move on to more important things in the hope that, after the next election, there will be a new Member of Parliament from Western Arctic who will have a much different attitude toward orderly marketing.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join in this debate in support of my colleagues who are in opposition to the private Member's Bill put forward by my colleague , the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). In entering this debate, I must underline what appears to be a very serious break within the Tory caucus in regard to this particular Private Member's Bill.

We have heard from a member of the Government in support of this agency and we have heard from Members on this side, but I find that the divisions across the way are very telling indeed. I heard my colleague from Newfoundland talk about some of the aspects of this agency. I heard my colleague from the New Democratic Party being very eloquent in support of change, talking about the substance of this particular Private Member's Motion, something that is quite unusual for him. I must underline that the divisions across the way, as telling as they are, leave many Members on all sides of the House with a very fishy taste when it comes to the intent of the motion.

In essence, the intent of the motion is to gut an agency which I believe has served Canadians rather well. There is no question that there could be improvements made to it. Opportunities for improvements are important to any piece of legislation passed by Parliament, but to suggest that gutting the effectiveness of this agency will in some way improve the situation is, I think, not in order at all.

On that note, I must say that I would be in opposition to the Hon. Member's motion.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the debate that has gone on since five o'clock on Bill C-211 proposed by my hon. colleague from Western Arctic. The Hon. Member is proposing that the House amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act and refer his Bill to a legislative committee.

After hearing the comments from all sides of the House, I am appalled that Hon. Members would not allow this Bill to go to committee for study. First we heard from a member of the socialist Party, the NDP, who said that they will kill it in committee and it shall never come up again before 1999. Is that an open mind?

I wish to speak in support of the motion because I think it is important that the Bill go to committee. I would like to outline why I think it should go to committee.

There are a number of freshwater fishermen in my riding along the Lesser Slave Lake area who depend on freshwater fish for their livelihoods. They give limited support to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board which is located in Winnipeg. I say that they give limited support to it because, until approximately two years ago, freshwater fishermen in northern Alberta could not market their fish outside northern Alberta. They could not take their fish to Edmonton and market it there. They could not sell it to retail outlets or processors in Calgary, they could only sell it in northern Alberta. That gave them a very limited market.

To get pickerel, which is in high demand, whitefish and trout to market in Calgary, the fishermen had to ship the fish first to Winnipeg, and then the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board would ship the order back to Edmonton or Calgary. Indeed, in some cases, the board even sent orders to Grande Prairie, which is 150 kilometres away from the area where the fish was caught.

Mr. Benjamin: So provide them with more facilities.

Mr. Shields: The fishermen of my area have indicated very strongly their support for the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board for many of the reasons pointed out by my hon. friend from the socialist Party. However, he has failed to express the dissatisfaction that exists, maybe not with the freshwater fishermen from Lake Winnipegosis or Lake Winnipeg, but clearly with fishermen in northern Saskatchewan, northern Alberta and northern British Columbia. These fishermen do not have the same advantages as the freshwater fishermen in Manitoba.

My colleague interjected by asking, why should we not give them more facilities in the other parts of the province? I would agree with that, but how do we do that? Do we do that by saying that we will not even study this Bill? We all know that if the Bill goes to committee, we are capable of amending it. We are capable of addressing the concerns of the fishermen from Athabasca, Peace River, Atikameg, Fort Chipewyan, Lake Athabasca, Lesser Slave Lake and all of the little lakes in northern Alberta. Let us listen to what they have to say. I think they have some concerns that they perceive to be legitimate and there are ways that we can change the practices of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board by removing its monopoly or retaining its monopoly but adding other services.

Fishermen from the Lesser Slave Lake area, particularly those from the West End Fishery Co-op, have been able to secure solid markets that the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board has not found in the past, even with its high paid salesmen who seek markets. The little freshwater fish co-op, called the West End Fishery Co-op, has found markets itself but has been denied access to those markets unless it they went through the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation in Winnipeg. That small group of fishermen have found markets in the United States on their own. They turned the information on these markets over to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board in Winnipeg in order to secure the markets. The Freshwater Fish Marketing Board has not, to date, secured those markets.

It seems to me that that is an indication of a complacent Crown corporation. The employees are not paid on the basis of expanding the market but only on the basis of their job descriptions. I am not denying for a moment that the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board in Winnipeg has done a good job for the fishermen on Lake Winnipeg, Lake Winnipegosis, and the lakes in northern Manitoba. However, it does not adequately serve the fishermen in northern Alberta, northern Saskatchewan, northern British Columbia, or the Territories. I am sure it is not by design of the corporation, but I am sure the corporation would be the first to admit that it has problems trying to control the flow of fish.

I am sure that there are an awful lot of people in this House who are prepared to vote against this legislation being referred to committee who do not understand the problems facing freshwater fishermen in Canada.

When I came to this House in 1980 one of the first things I tried to do—in which, I might add, I was successful—was to have freshwater fishermen included under the Unemployment Insurance Act. Until that time they were lumped in with the West Coast and East Coast fishermen, although their time of unemployment was absolutely counter to that of the East Coast and West Coast fishermen.

I want to give credit where credit is due. I took this problem to the then Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). We worked on the problem together and were able to accomplish something which was long overdue. Freshwater fishermen had for many years paid unemployment insurance premiums but could never avail themselves of the benefits of it.

I truly believe that this legislation should go to the committee for study. Let us learn from the fishermen in northern Alberta, northern British Columbia, and northern Saskatchewan the problems that they face.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret but the Hon. Member's time has expired. Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I wish to exercise my right of reply under Standing Order 61(2).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow the Hon. Member to make his last speech, which will talk out the Bill.

Mr. Nickerson: I understand, Sir, that before you recognize me, pursuant to Standing Order 61(2), to exercise the right of reply it is incumbent upon the Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 61(3), to give the necessary advice to the House in case anyone else wishes to speak. If I were to start speaking now, I would close the debate. Therefore, it is incumbent upon you, Sir, pursuant to that article, to give the necessary advice.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have no problem with that. The Hon. Member was not interrupted, therefore, he will be the last speaker the next time this Bill appears on the Order Paper.

The house provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the order is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce that there have been discussions among the Parties. Tomorrow, as House business, the House will debate the following motion:

> That this House endorse as being in the national interest the Canada-United States free trade agreement, the legal text of which was tabled in the House of Commons on Friday, December 11, 1987.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to confirm that, even though the usual 48 hours' notice has not been given for this motion, we are willing to give consent to have the debate on it start tomorrow. I want to make it clear that, while there is agreement that the debate start tomorrow, there is no agreement that it should finish in any precipitous or rushed manner.

We believe that the matter of the Government's trade agreement with the United States is so important that not only should there be a full opportunity for a reasoned and measured debate in this House, even more important, there should be full parliamentary hearings on the full and final text of the agreement to give Canadians in general, as well as parliamentarians, the opportunity to study and consider in depth and in detail the text of the agreement in question. They certainly did not have that opportunity during the committee hearings which were just completed.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that we are giving our consent not to have the usual 48 hours' notice to begin the debate, but that it is as far as our consent goes with regard to this matter.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party caucus I would like to indicate our support for having the debate begin tomorrow. However, I would also indicate that we believe the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should have kept his promise to the people of Canada. On October 5 he said that the final document would go to a committee of this House. That will obviously not happen. We consider that yet another broken promise of the Prime Minister.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

The House resumed from Friday, December 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 13(5), the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the motion for third reading of Bill C-87.

Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Hockin) which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I take it that we are now proceeding to vote on the Private Member's Motion that was deferred until today.

I would suggest that, following our practice, and after consulting with my many friends in this place, we agree that you go row by row, Mr. Speaker. Since it is a free vote, it is up to individual Members to express their vote according to their conscience.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House in agreement that the division be taken by rows?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

ADVISABILITY OF DECLARING CANADA A NUCLEAR ARMS FREE ZONE

The House resumed consideration from Friday, December 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Young:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of declaring Canada a nuclear arms free zone by prohibiting the deployment, testing, construction and transportation of nuclear weapons and associated equipment through and within Canada, the export of goods and materials for use in the construction and deployment of nuclear arms and further, the Government should encourage cities, provinces and states throughout the world to take similar action.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is at this point that I would like to remind Hon. Members that the voting will begin with those Members who are in favour of the motion in the rows to my right. They will rise by row, and then those Members in the rows to my left will rise later. I will ask those Members who are opposed to the motion in the rows to my right to rise, and end with those Members opposed to the motion in the rows to my left.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Young) which was negatived on the following division:

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND INTERNATIONAL TRADE

PRESENTATION OF FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the fourth report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade.

The report has a common introduction, a common background section, a very large section concerning the witnesses whom we heard and the broad spectrum of opinion, and a relatively short common ground section. Then there are three reports: A majority view, a minority view of the Liberal Party, and a minority view of the New Democratic Party. I believe it represents the spectrum of opinion that is in the country and perhaps in this House.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions between the Parties. I think you will find there is unanimous agreement for the following motion to be put to the House immediately. I move:

> That, on Wednesday, December 16, 1987, at 4.30 p.m., the Speaker shall interrupt any proceeding then under way and the House shall revert to the routine proceeding of "Statements by Ministers" for a statement by the Minister of Finance;
> And, that following replies to such statement and any related tabling by the Minister, the House shall resume consideration of the proceeding which had been interrupted by the Speaker;
> And, that the Speaker shall adjourn the House at the ordinary hour of daily adjournment.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PETITIONS

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege, indeed, honour, to present a petition on behalf of a number of westerners who indicate that the Conservative Government has no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States and are concerned that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and will undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

They point out that the agreement denies Canadians the secure access to the United States market which was the key objective in these negotiations, but threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

Therefore, they are calling upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

• (1110)

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a number of citizens of Thunder Bay and Schreiber, Ontario.

The petitioners say that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States.

Whereas the proposed trade agreement denies Canadians secure access to the U.S. market, which was the key objective in these negotiations, and threatens loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs, the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition signed by residents of Canada stating their objection to the trade agreement negotiated by the Government. They believe it threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians and to equalize opportunities between the regions of Canada.

Therefore, the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from a great many Canadians who wish to have their concern about the free trade agreement expressed in the House today as we begin the debate.

They believe it would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and would undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

They believe this agreement would deny Canadians the secure access to the U.S. market that was the key objective in these negotiations. They also believe that Parliament should be dissolved and that the people of Canada should be given the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour of presenting a petition to the House. Actually, there are six petitions.

The petitioners declare that the Government has no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised and yet this agreement threatens the very fabric of Canadian society. It also removes the powers of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources and to equalize opportunities between regions. It denies Canadians the secure access to the United States market that was promised.

Therefore, these petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition from a number of residents of the City of Toronto who are very concerned with the trade deal that has been negotiated between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States.

The petitioners point out that the fabric of Canadian sovereignty is threatened by the proposed Mulroney-Reagan trade deal and that the Government has no mandate to negotiate a free trade deal with the United States.

Because the deal would reduce Canada's ability to plan the economic, social and cultural programs Canadians need and would integrate Canada further into the North American defence industrial base, they ask Parliament to ensure that a national debate takes place on the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal and that this debate result in a national general election before such an agreement is signed.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition from a number of people in northwestern Ontario who believe that the proposed trade agreement not only denies Canadians the secure access to the U.S. market that was the key objective in the negotiations but also threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

Your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the trade agreement during a national general election, and your petitioners in duty-bound will ever pray.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of several hundred people in northern Alberta. In fact, they are all residents of the constituency of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), the constituency of Vegreville.

I thought it would be an appropriate matter to bring to the attention of the House that those people in that constituency say that whereas the Mulroney Government has sold out Canada, whereas Canadian industries are still not protected from U.S. trade laws, whereas the United States obtained everything it wanted in key areas of energy, auto trade, financial services and whereas thousands of jobs are threatened, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to denounce the Government for signing the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement.

The petition is signed by a number of people in the Province of Alberta and the constituency of the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and distinct honour to present a petition on behalf of residents of Nipigon, Red Rock, Armstrong and the City of Thunder Bay, all in my constituency of Thunder Bay—Nipigon.

The petitioners point out that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised during the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised, but the trade agreement negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians and to equalize opportunities between the regions.

Since the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, like my colleagues, I have a petition to present. It is signed by residents of Ontario and is with respect to the trade agreement with the United States.

The petitioners say that whereas the Conservative Government did not have a mandate to conclude such an agreement, whereas the agreement would deny Canada policy freedom in the future to shape its own economic course and whereas the agreement did not succeed in achieving the secure access to the U.S. market that was the key objective, and instead threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs, the petitioners call upon Parliament to give the people of Canada a chance to accept or reject this agreement in a national general election.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 157 and 223.

[Text]

EXPENSES OF NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Question No. 157—Mr. Parry:

1. Since the initiation of the Native Economic Development Program to March 31, 1987, were any funds from its annual budgets expended as administration and/or "overhead" expenses and, if so, what was the (a) total amount (b) percentage of total disbursements under the program this represented?

2. As of June 5, 1987, for the fiscal year 1987-88, what were the (a) budgeted (b) allocated figures for administration and/or "overhead" expenses (c) program disbursements?

3. Will (a) budget (b) allocation reductions be made to the program in 1987-88 and, if so, when will the government confirm this to the board of directors?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): 1. For the Native Economic Development Program, all operating costs such as administration and/or "overhead" expenses are a charge to the original $345 million allocation for the program.

(a) The total amount of Native Economic Development Program funds expended from its annual budgets as administration and/or "overhead" expenses was $17.1 million from the initiation of the program to March 31, 1987.

(b) This figure (17.1 million) represents 21.7 per cent of the total program disbursements to March 31, 1987.

2. (a) Part III of the 1987-88 Estimates for the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion provide projected requirements approved by Parliament of $1 million for grants and $75,224,000 for contributions to be made under the Native Economic Development Program. Funds required in 1987-88 for administration and/or "overhead" expenses have been determined at an additional $5.5 million. This figure represents the over-all requirement for non-salary operating costs and was reported to and approved by the Native Economic Development Board at its meeting on June 10-11, 1987.

(b) Ordinarily, allocations relating to the management of personnel or the administration of government programs which have not been expended are not disclosed to the public. A full and public accounting is made at the end of each fiscal year.

(c) As of June 5, 1987, for the fiscal year 1987-88, disbursements for operating expenditures were $264,000 and $556,000 for grants and contributions.

3. (a) A Budget reductions are not planned for the Native Economic Development Program in 1987-88.

(b) A financial report indicating any budgetary adjustments that might occur is tabled at every Native Economic Development Board meeting.

PERCENTAGE OF WOMEN EMPLOYED BY DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Question No. 223—Mr. Howie:

As of the last date for which information is available, what proportion of the employees of the Department of Agriculture were women?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): As of November 7, 1987, 28 per cent of the employees of the Department of Agriculture were women.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED DENIAL OF INFORMATION TO MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege because I have just learned within the last hour that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) plans to make a speech this afternoon before the Canadian Agricultural Outlook Conference and doubtless will be doing a major publicity activity there. That is part of the territory. It could be argued in this House that such information should be made available to this House of Commons.

However, my question of privilege relates to the fact that the Government has established a lock-up and briefing for the press starting at about 40 minutes from now, which apparently will carry through until 1.45 p.m. when the Prime Minister speaks at the Outlook Conference.

This information and briefing is being provided to the press gallery. Notices and invitations have been posted in the Press Gallery and in the press briefing room at the conference centre. However, repeated calls to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister responsible for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) to make arrangements for Members of Parliament, especially Members of the Opposition, to attend that press lock-up and briefing have drawn no response or actions from the Ministers.

This is clearly a violation of the privileges of Members of the House. They are being denied access to government information while the press is being provided with the information. There are all kinds of precedents. The information provided at the lock-up last Friday morning for the media on the Canada-U.S. trade agreement was also provided to Members of Parliament. The lock-up and briefing on the Auditor General's report includes Members of Parliament.

We know that Canadian agriculture is in crisis. Members of the Opposition should have the same access to information as have members of the press gallery. I call on the Government to take action immediately. If it does not and you, Mr. Speaker, find that I have established a prima facie case to show that the privileges of Members are being trampled on, I would be prepared to move the appropriate motion.

Mr. Speaker: This may be a point of order but it is clearly not a question of privilege. It may well be a complaint. However, as I said yesterday and have been saying repeatedly, especially in the interests of Canadians who are watching this, a question of privilege relates to something which has happened, something which was done, something which was said, or something which has not taken place, which impinges on the ability of a private Member to carry on his or her duties as a Member of Parliament in the interests of the people of Canada.

While the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) may very well raise a matter of complaint, it does not extend to privilege. However, I will take it as a point of order and it may be that the Government would wish to respond. However, that is completely up to the Government.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, whether it is a question of privilege or a point of order, it is clearly an alleged anticipatory breach, in my opinion. I heard what my hon. colleague said. We will look into the matter and try to ensure that all Members of the House get the same information at the same time. I have no knowledge that they will not.

I am pleased that my hon. friend drew to the attention of the House, through Hansard, the efforts that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is making on behalf of Canadian farmers. I believe this is the first time he has ever attended this type of conference. We appreciate all the support we can get in getting the word out. I would like to thank my hon. friend.

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED MISSTATEMENT OF NUMBER OF SIGNATURES

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I had occasion this morning to see one of the petitions that was tabled by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) after his protestation that it had several hundred signatures on it. There are 84 signatures on it. I also notice that it has never been certified by the Clerk of Petitions which is a requirement under our Standing Orders.

Mr. Axworthy: I am sorry, it was.

Mr. McKinnon: I would like to ensure that petitions tabled in this House are referred to more accurately as to numbers and, in all cases, certified by the Clerk of Petitions in accordance with our standards.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The certificate signed by Clairette Bourque, the Clerk of Petitions, duly certified this petition. Unfortunately, the staple came off and the sheet in question was not included with the petition. I would be happy to table that with the petition in the name of my hon. friend.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) may be wondering whether, when the staple came off, some of the signatures came off as well.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I will not speak to that point, but I am glad that the Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) found nothing wrong with any of the petitions presented by the New Democratic Party caucus.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair appreciates interventions by all Hon. Members on this matter. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and all Hon. Members will be properly aided in their presentation of petitions by the knowledge that occasionally other Hon. Members do count the number of signatures on a petition. It is probably appropriate now to call for Orders of the Day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

TRADE

CANADA—U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade) moved:

That this House endorse, as being in the national interest, the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement, the legal text of which was tabled in the House of Commons on Friday, December 11, 1987.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Before we begin this important debate, I wonder whether you would consider seeking the unanimous consent of the House to allow the spokesperson for the New Democratic Party to have ample time to speak as will the speakers for the Government and the Official Opposition.

Mr. Lewis: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Minister of State for immediately indicating agreement. I am looking to the Official Opposition; there is agreement there in accordance with the usual courtesies in this place. I thank the Hon. Member for raising the matter. The Hon. Minister has the floor.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased today to be able to rise and speak to the motion:

That this House endorse, as being in the national interest, the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement, the legal text of which was tabled in the House of Commons on Friday, December 11, 1987.

I am sure all Members of the House will agree that it was a truly historic moment when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) tabled, after two years of effort, the free trade agreement with the U.S.

The Opposition is spending a great deal of time outlining what the free trade agreement is not. That is seen in the petitions which were tabled today by Members of the Opposition. As an example, the petition tabled by the Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) said that the free trade agreement struck at the very fabric of Canadian society.

This is a trade agreement, Mr. Speaker. It is a big trade agreement between two countries. It does not strike at the very fabric of our society. Our country was built on trade from the earliest days of settlement. We are among the world's top traders. The jobs of three million Canadians depend on trade. It is clear that the free trade agreement, which is aimed at liberalizing and increasing trade, is very much in the national interest.

The Member for Vancouver East also said erroneously that the free trade agreement will increase foreign ownership in energy. That is simply not true. The provisions with regard to energy in the agreement very clearly protect Canadian ownership. There is nothing in the free trade agreement that would in any way increase foreign ownership in energy.

Then we have the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) in his petition talking again about what the free trade agreement is not. The Hon. Member in his petition talks about the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs. Let me remind the Hon. Member how wrong they have been in the past. Only one year ago we were in the House discussing the subject of softwood lumber. At that time we were negotiating a tax with the U.S. which we would impose in lieu of a countervail in order that we could collect the funds required here in Canada and leave the provinces free to manage their resources on their own timetable. This is something that we have accomplished and will be announcing shortly as B.C. moves to deal with the softwood lumber issue.

It is worth noting that at that time the provincial NDP and the IWA, the forestry union, supported us on softwood lumber. The Opposition stated that there would be hundreds of thousands of jobs lost. I wish to point out the news contained in the softwood lumber industry study prepared by the IWA, the very union that supported us, the very union that the workers, which states, "The massive job losses which many Canadian observers believed would surely result from the imposition of the 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber . . . simply have not occurred". The report goes on to state, "Altogether 600 sawmill jobs were added in British Columbia during that period", because, of course, Canadian production during the first eight months of 1987 exceeded records, according to this report.

Miss Carney: The IWA union report further states, "A check on the few mill closures that have been announced throughout Canada during 1987 reveals that they were caused by a number of factors, including severe shortages of economically priced timber and outdated, inefficient sawmill facilities. In no instance that we know of can the export tax be directly blamed as the sole cause of closure. And in one or two cases closed mills have been slated for reopening with new options for timber supplies". That is how accurate they are when they state that hundreds of thousands of jobs will be lost with the free trade agreement. That is wrong.

Then the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), like other NDP Members, states that the free trade agreement will somehow stop or limit our policy to set our own economic path in the future. Many of the NDP Members maintain that this will affect our sovereignty. I want to point out that this is wrong. I think that it is worth quoting Keith Spicer, a Citizen editor, who today came out in favor of this agreement. The Ottawa Citizen has been very cautious, waiting until the final text came out. Its editors actually read the agreement which is more than perhaps many of the opposition Members have done. The Ottawa Citizen points out that the people who talk about sovereignty probably have not read the deal and most never will. In the article Mr. Spicer states:

> There lurks in the minds of many of these professional patriots (apart from some specific partisan biases) a veritable Disneyland of neuroses about Canada: fear over hope; protectionism over risk-taking; a preference for the small, safe homeland over the scary grand stage of North America; pessimism over optimism; a love of hiding over seeking; a taste for tribe over individual.

The Ottawa Citizen editor concludes by stating:

> Isn't it time to stop being afraid? Isn't it time to grow up?

I think that puts it very clearly with respect to the sovereignty issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: It is time for Canada to grow up and join in a free trade agreement which will help to secure the future for ourselves and for our children.

Having spent some time talking about what the free trade agreement is not, which I will return to in the future, I would now like to talk about what it is.

It is a trade agreement in the language of trade agreements. It is actually the largest trade agreement ever negotiated between two countries. We have the largest bilateral trading relationship in the world, something in the order of $200 billion a year.

Second, it is a trade agreement negotiated under the GATT, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. The Opposition is often in favour of the GATT, speaks highly of it, and wants us to continue our multilateral negotiations in the GATT. May I point out what I have stated earlier, that in the very beginning of the free trade agreement, Part One, Chapter One, Article 101: Establishment of the Free Trade Area, it states:

> The Government of Canada and the Government of the United States of America, consistent with Article XXIV of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, hereby establish a free trade area.

Therefore, it is consistent with the international global system. I can certainly tell the House that once it is signed, it will be studied by the GATT to ensure that it is consistent with GATT rules. It is a trade agreement that we are talking about.

What does this trade agreement state? Again, it is dealing with tariffs. We are dealing with the complete elimination in 10 years of all tariffs between the two countries.

For the record, we should note our gratitude and our thanks to all the members of our SAGITs, our advisory groups, the 300 people who helped us over the two year period to define what tariffs should be lowered in what time period. All the industries involved are very much a part of the evolving of the free trade agreement. They helped us decide which tariffs go in year one, which tariffs go in year five, and which tariffs go in year 10. It is a balanced arrangement.

It means that on January 1, 1999 the remaining tariff barriers on trade between the two countries will be phased out. Some tariffs will go in stages of one-tenth, others will go in stages of 20 per cent a year, but at the end of the period there will be no tariffs between the two countries. Some people say that if we already have no tariffs on approximately 75 per cent of our trade, why is it so important to remove the remaining ones? It is those remaining tariffs that keep us in the category of drawers of water and hewers of wood which the Opposition likes to paint as an alternative to free trade. It is those tariffs which keep us out of some of the most lucrative markets in North America.

For example, the one that is very close to home for western Canadians is the tariff on petrochemicals. The tariff on feedstock is only approximately 1.5 per cent to 2 per cent going to the United States, but the tariff on petrochemicals going to the United States is approximately 15 to 18 per cent. When that tariff is lowered—and if my memory serves me correctly I believe those tariffs go in five years, 20 per cent, 20 per cent, and out—that whole industry will have access to the richest market in the world. That will be very good news for Sarnia, it will be very good news for Alberta and other producers. The elimination of those last tariff barriers open up lucrative markets and good opportunities for Canadians. It gives us better terms than those available to our major competitors in the United States. Of course, the manner in which we have phased tariffs out helps to give maximum protection to our most sensitive industries.

I also wish to point out what the free trade agreement is. It confirms and will carry out the concept of national treatment. National treatment is at the heart and soul of trade negotiations around the world. National treatment simply means that you do not discriminate against other people's goods.

In looking at the free trade agreement, this chapter incorporates the fundamental national treatment obligation of the GATT into the free trade agreement. It means that once goods have been imported into either country they will not be the object of discrimination. We find that every time we go shopping. When a Canadian goes shopping there is not a different set of rules for a Volvo and a car made in the riding of the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid). If a Canadian buys a camera, there is no different treatment in the store between one made in Canada and one made by our trading partner in Japan. We all take national treatment for granted. We have it every day in our lives. National treatment for American goods and Canadian goods in each other's market is confirmed under this free trade agreement.

Another subject covered by the free trade agreement is agriculture. This is very important to Canadians and it is worth noting again that this is the first time that agriculture has been included in a free trade agreement in a major way. I am told by our negotiators that it has eluded us in the GATT for 40 years. For 40 years we have been trying to get agriculture addressed in the international trading system. We are working very hard in the international trading system to do that. In the meantime we have in the free trade agreement more secure access to the U.S. for agriculture and food products. Some examples are meat and livestock, grains and oilseeds, and potatoes.

One thing which is important in this area is that each country agrees to stop putting up barriers to red meat imports. That is a major strength of the free trade agreement for the agricultural community, not only for red meat producers but also for grain producers. They tell us that the beef industry is a big market for grain, so the elimination of the barriers to meat imports will be a major benefit to Canadians in the agricultural sector.

Another area covered in the free trade agreement is services, trade in services. I think it is worth noting that when the GATT was designed 40 years ago, people thought only in terms of trade in goods. That is why it is called the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. It speaks only of goods, but now the fastest growing component of trade in the world is services and we are attempting to deal with it in the multilateral round in the GATT.

In the meantime we have made very solid gains in our free trade agreement by coming to agreement on a code for services. It provides that in the future, and for a variety of service sectors, Canadian service companies operating in the U.S. will get the same treatment from the U.S. Government as U.S. firms get and, of course, vice versa. This will be important to Canadians in the future. It is backed up by temporary business permits which will allow Canadians and Americans to move freely across the border in order to ensure that they can service each other's markets. It is very important for Canadians.

Another subject covered by the free trade agreement is automobiles. Here there are no major changes from the October text. We have always said that the agreement is good for Canada and good for Ontario. We call it the Auto Pact plus, because we have kept in place the fundamental elements of the Auto Pact and we have added provisions which will create new opportunities for production, employment, and other opportunities. For example, one of them is the very high standard of North American content which is being provided for.

I would like to add here something which people may forget, that the provisions in the agreement were negotiated by Simon Reisman who, of course, was the person who negotiated the main Auto Pact. No one is in a better position to strengthen the Auto Pact than Mr. Reisman. I am reminded of a comment made by a young man in Windsor when I went down to speak there. I was talking with him about the provisions in the free trade agreement for automobiles and finally I asked, "What do you think about it?" He said, "Well, I have never been worried about this, Minister, because as soon as I heard that Simon Reisman was for it I thought it was fine with me because he did a good job the first time around and I can trust him to do a good job the second time around".

Mr. Murphy: Is that the highlight of your speech, Pat?

Miss Carney: The Hon. Member asks if that is the highlight of my speech. Clearly he has not been listening. The highlight of my speech is to say what is in the free trade agreement, not, as the Opposition concentrates on, what is not in the free trade agreement. If the Hon. Member directs his mind to what I am talking about, it may be possible for him in future to talk about what is in the free trade agreement.

Another provision in the free trade agreement is procurement. We have broadened the provision of the GATT governing the procurement code by lowering the threshold level at which Canadian companies can bid for U.S. Government contracts. This means an additional $4 billion market in the U.S. for government contracts which is now open to Canadians. That is what we call a tiny perfect package. It is a good start in the procurement area. Canada wanted more, as I have said in the House, but the U.S. was being cautious in this area. We still maintain our defence sharing procurement, but the $4 billion is a good start for a lot of small businesses in Canada.

In energy we have negotiated the freest possible bilateral trade giving us secure tariff-free access to the U.S. market. We have a commitment to consultation on energy regulatory changes if these are inconsistent with the principles of the agreement. It provides for energy security on both sides of the border and, most important, it represents great opportunities for Canadian exports of oil, natural gas, electricity, and uranium which in the past have been harassed and threatened with the loss of market.

By securing the market for energy resources we have created the condition where we can attract the new investment required to develop our energy resources for Canadians in the future. I think that our energy package is one of the highlights of this agreement. It is not a continental energy policy as the Opposition says. We maintain our ownership of the resource. We maintain our right to manage it, to conserve it, and to regulate it. We maintain all the powers that the provinces had before in this agreement. We maintain, as I said earlier, the foreign ownership restrictions, but we have secured the market. I think that is a big plus in the over-all agreement.

Getting down to some of the other issues in the free trade agreement, of course we have the method of settling disputes. We have a method of which the world is extremely envious. We have an agreement to get a binational system for resolving trade disputes in a way which binds both parties. That is a major breakthrough. When the opposition Parties talk about the loss of sovereignty, it is odd that they never comment on the fact that by agreeing to a binational binding dispute settlement mechanism which replaces their own appeal process in the U.S. it is a tacit agreement by the U.S. to take a binational system in lieu of its own area of sovereignty. I believe that if we had this apparatus in place two years ago the softwood lumber case and some of the other cases, such as the potash one we currently have, would have been stopped in their tracks.

In future, when the law in either country has run its course, it will be Canadians as well as Americans who will decide on the final outcome of the case. Of course the key part of this dispute settlement element is that we will be creating in the interim a new body of law that will be binding on both parties. When people say to me "what is so important about that", I point out that if we have a market which is one large market and it replaces two markets, we need new laws. Let us think of it in terms of anti-dumping. The whole concept of anti-dumping is a concept of dumping into somebody else's market. If we have under free trade one market we need new laws, and both countries will be working to develop that in the future.

Mr. Cassidy: You said that we would have the new laws by now.

Miss Carney: The Opposition says that we were to have the new laws by now. We tried to do that, we tried to do that.

Mr. Cassidy: You failed and you still bought the deal.

Miss Carney: We tried very hard to do that, and we could not agree on a way of doing that in a way which met our objectives, so we—

Mr. Cassidy: So you threw away our bargaining power.

Miss Carney: —set ourselves the objective of giving us time to develop those new laws. In the meantime we have a way of settling disputes which is binding on both countries. It is an improvement over the situation we have now.

Turning again to what the free trade agreement is not, again it is not eroding our cultural sovereignty. I ask Hon. Members to examine the text of the free trade agreement and they will find an annex which says that cultural industries are particularly exempted from the agreement, from all provisions of the agreement. They are exempted from dispute settlement. The temporary business permit for immigration purposes will not apply to that industry. They will lose many of the benefits of this agreement, but that is what the Prime Minister promised and that is what they asked for.

Social programs are not affected, nor is our capacity to put in place new ones such as child care. I think Hon. Members can see that in the child care program we have developed.

Mr. Cassidy: Tell us about regional development.

Miss Carney: The Hon. Member asks us to tell him about regional development. I would love to tell him about regional development.

Mr. Cassidy: Tell us about countervail against regional development.

Miss Carney: Nothing in the free trade agreement affects our ability now or in the future to achieve our regional development goals.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: We can do today and tomorrow the same things we did yesterday. The difference in the future—

Mr. Cassidy: The Americans can do the same things to us as they did yesterday.

Miss Carney: —will be that the final resolution of such disputes will be by a—

• (1150)

Mr. Speaker: Naturally there is a temptation to intervene occasionally but this House has seen that before. I would point out to the Hon. Member that only a few moments ago the House very graciously granted to the spokesperson for the New Democratic Party a full 40 minute reply. In view of that courtesy, I hope Hon. Members will give the appropriate courtesy to the Minister by letting her continue her speech without interruption.

Miss Carney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can accommodate the Hon. Member's impatience by telling him—

Mr. Axworthy: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: If I could interrupt the Hon. Minister for just a moment. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order just to clarify your remarks. It is our understanding that in the opening round of debates there would be unlimited time. You have now restricted that time to 40 minutes. Could you clarify that, please?

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry. He is absolutely right. It is unlimited time.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take unlimited time, I just intend to deal with a few more things and then we can listen to the remarks of the Opposition.

We were talking about regional development and the Hon. Member yelled, "What about countervail?" May I remind him that our laws and the American laws in this area are entirely consistent with the GATT. This free trade agreement is negotiated within the provisions of the GATT. Our complaint with the Americans in the past in the case of potash, softwood and other issues was what we viewed as an unfair process in the application of these laws. That provision has been met with this binational dispute settlement mechanism. There will be an element of fairness involved when people know that trade remedy cases will be going before an impartial board of Canadians and Americans. Further we have made an improvement in this area. There is an appeal process on very narrow grounds if there is any suspicion of fraud or conflict of interest in these areas, and we have strengthened the dispute settlement mechanism in the final agreement.

I want to point out that for 10 years we have been net exporters of direct investment. Most of that has gone to the United States. This agreement now provides more secure access for investors in the U.S. and assurances of non-discriminatory treatment. That is very important for us because it gives us security of our investment in the U.S.

Since it is a balanced agreement, it gives security in Canada to American investment. If you ask why that is so important, Mr. Speaker, it is because the previous Liberal administration under the National Energy Program expropriated other people's property and the Americans want to ensure that no future Government can adopt those Liberal policies again.

In terms of adjustment, the agreement does not limit us in any way from helping people to adjust to the new trading regime. On the contrary, it provides for a generous phasing-in period over 10 years. Our Government, as the Prime Minister says, is ready to assist Canadian workers who need retraining and ready to assist companies wanting to take greater advantage of the new market opportunities.

If you look at the free trade agreement and see the lower prices to consumers which will flow from the elimination of tariffs, something very important to seniors and to all Canadians; if you look at the new markets that will be created and the new jobs that will be created, you will see why this agreement is very much in the national interest.

I have tried to limit my remarks to what is in the free trade agreement to educate and enlighten members of the Opposition because many of them clearly have not read it. I would like the opposition Parties, because this is a historic debate, to tell the House what alternatives they propose.

Mr. Axworthy: We will.

Miss Carney: We know what the NDP proposes. The New Democrats are entirely against this agreement. They want to stop it and stay in the narrow little world of protectionism.

Mr. Riis: Absolutely false.

Miss Carney: They want to stay in the Dark Ages. They want to retreat into the 19th century.

Mr. Riis: Untruth.

Miss Carney: They refuse to grow up and realize that in the world we have today we have been liberalizing and freeing trade and reducing barriers, but that is not the kind of world the New Democrats want.

Mr. Riis: You are incorrect, Pat.

Miss Carney: In the case of the Liberals we are rather confused about what they propose. First their leader has proposed walking away from the agreement. Then he proposed tearing up the agreement, all 2,000 pages of it. Lately he has been talking about how it is better for some regions than others. He has indicated that he may want to have a second look at the agreement. I think it is time the Liberals told us where they stand on the free trade agreement. Do they totally oppose it? What will they put in its place?

Mr. Frith: We have it right here, in colour.

Miss Carney: I can hardly wait, Mr. Speaker.

This agreement will go into force January 1, 1989.

Mr. Axworthy: There will be an election first. You will be defeated and it will be all over.

Miss Carney: What are they going to do on January 1, 1989 or, say, February 1, 1989? Will they put the tariffs back on all those items in 1989? Will they dismantle the dispute settlement mechanism? Will they dismantle the panels of experts and dismantle the whole appeal process?

Mr. Axworthy: It doesn't matter anyway.

Miss Carney: Will they put the red meat barriers back, on all the other agricultural goods which will be so damaging to the agricultural community? Will they put up the barriers to energy which we have just negotiated away in our own energy policy and enshrined in the free trade agreement?

Mr. Gauthier: That is nonsense, and you know it.

Miss Carney: In 1989 what do they propose to do? Do they propose to put back all the barriers that we so carefully have negotiated away? That is what Canadians want to know.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) opened her remarks by saying that this was a historic moment and a matter of undying concern for all Canadians. She then proceeded to give a speech that would be more reminiscent of a late night barroom brawl than the kind of elocution that might try to give Canadians a sense of purpose, direction and vision of where we are going. That is not surprising because I think the entire treatment of this matter from the time it was announced has been shrouded in secrecy, has been riddled with contradiction and has been tainted with this kind of low-life attitude that we are all right and we do not care what anybody else thinks.

If we describe the process that we have been through, it is more like a shotgun wedding. Consummation before you get to the altar, a hurry-up, gun-at-your-head-signing kind of arrangement and no willingness to deal with the consequences of your act.

Mr. McDermid: That is nonsense.

Mr. Axworthy: We talk about the national interest. I believe that one of the primary issues of the national interest is to ensure that we retain a respect for the democratic institutions of this country, that we retain a respect for the rights of Canadians to participate, to be informed, to have information and, particularly, to be heard.

There has been nothing since this initiative was launched to serve the national interest in strengthening peoples belief or credit in the parliamentary institutions. This institution has been treated with contempt and disdain. It has been ignored, short-circuited simply for the reasons of reaching a political public relations timetable. When the Minister says it is historic, it is historic in the way in which this Government has deliberately gone out of its way to bypass the fundamental institutions of Canada ensuring people have a right to participate.

Just take this morning as an example. Today a Commons committee was to table a report outlining its findings on what Canadians thought about the original document, but the Government has already decided on a final document so all those representations will have absolutely no relevance or impact whatsoever on what the Government will do. Is that not an attitude of cynicism about the way this institution works?

Let us take into account that, contrary to all promises and assurances, the final document contains within it major substantial changes to the agreement, changes affecting the rights of provinces, the right to establish Crown corporations, the control of the entire resource industry of Canada, transportation and agriculture. In other words, it is "Document II", it is not simply a legal redefinition. It was a fundamental alteration. Yet we are now entering into a debate of some few days' length in which the Conservatives will use their overwhelming majority to ram the agreement through so that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will have a so-called mandate to sign the agreement on January 2 without allowing Canadians the opportunity to have had the final document put before a parliamentary forum in which examination, review and debate could take place.

Is that in the national interest? Is it in the national interest for the Government to treat Parliament so blindly that it will create nothing but disrespect for how this institution works or how it should work? Of course, the Minister is so deeply interested in this historic debate she has not managed to stay for two seconds after her own presentation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member who has been here for many years knows that he should not reflect on the attendance of Hon. Members. There are television cameras in the lobbies for Members to watch. I believe the Hon. Minister will probably be back in the Chamber, but I do not think that that type of debate is necessary.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I thought it might be nice if any Minister at all were in the House. I apologize if I trespassed, against the House's rules. I only made that remark to illustrate just how important it really is when we are not even able to have a presence on the front-bench. I withdraw that remark also, but I think it is important to recognize just how this matter is being treated by Members on the government side.

The process was begun in an atmosphere of distrust. A candidate for the role of leader of his Party said with no equivocation that he would never sign a free trade deal because it would destroy Canadian sovereignty. That was a statement made by Mr. Brian Mulroney, private citizen, before he became Leader of the Conservative Party. In that same leadership campaign I recall hearing the words of the now Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the now Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) and the now Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), all of whom declared without any qualification that they would never initiate a free trade deal with the United States. Why? Because it would destroy our sovereignty.

How times have changed. There they sit now, ball on nose, clapping their flippers wildly for the concept that free trade is the biggest bonanza to hit Canada and will not affect sovereignty at all. That is not honest. It is not honest for the Prime Minister to have said he was absolutely sure he would never sign such an agreement and now say that he thinks it is the greatest thing without giving us any reason whatsoever for changing his mind.

What happened? That is an interesting question. What happened on the road to Damascus that caused Saul to change to Paul so suddenly? Once we saw the Prime Minister in action in the beginning of 1984 we realized that he changed his mind on everything. Unfortunately, this issue has an awful lot more impact on Canadians than most of his other gymnastic flip-flops have had.

I am not here to describe the mental acrobatics of the Prime Minister. God knows we have seen enough of that. I am saying, however, that on a matter as crucial as this, surely there was a responsibility and an obligation to explain.

I call to the attention of the House that at the beginning of this debate a cabinet document found its way into opposition hands. This document outlined the communications strategy for the launching of the trade debate. What was that communications strategy? It was basically to keep Canadians in the dark because it said that if Canadians find out what it is really all about, they will oppose it. That is what the document said. It is not something that was conjured up by—

Mr. McDermid: Produce it.

Mr. Axworthy: We will. I will be glad to table the report. I would be glad to have it on the public record.

The fact of the matter is that the debate has been that way right from the start. Has the Government ever given Parliament any clear demonstration of evidence to support its claims? No. Before a Commons committee, the deputy negotiator, Mr. Ritchie, when asked where the studies are to justify his claims for jobs, said that he did not have them.

Mr. Horner: Economic Council of Canada has them.

Mr. Axworthy: Oh, let us stop here. I heard echoing from a mental chamber on the other side that the Economic Council report is their justification. If that is the justification being used by Hon. Members opposite, may I ask why it is that the Economic Council report did not include as a basic premise the service industries to justify its job claims? The service sector only accounts for 60 per cent or 70 per cent of all jobs, but it was not included in the council's report. Furthermore, the Economic Council report said that its assumptions are based upon the fact that Canada will have an exemption from U.S. trade law. Do we have an exemption from U.S. trade law? Of course we do not. So much for the Economic Council report.

If that is the slender reed upon which the Government is basing its case, then God help this country. In fact, the Director of the Economic Council of Canada himself said that they could not give a forecast based upon the present agreement. He said that it would take until at least February to get the numbers. Of course, in the meantime the Prime Minister will already have signed the deal. So much for the evidence of the Government.

Let us continue to discuss another part of the process. The Government brought in its October 4 document and said that it needed a couple of days to brush it up and put the lawyers to work and then we would have a couple of months to debate it. A committee was formed before there was a final document. The committee was instructed to hear from Canadians and, of course, the majority of the members of the committee were so democratically minded that they defeated proposals that invitations be issued to the public at large. They said no, they did not want the public at large corrupting their committee process.

We asked for additional hours of hearings when we were in each city. Of course we were not allowed that. We were allowed a one-night stand in each provincial capital in order to hear presentations. In the Province of Quebec, in which there are six million people, six briefs were heard. That is a grand cross-section of Quebec society, to say nothing of all the other provinces.

That may be the Tory Star Chamber interpretation of democracy; that may be the kind of inquisitorial interpretation that Tories apply to it which means not giving people a chance to participate, but it surely is not a proper examination or opportunity for Canadians to be heard.

Then we got to the point we are now at. We were to have the committee report, but the deal has already been signed, sealed, locked up and delivered with a statement that we cannot change anything in it. It is a shotgun wedding. That is the only way to describe it. It is a gun to the head of the Canadian public. The deal was already forged before it was even made public.

We know what the consequences will be. A very important statement was made by the Anglican Archbishop, the Primate of Canada, before the committee. He said that the Government has a moral obligation to explain the consequences of its acts. He said that the Government has not done that. We are still waiting for that moral obligation to be fulfilled.

The process speaks for itself. I contend that it is not in the national interest to totally ignore democratic rights in this country, especially because the Government is committing what one can only call the big lie of propaganda. The Minister repeated it this morning when she said that this is only a trade deal.

The agreement we are debating goes far beyond the conventional process of bringing down some tariff barriers or dealing with non-tariff barriers. How can a Minister of the Crown say that it is simply a trade deal when there are clear limitations on the rights of this Parliament to deal with questions of foreign investment in the future? How can the Government say that it is only a trade deal when there is a direct limitation on the right of federal and provincial Governments in the future to establish Crown corporations the way they see fit? How can it say it is only a trade deal when the way in which we manage our resources and set prices for energy and other resources is clearly prescribed, limited and handicapped by this deal?

Section 409 states that all goods can no longer have discriminatory pricing set on them. It is hardly just a trade deal when every jurisdiction in this country that wishes to trade a good or service with the United States will no longer be able to set different prices to Government action. That is not trade, it is a direct limitation on the sovereignty of every Parliament and assembly in this country.

How can it only be a trade deal when it extends its reach into every jurisdiction in this country, including energy, agriculture, services and banking?

We are being told that as legislators we can no longer make decisions in these areas. We can no longer have the right as a sovereign Parliament to make laws and rules according to our best judgment, after debating them with other Canadians and other provinces and coming to grips with the issues in the fine old Canadian tradition. No longer do we have rights in these areas.

Vast areas within public jurisdiction in Canada have disappeared and future generations of Canadians will never have the rights in these areas that were enjoyed by previous generations. That is not a trade agreement. It is a form of sovereignty association, economic union, economic integration. Whatever one wishes to call it, it goes far beyond the boundaries of trade.

If we were simply negotiating a reduction of tariffs, there might be less worry because we could debate that in terms of its direct impact on industries. This far-reaching agreement extends into unchartered waters for which Canadians have no map to understand it. How can the Minister say with any credibility that it is simply a little trade matter about which Canadians should not worry.

One must ask if the Minister ever wonders why Canadians from coast to coast, in every region, are exercised and anguished about this deal? That would not be the case if this was simply a matter of reducing some tariffs on vegetables or other items. We are seeing incredible division, anxiety and controversy in Canada because Canadians see their fundamental right to choose what kind of country they want in the area of public policy disappear in front of them.

It is fascinating that a Prime Minister who said he would seek election on a platform of national reconciliation is offering what will undoubtedly be the most disputatious and divisive initiative in the history of this country. It is dividing people all across Canada, and not only on regional grounds, because we discovered in committee that people in Alberta are as deeply divided on this issue as people in Ontario, Quebec or the Atlantic Provinces. Yet we heard those scurrilous attempts by the Prime Minister and the Premier of Saskatchewan to suggest this is just a matter of the West versus Ontario. What a low-life approach.

Mr. McDermid: He never said that.

Mr. Axworthy: The Prime Minister, who was going to be the author of national reconciliation, is in fact trying to set region against region in a way that is simply designed to sell his arrangement with Mr. Reagan. That is hardly in the national interest when one sees how deeply this proposal cuts into the very soul of this country.

Let us consider the arguments being advanced by the Government. It was fascinating to hear the somewhat qualified remarks of the Minister for International Trade today. Unlike the bombast of the past, today we did not hear those kinds of grand, eloquent promises. When the Prime Minister announced this agreement, he said that it would be the solution for all that ails Canada.

Mr. McDermid: He never said that.

Mr. Axworthy: He said that if there were problems with regional development, free trade with the U.S. will help that.

Mr. McDermid: He never said that.

Mr. Axworthy: Yes, he did.

Mr. McDermid: No, he did not.

Mr. Axworthy: Yes, he did. He said if there are problems with productivity, free trade will help it. If there are problems with growth, free trade will help it. It will also help grow hair and eliminate warts at the same time. That is all it will do, eliminate warts.

Mr. Marchi: The Parliamentary Secretary is interested.

Mr. Axworthy: Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary is interested in it because he thinks it will grow hair.

The Government, its business allies and other advocates of this deal have presented no hard, clear evidence to demonstrate to Canadians exactly what economic benefits there will be. During our committee hearings throughout the country, we heard from various economists, chambers of commerce spokesmen and BCNI officials. Not once were they able to provide us with what one would call substantial evidence that there will be jobs. They hoped there would be jobs, they believed there would be jobs, and felt that there would be jobs, but not once were they able to provide the evidence that there will be jobs. There is no evidence.

If one considers the historical facts, there is no guarantee that a free trade region will automatically bring about all the promised benefits. I suggest that Members ask people in northern England, Scotland or Wales how Great Britain joining the Common Market has helped the regional divisions in Great Britain. The fact is that it has exacerbated them. How has it helped the unemployment rate? The unemployment rate in Britain was 5 per cent before it joined the Common Market. It went up to 15 per cent after it joined.

The Government talks about productivity. It is interesting to note that in the last 10 years we have had a higher productivity rate than the United States, even with its access to that market of 250 million people. We hear the argument that access to that market will make us more productive. Why are we more productive now than the Americans? We are not only being asked to accept a leap in faith, we are being asked to accept a leap in logic.

If the Common Market is so great, why have we had a higher rate of job creation in the last 10 years than any European country? The Common Market is supposed to be the magic answer for us, yet we were able to outperform it.

We are told about the great benefits of economic union with the United States. We have a $20 billion surplus in trade with the Americans while they have a $180 billion deficit. The economic facts simply do not exist.

However, we did learned in our committee hearings where there will be job losses. Witnesses appearing on behalf of data processing organizations, representing small high tech firms in Canada, said that we have already lost 100,000 jobs and will lose some 200,000 more because the present rules requiring data processing to be done in Canada will be wiped out. As one individual said, "It will not hurt me as a businessman. I will just go to St. Louis or Minneapolis". But the workers will be left behind unemployed.

What about the food processors? I was surprised that the Minister for International Trade ignored the largest industry in Canada. It employs more people than any other industry, close to 300,000. That industry appeared before the committee and said that the Government had a problem with the agreement. If it takes the tariffs down to zero on packaged processed frozen products, the Americans will have somewhat lower input goods because they can get their chickens out of Georgia and their vegetables out of California and they will undercut us totally, which will mean we will have to shut down, close up, go out of business, unless we get rid of supply management. Government was told it had a choice, either to get rid of supply management or destroy that industry.

It would seem to me that that is a fundamental dilemma a Government might want to face considering that the whole food industry is the largest employer in Canada. But has the Government faced it? No. Was there anything in the final text of the agreement to resolve that problem? No, because we cannot resolve it. What the Government has refused to recognize is that in order to maintain a stable, self-sufficient food industry, we must maintain certain rules. We must retain certain tariffs at times. We must retain a certain way of ensuring that the products of our farmers will be bought and their prices will be stable and the manufacturing processing plants will be doing the work for us.

We have now opened that up to double jeopardy. Here we have in a final agreement about to be signed on January 2 a great gaping hole, an unanswered question, with no answers being provided by the Government, and this will affect a fundamental industry of this country, the food industry. One would expect the Government to at least make some gesture to respond, but it has totally ignored that problem. It will not even talk about the problem. It says it does not exist. The Government is in that kind of fantasyland that if one does not think about something, it will not be there. The Government thinks it can wish it all away. It takes its political lessons from the fantasyland Premier of British Columbia. It is a catching disease.

The fact is that the economic benefits the Government promised simply and completely cannot be demonstrated. What can be shown is that there will be severe and substantial disruption to many vital industries in this country. All the members of the committee said that at least the Government should talk about a massive adjustment program. That was a recommendation of the Macdonald Commission. Its report is the Bible the Government keeps pulling out as the instrument and basis for the free trade agreement. Yet the Macdonald Commission clearly said there would have to be a massive multibillion dollar expenditure on adjustment to make it work. The Macdonald Commission said it should be written into the agreement. Is it in the agreement? I did not see a word about it because the Government has no intention of doing it.

I do not know who to believe, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) or the Prime Minister. They all say different things. The Minister of Finance controls the purse and he says, no, we will take care of it under our existing programs. That is fine except that the existing programs are being cut back. The Department of Employment and Immigration cut back several hundred million dollars over the last two or three years. There is not even enough money to take care of the present issues but the Government will solve all the new problems with a receding Budget. That is again an example of Tory arithmetic.

Let us go to the other huge benefit the Government talked about. What was it that the Prime Minister said in that speech in New York, the get tough speech to the American business community? He said that the whole reason for negotiating this agreement is to get an exemption from U.S. trade law, to stop the harassment, to ensure that Canadians will have a special elimination of those problems. The Macdonald Commission, the Bible, said the same thing, that the fundamental issue is that U.S. trade law is unfair and we have to do something about it.

So now we come to the centre point of the agreement, the binding binational dispute settlement mechanism that—and, of course, the Prime Minister did not say this in his remarks—is simply an appeal procedure. The entire continuation of U.S. trade law is in force and U.S. industry will still have the right to initiate actions, to go to the trade commission, to go to the Department of Commerce, to get the rulings. Canadian industry will still be forced to hire expensive Washington lawyers. They will still have to go through the process of fighting those claims. There will still be all the harassment that was there before. The only thing that was changed in the initial agreement is that we were told the International Court of Trade in New York would be replaced with a binational panel. In other words, we would be able to appeal based upon that law.

When I asked the deputy negotiator, Mr. Ritchie, why was it changed; was the International Court of Trade biased, was it unfair? He said, no, that was the one thing about which we had no complaint. It was totally impartial. So that was the genius of that great negotiating team which should be heralded as the biggest bag of wind in the history of Canada. The chief negotiator has more gas exploding from him than the Hindenburg dirigible, and is about as reliable. The fact is that what was negotiated was an appeal procedure, not an exemption from the law, and in doing so, they have closed off other avenues that the Canadian industry could use.

Clearly, if the binational panel is chosen we cannot go to GATT. At least in the GATT we could challenge the law, we could challenge the premise of the law, but these geniuses have now closed that option. Furthermore, they have substantially altered the process of judicial review and the rights of using courts. To add insult to injury, to take that Mickey Mouse mechanism and put a Donald Duck character to it, after we got the final agreement, what did they do to the appeal procedure? They put another appeal procedure on top of it. We now have an appeal procedure to the appeal procedure.

If one looks at the criteria set out in this final agreement, one can see that any smart Washington lawyer worth his thousand dollar a day fee is going to find enough room to run a truck through. So we will end up with a process that takes longer than the one we have now. It will be more expensive and more time consuming, and that is the so-called benefit of the deal. The great accomplishment of this Government is to end up with an appeal procedure to an appeal procedure, lengthier time, costing more money to Canadian industry and no protection, no security of access. That is the bottom line of this agreement. So much for the benefits of this deal that the Minister promised.

Before I forget, let us talk about the so-called consumer benefits. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), a few days after, rushed out to the TV cameras with press releases saying that consumers will benefit extraordinarily. There was the Minister for International Trade promising people that they could run down to Fargo, North Dakota, or Spokane, Washington, and come back with their arms full of VCRs, cameras and television sets. There was this image in the minds of people of this long train of people in front of a cornucopia of goods being hauled out of various K-Marts on the border stations across Canada.

But the Consumers' Association says it is not such a hot deal. If we really look at the 10-year phase-in, it may mean we get a $50 or $60 saving a year, if we are lucky. Furthermore, most of the goods people are being promised are excluded because they have foreign components and under the rules of origin, if the VCR is made in Japan, Taiwan or Korea it is going to have the same tariff applied to it. We now have the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) saying that, of course, we are going to keep our currency control, so the rule that says we can only bring in $50 worth of goods in the first 24 hours and $100 worth after will still be there. So much for the cornucopia.

Once again, we have this bloated, blown-up, bombastic propaganda being put forward by the Government, but when we look at the reality, what do we see? The problem is that the Government's propaganda machine has been characterized in the image of the Government itself. We have already had the shotgun wedding. That is what happens when you have a shotgun wedding, you get a false pregnancy. There are too many deals in which promises were made which never materialized. All of the so-called benefits have serious doubts cast upon them.

It is also interesting that the benefits which do result, such as the lowering of tariffs in some areas, could have been achieved as they have been in the past through negotiations internationally or under the U.S. trade law in accordance with which they are prepared to negotiate tariffs alone. We could have negotiated some tariff reduction. It would cause no dramatic upheaval for Canadians to do that. Previous Liberal Governments have negotiated far more tariff reductions than are contained in this agreement, which demonstrates that we are not against that. However, we never did that at the price of surrendering the control and management of our own economy as does this deal.

That brings us to the question of the costs. The Minister for International Trade went out of her way to suggest that this was a cost-free agreement. She suggested that this would be a simple matter of easy, open, peaceful transition. In fact, things are quite different. It is impossible for any government to claim that things will remain the same in the energy sector. When you lose the right to set price and supply you have lost control of the resource. That is what is in this agreement.

Even more damning, the so-called guaranteed access for Canadian energy to the United States market is not in the agreement. I read the agreement very carefully and do not see the words "guaranteed access" anywhere in the text. What does remain, however, is the right of the U.S. regulatory agency in Washington to set all the rules.

I want to remind Members of the House of the statement made by the Small Explorers and Producers Association of Canada, one of the three major oil and gas associations in Canada. It said that it is against this deal because it is not reciprocal, it does not give equal treatment. It says that we have given up our controls through the National Energy Board but the Americans have retained theirs. Prices in energy will be set in Washington or by cartels of OPEC or multinationals. The Government has lost its right to provide any leverage against such a cartel. This is the Government that says there is no limitation on sovereignty.

I have talked to a number of lawyers to get an explanation of this agreement. Sections 408 and 409 were not in the original agreement. The agreement disallows anyone from setting an export tax, not only on energy, but on any good exported to the United States. Section 408 goes on to say that you can no longer set prices through government action on any good or deal with supply matters. That clause gives the potential for the United States to insist upon rights of control management over every resource that we have in Canada.

Mr. McDermid: What a crock.

Mr. Axworthy: I ask the Member to read sections 408 and 409.

Mr. McDermid: Get serious. You are living in Disneyland.

Mr. Axworthy: Unfortunately Tory Members cannot read. After watching the Prime Minister in Question Period yesterday, I suggest that he might be well advised to read the agreement. He clearly has not. It might be helpful to read those clauses before he signs the agreement so that he will realize what he is doing to this country.

We are also told that there will be no limitation on the sovereignty of our provinces, that they will not be affected in any way. On page 300 of this final agreement it talks about establishment of monopolies, including Crown corporations at any level. It says that we can set up Crown corporations but must first consult with the United States and then comply with a whole series of conditions as to what they cannot do. They cannot cross-subsidize and cannot have discriminatory provisions on monopoly goods or services.

If this clause had existed in 1867 we would not have Air Canada, the CNR, the CBC, or provincial telephone corporations. We would not have the very institutions and instruments which helped to build this country. We would not have the Canadian Wheat Board. We would not have the institutions which various generations of Canadians have creatively forged to shape and define this country. Under this clause we will no longer have the power to use public instruments and public agencies to serve Canadian interests.

With regard to sovereignty, surely it is a primary right of any Parliament or provincial assembly to say what kind of Crown corporation it is going to establish and what the corporation will do without having to consult with the Americans or meeting a set of conditions.

The Minister said that cultural programs are being supported. Clearly she has not looked at the evidence which was brought forward by groups like ACTRA and various other cultural organizations and artists which say that the agreement retains a pregnant clause called a "notwithstanding" clause which gives the United States the right to retaliate on any future cultural initiative if they think it is not in their cultural interest. How can they say that culture will not be affected? We may have grandfathered what we did in the past, but we have mortgaged what we can do in the future. That is another limitation on sovereignty.

Let us deal with social programs. We have heard denial after denial. The Minister responsible for the Status of Women (Mrs. McDougall) has given several speeches saying that social programs will not be touched in the agreement. That is not the way it works. The Government should listen to the anti-poverty organizations, the women's associations, and others who say that they will clearly be touched. If the Government is not prepared to listen to that constituency, it may listen to the business community. The Business Council of British Columbia says that of course they will be affected because it is clear that the pressure for harmonization will begin to apply. The pressure which will affect them will not come from the Americans but from our own community.

Our businesses are now faced with so-called competition by a southern state which has no minimum wage, is a right-to-work state, has no health care program, and has no environmental standards. It therefore has much lower input costs. We are trying to compete with them in the making of blue jeans, furniture, or high tech goods. As a result, the first demands will be for lower taxes and to get rid of rules and regulations. In that way we will substantially affect the social and environmental fabric of Canada.

That is to say nothing of the still unanswered problem which was brought to the attention of the committee of the Maquiladora corridor. The Americans now send components into Mexico where they are assembled by cheap Mexican labour then brought back into the United States as made-in-America goods. The Government says that we should not worry about that, that we will have customs inspectors roaming through American factories testing these things.

Does the Government believe that a motor which could go into a 100 different varieties of refrigerators can be tagged and observed if it comes into the Canadian market a year later? If the Government tries to do that it will create a bureaucratic nightmare. However, that will not happen. That is a placebo, an attempt to deal with the problem without any intention of implementation. We will be faced, as American industries are now being faced, with this undercutting of the basic wage standards and social standards of their country.

This week there was a major article in the New York Sunday Times in the business page. It was a debate about the impact of the Maquiladora process. The basic outcome was that hundreds of thousands of American jobs are being lost as a result, because quite frankly the large corporations could not give a damn whether they have a factory in Michigan, Ontario, or British Columbia; if they think that they can make a higher profit by having it on the Mexican border, they will do that.

When we talk about the immunization of our social programs, we are living in a fool's paradise. The Government is not telling it straight, it is not being honest or giving Canadians the full and honest set of consequences that they will have to face.

We also have this incredible limitation on areas of investment. We have heard from Conservative spokespersons on the great advantages of foreign investment. Let me advise the House of what those advantages were in the last three years. Of the $22 billion that have come into this country, 95 per cent has been in takeovers and acquisitions. It has not been in new enterprises, but in takeovers and acquisitions. The documents based on Statistics Canada figures that were presented to the committee demonstrate that those do not create jobs. In fact, in looking at the performance of the multinationals in Canada, it has been job loss and not job gain. A billion dollars of profit creates something like an average of 4,000 jobs when in fact a Canadian company would create something like 800,000 jobs in the same period of time.

Yet what we have here is an open door system in which the threshold is now $150 million and where there will be absolutely no possibility of Canadians setting any performance requirements for those takeovers and acquisitions. We will not have the right either now or in the future to say to anyone who wants to take over a Canadian company that they have to keep the research facilities here, keep the jobs here, keep the enterprise going here. If they want, they will simply have the right to strip it totally, move the science and technology to some other place, do the real work at head office, and turn it into an assembly plant or a warehouse.

Once again we are relocating the economic decision-making of Canada outside of our own borders. Once again we are taking any ability to manage an economic process beyond the authority and scope of Canadian Governments. The investment itself will not result in a great bonanza. What it could result in is a very different nature for the Canadian economy, a substantially different way of doing business in this country which is primarily geared to a north-south access not east-west.

The historic continuity of Canada, as difficult as it has been over the past 130, 140, or 150 years, or even going back 300 years when the French first arrived on our borders and tried to deal with the aboriginal peoples, has been to try to take this northern part of North America and forge a series of linkages east and west. It has been done in the private market and in the public market, and it has not been easy, but it has been done. As a result, we have been able to create our distinctive way of doing things; the St. Lawrence Seaway, the transportation system, the co-op movements, and our development programs. It has not been easy, but it has been important to Canada.

Now the Government is going to break that historical continuity. It is going to shift the access north and south. It is going to say that it much prefers a company selling into the California market than into the B.C. market, or into the Ontario market, or into the Atlantic market. We are going to switch horizons. That carries with it a psychology and a set of attitudes and an outlook that cannot be quantified or have numbers put on it. But it will surely and fundamentally alter this country beyond recognition, and break faith with past generations. As surely as I stand here, it will alter the way in which Canadians think about themselves, if they think about themselves any more, because no longer will those linkages that we have so carefully forged and nurtured be around to continue. They will be altered, mangled, and reoriented.

When we talk about sovereignty, God knows it is not only sovereignty in the strict legal and political sense, it is also talking about it in the cultural, political, social, and psychological sense of how we begin to think about ourselves.

That is the reason why we oppose this agreement. That is the reason why we feel that the costs far outweigh any benefits, that the agreement goes far beyond simple prescriptions of trade and reaches into the very inner soul and continuity of this country. But we reproach it for something even more than that because it forfeits our future. I suppose most of us in the House, being mostly middle-aged or older, will survive the trade deal. We will not see the real impact in our generation or lifetime. But future generations will slowly see the erosion of what has happened in this country, and have their rights and their capacity to make decisions taken away from them. That is the saddest most tragic part of this agreement.

That is why it is important for Canadians to understand that there is an alternative. There is another way of doing it. In all our statements we have been very careful to ensure that it is simply not a matter of saying that this is a bad, rotten deal. We have also said that we believe there is another way, a better way of achieving some of the same goals of liberalizing trade, but not with the damage and destruction of this country.

Quite clearly, we have stated that we can reduce tariff barriers and non-tariff barriers more effectively, at less cost to international negotiation than we can through bilateral negotiation of a comprehensive deal. History proves us correct. We are not talking about theory and speculation, as the Government does, we are talking based upon historical fact.

Through international negotiation the tariffs which averaged approximately 40 or 50 per cent in 1948 have been brought down by successive Liberal Governments to an average of the 5 per cent that stands today. Through international negotiation we have reduced the trade barriers with the United States to the point where 80 per cent of the goods now travel tariff free. It has been successful because we have been able to use the bargaining power and leverage of other countries to help pay the cost of trade-offs, and to help put the type of pressure on the United States and the other big trading partners in order that they will also make concessions. We have been able to piggy back on many of those concessions and utilize them. But most important, because we established clearly our defence and support for a form of international economic rule of law, to say that big, medium, and small all get treated in the same way in a non-discriminatory fashion.

When the Minister for International Trade rises today and states that this is simply a way of improving upon the international system and GATT, I challenge her and defy her because she is wrong. She is running against the historical fact of this country and of the international system.

Paul Volcker said it best when he stated that the greatest threat to the international trade system today is the emergence of regional trading blocks. Why? Because they will set walls around regions not only countries; in North America, in the Pacific Rim, in Europe, in Latin America, and there will be a reproduction of the type of trade wars between countries that we saw in the 1930s now happening between regions. They will be hammering one another.

This trade deal starts that right now because we have set up discriminatory trade rules. In the Auto Pact system we say that there is one rule for North American automobiles and another rule for offshore. In the areas of manufactured goods we say that there is one rule for Canada-U.S., and another rule for those offshore. Therefore, by saying that there are different rules we have already substantially contributed to the emergence of a discriminatory trade wall around North America.

How can anyone in their right mind argue that that is helping the international system? How can anyone suggest that by establishing a discriminatory trade block in North America we are somehow providing sweetness and light in the international system? That works against our own interests, because a large part of our commodities are not traded with the Americans. They are traded in the Pacific Rim, in Europe, in the Middle East, and in Latin America. Can you tell me, Mr. Speaker, why a customer who is going to buy our wheat or barley offshore will not suddenly ask why he should buy Canadian wheat when there is lots of surplus in Argentinian, Australian, and other wheat, and when we have just signed a deal which says that he cannot get the same treatment as people in Buffalo? In other words, they are setting in motion a diversion of our trade patterns which will have an enormous impact upon our trading partners down the road.

In the field of agriculture and commodities they are also doing something very dangerous. They are beginning to play with the fundamental infrastructure of our commodity system. They have admitted in two places in the agreement that the transportation system or the freight rate system that we use to move our commodities from Atlantic Canada and our grain from western Canada is a subsidy which is objectionable under trade rules. It is the first time any Government of Canada has ever admitted that. It is the first time a precedent has been established that the western grain freight system is an unfair trade practice. Similarly the same thing would be true in the Atlantic system.

They are doing some very funny things with international trade rules otherwise. Let us talk about fish processing for a moment before my time comes to an end. We are told in the agreement that the eastern fish processing industry is protected but that the western B.C. one is not. However, when we go to the agreement we find that the eastern processes will still be vulnerable to the GATT rules which were applied to West Coast fishermen and processors. They have also eliminated the remedy which Canada allows, that is, the use of an export tax remedy. They have put in double jeopardy our fish processing and have taken away remedies normally available to us under the GATT to deal with those problems in both the East and West.

When we talk about using the international system, the Government is abusing the system. For a country which once took leadership in helping to formulate an international commercial economic system, we are now pulling away or retreating. All other countries are getting the signal that Canadians are in full retreat from the international system and they are asking, "why shouldn't we be too?" The end result will be a regional trade war around the world.

I would suggest that what we should have done, and what we have recommended, is tried to achieve a better trade deal for Canadians. We had the opportunity at the Uruguay Round to begin dealing with dispute settlement mechanisms at that level and to start dealing with the question of how we would deal with tariff reductions and non-tariff reductions in the next round.

However, we would do it in company with other countries with similar interests to our own. In the vast and important area of services, countries like Brazil, India, Third World countries, and European countries with which I met in Punta del Este over a year ago indicated that the reason they were nervous was that they knew that service industries were essential to the maintenance of the integrity of their countries. For example, if we give up control of our banking system, our data processing system, and our information system, we would not have a country left. Therefore, when we have rules applying to trade in services we must also have rules applying to the investment in those services and rules applying to the right of establishment in those services to ensure that when multinational companies like IBM or American Express come tromping into the country and say that they will take over our system we have rules which say how they must behave when they are in our country.

What has the Government done in this agreement? It has gone the opposite way. Wrong way Carney has once again scored a touchdown in her own end zone.

Mr. Tobin: For the other team.

Mr. Axworthy: Yes, the other team will get the points. They have opened up trade in services but at the same time they have taken off all controls on investment and all controls on right of establishment. They have said that they can come in and do what they want in our country and we will not say boo.

When they ask why the Liberals want an alternative, that is why we want an alternative. It is to ensure that rules apply to the big economic giants of the country. We recognize that they do not recognize national interest or Canadian interest. They recognize one interest only and that is the interest of their stockholders, if that at all. They are a private government unto themselves. The history of the country has been to try to find rules to apply to them. Surely, after the example of the oil crisis and the behaviour of the Seven Sisters, we should know just how demonic and destructive economic and multinational giants can be.

That is the basic start of the Liberal alternative. We think we can go much further. Why is it that in the three years since the Tories have been in government trade with the rest of the world has declined? There has been a 30 per cent drop in trade with the Pacific Rim. There has been a drop in trade with Europe, the Middle East, and Latin America. The Government is not interested in becoming a world trader or in opening up new markets. It has cut back on embassies, trade offices, international development programs, and trade assistance for small business. Is it any wonder our trade has dropped by 30 per cent with the Pacific Rim? It is because the Government has a mad obsession with the North American market and is taking the easy way out.

As Liberals we say that we have an alternative. We are the Party which speaks for Canadians. We have real confidence in Canadians becoming world traders and international salesmen of our goods and products around the world. It is the Tories who are afraid and are retreating into a North American hiding place. They are trying to find some protection in that shadow. They are the ones who do not have the guts and courage to say that we must define and develop a trading relationship on a world-wide basis. They have shown in the last three years what a bunch of 'fraidy cats they are. With this agreement there will be no hope for the establishment of ourselves as effective international traders.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): What nonsense.

Mr. Axworthy: We will see what kind of nonsense it is when we come to the next election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: We also say as part of our alternative that any Government really interested in forging an effective international competitive position must be prepared to invest in this country—in the brains of the country, in research and development, and in the infrastructure—so that we in Canada have a capacity to do it.

What has the Government done? It has cut back on universities and training schools. It has cut back on infrastructure. It has cut back on research and development. In other words, the very sinews by which a country is able to develop and enhance its international competitiveness are being reduced. The Government is pulling back and withdrawing.

How can we believe that they want us to be great world traders? Of course they do not. They want to be basket cases. They want to find that big, warm bathtub south of us in which they can wallow because they are not prepared to take on the kinds of initiatives required to ensure that the country is competitive. That has been their history in the last three years.

In combination with forging a new kind of international outlook, we must have a new domestic outlook geared to refining our industry and investing in infrastructure and research in our universities. Let us invest in the people of this country so they will go out and take on a leading trade role for Canada around the world, rather than cut back, reduce, and subtract. That is the Liberal alternative for which we will fight in the next election. That is the alternative we will put forward for the consideration of Canadians.

We believe without question that there is a very clear requirement for this decision to be decided by Canadians. Let Canadians decide what is in the national interest. The Tories have a vision of a North American continental fortress and hiding in the shadows of their big brother. We require an international world trading opportunity which will serve the national interest without surrendering our fundamental institutions and without surrendering our right to make public decisions in the interest of Canadians. Canadians will decide what is in the national interest.

In keeping to that, I would like to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia):

> That the motion be amended by inserting immediately after the comma following the word "interest" the following:
> "as determined by the people of Canada in a general election"

That is where the national interest will be determined.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Naturally I will look at the motion and reserve my decision.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF ANGLICAN CHURCH OF CANADA

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the Anglican Church of Canada says that a free trade agreement "must provide demonstrable benefits for the people of all regions and at all economic levels."

The Church is very concerned that certain principles will be violated by a free trade agreement with the United States. In particular, the possibility exists that the most vulnerable members in Canadian society will be harmed by the agreement. The agreement should not be undertaken if it limits society's members from making future decisions for the common good. As well, this agreement must not be undertaken if it reduces our ability as a society to protect the environment and our heritage in the natural resource sector. Finally, ordinary citizens should be allowed "to understand what is at stake in the free trade deal" and participate effectively in the decisions of major importance.

Every Canadian must enjoy a quality of life that is personally fulfilling. The free market does not look after the disadvantaged in Canada. We must address the widening gap between the rich and the poor in this country, a gap which is being worsened by the misguided and unfair tax policies of the Mulroney Government and its embracing of free trade. You do not build a strong country by abandoning the poor, the unemployed, the elderly, and the disadvantaged.

THE JUDICIARY

CREATION OF CENTRE FOR JUDICIAL EDUCATION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, how would you feel if you went to the hospital for an operation only to discover that, although your doctor has been to medical school, he or she has never been given any courses in surgery, just some on-the-job training? The same way, no doubt, that Canadians feel when they go to court only to discover that, although the judge has been to law school, he or she has not been given any form of judicial education, just on-the-job training.

You know that your surgeon will have received a formal education in his or her profession, Mr. Speaker. Our judges have not. Perhaps that is one reason why, according to public opinion polls, Canadians have lost confidence in our criminal justice system. That is why the announcement by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) of the creation of a Canadian Judicial Centre for judicial education is so important. Hopefully the Centre will soon provide courses on the principles of uniform criminal sentencing. That would go a long way to restoring public confidence in the system.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—VISIBLE MINORITIES

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Mulroney—Reagan trade deal we began debating today represents a terrible threat to thousands of visible minority Canadians.

It is clear that the deal will lead to the loss of jobs in the clothing industries of Canada. The Government has recognized that adjustment programs will be required for employees in these and other industries to assist them in finding new work. Unfortunately, however, the visible minority women working in these industries have had little preparation for better jobs. The Government has done nothing to prepare them for a meaningful role in the high-tech future they dream of for Canada.

This trade agreement with the U.S. will force thousands of visible minority Canadians on to unemployment insurance and social assistance rolls. The people at the bottom of Canada's vertical mosaic will end up ground into the dirt by the free trade ambitions of the Conservative Government.

It is cruel to speak of seeking strength for Canada when the weakest in our society will end up on the refuse heap of Canadian industries.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY LEADER

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) for forwarding to the constituents in my riding material which will increase interest in the trade agreement in the Niagara Falls riding. As a result, I have had a number of calls from people who want to obtain the truth on this important matter in an area that exports 30 per cent of everything it makes to the United States. But the Member for Oshawa has his facts wrong. The Auto Pact safeguards and the Canadian value added commitment remain in place. As well, the Free Trade Agreement encourages newcomers to the North American industry to use more Canadian or American parts and labour. Canadian workers and companies have shown that they can compete for this business. Canadians can be confident that auto and parts manufacturing are here to stay.

The Member for Oshawa would not understand this point, but that is why, in my riding of Niagara Falls, the auto parts industry is so supportive. B. F. Goodrich, Brunner Manufacturing, Hayes Dana, Thompson Products and Ford Motor Corporation are all in favour of this agreement. They know what the people of Oshawa know, that this agreement is good for the auto industry. It is good for Ontario, it is good for Canada because it is good for the Niagara Peninsula.

CHANGES EFFECTED DUE TO PRESSURES FROM LIBERALS AND GENERAL PUBLIC

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will announce changes in the White Paper on Tax Reform. Tomorrow we will know whether the Government intends to remedy the injustice done to Canadian families as a result of the deindexation of family allowance and lowering the eligibility ceiling for child tax credit. Tomorrow, we will find out whether senior citizens have been heard and a tax credit has been reinstated. Mr. Speaker, there is one reason to rejoice, although that reason has hardly been mentioned recently because of various Government scandals. I am referring to the fact that the Government, as a result of pressure from the Liberals and Canadians in general, has decided to backtrack on its option to tax food.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should thank Canadians for the work they have done in this respect. It is the fourth time the Official Opposition, the Liberal Party, has made the Conservative Government change its mind. First it was on the deindexation of old age security pensions, then the cuts in unemployment insurance benefits, the 10 per cent tax on drugs for cardio-vascular diseases and now the tax on food.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

PARTICULAR REQUIREMENTS IN ABITIBI

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, since 1984, the people of Abitibi have been aware of some very specific problems in connection with the economic development of their vast territory. The Government of Canada has taken the lead in working together with municipalities and private enterprise to rejuvenate the Abitibi economy.

With the advent of tax reform, we will have to further stimulate our economic growth by creating a fund for the economic diversification of Northern Quebec, which will reflect the importance of giving young people the option of staying in Abitibi, and by establishing a program that will stimulate the development and use of new technology in a region that is still too dependent on its resource industries.

Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the particular needs of the Abitibi area, and we will need a support fund of $100 million to achieve the objectives I just mentioned.

RAILWAYS

REQUIEM FOR PASSING OF CABOOSE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, this week will be a week to remember as one of the saddest weeks in Canadian history. The railways have been given permission to get rid of the caboose, against the claims of public safety and the well-being of railroaders.

As we contemplate waving goodbye to the caboose, it is important to remember that this week we could also be waving goodbye, as a result of the Mulroney—Reagan trade agreement, to a great many other things that Canadians value but which their Government is determined to take away from them in the name of being more competitive with the United States, which is the main argument the railways used for cabooseless trains.

The departure of the caboose is all about what is called harmonization through deregulation and free trade, the handmaidens of a new era in the exploitation of working people.

Perhaps if the Government is not prepared to respect the wishes of railroaders with respect to the caboose, or anything else for that matter, it will at least show some respect for retired railroaders and finally say what it intends to do about the CN pension plan and the demands that CN pensioners have been making for years.

FISHERIES

GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE SHELLFISH INDUSTRY—STATEMENTS MADE BY OPPOSITION MEMBERS

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians realize that the public must be alerted and kept informed of the problems found in certain shellfish products in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Yesterday opposition Members were naming other shellfish products not part of the general alert. By association these Members were suggesting that other shellfish may also have similar problems. These kinds of comments are not at all helpful. Members of the Opposition should know better and, if they do not, it is up to the Atlantic Coast opposition Members to explain to their colleagues the harm that is being done.

On behalf of Atlantic Canadians I am calling on these politicians to forget partisan politics. You have made your points. Don't kill the industry.

CANADA LANDS COMPANY

REVIEW REPORT'S FINDINGS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Today, Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House the Public Works Canada document entitled Report on the Special Review of the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel. I would like to read page 4 of the report which is entitled Over-all Assessment. I invite the Tories to pay attention because we will be asking questions later. It says:

> More precisely, our review of selected documentation supplied to us by the Corporation, and transactions indicated deficiencies in the following areas:
> -Contract administration.
> -Poor documentation supporting the existence, purpose and validity of some expenses.
> -Production of information required by Central Agencies.
> -Composition of the Board of Directors.

• (1410)

It goes on to say:

> We also recommend that the Director, Finance and Administration review the observations concerning administrative matters and ensure that acceptable documented controls are in place until the closing of the activities of the Corporation.

One of the highlights of the report was its mention of the fact that the local bar was hired to be in charge of the security of vacant lots at Mirabel. Yes, that is a sobering thought for the Government to contemplate.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—NORTHERN ONTARIO—POSITION OF PREMIER

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, in northern Ontario with its great resource based mining and forestry sectors and its attractive tourism industry, trade with the U.S. is extremely important. Seven out of 10 jobs depend directly on trade. It is for this significant reason that I am so frustrated with the Premier of Ontario's stand on our Government's trade pact with the U.S.

When he speaks, the Premier is not considering the needs of our region. He is not listening to what is being said by northern Ontarians and by Canadians. He is too busy with his red-tie rhetoric.

The trade agreement holds out great hope for the development of the northern Ontario region. Through securing access to the U.S. market, the Government in the trade pact ensures future growth, opportunities, and prosperity throughout the country.

A recent poll of businesses done by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business shows that 16 per cent in Ontario, and only 13 per cent across the country, oppose this trade deal. In fact, in Ontario, over two-thirds of small businessmen feel that this pact will be positive or will have no impact on Canadian business. In northern Ontario only 13 per cent are against the deal while 67 per cent see it as being the vehicle into the future.

The Canadian Chamber of Commerce is for this deal. So is the Canadian Mining Association, the Ontario Mining Association, Noranda Mines, the Canadian Export Association, and the Northern Ontario Tourist Outfitters' Association. I say to the Premier, wake up, start listening to Canadians and stop playing your red-tie brand of politics.

AGRICULTURE

SPECIAL GRAINS PROGRAM—AMOUNT OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), in announcing the Special Grains Program, documented the real disaster that is developing in agriculture in Canada. The Special Grains Program got $1 billion last year as an absolute minimum to cover the losses of grain producers. This was after an 18 per cent decrease in grain prices.

This year, after a further 20 per cent drop in grain prices and after farm organizations have asked for $2.6 billion, the Prime Minister and his Government are offering an increase of only $100 million. This is a great disappointment to the grain producers who had hoped to stay even with the cost of production this year. Instead, the steady stream of farmers off the farm is likely to grow. The disaster that is documented shows that the Government knows what is happening but chooses not to act.

FREE TRADE

ADVANTAGES FOR CANADIANS

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to read a letter I got yesterday from a Beauce agricultural producer who belongs to the Union des producteurs agricoles. Here it is:

> It is difficult today to predict with any accuracy the impact of the free trade agreement on our operations. Common sense indicates that the agreement would widen our horizons and act as an incentive to improve ourselves and lower our production costs by using the latest technological facilities without always falling back upon such social services as grants and stabilization insurance coverage. And yet, so many people have been telling me that we cannot tackle a giant! My response to that is that it is not the Americans who are strong and powerful, it is just we who think we are weak and unable to face a stronger opponent. Remember the story of giant Goliath and small David. The smaller came out the winner. I have been a pork producer for fifteen years and I look forward to facing that challenge with the tools I have been using all along. I would urge you to conctinue to enlighten people about this very topical issue.

It is signed by Lance et Compte, Gervais Vachon Farm, Saint-Séverin, Beauce. That, Mr. Speaker is the kind of spirit which prevails among Beauce residents. They go for calculated risks, they have an acute sense of entrepreneurship, and they have confidence in the future of this country. Mr. Speaker, I could go on quoting from a great many such letters.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF ADDITIONAL FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, for months and months we have heard gloom and doom from opposition Parties which have thought that this Party does not look after farmers. Today the Government announced hundreds of millions of additional dollars to help farmers in western Canada and clear across Canada.

There will be another $1.1 billion for the Canada Grains Program. That money was never there before.

There will be an additional $400 million in fuel tax rebates for farmers, the farmers the Government will continue to defend. There has been an additional $40 million to help the Farm Debt Review Board, an area in which we know there is concern.

There is an additional $100 million for the Farm Credit Corporation.

Canada's rural transition program is there for those who need it and will provide hundreds of millions of dollars.

Do not listen to the Opposition. We have hundreds of millions of dollars for the farmers under Western Grain Stabilization. For the first time there will be a potato stabilization payment. I point out to my friends from northern Saskatchewan and northern Alberta that even honey producers will be helped.

I do not have time to read it all. It is amazing. Never listen to the Opposition any longer. There are funds for farm management—

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

AIR-INDIA 1985 DISASTER—REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the most brutal mass murder ever in Canadian history, the Air-India disaster of June, 1985. The Deputy Prime Minister knows that the Government received advance warnings of a potential threat to Air-India. He knows that the criminal investigation was bungled from the start. He knows that his Government did not provide the necessary security in order to ensure the safety of the passengers on board Air-India Flight 182. He knows that a false affidavit was sworn by the Security Intelligence Service. He knows that there was a deliberate attempt to mislead the Federal Court.

We now know that important wiretap tapes have been erased, either by gross and inexcusable negligence or as part of an illegal, deliberate attempt to cover up evidence.

The Leader of the Official Opposition has called on at least 10 separate occasions for a Royal Commission Inquiry into all the facts surrounding the Air-India disaster, including the conduct of the Government of Canada. Could the Deputy Prime Minister explain why the Government has consistently refused a complete investigation? Can he explain to the people of Canada what the Government is trying to cover up?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, let me make it very, very clear and very, very plain that there is no coverup and that the Government has nothing to cover up. I have explained to the House on many, many occasions, and the Hon. Member well knows, that there is an ongoing, extremely active criminal investigation. I will not say anything that would jeopardize the successful outcome of that investigation. I know that the Hon. Member, being a lawyer himself, would not want me to say anything that might jeopardize the success of this investigation.

ERASING OF WIRETAP TAPES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General, the Prime Minister and the Government know that that is complete and utter nonsense. We are talking about the murder of 329 people, most of whom were Canadians, two and a half years ago. The Minister knows that that investigation has been bungled. He knows that the Government must assume some responsibility for what happened on June 23, 1985.

I would like to ask the Solicitor General specifically about these tapes that were erased. When did the Solicitor General first become aware that these tapes had been erased? Who ordered the destruction of these tapes? Can he explain when they were erased and why they were erased?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in no way has the investigation been bungled. I want to make that extremely clear. I suggest that perhaps the Hon. Member is being somewhat irresponsible by trying to get me to say something that might jeopardize the successful investigation and conclusion to this most heinous crime in Canadian history.

I can tell the Hon. Member and the House that this is the most extensive investigation the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have undertaken. Shortly after the incident, there were more than 200 officers working full-time on the case. At all times since then there have never been less than 50 officers working on the case. That is the situation today.

Mr. Nunziata: I suggest to the Solicitor General of Canada that if it was a British Airways flight or an American airlines flight, the Government would be a little more sensitive to what happened.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What a racist.

Some Hon. Members: Racist.

Mr. Speaker: First, let me advise Hon. Members who may be reacting to what was said that their comments are no better than what they complain about.

I would ask that the Hon. Member be very careful not to imply, even by innuendo, or leave open the interpretation that there is some sort of racist connotation in the entire issue. I ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

ALLEGED DESTRUCTION OF TAPES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Will he explain whether a criminal investigation has been launched into the destruction of those tapes?

Will he also explain to the people of Canada why the Government has not offered a reward for anyone to provide evidence leading to the arrest and conviction of those responsible for the Air-India disaster? Will his Government consider offering a substantial reward for that type of evidence in order to bring to justice those responsible, in view of the fact that the criminal investigation has been bungled?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I again deny that the investigation has been bungled. There is an intensive, ongoing investigation at this time.

I would also like the Hon. Member to be aware that we have looked into the matter of posting rewards. We have discussed this with other countries. It has been found not to be productive.

If the Hon. Member has some suggestions and new proposals for me in that regard, I would be more than prepared to listen.

CANADA LANDS COMPANY

REPORTED DEFICIENCIES IN ADMINISTRATION—REQUEST THAT ROYAL COMMISSION OF INQUIRY BE APPOINTED

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister, with whom lies the ultimate responsibility for the wrongdoings of the Tory Government.

Every day new elements are added to the already scandalous situation which exists with the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel.

In a report prepared by Louise St-Laurent, Director General, Audit and Evaluation Branch, on the Mirabel situation, she talks about deficiencies in contract administration, poor documentation, lack of information required by central agencies, composition of the Board of Directors, and need I mention two RCMP investigations going on right now.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister give the Canadian people one good reason why he keeps refusing Canadians a Royal Commission of Inquiry into the disposition, management, and the over-all operations of the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel? Why does he refuse?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to offer a reason. The special audit of the audit division, which I have given to my learned friend, indicates that there has been no misappropriation of funds or wrongdoing.

Let me put this whole operation into particular perspective and quote from the report.

> Within about three years from the political commitment the new administration has nearly accomplished its mandate, i.e. social peace and respect of the federal government has returned to the region of Mirabel, a great majority of the claims against the federal government (estimated at $100 million—

—and 95 per cent of these have now been settled—

> —have been dropped, the lands declared as surplus to needs for the airport have been sold, the social agricultural environment in the region have been preserved and/or improved and the Corporation is expected to terminate operations related to its present mandate and need for funding by September 1988 at the latest.

QUERY WHY GOVERNMENT REFUSES TO ESTABLISH PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Public Works. The report signed by Louise Saint-Laurent, Director of Audit and Evaluation, mentions a number of items. The Minister maintains everything is perfectly normal, but is it normal for a friend of a former Minister to do a feasibility study and then get the contract? Is it normal to divide contracts three ways to get around Treasury Board regulations? Is it normal to hire a brewery at a cost of $42,000 to guard vacant lots? Is that what a consultant was hired to do? Take care of security? If that isn't normal, and I don't see how it could be, I would ask the Minister of Public Works why the Government is still refusing to order a public inquiry into a scandal that is probably the worst the Government has faced so far.

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may quote another comment published saturday in La Presse; under the heading: "A Public Works report says the Canada Lands Corporation (Mirabel) is clean".

[English]

That indeed is a correct reflection of the findings of the special audit team, commissioned by myself to investigate. Their report is that this Government and that corporation got value for money.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

AIR-INDIA CRASH INVESTIGATION—REPORTED COMMITMENT NOT TO DESTROY EVIDENCE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It also concerns the ongoing history of incompetence and negligence by CSIS in the Air-India investigation.

Will the Minister confirm that within days after the bombing of the Air-India flight, at a meeting between senior officials of the RCMP and CSIS, CSIS made a commitment that absolutely no evidence whatsoever would be destroyed during this investigation into the murder of 329 people?

Why was this commitment that was made by CSIS broken, and why was there absolutely no consultation with either the prosecutor in this case or the RCMP before these tapes that were so incredibly important were destroyed by CSIS?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have already addressed that particular question from another Hon. Member. However, I will again address it and give the same answer. As the Hon. Member well knows—I said this to the Hon. Member on a number of occasions—there is a very active, ongoing criminal investigation. I am not in a position to say anything for fear of jeopardizing the successful outcome of the investigation.

This was a truly tragic accident. We are trying to do everything we can to catch those responsible. I know that the Hon. Member shares that concern with me.

Mr. Robinson: The Minister talks about jeopardizing the successful investigation. The biggest jeopardy to the successful investigation of this murder is the incompetence of CSIS itself.

REPORTED INVESTIGATION BY RCMP INTO DESTRUCTION OF WIRETAP TAPES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister confirm that at this point the RCMP have launched a police investigation into the destruction of these tapes? Will he indicate what is exactly the scope of that investigation and when we can expect to receive a report on the outcome of that investigation? The families of 329 victims of murder are waiting for the Government finally to take its responsibility seriously.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member, and, indeed, every Member of the House, that the Government is taking its responsibilities very seriously. We have an active, ongoing criminal investigation. I have told the Hon. Member that it is the most extensive investigation in the history of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. It involved up to and more than 200 officers at one time, and on a continuing daily basis not less than 50.

FISHERIES

TOXIC MUSSELS—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER'S ASSISTANT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Throughout the toxic mussels affair, the Minister of National Health and Welfare has stated he did not learn of toxic mussels until Monday, November 30. In a radio interview on December 7 the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans said he was informed at the same time as the Minister of National Health and Welfare. However, today in a television interview, an assistant to the Minister, a Mr. David Janes, said he learned of the toxic mussels while at the First Ministers' Conference in Toronto on Friday, November 27, a conference he attended with his Minister, with the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and also with the Prime Minister. Who is telling the truth about when the Government first learned of this affair, the Minister or his assistant?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member and Members of this House that I first learned of the serious toxic mussels situation on the afternoon of December 1 at the hour of 1.30 p.m.

ASSISTANT'S REPORTED KNOWLEDGE OF ISSUE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess what the Minister is saying then is that he did not tell the truth when he gave an interview—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member for Hamilton East means that perhaps the Minister was mixed up.

An Hon. Member: No, she doesn't.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put her question.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Minister must be confused because on December 7 he said in a radio interview: "I and the Minister of Health were made aware of the symptoms when some people became ill about a week ago". The Minister of National Health and Welfare has already told this House that he personally became aware when he was briefed at eleven o'clock on November 30.

I would like to ask the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans again whether he is denouncing the statement made by his own assistant that he first learned of the case of the toxic mussels on November 27 when he was in Toronto attending the First Ministers' meeting with the Minister, where he was in full consultation with the Minister? And does he really expect the public to believe that he only learned of it on the afternoon of December 1?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I cannot comment on a particular interview which I think the Hon. Member has taken out of context, but I certainly know something about the truth. I said this afternoon in this House that I first learned and was advised of the serious shellfish, mussel toxin problem at 1.30 p.m. on the afternoon of December 1. Whatever a member of my staff or officials of the Department might have known at a prior time is completely appropriate in accordance with standard procedures. I learned of this issue at 1.30 in the afternoon on December 1.

TRADE

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—DEADLINE FOR SIGNATURE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. The Minister will know that the Prime Minister has said that there is nothing special about the January 2 date for submitting the trade proposals for agreement between Canada and the United States. I assume the Minister also knows that there are literally thousands of Canadians who want an adequate opportunity to study the implications of this deal.

Is the Minister aware that there is precedent in the United States for extending the date in the fast-track process? In conjunction with that, is she aware of, and could she confirm to the House of Commons, that the Canadian Government made no request to extend the January 2 deadline?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, these dates were explored by our officials on both sides of the border. I have been advised by my officials that the January 2 date at midnight is the operative date for the operation of the fast track. I have no information to the contrary.

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION ON DATE FOR SIGNATURE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, that was not the question. We all know that January 2 is the date. The Canadian Government has tried to leave the impression with the people of Canada that this was an American imposed date. The reality is that it is this Government which is fast tracking this project because it does not want the Canadian people to have time to understand all the details.

Will the Minister now deal with the question? Considering there is precedent in U.S. experience for extending the deadline, considering that the Prime Minister himself said there is nothing special about it, and that thousands of Canadians would like to have time to understand it, why in Heaven's name has the Government of Canada not requested the U.S. Congress to extend that deadline?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion by the Hon. Member that the January 2 date is a Canadian imposed date, designed to withhold information from the Canadian people, is just the kind of misinformation that that Party is spreading to obscure the very real benefits to the country of the free trade agreement.

Again I am telling the House that my advisers, and our negotiators, including our embassy, tell us that under the 1974 trade legislation in the United States, and other relative legislative bodies, the U.S. fast track authority, under the U.S. trade legislation, runs out at midnight on January 2.

Mr. Riis: Unless you ask for an extension.

Miss Carney: If the Hon. Member has other pertinent information, I will be glad to receive it from him.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I naively assumed that the Minister herself knew the responsibilities she was given to act upon in the interests of the people of Canada. The reality is that we could have requested an extension of the deadline but this Government was not interested in extending the deadline and it is trying to blame the Americans for it. That is the reality and the people of Canada will understand that.

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE'S REPORT—UNITED STATES OMNIBUS TRADE LEGISLATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My final supplementary question is in reference to the committee's report that came out today. The committee in its report expresses its concern that the U.S. omnibus trade legislation will be passed and will be applicable to Canada. It suggests that, unless this legislation does not apply to Canada, we should not agree to the trade agreement. Does the Minister agree with that recommendation coming from the committee? If she agrees with it, why was it not written into the proposal in the first place?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think the House should congratulate the Winegard committee and all Members for the work they have done.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: I have just received the report. I look forward to reading both the majority report and the minority reports submitted by members of the opposition Parties.

To answer the Hon. Member's question, the U.S. Trade Bill is still being formalized. We do not yet know what is in it. The administration has pointed out to us—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: They laugh.

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, we laugh. You are laughable.

Miss Carney: That shows how little they know.

Mr. Broadbent: We are laughing at you.

Miss Carney: The fact is that we do not know what will be in the U.S. Trade Bill. It is in the process of going through the U.S. system. Those Members know nothing about the process. They know nothing about the process and they do not want to hear any answers.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF BRITISH COLUMBIA MINISTER OF TRANSPORTATION AND HIGHWAYS

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—GAZA STRIP—VIOLATIONS OF HUMAN RIGHTS OF PALESTINIANS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. A large number of Canadians are concerned about the continuing violence which has engulfed the occupied territories of the Gaza Strip. The indiscriminate use of live ammunition by Israeli military authorities to quell civilian demonstrations has resulted in numerous deaths and left countless wounded. The deaths of children as young as 11 and 14 years leave one perplexed about the intensity of repression.

In view of the fact that Canada has played an admirable peace-keeping role in the Middle East, and in view of our continued interest in bringing lasting peace to the region, what measures is the Government contemplating taking? And are we going to protest these latest and most grave and serious violations of human rights of Palestinians in the occupied territories?

• (1440)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question which expresses a concern shared by many Members of the House about developments in the West Bank.

Mr. Prud'homme: Unacceptable.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We have expressed our concern to the Government of Israel and will continue to do that. These events, as all events in that region, are of course complex.

Mr. Prud'homme: They are not complex.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): They point to the urgent need for progress to be made.

I hear interventions being made on behalf of the Liberal Party. I am not sure whether they represent the policy of that Party or not.

Mr. Prud'homme: Don't be cheap on this question.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I am trying to indicate the position which the Government of Canada is taking—

Mr. Prud'homme: Don't mix the Liberal Party with my view, will you? Don't play politics with this?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —with regard to a very serious situation in the Middle East which points to the urgency of both sides coming to some understanding on the possibility of a resolution by way of a peace conference which would allow direct negotiations.

Mr. Prud'homme: Cheap, cheap.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

AIR-INDIA AFFAIR—ALLEGED DESTRUCTION OF EVIDENCE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to get back to the case of the Air India disaster, where an explosion on board claimed 329 victims.

The Minister keeps repeating the same answer over and over again, like a broken record: The RCMP is investigating. We know the RCMP is investigating. The investigation has been going on for two and a half years now, and there have been some very strange developments during that time.

First of all, information available prior to the disaster was ignored instead of being used to prevent what happened. Today, tapes containing information that might have helped the RCMP in its investigation have been erased.

I would ask the Minister to be more specific, and instead of repeating that an investigation is going on, could he inform the House how many tapes were erased in this way? Could he tell us when the data were erased from these audio tapes? And could the Minister, and this is particular important, inform the House why a Government agency decided to erase information that might have been useful to the RCMP in its investigation? That is what Canadians want to know. Put your cards on the table!

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered that question several times today. For the benefit of the Hon. Member I will answer it again and I will give the same answer.

As the Hon. Member and all other Members of this House well know, there is an active criminal investigation ongoing, the greatest in the history of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The hon. gentleman would be the first to criticize the Government and the Solicitor General if I said something which would jeopardize the successful completion of that investigation.

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, by remaining silent, the Minister is making it very difficult for Canadians to understand why the RCMP has been hindered in its investigation since the very beginning.

It is unlikely that taped information that was important to the investigation could have been erased.

Since the RCMP's investigation has produced no results after two and a half years, why is the Government refusing to take the obvious next step and appoint a royal commission of inquiry to clear up this case so that we will finally know the role the Government played, either in trying to prevent the explosion or in solving this crime?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, with the greatest respect, I suggest that the Hon. Member is being irresponsible in suggesting that the Government is doing nothing and that the investigation is going nowhere. That is not correct. If that were the case we would have terminated the investigation.

I have advised the Hon. Member that that is not so. The investigation is very active. It is ongoing. It is the most extensive in the history of the force. I hope that we will be able to announce some results in the very near future.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

PANEL RULING AFFECTING WEST COAST FISH EXPORTS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Representatives of the B.C. fishing industry from UFAWU, PRASCU, the Fisheries Council, and the PTA, appeared before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans for four hours this morning. The Government failed to produce even two members to allow the committee to conduct its business in relation to this $750 million industry.

My question flows from the Minister's statement as reported at page 10922 of Hansard of November 18 of this year when he said:

> —we will be opposing that recommendation when it reaches the GATT council.

Is that the position of the Government of Canada? When the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans said "we" did he mean the Government of Canada?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall the context in which that statement was made but I do clearly recall stating that the Government of Canada will meet its obligations to fishermen in this matter and its obligations under the GATT.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. According to evidence given today to the Committee on Fisheries and Oceans, if the panel ruling is not opposed by the Government of Canada one-half of the B.C. fishing industry will be wiped out. I now have the confidential panel ruling from Geneva and have some understanding of why the Government did not want it released to the fishing industry or to the public.

When the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans said "we will be opposing that recommendation when it reaches the GATT council", was he speaking for the Government of Canada?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think I should correct the Hon. Member. The reason we did not want it released to the public was to enable us, in the normal course of our work before GATT rulings, to work out a situation which would protect the rights of all in the fishing industry. That is why we did not want it public. If the Hon. Member wants to wave it around in public and jeopardize the fishing industry, that is his concern, not ours.

CANADA LANDS COMPANY

CONDUCT OF OPERATIONS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and relates to the Prime Minister's over-all responsibility for the conduct of Ministers. We have been raising questions relating to the scandalous events involving the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel and they are not contradicted.

Earlier in Question Period my colleague, the Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, raised a list of concerns. The Minister for Public Works indicated that he had a report of the Auditor General which, in his opinion, indicated approval of the way in which that corporation has been operating.

The Deputy Prime Minister heard all that. Does he approve of the way in which the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel has been operated as revealed in recent stories and by the audit of the Auditor General?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the report of the Auditor General makes only one adverse comment about the operation of the corporation, that is concerning the composition of the board of directors. We have taken steps to fix that.

Indeed, I thought that management practices were inadequate and that appropriate controls were not in place. For that reason we commissioned an audit by the audit team of Public Works. The response has been that there is indeed a need to tighten up management practices. However, with regard to wrongdoing, the audit division found that there was absolutely none.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. We know that the Minister of Public Works is defending and approving in general the way in which this corporation is operated. However, does the Deputy Prime Minister approve of this method of doing business?

• (1450)

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General, who has had the opportunity to review the books, makes no adverse comment except with respect to the composition of the board of directors, and surely that gives us an insight as to whether or not the practices are appropriate.

TAX REFORM

PROPOSED BUSINESS TRANSFER TAX—EFFECT ON MUNICIPALITIES AND SCHOOL BOARDS

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance.

In the discussion paper on tax reform brought in by the Minister of Finance earlier this year, municipalities and school boards had a great deal of concern about the business transfer tax that could increase their costs up to 10 per cent.

Will the Minister tell the House and the municipalities and school boards across the country whether or not this tax is going forward?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we know that considerable progress is being made to bring about a national federal-provincial sales tax. Good progress is being accomplished.

I am very pleased to tell the Hon. Member that last week the Minister of Finance made it very clear that municipalities, universities, school boards, and hospitals will pay no more federal sales tax after the reform than they do now.

PUBLIC WORKS

QUERY WHY GOVERNMENT REFUSED TO ESTABLISH PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO ACTIVITIES OF CANADA LANDS CORPORATION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Public Works. Considering there are indications of patronage and questionable practices involving the Canada Lands Corporation at Mirabel, why is the Minister refusing to order a public inquiry into the Corporation's dealings? Does the Minister really believe there is no reason to order such an inquiry or have the Goverment's influential friends persuaded him not to order a public inquiry?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, after reviewing the reports of the Auditor General, and the special audit of our own Department, they indicate that there has been no misappropriation of funds, and that there has been nothing done that is untoward or impeaches the integrity of any of the officials. I think that we have responded well in ensuring that, from now on, new management practices will be imposed and accepted, and that indeed is the case. That is an appropriate discipline to follow in these circumstances.

REASON FOR MINISTER'S REFUSAL

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the answer does not reflect favourably on the Minister of Public Works. Contracts were awarded without tender. There was a management committee that acted unlawfully. They made all kinds of expenditures without having the authority to do so. Why is the Minister refusing to conduct a public inquiry into the affairs of the Canada Lands Corporation?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I categorically reject the suggestion that things have been done without approval. It is true that because of a misunderstanding of the authority of the corporation they did let contracts. But subsequently they applied to Treasury Board and did receive approval. That is why I am suggesting that nothing has been done wrong.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—PROTECTION OF CANADIAN CITIZENS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it has to do with human rights concerns in India.

In Canada there is continuing concern that the Government of India tends to be quite cavalier with respect to human rights violations and civil rights violations.

Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs assure this House that Canadians who are travelling in the Punjab will have the full protection of our High Commission in New Delhi, and that officers from New Delhi will be visiting the Punjab to ensure that Canadians there are being afforded full protection under the law?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, certainly I can offer the House and Canadians who might be travelling to India the assurance that the consular and other facilities of our High Commission in Delhi will be available to them in the Punjab and elsewhere.

There have been particular cases that have been previously discussed in the House, which I have also discussed or had discussed with the Indian High Commissioner to Canada. There are areas of continuing concern, and we intend to continue to follow them vigilantly.

FISHERIES

TOXIC MUSSELS—MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE OF ISSUE

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and it concerns the broadcast on CBC Radio Noon of an interview given on December 7.

The Minister is reported to have stated, "I and the Minister of Health, Mr. Epp, were made aware of the symptoms where some people became ill about a week ago and we took immediate action to send a notice to the producers of Prince Edward Island—"

We know that "immediate action" that the Minister is talking about, Mr. Speaker, is a "stop order" that was issued on November 29 to the shippers in Prince Edward Island.

That is backed up by the Minister of Health and Welfare's own chronology for November 29 when he stated that, as a routine precautionary measure the shippers of mussels from P.E.I. were requested to hold further shipments pending further investigation.

That is clearly on November 29, Mr. Speaker, and this statement clearly refers to November 29. Will the Minister come clean and tell us exactly the date that he knew when the mussels were toxic?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, first the reference to "about a week ago" is not very precise.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): That's the reason for the question.

Mr. Siddon: The facts on this issue as have been stated here, that I learned on the afternoon of Tuesday, December 1, are indeed the facts as stated.

The reference to "immediate action" refers to the Departments of Fisheries and Health in initiating certain actions on the Sunday which had not been brought to my attention, nor which were proved.

In fact, established procedures were followed at all times, as has been carefully underlined in the House by the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare. Those procedures have been outlined in a chronology that was released last Thursday, and those are the facts. Standard procedures were followed.

STOP SHIPMENT ORDER—TIME MINISTER WAS INFORMED

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): There is something wrong with this story, Mr. Speaker, because the Minister is clearly saying, "I and the Minister of Health, Mr. Epp", not his officials—put the stop order on the shipment of mussels on Sunday.

An Hon. Member: No, he did not say that.

Ms. Copps: Yes, he did. Read the interview.

Mr. Henderson: He sent a notice to the producers of Prince Edward Island that all shipments should stop of mussels produced in Prince Edward Island. That is a "stop shipment".

I ask the Minister once again not to blame it on the officials. If he is going to make statements about himself and the Minister of Health, then he must accept the responsibility for making those statements, and he must accept that he is the one who is in charge. If he didn't know with all this evidence, I can tell you one thing, Mr. Speaker, he should have known.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is dwelling on an unfortunate confluence of two thoughts expressed in two sentences, and confusing them.

At lunch-time on Tuesday, December 1, scientific information had been analysed by officials in the Departments of Fisheries and Oceans and Health and Welfare.

Ms. Copps: Your assistant knew on the November 27.

Mr. Siddon: That led to information being conveyed by my Deputy Minister to my Chief of Staff, as a result of which I was informed of this situation on the afternoon of December 1. As a result, an alert was issued later that day. That indeed summarizes the facts of the situation.

REQUEST FOR PROGRAM TO COMPENSATE PRODUCERS FOR LOSSES

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare has taken action for health reasons against the consumption and distribution of mussels, oysters, clams, and Gulf of St. Lawrence scallops.

All producers, even those whose product has not been shown to be affected by toxins, are suffering severe economic hardship, and some are facing financial ruin because of this situation.

Will the Minister assure those producers in Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, Quebec, and New Brunswick that he will act quickly to put a compensation program in place to prevent the disastrous financial consequence to these producers?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member I just want to make sure the record is very clear. Did the Hon. Member mention scallops? They are not included.

Mr. Harris: Gulf of St. Lawrence scallops.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): They are not included, Mr. Speaker I want to make sure the record is very clear on that.

I wish to say to all Members that advertisements have been placed in major newspapers today, French and English, regarding the plan of action, the manner in which Atlantic clams, mussels, oysters, and quahogs have been removed from the Canadian regional market. A new supply of products will re-enter the marketplace as inspection services are able to ensure that they fully meet health and safety requirements.

I want to say to the Hon. Member, as I said to the House yesterday, it is the health considerations that are of primary concern, and we will handle those first and look at other details later.

EFFECT ON SHELLFISH INDUSTRY

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the story in The Globe and Mail quotes the Minister and indicates that Gulf scallops do not include shrimp, crab, or Atlantic scallops. If he is correcting that, I thank him for it.

However, my question was for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I am referring to comments made by officials in Nova Scotia, the Deputy Minister of Fisheries in Nova Scotia, regarding a very serious financial problem in Nova Scotia. The provincial director of aquaculture in Nova Scotia talked about a major impact and there are the financial effects on the shellfish industry in Prince Edward Island where producers are about to go bankrupt. These are very serious considerations aside from the health considerations that the Minister's Department of Health is responsible for looking after.

Will the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans tell the House that he will look after the people in the industry who are affected by this?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member says that it is a serious issue he is right, and I have accepted that. I think it is important to restore the confidence of Canadians in health issues, consumer issues, and the industry. I think in all three areas the consideration is the same, that is, to assure that health considerations are absolutely of primary concern. The restoration of the industry and sales for the industry can best be reassured by taking the plan of action just as I have described it. We intend to continue just that way.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AID TO HAITI—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Haitian military regime has been guilty of flagrant human rights violations. Not long ago, dozens of citizens who were quietly waiting their turn to vote were savagely beaten. The government cancelled this democratic election and is now planning to hold an illegal election on January 17.

In view of these events, what concrete action does her Government intend to take to support the Haitian people's quest for justice and democracy?

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question which comes at a very appropriate time. Since the tragic events on November 29, our Government has reacted in no incertain terms to the acts of violence that ended in the election being cancelled. Since that time, we have also taken some concrete measures. We recalled our ambassador, and last week after meeting with the Prime Minister and Cabinet, our ambassador returned to Haiti with a special message which, and I cannot of course reveal the exact contents of the letter, reflects our indignation in very clear terms.

Mr. Speaker, like all Canadians our Government was appalled at what happened, and we hope the Haitian people will be able to achieve democracy safely and without constraints?

Mr. de Corneille: The Canadian Government has hesitated too long.

REQUEST THAT CANADA OFFER PROTECTION TO OPPOSITION LEADERS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, in view of the horrors which transpired during the attempted elections in Haiti, will the Government at least offer some form of Canadian protection to opposition leaders and to officials of the election committee? These individuals are in grave danger, as Hon. Members of Parliament know, and their lives are at stake.

Perhaps the Minister would be willing to have our Embassy in Haiti register these individuals and let it be known to Colonel Namphy's Government, so that it understands Canada's strict concern about the survival and well-being of those opposition leaders and those members of the election committee.

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, we have expressed our concern to the authorities that an election should be held in a climate of democracy and freedom, and we will continue to do so between now and the next election. The Haitian people must be allowed to achieve democracy, and the responsibility is theirs and theirs alone.

Mr. Speaker: There will be two more questions. The Hon. Member for Willowdale, followed by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan.

ABORTION

STATISTICS CANADA—DISTINCTION BETWEEN ABORTION PERFORMED IN HOSPITALS AND CLINICS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. Earlier this year Statistics Canada decided once again to publish abortion statistics. The figures will include abortions performed outside Canadian hospitals, as well as those performed in the clinics of Ontario and Quebec which operate in contravention of Canadian law.

Can the Minister tell the House if the published abortion statistics will contain a clear distinction between illegal abortions and legal abortions under Section 251 of the Criminal Code?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Supply and Services): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that Statistics Canada will indeed publish separate data pertaining to abortions performed in hospitals and in clinics as they will be recorded by the provinces.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

AIR-INDIA CRASH INVESTIGATION—ALLEGED PRIOR BOMB THREAT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Will he confirm The Journal report last night which indicated that one of the tapes that was erased contained wiretap evidence indicating that there was in fact a threat against Air-India made a number of weeks, if not months, prior to the actual bombing? Will he confirm that that was on one of the tapes which was erased?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I stated on a number of occasions today in the House, there is an active, ongoing criminal investigation and I am not going to say anything that would jeopardize the successful completion of that investigation.

Mr. Speaker: On one question, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie.

SHIPBUILDING

AWARDING OF CONTRACTS TO QUEBEC SHIPYARDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question will be very short. In today's Le Devoir one can read: "In a letter from Michel Côté to Daniel Johnson, Ottawa had promised huge contracts for Quebec shipyards". My question is very simple: The three Quebec shipyards are now facing bankruptcy. Is the Minister of Supply and Services prepared to honour his commitment to award huge contracts to Quebec shipyards? If so, what contracts will Quebec be awarded?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Supply and Services): Strangely enough, Mr. Speaker, this question originates from a Party which was in office when three Quebec refineries shut down, which never did support the petrochemical industry, which took its own sweet time to endorse the drugs bill, but which today seeks to tell us that we ought to defend the interests of Quebecers. Mr. Speaker, the shipyards issue was one of our first priorities in 1984. We awarded contracts, we made sure the shipyardss would survive, and we will continue to look after the interests of Quebecers. We will award contracts and make sure that due consideration has been given to fair competition, quality, and regional disparities.

[English]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, earlier the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs made some comments which were certainly directed to me. However, in all fairness to him and to you, Sir, I should like to reserve my right to raise a question of privilege at the first opportunity after I have read the exact text of what he meant when he tried to imply something. That really should not have been done in the House, especially coming from an ex-Prime Minister of Canada who is now the Minister responsible for foreign affairs.

I should like to reserve my right to do that tomorrow after I have seen the exact text in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). I took notice of his question of privilege.

POINTS OF ORDER

ATTENDANCE AT COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, this morning the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans sat from nine o'clock until one o'clock and heard four sets of witnesses from British Columbia.

I would like some direction from you, Mr. Speaker, on the point of order I would like to raise. The Government side never turned up enough Members at any time for the committee to conduct its business or to order an extended run of the minutes because of the importance of the issue to British Columbia, Quebec, Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia.

My second point is that we were not able to move or pass any motions in relation to the tabling of documents or evidence. I am just wondering, under a point of order, whether or not Your Honour could advise Members of the House how it is possible to conduct business when the Government will not turn out its own Members.

Mr. Speaker: the Hon. Member for Skeena has raised on a point of order certain concerns that he has relating to activities in a committee this morning. First, I should commend the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) for not having raised it under a question of privilege.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: However, I think the point has been made. It is not a matter with which the Chair can interfere and I suggest that now that the point is within the knowledge of both the Government and the Opposition perhaps some discussions might correct the matter.

INTERJECTION BY MEMBER

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday's Hansard at page 11760 contains factual errors on the part of the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) and the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) as to my interjection. The statement by the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) on that same page sets out exactly what I said, and I stand behind that comment.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Carney that this House endorse, as being in the national interest, the Canada—United States Free Trade Agreement, the legal text of which was tabled in the House of Commons on Friday, December 11, 1987.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the attention of the House that I have received an amendment to the main motion on the free trade motion moved by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) seconded by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia).

I think it has been indicated to the appropriate Members in the New Democratic Party and in the Official Opposition that I have some difficulty procedurally with the proposed amendment. I will read it to the House:

> That the motion be amended by inserting immediately after the comma following the word "interest" the following:
> "as determined by the people of Canada in a general election".

I think it has also been indicated that I would want to hear some argument on this matter before making my decision. I recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

Mr. Lloyd Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your bringing this matter to our attention and asking for guidance.

I think the amendment was drafted certainly in recognition of the various precedents that have been established in the House in which we are not to set out any conditions of approval for the endorsation called for in the amendment but rather to clearly define the concept of "national interest". I think Your Honour would recognize that that is a definition that probably has as many interpretations as there are citizens in the country. The Government used the phrase, not us. The Government said, "in the national interest".

Over the years we have defined that there is only one way of ultimately deciding the national interest and that is through the democratic process, by way of an election. Other than that it becomes an academic debate, a matter of bias or interpretation as to what is in the national interest.

As you will read the Government's motion, it says endorsing the trade agreement because it is in Canada's national interest. We are saying by way of our amendment that the most appropriate way of defining that is through an election itself. It is not a matter of the condition of endorsement, it is a way of demonstrating how this House would have to provide a further clarification or interpretation of the words "national interest" and we would not presume that the Liberal Party's interpretation would necessarily be omniscient or all prevailing. We would want to have recourse to the election to decide that.

You will find during the course of the debate on this motion various interpretations of the national interest being put forward. Even in the sovereign rights of this Parliament to decide that, the Government does not make any effort to decide it, so we are simply saying that the amendment is a way of taking the Government's prescription, namely, that the trade agreement must be in the national interest, and providing a way in which that interest in honourable traditions of the parliamentary system can most effectively and adequately be described and defined.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, having studied the amendment put forward by the Official Opposition to the motion before us, it seems to me that upon examination of the general conditions which apply to amendments to make them admissible, three different criteria are involved. First, obviously an amendment must be relevant to the question in the motion. In this case that certainly is the case, particularly recognizing the words of my hon. friend from Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). Second, that if not proposing an alternative, an amendment must modify a question in order to increase its acceptability. I refer here to Citation 425 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which reads:

> The object of an amendment may be either to modify a question in such a way as to increase its acceptability or to present to the House a different proposition as an alternative to the original which must, however, be relevant to the subject of the questions.

Third, the amendment must stay within the scope of the motion and not raise a matter which is foreign to the proposition raised in the main motion. I refer here to Citation 437 in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which reads:

> An amendment setting forth a proposition dealing with a matter which is far unto the proposition involved in the main motion is not relevant and cannot be moved.

In my judgment, the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry meets all of these requirements for the following reasons. The motion specifically states that the House "endorse, as being in the national interest". The amendment does not seek to introduce a new concept, Mr. Speaker, but simply seeks to define the term. Seeking greater definition and clarity is an acceptable objective of any amendment and the motion makes no reference about how the national interest is defined. The amendment clarifies this question by stating that the people of Canada will define whether or not the trade agreement is in the national interest. That seems to me to be perfectly in line with the traditions of Parliament in terms of the amendment and the practices of a democratic society. Furthermore, the amendment does not impose in a strict sense a condition to be met before the motion can be accepted but rather simply offers a means of defining national interest.

Who determines what is in the national interest, Mr. Speaker? Surely the people of Canada are the ultimate arbitrators when it comes to this critical question. How can they express their decision on this question? A general election is the normal way of meeting this objective. There are others, I suppose; the theory of a national referendum et cetera, but we reject those and recognize that a general election is the normal way.

The amendment simply states the obvious. It was the Government which introduced the concept of national interest into this motion in the first place and the amendment simply seeks a definition of how to determine what is in the national interest.

I want to add as a general suggestion for you to consider, namely, that on this very critical matter, you be generous in your interpretation. I ask you to be generous because I note in previous comments you have indicated a concern when a similar motion keeps reappearing in this House.

Regarding the whole matter of motions, Erskine May says that a motion or an amendment which is the same in substance as a question which has been decided in the affirmative or negative during the current Session may not be brought forward again during that Session.

We all recognize that we in this House have actually discussed, debated and voted on issues very similar to the one before us today which has been introduced by the Government. If we were to follow the letter of the law according to Erskine May, we might suggest that the motion itself is not in order. However, I do not want to argue that because I think we all agree that this is an important issue. I think all Canadians recognize that it is an important issue and I believe we want to be generous in our interpretation of the motion under past practices of the House, recognizing the importance of it and, equally so, recognizing the importance of the amendment put forward by my friend from Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments to make in support of the motion of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). The intent of the amendment which I have here before me is to qualify the word "interest" as being determined by the exercise of our democratic rights, and to amend the motion after the word "interest" to read as follows: "That this House endorse, as being in the national interest, as determined by the people of Canada in a general election, the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement". Mr. Speaker, what we are trying to do with this motion is to ensure that the words "national interest" are clearly understood as being an expression of the democratic will of the Canadian people, as expressed in a general election. To say that the amendment imposes a condition on the main motion is nonsense. We say it does not impose a condition, it clarifies, and I think the motion meets the requirements of the Standing Orders, or at least of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, Citation 203, which says, in referring to amendments, and I quote:

> (1) It is an imperative rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed.

The term "national interest" is the subject of an amendment, and to continue Citation 203;

> Every amendment proposed to be made either to a question or to a proposed amendment should be so framed that if agreed to by the House the question or amendment as amended would be intelligible and consistent with itself.

I think it is "intelligible and consistent" to say that the Canadian people must decide whether the national interest is at stake. According to the Government's proposal—the motion before the House today—it is in the national interest to agree to endorse this Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement.

What we are doing, Mr. Speaker, is to specify clearly and intelligibly that the national interest must be determined in a general election, which will deal with this question in a democratic manner.

Mr. Speaker, I will not lay claim much longer to the time of the House, because I realize other Members want to speak as well, but I would ask the Chair to consider only that we are trying to clarify, to provide the House with a clear and specific proposal to amend the main motion, an amendment I know Canadians will see as a conditio sine qua non for determining the "national interest". Mr. Speaker, only the Canadian people, exercising their democratic rights, can determine what the national interest is. We have had some long debates in this House, and I remember the debate we had on the National Capital. I remember this one particularly because an important point was made there. At the time it was said that the National Capital should be developed, in the national interest, by a commission appointed to that end. I spoke at some length about the definition of the words "national interest", and Hansard is there to prove it, Mr. Speaker. What exactly do those words mean? Well, we finally consulted the provincial Premiers, and who, when they met here in Ottawa for a federal-provincial conference, decided that the national interest should be clear and precise and that it had to be determined, and they did so. They also decided that the National Capital went beyond the City of Ottawa to encompass the entire National Capital Region. That is the location of the seat of government, and it is that experience I draw on to define the term "national interest".

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that you refer to the proceedings in Hansard and read the important debate that took place on the definition of the term "national interest", and I submit, with respect, that today, all the Official Opposition is trying to do is to clarify intelligibly the terms "national interest", in a way that I believe is to the advantage of Canadians and of our democratic process.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a few words to this debate. Unfortunately, I will not be on the same side of the question as my colleagues who just spoke.

I think it is very important that the House understand very clearly the question which is before it so that when the House decides on it everyone will know exactly what the House has decided. I suggest that the words that are used and the placement of the words in the amendment make it vague as to its intent.

If members of the Opposition wanted to put an election reference in the resolution it would be possible to do so, but I would have worded it differently and I would have inserted it in a different position. Unfortunately, I am not in a position to help my colleague. That he will have to do for himself.

The amendment as worded could seem to suggest that the election of September 4, 1984 was in the national interest. We happen to think so, so that if that was the intent we might agree with the amendment since that election definitely was in the national interest. The amendment could also mean, and I think this is what my friend is driving at, that this should only happen after a general election which would be in the national interest.

I submit that the problem with the amendment is that it is vague. Beauchesne says that vagueness alone cannot rule out an amendment, but I think we could also look at the lack of specificity in the proposed amendment.

The amendment also violates the principles of relevance and scope. For example, the amendment adds new material and/or a new question to the question that is before the House, and that is the question of determination by the people of Canada. The words do not make it clear to the reader whether, if the entire motion as amended were to pass, the referendum would have happened, may have happened or would happen in the future. I suppose I am saying that it is vague in its placement and it is vague in its wording. I suggest it could be worded more precisely.

The Hon. Member could have taken some direction from Beauchesne's Citation 426 which states that an amendment must make the whole main question intelligible. I suggest that as worded, and as placed, the amendment is vague as to what election the Hon. Member means, the election just passed or an election the Hon. Member looks forward to in the future.

As well, the amendment presses a little too hard against the limits of relevance and scope, and of course that is for the Chair to decide. Based on that, I submit that the amendment should be ruled out of order because it is vague as to which general election it refers to and I think it is improperly placed in the question which is before the House.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis), having available to him all the precedents set forth in Beauchesne's and other precedents that have not been set forth, can only come up with the criticism that the amendment is vague.

I think it is a matter for argument or debate once the amendment is accepted as to the value of its content. However, I respectfully submit that there is nothing in the amendment, taken by itself or reading it in connection with the resolution, that would support the argument that the amendment is so vague as to contravene Citation 426, which is based on Erskine May. It states:

> It is an imperative rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed.

My hon. friend, the Deputy Government House Leader has not attacked the amendment on the grounds of relevance. He concedes that it is relevant. The citation goes on to say:

> Every amendment proposed to be made, either to a question or to a proposed amendment, should be so framed that, if agreed to by the House, the question or amendment as amended would be intelligible and consistent with itself.

The Deputy Government House Leader has not argued that the motion as amended, if the amendment were to be accepted, would be inconsistent or unintelligible. Instead, he relies on the argument that there is something vague about the amendment. He argues that it is not clear to which general election the amendment refers.

With regard to that argument, let me say first that this should be more a matter of debate than anything else, but even if one tries to meet his argument head on, I submit that my hon. friend is wrong. If he is attempting to say that maybe this amendment refers to the general election which has already taken place, surely then we would have offered an amendment which would have read: "As having been determined by the people of Canada in a general election". We have not used the past tense, so it is obvious that the Government could not argue that this amendment refers to the general election of 1984.

Surely the amendment is sufficiently precise, if precision is needed, to rule out that possibility on the basis of which the Deputy Government House Leader argues that the amendment is vague.

The precedent in Beauchesne, based on Erskine May, nowhere uses the word vague or vagueness. It only speaks of whether or not the amendment or the question as amended would be intelligible and consistent with itself. The use of the word vagueness is not found anywhere there.

I repeat that my hon. friend has not argued that there is anything unintelligible or inconsistent in the motion offered by the Government, if the amendment offered by the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) were to be deemed acceptable.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, in the amendment on behalf of the Official Opposition, was simply trying to assist the House with respect to a means of defining national interest. Rather than creating vagueness, the purpose of the amendment is to eliminate the possibility of vagueness and to meet head-on the requirement of the citation in Beauchesne based on Erskine May that the amendment would make the question or amendment intelligible and consistent with itself. I submit that we have met this requirement in our amendment.

With respect, I remind you that of all the possible citations in Beauchesne that he could have used, and other citations that he did not mention, the Deputy Government House Leader relies simply on the general criticism on the grounds of vagueness, which, I submit, is not supported either by the precedent, the question itself, by a plain and simple reading of either the motion or the amendment, or the motion and the amendment taken together. Therefore, I respectfully submit that you should receive the amendment as being in order.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I want to come to the defence of the Deputy Government House Leader. I think his comments were not particularly well founded, but he had a certain point in terms of his arguments regarding vagueness. I do not think he is arguing at all about relevancy and has made it quite clear, but he went on at some length about vagueness and attempted to make a case for vagueness. I think he may have been poking fun at us because he knows that in Beauchesne's' Fifth Edition Citation 429 states:

> An amendment cannot be ruled out because of its vagueness.

In spite of the Deputy Government House Leader's arguments, he will understand as well that vagueness is not a criterion for ruling an amendment in or out of order.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I want to contribute briefly to this point of order on this ingenuous attempt being made by the Opposition. I tend to agree with some of the remarks of the Opposition in terms of their reasons why the argument of vagueness should be ruled out. Quite frankly, I think that question is almost irrelevant compared to what is being done in a most ingenuous way by the Opposition.

I refer to the third point raised by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). This amendment introduces a brand new element to the resolution, namely, an election. It should be ruled out of order on that ground alone.

The resolution simply states that the House endorse the Canada-U.S. trade agreement, and adds the qualifier: "As being in the national interest". The substance of the resolution is that the House endorse the Canada-U.S. trade agreement. The motion includes the qualifier that this is in the national interest.

If the argument of the Opposition is correct, then one must infer that the House is going to work against the national interest. One can go on to debate the classic definition of the national interest in the classrooms and forums of the nation, but surely we in this Chamber practice the national interest every day in this Chamber.

Beauchesne states that an amendment cannot introduce an entirely new concept. The Opposition is ingenuously attempting to introduce the concept of an election, which is entirely different from the House working in the national interest to endorse the Canada-U.S. trade agreement. If the Opposition's amendment is valid, I suppose it is suggesting that this House works against the national interest.

The substance of the resolution is to endorse the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement. While there may be some amendments to that resolution, attempting to change the substance of the resolution by adding the concept of elections means that we might as well close down forever and a day. If this amendment were allowed so that the work of Parliament could always be defined by an election, I suggest most humbly that we could always have amendments from the floor saying in effect: "The House, pursuant to an election" or, "The House, after an election" take certain action.

With respect, I do not think you need to listen to too many submissions because while the amendment is most ingenuous and interesting, it does not concern the issue. The issue is procedure, and that is why Beauchesne and others made sure that one cannot introduce a new fundamental concept that thwarts the resolution.

The resolution is for this House, working in the national interest, to endorse the free trade agreement.

Mr. Speaker: Before I hear the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, perhaps I could ask a question which the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) or others might want to answer briefly. As I understand it, the argument is that, in the interests of clarity, this amendment would be appropriate because after the next election—and I think it is clear that is what it is referring to—we will have an expression by the Canadian people of what is in the public interest.

What about a minority Government? Can someone address that matter?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, if I may say, before the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) responds, no one can predict the outcome of an election. As Your Honour suggests, one of the possible outcomes could be a minority Government. However, as we have seen in the past, that coalition of forces elected to the House will be based upon the very clear lines that have been taken thus far in the election process. There are three Parties. They are offering themselves for election. Two of them are opposed and one is for the agreement. Out of those three Parties—and let me just speculate for a moment—let us say that the Liberal Party receives the largest number of seats but without a clear majority, the Conservatives may receive the second largest number of seats, but the third Party, known for its judgment and goodwill at times, will be in a position to support a new Government. Therefore, we could have, as we now have in public opinion polls, close to 60 per cent or 70 per cent of the Canadian people being represented against a national interest as defined as being for or in favour of the free trade agreement.

So I would think that a minority Parliament, while it may be more complicating in the life of the Speaker, would also be able to speak with the same clarity on the national interest as one with an elected majority Government.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a small contribution to this debate. There has been some conversation about intelligibility. It is an interesting word. It is there and it is in our precedents to help us all remain aware of the reality that when we take an action as a House in relationship to a motion, the action we decide to take should be clear to the Canadian people. Ultimately, we are accountable to them for the actions we take.

There has been some discussion about whether or not the amendment as proposed refers to a previous election, any general election in our history, provincial or federal, I would assume, or whether it refers to an election in the future. I think there is a tendency in the discussions to this point to say that it probably refers to an election in the future. That makes a great deal of sense but it is not clear in the wording. But that comes to mind because it is an action the Government has taken on December 11, and we are probably referring to an election in the future without specifying. If that is true, I think we would end up with a logically inconsistent motion, even if reworded, because the main motion calls for this House—this House, not a future House, and we must all remember that this House disappears on election day—to endorse, and so on. If they wanted to move an amendment that added a new concept, they could have added a concept that there be a referendum, and then we could argue about whether or not it was acceptable. But the suggested amendment provides no mechanism for the resolution of an issue.

We do not have proportional representation in this country where we could run one Party against another on the basis of a public policy. We have an electoral system with 282 ridings, and perhaps after redistribution a few more, where people select the best representative for their community to come to this House. It is not a referendum on a single policy issue. It never has been. I suggest it is unlikely it ever will be in the future.

Therefore, there would be no resolution unless there had been an added kind of concept like a referendum being held, or something of that sort. If we accept the motion, we have, first, the lack of intelligibility about which election is meant, historical or future, and we are left without a mechanism to resolve the issue of whether this initiative itself, as a discreet and distinct piece of public policy, is or is not in the public interest. If Members opposite wanted to move, as determined by the people of Canada, in the 1984 general election, then this House, which was elected in 1984, would be expressing an opinion on whether this is in the national interest. But we leave it vague and unintelligible. We are not making a statement to the Canadian people about the will of the House.

I think that on that basis it should be ruled out of order, and they can come back with some other wording that might indeed be intelligible.

Mr. Speaker: I do not want to prolong this because I am going to give it very careful thought. I think I can indicate to all Hon. Members who have intervened, and it has been helpful to me, that certainly the Chair takes it that this is a reference to the next general election. I do not think anyone need to argue that point.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan), who spoke a few moments ago, said, as I understood him, that the motion before the House is simply that this House endorse the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement. But I want to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the point that this motion is not so narrowly worded or limited as the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants suggests. Instead, the motion itself brings in the concept of the national interest. It brings it in as an additional concept or factor with respect to approving the agreement.

The Government itself, having inserted in the motion a phrase "the national interest", I submit, cannot argue to you, Mr. Speaker, that an amendment intended to give meaning to the phrase "the national interest" or to clarify its meaning, is somehow out of order. We are offering an amendment to define the national interest, or to suggest a way of defining the national interest. If the Government had wanted to avoid an amendment in the terms offered by the Official Opposition, then the Government should not have presented a motion with the phrase "the national interest" in it.

Having presented a motion containing the words "the national interest" as an additional concept to approving the agreement, then I respectfully submit that the Government itself has opened the door to the acceptability of amendments which might not otherwise have been acceptable in so far as they refer to the phrase or concept "the national interest".

I respectfully submit that the situation may well have been different if the phrase "the national interest" had not been placed in the motion by the Government. Having done so, it cannot now argue that the amendment, intended to define or clarify the concept of "the national interest", is somehow inadmissible. Again, I respectfully urge you, Mr. Speaker, to accept the amendment as being admissible, related as it is to the phrase "the national interest" which the Government itself has placed in the motion which, therefore, makes it not simply a motion to approve the free trade agreement but makes it something more and, therefore, more subject to amendment than would otherwise be the case.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I want to add some points of view to the points raised by the House Leader for the Official Opposition. The Government, of course, we all recognize, did not have to put the term "national interest" into the text of the motion. The Government choosing to do that simply raises the question, what is the national interest? The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) in his amendment has attempted to define one way of determining that.

The reason this becomes a rather critical issue is the assumption in the motion that the agreement reached by the Canadian-United States negotiators is in fact an agreement that is in the national interest. I want to remind you, Mr. Speaker, in our deliberations on this, that the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), in the leadership race running up to the last federal election, opposed on the record the notion of a free trade deal with the United States.

Mr. Andre: What does that have to do with this point of order?

• (1550)

Mr. Riis: The relationship to the point of order is that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) is on record as opposing the idea and concept of a free trade deal with the United States. The issue before us was never even debated in the last federal election campaign. No Canadian who cast his or her ballot for the Conservative Party of Canada did so with the notion that the Government may enter into a free trade deal with the United States.

The question is on what basis the Government makes the assumption that this is in the national interest. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry is attempting to indicate that the way we determine national interest in a democratic parliamentary society is through a national election.

This is very critical. If we assume that this trade deal is automatically in the national interest when there has been no election on free trade, one could make the case to the contrary that the assumption of the electorate of Canada was that the Prime Minister and his senior cabinet Ministers were opposed to the notion because that point was made on the public record.

I submit that this amendment is not only in order but is moved in the spirit of attempting to clarify an issue which, we would all agree, is very important. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to be flexible in your ruling, particularly when you consider that we could offer points of view on the admissibility of the motion which is before us. However, I will put that aside with the assumption that it is not needed. We all recognize how important this issue is and that we need a full and complete debate on it. We certainly need to know precisely what we are debating. This amendment is at least a step toward clarifying the whole issue.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, it has been indicated in this debate that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said in 1983 that they were opposed to free trade. The whole situation has changed since 1983. In 1982 the Liberal Government appointed a royal commission to examine the economy and make recommendations. This study, cost Canadian taxpayers $24 million. The report tabled in 1985 recommended that Canada enter into negotiations for free trade with the United States. After reading a $24 million study the Prime Minister and the Finance Minister started thinking again. Many people were opposed to free trade and many people did not have a position on it because they knew nothing about it. However, if you reads the Macdonald report you will support free trade.

The Prime Minister commissioned the Flynn-Hockin committee to hold committee meetings across the country. In 1986 it recommended that Canada can only lose by introducing retaliatory protectionist measures but cannot stand by and do nothing with a modest and dispersed population. It said that Canada must have access to the markets of the world and be able to sell in these markets if it is to prosper. For this reason the committee recommended that we get into free trade discussions. That is why everyone changed their minds.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) has given some views as to why the motion ought to be supported. However, that is getting us a little bit away from the procedural point.

Mr. Boudria: You're being kind.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) says that I am being kind. He has been the beneficiary of much kindness and will be again, provided that he sums up in a succinct manner, as I know he can.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to get into a debate on whether it is a good idea or a bad idea to have the agreement. I intend to address that later in debate rather than on this point of order.

With regard to the admissibility of the amendment as proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), it is clear that my colleague has offered an amendment to the motion that is very much in keeping with the spirit of the main motion. In other words, my colleague has not offered an amendment that is contrary to the views expressed in the main motion, notwithstanding the fact that we will address that issue in debate later.

We have moved an amendment to add words after "the national interest". We know that Governments have signed such agreements in the past without qualifying them as being in the national interest in a motion in this House.

The amendment offered by my colleague is not to disagree that it is in the national interest; it is merely to define something which the Government has injected into the debate. We could make an argument right now as to whether the words "national interest" should be in the motion. If one were to listen attentively to what our colleagues on the government side have said, one could conclude that they have actually argued that the words "national interest" should not even appear in the Government's motion.

However, we are not debating whether that should be the case. We are debating whether, having recognized that the words "national interest" can be in the main motion, an amendment offered to further define what that national interest is is indeed in order. The Government could argue that it disagrees on whether or not this would further the national interest. That is a point of debate, not necessarily a point of order.

On page 397 of Erskine May, Twentieth Edition, it reads:

> The Speaker has ruled that an amendment to add another subject for inquiry to a question declaring the expediency of establishing a tribunal for the purpose of inquiring into a definite matter of urgent public importance, under the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Act, 1921, would not be relevant—

I agree that if that were the case today, it should be judged in a similar manner. However, today we have not asked for an amendment to add another subject for inquiry. We are not moving that the motion should read that, as opposed to having free trade, we should have multilateral trade, or something which would add another level of debate. We are keeping it at the same level. We are merely offering a motion which would further define the Government's motion.

As I have said, if one were to read the representations made by the Deputy Government House Leader, and, in particular, the Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan), one would likely conclude that they were speaking against having the words "national interest" in the main motion.

That is a debate which we could perhaps have had but have not chosen to address at this time. Because we are not now disagreeing with that being part of the motion—we will disagree with that in debate—I do not believe that the Government is justified in using that as a reason to disqualify the amendment which we have moved to the main motion.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for York South—Weston for (Nunziata) for a very brief remark.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I am so persuaded by the submissions made by my colleague and friend, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), that I wish to add a few remarks to the point which is being argued.

I look at the motion before us today and ask for the reason which the Government is presenting the motion. The motion reads:

> That this House endorse, as being in the national interest, the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement, the legal text of which was tabled in the House of Commons on Friday, December 11, 1987.

Canadians are asking why it is necessary to present this motion and to have this motion voted upon in the House of Commons. I have consulted with some resident experts and they advise me that there is no legal or constitutional requirement to have this motion carried. It seems to me that, if there is no legal requirement to have this motion presented and voted upon in the House, why is the Government presenting this motion?

I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is mere puffery. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would like to visit President Ronald Reagan on January 2, 1988, and say to him, "Here we have the endorsation of the Parliament of Canada".

I notice you are on the edge of your seat, Mr. Speaker, which might suggest to me that you are about to cut short my submission.

I would like to conclude my submission by pointing out that because this motion is not in any legal form, by accepting the amendment in no way are you, Mr. Speaker, affecting any legal requirement. I should also point out that the Government has chosen to use the word "endorse" rather than "ratify". I suggest that there is some significance to the fact that the Government has chosen the word "endorse" over the word "ratify".

Mr. Speaker: I know that Hon. Members would not want the debate to go on beyond its very useful part. I would ask the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) to respect the wishes of the Chair to close off debate at this time.

I have heard the arguments, which have been succinctly and well put, and also made with authority. I will take them into account and return to the Chamber at the earliest opportunity and decide on the matter.

I have listened carefully for nearly an hour, because it is an important matter. It is an important motion in front of the Chamber and the amendment is important to both the opposition Parties and has been strongly argued for. I will take all of that into account.

Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, as each of the speakers for the three Parties has suggested, this is certainly an historic debate. Therefore, we have to put it very much in a broad perspective. It is important to forget some of the name calling that has taken place and the short-term bickering that has occurred and to think about the future of our country in a world where a period of post-war prosperity is no longer assured to us. That is the fact that dominates this debate. The prosperity which we were used to as a country in the period since 1945 has ceased to become something upon which we can count.

In that sense, it is a period much like the 1840s when prosperity in Canada was hit by changing trade relations as the United Kingdom itself moved to free trade, and in turn the business elite of that time in panic issued the Annexation Manifesto of 1849. The manifesto is described by the pre-eminent historian of that period, J.M.S. Careless, as being signed by "a list which read chiefly like a roster of Montreal's business elite". Of course, that Annexation Manifesto, which I have here, called for Canada to join the United States.

It is fascinating to look through the arguments put forward in that Annexation Manifesto. For example, it states "—the Canadian market is too limited to tempt the foreign capitalist". Where, Mr. Speaker, have we heard that argument in the debate in front of us in 1987? Another quote is, "The proposed union would render Canada a field for American capital into which it would enter as freely for the prosecution of public works and private enterprise as into any of the present States". Where have we heard that argument, if not from the government benches? This annexation "—would increase our commerce, both with the United States and foreign countries, and would not necessarily diminish to any great extent our intercourse with Great Britain, into which our products would, for the most part, enter on the same times as at the present".

The Annexation Manifesto further states, "At the same time there is every reason to believe that our shipbuilders, as well at Quebec as on the Great Lakes, would find an unlimited market in all the ports of the American continent".

One could continue, Mr. Speaker, but I think perhaps the point is made that the Annexation Manifesto of 1849 made similar arguments for continental union, for joining the United States, as have been made by this Government in trying to support what in effect is the annexation manifesto of 1987: this free trade agreement which is in front of us.

Perhaps this deal has only one difference, and that difference is a history which perhaps finds itself in a comment which is often made of history, "History repeats itself the second time as farce". It seems to me that the Government, and the way that it has gone forth in trying to seek this trade agreement with the United States, has given us the greatest long-running farce which this country has ever seen, a farce which has included hearings across the country at which the public could not even testify. Those hearings were not even advertised in the city in which they were held. Those hearings across the country, believe it or not, Mr. Speaker, took place even before a final text of the free trade agreement had been prepared.

If that was not farce enough, we had to add to the craziness and the bizarre quality of this whole mad escapade the fact that the studies which exist with reference to this deal's impact on our economy are still kept secret. We still cannot have access under the Access to Information Act. For instance, we cannot have access to studies on auto parts and how they will be hit by this deal. That is of extreme importance to my constituency and to many constituencies across the country.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Tell us about IODE.

Mr. Langdon: I suspect that it may even be of extreme importance to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) if he sat and thought about it.

Also it is important to see, for the farce that it is, the timing which has been established to look at the agreement. Absolutely no time has been given to Members of Parliament, to interest groups throughout the country, to corporations, to trade unions, to churches, or to farm groups, all of whom expressed strong views when they talked with us as we went across the country as part of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade. Absolutely no time has been given to these groups to look at this incredibly complex deal. It is possible that Ministers receive précis of these deals which are not given to opposition critics. We spend our weekends trying to pore through every word. Let me tell the House that it is a complex, complicated, difficult deal, and we are leaving ourselves one week for possible debate on a deal which can fundamentally change the country in virtually all its aspects. That is farce, that is farce.

Just to add to the farce, we have as well a tremendous, in fact stupendous, amount of money being spent by the Government. Over $12 million will be spent, not to circulate neutral information around the country so that people can analyse the deal and come to conclusions, but to produce pamphlets, videos, hand-outs, and synopses which do not represent faithfully in any sense what is actually within the deal. To me that seems to be history as farce.

Frankly, I say to the Conservative Government that if it wants to sell us out, it should at least do so in a straightforward, open, and honest way rather than try sneakily to hide and cover up what is taking place. However, perhaps that is too much to ask from the Government.

How should we start to analyse a deal which bears such close resemblance in its rationalization to the Annexation Manifesto of 1849, a deal which has been brought before Canadians with such ridiculous high-handedness and such lack of candour and straightforwardness?

First we must recognize that free trade is an ancient theory. Free trade is something that goes back to David Ricardo. Perhaps it shows us how wise John Maynard Keynes was when he said that politicians were slaves not to existing economists but slaves to now defunct economists whose perspectives do not represent current reality. Much modern thinking in respect of trade in fact starts from very different bases than those David Ricardo started from over 120 years ago.

For instance there is, if the Government had chosen to want to look at it, general equilibrium theories, which are exceedingly complex and use computers to come up with answers that say quite clearly that free trade does not make sense for a country in all circumstances. In some circumstances, yes; in other circumstances, no. it would be much more sensible for a country like Canada, which is so dominated by foreign firms and large multinational corporations, to start from analyses which recognize that fact. we should start from theories of how multinational corporations actually operate, how they put their stress on technology, and how that technology establishes the basis upon which trade is built, not through some kind of open market, but through the multinational corporation itself.

To take just one example, close to 60 per cent of the foreign trade of the united states goes through multinational corporations, not through the open market. That is the basis from which we start. That kind of modern thinking can help to explain the statistics which we see in front of us when we look at reality in 1987, reality which for instance says, as the Government likes to say, "Let's look at the common market and let's look at the European community". The European community is an example of a free trade area which has even gone beyond free trade, as indeed this deal goes beyond free trade.

Let us look at the latest available figures in the quarterly economic review of the Department of Finance. It indicates that France, which enjoys a tremendous access to other markets, has an unemployment rate of 10.5 per cent. Let us take Italy, which also enjoys great access. Its unemployment rate is 10.9 per cent. Let us take the United Kingdom, which also enjoys great access. Its unemployment rate is 11.8 per cent. Then let us compare that with Japan, which has no access. Poor, beleaguered Japan must face the world without having access to any market, and Japan has an unemployment rate for that same period of 2.8 per cent.

That suggests to me that some ridiculous myths have been perpetrated by the Government in respect of trade. It is, therefore, from a different basis that we start from the basis of looking at the realities of the Canadian economy and the fact that we are a small, open economy dominated by international firms, which themselves shape much of our trade and much of our economic development. It is from that perspective that I and our Party start. It is because of that that we think this deal, this sell-out, is such a disaster for the people of Canada, for the ordinary person across the nation, not just because it will cost us hundreds of thousands of jobs—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): False.

Mr. Langdon: —but because it slices—

Mr. McDermid: What study does that come from?

Mr. Langdon: The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) said, and I heard it on tape, that this agreement could cost us 500,000 jobs. He said it, and he has not been prepared to back off.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is a false attribution.

Mr. Langdon: That happens to be reality. Anybody who wants to test it can simply listen to the tapes.

Mr. McDermid: Be honest.

Mr. Langdon: It is not just because of those hundreds of thousands of jobs that will be lost, but because this deal slices away our ability as a country to influence the decisions of these multinational companies. It also takes away our ability to shape technological advantages for us in the future that will give us trade, not in two years, not in five years, but trade advantages in 10 and in 15 years for our children for the future of this country.

Mr. McDermid: That is exactly what it is all about.

Mr. Langdon: We have to look very carefully at this deal because it has been built very much on the wrong basis and the wrong approach. When we look at the deal, the first thing that we see—and I say this with sadness and with a real sense of regret—is that the Government did not succeed at all in achieving its basic goal. It set out as its goal exemption from the U.S. trade laws which have hit Canada so hard. It did not succeed in achieving that. I quote, for instance, from the Secretary of State for External Affairs speaking on October 1, when he said:

> There has been agreement more or less in principle to the idea of a tribunal. But there has been no agreement on rules that would guide such a tribunal. In our judgment a tribunal without rules would not provide Canada with the kind of guarantees and security that we require.

That is what the Government brought back from Washington. It brought back a deal which does not have within it rules that protect and provide access for Canada on any sort of guarantee basis to the U.S. market. If the Government is straightforward and open, its members will admit that in their speeches as they talk about the motion.

I can go through the details and point out two key problems concerning the deal. First, on countervail and anti-dumping issues, the so-called trade remedy laws within the United States, a panel system is established for appeals, but that panel system "wants to review what happens in order to see to it if U.S. law has been followed" in the case of our companies in the United States. In short, and I quote directly from page 273:

—to determine whether such determination—that is by the United States:

"—was in accordance with the antidumping or countervailing duty law of the importing Party".

Mr. McDermid: Canadian law is still in effect too.

Mr. Langdon: In other words, does a company in my constituency go to United States and face the same kind of neutral assessment, some sort of just view of what is fair? No, Mr. Speaker. It faces instead the rules which are established within U.S. legislation, and it has to deal with those rules. It can only appeal on the basis of those rules. There is no kind of neutral basis, no agreed basis, of what is a subsidy for both countries.

That matters tremendously because the basic problem with the United States system is that the U.S. in its countervail system establishes a very curious way of looking at issues. It says that if Canada, for instance—and there have been 13 cases against Canada in recent years—

Mr. McDermid: How many have we had against the U.S.?

Mr. Langdon: Five. Thirteen to five.

Mr. McDermid: How many?

Mr. Langdon: Thirteen to five.

Mr. McDermid: How many anti-dumping?

Mr. Langdon: I am talking about countervail. If the Member does not want to listen, he does not have to, but he could keep his ears open and he might learn something. There have been 13 countervail actions by the United States against Canada. In each of those cases it was examined quite clearly what Canada did with respect to subsidies, not whether the United States itself provided subsidies and, therefore, Canada had some sort of valid fair right to do the same thing.

There is absolutely nothing in U.S. law which requires the United States to look at the subsidies which its firms receive which complain about subsidies that Canadian firms receive. That is just not fair to our workers or to our business people. That is what should have been changed if the Government had got the objective it said it was seeking. Instead, the Government failed to get that objective. Now it is trying to tell Canadians that somehow the Government has achieved those goals despite the fact that the record is very clear, but it has not in any sense achieved those goals whatever.

Moreover, we have to look at something that is even worse. The United States, so long as it names Canada, can change its countervail and anti-dumping laws at any point in the future if it wishes. That applies to Canada as well.

Mr. McDermid: No.

Mr. Langdon: So long as it is within the context of GATT, it applies to Canada.

Mr. McDermid: No.

Mr. Langdon: I am sorry, it does. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary has not read the agreement. Unfortunately, he is not listening. Perhaps if he did listen, he would hear what I am saying.

If these laws are changed in the United States, and if Canada is named in the change, then it applies to Canada and we have to accept that change. It is true, we can take it to a panel, but that panel cannot make any sort of decision. The panel can only say to the United States: "Tut, tut, you have not done things the way you should have and Canada therefore has the right to retaliate". Is that not wonderful? We have the right in the future to do what we now have the right to do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If the Hon. Member is having a question and answer session, I would appreciate if he directed it through the Chair.

Mr. Langdon: I thank you, Mr. Speaker. I suggest that the Parliamentary Secretary might follow that instruction as well.

This Government sought certain goals and, I must say, sought them with some energy. It sought those goals actively and it talked about those goals, but it did not succeed in any way in achieving those goals. Because of that, the deal that has been brought back is fatally flawed. It is simply not acceptable in the light of what business people across Canada told the committee as it travelled the country.

The people told us that they had sought secure and guaranteed access to the U.S. market. The Government failed to achieve that. The Government should recognize that and express its shame in that failure.

An Hon. Member: Sheer nonsense.

Mr. Langdon: It is absolutely true.

That is what the Government failed to achieve. What did it give away in the process of these negotiations? It gave away a tremendous amount.

The Government gave away a tremendous number of things that were of special concern to average people. First, it gave away jobs. It is quite clear that there will be thousands of jobs lost. Why else would the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have talked, in the very period after the trade deal was originally announced, about massive adjustment help for workers who would be hurt by this deal? Of course, it is possible that the Prime Minister was just talking through his hat, but I prefer to think that he was expressing some concern about the thousands of people whose jobs would in fact be lost because of this deal.

Why has the Minister of Employment talked of up to 500,000 jobs being lost if that is not the case?

Mr. McDermid: Why don't you quote him accurately?

Mr. Langdon: That is precisely what he said, and that is precisely what the people of Canada heard him say on television.

If these thousands of jobs are not to be lost, why is it that groups came before the committee talking about such job losses? B.C. fish processors reported to us that they expected to lose 6,000 to 8,000 jobs because of the way GATT was put into the free trade agreement. Prior to that, GATT was something with which one could negotiate and, in the end, if one actually felt that the position put forward was unreasonable, one could reject it. Under this deal, that is no longer possible.

B.C. fruit and vegetable growers told the committee that they would be wiped out. Grape growers from across the country told us that 20,000 jobs would be lost in that industry alone. The Council for Yukon Indians testified that they would lose out because they felt that the end of local hiring would follow upon the deal and they expected environmental damage. It is possible that the Minister may not be interested in what the Council for Yukon Indians said, but that is what the council said.

The Canadian Independent Computer Services Association, which is based in Winnipeg, Manitoba, testified that as a result of this deal, it is likely that 360,000 jobs would be shifted out of Canada in the next 10 years. The Government may not like these figures, but that is what the committee heard when it crossed the country.

The auto parts producers have now rejected this deal and expect that some 20,000 to 40,000 jobs will be lost. The printers' association testified before the committee in Fredericton, New Brunswick, that it expected to lose 6,000 jobs.

These are not, as the Government likes to pretend, trade unions coming to talk to the New Democratic Party. These are business and farm groups coming before a committee of the House of Commons giving very clear testimony with respect to the thousands and thousands of jobs which, from their expertise, they foresee as necessarily being lost because of this agreement.

It is not just job losses. As shifts from this country of enterprise to the anti-union southern states, the low-wage states of the South or the Maquiladora Corridor of Mexico take place, we will see that wages and working conditions for workers in Canada will be affected. The competition will be used by business people here to try to force down wages and reduce working conditions.

Beyond jobs, we also saw investment being thrown out of the window. The controls which had existed to this point over takeovers of Canadians companies of over $5 million in assets were thrown out of the window. We saw controls over indirect takeovers thrown out of the window. Again, there will be tremendous consequences as a result of that.

Let me refer to a United States report which attempted to outline what was happening in this deal. They said quite clearly: "The real achievement of this agreement is that henceforth the vast majority of new U.S. investments will occur with no interference from the Canadian Government."

What does it mean in practice? For instance, as happened in my constituency recently, an American company will be able to take over a Canadian-owned company and simply shut it down for competitive reasons. There will be absolutely no recourse on the part of the Canadian Government, unless that firm has over $150 million in assets, which accounts for about 300 out of the thousands of companies in this country.

We can go on to deal with energy and resources. It seems that the Government does not want to hear what we say, so let me quote people who testified to us as we went across the country. Joseph Mercier, the owner of an oil exploration company in Alberta, said: "Instead of going into battle with Ontario for Alberta's rights, are we going to try to allocate the authority to some administrator in Washington?" He went on to say: "The National Energy Board will no longer be able to say anything about our natural gas, but there will be people in the Federal Energy Resources Commission in the United States, there will be people in Washington, who will tell us what we can do with our natural gas". That is what we heard from oil people in Alberta.

We heard the same thing from the small-scale explorers' association in Alberta, who would not endorse this deal because they also saw it as a completely unbalanced, one-way exercise which gave far more to the United States than to us.

We can discuss cultural control. We heard magnificent testimony from a person in Prince Edward Island who had taken the plunge and moved from central Canada to try to establish a small scale enterprise in Prince Edward Island. He found considerable difficulty in establishing that enterprise, but nevertheless has persisted and succeeded in making it economically viable. Let me quote Jack McAndrew, from our hearings in Charlottetown. He said: "I, like every other Canadian producer, have spent most of my adult life fighting for a stall in the market of my own country".

That is what cultural industries have had to face in this country in the past. Unfortunately, that is what they will have to face in the future.

This agreement still contains the incredibly ambiguous and detrimental clause which states that the United States, notwithstanding anything that is in the agreement otherwise, will have the right to take action against us as a result of any cultural action that we take under the terms of the agreement.

There were major surrenders in the context of economic development. The Atlantic Chamber of Commerce told us quite clearly that it was very concerned about what would happen to regional development programs in this country, and therefore could not endorse the deal. It states in its brief: "The Atlantic Chamber of Commerce is concerned, therefore, that the terms of a free trade deal could preclude the federal Government from implementing policies which address this serious problem of regional underdevelopment". It went on to state that the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce believes that the Canadian Government cannot negotiate away its right to provide assistance to business and industry in economically depressed parts of the country.

As well, there are serious losses to the Auto Pact and losses which have seriously hurt agriculture. For instance, the President of the British Columbia Fruit Growers said: "Is the family farm no longer significant?" The head of the National Farmers Union said: "The bottom line for producers will be lower prices for farm products. This will come at a time when economic ills in the farm community can be linked to the destructive and predatory practices of the U.S. and the economic community countries. These practices will not end with the signing of this agreement".

All in all, it is a bad deal for ordinary people. It is an inequitable deal between our two countries, and it is an unfair deal for average families across Canada. I believe it is an unacceptable deal for the people of Canada, as the next election will prove conclusively to everyone in this Chamber.

It is perhaps most sad that there was an alternative, just as the Prime Minister told the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) during that memorable debate. He was absolutely right at that time when he said: "Yes, you did have an option". In this case, the Government had and still has an option that it will not follow because of its own ideological blinders.

Let me outline what I believe are some of the key elements of such an alternative. First, it is possible and necessary to deal with the U.S. protectionist pressures directly, on a case by case basis. If we had taken that action with respect to softwood lumber and concentrated our resources on that issue, we would have been much more successful than we were with the terribly unfair deal we ultimately saw.

I believe it is possible to set up sectoral arrangements between ourselves and the United States. With respect to the chemical industry, for instance, we have heard from Canadian chemical firms that they would be very interested in some kind of sectoral arrangement with the United States. That is the kind of thing we see as important to try to explore. The same is true with computer parts. There was a sectoral arrangement with respect to computer parts which the Government did away with because of its attempt to retaliate against the United States on shakes and shingles. That kind of sectoral arrangement also makes sense.

One can go through a whole host of different sectors of our economy within which it would be possible for us to work out arrangements like the Auto Pact, with safeguards, with protection for our people and communities, which would give us the possibility of benefiting from the U.S. market, but not at the expense of these tremendous giveaways which we have made part of this trade agreement.

I think that the GATT process, the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs, is an important part of what this Party has always been committed to in terms of negotiation in order to reach freer trade arrangements throughout the world. It is a process which establishes equality among all the countries taking part. That equality is itself very, very important. It is also a process, I would point out, having been at the start of the last GATT round, within which we have considerable influence. It is a process within which Canada is listened to quite seriously. Within that process of negotiation it would be possible for us to work to reduce the subsidies the United States looks at through its trade legislation, to get an agreed set of rules among all countries, an agreed set of rules in which we would have partners on our side in attempting to achieve the kind of equal relationship in trade about which we are talking.

That kind of approach makes so much more sense than the direct one-on-one relationship we have tried to carry forward with a country so much bigger, so much more powerful economically than our own. That country has successfully won from us all sorts of concessions, and that I am certain would not have happened in the context of a GATT negotiation within which we had Japan, Germany, Britain and Italy on our side as part of an attempt to discipline protectionism within the United States.

Most important, however, is that we as a country develop through government leadership and technological expertise in some of our key industrial and service areas. We have to develop a set of effective and efficient sectors within our economy through training, through emphasis on science and technology, and through a great many other measures which a Government, which had not sold itself out through this trade deal, would be able to make use of. I am referring to mechanisms such as state purchasing policies, planning agreements with the various companies, which play such a key role in the trade both between ourselves and the United States and in trade internationally. We would be able to establish Canadian content rules. We would be able to set conditions on investors that if they were going to take over Canadian plants, they would have to export certain amounts in the future. They would have to achieve certain levels of job increase in the future.

Those kinds of things could be done by a government seeking to establish technological expertise in key areas, if we had that kind of power still left to us.

We could also use tariffs. We could use tariffs selectively under GATT agreements, as we have in the past, to be able to assist certain parts of our economy to grow and to establish jobs for the people of this country. We could use other instruments such as public ownership. Public ownership is not something which, for ideological reasons, we would back away from as a Party. In addition to that thrust, we simply have to see to it that regulations are established for the multinational corporations which are so important in the international economy. That is what dominates trade, and the regulation of those multinationals is crucial in trying to shape that trade for the future.

When shut-downs take place, we must have full community review to see to it that communities and workers have a chance to see why it is that a company is being shut down and to challenge it, if it so wishes. We also have to see to it that there are no more export restrictions on the subsidiaries of multinational corporations in Canada when they are owned by other countries. That has to be part of our ruling as well.

We have to do a number of other things. I see you looking at the clock, Mr. Speaker. It is five o'clock and I would propose to continue tomorrow.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I assumed so.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar)—Status of women—Court challenge to language training policy—Minister's position; the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart)—Shipyards—Delay in restructuring industry in Quebec—Request for explanation—Request for clarification concerning frigates; the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Canadian Pacific Railway—Carriage of dangerous goods—Metro Toronto speed limit.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed with the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PARLIAMENT HILL

PROPOSED ERECTION OF STATUE OF QUEEN ELIZABETH

The House resumed from Tuesday, November 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Tupper:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of commissioning the structure of a statue of Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, to be placed on Parliament Hill in commemoration of the thirty-fifth anniversary of Her ascension to the Throne.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak in support of the resolution of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper). I rise to speak on the resolution to erect a statue on Parliament Hill in honour of Queen Elizabeth II.

Her contribution to this country as our queen is considerable. The Queen's influence cannot be denied. She participates in all kinds of Canadian events as well as provides that level of government which no elected Member can.

By definition, the sovereign, the person on whom the Crown is conferred, symbolizes our country as a constitutional monarchy. The Crown, the Senate, and the House of Commons, in that order, make up our Parliament. The Governor General, appointed by the Queen in consultation with the Prime Minister, carries out the Queen's functions in this country.

Queen Elizabeth II is the head of the Canadian state, the Government, and all our judicial functions. She is the Sovereign of the Order of Canada as well as the Order of Military Merit. She is, of course, as everyone knows, the patron of numerous associations and organizations throughout the country. The Queen is honorary Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police as well as Colonel in Chief of numerous Canadian military regiments.

I would like to point out that Canadian money pays only for the Canadian aspect of the Crown and her Majesty's expenses when she is in Canada. When members of the Crown are in Canada, the provincial and federal Governments cover the costs properly apportioned. As representatives of the Crown, the salaries of the Governor General and Lieutenant Governors are paid by the federal Government.

In June, 1973, the Queen stated that the Crown is an idea more than a person and that it should represent everything that is best and most admired in the Canadian ideal. I ask you, if there could be only one reason, would it be possible to find a better one for the erection of a statue of Her Majesty on Parliament Hill? The Queen is also our link to all the countries in the Commonwealth, which amounts to just about every ancestry and national origin.

Statue of Monarch

When you ask visitors to Canada about the Canadian identity the answer you get most often is related to the fact that we have a queen. The Queen symbolizes international prestige which, in turn, adds to Canada's standing in the world. One need only remember a few years ago when the Queen visited the United States. Even today her popularity with Americans is tremendous. Her presence at the 1976 Olympic Games brought enormous respect and prestige for Canada.

The role of Queen Elizabeth II in the Commonwealth is crucial. In turn, our country's external policy is influenced greatly by our union in the Commonwealth. The reception of the Queen in all Commonwealth countries is warm and respectful. Everyone in those countries knows of her relationship with this country.

In honouring Queen Elizabeth II with a statue on Parliament Hill we will be telling the world of our unique historical make-up. Canada has two founding nations, French and English. However, because of historical facts, Canada adopted British traditions. Let us honour that fact by erecting a statue in commemoration of the thirty-fifth anniversary of her ascension to the Throne. Thirty five years of devotion to our land is a very wonderful thing.

In her role as Queen of Canada one need only look at a 20-year period during her reign to realize that she has been a leading force in Canada's entry on the world stage as a leading country.

In 1959 she opened the St. Lawrence Seaway with President Eisenhower of the United States. She made a royal visit from coast to coast and back. In her July 1 speech she said: "If I have helped you to feel proud of being Canadian, if I have reminded you of the strength which comes from unity, and I have helped to draw your attention to the bright vision of the years ahead, I should feel well satisfied because I believe with all conviction that this country can look to a glorious future". She has indeed done her part to ensure that our land has become prosperous and great.

In 1962 she helped Canada mention to the world the launching of Telstar, the satellite developed in Canada in co-operation with other Commonwealth countries. In 1970 the Queen visited the North, demonstrating our sovereignty in that part of the land. The list goes on and on. During that time her duties as head of the Commonwealth also took her to many of the countries that link us to that great family of nations.

I am delighted to speak in support of this motion. I hope that the House will consider passing it. As we are all aware, Her Majesty visited Canada this year. She officiated at the opening of the Commonwealth Summit, which was an outstanding success. She also visited other parts of the country including the great Province of Quebec. I know that we will all be looking forward to hearing Her Majesty's very wonderful Christmas message on Christmas Day.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity this afternoon to speak on motion M-135 proposed by the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper). I want first to congratulate the Member for his initiative in bringing forward such a motion. I wish to make remarks in favour of the motion. I am of the opinion that this would be a good initiative for this Parliament to undertake.

You will probably recall, Mr. Speaker, that I brought forward a similar motion to erect a statue for a different individual, of course, a former Prime Minister of our country. I brought that motion before the House in February of 1987. Nearly a year has passed and the working group on the erection of the statue in question has not yet been completely formed. However, I understand that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) is going to appoint such a working group very soon.

I hope that sometime in 1988 we will all be joining together on Parliament Hill to participate in the unveiling of a statue in honour of the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, Canada's thirteenth Prime Minister who was, in my view, one of the most distinguished citizens this country has ever had. That is to sidetrack somewhat from the topic at hand today, but I believe it bears repeating.

This Parliament, through the Standing Committee on Government Operations, has adopted a report prepared by the Minister of Public Works on erecting statues in the future. The report describes those individuals whom we have commemorated with statues on Parliament Hill. It also suggests a policy for dealing with statues in the future. In general, it suggests that we should erect statues for very prominent and outstanding people. In general, to be eligible a person should be one who is no longer living. In the case of Prime Ministers, through that report we agreed that generally we would recognize those Prime Ministers who were elected to that office rather than those who were appointed. Of course, that policy does not apply in quite the same way when we are dealing with a sovereign. There is one outstanding difference, and that is the fact that it is generally accepted that when dealing with a statue in honour of anyone, that person would be deceased. The one exception that is usually accepted everywhere, including the report that we prepared for this House, is that in the case of a sovereign that requirement would not be enforced. In other words, a statue of a sovereign can be erected even if the sovereign is still living. Generally, that is the only exception.

What we have to decide is not whether the individual in question qualifies because, under the criteria that we have set for ourselves, quite clearly she does. First, we have to decide whether we wish to so honour the Queen. Second, we have to decide whether the thirty-fifth anniversary of Her Majesty's reign is the proper anniversary in which to do it. It could have been done on the twenty-fifth anniversary or the thirtieth. For that matter, it could be done at the fortieth anniversary. In my opinion, thirty-five years of reign certainly is an historic occasion and something that should be noted. To that end, this is a year in which we could very well choose to erect such a statue.

My only small concern, and I wish to raise it now, is that I hope our previous efforts toward erecting and recognizing Prime Ministers will not be cast aside while we undertake this particular task. I know that is not the intention of the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton and he would want this initiative to be taken in addition to those endeavours we are looking at at the present time.

Therefore, I have no hesitation in supporting this initiative of erecting a statue in honour of Her Majesty.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, today we have heard the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka (Mr. Darling) pay tribute to Her Majesty. It is obvious that in recent weeks and months this debate on the need or even the desire to erect a statue in honour of Her Majesty has opened up discussions in this House about the whole matter of monarchy in Canada. I for one feel comfortable with the present system, but if some Canadians are not and if other Canadians advocate putting an end to the present system, that is ending monarchy , that debate ought to be held indeed but at some other time. I would suggest that as long as we want to maintain the present system, we as Canadians are duty-bound to show respect for existing institutions for as long as we have them.

In the past, for example, controversy arose in this country when a Canadian public servant refused to swear allegiance to the Queen to keep his job. I am sorry, but I did not feel much sympathy for this man, and here is why. First of all, this was one of the conditions of his being hired by the Public Service Commission, so he knew what to expect. Second, one can always say that if this public servant was not overly enthused about this condition he could have looked for a job somewhere else.

So it was a basic requirement that was there to start with, and if a person is uncomfortable with the requirements of a job, he or she should look for employment elsewhere before even considering the job.

Obviously, some day the public servant in question, in fact, any Canadian could and should take part in a debate on whether we should keep the monarchy. I have already indicated my own position, Mr. Speaker, but just the same, it won't do any harm to have a debate.

In 1982, we patriated our Canadian Constitution, and we made the collective decision at the time to keep the Queen or rather the Sovereign as the Head of State of our country. I think it was a wise decision, but some day we may decide otherwise. We should not make it an issue here and now, however, when we are discussing whether we should offer some token of recognition to the Sovereign. The decision to offer that recognition should be based first of all, as I said earlier, on whether the person "qualifies". Of course the answer is yes, because we have a report that says that in the present context, the Sovereign would "qualify" for a statue in her honour. Furthermore, as I said earlier, we must agree on which anniversary it is to be. The other issues will probably be raised in the House at some time or other, but in another context.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I again wish to congratulate the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper) on his initiative. I hope the House will adopt the motion, if not unanimously at least with a majority, and that we will soon see the unveiling of a statue of Her Majesty. But before then, I hope we will have another unveiling to which I referred earlier, a statue in honour of the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, Canada's thirteenth Prime Minister.

[English]

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland—Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, when the future Queen, Princess Elizabeth visited Canada in 1951 she said, "I know of Maritimers that their hearts are filled with the love of the sea, for this is their heritage—and it is in the heritage of my family". Indeed, we know it is in the heritage not only of her own family but also of that of Her consort, Prince Philip, who had a distinguished career in the Royal Navy.

As a Maritimer, I am pleased to speak in favour and in support of Motion No. M-135, a motion that in a very real, visible, valid manner would seek to remind all Canadians from coast to coast that our nation is a constitutional monarchy, and that since 1952, Elizabeth II, by the grace of God of the United Kingdom, Canada and Her other realms and territories Queen, defender of the faith, became Queen of Canada, that latter title being introduced by the then Prime Minister of Canada, Louis St. Laurent.

While I was not conscious of the Princess' remarks of Maritimers and their love of the sea, it was only some three years later in 1954 that I joined the Royal Canadian Navy and tied my career to the sea. I do not pretend to have a seafaring tradition or background. Indeed, during the war years my father and uncle served in the Canadian Army. But I did have an uncle who served in the Merchant Navy, and indeed lost his life in that service.

It could be said that Maritimers are traditionalists with a sense of patriotism, which perhaps goes beyond what their background and ethnic heritages may be. I think of my own area of the Maritimes and New Brunswick, an area called Miramichi, which is made up of the Irish, the Scots, the English, and the French. One has to reflect only on November 11 when the names are called at the cenotaphs in over half a dozen communities throughout the area. The names of the people who fought for freedom, for the Queen and country, in the Great War and in the Second World War depict their background.

I think as well of the Union Jacks, which tend to fly in backyards throughout the area, people paying recognition to what they knew of the past. I remember during the great flag debate hearing people refer to the new flag as Pearson's pennant. It is not that they had anything against the new flag, but they did not want to give up a link with the past which they cherished—the Union Jack which was part and parcel of the Red Ensign.

I was guilty in the sense that I was most reluctant to see the White Ensign being given up by the Royal Canadian Navy, a flag for which I had such respect. Having said that, I must say that now no one is prouder of our Canadian flag, the Maple Leaf, than myself as I see it flying on public buildings and as I see young people travelling throughout the world with the Maple Leaf patch on their knapsacks, jackets, or whatever.

Parliamentarians are very much aware of the role of the monarch in our system of Government. The Parliament of Canada consists of the House of Commons, the Senate, and the sovereign, represented in Canada of course by the Governor General. We are one of 17 countries which acknowledge the Queen as sovereign, the Crown Commonwealth, as well as Queen of the Commonwealth in general. She is head of the Canadian state. While her powers may be exercised by her representatives, the Governor General and each provincial Lieutenant-Governor, she has the right to be consulted, the right to advise, and the right to warn.

It is sometimes too difficult to think of our monarch as a public servant, given what we tend to think of certain public servants from time to time. A public servant, yes, but a bureaucrat, no. She is a servant who has earned the respect and esteem of not only the leaders and subjects of the Crown Commonwealth and the leaders and people of the Commonwealth but of other nations great and small throughout the world. Indeed that makes Her Majesty more than just a symbol, more than just a figurehead in the family of nations.

Given what constitutes the Parliament of Canada—the Senate, the House of Commons, and the sovereign—at this juncture I would like to present my views on the Upper House. In so doing I believe that I can tie in the fears of many Canadians in respect of loss of identity and loss of culture to the very motion before us respecting the commissioning of a statue of Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II.

I should like to say forthwith that I am in favour of an appointed Senate, recognizing all the faults inherent therein and recognizing that changes must be introduced to make this body more meaningful and perhaps more effective. The problem lies not with what the Fathers of Confederation in their thoughtful manner intended for this institution, the body of sober second thought, but with what in too many cases has been permitted to become a retirement home for too many ineffectuals, a retirement home for too many former politicians, a club where partisan politics is played, planned, and connived not for the betterment of Canada or Canadians at large but solely for party purposes.

One study which I read indicated that something close to 99 per cent of all Canadians indicated that they would not run for nor seek public office at any level of government—federal, provincial, or municipal. If that is true, surely we must ask ourselves if the country is being best served by men and women who make up that 1 per cent. I suggest not, and I would think that most Canadians would agree.

This brings me to the appointed Senate. That body would give those Canadians making up 99 per cent of the population who have great qualifications, knowledge, experience, and ability, an opportunity to be selected not for political affiliation but to serve Canada and Canadians in a thoughtful manner. Of course other changes would be absolutely necessary, but I will not go into them at this time.

I would suggest that we never have an elected Senate. To be elected is to have a constituency. To have a constituency could in great measure negate their ability to carry out their duties in a non-partisan manner, which brings me full circle to why I mentioned the Senate in the context of this motion. To my mind, to introduce two elected bodies to our system of government is to lead us down the road to becoming a republic and to being more like the American system of government, each vying for additional power, certainly one attempting to usurp the power and the authority of the other. We could very gradually slip away from our government roots—the British parliamentary system, the mother of all Parliaments.

We want to be proud of our system of government, of our historical link, and of our bond with the monarch. We do so by cherishing our traditions of 120 years as a country and by building that same sense of pride in our children. Who epitomizes in a single personage more greatness in our form of government that Her Majesty the Queen of Canada?

I endorse and support the motion of the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper). I encourage Hon. Members on all sides of the House to do likewise.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased for the opportunity to speak to the motion before us today. It is a proposal to erect a statue of Queen Elizabeth II on Parliament Hill.

Probably many of us share the same kind of feelings which I recall very vividly when I first arrived on Parliament Hill in 1979. I stood at the foot of the sidewalk beside the Centennial Flame and then walked past the flame looking up at the Peace Tower and at our Parliament Buildings. I was surrounded by beauty and by many symbols of our national traditions.

I think most Canadians feel very emotional when they see pictures of the Parliament Buildings and the hill on which they stand. We fondly call it "The Hill" because the Parliament Buildings are indeed loved by Canadians. They are steeped in our history. Canadians on vacation bring their children here to celebrate being Canadians. They come from all parts of Canada—East, West, North, and along our borders. This is a place which ties us all together. Therefore, Parliament Hill reinforces our identity. It is our showcase for the world. Many thousands of visitors flock here every summer. Although Canada is a young country, we are quite unique and our Parliament Buildings and surrounding grounds are consistent with that uniqueness.

I think the symbolism is an important consideration that goes into our living shrine that reflects the life of Canada every day. We should thank our forefathers and mothers for their foresight in developing such a wonderful headquarters for Canadian Government, the heart of Canada, if you like. We must take very seriously the responsibility of preserving the beauty and appropriateness of Parliament Hill and all the monuments and memorials that surround and are inside it.

Today we have a motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper) which suggests that the Government should consider the commissioning of a statue of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, to be placed on Parliament Hill in commemoration of the thirty-fifth anniversary of her ascension to the throne.

First, I would like to say unequivocally that, like the statue of Queen Victoria which graces our Hill and who was in office when Canada first gained its independence, certainly Queen Elizabeth II deserves a special place. She is indisputably a part of our Canadian heritage. As the British monarch who was reigning at the time when Canada acquired its own Constitution and severed the last remaining legal link with Great Britain, she has a particular place in our history. She is a person whom we respect and honour as a very hard working public servant who binds our Commonwealth together. She is well respected even by those who may not be traditional monarchists.

We could debate, and perhaps this is a trivial point, whether such a statue should be placed in commemoration of her thirty-fifth year inasmuch as this does not explain that we are doing it for a living monarch, which I believe would be a precedent.

While I honour Queen Elizabeth and agree to honour her with a statue on Parliament Hill, I cannot help but think of all the other many Canadians that it would be so nice to honour in some way. I am sure Canadians across the land would like to see many statues. Let me give two or three examples. The Métis perhaps would like to see a statue of Louis Riel. Many feminists perhaps would like to see one of Nellie McClung. For doctors, it could be Dr. Keon, who used the Jarvik heart and has pioneered heart transplants in Canada. There is no question that we respect and honour our monarch, but there are also many Canadian women parliamentarians whom I would like to mention and whom I would like to find a way of honouring because of the unique tradition and contribution which they have made as Members of Parliament.

I think first of Agnes McPhail, who was elected in 1921 and was the first and only woman Member of Parliament who gained her seat in the first election after women had the right to vote in Canada. In 1943 she was the first woman on the Canadian delegation to the League of Nations.

Second, we have a bust of the Hon. Ellen Fairclough. You walk by it every day, Mr. Speaker, in the Speaker's Hall. This is appropriate. She achieved distinction as the first woman Cabinet Minister in 1957. She introduced a Bill calling for equal pay for equal work, a very progressive legislator. She created a womens' bureau in the Department of Labour. Also I am sure my hon. friend on my right will agree that the Hon. Judy LaMarsh deserves special honour and recognition. She was the only woman in Lester Pearson's Liberal Cabinet. She was an innovative legislator under whose guidance we achieved the Canada Pension Plan and medicare. She established the Royal Commission on the Status of Women which the women of Canada look upon as a milestone in development.

I think those who have been Members in this House for some time will also agree that Grace McInnis from my part of Canada should be honoured. She was not a Cabinet Minister because her Party was not in Government but she was a pioneer woman Member of Parliament. I believe she was at one time the sole woman Member of this House. I can recall talking to her because she was a mentor and is today my mentor. I was amused to learn that this very dignified daughter of J. S. Woodsworth once had to remind Members of this House that perhaps their behaviour deserved the initials M.S.P., which I am sure you may recall, Mr. Speaker.

Finally, we should mention Jeanne Sauvé, the first woman Speaker of this House and now our first woman Governor General. I am sure other Members of the House can think of many others.

It is great to have symbolism and to recognize people who make a unique contribution. It is obvious this list could go on and on, but if we were to erect statues for all of them our lawns would be very crowded. We have a duty to think carefully and to protect the dignity and integrity of Parliament Hill.

I would like to mention a suggestion made by my colleague the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) when he spoke to this motion. He suggested that perhaps a good way of determining the kinds of statues that should be on Parliament would be to set up a Parliament Hill commission. He proposes that only one of two statues should be erected on Parliament Hill every decade. I feel confident that Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth would be a first choice. This does not stop us from honouring outstanding Canadians in other places within our communities, within our Parliament Buildings, in our parks, squares and other appropriate places across Canada. Statues as we see them in Europe enliven and provide valuable additions in harmony with our outdoor living space as well as bringing an historic contribution to us.

We concur with this motion, but I hope the Member might consider the suggestion that there be a special Parliament Hill commission to deal with such matters in the future.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in contributing to this debate, the subject of which was put forward by the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper), that a statue be erected in honour of Queen Elizabeth II.

I am glad the New Democratic Party has given its enthusiastic support. I think somewhere in that 10 minutes speech I did hear a few sentences referring to the Queen. It was nice to hear a rousing endorsement of the motion. I would agree with the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) that there ought to be a statue erected in honour of Lester Pearson, former Prime Minister of Canada. I think that is overdue and I look forward to the day when that mission is accomplished.

I am pleased the Hon. Member from Nepean—Carleton has presented this motion to the House. I think the monarchy is a very important institution for Canada. I would like to mention three reasons that I think this is a timely and important motion to bring before us. First, the monarchy is important to us because it provides continuity in a world of constant change and increasingly accelerated change. The monarchy gives continuity. If we reflect on what the Royal Family has done to provide stability through its continuity in times of flux and crisis, we have to be very grateful to this great institution and those who have been kings and queens of the United Kingdom and of Canada throughout the centuries.

Let us think for a moment of what King George VI experienced in his relatively short reign of about 18 years. When he came to the throne, it was partly to his surprise. Then came a time of upheaval when fascist armies were forming in Europe and there was a great deal of concern throughout the world about the future of the world. The King was faced with the coming of World War II, and those of my generation at least remember the words of comfort he spoke to the entire Commonwealth and indeed to the entire world when he gave his New Year's message, "I said to the man who stood at the gate of the year". That provided much solace to the world at the time.

There were changes in government going on in the United Kingdom at that time. The government went from the coalition Government of Winston Churchill to the Labour Government of Clement Attlee and then back to the Government of Winston Churchill. Throughout those years, even though King George VI was not in good health, he provided not only the United Kingdom but the Commonwealth and indeed the world with a sense of stability. While there was change, indeed there was the stability that the Royal Family and monarchy provided to the world.

The same thing has been true of our monarch today, Elizabeth II. When she came to the throne in 1952, the world seemed to be fairly stable, but it was not many years after that that there was the Suez crisis, the Hungarian Uprising and the Korean conflict. All of those tensions were before us, and again there were changes in government in the United Kingdom. Yet Elizabeth II provided the continuity which gave comfort to the people of the United Kingdom as well as the people of the Commonwealth.

The monarchy is important because it provides continuity in a world of change. One must reflect only on the events that overtook those colonial countries that grew out of the anti-colonial movement of the 1960s. In the freshness of their sense of democracy and in their zeal for total independence, they thought it would be fashionable to become republics. One cannot help but wonder whether they were not impoverished by their too severe ties to a monarchy and would have been enriched and had found greater stability had they not maintained closer ties with the monarchy and become parliamentary democracies rather than republican democracies.

The first reason we honour the monarchy in Canada is that it provides continuity. Second, it provides us with a sense of family. It is easy enough in our world of legislation and Constitution to think that all differences are settled by law and by litigation. We are becoming an increasingly litigious society, but the monarchy reminds us of the fact that many of our tensions are best resolved not by litigation, not by confrontation, but through relationships. The monarchy has become a unifying symbol within the Commonwealth. It brings people of different views, of different socio-economic groupings, and of different heritages together. It allows us to solve problems through relations.

Let us think of the Lancaster House agreement regarding Zimbabwe. That could have been accomplished by fiat, but it was accomplished because of a relationship that existed between the United Kingdom through the monarchy and Zimbabwe. Let us think of the latest Commonwealth Conference we hosted in Vancouver and which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) conducted so ably. Troubles were occurring in Fiji at that time, but the conference sensed the ties of its relationship.

Forty countries with different forms of government and different heritages came together. Because the monarchy was represented at the conference, a familial relationship existed there, a relationship which brought the countries together in a way that they could not have been brought together had it been simply a constitutional or legal conference.

The monarchy is important to us because it represents a sense of family, togetherness and belonging among those people who have the heritage of a relationship with the United Kingdom.

Finally, the monarchy is important to us at this time because of the contribution our present monarch, Elizabeth II, has made not only to the entire Commonwealth but particularly to Canada. She has visited our country at least 12 times and probably more. I count 12 times and I may have missed several. She has visited Canada more often than any other monarch. She is intimately acquainted with the feelings and aspirations, not only of the Canadian people as a whole, but of groups of Canadian people. She understands the feelings of the people of the West, of the North, of Quebec and of the Maritimes. She has a sense not only of the whole but of the parts of the whole. Because she has spent time in Canada, she has become Queen of Canada not only because Prime Minister St. Laurent declared so in 1953, even though that was a very important declaration, but because she has experienced a sense of being Queen of Canada by participating in Canadian life.

I would like to commend the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton for the work he has done in bringing this motion forward. I look forward to the day when this statue will be erected to celebrate the 35th anniversary of the Queen's reign. I hope all Hon. Members will participate in the celebration of that day when we will see that statue erected here on Parliament Hill.

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to enter this debate this evening. I thank the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper) for bringing this issue forward.

As Hon. Members know, the Queen has reigned over this country for 35 years. Next week on Christmas Day, many Canadians will turn on their television sets and tune in to the Queen's Christmas message. It is a tradition for many families, many of whom do not have any British blood at all but may have emigrated here from other countries in the Commonwealth or from elsewhere. As Elizabeth II has visited Canada so often in her long reign, her message often mentions her visits to Canada and makes special note of those she has met with here.

The other time of the year when national attention is regularly focused on the monarchy is Victoria Day in May. On a superficial level, we all appreciate the holiday, but at the same time, we can appreciate the historic importance of the monarchy in our evolution as a nation. The day has significance as the day of celebration of Queen Victoria's birthday, but it is also a day to celebrate Queen Elizabeth II.

The Queen of Canada is in many ways a symbol for Canadians. Some people might say that she is just a symbol, she does not live here nor does she have daily input into the governing of this country. Young people and some new immigrants to this country do not always relate in a personal way to her role as the head of Government. Nonetheless, that which she symbolizes is very vital to understanding ourselves and the nature of Canada.

Canada has had a relatively short history, and some areas have had a shorter history than others. We are still busy writing our history rather than identifying very strongly with our nation's past achievements. But a sense of community and connectedness is vital to everyone.

We, of course, cannot deny our historical links to Britain and the monarchy. While the majority of Canadians do not have ancestors from the United Kingdom, as Canadians we have undeniable historical links with Britain as a one-time colony and one that chose a similar type of government. When Parliament passed legislation in 1953 making Queen Elizabeth the Queen of Canada, a strong link was forged between this country and the monarch. Historically, then, Queen Elizabeth II holds a unique and important place.

As head of the Commonwealth, Elizabeth II unites a great many different cultures and histories to work together toward a better future. That symbolic role on a global scale has a good deal of relevance to Canadians. In a real sense, that is what this country has done. It has united people from around the world to work together for the future of Canada.

In my riding of Welland in the Niagara Peninsula, we are culturally very rich. We have a strong French-Canadian community in Welland and a strong Italian community in Thorold. The St. Catharines Folk Arts Council is made up of some 35 ethnic organizations, all of whom are active and vital in the peninsula. Insofar as we, as Canadians, take pride in our diversity and ability to work together toward a common future, the symbolic presence of the Queen has a great deal of meaning for us.

It has meaning not merely in the historical context but in a living, forward-looking context. Queen Elizabeth II is the longest serving monarch we have had. She has always taken an active, personal interest in this country. Whenever she has visited, she has left a strong and personal impression.

In preparing to speak to the House today on this motion, I spoke with people in my riding who remember clearly the visit to Niagara made by Elizabeth II some 30 years ago. I remember meeting her myself in my capacity as the mayor of the City of Welland in more recent years. Her grace and accessibility are qualities which leave a lifelong impression on everyone she meets.

For the Welland riding, her visit to Canada in 1959, held special significance. She came to Canada to preside over the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway, of which the Welland Canal is a very important part. All of her visits to Canada over the past 35 years have touched us, as ordinary Canadians, right where we live.

Her enduring interest in this country has been noted by all. Her command of the French language and appreciation of the special character of the Province of Quebec has provided an example of her sensitivity to this unique country of ours. She has shown a genuine interest in native peoples and their concerns. She has made a point of meeting with multicultural organizations across Canada. Her wide travels here have made her more familiar with this huge country than most of us will ever be.

She has provided an example to all Canadians through her commitment to duty and service. Many countries have people to point to as national symbols. They are not necessarily heads of state and they are not necessarily people one would be proud to know. Elizabeth II, through the virtues and values she brings to her life and work, is someone we are proud to be associated with and proud to have as our head of state.

Some Hon. Members might feel that commissioning a statue of a monarch still living is not particularly appropriate. In the case of our Prime Ministers, statues have been erected long after their deaths. It often takes a few years before hindsight allows for impartial appreciation of someone's contribution to our national development. In the case of the Queen, there is no need to wait. The Queen has served this country longer than any other monarch. She has meant more to Canadians than any other and has more than earned the honour we have the authority to bestow in creating a statue here on Parliament Hill.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say a few words in support of Motion M-135, that the Government consider the advisability of commissioning a statue for Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II here on Parliament Hill.

In so doing, I recognize that Canada has been a constitutional monarchy from the time of its inception. Kings and queens have been part of our history for as long as that history has been written. However, what sets this monarch apart is that in 1953 she was declared by Parliament and the Government as the first Queen of Canada.

The Fathers of Confederation deliberately chose our form of constitutional monarchy, having the American example before it. Those were difficult times, but also a time of new beginnings. They could have chosen to reject the monarchy if they had preferred to do so, but in the words of Sir John A. Macdonald: "Our first act is to recognize the sovereignty of Her Majesty".

From that time, and even more significantly from 1953, when Elizabeth was specifically named Queen of Canada, the sovereignty of Her Majesty and the sovereignty of this country have been linked as one and the same.

The Queen is the head of the Canadian state, with powers and authorities under our Constitution as a constitutional monarch. She has administered those affairs with dignity and responsibility. She has, at times, remonstrated with her First Ministers and has given them cautious, careful and prudent guidance.

Although this form of Government is often misunderstood and often subject to criticism as not being democratic, this system is, in fact, one of the most stable, democratic and least costly of any system of government in modern political science.

The Queen has been enormously successful as an institution in government. We do not talk of a kingdom in this country. The people of Canada know that Parliament is supreme. We see no threat in Her Majesty, but we see her as part of our heritage, from whose predecessors Parliament won the right of government.

We see her as a person, conducting the affairs of the monarchy, as she is called upon to do from time to time, with the utmost of grace and dignity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member but he will have six minutes remaining in his speech the next time the Bill comes before the House.

The hour provided for consideration of Private Members' Business is now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the order is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

STATUS OF WOMEN—COURT CHALLENGE TO LANGUAGE TRAINING POLICY/MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to a question I asked in November concerning the Government's language policy for immigrant women. This is not a new question, but one which was identified in the 1960s, the 1970s and again in the 1980s. Over 50 per cent of immigrant women do not have access to language training.

The policy is that those who are about to have access to the job market or are seen as the head of the family are the ones who are eligible for language training. This is not effective. We know that what it is doing is making immigrant women, particularly those from Third World and Asian countries, ghettoized into low-paying jobs and poor working conditions. There now has been a colloquium of groups that have decided to launch legal action against the federal Government on its language policy. It seems to me we are just putting the well-being of lawyers as a priority rather than having a true policy for these immigrant women.

It has been identified as a problem over the years, and I think it would be quite simple if the Government could change its policy at this point in time. I am not suggesting that this would not be costly. Of course, it costs money to eliminate discrimination. However, we must look at the input of the Government with respect to adult immigrant women in particular. We did not educate them. We did not raise them. They were not part of any kind of liability on our health care system. Therefore, they have arrived here, and have become part of our workforce but are not able to gain the kind of employment they would be able to gain if they had the kind of language training that certainly male immigrants have access to.

I also have great concerns about the kind of pressure we are putting on the families of immigrant people. I wonder if any of the Members in the House recognize how difficult it is if one has to call a doctor, if one has to have a parent-teacher's interview or if one has to look for or ask about food products and cannot do it because they cannot communicate in the language. I certainly have some experience in hospitals where we had patients who could not communicate in either of the official languages. It was very difficult for them. I might suggest that it would also be less costly for us in the health care system because, of course, recovery is much quicker if communication skills are available.

It seems to me to make sense rather than going through the courts, and that was the purpose of my question originally. The Minister did not respond except to tell us the numbers of people who were in language training courses through the CJS program. I am very concerned about that because now we know that we are in the process of having legal action taken against the Government. I do not think this Government, or any other Government in Canada, would want to see legal action where it seems to me very evident it is going to find itself in discriminatory circumstances. However, my major concern is that the expenditures of funds would be in defence of a biased policy rather than toward eliminating discrimination and making life much more equitable for these people.

Another interesting statistic I have looked at is that up to the age of 55 years, there are about 8 per cent more immigrant women in the workforce than there are native-born Canadian women. It seems to me that these are women who will be in the labour force and, therefore, they are going to need the language skills. I am very concerned about the fact that over the years the problem has been identified over and over again, as I say, since the late 1960s, and we still have not done anything to change this policy. Just a fairly simple change in policy would be the kind of thing that we would be looking for. It would stop the legal action that is apt to be there. It would also certainly give us a sense that the way we are treating our immigrant women is equitable to the way we treat our male immigrants. We always wanted to see ourselves as a country that welcomes people.

The Government offers language training to immigrant men and women it feels will enter the labour market. Immigrant women who are coming to join a partner in Canada are excluded from the program if the Government assumes they will stay in the home. This policy ignores the fact that these women must communicate in English or French to lead their daily lives.

Furthermore, language training is not offered to immigrant women who have few occupational skills. Immigrant men in the same category do have access to language courses. This discriminatory policy relegates immigrant women to the ghettos of low-paying jobs.

[English]

It seems to me it would be quite simple for the Minister to undertake to change this policy to stop any kind of legal action. I hope that is what the Government wants. That is certainly what New Democrats want to have happen to immigrant women and visible minorities.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister I can say that we hope litigation will cease. I am not very hopeful that that will happen, regardless of what the Government does. We live in a world in which it is popular to say that you are being discriminated against and popular to go to court. We could have the most flawless program which human ingenuity could contrive and there would still be someone who would say that he or she is being discriminated against.

In her question on November 27 the Member said:

> Is the Minister willing or not to allow these people to become part of our daily workforce?

Of course he is. I think the Member made an unfortunate inference in her question. The Government has instituted policies which have created over one million jobs. Almost half of those jobs have gone to women and 80 per cent of those are full-time jobs. Surely the Member will accept the fact that the Government is interested in having women take part in the workforce if they so choose.

The Member also says that the Government's policies are working against immigrant women. I want to read her statistics with regard to this in order that we can discuss concrete data. In fact, the number of training seats available to immigrant women has gone up since we came into office in 1984. In 1983-84 there were 2,123 seats available to immigrant women. There was a slight increase in 1984-85 when there were 2,474 seats available. There were 2,512 seats available in 1985-86 and in 1986-87 there were 2,280 seats available to immigrant women.

With regard to refugee women there has been a 30 per cent increase in seats available.

Ms. Dewar: That's because the others were so bad.

Mr. Friesen: Of course it is because the others were so bad, but it does take time to bring programs into line with needs. We could not do it on September 5, 1984, the day after we were elected. We began working on it but it does take time to get programs in place. As the trend line shows, it is improving.

I hope the Member will accept the fact that the Government is making a sincere and genuine attempt to improve the lot for immigrant women, and refugee women in particular, that they can get the language training they require in order to get into the workforce if they so choose.

The trend line shows that in 1983-84 there were 2,942 seats available to refugee women. In 1986-87 there were 3,911 seats available. That is a 30 per cent improvement. I hope the Member will accept the fact that the Government is doing what it can to improve the lot of refugee women and immigrant women in order that they can get the language training necessary to participate in the workplace.

SHIPYARDS—DELAY IN RESTRUCTURING INDUSTRY IN QUEBEC/ REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION CONCERNING FRIGATES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, this is further to a question I asked in November 1986 about the problems of Quebec shipyards, and now, a year later, Mr. Speaker, the issue has yet to be dealt with. I mentioned at the time that the Conservative Government had promised the Quebec Government that it would purchase two shipyards. As we know, the Quebec Government owned Marine Industry in Sorel and Versatile owned the Davie Shipyard in Lauzon and Vickers in Montreal. Because of the problems faced by the shipyards, the incompetence of the Conservative Government and the lack of a useful policy, Versatile is now bankrupt and was unable to meet its commitments.

The Conservative Government, through the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Côté), who was then Minister of Regional and Industrial Expansion, asked the Quebec Government to acquire, through Marine Industry in Sorel, the Lauzon Shipyard in Quebec and the Montreal shipyard, and in return, promised to grant large contracts and to see to it that the Federal Government would become a major customer of the three shipyards. This would have put back to work the 5,000 workers of the industry who were then unemployed.

One year later, Mr. Speaker, the position is still the same and there is still uncertainty. The shipyards in both Quebec and the Atlantic provinces are affected. We know that Quebec and St. John shipyards are still waiting for a decision on the frigate building contracts.

I believe that it is important to recall that, in 1983, the Liberal Government, to ensure that all shipyard workers in Canada would have jobs, promised to give overall control to the St. John Shipyard in New Brunswick and guaranteed that three frigates would be built by the St. John Shipyard and three frigates by the Quebec shipyards. To ensure that one and a half frigate would be built in Montreal and one and a half in the Sorel shipyard and to ensure that the Quebec City workers in Lauzon would have jobs, the contract for repairing four destroyers under the TRUMP Program was awarded to the Lauzon shipyard.

Mr. Speaker, in 1984, disaster struck. The frigate which was to be built in Montreal has been transferred to the Quebec City shipyard. There is now a dispute with the Sorel shipyard about transfering the other frigate which was to be built in Sorel to Quebec City. The Government has taken away from Montreal shipyards two ships, two TRUMP destroyers, which it is intent on giving to Atlantic Canada since it is a very well known fact that the Federal Government would like to award the contract for all six frigates to St-John's shipyards.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest it is not only the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie who objects to this kind of attitude and who would like the Parliamentary Secretary to provide some answers. In this morning's issue of the Le Devoir newspaper . . . I never thought a year ago that I would still be dealing with this today. I have here an article from the Le Devoir referring to a letter from Michel Côté to Daniel Johnson, under the following headline:

Ottawa had promised "huge contracts" for Quebec shipyards

All those who know Daniel Johnson, the Quebec Minister of Industry, recognize that he is rather a non-partisan moderate man and, among Quebec Liberal ministers, he does not really stand out as a staunch liberal because of his background, his own father having served as Quebec Premier under the National Union banner. And for such a man to accuse the Federal Government, the Quebec Federal Ministers in Ottawa, of not meeting their commitments, and I can tell you he came down quite hard on the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) who have failed to honour their commitments to Quebec shipyards.

What matters, Mr. Speaker, is not only the question of the industry itself but also the question of manpower, the 5,000 workers. All decisions made by this Government over the past three years clearly show that it is intent on starving the Quebec shipyards. First there is the lack of decision concerning the sharing of the work. Second, the then Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion considered the Atlantic Provinces and decided that from then on any ship repair contract under $5 million would be awarded without tenders. Mr. Speaker, they even played around with some of the projects: an $8 million contract would be split and awarded so as to give preferential treatment to shipyards located in the Atlantic Provinces, to the detriment of Quebec shipyards.

In another decision the Minister said: Listen, in Quebec the seaway is frozen, there is no navigation, so we will not seek to obtain bids from St. Lawrence shipyards in Quebec. There again pressure had to be applied to have the decision reversed. And recently, they said that so-called trimming and short-term repairs have to be done in a ship's home port which means none of the business will come to Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, all Quebecers, including the Government of Quebec, are outraged at the attitude taken by the Conservative Government. If Mr. Bourassa trusts this Government on free trade, I have the impression he is going to get the same treatment as his own Minister, Daniel Johnson, who trusted the Government on the shipyards and today sees, to his chagrin that the Government is not delivering the goods.

I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will have some positive answers to give for the holidays, so that these workers who have families to support will soon be able to go back to work, and so that during the holidays, like all the moms and dads across this country who work in our shipyards, they will be able to give presents and celebrate like the rest of us.

• (1815)

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should be very much aware that he is lucky he does not come from Halifax where we have absolutely nothing.

The Hon. Member is under some kind of illusion that the federal Government is not concerned about the difficulties. I only reiterate that certainly the Government is aware of the difficulties being faced by shipyards in Quebec. I should like to assure him that the charges he makes are simply not the case.

I remind the Hon. Member that the contracts were somewhat in jeopardy because of the financial difficulties of Versatile. It took the co-operative efforts of both the federal and provincial Governments to make it possible for the contract for the Caribou ferry to be signed and for work on other contracts to which my hon. friend has alluded to proceed.

As far as specific contracts are concerned, work is proceeding on schedule with regard to the Tribal Update and Modernization Program or TRUMP. The work in the shipyard has commenced as scheduled in November of this year.

With regard to the CPF project, I am pleased to report that although the prime contractor, Saint John Shipbuilding Limited, experienced difficulties with scheduling in the early stages of the project, the work is now going well and no more slippages are anticipated. The early slippages affected only the first two frigates to be built at the Saint John yard and will not affect the ships to be built in Quebec. In fact, construction work on the third ship, which is the first to be built in Quebec at Sorel, has already started.

Finally, work on the Marine Atlantic Caribou II ferry is progressing satisfactorily and is on schedule for delivery, as was forecast, in 1989.

Might I reiterate that we recognize the importance of marine contracts to the shipbuilding industry in Quebec and reassure the Hon. Member that work on all federal contracts is proceeding on schedule.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—CARRIAGE OF DANGEROUS GOODS—METRO TORONTO SPEED LIMIT

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, have you ever seen the movie Bleve? I think I may have asked you that question in the past, but I am sure I have not asked the Parliamentary Secretary. If Your Honour or the Parliamentary Secretary had ever seen the movie, you would never forget it.

In that movie, Mr. Speaker, the first thing you see is a train derailment. Then you see a huge ball of fire engulfing everything and going up in the air, and suddenly an explosion. Across the screen you see the written words that tell you that the cameraman who took the picture you have just seen was killed by the explosion or the bleve which you have just seen in the movie. The movie is a fascinating but frightening experience. I can promise you, Mr. Speaker, that if you had ever seen it, you would want to make sure that something like a bleve would never happen again. It is an experience you would never ever forget.

A bleve is caused by the derailment of a train carrying hazardous goods. One train carrying hazardous goods was derailed in my constituency of York East on July 14 of this past year. It was a CP train drawn by three locomotives. There were 103 cars on the train. Some 31 freight cars on that particular train on that particular day derailed near the intersection of Don Mills Road and Winford Drive in my constituency. One of the cars on that train, No. 87, was carrying something called vinyl acetate. According to the Enrivonmental Contaminants Act, vinyl acetate is a toxic substance and it is highly dangerous. The fire chief for the City of North York, when his crew investigated the situation and was cleaning it up, said that that the stuff was just like dynamite. He said that if car No. 87 had actually derailed and caught fire it would have been an absolute disaster. He said in addition to that that we would have been looking at evacuating within 2,500 feet in all directions of that car and it would have been something like the Mississauga train derailment of 1979. That is a situation that occurred in my constituency on July 14, 1987.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, and as the Parliamentary Secretary I know is aware, some 60,000 carloads of dangerous chemicals are carried by rail through Metropolitan Toronto every year. Let me emphasize that, 60,000 carloads of dangerous chemicals. The main CNR and CPR tracks are right through the centre of my constituency. In my constituency alone there are approximately 100,000 people who live right next door to those railway tracks. That is not all, of course. Those railway tracks run through the heart of Metropolitan Toronto. There is something like 25 schools right beside the CPR tracks alone. There are senior citizens homes and all sorts of institutions. If anything ever happened in the way of a believe on that line or those lines with those 60,000 cars of dangerous materials carried every year, there would be a literal incineration of the people living next door to those tracks.

The particular train that derailed on July 14 was travelling, we are told, at something like 35 to 45 miles per hour or 56 to 64 kilometres an hour. Just to the south of this area they have limited the speed limit to some 25 miles an hour. Here there is no particular speed limit and trains are going 35 to 45 miles an hour. The fire chief for the City of North York said something else. He said "If you pick up the paper every morning you will see a story about a train derailment. Aren't we learning something from these stories?" I hope we are. In fact, the former Minister of Transport in this Government appointed the Toronto area Rail Transportation of Dangerous Goods Task Force to look into this situation to study it and see what could be done. They have been holding hearings.

Some studies have been done. In fact last week I got a stack of studies from them, nine in all. If I stood on top of them and jumped, for sure I would break my leg. So far I have been able to read one called The Risk Perception Study. It tells me that people out there in Metropolitan Toronto have the same concerns that I have about this situation. There are all sorts of other studies, routing studies, risk assessment studies, risk management, technology, speed, buffer zones, emergency responses, land use implications, all sorts of other things. I do not know whether the task force has the message from all these studies and from all the input they have received from the public and from me but if anything happen it will not be the task force that will be to blame; it will be you, me, the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister.

If we have not learned anything from the last couple of weeks, surely we have learned something from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the problems he has been having with issues of public safety. If one single solitary life is lost as a result of the carriage of dangerous goods by train through my constituency or anywhere else, there will be hell to pay and the hell to pay will be for the Minister.

Tonight I expect the Parliamentary Secretary to show us the way and to give us some answers to this problem at long last. We have had enough excuses and enough studies. The time has come for action and we are expecting it from the Government and the Parliamentary Secretary today.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to my colleague from York East on behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). I have not seen the movie to which he referred, but I do not doubt for one second the seriousness of the example of the movie nor of the case he makes for Toronto. However, I would remind the Hon. Member that there are certain limits on what the Minister can do, particularly since a task force has been appointed.

The task force is going about its responsibilities in a very responsible way. It is undertaking studies. Its mandate is to look not only at the speed of trains going through the Toronto area but to see if there should be new routes and new rights-of-way and if old rights-of-way by schools should be closed. I think that is the only responsible way that can be studied.

The people who know best are the people from the Toronto area. A large group of people from the Toronto area are on the task force. They are doing first-rate work. If they felt that there was a serious problem in the short term, they would say so to the Minister and we would try to accommodate that. Indeed, I think the general rule is 35 miles per hour, and CP itself has dropped the speed to 25 miles per hour in one of the areas.

If the members of the task force felt that that new speed limit should be extended throughout the rest of the district, I think they would tell us that. I am sure the Minister would respond positively. In any event, the task force will report in the late spring of next year.

I do not have the message the Hon. Member wants to hear today, whatever that message may be. Does he want the speed limit dropped to 10 miles per hour or does he want trains stopped totally? He has not indicated that.

Mr. Redway: One mile per hour would be fine.

Mr. Thacker: The Hon. Member has said that he would like the limit to be one mile per hour. That may be a little slow, but perhaps the speed limit should be 20 miles per hour. Who knows? We do not know and that is why this task force has been appointed, a task force consisting of highly responsible people. We look forward to responding positively to their recommendations when they submit their report in the late spring of 1988.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

SENIOR CITIZENS

OPPORTUNITY FOR GOUVERNMENT TO LISTEN ATTENTIVELY TO DEMANDS

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I support the position taken by the coalition including the Fédération de l'âge d'or du Québec, the Forum des personnes âgées de Montréal, the Golden Age and the Association québécoise pour la défense des retraités, all of which favour a truly progressive taxation system under which corporations and the wealthy will pay their fair share. They want the Government to maintain the investment income deduction of $1,000, which means that the first $1,000 is not taxable. They also want full indexation of our personal income tax system so that tax credits and deductions increase with the cost of living.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) should listen carefully to the demands being made by these organizations and by all senior citizens who come to see us regularly at our constituency offices to complain about financial pressures and who want the Minister of Finance to pay special attention to their demands.

FINANCE

EXTENSION OF NORTHERN TRAVEL TAX BENEFITS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the communique issued on December 10 by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is good news for northerners who had been concerned about the narrow application of the tax rules applied to northern travel benefits.

Under the new rules tax benefits will be extended to trips for all destinations, including those in the North, thereby allowing northerners to take their holidays in the North should they so wish.

The maximum deduction, of course, still is tied to the cost of travel to the designated southern point. Northerners will wish to thank the Minister for listening to their problems and developing workable solutions.

MULTICULTURALISM

CALL FOR NEW ANTI-RACISM EDUCATION PROGRAM

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, an effective policy of multiculturalism requires an effective program to improve race relations in Canada. The present Conservative Government has been tragically weak in this area.

The Race Relations Directorate has been allowed to deteriorate to the extent that it includes only an acting director and one program officer. Such a limited staff, which makes the title "directorate" a bitter joke, is quite incapable of mounting the programs that this country needs.

Is that the reason the program promised last March by the Minister for Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to fight fear, bigotry, and racism among Canadians has not yet been announced? The Minister promised an aggressive federal public education campaign for this fall. Where is it?

The Minister spoke truly when he declared: "You only beat racism, discrimination and prejudice by defeating the ignorance and stupidity from which they spring". When does the Government expect to act on that fine declaration?

LABOUR RELATIONS

AIR CANADA—SETTLEMENT OF STRIKE

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, this morning's reports that Air Canada and its 8,500 ground workers have come to an agreement is one Christmas gift for which all Canadians can be thankful.

My colleagues from western Canada will attest that travelling of late has been nothing short of horrendous. This past Monday, for example, it took me seven hours to arrive here from my riding of Edmonton East. As you well know, Mr. Speaker, such travel can be exhausting, inconvenient, and can only impede our efforts to serve Canadians better.

Commendation should be extended to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux). When the talks broke down the Minister acted swiftly in appointing a mediator with instructions to resolve the impasse with all possible haste. The Canadian public was again held at ransom as labour and management resorted to strike and lock-out. Surely there must be some better method of settling disputes and differences.

Travelling Canadians will now be assured of being home for Christmas with family, friends, and loved ones.

LUBICON LAKE INDIAN BAND—REQUEST FOR MEDIATION OF LAND CLAIM DISPUTE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, for almost 50 years the Lubicon Lake Indian Band in northern Alberta has struggled for a resolution of its outstanding land claim. The people are still waiting for the land they are entitled to and were promised almost 50 years ago.

Negotiations are stalled at the present time because the federal Government has refused the band's request for a mediator. Surely it is reasonable to request mediation in a dispute that has dragged on for so long. The proposed mediator is a highly respected former federal Conservative Justice Minister, the Hon. E. Davie Fulton, who has carefully examined the Lubicon Lake situation and is willing to serve in that capacity.

The federal Government, however, is ignoring this opportunity for a just settlement. Instead, the federal negotiator is working out a deal with the province without the band's involvement. The negotiator has said that he "can make a deal with the province" and the Lubicons are going to have to accept it. "They will have to be left holding the bag."

In Canada we take pride in our record on human rights. That record, however, is a blemished one, and the Lubicon Lake issue proves the point.

AGRICULTURE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE FOR FARMERS

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I would like personally to thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Ministers of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and Finance (Mr. Wilson), and all of my colleagues on the government side of the House for their timely assistance package for agriculture and western farmers.

The initiative includes a 1987 Special Canadian Grains Program payment of $1.1 billion, farm fuel tax rebates for two additional years at a cost of $400 million, $100 million will be committed to soil conservation, and the Farm Credit Corporation will receive an additional $330 million over the next three years for debt restructuring.

Farm Debt Review Boards will be extended until 1991, and $750 million of the Western Grain Stabilization Plan debt will be written off and new measures brought in to include all western farmers in stabilization.

In the last election campaign the Government made a commitment to farmers across Canada. These new initiatives illustrate our belief in standing up for western farmers.

The NDP is completely devoid of any agricultural policy. As farmers all too well know, the Liberals never acted responsibly on behalf of farmers. The Mulroney Government continues to listen and deliver for agriculture.

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS

CONSULTANTS' REPORT ON DANGERS TO HIGHLY POPULATED CENTRES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the transportation of dangerous goods by rail is a matter of great concern in major centres in Canada, including Toronto. In 1979 we in the Toronto and Mississauga area had the near tragedy of a derailment of railway cars containing dangerous chemicals. Ever since then measures have been implemented to make the carriage of dangerous goods more safe.

Currently, a task force set up by the Government is looking into the rail transportation of dangerous goods. The IBI Group consultants' summary report which they commissioned refers to the risk that is much greater when goods are carried through highly populated centres than when they are carried further north. The report states that there is a "basic trade-off between public safety and over-all cost," in bringing goods through Metro.

I note with alarm the prospect of northern railway tracks and central Ontario railway tracks being shut down and urge the Government to have the task force consider the consequences to Toronto of closing down railway tracks through remote regions which could result in dangerous chemicals having to be carried through our metropolitan areas.

WINTER OLYMPIC GAMES

THE OLYMPIC TORCH—CELEBRATIONS PLANNED BY CITY OF LONDON

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, today with the arrival in Ottawa of the Olympic Torch, the Parliament of Canada had the opportunity to share the spirit. As the Torch lights up 800 Canadian cities, towns, and villages, its glow is reaching the hearts of millions of Canadians.

The Government of Canada's initiative to share the Olympic spirit with the Celebration '88 Program is an overwhelming success. More than 2,000—and counting—voluntary self-financed community committees are creating and implementing hundreds of Olympic-themed events.

The City of London Celebration '88 Committee, with 40 members and 30 organizations, has organized, among other events, a program on January 3, 1988, named "The London Winterfest", a special day when the Torch arrives for all Londoners to join in the Olympic spirit. The London Celebration '88 medal award winners who proudly manifest the Olympic ideals are Darrel Foley, Jennifer Armstrong, John Simmons, Harvey Bailie, Tim McLennan, and Jimmy Agathos. As all communities of Canada "catch the flame" we will truly recognize the ultimate goal—a unity among Canadians, and their pride in showing the world "our Canada" at Calgary in 1988.

LUBICON LAKE INDIAN BAND LAND CLAIM—REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, today the Olympic Flame came to Ottawa. To the majority of people who were standing in the blowing snow to watch the Flame arrive, it represents the pride of the world in its best young athletes. But to one small group huddled in the cold this morning this flame means something else. To the Lubicon Indians it is a symbol of those who are exploiting them, the sponsors of the Olympic Games.

The oil companies are taking oil out of traditional Lubicon lands to the tune of $1 million a day. The federal Government has permitted this uncurbed exploitation that brings with it disease, despair, and destruction to the people who live on the land.

The rest of the world watches us as we approach the opening moment of the Winter Olympics. Unfortunately, we as Canadians are cast in the shadow of this shameful business. The federal Government now plans to negotiate a deal with the Alberta Government without the participation of the very people who are suffering as a result of the Government's dereliction of its duty.

All the Lubicons ask is that the person who carried out the inquiry on this matter, the person most knowledgeable about the facts of this case, and I might add, a former Tory cabinet Minister, be involved in these negotiations. I call upon the Minister of Indians Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) to direct his negotiator to invite Mr. Davie Fulton to participate in the negotiations, and to ensure that this long-standing claim is settled in a fair and democratic manner.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

QUÉBEC-EST CONSTITUENCY—GOVERNMENT PERFORMANCE

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, I am proud to announce that twenty-four projects for the riding of Québec-Est were approved under the Industrial and Regional Development Program from September 1984 to September 1987. The funding provided by the Progressive Conservative Government for these commitments totalled $1,614,453.

One hundred and sixty-eight jobs were created as a result of these projects, Mr. Speaker. This is an example of a serious and concrete commitment on the part of our Government to improve the country's economy which had been so sorely neglected by the federal Liberals.

In Quebec, the Progressive Conservative Government has been creating jobs at the rate of 6,421 per month, for a total of 244,000, nine times the rate of 727 jobs per month under the Liberals, while today's unemployment rate of 9.5 per cent is the lowest since April 1981.

Entrepreneurs in my riding have benefited substantially from this Government's economic programs, and they greatly appreciate our initiative and our leadership in this respect.

Thanks to financial assistance provided by the Government to businesses anxious to modernize or improve their productivity, those businesses will be in better shape to compete with the Americans when the Free Trade Agreement is ratified, which in turn will create thousands more jobs.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURE CUTS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) totally misled the employees of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and all industries related thereto during the last election campaign.

The present Prime Minister promised in 1984 not only to maintain the level of research that was being done by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited but to consider even more advanced research. After he gained power the first devastating act which the Prime Minister and his Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) performed was to cut the budget of Atomic Energy by 50 per cent, or $100 million, and to lift an additional $70 million out of the reserves of the company.

To date they have collected the $70 million reserve fund and cut $60 million of the $100 million cut from AECL.

Next year this Government, which talks about R and D in rhetorical terms only, will be cutting an additional $25 million out of R and D, and the following year it will be cutting an additional $15 million out of Atomic Energy.

I call upon the Government to throw its rhetoric aside and start supporting an industry which has saved the country billions of dollars over the last 40 years because of its new developments in energy, in medical research, in many areas of high technology, and in a whole host of offshoots from an industry which has been a tremendous asset to many areas of human life—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

AGRICULTURE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF ADDITIONAL FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, the Special Canadian Grains Program announced yesterday by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is good news for all Canadian farmers. The injection of $1.1 billion of cash, the extension of the fuel tax rebates, further funding for the Farm Credit Corporation in the amount of $100 million per year for each of the next three years, provision for a write-off of one half of the Western Grain Stabilization Fund deficit, a recognition of the necessity to deal with the serious problem of soil degradation through PFRA programs, and the Farm Debt Review Boards receiving $40 million to keep them operating until 1991, certainly give new meaning to the old adage that actions speak louder than words.

What a change, Mr. Speaker, to have a Prime Minister who says "the Government will stand by farmers and their families when they are hurting".

We recall only too well the response of a former Prime Minister who said "why should I sell your wheat?" and responded with an obscene gesture.

The response of the farm community indicates how well received this new program is where it really counts, in the farm kitchens and coffee shops across Canada.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SITUATION IN HAITI—GOVERNMENT OBLIGATION TO TAKE STRONG AND CLEAR POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, like all Canadians, we in the New Democratic Party were shocked by recent events in Haiti. We were also disappointed in the Canadian Government's weak response to this serious situation.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the National Council of General Namphy's government has lost all legitimacy in Haiti and that the new provisional electoral council appointed by General Namphy is unconstitutional.

This is a crisis situation, and the Government of Canada should take a clear and strong stand. A diplomatic protest note is not enough. The Government must cut its aid to Haiti and stop deporting Haitian refugees. At the international level, the Government must take a clear stand against General Namphy's regime and make strong representations at the United Nations and elsewhere to bring about strong and effective international pressure on General Namphy's regime to ensure a stable situation for a proper and legitimate election.

TRADE

ARTICLE 1904.2 OF FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, I will direct my question—

• (1420)

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Chair could help. I apologize to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition for interrupting, but there is a long standing rule about not referring to the absence of Members.

There has also been a long standing custom that, when asking questions of the Treasury bench, the questioner starts off by saying—if in fact the Minister is absent to whom the Member wishes to direct his or her question—"in the absence of the Minister for so and so, I will direct my question to—". That is a perfectly proper procedure. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is absolutely correct in his approach.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, some of the backbenchers, the trained seals of the Conservative Party, need a rest. We understand that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I think some of them have started the party early today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: We certainly are not starting the Question Period early.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition could try again.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister, a very simple question because here in the House we are always trying to elicit very clear and very specific answers.

The Deputy Prime Minister knows full well that the Prime Minister has been arguing that his free trade agreement with the United States guarantees that Canada will be fully exempt from existing and future American trade laws.

Mr. Speaker, Article 1904,2 of the agreement provides, and I quote: "—the antidumping and countervailing duty statutes of the Parties, as those statutes may be amended from time to time, are incorporated into this agreement." In other words, the agreement directly contradicts the Prime Minister.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister explain and give us a reason for this?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I did not get all of the Right Hon. Member's question, but I certainly point out that Article 1904 says:

—the Parties shall replace judicial review of final antidumping and countervailing duty determinations with binational panel review.

That, of course, confirms what we have said, that we are going to have a binational panel review and that we are providing ourselves with time to develop new trade remedy laws appropriate to one single market.

I think it would be more appropriate, rather than picking out specific clauses in the Free Trade Agreement—

Mr. Riis: We would not want to do that.

Miss Carney: —for the Right Hon. Member to read the whole Chapter of the agreement because each Article relates to other Articles in the Chapter as is normal in treaty language.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I turn then to the Minister. Is she suggesting that we not read the document? Is she suggesting we do not refer it to Parliament and that we accept the Prime Minister's and her statement as to what is in it?

I want to bring the Minister back to her own document which says on page 273 that American anti-dumping law and countervailing laws future and present apply against Canada. Why then does the Minister claim that Canada has been exempted from American trade law when it is not the case? Why then does the Minister claim that we have somehow got guaranteed access to the American market, something which in light of the text we clearly have not? Why does the Minister not admit that she and her colleagues, led by the Prime Minister, failed to obtain for Canada what they undertook to obtain?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, let me make it very clear that I am urging all Hon. Members to read this agreement, and particularly members of the Opposition who, through their speeches and public statements, have made it clear that they have not read the agreement and do not know what is in it.

I have never said when talking about the Free Trade Agreement that Canada is exempt from trade law. I have said repeatedly, over and over again, that we set up a binational review for a period of five years plus two so that we could develop common trade law that applies to one market. I said that over and over. I have explained to the House that through many, many difficult negotiations, we were unable to do that in the time period preceding October 4. I have said over and over that in the meantime we have set in these interim measures and we will be addressing this question in the time period we have set. For the Right Hon. Member to suggest otherwise is misleading the House and Canadians.

EXEMPTION FROM U.S. TRADE LAW—EFFECT OF AGREEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has said in the House repeatedly, particularly in the last debate on this issue, that her purpose was to get an exemption from American countervail. We can give her the citations. She said it right in this House.

The Prime Minister said in New York City that American trade law cannot apply to Canada, period. I cite again for the Minister's attention 1904.2 of the agreement referring to American trade law future and applicable; anti-dumping, quotas, surtax and countervail will apply to Canada. How is it, therefore, that Canada has an exemption from American trade law in this agreement? How have we got secure access to the American market?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Member's question is both pitiful and pathetic. I am being very kind to the Right Hon. Member.

I have explained to him in the course of debate over the last year, when I told Canadians about the historic negotiations that took place over the last 16 months and the historic negotiations that took place in Washington in October and recently, that we had set ourselves that goal of creating new laws and we could not do it in the time period available to us. Therefore, we have put in interim measures while we develop the new laws that are required when there are two markets that are being integrated into one through the reduction of tariffs.

It is a matter of public record. I have said that all across the country. For the Right Hon. Member to maintain, after we have tabled the "Elements of the Agreement" and after we have tabled the entire Free Trade Agreement, that I am claiming that we are exempt from U.S. trade law is ridiculous and irresponsible.

PROPOSED OMNIBUS U.S. TRADE BILL—PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister for International Trade. While the Minister is talking about statements that are ridiculous and irresponsible, I would like to cite to her a statement made by the Prime Minister of Canada in an interview in The New York Times. He said: "We will have guaranteed access to the U.S. market through the elimination of U.S. trade laws or we won't have a deal". That is a direct quote from the Prime Minister of Canada.

The fact that the Minister for International Trade is engaging in double-backward gymnastics, trying to cover up her tracks on this matter, is of no comfort to Canadians when they know that they are being denied proper information.

My question is directed to the Minister. She said yesterday in response to a question that she had not had time to know what was in the U.S. Trade Bill which will apply to Canada if passed. I have here a 45-page document prepared by the Department of External Affairs which outlines every specific issue in the proposed omnibus U.S. Trade Bill. Obviously the Minister has not got around to reading that.

An all-Party committee of the Commons recommended that the Government say now that it will not abide by the agreement if the United States passes the omnibus Trade Bill before it deals with the Canada-U.S. Trade Agreement. Therefore, can we get a firm commitment from the Minister today that the Government will not proceed with the trade agreement if the Americans pass the omnibus Trade Bill?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, double-backward gymnastics may be easy for the Hon. Member but are very difficult for me.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Carney: The Hon. Member raised several issues in his question. Possibly he would like to repeat them in a supplementary question.

If the opposition Party read past Article 1904 to Article 1906, it may explain to them the provisions of the Free Trade Agreement.

Article 1906: Duration, says:

> The provisions of this Chapter shall be in effect for five years pending the development of a substitute system of rules in both countries for antidumping and countervailing duties as applied to their bilateral trade. If no such system of rules is agreed and implemented at the end of five years, the provisions of this Chapter shall be extended for a further two years. Failure to agree to implement a new regime at the end of the two-year extension shall allow either Party to terminate the Agreement on six-month notice.

That certainly meets the Prime Minister's commitment.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACCEPT COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Minister no longer has much agility of feet. I knew she had no agility of mind, but we now recognize that she cannot move on her feet either.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Cry-baby.

Mr. Axworthy: I am not crying. I am just saying that some of us are a little more quick-footed than others.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry will put his question.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I will now pose the question which I thought the Hon. Minister might want to answer. Will the Government go along with the unanimous recommendation of the Commons committee and say explicitly at this time that the Government of Canada will not proceed with the trade agreement with the United States if the Americans go ahead and pass their omnibus Trade Bill? Yes or no?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that the Hon. Member would have the grace to stand in his place and withdraw his coarse and common allegations in Question Period.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Carney: His question is totally hypothetical and I will not deal with hypothetical questions in this House.

OBSERVANCE OF AGREEMENT PROVISIONS BY PROVINCES AND MUNICIPALITIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Shields: Ladies and gentlemen, Shirley Carr!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I may have to keep you here for a while this afternoon. The Hon. Member for Oshawa has the floor.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, we have once again seen the intellectual level of which the Conservative Party is capable.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: The Hon. Member has a very profound sense of humour.

Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Article 103 of the trade proposal between Canada and the United States states as follows:

> The Parties to this Agreement shall ensure that all necessary measures are taken in order to give effect to its provisions, including their observance . . . by state, provincial and local governments.

This clause is unequivocal in its assertion that it is up to the federal Government to ensure compliance, including by the provinces and municipalities, and the Government itself has admitted that at least a number of areas are within provincial jurisdictional authority. Has the federal Government obtained agreement from all the provinces to implement this accord? If not, does it intend to do so?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I want to correct an assumption which the Hon. Member has made in his question. As I and the Prime Minister have stated, the Government's position on this matter is very clear.

This treaty is within the legal competence of the Government of Canada on behalf of the people of Canada. We are entitled, under the Constitution of this country, to enact this treaty. In fact, as we have indicated on many previous occasions, we have every legal right to put into effect all the provisions of the treaty.

Mr. Broadbent: Is that so?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is as simple as that. That is the considered legal opinion of people who have studied this matter. It is the opinion of the Government of Canada.

IMPLEMENTATION OF PROVISIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, that which the Minister of Justice has just said is very interesting. I do not know of a single legal authority who would support what he has just said. I would like him to clarify that.

All legal authorities I know have said that it is the unequivocal right of the federal Government to sign the treaty but that the one decision which has been made in this area, which was made in the 1930s, makes it quite clear that the federal Government has no right whatsoever to implement it in areas of provincial jurisdictional authority.

I will address my question to the Minister of Justice since he is apparently answering these questions. Since the Government is required to carry this out by the agreement it is about to enter into with the United States, how does it plan to carry out these commitments when at least three provinces have said that they are categorically opposed to it?

When the Minister answers that question will he also do us the courtesy of tabling the legal opinion which he apparently has which would justify the making of the extraordinary assertion he made only a minute ago?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I will reiterate the point. I have given the view of the Government of Canada of the legal position. We know that we have the ability to enter into this treaty and to have the provisions thereof put into effect. The courts of this country are always available in the event that anyone wants to challenge that right. We are certain and determined in our legal right to proceed.

Mr. Broadbent: There we have the first withdrawal, Mr. Speaker.

EFFECT ON FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister cite, not half a dozen, not four or five, but only one legal authority in the country, apart from himself as a politician somewhat interested in the area, who would support the claim he has made? I suspect that waiting for his answer will be like waiting for Godot. Therefore, while we wait, I will ask him another question.

Since three of the provinces have said that they are opposed, and since the Government will be committed to acting on this with the Government of the United States, does it intend to act on the federal power of disallowance, for example, to carry out its will? If it does, what does the Minister think that will do for federal-provincial relations?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I do not quite understand what the hon. gentleman wants me to do. I am sure that he may have access to his own legal opinions on this issue. I state categorically that the Government has the right to enter into and implement this treaty under the trade and commerce provisions of the Constitution of Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: Name one authority.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I have just quoted the Constitution of Canada. What kind of authority does the Hon. Member want?

Mr. Axworthy: That is to enter a treaty, not implement it.

Mr. Broadbent: Just give us one.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There are precedents galore with respect to international trade arrangements.

Mr. Riis: Name one.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There is 1935, 1947, the GATT. I take it the Hon. Member knows what the GATT is. This was passed by the federal Government and brought in some months after the GATT had been signed on the part of Canada for the approval of the House of Commons. We are now debating this in advance of the signature of this agreement, and that is something that has never happened before.

HEALTH

TOXIC MUSSELS—REQUEST FOR FINANCIAL COMPENSATION PROGRAM TO ASSIST VICTIMS AND FISHING INDUSTRY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister is aware of all of the circumstances surrounding the tragic toxic mussel episode. He knows that as a result of general mismanagement and confusion, individual Canadians have become seriously ill, two have died, and the fishing industry has unnecessarily suffered financially, in particular those sectors that were improperly included in a health alert issued by the Government of Canada.

I ask the Prime Minister if the Government is prepared to consider establishing a financial compensation program, first and foremost for the victims of toxic mussel poisoning, and also for the fishing industry, particularly those sectors that have suffered financially because of the Government's mismanagement of this issue.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the issues have been raised in the House many times. I have explained very clearly the position of the Government, the health alert which was necessary on Friday last, and which the Hon. Member's Party and members of that Party said was over-reaction. This week we have a different reaction to the position they took last Friday. The action I took was correct, and in respect to the best information for the industry, is exactly what I said yesterday in the House, and what I said outside the House, and that is to clear the system and bring new product in that is inspected and that we know is safe.

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF FINANCIAL COMPENSATION PROGRAM

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, we all know that despite the incredible confusion and mismanagement by the Government on this issue, the Government and the Minister make the claim, incredibly, that everything operated according to plan. All we can say is, some plan! What we are raising today is a separate issue. It is a question directed to the Prime Minister of Canada, and I ask it again.

Is the Prime Minister prepared to consider a financial compensation program for those victims—more than 100 in Canada, including two who have died—and their families, of toxic mussel poisoning, and also for the fishing industry, particularly those sectors that have suffered unnecessarily financially because of being falsely included in a health alert issued by the Government of Canada? That is the question. It is a separate one.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, to repeat, the question does not change the answer and the answer remains the same.

Mr. Tobin: What is the answer to the question?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The point, as I indicated yesterday, the ads that went into various newspapers across the country, in both official languages, today, secondly, the news release entitled: "Live Atlantic mussels, clams, oysters and quahogs removed from sale". I think if Members look very carefully, the plan that is in this one, for example, 280 officers of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the Department of National Health and Welfare, plus 1,075 officers from the federal Health Protection Branch, from provincial and municipal departments. We have contacted 52,689 individual retail restaurants and other establishments.

Mr. Tobin: You are saying no compensation, then? Answer the question.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): We have a very clear plan in action. What we are saying is the best thing we can do with health as a priority, and then to clean the system and have an orderly plan of bringing the product back. That is the best way to handle the industry—

Mr. Gauthier: How about compensation?

Mr. Tobin: Answer the question.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I am answering the question. The hon. gentleman last Friday said the health alert was over-reaction. Today he is yapping about something else. Get your act straight.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: So much for compensation.

FISHERIES INSPECTION PROGRAM—REQUEST THAT PUBLIC INQUIRY BE INSTITUTED

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. There is a loss of confidence by Canadians which has increased as a result of the second death from mussel poisoning, a loss of confidence in the Government's fisheries inspection program and the Government's ability to respond quickly and appropriately to a problem of such seriousness.

The handling of this matter has also caused financial chaos in the shellfish industry in Atlantic Canada. Will the Prime Minister demonstrate that his Government can act responsibly by instituting a public inquiry into the whole sequence of events and the procedures of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, and immediately announce a compensation program for those in the shellfish industry who have been so drastically affected and for those whose health has been injured?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman asked the same question yesterday and I answered it yesterday.

Mr. McCurdy: No, he didn't.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I say to him again that the operations centre has a very clear plan in mind. I can say to the Member and to the House that after the press release of this morning at six a.m.—I believe that was the agreed time it would go out—tomorrow there will be a further briefing in the operations centre in terms of the testing procedure and the reintroduction into market—

Mr. Riis: Compensation, Jake.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —which I think is the best plan at this stage respecting the reintroduction of product into the market. That is as far as I will go today and that is as far as I went yesterday. The answer remains the same.

Mr. McCurdy: What about compensation? That was the question.

RESPONSIBILITY OF MINISTER OF FISHERIES

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, has the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans been put out to pasture on this issue? It is his Department, his inspection procedures, we are talking about. He is the one who should know about compensation programs. Why does he not get up on his feet and announce a compensation program and an inquiry into his own procedures?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the issue of health is the primary issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: The question is about compensation, Jake.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That issue remains the primary issue and all the actions we are taking relating to the actions of yesterday, which were explained in the House, the actions which we took today with the press release and, again with explanation in the House, what we are doing today, what we have said we will do tomorrow and the type of briefing for tomorrow and what action, that is on a very clear plan as to how the health of Canadians can be protected and the best action for the industry, and I am following that plan and I am sticking to that plan.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MINISTER OF RENEWABLE RESOURCES AND CULTURE, AND OF MINISTER OF SOCIAL SERVICES, NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Speaker: I wish to bring to the attention of Hon. Members the presence in the gallery of two Members from the Northwest Territories Legislative Assembly the Hon. Titus Allooloo, Minister of Renewable Resources and Culture and Communications, and the Hon. Jeannie Marie Jewell, Minister of Social Services.

FISHERIES

TOXIC MUSSELS—OPPORTUNITY TO OFFER COMPENSATION TO VICTIMS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister and get back to the issue of compensation for the victims of toxic mussels, particularly in light of negligence on the part of two Cabinet Ministers. We know that the first alarm was sounded four days late—on December 1—because lab tests results released on November 27 already indicated that mussels were toxic. The outcome of all this is that in excess of 100 people are sick and that a second victim has died today. And then the ban on seafoods, which covered perfectly good products including—through sheer blunder, I might add—such things as lobsters, shrimps and scallops, made fishermen, wholesalers, fish dealers and restaurant owners incur huge financial losses. I want to ask the Prime Minister whether he thinks it might be fair and equitable if his Government were to repair the damage it has done to the victims as a result of its own blunders and mistakes.

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's Leader stated the health priority in the House. I have stated the health priority. Now, the answer today is the same answer I have given every day as to the knowledge of the issue for this Minister, that the information came to me on November 30th and that the health alert went out on December 1. The Member cannot change the facts. The Member cannot put a different twist on the facts.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): The facts of your negligence.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): So to the Hon. Member I say that just today in his question he now used the word "seafood". That has not been the issue. Just analyse what you are saying. Analyse what you are doing to the industry. But, more importantly, analyse what you are doing to the health of Canadians. He cannot have it both ways.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONSUMPTION OF TOXIC MUSSELS—QUERY WHY GOVERNMENT REFUSED JUST COMPENSATION FOR VICTIMS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, it is clear the Minister of National Health and Welfare does not intend to acknowledge his responsibility, nor does the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. That is why I am directing my question to the Prime Minister, who in the final instance will have to decide about compensating the victims. Both ministers have behaved like bulls in a china shop, and today, the Prime Minister has to decide what to do next. Why is the Government refusing to pay fair compensation to people who became victims through the Government's fault?

• (1450)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as I have said so many times, the health issue will remain as the priority issue. There is a very clear plan in terms of how to restore the industry and to keep the health issue as the primary issue.

The Hon. Member will have to think of his words and his partisanship in relation to what he wants to do. Not only does he want to make the points about responsibility, he also wants to use his position in this House to raise—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York East.

INCOME TAX

FUNDING OF NDP MUNICIPAL ELECTION CANDIDATES—ISSUANCE OF RECEIPTS FOR TAX DEDUCTIONS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. He is aware that financial contributions made to municipal political candidates are not deductible for income tax purposes.

However, according to a recent report, supporters of NDP municipal candidates in the city of Toronto have been making contributions to those candidates and receiving federal income tax receipts.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Redway: They have been doing it by funnelling the money through the federal New Democratic Party.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Redway: Is this NDP tax rip-off legal and, if so, will the Minister immediately move to close this NDP tax loophole?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am sure this matter is of interest to all political Parties in this Chamber. I can assure my colleagues that our Department, pursuant to its responsibilities, will check into the amounts of the receipts and authenticate them.

Mr. Crosbie: And prosecute.

Mr. MacKay: Insofar as the use or purpose to which the contributions are made is concerned, I think that is probably within the jurisdiction of Elections Canada.

Mr. Jelinek: It is a question of morality.

Mr. MacKay: That process will be looked at very carefully. It is not in the interest of any of us in this Chamber that these political contributions which are, after all, a special form of tax deduction, should be abused or misused.

Mr. Crosbie: You are tattle-tale grey, Ed.

An Hon. Member: Honest Ed.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

PANEL RULING AFFECTING BRITISH COLUMBIA FISHERY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Tories do not run off with the shoe closet after the election.

An Hon. Member: You can do better than that.

Mr. Fulton: My question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. On November 30 he received a letter from the British Columbia Minister of Fisheries, Mr. Savage, regarding the GATT panel ruling, which pointed out that the decision has serious implications for export controls and natural resource management. Mr. Savage said:

> British Columbia also notes that any specific grandfathering of Provincial fishery practices impairs all those practices not specified. By grandfathering East Coast policies, the legal text could be interpreted as specifically disallowing existing West Coast policies which have a similar intent.

He concludes by saying:

> Without such a solution the British Columbia government may find itself under considerable pressure to reassess its support for the Canada-U.S. agreement.

Will the Minister confirm that the Government of Canada will oppose the GATT ruling as the Minister stated on November 18 in this House?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the letter from the Hon. Mr. Savage in front of me. Indeed, as we have indicated in the House and as I have indicated to the British Columbia fishing industry, in the matter of regulations which we apply against the export of unprocessed salmon and herring, we intend to meet our obligations to our fishermen on the West Coast, to the processors, and to meet our obligations under the GATT. We intend to take all those factors into consideration in preparing for our case to be heard before the GATT council.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans said that he could not recall the context in which he made a particular statement. He was asked what action he would take in relation to the GATT panel ruling, and the statement he made, as reported in Hansard at page 10922, is:

> —we will be opposing that recommendation when it reaches the GATT council.

Is that or is that not the position of the Government of Canada, or was that not the Minister of Fisheries who was in this House on November 18?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated to members of the industry, including some of the Hon. Member's own constituents, we will be consulting with the processors, the unions and others, and preparing the Government's response to this GATT panel recommendation. I might add, it does not become a decision of GATT until the GATT council finally ratifies it.

Mr. McCurdy: Do you oppose it or not?

Mr. Siddon: I, together with the fishing industry which I represent, certainly will be doing everything in my power to ensure that their interests are represented.

Mr. Rodriguez: What do you think?

Mr. Siddon: If the Hon. Member wants to interpret that as opposing, at this point I am certainly opposing anything that is not in the interests of our fishermen.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ZIMBABWE—DETENTION, WITHOUT CHARGE, OF CANADIAN CITIZEN

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for External Relations. Has Canadian citizen Dick Laban been held in a Zimbabwe jail for several months without even a formal charge being laid? What is the Department doing to ensure that Mr. Laban is dealt with in accordance with fundamental justice in a country that does not have a very enviable human rights record?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, we are aware of Mr. Laban's case. As the Hon. Member said, he is being held in Zimbabwe. He is being visited regularly by an officer from our High Commission. He is also visited by his family and friends who bring him books and food. He is in good health, is well treated, and has retained a lawyer. He is accused of having provided information to South Africa's intelligence service in 1984. A hearing was scheduled for December 8, and we are now waiting for news from our High Commission.

HEALTH

TOXIC MUSSELS—PLAN OF ACTION—REPRESENTATIONS REPORTEDLY MADE TO ONTARIO GOVERNMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Throughout the situation dealing with the toxic mussels, the Minister today has insisted that last Friday he had "a very clear plan of action" to deal with the over-all ban.

If he had this very clear plan of action, can he explain why, after he had announced a ban on all shellfish from Atlantic Canada, his own officials were in touch with the Government of Ontario in an attempt to convince it to lift a ban on mussels outside of P.E.I. and the Magdalen Islands? Can he explain why, in his clear plan of action, his own officials were trying to convince the Ontario Government to lift its own ban?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, again the Hon. Member puts together positions, allegations which are not factual and which I did not say.

• (1500)

On Friday I put forward a ban. On the weekend of Saturday and Sunday the operation centre was put together. The plan that I put forward in the House today was developed during those days and the subsequent days this week.

For the Hon. Member to say that the plan was in place on Friday, again, as she has done day after day, it is simply false, and she insists on it, and she knows it, and she persists in it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What I am saying to her if in fact she checks the Ontario records, when she checks the Ontario records when the information went out on December 1 to the Ontario Health Ministry on that day, which is then the job of the Ontario Health Ministry to put that information forward into all health units, Ontario didn't do it, and it was my officials in the next days in Health Protection Branch who literally took those alerts and went into the Ontario units of health, because Ontario hadn't done it. For her to put those kinds of details forward and try and wrap them around in some kind of semblance of truth has gone too far.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ONTARIO BAN—MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that when two people have died it is not the arena for applause.

I would like to ask the Minister to give us a very specific answer to a very specific question. Last Friday morning in the House he stated that within three minutes he had issued an all-out alert on all shellfish in Atlantic Canada. Subsequent to that, his own officials in his own Department were in touch with officials from the Ministry of Health in Ontario trying to tell them it was okay to lift a wider ban on mussels outside of the mussels in P.E.I. and the Magdalen Islands.

I would like to ask the Minister how he can claim in the House today that he had a very clear plan of action last Friday, when on the one hand he was issuing an all-out ban on all shellfish, and on the other hand his own officials were trying to tell Ontario to lift their ban?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has again stated the allegations as if they were fact.

Ms. Copps: They are fact.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): They are not fact.

Ms. Copps: They are absolute fact.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): They are not fact. What I said on the Friday was the ban. I did not say that there was a clear plan in place on Friday. For the Member to persist on that time after time is simply false, it's wrong, and it shouldn't be done in this House.

TRADE

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. His Minister has risen in the House and stated that the federal Government can sign treaties without the consent of the provinces.

Why is it that every year that I have gone to the International Labour Organization, the Canadian Government, whether it was the previous Liberal or the present Conservative Government, has always taken the position that it cannot sign treaties on the environment, on human rights, on women workers, and on occupational health and safety, because these are the jurisdiction of the provinces?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, for just about 45 minutes I have been sitting here expecting the NDP or the Liberals to ask me a question about agriculture.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, it was either that, or the statement this morning by the Chairman of General Motors in Oshawa saying that the Free Trade Agreement is a great deal for Oshawa, a great deal for Ontario and the automotive industry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: What do I get? The NDP wants a legal opinion.

The Leader of the NDP has just heard from the distinguished Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada one of the finest legal opinions that this House will hear in a long time.

ILO COVENANTS—LEGAL POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): The Minister should be nervous after that endorsation by the Prime Minister considering past history.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Prime Minister is always right.

Mr. Murphy: We do want our Government to be saying the same thing all across this land and at international conferences.

What is the position of this Government? Does it have a right to implement International Labour Organization covenants, which it has always stated that it has not the right to do? Will it reverse its case time after time whenever it is convenient? What is the legal position of this Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, is the socialist Party arguing that the federal Parliament and the Government of Canada have the right to conclude international treaties, but are dispossessed of any rights in respect of their implementation? If my hon. friend is saying that, I want to tell him on behalf of Canadians—

Mr. Murphy: That is what your Government has been saying.

Mr. Broadbent: That is what you have been saying in Geneva.

Mr. Mulroney: —and on behalf of this Government, and on behalf of the people in the Parliament of Canada that this Government and this Parliament speak for Canada, all Canada. This is what we have done, and this is what we will do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: In view of the time, I should advise that the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell has indicated his co-operation in asking a single question, which will be followed by a question from the Hon. Member for Pembina.

Mr. Crosbie: One too many.

CANADA LANDS COMPANY

SECURITY SURVEILLANCE CONTRACT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I will ignore that remark from the Minister of Transport, and I will ask a question of the Minister of Public Works. It concerns the management and disposition of property by the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel, and I know that this is embarrassing for the Government.

Yesterday, in answer to my question concerning the deficiencies in a report of an internal audit by Louise St. Laurent, the Minister stated that there was no wrongdoing—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell has the floor, and he is entitled to the usual courtesies.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister stated that there was no wrongdoing at Mirabel, and that everything at the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel was clean.

Does this mean that the Minister personally approves of a beer parlour receiving an untendered contract to do security surveillance of vacant lots at a cost of $42,000? Is this the Government's position?

If so, I would like to tell the Minister that it is small wonder that the people of Canada do not think much of the competence of this Government to run the affairs of the country.

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I refer to the report of the Auditor General who made no adverse comment about any wrongdoing at Mirabel.

Let me refer to a portion of the report of the special audit division of Public Works Canada which states the following:

> To achieve its mandate the new management of the Corporation followed management practices and controls examined during this review. In the areas of Land Sales and Agricultural Renewal a structured and controlled process was put in place in accordance with Treasury Board terms and conditions and regularly monitored by Central Agencies. The Corporation complied with the approved process and produced complete documentation in support of decisions and approvals.

I think that says it all, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

SPECIAL GRAINS PROGRAM—TIMING OF IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Yesterday a very positive announcement was made with regard to the Special Grains Program. When will that Special Grains Program come into effect?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his surprise question. Yesterday I was honoured on behalf of the Government of Canada to announce a deficiency payment to grains producers in Canada of $1.1 billion, the largest—

• (1510)

Mr. Mulroney: In excess of some $800 million will be in the pockets of farmers by March 31, 1988. Among other things, a major series of initiatives was announced to render more secure the status of the Canadian farm, the family farm, and the plight of the Canadian farmer in a multitude of ways.

We announced initiatives yesterday which we think put the proper spotlight and the proper degree of attention on all Canadian farmers who do so much for the country.

I am proud to say that in the three years since I have been Prime Minister and this Government has been here, direct aid to Canadian agriculture has increased by 400 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

TRADE

TABLING OF MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING—SOFTWOOD LUMBER

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure today to table, in both official languages, the Memorandum of Understanding on Softwood Lumber, pursuant to Standing Order 67(2).

SOFTWOOD LUMBER

15 PER CENT EXPORT CHARGE EXEMPTION

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to report that we have successfully renegotiated the Memorandum of Understanding on Softwood Lumber which was concluded a year ago with the United States. As a result, all softwood lumber products milled in five provinces—British Columbia, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and Newfoundland, and representing close to 75 per cent of Canada's softwood lumber exports to the U.S.—will be exempt from the 15 per cent export charge.

Discussions are continuing with the U.S. on the value of Quebec replacement measures, and I am optimistic that we will be in a position to announce shortly a reduction in the export charge for softwood lumber milled in Quebec.

The Government of Saskatchewan has recently advised me of that province's interest in seeing the export charge eliminated for Saskatchewan producers on the basis of changes in Saskatchewan forest management policies.

Clearly we are well on the way to achieving the objectives which we set for ourselves a year ago to move away from this export charge.

Our key objectives in signing the Memorandum of Understanding last year were to retain in Canada revenues which would otherwise have gone into the U.S. Treasury and to protect the ability of the provinces to manage their resource. That is an important consideration.

Faced with the prospect of a countervailing duty imposed by the U.S., nine out of ten provinces and the IWA, the international woodworkers' union, fully supported the Government's decision to seek a negotiated solution to the dispute with the U.S. over softwood lumber.

As a result of that agreement, approximately $335 million has already been remitted to the provinces. The provinces have been able to proceed with planned changes in forest management policies which would have been, for all practical purposes, precluded if the U.S. had imposed a punitive countervailing duty. I have today reminded the Governments of Ontario, Manitoba, and Alberta that we are prepared, as soon as each province is ready, to discuss with the U.S. the value of their replacement measures.

We were criticized for our decision to seek a negotiated solution to this dispute, and there were dire predictions from our critics that the export charge would result in shutdowns and lay-offs in the industry. Our critics were wrong.

A study issued November 20, 1987 by Dough Smyth of the IWA-Canada provides an authoritative assessment of the impact of the export charge on employment in the Canadian lumber industry. This study concludes:

> The massive job losses which many Canadian observers believed would surely result from the imposition of the 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber shipments to the United States during 1987 simply have not occurred.

Altogether 600 new jobs were added in British Columbia alone between January and September, 1987, according to the union's report.

The IWA study also shows that during the first eight months of 1987 Canadian lumber production exceeded comparable 1986 output by more than 5 per cent. After noting that the few sawmill closures announced throughout Canada during 1987 were caused by a number of factors, the study concludes:

> In no instance that we know of can the export tax be directly blamed as the sole cause of the closure.

Over all the study concludes:

> It is clear, therefore, that the dire predictions of declining profits, production cutbacks and sawmill job losses ranging from 5,000 to 20,000 positions during 1987 have simply not come to pass.

The main elements of the agreement which I am tabling today are as follows. First, the value of B.C. replacement measures constitute full replacement of the export charge on softwood lumber products milled in B.C. and exported to the U.S. after November 30, 1987. Termination of the export charge for lumber milled in British Columbia eliminates the unfair burden on lumber remanufacturers in that province. B.C. will be able to rebate to remanufacturers any export charge paid with respect to softwood lumber products shipped after October 31.

Second, effective January 1, 1988, all softwood lumber products milled in the four Atlantic provinces will be exempt from the export charge.

Third, lumber produced in Canada from logs harvested in the U.S. will also be exempt from the export charge subject to a ceiling of 365 million board feet per year. This will be of particular benefit to a number of Quebec mills close to the U.S. border. That ceiling is roughly the amount of the volume of trade at the present time.

Fourth, additional further manufactured products will be exempted from the export charge with respect to the value added. This will be of particular benefit to mills in Alberta, Ontario, and Quebec.

Finally, all individual company exclusions will be terminated. As a result, the 20 companies which have enjoyed the benefits of this exclusion over the past year will now be competing in the U.S. market on the same basis as other softwood lumber producers in their respective provinces. As a practical matter, for most of the companies affected, the loss of their exclusion will be offset wholly or in part by the concessions we have gained.

In conclusion, I want to acknowledge the significant investment of time and effort on the part of my colleague, the Hon. Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew), and the Canadian Council of Forest Ministers concerning provincial replacement measures. Finally, I would like to make particular mention of the very close and effective working relationship with the Governments of British Columbia and Quebec during all the negotiations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, time after time in the House the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) has shown a remarkable facility of taking a disaster and describing it as a victory.

The fact of the matter is that the announcement today should bring absolutely no joy to the hearts of Canadians, because what she is not announcing in the elimination of an export tax is the application of a major new program of stumpage fees which will have significant negative consequences for the entire lumber industry, not just the softwood industry.

When the legislative committee on Bill C-37 held its hearings, the problem of replacing an export tax with a stumpage fee was made very clear. Our there in the forests in the interior of British Columbia and other places, it is impossible to distinguish which tree is going to be softwood lumber and which one is going to be used for other wood products such pulp and paper. There was no formula or equation announced in the Minister's statement to show that that is indeed the case. We have the problem that in the softwood lumber field itself there will be a new cost to Canadian consumers.

Mr. Axworthy: All Canadian consumers will now be paying higher lumber prices. That is consequence number one. All Canadian softwood lumber products in the building industry will now be higher priced. As we saw previously in the committee, that can add anywhere from $500 to $700 per house in new construction in this country.

Second, we will now, because of the stumpage fee, be adding additional costs to all our other exports, not just U.S. related exports, but all our other lumber related exports going to other countries. You cannot say that this tree is going to the United States and that one is going to Europe. The stumpage fee has across the board application and, therefore, we will be in a position where our own exports will be at a higher cost and in a less competitive position with others in the softwood lumber area.

Third, will the new stumpage formulae being brought in by the provinces apply only to those stands of timber used for softwood lumber or will they be applying to all wood products? There is no clarification in the Minister's statement to determine whether in fact the negotiation has resulted in some kind of complicated formula that will allow a distinction to be made between various kinds of lumber products. If that is the case, then the inflationary consequences, the cost-push consequences, will be enormous for the entire lumber industry.

When the Minister, in an attempt to dissemble in this House, says that we are eliminating the export tax, she does not provide any information on the other side of the equation about the additional cost to Canadian consumers, additional costs to our export markets and potentially additional costs to all other lumber products as a result of the raise in stumpage fees.

The Minister in her statement suggests that the imposition of the export tax in its original form and now the stumpage fee will have absolutely no impact on the softwood lumber industry. It is a mere irrelevant, small item that has no consequence whatever. She points to the fact that in the last six or seven months since the passage of the Act the market prices have stayed strong and employment up. There is no argument with that. But the Minister does not deal with the fact that the softwood lumber industry is a cyclical industry. It goes through boom and bust times.

What was clear in the evidence presented before the standing committee dealing with this matter was that it may be possible for the lumber industry to pass on these additional costs to consumers when there is strong market demand. But when that market turns down, as historically it will, because it has every time in the past, then the additional $700 million, $800 million, $900 million—close to a billion dollars—in additional costs imposed will provide an enormous drain on the cash flow of the industry and put many companies in a position where they will no longer be able to operate.

Let me give you an example of the changes already occurring as a consequence of the new regime that has been brought in as a result of the Government's action.

In an article dated October 17 in The Vancouver Sun various spokespersons for the British Columbia interior lumber industry point out that these are the changes in cost. If you combine the additional stumpage fee increases and the cancellation of the reforestation subsidies, which are not allowed as a result of the Memorandum of Agreement signed with the Americans, the cost of production which used to average around $5 a cubic metre, will now be in the range of anywhere from $50 to $80 a cubic metre. In Prince George the cost was $4 a cubic metre. It is now $80.75 a cubic metre. That is an incredible increase for the entire production of that major lumber producing area. Let us take a look at Cranbrook. Dealing in spruce the price goes from $5 to $50. In northern British Columbia, dealing in spruce, the price goes from $10 to $125 a cubic metre in additional input costs in that lumber area.

If the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) and her colleagues, especially her colleagues from British Columbia, are attempting to say that the lumber industry can absorb those kinds of costs in perpetuity, then they are whistling through their proverbial hats. When the market turns down they are condemning the industry to an additional cost of $10 to a $125 a cubic metre. That will be the death-knell for many a softwood lumber producer in that region. Will that change occur?

There is a kind of economic convulsion taking place in the United States today. All of a sudden the Americans are going through a major re-organization of their economic system which could be the foretaste of major chaos and which could bring major destruction to the lumber industry.

There is one other point concerning the substance of the Minister's statement. She says, as if this is a great achievement, that further manufactured products will be exempted. Manufactured products were never supposed to be in the agreement in the first place. They were caught there and they have been there for a whole year. All of a sudden the Government is making this announcement as though it were a great big deal, that products have been exempted.

This Memorandum of Agreement set in motion a very dangerous precedent. For the first time, Canada is agreeing that the kinds of programs we have in our resource industries are considered to be unfair trade practices. We have now accepted that in principle and that principle is becoming entrenched in the proposed trade agreement under Sections 408 and 409. All our resource industries will be prevented from applying the kinds of direct support and assistance necessary to keep many of them healthy.

This Memorandum of Agreement is only one further step against the resource industries of Canada perpetrated by this Government in the last few years.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, in listening to the Hon. Minister's statement on the lifting of the softwood lumber export tax in certain circumstances I was reminded of the story of the person who was observed to be hitting his head against a brick wall. When asked why he was doing such a thing he replied, because it feels so good when you stop.

I have to challenge the statement by the Minister that there have been no lay-offs resulting from the application of a year's duration of the softwood lumber export tax. The fact is—and the Minister's Parliamentary Secretary in this House had a list—that there have been several lay-offs and closures both of a permanent and temporary nature, and in all cases the imposition of the softwood lumber export tax was cited as a contributory factor; in most cases major, in some cases minor. I have also heard personally about this from operators of some mills. Several producers have closed.

It is true, nevertheless, that there has been an upturn in some sections of the industry and in some parts of the country. That is a reflection not of any inherent worth of this measure but simply of the cyclical upturn in the softwood lumber industry and the strong domestic market. Although we have been accused of being doomsayers, none of us was hoping for unemployment to result. Fortunately, it has enabled the industry in many parts of the nation to ride through the imposition of this measure. That is a reflection, as I said, of the cyclical nature of the industry. Just as the boom must end, so surely the downturn will unfortunately begin and detract many of those who have had to pay this tax.

The announcement is welcome in the Maritimes—

—And would also be welcome for mussels that are near the border between the United States and the Province of Quebec.

[English]

But let us not be deceived. The impact in the Province of British Columbia of this measure has been cataclysmic. Industry sources estimate up to a 600 per cent increase in management and cutting costs as a result of the softwood lumber export tax, because of the measures introduced to replace that tax and to satisfy the American industry lobby. The Council of Forest Industries recognizes a 250 per cent forest-wide cost increase in wood acquisition.

The Hon. Minister and the Premier of British Columbia are playing whip-saw with this industry. Their approach failed. They got into a blind auction with the Americans. Their first offer on this tax was 10 per cent and their final offer was 15 per cent. It is not only a failure but essentially a cession of sovereignty within the context of Canada's independence.

The Government failed to consult adequately with the industry and, completely sub rosa, ceded a constitutional power from the provinces to the U.S. Trade Department.

A dangerous precedent, Mr. Speaker, and the present Memorandum of Understanding does nothing to deny this concession.

[English]

In the United States, that tax was seen as part of the softening up process, the process widely remarked on by American commentators, whereby the United States established its expectation and its intention of hegemony in the free trade agreement. A sophisticated lobby was able to manipulate public and legislative opinion, not only within the United States but within Canada, to the ultimate advantage of the American economy.

Those fee increases which have now been introduced to justify the removal of the softwood lumber export tax will of course affect the competitiveness and prices of all lumber products to all Canadians. Let us not be deceived into believing that softwood lumber is the only component of the product mix the bounty of our forests yields us. From the railway tie to the toothpick, all markets will be affected. All Canadian consumers will pay higher prices because of these ill-counselled, hasty and peremptory measures the Government is now withdrawing.

American sales into the Canadian market have had their effect and may continue to have their effect. The 25 per cent of our industry that is still affected will, as will the sectors that are now unaffected, continue to feel the damage of the Minister's concessionary and ill-prepared negotiating approach in this agreement as in the other agreement.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS RETURNS ACT

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-91, an Act to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, I have the honour to present the Bill to the House without amendment.

Introduction of Bills

EXCISE TAX ACT

Hon. Tom Hockin (for Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-101, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the two opposition Parties for their courtesy. There have been discussions and I think you would find that there would be unanimous consent in the House to send the Bill to Committee of the Whole House on the understanding that it would be dealt with as the first order of Government business. There is also an understanding among the Parties that the item would be completed in all stages by 4.30 this afternoon.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, what the government House Leader just said does reflect the understanding of our Party on the matter. I would like to make a suggestion. If by some chance we complete consideration of the Bill through all stages before 4.30 and the person who had the floor in debate on the trade motion, the official spokesman for the NDP, is not present, perhaps we could suspend the sitting of the House until the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is ready to give his statement on tax reform at 4.30.

Mr. Lewis: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, indeed there have been discussions between the Parties. However, recognizing the contents of the Bill before us and the fact that it does a number of things other than simply extend the date for the fuel tax exemption, but in fact results in some increases, I suspect that there will be adequate debate to fill the time until 4.30.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that there is agreement with the suggestion put forward by the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) and it will be so ordered. I also take it that if the Bill should happen to be completed before 4.30, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) would have no objection to the Chair adjourning until 4.30 to go along with the suggestion which has been extended as a matter of courtesy by the other two House Leaders to his own Party.

WESTERN ARCTIC (INUVIALUIT) CLAIMS SETTLEMENT ACT

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-102, an Act to amend the Western Arctic (Inuvialuit) Claims Settlement Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADA PORTS CORPORATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. André Harvey (Chicoutimi) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-276, an Act to amend the Canada Ports Corporation Act (port Saguenay de Ville de la Baie).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Harvey: Mr. Speaker, thank you for giving me this opportunity to table the Bill to amend the Canada Ports Corporation Act. The purpose of this Bill is simply to change the name of the port of Chicoutimi to port Saguenay de Ville de la Baie.

Mr. Speaker, this name change reflects a regional need, and I am therefore particularly pleased to table this Bill this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.)

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PETITIONS

TRANSPORT OF PLUTONIUM OVER NORTHERN CANADA

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present petitions which have been signed by residents of Whitehorse, Elsa, Mayo, and Dawson City, Yukon, who wish to register their extreme concern, based on the potential environmental hazards and threat to security and safety not only of northern Canadians but of all Canadians, with the proposed plutonium flights over the North.

These petitioners call upon the Government of Canada to say no to these flights, in the interests not only of northern Canadians but of all Canadians.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition from a number of residents of Canada who are concerned that the recent agreement negotiated between the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States has no mandate in the last election or since from the Canadian people and will seriously erode and undermine the sovereignty of Canada and hinder Canada in planning and determining its own economic future. They believe that it fails to win for Canada the secure access to the United States market which was promised as the key objective and, in fact, endangers hundreds of thousands of jobs.

Therefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED TAX REFORM

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present. The first is from citizens of the City of Thunder Bay who note that the federal Government's White Paper calls for changes to the taxation structure of Canada. The proposals do not, however, change an already unfair tax structure for average Canadian families; those wealthy Canadians earning over $100,000 a year who do not pay their fair share will in fact receive a tax cut under the proposal, and 60,000 profitable corporations are likely to pay no income tax at all.

The petitioners protest the failure to restore full indexation to the personal tax system and call upon Parliament to reject these tax changes and to restore full indexation to the personal tax system.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the second petition is also from residents of the City of Thunder

Bay who point out that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States.

They say that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised, in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations, that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised but that in fact the agreement negotiated threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control effectively foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, and to equalize opportunities between the regions.

They say that this agreement would in fact deny Canadians the policy freedom to determine our own economic future.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege, honour, and responsibility to present a petition signed by residents of R.R. 1, Blenheim; R.R. 1, Chatham; Windsor, and Timmins, Ontario. These petitioners are putting forward the proposition that the Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States.

They further point out that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised, in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations, that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised.

In view of the fact that the proposed trade agreement not only denies Canadians the secure access to U.S. markets which was the key objective in these negotiations, but indeed threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs, these petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions here from a number of Canadians concerned about the trade arrangement that has been made between the Government and the United States.

They point out that the Government had no mandate for such, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised but that the trade agreement threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty, and that it not only denies Canadians secure access to the U.S. market which was the key objective in these negotiations but threatens the loss of hundreds and thousands of Canadian jobs.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I, like my colleagues, have a petition from a number of residents of Canada who have called upon Parliament assembled, indicating that in their view the Conservative Party has no mandate to conclude a free trade agreement, that such an agreement as has been signed threatens elements of Canadian control over our destiny, denies Canada the ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States, and threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

In addition, there is not—

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt when any Member is presenting a petition. However, the Hon. Member will know, as will all Hon. Members, that the presentation of a petition can be accompanied by words describing the petition and from where it comes, but I think the Hon. Member is getting well into the field of argument now. I will have an application from someone wanting to comment and that will take up a lot of time. I would ask the Hon. Member to close off his remarks.

Mr. Langdon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I was quoting from the petition, which concludes with a call from the petitioners for Parliament to dissolve to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement. This petition has been signed by people from Nipigon, Red Rock and Thunder Bay as well as from other parts of northern Ontario.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I, too have a petition to present. It is signed by people from all across the Province of Ontario; from Fort Francis and Kenora in the northwest, to Welland, Burlington, Hamilton and Guelph in the south. It is signed as well by people from Geraldton, Red Lake, Atikokan, and Thunder Bay.

These petitioners call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege and responsibility to file a petition signed by people from Thunder Bay, Dorion, and Nipigon.

These people say that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised, and that the trade agreement negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control effectively foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, and to equalize opportunities between the regions.

Therefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, again I have the honour to present a petition signed by Canadians who express their concern with the Government's trade agreement.

• (1550)

They believe it would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and would undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

They also believe that the proposed trade agreement not only denies Canadians secure access to the U.S. market, which was the key objective in these negotiations, but also threatens the loss of hundreds and thousands of Canadian jobs.

Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of westerners who indicate that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised.

They believe that the trade agreement negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, and to equalize opportunity between the regions.

Therefore, they call upon Parliament to dissolve now and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Pursuant to Standing Order 106, I welcome this opportunity to table in the House a petition asking the federal Government to refrain from putting a tax on food. Mr. Speaker, I realize that the Government has finally decided to take the advice of the Official Opposition and refrain from imposing this tax. And I also want to take this opportunity to mention that 385 petitioners were also instrumental in persuading the Government not to take such a regressive measure.

REQUEST FOR NECESSARY GOVERNMENT ACTION TO INCREASE HOUSING FOR THE NEEDY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition which informs us that over 100,000 people are homeless and asks Parliament to act now to take the necessary measures so that Canadians in substandard housing will be given adequate accommodation. This petition is signed by 105 petitioners.

SITUATION IN HAITI—DEMANDS OF HAITIAN COMMUNITY

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I present a petition on behalf of 4,000-odd people of Canada's Haitian community. Your petitioners humbly request:

That the régime of General Namphy in Haiti be denounced because it is made up of former Duvalier supporters, some of whom are now on trial;

That the Canadian Parliament firmly denounce the so-called democratic approach of this régime since it took over;

That Canadian assistance, earmarked mostly for salaries paid to Canadian volunteers and for project administration expenditures, be suspended until such time as the interim electoral council, whose members have been dismissed by General Namphy, has been reinstated; and

That the Prime Minister urge the United Nations to launch an inquiry into the repeated breaches against human and democratic rights which were witnessed on November 29 and the following days and which are still going on.

The petition of the Haitian people will continue to circulate and gather public support until the disappearance of the Haiti dictatorship and the end of the massacre of these people.

EXCISE TAX ACT

Hon. Tom Hockin (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-101, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to the Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have some very brief comments to make pursuant to the agreement the House Leaders made earlier this day with regard to this Bill. I would like to make a few comments, however brief, because it is an important Bill.

The main purpose of this Bill is to extend the fuel tax rebate program for primary producers for two years to December 31, 1989. The Bill will also implement other proposals relating to the excise taxes on motive fuels announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his Budget Speech on February 18, 1987. These include the one-cent per litre increase in the excise taxes on motive fuels and an equivalent increase in the fuel tax rebates payable to primary producers to offset the tax increase.

[Translation]

The fuel tax rebate program provides for a refund of taxes paid by primary producers on fuel bought for their production operations. Farmers get a full refund of the federal and excise taxes they pay on this kind of fuel. Federal sales taxes are paid back to other primary producers—fishermen, forest resources operators, hunters and trappers, to name some. In addition, all primary producers are also eligible for a 1.5-cent-a-litre refund of excise taxes on motive fuels.

[English]

The program was introduced in the fall of 1984 in response to financial difficulties being experienced by primary producers. We remember that time. It is a temporary program that was designed to provide short-term assistance. The program expires on December 31 of this year.

The economic situation has improved for many of our primary producers since this program was introduced. The farming sector, however, continues to experience very serious difficulty. This was, of course, recognized by the announcements made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) yesterday. Farmers in the grains and oilseeds sectors have been hit particularly hard in recent years. The devastating effects of the international subsidy war make additional assistance imperative. All of us who follow the subsidy war know that this is continuing from our major trading competitors.

In response to this serious problem, and to provide additional assistance to all primary producers, the Prime Minister announced yesterday at the Agricultural Outlook Conference that the fuel tax rebate program would be extended to December 31, 1989. This extension will provide $200 million each year to the farming sector, $110 million of that to grain farmers as part of the grains assistance program. The total benefit from the two-year extension of this particular program for all primary producers will be $500 million.

This initiative also responds to the recommendation of the Standing Committee on Agriculture that the fuel tax rebate program be extended.

The one-cent per litre increase in the excise taxes on motive fuels was part of a limited number of tax increases announced in the February Budget to maintain an acceptable rate of progress towards the Government's medium-term deficit reduction goals, which are proceeding on course. The fuel tax rebates to farmers and other primary producers are being increased by an equivalent amount. Since the rebates to farmers are currently equal to the taxes imposed, it would be inappropriate to propose any further increases in the level of these rebates without implementing the tax increases on which the higher rebates are based.

This program is an expenditure program. No payments can be made in respect of fuels purchased in 1988 until after the legislation receives Royal Assent. In order to ensure that rebates can continue to be paid to farmers and other primary producers in respect of fuels purchased after December 31, 1987, it is imperative that this legislation receive Royal Assent before the end of this year.

I am certain that Hon. Members appreciate the importance of this program. The time remaining is very short and I ask their assistance in giving quick consideration to this Bill. This will ensure that primary producers and, in particular, Canadian farmers, will continue to receive fuel tax rebates in respect of fuels purchased in the new year.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with a Bill intended to extend the rebate program for groups such as farmers, loggers, fishermen, miners, hunters and trappers for two years, to December 31, 1989. However, that is only one part of the Bill.

The other part of the Bill is to increase the rates of excise tax on gasoline, aviation gasoline, diesel fuel and aviation fuel by one cent per litre, effective last February 19, 1987, the date of the last budget. This would bring about a total annual increase in revenue from this excise tax of approximately $450 million.

The net increase in revenue to the federal treasury as a result of this legislation will be $200 million. That is $450 million produced by this increase in excise tax, less the $250 million for the fuel tax rebate. In other words, the Government is asking us to agree to an increase in excise tax not simply to equal the additional cost of extending the rebate program for another two years, but to also carry out what amounts to a hidden and unjustified tax grab from the Canadian people of another $200 million.

The position of our Party is certainly to support the measures to extend the fuel tax rebate program for farmers, loggers, fishermen, miners, hunters and trappers to December 31, 1989, but I do not see how Canadians would expect us to support the one-cent increase in gasoline excise taxes, because this would certainly further hit the hard-pressed Canadian taxpayer, not simply to match the additional cost of the rebate, but to produce another $200 million for the federal treasury.

This additional tax grab has negative effects on many sectors of the economy. Furthermore, this measure cannot be judged in isolation. One must also examine the other increases in indirect taxes introduced by the Conservative Government.

Let us consider the Conservative record when it comes to increases in indirect taxes, that is to say, sales and excise taxes. First, let us look at gasoline and associated products. There was the first increase of two cents per litre on gas, effective September, 1985, with an annual cost of $900 million. There was a second increase of one cent per litre on gasoline, effective January, 1987, with an annual cost of $450 million. There was a third increase of one cent per litre on gasoline effective February, 1987, with an annual cost of $450 million. There is equalization of sales tax on unleaded and leaded gas, effective 1987, with an annual cost of $30 million.

There are other increases in sales taxes. There was the first increase of one per cent in sales tax in 1984, with an annual cost of $1 billion. There was a second increase of one per cent in sales tax, effective January 1, 1986, for another annual cost of $1 billion. There was a third increase of one per cent in sales tax, effective April 1, 1986, for a further annual cost of $1 billion.

There was the extension of the sales tax on candy, soft drinks and even pet food, which went into effect in 1985, for an annual cost of $400 million. There was the extension of sales tax on snack foods, coming into effect in 1987, for a further annual cost of $60 million. There is the increase in air transport tax, coming into effect in 1987, for an annual cost of $45 million.

There is the proposed 10 per cent tax on all long distance calls and business telephones, and the increase in cable television tax, coming into effect in 1988, for a further annual cost of $945 million. There is the proposed increase in sales tax on paint, wallpaper and toys, coming into effect in 1988, for an annual cost of $370 million.

I have added this up quickly, and it means that the Conservative Government has imposed an additional tax burden of some $6.65 billion in the few short years since it came into office.

Furthermore, we are talking about an annual increase. This burden goes on and on, on the shoulders of the hard-pressed Canadian taxpayer, especially the lower income taxpayer who bears the heaviest burden of sales and excise taxes.

These are unfair, regressive taxes that do not hurt the wealthy friends of the Conservative Party but particularly hurt middle and lower income Canadians.

These increases are only part of the additional burden placed on ordinary Canadians by this heartless Conservative Government. There are also increases in personal income taxes which have added hundreds of dollars and more to the annual tax burden of middle and lower income Canadians.

Later today the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will give a statement indicating the Government's final answer to what it laughingly calls tax reform. In that regard, we will find that any reductions that the Government will promise will do nothing more than give back some of the hundreds of millions of dollars improperly taken out of the pockets of middle and lower income Canadians since it came into office. It will not be giving back all of what it has taken. It will not even restore Canadians to where they were in 1984.

While I certainly support the extension of the rebate for farmers, fishermen and the other groups which I have mentioned, we must put on the record what is really happening here. It is not just an extension of the rebate, it is also another hidden tax grab, added to the tax grab of billions of dollars imposed on middle and lower income Canadians in the short years since the Tory Government came into office. I want to put this on the record so that Canadians will very much remember what the Tory Government has done to their pocketbooks when they come to vote. I am sure it will not be long before they have the opportunity to vote and I am sure they will turn out of office the heartless Conservative Government.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is always somewhat dangerous to accept a Bill for passage through all stages without seeing the text of the Bill. This is a Bill where there is that danger.

Bill C-101 does two things. It extends the rebate to people who are primary producers across the country from December 31, 1987 for the next two years. It also increases the tax on fuel by one cent per litre on February 19, 1987. In fact, we have been paying that for some time. It is something to consider that without too much trouble we can collect from the people of the country without passing a Bill in Parliament, but we cannot pay out to the people of the country without passing a Bill. Therefore, at the eleventh hour, we are asked to pass a Bill, which it is necessary to pass, because without it the primary producers who purchase fuel after January 1, 1988 would not be able to get part of the rebate for which they are being considered. Consequently, it is a little dangerous to tell the Government that we will pass something, because what we get in the end is not necessarily what we are told we will get.

Since February 19, 1987 all people across the country have been paying an extra cent per litre on fuel. That is authorized or ratified by this particular Bill. Since that is already in place, it behooves us to pass this Bill, rather than to stop it from going through quickly. But I do point out the danger of accepting a Bill without having the text in its entirety.

In the presentation made yesterday by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) before the Agricultural Outlook Conference, we were told that this rebate would be 9 cents per litre for gasoline, and 7.5 cents per litre for diesel fuel. This is a welcome amount, particularly for the farmers and, I am sure, for the hunters, the loggers, the trappers, and the fishermen.

It is interesting to note that this is part of an agricultural package which is a little confusing. The $1.1 billion going into the special grains payments and deficiency payments is recognized and appreciated. It is also recognized that in a couple of areas the Government did bite the bullet and pay back, or at least cut off the responsibility for the Western Grain Stabilization fund. That was $750 million that it would eventually find itself picking up, and it may as well be done now.

The other points were spread over two or three years, and consequently had to be divided by two or three. The net result is a rather confusing suggestion that the farmers were getting a lot more in this package than they will get in the next fiscal year. If you read the headlines, Mr. Speaker, you will see how confusing it was. No two reporters picked out the same things. Consequently there is a variety of reports on what was actually proposed yesterday by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture for farmers.

I appreciate the fact that it is worthwhile to pass quickly a Bill which allows for the increase of taxes and the ability for farmers and other primary producers to collect the rebate of 4 cents and 3 cents per litre on the fuel that they buy. We have to recognize that the Government is not rebating the entire amount of excise tax. If one looks at the Bill carefully, it will be found that the present tax on gasoline will be 5 cents per litre, and the tax on diesel will be 4 cents per litre. What we are being told is that the Government will rebate 4 cents per litre in 1989, and 3 cents per litre in 1988.

In order to have this rebate program in place on January 1, 1988, we have agreed to allow this Bill to go through the House today.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments. Because it is Christmas, it might be appropriate to refer to The Bible where it states, "The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away". It goes on to say, "Blessed be the name of the Lord". In this case the Government is giving and the Government is taking away. Canadians, particularly those who live in northern and rural areas will say, "cursed be the name of the Government", because, as my colleague from Windsor has pointed out, the Bill gives to primary producers, but it certainly takes away more than it gives. It extends the tax rebate for two years to farmers, loggers, fishermen, miners, hunters, and trappers, and it puts into their pockets $250 million. But it will take out of the pockets of Canadians generally $450 million in the rates of excise tax on gasoline, aviation fuel and gas, and diesel fuel. That will be increased by 1 per cent.

The net effect is that although farmers and fishermen and primary producers, many of whom live in northern and rural areas, will pay less for the gasoline that they use in their work, they will pay more for everything else. For example, a placer miner in the Yukon has to fly in and out. He has to fly on an aircraft, and fuel is going up. Moreover, the Government still has a tax that he has to pay at the airport, but I will not get into that. Everything that the miner buys has to come in by air. The cost of that transportation is going up. The cost to the man who produces the tools that the miner uses, and the nets, the boats, and the engines that the fishermen use, will all go up because the fuel that is used by industry will be increased in price.

On the one hand, while it appears that the Government has made a magnanimous gesture toward primary producers, that is, farmers, loggers, fishermen, and so on, particularly those people who live in northern, rural, and remote parts, because they have to pay more for their materials and the transportation of those materials they will be in a net deficit position.

I could go on and talk particularly about fishermen who have not been helped by the actions the Government has taken. It is important to point out in the context of this debate that although on the surface this appears to be a gesture aimed at improving the lot of farmers and fishermen, there is no net gain. As a matter of fact, there is a net loss on the part of those primary producers.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I would like to follow up on the remarks made by my hon. colleagues. This particular Bill reminds me of many of the Bills that we have been faced with in this House that say one thing and basically do another. Bill C-101 is the extension of a fuel tax rebate program that was first introduced in October, 1984. This rebate program is to be extended for farmers, loggers, fishermen, miners, hunters, and trappers to December 31, 1989. It is a rebate to primary producers for an additional two years. It looks and sounds good, but it will affect only one part of the day in the life of a farmer, logger, fisherman, miner, hunter, or trapper.

The rebate of the excise tax imposed on gasoline and diesel fuels sold to or imported by these various sectors for purchases between January 1, 1987 to December 31, 1987 will be 3 cents per litre, and for purchases between January 1, 1988 to December 31, 1989, it will be cents per litre. The total annual cost of the rebate program is estimated to be $250 million. This sounds very kind, very generous, and very wonderful. I am sure that government Members will be thrilled with themselves.

On the other hand, why does the Government not look at the second part of the Bill? The increase in tax on fuel of one cent per litre is already in effect. look at the impact of that tax on the daily lives of everyone, and government Members might not be so quick to vaunt and be so proud of what it has undertaken to do.

I see the Hon. Minister giggling and laughing across the way. It is no laughing matter for the person who pays for it out of his or her pocket.

We do not support the one cent increase in the gasoline excise tax which has been in effect, by the way, since February 19 of this year. Further, it has hit hardest at low and middle-income Canadian families. The increase has had a negative effect upon many sectors of the economy.

If we are to take a look at the impact, we should not do it in isolation. If we put the increases all together, they amount to $6,650 million, and that is only the sales tax section. It does not even include what the Conservatives have done in the area of personal income tax, what they have dug out of the pockets of every good Canadian close to $22 billion. I think such a tax grab it is totally unconscionable.

I should like to put on record what the Conservatives have taken from the pockets of Canadians in the area of sales tax. They should be ashamed of their tax record. It is actually an unbelievable gesture. Referring to the Conservative tax record, in terms of gasoline and associated products the annual cost was $900 million. The first increase of two cents per litre on gas was effective in September, 1985. The second increase of one cent per litre on gas, effective January, 1987, amounted to $450 million. The third increase of one cent per litre on gas, effective February, 1987, amounted to $450 million. We must look at those amounts, along with the equalization of sales tax on unleaded and leaded gasoline which amounts to an additional $30 million. We know that Canadians need to use their cars for transportation. I regret the way they have dug into that pocket!

Let us look at the other sales tax measures which they have put into place. There was a 1 per cent increase in sales tax in 1984 which amounted to $1 billion. There was a second increase of 1 per cent which amounted to another $1 billion. Those guys do not even care how many billions they take. They do not even count the zeros. The third increase of 1 per cent in sales tax amounted to another $1 billion. The extension of sales tax on candies, soft drinks, and pet food amounted to $400 million in 1985. We cannot even enjoy small pleasures around here. The extension of sales tax on snack foods—they are scrooges—amounted to $60 million. The increase in air transport tax—and we have settled the Air Canada situation—amounted to $45 million. The proposed 10 per cent tax on all long distance calls and business telephones and the increase in cable TV tax, which was automatic and with no justification, will amount to $945 million. The proposed increase on paint, wallpaper, toys, et cetera—they want to kill Christmas too—will amount to $370 million.

These tax changes do not include any increase which will occur when a new federal sales tax is introduced. I believe the Minister is expected in here in about five minutes with some more such jolly good news which we are all waiting with bated breath to hear!

This is not a simple Bill and it is not as pleasant as it would seem on the surface. I suggest that they ought to re-look at some of their goals.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the chair.

Clauses 1 and 2 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Hockin (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Hockin (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the Bill be read a third time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe there was unanimous consent to recess or adjourn the House until 4.30 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well.

At 4.28 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

TAX REFORM 1987

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE—STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Speaker: It being 4.30 p.m., pursuant to order made Tuesday, December 15, 1987, the House will now revert to Statements by Ministers. I will recognize the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Finance).

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, six months ago, I proposed comprehensive reforms to ensure that Canada's tax system serves the interests of all Canadians.

I set out clearly for public discussion and consultation the objective of tax reform and a carefully balanced package of specific proposals to achieve those objectives. The response was clear. Canadians want a fair and progressive tax system that imposes little or no burden on those least able to pay; a system that levies similar amounts of tax on individuals in similar economic circumstances.

Canadians want a tax system with a broader base and lower rates; a system that encourages individual initiative and in which all high income individuals and profitable corporations pay their fair share of tax. Canadians want a tax system that supports Canada's ability to compete in world market and to create increased employment opportunities; a system that supports the ability of Canada's regions to grow and prosper. Canadians want a more understandable and reliable tax system that ensures the revenues to finance public programs.

Today, I am presenting measures to implement the far-reaching changes to Canada's income tax system that I proposed in the White Paper in June. The proposals meet those objectives with lower tax rates and a fairer system for all.

During the extensive consultation process, broad support was repeatedly expressed for the main thrust and the framework of the proposed income tax reforms. A number of specific proposals were put forward by the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, by the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce and by others. I am tabling today a formal response to the recommendations of the House committee.

I want to pay particular credit for the fine work done by the House committee led by its Chairman, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

As a result of these consultations with Canadians, we have incorporated improvements that further the objectives of the White Paper. In my remarks I will touch only on some features of the measures which are of broader interest. Details on all the measures that I am bringing forward are contained in the supplementary information that I will table.

[English]

To achieve the objectives of personal income tax reform, the three fundamental proposals of the White Paper will be implemented: One, a simplified structure of lower personal income tax rates. There will be three federal tax brackets instead of 10. The rates will be 17 per cent, 26 per cent and 29 per cent respectively. Two, conversion of personal exemptions and many deductions to tax credits. The new credits will be worth the same to all taxpayers regardless of their income. This is a major improvement in fairness. Three, the reduction or elimination of many special tax breaks. This helps to pay for lower tax rates and makes the system fairer.

As a result of these reforms, personal income tax will be reduced for 9.7 million Canadian households, 85 per cent of the total. Income taxes will be reduced for 90 per cent of those aged 65 and over. About 850,000 Canadians, including 250,000 senior citizens, will have their income tax reduced to zero.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The vast majority of families with children will pay substantially less personal income tax as a result of the White Paper proposals. Today I am announcing further improvements to the tax treatment of families with children.

To provide further assistance to lower and middle-income families, the refundable child tax credit will be increased by an additional $35 per child to $559 on January 1, 1988. This will directly benefit 2.3 million Canadian families, including 300,000 below the income tax threshold.

To target additional assistance to larger families, the child credit for the third and each subsequent child in the family is being doubled to $130. A dependent child will be able to earn up to $2,500 before the basic credit will begin to phase out.

A dependent child will be able to earn up to $2,500 before the basic credit wil begin to phase out.

• (1640)

In addition, children who reach the age of 18 during the year will be eligible for the dependent child and the refundable child tax credit for the full year. Family allowance payments will be reported on the tax return of the higher-income spouse, but there is no change to the provisions which determine who receives the family allowance payment.

These measures incorporate a number of suggestions from the House Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. The impact of these measures is to further reduce the taxes paid by families with children. In combination with the new child care initiative announced earlier this month by my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), these measures will bring about a major strengthening of tax assistance for Canadian families.

In keeping with the objectives of fairness and base broadening, the White Paper proposed to limit deductions for automobile expenses to reflect more accurately the element of personal consumption in these expenses.

As a result of suggestions received during the consultation process, changes have been incorporated to meet a number of concerns that were raised. For those drivers using personal automobiles for business use of more than 24,000 kilometres per year, the existing system will remain. Deductions will be restricted only for those who drive personal automobiles for relatively modest amounts of business use. These measures will ensure that deductible automobile expenses more accurately reflect business use.

The White Paper proposed measures to provide objective tests for determining the extent to which farm losses could be deducted against other sources of income. As part of these measures, new accounting rules were proposed. During the consultation process, a number of suggestions were received on ways that the objectives underlying the White Paper proposal could be achieved without asking all farmers to adopt modified accrual accounting. I am thus issuing today amended proposals which will retain cash accounting for farmers.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Government will continue consultations on these amended proposals which would address the tax treatment of farm losses, but which would allow farmers to continue to account on a cash basis. Implementation will follow completion of these consultations.

I made a limited number of modifications to other proposals. For example, adjustments are being incorporated in measures dealing with investments in Canadian films and in multiple-unit residential buildings.

The corporate income tax proposals will achieve three major objectives set out in the White Paper. Corporate tax rates will be reduced. The general federal rate will fall to 28 per cent in 1988 and the manufacturing rate will be reduced to 23 per cent by 1991. The rate for small business will fall to 12 per cent. This will promote growth and job creation in Canada by maintaining a corporate tax system that is competitive with other countries, particularly the United States.

[Translation]

The elimination or reduction of many special tax breaks will pay for lower corporate and personal tax rates. It will return the profit motive to investment by rewarding success. And it will encourage investment decisions based more on economic initiative and opportunity than on tax considerations.

[English]

A broader tax base with fewer preferences will mean that profitable corporations will pay a bigger share of the total tax burden. The corporate income tax will also be a more predictable and reliable source of revenues.

At the same time, important tax incentives have been retained for key priorities such as small business growth, research and development and regional development. The corporate tax measures will be implemented substantially as put forward in the White Paper. Adjustments have been incorporated to moderate the impact of tax reform in a number of areas.

To support the development that is vital to regional economic growth and to isolated communities, the White Paper proposed to retain important incentives in the resource sector. In particular, improvements are being made in the proposed regime for flow-through shares.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The period during which resource expenditures will qualify for the 16 and two-thirds per cent rate of depletion will be extended to the end of 1989. In addition, changes are being made in the investment loss rules to ensure that flow-through shares remain an attractive investment vehicle for junior resource companies.

The White Paper proposals recognize the vital role of research and development in the future of our economy. To ensure that Canada's tax regime for R and D continues to be among the world's best, the proposed limitation on claimable investment tax credits has been increased to 75 percent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In addition, the proposal for the capitalization of interest on vacant land will be modified so as not to affect small firms in the home building industry.

Across the entire economy, corporate tax reform will strengthen the incentive for firms to invest in profitable ventures. The rate of tax on the return from new investment will be reduced. The tax treatment of capital in this country will continue to encourage risk taking, initiative, growth and job creation.

One of the key principles of tax reform is that all corporations should pay a fair amount of tax on their economic income. The existing tax base fails to achieve this goal. Tax reform broadens the tax base so that it more closely measures the true income of corporations. This directly addresses the problem of profitable corporations paying little or no tax.

The changes being proposed will reduce by one-half the number of profitable corporations that pay no tax. Those that remain will either be firms in cyclical industries that have experienced significant economic losses in prior years or will be firms in industries which receive incentives directed at important national priorities. These priorities include promoting regional development, ensuring a healthy and active resource sector and encouraging research and development to provide jobs in the future.

However, there has been some concern that many large banks and life insurance companies have not paid significant tax over the past decade. To respond to this concern, the Commons committee has suggested that it might be appropriate to levy a minimum tax.

I share this concern. This has motivated the proposals in the White Paper affecting the taxation of financial institutions. I am confident that the combination of all the proposals in tax reform will ensure that financial institutions will pay their fair share of tax in the future. It is expected that over the next five years, the base-broadening measures being applied to the larger financial institutions will raise substantial amounts of revenue estimated to be almost $4 billion. In the meantime, I will be reviewing various mechanisms which could be used in achieving this objective should that be necessary.

Before tax reform is fully effective, a number of banks are not expected to be taxable in 1988. Accordingly, I will implement a tax on the capital of larger banks and trust companies. This tax, a form of minimum tax, will be creditable against future income tax.

Corporate tax reforms will ensure that life insurance companies pay appropriate tax on their regular corporate income. However, without further action, investment income earned by life insurers on funds accumulated in respect of life insurance policies would have remained untaxed.

I therefore intend to tax this income in the hands of the insurance company at a rate of 3 per cent in 1988 rising to 15 per cent by 1992. This measure will include some modifications to the original White Paper proposal. It will remove a major tax preference for the life insurance sector. In conjunction with reforms to the regular corporate income tax, this will ensure that insurance companies are appropriately taxed.

To deal with the increasing problem of abusive tax avoidance and evasion, the White Paper proposed a number of measures including a general anti-avoidance rule. As a result of consultations, changes will be incorporated in the proposal to deal with concerns that were raised about the possible unintended scope and effects of such a rule. Draft legislation is being released today for further discussion. Implementation will follow these consultations.

Fiscal responsibility was a major constraint that we imposed on ourselves in evaluating proposed changes to the tax reform package. We would not and we will not abandon the principle that tax reform must pay its own way. Nor did we accept the notion that the bill for changes in the first stage of tax reform can be held over until the second stage. That is why we have rejected suggestions for larger personal income tax cuts now to be financed by sales tax reform later. Tax reform is not a reform-now-pay-later proposition.

Therefore, improvements such as child benefits have to be paid for now. To maintain the fiscal balance of the package, I am taking the following measures: additional taxes will be levied on banks and trust companies, including a capital tax on large deposit-taking institutions; effective January 1, 1988, the federal sales tax on alcoholic beverages and tobacco products, currently 15 per cent, will be increased by three percentage points.

We are proceeding with the changes to the existing sales tax as announced in the White Paper, according to the schedule set out in November. These measures will ensure that the first stage of tax reform is fully consistent with responsible fiscal management.

Over-all, the White Paper proposals and the measures I have announced today will reduce personal income taxes by $12 billion over the next five years. This will be paid for by roughly equal increases in corporate and sales tax revenues.

I am tabling the Notice of Ways and Means Motions that will enable us to proceed with the measures that make up the first stage of tax reform. Most of the measures will come into effect on January 1, 1988. Personal income tax reductions will be reflected in payroll deductions beginning July 1, 1988. This will provide employers with adequate time to make the necessary adjustments.

The measures presented today deal with the first stage of tax reform. In the second stage the outdated federal sales tax system will be replaced by a multi-stage tax and a number of further adjustments will be made to the income tax system. The refundable sales tax credit will be substantially enriched, paid in advance, and extended to more households. There will be further income tax reductions for middle-income Canadians, and the income surtaxes will be removed.

The consultation process has indicated there is support among a wide range of interest groups for a new sales tax system—one that is fairer, more reliable, and more supportive of efforts to strengthen competitiveness, growth, and job creation.

A multi-stage sales tax system has been the subject of ongoing discussions. A multi-stage tax can be implemented either at the federal level alone or on an integrated basis in conjunction with the provinces. Currently, the opportunity presented by combining both federal and provincial sales taxes under one system is under discussion with the provinces.

Last week, after meeting with my provincial colleagues, I announced that we had agreed that work on the national sales tax should continue based on the following considerations: municipalities, hospitals, school boards, colleges and universities should not bear a greater tax burden under the national sales tax than they would under the existing sales tax regimes; basic groceries, prescription drugs, and certain medical devices should not be subject to tax.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): These considerations reflect our commitment to ensuring that the design of the tax is consistent with the views of Canadians. They provide a foundation for further discussion of the national sales tax with the provinces. While much more work must be done before we can be sure that a national sales tax system can be achieved, I am encouraged by the progress to date with these and other discussions.

These proposals are the result of extensive consultations. This dialogue, with full involvement of the House committee, has been a clear improvement in the process of implementing taxation proposals. The flexibility of the Government has served Canadians well in achieving a better balance among the competing objectives and priorities that make tax reform the challenge it is. The result is an improved set of proposals for tax reform that retains the structure and principles established in the White Paper.

The measures febore the House today will put more money into the hands of Canadians. The freedom to make their own decisions, as individuals and families, on how best to use that money is at the heart of the government's philosophy of economic renewal.

[English]

Building a stronger, more resilient economy is the best way to ensure that Canadians have the resources to sustain and enhance their social and cultural identity, key elements in the high quality of life we enjoy. It is the best way to strengthen the distinctive elements of national life that make Canada a unique and uniquely successful nation.

[Translation]

The government will continue building a stronger Canada by moving forward on the full range of initiatives designed to unlock our potential as individuals and as a nation—initiatives such as tax reform, free trade, regulatory reform and child care.

[English]

Last June 18, I said that, in the final analysis, this package must be judged on whether the proposals would give to our senior citizens more peace of mind and security; to those in need, a fairer and reduced tax burden; to our young, a greater sense of opportunity and hope; and to our working people, more incentive, stability and freedom.

I can say today—with even greater confidence—that we are meeting those tests.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, we have just witnessed what I would call a farce, and I think this fact deserves to be strongly emphasized so Canadian taxpayers will realize what it is they have been watching.

• (1700)

This Government cannot be trusted. This Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) cannot be trusted—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Garneau: —because he has abused the confidence of Canadian taxpayers. The Minister of Finance is just like a thief who has stolen the purse of an old lady in a park with $200 in it, and just because he returns the empty purse, he expects to be thanked.

Mr. Speaker, I intend to comment on the various items mentioned by the Minister of Finance in his speech today, and to give you an example of the simile I just gave, here are some comments on the tax treatment of families.

Mr. Speaker, in 1985 when this Minister of Finance decided to de-index partially family allowance payments, reduce the dependent child exemption and increase the child tax credit, he saved the federal Treasury and took out of the pockets of Canadian families one billion two hundred million dollars over a five-year period. He cut family tax benefits by $1.2 billion. For 1988-89 this would represent a saving of $200 million.

And what did he announce today? He will return part of the 200 million he took out of the pockets of these families three or four years ago.

Mr. Speaker, that is what I mean when I say the Minister cannot be taken seriously, when he says his tax reform will improve the circumstances of our families. He is just giving back part of what he took away several years ago.

Mr. Speaker, since 1984, tax reform has developed into a three- or four-act farce. Initially, the Government tightened the screws on Canadians with the biggest tax increase in our history.

Mr. Speaker, in his last three Budgets the Minister of Finance increased taxes by a total of $22 billion—yes, $22 billion—which put a considerable burden on families—

An Hon. Member: The deficit!

Mr. Garneau: —the Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland) had better look after his riding, because if he is so anxious to talk about the deficit, we will talk about it later on. I certainly have some comments to make.

So the Minister of Finance increased taxes by $22 billion.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may recall the various tax increases he introduced.

First, he increased the sales tax by 1 per cent in 1984.

Second, he increased the sales tax by another 1 per cent in 1986 and then by a third 1 per cent. In fact, there were two sales tax increases in 1986 of 1 per cent each. Mr. Speaker, do you realize how much this cost, per increase? It cost Canadian taxpayers an additional 1 billion dollars. For every increase, the Minister took an additional 1 billion dollars out of the pockets of Canadian taxpayers.

He raised the tax on gas by two cents a litre in 1985. He increased it by an additional cent in 1987. This afternoon, the House was looking at four cents altogether, because as of today, the tax on gas will be four cents a litre more than when this Government came to power.

Mr. Speaker, sales tax has been extended to a number of items that were not taxed before, representing an increase of $400 million. There is even a tax on chocolate bars, the stuff children buy for snacks. The tax on cigarettes and tobacco was raised initially in 1985. In 1986 the tax on tobacco and alcohol was raised a second time. The third time was in 1987, and we will have another 3 per cent increase as a result of the Minister's statement.

The Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan was abolished. Our income tax system was de-indexed. The federal tax rebate was eliminated. The status of married persons was changed, resulting in additional tax increases. Five and 10 per cent surtaxes were introduced. Another 3 per cent surtax was added, which has now become a permanent fixture as a result of Bill C-64. And now we have an additional 10 per cent tax on all communications except basic services, which will take $1 billion out of the pockets of Canadian taxpayers.

[English]

After having increased taxes by $22 billion in three years, now, on the eve of the election the Minister comes to the Canadian people and says he will return $2 billion in 1988. Big deal! There is still a net increase of $20 billion that the Canadian people are going to have to pay because of this Government. The trick he is using is unbelievable. This is why I am saying to the Minister of Finance that he is playing with his credibility a lot. I do not think the Minister can stand that for very long.

The Minister announced in June that he would cut the R and D credit. Companies that invested in research and development could have deducted 100 per cent of the net taxable benefit the company had. He decided in June to cut by half this tax credit for research and development, and today he announced with a smile on his face that he is now increasing it to 75 per cent. The conclusion is a net decrease of 25 per cent, and he announces it as being an improvement. God knows we need research and development. You are playing with your credibility, Mr. Minister.

When the Minister says he is going to give back to families a certain amount of money, he is playing with his credibility, because in 1985 he took from Canadian families $200 million because he partially de-indexed the family allowances cut the child exemption to the level of the family allowances and increased—and I take that into account—the refundable child tax credit. But altogether in the process, in the year 1988, he put $200 million in his pocket. Now, on the eve of the election, he is returning $150 million by increasing the refundable tax credit by $35. This is what the officials have told us. So altogether the Minister nets another $150 million, and he is telling the Canadian people that he brought more fairness to the system. That is a farce.

Let us talk about the flow-through shares. In June the Minister decided that the earned depletion would disappear in two steps, first, sixteen and two-thirds per cent for 1988, and zero for 1989. Now it is a big deal. He says he is improving the system. He will keep the sixteen and two-thirds per cent for 1989. Yet the earned depletion allowance of 33 per cent will disappear. The Minister says in his speech that he will protect this to help regional development. I say to the Minister of Finance that he is playing with his credibility because he is not telling the truth. He has hit hard the Canadian taxpayer and now he is returning a little amount of money and saying: "I helped you".

Flow-through shares: the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has just lowered the boom with respect to flow-through shares, for two reasons. First, he does away with earned depletion. What he had announced on June 18 remains basically unchanged, except that he prolongs the agony for one more year. But because he cuts the earned depletion in half and, second, because he will tax capital gains at a rate of 75 instead of 50 per cent, he makes the operation of flow-through shares almost inapplicable. And that is what we have been hearing throughout Canada, not only in Quebec, people have been saying just that in British Columbia, Alberta, Manitoba, Northern Ontario and Northern Quebec. They told us that the measure of the Minister was going to kill investments in smaller oil and mining companies.

All he is doing today is to decide to maintain the system. I would ask the Hon. Member for Abitibi (Mr. St-Julien) and the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Desjardins) what they are going to tell their constituents, after promising them that the Minister of Finance would keep the earned depletion at 33.3 per cent. What is the Minister going to say to small businesses that have asked . . . Again yesterday I was reading the statement of Maritime residents who told us that the way the Minister applies the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption only on shares will make it impossible for them to use the tax benefit which the Minister is bragging about. In fact only big companies will be able to benefit from the sale of shares.

You know, Mr. Speaker, according to the measure announced by the Minister, a family company which would be as big a monopoly or consortium as Eaton's or Power Corporation is considered to be a small business.

• (1710)

Can one imagine Eaton's as a small business that will get the advantage of the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption? Is that what you call fairness? A small business owner who is not incorporated and wants to sell the assets will not benefit from the exemption. Is that fairness?

I suggest that the Minister of Finance is playing with his credibility. The House will recall that, before the election in 1984, he made a number of statements, one of which was that "We would cut spending. We would not raise taxes. Tax levels in Canada are already too high". The Minister said that in March, 1984, before the election. After the election, he increased taxes by $22 billion, which is the largest tax increase in three years that we have seen in Canadian history.

In November, 1984, after the election, they said that Canadians pay a pretty sum in taxes and they feel they pay quite enough. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said this as well. They said they would not increase taxes, yet they have increased them by $22 billion. Just before the next election, the Government is bragging that it is returning $2 billion.

On June 18, the Minister of Finance tabled in the House of Commons a proposal for sales tax in which food would be taxed. An example was given to show that the new tax on food would not hurt Canadians.

Today, the Minister announced that he will not impose that tax. Yet I cannot trust what he is saying.

Let me explain why. The House will certainly want to pay attention to what he said in his speech. He stated that municipalities, hospitals, school boards, colleges and universities should not bear a greater tax burden under the national sales tax. Why does he use the words "should not"? He also says that basic groceries, prescription drugs and certain medical devices should not be subject to tax. Why use the words "should not"?

I have been part of the Budget speech process for many years and I know that the officials of the Department, if not the Minister, use very precise words. There are reasons for this. If there is certainty that food will not be taxed, we do not say it "should not" be taxed but that "it will not" be taxed. We would say that the municipalities and hospitals "will not" bear a greater tax burden.

I state very sincerely that I do not believe the Minister one bit. If I compare what he said before the election and what happened after the election, and if I compare what he is saying now in this statement with what could happen after the election if by chance he is re-elected, I am sure we would hear more about these items that "should not" subject to tax. It is not a firm commitment and he may change his point of view.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should like to return to the matter of financial balance. The minister does not support his statement with figures because he either could not or would not. Why? I want to know. The Minister would not say how much additional revenues he was expecting to collect with his proposals and what exactly would be the cost of those changes. He simply said that everything should balance out. We do not know what will be the tax level on banking institutions. All we know is that there will be a 3 per cent additional tax on tobacco and spirits, although he would not say exactly how much additional revenues it would provide.

Mr. Speaker, we have just lived through five years of economic prosperity which had begun before the Conservative Party came to power. 1983 was a year of very interesting economic growth. 1984: since the Conservative Party came to power in September, it could not claim responsibility for the economic growth which occurred in 1984 and which exceeded 5 per cent; 1986 was also a year of economic growth. During these five years the Government has increased taxes by $22 billion and, in spite of that, the deficit still amounts to $28 or $30 billion a year. Each year the public debt increases by as much as $30 billion. By the end of this fiscal year, it will amount to nearly $300 billion.

Mr. Speaker, this is a political party which came to power on the pretence that it would bring down the deficit not through taxe increases but by a reduction in expenditures. So I will say again to the Minister of Finance: Sir, you are playing a dangerous game with your credibility, as evidenced by an article published recently that the C.D. Howe Institute said—

[English]

"The C.D. Howe Institute calculates that the total Canadian deficit amounts to 4.1 per cent of the Gross National Product compared with the U.S. deficit of 2 per cent of the GNP".

Mr. Speaker, this Government and this Minister of Finance seem . . . Perhaps I should put it another way . . . When the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Centre entered the House as Minister of Finance, I don't think people saw the new Minister as an accomplished politician, but he did have a certain credibility in the business world and among ordinary Canadians. When the new Minister of Finance spoke, he had a certain credibility. Today, however, under constant pressure from the Prime Minister's Office which cannot be said to have a monopoly on truth, the Minister is losing that credibility. He is brandishing billions of dollars' worth of expenditures. Mr. Speaker, do you realize that in two weeks, the Minister of Finance has added nearly $3 billion to public expenditures to pay for items like nuclear submarines, the icebreaker Polar Sea, daycare funding and wheat? Three billion dollars! Did anyone hear the Minister say where he is going to get the money? Did you hear anything in his speech today that says those $3 billion will be financed by increasing sales tax? Did he tell us those additional $3 billion would increase the deficit? Did he tell us he was going to increase personal income tax? No, not a word about how he was going to finance the $3 billion! Mr. Minister, you are playing fast and loose with your credibility. No one is going to believe you anymore, not even your Prime Minister.

If we look at today's operation, it is really sad to see what the Minister has done. I don't know whether you looked at everything . . . Mr. Speaker, you may have glanced at the report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. The Committee travelled across this country. The Committee heard hundreds of witnesses who came with briefs prepared after consulting with thousands of members of their chambers of commerce, professional associations and senior citizens clubs. We received all kinds of briefs. We drafted a very thorough report, and the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) must be very disappointed today, because at least 85 per cent of our recommendations were rejected outright.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke-Centre): Bullshit!

Mr. Garneau: The Minister of Finance says: Bullshit! I added up all the recommendations we made. Mr. Minister, you are playing fast and loose with your credibility when you say things like that. Eighty-five per cent of our recommendations were set aside.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about the banks, since I am familiar with the subject. The Minister of Finance said he had set aside the minimum tax to be applied to banks. Here is an area, a community of institutions which in actual fact have paid no income tax over the past years for a number of reasons, one of which is mainly the use of investment instruments that generate non taxable income. The banks evaded nothing, they simply made use of the law, but one thing remains, they paid no income tax. In committee we looked at several options and we recommended a minimum tax because it allowed the Government to tax profits. What did the Government do? It is going to tax reserves. After his blunders in connection with the Northland Bank, the Bank of British Columbia, the Bank of Alberta, the Canadian Commercial Bank, after fumbling around and engulfing hundreds of millions of the taxpayers' dollars, the same Minister says in this House that he will tax reserves aimed at protecting the savings of Canadians. This is the reason why I viewed a minimum tax as a lot more rational because at least this concept was based on the profits made and showing on the banks' balance sheet. The Minister will now tax capital, and a bank showing no profit would have to pay tax. Will this make the savings of Canadians in those banks any safer? I would like to deal with the insurance companies from across the land which told us here that the Government's policy was wrong, that it would increase by 20 to 40 per cent life insurance premiums paid by Canadians.

Did the Minister listen to the committee's recommendations? Not at all. We might understand he would turn a deaf ear to the Opposition, but he turned a deaf ear to his own Members, the experts in the field. He maintained the 15 per cent tax on insurance company investment. This is the only thing he did: instead of doing it outright, he will do it in two or three steps.

However, the principle remains that there will be a 15 per cent tax on the investment income of insurance companies, which will result in an increase of between 20 and 40 per cent in insurance premiums according to the experts who appeared before our committee.

The Minister believes that he can do anything he wants. He is always consulting, but he throws all the replies that he receives in the waste basket as soon as they come in because he does not know how to listen. For instance, and I shall close with this as my time is nearly expired, did he listen to the coalition of senior citizens who came twice to tell us that the tax reform would affect them and that their taxes increased substantially between 1984 and 1987? I have two examples here. An older couple with an income of $27,000, which is not that much, saw their taxes increase from $2,000 to $3,300 within three years under this Government.

This group of senior citizens, who come not only from Quebec, but from all Canada, appeared before the Finance Committee. These people came back last week to meet the Minister. Did he listen to them? No, he must have simply thrown their submission into the waste basket since nothing will change for senior citizens.

• (1720)

Their $1,000 exemption on the first $1,000 of investment income has been eliminated. They have no protection against inflation. They do not know how they will be affected by Phase II of the tax reform. Senior citizens have been completely ignored.

Mr. Speaker, the credibility of the Government as well as personal initiative and entrepreneurship have been affected substantially by this reform.

Under tax reform, the same Minister who provided a $500,000 capital gains tax exemption is now proposing to tax capital gains at a higher rate than dividends, on the pretext that this will promote investment and development.

People who take risks and who make capital investments will be taxed at a higher rate if they obtain any capital gains than if they had invested the money in a quiet company and received dividends. This will affect the dividend policy of companies and completely change stock and shares dealings in Canada. After the market crash last October, there is cause for concern about our economic future and our development. Small manufacturing companies will see their tax rate increase from 10 to 12 per cent, and what about the simplification of the tax system, which was one of the objectives of tax reform?

If somebody can show me and prove to me that this reform will simplify Canada's tax system and make it easier for taxpayers, Mr. Speaker, I should like to meet him and listen to him because, after spending weeks with the finance committee, listening to briefs from experts of every description, accountants, lawyers, businessmen, we came to the conclusion that the new system is going to be more complicated than the one we had before.

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude the way I began, by saying that this Minister of Finance reminds me of a highway robber who steals a woman's purse containing $200, and because he gives back the empty purse he fully expects the victim to be grateful. It does not make sense, the Minister of Finance knows very well that I am right, he knows very well that taking $22 billion out of the pockets of Canadian taxpayers and handing back a mere $2 billion— And he expects us to thank him for that. Mr. Speaker, I know my time is limited, so I hope I will have other opportunities to focus on each of these measures and show that the credibility of the Minister of Finance is at its lowest ever because he has given up everywhere under the Prime Minister's election pressure.

[English]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, this feels a little like the replay of a movie, because six months ago I stood in the House of Commons and commented on the Minister's White Paper on tax reform. so little has been changed since that time that I might as well pull out the speech that I gave on June 18 and deliver it again.

We are left with a tax system, Mr. Speaker, which is as unfair as the reforms that the Minister put forward back in June of this year. We are left with a tax system in which wealthy Canadians with incomes of over $100,000 will be big winners, and in which poor Canadians and Canadians with average incomes will be considerably worse off than they were back in 1984 before the Conservative Government came to power. We are left with a system where the essential unfairness of the tax system has not been changed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

The Minister says that he is quite happy and that the Government is quite happy to go to the people with tax reform as one of the major planks in the Conservative platform. If the Minister thinks the bank shareholders are the only voters, then so be it. I am sure that they will give the Minister of Finance the vote of confidence which they feel he richly deserves.

As far as average Canadians are concerned, that is not the case. The Minister had a choice. He could have opted in favour of average Canadians or he could have opted in favour of the banks. He has opted in favour of banks and financial institutions and against average Canadians. I am quite happy to go to the people and talk about tax reform and about real fairness, a fairness which I am afraid we do not see in the proposals from the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance had a choice to make, but what he gave us is a system which remains unfair to ordinary Canadians. Canadians were expecting justice, but with this so-called tax reform advocated by the Minister of Finance the average family will pay $1,000 more than in 1984 as a result of the tax reform just unveiled by the Minister of Finance, and once he is through making the changes announced today in the ways and means motion.

People living below poverty level will continue to pay taxes. Sixty thousand profitable corporations will still be able to pay no income tax at all under the fiscal reform introduced by the Minister. And thanks to the partial deindexation, the benefits, if any, for the average Canadian family will have completely disappeared within three years.

[English]

Over the past six months the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs has worked particularly hard on the question of tax reform. We responded, albeit with some reticence, to the Minister's timetable. We accepted that the Minister's delay until June 18 in introducing his tax reform would not prevent us from offering our comments. Just over a month ago, after a cross-country tour, after receiving more than 600 briefs and after hearing from some 200 witnesses, we presented a report with 81 recommendations which were based on sober second thought and on a great deal of reflection on the proposals made by the Minister of Finance.

I regret to say that the Minister has totally ignored most of those recommendations. In fact, according to my count, only 12 of the 81 recommendations made by the committee have been acted upon by the Minister. The rest have either been ignored, rejected, or put aside for further study. If the Minister and the Conservative Government really believe in parliamentary reform, then that is just not good enough.

I commend my friend, the Chairman of the Finance Committee. We get along reasonably well. We differ on certain ideological questions from time to time. However, I can commend him for keeping us going and for the work that is there. I saw him get to his feet reluctantly and I do not believe that he applauded the Minister. Well, I did not applaud the Minister either, and with good reason. I understand the Chairman's reticence, because the Minister of Finance has slapped the committee in the face and has kicked Canadians in the ass in the way that he has treated their need for a fair tax system.

This apostle of Christmas cheer, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre, has chosen to make a few small changes. However, rather than having them paid for by the corporate sector as we proposed in committee, he is ensuring that they will be paid for by average Canadians. Average Canadians got "scrooged" by the Minister of Finance.

The Minister, just to put it on record, is raising the price of a case of beer by 41 cents on 24 bottles, by 38 cents on a bottle of scotch, and by 26 cents on a carton of cigarettes. On behalf of average Canadians I want to convey with somewhat clenched teeth my greetings for a Merry Christmas to the Minister after what he has done to Christmas cheer.

This whole exercise is a bit like free trade. In this case Canadians have been consulted but ignored. In the case of free trade they were not consulted and they were ignored. On December 16 we are seeing a Ways and Means motion which, by parliamentary tradition, will enter into force on January 1. The legislation will come months later, but the message is very clear to average Canadians—do not bother to try to influence the legislation, do not bother to try to get any words into the conscience of the Minister of Finance. He did not listen over the last six months. He will not listen over the next six months. He is actually proud of a measure which does little or nothing to redress the imbalance in taxation between corporations and average Canadians and between rich Canadians and average Canadians. It is clear that not only the Minister but the Government has its head and heart on Bay Street, not on Main Street.

It goes without saying that the recommendations made by the New Democratic Party in our minority report, along with the report of the Finance Committee, have been ignored. Likewise, the recommendations made by my friends in the Liberal Party in its minority report were ignored. This was despite the fact that we were speaking for some 75 per cent of Canadians who have decided that they cannot support this particular Government.

I would like to deal for a minute with the specific proposals made by the Minister. I guess it is useful that the Minister accepted to a modest degree certain proposals made to improve the benefits for families. However this means, in his case, that families with three or more children will get an extra $65 in tax credit. There will be a certain amount of child tax credit added, to be paid for whenever one buys a bottle of scotch or 24 bottles of beer. Apart from that there will be nothing at all, according to the committee's recommendations in respect of dependent children between the ages of 18 to 21. That is to be deplored.

It is interesting that in terms of our recommendations for a substantial increase in benefits for families with children, because of the important responsibility they carry in society, there is nothing at all.

The Minister backed off on his proposals for accrual accounting for farmers. They will welcome that, but he has left farmers across the country in a position of grave uncertainty, because they do not know what will happen next. Farmers are in limbo. In fact, the proposals put out by the Minister for discussion look very much like modified accrual accounting for farmers, except that it is called cash accounting. In other words, the Minister has not really backed away. He has just changed the cosmetics of his proposal to make it sound a little different. I suspect that farmers may treat that with the same contempt that they treated the Minister's proposals in the White Paper.

I regret the fact that the Minister, who claims to be listening to average farmers and average Canadians, did not listen when farmers across the country said that there must be peer review in deciding who is a legitimate farmer. The Minister rejected that out of hand. Farmers like the proposals made by the committee. In respect of the loss provisions, the Minister has kicked them out of the court as well and has said that they will not apply. Why? It is because they happened to reject the ability of certain of his wealthy friends in Mississauga and other such places to deduct farm losses when they are not genuinely full-time farmers. I exempt the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner), who I understand messes around with cattle from time to time in a fairly legitimate way.

The point I am making is that the Minister has drawn back from his proposals for farm accounting because they were so unacceptable. He has not indicated clearly what will be there, therefore farmers must wait yet another year before finding out what the situation will be.

The Minister has moved on auto expenses. I suppose that is welcome. It is hard to analyse exactly what he has done. We will see what that means in a day or two when the dust has cleared. Apart from that, the Minister has done as little as possible to implement the recommendations made by the committee. In fact, the other recommendations he accepted seem to be the ones which amounted not to benefiting average Canadians but to taking income away from average Canadians, for example, those who will pay the tax on family allowances.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in the end, the problem with the Minister is not simply that he rejected all the recommendations made by the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, there is much more than that. The problem is the fact that the Minister is completely ignoring the recommendations that are being made by the New Democratic Party and by a great number of Canadians from all walks of life, by groups representing ordinary Canadians that have appeared before the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs during our hearings in the last five months.

Mr. Speaker, our Party and the Committee have recommended that we increase the corporate income tax and especially the tax on all financial institutions in order to have a better balance between individuals on the one hand and corporations on the other. The Minister of Finance and the Government have rejected these recommendations.

Mr. Speaker, even the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan), who is a Member of our Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, in a letter that he wrote to the Minister of Finance in November, has stated clearly that if the Government does not take a clear stand in support of an adequate tax on financial institutions, in order to avoid the situation in which banks and life insurance companies were paying almost no tax at all on their profits, then in effect, Mr. Speaker, the Government would be guilty of advantaging the rich at the expense of ordinary Canadians.

• (1740)

I will cite the comment from the Hon. Member for York—Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) who said in his letter to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson):

> To the extent that "handsome" taxes which are seen to be fair are not levied in 1988 against all profitable financial intermedies, it is almost certain that tax reform will be seen as unfair and that the allegation of "favouring the rich" will form an important part of the next election campaign.

What the Member from York—Scarborough said is absolutely dead on. He understands that situation. I think he made a great contribution to the committee in helping to design the average minimum margin tax and I, with him, deplore the fact that the Minister of Finance would not listen to the committee and, therefore, is guilty of a tax system which favours the rich and ignores the needs of average Canadians.

What has the Minister done, Mr. Speaker? He has brought back a capital tax and said, "Look what I am doing". In fact, in his language he tried to indicate that this was a brand new tax that will soak the banks. It is not true. It is a weaker capital tax than the tax on capital which is in force right now and which was due to expire at the end of 1987. This is the Minister's dirty little secret. There is a capital tax on the banks right now which the Minister proposed to withdraw. Will he put it back in its present form? No, Mr. Speaker. He is going to make it refundable. That means it will simply be a prepayment on income taxes if, as, and when the banks ever get around to paying those taxes.

What about revenues? The Minister says this will increase his revenues by $120 million in the first year. We have looked at the figures. They indicate that the banks were paying only $20 million in capital taxes under the old tax at the same rates. The Minister, by some legerdemain, has come up with an extra $100 million, which I suggest will not be there. If you gave the Minister the benefit of the doubt, if you said, "Okay, the system will work", what will the banks pay? The banks will be forced to pay 6 per cent of their profits as opposed to an overall level of taxation which, with provincial taxes, ought to amount to some 40 per cent to 44 per cent of their taxes. The banks will pay 6 per cent. It is reminiscent of the situation prevailing over the last five or six years. Tax measures were brought in by the Liberals back in the 1970s, and have been perpetuated by the Conservatives since 1984. These measures saw to it that the banks paid between 1 per cent and 5 per cent of their income in tax.

Any average Canadian, any bank teller, who pays taxes has to pay a higher rate of tax on his or her income than the average Canadian bank. The poor Canadian banks are only able to pay 1 per cent, 2 per cent or 3 per cent taxes on their profits. Poor dears. They are not able to stay profitable, not able to stay in business, almost forced to the wall, forced to be in little tin tarpaper shacks because they cannot keep up the rent on those locations they have on every major street corner, on every main street in urban Canada. The banks have to be spared. On behalf of the bank presidents of Canada, I would like to say to the Hon. Minister of Finance how grateful they all are for this particular consideration.

Perhaps I spoke with tongue in cheek just now, but I want to say there is something wrong about a tax system which spares the banks and taxes average Canadians at a level higher by a substantial amount than in 1984. Make no mistake, we are not talking about tax cuts for average Canadians; we are talking about tax increases for average Canadians.

The people who benefit are the wealthy Canadians who drive around in BMWs and Jaguars who go to the cocktail parties in Forest Hills and in Etobicoke held to raise election funds for the Minister of Finance and his Conservative colleagues, who go to the convention centre in Toronto and similar quarters in Montreal and dole our $250 a plate for fundraising dinners where they can hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) say how the Conservatives are acting on behalf of average Canadians.

Those average Canadians with incomes of $100,000 a year, or a majority of them, will have a tax reduction of $4,365 per annum thanks to tax reform from the Hon. Minister of Finance. Nothing in the proposals which have been made today in the Ways and Means motion will change that at all. But the family earning $15,000 a year will get a tax cut of $90 a year. If you are in the $100,000 bracket, you will get a tax cut 50 times as great as the average tax cut for someone who perhaps shines your shoes, delivers your milk or cleans house for you once a week and earns less than $15,000 a year.

For a family with a couple of kids earning $30,000 a year the White Paper would have given a tax cut of about $263. That will change slightly, perhaps by another $30 with the proposals made in the Ways and Means motion. but that family on $30,000 a year has had a tax increase of $966 since 1984 because of the increases of the minister of finance and the conservative government's policy of soaking the poor to benefit the rich. that, of course, has been needed so that we can have these huge capital gains exemptions for wealthy Canadians and other types of things designed to keep the BMW owners off the poor lines.

The consequence is that for the average Canadian with $30,000 worth of income he or she will wind up, after tax reform, paying $700 or $800 more in tax per annum than he or she paid prior to 1984.

What else has changed, Mr. Speaker? Nothing much has changed in the Ways and Means motion. sixty thousand profitable Canadian corporations will not be paying a nickel of tax. Twenty per cent of Canadian corporations, one Canadian corporation in five which is profitable, will not pay tax. On behalf of the shareholders, the presidents and the officers of those companies, I suppose I should thank the Minister of Finance again for remembering their needs, even if it is at the expense of average Canadians.

I come back to the problem that we face, namely, that Canadians have indicated more and more that they want fairness and justice in the tax system. They want real tax reform, not the phoney tax reform which the Minister of Finance is giving them. When it came to choosing between the needs of the banks and the needs of average Canadians, people wanted the Government to side with average Canadians, but they failed to get that.

I want to remind the Minister of Finance of some of the recommendations we made in our minority report. These are constructive recommendations which an NDP Government would seek to put into operation in order to give Canadians a genuinely fair tax system. We say the tax system should be more progressive. There should be higher rates of taxes, dare I say, on upper income Canadians. Canadians say yes to that, Mr. Speaker. I regret that the Minister of Finance has said no. We say the tax system should be fully indexed so that average Canadians will not find that any benefits they get from tax reform will disappear as quickly as they will disappear. The finance committee itself estimated that the benefits from tax reform will, because of deindexing, disappear in just three years. Canadians say yes to that change. I regret to say that the Minister of Finance said no.

We have been arguing year after year that capital gains in Canada should be taxed like any other form of income.

Somebody who clips coupons, who holds shares, properties, who has works of art, condominiums in Florida and makes capital gains on them should surely pay as much taxation as a man or woman who works eight or 10 hours a day. He or she may work eight or 10 hours a day, week in and week out, year in and year out, in order to earn the amount of money that is made in a property flip, money which would be tax free according to the Minister of Finance. One must ask, if capital gains can be earned that easily, perhaps they should be taxed more highly rather than at a lower rate than wages and salaries are taxed.

We have argued that the lifetime exemption on capital gains was wrong. It should not have been brought in. It should only have been allowed for small businesses and farms. We accepted that, but we do not accept it in other areas. Unfortunately, the Minister of Finance did not hear us. The Government did not hear us either.

Canadians say that it is wrong to give special treatment to capital gains, but the Minister of Finance says that it is right. It certainly is right-wing. It suits his friends in the banks, it suits wealthy Canadians, but it does not suit average Canadians.

We said that other measures that favour wealthy Canadians should be blocked, measures like the top-ups on RRSPs and the ability to deduct interest payments against other income when investing. Canadians understand that it is wrong to have those kinds of loopholes in the tax system. The Minister of Finance does not understand that.

We said that the child tax credit should be substantially increased by some 80 per cent. The Minister of Finance heard us but acted in a very limited way. Canadians know what is fair to families. The Minister of Finance does not.

We said that there should be no sales tax on food. I guess I should comment on that because back on June 18, I said very specifically that if the Minister of Finance refused to listen to average Canadians on that issue, he would have the fight of his life in the 1988 or 1989 election campaign. It has taken him six months, but last week we finally heard from the Minister of Finance. He should not have left Canadians with any uncertainty on that question. I welcome the fact that the Minister of Finance has finally seen the light, but I ask how it is that this man of the people could have been so deaf to what Canadians from Bonavista to Vancouver Island, from Tuktoyaktuk to Point Pelee, were saying which is that a tax on groceries was absolutely wrong. From the very beginning, from June 18, the Minister of Finance should have acknowledged that.

New Democrats have said that we believe it is right that there should be a minimum tax to ensure that wealthy Canadian individuals do make a reasonable contribution to the society from which they benefit. Canada is one of the finest countries in the world. Every Canadian benefits from that, even if he or she does not directly receive government services. Every Canadian benefits from medicare and from the kind of healthy, decent, caring, sharing society that still exists in this country. If that is right, we feel that it is just as right that corporations should pay their fair share as well.

It is wrong that every year, 60,000 Canadian companies do not pay tax. If the Americans can agree that there should be a minimum tax on corporations, why the devil should we be lagging behind? We say that there should be a minimum tax on corporations. Canadians agree with that because it is part of a fair tax system. It is only the Minister of Finance who fails to understand that.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party has been giving some very serious thought to the remote areas in this country, our mining companies and flow-through shares, and to the problems created by the fact that according to the Minister of Finance, flow-through shares and earned depletion allowances have been abolished. Very little was done to cope with these problems by the amendments announced today by the Minister. We said we would need targeted tax measures that would benefit small resource companies, to ensure continued exploration in regions like Abitibi, Schefferville and other remote areas that depend on this country's resources, and that the tax measures must also benefit these areas as such. Unfortunately, the Minister of Finance only said he would consider the recommendation. I regret to say that once again, the Minister of Finance has refused to listen to the mining industry, the people in the regions concerned and the recommendations of the New Democratic Party.

[English]

We called for a tax system that was more accountable. We said that the cost of tax expenditures which amounts to more than the annual deficit of Canada every year should be reported every year to Parliament and should be voted upon every year by Parliament. That was ignored as well.

We said that there should be a tax system that was simpler and easier for Canadians to understand. That was ignored as well. It is very interesting just how much of what average Canadians are looking for in the tax system was in fact ignored by the Minister of Finance.

In conclusion, I want to say that the responsibility is not just that of the Minister of Finance. Sometimes there is a tendency to say that the Minister is right if one is a Conservative or that the Minister is wrong if one is an average Canadian or is speaking from this side of the House. It is not just the Minister of Finance who is responsible for this.

When the Minister announces his Ways and Means motion for a tax system that goes into force on January 1, 1988, he is speaking on behalf of the Government, on behalf of the Prime Minister on behalf of 38 or 40 cabinet Ministers, and on behalf of 200-odd Conservative Members of Parliament. That is Conservative government policy. They will say it is Progressive Conservative policy, I say it is regressive Conservative policy.

This tax reform is a government initiative that the Government intends to take to the people of Canada in the 1988 or 1989 election campaign. If that is its reform, I will take on the Minister of Finance or any Conservative candidate on any television station on any platform at all anywhere across Canada.

In the 1984 election campaign, the now Prime Minister promised a fairer tax system. He said that those wealthy banks and companies will pay and pay handsomely. I suppose they paid handsomely to the Conservative war chest because they are not being made to pay handsomely in tax revenues that would allow us to take the tax burdens off average Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, finally, the Government had a choice. The measures announced today are not just decisions made by the Minister of Finance. They are supported by the Progressive Conservative Party and by all Members and all Ministers in that Party. Apparently, this is to be the Conservative Party's platform for the next election campaign. Mr. Speaker, if the Conservatives want to ask the average Canadian to vote for them on the basis of a platform that favours the banks and large corporations at the expense of ordinary Canadians, they can go right ahead. We favour genuine tax reform that is fair and equitable to all Canadians, to all taxpayers and not just to the corporate sector.

[English]

We are prepared to fight an election campaign on this particular tax reform. I wish that even now the Minister of Finance would understand what a mistake he is making, listen carefully to the proposals made by the Finance committee, listen to what average Canadians are saying, and then come back with real tax reform that brings taxes down for average Canadian families, that takes poor Canadians right off the tax rolls and not just temporarily, that ensures full indexing of the tax system and not just a partial deindexing, and that is fair to families. Better to be fair to average families than to be fair to the banks. That is our slogan.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I think you might find that there have been discussions between the Parties and there would be consent to call it 6.20.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 6.20 p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven a.m.

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

VETERANS AFFAIRS—FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the first report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, in both official languages.

FISHERIES AND OCEANS—THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the third report of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans, in both official languages.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, as Co-chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages, I have the honour to present the fifth report of the committee, in both official languages.

Pursuant to Standing Order 99(2) of the House of Commons, the committee requests the Government to table a comprehensive response to the report within 150 days.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

REINTRODUCTION OF PRIVATE MEMBER'S BILL

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask consent, which I believe I need, in order to have an Act to provide the political rights of public employees introduced again into the House. The Clerk, I think, understands better than I exactly what is the procedure. We were in consultation with the Privy office yesterday and I understand that this procedure is necessary in order to allow a Bill which I had previously debated for one hour in this House back into the hopper for the private Members' draw taking place this afternoon.

I would appreciate all Members granting me the necessary consent to revert to introduction of Private Members' Bills and then to have this Bill introduced. I was trying to listen and do this at the same time.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the request of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre. I should advise all Hon. Members that this can only be done with unanimous consent. I think the Hon. Member realizes that.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the normal pattern on a unanimous consent request at this time would be some prior consultation. At first blush, I do not think there is any problem, but I think we should go through the consultation process before we grant the unanimous consent.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I would be quite happy to do that provided that perhaps there will be some disposition, assuming there is nothing irregular, to do this in the next few minutes because of the need to fit in under the deadline for the draw. I have to apologize, but was rather tied up with tax reform matters yesterday and we just managed to start to get in under the wire at 5.30 or 6 p.m. yesterday with respect to the draw.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, as long as we know exactly what we are facing. We are always concerned about precedents. If it is missing a deadline, that is one set of circumstances. If it opens the door to Parliament's reconsideration of matters already dealt with, which is one of the fundamental principles in this place, then we are in a somewhat different ball park. I just do not know what the situation is because consultation did not occur. We would be pleased to have those consultations at the earliest moment.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Chair can assist the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary and Hon. Members. First, if the House decides to do something by consent, I should make it very clear that that is not viewed by the Chair as any type of precedent. I might share with Members my view of precedent. It is not the automatic following of something that has been done once. I want to assure the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary that if something can be worked out here, the Chair will not feel that it is any type of precedent. I do understand and appreciate the support of the Parliamentary Secretary for maintenance, under those circumstances, to the ordered way of doing things. I know that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) feels the same way.

I am only suggesting to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary and the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre that perhaps they could have a quick consultation, and it might be the disposition of the House to come back in a few minutes and revert to this matter. If there is a general disposition to go along with something, I do not want to see it stopped for any narrow grounds. I am in the hands of the House. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I agree that that is the most constructive way to proceed. Therefore, I withdraw my request for consent at this time pending consultations with the Parliamentary Secretary. We will do that right away.

REQUEST FOR NECESSARY GOVERNMENT ACTION TO INCREASE HOUSING FOR THE NEEDY

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of a number of concerned citizens of Sussex, New Brunswick, I wish to present a petition.

My constituents pray that the Parliament of Canada will act to establish necessary measures to ensure that the homeless and poorly lodged Canadians live in adequate and healthy housing, and have access to a variety of rehabilitation programs in order to reintegrate into Canadian society.

The Canadian Council on Social Development has indicated that 100,000 people were homeless sometime during 1986, that there are increasing numbers joining those ranks, and that soup kitchens are not an adequate response. I petition the House of Commons on behalf of the petitioners that something be done to alleviate the situation.

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of Portage—Marquette, my neighbouring riding, and particularly those who reside in the Riding Mountain area and neighbouring communities.

Understandably, the petitioners are concerned about reduction in postal service in their area, and petition Parliament on behalf of all who reside in that area, with the request that Canada Post should not reduce service to rural communities, and that rural Canadians should not in any way be treated inequitably by that Crown corporation.

MANDATORY INSTALLATION IN CARS OF AIRBAGS AND THREE-POINT SEATBELTS

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by hundreds of constituents of the federal constituency of Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington who are asking for changes in our road safety regulations.

The petitioners believe that rear seatbelts in passenger cars are inadequate, and that the suffering of crash victims could be reduced or avoided through improved seatbelts. They also believe that medical care costs can be reduced or eliminated.

For those reasons, the petitioners urge the Government to make a commitment with respect to the mandatory installation of adjustable shoulder safety belts for all rear seat passenger cars, and the installation of airbags for front seat passengers.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 40 residents of Thunder Bay who say that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States.

The petitioners feel that the trade agreement negotiated by the Mulroney Government threatens the very fabric of the Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, or to equalize opportunities between the regions.

Therefore the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, like my colleague, I have several petitions which deal with the question of free trade.

The first petition points out various inadequacies of the trade agreement, and it concludes that the petitioners humbly call upon this Government to allow Parliament to dissolve and permit the people of Canada to have their say during a national election. It is signed by residents of Thunder Bay.

The second petition is also signed by residents of Thunder Bay and it makes the same points. It indicates quite clearly the sense of concern of those people with this issue.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I too rise today under the provisions of the Standing Orders to present petitions on behalf of more than 200 individuals who live in and around the City of Thunder Bay, the rural community, Kaministiquia, Atikokan, Murillo, Sioux Lookout, and even one of our suburbs, Edmonton.

The petitioners call upon the Parliament of Canada to reject the Canada-U.S. trade agreement. The petitioners argue that the Government had no mandate to negotiate it, and that it threatens the fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty.

The petitioners call upon the House to dissolve Parliament in order that a general election can be called so that they can directly pass judgment on the trade agreement.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 106, I too have the honour, privilege, and responsibility to present a petition signed by people from the City of Hamilton.

This petition states that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised. The trade agreement negotiated by the Mulroney Government threatens the very fabric of our Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, and to equalize opportunities between the regions.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106 I have the honour to present petitions on behalf of people who are indicating that the Conservative Government does not have a mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States.

They believe that the trade agreement negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, or equalize opportunity between the regions of Canada.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to be dissolved, and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I too have petitions to present.

The petitioners point out to Parliament that the proposed trade agreement not only denies Canadians secure access to the U.S. market, which was the key objective in these negotiations, but threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

Therefore, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, again I have the honour to present a petition signed by Canadians who express their concern with the Government's trade deal.

They believe that the trade deal negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of the Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop the Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, or to equalize opportunities between the regions.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We will certainly grant permission for the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to stand all questions. However, we would like some assurance from him, being that tomorrow is the last day he could answer questions this year, that he would make some attempt to have a number of questions answered at that time.

We would hate for our constituents and other concerned people to have to wait until some time in January or February to get responses to questions requesting information, some of which were placed on the Order Paper as long ago as last spring.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the tone of the Hon. Member's remarks and his concerns. In keeping with the rather excellent record of the Government in the last 3.5 years, which is very different than that of our predecessors, we will be as obliging as we can. We attempt to get Ministers to make it a priority but there are, as the Hon. Member knows, more important things from time to time, like free trade agreements and so on, which compel attendance. We will do our best to get as many answers as we can.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

TRADE

CANADA—U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Carney:

That this House endorse, as being in the national interest, the Canada—United States Free Trade Agreement, the legal text of which was tabled in the House of Commons on Friday, December 11, 1987.

Mr. Speaker: Wednesday during our proceedings on the motion standing in the name of the Hon. Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) in relation to the endorsement of the free trade agreement with the United States, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) moved the following amendment:

That the motion be amended by inserting immediately after the comma following the word "interest" the following: "as determined by the people of Canada in a general election".

[English]

It is at this point that I wish to thank all Hon. Members who took part in the procedural discussion on Wednesday afternoon for their assistance in helping the Chair arrive at a decision.

This amendment has given the Chair very real concern. The motion itself asks the House to endorse the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement as being in the national interest of the country. Some Hon. Members would argue that the amendment seeks to clarify the words "as being in the national interest" by adding the requirement that this should be decided by the Canadian population in a general election. Other Hon. Members argued that the amendment was attempting to introduce a new element to the main motion, an element not contemplated when it was moved and as such would enlarge upon the scope of the motion. Further, the argument was made that the amendment was vague and therefore, if passed, would leave the House wondering what it had decided because of the inherent imprecision in the amendment.

This kind of motion, as our precedents demonstrate, is not easy to amend, and it might be desirable for the Chair to be as liberal as possible. However, by their own admission, the Members who spoke for the Official Opposition stated that the intent of the amendment was to link the definition of the national interest to the outcome of the next general election. As such the amendment would clearly render a part of the main motion subject to the results of a future general election beyond the dissolution of this House and this Parliament.

I should point out at this time that on many occasions in the past Hon. Members have tried to introduce amendments to resolutions of this type and found it extremely difficult to draft one that would be acceptable to the Chair.

There is an excellent ruling in this regard delivered by Mr. Lamoureux on Thursday, June 4, 1964 and I should like to quote:

The difficulty, of course, is that if an amendment proposes nothing new it is a nullity and if it does introduce a new proposition not covered in the motion it becomes irrelevant.

[English]

Further on in the same ruling can be found this passage, and here again I am quoting:

Furthermore, the Chair agrees with the suggestion made in the course of argument this afternoon that one cannot propose an amendment which does not oppose or alter the main motion but attempts to approve of it on a conditional basis.

[Translation]

Assuming that the amendment and the motion were accepted, we would have the endorsement, by the House, of the trade agreement subject to a further endorsement by the population at the next general election and, in my humble opinion, this is foreign to the main question.

[English]

Let me quote a further ruling by Speaker Lamoureux of May 6, 1966 when the House was asked to approve the agreement between Canada and the United States concerning automotive products and an amendment was proposed requiring the future consent of Parliament for any amendments to or renewals of that agreement. Mr. Speaker Lamoureux said:

I suggest that the proper procedure to achieve this aim is not by way of amendment to the resolution but rather by way of substantive motion, with due notice. I agree with the contention . . . that this amendment is in fact a new proposition.

Further, to quote Mr. Speaker Michener from June 11, 1958 commenting on a proposed amendment to a motion for approval of the NORAD agreement, he said the following:

If the amendment has the effect of denying the motion it is unnecessary and irrelevant because those Members who wish to disapprove the agreement have only to vote against the motion as it stands.

If the amendment adds something to the motion in a positive way it is a declaration of principle in these terms . . . Assuming that the amendment and the motion were accepted you would have the agreement approved but you would have added to it a declaration of this independent principle which is not related to the motion nor is it necessary for the decision of the motion in question.

And further on, Mr. Speaker Michener comments:

—a motion clearly could be brought forward for the purposes of this amendment but it would have to be on notice and as an independent motion.

In summary, I feel that the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) is similar in many ways to those dealt with previously by Speakers Lamoureux and Michener. The condition of requiring the national interest to be determined by means of a general election is a new proposition which would have to be put forward as an independent motion on notice.

[Translation]

Therefore, under the circumstances, and with regret, I have no alternative but to declare that the amendment cannot be proposed to the House.

[English]

In closing I also want to say that, because of the very great importance of the motion itself and the issue, I wanted to hear very carefully from all Hon. Members in the Chamber. Hon. Members will remember that on Wednesday with their assistance we spent nearly an hour discussing the procedural aspects of the motion.

As I say, I regret very much that I cannot be more generous as I was urged to be, but I am bound by the procedural rules and the precedents. I hope Hon. Members, who I know feel very strongly about this matter, will accept the ruling in that spirit.

Continuing debate with the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, perhaps there has been a longer pause than usual between the last comments I made to the House and the comments with which I should like to begin this morning.

I remind Hon. Members of the House that within the speech I am giving as trade spokesman for my Party the emphasis has been very much on the necessity of having a correct, sort of modern framework which recognizes the importance of international firms and their key role in the trade of the country in order for us to assess what we have in front of us as a trade agreement.

• (1130)

From that perspective it becomes possible to ask some questions; first, about whether the objectives were achieved by this Government in the trade agreement. I think I demonstrated as clearly as one possibly could that the objectives not only were not achieved, but we have left ourselves in an extremely vulnerable position vis-a-vis the United States concerning future legislation on countervail and anti-dumping.

There are also a set of crucial concessions that we have given up which, as an independent country with a sense of self-direction for the future, we should not have been prepared to give up. These are concessions in the area of investment, in the area of energy, in the area of job losses, and concern areas such as economic development and our capacity to act freely in economic development in the future.

These concessions, combined with the absence of success in obtaining the basic goals which the Government set out to achieve, leave one with no other choice but to conclude that this agreement itself is bad news for Canadians. It is an unfair deal for average Canadians. It is an unacceptable deal for the country, as I am sure an election would prove. It is, therefore, something which we as a Party completely and flatly reject.

What was perhaps most unfortunate about the approach the Government had taken was that there were and there are alternatives which could have been selected. In my view, and that of my Party, they would have been much more effective and would have met the interests of the average people of Canada much more effectively and with much more concern for their interests than is true of this deal.

In the closing period of my speech on Tuesday I dealt with four areas which we felt were crucial in an alternative approach. I dealt with approaches to deal with U.S. protectionism itself directly, through item by item negotiations, through sectoral moves and through the establishment of a trade dispute agency. I had also suggested that agreed subsidies would give this country and its business people some sense of security and some sense of a guaranteed access. The Government keeps saying that the best method for proceeding is through the GATT. Though faced with an inequitable negotiation process, we have people supporting our view and we are able to put that view forward with much greater force and with much greater possibility of winning support from the United States for that view, a view which would restrict, control and dampen the use by the United States of subsidies which have been so damaging to parts of our economy.

It is crucial for us to start to move toward the establishment of various areas of technological expertise, areas of advantage within our economy in both the industrial and the service sectors. We cannot do this with a hope and a prayer. We have to do it with government leadership and with government playing an active role.

We have before us a variety of methods which can be used to help achieve that set of goals. We can put much more emphasis on training, on science and technology. But we could also use methods such as state purchasing policy, planning agreements with the corporate sector, Canadian content rules, tariffs themselves and public ownership. There are a variety of different methods which in a pragmatic way can be applied to establish for ourselves areas of advantage from which we can serve our home market, and which, for the future, enable us to expand our exports, not just to the United States but to the rest of the world.

I had just finished on Tuesday talking about the importance of recognizing the key role of multinational corporations in the trade area and, therefore, the necessity of seeing that there is some direct effort to regulate and review what those multinational firms do with respect to our country. For instance, I suggested it was crucial that we had legislation to make it possible for communities and for workers to review decisions taken by multinational companies to shut down their plants within Canada. They should not simply have the right, as has been the case throughout this country far too long, to shut down, move out and leave Canadian workers to pick up the pieces of their lives and to pick up the pieces of their communities. That should not be done in future. It is an approach which we could take in concert with some other things which would be very important for the average person.

It is also important that we recognize that most subsidiaries which exist here have export restrictions. Subsidiaries cannot, for instance, export in competition against their American parent companies in the United States. I think we must have laws which prevent that.

In addition, the alternatives that we as a Party would set forth would include a fifth point, an emphasis on small businesses within Canada which at this stage do not in many cases have the capacity to reach into the export markets. Some manage to reach into the United States, but it is very rare for small companies to develop the expertise and the contacts to reach into other countries throughout the world. It is crucial that we provide much more help for these small businesses. They should get assistance through the Export Development Corporation which to this point has given most of its help to the large scale corporate sector in Canada. We could provide assistance through direct efforts on the part of the various Ministries of Government. The Ministry of External Affairs with its trade and commerce section would be able to help with marketing and the developing of marketing contacts throughout the world for those small firms. If we were to do that, there would be a tremendous potential for small-scale firms to produce thousands of jobs in the future for our young people.

Finally, I think it is crucial to talk about equitable regional development. I come from a part of the country which has suffered from the ups and downs of the auto industry. It is a part of the country which feels, as a result of these cycles, its sense of disadvantage within this country. However, that sense of disadvantage is much less than the sense of disadvantage I have heard expressed by people from Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, parts of British Columbia, parts of northern Alberta and parts of northern Ontario. They have said that we must establish fairness on a regional basis as a crucial priority of our economic policy.

It is precisely that sense of regional fairness which we will not establish through the trade agreement. We only need look at the situation in places like northern Vermont, northern Maine, North Dakota and Montana. Rather than being part of an equitable pattern of development across the United States, those parts of that country have themselves become disadvantaged regions.

We face the certainty that there will be more disadvantaged regions and that their disadvantages will be greater than is presently the case if we go forward with this deal. Our hands will be so tied when it comes to the instruments we could use to build a fair and equitable situation for those parts of Canada.

There are ways to build that fairness. As our action group on jobs found when it went across the country in 1985, there is a whole set of ways in which communities can build on their own strengths. They can do so through community development efforts and through assistance to co-operatives. What is crucial is that they can do so under their own direction, not under the direction of Chicago, Washington or New York.

In addition to those ways in which communities can build on their own strengths, we must have as a responsibility the goal of seeing to it that the resource areas of Canada are given an equal share in this Canada of ours. We must see to it that the fish processors of Newfoundland have an equal chance at prosperity and benefits for their children. We must do the same for those in the logging industry and those who work in the sawmills in British Columbia. We must see that equality of possibility is established for people in northern Alberta just as we must do so for the people in the Eastern Townships of Quebec which have been so hard hit by the problems the textile industry has faced.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is necessary to have genuine equality in all sectors of this country. It is necessary to have a real Canada which offers all people in this country an opportunity to enjoy a good and prosperous life, the kind of prosperity with which people in Toronto and Montreal are familiar. That is necessary and it can be done. There is no need to say it is impossible. There was an option before, as we indicated during the election campaign. As we said, there was an option and we have to find that option. It is an option of planning. It is an option of leadership on the part of the Government. It is an option of regional equality, and for this country it is very important that it be found.

[English]

So this historic debate begins and will continue for the months ahead. There are those who are frightened of being on their own in the world, those who want to see themselves sheltered by the protective umbrella of the United States. Those are on one side of this debate. They are the ones who cannot hack it as Canadians. They feel that they must be part of a continental grand scheme which will give them some sort of protection from the American giant.

On the other side of the debate are those of us who believe in the people of Canada. We believe that we can work to establish a socially fair, democratic country which will give to every person the chance to enjoy the tremendous benefits which Canada has to offer.

Our Party has confidence in our people. Our Party has confidence in their ability to make Canada reach full employment, to make Canada achieve fairness throughout, to make Canada establish its place in the world on its own in co-operation with all countries of the world, not as the dependent junior partner of the United States. That is what we believe this country can do. That is the faith we have in this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Canada can be more than a junior partner of the United States. Canada has the potential to build a prosperous economy for all Canadians and to do so independently.

• (1150)

[English]

The choice between those two visions of our future cannot be made by this House of Commons. It is a choice which must be made by the people of Canada as they assess the different paths on which we might proceed. Do they want to see us sell ourselves out to the United States and become a junior partner, sheltered by the American umbrella? Or, do they want to see us express our confidence in the ability of this country to take its own direction and manage its own affairs?

That is the choice which must be made, and it must be made by an election. It is not a choice which a discredited Government, in office far too long for the people of this country, can be permitted to make. It has to be made by Canadians. If the people across the aisle are frightened of that choice, if they are as frightened of that as they are of being independent in this world, all I can say—

Mr. McDermid: What a joke.

Mr. Langdon: —is that it is a sad day to see leading this country a Government with such fear deep in its heart, such a sense of dependency built into its psyche, such a sense of absolute paranoia about the rest of the world.

Mr. Edwards: You wrote the book on that.

Mr. Langdon: What we in the NDP have is a sense of confidence that this country can go forward. We believe absolutely that this country will make that choice in an election when it takes place and see to it that the government benches of this House are reduced to virtually nothing. We will see a new direction for this country which gives us an independent future and, as a result, a much better future for every Canadian.

That is why we have to fight, and ask Canadians right across this country to fight, as hard as we possibly can to stop this trade deal from taking place. We have to appeal to people right across this country to write petitions, send letters of protest, and make clear to government Members that they are a discredited bunch who do not deserve to govern this country one day longer, let alone take it into an agreement which will destroy our independence in the future.

Mr. McDermid: What a bunch of poppycock.

Mr. Langdon: The Government must not be permitted to do that and I appeal to everyone in this country to fight the Government in its attempt to destroy our independence and our economic potential. It is completely unacceptable and we as proud Canadians are not prepared to let that discredited Government do this to us.

As a final statement in this debate, given this sense of how discredited the Government is, I want to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar), the following amendment:

> That the words "as being in the national interest," be deleted and the following substituted therefore;
> "as determined by the people of Canada to be in the national interest,"

I proudly move that amendment as a measure of our confidence in what this country can do independently without having to sell itself out as a junior partner to the U.S.

Mr. Edwards: Back to the 19th century. What a reactionary speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair finds the amendment in order. Resuming debate.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have sat for I think an hour and a half over two days listening to the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). All I can say is that the one blessing of having him here in the House is that he is not back at the University of Windsor warping young minds. I have never heard so much gobbledegook, so much distortion, so much inaccuracy, so much fear-mongering. He spends an hour and 15 minutes saying "Beware! Beware! It's a tough world out there. We are going to get gobbled up. The Americans are going to buy us. They are going to destroy us. We will lose our social programs. We will lose our independence. We will lose hundreds of thousands of jobs." Then at the end of the speech he says "We NDPers have confidence in Canada. We believe we can compete. We can take on the world and conquer the world." What an absurdity! On logic he flunks totally.

Mr. Althouse: You would rather cosy up to the U.S.

Mr. Andre: Well, in one part of his speech I think he said "We are not going to allow a situation where people are taking orders from Chicago and Washington and New York." His colleagues applauded vigorously. He left one city out, that is Detroit, the city where the U.S. auto industry is headquartered. That is the industry in which we have had free trade for 22 years—free trade which has brought tremendous prosperity to that member's constituency and the constituency of the leader of his party.

Look at the absurdity of it. Oshawa is not on the StatsCan list for unemployment, they cannot measure any! Oshawa has more foreign investment per capita than any city in the country. Yet do we hear a word of condemnation? Apparently foreign investment in Oshawa is a wonderful thing. Foreign investment in Calgary is terrible! Apparently a job with a foreign multinational in Calgary is a horrible thing to behold, but a job with a foreign multinational in Oshawa is a wonderful thing that we must protect.

For months and months we heard the NDP saying "Don't touch the Auto Pact. You can't touch the Auto Pact, it's too vitally important". The Auto Pact is a free trade arrangement which has brought tremendous prosperity to Ontario. If we had free trade in other industries, petrochemicals for example; if the 18 per cent royalties on Canadian chemicals were removed and we had the opportunity to take advantage of the raw materials and expertise in the West with a huge market to the south, maybe we would not be able to measure the unemployment rates in Red Deer, Medicine Hat, and Fort Saskatchewan. However, the NDP says that that is an opportunity against which we must guard.

Why are jobs in Windsor and Oshawa created through the Auto Pact a wonderful thing while jobs in Medicine Hat, Red Deer, and Fort Saskatchewan created through free trade not a wonderful thing? I want the NDP to go to Alberta and tell the people why foreign investment in Oshawa is so wonderful yet would be so terrible in the West.

Mr. Althouse: The difference is job guarantees.

Mr. Andre: The situation in Oshawa is good. It is terrific and we are all proud and happy about that. At present Canadians consume 9 per cent of the automobiles made in North America. We produce 14 per cent. Under the investment plans put in place by the auto producers, by 1991 Canada will produce 19 per cent of the cars made in North America and consume 9 per cent. How long does the NDP think that that kind of inequity between Canada and the United States would exist without the protection of a free trade agreement? How long do they think it would take the Congressmen and Senators from the auto-producing states to demand that the Auto Pact be renegotiated, which it can be at any time? It can be cancelled with a year's notice. How long do they think their sacred Auto Pact would exist without a free trade agreement? It would not last very long. They should be hailing the free trade agreement as the best possible mechanism to protect the prosperity which is now theirs.

On several occasions in his speech the Hon. Member said that the free trade agreement will cost hundreds of thousands of jobs. He went to the absurd lengths of talking about unemployment rates in member countries of the EEC. He suggested that somehow this is evidence that free trade causes unemployment. There are 71 countries in the world involved in free trade arrangements. We have seen the gathering together under free trade arrangements and the lowering of free trade barriers between countries since the post-war period. Nowhere in the world have we seen a country withdraw because the free trade arrangement created the unemployment which the NDP says it will.

I recall when the United Kingdom had its debate about joining the European Economic Community. I recall the Labour Party, soul mates of the NDP, saying that it was outrageous for Britain to join the European Economic Community, that it would disappear.

Mr. Manly: Tell us about unemployment in the north of England.

Mr. Andre: The Hon. Member shouts about unemployment in the north of England. The fact is that the Labour Party, which knows the situation a lot better than the Hon. Member, has changed its policy. It now recognizes that membership in the European Common Community is beneficial to Britain. Even the Labour Party recognizes that it would be stupid to withdraw.

Mr. Althouse: How did the farmers make out in Britain? They did very well, didn't they?

Mr. Andre: I can understand the NDP saying that Margaret Thatcher does not know what is right for Britain. I accept that as a partisan remark. However, they also have the audacity, the arrogance, the ignorance, to suggest that Neil Kinnock does not know what is good for them either. Of course, the Vice-President of Socialists International is their Party Leader. I guess that makes them experts on everything in the world. They say that Neil Kinnock is an idiot for convincing the Labour Party that membership in the EEC is appropriate.

Mr. Cassidy: That's ridiculous.

Mr. Althouse: The EEC gives farm people a lot of protection.

Mr. Andre: What kind of test is given to people who join the NDP caucus? Are they found walking down the street or do they have to be educated? This is incredible.

Every economic think tank in the country has said that the free trade agreement will be a net generator of jobs for Canada. The numbers vary because they are trying to predict the future which is always difficult. However, everyone says there will be a net benefit in jobs except, of course, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor. No one else in the whole country says that.

It is not as though the NDP has a great record of predictions to fall back on. On November 8, 1984, we introduced the economic statement on which we ran in the election and which was approved by the people of Canada. At that time the NDP fearlessly predicted that that economic policy would cost 150,000 jobs. In righteous indignation the Member for Essex—Windsor stood up and said, "Mr. Speaker, this is a disaster for Canada". Since then Canada has created 1,000 new jobs every single day. That is what the NDP knows about predictions. It is galling that they stand up and say that the Government has no credibility. They predicted a loss of 150,000 jobs yet say they have credibility.

The British Labour Party recognizes that membership in a trade union is a good idea, but the NDP says that the British Labour Party does not know what is good for them, that the NDP knows it is bad to be a member of the EEC. That is absurd, to put it mildly. That is one of the reasons they are getting so desperate. None of the five elections in which I have run have been single-issue elections. Nevertheless, the NDP want an election on this issue—

Mr. Manly: To throw you bums out.

Mr. Andre: —because they know that there is no basis for the arguments they are making. They know that in the end the truth will out. They know that in truth this is a great deal for Canada and they want an election before the bulk of Canadians find that out.

Mr. Manly: You're signing it before the bulk of Canadians find out the truth. Why are you rushing to sign it if you say the truth isn't out yet?

Mr. Gauthier: That's not very strong, Harvie.

Mr. Foster: That's your convoluted logic, Harvie.

Mr. Andre: I look forward to an election on this issue, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to an election comparing our record with NDP predictions. I look forward to having the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) coming to Calgary from Oshawa where there is zero unemployment. They have all that foreign investment. They have a free trade agreement. I look forward to him coming to speak on behalf of the New Democratic Party candidate in Calgary Centre to explain what a terrible thing we are doing. I want to hear him telling Calgarians that they are going to disappear and all become Americans, that the Stars and Stripes will be flying from the top of the Petro-Canada tower, and that they will stop being Canadians if they go along with this deal.

I was in Oshawa a couple of weeks ago and I was shocked, as I looked around, not to see any Stars and Stripes on any buildings. It looked like a Canadian city to me and the people to whom I talked were certainly proud Canadians. Many of them work for General Motors and have good paying jobs. They are proud of the fact that in Oshawa they can produce a car $1,200 cheaper than the Americans in Detroit. They have a right to be proud of that. It made them stronger Canadians.

The NDP argue that the way to become stronger Canadians is to put up the barriers and have no truck or trade with the Yankees. If that is how free trade will work, I would like to travel to Europe to see what is happening there. I have not had the opportunity to travel like the back-benchers because I have been too busy. I would like to go to Europe to see all those people in Frankfurt speaking French, people in Paris speaking German, or people in Rome speaking English. I imagine that the Union Jack must be flying from the Vatican since one's identity disappears with a free trade agreement.

Apparently, all the social programs in those countries will have to be identical as a result of that trading arrangement. I will have to travel to Europe to see how the unemployment insurance schemes in Italy, Denmark and Luxembourg are identical. The old age pensions must be identical in all of those countries, if the pensions exist at all since trade apparently makes such things difficult. According to the NDP, such programs must be identical and pretty miniscule. The NDP are suggesting that our social programs will disappear and we will disappear as a country. What absurdity!

This agreement will generate hundreds of thousands of new jobs, according to all the experts. Those who say that this will not happen are the same experts whose predictions in the last three years have turned out to be totally wrong.

I could go on for hours ridiculing the NDP, considering the ammunition they provide. However, I want to spend a few minutes talking about one group for whom even some New Democrats admit the free trade agreement is nothing but a benefit. That group is the consumers. Howard Pawley acknowledged that the consumers will benefit. Indeed, they will benefit very substantially.

Mr. Frith: Prove it.

Mr. Andre: The Hon. Member says prove it.

Mr. Gauthier: Do not be as bad as the NDP. Give us some facts.

Mr. Andre: We have some facts.

Mr. Frith: Bill C-22 will save consumers money.

Mr. Andre: I am glad he mentioned Bill C-22. Let me quote what the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) said. He is muttering about Bill C-22, but he remembers what he said in the Canadian Pharmaceutical Review about Bill C-22. He said it was a good Bill.

Mr. McDermid: That is why he is heckling. He is embarrassed.

Mr. Andre: If he keeps this up, I will tell Malépart.

There is no question that the consumer is a clear winner. First, there is the dropping of tariffs on imports from the United States. In 1986, the total tariffs paid on goods imported from the United States amounted to $2.1 billion. The removal of that by itself automatically means at least that benefit.

But there are more benefits. If U.S. goods come in to Canada tariff-free, they are therefore cheaper for Canadian consumers. Similar goods coming in from Japan, Germany and other countries will have to be cheaper in order to compete. While they will not have the tariff reduction, they will have to drop their prices or lose their market share. In either case, the consumer will get the benefit.

Third, Canadian consumers will have to compete and therefore the prices of those goods will drop. Therefore, a drop in tariffs on goods coming from the United States will cause a price drop on goods produced in Canada and goods imported from other countries. The consumer will benefit in all those areas.

Some may express concern about the Canadian producer. The Canadian producer has the benefit of tariff-free raw materials and parts which go into their goods. More important, Canadian producers have the benefit of the entire North American market in which to compete. Even the NDP recognize the fundamental principle that the more one produces the lower the unit cost will be. The bigger the market, the bigger the opportunity for longer production runs and lower unit costs. From every standpoint the consumer is a very substantial beneficiary.

We have examined what a typical consumer might save on typical goods. For instance, the cost of the average new house in Canada would include $72,000 for building materials. The consumer would save $4,600 as a result of tariff reductions. The savings on floor coverings is $300 and some $500 for major appliances such as a fridge, stove, washer and dryer. Therefore, an average family buying the average new house will save $8,000, according to Statistics Canada figures.

Mr. Cassidy: That is a ridiculous estimate and you know it.

Mr. Andre: It is here in the study and the Hon. Member, if he had the intellectual honesty, would admit it.

Mr. Cassidy: Where is the study? Table it.

Mr. Andre: Even Howard Pawley recognizes that the consumer benefits, but not this bunch over here.

Mr. Orlikow: Table the study.

Mr. Andre: We will have more to say about consumer benefits as the weeks and months unfold, and as we go into an election. I am looking forward to debating with the NDP anywhere, at any time, about consumer benefits, jobs or any other aspect of this free trade agreement, because they know in their souls that it is a good deal for all of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I have never heard such a ridiculous and nonsensical speech in my life. I have not been listening to the Minister enough in this House, I can see.

• (1220)

I have two or three comments first and then a question. First, of course, to say the Auto Pact is free trade is absolute nonsense. It is something the Government has been trying to tell the west is the case, and it is not true. What exists are safeguards within a sectoral agreement, something of which we are entirely in favour, which protect the jobs of Canadian workers and Canadian communities.

With respect to the Minister's chemical sector, about which he talked and about which I also talked in my speech as something which would make sense for us to move toward in terms of a sectoral agreement, it would make sense because that sectoral agreement would have safeguards that protect those jobs in Calgary and Edmonton and would see to it we have some kind of handle on the industry, which we do not have in this kind of across-the-board deal. The prediction of hundreds of thousands of lost jobs, I remind the Minister, is not my prediction. That is the testimony which, unfortunately, the Minister, because he is so busy, did not happen to read or hear, as I did as a member of the committee which went across this country, because guess he was too busy to do that as well. It came from the individual industries which told us quite clearly that these were the thousands and thousands of jobs, industry by industry, which are going to be lost by this deal. The latest group, we were told yesterday, is the printing industry in Canada which said that 6,500 jobs would be lost as a consequence of this trade deal. If the Minister wants to challenge them, let him go ahead, but I think those people know a good deal more about their own industry than he does.

With respect to the European Community, the greatest piece of nonsense put forward is the suggestion that the Labour Party has somehow become a great convert to the European Community. They said, as we say, that the people of this country, just as the people of Britain, have to pass judgment first as to whether they should be part of the Common Market. The people of Britain voted and decided to go into the Common Market. Since that time Britain's unemployment rate has gone up from 1 million to 3 million. The Norwegians were given the same chance to make a choice. The people made their choice to stay out of the Common Market and their unemployment rate is significantly lower than that of Britain.

If the Minister is so convinced that free trade is wonderful for this country, why is there nothing in this trade agreement in front of us which offers any guarantee with respect to jobs that are going to be established? Why is there nothing in this trade agreement which offers any possibility of the Government negotiating with the companies which are in this country, foreign and local, in order to see to it that job guarantees are provided? If he is so convinced that jobs are going to be established, why has that so conspicuously been out of this agreement when it was part of the Auto Pact and should be part of any sectoral agreement we sign?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, first, just very quickly because of the Member's opening comments about the Auto Pact, the Hon. Member is trying to deceive Canadians that somehow the Auto Pact is inviolate and will last forever—

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There are many possibilities of attacking and counter attacking in this House, but to claim that one Hon. Member is attempting to deceive the House, as I have read the rule books, is out of order. It is also completely incorrect in this case and the Minister knows it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is not sure that the Hon. Minister meant that the Hon. Member was deceiving intentionally. That is why the Chair does not find it is a point of order.

Mr. Andre: Of course, Mr. Speaker, I would not suggest that the Hon. Member would intentionally deceive Canadians. To suggest that would be to imply he knows the difference between fact and fiction. I would not make such a statement.

The Auto Pact, as the Hon. Member knows, has a one-year cancellation provision. In one year it can be cancelled. Given the fact that by 1991 we will be producing twice as many cars in Canada as we consume, as a proportion of the North American market, that Auto Pact does not stand a chance without the protective umbrella of a free trade agreement. Second, the Hon. Member talks about safeguards. Before those safeguards would come into play, 50 per cent of the auto plants in Canada would have to be shut down. We would have to shut down 50 per cent of the plants in this country before those safeguards come into play. So I ask the Hon. Member not to invoke this absurdity of safeguards somehow coming into play.

The Hon. Member wants guarantees. The faith of the New Democratic Party in written guarantee is mind boggling at times. It thinks the only deal worth doing is a deal that says, "You are guaranteed 1,649,323 jobs by July 1, 1991". That is an absurdity. The Hon. Member knows it is an absurdity. Sure, we could get those guarantees, if the Hon. Member could guarantee that the weather is going to be perfect so that agricultural crops are abundant and that there will be lousy weather in the rest of the agriculture producing world so we can sell; if the Hon. Member is going to guarantee that other economies in the world are going to work in such a fashion, or that the Middle East is not going to blow up in a war and shut down the oil fields. If the Hon. Member could somehow, through the magic of legislation, force all of those uncontrollable events to be controlled, then I suppose someone could make a guarantee. But we have the best economists in the country, independent third parties—these are not Conservative groups, but for instance, the C. D. Howe Institute, the Economic Council of Canada, Infometrica, Data Resources—

Mr. Orlikow: The Fraser Institute.

Mr. Andre: Yes, the Fraser Institute has a right wing philosophy but, for instance, Tommy Shoyama, who worked with Donald Macdonald, is no conservative. He cut his eye teeth with Tommy Douglas. He says it is a good deal. So the Hon. Member is absurd. He knows his party is sitting out there in isolation with Bob White and Shirley Carr and it is starting to get cold as the rest of the people drift off, and that is why the frantic nature of its Opposition.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this agreement, according to the Government, is that it will open the market for Canadians in the United States and for the Americans in Canada. In order to compete we have to bring down our costs. Part of the costs in Canada for every company is helping to pay for the social programs which we have and which the Americans do not. We have a medicare system, a hospital system and an old age pension system, none of which the Americans have. These programs cost the Canadian people billions of dollars. When we have to compete, I say to the Minister, are not companies going to come to Governments and say, "We can't compete because our taxes are too high. We have to cut back on those social programs?" That will be the result of this free trade agreement, if it goes through.

Mr. Andre: Let me return to the Auto Pact. At the present time in Canada an automobile can be produced for an average of $1,200 less than in the United States. That is why the big three are making these investments in Canada at this point in time.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) and the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor know that they are doing that in Canada where we have old age pensions, unemployment insurance, medicare, and all of those social programs. With those social programs in place, it is still more economical to produce a car in Canada than in the United States.

Mr. Orlikow: Because companies have to pay for it themselves in the United States.

Mr. Andre: Now the Hon. Member is doing the reverse of the argument. The Hon. Member is stating that because in the United States they do not have these social programs it is more costly for companies down there, and therefore that is why we can compete against them. He is on both sides of that fence. Isn't that a little painful?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Earlier today the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) rose and sought the unanimous consent of the House to revert to Private Members' Bills during Routine Proceedings. There have been some discussions. However, I would ask as a generosity on the part of the Government and the Official Opposition, that with unanimous consent we be allowed to revert to Routine Proceedings to allow the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre to introduce his Private Member's Bill, allowing him to have that Bill available for the draw at one o'clock today.

Mr. Hawkes: There have indeed been consultations. In the spirit with which the House quite frequently moves when people pass deadlines, from the procedural point of view of the Government there would be no objection in overcoming the deadline problem. However, at the same time it should be made clear that the consultations have brought forward another problem which will be of concern to the House in the long term.

We are dealing here with the situation where a Member is reintroducing a Bill in identical form that has been chosen once before in the draw and been considered by the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business. It has had one hour of debate in the House. In those circumstances the growing practice for Members who still care about the content has been to change the Bill and participate in a second draw.

In this particular case we are dealing with identical wording. I do not think that the problem will be solved today. It should be a future topic of discussion for the committee. It is not difficult to see that if we followed this practice to its logical conclusion we would reach the point where possibly all 20 Bills chosen in the draw at any one point in time could be issues on which the House has already had some consideration. That would not be in the spirit of parliamentary reform or in the best interests of the House.

If the Member chose to participate in a later draw to give himself more time to change the content, that would certainly be in order. From our point of view procedurally, simply missing the deadline on occasion for good reason should not be a reason for withholding unanimous consent.

The other issue is perhaps the broader and more important. If the Member were to reconsider and request more time to redraft the Bill and place it in a future draw, the House would understand and appreciate that. But if the Hon. Member wishes the identical Bill to come forward into the draw, I can see that there might be some difficulty with that.

Mr. Gauthier: We on this side concur with the proposal that we revert back to that item in Routine Proceedings allowing the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) to table his Bill. The Parliamentary Secretary has made a valid and good argument that, if the Bill is in the same wording as was once dealt with by the House, and the House having pronounced itself, whether or not the debate ended with a vote is irrelevant. Having pronounced ourselves on a particular item and with the appropriate wording at that time, I can hardly see how one could retable the same Bill word for word and comma for comma and ask the House to again pronounce itself on the same Bill. I think there is a good argument to be made for redundancy. The House cannot be asked to pronounce itself on the same question twice in the same session.

I take the point made by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary about the committee looking into the possibility of amending our orders. At this time, I do not see that that would impact on the question at hand, which is to revert back to Routine Proceedings allowing the Member to table his Bill. Perhaps he will see the committee and eventually modify the Bill to meet with the requirements of good parliamentary procedure, which is not to present the same question twice in the same session.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before we revert to Routine Proceedings, I would like to point out to Hon. Members Standing Order 42(2) which states:

> (2) The dropping of an item pursuant to section (1) of this Standing Order shall not be considered a decision of the House.

Therefore, in the case of the Bill of the Hon. Member, there was not a decision of the House on the first occasion. I gather there is unanimous consent to revert back to Introduction of Bills?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PUBLIC EMPLOYEES POLITICAL RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-277, an Act to provide for the political rights of public employees.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank Hon. Members. Perhaps the points that have been raised can be looked at by the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business for a clearer indication of what might take place in the future.

The issue in my Bill is one I have been pursuing since I came to Parliament in 1984. It is to ensure that on as broad a base as possible members of the Public Service of Canada and of related Crown corporations, et cetera, should have the ability to form, to be involved in political Parties, and to be involved in campaigns without the types of fears that they now undergo because of a very ambiguous situation.

In my constituency it is not even clear whether a public servant who works as a truck driver, or a secretary, or in some other job, can put up a sign for an election candidate. I believe that this creates difficulties for all of the Ottawa area Members, and also people in many other parts of the country.

I believe as a matter of basic principle that the rights in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms should be granted, and that is the purpose of this Bill, which I hope will be considered favourably by the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business when it has the draw this afternoon.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Carney that this House endorse, as being in the national interest, the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement, the legal text of which was tabled in the House of Commons on Friday, December 11, 1987, and the amendment of Mr. Langdon (p. 11885).

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on this resolution before the House concerning the Canada-U.S. trade deal. I had the opportunity to be with the standing committee during a number of the hearings in Ottawa and across western Canada. One theme that came through during the hearings across western Canada was that there was no text available, no one knew what was happening, and the general public did not have an opportunity to put forward its views. Although the committee put in a very onerous five days in five territories or provinces during that week, the general public did not have an opportunity.

Therefore, we find ourselves today dealing with the final text of this agreement here for the first time, which the committee did not have access to at its official hearings, and to which the public did not have access. We now have a three day debate in which to consider this matter, perhaps the most important trade agreement that Canada has ever proposed entering into.

It seems that we are on a fast track of three days in anticipation of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) signing the agreement on January 2, yet we are told that the United States Congress will not deal with the issue until June, 1988. It seems that ironically we have been put on a fast track, the United States is on a slow track, and the Canadian people generally are very upset and concerned about this.

I was interested to note that when the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) spoke this morning he did not mention two things. He did not mention that the Consumers' Association of Canada, which has historically been in favour of a free trade deal with the United States, has gradually, as it saw the details of the deal, reduced its support to practically nil.

I think it is also important to look at the deal from the consumers' point of view. I live in a border city in the Sault Ste. Marie—Algoma district where many consumers have been dramatically misled by the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) to believe that they would be able to go to the United States and bring back unlimited amounts of goods with no duty or tax. In fact, that is not true. Last week officials made clear that the same limit of $100 after a 48-hour visit would apply, that the same sales tax of 12 per cent would apply, and that there would be no reduction in the duties on goods brought into Canada from the United States which were manufactured in Japan, Malaysia, or some other country.

On average, 80 per cent of all goods going into the United States from Canada, and I assume vice versa, are duty-free. The amount of duty reduction is very low. The idea that Canadians will have unlimited access to the United States and that there will be no customs duties is incorrect. In fact, there will be even greater customs inspections because each item brought back from the U.S. would have to be identified to ensure that it was manufactured in the United States. It would be necessary to ensure that the goods on which duties will be reduced over a 10-year period are actually manufactured in the United States.

I want to talk for a moment about the agricultural side of the issue. When the external affairs committee was in Saskatchewan, Alberta, Manitoba, and British Columbia, we heard long and very concerned presentations from agricultural groups. Some groups like hog producers, beef producers, and Canadian cattlemen who essentially have free trade now are pleased to see that there will be free trade in the future. I understand that over the course of a five-year period there will be a reduction of one cent per pound on the amount of duty they will pay. That applies to red meat going in either direction across the border.

However, groups like the Canadian Federation of Agriculture have expressed concern. In its brief it said that the draft agreement did not fully meet the requirements set forth by the federation at the onset of the negotiations, and that Canada had not achieved the trade rules and dispute handling mechanisms which it sought. That comment was echoed and spelled out in graphic terms by B.C. wine producers, as well as tender fruit and fruit and vegetable associations in that province.

Similarly, the majority of members of the Saskatchewan pool voted against the trade deal. The Ontario Federation of Agriculture has turned it down in a strong and decisive manner. Maritime groups have turned it down, as has the UPA in Quebec. I understand that it will be having a press conference this afternoon in which it will further elaborate upon its concerns.

Just to show how insensitive the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) has been, he volunteered that the UPA in Quebec did not read the deal and did not know what was in it. They know exactly what is in the deal. They are very concerned about the arrangement under Article 710 and how it will be subservient to Article 703 which provides for the removal of all tariff barriers and quotas in the long haul. They are extremely concerned.

At a recent conference which they had in Quebec, it was interesting that they characterized the Prime Minister's side of the deal by holding up a little white rabbit in a cage and by indicating that the President of the United States was leading a full draughthorse around to show who won and who lost in the agreement. It was also interesting that the junior Minister of Agriculture was presented with the little white rabbit in the cage to dramatize the loss of so much in the deal.

There is very grave concern among agricultural producers that the dispute handling mechanism will not change the rules of access to the U.S. market. For instance, the countervail duty on hogs today of 4.3 cents per pound or $10 per hog going into the U.S. is still there. If we are to get rid of all these countervail problems, why did we not get rid of that one?

Clearly the same laws are in place, as is the long rigmarole. The omnibus trade Bill which has many provisions relating to agriculture will probably be put in place. The trade agreement will not change that.

It is clear from our hearings across the country that no group will be hurt worse than the grape and wine industry. Some 20,000 jobs will be totally sacrificed. They will be going out of business. There are tremendous areas of Canada in the Niagara Peninsula and in the Okanagan Valley which are suitable for such crops, but they will be sacrificed in the deal. I think it is one of the most shameful acts that has ever taken place. We know that it was a personal deal between the Prime Minister and the President. The President has his rich friends in California and he ensured that the deal was carried out. Perhaps he can tip his hat to them, but it will certainly carry a very angry odour with it throughout history in those areas of the country.

Similarly, seasonal tariffs which are absolutely essential to the fruit and vegetable industry will be wiped out by the agreement. The snap back provision introduced by the Government is ineffective and will require that the industry contract or stay small. It will not be able to expand. It is unbelievable that that was given away.

It is also clear that the powers and prerogatives of the Canadian Wheat Board will be reduced by the deal. The two-price system, which has provided some $280 million of benefit to western farmers and some $30 million to Ontario farmers, will be wiped out. We are not clear whether there will be a compensation package. That is a weakness in the deal which was identified by the standing committee. Also, there is no industrial adjustment or compensation package for any group of producers which will be adversely affected by the deal.

One of the greatest concerns of the Canadian agricultural industry, especially in the West, is the Crow benefit in that some $750 million has been removed for shipments of Canola oil and Canola meal to the Pacific northwest. The Government has indicated that it is an export subsidy. We know that the United States will be going to the GATT negotiations determined to remove all export subsidies, and now the Government has admitted that this is an export subsidy. Furthermore, the Government is committed in the agreement to supporting the United States. They will go hand in hand to the GATT. What chance does the Crow benefit have of surviving the next GATT round of negotiations?

Canola is one of the exciting crops developed in Canada. It has been gaining markets in the Pacific northwest. It is interesting that the Government gave away a transportation subsidy which will amount, in the private sector if it has to be paid by producers from January 1, 1989, to some $23 per tonne in Alberta and over $30 per tonne at shipping points in Manitoba and Saskatchewan. That assistance stops January 1, 1989, but the tariff on Canola oil into the Pacific northwest which amounts to over $30 a tonne will be phased out over 10 years. It is a shameful act.

The chief negotiator for Canada said that the United States is like a Third World country in the way it negotiates and that they were snookered by Mr. Reisman. I ask on that Canola deal whether Mr. Reisman thinks that the Canadians really snookered the American negotiators. Clearly the Canadians did not. We lost tremendously.

If we destroy the Canadian Wheat Board, and the move in this deal is in that direction because there will be tremendous pressure on the Canadian Wheat Board, Canadian producers with a free flow of grain across the border will only be able to deliver to their milling operation or for export to the limit of their quota books. United States producers will have unlimited access to deliver in Canada. That, in the long haul will put pressure on the Canadian Wheat Board and will reduce its authority.

The chief negotiator on the American side we are told is Dan Amstutz who was the former chief executive officer of the Cargill organization, the largest private corporation in the world. He was there at the same time as an official from Cargill in Canada, seconded to the Minister of Agriculture's (Mr. Wise) office. Did we have the large private grain companies negotiating on both sides of this issue on agriculture? If we did you can bet that the Canadian farmer did not come off best in this agreement.

I want to turn briefly to supply management, marketing boards and the feather industry. Clearly we have given away the tariffs and increased the quota for the feather industry so that there will be massive increases in the amount of chicken, turkey and poultry coming into Canada, some 20 per cent over the previous quotas allowed.

Concerning eggs, some six million more dozen will be allowed into the country under this agreement. What did we get in return, Mr. Speaker? As far as I know we got nothing. There is no new access to the U.S. market. There will be tremendous pressure on Canadian producers because of the loss of the tariff.

The dairy farmers of Canada have indicated that they will oppose the deal because the Government has refused to put dairy products, like ice-cream, yogourt and fluid milk, on the import controlled list. We are not clear why the Government has refused to do that. We suspect the Government has refused because the farmers have to show injury. Is any dairy processing plant going to show injury in that regard?

It is interesting the the Quebec Government and the UPA demanded that Article XI of GATT, which provides for quotas on supply management commodities, be in the final draft. It was in the final draft as Item 710, but the only problem with that is that Item 710 is subject to any other section in the agreement. If we look at Item 703 it says that the agreement is to remove all tariff and all import barriers. Article 710 is in the agreement but it is subject to Article 703 which is to remove barriers to trade and to the free flow of farm goods coming across the border, and we cannot be very assured. I think that is one of things the UPA will be arguing in its presentation today at a press conference in Quebec.

The Grocery Products Manufacturers of Canada, one of the largest employers in Canada, appeared before the committee. It employs over 200,000 Canadians and is the largest manufacturing sector in the country, doing some $40 billion worth of business. That association said that the agreement is clearly unworkable and it will put pressure—the Americans are doing so as well—on the Government to remove marketing boards and border controls. Agriculture is clearly under the gun. That is why groups like UPA and the Ontario Federation of Agriculture are strongly opposing this agreement. The grocery products manufactures say that they simply cannot operate in a situation where competition from the U.S. is not supply management.

It seems to me that that is one of the very great concerns of the whole supply management industry in Canada. The Government of Canada is going to GATT. The Government has put the marketing boards on the table for negotiation at GATT. The United States is opposing marketing boards. Practically all of the Cairns Group is opposing marketing boards. The Canadian Government has said we are going to the GATT hand in hand with the United States to remove subsidies. I think in the long run we will destroy our whole marketing board and supply management system in Canada because of the Government's position. Here the Government will start the ball rolling and in GATT the Government will, in my view, completely give away our marketing system which has served us well. It has cost less than subsidies and it has been especially effective. It not only applies to the dairy and the feather industry but also to the Canadian Wheat Board.

I think we are rushing into a trade deal where we are giving up a great deal and probably will give more in the GATT negotiations while getting very little in return. We have hitched our wagon to the United States saying this will be fortress North America. In fact, the United States is our competitor on most commodities around the world. We say we are going to support the Americans' position where often their position is not in our interest. There is a great deal of concern in the agricultural community. That is why so many farm groups across Canada are opposing this trade deal.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will proceed with the question and comment period after Question Period if the Hon. Member is in the House.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 12.59 p.m. the House took recess.

TAX REFORM

OPPOSITION TO TAXATION OF FOOD

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have more than 150,000 signatures of people residing in Canada who object to the Government's decision to consider taxing food and food products as an option.

Last week in Toronto, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced he was withdrawing his proposal to tax food. Mr. Speaker, I don't think Canadians have any more reason to trust this Government than they did when it deindexed old age security pensions.

The Chairman of the Finance Committee, Mr. Blenkarn, is asking for $57,000 to go to New Zealand and look at how they tax food. Why didn't the Minister of Finance say fairly and squarely yesterday that the Government refused to tax food? Why did he say that certain essential products should not be taxed and will be exempt?

Mr. Speaker, I warn this Government that the Liberal Party will continue its opposition until it has the assurance that bread, milk, butter and other food products will not be taxed.

TRADE

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITIONS OF NDP AND LIBERAL PARTIES

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, sometimes we lose sight of the fundamental precepts upon which the Government bases its policy and upon which opposition Parties base their criticisms. The debate over free trade is a case in point.

At the heart of the NDP's political agenda and its position on free trade is the tired old precept of greater government control over the day-to-day lives of Canadians: more regulation, more taxes, more state ownership, more interference and more control over the decisions Canadians must take in their homes and in their businesses.

At the heart of the Liberal position on free trade is a confused, contradictory hodge-podge of principles sometimes called pragmatic but more actually called opportunistic. It is no wonder members of the NDP and the Liberal Party are frightened of free trade. It goes against everything they stand for. The concept of free trade is as foreign to the NDP and the Liberals as individual initiative, private business, and freedom from the heavy hand of state.

The bold initiative of the Government is based on the principle that Canadians deserve every opportunity to free themselves from dependence on the state. Free trade is based on the principle that Canadians have a right to as large a market as possible from which to reap the rewards of their ingenuity and hard work. Free trade is based on the same principles that guide the Government daily, bold, courageous, daring principles that the Liberals and the NDP cannot stomach. Fortunately, Canadians—

Mr. Speaker: I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

TAX REFORM

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT MEASURES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday's typical Tory tax reform is one more example of the Government's dishonesty. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) refuses to provide real tax fairness for Canadian families.

Average and low-income families will still be worse off after this so-called reform than they were before the Government came to power. Under the guise of tax reform they will now pay a sweeping new tax on virtually all goods and services after the next election.

Middle-income families will lose 60 per cent of their child benefits by 1991 while households with incomes of over $100,000 will get income tax cuts five times greater than families making $30,000.

While the Minister continually claims that his purpose is to help those most in need, poor families who should not have been paying taxes in the first place will continue to be fleeced and more will start paying taxes each year. Others are not eligible for the non-refundable child tax credit.

The Minister has partially deindexed the child tax credit and the family allowance and the new tax credits will not be indexed to inflation, ensuring that family benefits will be steadily eroded. Why does the Government not be honest with Canadians for once and admit that its vision is of a system which gives more to those who already have the most? Canadians have been handed an empty package of broken promises and political rhetoric for a merry Christmas and—

Mr. Speaker: I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

PLIGHT OF THE HOMELESS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, the plight of many thousand homeless men, women and entire families in Canada was highlighted during 1987, the International Year of the Homeless. Canadians were made more aware of this despair, and Governments were encouraged to address and resolve these inadequacies. In two weeks, the year designated to accentuate this issue and find satisfactory solutions will be over but the crisis will not.

Throughout urban and rural centres, soup kitchens and emergency facilities have been established to offer sustenance and shelter. While these measures address the problem in the short term, they do not provide a stable base from which these people can reintegrate into the community. The problems of the homeless are chronic and appear to be getting worse. These people are falling through the cracks of our society.

I join my constituents of Fundy—Royal in calling upon the Government to ensure that the homeless and poorly lodged live in adequate and healthy housing and that these citizens are able to participate fully in Canadian life. Let us not allow the commitment of 1987 to become yesterday's concern in 1988.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—GOVERNMENT'S LEGAL POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the face of considerable authority to the contrary, the Government notes that it has the right to implement the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal by passing legislation in areas of provincial control. Not only is the Government's position not supported by the weight of legal authority but the position is contradicted by Canada's Ambassador to the U.S., Allan Gotlieb, the author of a book on international treaties.

In his book published in 1968, Mr. Gotlieb wrote that the Parliament of Canada cannot, through making a treaty, legislate in fields of provincial legislative competence.

• (1405)

When pressed in the House to provide the legal opinions on which Canada based its position, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) offered only vague assurances about the trade and commerce power and the Constitution. Yet Ambassador Gotlieb points out in his book that the Canadian Constitution, unlike that of the U.S., does not allow Parliament, through implementation of a treaty, to change the distribution of legislative powers. If the Minister has any legal opinions to back up his position, he should produce them.

Apart from the legal arguments, the Conservative Government is making a power grab against well-established provincial powers which exceeds even the Conservative's own exaggerated allegations about the Trudeau Government.

AGRICULTURE

ADDITIONAL GOVERNMENT FUNDING WELCOMED

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to applaud the new agricultural initiatives announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on Wednesday. The Government's record in the agricultural sector is unparalleled. Never before have the needs of the nation's farmers been met with such innovative and timely programs. Since 1984 government spending in agriculture has increased nearly 400 per cent.

The grain and oilseed farmers of the Pembina riding, along with the producers of peas, beans, lentils, and processed alfalfa, were delighted to learn that the Special Canadian Grains Program has been extended to the 1987 crop year. This $1.1 billion program, coupled with the extension of the farm fuel tax rebate, will have a strong impact on their financial stability.

I commend the Government for its measures to instil new vitality into the Farm Credit Corporation. The deferred loan payment, together with the provision of $100 million to cover corporate losses, will enable the FCC to continue to reach out and help those farmers in financial difficulties.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry but the Hon. Member's time has expired.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAELI AND PALESTINIAN RIGHTS—CALL FOR HOLDING OF PEACE CONFERENCE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party has a tradition of commitment to the security of Israel within established and recognized borders. At the same time we have supported the right of the Palestinians to a recognized national homeland of their own.

We have also called on the Palestinians and the PLO to recognize unequivocally the right of Israel to exist, within secure and recognized borders. We have called for recognition of the PLO as an important voice of the Palestinian people, and for their participation in effective and meaningful negotiations.

We have criticized the fostering of state directed and financed Israeli settlements in the West Bank as an obvious obstacle to a solution of the problems in that area.

It is clear to us that the Israeli response to the current situation in the West Bank and Gaza is not helpful either. The use of live ammunition on crowds, and the increasingly routine resort to violence as a way of dealing with deep-rooted problems which require structural and political solutions, are disturbing and unacceptable. Neither terrorism nor military force is the answer. Years of bloodshed have hardened the hearts of too many in that area of the world.

The NDP supports the idea of a peace conference and calls on all who are involved to show new resolve in the search for peace—resolve for peace rather than resort to violence.

FREE TRADE

TRIBUTE TO CERTAIN CANADIANS

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec Est): Mr. Speaker, by its attitude to free trade in the last few months, the Opposition has shown Canadians it is unworthy of aspiring to lead the Government of this country.

Only the Progressive Conservative Party, whose principles are based on respect for the freedom and growth of the individual and respect for law and order, has the qualifications to continue governing this country.

The Free Trade Agreement is based on these principles and urges Canadians to go the extra mile to be even more productive. It is an appeal for excellence, Mr. Speaker.

Today, I wish to pay special tribute to a large number of Quebecers who have decided to make the Free Trade Agreement their business.

I want to congratulate Laurent Beaudoin, Marcel Dutil, Gaëtan Mathieu and so many others who are responsible for establishing a coalition for free trade in the Province of Quebec and are attracting thousands of people to their cause.

That is a vote of confidence for Canada and its Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney.

PESTICIDES

CALL FOR REVIEW OF REGULATIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, through her book Silent Spring, Rachel Carson alerted the public to the dangers of chemical pesticides, particularly DDT. Silent Spring raised public awareness of environmental and health hazards that chemicals pose.

• (1410)

The just released Law Reform Commission study Pesticides in Canada notes that over the last two decades pesticide sales increased more than tenfold in Canada. Over the same period evidence has emerged of past and current pesticide related damage; fish and wildlife killings, farm worker deaths and poisonings, human health concerns in the general population, contamination of ground water, et cetera.

It is now urgent that the Government follow up on this timely review of the ineffective aspect of our laws in protecting human and environmental health from the hazards of pesticides which, by definition, are toxic and deliberately poisonous. Again we urge the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to launch a full public review of the regulation of pesticides in Canada now.

TRADE

REMOVAL OF EXPORT TAX ON BRITISH COLUMBIA SOFTWOOD LUMBER

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, it must be getting to be Christmas because certainly a spirit of good will prevailed yesterday when the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) announced the successful negotiations with the U.S. and the termination of the 15 per cent export charge on British Columbia softwood lumber.

This tax, which had been put in place in response to a U.S. countervail action, was a continuing source of irritation to industry and government. It was to be an interim measure until such time as the provinces could put in place comparable replacement measures. This has now been accomplished in B.C. with the introduction of a new stumpage system, and the tax has been lifted.

The decision of the Government to seek a negotiated solution to the softwood lumber dispute has turned out to be the most appropriate course. The opposition Parties' course of action, to continue the fight, would have resulted in at least an additional year of uncertainty and the loss of over $300 million in revenues to the provinces.

Once again the Government has been decisive. We have acted on our decisions.

Mr. Speaker: I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

ONTARIO SOYBEAN FARMERS—LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of Christmas the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced a second round of support for grain farmers. Yet for much of Ontario the farm announcement represents a kick in the teeth for soybean farmers. Comparing the support, 44 cents per bushel is given for wheat, 29 cents per bushel is given for corn, and one cent per bushel is given to soybean producers. This is a ludicrous and ridiculous reflection of the very difficult position in which soybean producers find themselves.

I have received calls from four farmers this week alone who told me that they face bankruptcy and repossession this week. We have to respond quickly to these farmers. There must be a neutral review of these ludicrous and ridiculous levels which have been established in order that soybean farmers get their fair share.

MINES AND MINING

IMPORTANCE OF FLOW-THROUGH SHARES

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has decided to restore part of the tax advantages of flow-through shares. Personally however, I would have preferred to see him maintain the rate of 133 1/3 per cent for three years.

Nevertheless, this Government recognizes the importance of sustained resource development in certain regions, and it is worried that these activities will start to decline during downturns in the industry. The Finance Committee felt that tax incentives or Government grants might be necessary as temporary measures, during periods of falling prices or during an economic recession, to ensure the survival of exploration activity in Canada. Our Government agrees with this position and is prepared to consider the temporary assistance that might be necessary in this case.

The fact remains that flow-through shares will probably be one of the last tax shelters still in effect after 1987, so today I continue my fight for our Abitibi prospectors, and next Sunday, I will attend the big prospectors rally at Val-d'Or. Together, and with the help of the Government of Quebec, we must find new ways to maintain economic renewal in the mining industry.

TAX REFORM

FAMILIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government has just announced new changes in relation with its tax reform which are regressive and unfair for Canadian families. The Government pretends that it is helping Canadian families and women. However, nothing so far supports this claim, quite the opposite! Families need an affordable child care program with universal access. The Government wants to spend a large amount of money by increasing deductions for child care services with proof of payment. This will benefit well-off families who already have spaces in daycare centres and who can afford such costly services, while refundable tax credits would have helped low-income and single parent families who do not have spaces in daycares and who cannot afford such services.

The Government had also promised to do everything in its power to change the spouse tax exemption into a refundable tax credit for spouses who stay at home, but the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has done nothing about it. He continues to ignore the important work of women at home and the personal independence which should be given to them. It is ridiculous, Mr. Speaker, for the Government to pretend that it is solving the problems of families for the 90s when it is applying measures which are more appropriate to the needs of the 50s.

TRADE

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—SUPPORT BY MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, for over 100 years the political economy of Canada had, by a combination of tariffs and freight rates, furthered central Canada manufacturers at the expense of agricultural and resource interests in the Maritimes and West and consumers across the nation.

Today our manufacturers are to be congratulated as, without exception, they support the free trade initiative. This confirms their maturity and their ability to compete internationally and to create new sales opportunities and new jobs without stifling government intervention.

The only voices of reaction still wanting to exploit the consumer, the farmer, the miner, the logger and the fisherman, are the Opposition Leaders and Premier Peterson. When history comes to be written, these will suffer the same fate as the mammoth, the sabre-toothed tiger, and the dodo.

TRADE

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON WORKERS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the proposed trade pact between Canada and the United States is causing grave concerns for Canadian workers. Bilateral free trade is being seen as a direct threat to their livelihood and way of life. For example, workers in labour intensive industries such as textiles, clothing, electrical products, leather products and toys, to name but a few, fear for the loss of their jobs.

Service workers, mostly women, are increasingly concerned about the potential threat to their jobs. Predictions estimate that Canadian women will lost tens of thousands of jobs and suffer severe deterioration in working conditions under the Mulroney trade agreement. Women will be major losers because their jobs are heavily concentrated in Canadian manufacturing and service industries. Over-all, more than 60 per cent of working Canadian women have jobs in the manufacturing industries. Many of these women who will face the prospect of future unemployment are middle-aged or immigrant women with poor prospects for job retraining.

There will be major American takeovers under this deal, and these absentee foreign owners will not protect Canadian jobs.

TAX REFORM

GOVERNMENT'S PROMISE NOT TO INCREASE TAXES—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, during the last election campaign, the Minister of Finance had promised not to increase taxes, and we now have a broken promise of $22 billion! Since the Conservatives have been in power, the Minister of Finance has increased the sales tax three times for a total of $8 billion. He has increased the tax on gasoline by $2 billion. He has increased income taxes by over $5 billion. He has imposed a $1 billion tax on long distance telephone calls. I repeat that the Minister of Finance had promised that the Conservative Government would not increase taxes, but that he has imposed $22 billion of new taxes on Canadians. Now, he is promising to give them back a mere $2 billion.

My question to the Minister of Finance is this, Mr. Speaker: Who is he trying to fool? And when will he refund the other $20 billion?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition likes to focus in on very narrow parts of the program. If the Hon. Member looks at the broad range of the government program as set out in the November, 1984, statement, he will see from there that the combination of that has resulted in 1,042,000 jobs being created. The unemployment rate has gone from 11.7 per cent down to 8.4 per cent. Mortgage payments of individuals, going on the average mortgage of about $50,000 or $60,000, have dropped in excess of $1,200 a year. So it is that broad economic program which is important, not individual items of it that the Leader of the Official Opposition would wish to pick out.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I am using the over-all figures from the Minister's own Department.

ELECTION PROMISE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The campaign promise of the Conservative Party, as set forth by the Minister of Finance during the 1984 election, was that they would not raise taxes. The bottom line is that the average Canadian family with an income of, say, $32,000 a year, pays $1,100 more in personal taxes every year than it did when the Conservative Government came to power.

Mr. McDermid: Who ran up the debt, John?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister of Finance says he is returning $300 to these families, but this is going to be wiped out in a few weeks by a new tax on wallpaper, paint, toys, handicrafts and long distance phone calls. My question is very simple. Why has the Minister of Finance so gouged Canadian families with new taxes since his arrival in power when he promised during the election campaign that he was not going to raise taxes by a single cent?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to remind the hon. gentleman that he has also said he felt it was important to get the deficit down. I would ask him how he was going to get the deficit down if he were on this side of the House?

Mr. Gauthier: Answer the question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I think he would have his mouth very tightly shut because he wouldn't have a word to say.

Let me talk about some of the benefits. A single wage earner earning under $25,000 is going to find he has a tax cut of $590 a year. A couple with one wage earner in the family with two children under 18 years will receive a tax cut of $710. A couple with one wage earner and four children under 18 years will find there is a $945 tax saving as a result of tax reform.

We are delivering on tax reform. It is very, very clearly here in the papers which have been accepted by many people.

Mr. Garneau: How can you say that?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I would say—

[Translation]

And I would say to the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides that it is very important, important enough to make the headlines in the Journal de Montréal "Winners: Families." It is true!

Mr. Garneau: You are true professional jugglers!

[English]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I did not make the promise. The Minister made the promise to Canadians during the 1984 election campaign that he would not raise taxes by a single cent. He has taken $22 billion from the pockets of Canadians and now he is saying he is going to return $2 billion. Big deal! He said during the election campaign he would not raise taxes, but he has taken $1,100 per family since he became Minister of Finance, year by year, out of the pockets of Canadian taxpayers, and he is now going to return $300, and all of that is going to be wiped out in two or three weeks by new taxes. Big deal!

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Let me turn to another area. We had a very interesting report from the House of Commons Finance Committee on tax reform. The Minister of Finance said he was going to listen to and follow that report. Yet he has rejected 85 per cent of the recommendations in the report of the committee which consisted of a majority of followers of the Government of which the Minister is a member. Why, in simple terms, has the Minister of Finance broken his word to Canadians both on taxes and on tax reform?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member, if he had taken the time to read the report, plus the response to the committee's report, would see that we have listened very carefully to the very good work that has been produced by the Finance Committee. As a result of the announcement that I made yesterday, 31 promises have been accepted in full or in part; 21 recommendations we said we either agree to in principle and need further work, or we feel that they should be studied further; 29 recommendations are not accepted. Some of those recommendations are grouped. I believe there is one that we could not accept, and it followed that four individual recommendations would not be accepted.

• (1425)

We have followed very closely what we said we would do with this report. As I stated yesterday, we appreciate very much the fine work that has been done by the members of the committee, led by my neighbour, the Hon.—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Who is that guy?

ELECTION PROMISE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, if I were the Minister of Finance I would not push my luck too far with the Member from Mississauga.

The Minister of Finance did not answer the question posed by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Before the election the Minister of Finance promised, on behalf of his Party, that if elected the Conservative Party would not raise taxes. He made that very straightforward promise.

I wish to ask the Minister the same question, which he did not answer. Why has he broken this promise and increased taxes by billions of dollars, including the sales tax, the tax on gasoline, alcohol and tobacco, the deindexation of the personal income tax, the surtax on personal income tax, for a total of $22 billion? Why has he broken the solemn promise that he made in the House on March 6, 1984?

Mr. McDermid: You were not around here when the Liberals piled up the debt.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me say very clearly to the Hon. Member—he was not here before and he probably cannot be held culpable for that—we did not anticipate the huge mess that we got into when we opened the books after we were elected in September, 1984.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Let me also correct a misstatement by the Hon. Member, as well as by his Leader, when they state that we have increased taxes by $22 billion. I reject that comment. I wish to say this to the Hon. Member. Yes, revenues have gone up. But 85 per cent of the reason for those revenues is the very healthy economy that we have seen over the course of the last three years.

When 1,042,000 more people are working, they pay taxes and generate personal tax revenues. That is why we have more revenues to date. We have one of the healthiest economies in the world today. That is why sales tax revenue increases are brought about. Yes, we have increased some taxes, I do not deny that. But don't ignore the healthy economy and the effect that that has on the revenues.

Mr. Garneau: What the Minister of Finance is telling me is that he taxed the economy back to progress.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER JUSTIFY MEASURES HE HAS TAKEN

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, it has been figured out. A while ago, I heard the comments made by the Minister responsible for Technology about families. We had a family with an annual income of $32,000 and we figured out what would have happened if the Government had kept its promises, if it had not deindexed tax schedules, if it had not increased the surtax and the income tax rates, if it had not changed the deindexation of family allowances; we found out that such a family earning $32,000 would have paid $1,100 less income tax. With tax reform, an amount of $300 will be refunded. There remains an increase of $800. How can the Minister say that he has helped the average family whose taxes are up $800 per year?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, again I say the same thing to the Hon. Member. He is looking at one part of the broad economic program of the Government of Canada. Part of that is tax reform, part of that is getting the deficit down, and part of that is getting interest rates down.

• (1430)

I remind the Hon. Member, as I just did his Leader, that payments on the average mortgage are down in excess of $1,200 per year. Surely that will have a tremendous impact on the health of the economy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I also remind the Hon. Member that if he looks carefully he will see that the net revenue for individuals, after taxes, is up.

SOCIAL JUSTICE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

Will the Minister admit to the House that under this so-called reform of our tax system, the average family will pay $1,000 more income tax than it did in 1984 when the Conservative Government was elected, while 60,000 profitable corporations will not be paying a cent? Is that Conservative justice?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think any objective observer—and I exclude the Hon. Member when I say that—

An Hon. Member: Objective or intelligent.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I am not saying that in a derogatory way.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member is not objective, but any objective observer would say that we have made major strides in tax reform to bring non-taxpaying but profitable companies into a taxpaying position. That is very, very clear, and any of the experts will tell him that.

There are companies that are not paying taxes. These are companies which have had substantial real losses in previous periods, where there is a carry forward—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Members over there are saying: "Oh, oh". They are laughing. I will tell them who those companies are.

Mr. Rodriguez: Who are they?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt wants to know who these companies are. Many of them are mining companies which have their offices in his riding, where they have lost money and they are carrying—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, $3.20 a pound.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt does not like to hear it because he knows that he will feel the heat when he goes home to his riding in Sudbury. He is going to have to explain why he wants to have the mining companies in his area that have lost money in previous years taxed today. If we did that, there would be job losses in those companies.

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister's stories are very touching. I would agree with him that any objective Bay Street lawyer would agree with him, that there is tax reform. Any fair-minded Canadian knows that the so-called reform is completely phoney.

U.S. MINIMUM CORPORATE TAX

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I saw the Minister on television last night—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: —saying that the Government had to be concerned, and I would agree with it, about the competitive position our tax system is in compared with that of other countries.

Would he be prepared to admit to his Bay Street colleagues that in the United States today there is a 20 per cent minimum tax on corporations if they make profits; even, I say to the Minister, in the United States? If we had that minimum 20 per cent corporate tax here on the 60,000 corporations which do not pay, we would have $2 billion in additional revenue and we could then reduce taxes, for example, on average and low-income Canadians. That would be real reform.

Mr. Shields: Anti-American and anti-business.

Mr. Crosbie: Pro Shirley Carr.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me reply to the Hon. Member in a serious way. We recognize that there are—and I think the Hon. Member's number is right—60,000 companies that are not paying tax and will be making profits. However, I pointed out in my speech yesterday that those companies belong to two categories. First, they are companies in cyclical industries which have lost money in a substantial way in previous years and have a loss carried forward. If he is suggesting that we change tax policy to tax, in effect, companies that have made losses, I would welcome that because then I would point out which companies are hurt by that. The other category is basically companies in the Atlantic provinces and parts of Quebec which have very minimal levels of earnings but take advantage of things like regional investment tax credits. Is the Hon. Member saying that we should hit those companies?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): These are the difficult decisions which must be made in tax reform. It is easy for the Hon. Member on the other side of the House to make these allegations but, if he has to live with the decisions, he is going to hurt a lot of Canadians by doing so.

Mr. Broadbent: I say to the Minister that the average Canadian, and the average business person too, believes that if they are making profits they should pay taxes. Poor people pay taxes, and every company which makes money in this country should be paying taxes too. If he wants to campaign on this, we will go into every region of the country and take him on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MINIMUM TAX—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, how does the Minister think the Republican Party in the United States is able to have a 20 per cent minimum tax and to get revenue there, and the Conservative Government up here can ignore $2 billion in revenue which could be used for the poor people of the country? Explain that.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: The Hon. Member for the Royal Bank.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Now, Ed, watch your language. What I would have to acknowledge is that if we did have a minimum tax in this country it might pick up political contributions that are funnelled through NDP organizations and passed on to municipal candidates.

Mr. Broadbent: Join the rest of the sleaze over there, Michael.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I am just telling you some of the things which might be picked up in a minimum tax.

The fundamental reason, as I said to his colleague from Nickel Belt, is that companies in Sudbury are not paying taxes today—

Mr. Riis: Like Royal Trust.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, just a year or two ago, was saying that times were tough in Sudbury, and we know that they were tough. Those companies have losses that they are carrying forward into this year, and some of them won't be paying tax this year. If he wants to put a minimum corporate tax on, that is the sort of—

Mr. Broadbent: We will do it and we will explain it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —company that he is going to hit. There will be lay-offs, and he is going to have to answer to his colleague from Nickel Belt why Ed is causing lay-offs in Sudbury with his minimum tax.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We will have an election on that.

AMOUNT OF TAX COLLECTED BY GOVERNMENT

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that since the Conservative Government came to power personal income taxes, sales taxes, and excise taxes have been increased by a total of $22 billion, will the Minister explain to the House if he really thinks it is honest to tell Canadians that they are getting a good deal now because he proposes to return $2 billion in 1988?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, The Toronto Star, another objective observer of the scene, also said: "Nine out of ten households to get $490 break under tax reforms".

Mr. Garneau: You know it is a joke to say that.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In the books here, as I have said, a $25,000 single earner under age 65 will get a tax reduction of $590 as a result of tax reform. A one-earner couple with two children under age 18 will get a savings of $710. Those are meaningful amounts.

The Hon. Member says: "What is the other half of the question?" The other half of the question is that the $22 billion figure is a fictitious figure. What I am saying, and what I have said before to other questioners from the Liberal Party, is that we have had the strongest economy of the seven largest industrialized countries in the last three years. The result of that is a substantial increase in personal income taxes because 1,042,000 more people are working today and they are paying taxes. They are not drawing down unemployment insurance. This is the positive approach that the Government is taking, and it is paying off.

WHITE PAPER SALES TAX PROJECTION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I think 22 to 2 is the Minister's own Catch-22 proposal—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Nicholson: —in which the consumer is caught. The Minister said my figures were fictitious. My figures come from his own Department and are published.

I would like to quote another figure which the Minister may call fictitious which comes from the economic and fiscal outlook in his White Paper, page 47. According to that, the sales taxes paid by Canadian consumers, the people caught in this Catch-22, will be $17 billion by 1990 as opposed to $7 billion in 1984-85.

The Minister knows, despite what he said in response to a question put by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, that he will not get the corporate taxes that he is anticipating because he has left every loophole in place which is used to shelter income. Therefore, how much does the Minister really expect to get from sales taxes to balance his budget? Is the $17 billion figure also an underestimate and, if so, is the sky the limit?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Member for Trinity has a reputation for asking straight questions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): She is alone in her caucus.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Member has just said that we have left every loophole in place. I know she does not believe that. I know she knows that is not true. If she is going to get back on track with her questioning she should withdraw that statement because most, as I said previously, objective observers will say that we have done a major job, not just in tax reform but in a major way throughout our term of office, eliminating a number of the tax preferences, the scientific research tax credit of, the carve-outs and "the Little Egypt bump", all of which we inherited from the previous Government. We have systematically taken them out of the tax system to ensure that profitable corporations do pay their fair share of taxes. That will be the result of tax reform.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS—MINIMUM TAX RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday he rejected outright a key recommendation of the Finance Committee to levy a minimum tax on the banks and other financial institutions. Instead, the Minister merely extended an existing capital tax and made it refundable on future taxes, a move his own Department confirmed to us this morning will, and I quote "not raise revenue over the long term".

Is the Minister prepared to stand in the House this afternoon and admit that his capital tax on banks and financial institutions is nothing but a sham?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I reject what the Hon. Member has said in a major way. A minimum tax, such as the one we have imposed on the banks, by its nature is designed to produce a minimum amount of money, as was the minimum margin proposed by the Finance Committee. But the purpose of tax reform is to get regular corporate tax in place so that that regular corporate tax will raise far more in corporate tax revenues than a minimum tax would. That would have been the effect of tax reform on the AMMT as proposed by the committee. That will be the effect of this.

We are trying to get more money out of the banks, the insurance companies and the trust companies, than a minimum tax would. That is what tax reform will do.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONSIDER INTRODUCING MINIMUM TAX

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the reason that the finance committee recommended a minimum tax was, and I quote his Conservative colleague, the Hon. Member for York—Scarborough, who said: "Only by means of a minimum tax will the Government be in a position to demonstrate taxes will be paid with certainty".

The Finance Committee found that the only way of collecting taxes from the banks and financial institutions was through a minimum tax. Every time the Finance Department in the past has tried to collect taxes, the banks have ended up paying even less than before the attempt.

Again, will the Minister give serious consideration to introducing a genuine minimum tax on the banks and financial institutions?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can say with certainty that taxes will be collected from the banks. That is the result, that is the effect of the capital tax, the form of minimum tax that we have imposed on the chartered banks.

Mr. de Jong: And it is refundable.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member has been on the Finance Committee from time to time. I would remind him that the Finance Committee itself has made recommendations on how to ensure that we collect taxes from the banks. We have adopted a number of those proposals. The point I want to make to him is that we have analyzed carefully each and every way by which the banks, the life insurance companies and the trust companies have been able to avoid paying taxes in the past. We have plugged each of those loopholes and we have made absolutely sure that that will result in them paying, as I said yesterday, up to $4 billion in taxes.

We have also said in response to the Finance Committee's report that we are not going to sit still there. We will monitor, and look at various mechanisms, including the AMMT, to see whether they are necessary to achieve the goal. If we are not successful with the way we have chosen now, we will follow the other route as well.

LABOUR RELATIONS

PRINCE RUPERT GRAIN HANDLERS' STRIKE

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question through you is for the Minister of Labour. It concerns the grain handlers' strike at Prince Rupert. The Minister will be aware that Canada's reputation internationally as a reliable supplier of high quality wheat may be at stake. Not only are farm communities inconvenienced by this labour-management dispute, the families of those who have been laid off, such as 70 CN rail employees, are facing a very bleak Christmas.

With this in mind, can the Minister advise the House and the western Canadian grain farmers if there has been any progress in the dispute as a result of the initiatives taken by his Department?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, I instructed the mediator in that particular dispute on Tuesday to reconvene the parties in order to work toward a settlement.

I am informed the parties are meeting with the mediator tomorrow in Vancouver at two o'clock. I do hope that the parties, in view of the circumstances and in view of the effect of this particular work stoppage on the Canadian economy, and the effect on their own economy at this time of the year, will come to a settlement.

FISHERIES

EXPORT OF CLAMS—ISSUANCE OF PERMITS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Two companies have been exporting clams to the United States from the north shore of the St. Lawrence River and these shellfish, clams in particular, have come from rivers that have been officially classified as contaminated by Ottawa.

Can the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans explain to this House why permits were issued to export these clams in violation of a 1948 inspection treaty signed by the two countries? Can he also explain why his Government is now contemplating reissuing the permits, from waters that have not been tested in the last 10 years?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, without commenting on the specifics of the issue that has been raised, we have an effective system of control on all products, clams, quahogs, oysters and mussels harvested in Atlantic Canada which does not allow the harvesting, processing or sale of these products until the completion of the work by the operations centre established to co-ordinate all government activities related to the alert on these products.

The operations centre is now working very diligently to restore consumer confidence in all of these products and to ensure that the interests of the industry are served in this way.

• (1450)

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I would now like an answer to the question. I specifically asked why the Government had agreed to issue export permits to two companies to export clams to the United States despite the fact that these clams were found in waters that were called contaminated by Ottawa.

Can the Minister explain to the House why the Government is now contemplating reissuing permits to those companies to export clams to the United States when in fact some of these waters have not been tested in 10 years, a violation of an international treaty signed in 1948? Please answer that question.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the second part of the question is entirely hypothetical. The Hon. Member speaks of contemplating. I do not know what he knows that I do not know.

The first part of the question is a specific question that could be addressed to me by way of a letter, but I am not prepared to comment on some hypothetical situation that the Hon. Member has thrown across the aisle of the House of Commons without notice.

HEALTH

TOXIC MUSSELS CONSUMED IN ONTARIO

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I have in my hand a chronology of events prepared by the Government of Ontario which is actually a damning indictment of this Minister's handling of the whole question of toxic mussels.

For example, on December 2, after the Minister had issued a public warning, his own officials told the Government of Ontario that no action on recalls had to be taken within the Province of Ontario because, to the knowledge of the Department, no P.E.I. mussels had been sent to Ontario. In fact we know that in the city of Toronto one man passed away and several are ill. Obviously the information provided by his Department after he issued the public warning was patently absurd.

How can the Minister expect the Canadian public to have any confidence in his health warning process if his own Department is unable to track the toxic mussel link or to track the toxic mussels that are being sent out across the country?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I also have in my hand the statement of the Hon. Elinor Caplan that she made yesterday in Queen's Park—excuse me, not yesterday, December 7. I also have here a chronology in respect of the manner in which the health alert was sent to Ontario and I will read from it, and I want to make sure which day we are talking about. We are talking about the health alert of December 1. What happened on December 1 was this:

> The Minister's public alert was distributed by the wire services during the evening of December 1, 1987.
> It is obvious from the above chronology—

—which I have here—

> —of events that officers of the Toronto Public Health Unit were aware of the alert which stimulated their call of 8:10 a.m., December 2, 1987. They were further briefed that morning by an officer of the Health Protection Branch.

So, Mr. Speaker, not only can I—if you give me a little more time—what I can show as well to the House is that when a message is given by Health and Welfare Canada to the provincial Ministries of Health who have the responsibility for public health in their provinces, it is very interesting to note that chronology that in fact that message from Ontario did not go to certain health units even in Toronto until the Department of Health and Welfare in fact got it to them directly.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO FEDERAL OFFICIAL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware of the fact that his own health alert was sent to an employee of the provincial Government who had retired two months before this incident? His mailing list was two months out of date.

The federal official, a Mr. Blackwood, the chief of food inspection, HPB Ontario Region, told the people of the Province of Ontario on December 2 that he was unaware of P.E.I. mussels being sent to Ontario and said that no further action was indicated at that time. Mr. Blackwood told the Province of Ontario not to take action, but we know now that toxic mussels were available in Ontario, were being consumed in Ontario, and in fact a man in Ontario died.

How can the Minister expect the public to have any confidence in him when his own officials give out erroneous information which continues to place the health of Canadians at risk even after he issued the public health alert?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on December 1, 1987, as I have already stated, respecting the mussel situation in Prince Edward Island—

Mr. Tobin: Answer the question.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Oh, I will answer the question. Just give me the time. I would love to answer the question.

I have given the details of how the message was sent to Ontario. It is interesting that at 8.10 a.m. on December 2, the following happened:

> —that morning Messrs. Boehnke and Flaherty, two officials of the Toronto Public Health Unit had spoken with Mr. Saarkoppel, a supervisor at Scarborough H.P.B. who advised them that he would obtain details and call them back. Later that morning, Mr. Saarkoppel advised both Messrs. Boehnke and Flaherty of the Toronto Public Health Unit that the Minister of National Health and Welfare had issued a release to the public to advise against the consumption of cultured P.E.I. mussels and that H.P.B. was in the process of receiving from Fisheries and Oceans Canada a list of retail and restaurants where the product could be found.

What is then interesting is the following:

> Our current agreement with the Ontario Ministry of Health is that they are responsible for the distribution of hard copy to all Health Units in Ontario. When by 1:30 p.m. on Thursday, December 3, 1987 it became clear that hard copy from the Ontario Ministry of Health was to be sent by mail, H.P.B. decided immediately to deliver by hand, to all Public Health Units in the greater Metropolitan Toronto area, . . . a hard copy of the list of retailers, distributors and restaurants where mussels were likely to be found and this was done.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if all Hon. Members would consider for a moment not only themselves but the public are watching this extremely difficult and very important issue. The Opposition has not only a right but a duty to ask questions. The Government has a right and a duty to answer them. Given all that has happened, it seems to me that it would fit the dignity of this place if questions were to be asked and answers given without a lot of interruption from other Hon. Members who are not recognized.

TOXIC MUSSELS AFFAIR—OPPORTUNITY FOR GOVERNMENT TO OFFER COMPENSATION TO VICTIMS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives are laughing and clapping, but this morning Mr. Donat Gagnon added his name to the lengthening list of persons who died after eating mussels.

Yesterday, despite the mistakes made by two Ministers, the Government was still refusing to offer compensation to the victims of the credible errors made by this Government. Six people are still in hospital in Montreal. Three are in intensive care and one person is in very serious condition.

I want to ask the Prime Minister why the Government keeps refusing to offer compensation to the victims' families and to the fisheries that have been affected.

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first of all I do not think anyone in the House is laughing about this serious issue or about the illnesses that have occurred or the deaths that have occurred. I say to the Hon. Member that he should have in his hand and, if not, it should have been delivered to his office further to what I said in the House yesterday that we would give a further update today from the operations centre. It is an operations centre update dated today. There are details in it, relating to the present situation, under three titles, and that is all I have time for right now. One is intensive analysis to create the conditions enabling resumption of the fishery. The order of re-entry. And a joint Government-industry approach.

• (1500)

Keeping in mind that that plan is being worked on very carefully, there is one overriding consideration in the entire plan. That is the health conditions, the health priority and its rigorous application, will be applied.

I suggest to the Hon. Member, while he has raised this question a number of times, and I know what he is saying, that it is important to use this plan rather than get into some of the other questions because the health issue has to be paramount for all of us in this House and beyond.

WHY ARE TWO MINISTERS WAITING TO TENDER RESIGNATIONS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, when he waited four days before alerting Canadians the Minister of National Health and Welfare gambled with the lives of Canadians, and he knows that. As to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, by including shellfish with other molluscs when he sounded the alarm on November 11 he too goofed, and he knows it. And now clam fishing permits are being issued in zones which Environment Canada has said to be contaminated, again endangering the lives of Canadians. Mr. Speaker, what are these two Ministers waiting for before they get out of their shell and hand in their resignation? That is the only move which will restore the confidence of Canadians!

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, again the Hon. Member in his preamble made a statement or an allegation which is not true. There was not a delay of the health alert and there was not knowledge by this Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Let me finish. There was not a change of the dates. For the two weeks that I have been asked questions in this House and the media, those dates and that information, time after time, has been affirmed and confirmed. That is the first point that has to be made.

Ms. Copps: That's false.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The second—I would think that Hon. Member should heed the warnings that were given.

Second, I say to the Hon. Member, with respect to the health alert, his own Leader said that health was a priority and the only priority. The Hon. Member is still questioning today after the events and the facts and I take it that he does not think the health alert should be sent. That is how I have to interpret his question. I say to him that the plan is in place, we are following the plan, and I am not going to change the plan because of his partisan priorities or partisan words.

FISHERIES

EXPORT OF CLAMS—ISSUANCE OF LICENCES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and deals with the question posed earlier by my colleague from Yorkton—Melville.

Some Hon. Members: Same question!

Mr. McCurdy: In 1948 a treaty called the Clam Zone Inspection Treaty was signed with the United States. According to that treaty clams taken from polluted areas, that is areas found to contain evidence of human fecal pollution, should not be allowed for export to the U.S.

Why were licences issued to two companies to take clams from Rivière Blanche, in the riding of the Prime Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCurdy: —from Sector N4.3 and Papinachois Sector N5.2.1, which are areas which have shown evidence of coliform contamination? Why were licences issued which would allow shipment of contaminated clams to the United States when this is prohibited under the treaty?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, again, as is so common with members of the Opposition these days, the Hon. Member is over-simplifying. The general treaty provides for notice and closures as proclaimed by the Government of Canada to take precedence over any desire to export a product. Because of Red Tide, the closing of shellfish areas is a common practice, in place for decades, to ensure that at times of the year when particular areas are contaminated product is not harvested from those areas. Those procedures are followed with the opening and closing of various areas from time to time.

I can assure the Hon. Member that both the environmental protection service and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans ensure that whenever a shellfish area is open for the harvesting of clams and other mollusks it is in accordance with all the health standards required by the Health Protection Branch and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans.

REASON FOR ISSUING EXPORT LICENCES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, I have to tell you that if that is the kind of ignorance motivating policies in fisheries, then we are in serious trouble. We are not talking about Red Tide. We are talking about the requirement that there be no evidence of human fecal pollution in clams shipped to the U.S.

I want to know why licences were issued for taking of clams in two known contaminated areas and why licences were issued to take clams from 30 areas that have not been tested in 10 years?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, now we are getting down to the heart of the situation. I am well aware of the situation that prevails in Baie de la Rivière Blanche and I can assure the Hon. Member that we do not open areas in which the levels of contamination exceed safe health standards. I can assure the Hon. Member that when this particular area of the Rivière Blanche was open in the winter of 1986, it was on the basis of water quality tests carried out on December 2, 1986, by the environmental protection service and those tests indicated there was no contamination and that the water quality standards were met.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise Hon. Members that the time for Question Period has expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, while Members of the House are completing private conversations, leaving the Chamber, arranging their papers and engaging in other parliamentary matters, I wonder—

Message from the Senate

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) has of course en passant noted that his intervention to question the Government this afternoon as to House business are being interrupted by conversations by Hon. Members. I ask Hon. Members standing in the Chamber carrying on conversations to please move beyond the curtain. I ask other Hon. Members to co-operate. I thank Hon. Members.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your intervention although I would have had no objection to the conversations continuing. I would have been happy to use my weekly exchange with the Deputy Government House Leader as a period of time in which Members could settle down so the House can resume its normal placid but important atmosphere.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Don't go overboard.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): In any event, I want to ask the Deputy Government House Leader to give a statement of government business. Perhaps under the circumstances, he can tell us whether the Government can outline its program for the forthcoming winter semester, including generally when the Budget might be expected, what priority will be given to the official languages Bill, and when the Government will bring forward its long promised but as yet unpresented ethics in government legislation?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I agree with my hon. friend, I thought everyone hung on our every word every Thursday.

This afternoon we will complete Bill S-14 in all stages and then proceed to the free trade debate. If that debate is not completed this afternoon, we will continue it tomorrow. If it is not completed tomorrow, we will possibly continue the debate on January 18, 1988, if the House agrees with the Adjournment Motion on the Order Paper. Thanks to the co-operation of the Opposition, at times, and to the diligence of the Government, at all times, we completed quite a bit of legislation this past fall. We will have a full agenda when we return on January 18.

• (1510)

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, we know that today and tomorrow are the last days that Parliament will be sitting to debate the free trade issue prior to rising. We also know that the Government will be signing the free trade agreement on January 2. That means that these two days will be the last opportunity for debate prior to the signing. Does the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) plan to speak on this issue before the signing of the agreement on January 2, which means either later today or tomorrow?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I will take this up with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to learn whether his agenda permits him to enter the debate either this afternoon or tomorrow.

There have been discussions among the Parties, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to thank my colleagues in the Opposition in advance for their indulgence. I think you would find consent to call Bill S-14, a Bill from the other House, presently standing on the Order Paper in the name of the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Desjardins), which I would move on his behalf. I think you would find consent to deal with that Bill in all stages without debate.

You will also find that it has been agreed that at five o'clock the House shall proceed directly to the adjournment debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

TRADE

CANADA—U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Carney that this House endorse, as being in the national interest, the Canada—United States Free Trade Agreement, the legal text of which was tabled in the House of Commons on Friday, December 11, 1987, and of the amendment of Mr. Langdon (p. 11885).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at 1 o'clock, there remained ten minutes for questions and comments following the speech of the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

[English]

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member's speech earlier today. I know that he is very interested in Canadian agriculture, is very concerned for the consumer, and is interested in the service sector as well because he was a doctor of some reknown in the practice of veterinary medicine.

Free Trade

I would like to read three brief quotes and ask the Member to comment on them. The first is from Jalynn Bennett of the Canadian Life and Health Insurance Association who says:

> The free trade agreement is, on balance, a significant and positive achievement for the Canadian economy. The primary and highly important—benefit to the financial services sector is this: secure and improved access to each others markets over the long term. The Canadian industry—and its customers—will be well served by the agreement.

Sally Hall of the Consumers' Association of Canada says:

> Barriers to trade are always paid for by consumers, while producers are the main beneficiary of them. Free trade produces choice and competition, and gives consumers real power in the marketplace. Signing the deal will provide positive economic gains for Canada, the deal deserves some support from consumers.

There are some mining interests in the Hon. Member's constituency. George Miller of the Mining Association of Canada says:

> The Canadian Mining Industry lives by trade. The free trade agreement will help secure access to our most important market by limiting protectionist harassment. We are convinced that the binational dispute settlement mechanism will introduce real discipline in the trade remedy area.

Those are three areas which constituents of the Hon. Member are very interested in and very concerned about. With that kind of endorsation and support how can the Hon. Member, in all sincerity, stand up and oppose this very excellent U.S.-Canada trade agreement which was reached between our two Governments?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. McDermid) has posed these questions. I had the opportunity to travel with the External Affairs and International Trade Committee to Yellowknife in the Northwest Territories where The Consumers' Association certainly watered down and practically disowned this agreement between Canada and the United States. While they are in favour of freer trade with all countries because it will help consumers, when they looked at this deal and all of the publications since, they practically gave up all support for the deal.

I am also interested to know why it seems the whole approach to this deal is to avoid further processing of our own resources, such as the mineral resources of this country. According to this agreement, we have to give up the policy we established many years ago to further upgrade our uranium in Canada. The federal Government has spent about $180 million building refinery facilities in Blind River and Port Hope. Now, however, besides giving unlimited access to all our energy resources under this agreement, including natural gas and oil—

Mr. McDermid: That is not true.

Mr. Foster: —we have given up the right to upgrade our mineral resources like uranium.

Mr. McDermid: Start telling the truth.

Mr. Foster: I also want to ask the Parliamentary Secretary, who perhaps sees the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) from time to time, to tell her to stop deceiving Canadians about how they will be able to bring consumer goods from the United States. She has been leaving the impression throughout the country that Canadians will be able to cross the border and import back into Canada unlimited amounts of consumer goods from the United States. That is very important to an area like Algoma which is immediately adjacent to Sault Ste Marie, Michigan.

The fact is that her own officials have corrected her and said that consumers will only be able to bring $100 worth of goods back to Canada after 48 hours. They will have to pay the sales tax of 12.5 per cent. If the product is manufactured in Japan, Malaysia, or some other country, they will pay full duty. If the product is manufactured in the United States, the duty will be gradually reduced, if there is a duty, because 85 per cent of our trade with the United States is duty-free.

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will ask the Minister to stop misleading Canadians about the amount they can bring in from the United States. It is $100 after 48 hours, not the malarkey she has been spreading.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I must be careful about what words I use. The Hon. Member is not giving the full story. The Minister said very clearly that any goods produced in the United States would be duty-free after the 10-year period. There will be no duties on them. In the next breath she said that by the time that happens, the limits that are set by either government for products being brought back will apply.

The Member should finish the Minister's quote. If he is quoting from a newspaper story he should give the whole story because he is being very unfair. He is attributing something to the Minister that is not accurate. He did not finish the whole story.

The Hon. Member talks about goods from Taiwan and Singapore. This is a trade agreement regarding American made goods and Canadian made goods. It is all about creating jobs in Canada, not in Taiwan or China.

I suggest the Hon. Member is being intellectually dishonest with the House by telling us that malarkey.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I want to quote from an article in the Ottawa Citizen on December 10, with the headline "Duty-free limits unchanged in free-trade pact with U.S.". It states:

> Canadian consumers who think a free-trade deal will mean they can head to the U.S. for unrestricted shopping sprees are in for an expensive shock at Canada Customs.
> Federal officials say the final trade agreement, to be made public Friday, makes no changes to the current duty-free limits and other restrictions on what Canadian travellers can bring home with them from trips south of the border.

It goes on to say that the trade Minister:

> ... has been spreading the idea that free trade will allow Canadian shoppers to cash in on cheap American goods without having to face Canada Customs on the way home.

Mr. McDermid: Who said that? Is there a quote?

Mr. Foster: Yes, I will quote the Minister's speech. The article went on:

> During a recent speech, Carney said she had been asked 'if free trade meant you could bring anything you wanted back from the U.S. without paying duty. The answer was, yes'.

That impression she has been leaving with the country is patently false and the Parliamentary Secretary knows that. I am simply asking him to have the Minister come clean and tell Canadians if the limit will still be $100 after a two-day visit.

For instance, the officials in the Parliamentary Secretary's own department gave the following example. One year after the trade agreement has been in effect, the reduction on a $600 stereo made in the United States is $5. The consumer who buys a stereo in the United States and thinks he will bring it back without paying any duty, sales tax and no limit on importation amounts, will be in for a rude awakening. He will only save $5 after the first year of this agreement with the duty reduction in effect.

I know the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary does not want to mislead Canadians. Perhaps he could tell the Minister to come clean with Canadians, especially those who live along the St. Lawrence River and in places like Sault Ste Marie which are near the border, and tell them that the limits are just the same and the duty will be gradually reduced over 10 years. The sales tax will be the same.

Mr. McDermid: Read the quote again. It says duty.

Mr. Foster: The Customs agent will have to check them more carefully because the duty reduction applies if the goods are made in America but does not apply if they are made in Taiwan or some other country.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) referred briefly to the effect of the deal on dairy producers and processors. Would he care to comment on some recent events which I noticed in the business pages. Peter Pocklington has just become the owner of Palm Dairies. I also know from reading the agreement that the import duties, the protection we had on dairy products of 15 per cent against American ice cream and yogurt and other mixed products from that side of the border, are going to drop, leaving the fear among some producers in this country that the value of raw milk will be forced down.

Mr. Pocklington was quoted in the article with respect to his acquisition of Palm Dairies as saying he made the acquisition thanks to the trade deal, which he understands will cause the price of raw products in this country to go down, and he feels these would be a great opportunity in the dairy business as a result. I wonder if the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) could comment and give us his assessment of how accurate the statement of Mr. Pocklington is?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I must say I am extremely concerned about this statement because Mr. Pocklington was instrumental in seeing the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) become the Leader of the Tory Party and is probably privy to exactly what is going to happen in that regard. Clearly, in the final text there is a contradiction because the Government has mentioned in Article 710 that Section 11 of the GATT applies, but it also states that Section 10 is subject to any other section. That is where the trouble starts. Article 703 provides for the removal of all barriers. That is the concern. Even though Section 11 of the GATT is mentioned in Article 710, it is subject to the overriding provision.

Today the UPA in Quebec has issued a press release and has expressed deep concern that the Government has introduced this new overriding section, which will seemingly move towards the removal of all barriers. That is what the Undersecretary for Agriculture of the United States said they were going to get during the negotiations, and that appears what they have gotten.

The UPA has expressed its deep concern with respect to that section and to the fact that the Government has refused to implement import controls and put ice cream, yogurt and fluid milk on that import control list. I think that Mr. Pocklington bought up Palm Dairies because he knows the whole supply-management system is going to be ruined by this agreement, plus the Government putting the whole supply-management system on the table at the GATT. He knows something that the rest of us do not. He knows when to get in and take advantage of a business opportunity. Obviously, that is the direction in which the Government is going.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Resuming debate. The Minister of State (Agriculture).

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak this afternoon in the free trade debate. I listened carefully, especially to what was said by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) just now and this morning with respect to free trade. What surprised me again—I would not call it ignorance—was the failure to understand the facts and circumstances of the historic Free Trade Agreement concluded by Canada and the United States. To hear the Hon. Member, the majority of Canadians and Canadian farm groups are opposed to the Free Trade Agreement, although the opposite is closer to the truth.

Only forty-eight hours ago, at a meeting on Canadian farm perspectives held across the street, I heard the President of the Canadian Pork Council when he spoke to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), right after the latter's announcement that our Government would inject about $3 billion into Canadian agriculture. The President of the Canadian Pork Council said how delighted he was with the Free Trade Agreement concluded by this Government and the United States.

A person would have to be blind not to realize the obvious benefits arising from this Agreement for Canadian agriculture. When we realize that the market for pork alone, which only a few years ago was worth $300 million, is now worth over $630 million, it is clear this market is important to Canadian farmers and to the Canadian economy. If we add the cattle sector, we find that as cattle breeders told us the other day, more than $1 billion in this particular sector crosses the border into the United States. It is an important and profitable market for Canadians. I noticed that when making his quotes, the Hon. Member overlooked a number of statements made by the president of the cattle breeders association. So it is not just pork but beef as well.

The Hon. Member had some concerns about marketing boards. Mr. Speaker, as of March 16 this year, we made a commitment here in the House to protect marketing boards for agricultural products. We made that commitment in the knowledge that over the years, Canadians have developed a structure that is uniquely adapted to their needs. In fact, to a certain extent it is also unique by world standards. By dint of hard work and discipline, Canadians over the years have developed for certain industries, and I am thinking of the dairy industry, a very special structure that monitors supply—there is no pressure—and exports to countries with which we do business, including the United States, the Common Market and other countries as well.

This special structure, as the Hon. Member is aware, is such that it is protected under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. One would have to be foolishly partisan or blind not to acknowledge that in recent years, this structure has proven its worth and we are thus committed to preserving it. Furthermore, in the realization that it might be necessary to include an additional caveat in the final text we tabled last week, we inserted Section 11 of GATT which closes the gap and specifically mentions the protection afforded by GATT, which already had an umbrella like function.

In negotiating this Agreement with the Americans, Canada has always been careful to observe the basic principles of international trade, especially in the agricultural sector. We have always been a dynamic participant in the GATT talks, and we will remain so, Mr. Speaker, because we believe this is important.

From the outset, the Prime Minister and his Government have notified other world economic powers and other countries that export agricultural products.

Over the years, we have seen a subsidy war develop which was altogether unacceptable. To that end, we have also presented these past few weeks during the GATT negotiations in Geneva a position which is quite consistent with this policy. These past few weeks, Mr. Speaker, members of the Opposition and some extremist farm groups have tried to convince Canadians that we had made a mess of the farm industry and that we did not want to make any particular effort to protect this industry. This is not true, Mr. Speaker! We have taken concrete measures both under this free trade deal and the position which the Minister of International Trade (Mrs. Carney) has indicated to the House. We have not tabled the text of the negotiations, but our general position was quite consistent with Section 11 of the GATT and the fact that, until further notice, we still operate under a quota and supply management system which is to the liking of the Canadian people, which puts no pressure on foreign markets and which could be argued for before this international court in front of 94 other countries with which we will negotiate in good faith over the next few months.

This being said, Mr. Speaker, I think this was the main point on which we had made a commitment last March. However, we had also made a firm commitment, not out of the blue but as a result of this absolutely frustrating wave of American protectionism. I think that we had no choice, we could not just sit and wait while American protectionist measures blocked our exports, in every area: hogs, raspberries, cut flowers, and many more, Mr. Speaker.

We had to act. We simply had too, because we are aware that Canada is a country much smaller, population wise, than the United States. There are only twenty five million of us as opposed to a market of 235 million people south of the border. As a Canadian I do not like this sort of reaction which I would describe as somewhat abnormal emphasizing the fact that "We are a small country". We are small and to keep from being swallowed up, to prevent others from capturing our markets, we are to erect barriers all around us—as if the way, Mr. Speaker, to develop aggressive marketing structures was to sit down, to try and keep other countries from invading our markets by putting up barriers, while trying to step over the barriers put up by other countries. That is a childish and backward attitude, Mr. Speaker, that would take us back to the 19th century, if not to the 18th century, as shown by the Opposition. This does not represent Canadians as they are. This does not represent Canadians who have been building this country for the past 200 years, who built it specifically on a trading basis.

Canada has always been a country whose economy was largely based on trade, and I think it was legitimate and normal for Canadians and their Government to strike an attitude that would mean: I am not afraid. I can sit down. I am not small. I am big country and I am capable of negotiating with others on equal terms. This is what Canada is all about, Mr. Speaker. And all through the debate about the trade negotiations, that might be the problem. That might be the problem with those who are against free trade. Maybe they are small in their own minds. They cannot exercice vision, they cannot show Canadians everywhere what it is like to have vision, what it is like to look up to the future for ourselves and for our children.

Over these last few weeks I have been assessing the various reactions and spinoffs for this country.

Mr. Speaker, in the face of increasing protectionism we decided to sit down and conclude a historic agreement. It will not solve everything because we are not perfect, and neither are the Americans. It would seem that perfection can be found only in a small corner on the other side of the House.

An Hon. Member: You are laying it on a bit thick!

Mr. Blais: As to the rest of us, Mr. Speaker, we have not quite reached perfection. We may not be perfect but we do work and come up with final texts which respond to the needs of Canadians. People do not expect us to be perfect, they simply want us to work in the best interests of all Canadians.

We negotiated a dispute settlement mechanism which, as may be recalled, was singled out by two independent firms barely a few weeks ago as being the first time such an avant-garde mechanism is available to settle disputes between two countries. That was not easy either. A lot has been said about sovereignty, about the danger that we might just lose our sovereignty in an agreement of this kind. I heard that many, many times. But it was not any easier for the Americans to relinquish part of their responsibilities to a tribunal having binational jurisdiction. It takes a fair amount of maturity for a country to feel strong enough, Mr. Speaker. One has to be strong enough to be able to say: I am not afraid to sit down at a table with my neighbour on an equal-to-equal basis to deal with our diverging views like adults and settle our problems.

Over a five-year period—we did give ourselves some time—this mechanism will enable us to weigh the various issues which might be a source of trouble in future. It stands to reason that other problems will crop up eventually, and we are all aware of that. There will be other problems in other sectors, not only in the agricultural sector. But are we going to wait until these problems land in our lap before trying to draft legislation, make speeches in the House, and try to do away with trade and tariff barriers? No, I do not think that was the secret. Rather the secret was in the approach, an open approach, a dispute-settling approach. Most Canadian leaders in all sectors are telling us that already we can see that the Americans have a new attitude with respect to trade discussions of whatever nature. I think we can do the same thing.

Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago during the conference of First Ministers we heard . . . and I thought it was rather strange to see the British Columbia premier talking to his Ontario colleague and telling him he did not understand why he was against it, he did not understand why a province which does practically 90 per cent of its business with a neighbour would be against free trade, particularly since he in British Columbia did no more than about 40 per cent yet was quite prepared to open his markets to the Americans. We will need answers and explanations with respect to the question which, as I see it, is of some importance.

Just before the Quebec premier got to speak, his Saskatchewan counterpart was saying just about the same thing to the Ontario premier. Will Canadians in the rest of Canada have to spring to the defence of Ontario which is being threatened by the American monster? I should think that, after listening to so many arguments and expressions, one can appreciate why a number of Canadians find it difficult to understand why the Government of Ontario is against the agreement. And right after that the Quebec premier told his Ontario colleague: We have been trying to diversify our markets for 30 years and in spite of 30 years' work to diversify our markets world-wide we are still doing more than 75 per cent of our business with our American neighbours.

Why, then, leave that market for other uncertain markets with which we are not familiar and about which we have not been given any sure indications. We have not stopped looking for markets. We now trade with 30 or 40 countries in the agricultural sector alone. In the last four years, the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board and the Minister of Agriculture have made every effort to increase these markets. However, it still remains that, before thinking about any potential markets, we have a duty to think about the products which we now have to sell in spite of generally depressed prices on the market. Mr. Speaker, I believe that we have delivered the goods in this regard, but we have not solved all the problems. The purpose of these negotiations was not to solve all problems for the next 50 years, but to find a new approach for a Canadian Government which is not afraid to stand up, which does not hide behind the curtains and which has confidence in the population and businesses of Canada.

As recently as two days ago, Mr. Speaker, and the same is happening throughout Canada, a group of business people in the industrial and agricultural sectors, including the president of the Farming Corporation of my region in Quebec, came here to support the free trade initiative and to show Canadians that, in small plants located throughout Canada, thanks to the entrepreneurship of Canadians and the positive effects of a regional development policy which we are now applying to all Canadian regions and which is consistent with national and regional policies in Canada . . . When we implement a regional development policy in the Maritimes, it has not been developed by people in office towers, here, in Ottawa, but by local people in the Maritimes, in co-operation with the Governments involved. The same happens in Western Canada, in Ontario and in Quebec. This is how, Mr. Speaker, we have developed in all our regions an economic and manufacturing infrastructure which is not afraid of facing the American market. In all Canadian regions, and this did not start last week, but many months and even two or three years ago, small companies which had 15, 20 or 30 employees now have 50, 80 or 100 employees, and every day, they produce quality products which they send to the American market.

What we see are people like the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) where workers are paid three times as much as others in some regions of Quebec, but they are rolling up their sleeves, and people in Oshawa are getting $2 billion in investments from companies which are in favour of free trade. Yet those people are against free trade. My little girl is 12 years old, she watches television, but she cannot understand the position of those people. It will be necessary that the kind of fraud we have been witnessing over the past year, the kind of philosophical opposition to a historic treaty, to a historic approach for Canadians . . . the situation is getting clearer because Canadians everywhere are saying: "It is good for us, our markets are there, and so are our jobs." We must support the Government in this endeavour. They do not understand why people living in better-off regions should object, as if they were afraid to lose whatever advantage they may have.

Mr. Speaker, in agriculture as in any other sector, this agreement is a resounding success. It is a historic agreement. I think an ever increasing number of Canadians will agree with us in the coming weeks. They said they agree, and I am convinced that we will make the transition into the 21st century as only Canadians can do, standing up, not on our knees.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

TRADE

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Carney that this House endorse, as being in the national interest, the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement, the legal text of which was tabled in the House of Commons on Friday, December 11, 1987, and the amendment of Mr. Langdon (p. 11885).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions or comments, the Hon. Member for Algoma.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I noticed the "loud" applause of the half dozen Tories in the House this afternoon; it was because the Minister's arguments were weak.

The Hon. junior Minister might be able to help his own cause in Quebec if he could answer some of the questions posed today by the UPA. For instance, at its press conference this afternoon it wanted to know why nobody in the Department of Trade has been able to clarify the reason that Article 710, which mentions that Section 11 of the GATT agreement provides for import control lists, has been made subject to Article 703 in the agreement, which provides that barriers to trade between Canada and the United States will be reduced in whatever way possible, whether it be by the removal of tariffs or by the removal of quotas.

Also in its press conference this afternoon the UPA wanted to know why ice-cream, yogurt, and liquid milk were not on the import control list as was demanded by Mr. Pagé, the Minister of Agriculture in Quebec, and as was promised by the Minister when he spoke to the UPA a couple of weeks ago.

I will not get into the details of that speaking engagement, because it was incredibly embarrassing for the Hon. Minister.

Another concern of the UPA is why there are increased quotas for poultry and meat, an increase of some 31 million kilos to some 37 million kilos of meat per year, and an increase of 6 million dozen eggs.

At the conclusion of the press conference, the President of the UPA said that the free trade agreement raises many legal and technical problems and puts a number of problems before Quebec agricultural producers.

Could the Hon. Minister clarify these points, especially for dairy and poultry producers in the Province of Quebec?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I would like to give the answer of a junior Minister to a senior back-bencher.

Everyone knows that we can include yogurt and ice-cream in the agreement. It is an internal question about addressing the national market. It is not really a question about free trade. Two or three weeks ago the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) said that we had asked the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) to try to put yogurt and ice-cream on the import quota list. We are working on it now. We have said that we will check all the details of that question to find out if it is appropriate to do it. We are working on it now.

Anyway, it will not be necessary a year and a half beforehand because yogurt and ice-cream imports have decreased from 250,000 kilos to 50,000 kilos over the last two or three years.

[Translation]

In fact, to be more specific, in the last two or three years these imports declined to one-fifth of what they were previously. We are working on this right now. We have had several meetings about supply management with national representatives, including the Canadian Dairy Farmers and provincial organizations, especially in Quebec. These people did not take the slightly hysterical attitude we saw among some leaders in Quebec. Their approach was far more pragmatic, in that they asked for specific questions to be dealt with. There was the issue of imitations. This comes under provincial jurisdiction. We discussed this with our provincial counterparts, including the Quebec Minister of Agriculture.

You mentioned an increase in chicken quotas. There is no increase. We have maintained import quotas at the same level, which is the average level for the past five years. Total imports for last year were lower than in 1984. Furthermore, and the Hon. Member forgot to mention this, production in the poultry sector increased 8 per cent last year in Canada. It is expected to increase by 4 per cent next year. Is there any other economic sector, any other farm sector in Canada that can say it increased production by about 13 per cent over two years, Mr. Speaker? This particular sector is in very good shape. We have no problems here. There is a production increase.

I am sure that those people . . . a few minutes ago, I saw a press release issued by the Union des producteurs agricoles du Québec, which said they were glad to see GATT Section 11 had been recognized in the final agreement. They raised a number of other problems we will look into. I received this only a few minutes ago, Mr. Speaker. This was a press conference held in Montreal, to which I was not invited, and I intend to continue our dialogue with agricultural groups in Canada, wherever they happen to be. I am sure that as soon as the Opposition Parties and the people who for philosophical reasons are opposed to free trade have changed their tune and told the Canadian people and farm producers exactly what the situation is, people will understand it is in their interests to support this Agreement and see it ratified.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I want to remind my hon. friend that the newspapers today as a result of extensive polling, tell us that six out of 10 Canadians are against the free trade deal which the Mulroney Government has signed with the United States.

The Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) is on record as opposing the free trade deal with the United States because of loss of Canadian sovereignty, the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is on record as opposing a free trade deal, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is on the record as opposing the free trade deal, and the former Secretary of State is on record as opposing the deal. Every single candidate for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party is on record as opposing this free trade deal with the United States because of what it will do to Canada. There was one exception, Peter Pocklington. He was the only one in favour of free trade.

The Prime Minister himself and the leading Cabinet Ministers of Canada are on the record as opposing free trade prior to the election. They then were given a mandate by the people of Canada, but the issue of free trade was never raised during the entire eight week federal election campaign. The Prime Minister is now going to sign the agreement into effect on January 2 without any mandate from the people of Canada. The Premiers themselves who are supporting the deal have no mandate from their electorate because they never campaigned on the issue of free trade. What right does the Government of Canada have to lock Canadians into a free trade deal with the United States that will have profound implications for generations to come—

Mr. McDermid: Positive implications.

Mr. Riis: —without having any mandate from the people of Canada? Could he explain why it is that the Government is signing this deal before the people of Canada have had a chance to look at the final agreement? We have had it for only three or four days, and I would guess that 99.99 per cent of Canadians have not seen the agreement, let alone studied it. Does he think this is the way a Government should do business in a democratic society?

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I think the mandate we got was to give Canadians economic prosperity. That was the mandate we received, and clearly this is what we have been delivering over these last three years. A government that can pride itself on creating more than a million jobs over the same period of time has no lessons in economy to learn from an Opposition that fought against the Auto Pact some 20 years ago and that is now fighting like a tiger because those people fear that the system we put in place during the 1960's might under a freer trade system be extended to the Canadian economy as a whole. I think we have no lessons to learn from that side, Mr. Speaker.

And if they feel like being honest, they will admit that the protectionist moves we have been facing up to very recently were not there in 1983 and 1984. Those moves came over the years, they came with the really stupendous increase in the American trade deficit, which was still at $17 billion last month. Clearly the Americans had a gut reaction when they found themselves being swamped with goods coming in from all over the world—the European Economic Community, Japan, Asia, Canada. They had a protectionist reaction. And as I explained earlier—whether the Ottawa Member listened to my speech or not—that reaction indeed was what came after 1984, the protectionist one. We had to react. Should we have adopted a wait and see attitude, and must we now have an election every three months, whenever a problem arises? We reacted, Mr. Speaker, the way a government should. We created jobs. We developed a regional development policy that is the pride of all Canadians, and when the time comes, Mr. Speaker, Canadians will pass judgement on us in the polls. I have no fear of that, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, before I begin, I understand that we are expecting a messenger from the Senate, which means that my speech will probably be interrupted, as it has been before in this House, by this ridiculous procedure that should have been abolished a long time ago, something which the McGrath commission recommended. Because the Government has not chosen to implement that particular recommendation of the McGrath report, I suppose we will have to suffer this absurdity at least one more time.

I am very happy to speak this afternoon. I hope that this agreement will not go through. We know that if there is an election between now and the time it is to be implemented, it will not be because we know the Government will be defeated. If, however, by some tragic turn of events it is implemented, I am glad that I will be counted for historical purposes as one of those who stood up to defend my country. I hope my grandchildren or my great-grandchildren, whoever has the misfortune of having to read through Hansard on the great free trade debate, will be able to say that their ancestors were on the side of Canada. When they are groping through the congressional library in Washington looking for records of the free trade debate that took place in that country called Canada back in 1987 they will see it there too.

I listened to the argument made by the Minister of State for Agriculture (Mr. Blais). Instead of answering the question about process he said that this agreement will bring great prosperity to Canada. Even if that were true, and I do not believe it is true, the end does not justify the means. I thought that there might be some recognition of that ethical principle by Conservative Members, but apparently, in order to foist this agreement upon the country, they have cast away any ethical norms they ever held on parliamentary process and democratic principle. The end justifies the means, and so we are to be put in the ridiculous position of debating an agreement which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) proposes to sign on January 2 although the Parliament of Canada has only had an opportunity to look at the official text of it for a couple of weeks and the people of Canada themselves will not have had any opportunity to study it.

One of the enduring dishonesties of this debate has been the contention of the Government that this is just a commercial arrangement, an economic matter, nothing we should take too seriously. Canadians are asked to believe that this agreement is an ordinary agreement, that countries are in the habit of doing this sort of thing, and that opposition Members really ought not to make such a big deal of it.

Chapter One of the text of the agreement itself, the chapter entitled Objectives and Scope, says:

> The objectives make clear the extent to which the Canada-United States Trade Agreement moves beyond other free-trade agreements negotiated under the GATT.

The next paragraph says:

> The new Canada-United States Agreement is broader in scope as it provides for liberalization in all sectors of the economy, including agriculture. No other trade agreement includes binding commitments on trade in services, business travel or investment. No other agreement provides a basis for developing new rules—

And it goes on and on. The point is that this agreement is quite different from any other free trade agreement, but the Government wants us to believe that we are doing something quite ordinary here.

In fact, we are doing something with the united states that no other country has ever done before. no other country, regardless of its political make-up, has ever had so little self-respect that it would even contemplate entering into an agreement like this with its neighbour or with any other country for that matter. when the minister for international trade (Miss Carney) tries to pass this agreement off as just another commercial arrangement, she is engaging in one of the most fundamentally misleading descriptions of what the government is asking canadians to do that i can imagine.

The funny thing about this free trade agreement is that it is both more than free trade and less than free trade. where it is free trade, it is either about the kind of free trade that we have had all along, or it is about the kind of free trade that we would have achieved anyway through the continuing liberalization of trade or reduction of tariffs. on all three counts, it must be described quite differently from how the government describes it.

Why is the agreement less than free trade? We do not get the secure access to American markets that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said was the bottom line of the negotiations entered into with the United States. We will still be subject to American trade law, countervail and anti-dumping. Our exporters will still have to go through all the hassles involved in being charged under American law.

Yes, there will be a binational panel, but after the panel, there will be an appeal to a panel of judges, and if the panel of judges decides that the circumstances warrant it, it is referred back to a new binational panel. Throughout, the guidelines as to fairness will be American trade law, the very law the Prime Minister and the Minister for International Trade said they wanted to get out from under all along.

However, in my judgment, the more serious problem is where this agreement is about more than free trade. It includes concessions in the energy sector, the investment sector and the financial sector that cumulatively amount to a giving up of Canadian control over our own economy. The Parliamentary Secretary is making funny noises. That is not unusual. The fact is that we are giving up control over our energy, investment and financial services policies to the market-place.

Conservative Members say that that is a good thing. That fact is not lost on me. I do not think they are doing this unconsciously, although sometimes they look unconscious. They are doing this quite consciously, and that is what makes it even more reprehensible. They are quite consciously trying to lock their view of how the Canadian economy should run—

Mr. McDermid: And you are not?

Mr. Blaikie: —into this free trade agreement. The Parliamentary Secretary asks if I am not. No, I am not. If I were in government or elsewhere, I would not propose to enshrine the NDP view of Canada in a way that would it beyond the reach of democracy and beyond the reach of other Parliaments. We will save that for the Soviet Union or for the Conservative Government, which has so little respect for democracy and pluralism that it wants to entrench its ideas in a free trade agreement.

Mr. McDermid: What are you worried about? You can get out of it in six months.

Mr. Blaikie: The Parliamentary Secretary says that we can get out of it in six months. I hope we will never even get into it. The Parliamentary Secretary knows that if by some tragic circumstance we do get into it, it will not be all that easy to get out of it. Things will have happened and we will be in a very difficult position if a future Government wanted to get out of this agreement. We hope that we can get out of it in 1988 through the election of a new Government that will not have anything to do with this agreement. For that matter, 1989 will do, any time within the constitutional limitation of this Government. In either 1988 or 1989, we will tear up the agreement, but tear it up we will. Should the worst possible thing happen and, by some quirk of ugly fate, this gang of bandits over here were re-elected, that is what I mean when I talk about the difficulty of getting out of the agreement in the future.

I said that the agreement is about less than free trade and more than free trade. Where it is about free trade, it is about the kind of thing that would have happened anyway the kind of thing we did not have to give up our sovereignty to get. Tariffs have been going down since 1945, and 80 per cent of our trade with the United States is tariff-free now. What is left would probably have been reduced over time in any event.

What was the big deal? The big deal was that these people over here were spooked, were made scared and by the protectionist mood in the U.S. Congress. Instead of trying to find long-term solutions and counteract U.S. protectionism in other ways, the Government, "Said we cannot do it. If we cannot beat them, let us join them". It did not even try to beat them. It gave up on the global process. It gave up on the multilateral process. It said, "Let us get in under those American skirts and hope we will be looked after. Let us see if we can get a sweetheart arrangement". That is what the Government did, and Members opposite have the nerve to get up and talk about confidence.

Mr. McDermid: You are not telling the truth again.

Mr. Blaikie: They have absolutely no confidence in Canada. The only confidence the Tories have in Canada is the confidence that somehow we can become as much like the Americans as we have to in order to be competitive. That is not a surprise. What we have among the Tory back-benchers is a lot of neo-Americans anyway.

Mr. McDermid: A lot of what?

Mr. Blaikie: Neo-Americans. Almost as bad as neo-Conservatives. People who spent their childhood singing for the American company president when he came to town every once in a while to check on his empire.

Mr. McDermid: Neo-communist and the NDP, same thing.

Mr. Blaikie: Whatever happened to the Tory view of Canada? Sir John A. Macdonald and John George Diefenbaker must be spinning in their graves.

Mr. McDermid: Listen to who the socialists are quoting!

Mr. Blaikie: I do not mind quoting real Tories because from time to time they were on to something about the nature of this country, especially historically.

Mr. McDermid: The best thing that happened to us was when you left the Tory Party.

Mr. Blaikie: John Diefenbaker had a northern vision of Canada. What have we got over there? Dallas! A southern vision of Canada, a Canada more like Alabama than the Canada we have come to know and which most Canadians, except for Tories, have come to value.

If you check the record, all the things jeopardized by this agreement are things the Conservatives never liked in the first place. Social programs. Who have New Democrats had to fight over the years to put in place the social programs threatened by this agreement?

Mr. McDermid: People do not believe that, Bill.

Mr. Blaikie: Conservatives. Who have New Democrats had to fight over the years to get controls on foreign investment? Conservatives. Who have New Democrats had to fight in order to have a sane policy energy and not just sell off everything as fast as we can? Conservatives. It is no coincidence that when we look at what this agreement puts in jeopardy, it is being put in place by a Conservative Government.

I also have a word to say about what this agreement means in light of some of the things that have been said in the last few weeks about the federal Government's alleged ability to impose this agreement without provincial consent, or about co-operative federalism. I remember the Tories in 1981 and 1982. Oh, how they sung the praises of co-operative federalism. Oh, how they vilified any Government that would consider changing the Constitution of Canada without substantial, or even at that time unanimous, provincial consent. Yet what do they propose to do now? By President Reagan's own admission, they propose to change the economic constitution of this country. The Government proposes to change the economic constitution of Canada without seeking a mandate, without a consensus, and without the kind of unanimity we voted for not too long ago on constitutional matters when we voted for the Meech Lake Accord.

Oh, was that not a day for federal-provincial reconciliation? Nothing would be done without unanimity. The rhetoric flowed about what a wonderful achievement that was for federalism and co-operation and harmony. Frankly, I feel as though I have been had. I tried as best I could to believe all that stuff when I voted for the Meech Lake Accord. I feel as though I have been had by the Prime Minister when he gets up and talks about what he will do and to hell with the provinces.

I feel as though I have been had by the Premier of Quebec, too, because I got up and voted for Quebec's right to a distinct society. I thought that was a great victory for Quebec and Canada. Frankly, I feel stabbed in the back by the Premier of Quebec who has now said to the rest of Canada, through his support for this free trade agreement, that our distinct non-Quebec Canadian society is not worth fighting for as far as he is concerned. That can be sacrificed to his convictions about the alleged economic benefits of this agreement.

I feel double-crossed with respect to the question of a distinct society. As a non-Quebec Canadian I feel that Canada as a whole is entitled to economic structures and relationships which enable us to preserve and enhance our distinct society. I hope the Premier of Quebec will reconsider his support for this agreement on that basis.

Now we come to the question of whether the Government has a mandate for this agreement. By now Canadians who are listening and Members of Parliament have heard time and time again about how the Conservatives ran in 1984 on the basis that they would not enter into a free trade agreement.

Mr. Belsher: We ran on jobs.

Mr. Blaikie: The Hon. Member says they ran on jobs. Who did not run on jobs? Give me a break. We all ran on jobs and what we argue about is what will create jobs—

Mr. McDermid: And what has created jobs.

Mr. Blaikie: —and what jobs will be created and all that sort of thing. To run on jobs is not a mandate to enter into this kind of agreement. In fact, the free trade agreement the Prime Minister wants to sign on January 2 is much more threatening than the kind of free trade that he rejected when he said the issue had been settled in 1911. The free trade that was debated in 1911 was a question of tariffs. It was actually a trade agreement because it had only to do with tariffs.

If the Prime Minister thought in 1983 that the kind of trade agreement contemplated in 1911 threatened Canadian sovereignty, why in heaven's name would he propose to sign an agreement on January 2 that goes way beyond the concept he found so threatening in 1983? Why? You want to know what I think? It is because this kind of agreement with Canada was on the American agenda. This is something the Americans wanted Canada to enter into. It is no coincidence that before American Ambassador Robinson left Canada he set this in motion. It just so happened that along came Brian, the perfect sucker for this kind of an agreement. Since Confederation Canada has become a significantly just and peaceful country. In a very short time, historically speaking, it is to be bargained away in the interests of entrenching neo-Conservative view of Canada.

It would be a tragedy beyond all proportion if this should ever pass. However, I have enough confidence in Canadians to know that, if given the chance in a general election, they will tell the Prime Minister that they want to keep Canada and trade him.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, with the committee I had an opportunity to travel in western Canada with the Hon. Member from Winnipeg. We heard from groups such as the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency. Representatives of that organization expressed concern about increased quotas for eggs and poultry while not getting new access to American markets because of the differences between our systems. We have a supply management system with government controls, although that system will be sorely tested. Article 701.3 of the agreement reads:

> Neither Party, including any public entity that it establishes or maintains, shall sell agricultural goods for export to the territory of the other Party at a price below the acquisition price of the goods plus any storage, handling or other costs incurred by it with respect to those goods.

That causes an incredible problem for supply management agencies such as CEMA which produces eggs on an administered price basis. When there are surpluses, they break the eggs and use them as processed egg products. Some of that is disposed of in the United States because there is not an adequate market for it here. That may seem like a relatively small item in the over-all context of an agency the size of CEMA, and perhaps it is, but it points out the danger of proceeding hell-bent for leather on this agreement. The committee reported last Thursday night and the final text came out on Friday. We are debating it for three short days this week and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will sign the deal on January 2.

According to the legal advice which this agency has received, they will have to sell this agricultural commodity at the same price for which they bought it in Canada plus handling costs, even though it is a surplus commodity which cannot possibly be disposed of at that price. That is the danger of such a rushed agreement which contains unworkable clauses.

I do not know what will happen to this agency. This issue may have to be negotiated if the agreement is ever implemented. However, it is certainly not a workable agreement. I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary or someone else will be able to respond to the concerns of agricultural groups like CEMA.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, the point of the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) is well made. He mentioned that we spent time together travelling with the committee listening to a balanced representation of Canadians making submissions on the free trade agreement.

Although over-all the committee was a farce, given that we did not have the agreement and were only able to report after the final negotiations were complete, certain witnesses who were supporters of the agreement were more honest about the agreement than the Government has ever been. We were, therefore, able to learn various things about the agreement from its supporters.

With respect to marketing boards, we learned from the Grocery Products Manufacturing Association—hardly a cell of the socialist conspiracy—that marketing boards would be at risk under this agreement. A lowering of tariffs and the continued existence of our supply management system as it is now constituted would be incompatible. We have been saying that all along, but when we said it it was NDP fear-mongering. Now the Grocery Products Manufacturing Association has said that.

We have said for some time that this agreement would infringe on the right of provinces to control energy prices. Every time we tried to get the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) to say that in the House, we failed. She would say that it was another NDP tactic. Former Premier Peter Lougheed of Alberta came before the committee and said that that is what the agreement means. I suppose he is part of the socialist conspiracy too, distorting the meaning of this agreement. He said that the provinces would no longer have the power to set a domestic price for, in Alberta's case, natural gas and oil. That was okay with him. It is not okay with me, but at least he was honest about the agreement.

We have said that this agreement will eventually mean the end of the Crow benefit and the current economic structure of western Canada, and we were dismissed. However, the Western Wheat Growers came before us—again hardly an arm of the NDP—and said that over time this will mean the end of the Crow benefit, which may have to be replaced with payments to producers, which is something a lot of Tories are in favour of anyway. At least the Western Wheat Growers were honest with the committee, in a way the Government has not been, about the effect of this agreement.

We have said that our social programs are put in jeopardy by this agreement because they be taken into account when judging which country may have a competitive advantage over the other. They said we were being hysterical when we said that. However, representatives of the business community in Vancouver and National Sea in Halifax came before us and said that some companies invest in Canada because our social programs are a competitive advantage for them.

That may be good, but in the next five to seven years when we are negotiating what it means to have a level playing field, social programs will be included in calculations for competitive advantage.

• (1640)

It could come through Canadians arguing that the tax burden they must bear in order to continue to fund our programs makes them uncompetitive, or the Americans could argue that our programs are an unfair advantage to companies which locate here in Canada. In either case, the unassailable point that I believe we are making is that social programs will become part and parcel of the negotiations when we talk about competitive advantage. That was admitted by people who supported the agreement.

Although the over-all committee process was a farce, it had bright moments. Those bright moments were not only when opponents of the agreement came before the committee and articulated why this agreement is a sell-out of Canada and its future, but when supporters of the agreement appeared before the committee and were more forthcoming about the true consequences of this agreement than the Government has ever had the parliamentary or moral decency to be with us or with the Canadian people.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I think we must emphasize over and over again that in this debate we are not discussing theoretical free trade. We are not discussing the pros and cons of textbook free trade, we are debating and discussing a very specific trade agreement between the United States and Canada which was concluded on October 4, 1987. It is that deal we are examining.

I say this because in listening to the discussion across the country and in this House one gets the impression that individuals are debating free trade as they learned it at university.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Deputy Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

And being returned:

• (1650)

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, it might well be that certain Members of this House and the other place have left early for Christmas. However, it might be meet to point out for the public record that during the part of the ceremony that has just taken place in the Senate Chamber, with the attendance of Senator Willie Adams, the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk), and your humble servant, there was 100 per cent attendance from the Northwest Territories.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1700)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall we call it five o'clock? The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) was given the floor, and I presume that he will continue tomorrow.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC SERVICE—EMPLOYMENT OF VISIBLE MINORITIES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak first in the adjournment debate this evening. I was expecting to speak second.

I want to tell you a story, Mr. Speaker, about a friend of mine. This particular friend is a black Canadian woman. I have known her for a number of years. She was born in Canada, and understandably she becomes very upset when people ask her where she comes from. This friend of mine is a widow, but she was married to a black Canadian who was also born in this country. They have two children. My friend tells me this story that I wish to share with you tonight, Mr. Speaker, of the day when one of her daughters came home from school. Both of her daughters attend schools in my constituency. One day one of her daughters came home from school and told her mother that she was going to paint herself white. She said that because of the remarks that had been made to her by her friends and her schoolmates, remarks that obviously caused her a great deal of upset and concern. That story had a deep impact on me.

There is no way that myself, you, Mr. Speaker, and the Parliamentary Secretary, for that matter, could possibly understand the things that went through the mind of that young black Canadian girl, her father, and her mother on that particular occasion. To me it was a very touching story.

It made me think back to the days when I joined the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada in 1956. I did it because I believed at that time, and I truly believe today, that the Progressive Conservative Party stands for equality; equality of opportunity and equality of the person regardless of race, colour, or creed. That is what the Progressive Conservative Party is all about to me, and that is what Canada is all about to me. It is because of that I have been so happy and pleased that the current Government, the Government that I was elected to support and do support, was the very first Government in this country to introduce employment equity legislation for women, native people, the disabled, and visible minorities.

I was also pleased when the Government, for the very first time ever in this country, introduced an affirmative action program in the Public Service of Canada for visible minorities. I was especially pleased to hear the Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Mazankowski) earlier this fall stand up in the House and indicate in answer to one of my questions that the Government and the Treasury Board had instituted targets for visible minorities in the Public Service, targets that had never been in place before.

Against this background, Mr. Speaker, you can imagine how disappointed I was to start receiving calls from people in the Public Service indicating that the affirmative action program put in place was not working. I might not have been particularly concerned if it had come from only one or two sources, but I have had those concerns raised to me by people who work in the Department of Justice, people who work in the Department of Supply and Services, people who work in the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, people who work in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, people who work in Treasury Board itself, people who work in the Department of Employment and Immigration, people who work in the Department of Labour, people who work in the Department of the Environment, and people who work for the Public Service Commission of Canada, which is supposed to be there to make sure that everybody receives equal treatment.

• (1705)

These people tell me that the programs which have been put in place are not working. In fact, they say that instead of actually increasing the number of visible minorities in the Public Service, they are actually decreasing because of retirements and lay-offs. They say that instead of getting promotions they are standing still. After years of the former Liberal Government doing nothing about seeing that visible minorities in the Public Service were promoted to management and senior management positions, they had hoped that with this Government there would be a change. However, they are not seeing that change, and those are the concerns which they are conveying to me.

This is why I want to raise this question with the Parliamentary Secretary tonight. I want him to consider it and answer it very carefully.

Personally, I want to be part of a Government which is colour blind, part of a Government which promotes people on merit, part of a Government where everyone is considered equal, and part of a Government where people do not have to think about going home and painting themselves white in order to be treated fairly.

With that in mind, I ask the Parliamentary Secretary what the Government will do about it. Will it follow through with an effective affirmative action program, one which has specific targets, not only globally for the whole Public Service but department by department and position by position? What will the Government do about it? I want to hear from him that he will ensure that the program is put into effect and that he is prepared to put his own position as a Parliamentary Secretary, and that of the Minister's, on the line if that does not occur.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for raising this very important issue. I recall that Mr. Diefenbaker used to speak about hyphenated

Canadians and how insulted he was at the concept of having to be registered as a hyphenated Canadian. I recall in 1945 when I had to register under the National Selective Service Act that I could not register as a Canadian in those days. I had to register as a German Mennonite. I am glad that those days have passed, yet it requires continual vigilance to ensure that all of us see each other as Canadians and not as foreign nationals.

I assure the Hon. Member that the Government is committed to addressing the employment concerns of visible minorities and has taken many positive steps to entrench employment equity principles and practices in the federal Public Service.

In 1985 visible minorities were designated as an employment equity target group, and a 14-member advisory committee to the President of the Treasury Board on the employment of visible minorities was established.

Since then the following initiatives have been undertaken: preparation of a report on the availability of qualified members of visible minority groups; creation of special training modules for Public Service managers on visible minorities and employment equity; design of a special orientation module for newly recruited visible minorities in the Public Service; revision of the application for employment form so that visible minorities can self-identify; initiation of a survey to obtain current figures on the numbers of public servants in each target group; and establishment of an automated system to track visible minority employees through the recruitment and staffing process.

In June, 1986 a special program was designed specifically to meet the needs of visible minorities. This program consists of $10.5 million and 300 person-years to be allocated over a three-year period between 1986 and 1989, an office of services for visible minority groups within the Public Service Commission to provide over-all program co-ordination and evaluation, and a network of regional visible minority co-ordinators across Canada.

As recently as August, 1987 we further demonstrated our commitment to this group by approving the establishment of numerical targets for visible minority groups, and I am sure that the Hon. Member is looking for that. This decision was made in response to the recommendations of the president's advisory committee, which is sensitive to the concerns of target group members. The numerical targets will be established by Departments for a three year period beginning April 1, 1988. Now visible minority groups are on an equal footing with the other target groups in the Public Service, women, disabled persons and aboriginal peoples, who have had numerical objectives since 1985-86.

To set these targets, Departments are being asked to compare the number of visible minority employees to the availability of members of these groups in the Canadian labour force. According to the 1981 census data, this figure is slightly more than 4 per cent. The visible minority population of the Public Service was identified as 1.7 per cent by a 1985 survey, which is the latest data available.

I am pleased to say that our Government is responding positively by addressing the employment concerns of visible minorities. We are determined to eliminate inequities in the workplace so that all Canadians are able to obtain their fair share of employment opportunities in the Public Service.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—RIGHTS OF EARLY RETIREES—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to go back to a an issue of utmost importance for Members of this House and the general public. This is the time of the year when we wish one another a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. It reminds me that in December of 1985, the Government chose to make a very special gift to older workers who were on UI benefits and where looking for a job.

On January 5, 1986, everybody suddenly realized that from then on, people who had lost their job and were entitled to benefits of an employer-sponsored pension plan would have their UI benefits reduced by the same amount. After 17 months of struggle by older workers, people from the Quebec City area, the Montreal area and from all parts of Canada, we succeeded. The Government backed down and 46,000 persons were reimbursed the equivalent of $10,000. Unfortunately, other people also took an early retirement or lost their job on December 31. Just imagine. It is December 31 and 1000 people at Quebec Hydro . . . There are 2000 people in this same predicament in Canada. The workers finished working on December 31 and that was it, the plant was closed. They are entitled to their severance pay and their unused sick leave. On January 1, the employment centers are closed. So, these people went to manpower centres on January 4 to ask for their unemployment insurance benefits. They were told by officials: You must first use up your benefits for your two weeks vacation and sick leave and then come back. These people went back at the end of that period, following the advice given by Members of Parliament, by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, by officials at the Department of Employment; these people went back to ask for their benefits on the date when they were to become eligible, around January 15. However, they suddenly discovered that the legislation . . . there are 2,000 people in Canada who find themselves in that situation today, they had to go in early retirement before January 5, 1986, as the Government requested, in order to be reimbursed, but because they made that request after, the request was rejected and the person is penalized. So, I submit that this measure is unfair. It is a fact that in the Laurentian region, for instance, when people appealed this decision, their appeal was upheld and they are getting a refund from the Unemployment Insurance Commission. In the Montreal region, on the other hand, the decision was maintained. In the Quebec region, it was the other way around.

Mr. Speaker, I think it would be important to see some justice here. I think it would be appropriate, just before the holiday season, for the Government to examine its conscience and pay for its sins with a little generosity. It should give refunds to those 2,000 people.

There is another side as well. An unfortunate one, and I hope the Government and the Minister of State (Senior Citizens) (Mr. Hees) will manage to rectify this. I am referring to the fact that from now on, every person, every older worker—and that is discrimination—who loses his job and has to withdraw his pension benefits—a number of businesses in Montreal are closing, including Coleco—while that person is looking for a new job, and after withdrawing the pension benefits he paid for, the contributions he is now entitled to put in his pocket, including the employer's contribution for which he opted in lieu of a pay increase—now these people can kiss their unemployment insurance cheque goodbye.

On the other hand, if that same person withdrew the same amount, say $500, from a registered retirement savings plan, he would be entitled to the full amount of his cheque. We cannot tolerate the Government maintaining this kind of discrimination and injustice in its treatment of older workers.

Mr. Speaker, I wish the Parliamentary Secretary would provide more details on what the Government has decided to do.

First of all, will the Minister, since it is the season to be generous, say: Okay, we have 2,000 people in this gray area, and now all those who have a job termination certificate, who left their jobs but were looking for a new job before January 5, 1986, will receive a refund because it wasn't their fault they couldn't come and apply for unemployment insurance benefits? Those 2,000 people should get an immediate refund of the money the Government owes them.

Subsequently, in the next Speech from the Throne or the next Budget or by issuing instructions the way they did in 1985 when Cabinet decided to pick on older workers, perhaps he could change the system and rectify his mistake by removing any hint of discrimination and letting anyone, whatever their source of income—the way it was before—be entitled to the full amount of his unemployment insurance benefits, provided he can prove he is still looking for work.

When a young person is out of work, he goes to the unemployment insurance office, and they don't ask him: Do you have other income? If he is forty or fifty years old, they don't ask: Do you have rental income? Do you have investment income? Are you getting any income from an RRSP? They say: You have paid so many weeks worth of unemployment insurance benefits so you are eligible for that number of weeks. Here is the money. As soon as you start working again, as soon as you start receiving employment-related earnings, let us know and we will stop your benefits, and so forth.

Today, however, only a person who has a registered employee/employer pension plan has his unemployment insurance payments reduced or completely cut off.

I hope that in this holiday season, at a time when we should be generous to these older workers, the Parliamentary Secretary will stop to consider that these are people who worked for twenty, thirty or forty years by the sweat of their brow and were able to save a little money. We have to remember that these people paid every penny of their unemployment insurance contributions. They were never on unemployment insurance, and now if the plant closes down, they lose their jobs, and they file for unemployment insurance while they are looking for a job, they are penalized. That is injustice, pure and simple.

So in this holiday season, I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will say the Government is going to give a refund to those 2,000 people and that he will make the requisite changes for the coming year to amend the unemployment insurance system.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would agree with the Hon. Member that the issues of unemployment and unemployment insurance are very important and in no way would we minimize them. I hope he would agree with me, though, that the best gift we have given to the people of Montreal and Quebec is the creation in the last three years of over a million jobs. Jobs are ever so much better than unemployment or unemployment insurance. I think the thousands of people in Montreal who are now working as a result of the policies of this Government will recognize that.

I would like to answer the Hon. Member's question of March 20. He will recall that Bill C-50 became effective on April 5, 1987. While maintaining the principle that persons who have retired should not use UI as supplementary income, Bill C-50 ensured that workers who take other employment after their retirement and then work long enough to re-qualify for UI benefits will receive those benefits without any deduction of the previous pension income.

The Bill permitted the retroactive re qualification back to January 5, 1986. As well, the Government amended the pension regulations to permit re-qualification as of April 5, 1987. These changes to the pension legislation are consistent with the Government's belief that persons who have retired from the labour market should not look to unemployment insurance as a supplementary source of income.

As well, Bill C-50 draws a clear and simple line to ensure that there is fairness in the transition provisions. The rule is simply this. Those who applied for unemployment insurance prior to January 5, 1986, that is to say those who applied under the previous rules, have had their entitlement to benefits determined under the previous rules. Equally straightforward, those who applied for benefits on or after January 5, 1986, are governed by the new rules.

In respect of the alleged discrimination between Registered Retirement Savings Plans and employment-generated pensions, it should be noted that RRSPs are a form of personal savings much like investments in long-term securities which eventually provide an annuity. Investment income derived from personal savings has long been regarded as having no relation to income arising from employment and therefore as non-earnings for unemployment insurance purposes. There is no intention of changing this position.

On the other hand, both UI and employment-generated pensions have as a general intention to compensate a person upon becoming unemployed. To avoid double indemnification it is therefore a sound principle to treat retirement pensions as earnings. Bill C-50 and related regulatory amendments provide adequate relief to older workers. For those who work long enough after the start of their pension income to establish a new claim for benefit, the pension income will cease to be regarded as earnings for UI purposes.

I hope the Hon. Member will agree that those individuals who have saved money and invested it in an RRSP should not be penalized for their foresight and planning. This Government is not embarrassed at all about the fact it rewards and encourages those people who save for the hard times that could lie ahead.

SOVEREIGNTY—NORTHWEST PASSAGE—CANADIAN JURISDICTION.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it was on September 10, 1985, a bit over two years ago, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) gave his historic speech to this House on the subject of Arctic sovereignty, something that had been neglected for many, many years by the previous Government. At that time he announced a number of initiatives, many of which are now on the way. Those include additional sovereignty overflights in the Arctic, better defence systems, construction of a Polar 8 ice-breaker, and others.

There are two initiatives that I want to address this afternoon. One was his statement that there would be an immediate adoption of a Canadian Laws Offshore Application Act. Second, that there would immediately commence talks with the U.S. on co-operation in Arctic waters on the basis of full respect for Canadian sovereignty.

In the Minister's announcement there is no connection between the two. One was not dependent on the other. In fact, shortly after the statement, Bill C-104, the Canadian Laws Offshore Application Act, was introduced in the House. It never got very far and died on the Order Paper shortly thereafter.

Those of who have a suspicious frame of mind might think there is some connection between the two and the Government is reluctant to introduce the Act until the talks with the U.S. have been brought to a conclusion. That is despite assurances to the contrary by government spokesmen. If that in fact is not the case, why has the Government not reintroduced that Act? That was my question to the Minister on October 6, 1987. That is not the first time I asked that question and it was not the first time I received the same answer, "Soon". That is a very popular answer with the Government.

This is an important issue at this time because there has just been released to the press—and I know not how because it was supposed to have been confidential—an initial draft of the Arctic co-operation agreement, which is taking a lot longer to negotiate than did the free trade agreement. We have had some inclinations from the press as to what it might contain. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has said that such an agreement will be signed in the future. What we know of it leaves a number of outstanding questions.

We still do not know whether the U.S. will recognize our claims to certain offshore areas or whether the agreement will only be an agreement to disagree, as is the present case. We know that permission will have to be granted, or at least sought, if the United States wants to send an ice-breaker through the Northwest Passage. Is this only if they want to go through the Prince of Wales Strait, which is less than 24 miles wide? If they intend to go through the M'Clure Strait, which is blocked with ice most of the time, would they still request Canadian permission?

Unanswered questions exist with respect to U.S. naval operations in the Arctic, which we understand is not to be included in this agreement. Canadians have a right to know whether there exists any agreement with the United States concerning their notification of us or request for permission from us if they want to engage in naval operations in the waters claimed by Canada.

When we ask those questions of the Government we get a rather equivocating answer. The Government will not tell us whether such an agreement exists or whether the U.S. tells the Government if they are there. Canadians really want to have these questions answered.

This afternoon I urge that the Canadian Laws OffShore Application Act be reintroduced as soon as possible and then be proceeded with through second and third readings. I would like to have the whole question completed. I look forward to the day when there will be navigation through the Northwest Passage, when it becomes a waterway open to vessels of all nations for commercial purposes, so long as they keep to the rules which Canada ought to and has every right to apply to vessels navigating in those waters.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) for the work he has done in representing his constituency, especially on the question he has just raised, which impinges on his constituency probably more than on any other. He has shown his usual consistency in representing his constituents to Parliament and to the Government.

Following the 1985 voyage of the U.S. Coastguard ice-breaker Polar Sea, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) made a statement in the House concerning Canadian sovereignty, particularly in the Arctic. Among the measures that he announced on behalf of the Government was immediate talks with the United States on co-operation in Arctic waters on the basis of full respect for Canadian sovereignty.

Since then the two sides have exchanged draft texts and progress was achieved on practical arrangements that might govern shipping activity in the Canadian Arctic archipelago and off the coast of Alaska. The matter was also raised at ministerial level on several occasions and between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and President Reagan at the Washington Summit in March, 1986, and the Ottawa Summit in April, 1987.

The Prime Minister and President Reagan agreed at the Ottawa Summit to inject new impetus to the discussions already under-way and pledged their determination to find a solution based on mutual respect for sovereignty and our security and other interests.

• (1730)

With respect to the details of the discussion, we are seeking a practical arrangement that would require Canada's prior consent each and every time the United States wishes to send a U.S. government-owned or government-operated ice-breaker, like the Polar Sea, through the Northwest Passage.

With respect to the Canadian Laws Offshore Application Act, the Government considers that this is an important Bill and is committed to bringing it before the House shortly. I know the Member for Western Arctic will be very closely involved in the passage of that legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 5.31 p.m.

TRADE

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

The House resumed from Thursday, December 17, consideration of the motion of Miss Carney that this House endorse, as being in the national interest, the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement, the legal text of which was tabled in the House of Commons on Friday, December 11, 1987, and the amendment of Mr. Langdon (p. 11885).

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been some consultations with respect to the order of speakers. It is my understanding that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) wants to speak this morning, and we would be happy to hear him.

I would like to propose that it be understood that the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) complete his speech, then the Prime Minister would be recognized, followed by the Leader of the Official Opposition who would then be followed by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. Of course, Question Period would begin at the usual time, as would Routine Proceedings.

What I have in mind is that this would mean it would be likely that the Prime Minister, if he wished to do so, would conclude his remarks at 11 o'clock. We would then go into the rest of the Routine Proceedings and Question Period. Following Question Period the Leader of the Opposition would be heard, and then the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we are content with that arrangement which is being made in order to give the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) an opportunity to make his speech in total at one time. We are content with the arrangements, with the proviso that should the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) impinge somewhat, not extensively, on the 11 o'clock start for Statements by Members that the Chair would not see the clock in order to allow the Prime Minister to complete his remarks.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I would be happy to agree to that, provided this means that time would not be taken from the Statements by Members or Question Period.

Mr. Speaker: In view of this morning's events, it has been suggested that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) be given every opportunity to continue his remarks, even if they go beyond 11 o'clock. There seems to be agreement. Is there agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: On the condition, of course, that that would not take away from the usual time for Statements by Members and Question Period. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: So ordered.

• (1010)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, as I stated yesterday when I started my speech, we must repeat over and over again that in this debate we are not discussing theoretical free trade. We are not debating the pros and cons of textbook free trade as we learned it at university. Unfortunately, that is what some individuals in this debate are doing. They are asking us to discuss theoretical free trade, and ask how anybody can be against it.

No, we are not discussing theoretical free trade, but we are discussing this very particular agreement signed between Canada and the United States and announced to the House on October 5, the full text of which we only received last week, on December 11. That is what we have to put our attention to. We must ask whether or not this very particular deal is good for Canada, if on balance it is good for Canada. We in this Party have come to the conclusion that it is not good for Canada, that we gave up too much for what we got.

By the way, it is very interesting to note what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and certain Ministers said about free trade in general before the election of 1984. Let us refer to an article in Maclean's magazine of 1983. The Prime Minister and several other present day Ministers were asked what they thought about free trade, because at that time they were involved in a leadership campaign for the Conservative Party. Here is what the Prime Minister said in 1983, and I quote:

> Canadians rejected free trade with the United States in 1911. They would do so again in 1983. Canada must increase its share of total world trade which has dropped by 33 per cent in the past two decades.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said:

> Bilateral free trade with the United States is simplistic and naive. It would only serve to further diminish our ability to compete internationally.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) said:

> It's silly. Canada must improve relations in trade with the United States, of course. But our national destiny is to become a global leader, not America's weak sister.

I could go on. This is what leading Tories said in 1983 before the election of 1984 when, by the way, they never sought a mandate to go ahead with this kind of arrangement.

I said that we must examine this very particular deal in detail and ask Canadians whether the deal is good or bad for Canada. We must invite Canadians to examine this deal with us. We must ask ourselves, "Did we get more out of this deal than we gave up?" I would like to examine that.

By the way, this is not an easy thing to do in the short time given to us. I said a few minutes ago that we only received the complete text of this trade deal last Friday, on December 11, and this week we are being given three days to debate what the Government says is a most important measure; perhaps in its opinion one of the most important measures to be put before the country since the Second World War if we consider its economic implications.

After this short debate the Prime Minister will sign this treaty with the President of the United States on January 2. When we have raised this issue time and time again, the Government has said, "If you think it should be debated at greater length, we are prepared to sit next week", during the few days before Christmas. The debate we are carrying on in the House is not just for Hon. Members, it is for the Canadian people. A debate in Parliament is meant to be an interaction with the Canadian public so that public opinion can come back and forth and respond to what we are saying here. A debate in Parliament is an attempt to inform the public about the issues. To add two or three days next week will not meet that demand or need on behalf of Canadians.

As a member of the foreign trade committee which spent two weeks travelling in the country, let me say that a large number of witnesses to the committee said that they did not have enough information on which to make a decision in respect of this particular deal. They wanted more time. They wanted to hear a prolonged debate. In any case, this is the timetable with which we are faced, a timetable which was set, by the way, by the American Congress, not by us.

In examining the deal in detail, what did we get? The Government promised and still says that we got secure access to the American market for our goods and services. That is not true. We got an agreement that all tariffs would be eliminated over a 10-year period. That we got; both sides agreed to that. However, we did not get total access to the American market because countervail and anti-dumping laws of the United States still remain and will still impact on trade between the two countries. The barriers of countervail and anti-dumping are the ones that are most serious for Canadian business and Canadian products. They are the ones which have been used to harass Canadian businessmen time and time again, and nothing has been done about them. We got an agreement to reduce tariffs or to eliminate tariffs on both sides. That is the gain which Canada got.

What did we give up? In respect of tariffs, I want to quote from the brief which the Hon. Eric Kierans gave before the parliamentary committee in Halifax. He said in his submission:

> There can be little objection to the elimination of most of our remaining tariffs over the suggested 10-year period. We will become more efficient and the standard of living can only benefit but not to the degree that some envisage.

He went on to say:

> This agreement can never be justified. By giving up sovereignty and jurisdiction over vital areas of our economy, we have reduced our status as a nation to that of an American colony.

That is what the Hon. Eric Kierans said, a man who was a successful businessman, a man who was President of the Montreal Stock Exchange, a man who served as Minister in the Province of Quebec and at the federal level in Ottawa, and a man who later became the head of the Business School at McGill University.

Mr. Crosbie: What did Gerry Regan say?

Mr. Allmand: The Minister can quote Gerry Regan. I am quoting—

Mr. Crosbie: He is your colleague.

Mr. Allmand: He was my colleague. He is your colleague now, I believe. Mr. Speaker, we will find mavericks on both sides of this issue, and God knows that there is a lot of them on the other side.

Mr. Crosbie: Poor Gerry is a maverick now.

Mr. Allmand: In any case, this kind of remark from the government side shows that they are embarrassed by the statements of Mr. Kierans. They cannot sit and listen to that sort of thing because it upsets them and tears holes in their argument.

In addition to reducing our tariffs to zero over a 10-year period—and the United States is reducing its tariffs to zero—what else did we give up, and why was it necessary? With respect to the energy provisions—and I have to read from the elements of the agreement of October 5 because if I try to read from the detailed legal text of December 11 it would take me a whole afternoon—this is what they said in the agreement:

> There is broad agreement to assure . . . non-discriminatory access for the United States to Canadian energy supplies—

I think Canadians should examine that statement in detail. They go on to say in the agreement:

> Both sides have agreed to prohibit restrictions on imports or exports, including quantitative restrictions, taxes, minimum import or export price requirements or any other equivalent measure, subject to very limited exceptions:

• (1020)

That is providing the United States with very wide access to our energy resources.

One must ask why was this necessary in what is described as a free trade agreement. Generally in a free trade agreement both sides reduce tariffs or eliminate them. It might have been sufficient if we eliminated our tariffs over a 10-year period and they eliminated theirs over a 10-year period. But no, Mr. Speaker, not only did we have to agree to eliminate our tariffs so that they would eliminate theirs, we had to throw in unrestricted access to our energy resources, as I just quoted the deal.

Is that appropriate in a so-called free trade agreement? Why was it necessary to put that in? We submit that it was not necessary. It indicates poor bargaining strength on the part of the Government and an inability to negotiate from strength.

What else did we give up? Let us look at the provisions with respect to investment. Again to quote from the elements of the agreement it says that the Parties have agreed to provide each other's investors national treatment with respect to the establishment of new businesses, the acquisition of existing businesses and the conduct, operation and sale of established businesses. What does that mean? It means that Canada has agreed to treat American investors and American companies operating in Canada just as Canadian companies. We have given up the right to screen foreign investment from the United States and control how U.S. investors operate in Canada. We have given up our right to legislate on that as we see fit in the best interests of this country.

Again one must ask why was this necessary if we had already agreed to eliminate all our tariffs. Again we gave up something that we should not have given up and something that was not necessary.

Let us look at the provisions with respect to financial services, banks and financial institutions. Once again we gave up a long standing tradition of control over our banks and financial institutions which has existed in this country for years and years.

With respect to the Auto Pact we have weakened it. We have given up the safeguards that made the Auto Pact effective in bringing investment and jobs to this country.

Concerning agriculture, we have put Canadian farmers in competition with American farmers despite the fact that Canada has a shorter growing season. Our farmers must deal with harsh winters and all the expenses that that entails. In general, Canadian farmers are farther from mass markets compared to American farm producers. Despite all of those things the Government has thrown our Canadian farmers into the same market-place as the larger American corporate farmers from California, Florida and Arizona where there are very long growing seasons and lower costs.

These are some of the things that we gave up in the deal in addition to reducing our tariffs to zero. I have to repeat again and again that usually one would expect in a free trade agreement that a country, in this case the United States, would reduce or eliminate its tariffs and we would eliminate ours and there would be no tariffs on either side. That is what one would expect. But no, this Government, this weak-kneed Government decided to give access to our energy supplies and agreed to give up the right to control investment in American business operating in Canada, and we have given up our traditional control over financial institutions, banks and so on. The Government has thrown our agricultural communities into what I consider to be unfair competition with American producers and the safeguards in the Auto Pact have been given up. All those things are written right into the agreement.

What about those things we have given up that are not written in the agreement which, by the way, Conservative Members pretend do not exist. Here I am referring to the way in which this agreement undermines our regional development programs, our social programs, our labour programs and our environmental programs.

With respect to our regional development programs, they will still be subject to countervail from the United States. They have been countervailed before. In addition, they will be subject to the pressures of harmonization as a result of competition between Canadian firms and U.S. firms. I say that our regional development programs will still be subject to countervail despite this deal with the United States.

Let us look at what the United States Department of Commerce has already said about some of our regional development programs. For example, because we have a fishing vessel assistance program that is a sort of unfair subsidy to fishermen and, therefore, subject to countervail. They have said that our agricultural and rural development programs were countervailable and they imposed countervailing duties because of those programs. I could go on. I have a list of 12 regional development programs which the American Department of Commerce consider to be countervailable and imposed duties as a result. Nothing has been done in this deal to modify or moderate this ability by the American Government to countervail against our regional development programs.

What about our social programs, our labour standards, and our environmental laws? What about such things as medicare, family allowance, day care programs, minimum wages, unemployment insurance, health and safety standards, affirmative action programs and so on? Because these things are not written specifically into the deal the Government said they are not touched by this and that they are protected.

You do not have to be very intelligent to know that if a Canadian firm, subject to all these laws and standards that I have referred to, is in competition with an American firm, that has complete and total access to Canada, it will lose out to the American firm that will have lower costs. In many States of the U.S., and in its federal Government, there are not the same high standards of unemployment insurance, minimum wages or affirmative action as we have here in Canada. The Canadian firm will be subject to higher costs because of those things. The American firm will have total access to Canadian markets to sell its goods and services.

I would like to refer to a statement made about 10 days ago at a symposium on this so-called free trade agreement in Montreal. Manfred Meier-Preschany, former chief of world-wide loans for the Dresdner Bank in West Germany said:

> Without a free trade deal Europeans are almost forced to invest in Canada to reach the Canadian market. But free trade would allow them to serve Canada from plants in the United States.
> If large European firms are given the option of locating a manufacturing plant in either Canada or the United States, they will, "almost by definition use the United States". That is because of such factors as transportation costs, taxation rates, market size and labour laws.

This deal will not bring jobs or investment to Canada. It will weaken our standards, weaken our programs and bring down our costs so Canadian firms can compete with American firms and thereby the pressure to harmonize with the lower standards in the United States will have to take effect. Either that or sooner or later firms will move to the United States where they will have lower costs, lower standards but still sell into Canada, thus having the best of both worlds.

Who wins in that deal, Mr. Speaker? Of course the Canadian firms. That is why business is in favour of this deal. Canadian firms can move to the United States. They are free to invest there but the workers who live in this country are not as free to move. They are not like capital.

In conclusion, we have to ask Canadians what kind of a country they want. Do they want one that becomes, as a result of this deal, a quasi-colony of the United States, an appendage of the United States? Do they want a free and independent country that will be able to act in its best interests whenever it sees fit to do so?

• (1030)

It is very interesting to note that we terminated our last colonial link with the United Kingdom with the Constitution of 1982. When we brought the Constitution home and established our own amending formula, the Constitution became completely Canadian. That long process started with the Battle of Vimy Ridge in the First World War when Canadians fought as an individual nation. We proceeded through the Statute of Westminster, the abolition of appeals to the Privy Council and the establishment of a Canadian Governor General. It went on and on, and in 1982 we became a fully independent country. It has only lasted for five years. Now this Government has sent us in the other direction. We will become a colony of the United States unless Canadians can stop this Government in a general election.

I ask Canadians, people beyond the House of Commons, to think seriously about this issue and to think about what kind of country they want. Do they want one that is part of the United States empire or one that is a free and independent country?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I have a very short question for the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member has spent the last three years as a distinguished critic of employment programs, and goodness knows, that has kept him very busy because there has been a lot to be critical about.

We in this House have been told that any proposed adjustment could be handled by existing programs. We find that to be somewhat surprising since all the existing programs for job training have been cut back by several hundreds of millions of dollars in the last three years.

I wonder if the Hon. Member would care to comment on the real requirement for not only effective job-training programs but for programs to deal with the massive dislocation that will take place, as we heard by way of testimony before the Commons committee, in the food processing, the data processing, the printing, the agriculture and the garment and apparel industries. We are talking about some of the most significant and broad-ranging industries in Canada. There will be major job losses in those industries. What will be the requirements and the costs for a massive new adjustment program to respond to those problems?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, it is more than laughable for the Government to suggest that the present retraining programs are adequate to deal with the consequences of this trade agreement with the United States. Let us be very clear, the Government has cut retraining programs by 32 per cent from 1984 to 1987. In 1984, the budget for retraining was $2.2 billion. Now it is $1.6 billion. When we ask questions in the House of Commons, the Government pretends to the Canadian people that this cut-back program will be adequate to deal with the massive readjustment resulting from this agreement.

The onus is on the Government to tell Canadians which and how many jobs will be lost and which and how many jobs will be gained. That it has not done. Studies have been done by various bodies from the Economic Council of Canada through to the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and different estimates have been made. Many of those estimates were made before this particular agreement was announced. They were made on theoretical models and then readjusted after because they found that the actual deal was not quite the model on which they had based their studies.

Everyone on all sides of the House agrees that there will be massive readjustments. Even those on the government side agree with that because the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said so in a speech he made on October 6. He said that massive readjustment programs would be necessary. He backtracked after that but he told the truth on that night.

We do not know to what extent the number of jobs will increase or decrease, but we know that there will be a massive loss of jobs and no doubt there will be new jobs created. We know that. However, Canadians who now have jobs that they have held for 20 or 30 years will lose those jobs. Some of those jobs are high-paying, good jobs, not like the jobs that are being produced now, jobs at minimum wage with no benefits, no labour standards and no unions. Canadians will lose those good jobs. Maybe there will be new jobs created in other parts of the country or in other kinds of industries, but Canadians have no assurance yet from the Government that there will be an adjustment program to retrain them or relocate them. The Government has not made that commitment and it should. The parliamentary committee strongly recommended that, before the Prime Minister signs this agreement, he should announce such a program.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to hear the hon. gentleman. Since we have a precedent of asking questions despite the occasion, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question.

I would like to know what he thinks of the submission by Gerald A. Regan to the Committee of the House of Commons on trade negotiations of December 3. At page 9 of his submission, he said:

> I regard arguments to the effect that Canada will lose its culture, its sovereignty, or its social welfare system as a consequence of this kind of a pact as downright silly.

That is the opinion of a former Liberal International Trade Minister under former Prime Minister—what was his name—Trudeau. He is a man who attempted to negotiate free trade with the United States on a sectoral basis, sector by sector, and got nowhere under the last Liberal administration. He has called the suggestion of the Hon. Member "downright silly".

On the same page of his remarks, Mr. Regan pointed out the following:

> That increasing dependence on the U.S. market has not eroded our social security system—indeed, during those years it has been enhanced by expansion of the U.I. system and the barring of extra billing for medical services as well as other improvements.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member's opinion of what was said on page 12 by Gerry Regan, a former Premier of Nova Scotia, not a neophyte, not some minor member of the Liberal Party of Canada as the hon. gentleman might be considered to be. He said this:

> The greatest assurance of protection of our sovereignty and our culture is the maintenance of a strong economy. Free trade, with the greatest market on earth, gives us an opportunity to strengthen our economy that any other country on earth would give their eye teeth to have.

That was said by the former International Trade Minister. There is a lot of good material in here, but I will go right on to page 15. The same prominent Liberal about whom the Hon. Member has said is a maverick and is now being described as a maverick by the front-benchers in the Hon. Leader of the maverick's Party, said this about Nova Scotia:

> With barriers removed, we can enter a new era of economic development in this province.

That was said by a man who was Premier of Nova Scotia for eight years, not some little turkey jerky from some remote corner of the Liberal Party of Canada, and God knows they have more turkeys there. Perhaps the turkeys in the Liberal Party are endangered by this agreement.

Mr. Regan also said:

> A good free trade agreement can be the most effective regional development plan this country could have and could move us toward the time when transfer payments will no longer be necessary.

Did the Hon. Member get that? He said that it can be the most effective regional development plan this country could have.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Finally, will the Hon. Member comment on the conclusion of Mr. Regan's address to the House of Commons Committee in which he said:

> I have sought to stress the removal of tariffs does not threaten culture or sovereignty and that free trade would be golden opportunity for this part of the country.

What will the Hon. Member say to Gerry Regan's part of the country when he goes there to explain that he is against this golden opportunity that Gerry Regan wants for his part of the country, Nova Scotia? What about that?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to be with the committee in Halifax when Mr. Regan made that statement. The Hon. Member asked me what I thought about it, and I must tell him, not very much. Of course, Mr. Regan is a delightful fellow. We love him. He is a former Liberal Minister, but at the same time I referred to the statement of the Hon. Eric Kierans who, in my opinion, has higher qualifications—

• (1040)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: Well, that is what Canadians will have to judge. Let me tell the Hon. Member this. Following the remarks of the Hon. Gerry Regan he was asked a question by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall)—I think that is his riding.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Holtmann: He is a member of your Party.

Mr. Allmand: They consider that funny. I approached this subject in a serious way this morning but the other side is not interested.

The Hon. Member asked Mr. Regan this question: "You are the former Premier of this province. You were a leading Minister from Nova Scotia. Did you examine the implications of this agreement for regional development programs as they would affect this province?" Mr. Regan's answer was: "No, I have not done this".

How can anyone give any credibility to a statement made before a committee of this House by someone who has not even examined the implications on regional development in a province which has benefited for a long time from the use of those programs?

Mr. Regan did exactly what I was talking about at the beginning of my remarks. He was debating this issue as if we were talking about theoretical free trade and what he learned in Nova Scotia schools when he was a kid.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Joseph Howe.

Mr. Allmand: He was discussing free trade in pure theory. He was not discussing this agreement. He admitted himself that he had not even examined the implications for regional development for Nova Scotia. So much for Mr. Regan.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We shall continue the debate with the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

[English]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I begin simply by saying to my friend, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) that Gerry Regan has been accused of being a lot of things but a political theorist is not one of them. He has been known as a very successful, down-to-earth Premier of Nova Scotia, and an extremely successful Minister for International Trade in the Liberal Government who represented Canada with great distinction. When he says that the free trade agreement is good, presents a golden opportunity for Nova Scotia and Atlantic Canada, I can tell you that I will accept his view before I will accept that of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: What about your old buddy Eric Kierans?

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend invokes Eric Kierans. He is also a very distinguished Canadian. That is why I was surprised at the bitter reaction in the Liberal Party against Mr. Kierans when I invoked his statement in support of Meech Lake. Members of the Liberal Party said Eric Kierans does not count. He is a nobody. I said Eric Kierans is a very distinguished Canadian. When he spoke out in support of Meech Lake—I did not say the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East, I said members of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We came down here to listen to you, Brian.

Mr. Mulroney: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) says he would like to listen to me. I thank him for that courtesy. If he wants to get home for the weekend, I will be brief.

Some four years ago, Mr. Speaker, in my main address to this House, I had the occasion to refer to Canada and Canadians as a land of promise and people of hope. Today I want to speak about our country and our people in exactly those same terms. I want to speak about promise for Canada. I want to speak about hope for Canadians. I want to speak about the Canada-U.S. trade agreement, the promise it holds for our economy, the difficulties and challenges it can present, and the hope it holds for all Canadians, particularly for the youth of Canada.

[Translation]

Because, Mr. Speaker, it is the future of our youth which is at stake here today. The free trade agreement we have reached with the United States is a gateway to that future. Thanks to this agreement, our products and services will have free access to the biggest market in the world. This will mean thousands of new jobs and a future for our youth. And whether we are speaking of young Canadians in Quebec, Alberta or British Columbia, their message to us is clear: Give us this marvelous opportunity, create jobs, and we, young Canadians, shall build a stronger and a more united Canada.

[English]

I support the main resolution and my colleagues support the agreement, as finalized last week and tabled in this House on Friday, for reasons we have set forward and are happy to discuss again. I congratulate in a special way the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) and our negotiating team for a job very well done. It has not been easy for any Government or any group of Ministers to undertake a complex international negotiation. There were moments of great difficulty, moments of concern, but the Minister and her colleagues held firm. They represented the Canadian national interest with great conviction and great skill, and on behalf of all Members of the House, irrespective of political Party, I congratulate the Minister for International Trade, Ambassador Reisman, and their group for a job well done on behalf of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We have secured an agreement which is good for Canada, very much in the national interest, which protects our national and cultural sovereignty, our social programs, our unique linguistic character, and our regional development initiatives. As I told the House of Commons at the outset of these considerations and debates on September 26, 1985, these attributes of our nationhood are not at all negotiable. We never wavered under any circumstances from that commitment from beginning to end of the negotiations.

The lines of the debate are very clearly drawn. There can be no mistaking where the Parties in this House stand. On our side the Progressive Conservative Government undertook this initiative, negotiated the agreement, and now presents it to the House for consideration of Hon. Members. On the other side the Liberals and the NDP oppose the agreement completely and unalterably. We know now, Canadians now know, what the Liberals and the NDP are against. Canadians have yet to find out what the Liberals and the NDP are for.

I think in the fullness of time, notwithstanding understandable partisan comments from time to time, the country hopes for and will achieve a rational debate. I think Canadians expect that of us and we owe them nothing less.

I believe this agreement presents Canadians with new opportunities for prosperity and new challenges to make our economy more competitive. The free trade agreement does not mean that we can sit back and watch the world come to us, because it is not going to happen. We are not going to sell our products because of the colour of our eyes or the cut of our jibs. We are going to sell them because they are high quality and internationally competitive. That has been the strength of Canada in the past and that is what is going to happen to us in the future.

We have to go out and aggressively seek and conquer new markets. This is a call to collective excellence. We are saying to Canadians let us dare to be the best. There is no doubt in my mind about the answer of Canadians. Our people do not shrink from challenges. This very country was built by pioneers right out of the wilderness. They rolled back frontiers decade after decade. We are now confronted with a similar challenge and we are going to roll back the frontier of technological innovation and excellence into the 21st century where Canadians will be major players, not only in the growth of their country but in the growth of the trading world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1050)

Mr. Mulroney: Permit me to quote briefly from the preamble to the text as follows:

> The Government of Canada and the Government of the United States of America, resolved to strengthen the unique and enduring friendship between their two nations, have agreed to establish a free trade area.

The objectives of this agreement are to eliminate the barriers to trade in goods and services between our two countries, facilitate fair competition, liberalize conditions for investments, establish effective procedures for the resolution of trade disputes, and lay the foundation for further co-operation to expand and enhance the benefits of the agreement.

There it is, Mr. Speaker. Those are the elements, an important, mutually advantageous commercial transaction; nothing more, nothing less. This is not the kind of integrated economic union brought about by the Common Market in the United Kingdom with France. If anybody for a second thinks that——General de Gaulle, as President of the French Republic, would have allowed France to accept trading conditions which might have weakened French sovereignty, he is misjudging the General. In spite of 25 years of much closer economic co-operation than is provided by this agreement, France has preserved its integrity, its independence, the purity of its language and its literature.

[English]

If anybody thinks that Margaret Thatcher would, for one second, agree to an economic apparatus that would diminish the integrity of Great Britain or the soul of the English language or literature, they know nothing about Margaret Thatcher. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that this commercial transaction will do nothing except make Canada more prosperous and that prosperity will allow Canadians to enjoy a stronger and richer culture.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I will list very briefly some of the things that we have achieved for Canada. First, we have achieved a more certain framework for our most vital trading relationship. I think few people would quarrel with the desirability of that. Interdependence requires co-operation, but co-operation based on rules impartially applied, not at the whim of the Party in power.

Second, the elimination of tariffs, which is the most powerful element of the agreement, removes barriers to manufacturing and processing in Canada and expands tremendous markets for exports of these resources and agri-fish products.

Third, we will enjoy a more certain climate for investment. Investment means more jobs. Investment means more income for Canadians. May I say, with respect for my hon. friend from Oshawa, that his constituency, of which I am proud, represents, I suppose, the ideal for the other 281 constituencies in Canada. Everyone is proud of the tremendous foreign investment and the low unemployment which has been brought about in Oshawa. We wish that kind of richness and prosperity for all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: That's what happens when you vote NDP.

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend knows that I say that with affection and respect with regard to the kinds of things which we can bring about on a progressive basis for all Canadians.

Fourth, the agreement will provide better choice and better prices for consumers. The leading spokespeople of consumers' associations have indicated that consumer goods will cost less, which is of great benefit to the ordinary Canadian.

Fifth, the Auto Pact is maintained, improved, and made more secure as part of the broader package. The Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) seems to chuckle. He should not chuckle because he knows that Mr. Peapples, the Chairman of General Motors, is a very serious man whose company has invested billions of dollars in southern Ontario and billions of dollars in his own constituency. Mr. Peapples and the chairman of the two other leading car manufacturers, experts in the automobile business, say that the free trade agreement with the United States has preserved and enhanced the Auto Pact, it means more jobs and greater security of access. Mr. Peapples said that it is good for Oshawa, it is good for Ontario, and it is good for Canada. I would have thought the Leader of the NDP would stand up and celebrate that fact.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Sixth, we have achieved a better market for energy products which means more investment in energy projects in western Canada which is so vital for the well-being of that great region of our country, for Hibernia, the offshore of Newfoundland and Labrador, and possibly for Nova Scotia. This is another great attraction as a result of a free trade arrangement.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Quebecers are especially aware of the opportunities our free trade agreement opens up for electricity exports. The American market is crucial if Quebec is to develop this key natural resource. Hydro power is no more immune to American protectionist measures than oil or other products. It was threatened just like all other products. And protectionism is a risk we cannot afford to run if we want electrical energy to remain the powerful instrument of growth it has been for Quebec. And I can tell you that all or practically all Quebec spokesmen, the Premier of Quebec, the leader—the former Minister of Finance, Mr. Parizeau, the former Minister of Finance, Mr. Landry, the leaders at all levels of society are now saying that the future of Canada and Quebec rests squarely on the free trade agreement. It is an instrument which will bring back a degree of unusual prosperity to Quebec, and Quebecers simply want Canada to sign this free trade agreement. I fully expect the leader of the Liberal Party and the NDP to help us promote the economic interests of Quebec within a renewed confederation.

[English]

Seventh, we wanted to maintain agricultural marketing boards, and they have been maintained.

[Translation]

Preservation of our supply management system and marketing boards is especially important for Quebec, where the Dairy Product and Egg Marketing Boards regulate 60 per cent of farm produce.

This Agreement also complies with Article 11 of the GATT, in line with the wishes of the Government of Quebec and several UPA leaders. It is thanks to the Minister of Agriculture, to Mr. Pagé, the Quebec Minister and Premier Bourassa, and Mr. Blais, the Minister of State for Agriculture, that the final text contains this reference to Article 11 of the GATT, as desired by the UPA, and this represents a considerable gain for Quebec producers.

[English]

Regional development programs and cultural policies are preserved along with our capacity to assist cultural industries. Social programs were never at issue.

Eighth, more certain economic growth will bolster institutions and programs which anchor Canadian values and identity. I have mentioned before that this trade agreement is neither a miracle nor a mirage. It is an instrument for growth, a pragmatic undertaking conditioned by lessons of geography, experience, and common sense. It is born of confidence—confidence in who we are as Canadians and what we are capable of achieving. Above all, we will have a fair chance to compete, to excel in trade internationally—not only with the United States but in the GATT—and to enrich Canada in the process.

For Quebec, as I have mentioned, the agreement means new opportunities for hydroelectric exports and new export outlets for small and medium-sized enterprises.

[Translation]

For example, Mr. Speaker, I am thinking of Quebec's new generation of business men and women, who have already made breakthroughs outside the province and outside the country. The days of a well-meaning elite preaching introversion, and making a virtue of economic faint-heartedness, are history. Quebecers used to complain about having their economy dominated by others. Today, throughout Quebec, we see men and women who have taken their future into their own hands, and astonished both their fellow Canadians and our neighbours to the south with their dynamic, creative and daring spirit. Today's modern, prosperous and self-confident Quebec is an example for the rest of Canada. Entrepreneurs from Quebec, businessmen and women from Quebec are saying to the Federal Parliament: Give us this instrument for economic expansion and national unity. Give us, as Quebeckers, an opportunity to compete with the best in the world and we will succeed. And in the process, we will bring back a degree of prosperity to Quebec and to Canada.

• (1100)

For Ontario, clearly the assessment of everyone, including the Government of Ontario if I read the most recent report of the Treasurer of Ontario correctly, is that it offers new opportunities for greater prosperity. I suppose one could quibble about the degree, but there is no doubt about the fact that even the Government of Ontario, which I understand is officially opposed to the transaction, produces numbers and studies which confirm that Ontario will benefit from this deal. Everyone knew that before.

The only degree of difference is the extent to which Ontario will benefit. It is our hope that Ontario will benefit greatly from this transaction because Ontario has become, in Canada, a great industrial heartland, a great symbol and instrument of growth and prosperity. This Government has initiated policies that have enhanced that and contributed to it. We want to make sure that that great strength of Ontario is maintained for future decades. This treaty with the United States will clearly contribute to the prosperity of Ontario and, in the process, the prosperity of Canada.

In the West there will be gains for forestry workers in British Columbia, for ranchers and oil workers in Alberta, for uranium producers in Saskatchewan, for electricity exports from Manitoba. In the Atlantic there will be benefits for the fishery, for exports of agricultural products, for minerals, and for manufacturing. The potential benefits span the breadth of this country and will stimulate more balanced development in the years ahead.

To those who say our industry will go into decline without the protection of tariff walls, I say, have confidence in the quality and competitiveness of Canadian products. After all, the same concern was expressed when the Auto Pact was negotiated by the Government of Canada 23 years ago. Remember that, at the time, that great commercial treaty was negotiated by the same fellow who did it again, Simon Reisman. The Leader of the New Democratic Party chuckles. Twenty-three years ago Simon Reisman negotiated the Auto Pact on behalf of Canada. Many people, including some of the Members of the socialist party, were opposed. The fact of the matter is that the Auto Pact, far from being a difficulty, has been a bonanza for Ontario and for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I say with respect and affection, of course, that I would advise my hon. friend, the Leader of the NDP—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): And Shirley Carr.

Mr. Mulroney: Shirley Carr too. After all, it is Christmas. I would advise my hon. friend to be very prudent in the severe judgments that he makes in forecasting. I say with all the Christian charity that I can summon at Christmas time, his record as a forecaster on the floor of the House of Commons is, to understate the case, poor indeed.

For those who said that the Auto Pact would be a disaster, I remind them that nearly 100,000 jobs have been created in the automobile and auto parts industry. There has been $10 billion in direct new investment in that industry in the 1980s alone. It has become the great motor of industrial renewal in Ontario, yet some Members were predicting a disaster. In the same way that the Leader of the NDP is predicting disaster with the free trade agreement, which I hope is recorded in Hansard, let me tell him that he was wrong 23 years ago and he will be wrong again today.

To those who say that our cultural sovereignty will be diminished, I simply say, look around you. I suggest that we examine this emotional argument in the light of some empirical evidence. Let us consider the experience of Ontario and the Auto Pact, because it is very sensitive and important. The numbers are there. One can consider them or disregard them. I believe the figures are an important consideration.

In 1966, the first year after the Auto Pact came into force, 72 per cent of Ontario's foreign trade went to the United States. Last year, 90 per cent of Ontario's foreign trade went to the United States, and two-thirds of that 90 per cent of foreign trade came from the automotive product business. In other words, 90 per cent of all the goods and services produced in Ontario that were exported went to the United States. No other province has that kind of trade balance with the United States.

When the Auto Pact was signed, Ontario's foreign trade in this area was $2.6 billion in 1966. It has risen to $54.6 billion, last year, which raises the following question. Has Ontario and Canada's culture been adversely affected by this closeness or new prosperity?

Let us look at Toronto, southern Ontario and Ontario. In the last 20 years new newspapers have been born, new magazines have been published, new books have been written, new symphonies performed, new plays staged, new concert halls have been built, new television networks have been launched. All of that has enhanced and enriched the great cultural personality of Canada. That is because new prosperity has meant greater investment in arts and culture. It has always been thus. Rich societies do that and we want to make sure that is maintained.

Mr. Nunziata: The Auto Pact did all that.

Mr. Mulroney: Well, one of my hon. friends from Toronto is chuckling at the fact that the Auto Pact did all that. The Auto Pact contributed greatly, and there are other areas of the country that seek only an equality of opportunity to have that kind of prosperity. They do not want to detract from Ontario's prosperity. They are proud of it. They are only asking you to please open your mind so that British Columbia and Newfoundland can have the same equality of opportunity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: When in Venice in last June at the Economic Summit, I was struck again that the city itself is one of the world's great treasures which has contributed greatly to the cultural life of Italy and all of mankind. What is Venice in history if not a trading city? What are Venetians, from Marco Polo's time, if not traders?

What is Canada, if not a great trading nation? What are Canadians, if not great traders? Trade is the lifeblood of our nation. Thirty per cent of everything we produce is for export. This compares with some 20 per cent for Japan and 10 per cent for the United States of America, another great trading partner.

In the final text of the agreement we have clarified and consolidated the gains we have achieved for Canada from the October agreement in principle. We also believe that our agreement with the United States will be a catalyst for the GATT negotiations, and the underlying objective of all trading nations. These are not mutually exclusive. We have not done anything to the detriment of the other. We have negotiated bilaterally with our great trading partner, the United States of America, but we have intensified our negotiations on the GATT.

The Minister for International Trade and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) have provided leadership on a sustained basis. They have brought agriculture, services and other items to the forefront of the agenda of the GATT.

Canada is a great trading nation, and not just exclusively with the United States, although we value that greatly. Our trading strategy is for Canada to excel across the world. We will fight for markets everywhere, and everywhere we can find a new trading opportunity we will take it, because that means jobs back at home.

• (1110)

So the exclusion is not something that we believe in. We believe that we can and should promote a proper bilateral relationship with the United States, and at the same time intensify and expand our trading opportunities around the world, because in that manner greater prosperity is ensured and greater fairness for all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We all know full well, Mr. Speaker, that protectionism breeds stagnation; that trade liberalization is the time-tested promise of sustained economic growth. If this is a time for confidence, and I believe it is, it is also a period in our history that demands vision, vision to build a more united and a stronger Canada.

I invite Members to consider some of the implications of a question posed recently in The Ottawa Citizen by Mr. Spicer. I leave the question with my hon. friends. Mr. Spicer observed:

> There lurks in the minds of many of these professional patriots . . . a veritable Disneyland of neuroses about Canada: fear over hope; protectionism over risk-taking; a preference for the small, safe homeland over the scary grand stage of North America; pessimism over optimism; a love of hiding over seeking; a taste for tribe over individual.

Mr. Spicer asked, is it not time for Canadians to stop being afraid. I say to Mr. Spicer, not only was his question right, the answer is that Canadians have stopped being afraid and will move proudly into the 21st century in large measure because of this courageous action in respect of bilateral trade.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

The newspaper Le Droit wrote on Tuesday:

> The shortsightedness and the too few arguments used by those who oppose free trade between Canada and the U.S. contrast sharply with the strength of the rational arguments used by those who favor the deal.

In an a major editorial published on Monday in the daily newspaper Le Devoir, which is quite important in Quebec, the editorialist wrote, and I quote:

> Canada needs the free trade deal simply because there is no other alternative.

That is a major statement made in the name of all Quebecers.

[English]

Legitimate concerns have been expressed about the implications of the omnibus trade Bill which is under consideration in the United States. The fundamental nature of this concern illustrates the concern we had about protectionism, a primary motivator in the efforts that brought about this historic trade agreement. That is why we sought, as a first priority, greater security of access to the United States market, and we succeeded in that objective.

We have agreed to a unique binding dispute settlement provision, one which others envy, which will ensure impartial, fair application of trade remedy rules. This is intended simply to guarantee the rule of law—the rule of law over the whim of political power. We have preserved our access against changes to existing trade remedy law. We have concluded a standstill provision restricting either party from taking trade action which will run counter to the spirit of the free trade agreement before that takes effect.

The United States administration and the Congress know our concerns about what might be included in the omnibus Bill. They know full well what the implications would be, if measures are approved in the omnibus Bill which undermine all of those important matters that have been negotiated.

So, Mr. Speaker, a legitimate question, and one that I have heard in this House and elsewhere is, how did we do in the negotiations. I can only hope, and I express the serious hope, that we do not have to have the United States Congress reject the agreement in order to convince some Canadians that we actually did pretty well.

What we have negotiated is a balance. It is not perfection, but it is a balance; a net gain based on the best judgments available on what the result would generate for Canada, and on what the political process in both countries would accommodate.

Just consider what some others are saying and doing. In a major article in the Washington Post on November 8, headed "Other nations vie for U.S. trade pacts. Canadian agreement includes coveted points". In a major analysis, Stuart Auerbach said the following:

> While opposition mounts in Canada to a recently completed free trade agreement with the United States, other countries are asking the Reagan administration for a chance to conclude similar pacts.
> Among major U.S. trading partners that have expressed interest in negotiating free trade pacts with the United States are Japan, South Korea, Taiwan and . . . especially Singapore. In addition, Israel now wants its two year old free trade agreement upgraded to match some of the provisions in the Canadian pact . . .

Because they are so beneficial.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: An important American Congressman, John LaFalce, who is chairman of an important congressional subcommittee, was more pointed in his assessment. He is not someone who is hostile to Canada. He is not someone who, to the best of my knowledge, has expressed anything other than fairly reasoned judgments on major issues in the past. I do not know him personally but I am acquainted with his record of service in the Congress of the United States. I suppose, like all of us, he is an ordinary Congressman trying to exercise value judgments on important matters that come before the Congress. Clearly his interests are the American interests. My interests are Canadian interests. But take a look at his judgment. He recently stated:

> The Canadians were extremely successful in their negotiations on this agreement. The Canadians said we ought not to have provision within the agreement that refers to stabilization of our exchange rates. There are a great many industries which we believe to be primarily commercial that should have been included within the embrace of the agreement.
> The Canadians said, these commercial industries are basically cultural industries and "we won't even talk about our cultural industries".

He went on to state, " . . . and the United States gave in to the Canadians". "The same thing," he said, "is true about the Auto Pact". He concludes by stating:

> Most of the members of the United States Congress think that in the free trade agreement the Canadians got a much better deal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I, personally, Mr. Speaker, have never put forward that view, for a very good reason. I believe that the only kind of deal that is of any value is a good deal for both sides. For this deal to have any life or any value, like any other mutually beneficial contract, it must be an undertaking that provides benefits for both sides. This is a win-win situation.

No one gets rich on the back of somebody else. We are saying that by liberalizing our trading instruments we will create more wealth—more wealth for the United States, more wealth for Canada. This is genuinely the proven track record of liberalized trade in Europe, now a market of 320 million people which was cringing and crumbling after the war which; with visionary leadership it knocked down trade barriers, got rid of the impediments to trade, and allowed people to compete in a larger market.

This is exactly what we are doing. This is a call to excellence, and we believe that the United States and Canada will emerge with stronger, more powerful economies, providing greater economic opportunities for the young people of both countries.

It is for these reasons that I say as Prime Minister of Canada that I support wholeheartedly this resolution and intend on January 2 to sign this agreement with the United States of America.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: This will represent a major step towards the conclusion, but there will still remain a great deal of time for debate as we move in the new year to put forward the required enabling legislation. We are debating this issue in all parts of the country, and we welcome the response. We are gratified by the growing support from Premiers, the growing support from all regions of the country from Canadians who share the vision of a mature and confident Canada.

[Translation]

This is due mainly to the new spirit of tolerance and generosity uniting us all. Canadians have decided to turn their backs on the disagreements and pointless arguments of the past, and face with determination the challenge of the new century ahead. Strengthened by their rediscovered unity, Canadians want to build an even more prosperous country equal to our collective aspirations and our national destiny.

Canada has done very well in this agreement, very well indeed. The agreement has achieved some broad support across the Canadian spectrum. By way of rapid illustration this morning, financial writer, Mr. Belanger, commented that this deal was historic, probably the most important we have ever signed since Confederation. He said, for too long Canada has cut bait. Now is the time for the country to go for it.

Bob Blair from Alberta, one of our most distinguished entrepreneurs and risk-takers, said in our business we would prefer to fight than be protected. We in Alberta are ready to compete with anyone.

[Translation]

Robert Campeau, who is one our greatest Canadian entrepreneurs, said:

[English]

Free trade is the most significant economic political act in this century in Canada.

Gordon Cummings talked of the Atlantic possibilities. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) raised them this morning and quoted the distinguished Liberal Premier of Nova Scotia. here is another distinguished Nova Scotian, Gordon Cummings from National Sea Products, who says the most important aspect to us was the dispute settlement mechanism and we got that. It is a hell of a gain for Canada.

[Translation]

Philippe de Gaspé Beaubien, president of Télémédia, said that this deal is the key to our future strenght and prosperity as a country. Alain Dubuc wrote in La Presse that Quebec hit the jackpot with this deal and Mr. Dubuc is right. Quebec hit the jackpot and so has the rest of Canada with this free trade agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Even John Kenneth Galbraith says Canada clearly has a trading advantage under this deal and much wider access to the United States.

Sally Hall of the Consumers' Association of Canada said that free trade produces choice and competition and gives consumers real power in the market-place.

The Hon. Donald Macdonald said, this deal will be the envy of every other nation in the world.

[Translation]

Michel Roy wrote in La Presse: We must therefore conclude unequivocally that La Presse can welcome quite favorably this agreement as a major step towards a new economic, commercial and financial system between Canada and the United States.

As to the Cattlemen's Association . . . Laurent Beaudoin, president of Bombardier, stated: This agreement gives Canada more security and opportunity for Canada.

[English]

The Vice-President of Polysar, in a very important area of Ontario, in Sarnia, Mr. Bentley, said, it is going to enhance an already growing area. We got in the free trade agreement 100 per cent of what we asked for in Canada.

The C. D. Howe Institute said that women in the service sector in particular would see their employment prospects vastly improved.

Robert Nixon, Treasurer of the Government of Ontario, put out a report "Economic Outlook and Fiscal Review" which indicated that marginally lower prices for imported goods should lower consumer prices and modestly increase real incomes in Canada. The effect of this is to boost aggregate demand and stimulate industry in general. The net effects of mutual tariff reduction will be small but marginally positive. This is the Treasurer of Ontario, a Government against the free trade agreement, who says that it will bring greater prosperity for Ontario. We should all be so lucky!

I want to quote the friend of my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). He clearly has not heard this, so I want to be the first to bring him the good news. This brings such great advantages to his riding and to Bob White that they will probably be on the bandwagon by the time the bells ring this afternoon. George Peapples, Chairman and Chief Executive Office of GM and Chairman of the Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Association of Canada in Oshawa, Ontario, said:

> The free trade agreement preserves the Auto Pact and its benefits and recognizes the contributions to the economy which Auto Pact producers have made in this country for many years. It cements and strengthens the automotive partnership which provides Canada and the U.S. with benefits they have long enjoyed and provides a secure basis for Canadian parts manufacturers—

Mr. Broadbent: He is pausing.

Mr. Mulroney: I want to make sure the Hon. Member hears this. He continues:

> —to compete for business throughout North America, expanding and strengthening Canada's economic infrastructure.

Mr. Peapples says:

> Our ability to serve that market in future will have a direct impact on our long-term prosperity and the job security of our employees. This is true for the auto industry and also for many other sectors. The free trade agreement, in our view, provides the framework we need to get on with the job.

I think these people are recognized as very distinguished Canadians with no axes to grind of which I am aware.

The Leader of the Opposition is chuckling. Let me give him another one.

Mr. Fulton: Let's have a quote from Walt Disney.

Mr. Mulroney: No, but I will give a quote from Dr. John Polanyi, the Canadian Nobel Laureate in Chemistry, who said:

> Free trade is the way of the future. In science there is no duty level in ideas and we compete internationally. It is a logical extension that business which depends on ideas competes internationally.

Yesterday I met with the Premiers on this specific issue for the tenth time. Some of the meetings lasted eight, nine, and ten hours. I briefed them fully on the legal draft. At the ministerial and the official level no fewer than 20 official meetings were conducted. There have also been dozens and dozens of meetings of our sectoral advisory groups on international trade in 15 different important sectors of the economy, bringing together people from all walks of life, from every province, from every region, for two years of intensive input and consultation. Our international trade advisory committee, in which the public and private sector were also represented, has consulted absolutely fully.

I think I can say in fairness that at no time in the history of federal-provincial relations in Canada, on one issue, have officials, politicians, business leaders, and academics been invited to devote so much time, invited into the decision-making process, in exchanging views and providing counsel to the country and advice to the Government. If you want to put it into some perspective, when important matters—

Mr. Tobin: Please do.

Mr. Mulroney: I will. You could compare that with the manner in which a previous Government at the end of one afternoon brought in the National Energy Program without the slightest consultation with any of the provinces and devastated part of the economy of western Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: And you rang the bells for two weeks.

Mr. Mulroney: I will compare it as well with the Auto Pact which was negotiated without so much as a "by your leave" to the Government of Ontario. I want my friend to check the record. He is asking for debate and consultation and saying, don't do this before it is signed. The Auto Pact was debated in the House of Commons one and a half years after it was signed—

Mr. Broadbent: What did the Conservatives say at that time?

Mr. Mulroney: —and the Conservatives spoke on the Canada—U.S. Columbia River Treaty which was debated in Parliament under a previous Government three years after it was signed. Look at the difference, a Government that believes in Parliament and even believes in you, a Government that believes in the Premiers and the consultative process. That is why this free trade agreement is receiving growing support across the country.

The free trade agreement is very much about economic renewal. Recently I had the opportunity to review some of the events of the last six months, from June 3 to December 3, six months in the life of our country. Here is what our Government and this Parliament were called upon to consider: from June 3 to December 3, six months exactly, the Meech Lake Accord, the White Paper on National Defence, tax reform, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, the Western Canadian Diversification Initiative, the debate and vote on capital punishment, Sommet de la francophonie, the hosting of the British Commonwealth of Nations in Vancouver, the royal tour that Her Majesty made at the invitation of this Government, her first official tour into the Province of Quebec in 23 years, the free trade agreement and a national child care program. All of that was done in six months. Those are questions that speak to unity, to prosperity and to the sovereignty of Canada. I think that represents a record and a commitment with few parallels in the life of this House.

• (1130)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: It is also worth noting that during that same period StatsCanada put out its report which indicated that during the three years of the life of this Government a million new jobs were created. It is even perhaps more important to point to the kinds of jobs, the quality of jobs, reversing completely previous trends. Yes, unemployment dropped from 12.7 to 8.2 per cent. Almost 90 per cent of the new jobs that were created were full time. No less importantly and for the first time, almost 60 per cent of those new jobs went to the women of Canada. Even with these results we still have one million people unemployed even though youth unemployment has dropped by over 5 per cent in the three years that we have been in office.

Trade is about jobs for our youth, economic prospects for Newfoundland and Labrador right through to the interior of British Columbia. Canada has done well. In the last three years unemployment has come down dramatically. The OECD figures indicate that our employment growth is the highest rate of growth of the 24 industrialized nations of the world. It is good, but it is not good enough. We cannot say it is appropriate and adequate to have a million people unemployed and to have young people come on the job market, young men and women, without the kinds of prospects to which a generous, able and rich country should entitle them. That is what this resolution is about.

This resolution is about trade and it is about prosperity and about opportunity. If we have brought the rate of unemployment down from 12.7 per cent to 8.2 per cent, if it is true that a million new jobs have been created in three years and if the quality of those jobs have improved, it is still not enough, but the manner in which we bring it down even further is to trade our way to greater prosperity. To me, trade in the abstract means very little. Trade means jobs at home, jobs for our young people and that is why I have pursued it from the beginning with difficulty and through some great challenge. That is why I have not given up, because international trade and a bilateral trade agreement with the United States means thousands of new jobs at home in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The heart of the most important question is, at the end of the day exactly what kind of Canada, what kind of a country do we want?

All Members of the House have had to deal in the last six months of this year with some sensitive, challenging issues. We came together in a great statement of national affirmation and purpose and defined some fundamental issues, not without some difficulty, and set out a vision of Canada that said we had had enough of the evolution of two Canadas. We wanted one Canada, united, prosperous and strong. In my judgment the greatest hallmark of a united country is its tolerance. The greatest attribute of a civilized society has to be its sense of tolerance. So at the end of the day each of us in his or her mind will have to speak out about the kind of country and the kind of leadership he or she wants.

It is not good enough in 1988 to say that because the Government is in favour of this, I will tear it up and throw it away. That is not good enough anymore. If you are against this, you have to say what you are in favour of. If you are against the Meech Lake conception of Canada you have to speak out exactly about what kind of Canada you will define, what kind of leadership you will provide and what kind of a future our children will inherit.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we want a country that will be renowned for its competitive excellence, a country very much on the leading edge of all of the technologies, and a country capable of creating jobs. We have done that. Those jobs are very favourably distributed to women, to ethnic minorities in Canada, but it is not just enough to create jobs. They have to be stimulating and enriching jobs. For our youth we are looking for lasting prosperity for their tomorrows as well, a country where working women will achieve real dignity. That is what the national child care program is about. That is what the revolution in the kinds of job structures we have brought about is all about. Where women used to get the back of the bus, women are now getting quite properly the lion's share of these new jobs. This we have brought about and this can only come about with a stimulating, exciting new economy, a country we want celebrated for its economic achievements and its social compassion, a country called Canada, a model of tolerance and prosperity among the nations of the earth.

[Translation]

That is what we want, Mr. Speaker, a strong, united, prosperous and tolerant Canada, a country of which all Canadian men and women will be proud to be citizens.

Some Hon. Members: Hear! Hear!

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with Standing Order 19(4), the House will now proceed to statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 21.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[English]

THE ADMINISTRATION

PERFORMANCE IN 1987

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, as Christmas comes near let us take a moment to reflect on the performance of this Government during 1987. January was the Oerlikon affair. In February was the Brodilaf affair in Drummondville. March was for Place Vincent Massey in Hull. April the RCMP set up a special investigative squad to investigate the Government. In May the Minister of Public Works resigned. In June was the RCMP investigation of the Peloquin advertising contract. July was Guccigate. In August the Government recalled Parliament to deal with the invasion of Canada by refugees. In September there was an RCMP investigation over alleged kickbacks in Trois Rivières. In October the RCMP investigated Intergestion GD over greenhouses at Mirabel. November was the Parker Commission Report. December is Christmastime in Mirabel.

TAX REFORM

CONSULTATION WITH AND EFFECT UPON MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, some three months ago in Edmonton fears that tax reform would impose added costs on municipalities, and by extension to home owners, were being needlessly perpetuated. So on September 16 I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) whether tax reform would bring added costs to municipalities for performing various services like snow removal and garbage pickup. The Minister indicated then that before announcing anything he would first hear the representations of cities from coast to coast.

As we all now know, the Minister delivered on his promise to consider these views. He has stated that municipalities, school boards, hospitals, colleges and universities would not pay any more after tax reform than they did before.

• (1140)

The phrases "consultation before implementation" and "participatory government" have been used since the dawn of democracy, but they have never been more evident and more practised than by this Government and this Finance Minister.

FISHERIES

ATLANTIC SHELLFISH INDUSTRY—CALL FOR COMPENSATION PROGRAM

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) has failed to respond to repeated requests in the House to consider a compensation program for the Atlantic shellfish industry. While the health concerns are a priority, they are the concern of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). However, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has a responsibility too.

The losses to producers are serious in an industry that is growing but financially fragile. St. Peter's Bay Mussel Farm in P.E.I. has lost 675,000 kilograms of mussels. Mr. Ken McWilliams of Nova Scotia will lose $100,000 as a result of the problem. David Walsh of Atlantic Ocean Farms in Newfoundland will lose $20,000 and stands to lose his business. Pêcherie Hubert of Montreal stands to lose $500,000.

These companies and many others are facing a serious situation as a result of this crisis. Along with our Party, the Minister of Fisheries of P.E.I. has also called for a compensation program. I call again on the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to break his silence on this issue and to announce immediately that his Department will provide a compensation program for Atlantic fishermen and producers who have suffered serious financial consequences stemming from this crisis.

TRADE

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, all this talk by the NDP about loss of sovereignty and loss of jobs under free trade does not fizz on me. I heard the same arguments 40 years ago made by the CCF when the Alberta Government invited the Americans to bring their capital and expertise to develop our gas and oil under Canadian rules.

The socialists cried then, as the NDP is crying now: "We will lose sovereignty, we will lose jobs!" Well, the Americans came, rigidly adhered to Canadian law, and developed our gas and oil industry that has been such a boon to Canada. Thousands of jobs were created, hundreds of people earned cheques instead of getting welfare, the standard of living rose, and a buoyant economy brought revenue to the Governments and put money in the pockets of the people. There was no loss of sovereignty.

The CCF has changed its name but the New Democrats have not learned a thing in 40 years. They are so brainwashed with socialism that they cannot recognize a good thing when they see it. Free trade will do for Canada what American capital did for Alberta, so on with free trade!

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

NEWFOUNDLAND—ELECTION OF LIBERAL PARTY LEADER TO HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I know that all Hon. Members would want to be aware that last night marked the beginning of a great and important crusade in the history of that great Province of Newfoundland and Labrador. Hon. Members would want to know that, despite the best efforts of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), who hollered, stamped his feet and beat his breast, despite the great efforts of the Premier of Newfoundland, Mr. Peckford, who hollered and beat his breast and carried his minions from Cabinet behind him with baubles and taxpayers' purses hanging out of their pockets, last night in the great historic Province of Newfoundland, a crusade began when the Liberal leader of Newfoundland was elected in a by-election to the House of Assembly.

It is important to note that this crusade not only put the lie to the myth of the Tory notion that you can buy the taxpayers with their own dollars, it also burst the bubble of the NDP myth. The NDP polled a total of 9 per cent of the vote last night and lost their deposit, in that great Province of Newfoundland and Labrador.

I say that the people of Newfoundland and Labrador answered the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) plaudits, words, adjectives, and exhortations to the people of Canada last night when they elected a Liberal leader in the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador, a leader who will join with the federal team to put an end to the scourge of phony Toryism in the Province of Newfoundland and in Canada come the new year, whenever they have the nerve to call a federal general election.

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE

GOVERNING BOARD—SELECTION OF NEW DIRECTOR GENERAL

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the National Arts Centre is one of Canada's great national and cultural institutions with an outstanding international reputation. A search committee seeking a new Director General at the National Arts Centre recently announced that the nomination for the Director General post would be the bilingual career diplomat, Mr. Ian Clarke, to be assisted by the skilled and accomplished former Stratford Festival Chief, Mr. Robin Phillips, as Artistic Director, and assisted by a francophone Business Manager.

That triumvirate would have served as an elegant choice to manage the National Arts Centre. I am dismayed to learn that the Governing Board of the National Arts Centre did not accept these recommendations.

Clearly it is important that the new directorship reflect Canada's heritage. At the same time it is important that a cultural institution such as that which reaches out to all Canadians be run by a management chosen on the basis of merit.

EXTERNAL AID

ETHIOPIA—DROUGHT AND FAMINE—CANADIAN ASSISTANCE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the gap between rich and poor never seems greater or more unjust than at this time of year when we celebrate peace on earth, good will among all people. People of good will can always find ways of reaching across that gap and helping decrease it.

My parents always remembered with thanks the gift of food they received from an unknown family in Ontario one Saskatchewan Christmas during the drought of the 1930s.

This Christmas again, the lives of five million to eight million people in Ethiopia are under threat because of drought and starvation. Once again, with imagination, generosity, and good will, the people of Canada, working with others from around the world, can help to avert a major tragedy.

On behalf of those Canadians who believe in peace and good will as more than simply platitudes, I ask the Government of Canada once again to provide the facilities, personnel and leadership to co-ordinate our efforts to help the people of Ethiopia.

FREE TRADE

PROTECTION OF PRESENT BENEFITS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, Barraute's Précibois Company in Abitibi has been exempted from the 15 per cent tax on softwood lumber exports to the United States since December 30, 1986.

The exemption is not a mistake but the outcome of an American 100-page questionnaire to which company president Clément Julien responded: never did his firm receive grants from Quebec for stumpage rights or for his plant.

Précibois has 40 workers on the payroll, produces 30 million board metres, two thirds of which are exported to the United States.

The latest rumour in Ottawa is that, as of January 1, 1988, this Barraute firm will have to pay a 15-per-cent levy on its exports.

Mr. Speaker, the Province of Quebec is now party to the negotiations, so why penalize this Barraute company in Abitibi which had already won its case?

COPYRIGHT

BILL C-60—TIME TAKEN TO ENACT

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, who in her wildest dreams would think that a Bill on Canadian copyright could plunge us into a world of mystery and intrigue? Who would dream that the mother of this Bill, the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald), would resort to whispered behind-the-curtain warnings to an innocent Member of Parliament who is only trying to do her work?

It has happened to me. The Minister of Communications spoke to me behind the curtain the other day and said that my amendments to Bill C-60 were holding up this vital Bill and that the cultural community would know of my crime. Has the Minister forgotten her vital links? I have not. They are key to the Bill.

I was surprised but not easily intimidated, for this Bill was nine of ninth on the government shopping list. I stuck to my guns, so to speak, but sure enough several telephone calls to my office from members of the cultural community confirmed that indeed I was being accused of obstructing the progress of the Bill. Since when has putting forth amendments to a Bill been considered unjustified intrigue, particularly a Bill that was so flawed?

Has this Minister given up on the democratic system? Has she forgotten that copyright is about fair balance between the rights of creators and the rights of users, or has she gone entirely into the world of James Bond? I have not. The heavy correspondence to my office from the cultural community assures me that I have helped the Minister to put the Bill on the right track. The timing problems are hers and the Government's, not mine.

THE MEDIA

COLUMNISTS—CHRISTMAS WISHES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, everyone knows that it is not really the rat pack opposite that forms the real Opposition. Rather, it is our good friends, the newspaper columnists. From the uninspired mumblings of Jeffrey Simpson to the venom-dipped pen of Claire Hoy, they do a great job of filling up the space between advertisements.

This freedom of the Press means submission to the maulings of the great fuzzifier and occasional plagiarist, Alan Fotheringham. Charlie Lynch might be pardoned for telling the odd lie, but Peter Worthington can never be forgiven for speaking the truth. The most intelligent columnist might well be Ronald Anderson, but no one has ever stayed awake past the first two paragraphs to find out.

• (1150)

God bless them all.

Mr. Speaker: I suppose "Merry Christmas" comes in different ways.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Churchill.

Mr. Murphy: That's certainly an act I would not try to follow, Mr. Speaker.

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANIZATION

RATIFICATION OF CONVENTIONS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): We have heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Minister of Justice (Mr.

Hnatyshyn) claim in this House and to the Canadian people that the Government is able to implement the Prime Minister's trade deal without the consent of the provinces. I am sorry the Government of Canada does not share the same level of determination for implementation of other treaties and conventions. The Government has repeatedly declined to ratify conventions of the International Labour Organization, the UN body responsible for working people.

The record of the Government is terrible. We have ratified 26 of the 162 conventions of the ILO, or only 16 per cent. Once again we are able to see just where Conservative Government priorities lie. The Government refuses to improve working conditions for ordinary Canadians, claiming it cannot sign treaties that interfere with areas of provincial jurisdiction.

The Government of Canada has not signed an ILO convention since 1964. We have not signed the convention on apartheid, presumably because it deals with wines which are under provincial jurisdiction. We have not signed the convention on the working environment, the convention on accident prevention, on occupational health and safety, old age security and survivor benefits, minimum wages, paid holidays, collective bargaining, medicare, health benefits, or injury benefits, all because they come under provincial jurisdiction or are shared with the provinces.

Why does the Government want to sign the trade deal, which certainly affects provincial jurisdiction, but will not do anything for the working people of Canada, not since 1964?

TRADE

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON YUKON

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, 13 days ago I had the privilege to respond to an invitation to visit Yukon. As a result, I enjoyed superb frontier hospitality. I spent 60 hours meeting miners, workers, teachers and young people, and discussed with them in many forums the concept of free trade. Those people, like most Canadians, hunger for information on the issue and I did my utmost to provide it. I found there was a terrible lack of genuine information on the issue in Yukon and I committed myself to try to redress that lack.

The difficulty appears to be an unwillingness on the part of the territorial Government and other elected officials to provide the facts. They seem to be getting fear, fabrication and foolishness from certain sources.

I have urged the people of Yukon with whom I spoke to ask their territorial MLAs for a copy of a study commissioned by the territorial Government into the benefits of free trade. Among those benefits underlined in the study are the creation of a market of 100,000 people among Alaska, Yukon and the Mackenzie district of the Northwest Territories, new opportunities for trans-shipment, and lower input costs for mining.

Randolph Churchill once said to his son: "When all else fails, my son, trust the judgment of the people." The truth will prevail with the wonderful vigorous people of Yukon. They, as all other Canadians, will decide who is telling the truth.

DISASTERS

AIR-INDIA CRASH—CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the crucial Air-India investigation is another example of how the Government of Canada has bungled. We were told a few days ago by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) that there is an active, ongoing investigation into that disaster. Canadians just do not believe him. A year ago he said the same thing. On December 4, 1986, he said to the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General: "There is some new evidence that gives us some hope."

The chairman of the Security Intelligence Review Committee said on November 20, 1986, one year ago, that the investigation was coming to a conclusion quite quickly. Just yesterday Mr. Atkey said: "There is a hope, and I put it no stronger than that, that the culprits will be brought to justice."

It is clear that the investigation has come to a complete standstill. It is clear that the Government has bungled that investigation. It is time that it assumed its responsibility and called a Royal Commission of Inquiry to determine all the facts surrounding this case, including the conduct of officials of the Government and whether or not they acted appropriately in the circumstances. Families of the victims feel betrayed by the Government. It has not shown the sensitivity necessary in the circumstances. The Government owes it to the families of the victims to establish a Royal Commission of Inquiry.

THE ECONOMY

A MESSAGE FROM SANTA CLAUS

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, this morning I received a letter from a personal friend of mine and I would like to share it with the rest of Canadians. It says:

Dear Felix:

As I get things ready for Christmas in Canada's sovereign north, just a couple of short lines since I wrote you three years ago.

The wife and I always watch you and your colleagues on Question Period but I think she has a crush on the Speaker. Life has sure gone smoother for me with this economy booming and the unemployment dropping. The way you guys create jobs there is a brighter smile on Canadian faces this year.

Say, do you realize how much time it takes for me to stop at the U.S. border on the way south and be hassled with tariffs that I have to pay? When it comes to free trade tell that Mulroney fellow that he has my blessings, and although John and Ed are still getting the regular tin horn and air balloon presents, I am saving a dandy Christmas present for Brian for later in 1988.

Keep up the good work. Merry Christmas, buddy.

Nick Claus.

P.S. Felix, regarding your favourite constituent, the Premier of Manitoba, do not worry. Nobody is listening to him.

THE ADMINISTRATION

REPORT ON 1987

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, year's end is always the time to produce balance sheets. Looking over the balance sheet of the Conservatives, 1987 will prove to be the year of catastrophic happenings, not to mention scandals.

Hon. Members will recall that elderly Canadians and families have been particularly hard hit, and that Montreal East was not spared. The Government failed to respond to the recommendations of the Picard and Pichette reports. Above all, Mr. Speaker, the end of the year is highlighted by calamity in the shipbuilding industry. The Government did not live up to its promises to Quebecers, and these people will not forget it whenever the next election comes up.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IRAN-IRAQ WAR—CANADIAN ROLE IN SEEKING SOLUTION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to pay particular attention to the efforts to end the Iran-Iraq war. The U.S. and the Soviet Union have disagreed on how to enforce the Security Council resolution calling for an end to the war. The Soviet Union has not agreed to an arms boycott of Iran and the United States has not been willing to entertain a proposal to put a U.S. naval force into the Persian Gulf.

A number of influential persons, including the Secretary General of the Commonwealth, Shridath S. Ramphal, believe the time is ripe to revive multilateralism and to get the United Nations to fulfil its promise as an instrument of collective security.

Canada should be trying to develop a consensus on these questions in order to pressure the superpowers to come to some kind of agreement. I urge the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Government to make Canada's voice heard.

TAX REFORM

BENEFITS TO SCARBOROUGH CENTRE CONSTITUENTS

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, 85 per cent of families in Scarborough Centre will pay less taxes as a result of the tax reform measures announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Tax reform also means that nine out of 10 seniors in Scarborough Centre will pay lower taxes, and thousands of low-income families will pay no tax at all.

Let me cite three examples of how tax reform will benefit the majority of people in Scarborough Centre. Mrs. Doris Birse, a senior citizen in my riding, receives most of her income from Old Age Security, Canada Pension Plan, and a modest annuity. Thanks to the tax reform initiatives, Mrs. Birse will pay $350 less in taxes next year. Another senior in Scarborough Centre, Mrs. Ethel Epp, also receives OAS and CPP benefits, as well as a small additional pension. Tax reform will save her over $300 next year. Finally, as a result of converting tax exemptions into tax credits and the lowering of personal income tax rates, the Csorgeo family will save nearly $1,000 in taxes.

For those people and thousands more in Scarborough Centre, tax reform means savings.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

MAIL DELIVERY BACKLOG

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, this is a statement about the Grinch who stole Christmas. Most of the more astute Members of this House will have already realized that, of course, I am talking about Canada Post.

Every day at post offices from one end of the country to the other Christmas packages are piling up. Every day the backlog of undelivered parcels grows larger. Why is that? Because Canada Post will not allow its employees to work the overtime necessary to get the mail out.

Instead, it is hiring casual workers, people who use their own cars or trucks, to deliver parcels at $1 a piece. They are not required to have any security checks, special insurance, or a special licence which, in some communities, is supposed to be the law for this kind work.

This can cause some problems. We have heard stories about a pile of parcels being left in the lobby of a highrise. We have heard of casual employees taking parcels home at night because they did not get them all delivered.

As the Chairperson of the New Democratic Caucus I say that we do not approve of the way Canada Post is treating the mail of Canadians. We want to have a public inquiry into the way the Post Office conducts its business.

How many children are going to look under the tree on Christmas morning and see nothing but a little card from Canada Post that says: "Sorry, but we just couldn't manage to get your presents to you on time"?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CANADA LANDS COMPANY

ALLEGATIONS CONCERNING MEMBER FOR ARGENTEUIL—PAPINEAU—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns the sad and shocking story of the Canada Lands Corporation (Mirabel). Yesterday, Canadians were informed by the media that the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau had confirmed she had asked the president of the Canada Lands Corporation at Mirabel, Mr. Pierre Hardy, to award, without tender, a contract worth $42,000 for supervising vacant lots to a Conservative organizer, the owner of a brewery.

Today, according to the media, Gérard Poirier's son claimed that the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau and President Hardy had made threats to the effect that if Mr. Poirier dared to expose the Mirabel scandal, he would lose the right to buy back his land.

In the light of the last two revelations, is the Prime Minister prepared, first of all, to expel the Member in question from caucus; second, to fire the president of the Canada Lands Corporation at Mirabel immediately; and third, to order a royal commission of inquiry to investigate this scandal?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, all of those allegations have been denied. Throughout the week the Hon. Member has been raising a number of suggestions about wrongdoings involving alleged friends of Tories.

Allow me to refer very quickly to the case of the celebrated Gervais Desrochers who received, between the years 1981 and 1984, eight contracts from the previous administration with regard to Mirabel whereas, between the years 1984 and 1987, he received only two.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McInnes: Allow me to refer to the operational expenditures of Mirabel between April 1, 1981, and September of 1984. They totalled $34 million, whereas from September of 1984 to 1987 they were only $20 million.

Allow me to bring to the attention of this honourable House that the former Government spent $15 million in the 1970s, which included $2 million for advertising without any result, whereas in the last three years $8 million in new investment has been secured for the Mirabel industrial park, and $100 million in lawsuits have been settled in the last two years with the exclusion of only 3 per cent. That is performance.

Mr. Boudria: Anything but an answer to the question, Mr. Speaker.

SALE OF MIRABEL PROPERTIES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works. It is with regard to the sale of properties at Mirabel.

How can the Minister justify to the House that some of the properties which were sold are the exact same properties we will have to buy back to build a highway for the airport? What possible reason is there for doing such things other than giving taxpayers' dollars to friends of the Conservative Party?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this is the ultimate in humour for 1987. The debacle created by the previous administration at Mirabel is without precedent.

With regard to the allegations of my friend, I prefer to rely on the analysis and judgment of the Auditor General, and the special audit team which has expressed time and again that it has found no evidence of wrongdoing.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, it is correct that it is without precedent. There is no doubt about that.

EXPENDITURE OF TAXPAYERS' MONEY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. We now have three Tory organizers recompensed, two sets of documents not filed on time, one law suit, one murder, three RCMP investigations, two audits, a relative—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member will know, as do all Hon. Members, that there are often very difficult matters which have to be raised in Question Period. However, the preamble to a question ought to be to state the alleged facts on which the question is set. As I have indicated to the House on other occasions, it is not appropriate to use the preamble to set a lot of charges against any individual or individuals.

I know the Hon. Member will appreciate this. I ask him to put his question succinctly. I am sure that would be properly received by the House.

Mr. Boudria: Does the Prime Minister agree with his Minister of Public Works who says that taxpayers have been getting value for their money in this deal? Or is it not the fact that Tory organizers have been getting money for their value in this deal?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the answer to the question might be given to the Hon. Member if he asked the residents of Mirabel how they have fared under this administration compared to the previous one.

RCMP—REPORTED SEARCH OF MEMBER'S OFFICE ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday the RCMP, with a search warrant, conducted a search of a Member's office on Parliament Hill. Will the Prime Minister confirm that this indeed took place and that it was part of the investigation into the corruption in the way in which the lands resale had taken place?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have said repeatedly, and I think Hon. Members would agree with me, that the Opposition has not only a right to inquire about things but a duty. However, the preamble to a question is not the place to lay a charge. If the Hon. Member, who is a very experienced Member, wishes to ask a question, he should put the question.

Mr. Prud'homme: Does he need your permission to do that?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member asked whether it was necessary to have my permission. The answer is an unequivocal no!

[English]

However, there are certain rules by which we are bound and I would ask Hon. Members to keep them in mind when they are putting their questions.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I have considerable experience, as you will appreciate, in receiving questions of that type. I consider it a perfectly proper question, if I may say so.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Kaplan: I have not been ruled out of order. I ask the Prime Minister or another responsible Minister to confirm the fact which I have learned this morning that the RCMP, with a search warrant, has conducted a search of a Member's office. Is this part of the matters relating to Mirabel about which the official Opposition has been asking questions for a number of days?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have had considerable experience with regard to these matters as well. I find the question repulsive and against the interests of natural justice in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, come on.

Mr. Penner: Smarten up.

Ms. Copps: In other words, the answer is yes.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The general allegation which has been made, without specificity, casts reflection, not only on the Speaker but on the whole House. I find this kind of tactic by the Liberal Party unbelievable.

Mr. Gauthier: Stonewall.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I do not understand why they would persist in this kind of sleazy tactic.

• (1210)

I am not aware of the circumstances. I do not comment on investigations. I do not think it is appropriate to comment on investigations because, if an investigation is going on, we want to make sure that it is successful. It hardly has anything to do with making some general allegation that I think is basically false and unfair.

SALE OF LAND AT MIRABEL

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, for a number of days the Official Opposition has been bringing forward facts in relation to the resale of Mirabel land.

Mr. Crosbie: What facts?

Mr. Kaplan: We know that there are police investigations under way. That has been confirmed. The RCMP confirmed this morning that a search warrant was executed on Parliament Hill yesterday.

My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is he content to leave the resolution of the standards of sale of land at Mirabel to the police? Is that where the morality of the Ministers and Members of the Government caucus will be resolved, or will he take some responsibility for their conduct at a higher level than the violation of the criminal law?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I simply do not accept the premise of the Hon. Member's question. It is false. It is a false question, a false premise.

The fact is that I simply think it is untenable for the justice critic of the Official Opposition to try to stand up in the first place and make suggestions that the Opposition has been bringing forward facts in respect of this matter of land transactions at Mirabel.

Mr. Nunziata: Was there a search warrant? Yes or no?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The reality is that these are allegations that are being brought forward. That is quite different. Very adequate responses have been given by the Minister of Public Works. He has dealt with every specific question and, sitting here as an observer of what has transpired during Question Period, I can say that the Minister of Public Works has answered every one of the allegations put by the Opposition. They should get the facts before they ask another question.

AWARDING OF SECURITY CONTRACT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice may think that the answers given by the Minister of Public Works have been at an acceptable level, but I can say to the Minister that the people of Canada will not share that opinion one bit.

A Parliamentary Secretary, the Member for Argenteuil—Papineau, was quoted yesterday in a Montreal newspaper and today in a Toronto newspaper as saying that a tavern owner in her constituency was awarded a non-tendered contract for security reasons because of his services to the Conservative Party. Does the Prime Minister think that this is appropriate contract procedure and, if not, when will the Government clean up its act?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, may I advise the Hon. Member that the person hired for this particular contract was a policeman who had worked for the Montreal Police Force for six or seven years. The contract was within the ambit of authority of the corporation.

Mr. Broadbent: The answer by the Minister is just totally unacceptable to the people of Canada. I say to the Minister that it was his Government that promised to clean up patronage, and the people of Canada did not want to replace old Liberal patronage with Conservative patronage. They wanted a change.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT APPOINT INQUIRY INTO CONTRACT AWARDING PROCESSES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister who has said about once a month, now, that it is time his Government did a little better in this area. This time the Member in question is a Parliamentary Secretary who is acknowledging that the person got the contract not because of police experience but because he was an organizer for the Conservative Party. Does the Prime Minister not think it is time to appoint a commission now, with a three-month mandate, to look into government contract processes, and to come back and make recommendations to Parliament for a change in all of this?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, from time to time the Hon. Member has pointed to comments of the Auditor General. I suggest that he is the person in the best position, having reviewed the books and all of the contracts of the corporation. As well, the special audit team went into a very thorough investigation. They have confirmed that all of the contracts received good value for the Government and they were done within Treasury Board guidelines and with the approval of the corporation.

[Translation]

AWARDING OF CONTRACTS—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is not about this particular subject. It is about something else. I will repeat my question for the Prime Minister. The Canadian people do not want a switch from grit to Tory patronage. They want honest government. That is the truth, and could the Prime Minister therefore consider ordering an investigation into the federal Government's contract procedures?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I believe that what the people of Canada want is the assurance that value for money has been received with respect to government contracts and that the contracts have been given according to established guidelines. This procedure has been confirmed by the Auditor General and the special audit team.

REPORTED SEARCH OF MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT'S OFFICE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question which concerns the same subject is directed to the Prime Minister. He is the one who is ultimately responsible for the morality of the Government. Will he confirm, because he ought to know, that a search warrant pursuant to the Criminal Code of Canada was executed in order to search the office of a Member of Parliament? Would he not agree that a Member of Parliament should be judged using the same standards and laws as any other Canadian?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I simply reiterate the fact that an allegation was made, first by the Official Opposition critic on Justice and now by the Official Opposition critic on Solicitor General, linking search warrants with certain activities and certain investigations that are going on with respect to the Mirabel land transaction.

I already answered his colleague. I find it repulsive that they continue to ask the same question. I have denied the matter. If the Hon. Member cannot take no for an answer, maybe he could get someone else to ask a question.

Mr. Nunziata: One would have thought that they learned their lessons in the Sinc Stevens affair. Obviously they have not.

EXECUTION OF SEARCH WARRANT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I want to put the question again. Stop stonewalling and give us a clear answer. Was a search warrant executed on a Member of Parliament? Yes or no?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am not denying that a search warrant was involved.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Just hold it. The allegation was with respect to Mirabel and I said it had nothing to do with Mirabel. The information I have received is that it has nothing whatsoever to do with Mirabel. Is that clear enough for the Hon. Member?

FISHERIES

EXPORT OF CLAMS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Yesterday in the House I raised the question of clams being exported from contaminated water in the Prime Minister's riding to the United States. This morning I have copies of four letters that were exchanged between the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and Environment Canada that confirm that Environment Canada had recommended the closing of these two sites. They also confirm, shockingly, that Fisheries and Oceans ignored this recommendation and overruled the Department of the Environment.

I also have two applications, one by Les Produits de la Gaspésie and the other by La Conserverie Polyvalente Rivière Portneur. One was filled out in January, 1987, and the other in February, 1987. Both of them were approved on February 18, 1987, for the export of clams to the United States.

Will the Minister tell us why the advice of the experts of the Department of the Environment was ignored by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans? Will he tell us why the recommendation was overruled, why these applications were approved, and will he assure us that there was no pressure from companies that wanted to fish in the Prime Minister's riding and export those clams to the United States?

• (1220)

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I know that you will accord me the same courtesy in giving the detailed answer that this very malicious question demands.

Yesterday the Hon. Member alleged that shellfish taken from rivers in Quebec have been officially classified as contaminated by Ottawa and exported from Canada. That is patently untrue, and I will explain why.

Second, the Hon. Member has stated that these export permits violated a Canada-U.S. agreement of 1948. That is patently untrue.

At certain times during the winter months in parts of Atlantic Canada, certain beds of clams are certified as safe, under both our health protection regulations and our fisheries regulations. That is because during the winter months there are not the similar types of hydrological situations that occur in the summer.

What happens is as follows. All 55 monitoring stations in Quebec are sampled weekly for paralytic shellfish poisoning or evidence of toxin. On this basis, the two areas in question, Papinachois and Rivière Blanche, were closed until mid-October. As in previous years, those areas were reopened around mid-October, after appropriate tests for toxin proved to be negative.

Third, once harvesting is reopened every lot at the processing plant—the only processing plant on the north shore this year being at Rivière Portneuf—is tested for bacterial contamination. I should point out that that plant and most of these shellfish areas are located in the federal electoral district of Charlevoix. Only product meeting established Canada-U.S. health standards is permitted for commercial sale and export.

Finally, there have been no exports to the United States of America of clams, quahogs, mussels, and oysters since the alert of December 11 from any plants under federal jurisdiction.

I think that the premise of the question is most irresponsible.

Mr. Crosbie: It is a disgrace.

ENVIRONMENT CANADA OFFICIAL'S LETTER

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I know that there have been no exports since that time. I am not talking about that. The Minister stated that clams could be exported at certain times. These applications are not for certain times. They are open-ended applications approved for the entire year.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. I have here a letter dated October 21, 1987, from an Environment Canada employee, and I quote:

> The report recommended the closing of these two sectors, and, to our knowledge, your Department has made no move to reclassify these sectors. Furthermore, products from the contaminated sectors have been harvested and put on the export market. We reiterate our recommendation for closing the two sectors.

Congratulations!

[English]

In light of that, I would like to ask the Minister once again why his Department ignored the advice of the Department of the Environment of this country that these sectors be closed for fishing of clams, and why those clams were shipped to the United States.

It seems to me that this is putting the whole shellfish industry in this country in jeopardy. Why does he do that, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, if anyone is putting the shellfish industry of this country in jeopardy, it is irresponsible Members like the Member opposite who have made totally unsubstantiated allegations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: Here is the letter right here.

Mr. Murphy: He didn't write the letter. It was your official who wrote that letter and you know it. More scandals every day.

Mr. Siddon: If you could all simmer down a little, Christmas is coming.

Mr. Crosbie: Are you sure?

Mr. Siddon: In regard to exchanges of letters at the officials' level, my attention has been brought to certain letters. I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that these letters do not deal with the reality that each year in the winter months these areas are opened in accordance with safe health and all other standards, including those required under the Canada-U.S. agreement.

I can therefore confirm that the Bêtes à Chevaux subsector was resampled by the environmental protection service during the summer and fall of 1987. The results indicate that this sector should be closed during the summer period, but could be conditionally approved during the fall and winter, November to March, and recommendations were made accordingly by EPS to Fisheries and Oceans. This is totally irresponsible on his part.

Mr. Mazankowski: Irresponsible, destructive.

Mr. Crosbie: You don't care who you hurt, what industry you hurt. Resign!

Mr. Nystrom: Scandal, scandal, scandal.

[Translation]

SHIPBUILDING

ALLEGED NON-COMPLIANCE WITH COMMITMENT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

A year ago, the Minister of Supply and Services asked the Quebec Minister of Industry, Mr. Daniel Johnson, whether Marine Industries was prepared to take over shipyards in Montreal and Quebec City, in return for which the Conservative Government held out the promise of enough contracts to keep the three shipyards open and call back the 3,000 workers who had been laid off.

This morning, we were informed that the Government had awarded the contract for building the six frigates to St. John's Shipbuilding. However, there has been no announcement regarding the commitment made by the Minister.

Could the Prime Minister explain to the House why the Government failed to keep the promise it made to the Quebec Minister and to Quebec shipyard workers?

[English]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the House has taken due note of the position of the Hon. Member, I presume speaking on behalf of the Liberal Party, where he is now in opposition to the fact that this Government has just accorded a $3 billion contract to the shipyard in Saint John, New Brunswick, which desperately needs the work. I think that that is very clearly the position of the Liberals.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): He didn't say that. He never said that. You should be ashamed of yourself.

Mr. Mulroney: If he is not saying that, perhaps he could clarify when he rises on his supplementary.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to shipyards in Quebec. He is right. Since we came to power, the Canadian Government has spent about $100 million on restructuring and modernizing shipyards in Quebec.

Furthermore, the Canadian Government has awarded so many contracts to Quebec shipyards that the order books of the main yards are filled up to 1991-92, which is a very important development in the history of the industry in Quebec. The Government has also given assurances that upon completion of the contracts in 1991-92, unlike what happened years ago, it intends to give more contracts to Quebec shipyards so that their survival as a major instrument of Quebec's economic prosperity is guaranteed.

REQUEST THAT CONTRACTS BE AWARDED TO QUEBEC SHIPYARDS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, sad but true: We have a Prime Minister who is so incompetent he does not know the facts.

The contracts being carried out today in Quebec shipyards were awarded by the Liberal Government in 1983. If we have $800 million today, it is thanks to the Liberal Government. The only contract this Government awarded was for the Caribou, which takes care of the balance. Shipyards are closed because no new contracts are forthcoming.

My question is quite simple, Mr. Prime Minister. A promise is a promise, and I am not the only one who is saying that the Minister of Supply and Services broke his promise. Shipyard workers and Minister Johnson could not agree more.

I don't want to know how many frigates you are going to give us. I want to know about the other jobs and contracts you will give the shipyards to keep your promise and make sure they have work. In Montreal, 600 workers cannot buy Christmas presents for their children. What kind of jobs are you going to provide for these people in January?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member refers to employees in Montreal or in Quebec who cannot buy Christmas presents, I think he is saying something very important, and I think it is very sad. However, perhaps I may remind him that during the four years and nine months his Government was in power, 40,000 jobs were created in Quebec, while in three years this Government has created 275,000 new jobs. That is the whole difference!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the job creation rate and figures are there. This Government's job creation rate is ten times what was accomplished in this respect by the Government of which the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie was a Member, a Member who remained silent when plants were closing down with the resulting human tragedy.

He was sitting here in the House, and while those tragic events were taking place in Montreal, he kept quiet, he did not say one word to support the people of Montreal!

TRADE

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—IMPACT ON EMPLOYMENT STUDIES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister promised Canadians a full and open debate on his trade deal with the United States. Yet when I have tried to get impact studies on the employment effects of this deal through Access to Information I have been denied.

Does the Prime Minister not believe that Canadians have a right to this information to judge for themselves the real impact of this trade deal? Why is the Government committee to a conspiracy of silence when it comes to this important information?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I find passing strange the conspiracy of silence the New Democratic Party talks about.

We have probably been more open on this particular trade agreement than any trade agreement in the history of the country, any trade agreement. We have discussed this from one side of the country to the other since we became the Government.

Study after study has been produced, not by the Government but by independent bodies, which say that it is the right thing to do. All kinds of information has been available to the Hon. Member. He just does not know how to interpret it properly. That is his problem.

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF DATA

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister because it is really a question of trust and openness. There is no doubt that the studies exist. In the response I have received indeed it is admitted that the studies exist and that the studies deal with the impact the trade deal will have on employment.

If this is such a good deal, why does the Canadian Government not trust the Canadian people and make the data available so that Canadians can judge for themselves? Why does the Government not make this information public? Surely Canadians have a right to know what will be the employment impact of this deal. Why is it trying to cover this up?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Government is not covering up anything. We know that the trade agreement with the United States will create thousands of jobs. It is going to be very, very important to this country.

The only thing opposition Members can do, the only thing they can attack—it is their whole raison d'être—is to try to spread misconceptions of untrustworthiness and all this type of nonsense. They sit there day after day and yell liar and never justify it at all. What a phony bunch over there!

TAX REFORM

NATIONAL SALES TAX—EXEMPTION OF GROCERIES AND PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. On November 16 the Minister said in the House that the proposed national sales tax should not apply to basic groceries, prescription drugs, and certain medical devices.

Is the Minister prepared to state unequivocably in the House today that these goods will not be taxed?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

POSITION OF SCHOOL BOARDS AND MUNICIPALITIES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. Also in the same speech the Minister said that municipalities, hospitals, school boards, colleges, and universities should not pay more tax under the proposed national sales tax.

Again I ask the Minister if he is prepared to give the same commitment to the House that municipalities and the agencies which he listed will not pay more sales tax under his new national sales tax proposal?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I make the same commitment. I think that what this does is take two matters which were somewhat contentious off the table which had been deflecting the attention of people from the true merits of the reform of the sales tax system that the Hon. Member's Party is in support of, as is the New Democratic Party.

I hope that now we will be able to get on with reasonable debate on a sales tax which will be fair, which will be supportive of our export industries, which will put Canadian companies on the same basis as importers, which will result in a substantial refundable sales tax credit to lower-income Canadians, and which will result in the reduction of some taxes for middle-income earners as well.

WELFARE

ASSISTANCE FOR HUNGRY IN ALBERTA AND BRITISH COLUMBIA

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It concerns the thousands of Canadians who are hungry year round across the country.

I refer the Minister to a recent letter that he sent to me in which he said that he would continue to encourage provincial colleagues to provide adequate levels of assistance to meet basic needs.

In view of this commitment, and as a special Christmas present, will he personally encourage the Alberta Minister to be more forgiving toward hungry people who use food banks? Will he also encourage the B.C. Minister of Social Services to support breakfast programs for hungry children and 1988? I am sure there are many things in other provinces which should be supported as well.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think all of us have been saying in the House for some time that the best way to eradicate or reduce poverty in the country is for people to have opportunities through jobs and the independence and dignity which come from jobs. Consequently, one million jobs have been developed and created in Canada in the last three years. More important, possibly in terms of the Hon. member's question, 520,000 Canadians are now not below the low income cut-off line as they were previous to the Government coming into office. The trend was going the other way, and we have been able to reverse it in the last three years. That is very important in terms of poverty.

In terms of child care, the increasing growth of poverty and children in poverty is especially in families with one parent. That is the reason for the program on child care and the manner in which it was designed.

In terms of welfare rates, I do not think that poverty should be designed or devoted to the kind of narrow partisanship to which she referred when she said Alberta and British Columbia. She could have said Manitoba and its two-tier system.

I would say that, if the provinces increase their benefits, the Government of Canada through the Canada Assistance Plan has always paid its 50 per cent share and will continue to do so.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, this is not a partisan issue. The simple facts that one in six children in Canada is growing up in poverty, and we all have an obligation to do something about it.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN—PROVINCIAL SOCIAL ASSISTANCE RATES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister begin a concerted attack on poverty in 1988? Will he make poverty a priority at his next meeting with Ministers of Social Services? Will he also make it mandatory for provinces to report social assistance rates in the annual Canada Assistance Plan report so that it can be used as the basis of an attack on poverty?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I could repeat the answer I gave to the first question because the Hon. Member's second question is very similar.

I say to the Hon. Member that our work will continue along the lines of the success that we have seen in the last three years, in addition to programs which provinces want to initiate as they fall into the ambit of the Canada Assistance Plan. For example, we made changes in relationship to the use of the Unemployment Insurance Act and the moneys spent under the Canada Assistance Plan. Last year we came forward with a program for $100 million. That has now been doubled. It is in those kinds of ways that more dignity is brought to those who are living in poverty.

The Hon. Member says that it is not a partisan issue. I always find it passing strange that she uses certain provinces rather than the entire country—she could also have used the Province of Manitoba and its rate—so that her questions to me would have more credibility.

POSSIBILITY OF GIVING PRÉCIBOIS COMPANY A TAX EXEMPTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade.

Since December 30, 1986, PréciBois de Barraute, in Abitibi, has been exempt from the 15 per cent export tax on lumber as it meets the criteria of the American questionnaire.

There is a rumor now going around Ottawa and the Quebec Department of Forests to the effect that this company will be penalized on January 1, 1988, and will have to pay 15 per cent on its exports to the United States. Is this true? Why not grant this company a tax exemption on a quota of 20 million board-feet for its exports to the United States?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, Canada undertook negotiations with the United States last February to amend the agreement on the rough lumber trade.

Canada has tried to find a way to meet the request of the United States without harming the interests of the greater number of Canadian producers.

After completion of the negotiations, Canada accepted to put an end to the 20 individual exclusions to gain other exemptions which will benefit Canadian exporters in all provinces.

Unfortunately, two of the 20 companies which will lose their exclusion will be subject to the full rate of the export charge. Thus, all Canadian exporters will from now on be on an equal footing. It is also appropriate to note that the export tax rate of PréciBois Inc. will decrease substantially within a few weeks, after completion of our discussions with the United States on the value of the replacement measures introduced by Quebec.

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR THE MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton-East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It has been three weeks since his Department established a link between the death of all laboratory mice and the presence of toxin in mussels. However, he said nothing about it to the public for four days. The behaviour of his Department has been characterized by chaos, total confusion and mismanagement.

I would like to ask him whether he does not think that he should resign to restore the confidence of the public in the Department of National Health and Welfare.

• (1240)

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, again that information has been put on the record all of these days. I have answered that question a number of times. I do not think it needs another answer.

RESTORATION OF CONSUMER CONFIDENCE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): He has never answered, Mr. Speaker. While he said mice didn't die, his officials said all mice died. He said scientists were working all night through the weekend but his officials said they were not working through the weekend. The other Minister's aide said he heard about it at the First Ministers' Conference, yet he didn't hear about it until the Monday. New scientific evidence was coming through on the Tuesday and yet there was no new scientific evidence presented.

Surely the Minister must realize that there are enough questions that have not been answered by this Minister. The only way he can re-establish confidence in the public that his Ministry is looking after the interests of the consumer in this issue is for him to resign.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, for all the days that the questions relating to this issue have been put forward, I have answered those questions time after time.

Ms. Copps: You never answered.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): As again today, the Hon. Member is throwing forward falsehoods—

Ms. Copps: Facts.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): She is throwing forward allegations.

Ms. Copps: Facts.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Her word in the public has been tested against mine. Mine has been found to be truthful. Her's stands as naked, and as empty, and as and wrong.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—AREAS OF PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. There has just been completed a First Ministers' meeting in which the Prime Minister made it very clear that he intended to push ahead as strongly as possible with all areas of jurisdiction, all areas of legislation under the free trade arrangement with the United States.

What has happened to the Prime Minister's promise of 1985 that every province would be with him with respect to areas of their jurisdiction or they would not proceed in spite of opposition?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the question of the Hon. Member. It gives me an opportunity to remind all of us that there has been, I suppose, unprecedented consultation with the provinces concerning this very important transaction.

The Prime Minister has met with the First Ministers of all our provinces and has gone through detailed background briefing consultation no less than 10 times. This is totally unprecedented in federal-provincial relations.

I do not accept the premise of the Hon. Member's question. All I can say is that I am satisfied with the constitutional authority which the federal Government has. I think the Hon. Member would be the first to agree that we have that power. As I think emanated from the meeting yesterday, there is a sense of yes, we can sit around and discuss the matters before us; yes, we can settle these in a Canadian way. That is the way I would like to see this matter resolved and that is the way I think it will be resolved.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, we have seen this Government boast about its capacity to pull together all the provinces in the case of Meech Lake.

Why in this case is it considered possible to go forward with such a widespread, detailed and deep incursion into provincial jurisdiction despite the opposition of at least three provinces in this country? Why is that considered possible and legitimate?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Again, the Hon. Member is quite right, Mr. Speaker. I think it is pretty well unprecedented that the Prime Minister and the Government have been able to find unanimity with respect to constitutional amendment as represented by the Meech Lake Agreement.

We rejoice that there has been such progress. This has not always been the case in Canada. We have tried to develop consensus on all major issues, and I think we have succeeded in doing that with free trade.

Mr. Langdon: Where is the consensus?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I remind the Hon. Member that the history and the precedent in this country have been quite the contrary. The federal Government has acted unilaterally concerning trade matters. I am reminded that in 1947 the Right Hon. Mackenzie King sent some public servants to negotiate the GATT at Geneva. There was no prior consultation with any province or with any other level of government. The political input was minimal. The officials returned. The matter was then accepted by the federal Government and signed on its behalf. A debate only took place on the floor of the House of Commons—I believe my colleague the Deputy Prime Minister will confirm this—some months after, maybe a year after the matter had transpired. Never were the provinces consulted. The Hon. Member will understand how far we have gone ahead from that point of view. We have a great deal for Canada and I know the Member will join us in supporting it across the country.

Mr. Speaker: The next will be the last question in Question Period. The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

TOXIC MUSSELS AFFAIR—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION CAMPAIGN

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, Quebec Fish and Seafood Marketing Association spokesmen accuse the Government of spreading confusion and triggering a $50 million loss in the industry—distributors, fish and molluscs producers, brokers and retailers. The facts speak for themselves, Mr. Speaker: sales figures for all seafoods dropped anywhere between 30 and 70 per cent, depending on the outlet, despite the fact that molluscs, which have been banned, account for only 1 per cent of seafoods. These people seek compensation. Dealers want the Government to intervene immediately to help them offset the negative impact.

Since the Government is duty-bound to clear up the situation and keep the public fully informed, I would suggest that the Prime Minister launch an information campaign so that people know what is safe to eat and provide assistance to the seafood industry which is experiencing serious financial difficulties as a result of the errors and confusion of the Government.

• (1250)

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member, without accepting any of the allegations that he makes, I want to say to him that, along with the Minister of Fisheries, we have put forward a plan which was given yesterday and there were a number of questions, primarily from the media, on the issue.

I take it the Hon. Member is looking at a promotion campaign, a reassurance campaign. We are looking at that. I, along with the Minister of Fisheries, am taking that suggestion very seriously.

We thank you for taking what is said here and transforming it into intelligible and civil form.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: May I also take this opportunity to thank the Leaders of all Parties, the House Leaders and all of my colleagues in this place for their co-operation and help in all these many months.

I conclude by saying that I remind all Hon. Members that there is a certain tradition in this place that will take place as soon as the House rises in the usual place. I will be hoping that you will all join me there.

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to Petitions Nos. 332-3414 and 332-3488.

ELECTIONS, PRIVILEGES AND PROCEDURE

PRESENTATION OF SEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan—Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present in both official languages the Seventh Report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. This report concerns the question of privilege referred to the committee by the House last May. We believe the recommendations contained in the report will help all committees to establish guidelines respecting in camera proceedings so that all committees and their members are better protected. Such guidelines will also better enable the House to deal with problems of disclosure of confidential proceedings of committees.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED DIVULGING OF IN CAMERA COMMITTEE INFORMATION—APOLOGY BY MEMBER

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege.

Now that the Seventh Report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure has found that my actions that were referred to the committee constituted a breach of the traditions and procedures of this House, I should like hereby to apologize to all Members of Parliament and in particular to those who felt affronted or affected by my actions for the actions that were referred to the committee.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: As Hon. Members know, the matter that was referred to committee on a question of privilege brought to the Chair was a difficult one. I can say to the Hon. Member that I think he has very much deserved the respect of all Members of the House for his completely forthright and honourable statement of a moment ago. I know that Hon. Members in this place would want to join me in commending the Hon. Member for his attitude and his acceptance of what has been for him, I know, a difficult matter.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

ELECTIONS, PRIVILEGES AND PROCEDURE—CONCURRENCE IN SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan—Similkameen) moved that the Sixth Report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure presented to the House on Monday, December 7, 1987, be concurred in.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties, and I think you would find that the House would be content that the motion be moved as it has now been moved and not debated. I would like to acknowledge the efforts of my colleague from York Centre in this matter in his capacity as the Chairman of the Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. I think you will find that with the following amendment, which has been discussed between the Parties, the vote on the motion can be taken without debate. We move in amendment, Sir, that:

> The sixth report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedures be concurred in excepting the recommended change to the following portion of Standing Order 44:
> > "44.—if the report is concurred in, it would be an Order of this House to the Ministry to rescind one specified regulation or other statutory instrument, which the Ministry has the authority to rescind."

• (1300)

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the proposition of the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis). Is there agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS—AUTHORIZATION TO TRAVEL

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions between the Parties and I think you will find the House is prepared to accept the following motion without debate:

That the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs be empowered to travel to Auckland and Wellington, New Zealand, from February 7 to February 16, 1988, in relation to its study of the White Paper on Tax Reform and other related documents, (Stage II), and that the necessary staff do accompany the committee.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Caccia: No.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Mr. Caccia: No.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed. The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there is another motion on the Order Paper under Motions with respect to adjournment. I am going to encompass a couple of things in my remarks and suggest that this motion should be brought forward following the completion of the remarks of the Hon. Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent).

At this point I would like to suggest to the House that when Orders of the Day are called, the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) should take the floor and be given the necessary time to complete his remarks. Following that I suggest that the Chair recognize the Hon. Leader of the NDP. I think you will find unanimous consent that, in the event the Hon. Leader needs more time than specified in the Standing Orders, the House give its consent not to see the clock and to allow him to complete his remarks.

Mr. Broadbent: The Christmas spirit.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the generous and, I might also say, traditional suggestion by the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis). I hope the House will express unanimous accord with that.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There is agreement. However, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) rises.

Mr. Gauthier: Just a small detail but an important one, Mr. Speaker. There is in the Order Paper under Private Members' Business a Bill, C-238, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington (Mr. Vankoughnet). I just wondered if the Government intends to proceed with that Bill at the appropriate time following the speeches of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent).

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the sequence should be: Speech, speech, motion, and then, as you are aware, the Government tries not to interfere with Private Members' Business, and if the House wishes to go ahead with it at that time and the Private Member wishes to go ahead, the Government would take no position on it and we would certainly agree to that hour going forward.

PETITION

PROHIBITION FROM CARRYING OF KNIVES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour on behalf of a great number of my constituents and other Canadians across the country to present a petition concerned with the question of murder and injury resulting from the carrying of knives. The petitioners state that inasmuch as the incidence of crimes committed with knives is on the increase in all major cities across Canada, the federal Criminal Code allows citizens to carry knives for self-defence, and this is largely responsible for their being used in a variety of crimes, they call upon Parliament to amend the federal Criminal Code to prohibit the carrying of knives in public places. The only exception would be for those who use a knife for legitimate work or for religious reasons.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Question No. 218 will be answered today.

[Text]

DND—GRANTS TO ORGANIZATIONS IN METROPOLITAN TORONTO

Question No. 218—Mr. Redway:

Since September 4, 1984, did the Department of National Defence make grants and/or loans to persons or corporations, non-governmental organizations and governments within Metropolitan Toronto and, if so, in each case, in what amount and for what purpose?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence):

1. Yes.

| | $ | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 1984-85 | 1985-86 | 1986-87 | 1987-88 |
| Royal Canadian Naval Association | 9,125 | 9,490 | 9,490 | 9,490 |
| Naval Officers Association | 24,700 | 25,690 | 25,690 | 25,690 |
| Military Studies—York University | 40,000 | 40,500 | 90,000 | 92,700 |

| Ontario Rifle Association | 5,645 | 8,315 | 7,405 | 7,180 |

2. The above are annual grants which are included in the DND Main Estimates and are paid for the following purposes:

(a) Royal Canadian Naval Association and the Naval Officers' Association—to promote and maintain interest in military affairs generally and particularly in the welfare and development of the naval forces.

(b) Military studies—to develop a domestic competence and national interest in military and strategic issues of current and future relevance to Canada's national security.

(c) Royal Canadian Military Institute—to provide the means of maintaining contact with the civilian population and retired service officers to encourage the promotion of military science and disseminate to the public accurate and current information on military affairs.

(d) Ontario Rifle Association—to promote the skill of small arms usage as a contribution to the defence of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary is aware that I am going to ask him questions before we give unanimous consent.

Can he explain how many questions are left on the Order Paper which he wants to be left over until sometime in January when the House reconvenes? Can he tell us the date of the earliest question that the Government has yet to answer, with all these public servants at its disposal and all these people in the Minister's office? It is very important that we get those questions answered, and I want to know how many questions he wants left on the Order Paper and for how long they will remain on the Order Paper.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, we have been answering questions at such a rapid rate that I am not up-to-date on how many remain on the Order Paper. However, it is helpful that the Opposition knows how busy Ministers are when the House is sitting, in addition to all their other responsibilities, and a break at this time, having come back for an emergency session, would be very helpful in making sure that early in the New Year, when the House reconvenes, we will have an opportunity to accelerate the rather excellent record of this Government in answering questions, a record much better than that of the previous Governments.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on the same point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Parliamentary Secretary that some of the questions are indicated by a small 2, and these require an answer within 45 days. It was pointed out this week or last week that now and again the Government hesitates or takes time before answering these questions. I remind him that there are at least one, two, three . . . questions numbered 116, 133, 135, 196, 205, 208, plus mine, question No. 209, about which a request has been made to have answers within 45 days, but there has been no response. I can understand that the Parliamentary Secretary is a very busy man, but I hope he will find time during the Christmas recess to come back here for a few days and get some help to be able to answer these questions when the House resumes in January.

Mr. Hawkes: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to answer the question as soon as the House comes back after the holidays.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

TRADE

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

The House resumed from Thursday, December 17, consideration of the motion of Miss Carney that this House endorse, as being in the national interest, the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement, the legal text of which was tabled in the

House of Commons on Friday, December 11, 1987, and the amendment of Mr. Langdon (p. 11885).

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is more than a debate about trade. This debate is indeed about the kind of Canada we intend to leave our children. Canadians have to make important choices if tomorrow's Canada is to be sovereign, independent and dynamic. I believe that we Canadians can make the right choices to control our own future without sacrificing our sovereignty, without sacrificing our economic independence, and without submitting to the lure of continentalism.

We have the privilege of living in the freest, most tolerant country in the world. Our Charter of Rights, our social safety net, our unshakable sense of fairness, are proof that we do have a deep commitment as a people to improving the quality of life of all our citizens.

• (1310)

This debate compels us, first, to think of Canada. I believe it appropriate and relevant for me to tell you, Mr. Speaker, as presiding officer of this great institution, what Canada means to me. It means our sense of tolerance, our unique history, our generous mix of cultures, our two languages, our parliamentary system, our priceless environmental heritage, the cleanliness and safety of our big cities, and the special Canadian sense of fairness. It means the fact that when you go to a doctor or a hospital they do not ask to check your credit rating before they check your pulse.

Quite simply, and I am not ashamed to say it in this place, I love it here. I love what we have built as a nation, I love what we stand for and, above all, I love that it is ours. We have made a conscious choice to live here. We made a conscious choice to build this country against the odds, against the weather, against geography, and against the unceasing pressures coming from south of our border. We made a conscious choice to build this country, East, West, and North. In order to bind it we built a railway, an airline, a broadcasting system, a pipeline, and a national highway. These are the links, the bonds we built against the raw force of continentalism which would have turned us south.

This trade deal would destroy those bonds pulling us into a continental vortex dominated by the United States. What is worse, it will not be a conscious choice by Canadians because, if the Government has its way, Canadians will have absolutely nothing to say about it.

I have had the opportunity to read this document. It is a massive document buttressed by a total of 2,500 pages just released by the Government, the details of the trade deal with the United States. This deal represents nothing less than the title deed to our country, the deed which, thanks to the Government, will now be held by and for the people of the United States. This is the most massive giveaway of our sovereignty in history.

In order that we understand each other in this House I want to tell you what I mean by sovereignty. When I say sovereignty I mean having the final ability and authority to govern our own country, to choose our own directions, and to work toward fulfilling our own national purpose. When I say sovereignty I mean having the authority to develop economic and social policies which meet Canadian needs and respond to Canadian priorities. When I say sovereignty I mean being able to share the wealth of the nation in a way which promotes and enhances Canadian values and traditions. When I say sovereignty I mean supporting our own culture through a strong and thriving artistic community which reflects the soul of our nation and our way of life. When I say sovereignty I mean having our own foreign and defence policies which reflect our concern for peace in the world and for human rights which should know no frontiers.

That is what I mean when I speak of sovereignty. We are the elected representatives of the people of a great country. Canadians have charged us with the responsibility of defending and enhancing that sovereignty. This deal is a betrayal of that sovereignty because it fundamentally alters the way this nation has operated, the way in which this nation has pursued its own economic, social, political, and cultural values. It alters it not only for now but for tomorrow and for generations to come.

Who speaks for our children? We are selling out their birthright—a word for "sovereignty" which people can understand. When they grow up and ask, "Where were you when we sold out?", who will stand up and answer that question and tell them why we did it?

Why did we get into this deal in the first place? We were told by those who believe in this deal that it would give us secure access to the United States market. There was no other purpose for the deal than secure access to the U.S. market and an exemption from U.S. protection, particularly as evidenced in the U.S. Congress and as written in U.S. trade law.

However, as we in this Party have pointed out repeatedly, and as I outlined to the Ottawa Board of Trade a year and a half ago, secure access meant exempting us from United States trade law. It also meant an impartial binding dispute mechanism which would enforce that exemption from U.S. trade law. Without that, I told the Ottawa Board of Trade and I say again, the deal would not have been fair, it would not have been free, and it would not have been worth the paper it was written on.

I took that position a year and a half ago and gradually the Government came around to agreeing. In March, although she denied the concept in the House three days ago in response to questions I put to her, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) said that the objective of any trade agreement "would be the elimination of countervail by both countries". Two or three days ago in the House she said that this was never her objective.

In April in New York City, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that the U.S. trade remedy laws cannot apply to Canada, period. That made sense, but that is not what we have achieved. Gordon Ritchie, the deputy trade negotiator, admitted to the House of Commons committee that no secure access had been gained. He admitted to the committee that U.S. laws would still apply. The agreement itself at Article 1902: 1 says that the United States "reserves the right to apply its antidumping law and countervailing duty law to goods imported from the territory of the other Party"—Canada. We have not changed the laws which hit us on potash, steel, and softwood lumber.

[Translation]

We are not exempted from the 1930 U.S. Trade Act or the 1974 Trade Act. We are not exempted from the Omnibus Bill now before the U.S. Senate and the House of Representatives, although the Minister for International Trade would like to pretend the Omnibus Bill doesn't exist.

And what kind of tribunal will there be? How will this tribunal ensure our exports will have access to the U.S. market? It won't.

First of all, no one may go before the tribunal until the U.S. International Trade Commission has heard the case and handed down its decision—and not just a preliminary but a final decision. This takes about one year. One then has the option of either going to GATT, the international tribunal, or to this new tribunal. That process would take another year. Subsequently, if the decision is still unsatisfactory, there is now a new avenue for appealing a case, not included in the October 5 version but in the final version, and I am referring to the Extraordinary Challenge Procedure.

Mr. Speaker, we do not know how long these appeals will take or what kind of decisions can be made at this level, because the rules for this procedure are still being negotiated.

In other words, we would now be involved in a very lengthy process—three or four years—and a very costly one. In the softwood lumber case, legal fees have already cost the industry between $3 and $5 million. To do what? Not to change U.S. protectionist legislation but to make sure the legislation was correctly enforced.

• (1320)

[English]

One does not have to take my word for it, but we can read what it says in the document.

This is how the agreement defines the role of the tribunal. Article 1904:2 states that the review panel can review a trade decision of the United States Government only:

> . . . to determine whether such determination was in accordance with the antidumping or countervailing duty law of the importing Party.

That is to say, the law of the United States. It goes on:

> For this purpose, the antidumping or countervailing duty law consists of the relevant statutes, legislative history, regulations, administrative practice, and judicial precedents to the extent that a court of the importing Party would rely on such materials in reviewing a final determination of the competent investigating authority. Solely for the purposes of the panel review provided for in this Article, the antidumping and countervailing duty statutes of the Parties, as those statutes may be amended from time to time, are incorporated into this Agreement.

Nothing could be clearer. American law continues to apply unfettered. The only jurisdiction of the tribunal is to decide whether that law has been fairly applied. It is not only present and past law of the United States, but any future law, which of course brings into play the omnibus Bill currently before the Congress.

Some members of the business community seem to think that they have to support the deal because, as they have said to me and perhaps other Members of the House, this deal is better than no deal. I have read the text. No deal would have been better than this deal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I listened to the Prime Minister this morning. It was not a speech, it was citation after citation of endorsement, citation after citation of editorial boards. It did not deal with the substance and did not deal with the text, except for one peripheral quote from the preamble of the agreement.

Incidentally, the business community is not monolithic. We can put forward citations as well, but it will not advance the cause.

Some leading businessmen are concerned, particularly in the big leagues, about the peer pressure that is being applied. The Chairman of the Bank of Nova Scotia wrote the Chairman of the Business Council on National Issues to say we should not, as businessmen, "allow ourselves to be stampeded into a deal" in which we may be "sacrificing a vital component of sovereignty".

The Prime Minister spent three-quarters of his speech dragging up the endorsements. I say to him that this debate will not be won in the boardrooms, will not be won in the editorial boards, it will be won by a final tally of the votes of Canadians from one end of this country to the other.

Those endorsements do not change the facts.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we have to get rid of the myth that we have a free trade agreement. Even the document itself is labelled "Free Trade Agreement". It is not true. We don't need a philosophical discussion about whether we are for or against free trade, because this document does not constitute a free trade agreement. It is a selective trade agreement, not an agreement that covers all sectors of the economy.

Like any other contract, this agreement must be analysed and thoroughly examined. We must consider what was gained and what was lost or given away, and we must do this from the Canadian point of view. First of all, as I said earlier, we have not gained access to the U.S. market. Granted, some customs tariffs have been reduced, but they will be reduced in any case in the next round of GATT and other international talks. Customs tariffs will go down at the same rate on both sides, which will be worse for Canadian than U.S. interests, since our tariffs are generally higher and will therefore have to come down more than the U.S. tariffs.

We have not gained access to procurement contracts. The access we gained in the last GATT talks was far greater, proportionally, than what is provided under this Agreement. If we add up all our concessions, what we have is not a trade agreement but rather a contract to sell Canada at a discount.

We have abandoned control over our investments. We have abandoned control over our capital markets. The maximum for direct takeovers without review has been raised to $150 million and will disappear altogether in the case of indirect takeovers. This will leave the door open to unlimited takeovers.

In our capital markets, five Americans with no mutual business or family connections will be able to own and operate an American bank in Canada or even purchase a Canadian chartered bank. On the other hand, our banks do not obtain free access to the United States, because the Agreement does not change the laws established by individual States. In this respect, we must realize that the document before the House is not a treaty but an agreement. It is not a treaty that will be binding, by a vote of two-thirds of the U.S. Senate, on the constitution of the fifty States of the Union. It is not. And perhaps our Government will have the same problem in this country with the provinces.

[English]

This deal also commits Canada to a new continental energy policy. I refer again to the document, Article 904 which states that we must ensure as Canadians that any tax or other measure we take regarding any energy resource:

> . . . does not impose a higher price for exports of an energy good to the other Party than the price charged for such energy good when consumed domestically . . .

That means we can no longer set a separate export price. It also means, as we read further, that we can no longer set reserves. We can no longer set surpluses, no longer provide for our own self-sufficiency.

The National Energy Board will become merely a monitoring agency. Constitutionally, our producing provinces have really lost control over their own energy resources.

I recall when the western provinces responded to the National Energy Program on constitutional grounds because they thought Ottawa was taking away their control over resources. What has happened with this treaty is that Washington has now taken over the resources of this country. We are now obliged to sell our energy to the United States at the same price as we sell it domestically. We no longer have the ability to use our resources as an advantage competitively.

• (1330)

I was brought up believing that people would come to resources. I was brought up believing that resources were the base of this country to build a great nation. We have now allowed the resources to flow to the population and the control of the United States.

We also guarantee that in times of shortage or crisis shipments of energy to the United States can only be reduced as a proportion of total supply based on the most recent three-year period. Our total supply is defined to include everything that we have on top of the ground or in the ground, plus everything that we import. Even the energy that we import becomes part of the continental reservoir of the United States. As if that were not enough, Articles 408 and 409 of the agreement make it clear that the same proportional access and the same regime will apply to all renewable and non-renewable resources, probably including water.

In effect, we have become a storehouse or reservoir for the United States of America. I meant to include water, and I find it a little curious that this morning the Prime Minister referred to Venice as one of the great trading cities—I suppose to remind us that he is in the big leagues and was at the Summit. He mentioned Venice as one of the great trading cities. He did not mention that Venice is slowly sinking into its own canals, which is what will happen to this country if this deal goes through.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): By virtue of Articles 408 and 409 of this agreement, the United States gets a guaranteed share of our country. What is theirs is theirs; what is ours is theirs too.

This is not only not a free trade deal, Mr. Speaker, this is not even a trade deal. This is "The Sale of Canada Act", and that is why we oppose it.

What about the Auto Pact? The Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) will undoubtedly want to deal with it in some detail. This morning the Prime Minister spent approximately 10 or 15 minutes citing the Auto Pact as a great example of free trade. That is a fallacious argument. The Auto Pact is not free trade; it is a managed sectoral agreement between two countries with guaranteed percentages of employment, production, and content. It is not a free trade agreement, and it is absolutely no precedent for free trade as a concept either in theory or in practice.

In terms of that type of sectoral initiative, of course we would be willing to explore more sectoral opportunities with the United States, and to explore ways of eliminating any trade irritations that we have between the two countries.

The Prime Minister and the Minister for International Trade have repeatedly stated, in response to my questions and those of others, that the Auto Pact was not on the table. Yet by virtue of the tariffs moving down the whole enforcement mechanism for the safeguards protecting Canadians percentage production, employment and content disappear.

What about agriculture? Agriculture was not supposed to be in the deal. If we read the preamble, it is clearly in the deal. If we read the whole agricultural section, it is in the deal. The family farm will be devastated.

[Translation]

We find in the Agreement, in the document itself, that there will be a progressive elimination of the protection afforded by seasonal duties. We find in the final text of the Agreement that our farmers will be unable to face American competition because, while this document uses the term "free trade", Canadian farmers will never be able to compete because of our difficult climate and short four, five or six-month season. They will never be able to face totally free competition with American farmers, especially those in California, Florida and Georgia, who have a twelve-month season. It is impossible. If we want to remain self-sufficient in agriculture, we should never sign such an agreement because it will destroy the family farm in Canada.

The Prime Minister spoke this morning about GATT Article 11. This was an afterthought in the negotiations following the interventions of the Quebec Minister of Agriculture.

I must tell Quebec farmers that the problem has not been solved. The agreement is contradictory, as the UPA has already concluded. The UPA has told the newspapers that there is a contradiction between articles 703 and 710 of the Agreement. Article 710 states that import barriers will be reduced, while article 70 states that protection will be maintained, and this raises very important questions. There is an obvious and even glaring contradiction between those articles which brings into question the whole application of GATT Article 11. Will it be necessary to phase out all existing marketing boards? Will it be possible to create new ones? I seriously doubt it!

[English]

Our whole supply management system is being negotiated away. If we allow the import restrictions on major grains, if we allow the import restrictions seasonally on fruit and vegetables,if we allow the whole range of horticulture to disappear, there is no way that supply management can be contained in this country. Canadian agricultural programs will be—to use the delightful word of this agreement—"harmonized". They will be harmonized with U.S. programs. Harmonization is defined in Article 711 of the agricultural section of the agreement. It means making identical.

What has happened here is that every support program for western grain producers is listed in the agreement along with the list of support programs for U.S. farmers. Those two lists will now be made identical.

Our list includes the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, PFRA; it includes the Agricultural and Rural Development Act, ARDA; it includes the Economic and Rural Development Agreements, the ERDA agreements; it includes the Agricultural Stabilization Act, the Western Grain Stabilization Act, the Special Canadian Grains Program, the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, and Crop Insurance Program. All those programs and others listed fully in the agreement, probably taking it out of the ambit of Article 11 of GATT, will be harmonized with U.S. programs.

Since the United States overwhelmingly dominates in agriculture by virtue of its size and market, the level of government support for Canadians farmers will be determined not by Ottawa, not by provincial capitals, but by Washington.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, a new section added to the legal text states that, if the federal or provincial Governments wish to designate a monopoly by creating a Crown corporation at either the federal or the provincial level, or by using another system or method in a given sector, for whatever reasons, they will first have to obtain the authorization of the American Government. They will then have to ensure that no monopoly will grant preference to Canadian goods and services. The type of arrangement which exists between Bell Canada and Northern Telecom, for instance, could become unacceptable under this provision. There will also be an impact on existing and future utilities, such as electricity and hydro, and provincial programs such as automobile insurance and provincial health care plans. Articles 103 and 502 of the agreement also state that the federal Government will ensure compliance by the provinces and municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, I think that I can predict with some certainty that the provincial Governments will have much to say about the specific impact of this agreement on their jurisdiction in these areas.

[English]

The very premise of this agreement is based on free market forces. There is clause after clause and article after article that insists on harmonization and the free flow of those forces. That is relevant to this country in three ways that strike me immediately.

First, this country would never have been built east, west and north without some resistance to those continental economic forces. For 120 years we have resisted those forces and created a nation. Yet this agreement turns those forces north and south. Second, on the basis of pure economic forces and market forces, we would not have achieved some measure of economic equality in Canada. We would not have had a basis for our regional economic equality programs. We would not have had the basis for a philosophy that wherever one is born in the country, wherever one chooses to live when one comes to the country, or wherever one receives an education, one will have the same rights as a Canadian to a good education, a good job, and a secure retirement. Market forces would never have given us that.

We have always believed in a mixed economy in Canada. Yes, we believe in success, enterprise, and initiative. We want people to succeed. We also felt that it was very important to protect those of our citizens who are less able to protect themselves.

The mixed economy depends from time to time on where the private sector cannot intervene or will not or cannot do the job in the public interest, and the Government, the state, the people intervene to achieve a specific result. Market forces would not have given us public housing. Market forces would not have given us public transportation. Market forces would not give us the spine of the country in terms of a publicly owned railway, airline, and broadcasting system.

The whole basis of this agreement is the unleashing of sheer market forces which would destroy nationhood for Canada and would destroy the equality of the country from one coast to another and into the North. It would also destroy the basis for Canadians to intervene where they felt the public sector needed to intervene to preserve some equality of opportunity in the country.

President Reagan has said that this deal represents the fulfilment of an American dream. I can understand that. Let the Americans dream, but we have our own dreams. We dream of an independent and a distinct nation north of the 49th parallel. Despite the assurances of the Prime Minister given just yesterday to the provincial Premiers that social programs and regional development programs are safeguarded in the deal, it is just not true. Read the text. There is no specific exemption from U.S. action under its definition of subsidies against either our social programs or our regional equality development programs.

I turn again to the text. Article 1906 and Article 1907 commit us to begin a negotiating process for up to seven years to decide which social and regional development programs are to be defined as subsidies for the purpose of the agreement. If those programs qualify as subsidies within the nature of this agreement, and certainly within the ambit of current American law—1930, 1974, and particularly the omnibus Bill before the Congress of the United States—our programs socially and regionally will be subject to countervail and other American remedy. It means that we are negotiating with the Americans the type of general assistance we will be allowed to provide our citizens as Canadians.

There will also be pressure to harmonize those programs from another source. As free market forces are unleashed under this agreement north and south, American business will look northward and say that there is unfair competition from Canada because we have public medicare, which our companies have to pay down in the United States by way of private plans, and because we have benefits such as the unemployment insurance and the Canada Pension Plan. There will be pressure in terms of competitive forces to harmonize our programs, that is to say, to reduce our programs to American levels.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) is asking us to have confidence in the Government for five to seven years to enable it to negotiate a new set of rules.

Confidence in this Government, Mr. Speaker? All we need to remember is what it has done in the social field and in regional development since it came into office. They attempted to de-index old age security pensions. They cut down youth assistance and employment programs. They slashed expenditures for the regions to the tune of several million dollars. They did away with the national training program called "First Chance". They shelved a number of training programs. So Canadians no longer believe that the Government will be able to stop the Americans when they get around to axing some of our social programs.

American companies will be in a good position to argue that we do have one advantage over them—health insurance and pensions plans—and that it costs less here. The American companies themselves pay for the social benefits available to their employees.

[English]

The Prime Minister has said in Atlantic Canada that his trade deal is a solution to regional disparities. He told the Atlantic provinces that this deal would allow them to trade their way to prosperity. This deal will abandon Atlantic Canada to the sheer, raw market forces. This deal will cut Atlantic Canada adrift. This deal is based, I say again, upon the premise of the free market American style, and we have used a mixed economy to equalize opportunity in Canada between regions and among all levels of our citizens.

We have just received this massive text. We are spending two or three days debating it before it is signed by our Prime Minister and the President of the United States on January 2.

[Translation]

The House committee responsible for trade matters looked into this question, but none of its members ever saw the text before the report was drafted. That may be good enough for the trained seals who sit behind the Prime Minister, but not for us. Perhaps they have confidence in the Government, but we certainly do not, neither I nor the people of Canada.

As we indicate in our minority report, consideration of the agreement was not done in a democratic or representative manner. The committee hearings were a parody of democracy. Without the final text, the study it did was just a big joke.

[English]

The Prime Minister challenges us to a positive alternative. We published that in the minority report which we issued on Tuesday to the House of Commons committee report. It was entitled Reaching Out. We in the Liberal Party have always favoured more liberalized trade, not only with the United States but across the world and around the world. Under this Government our trade with the Pacific Rim has dropped dramatically and our trade with Europe has dropped dramatically.

We have always believed, essential though the American market is to us and essential though the United States is to us, that we have always done better, as we have over the last seven rounds of the GATT, internationally and multilaterally in our negotiations with the United States than head to head and bilaterally, because we never believed that we would get an exemption from U.S. trade law in a bilateral way.

We would continue to pursue sectoral opportunities. The Auto Pact was concluded under a Liberal Government. We would continue to look for ways to ease those irritants to trade between the two countries. We are world traders. We want a more vigorous trade policy, but we want a policy which allows us to trade with the world with special and immediate focus on the United States, not just an exclusive deal with the United States.

A Liberal trade strategy will start by reducing and eliminating interprovincial barriers to trade so that we have a free trade market within our own country. We will bring in a comprehensive trade Bill which will make clear our trade objectives, our style of trade financing, and our trade remedies. We will put all the efforts of the federal Government under one roof so that all expertise can be gathered coherently with one single objective, that is to say, to open up markets and enhance our trade opportunities both abroad and continentally.

The trade agreement is also based on the supposition and premise that it can be a substitute for a national economic strategy. No trade policy can substitute for a national coherent strategy on the economy. It must be part of that strategy. We can only make ourselves more competitive. No trade agreement will do it for us. No trade agreement will bail us out. We must, therefore, expand our commitment to research and development and work to develop our education system so that we give our youth the skills that it will need in a tough, competitive world. We will commit ourselves to a full employment strategy. We are committed to better training and retraining for our workforce, particularly for those men and women thrown out of work by technological progress. We are committed to a national literacy program to help those five million Canadians who cannot read or write on a functional basis thereby being denied an opportunity to participate fully in the economy.

• (1350)

In democratic parliamentary terms the Government has no mandate for the motion or the deal before the House. It was not discussed in the last election. The only words we had from the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) were in debate in 1983 against the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) for the leadership of the Conservative Party. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance were both against free trade because, to use the Prime Minister's words ,"It affected our sovereignty", and he would have none of it. That is where he stood. He was right and he should have maintained that. It is for this reason we believe the people of Canada must be given an opportunity to decide. No Government has the right to alter fundamentally the direction, the style and the nature of this country without the consent of a majority of Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We are still a democracy after all. We are still governed by a parliamentary system after all. I challenge the Prime Minister to call an election. Let the people of Canada decide before this deal is implemented. We cannot block the signing, but let the people decide before this deal is rammed through Parliament and before it is autocratically imposed on Canadians. I believe that when Canadians at long last have an opportunity to examine this deal, to study and look at it clause by clause as we have looked at it, they will reject this deal massively and overwhelmingly in the next general election.

The Prime Minister met the Premiers yesterday. He said in an earlier meeting with the Premiers that, in terms of provincial government support, he is happy. He said that a seven to three score would be good enough in a hockey game in Baie Comeau. It may be good enough for a hockey game in Baie Comeau but it is not good enough for the future of this country. It is not just that simple. I ask the Premiers of this country to read and study this document as we have studied it. Premiers in their comments yesterday said on countervail, on regional economic development, "I have an assurance from the Prime Minister". They said on the binational tribunal, "I have had an assurance from the Prime Minister". They said on the omnibus Bill, "I have an assurance from the Prime Minister". I want to tell the Premiers not to count on those assurances. We know in this House how well we can count on those assurances. I tell the Premiers to read the document and study it.

Provincial Premiers have their own mandates and their own responsibilities, and I respect that. In light of the interest of their provinces as they see fit, they are entitled to take a position. I can understand that. I accept that. But in this House of Commons our responsibility is a national one. We must consider the implications of this deal, of this pact, on behalf of all Canadians as we see them within this federal jurisdiction of Parliament. Even if the count had been 10 to zip in favour of this deal by the provincial Premiers I would have still opposed it because it is bad for Canada and we are going to vote against it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I said when I saw the general principles of the deal in October that I would tear it up. I am going to spend a bit of the Christmas holidays working on the iron to get in shape because the 2,500 pages of this document will be a little harder to handle than I anticipated.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Except for one passing reference to the preamble the Prime Minister did not cite this document at all in support of his case. I suspect that the Prime Minister has not read it, and if he reads it I suspect that he will want to tear it up too.

We are opposed to this deal. We who are opposed to it are painted by the Prime Minister as being negative. We are painted as being timid. We are being painted as being afraid and having no confidence in the future of this country. But who are the frightened ones? Who are the real fearful Canadians? Who are the ones who are saying that our only hope for survival as a nation is this pact with the United States? Who are the ones who are mortgaging us to the United States as the only hope for our economic survival? It is not our Party, it is the Government of Canada.

When the Prime Minister says that we do not have confidence in Canada, that we do not have confidence in our future, he is dead wrong. We have confidence in this country. We have confidence in our future, but our future is not a continental future, it is a Canadian future.

On this trade issue I am not saying that as Canadians we can do it alone, but I am saying that we can do it in our own way. I believe Canadians have proved that in 120 years of resisting the continental forces and creating a flourishing, proud and self-sufficient nation.

I retain fundamentally my optimism in this country. I retain fundamentally my faith in Canadians. I believe that we are now mature enough, talented enough, strong enough, confident enough and tough enough to make our own choices in our own way for our own future, and that is why we reject this deal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in 1983 the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) when asked about a comprehensive free trade agreement with the United States said it was wrong. It affected our sovereignty, which is to say it affected our capacity to shape the future of our country with our own decisions.

In 1984 in a campaign in which he discussed every other issue under the sun, the same Prime Minister never mentioned a comprehensive free trade agreement a single time. In 1985, after the same man had formed the Government of Canada, he launched a process to put in place exactly what he had denounced in 1983.

The New Democratic Party opposed such an approach to our relationship with the United States in 1983. We would have made that clear in 1984 if it had been a campaign issue, and I can tell you today in 1987 that we are as strongly opposed to this approach today as we ever were.

What has been made abundantly clear from the weekend of October 1 right up to the time not many days ago when we saw the final wording in this agreement is that what is involved is something other than an accord on the exchange of commercial products. What is involved is much more comprehensive than that. What is ultimately involved in this agreement is that the priorities of the people of Canada in virtually every aspect of life will be shaped by influences and forces South of the border rather than by the people of Canada. With that kind of approach, the New Democratic Party is in total opposition because we believe in an independent, self-reliant, confident Canada.

• (1400)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, as I said when we first saw the elements of the agreement on that first weekend in October after the Prime Minister's senior cabinet Ministers spent the concluding days of negotiations in Washington, my caucus colleagues and I were opposed to what we saw at that time and we would look forward to reading the final document. Of course, when we saw the final document, as the country now knows because we have had occasion to discuss it at least in Question Period since that time, our concerns have been confirmed. The opposition of the New Democratic Party at every level, federal and provincial, has been intensified. We will do everything we can as a Party to stop this accord from being put in place in Canada.

As I said, this is not simply a matter of commerce or exchange. There are all kinds of positive arguments to be made about the expansion of commerce and trade with the United States, our most significant trading partner and for most of our history a good neighbour and a good friend. However, this is something quite different.

If we as a nation want to determine how we will reduce regional economic disparities, we will not be able to do so if this agreement goes into place. If we want to set our own energy prices here in Canada, we will not be able to do so. If we want to control our own agricultural sector in the way the farmers and farming communities would like us to do, we will not be able to do so. If we wish to process our resources to whatever level we decide before we export them to other nations, we will not be able to do so if this agreement goes into place.

If we want to ensure that when foreign capital comes into our country, either in the form of new investment or as a takeover of an existing Canadian firm, capital be put to work to provide benefits for Canadians and not simply profits for those who invest, we will no longer be able to establish those priorities. If we want to enhance the future of our service sector in which so many Canadians and particularly Canadian women work, we will not be able to do so. If we want to strengthen our cultural industries by making decisions independently arrived at here in Canada without fear of future countervail from the United States of America, we will not be able to do so.

The people of this nation, and I would suggest the people who vote for all three political Parties, are deeply committed to the principle of a mixed economy, unlike those in the country to the south of us. If we wish to establish Crown corporations and give them certain monopoly power to fulfil certain objectives desired by the people of Canada in the future the way we have in the past, we will not be able to do so if this agreement goes into effect. I say shame on the Government of Canada for making such a proposition.

Instead of maximizing opportunities to shape our own destiny as a free people, the Government has done just the opposite. Instead of boasting, this Government should be hanging its collective head in shame for what it is submitting to the people of Canada.

Government Members and cabinet Ministers boast that this is the biggest trade deal ever negotiated between two countries. It may not be the biggest, but it is certainly the worst from a Canadian point of view. Whether it is energy, agriculture or regional fairness, whether it is service or culture, whether it is East, West or central Canada, whether it is national leadership or provincial rights, this Government has betrayed the interests of our people wherever they may live and whatever kind of work they may do.

Not only is this a bad deal in substance, but the Government of Canada has systematically misled the people of Canada about its true nature. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said today, and I totally agree with him, that when the Prime Minister spoke this morning, he did not refer to one single specific clause in the agreement. He might have made one reference as part of what he had to say, but if there was one reference, there was only one.

Not only the Prime Minister but cabinet Ministers and not only cabinet Ministers but Conservative Premiers from coast to coast have not talked about the substance of this deal. They have not referred to specific clauses of it to explain to the people of Canada what they mean. I know why they have not done so. It is because the more the people of Canada understand what those clauses mean, the more the people of Canada will oppose this deal.

I would like to deal with some of those clauses specifically. I wish that just for once in this debate, someone on the other side would reply so that we could have a serious intellectual exchange about the future of this great nation of ours. I will make a prediction today. Instead of replying, they will send little newsletters, and Conservative provincial Premiers will debate in their regions and try to create animosity toward other regions, but not once will they have the integrity and decency to meet the arguments head-on. I make that prediction right now.

I said in my opening comments today that this deal is bad for the future of our country because it does not involve only the setting down of principles for commerce and the exchange between two good neighbours but because ultimately it impacts upon our rights as a people to make our own decisions, something that is quite a different matter indeed. This is particularly so with the energy sector.

I am a leader of a Party who has watched the evolution of my nation go roughly from east to west in our historical development. I as one national leader wanted to see opportunities for western Canada arise more rapidly than they did in central Canada so that we could get away from being hewers of wood and drawers of water and from being a resource hinterland, whether for central Canada or for Japan and the United States of America.

One of the reasons my Party has grown at the provincial level in western Canada is that a long time ago, the provincial level took head-on the argument that it would not yield to old market forces for the development which would have kept western Canada a resource-based economy forever. The provincial level took concrete action to make of western Canada what central Canada has gradually become, a vibrant, mixed, aggressively competitive economy in all its dimensions and not simply a resource hinterland. That is the national view of my Party today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: One of the aspects of this deal that disturbs me the most is indeed its energy provision. In the last decade, Premier Lougheed and all the western Premiers argued about the right of and necessity for the provinces to retain control over the development of their resources. We in this Party happen to agree with that. In 1981, I wrote a letter to the Prime Minister of the day, Mr. Trudeau. One of the very specific conditions for our agreement to the constitutional accord in 1981 which was subsequently adopted in 1982, was the clarification in the Constitution of the provinces' right to control, manage and develop their resources including the setting of prices.

I believe in a decentralized economy. If there is anything the world has learned in the last 30 or 40 years of economic development, it has been the importance of decentralized decision-making. As a Canadian, I believed it was particularly important for western Canadians to have the right to set the pattern of the development and control of their resources themselves within their domain. The arguments made then by the Premiers have since been abandoned, and I think pretty superficially, without giving much thought at all to what is involved.

I would zero in on the price of energy as a particular element. I say to Conservative Members opposite, especially those from western Canada, that the petrochemical price structure in Alberta for Canadian firms has been kept lower, and they do not talk about it now, by the policies of the Alberta Government so that the West would not simply have to continue derive income from exporting its resource in raw form. It made sense and we supported it. I can tell you that in the Province of Quebec, under the Government of Premier Lesage and the Government of Premier René Lévesque, energy prices were kept at a lower level for the development of industry in that province, hydroelectric energy in this case, because it was a competitive economic advantage we had and we used it for the development of our people. The same principle holds for the hydroelectric resources of Manitoba and Ontario. It also holds for energy resources in Saskatchewan and British Columbia, albeit less so than Alberta.

We are saying that this is a totally unacceptable betrayal of not only provincial rights in the abstract but of the rights of the people who live in those provinces to determine their prices and set them at a lower level if they deem that desirable for the development of their region. It is the Tories who are selling out the serious long-range interests of western Canada, indeed of every province in Canada with important resources. It is no accident that Mr. Yeutter was boasting, within 24 hours of the deal being signed in Washington, about how the Americans got us locked into this energy deal. That is what they talked about. It is no accident.

Ronald Reagan, when he was Governor of California, used to talk about continental energy. In 1980, after he became President, he did the same thing. The Mexicans have turned this kind of deal down saying it would be foolish for a country with energy resources to accept. It is the kind of foolishness only Canadian Conservatives are inclined to accept.

To move to the question of provincial rights, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) said in the debate in this House just after October 3 that there is no change in provincial rights at all. I had raised questions about control of energy development, and they said there has been no change. I will simply say, as I said then, that that is not true. There has been change, and the rights which have been taken away from Ottawa have indeed been given to Washington. That is unacceptable to the New Democratic Party of Canada.

The same Minister for International Trade said, not simply with reference to the energy question but to all provincial rights, that there has been no change, they would have the same rights after this agreement as before. That of course is not the case. If you look at this agreement, it does not take long at all to ascertain that instead of what the Prime Minister said, that some 97 per cent of the areas covered are within federal jurisdiction, it is a much smaller percentage within federal jurisdiction and a much greater percentage within provincial jurisdiction than the Government has been prepared to admit.

On that particular point, I had hoped the Prime Minister could be here and I understand that he had another commitment, but I hope he will deal with this in the future. He talked appropriately in a positive sense about the Meech Lake agreement, on this particular issue he has turned co-operative federalism upside down. He said, in a commitment to the Premiers in Halifax in the fall of 1985, with respect to elements of a potential agreement that were within provincial jurisdiction or authority, that the federal Government, and I quote, "would not pursue any particular element within provincial jurisdictional authority unless all provincial Governments support it and are ready to implement it". In other words, he was saying something that I think is very important for a federal Prime Minister of this country, that if you are taking a major initiative and you are talking about an area specifically within provincial areas of responsibility, then you have an obligation to get their support.

You do not have the right to trample over the rights of the provinces, whether it is three provinces, six provinces or one province. If that province has the constitutional right in a certain area of authority, that right has to be respected by the federal Prime Minister. Yet instead of respecting that right the federal Prime Minister moved unilaterally to make changes in at least five areas of constitutional authority that are directly within the provincial domain. The wine and distillery section is of course well known and has been discussed at length. Then there is the energy sector, the service sector, and investments. The approach in making so-called national treatment a policy for all industry in Canada and the U.S., if this accord goes into effect, profoundly impacts upon provincial jurisdictional authority.

The Prime Minister has been pretty glib, to put it euphemistically, about this particular point, trying to skirt around it, trying to imply that the federal Government had not only the right to negotiate a treaty, which no one has questioned, but he asserted in the past 48 hours, along with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), that it not only has the right to negotiate the treaty but to implement it in those areas within provincial jurisdictional authority.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Citing no authority.

Mr. Broadbent: Citing no authority whatsoever for such a view. I know why. With the exception of one case that I am aware of, 90 per cent of the constitutional authorities are clearly on the other side of the issue.

There is a simple way, however, if he would like to be consistent with what he has talked about with respect to building a co-operative attitude in Canada. Why not make a reference to the Supreme Court? Technically it is totally possible. He could simply refer a question of the following kind, for example: Does this trade arrangement give the federal Government the power to implement its provisions in areas of provincial jurisdiction?

Mr. Lewis: Who wrote that?

Mr. Broadbent: He could refer that question, drafted in legal language, to the Supreme Court, get an answer and provide it to the House of Commons, the Premiers and, more important, to the people of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this Agreement is a threat to rural communities. In March, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated in the House of Commons that the Government was going to "maintain support policies for our farmers and our marketing boards".

Today, we read in Le Devoir and other Quebec newspapers that the Quebec UPA is still against the Agreement. I can see why. The Mulroney Government claims it has protected the marketing boards, but eliminating tariffs on processed goods will sooner or later undermine the effectiveness of these boards.

Either the boards will eventually disappear, because the cost of farm products regulated by the boards will be higher than U.S. products which are not so regulated, or the food processing industry—the most important manufacturing industry in Canada—may disappear because it will have to pay more for agricultural products like chicken, eggs and milk than the U.S. industry.

Protecting marketing boards without protecting the food processing industry is ridiculous, Mr. Speaker. If we talk to average Canadians across this country, I am sure we will find many Canadians who have an interest in the Agreement's impact on regional development.

The final text has not removed any of our concerns about a possible dismantling of our regional development programs. The Prime Minister claims this trade agreement would eliminate regional disparity. Not true! An economist, otherwise an ardent supporter of the Mulroney-Reagan Agreement, has refuted this ridiculous statement.

Mr. Speaker, after 200 years of free trade, the United States has yet to eliminate regional disparity. In fact, regional disparity is on the increase. That is a fact. I hope that for once, the Prime Minister of Canada will start being honest about this Agreement. Mr. Speaker, regional development programs are essential to the growth and economic diversification of the Atlantic Provinces, of the remote regions of Northern Quebec and Ontario and of several Western regions. In fact, all regions in this country benefit from these programs. Here again, however, the Americans have won out.

When the Agreement was announced in early October, the Deputy Minister of Finance said we would now have to modify our regional programs to avoid retaliatory action by the Americans. So, in this area as well, our policies are going to be dictated by Washington.

• (1420)

This is not a small point. At the time of the final agreement on the Constitution of 1982 there had emerged in Canada a consensus that we had to build into our modern Constitution something which is in no other constitution in the developed industrial world—a commitment to regional equality. A solid clause in that Constitution commits us as a people, not to intensify or even leave in existence regional inequalities but to work to eliminate them.

As a Social Democrat, my Party in particular owes, in part, its raison d'être to our commitment to dealing with regional inequality. An accord which will impact on a long list of regional development programs in the agricultural sector and regional programs in general and says that we have ultimately to mesh our rules in this important aspect of our national development with those in the United States is not acceptable.

The reality is once again quite different from what the Government has told us. Mr. Simon Reisman took great delight at one time in saying that he had managed to have social policy and regional development policies excluded from this accord. In the early stages he said that the Americans were putting immense pressure on the Government of Canada to include all these programs in the accord. He boasted, as the Government has since, that they did not yield to this pressure, that somehow the Canadian side won out.

That is simply not the case. I have already mentioned one key decision made by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) in this regard within days after the original signing in October. There is also a clause which says that during the next seven years all of these programs will be considered as a type of subsidy in terms of the impact of the trade relationships between the two countries.

These issues have not been resolved. Mr. Reisman himself said that there was immense pressure from the Americans early in the discussions to have all of these included. You do not have to be the slightest bit paranoid to understand that if the United States of America, with more than 10 times our economic strength and profoundly committed as it is to an exclusively free market orientation in the economy, believed in August that all these programs were important for inclusion, it will once again start exerting pressure to put all these programs right back on the agenda as soon as the agreement is signed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, as leader of a Party which is profoundly committed to building greater, not lesser, equality in Canada, I believe that regional development programs should be designed by Canadians for Canadians and that decisions about them should be made in Ottawa, not Washington.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

And what about services? Mr. Speaker, other countries which have signed free trade agreements have excluded, and not by accident, their service sector from such agreements, recognizing the potential threat to their own social and economic programs. The development of our service industries is critical if we wish to preserve independent economic and political institutions. As the trade agreement recognizes the basic principles of the right to establisment and national treatment, American service companies will be able to defy any Canadian practice which could limit their ability to compete in Canada.

The final text includes a detailed list of service industries which are covered by the agreement. The list is complete and covers such sectors as insurance, real estate, tourism and data processing. By agreeing to the inclusion of services, the Government has made concessions without knowing the true consequences of its actions. Neither the Government nor the Macdonald Commission have examined the impact of such an agreement on the service sector. Mr. Speaker, 83 per cent of working women are employed in the service sector. In what was certainly one of the most alarming submissions presented to the Parliamentary Committee, the Association of Independent Data Processing Services predicted the loss of 360,000 jobs in data processing services by 1993, which jobs are mostly held by women.

[English]

With regard to the service sector, just a couple of days ago I raised the problem of including in this accord the right of private firms in the United States to compete for contracts in the management of our hospital services, our ambulance services, and nursing home services, a total of 47 categories in the medical field. The Prime Minister was veritably buffoonish in response. We never anticipated that they would be included in this agreement, but we found it in the document.

• (1430)

When it was suggested that this might have some impact on public medicare, we were again attacked for raising red herrings and were told that this was a bogus concern. They laughed about it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He has not read it.

Mr. Broadbent: As the Leader of the Opposition said, probably the Prime Minister had not even read that section.

Mr. Lewis: Nonsense and you know it. You have not read it.

Mr. Broadbent: I can tell the Hon. Member that I have read it and, as the leader of a Party that brought medicare to Canada, I am deeply concerned about what the Conservatives are doing in this regard. I hope the Member will join in the debate. I would like him to deal with the question.

I want to put it as clearly as I can—

Mr. Lewis: Please do. It has not been clear up to now. It is nonsense.

Mr. Broadbent: If he will listen—

Mr. Lewis: I am listening.

Mr. Broadbent: I will put the point and I hope he will respond.

Mr. Lewis: Do not make allegations that the Prime Minister has not read it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Not only did he read it, he wrote it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: The Member is really testing our credibility. He wants us to believe that the Prime Minister can both read and write.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I will leave out the question of whether the Prime Minister read this part of the document. That is irrelevant to my argument.

The point is that I am concerned about the wording that is there. We need not believe that there is a sinister plot by the Americans, simply that they want to make money, which, in the context of their society, is a legitimate notion. If we open the border across the country to American firms so they can start applying for business contracts, they could end up managing our hospitals—

Mr. Lewis: They are in Ontario.

Mr. Broadbent: Let us carry this through. If this goes on and they ultimately manage our nursing homes, our hospitals, our ambulance services, they bring with that not just management techniques but a whole ideology of privatization. We believe in public medicare in this country. That is the point.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: If Conservatives opposite think it is accidental that 35 million Americans do not even have any form of medical insurance, then they do not know much about the historical development of countries. One reason that they do not have that insurance is that there is no commitment to public social policy such as we have established in this country. We do not want our country to regress to that stage.

I hope Canadians will have an opportunity to read and consider the implications of another sector of this agreement. It is that of investment. This agreement sets criteria that will prohibit provincial or federal Governments from attaching performance criteria to investment in this country, and that the establishment of basic market principles are to be the standard for judgment of economic activity. In that respect we are deeply concerned that the new ceiling at which takeovers will be considered in industry and industrial development in Canada is raised to $150 million. This means that some 500 or fewer companies in Canada will be screened in terms of future takeover bids.

Again, that has absolutely nothing to do with the competitiveness of Canada, the confidence, the zest or determination of Canada. Those are important notions, not merely clichés as the Government has made them.

Governments in the post-war period of this country, indeed most other industrialized countries, have been concerned about having legislation permitting certain frameworks of control and conditions for capital coming in. They made the common-sense judgment that those with dominant economic power are more likely than not to use it for their own economic interest if they are allowed to have their way. It does not take a genius to understand that. I only wish more Conservatives would understand it.

Canada has many vibrant and innovative firms. Our Party is concerned that a larger conglomerate with 10 times the financial resources in the United States, which may not be as competent but has more capital at its disposal, will simply come in and gobble up those innovative firms. They can take all of the advantages developed by the smaller or medium-sized firms in Canada and transfer them to the United States. We in the New Democratic Party do not plan to stand by and let that happen.

I ask Conservative Members of the House in particular, and Premiers as well, to read a study that was released by Statistics Canada a few weeks ago which compares the performance of foreign-owned firms in Canada with Canadian-owned firms in the period from 1978 to 1985. It does not come as much of a surprise to discover that in the comparison of job creation in relation to profits that were made, Canadian firms were outperforming the Americans by a considerable margin in terms of creating jobs here in Canada. That is not rhetoric, that is the reality. I wish Members on the government side would look at their own data.

I want to say a few words about the auto sector. Not only has the Prime Minister, with his propaganda here today, but also many Ministers of the Cabinet and premiers across the country, have tried to persuade Canadians that the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement was an example of free trade. That agreement has had a very positive impact in my constituency as well as many others in Ontario, and has had a great advantage for Canada. They suggest that somehow the New Democratic Party is opposed to this kind of development, which has worked so well in Ontario, taking place elsewhere in Canada.

While I do not want to use the same rhetoric as Mr. Reisman about the big lie, and will forgo some of the historical comparisons he made, I will say that it is an utter distortion of the truth to call the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement a free trade agreement.

Perhaps some Conservative back-benchers do not know the reality because they were not here at the time. However, the classical refutation of that argument is that when the Auto Pact came in, the big three automotive companies had to sign letters committing themselves to a certain level of investment in Canada. I can say that we would not have the level of investment in my constituency if we had a free trade agreement in 1965. We have the investment today because it was managed trade and because the then Government negotiated, on balance, a good deal for Canada. That is the truth.

• (1440)

If the Tories in particular were interested in talking about the truth on this issue, they could cite my colleagues and myself as having stated that we are very happy in principle to take the model of the Canada-U.S. Automotive Agreement, by and large, and look at different sectors of the Canadian economy wherever we can and bring that into place, precisely because it is a managed trade agreement that has built into it certain guaranteed benefits for Canada. Next time the Tories cite the Auto Pact and cite the NDP, at least for once would they tell the truth?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I wish to talk about another aspect of this deal that the Government has systematically distorted, which is the dispute settlement mechanism. This was the name of the game, as we understood it, when the Government embarked on these trade negotiations. They stated, and I think all Parties in the House agreed with this objective, that what we ought to try to do was to put in place an institution, a mechanism, or whatever we want to call it, that would remove some of the unfair trade barriers that existed in terms of our exports to the United States. There were some concerns from time to time on the Canadian side, but the overriding concern was for us to have free and fair access to U.S. markets.

At the time the Minister for International Trade was quite explicit about the Government's agenda, which was to get rid of all those unfair U.S. laws and unfair countervailing practices. The bottom line was to get rid of those. Some of us were quite sceptical about the possibility of getting rid of those completely, because some of us know something about the powers of the U.S. Congress and the history of the United States. If that was the bottom line that the Conservatives had on their agenda, we said, "Good luck to them". They said that that was really what they were all about. They had to get guaranteed access and get rid of those bad laws. We know that they did nothing of the kind. The tune has now changed. What they want to do is to have a few Canadians on the board who will lend legitimacy in one sense to the interpretation of American law. That is real success!

Even after the delays from October until a couple of weeks ago when we saw the final wording, the whole thing has become even more complicated. The essential principle remains, the U.S. Congress retains its right, whether it is in softwood, shakes and shingles, tubular steel, or pork. Whenever we win the competition, the U.S. Congress retains its right to pass unfair discriminatory law against us. That has not changed. But the newly constituted, latest, last minute, up-to-date tribunal that the Government has negotiated, at the first stage in the new process of coming to grips with one of these unfair acts, will take up to 315 days, or almost one year potentially, to correct some unfair action. Even at the end, and God knows how many months beyond that it will go on, the U.S. Congress still retains its right to take unfair action against Canadians who happen to be winning the competition.

To paraphrase an old Conservative, rarely has so much been given away by a Government to get so little, as the Government of Canada has done in this particular deal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I wish to conclude my remarks today by dealing with two final matters. The Government has not attempted to defend the details of what it has brought out, and I suspect that it never will. But it has indulged in two types of arguments about those of us on the other side of this very important historical issue. On the one hand, the Government has stated that it is either this or nothing; that lofty intellectual argument that we either accept this particular proposal, or there is nothing else around. That certainly shows the limits of the Conservative imagination. It is this deal or nothing.

I will not go on at length, Mr. Speaker, since I have done so in other speeches in the House and outside, but today I simply want to say to Canadians that there are alternatives. One does not have to accept a bad deal in place of other options that are open to us as a nation. I wish to put it in context. When the Government started negotiations there was a surplus in our commercial trade of some $20 billion in the very year the negotiations were launched. As I said in another context when talking to a business person, only a Conservative would be so stupid as to remind the U.S. Congress, most of whom were quite asleep on this particular point, that we had a $20 billion surplus. Mentioning that point woke many Americans up to that reality. But we had a $20 billion surplus when the negotiations started, and even this year when the figures came out, I believe last Thursday, they showed that the surplus up to October of this year was running at a $10.1 billion in terms of trade with the U.S.

The point I want to make here is that, in terms of the so-called status quo, we are doing quite well in terms of our trade with the United States. One might even say that we have been winning the competition. As a Canadian, what pleases me particularly is looking at some of the new areas. It is not only as the hewers of wood and the drawers of water that we have been doing well in recent years.

My research staff have prepared some data comparing our exports to the United States from 1980 to 1986 to see how well we have been doing. Some interesting patterns emerged. In the manufacturing field, crushing and milling machinery and parts, we exported to the United States some $7.4 million in 1980, and in 1986 that had gone up to $19.5 million. In construction machinery and equipment we exported $36 million in 1980, which had gone up to $76 million in 1986. In parts for pulp and paper industrial machinery we exported $49.8 million in 1980, and that was up to $60 million in 1986. In aircraft assembly we exported $561 million in 1980, and that was up to $1.150 billion in 1986. In radar equipment and related devices and parts we exported $5 million in 1980, and $33 million in 1986. In commercial telecommunications equipment we exported $122 million in 1980, and that was up to $260 million in 1986.

The point I wish to make with only a few of those statistics is that there has been an interesting and important development of the Canadian economy in the last 10 to 15 years, which one can begin to see in this six year period of statistics. Finally, we are getting away from being simply an exporter of raw materials. We have been winning the competition. I wish to remind the Prime Minister that we do not have to take a back seat to the United States of America. We are doing very well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Among other things, my Party has stated that we should build on those strengths. We can have bilateral arrangements in certain sectors with the United States. We should pursue a reduction in tariffs where there is unfair access to the United States, most effectively, as others have argued in this debate, through the GATT working with other smaller-sized nations to deal with that big economic giant, the United States, to receive fairer trade practices. We have said that we should expand our efforts in trade to the Pacific Rim, to South America and Central America. We have lost some of our older markets in Europe because this Government has concentrated so much on the United States. We should be going back to some of those markets in Europe.

All of this should be embraced, in our judgment, in an over-all industrial strategy, in a mixed economy, recognizing provincial jurisdictional authority, and worked out with the provinces and the private sector to put in place an over-all industrial development strategy, geared to achieving one day full employment. That can be done. The Austrians, the Swedes, and the Japanese have done it, and it is time that we did it, because we can do it. There are other options, I say to the people of Canada, than this big giveaway which the Conservatives want them to accept.

The second argument, which the Government has attempted to use, whether it is in the House or out in the country, has been that all confident and imaginative Canadians are for this deal—whether they be male, female, westerners, easterners, central Canadians, farmers, or auto workers, that everyone of a positive, imaginative, and confident bent is for this deal, and everyone who does not fit into those categories of positive human attributes is on the other side. It argues that all those who have fear and apprehension and are lacking in confidence are opposed.

If we are going to make a guess about this, it is exactly the reverse of what the Government is going to say. However, I am not going to indulge in the same propaganda as the Government on the other side. I am not going to say that all people of confidence, imagination, and determination are opposed to this deal. I am just saying that all the people of that kind that I know are opposed to this deal, and I want to put it in some kind of perspective.

Let us look at the country in which we live. As a Canadian and as a person who came of age, reached maturity or adulthood in the fifties, I would like to reflect upon our country. Let us look at what has happened in this Canada of ours since 1945. There has been a profound change in almost every respect. As a country we no longer defer to Great Britain. In the 1911 great debate on free trade the slogans used were: "Keep Canada British". Well, it was not even British then. There was a certain major province on the other side of this province which was ignored in that sloganeering, but we understand, with an historical perspective, why that slogan might have been the case in 1911. We are no longer, as I say, a nation which is deferential toward Britain, to say the least. However, for many years I think that was the case. Canadians had a sense, if they were to make it in whatever field they were in, whether it was in sports, creative arts, or business, that they had to do it in the United States. There was a transformation from Britain to the United States in the psychic imagination of Canadians, consistent with our development.

If there is anything that is true of our generation today, that is behind us. If there is anything that is true of Canadians in their adult years now, it is the recognition of this great country of ours. I do not care what the field is, whether it is business or the arts. I happen to like fiction, but I can read a Margaret Atwood, a Margaret Laurence, an Alice Munroe, or a Mordechai Richler in the knowledge that they are not simply good Canadian writers but that they are among the very best in the English language in the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: If one listens to music, one could name a Glenn Gould or an Angela Hewitt, again the best in the world. If one goes into a cinema, what are the two top internationally recognized movies? One came out of the Province of Quebec in this past year, Le déclin de l'empire américain, and another came out of Toronto. They are internationally recognized. If one looks at our athletes, at virtually every aspect of Canadian life, one finds that for a nation of 25 million people we do not have to boast that we are the best in the world, but I am telling you, Mr. Speaker, that we are right up there. We are second to none in our confidence and in our creative capacity.

It is precisely this generation of Canadians who are saying to the Conservatives that only a Conservative Prime Minister at this time would say that to be a confident, creative, self-assertive Canadian one has to be American. How ridiculous can they get?

We say that the Government does not have the mandate for this deal. Whether we consider energy, services, automotive parts, Crown corporations, the broad future of this wonderful nation of ours, our tradition of a mixed economy, or our particular blending of liberty and equality which is different from that of the United States, we do not need, we do not want, and we must not have this package of proposals which the Conservatives want to foist on the people of Canada. Instead of ignoring the democratic rights of our people to understand the details and implications of this deal by forcing it through and signing it on January 2, the Government should live up to its democratic obligations, recognize that it did not discuss it in 1984, has no mandate for it today, and ought to have a general election on it early in 1988.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Further to the Order made earlier this day, perhaps we could now revert to motions and recognize the Hon. Minister of State.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, as you have just suggested, the next order of business prior to Private Members' Hour is to call the motion that is presently on the Order Paper in respect of the adjournment of the House.

There have been discussions among the Parties, and I would just inquire at this time whether or not there is any disposition among my colleagues to amend the motion presently on the Order Paper immediately prior to Your Honour calling the same.

Mr. Benjamin: Amended to what?

Mr. Lewis: Then, Mr. Speaker, if there is no disposition to amend the same, I would ask—

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I fear that I did not catch the purpose of the intervention that the Minister was making; I was being disturbed by colleagues. I wonder whether he could repeat the proposition so that we all understand what he wants and what he is talking about.

Mr. Lewis: There were discussions with respect to the date of the return of the House, and I just asked the House if there was disposition to seek an amendment to the motion prior to it being put.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I am quite open to any proposal which the Government might wish to make to amend its own motion. I wonder what amendment it has in mind, but I am willing to listen to it and perhaps also to accept it.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would be perfectly prepared, as my colleague knows, to make that amendment, but not without completing consultations with the House Leader of the NDP.

It is my signal from him that there is no point in proceeding any further, so I suggest that the amendment be put, unless he wishes to make a comment at this time.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, to be very clear about it, there have been extensive discussions between the Parties. We have come to an agreement, and the agreement is reflected on the Order Paper.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

MOTION TO ADJOURN

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)) moved:

That when the House adjourns on Friday, December 18, 1987, it shall stand adjourned until eleven o'clock a.m., Monday, January 18, 1988:

Provided that;

At any time before that date, should any bill or bills be awaiting the giving of Royal Assent, the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker shall convene a meeting of the House at a time to be fixed by the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker by notifying the Chief Whip of each party, for the sole purpose of the giving of Royal Assent to any bill or bills;

Upon the completion of the giving of Royal Assent, the Speaker or Deputy Speaker shall adjourn the House until the date specified in this order;

The provisions of Standing Order 5 shall apply during the period of adjournment; and

For the purposes of Standing Order 4, the first sitting day in 1988 shall be deemed to have been January 11, 1988.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to Private Members' Hour.

INTERNATIONAL PEACE AND GOODWILL DAY

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington) moved that Bill C-238, an Act respecting international peace and goodwill, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present to this House for consideration and second reading debate an Act respecting International Peace and Goodwill Day. The purpose of this legislation is to change the name associated with December 26 from Boxing Day to International Peace and Goodwill Day in honour of Canada's commitment to world peace and goodwill among all nations and people.

This Bill is a direct result of my great concern about the world's present situation and what kind of future we are building for ourselves. The recent historic summit between Soviet Leader Gorbachev and President Reagan gives hope and optimism for moving away from the so-called policy of mutual assured destruction by which nations hold each other hostage to nuclear terror and destruction. This is only a small step forward, and it is imperative that we continue to remind the world that we have a long way to go on disarmament and relieving human suffering throughout the world. Hopefully the Government will support this proposal or at least refer the subject material to an appropriate legislative committee for further study.

There is nothing more important that we could discuss here or anywhere than the survival of the human race. I strongly believe that we are masters of our own fate. We, as Members of Parliament, representing peace loving Canadians have an opportunity to stress the importance of international peace and goodwill further by supporting this initiative. Never before in the history of the world has there been a more crucial time to demonstrate the need for peace and goodwill. We are living in a world constantly threatened by nuclear war. We are living in a world constantly threatened by conventional forces. We are collectively held hostage in fear as each new act of terrorism is committed. Acts of terrorism and the building of arms must be stopped.

Nuclear war became a very real threat to the world once the first nuclear bomb was dropped on Japan. No other country has experienced the horrible reality and aftermath of nuclear war. We have a duty to ourselves and the rest of the world to ensure that this does not happen again.

Until recently, instead of trying to stop the growth in numbers of nuclear weapons, we became obsessed with equalling our powers, not limiting them. We have lived in a world where the major global powers have been preoccupied with preparing for nuclear war, not preventing one. There are presently enough nuclear weapons in the world to kill every human being several times over. We have seen some very real and positive steps taken toward limiting the arms race. It was most heartening to see the two superpowers, President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev, come together and sign a treaty scrapping 2,000 U.S. and Soviet medium and shorter range nuclear missiles within the three year period.

Decades ago Canada chose not to acquire nuclear weapons. This was a practical contribution to the control of nuclear arms. We must as individuals continue to encourage and facilitate any meetings or discussions to further the goal of world peace, and I believe that changing the name of Boxing Day would go a long way to remind everyone of the importance of peace and goodwill. I hope there will not be excuses such as minor technical problems used as a smokescreen to discourage serious consideration of this Bill.

As a Member of this House at the time, I remember changing the name of Dominion Day to Canada Day. I suggest this would not be any more of a problem than that change. I objected to that substitution and I would like to have seen that national holiday called Dominion of Canada Day with the short title for those who wished either Dominion Day or Canada Day.

Today the whole world seems to be growing in its awareness of the terror and futility of the arms race. The United Nations continues to promote world peace at a time when all citizens of the world are becoming more and more aware of the need and urgency to seek peace and goodwill and lasting peace. We must redirect our thinking and rid ourselves of any arrogance toward this earth and each other and replace those negative attitudes with respect and love for this planet. It is our home, and we are responsible for the shape of things to come for future generations. Our citizens are crying out for world peace and, as Members of Parliament, we have a duty to seek that which our citizens want.

We are a fortunate country and have long enjoyed benefits of a peaceful and prosperous nation, living in a free and democratic society. Our history shows how often Canada has been in the forefront by helping other countries through troubled times.

We have consistently demonstrated our compassion and goodwill toward others. We can be proud of our example to the rest of the world. This is another opportunity for Canada to take the lead. Designating December 26 as International Peace and Goodwill Day will demonstrate to the rest of the world that Canada, and Canadians, are committed to the goal of world peace.

Such a change in name will not detract from any of our traditions. No one is more aware of customs than I. My strong belief in our traditions is on record as a descendant of the United Empire Loyalists who carved society out of this harsh Canadian climate. I believe that such a name change will, in fact, enhance our historical view of Boxing Day. The traditional concept of this day being one to honour and celebrate goodwill toward mankind will be expanded and enriched as we include the whole world with our goal of world peace and goodwill. Unless we recognize the imminent danger that we face, not just as Canadians, but as human beings, we run the risk of losing everything.

Our goal today should not only be to respect our traditions but to learn from our mistakes and make a positive legacy for future generations so that they will have an opportunity to enjoy and appreciate what we so often have a tendency to take for granted.

We must continue to work toward world peace if we are to have a world in which to carry on our traditions. There are many concerns, challenges and battles which face all of us on a daily basis, but without lasting peace this may be our last challenge. It is only fitting that we mark a day of peace directly following the day we celebrate the birth of the Prince of Peace. This can be a concrete reminder to us all where our hope should be placed.

In conclusion, may I again stress that the creation of International Peace and Goodwill Day will demonstrate to the world Canada's commitment to continue seeking world peace and goodwill while maintaining the principles of our traditions. I urge Members of this House once again to support this legislative proposal.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington (Mr. Vankoughnet) for bringing this Bill before the House at this time. It is very timely. I had even hoped that peace and goodwill would come to the House of Commons this week, the week before Christmas.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rompkey: It has been one of the most pugilistic and intense weeks with more packed into it, not with acrimony but certainly with liveliness, than I have seen in a long while. The motion is timely from that point of view.

• (1510)

Of course, the motion is also timely in terms of what is happening in the world. It comes on the heels of the Reagan-Gorbachev summit and the goodwill that flowed out of that. I believe that that summit conveyed optimism and hope for the future to all of us. I welcome the measure from that point of view as well.

Of course, the very season of the year suggests that this is an appropriate topic to bring forward this afternoon. However, it is worth while pointing out that Boxing Day indeed flows from Christmas Day itself.

Growing up in St. John's, Newfoundland, I can recall when we still had mail delivery. That was before the present Government got into power. As well, other things were delivered to the house. Those who burned coal had coal delivered, those who drank milk had milk delivered and so on.

On Boxing Day, boxes were put together for those who delivered and collected, for the garbageman, the milkman, the deliverer of coal and the like. It flowed out of Christmas Day and the spirit of that day was indeed that which was fundamental and essential to Christmas itself.

The meaning of Boxing Day is that it is a day on which one continues to give and on which the spirit of Christmas continues. That is the tradition in Canada. Oddly enough, I suppose, if I were to continue that line of argument, Mr. Speaker, you could tell me that I was a Conservative. However, some things are worth holding on to.

On the other hand, I see the wisdom of what the Hon. Member has proposed. I think his Bill is laudable. I wonder, though, if we need to express those feelings on Boxing Day, if we actually need to change the meaning of Boxing Day. For instance, there is the practice of Boxing Day sales. How many housewives will be inconvenienced if there is no Boxing Day? I know many people who buy their New Year's gifts, next year's Christmas cards and gift-wrapping paper on Boxing Day at Boxing Day sales. Many people would think that that tradition should continue as well. Certainly the retail community would feel that way.

I wonder if we need to express the thought expressed by the Hon. Member's motion on Boxing Day itself. Perhaps we could have Boxing Day and still express international goodwill.

I think it is very appropriate that we are discussing this today in this Chamber. Historically, Canada has expressed this feeling possibly more than most. The record of this country is one of peace-keeping. We have provided an atmosphere of compromise in which international incidents, issues and problems could be and have been resolved. I think it is appropriate that this topic come up in the Canadian House of Parliament today.

I want to support the spirit of the Hon. Member's proposal, but I wonder if we actually need to do away with Boxing Day itself in order to achieve what the Hon. Member wants. I think we should focus on it for one day and indeed every day of the year. When the preacher preaches to those who are in church on Christmas morning, he will in all likelihood say that the spirit of Christmas should not simply pertain only for that one day of the year but indeed throughout all the year. While I appreciate that, I still think it would be useful to have one day set aside for that in order to focus people on the issue. Whether the day needs to be Boxing Day is a matter that is open to question.

I congratulate the Hon. Member for bringing this measure forward today. I certainly support in principle what he is trying to do. I would conclude by offering those who are in the Chamber and those who are not all the goodwill for this Christmas season and for when we next sit again.

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment both Hon. Members who have just spoken on this Bill. I think there is very little we can find to say that would not be in favour of what the Hon. Member is proposing. The substance of the Hon. Member's Bill is good. He did mention, however, that there could be some technicalities that might make it difficult. My job is to point out several of these technicalities that would make it difficult for the Government.

Bill C-238 proposes in substance to amend the Canada Labour Code in order to change the name of Boxing Day to International Peace and Goodwill Day. However, I doubt if such a gesture would make any concrete or substantive contribution to international peace and goodwill. Should Canada alone speak for the world community? Would not this laudable effort be best directed to the United Nations?

I realize that the cause of world peace is not a trivial one. However, with all due respect to the Hon. Member for Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington (Mr. Vankoughnet), I am afraid that the proposed change is unlikely to achieve the goal it espouses. Even if by passing the Bill we would be promoting world peace, I fear the whole exercise would be beyond the scope of the Canada Labour Code. The Code deals with the rights, safety and well-being of Canadian workers, an issue distinct from the precise matter at hand.

We must also remember that not all workers are subject to the Canada Labour Code. Roughly 90 per cent of Canadian workers are regulated by provincial labour laws and none of the provincial statutes recognize Boxing Day as a paid holiday.

The federal Government and all the provinces and territories have legislation of broad application dealing with paid general holidays. However, the list of holidays and details concerning employees' rights to these holidays vary from one jurisdiction to the next.

Under the Canada Labour Code, Part III, Division 4, nine general holidays in a year are to be observed as paid holidays. These are New Year's Day, Good Friday, Victoria Day, Canada Day, Labour Day, Thanksgiving Day, Remembrance Day, Christmas Day and Boxing Day.

The Code also provides that under certain conditions, an alternative holiday may be substituted for any of the nine holidays specified. Should a holiday occur on a day on which an employee does not normally work, he or she must be granted a day off with pay in lieu of the holiday either at a time convenient to the employer and employee or by the addition of a day to the annual vacation leave.

If Christmas Day, New Year's Day, Canada Day or Remembrance Day fall on a Saturday or Sunday that is a non-working day for an employee, the employee must be given a holiday with pay on the working day immediately before or after the general holiday. These provisions regarding alternative days off do not apply, however, to employees covered by a collective agreement that entitles them to at least nine paid holidays a year.

The Code lays down the general principle that an employee in a federal undertaking who does not work on a holiday is entitled to regular pay for the day. If the employee is paid by the week or month, wages must not be reduced by reason of his or her not working on a holiday. If the employee is paid on any other basis, he or she must receive the equivalent of the regular wages for a normal working day.

The regular rate of wages for an employee whose hours of work vary from day to day or who is paid other than on an hourly or daily basis is the average of daily earnings exclusive of overtime for the 20 days worked immediately preceding the holiday. An employee in a federal undertaking required to work on a general holiday is entitled to regular wages for the day and, in addition, to time and one-half the regular rate for all time worked. In other words, the employee is paid two and a half times the usual rate.

Different provisions apply to those employed in continuous operations who are required to work on a holiday. A continuous operation is defined to include any industrial establishment in which, during a seven-day period, operations normally continue without cessation until the end of that period. For example, the operation of trains, planes, ships, trucks and other vehicles, telephone, radio, television, telegraph or other communication or broadcasting services, or any other operation normally carried on without regard to weekends or holidays. An employee who works on a holiday must be paid regular wages for the day and must, in addition, be paid one and a half times the regular rate for the time worked, or must be granted holiday with pay at some other time. This may involve either a day added to annual vacation or another day off where convenient to the employee and employer. Or, where a collective agreement so provides, the employee must be paid for the holiday on his or next non-working day. However, an employee not entitled to wages for at least 15 days during the 30 calendar days immediately preceding the holiday is entitled to one-twentieth of the wages earned during those 30 days.

There are some situations in which an employee is not entitled to holiday pay. An employee is not entitled to pay for a general holiday that occurs in his or her first 30 days of employment with an employer, but if required to work on a holiday he or she must be paid time and one-half the regular rate. If employed in a continuous operation, he or she may be paid at the regular rate for work done on a holiday.

At the provincial level, as I mentioned, none of the labour laws recognize Boxing Day as a paid holiday. Obviously, some collective agreements may provide such a holiday, and in most provinces, provincial or municipal laws oblige retail establishments to close on Boxing Day, although this does not entitle employees to a paid holiday. Therefore, the change proposed by this Bill would not only be purely symbolic, it would also affect a very small proportion of Canadian workers.

Therefore, I urge Hon. Members not to support this Bill.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great care to the comments not only of my friend, the sponsor of this Bill, but the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey). He made a statement that I know was in jest but I believe in the honest record-keeping of this august Chamber, so I would point out that it was truly a previous Government that stopped delivering the mail on Boxing Day. I think Canada Post is more interested in a different kind of boxing these days.

As my hon. colleagues are well aware, not every duty of a Member of Parliament is a pleasant one. It is with considerable reservation that I stand in this House barely a week before Christmas to oppose a Bill whose intention is to promote peace and goodwill. I hope a few months hence I will not be rising, in the second or third week of May, in order to oppose a Bill whose purpose is to promote motherhood. Therefore, at the risk of sounding like the Grinch, I must oppose this Bill. Not because I am any less interested in peace and goodwill than my hon. colleague, but because the change to the Canada Labour Code he is recommending would be nothing but a symbolic change which would make no meaningful contribution to the worthy cause he is advocating.

To begin with, the Canada Labour Code applies to a rather small proportion of the Canadian workforce, that is, employees in industries under federal labour jurisdiction. Such enterprises include interprovincial or international works such as railways, highway transport, telephone, telegraph and cable systems, pipelines, canals, ferries, tunnels, bridges, and shipping, as well as all forms of broadcasting, banking, air transport, grain elevators, and some 40 Crown corporations. Also included are industries declared by Parliament to be for the general advantage of Canada, such as uranium mining.

In addition, the occupational safety and health provisions of the Code apply to the federal Public Service, operating employees in the transportation industry, and workers involved in the exploration for and development of oil and gas in certain Canada lands. As well, the industrial relations provisions of the Code apply to all industries in Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

Generally speaking, all other enterprises fall within provincial or territorial jurisdiction. Therefore, even if we were to pass the Hon. Member's Bill, Boxing Day would become International Peace and Goodwill Day for less than 10 per cent of Canada's workforce. Furthermore, even if we were to change the name of the holiday to International Peace and Goodwill Day, does anyone in this House seriously believe that any substantial number of Canadians would drop the old, familiar and short name in favour of a new, 10-syllable name?

I recall a contest in my own City of Edmonton to find a cute name for the Edmonton Coliseum. "The Igloo" was suggested.

Various other cute names were put forward. I think several thousand entries were obtained. Of course, it was called the Edmonton Coliseum.

Let us be realistic. The only practical effect of the proposed amendments would be to create an interesting new bit of Canadian trivia. We could have this question: What is the official name of Boxing Day in the Canada Labour Code? That could take its place next to: How many Canadian provinces do not touch on salt water? As far as I can see, that would be the only practical effect of the proposed change.

In addition, this Bill seems to assume that Canadians will not mind doing away with the fine old traditional name of Boxing Day. On the contrary, I think it is a wonderful name and a great many people in this country would object to doing away with such an interesting and distinctive name which has become part of our Canadian culture.

Although Boxing Day is British in origin, our observance of the holiday and our use of the term is a trait that truly sets us apart from our friends and neighbours to the south. In fact, in light of the debate which immediately preceded this debate today, I think all of us, including those who support furiously and fervently the free trade initiative, want to preserve our Canadian culture. That goes without saying. So let us preserve Boxing Day.

It is true that many Americans have never even heard the term and are slightly shocked that we associate a season of peace and goodwill with fisticuffs. As we know, the term Boxing Day has nothing to do with the sport of boxing, although there is more than one theory as to its origin. The prevailing view is that it is the day on which Christmas boxes are given to errand boys, postmen and those entitled to gratuities. Another theory holds that the day after Christmas was the day on which poor boxes in english churches were opened and their contents distributed to the needy. According to this theory, the boxes were opened the day after Christmas because, hopefully, they had been filled to bursting the day before by generous church-goers filled with the holiday spirit. Still another theory holds that on the day after Christmas rich homes would pack leftovers from their Yuletide celebration into boxes and distribute them to the poor so they could enjoy their own modest feast. Finally, Sir, there is the modern wag who advanced the theory that the term derives from the practice of everyone boxing the gifts they received in order to return them to the stores.

Whichever of the serious theories we accept, it is obvious that Boxing Day is based on concepts of charity and concern for others. Indeed, it is interesting to note that even today in Canada Boxing Day is often the time when people show their concern for others by participating in blood donor clinics. On the other hand, symbolic changes such as this Bill proposes can often be worse than ineffectual. They can give the false impression that something of substance has been done for world peace.

I know that the Hon. Member who sponsored this Bill labours mightily for world peace. It is his top priority. So what I am saying today I say with some hesitation and reservation. It is easy to pay lip service to the cause of peace. It is quite another thing to address the ingrained problems of oppression, injustice, inequality, and human suffering that deny humanity that elusive goal.

We know that Canada is at the forefront of international peace efforts and especially involved in the role played by the International Labour Organization. The ILO is the oldest United Nations agency. Created in 1919 under the Treaty of Versailles, the organization pursues the objective of promoting lasting peace through the reduction of poverty and the improvement of working conditions throughout the world.

In line with the preamble of its constitution, which proclaims that universal and lasting peace can only be established if it is based on social justice, the ILO's main activity since its establishment has been the adoption of conventions, which are subject to ratification, and recommendations, which provide guidance on the formulation of national policies, legislation, and practices.

Over the years the ILO has adopted more than 160 conventions and 170 recommendations which together form the International Labour Code. These conventions and recommendations cover many subjects including basic human rights—such as freedom of association, equal pay, and the elimination of discrimination in employment—labour administration, industrial relations, employment policy, social security, and occupational safety and health. Once adopted by the conference, ILO conventions can be ratified by member states.

Each member state is required to bring the conventions and recommendations adopted by the conference to the attention of its national legislative authorities. When a country ratifies an ILO convention it undertakes to comply with the provisions of that convention and to report regularly to the ILO on the measures taken to that end.

Canada's relationship with the ILO goes back to the very beginning. Indeed, Canada was among the 45 founding countries of the organization in 1919 and has been a strong supporter of the ILO's objectives and programs ever since. An interesting historical footnote is that when the ILO headquarters in Geneva was believed to be threatened during World War II, Canada invited the organization to move temporarily to McGill University in Montreal where it remained from 1940 to 1948. I know you, Mr. Speaker, remember that very well.

Throughout the history of the ILO Canadians representing governments, workers, and employers have actively participated in ILO activities. In many instances, Canadians have been elected to the organization's highest offices.

In 1966 and again in 1986 Canada hosted the regional conference of American states which are members of the ILO. This conference meets every five or six years to address issues of common concern to the countries in the region which consists of North and South America and the Caribbean.

Canada's financial contribution to the ILO, which is the eighth largest of any member state, is in the order of $5 million annually, which represents approximately 3 per cent of the organization's budget.

It is through efforts such as these, rather than symbolic changes, that Canada can work for world peace and goodwill. In summary, when the Hon. Member introduced the motion before the House today, he acknowledged that Boxing Day follows the birthday of the Prince of Peace. I submit that it would be fundamental and indeed most fitting to do everything in our power to remember the Prince of Peace on December 25 and to extend goodwill to all. Therefore, I ask Hon. Members not to support Bill C-238.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is fitting that on the day Parliament rises for the Christmas break we have a discussion on designating December 26 as International Peace and Goodwill Day.

This raises a number of questions for me. For many years in this House I have listened to my good friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), make many speeches to the effect, I suppose, of setting aside every day for international peace and goodwill.

I am not questioning the intentions of the Hon. Member who submitted this idea, but to set aside one day of the year to focus our attention on international peace and goodwill would be to miss a real opportunity. I think Canadians all believe that Canada has a unique role to play in international peace and goodwill.

Canada is seen by many nations as being a non-aggressor, a nation with no imperialistic tendencies. We have been known for some years for our international peace-keeping forces, for much good works in development, and for playing a role in international peace conferences and promoting the peace movement internationally as well as at home. I would much rather have the Government propose to target every day for international peace and goodwill and take a number of steps toward achieving the goals implicit in that designation.

We just witnessed the signing of a major treaty between the two superpowers, which was a major step toward arms reduction. Yet, the Government continues its policy of testing the cruise missile. It is very clear that we must now take steps to remove ourselves from the testing of this deadly first-strike weapon.

As a matter of fact, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) made the commitment to the people of Canada that once the treaty was signed and a step toward arms reduction took place Canada would extract itself from this testing program. Of course, such has not been the case.

The Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam has, on a number of occasions, urged the Secretary of State for External Affairs to ensure that Canada take a much more significant role in encouraging the peace process in Central America. On many occasions she has urged the Minister to make contact with the United States administration and encourage them to back off in their support for dictatorial regimes in Nicaragua and other regions of the world. Other than lip service, we have not seen very much.

Suggestions were made, again by the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam, that the Government now take a leadership role in encouraging the superpowers to continue the process of arms reduction. Again, such has not been the case.

It is, therefore, with some frustration that I speak to this private Member's Bill. I respect the motive of the Hon. Member in wanting to designate December 26 as International Peace and Goodwill Day rather than Boxing Day. I applaud and support the general intention. However, I would much rather see the Hon. Member take the initiative to urge the Government which he represents to take meaningful steps toward international peace and goodwill. I have mentioned only three initiatives which could be taken. There are many others.

I appreciate the motive of the hon. back-bencher of the Government, but it would be much more appropriate to expand this concept to ensure that Canada plays a major leadership role in moving the world toward more peace and goodwill, especially in terms of the reduction of the arms buildup.

Therefore, my feelings are rather mixed. I support the intention, but I do not believe that if we set aside December 26 as International Peace and Goodwill Day we will have made a major step forward. I believe that would tend to divert attention from the real and meaningful initiatives which the Government of Canada should be taking with regard to international peace and goodwill.

• (1540)

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in this debate on Bill C-238, an Act respecting International Peace and Goodwill Day. As you know, the Bill was first read on December 1, 1986, just over a year ago. As other Members have said, it is also very appropriate that we should be reviewing this Bill at this time of Christmas and the spirit of peace and goodwill toward all.

There are three important comments in the preamble of the Bill which I want to review. The first states:

> Whereas the people of Canada endorse the objective of world peace;

I think we all agree with that. The second states:

> Whereas they seek earnestly to achieve this end;

I think the record of Canada has been exemplary around the world in this respect. Third, it states:

> And whereas they seek to set an example of their commitment to the nations of the world;

Again, Canada's example has been unquestionable.

The Bill itself deals with changing the name of a national holiday, which is a very serious matter and one which I believe deserves very solemn and strong consideration by Members of the House.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox—Addington (Mr. Vankoughnet), is to be commended for his initiative in introducing this matter, because the pursuit of peace, whether it is the formal recognition of a day in Canada, through discussions in this House, through efforts at conferences or through Canada's middle power role with the superpowers, is something that we can and should never lose sight of.

However, let us consider the holiday which this Bill seeks to change, Boxing Day, December 26. As is observed in the useful book High Days and Holidays in Canada:

> The day is almost a continuation of Christmas, for the customs associated with it are practically the same. Boxing Day, the name given by the English to the day after Christmas, is a bank holiday with them. On that day, Christmas 'boxes' are given to errand boys, postmen and those who are entitled to gratuities . . .

This pleasant holiday observance has been embraced by Canada in name, certainly, although I dare say the spreading of "tributes" to errand boys, postmen and, in our context, newspaper boys and girls, laneway shovellers and so on, is done in advance of Christmas rather than the day after.

My colleague from Newfoundland referred to the days when the milkmen used to deliver milk to the house. I remember my mother and father giving them an extra gift at Christmas. While we always forgot to give something to the horse, the milkmen certainly received a gift. These days, we normally give gifts to service people who help us throughout the course of the year before Christmas.

However, the traditions of Boxing Day in the other sense have stayed. It is a day of rest and relaxation, of spending time with our families and associating with the joys of Christmas. It is a day that we spend visiting our relatives and counting our blessings. Usually it is also a day of rest and recuperation from the pressures and stress often associated with the preparation for Christmas Day. Our grandparents, mothers and fathers, aunts and uncles and godmothers can all testify to the tremendous efforts that go into preparing for Christmas Day.

We must consider whether this is the appropriate atmosphere for Canadians to spend a day paying honour and tribute to international peace and goodwill. Perhaps we should rethink the matter somewhat.

As I said a moment ago, one can hardly be opposed to the notion that international peace and goodwill are worthy subjects for being honoured, perhaps even with a national holiday. However, when one is in the overindulged, post-Christmas Day, when we are full of food and fun, I question whether it would be appropriate to pick that day as the internationial day for peace and goodwill.

As my colleague, the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) said, we should not downplay the importance of pursuing peace and goodwill, not just on one day, but on every day. I think of the strife we see throughout the world today with the problems in Lebanon in the Middle East, the conflict in Northern Ireland, the Gulf war between Iran and Iraq, where hundreds of thousands have died. There is conflict between Sikhs and Hindus in the Punjab. There is the conflict between the Tamils and Sinhalese in Sri Lanka. There is tremendous strife in Central America. I visited Africa recently, where I saw the strife in Zimbabwe, Angola, and Mozambique. There is tremendous strife in the Republic of South Africa.

I think of what we saw in South Korea yesterday and today. There is political strife in Afghanistan between the people and the Soviet military. We saw tremendous conflict in Haiti. One need not look very far to see examples in the world where there is no peace.

Let us focus on the more serious issues for a moment. International peace has long been of major concern to Canada, and our commitment to peace as well as our tolerant attitudes toward all peoples hold true today. Canadians are particularly fortunate to live in what has been called "a peaceable kingdom". There have been no real wars on our soil in more than a century and a half, nor has there ever been a war of Canadian origin or for a Canadian cause.

Canadian leaders infinitely prefer to make treaties rather than to take up arms. Indeed, right at the beginning of our nationhood, when the Provinces of Canada were united in a Confederation in 1867, the legal document making it official promised Canadian citizens "peace, order and good government". I am reminded of my own Christmas message which I sent to my constituents yesterday when I talked about the peace, order and good government we have in our country.

Occasionally we may have a political skirmish, as we saw today in the House dealing with the free trade agreement, but that is how we settle our disputes. We do it in this chamber, not with bayonets and bullets in the streets of our towns and villages.

None of them would question the fact that there is peace and order in this land. Canada has proven its attachment to world peace and its concern for human rights. Our constant support to the efforts of the United Nations, our decision to create a special fund for disarmament and our condemnation of human rights violations in South Africa, Latin America and many other regions in the world are tangible proof of our will to promote a climate of equality for all human beings.

I would remind Hon. Members that in our observance of Remembrance Day we pay our respects to those who have made possible international peace, or as much of it as we can enjoy these days. On Remembrance Day we pay tribute to those who made the supreme sacrifice, and those who served their country as members of the Armed Forces in the two World Wars as well as in the several peace-keeping actions in which Canada has been engaged for the United Nations. In that sense, every day, not just Remembrance Day or Christmas Day, should be a day for us to remember in the pursuit of international peace and goodwill.

Some years ago there was a movement to initiate a national holiday that would recognize Heritage Day. Frankly, I think that this proposition is a very reasonable one. Perhaps I might share a couple of Mr. Pierre Berton's thoughts on the matter when he spoke of the importance of creating what might be known as Heritage Day. In a Heritage Canada publication Mr. Burton suggests, " . . . if we are to have a holiday—and I believe it is inevitable—surely we ought to use it as a tool to mark some aspect of our nationality and culture. Our major summer holiday, July 1, celebrates our political past. What is needed now, in February, is a day on which we can celebrate our non-political past. That day clearly is Heritage Day, which falls on the third Monday in February—an ideal time for such a holiday".

We all recognize the importance of creating a special moment during the year to pursue peace. Personally, I do not think that Boxing Day is the best day to do that. We have had tremendous traditions that that is a day that comes just after Christmas. But in that spirit I wish to say to you, Sir, to all Members in the House, and to our constituents, a very Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few remarks on this Bill. I certainly appreciate the spirit with which it was brought forward by my hon. colleague.

Boxing Day has been traditional all through my life, perhaps because I come from a background with English parents. Boxing Day is often celebrated in Canada as strongly as it is in Britain, because of our ties with that country.

The idea of a holiday or the designation of a day for peace and goodwill is something that we should all take very seriously. International peace and goodwill is something that Canadians have worked for over the years, and certainly nowhere more fervently than at the United Nations. The time that I have spent down there in the last two to three years has brought to me even more of an awareness of how important is international peace.

As was mentioned by a previous speaker, we are very lucky in Canada because we have not had a war on our shores for many years. The part of the country that I come from is actually the battleground of the War of 1812. In the farm on which we live we have breastworks that were left from the original battle of the War of 1812. As we till the land, we still turn up musket balls, arrowheads, and pieces of pottery from settlements that took place during that war.

International Peace is very important to Canadians. It is something that we must always have in mind, and something that we must work towards not only on our own shores but also on distant shores. Canada's role in peacekeeping operations around the world is one that we can be very proud of, and certainly one that is envied by many other countries. I have received comments from people working in peacekeeping forces around the world who speak with a great deal of pride for Canadians, not only for their talents and expertise in keeping the peace, but for their dedication and the amount of effort that we put forward in the United Nations where we are seen as a leader.

In the crucial arms reduction talks that have been taking place, Canada's motion at the United Nations and the resolution that it brought forward on the verification of peacekeeping treaties and the arms reduction treaties set a precedent. It was one that had been worked on for years, and it was finally the Canadians who were able to bring the resolution and receive unanimous consent. International peace and goodwill should be honoured and respected not only in Canada but around the world.

For that reason, it is difficult to talk against the Bill, because I believe in the spirit of it and the spirit with which it was brought forward. However, my reluctance is that I am not sure that Boxing Day should be the day that is changed to represent this particular title.

Canadians should not need a day entitled International Peace and Goodwill Day to remind them that this is something to which that we are committed. The theme of international peace and goodwill is something that should be on the minds of Canadians every day. I do not think that it is necessary to have a holiday set aside with that title.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) stated that Remembrance Day is something that was recognized as a holiday some years ago. I can remember when I was a child in school that November 11 was always a day that we had off for remembrance. Now that has changed. It has changed because the remembrance of the fallen heroes, and the reason for November 11 is something that is celebrated within the schools. It is an opportunity to teach children the need for remembrance of what those veterans did for us.

This year on November 11, instead of having a service at the cenotaph in my home town of Grimsby, the whole service was held within the public school. All the children attended. The stage within the auditorium was set up as a cenotaph, covered with artificial grass, with a replica of the monument. The entire proceedings took place within the auditorium of the school. That hour of remembrance was an education period for the children, those who had never seen war, and hopefully never will, or hear about it, or read about it. Certainly it brought to them the need to remember the fallen soldiers and the dedication given by the veterans from this country, and their families who stayed at home and suffered the loss of those who were overseas.

It is important that we teach our young people, not through giving them a holiday to celebrate something but through teaching them within the classrooms and with the spirit of example that we show as adults, the need for international peace and goodwill. Our young people will gain more and will have more respect for the term international peace and goodwill through learning and through example of the dedication that we give to those particular words, as opposed to having a holiday where they can go out and forget. Usually when it is a holiday, young people go out and enjoy themselves. They don't always remember what the holiday stands for, rather they remember the time that is available to them.

I would sooner see a day set aside entitled International Peace and Goodwill Day, and that that day be dedicated through the school system across this country to a total day of education on what international peace and goodwill means, so that it is not only at Christmastime that we think of goodwill towards men, but we think about it all year round, with a day set aside for instruction within the schools as to the meaning of international peace and goodwill, and one that brings in not only the teachers but also perhaps the people from the United Nations. The United Nations Committee has people across the country who I know would be very willing to get involved in this. There are people within our own Armed Forces and the Department of National Defence who would be available to go out and speak to the children and show them why international peace and goodwill is so important.

This type of educational program and also stressing the meaning of international peace is so much more important than taking a day and setting it aside as a holiday. When people go out and have a holiday, they do not really think about the name of the day or the importance of that day. For that reason, Boxing Day is not necessarily the appropriate day to change to International Peace and Goodwill Day.

RAILWAY SAFETY ACT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-105, an act to ensure the safe operation of railways and to amend certain other acts in consequence thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, it is my honour and, indeed, a pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of western Canadians who indicate that the Conservative Government has really no mandate from the people of Canada to conclude a trade deal with the United States.

The petitioners believe that the proposed trade deal would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future, and would undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States. Since they also believe that the trade deal denies Canadians secure access to the United States market, which was the key objective of all of these negotiations, they are asking that Parliament dissolve now and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ALLOW ELDERLY WORKERS FULL UI BENEFITS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table a number of petitions from people from all parts of Quebec who are asking the Government to withdraw the so-called Bouchard Bill aimed at older workers—mainly workers in our shipyards—who have lost their jobs and as a result of this Bill will be penalized because they will not be able to draw unemployment insurance benefits. The petitioners are asking the Government to amend the Bill and allow older workers to draw their full unemployment insurance benefits.

[English]

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the Standing Orders, I have a petition signed by a number of residents of Spadina and other districts in Toronto who point out that the trade deal between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States threatens the sovereignty of Canada, that the Prime Minister has no mandate to negotiate it, and that it will also reduce Canada's ability to plan our economic, social and cultural programs and would integrate us further into the North American defence industrial base.

Therefore, the undersigned ask Parliament to ensure that a national debate take place on the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal and that this debate should result in a national general election before such an agreement is signed.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and responsibility to present a petition to Parliament signed by Canadians from Willowdale, Toronto, Montreal, Pierrefonds, Westmount, Laval, New Westminster, Coquitlam, Abbotsford, Richmond, Delta, Surrey and Langley, all in British Columbia, and Sudbury and Garson in Ontario.

This petition points out that the Conservative Government had no mandate whatsoever from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States and, furthermore, the trade agreement negotiated by the Mulroney Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control effectively foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians or to equalize opportunities between the regions. Furthermore, this proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States of America.

Therefore, these petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve now and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

• (1110)

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, according to the procedures, I have the responsibility to register with you a petition that has been signed by citizens of Canada from Toronto, Markham, Scarborough, Etobicoke, Ottawa and Brandon.

All of these people are asking that, because the Mulroney Government has no mandate to negotiate a free trade deal with the United States, and because the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal would reduce Canada's ability to plan the economic, social and cultural programs Canadians need, and because the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal would integrate Canada further into the North American defence industrial base, Parliament ensure that a national debate take place on the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal and that this debate result in a national General Election before such an agreement is signed.

DPW—RENTAL SPACE

Question No. 116—Mr. Fontaine:

1. Does the Department of Public Works put at the disposal of third parties, on a temporary basis, space rented by or belonging to the Department?

2. In 1984, were any government capital assets unused and, if so (a) what is a complete list (b) in each case, what was the (i) description (ii) owners' names?

3. In 1984, was space unused due to lack of decision or budget and, if so, what space?

4. In 1984, did the Department rent space unused by the public service or Crown corporations and, if so (a) to whom (b) what were the terms?

5. Between 1980 and 1984, did the Department buy land and, if so (a) from whom (b) for what intended use (c) what is the current use?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): In so far as Public Works Canada is concerned:

1. The Department leases space, which is not required for government occupancy or which is used to support government occupancy, e.g. cafeterias and canteens, to third parties on a temporary basis or on a fixed term basis.

2. In April 1984, the Department had on inventory 655,725 square metres of space in 592 buildings and 1,304,289 square metres of land, situated in 75 parcels, which were unoccupied. (See table below). The Department has an inventory of 255,413 square metres of space and 1,403,317 square metres of vacant land. See table below for a regional comparison.

3. Of the April, 1984, unoccupied inventory, 253,232 square metres of space located in 38 buildings and 855,936 square metres of land in 18 parcels were under study or pending decisions.

4. The Department let space and land, which was not required for government occupancy, to 539 third parties. The quantities were 184,720 square metres of space and 1,466,445 square metres of land. (See table below). To this day, the space let to third parties is 182,158 square metres of space and 1,174,823 square metres of land. See table for data comparison.

5. Between 1980 and 1984, the Department acquired interests in 1,246 parcels of land.

2. The above are annual grants which are included in the DND Main Estimates and are paid for the following purposes:

(a) Royal Canadian Naval Association and the Naval Officers' Association—to promote and maintain interest in military affairs generally and particularly in the welfare and development of the Naval Forces.

(b) Military Studies—to develop a domestic competence and national interest in military and strategic issues of current and future relevance to Canada's national security.

(c) Royal Canadian Military Institute—to provide the means of maintaining contact with the civilian population and retired service officers to encourage the promotion of military science and disseminate to the public accurate and current information on military affairs.

(d) Ontario Rifle Association—to promote the skill of small arms usage as a contribution to the defence of Canada.

(e) The Canadian Institute of Strategic Studies—to encourage an understanding of strategic issues, Canada's role and position in the world within both the Canadian public and the government.

PERMITS UNDER EXPORT CONTROL LIST

Question No. 220—Mr. Riis:

Between January 1 and November 1, 1987, did the government authorize permits for the export of goods falling under Section 7 (military goods) of the Export Control List for (a) Chile (b) Honduras (c) El Salvador (d) Guatemala (e) Colombia (f) Angola (g) Mozambique (h) Sri Lanka (i) Indonesia (j) Pakistan (k) South Korea (l) Taiwan (m) Philippines (n) Syria (o) Iraq (p) Iran (q) Jordan (r) Saudi Arabia (s) Kuwait (t) Lebanon (u) Turkey and, if so, what was the total value of such permits in each case?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The chart below summarizes by country the number and total value of the permits for Group 7 products, (military goods) issued to the specified countries between January 1, 1987 and November 1, 1987. It should be noted that the values indicated are for authorized exports; values for actual exports may be considerably less.

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Question No. 224—Mr. Caccia:

1. In 1987, what studies have been conducted to assess potential impacts on the environment resulting from free trade negotiations?

2. Are studies (a) being conducted to assess potential environmental impacts of the trade agreement reached on October 4, 1987 (b) going to be conducted before such agreement is ratified?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): The Free Trade Agreement is a commercial accord between the world's two largest trading partners. It is not an environmental agreement. The environment was not, therefore, a subject for negotiation nor are environmental matters included in the text of the agreement. Our capability to deal with environmental issues at the national and international levels is unaffected by the FTA as our recently announced federal water policy makes clear. In the appropriate way and in the appropriate forums Canada will continue to pursue with vigour the objectives of its environmental policies.

On the broader question of international trade and the environment, the GATT has ruled that the environmental policies of a national government cannot be construed as an impediment to trade. Canada has long supported the GATT and will continue to do so.

MARIJUANA

Question No. 225—Mr. Howie:

For 1986 and 1987, to date, were any studies conducted by the Department of National Health and Welfare related to marijuana and, if so, how many and, in each case, at what cost?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): There have been no specific studies of marijuana use for 1986 and 1987 to date. Some questions on marijuana were incorporated as part of a larger survey entitled "A Summary Report on Tobacco, Alcohol and Marijuana Use and Norms Among Young People in Canada—Year 4", which was prepared for Health Services and Promotion Branch by the Canadian Gallup Poll Limited in March, 1986. The total cost of this survey was $230,000.

A copy of the report is available from the Health Services and Promotion Branch—Department of National Health and Welfare—Ottawa, Ontario.

RESEARCH INTO TOBACCO

Question No. 227—Mr. Howie:

1. Is the Department of Agriculture currently conducting any in-house research into tobacco and, if so, (a) at what research stations (b) involving approximately how many person years?

2. In the past year, has the Department contracted out any such research?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture):

1. Yes (a) Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island (b) 1 person-year
L'Assomption, Quebec 6 person-years
Delhi, Ontario 25 person-years total = 32 person-years

2. No.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Mr. Hawkes: I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary just answered several questions. There are 23 other questions which are begging to be answered by the Government and the 45 days required for that have expired. I wonder, in the spirit of the new year, if the Parliamentary Secretary could give me the undertaking that he will incite, encourage and possibly promote the answering of these questions so that we may get satisfactory responses.

By the way, I have a vested interest in this. I have a question on the Order Paper which I would love to have answered because I want to act on it quickly.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I did some investigation into the situation over the recent break. I am sure the Hon. Member would agree that the speed with which this Government answers questions is at least 20 per cent faster than the previous Government. However, I take his concern about the 23 questions into account and will see what we can do.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary that there is still a question dated November 24 standing in my name which has not been answered. Whether or not the Government is quicker than any preceding Government is not the point. The rules of the House have changed and there is now a specific requirement under the Standing Orders which did not previously exist, a requirement which was adopted unanimously by the House, providing that Order Paper Questions be answered in 45 days when so requested by an Hon. Member. Question No. 228 is in fact a question requiring a 45-day response.

In view of the fact that November 24 and the subsequent 45 days have long elapsed, I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary to look into Question No. 228 particularly. The question involves the expenditure of funds in relation to the Petro-Canada jet to transport someone from the United States to Canada.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to hear the Hon. Member. I think he was wise to point out that we have had parliamentary reform; this Government led the way on parliamentary reform. That is one of the reasons questions are being answered so much more frequently and quickly. We spent many years in Opposition being stonewalled by previous Governments and it is really a pleasure to have the Hon. Member point out to the House that we have moved so much further ahead.

However, I will look specifically into Question No. 228. There may indeed be some kind of a problem of which I am not aware, but we will attempt to find out in the spirit with which we are moving forward on parliamentary reform.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if Question No. 133 could be made an Order for Return, the return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that Question No. 133 be deemed to have been made an Order for Return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, ATLANTIC CANADA, 1987

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (for Mr. Mulroney) moved that Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure and privilege to have the opportunity to speak in introducing this Bill at second reading. It is most appropriate that the House should resume its session today for the calendar year 1988 with this legislation which is designed to give a great upward boost and momentum to the cause of overcoming regional disparities in Atlantic Canada.

The Bill was introduced just before Christmas. It was forecast in the Speech from the Throne, and I will refer to that in a few moments. I might point out that it was in 1969 that the former Department of Regional Economic Expansion was established and over the past 20 or 25 years we have seen a variety of programs and expenditures aimed at reducing regional disparities in Canada.

I think it must be said that the Government that was here before us and previous Governments over the last 20 or 25 years have endorsed the principles of overcoming regional disparity and of trying to develop all regions of Canada. In fact, I do not know of any other nation in the world where so much emphasis is put on regional development and on attempting to overcome regional disparities.

In any event, the old DREE was established in 1969. In the early 1970s, there were the beginnings of general development agreements with subagreements for specific purposes. Spending was shared between the federal and provincial Governments, the higher proportion coming from the Government of Canada. Two of the principal industrial incentive programs of the Government of Canada have been the Regional Development Incentives Act and under that Act the Industrial and Regional Development Program.

It should be pointed out, to put it in the proper context, that federal regional development spending under GDAs, ERDAs and under the RDIA and IRDP programs did slacken off, I think would perhaps be the right term, over recent years until 1984-85. For example, there was very little growth in federal government spending in the Atlantic provinces on these major development programs in 1984-85 as compared to 1976-77. In 1984-85, spending under those programs in the Atlantic region was only 10 per cent higher than it was in 1976-77 while spending in Canada as a whole was 77 per cent higher.

The early 1980s was a period of retrenchment on the part of the Government of Canada and that is shown by the fact that spending in the Atlantic region for those programs in 1981-82 was only 3 per cent higher than it was in 1976-77 despite the inflation that had occurred in the intervening period. In addition, the proportion of the Canadian total going to the Atlantic region had declined dramatically during that period.

There has been some improvement in spending under these programs in Atlantic Canada from 1984-85 to the present time, but quite clearly, apart all together from the need for increased spending, it is quite clear that there is a need for changes in approach as well. That is what the present legislation is designed to do.

We all know, at least those of us who are objective, rational and honest in our approach, that there has been considerable improvement in the economic environment in Atlantic Canada under the administration of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Some 1,118,000 jobs were created under this Government's policies in effect since September, 1984. In relative terms, jobs have been created in Canada at a faster rate than in any other major OECD nation. Of those, 81,000 were created in Atlantic Canada. That is some improvement but not nearly enough. It is a very considerable improvement, of course, over the record of our Liberal predecessors.

Employment has risen and the unemployment rate has fallen in every Atlantic province, indeed in every province, during this period. In Atlantic Canada total unemployment fell by 30,000 from September, 1984, to the present, compared to an increase of 68,000 under the last Liberal Government of former Prime Minister Trudeau. That is a significant improvement but of course not enough. In September of 1984, when the Mulroney Government took office, unemployment in Atlantic Canada was 17 per cent. By October of 1987, just over three years later, it had fallen to 13.2 per cent; still a significant figure but a decrease of almost 4 per cent.

The number of Atlantic Canada families living below the poverty line decreased during the same period from 16.4 per cent in 1984 to 15.8 per cent in 1986; a small decrease, but nevertheless a decrease. The number of single people in Atlantic Canada living below the poverty line decreased by almost 10 per cent, from 48 per cent in 1984 to 38.6 per cent in 1986. The free trade agreement will of course further reduce the number of Atlantic Canadians living below the poverty line because it will increase the number of jobs, increase real incomes, and reduce consumer prices. This is particularly appropriate for Atlantic Canada because it has for 100 years been seeking ways to improve the terms of trade with our partners to the south. The region is achieving that at last under the leadership of the Prime Minister.

As I said, there has been a considerable improvement in the economic environment in Atlantic Canada since the last election, but of course this is not enough. We are not satisfied with it. The Prime Minister is not satisfied with it. Our Atlantic Ministers are not satisfied with it. It has not been enough and more needs to be done. That is why the present legislation is before us.

On October 1, 1986, in the Speech from the Throne, the Government promised a bold new approach to regional development. That is encompassed in this Bill. The Speech from the Throne said this:

> It is time to consider new approaches, to examine how our considerable and growing support for Canada's regions can be used more efficiently, more effectively and with greater sensitivity to local conditions and opportunities.

That is one of the main features of the approach in this legislation, greater sensitivity to local conditions and opportunities. It went on to say that we are convinced:

> —many positive proposals for new policy initiatives will come from those who live and work in the regions concerned.

That is a central principle of this legislation. The speech went on to say:

> As a first step in achieving improved results from this sustained national approach, an Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will be constituted to facilitate and co-ordinate all federal development initiatives in the area. This agency will make full use of the expertise available in the Atlantic region and invite the maximum participation of other Governments and organizations in the area.

That is what the Speech from the Throne in 1986 said and that is what the legislation now before the House does. Mr. McPhail and Senator Murray have put in place the machinery to carry out these pledges in a Speech from the Throne which was one of the most momentous in Canadian history to date. Under it, a whole series of very important policies have been adopted and implemented by the Government, including the free trade agreement, the Meech Lake constitutional Accord, the new approach to defence, child care, and other policies of which we will hear a great deal during the next few months.

The Prime Minister promised to consult with Atlantic Canadians in establishing the new regional development agency promised in the Speech from the Throne. The result is the ACOA which will be operated by and for Atlantic Canadians. It has been devised by Atlantic Canadians. It has not been imposed upon them from someone here in Ottawa, such as a former mayor now in this House or someone who doubtless believes that they understand everything that happens in Canada because they happen to live in the national capital and scoot off somewhere in the region of Ontario to get elected to this Parliament and tell us how the world works outside Ottawa. They of course think that the world is Ottawa. There is a great world out there that is not Ottawa or Ontario. The result, of course, of our approach, which is different—

Mr. Rompkey: Or St. John's.

Mr. Crosbie: There is life beyond the overpass.

Mr. Rompkey: Right.

Mr. Tobin: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: That is proven by the fact that last Monday in Gander, I helped celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the great Gander airport. There was a rapprochement between myself and the people of Gander.

Mr. Tobin: As the bubbly flowed.

Mr. Crosbie: Following the Speech from the Throne the consultation promised by the Prime Minister was put in place. Mr. Donald Savoie was appointed to consult extensively with representatives from all sectors in Atlantic Canada. He is an expert on and very familiar with regional development and he reported to the Government in May of 1987 as to what the approach should be.

I might mention at this stage that Dalton Camp, a well-known Atlantic Canadian from New Brunswick—

Mr. Tobin: Advisor to Richard Hatfield.

Mr. Crosbie: —is now serving his country in the Privy Council Office, and any man prepared to go in the Privy Council Office has to be dedicated indeed. He had a great deal to do with this, as well as the six Atlantic Ministers. My colleagues, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay), both from Nova Scotia, the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew), from New Brunswick, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt), from New Brunswick, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), from Prince Edward Island, and myself, your humble servant, worked on the legislation, its planning and administration, now before the House for which we are seeking approval.

After Mr. Savoie's report was received, steps were taken very quickly to implement it. On June 6, the Prime Minister announced the creation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency at St. John's. He came to St. John's, met the four Atlantic Premiers and others, and announced the new agency there. He said at that time that Senator Lowell Murray, who of course is another Atlantic Canadian and very familiar with the region, would be the Minister responsible for ACOA, and that I would represent him in that respect in the House of Commons. He went on to say that Senator Murray would consult with the Atlantic provincial Governments and private sector representatives as ACOA was set up. At about that time the Prime Minister announced that Mr. Donald McPhail, who was then our Ambassador in Germany, would be the President, I believe, of the agency and that the head office of the agency would be in Moncton, New Brunswick, a city about which we have heard much in the last several years and to which the Government has given much attention.

Mr. Robichaud: You will be hearing more.

Mr. Crosbie: You will be hearing a great deal more about Moncton because the Government has done a great deal for New Brunswick including paying a great deal of attention to the City of Moncton and the City of Saint John which was in the news just before Christmas when it received a tremendous contract for the construction of six frigates for the Canadian Navy. Those frigates would never be constructed if the NDP was in power because of its "no defence" policy.

Mr. Tobin: We didn't have the Russians to bring the parts for us.

Mr. Crosbie: Apparently the hon. gentleman does not believe in glasnost. When the hon. gentleman needs some parts he will not worry about where they come from. I can suggest one part he needs now up above the nose.

Mr. Tobin: Not one of your better lines, John.

Mr. Crosbie: On August 31 Senator Murray announced the composition of a 19-member ACOA board, an advisory board with members from each of the Atlantic provinces. This is to ensure input by representative Atlantic business persons into all aspects of the operation of the agency. The purpose of the board is to advise, guide and encourage. On September 3 the board had its first meeting in Moncton. There are four Newfoundland representatives with whom I am, of course, fully familiar. Fred Russell has done an excellent job on the Atlantic Enterprise Board and is a very experienced and capable Newfoundland businessman. He is experienced in the fish processing business, the automobile business, and the shipping business. He is very experienced in employer-labour relations in Newfoundland. Mr. Ed Drover is a dynamic life insurance representative, a fine Newfoundlander from Upper Island Cove.

Mr. Tobin: Prominent Tory fundraiser.

Mr. Crosbie: I do not know what his politics are, Mr. Speaker. I would not have inquired into that. I do not think the hon. gentleman would know what the politics of Barbara Knight are because she happens to be a civil servant.

Mr. Tobin: In Newfoundland? A prominent Tory.

Mr. Crosbie: I don't think she has any partisan politics at all. Finally, Mr. Ian Strachan, who I believe ran at one time for the Liberal Party, but the hon. gentleman is not going to mention that.

Mr. Rompkey: But then so did you, John.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Ian Strachan is from Goose Bay. I think if we examine the composition of this board we will see that there are representatives from all Parties except, I believe, the New Democratic Party. I do not believe there are any supporters of the New Democratic Party on the board of this agency, but there might well be, because we do not investigate these matters.

Mr. Tobin: Who are the Liberals, John?

Mr. Crosbie: I cannot guarantee that there are any NDP representatives on the board, but there may well be. We could not care less if they are good, sound people. Of course, it is hard to find good, sound NDP people in the area who might be available for this. They are all here in the House.

In addition to the consultation that I have mentioned so far, as a follow-up to that process, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is at this time having an intensive round of consultations with business and community leaders in 20 centres in Atlantic Canada. This process has been very successful. I will refer later to an editorial from the Atlantic Chamber Journal and the APCC President's Report by Jeanne Geldart wherein she points out how successful that process has been. There has never before been as much consultation in the setting up of any government agency.

When this phase ends in the next several weeks, 400 to 500 Atlantic Canadians from the private sector, our educational communities, and labour groups in Atlantic Canada will have had a chance to contribute to the policy and program design options for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. This is an unprecedented opportunity for groups outside of government to involve themselves in the design of the programs and the agency itself.

We have consulted with and listened to Atlantic Canadians in establishing this agency. The reaction so far has been good. We know that the agency is only starting. We will have to look back in four or five years to see whether it has been more successful than the previous approaches to overcoming regional disparity in Atlantic Canada.

I want to refer to a Saint John, New Brunswick editorial. I quote from The Citizen. The editorial discusses previous attempts at regional development under our Liberal predecessors and then goes on to say the following:

> With this track record, it's understandable why some people are greeting ACOA with a certain amount of apprehension.

I have said before that the Liberal Party is interested in overcoming regional disparity and did make efforts to do that, with mixed results. The editorial continues:

> But the make up of this new agency gives us good reason to have hope for the future . . . . The agency is hungry for ideas, Atlantic Canadian ideas, that can help improve the employment situation and general economic atmosphere in the region . . . .

That editorial is dated October 13, 1987.

The Evening Times- Globe of Saint John, New Brunswick, had the following to say on November 12:

> The federal government, in giving ACOA a clean slate with which to work, has also given it a corporate status that keeps it out of the clutches of the Ottawa bureaucratic establishment's red tape.

That is a true and essential characteristic of this agency as well. Its head office is in Moncton and its other offices are in the four provincial capitals. In Ottawa there is only a liaison office which has an advocacy role.

Mr. Robichaud: Where are the decisions being made?

Mr. Crosbie: The decisions are being made in Atlantic Canada. There must be representatives in Ottawa to keep the Ministers advised, to play the advocacy role that is so important, and to help co-ordinate.

Just because the Liberal approach did not work and needed improvement I hope the hon. gentleman will not take a negative approach to this legislation. We are looking for unanimity. I am hoping to have the support of the Official Opposition at least. The New Democratic Party has no record in this area but the Liberal Party has and I hope we will have its support for the principles of the legislation now before the House.

The agency is regionally based. The headquarters is in Atlantic Canada. I want to make the point that the success of the agency will depend on Atlantic Canadians. It will depend on initiatives from the area. Success will depend on the entrepreneurs of Atlantic Canada, on the proposals they put forward, on the amount of get-up-and-go there is in Atlantic Canada. The backing and support for them is here but it is up to them to initiate the enterprises or expand enterprises so that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency can assist.

As was stated in the Saint John newspaper editorial that I referred to "the ball has been placed squarely in Atlantic Canada's court and we now have to run with it. We must show the rest of Canada that we possess more than down-home rural charm". That quote from The Citizen of October 13 puts it in a nutshell. That is the way I see it. Through this legislation, through the money being provided, and through the flexibility which is being given, we are putting the ball in the court of Atlantic Canada and it is Atlantic Canadians who must run with it. We have to show the rest of Canada that we possess more than a down-home rural charm, and that we have the get-up and go. We have the ability in Atlantic Canada, given the necessary assistance to succeed.

• (1140)

The agency has been given responsibility for all regional development programs that relate to the Atlantic region. These include the Atlantic Enterprise Program, which is another Mulroney Government initiative.

An Hon. Member: A great success.

Mr. Crosbie: The Atlantic Enterprise Program has been a great success and a great help in Atlantic Canada, with interest rate reduction and other programs introduced by that policy.

The agency will also take over the Industrial Regional Development Program, Enterprise Cape Breton and ERDA's.

Mr. Tobin: The IRDP is being phased out.

Mr. Crosbie: IRDP phased out or not, it is still a program to be administered and will be administered for Atlantic Canada by Senator Murray.

Along with those programs comes the money to administer them. The present level of expenditures under those programs amounts to approximately $196 million—

Mr. Tobin: Annually.

Mr. Crosbie: —annually, which is a considerable increase over the regional development spending in Atlantic Canada by the last Liberal government. As I described earlier in my remarks, unfortunately their spending had not increased greatly over the 1960s. The spending on these programs for the present fiscal year will be approximately $196 million. The average spending under ERDAs and GDAs by the last Liberal administration in the last three years of their mandate from 1981-82 to 1983-84 amounted to $146 million for these purposes. The average expenditure under ERDA's and GDAs by the present Government during the last three years amounts to $198.5 million, an increase of approximately 35 per cent.

Mr. Rompkey: But the same agreements.

Mr. Crosbie: Spending has increased 35 per cent in the system of ERDA agreements and GDAs under this Government. Those are simply the facts. The Prime Minister, and certainly we Atlantic Ministers, were not satisfied with an increase in spending of 35 per cent. That is why we have committed an additional $1.05 billion over the next five years. We have already increased the spending that existed when the Liberals were in office in 1984-85 by 35 per cent. We are not satisfied with a 10 per cent, 20 per cent or 35 per cent increase. We have stated that we will continue spending on these programs or similar programs and will add to that level another $1.05 billion over the next five years. Our commitment is for an additional $200 million yearly for five years, which is an increase of twice the spending in this Government's effort to overcome regional disparity in Atlantic Canada. My hon. friends opposite may have some criticism, but I know they will support this program.

Let me refer to the Bill. The purpose is stated in Clause 4, which is:

> To increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada and, more particularly, to enhance the growth of earned incomes and employment opportunities in that region.

That is what we want for the region. We want an increase in earned income, not a transfer in income.

The object of the Bill is described in Clause 12, which states:

Government Organization Act, Atlantic Canada, 1987

> The object of the Agency is to support and promote opportunity for economic development of Atlantic Canada, with particular emphasis on small and medium-sized enterprises, through policy, program and project development and implementation and through advocacy of the interests of Atlantic Canada in national economic policy, program and project development and implementation.

Clause 4 and Clause 12 describe the purpose and object of the Bill, with particular emphasis on small and medium-sized enterprises. That is the purpose of the agency, not to spend $1 billion on general infrastructure in Atlantic Canada. This money will not be used for those purposes, which are the purposes of the present regional development spending under current ERDA and other agreements.

This money will not be used for the sewerage out of Halifax Harbour or Saint John's Harbour. That is not its purpose.

Mr. Rodriguez: What is happening to ERDAs?

Mr. Crosbie: ERDAs will continue at the rate of spending now in effect. The other $200 million a year will help small and medium-sized business create jobs and increase earned incomes throughout Atlantic Canada. That is its purpose, not to pave streets, build roads and so on, as will continue to be done under ERDA type agreements.

In addition, the agency will have an advocacy role. It will be empowered to formulate plans to support economic development in Atlantic Canada in consort with all other federal departments. No federal department will be able to operate in Atlantic Canada without input from this agency. The agency will ensure that any initiative of the federal Government in Atlantic Canada is harnessed to the goal of increasing opportunities for economic development in Atlantic Canada.

As one person said, it is like having a friend fighting for us in Ottawa. In addition to Atlantic Canada Members and Atlantic Canada Ministers, this agency will have the object of fighting for Atlantic Canadians in Ottawa. This never happened before.

An Hon. Member: I thought that was your job.

Mr. Rodriguez: You will be redundant.

Mr. Crosbie: It would be a tremendous accomplishment if we became redundant.

Mr. Rodriguez: You will be very soon.

Mr. Crosbie: I would sooner be redundant than a complete reactionary, like the Hon. Member and his Party. They are against any change in Canada. I suppose they will be against this Bill because it is a change. They are against free trade because that is a change, and against freedom to move because that is a change. Has Shirley Carr given her permission for you to support this little change?

This agency will also have a co-ordinating role. The Minister is given unprecedented authority to co-ordinate all policies and programs of the Government of Canada in relation to opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada. This provision is contained in Clause 5(2) of the legislation.

Clause 9 provides for another unprecedented power. It gives the Minister the unique authority to transfer, conditionally or unconditionally, funds from ACOA to supplement the funds of another Minister for a project that the Minister of ACOA is satisfied will further the objectives of this legislation. If another minister has a project that is very helpful to Atlantic Canada, the Minister responsible for ACOA can decide to supplement the funding there. He will have the right under Clause 7 to designate areas within Atlantic Canada for specific periods of time. He will select those areas because they provide exceptional opportunities for economic development. This gives the Minister real flexibility so that he can designate as such, an area that has an exceptional opportunity for economic development. That is in addition to his present authority to create special areas under the special areas legislation. If the Minister must create a designated area or a special area in Atlantic Canada, he can do so.

Clause 8 provides another new power. It gives the Minister the right to acquire stock options and to exercise rights under those options in connection with any loan guarantee, or credit insurance, grant or contribution.

• (1150)

The Minister is also empowered to enter into federal-provincial agreements with the provinces of Atlantic Canada subject to approval by the Governor in Council. In that respect he will have the same powers the Minister of DRIE had with respect to ERDA subsidiary agreements.

This is another illustration of the Prime Minister's policy of building a stronger Canada based on co-operative federal-provincial relations. This is not talking about co-operative federalism, as did the last Government under former Prime Minister Trudeau, and then imposing the iron-shod heel on the provinces. No, this is not talking abut co-operative federalism on the one hand and doing the exact opposite on the other hand, what I used to call "jackboot" democracy. Do Hon. Members remember when we had jackboot democracy in this country? My God, if one disagreed with the Liberal administration it put the boots right to you, jack and all. Well, we do not have that any longer. We have co-operative federal-provincial relations.

This will enable federal and provincial governments to work together on priority initiatives to give opportunities for economic development. Its success will in part depend on the provincial governments and their co-operation as well. The Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) will remember that sometimes it is not all that easy to get co-operation from provincial governments. Perhaps he will enlighten us on that when he speaks.

Mr. Rompkey: You have had a more recent experience, John.

Mr. Crosbie: I mentioned that the key feature of the agency is the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Board consisting of 18 members plus the president. It has been operational for four months. It has had four meetings. It is greatly assisting the agency in performing its duties. It has recommended a number of initiatives which include the Centre for Fisheries Innovations in St. John's, Newfoundland, the New Brunswick Research Productivity Council Revitalization Program, the Atlantic Canada Supply or Development Program, the Office Automation Centre Program, for starters. Its next meeting will be January 26 in Halifax, the great metropolitan centre of Atlantic Canada. That will be its fifth meeting.

It is a coincidence that the Atlantic Ministers meet frequently with Senator Murray. We had a meeting this morning which I had to leave, of course, to come here and introduce the Bill. The six Atlantic Ministers will be meeting with Senator Murray on a regular basis in order to assist this process and ensure that Atlantic Canada takes a central role, which is of tremendous importance in the thinking of the Government and Government structure here in Ottawa.

In Part II of the Bill there is the establishment of the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation. The corporation will carry on the mandate of the industrial development division of DEVCO. Its objectives are mainly the same as those of the industrial development division under the Cape Breton Development Act. The transfer of the industrial development role and responsibilities to Enterprise Cape Breton will not diminish at all the current level of development assistance and service at Cape Breton or St. John's. It is interesting to see the successful turn in Cape Breton and the atmosphere of greater hope and greater positive prospects. DEVCO will retain a clear commercial mandate to continue the coal mining operations of DEVCO.

Since June of 1987, when the Prime Minister made his announcement in St. John's, Newfoundland, the ACOA has been busy getting itself set up. It has taken over the processes for applications under existing regional development programs such as the Atlantic Enterprise Program. These processes are now being greatly streamlined. You will not believe this, Mr. Speaker, because you are used to how things were done in the past under the former Liberal administration and how much time it took, but 90 per cent of all applications can now be processed at the provincial ACOA offices. They do not have to come to Ottawa at all. Ninety per cent of Atlantic Enterprise Program applications, for example, can be dealt with by Gordon Slade and his people at the office in St. John's or at the offices in Charlottetown, Halifax or Moncton. There has been tremendous streamlining. In the seven and a half months since the agency was established, it has approved 451 applications and has authorized $68 million in contributions to Atlantic enterprises, and it is only getting started under these present regional development programs.

These activities have resulted in creating 1,704 jobs and enabled 2,648 additional jobs to be maintained. Once this legislation is passed, hopefully, through the House of Commons and the Senate during January and February, it is not unreasonable, I think, to hope or expect that this process could be completed by the middle of February and then the agency will be in a position to start with its own new programs and to really get them in gear.

The suggestion has been made that the free trade agreement might threaten regional development. I think the obvious non sequitur relationship of that is easily seen by the fact that this legislation is now before the House of Commons. There is nothing in the free trade arrangement—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Minister but his time has expired. Do we have unanimous consent for the Hon. Minister to continue for a few more minutes?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crosbie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will try to finish up in two or three minutes.

As I was saying, there is nothing in the Canada-U.S. free trade arrangements which threatens regional development. The Prime Minister wrote to Premier Buchanan on December 30. I would like to put on the record what he said, as follows:

> When these negotiations with the U.S. began, I wanted to ensure that our ability to promote regional development policies was preserved. We have done that. I can assure you further that we will continue to maintain our capacity for regional development programs in the course of negotiations intended to develop a new North American regime on trade remedy rules. In short, the federal Government remains fully committed to programs and measures which will deal effectively with regional disparities.

Let me reaffirm here today the Prime Minister's commitment on behalf of the Government of Canada.

I have one further reference I would like to make. Gerald Regan, the former Minister of International Trade in the Government of Mr. Trudeau and former Liberal Premier of Nova Scotia, said last December when discussing free trade and regional development:

> What a bilateral trade deal does is provide us with a chance to create new opportunities rather than just be affected, one way or another, by forces beyond our control—

I want to congratulate Mr. Regan for taking the stand he has. It is never easy to disagree with ones own party—I have been through that—but he has to do it in this case because he feels deeply about Atlantic Canada and about the Canada-U.S. free trade arrangement. He is to be congratulated for having the courage to express those views publicly. I am not surprised by it because I have known Gerry Regan for many years and he struck me as just that kind of person.

Trying to summarize, in conclusion let me say that it is my privilege to assist my colleague, Senator Murray, with this Bill in the House and to speak on the benefits we expect to flow to Atlantic Canadians by the creation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and, of course, by the fruition of the free trade agreement, if it comes to fruition during the balance of 1988. It is very interesting to note the remarks of Jeanne Geldart, who is the new president of the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce, in its recent issue, in which she pointed out that the chamber had been criticized for propagating negative thinking about ACOA before the agency had been given a chance. She acknowledges that this is a possible criticism, but takes a different attitude and view with respect to the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. She said that they were more concerned about perceived failures of earlier regional development programs. In her remarks she pointed out that many business people would like to give the agency a chance, and to fully engage in helping the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency in being a success, which they hope that it will be, by taking a more positive approach to the suggestions. She points out how in recent years skepticism has become extremely fashionable and that negativism—

Mr. Tobin: Who said this?

Mr. Crosbie: Jeanne Geldart, the President of the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of commerce. She points out that there was much skepticism and negativism, probably caused by the fact that Governments before us did not always do what they said they would do in contradistinction to the record of this Government.

In ending her editorial comment she pointed out that if we are to overcome the problems of regional economic disparity and create a new partnership for our Atlantic Provinces in Confederation, the business community must first believe that it is able to do so. That is very true. It must also take a positive attitude, which Madam Geldart says it will be taking toward this agency.

We all know that there will be no miracles. We also believe that this will be much better machinery and a much better organization with much greater powers to assist in overcoming regional disparity in Atlantic Canada. All of this is embodied in the legislation before us. We also believe that we have excellent people to administer and carry this out.

Finally, I note that Mr. John O'Day, who was President of the St. John's Board of Trade last year, feels that this agency will have a very positive impact. He is looking forward to working closely with it. I can assure Hon. Members that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is looking forward to working closely with all interested Atlantic Canadians, those who are interested in more economic opportunities in Atlantic Canada and greater earned income for Atlantic Canadians. I feel sure that this Bill is a step toward a more prosperous future for Atlantic Canada.

I am looking forward to listening to the comments of Hon. Members opposite. Before I sit down I would like to explain that I have to leave at 12.30 p.m. because of a Bill I introduced earlier today dealing with railway safety on which we have to have a session with the press. I will be following the debate very closely to see what Hon. Members opposite have to suggest and to see what their comments will be in connection with any improvements they think might be made to the Bill. The Bill will be going to a legislative committee as well and to the Senate.

I would like to say a word of praise for the Prime Minister whose initiative this has been. He has been very much interested in regional development and in assisting Atlantic Canada. He has not lost sight of that despite the many other great national objectives and national triumphs he has had in the last six months, including the Meech Lake Accord and the U.S.-Canada free trade arrangement. He has not forgotten the need for doing something special for Atlantic Canada. He was born in Baie-Comeau which is in part of this area that needs regional assistance. I believe he was educated in New Brunswick, certainly in Cape Breton. Thus he is well aware of our circumstances in Atlantic Canada. He first ran in the riding of the present Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) in Nova Scotia—

Mr. Rodriguez: And then he promptly ran away!

Mr. Crosbie: No, he did not run away. There is not one other Member in the House who would do what the Prime Minister did—

Mr. Althouse: You are right about that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, Hear!

Mr. Crosbie: He left what to all purposes was a safe seat politically and went to run in Manicouagan where in the last election the Liberals won by about 2,500,000 votes! He moved from a safe district to an unsafe district and led us to a great victory. There is not another Member in the House who would risk that, certainly not the mighty mouths who are here today trying to howl down the Prime Minister after this wonderful record that I have outlined for them today.

I would like to congratulate the Prime Minister who has not forgotten us in Atlantic Canada. This will be his great monument in Atlantic Canada, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. I am delighted to serve with him. I hope that before nine or ten months have gone by we will settle this matter of who will form the Government of Canada for the next succeeding four or five years so that progress and policies such as this can continue to go forward for the help of all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to come back to Parliament and to see the Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) leading off for the Government. A little bit of humour sets a better tone as we return after the Christmas break.

I could not help but reflect as I listened to the Minister's speech that it was like some kind of an election speech. Here was the Minister of Transport, after three years of being in government, reflecting on the record of the previous Government and finding it necessary to read to Members of Parliament, and all Canadians, a little bit of biographical data about the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). He is a man who is supposedly in touch, with his finger on the pulse of the people of Canada.

The Minister started off by saying that this Bill is designed to give a great upward boost to Atlantic Canada. He might have been more to the point if he had said that this Bill was designed to give a great upward goose to Atlantic Canada. In essence, this Bill is nothing but smoke and mirrors. It is nothing but an attempt to get a bigger bang, more publicity, out of a smaller regional development buck.

The facts are straightforward. Over the three years that the Government has been in power regional development spending has decreased by over 30 per cent. Regional development spending has decreased by $3 billion in the three years that the Government has been in power. That is the reality.

What does that leave us? It leaves us with a Government, in the face of an ever shrinking commitment to regional development spending, inventing new names and giving higher local profiles to new agencies in an attempt to give a greater emphasis to a shrinking commitment and a shrinking regional development dollar in Atlantic Canada to the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. In western Canada there is a Western Initiatives Program. Both these programs are designed to cover up, to camouflage, the fact that the Government has reduced both in spirit and in financial terms its commitment to combat regional disparity and to seek as a target some minimal level of services no matter where one lives.

The Minister of Transport, who is a former Minister of Justice, a year or a year and a half ago stood in the House to say that he wanted to bring in a Bill, if he could obtain the consent of the provinces, to do away with the Senate, that unelected chamber that has no role in a modern democracy. I found it passing strange to see that self-same former Minister of Justice stand in his place today as the Minister of Transport acting as an apologist for the real power and the real Minister responsible for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, Senator Lowell Murray. This same Minister who wanted to abolish the Senate because it was fundamentally undemocratic and fundamentally non-representative has now been relegated to the role of a mouthpiece and an apologist for the Senator who has the real power, to the extent that there is any, for development in Atlantic Canada.

Canadians should be asking themselves why it is that of the 17 to 20 Members elected from Atlantic Canada and the half a dozen Ministers elected from Atlantic Canada in the Conservative Party, not one of those Members of Parliament enjoys enough of the Prime Minister's confidence to be named the Minister responsible for the Atlantic Opportunities Agency. Having reviewed the resumes of every single Conservative Member from Atlantic Canada, starting with the Minister of Transport, why did the Prime Minister of Canada find it necessary to go to the Senate and pick a Senator to be the Minister responsible for running the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency? Is it because the Minister of Transport and his colleagues in the Cabinet from Atlantic Canada lack the confidence, the bravado, and the desire to pilot this agency through with legislation and into new programs, or was it because he wanted to put the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency out of the reach of parliamentarians and off into another chamber because this agency is so good, dynamic, and fantastic and it will make such a difference to Atlantic Canada that the Prime Minister in his wisdom did not want it to have a chance to be show-cased in the House of Commons?

It is an extreme contradiction in terms. On the one hand there is this view expressed by the Minister of Transport, the mouthpiece for Senator Lowell Murray, that this is a great upward boost—I call it the "great upward goose"—something the Government wants to brag about. But on the other hand the authority for the agency is vested not in the House of Commons, not with an elected Member from Atlantic Canada, but with a Senator in the other place named for another region of this country. That very fact alone should have people in Atlantic Canada wondering about the new Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

This agency was first announced in the Speech from the Throne in October of 1986, a year and a half ago. It was subsequently reannounced during the by-election which sent my friend from St. John's East to Parliament, with all of the accompanying extravaganza. We did not receive the first inkling of a piece of legislation for this new agency until the very last day the House sat before the Christmas break. That is the high profile and the importance that the Government attaches to this new agency. A year and a half after he announced it, the Minister, on behalf of his boss, Senator Murray, has finally stated in the House that he would like to introduce legislation.

What happened in the intervening 18 months? I hold in my hand a thick sheaf of press releases issued by the Minister of Transport's boss, Senator Lowell Murray, on behalf of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. Every one of them begins with the words, "Senator Lowell Murray", or in some cases, "the Minister of Transport on behalf of Senator Lowell Murray," announced today such and such a program. There are all kinds of them. This Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency has obviously been busy.

When one goes through the announcements, one discovers that every single program announced has funding that comes out of existing federal government programs and existing grants that have nothing to do with the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. Lo and behold, when ACOA is examined under a microscope, rather than from the dramatic distance of the Minister of Transport's words, it is discovered that not one single penny, not a red cent, has been spent by the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency since its announcement 18 months ago, and since its official kick-off in June of last year by the Prime Minister in the middle of a by-election in St. John's, Newfoundland.

Not one penny has been expended. Yet today we hear the Minister of Transport telling us that we ought to be pleased because, unlike previous programs, 90 per cent of the applications can be rapidly expedited, faster than was ever done before. The Minister of Transport knows that not one single application has been expedited, and not one single penny has been spent by the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency since it was announced 18 months ago. Let us get the facts straight before we allow the Minister of Transport to get carried away with his message, perhaps to carry away some of the people of Atlantic Canada as well.

The true measure of how autonomous, relevant, and independent minded this new board will be that runs the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is perhaps best measured by what has happened in the City of Moncton. In the City of Moncton the closure of the CN Shops has already cost some 850 jobs. Those jobs are permanently lost. This is in the self-same city that is the headquarters for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

How did the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and the appropriate Ministers respond to this great loss of jobs in the City of Moncton? I can tell you how they did not respond, Mr. Speaker. A few days ago CN put out another press release announcing that the remaining 350 employees at the CN yards in Moncton will be receiving notices of their jobs being lost in the near future. I am told that as of September 30 the CN Shops will be closed. The answer to the first 850 jobs being lost is to wipe out 350 more. That is right in the backyard of the headquarters of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. This latest announcement and death blow for Moncton comes despite the fact that the Minister of Transport and his predecessor, the gentleman who is currently the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mazankowski), both assured the people of Moncton that the Government of Canada was going to find a solution to the dramatic loss of jobs in the City of Moncton. Neither the Minister's predecessor nor the Minister have delivered on the solemn commitment given in the House, repeatedly and in particular in answer to questions from my colleague, the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud).

There will be a board of 16 or 18 members. If one listened carefully, at least to the names read out and put on the public record by the Minister of Transport of board members from Newfoundland, three of whom are well known Conservative fund raisers and Party supporters, and in the last month one of whom had a front page exposé on his Tory Party connections and was proud to talk about them in the Sunday Express. When I listened to those three or four names of prominent, hard core Conservative fund raisers, and if I assumed from that list of names that in the other Atlantic Provinces people were drawn for similar reasons, then one has to ask—and this is very important—to what extent will this board be an independent semi-autonomous agency that functions independent of thought and action of the governing Party of the day?

How can Atlantic Canadians be issued the challenge of the Minister of Transport that "Ottawa cannot solve your problems, you must solve your own problems; you come with the solutions and we may or may not come with the money", when the board that has been set up to expedite that process is made up of intimate friends of the Party in power today and Conservative fund raisers? How can anyone be expected to believe that this board will operate independently, notwithstanding the views of the Minister of Transport and his colleagues from Atlantic Canada, and notwithstanding the views of the boss of the Minister of Transport, Senator Lowell Murray?

It seems to me that, as I stated, we have been given the golden goose, not a golden boost. It does not lay golden eggs. On the one hand we have been told to solve our own problems, and on the other hand our so-called independent voice has been stacked with friends of the Government who will take their instructions from the Government. That is the reality; there is no independent voice.

Why is that important and such a major point in this debate today? I will tell you why, Mr. Speaker. Over the last two or three years, and I humbly submit particularly in Atlantic Canada, there has grown a degree of cynicism about the so-called objective means through which individuals and businesses receive grants from government, the likes of which we have never seen. There has been a proliferation of new lobby companies, a proliferation of people who will represent you to the Government and you pay if you get what you ask for. One of the better known companies is GCI, Government Consultants International and this week's Report On Business Magazine has a huge article on it. The company is headed up by former Conservative Premier Frank Moores.

Why is it important that all of the board members on ACOA are Conservatives? The article points out that this new lobby company, set up by former Conservative Frank Moores of Newfoundland, a good colleague and friend of the Minister of Transport, has established a new system to lobby on behalf of clients. It is called a pay if you win system. If you are looking for a fishing license you hire GCI, give it a flat retainer—or lobster licences in recent days—of $25,000 and if, miraculously, you get your licence—I am told there is a pretty good batting average—you continue to pay $5,000 a month for three years. This is all outlined in the Report on Business Magazine.

On the one hand we have an agency with a so-called billion dollars in new funds. It is not new funds and I will come to that. We have a so-called independent board made up of the most blue-backed dyed-in-the wool Conservatives the Government could find and we have a new system in place in Ottawa, a new ethic, pay if you win, pay as you go and hire GCI former Conservative Premier Frank Moores and Mr. Doucet, another well known name around these places. That is the new Ottawa, Mr. Speaker.

So what do we have here? GCI is acting for Petro-Canada, a Crown corporation. GCI is acting for Canadian National, another Crown corporation. Is GCI acting for ACOA? This is the same GCI which charged Mr. Snarby $2,000 for a licence plus a $500 a month retainer after he was turned down by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Siddon) and by all of the bureaucrats in Ottawa. Having been turned down, and on appeal at every level rejected again, miraculously Mr. Snarby got a licence that formerly he could not get. Is that the way ACOA is going to do business?

Mr. Crosbie: What about Francis Fox?

Mr. Tobin: Or Mr. Fox. It does not matter. This kind of lobbying is unacceptable and this kind of development in Ottawa under the Government is unacceptable to all the people of Canada no matter who is employed and who is involved. You can name whatever names you want.

Mr. Crosbie: You are not too convincing.

Mr. Tobin: This is the same company that just recently helped a Nova Scotia company get lobster licences. It was on the national news, rejected by the Premier of Nova Scotia, the Minister of Fisheries of Nova Scotia, the opposition leaders of Nova Scotia and the fishermen of Nova Scotia. This is the same company that helped the same Halifax company get a licence. GCI took on the assignment for an initial fee of $10,000 but told the client that if it got the licence it would have to cough up an additional $25,000 a year for four years. GCI denied that and said it was charging $25,000 a year for three years, not four years. It said "We have been misrepresented". So a public relations firm for a fee of $85,000 arranges lobster licences for a so-called free market—some free market—and a free enterprise firm—some free enterprise firm—in Nova Scotia.

This so-called billion dollar agency is established with a board of directors no more independent of the Minister of Transport than the Minister who tags along at his side. The board of directors is made up of appointments not named by agencies and groups in the region. The Atlantic Chamber of Commerce was not asked to name somebody; nor was the Development Association Movement of Newfoundland and nor were the various agencies for development in Atlantic Canada. The Government polled to find out who were the staunchest Tories in the land and named them to the board. The Government is telling us that the board is to be autonomous.

As I said, in the Prime Minister's Ottawa, we are paying for contracts and licences as a way of life. Frankly, it terrifies me that that kind of board has been named which will have access to such amounts of money, and responding to the wishes of the Minister of Transport or his boss in the Senate, Senator Murray. They are part of an administration in which paying for access and paying for the right decisions has become commonplace. It should never be commonplace.

The Minister of Transport in announcing this Bill today talks about decentralization as if it were a wonderful new thing. The Minister knows that in 1982 a system of federal development co-ordinators was established in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Robichaud: The Minister is leaving.

Mr. Tobin: He has to go to his press conference to launch another, no doubt, great initiative.

Federal development co-ordinators were named in 1982. Each of these co-ordinators were tasked with the responsibility of co-ordinating the efforts of all federal line departments in each of the provinces. There was one for each of the Atlantic provinces. That led to a much decentralized decision-making process.

ACOA is expanding that process. One could almost argue that it is moving away from decentralization to some extent because now there is a head office in Moncton whereas before each province had a federal development co-ordinator officer who reported directly to Ottawa. One did not have to go through Moncton or any other regional office, but directly to the Minister in Ottawa. We have the same system except now we have another layer of bureaucracy so that there is no direct line of communication between New Brunswick's federal co-ordinating officer and Ottawa. New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, P.E.I. and Newfoundland must all go through the Atlantic regional office. I do not know whether one can call that further decentralization. I suspect in reality it may to some extent be the opposite.

The Government says there will be a billion dollars or a little more than a billion dollars in funding over five years, $200 million a year for the entire Atlantic region. If you break it down that way it does not sound as intimidating, but there are many of us who question this notion that it is new funding over five years. I noted earlier today during the Minister's speech, and he did not disagree, that IRDP will be phased out in June of this year. I do not need to tell you, Mr. Speaker, because of your extreme sensitivity and great awareness of all the regions of Canada the importance of IRDP and the role it has played in Atlantic Canada and elsewhere in the country. That program which the Minister said is being transferred to ACOA will be phased out in June. As part of the reorganization of DRIE, no doubt other programs—this one has been confirmed—are on the block to be phased out.

How can the Government in good conscience on the one hand claim in excess of $1 billion in new money, moneys over and above what would have been spent in any case, when in the next breath the Minister in this House admits that IRDP, among others—is being phased out. There is no indication yet where the moneys that would have been spent under IRDP are going or whether there will be a replacement program.

What is occurring is a consolidation of the DRIE, a consolidation of existing programs and elimination of some of those programs, and as those programs are eliminated the funds will be used to pay for new programs under ACOA. It is not new money; it is not a new initiative. It is certainly not $1 billion in new money.

The Minister chose during the course of his remarks to talk about free trade and regional development. The Minister will know that in the weeks leading up to the issuing of the final text of the free trade agreement, I and many other members of my Party, in the House and elsewhere, have categorically, repeatedly, day after day put the question to the Prime Minister. We asked him if there would be language in the final text which would specifically exempt regional development programs from U.S. trade law. That question, clearly, simply and without preamble, was put repeatedly to the Prime Minister of Canada.

While a direct answer to that question was very carefully never given, as I know from reviewing the transcripts, the Prime Minister or whoever else was answering in his absence always left the impression that there was nothing to be concerned about, that regional development would be covered and not to worry about it. I challenge any Hon. Member of the House to read the final text of the free trade agreement and to show me where there is a written exemption from U.S. trade law for regional development programs, because no such wording or exemption exists.

In the face of the lack of an exemption and of previous rulings made by the U.S. Commerce Department, Atlantic Canadians are correct to be concerned about free trade and regional development. That is why the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce, during committee hearings in Atlantic Canada, refused to endorse free trade. It refused to endorse it because of the uncertainty that existed at that stage over whether or not an exemption would exist.

I invite Hon. Members to read the softwood lumber ruling of last year made by the U.S. Department of Commerce. They will find within that ruling made by the U.S. Department of Commerce an almost categorical and complete list of all the regional development programs in this country that are countervailable and subject to U.S. trade law. We all know that one of the clauses in the free trade agreement provides that all existing rulings made by the Department of Commerce or the U.S. courts on trade action stand.

Given that the softwood lumber decision stands, given that almost all of our regional development programs are listed as being countervailable, and given that there is no exemption for regional development programs in the final text, how can the Minister of Transport rise in his place and tell us today that we ought not be concerned about the future of regional development programs?

That brings me to my last point. We are told, though it is difficult to know, that the Government has designed the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency to respond to the private sector, period. There is nothing wrong with designing a program to respond to the private sector, providing that there are complementary programs to continue the work of building up the infrastructure and the public sector at the same time.

To clear away the smoke and mirrors so that the people may understand what is happening, basically what is happening is that the Government of Canada has said that it is out of the business of infrastructure in Atlantic Canada. It is no longer interested in that. Whether it is highways, wharves and harbour development, water and sewer, educational facilities, post-secondary and primary or otherwise, or any of those kinds of programs or infrastructures, the basic underpinnings of the ability of any region to be competitive, the Government of Canada is out of the business. The Government will tailor this program and these funds primarily to respond to the private sector, period.

If a person lives in a part of Atlantic Canada in which the basic infrastructure is not up to national standards and is looking to ACOA to solve the problem or to assist in that problem, forget it. If a person lives in Halifax, Moncton, Saint John, St. John's or Charlottetown where there is basic industrial infrastructure in place, then that person can apply. It might be wise for that person to call GCI so that it would represent him, but he can apply. However, those who live in parts of Atlantic Canada which do not even have basic decent highway systems, where every summer the choice is between running the fish plant or having a bath at night because there is not enough water for both, where the school system is dilapidated and falling down around their ears, and there are far too many places like that in Atlantic Canada, then ACOA is not for them. It is not their agency. ACOA is a closed door.

No conscientious Member from Atlantic Canada, recognizing that continued reality of Atlantic Canada, a reality of which we are not proud and not happy, can accept that this is the primary development initiative of the Government of Canada. We cannot accept that the philosophy that those who have nothing will get nothing and those who have infrastructure may hire GCI and might get a grant is the philosophy of winners and losers, and that those who happen to be the losers in a losing region are told: "Tough luck, buddy, move to Toronto". No, I cannot accept that kind of philosophy.

When DREE was established in 1969, exactly the opposite prevailed as the raison d'être for establishing a department focused entirely on regional development. The philosophy was not that we ought to pour money into the region for a 10-week cycle but that we ought to recognize that before we can cultivate and build an entrepreneurial spirit in the private sector we must first put in place the underpinnings, the infrastructure necessary to be on an equal footing and to be competitive in the Canadian or the Atlantic market-place.

A lot of progress was made. The Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) and I represent a part of Newfoundland where only in the last 10 to 15 years, and really only in the last five or six years, a highway covering an area of 500 miles of coastline has been completed. Just 15 or 20 years ago the highway was a cow path. The best bet to get up the coast was by boat. There has not been a paved road up the northern peninsula for all that long. We are just now in the process—

Mr. Johnson: Only since the PC Government got in.

Mr. Tobin: The Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception (Mr. Johnson) knows what I am saying. The road was finished before the PC Government got elected.

What are the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador and I doing now? We are now trying to get basic infrastructure like water and sewer into these communities to allow industrial and secondary development in the fishery. However, the ACOA program is not interested in that kind of development.

We endorse the basic principle of more autonomy and more decisions being taken in the region. However, we only endorse it when it is real, when the board has a mandate to be autonomous and not merely an echo sounding-board for Tory thought in Ottawa. We endorse the principle of targeting a region to try to come to grips with regional development programs, but not when the Government walks away from the responsibility, objectives and aims of developing the infrastructure of the region.

We look forward to seeing this Bill brought to committee. Indeed, we look forward to giving the many agencies and groups in Atlantic Canada which are not represented on this board and were not even invited to participate on it an opportunity to have their say about the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. Before this process is finished, we shall be proposing amendments to ensure that this agency, if it is to be established, functions as an agency that works on behalf of the people of Atlantic Canada on the initiative of Atlantic Canada and not as an agency that functions as a pre-election ploy on the part of the Conservative Government of Canada which finds itself in desperate need of raising its profile in the Atlantic region.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) speaking on behalf of the Senate on this issue. I have also listened with great interest to my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), speaking on the same issue. I am pleased to have an opportunity to put to the House my views on what is probably the most important economic issue for Canada from now until the end of this century; that is, the issue of regional development. That is not just my view or that of my Party, it is also the view expressed by the Economic Council of Canada in its report released September 30, 1987. That Council looked at the next five years and said that the national economy is likely to expand steadily in coming years but uneven regional growth will be the country's major economic problem.

• (1240)

In dealing with that issue we do not require a Government response which is either a hoax or an attempt to baffle and confuse the people of Canada, particularly Atlantic Canada, into thinking it has done something where others have failed. I will repeat the figures quoted by the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe with respect to the Government's reduction in the amount of money spent on regional development in Atlantic Canada. Over the last three years it amounted to a reduction of $1 billion per year. The Government has replaced that with what it calls $1 billion, but it is actually $200 million a year. That tells the people of Canada how important the Government thinks the most serious economic problem in Canada is. The former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion was criticized for cutting $3 billion from regional development funding since 1984. It was also pointed out that the share of regional development dollars did not flow to the east or to the west as one might expect, but into central Canada.

The Minister of Transport quoted from the Throne Speech. That speech also said that spending more money by itself has not solved the problem. How hypocritical can the Government get? It takes $3 billion from regional development funding and then lectures Canadians on how spending money by itself will not solve the problem. I can tell you for sure that removing $3 billion from regional development will certainly not solve the problem. Giving back $200 million a year over five years is not going to solve the problem.

Since Confederation, I suppose, we have had certain regional disparities. Given the elaborate attention paid to the idea of regional development by previous Governments we would expect to see these disparities narrow. Yet that has not happened. In fact, the disparity in the unemployment rate between Ontario, where it is the lowest in the country, and the Atlantic provinces has increased over the last five years, not decreased. Relatively speaking, Atlantic Canadians are worse off now than they were five, six or seven years ago. That is not progress. In fact, it underscores exactly what the Economic Council of Canada has said, that regional disparity is the most serious economic problem we face.

It is not merely an economic problem either. It affects individuals and communities all across Atlantic Canada. People have to face the prospect of unemployment and the loss of dignity associated with the inability to contribute to the economy and their own lives. Youth unemployment is extremely serious. The ability of women to participate in the labour force has been diminished.

The Minister of Transport tried to brag about the past three years of Conservative Government, particularly with respect to Atlantic Canada. Yet Atlantic Canada fared very badly with respect to regional development. During the first 18 months of Conservative Government the expenditure in Newfoundland, which has the highest unemployment rate in the country, was 1 per cent of the dollars available for regional development. If unemployment and other economic problems were spread evenly across the country on the basis of population we would have expected to get at least 2 per cent. Yet, no, under a Conservative Government Newfoundland received 1 per cent.

During that period of Tory administration, we have seen a reduction of regional development spending and a distortion of the spending in favour of central Canada at the expense of the region that needed it most, Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Manly: Where was Crosbie?

Mr. Harris: Where was the Minister of Transport then? Where was Senator Murray then? Where were the other Ministers and Members from Newfoundland and the other Atlantic provinces when this was going on?

Even during the five-year period from 1981 to 1985 Newfoundland received on average 4.5 per cent of federal regional development dollars, or four and a half times the amount it received in the first 18 months of the Tory Government. Therefore I ask the House to reflect on what the Minister has said, given those astounding figures.

The Government has decreased regional development funding by $3 billion from 1984 to the present and yet it pretends that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is going to provide us with an answer to development in Atlantic Canada. The Government takes away $1 billion and gives back $200 million. That amounts to 20 cents on the dollar and it appears to be all we can expect. It is a hoax, a sleight of hand that the Government is trying to perpetrate on the Canadian people.

It has been suggested that what is happening is a decentralization of decision-making in all of Atlantic Canada. That is another hoax. Not only that, it is a derogation of the responsibility of the federal Government which is trying to get rid of the responsibility for regional development. We have heard the Minister of Transport say today that Atlantic Canadians are responsible for their own destiny, just as the poor are responsible for their poverty. The approach is to blame Atlantic Canadians; it is their fault, and they have to solve the problem. We have had enough of it.

One of those famous Atlantic Ministers who is going to be responsible for ACOA calls it the last kick at the can. The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will be the last kick at the can as far as development programs for this region are concerned. In March of last year the former Public Works Minister stated that they had tried just about everything in the Atlantic region. They are now throwing up their hands. Two hundred million dollars a year will be the last kick at the can for Atlantic Canadians.

The Minister of Transport has said that setting up a board and allowing decisions to be made in Atlantic Canada is the last kick at the can, and they will wait four or five years to see if it works. The people of Atlantic Canada will not wait four or five years to have a hoax foisted upon them by the Government. The people of Atlantic Canada cannot afford to wait four or five years to have the Government of Canada look after their most serious problems.

The Minister of Transport says that decentralization is taking place and decisions will be made in Atlantic Canada. However that is not what the Senator said. In June, 1987, he said that the decisions will be made by him here in Ottawa. That is what Senator Murray said when asked where decentralized decision-making will take place. The final decisions will be made here in Ottawa by the Senator and if we have any questions about them we will ask the Minister of Transport to ask the Senator what he has to say about them.

The Government will take away $1 billion a year and put back $200 million, 20 cents on the dollars. The Government is telling Atlantic Canadians that it is now up to them to make a success of it. The Government will give them 20-cent dollars to work with and will put the responsibility on them. If this fails after four or five years the Government will blame Atlantic Canadians. It has absolved itself of responsibility for regional development.

The Government has set up a board of cronies and appointees with a few government people from the various provinces. I understand that this board represents the regional decision-making. However, in the legislation itself the board has no power, no decision-making authority. It is estalished by Section 18 of the Act. It is to be appointed by the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Minister. The object of the board is to assist the agency in the exercise of its powers and in the performance of its duties and functions. It is only to assist the agency. It has no decision-making power and no authority. Nowhere throughout the rest of the Act is there any mention of what role the board will play. It exists and can be called together from time to time by the president who operates under the direction of the Minister.

The Minister has already said that the decisions will be made by him in Ottawa. That is another part of the sham that the Government is trying to foist upon the people of Atlantic Canada. The Government has put all the Atlantic Canada regional development programs under one department, which is a good thing. At least there is a focus for Atlantic Canada in this legislation.

There will be input from business people, a very narrow sector of the Atlantic economy, but there are no representatives from a very substantial part of the Atlantic Canada enterprise, the co-operative sector. There are no representatives from the very substantial regional development councils, associations, and corporations which exist in Atlantic Canada. These people are concerned about development in their parts of the country, but there is no representation by them. We have only business people, insurance executives, fundraisers for the Tory Party, and one person at least from each of the provinces who appears to be a representative of a government secretariat. There will be some input from Atlantic Canada but the decision-making has not changed substantially. We are not receiving any new thrust or effort through this legislation.

In the history of regional disparity there has been no improvement in Atlantic Canada. Elizabeth Beale is an economist and specialist analysing the Atlantic regional problems and related policy. She is the chief economist of the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council. She has reported that there has been very little improvement in any of the major indicators of regional disparity between the Atlantic provinces and the country as a whole since the 1960s. The gap in the unemployment rate is proportionately the same as it was 15 years ago. Personal income has risen but that is not related to earned income. It is attributed primarily to the increase in personal transfers. There has been no narrowing of the gap between Atlantic Canada and the rest of the country. That is deplored by this Party. The Government's record in regional development is atrocious, as is its attitude and that of the Minister of Transport.

We were not really surprised when the Minister of Transport said that people in Atlantic Canada should stop belly-aching, that they are better off than Bangladesh and the Third World. That is the bench-mark of the Government and the Minister of Transport. That is why he takes away a dollar and gives back 20 cents and then says that success depends on Atlantic Canadians, that the Government will wait four or five years to see whether it works. That is the Government's attitude on regional development and that is why the Government must be replaced.

Regional development must be a national effort taken seriously by the federal Government and the Cabinet. It must be integrated into the national economy. It is fine to say that decision-making has been decentralized and put in the region and that we have flexibility. We need flexibility. The Government had to admit—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I call it one o'clock, the Member will have another 20 minutes to speak when we recommence after Question Period. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—SUGGESTED PRESENTATION TO UNITED STATES OF BILL FOR DAMAGES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, last week Canada's Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) met with his U.S. counterpart to discuss common issues. We are told that in that conversation the Secretary of State raised the question of acid rain and pretended that there is hope in obtaining cuts in the U.S. pollution coming into Canada.

Has the Secretary of State for External Affairs forgotten that because of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) decision to endorse the five-year U.S. clean coal technology program, the U.S. administration does not have to listen to Canada? Canada is now stuck with that endorsement and the Secretary of State knows it. Clearly the Government goofed.

If the Secretary of State really wants to obtain acid gas pollution cuts in the United States, he would assemble the costs and prepare a bill for damages to be presented by the Prime Minister to President Reagan at the April summit in Washington and resume the global strategy abandoned in 1985, namely, to put pressure on the United States to cut emissions.

NATIONAL ARCHIVES

CONSTRUCTION OF NEW FACILITY ADVOCATED

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I would like, once again, to express my grave concern about the precarious state of accommodation for Canada's Public Archives. I first raised this issue on June 6, 1986, during the debate on the Archives Act.

On December 8, last year, the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture tabled its report on the Public Archives. It found that the little space available for archival holdings and government records is spread over 14 locations in the National Capital Region. Moreover, this space does not meet the minimum atmospheric and environmental standards for the long-term preservation of our national heritage. The committee recommended the construction of a new Public Archives facility, located close to the National Library buildings.

The picture of burst pipes destroying our historical and cultural treasures, an embarrassment and threat to our sense of identity, was once again brought home during the Christmas recess when water severely damaged many priceless records in the Public Archives building itself.

This is the third time major damage has been caused to valuable collections of the library and archives since I first warned the House about this matter a year and a half ago.

I urge the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) to act immediately on the recommendations of the committee so that we can enter the next century without having lost the records of our past.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

ESTABLISHMENT OF SCIENTIFIC CENTRES OF EXCELLENCE—TREATMENT OF MANITOBA UNIVERSITIES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, at the National Conference on Technology and Innovation held just over a week ago, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced the establishment of scientific centres of excellence.

Manitobans were shocked to read statements by unnamed senior civil servants that Manitoba universities would be frozen out of consideration for these institutes as long as Premier Pawley was the Premier of Manitoba.

Manitobans, from labour, business and government, and members of the Legislature in all Parties, protested when the CF-18 contract was awarded to Canadair because it was obvious that the bid submitted by Bristol Aerospace of Winnipeg came in at a lower price. Recent documents released as a result of inquiries by The Globe and Mail and Winnipeg Free Press indicate that not only was the Bristol bid lower, it was better technically.

People in Manitoba want fair treatment by the Government and they call on the Government, particularly Cabinet Ministers from Manitoba, to see that Manitoba is treated fairly.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

GOVERNMENT FUNDING—PRIME MINISTER'S ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, last week some 200 of the nation's leaders with an interest in research and development participated in the National Conference on Technology and Innovation, chaired by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

In his opening remarks the Prime Minister announced federal funding of $1.3 billion for new science and technology initiatives. Part of these funds is to create centres of excellence at a number of universities across Canada, and the creation of 2,500 undergraduate scholarships in science and engineering.

S. O. 21

In his closing remarks the Prime Minister also announced a $10 million public awareness program to make Canadians more aware of the importance of research and development and its economic and social linkages.

Three themes were discussed in the forum workshops. They were revitalizing established industries; developing higher value products; fostering technology intensive firms.

Participants enthusiastically endorsed the new funding for the centres of excellence, the scholarships and public awareness program, but urged the Government to re-examine how tax incentives, advance rulings, and procurement could better assist research and technology intensive companies.

All agreed that the forum marked a new beginning and that Canada had turned a page in developing a knowledge intensive society.

Knowing your interest in this subject, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that you would have been proud to have been there.

THE COURTS

OPPORTUNITY TO INTRODUCE UNIFORMITY OF SENTENCING FOR CASES OF SIMILAR NATURE

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, last week in Ontario, we saw a case of sexual assault where justice has yet to be done. A woman suffered sexual assault with violence. She was beaten and suffered injuries.

Judge Vanini's decision in this case was shocking and irresponsible. He imposed a sentence of ninety days, to be served only on weekends because the defendant came from a good family. The judge decided the victim had suffered no serious psychological effects and that the defendant should stay in his family environment for the sake of his rehabilitation.

Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at the lack of concern and lack of sensitivity shown by Judge Vanini in this case. The judge seems to be punishing the victim and protecting the aggressor. The kind of stereotyping we see constantly in Canada's courts must stop.

Mr. Speaker, I want to ask all Canadian judges to seriously consider their attitude to women and what they suffer in cases of sexual assault, and I want to ask the Government to implement as soon as possible the recommendations of the Archambault report on sentence harmonization.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, until the middle of the 80s, Quebec's outlying regions were neglected by the previous Goverment as far as regional development was concerned. The northwestern part of Quebec, the Saguenay—Lac Saint-Jean area and the North Shore, as well as the Gaspé, the Lower St. Lawrence and the Magdalen Islands have always had special needs.

In 1984, the new Government, the team led by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), made these outlying areas one of its priorities for regional development.

In 1987, as part of the renewed federal policy for economic development, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, at the request of Cabinet, started a thorough evaluation of the economic requirements of these rural regions.

At Sept-Îles on December 22 last year, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. de Cotret) proposed a new regional development plan. Federal and provincial authorities have agreed to co-operate so that the plan can become effective as of April 1, 1988.

Mr. Speaker, while the Opposition is still talking about these issues in Ottawa, we Conservative Members are doing something about them.

THE COURTS

OPPORTUNITY TO INTRODUCE UNIFORMITY OF SENTENCING FOR CASES OF SIMILAR NATURE

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, last week the women of this country were shocked to hear that a man convicted of sexual assault in Sault Ste Marie received only a very light sentence.

A report published by the Metro Toronto Action Committee on Violence against Women and Children submits that judges in our judicial system tend to be more lenient with men of their own socio-economic class when these men are found guilty of sexual assault. This conclusion supports the arguments of many feminists who work with victims of sexual violence.

There are still so many stereotypes and myths that influence decisions made in criminal courts. The federal Government and the provinces must find a way to educate judges who preside over courts responsible for prosecuting sexual assailants.

It is imperative that Canadian women have access to a truly impartial judicial system. Otherwise, women who have been assaulted will be victimized a second time by the sentences handed out to the men responsible for these crimes.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

IMPOSITION OF LIFE SENTENCES FOR MURDERERS URGED

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this House today with sadness in my heart and deep, sincere sympathy for the friends and relatives of the three innocent people brutally murdered in Chilliwack, British Columbia. An alleged repeat murderer not only murdered these three but also murdered the sister of one of my constituents in 1971.

It was just last year that some Members of this House voted against the reinstatement of capital punishment. They did this in spite of the wishes of the majority of Canadians who wanted changes to deal with the inefficiencies in our present judicial system. One of the main arguments was the fear of prosecuting an innocent person. Well, Sir, since that vote was taken we have lost four innocent people at the hands of alleged repeat murderers.

My respect for this House dictates that I accept its decision. However, I feel it is incumbent on this House to deal immediately with the system that has proven ineffective in dealing with those who brutally murder innocent people. We cannot bring back those already lost, but we can prevent recurrences of this nature, and we must act now.

I believe we must develop a system that incarcerates murderers for their entire natural life. Failing that, this House should reconsider its position on capital punishment.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GRAIN HANDLERS' STRIKE AT PRINCE RUPERT—BINDING ARBITRATION PROPOSED

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, it is time for the Government to act to get grain moving through the grain port at Prince Rupert in British Columbia. This strike, which has crippled a large percentage of western Canada's shipments of grain for export, is having a serious affect on western grain farmers.

Last Friday the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) called on the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) to meet with the two sides involved in the Prince Rupert grain terminal strike this weekend and to persuade them to accept binding arbitration. He said that the Minister should be ready to suggest the name of an arbitrator to the parties.

Prairie farmers continue to face severely depressed grain prices. Prices are the lowest since the Great Depression. The last thing farmers need is to have grain backed up for weeks on end. It is estimated that the farmers have already lost over $50 million.

The Leader of the Official Opposition has said that the grain transportation system is backed up, that elevators are clogged, and that farmers cannot deliver their grain. In addition, the Canadian Wheat Board is losing sales and Canada's reputation as a reliable supplier of grain is suffering. Both sides in the dispute must recognize that in failing to agree to binding arbitration they run the risk of having it imposed on them through legislation.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GRAIN HANDLERS' STRIKE AT PRINCE RUPERT—CALL FOR BACK-TO-WORK LEGISLATION

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, have you ever been robbed? Once again thousands of western Canadian grain farmers have been robbed of valuable grain sales, robbed of much needed income because of 69 union members and four grain companies unable to settle a strike at the Prince Rupert exporting grain terminal.

Over the years strikes and lockouts of grain handlers, longshoremen, rail unions and inspectors have taken the very food from mouths of farmers and their families. When grain producers right across western Canada are suffering from drastically reduced commodity prices while the average salary of a grain handler at Prince Rupert approaches $40,000 when benefits are included, farmers have a right to be steaming hot mad.

I urge the Government to legislate grain handlers back to work immediately and, further, to declare all aspects of grain handling and transportation systems affecting Canada's grain exports an essential service in order that the interests of western grain farmers and all of Canada best be served.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

ISSUANCE OF ALL-NEWS TELEVISION LICENCE TO CBC

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, while individual Tory MPs lobbying on behalf of a private company remind us of the long-promised lobbying legislation, the spectre of these backbenchers, who have loathed the CBC since the days of Julliet, pressuring the Cabinet to intervene and quash the CRTC decision to award the all-news TV service to the CBC reminds Canadians that the hallmark of the Government has been political interference and political manipulation.

Blatant political patronage, the abuse of conflict of interest guidelines by certain Cabinet Ministers, and the politically motivated CF-18 decision were events which led the Commons Broadcasting Committee to advise the Government not to overturn CRTC decisions on broadcast licences. However, Tory backbenchers want the CRTC not to be an independent agency that acts at arm's length from the Government but to be subject to political intervention and political manipulation.

The CBC, with its ready access to 153 news gathering cameras in Canada and over 400 available world-wide, is a broadcasting strand which binds the Canadian fabric together and which provides Canadians with a sense of unity. While the federal Government has now inextricably linked us economically with the United States and moved us closer in both social and economic terms as well as in political terms, for the Cabinet now to intervene and bow to these company lobbyists would be yet another step toward the Americanization of Canada.

HOUSING

LACK OF AFFORDABLE ACCOMMODATION IN TORONTO AREA

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, of all the many concerns and problems that my constituents discussed with me over the Christmas recess, the lack of affordable housing in the greater Metropolitan Toronto area was the one raised most frequently.

Whether it was a young person looking for an apartment in a market where the rental vacancy rate is only 0.1 per cent, or a couple trying to buy their first home in a market where even the most modest house costs over $200,000, or a senior citizen facing a substantial rent increase with no prospect of alternative accommodation, all had first-hand experience with the problem, and understandably all are looking to Governments for solutions and for leadership.

There are no instant solutions, but the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation can help to provide leadership by making federally owned land in Metropolitan Toronto available for affordable housing projects. One of his own consultants estimated that 15,000 such housing units could be built on federally owned surplus land at Downsview Airport.

How about it, Mr. Minister?

YOUTH

JOB CREATION—GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, as the Official Opposition critic for Youth, I have a duty to criticize the irresponsible attitude taken by the Minister of State (Youth) (Mr. Charest) in his announcement last week on Challenge 88. Young Canadians are right to be upset. This announcement remains well below what they have a right to expect, and shows the Conservative Government has not made any effort at all to help them. The former version of the Program has not been improved, except with respect to drop-outs, and on top of that, the budget is less than what it was four years ago.

In 1984, the Liberal Government spent $200 million on its job creation program for youths. In 1988, all the Conservative Government has to offer is a paltry $180 million. And I refuse to buy the excuse by the Minister of State (Youth), who says that this budget freeze is normal and acceptable considering the drop of unemployment among young people. So many young people are still unemployed that it is hardly appropriate for us to sit back and relax. Drop-outs are not necessarily young people who are not interested in continuing their education. Many have to drop out because they cannot afford a college or university education. In many of Canada's regions, the unemployment rate has risen to unacceptable levels. This is also true in Quebec, where youth unemployment is around 13.7 per cent. There is no excuse for letting this Program stagnate.

What about the national youth strategy! More than two years ago, the Minister promised us this strategy, and since then: Nothing! Improvisation is the name of the game. Too bad for the Minister, because now people will be able to say at the end of his mandate that if he had really tried, he would have been a star player and probably the recruit of the year in the national improvisation league!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

SOVEREIGNTY

CANADIAN ARCTIC—SIGNING OF CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and it concerns misleading statements made by two of his Ministers on defence matters.

First, I would like to deal with statements made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs who stated in the House of Commons on September 10, 1985, in response to opposition prodding, that there is—and I use the Secretary of State's own words—"no substitute for Canada's full sovereignty over the waters of the Arctic . . . Full sovereignty is vital to Canada's security—it is vital to Canada's—identity . . . We will accept no substitute . . . Any co-operation with the United States—shall only be on the basis of full respect for Canada's sovereignty". Those were the words of the right hon. gentleman.

In view of the fact that last week the Secretary of State for External Affairs negotiated and signed an agreement with the United States which fails to recognize Canadian sovereignty over the Arctic, which makes no mention of American submarines patrolling our waters, and which in effect clearly weakens Canada's legal claim to the Arctic, why would the Prime Minister tolerate a senior Minister and colleague negotiating and signing an agreement with the United States which clearly violates a declaration and undertaking that he gave to the House of Commons?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, before that agreement was signed the United States did not acknowledge its need to seek Canada's consent before the transit through our Northwest Passage of U.S. government owned or operated ice-breakers.

As a result of that agreement, the United States now acknowledges and has a legal obligation to seek Canada's permission before there is a transit through our Northwest Passage of government owned or operated ice-breakers. That is a small but significant step forward in emphasizing Canada's control over our North.

• (1420)

As the Leader of the Opposition will understand, one of the ways to establish sovereignty is not to talk about it in empty phrases, as the Liberal Party did for so many years, but actually to go out and assert control. That is what we are doing.

Mr. Prud'homme: Bring back Flora.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF ALLEGED CONTRADICTION RELATING TO AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH UNITED STATES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, by his actions, by signing the contract with the United States, the Minister contradicted the clear statement he made in the House. I repeat, he said: "We will accept no substitute. Any co-operation with the United States shall only be on the basis of full respect for Canada's sovereignty". That was quite clear. There was no misunderstanding.

I repeat: Why did the Secretary of State for External Affairs mislead this Parliament during the debate? Why did he negotiate and sign an agreement with the United States that clearly contradicts what he said before the Parliament of Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is repeating in French the question he just put in English. Maybe he never heard of simultaneous translation. It's a fact of life in Canada, and it is also a fact there has been no change in the Canadian position on our sovereignty and our control over the North. The change is that before the agreement was signed with the United States, the U.S. did not recognize it was necessary to seek and obtain Canada's consent before they could go through with icebreakers controlled or directed by the U.S. Government. It was not necessary before, but now it is. That is a step forward, a very concrete step, and concrete steps help demonstrate our sovereignty.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is as vague in French as he is in English, and as contradictory in either language. He is to be commended for his bilingualism.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

BIDS FOR CF-18 MAINTENANCE CONTRACT—MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we also learned over the parliamentary recess that a second Minister has misled Canadians on defence matters. The Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion told the House of Commons on October 31, 1986, that the two bids for the CF-18 maintenance contract were:

> —very close on technical merit and on cost.

Documents produced by the Government's own experts and only revealed under Access to Information legislation demonstrate clearly that the Minister was not telling the truth and misled the House.

In these circumstances involving a contract worth over $1 billion, can the Prime Minister tell us why that Minister is still among his colleagues in the Government of Canada?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to my right hon. colleague by saying that it was not on December 31 but on October 31 when I made that statement.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I said October 31.

Mr. de Cotret: It is a statement that I stand by. I mentioned very clearly that on the price side the two bids were very close. I mentioned in reply to further questions in this House that there was a differential of $3.5 million on a $100 million contract for four years. I maintained that the bid by Canadair, as I mentioned then, was one of $104.4 million and the bid by Bristol was $100.54 million. I maintain, as I did then, that on the technical criteria, which was the second evaluation criteria, Canadair had a score of 843 out of 1000 and Bristol had a score of 926 out of 1000. Given that they were both excellent companies, both very qualified, with the price differential very slight, we felt very strongly as a Government that the technology transfer for the benefit of Canadian industry would be best accomplished by giving the contract to Canadair than by giving it to Cast-18 or Bristol.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SITUATION IN HAITI—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. By refusing to take part in that electoral charade yesterday, the Haitian people showed how much they are striving for justice, change and democracy. Is the Conservative Government now willing to admit its mistake in endorsing for months the military junta of General Namphy, and what does the Canadian Government intend to do to force General Namphy to hold truly democratic elections?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member on being appointed spokesman for his party on international issues. We both have a lot of experience in this House, and I hope and trust that we shall be able to work together effectively.

In my statement this morning, I said that the Canadian Government believes that yesterday's events represent a clear judgment by the Haitian people that the elections were not a democratic success. They do not give a democratic verdict in our opinion. We shall review our relations with Haiti, including our development assistance. As the Minister for External Relations indicated last week, the Canadian ambassador to Haiti will be here next week to consult with the Government on possible means to ensure that Canadian activities can promote the evolution of democracy in Haiti and also benefit the Haitian people.

CONVENING OF MEETING OF MOST IMPORTANT COUNTRIES INVOLVED IN AID TO HAITIAN PEOPLE—HOLDING OF INQUIRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I accept the comments of the Secretary of State for External Affairs as the least that the Government can do under the circumstances.

First, I would like to ask the Minister whether he is willing to call on behalf of the Canadian Government a meeting of the major contributors of assistance to the Haitian people to exert pressure on General Namphy as soon as possible.

Second, is the Minister able to assure us that there will be a full investigation of Canadian assistance to Haiti to guarantee that our money will no longer be used to finance the Machiavelian plans of the military junta?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Three things, Mr. Speaker. I am willing to consider the effectiveness of the first proposal of the Hon. Member. If it can be effective, I would intend to pursue it.

Second, the Canadian Government has already consulted all countries which have important relations with Haiti, namely France, the United States and neighbouring Caribbean countries. My colleague, the Minister for External Relations, has met directly with the prime ministers of certain neighbouring countries in the Caribbeans.

Third, I believe that it would be very useful for Hon. Members and other people to learn about the situation in Haiti as concerns development assistance and other matters. I hope that our ambassador will be able to meet directly with parliamentarians and other interested parties when he is here. Tomorrow, the Minister for External Relations will meet with non-government organizations which operate in Haiti to discuss the most effective means to take concerted action because, in our view, our objectives should be, first, to ensure a truly democratic situation in Haiti, and second, to maintain the historic support of the Canadian people to the poorest members of Haitian society.

NATIONAL SECURITY

ALLEGED PRESENCE OF TERRORIST IN CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Solicitor General.

According to an article published in today's Globe and Mail, Canada is the home of a terrorist. For a few months now the Government has had information concerning this individual.

My question is quite straightforward: Why did the Government not arrest this terrorist?

• (1430)

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the House that in the summer of 1986 a Mr. Mohammad applied for landed immigrant status to Canada through our office in Madrid, Spain. As a result of inquiries made to Spanish authorities a positive response was obtained and, as a result, our liaison officer in Spain advised Immigration that there was not a security problem. That information was obtained, I may say, because of false and misleading information which this Mr. Mohammad gave to our officer in Spain.

When we subsequently received additional information, we again conducted interviews of this Mr. Mohammad in Canada and, after a number of months, obtained a positive identification of this gentleman. That was in the late spring of 1987. The information was then turned over to Immigration which has been proceeding since that time to institute deportation proceedings against the gentleman in question.

GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since the information made available and now confirmed in the House by the Minister reveals clearly that the individual in question lied in his application to come here as a bona fide immigrant, could the Government explain why nothing substantial has been done for many months? Why have charges not been laid? Why has no action been taken to ensure that this person is removed from Canada?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I have already advised the House, the gentleman in question was interviewed here in Canada immediately after his arrival. Fingerprints and other documentation were obtained at that time. It then took a number of months to obtain a positive ID from the other countries in Europe as to the proper identification of this gentleman.

The House must understand that he is of Lebanese background. There has been a great deal of turmoil and problems in that country. It took until then to make a positive ID. The information was then turned over to Immigration officials who, since that time in the early summer of 1987, have been preparing their case against the gentleman in question.

REQUEST FOR DEPORTATION OF INDIVIDUAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, while the Government has been busy bringing in bogus legislation allegedly dealing with the refugee problem, keeping out, if it had its way, all kinds of illegitimate—

Some Hon. Members: Right!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: —all kinds of legitimate refugees—well, the people of Canada understand very well the bogus games the Government is up to in passing the buck.

Having heard the answer of the Minister, I want to ask him again, when we have a clear violation of the Immigration Act by a known terrorist, why has the Government not acted promptly to get that known terrorist out of Canada?

Mr. Crosbie: Pass the legislation.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): As the hon. gentleman knows, as soon as the positive ID was obtained, the information was turned over to officials in Immigration. There is a due process under the Act which has been followed and that indeed is being done and has been done, and I think Immigration is now in a position to proceed further on the matter.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the bottom line is that as a result of the Government's negligence a convicted terrorist was allowed to obtain landed immigrant status in Canada. As a result of the Government's gross negligence, a threat to the national security of Canada and Canadians has been created. Is the Solicitor General prepared to assume responsibility on behalf of the Government for this bizarre series of events, and will he not admit today in the House that this individual is in Canada because of the negligence of the Government and its officials?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I have already advised the House, the gentleman is in Canada because he gave false and misleading evidence to our liaison officer in Spain. That official checked with authorities over there, found nothing, and advised Immigration here that he had not found anything. As a result of that he was allowed to come to Canada.

Immediately upon obtaining additional information, CSIS interviewed the gentleman, got fingerprints, and over the course of the next number of months found evidence that positively identified him as a terrorist. That was then turned over to Immigration officials who are pursuing their case with respect to deportation.

ADMITTANCE OF INDIVIDUAL THROUGH PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Immigration. Given that immigration officials at Pearson International Airport were placed on an urgent alert in advance of this individual's arrival in Canada on February 27 of last year, why did they admit him to Canada rather than intercepting and, as a security precaution, detaining him at that time? Will the Minister ensure, as advocated by a committee report dated 1986, that changes are introduced immediately to the role that CSIS plays in immigration security clearance, because it is not doing it to the degree Canadians deserve in order to protect the integrity of and confidence in the system.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the same false information given to the security agency in Spain was used to gain access to Canada.

The individual in question used 21 different names for identification purposes and when he arrived at the Canadian border the name appearing on the official visa did not match any on the lists we had. This is why the individual was admitted.

But again, Mr. Speaker, I want to correct a false statement made by my colleague from York South—Weston to the effect that Canadian security was jeopardized. That same day or the day after this individual entered Canada we were aware of his whereabouts. He was followed by the security agency, or the RCMP in this case. At no time ever did this individual constitute a threat.

As to the second part of the question, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration is quite satisfied with the security agency services. There is no question of changing the system.

TRADE

PROPOSED UNITED STATES OMNIBUS TRADE BILL—MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S. SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who met last week with U.S. Secretary of State Shultz. Did the Minister discuss with Mr. Shultz the omnibus trade Bill which was so importantly stressed by the external affairs committee in its report, and did he obtain assurances that that Bill will not apply to Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is yes. The answer to the second question is that the United States is fully aware of our concerns and, we believe, bound by the agreement that was signed in Washington with respect to the primacy of the Free Trade Agreement relating to trade relations touched by that agreement after January 1, 1988.

INQUIRY WHETHER MR. SHULTZ PROMISED REJECTION OF TRADE BILL BY PRESIDENT REAGAN

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. This important question requires a direct answer. Did Mr. Shultz give the assurance that this trade bill would be turned down by Mr. Reagan? Did he give this assurance?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is another matter entirely. But the reply concerning the relationship between the Omnibus Trade Bill and the Free Trade Agreement signed by Canada and the United States is to the effect that in the free trade document itself, there is a committment made by the United States which deals directly with the issues raised by the Hon. Member and which provides Canadians with the necessary guarantees.

FISHERIES

ISSUANCE OF NEW LOBSTER FISHING LICENCES IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister has issued four new offshore lobster licences against the advice of his own advisory board and of the Minister of Fisheries for the Province of Nova Scotia. Premier Buchanan of Nova Scotia, the Maritime Fishermen's Union, and the Eastern Fishermen's Federation have called for the immediate cancellation of these licences.

Will the Minister respect the integrity of the lobster fisheries management system and cancel these licences immediately?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I certainly shall respect the integrity of the lobster management system which allowed me to add four licences to the over 6,000 lobster licences in Nova Scotia on a basis which was biologically sound and managerially prudent.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: The selection process was absolutely fair and according to a set of criteria prepared by my own officials. If the Member wants to ask further questions I can certainly elaborate on this initiative which will produce new employment and new economic growth in Nova Scotia, which I hope the Hon. Member would support.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, that selection was anything but fair. It was done in secret and the licences were given to Tory hacks. The selection had nothing to do with scientific research and everything to do with political patronage.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I know the Hon. Member would not want to get into debate in a preamble, which he is getting very close to doing. The Hon. Member will put his question.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, why is the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans using lobster pots for even more Tory pork-barrels?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, speaking of lobster pots and pork-barrels, I ask that the House consider the basis on which six of the eight original offshore lobster licences were awarded to one particular family by a Liberal Government, and the Hon. Member can decide for himself what the politics of that family were.

The offshore lobster fishery has the potential for significant new development as have a number of other offshore fisheries in that province such as the offshore clam fishery.

It is passing strange that whenever we have an opportunity, based on scientific advice and according to a fair selection process, to create more jobs and employment, the Opposition is forever critical.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

MONTREAL'S EAST END—REQUEST FOR ADEQUATE AID PROGRAMS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Science and Technology who is also responsible for the lack of action in the development of the Montreal East area since his government came to power three and a half years ago.

Following the losses of 400 jobs at Vickers and 150 more at the CIP over the Holiday season the number of unemployed in that area has increased to over 20,000. Would the government be prepared to support training and retraining programs for the workers who have been laid off in the Montreal East area, those especially who are over 50 years of age? Could the Minister assure the House that any assistance program directed at Montreal East will take into account both the human problems of the unemployed workers as well as the financial and competitive difficulties faced by the companies in that area?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, this government has always been concerned with the financial, economic and human problems of the Montreal East area. My honourable friend has just referred to the period since 1984. For his information, I should like to provide him with a few statistics on what this government has done for the Montreal East area.

The Federal Government has directly approved seventy six projects representing a total cost of $294.6 million, with $256.7 million in admissible costs, nearly $40 million in authorized payments, which have resulted in the creation of 2,468 new jobs and the preservation of 2,499 old ones. And this, Mr. Speaker, does not even include the 2,000 person-years of employment at Bombardier for the building of locomotives which I announced recently in Montreal East.

OUTLOOK FOR FUTURE OF MONTREAL'S EAST END—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister neglected to mention that he failed to respond to a report submitted by the Montreal East economic renewal committee in September. The people and unions of Montreal East are still waiting for the Minister's response. According to the report, 1,000 workers are unemployed, 7,500 have been laid off and 10,000 are living on welfare. My supplementary to the Minister is as follows: Does the Government intend to maintain Montreal East as a major centre for heavy industry or will it just be a location for service industries where all these people would then have to work, selling hamburgers at MacDonald's?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to respond to the preamble to the Hon. Member's question. We have examined the report on Montreal East, and in the spirit of co-operation we have maintained with all Canadian provinces, I discussed the report several times with my Quebec counterpart. We are now preparing a joint comprehensive and positive response to the recommendations of the Pichette report. I am meeting my counterpart again this Friday when we will try and finalize a joint position for the federal and provincial governments which will respond to the economic, financial and social needs of Montreal East.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

OUTLOOK FOR FUTURE OF OUTLYING REGIONS OF QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Up to the middle of the 80s, rural regions in Quebec had been neglected by the previous Government as far as economic development was concerned, and federal action on regional development in Quebec had focussed on the more industrialized regions in the southwest. Could the Minister give the House an indication today of the kind of economic development plan the federal Government has in mind for Quebec's outlying areas?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as you know,—and I am sure this will interest the Hon. Member as well—as far as regional economic development is concerned, we have embarked on a program that focusses particularly on outlying regions, which tend to experience major problems with respect to employment and economic development. Mr. Speaker, we have also made a conscious effort to involve local communities in this initiative. We want to see consultation. We want community participation, not only in regional programming but also in the implementation of regional programs across this country. We have already demonstrated this in the Atlantic Region and Western Canada, we are now doing so in Quebec and Ontario, and we intend to continue this policy. Community involvement is the key to success in regional development!

SHIPYARDS

REQUEST THAT JOBS BE SAVED IN QUEBEC

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister. During a TVA year-end television program the Prime Minister indicated that all Quebec shipyards had rosy future prospects. In addition, speaking to Radio-Canada's journalist Pierre Nadeau, he stated that Quebec shipyards were going full spin and that there was no reason to push the panic button before 1990 or 1991. Again the Prime Minister misled the people of Quebec and the shipyard workers: the rosy hue turned to a funeral-parlor mauve after two Quebec shipyards—Vickers and Sorel's—died and the only thing going full spin are the 635 lay-offs. Now that the Conservative Government has shut down two Quebec shipyards and laid off 635 workers, can the Prime Minister tell us what he is going to do to support and help these 635 workers and salvage what is left of Quebec's naval tradition, namely the Lauzon shipyards?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it was precisely to save jobs that the federal Government and the Quebec Government took the initiative of which you are aware. The restructuring plan was unveiled by the Quebec Government. Under this plan and with a major federal contribution the industry will be in a position to streamline its operations. It will end up with more—not fewer—jobs; three times as many jobs at Lauzon, twice as many jobs at Sorel. That is part of the restructuring plan.

REQUEST FOR WORK

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a recording of the Prime Minister's comments. Enough is enough! I would like to know what the Prime Minister meant when he told Quebec workers that their province's shipyards were operating "full spin". What is the Prime Minister's answer on that? Those people want to know the truth. What will there be for those 635 workers? Mr. Prime Minister, you were saying to Mr. Nadeau, in your deep voice : "Look now, Mr. Nadeau, about those 635 workers, the shipyards are operating full spin". What does that mean, "full spin"? People in Quebec want to work! Give them work, give them contracts for Quebec shipyards!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, since the Hon. Member referred to job creation and helping workers, it should perhaps be remembered that since September 1984 in Montreal, 116,000 new jobs have been created over the last three years, as compared to a net loss of 4,000 jobs in Montreal over four years under the Liberals. So there you have it, Mr. Speaker—116,000 new jobs created in Montreal under the Conservative Government over three years, as compared to a net loss of 4,000 jobs under the Liberal administration when the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie was sitting in this House of Commons but did not say one word against the Liberal Government that was killing Eastern Montreal's economy.

Mr. Speaker, on that point, of course the Hon. Member knows too well that almost a third of the frigate contract is going to Quebec through a very large, nearly $900 million contract to Paramax. Secondly, perhaps my hon. friend should read the statement made by Minister Daniel Johnson where he said the award by the Canadian Government of the frigate contract to Marine Industries Ltd. shipyards will in no way impair the rigourous restructuring plan developed by that company. The Quebec Government's plan to restructure shipyards was clearly in place and the award of the contract to St. John's, New Brunswick, which was in great need of that help from the Canadian Government, changed nothing to the impact on employment in Montreal.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PRETENCE OF ELECTION IN HAITI—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The government has announced this morning that it does not recognize as valid the elections in Haiti. They have known for a long time that these elections would not be democratic. Why have they remained silent all that time? Now it is too late!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have not remained silent. We think that it is up to the people administered by a governement to judge the efficiency of that government. The people of Haiti have now decided. There is evidently no support. The people have not voted. There is no support for the elections that were held yesterday. The challenge now for us, for the friends of Haiti, is to find ways to restore the democracy in Haiti and help the people of that country. That is the objective of our government.

• (1450)

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it was clear to everyone that these elections held yesterday were bound to be a manipulated tragedy. Is it not possible that had the Canadian Government and other Governments condemned in advance what was going to be inevitably a travesty, the tragedy of yesterday and the actions of now might have been avoided?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, to come to that point, since the Hon. Member has raised it, I believe that the eloquent statement made by the electors at Haiti who stayed home was all the more effective because it was clearly a statement that they made themselves.

The challenge for us now is to find ways not just to talk about helping Haiti, but to find practical ways in which this country, France, the United States and neighbours in the Caribbean can come together to encourage democracy in that country as well as to help the impoverished citizens of one of the most impoverished countries in the world. Indeed, it is a country with whom we have had long and important relations.

I misheard part of the statement of the Member for Papineau who made an accusation with regard to the misdirection of aid funds. We have investigated that. There is no basis to that allegation.

THE ADMINISTRATION

JUDICIAL FINDING OF FAILURE BY MINISTERS TO OBEY COURT ORDER

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On January 8 the federal Court of Appeal, in a unanimous decision, found both the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the former Minister of Employment and Immigration, the present Minister of Communications, guilty of contempt of court for failing to obey a court order. In other words, two of his Ministers now stand convicted in their personal capacity of a serious offence, characterized as a quasi criminal offence, convicted by a court of law for failing to carry out their duties as Ministers.

What is the Prime Minister's reaction to this conviction of his Ministers, and what is the position of the Government?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of my colleague, the Minister of Justice who is away on other government business, I can advise the House that the Minister of Justice today instructed the officials in his Ministry to commence proceedings for leave to appeal this particular conviction. As a result, the matter is presently before the courts and, as the Hon. Member well knows, I cannot comment further on a matter that is going to be under appeal.

Mr. Kaplan: We are accustomed to the non comments of the Solicitor General on matters involving members of his caucus and the courts.

DECISION TO APPEAL FINDING

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, does the decision of the Government to appeal mean that Ministers are not to be held accountable in court for failures like the one that resulted in this conviction? Is it the Government's position that the Ministers are not responsible for their Departments? I think the Prime Minister himself should be answering a question of this importance.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am very concerned that the Hon. Member appears to be suggesting that my two colleagues should not be able to avail themselves of a right of appeal. Is he suggesting that they do not have that right?

With the greatest respect, I do not think that the Hon. Member should be making suggestions about what has or has not happened or about the results until we have heard the decision.

Mr. Speaker: There will be two more questions—the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North, followed by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East. That will close Question Period.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

AWARDING OF CF-18 MAINTENANCE CONTRACT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion. The decision to award the CF-18 contract to Canadair instead of Bristol in Winnipeg incensed all Manitobans. The Leader of the New Democratic Party asked the Government, first, for assurances that the decision had been made on the basis of the competitive aspect of both bids. We also asked that the relevant documents be referred to the Auditor General for study and report to the House. I ask the Minister why the Government did not agree at that time to that proposal?

• (1500)

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, subject to consulting Hansard, if I recall properly at that point I indicated very clearly that all relevant documents would be referred to the Auditor General. He reports directly to this House and will have access to all the relevant material. I will verify the record to ensure I have made that commitment. Obviously, through the normal process, the information was made public, subject, obviously to the caveat I mentioned back then, that some of the confidential commercial information, before its release, had to be cleared by the companies involved.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary, please.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

ESTABLISHMENT OF CENTRES OF EXCELLENCE—POSITION OF MANITOBA UNIVERSITIES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I would like to ask the Minister to assure the people of Manitoba that the report in the Winnipeg Free Press several days ago that the universities of Manitoba would not be considered as possible recipients of scientific research centres of excellence because Manitoba has a New Democratic Government is incorrect, and that Manitoba universities will be given a fair opportunity in the competition for these centres of excellence.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I would like to give the strongest assurance that all Canadians, all Canadian provinces, all Canadian universities and all Canadian researchers will be treated equally by this Government.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CONVICTED MURDERER-RAPIST CHARGED WITH TRIPLE MURDERS WHILE OF PAROLE

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General of Canada. On December 13 a convicted murderer-rapist, who was out on full parole after serving only seven-and-a-half years of a life sentence, murdered three innocent people in Chilliwack, a 34-year-old mother, her 12-year-old daughter and her 12-year-old friend.

Why was a convicted deviant sexual offender who had committed a heinous murder and rape in 1971, and who was subsequently convicted of indecent exposure in 1986 while out on parole, again let out on full parole to go and murder three people?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, let me first express my horror to this House and to the families and relatives of the victims over what happened. I can advise the House that this individual was convicted of non capital murder in 1972. After nine years in prison, he was paroled under very strict terms in 1981. In 1986 his parole was revoked for a 21-day period for indecent exposure. Again, after a full hearing by the vice-chairman of the National Parole Board, he was again released in 1986 on very strict terms. He was receiving medical and psychiatric treatment at the time of this tragedy. We were shocked and surprised, as was everyone else.

There is going to be a full inquest conducted by the coroner of British Columbia into this case in either February or March of this year.

Mr. St. Germain: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I know there are some Members who would like to pursue this longer, but I am conscious of the time. I will, of course, be very generous in recognizing those Members tomorrow.

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED USE OF TAPE RECORDER IN THE HOUSE

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if you could clarify something for the House. I saw the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) with a tape recorder on his desk and he was waving it in the air. If the Member was using it in the House and it is against the rules, where do we stand on that issue, please?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can assist the House. I also noticed the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) with a recorder in his hand. I thought perhaps he wanted an immediate Translation or recording of what was taking place. There has been some indication that perhaps the Hon. Member, in an excess of enthusiasm, wished something on that tape to be put through the recording system of the House. That is an ingenious approach, but, of course, it is out of order. However, I listened and found that I could not hear anything except the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie who, of course, has never been shy about ensuring that we could hear the question that he put.

The Hon. Member has raised a point in which he is absolutely correct. If an hon. member was doing what may well have been attempted, that would be out of order. I am sure all Hon. Members would refrain from doing it again.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Saint-Denis had that tape.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Montreal—Sainte-Marie.

Mr. Prud'homme: The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie had that recorder. I wish to draw to the attention of the Chair that at no time was the Hon. Member trying to use a recorder to tape the deliberations. That would be out of order. In any case, the rules are very clear, we cannot do that in committee or in the House even though everything is now made public on television.

What the Hon. Member had in his hand was a tape of a speech that was made. He only wanted to emphasize that he had in his hand the proof of what he was saying.

An Hon. Member: You are on light ground.

An Hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Prud'homme: I am not on light ground. If I was, Mr. Speaker would have ruled me out of order right away. So that is the explanation.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) has the floor on a point of order. The Hon. Member may continue.

[English]

Mr. Prud'homme: I will conclude by saying it is an non-issue because the Hon. Member was not trying to be out of order by taping what was going on, even though, as I said and as I will repeat, every deliberation is now on television. However, it is still against the rules to tape in a committee room or in the House, but that is not what the Hon. Member from Montreal—Sainte-Marie was trying to achieve. He just wanted to emphasize by showing that he had in his hand proof of a speech made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) somewhere concerning a certain debate. That was all. I do not think my hon. friend should have even raised that question.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT TO INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier, Member for the electoral constituency of Ottawa—Vanier, has been appointed member of the Board of Internal Economy to replace the Hon. André Ouellet, Member for the electoral constituency of Papineau, for the purposes of and pursuant to the provisions of Chapter 39 of the Statutes of Canada, 1985, entitled an Act to amend the House of Commons Act.

[English]

POINT OF ORDER

WITHDRAWAL OF EARLIER REMARK

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, During Question Period the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) raised a question with respect to a purported foreign terrorist in Canada. I made an intervention or interjection which inferred that the terrorist was a refugee. I have no idea whether or not that remark was recorded by Hansard. However, I take no comfort in whether it was or was not recorded. I simply want to categorically withdraw the remark as being terribly wrong in casting a reflection upon refugees that was clearly unintended.

I unequivocally withdraw my remark whether or not I have been identified as the person who made that untoward comment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) has made an intervention in the best tradition of this House. The Hon. Member has the thanks of other Hon. Members, as was indicated by the applause and by the Chair.

When the House rose at one o'clock the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) had the floor.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, ATLANTIC CANADA, 1987

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion (Mr. Mulroney) that Bill-103, an Act to increase economic opportunity in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated that there are certain aspects of this legislation which improve upon the previous approach taken. That is to say, under one ministry will be all of the programs for regional development related to Atlantic Canada. I would expect there to be more sensitivity than we have come to expect from the Governments of Canada, whether they be under the current administration or previous Liberal ones, to the two programs as they affect Atlantic Canadians and Atlantic Canadian businesses.

In this regard I need only refer to the Atlantic Enterprise Program which was introduced by the present Government.

In February of this year the Government had to respond very quickly to the criticisms which were launched immediately against the program by business people in Atlantic Canada concerning its threshold requirements. Initially, the program provided for loan insurance and interest buy-downs for projects in excess of $250,000. This refers to the program which was announced in the 1986 Budget.

The immediate reaction from Atlantic business people was that that would not apply to very many projects for capital improvement and that it would not provide any major initiative for development of capital projects in the Atlantic region. Within a matter of months the Government was required to announce, through the then Minister of State for Small Businesses, that the thresholds would be lowered from $250,000 to $100,000 and that interest buy-downs would be lowered from $250,000 to $25,000. This was in keeping with the scale of many projects and businesses in the Atlantic region. That is only one small example of what we in the New Democratic Party see as insensitivity by the members of Cabinet and by the Government to the needs of Atlantic Canada and to the importance of regional development to Atlantic Canada.

These difficulties that Atlantic Canadians have in getting a response from the Government of Canada to their needs are not new. They existed under the Tories. They existed prior to that under Liberal administrations. During the first five years of the DREE program under the Liberal administration, from 1969 to 1974, the per capita spending in the Province of Newfoundland was $9 per year. That was the annual average expenditure for the first five year period of the program. In the last five year period the per capita expenditure was down to $7. In the next year, which was a year under the Tory administration, the per capita expenditure for industrial incentive grants was down to $3. So we experienced a decrease, not an increase, in expenditures for this type of program. This was a program which was absolutely necessary, not only in terms of the interests of Atlantic Canada but in terms of the interests of the whole of Canada.

As I indicated before lunch, regional imbalances are the major economic problem of Canada. Since August of this year we have heard in the House statements by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and other Ministers bragging about their performance. Figures released by the OECD Organization for Economic Co-Operation and Development show that Canada's economy as a whole has been very good compared to other OECD nations. Our unemployment rate has dropped to a five year low of 9.1 per cent in the past year. However, not all Canadians have shared the sustained growth that Canada has experienced over the last several years. In the industrial heartland of Canada, in southern Ontario and in parts of Quebec, we are back to pre-recession levels. However, in the western provinces and in Atlantic Canada such is not the case.

The underlying message in all of this is that economic growth in Canada, powerful as it may be, will not cure the widening imbalances between regions. We are developing a two-tier system wherein there are two types of Canada's, a Canada for the economic heartlands and one for the fringes of the country, including Atlantic Canada. That is not good enough. It is not good enough for Atlantic Canada. It is not good enough for Canada as a whole.

Not just Members of Parliament from Atlantic Canada ought to be concerned about this matter. They are not the only ones from whom we should hear speeches on this subject. Members of Parliament from wealthier ridings, from ridings which have sustained economic growth, ought also to be concerned about the importance of regional development and about correcting regional imbalances.

Mr. John Crow, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, is one of many Canadians who has expressed concerns about regional imbalances. He has said that these regional imbalances could eventually drag down the whole economy. That is but one reason to support regional development. It affects the whole economy of the country. A more important reason to support regional development is that the people of Atlantic Canada deserve to have the same opportunities as do other Canadians in terms of employment. They deserve a share of the wealth of this great country.

The same report that the Prime Minister was so happy to quote in August and September of this year, put out by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, flagged to all industrialized countries the starkness of regional disparities in Canada's growth rates as a major problem. The agency has been quoted as saying that while such differences are a common feature of the Canadian economic scene, their intensity was unusually pronounced last year. That is an indictment against this country's approach to regional development. It is an indictment against the lack of concern that central Governments, both Tory and Liberal, have had for the regional development of Atlantic Canada. We in the New Democratic Party wish to see that change. We wish to see a national commitment to reducing the unemployment rate in Atlantic Canada.

• (1520)

The Minister of Transport stated in the House today that, "We will wait for four or five years and see if it works. We are putting in $200 million a year for five years and we will wait for four or five years and see how it works. The success of this is in the hands of the board that we have appointed". Atlantic Canadians, it is all your problem now. We are turning it over to you. We have taken away $1 billion per year, we are giving you back $200 million. In four or five years we will come and see how it has worked.

Instead of that, there ought to be a five-year commitment from the Government, or from any Government of Canada, to reduce the disparity between Atlantic Canada and the national economy by 20 per cent per year. That is the type of commitment we expect from a Government that is serious about reducing regional inequities in this country. Let us put into the legislation that that is the goal and the objective of the agency, and that the Government is committed to making moneys available on an annual basis to achieve those results. Have the agency make an annual report to Parliament on the progress that it has made. That would be a real commitment to the reduction of regional disparities. All Canadians would then know, without even thinking about it, that if the unemployment rate in Ontario was the same as it was in Newfoundland, that would require a national project and would be a matter of national concern. It is a matter of national concern now because it is Newfoundland, just as much as it would be if it were Ontario, Quebec, or any other province.

Atlantic Canadians deserve better from this country. They deserve a commitment from the Government of this country to reduce the regional disparities. We want targets in the legislation, and we want input on that board from sectors of the economy in Atlantic Canada other than the private sector. We need to have input from the co-operative sector. We need stronger commitment from labour, an involvement by regional development corporations and associations, and a stronger input from the voluntary sector and organized labour. These commitments are needed if this Government is to be seen as taking seriously any commitment to regional development.

There is a concern that there is a lack of political will to do what needs to be done about regional development. That is the cases. It is exists in this Government. I quoted what was stated by the former Minister of Public Works, a Minister from the Atlantic region, who stated that "this is the last kick at the can". The five year commitment of $200 million a year for all of Atlantic Canada is the last kick at the can. This is all we can do. After that there ain't no more. If that is all that this Government can do for the next five years for Atlantic Canada, it does not deserve to be the Government of this country, and Atlantic Canadians will not support it.

Prior to the Government's involvement in 1984, the Liberal Government had a chance for 15 years, with the exception of the brief interregnum of the Government of the Right Hon. Mr. Clark. During that 15 year period the commitment to regional development decreased; it did not increase. In fact, the former Liberal Party regional development critic, a Member from Nova Scotia, admitted that his Party lost the political will to stimulate economic growth in the last years of former Prime Minister Trudeau's Government. That is an admission that the political will and the commitment was lost.

Indeed, when the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) was Prime Minister, one of his first acts was to remove any Minister responsible for regional development. At that time, for the first time in 20 years, there was no one at the Cabinet table who was responsible for regional development. There was not one person whose responsibility was to see that regional development was to take place in this country. That was the extent of the loss of political will of the former Liberal administration which existed up until September, 1984. That was when it ended. Since 1984 this Government has shown how badly it treats regional development as an issue.

A very poignant way of expressing the concern of this Government's approach to regional development was expressed in The Ottawa Citizen in May, 1987. The article states:

> The Conservative government's approach to regional development seems to have one potentially fatal flaw: As in Charles Darwin's theory on survival of the fittest, some parts of the country may never flourish.

That is what has happened with the Government. It has one approach, and that is, if you are fit you survive, and otherwise you die. By taking money away from regional development in Atlantic Canada it is hanging Atlantic Canada out to dry, and all Atlantic Canadians will be the losers.

The people of Canada will rely on the New Democratic Party to make a commitment to a national effort on regional development; a commitment to attempt seriously in a targeted, programmed way to reduce economic disparities in this country, in a reasoned, carefully planned staged manner over a short period of time, and make the commitment to provide the funds to make that possible.

This can be done by way of the tax system. We know that the tax system as it presently exists favours the large corporations over the small. The economic reality of Canadian corporate structure is that the larger you are the less taxes you pay as a percentage of your earned income. Obviously that favours survival of the fittest. The fittest are those who will have more money to spend and co-operate with the Government to become larger at the expense of smaller enterprises. These smaller enterprises exist in the regions of this country.

Over the last 25 years we have seen a decrease in spending in the Atlantic region for regional development. In the late 1960s when DREE was first started, one-half of its budget went to Atlantic Canada. In the last year of the Liberal's power this had fallen to 22 per cent. In 1983-84 the Liberals spent $30 million less in the Atlantic region than in 1975-76. The people of Atlantic Canada cannot look to the Liberals for an answer. They cannot look to the Government for an answer. They will have to look elsewhere, to the New Democratic Party for a commitment on regional development.

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York—Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, today we have heard from several Members of Parliament from the Atlantic provinces on this very important measure. Like the previous speaker, they made some excellent points that are worthy of consideration. This also is an example of the high calibre of debate that we receive in this House from Members of Parliament from Atlantic Canada.

Since the establishment of DREE in 1969, substantial attention has been devoted to the problem of regional disparity as it manifests itself in the Atlantic region. In fact, the experiences of the federal Government in trying to meet the special needs of this region predate DREE. There were a wide variety of initiatives undertaken beginning in the late 1950s.

There have been a multitude of broad strategies and individual initiatives. One survey identifies nine major and significant policy shifts since 1963. In addition, there have been major studies of the successes and failures undertaken by Governments and by independent agencies and scholars. The late DREE published regional and provincial reports; a select committee of the Senate produced a very insightful document; the Macdonald Royal Commission, the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, and the Cape Breton Advisory Committee have all reported recently.

Given the time which has now elapsed since the first attempts to address the problem, and given the amount of information and analysis now available, it should be possible to arrive at coherent and effective new policies. It is now urgent that this be done.

• (1530)

Governments, and particularly the federal Government, now have a severely diminished capacity to redistribute wealth because of their deficits and their strained sources of revenue. We appear to have reached the point where corporations feel able to demand that provincial Governments compete with each other in offering extravagant concessions in order to obtain development. What all the reports tell us basically is that regional development policies have failed utterly to lessen disparities between the Atlantic provinces and the rest of the country. It is possible to argue, hypothetically, that in the absence of those policies the disparities would be even greater, but that thought provides very little comfort. The statistical demonstrations of this failure are legion.

We know that social policies and equalization payments have raised disposable incomes closer to the national average and allowed the Maritime provinces to sustain levels of health and educational services which would otherwise be impossible. These, in turn, generate local economic activity. Compensatory policies not only signal a commitment to the right of all individuals to basic standards of living and of services in all parts of the country, but they also signal a rejection of the idea of leaving the Atlantic region to the mercy of market forces, which could well have the effect of emptying it entirely. Direct government activity, such as military installations, also contributes to the standard of living. This is to the good, and so is decentralized administration and procurement in the region. It is one thing to raise disposable incomes, however, and another to increase the production of wealth and thus to lessen the dependency of the Atlantic region.

Efforts to stimulate economic development and diversification have not led to increases in earned incomes relative to the rest of the country, or lessened dependence on public sector spending in general, and federal spending and transfers in particular. Federal transfers to Governments and individuals in Atlantic Canada exceed revenues by $7 or $8 billion a year and account for 75 per cent of gross provincial product. That is a tragedy. This is true despite the achievement of specific objectives related to the creation of economic infrastructure and the stimulation of designated growth centres.

It is alarming to note that the low pay-off received from economic incentives has been consistent across several administrative approaches and changes in the nature of the incentives offered. There are some positive lessons to be gleaned. One is that projects do not outlast the incentives if they never made economic sense in the first place. They do not change the reality which discouraged investment in the first place, and they turn out to be a terribly expensive and demoralizing form of make-work project. The best DREE investments, by contrast, were in the expansion or modernization of existing viable enterprises, usually small to middle-sized and locally owned or controlled. It would be tempting in a time of fiscal restraint, but simplistic, for the federal Government to say that grants, tax incentives et cetera have not worked and thus should be abandoned. It would be simplistic because there is no evidence that these policies themselves are the problem or are unnecessary to generate economic growth. The truth is that traditional policy supports are almost certainly necessary, but apparently have not been sufficient to turn the Atlantic economy around. We must, therefore, recognize the fundamental problems which incentives and subsidies did not fully address.

Atlantic Canadians have to contend with a small market for their products. Although particular interest groups may see themselves threatened by prospects of freer trade with the United States, regional representatives should in general welcome the possibility of new economic opportunities in an expanded market. They and the Government of Canada must quickly identify the possible advantages and plan to seize them.

It has often been observed that some of the traditional disadvantages of Maritime industry, notably geographic ones, should not discourage the development of high technology industries, not to mention industries for which the region may in fact be uniquely suited. For example, several marine-related industries have been mooted in recent years. We should, therefore, be asking why outside capital is not attracted to genuine economic opportunities, especially when they are sweetened by incentives. It should equally be asked why these opportunities are often ignored even by indigenous entrepreneurs. If we knew why the Atlantic provinces were not considered attractive places to invest and why corporations hesitate to transfer highly skilled people there, we might understand why infrastructure and special incentives have not been sufficient to attract and hold industrial activity outside of natural resource exploitation. This is a roundabout way of posing a highly delicate question. Do the Atlantic provinces have characteristics which positively discourage or prevent investment? Do they produce enough skillful and ambitious entrepreneurs and managers, develop enough scientific and technological expertise, train a sufficiently qualified and disciplined workforce to be taken seriously by outside investors? Do we drive out the best and brightest of those we do manage to produce?

The subjects of education, manpower training, research, entrepreneurship and investment incentives are related and fundamental to a realistic analysis of economic disparity.

We must acknowledge the problem and begin to consider fundamental changes or no amount of compensatory spending and short-term incentives will alleviate the chronic dependency of Atlantic Canadians. Our ability to match brains with the rest of the industrialized world will ultimately determine whether we can achieve the goals of social justice and humanity which all of us want.

At the present time the economy of the Atlantic provinces appears to be going through a crisis of confidence. This crisis is both economic and psychological. It is thus imperative that the Government of Canada undertake a new initiative to expand and diversify the economic base of the Atlantic region. This new initiative by the federal Government must be strong and determined and, by its nature, must be seen to be strong and determined. It, too, must have its economic and psychological effects but they must be growth promoting and confidence building.

Since the creation of the Atlantic Development Board in 1962, substantial amounts have been spent by the Government of Canada to encourage economic development in the Atlantic provinces. Very little of this money, however, has gone to the private sector to encourage directly the expansion of employment in manufacturing. Most federal funds have gone to provincial Governments to expand the infrastructure or the social overhead capital of the region.

Any survey of federal spending for regional economic development in the Atlantic provinces over the last two decades will reveal that direct incentives to industry have been relatively small, indeed so small as to be most unlikely to have any significant impact on the process of economic development. The fact is that there has never been a determined and realistic effort by the Government of Canada to expand and diversify the industrial base of New Brunswick and the other Atlantic provinces. Industrial incentives in aggregate have been relatively weak, weak in relation to those available in central Canada and perhaps, more important, the will in Ottawa to promote industrial change in Atlantic Canada has been extremely weak.

Citizens of New Brunswick and other Atlantic provinces contrast the enormous efforts and expenditures made by the federal Government to expand the automobile and aircraft industries of central Canada with the puny and perfunctory efforts at industrial development east of the Quebec-New Brunswick border.

Industrial development can only succeed if there are strong incentives for industry and there is the will in Ottawa to assist in using these incentives to promote economic change. Regional industrial development must also become an important and pervasive objective of all the key economic Departments of the federal Government and must be co-ordinated to maximize its impact. In the past, industrial development in the Atlantic region has only been of peripheral interest.

What is the Government's response? The Government's response is before us today in the Bill to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, ACOA, has been designed by the Government of Canada to ensure the creation of a more favourable environment for sustained regional economic growth within which the people of Atlantic Canada will share increasingly the opportunities for employment and earned income available to other Canadians. The agency's prime objective is to reduce economic disparity between Atlantic Canada and the remainder of Canada through action, co-ordination and advocacy. ACOA is responsible for federal business and industrial development programs in the region with particular emphasis on small and medium-sized operations.

Its principal function is to design and deliver such programs, working closely with provincial Government and the private sector, and not as a substitute for the activities of other federal Departments. It has a particular responsibility to foster new enterprises at the local level. It has a strong co-ordinating mandate over all the region, particularly in job creation, training and skills development, local investment promotion, technology infrastructure development and procurement.

One of ACOA's objectives will be to build up the research capability of universities and other post-secondary institutions in Atlantic Canada and to ensure that regional enterprise is fostered. It is responsible for bringing a regional perspective to bear on the design of national economic and social programs that affect Atlantic Canada.

The agency, with its particular emphasis on business development aspects of regional development, seeks to stimulate the entrepreneurial environment of the region to improve the competitiveness regionally, nationally and internationally with small and medium-sized Atlantic businesses and to encourage adjustment generally to changing local and broader economic and market circumstances. The agency, guided by the advice of its board, seeks innovative ways in which to maximize the use of new and existing resources.

The board's views on the design and execution of flexible new programs and on the adequacy and possible modification of existing programs are being sought. In particular, the board advises the agency on ways in which the agency can work competitively with its clientele in programs to enhance economic and industrial growth, on strategies for ensuring Atlantic interests are addressed in the treatment of national issues, on methods for planning and co-ordinating economic development activities in Atlantic Canada, on possibilities for stimulating productivity improvements and technological innovation in the region, and on needs for improved information, program-delivery systems and analysis of barriers to Atlantic entrepreneurial activity.

The legislation will give the Atlantic-based agency the legal powers and clout needed to implement an innovative economic agenda aimed primarily at small and medium-sized entrepreneurs and based on the vision and creativity of the people of the region. The Bill before us gives far reaching authority to the agency including direct influence on the programs of other federal Departments inasmuch as these affect the economic climate in Atlantic Canada.

Not only are the organizational and administrative characteristics of the Government's new policy in establishing the agency unique, but what sets ACOA apart is also the flexibility of its approach to promoting and supporting entrepreneurship in Atlantic Canada. Greater employment and higher earned incomes are dependent upon assisting entrepreneurs to realize their objectives without the impediments of regional disparity. The agency will have unprecedented authority of its own to assist small and medium-sized businesses, the types of businesses that create the most jobs.

This legislation gives the people of Atlantic Canada their first real chance to design economic policies which affect them directly. Following the Prime Minister's June 1987 challenge to Atlantic Canadians to become architects of their own economic destiny, numerous business and community leaders have been participating in an ongoing consultation with the agency regarding what needs to be done in Atlantic Canada. This dialogue will add well-thought-out program substance to the legislative structure before us today. It will also help devise effective guidelines to gain maximum benefit from the $1.5 billion of new money set aside by the Government for new ACOA programs.

The new legislation will allow the ACOA Minister and the agency to have a great deal of flexibility regarding decision-making in the region. It will allow co-financing of regionally advantageous projects with other Departments and the establishment of designated areas of exceptional opportunities. It will harness federal programs to the common goal of increasing opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada.

This is a Bill for the future. It is a Bill which gives Atlantic Canadians direction over their economic future. It is a Bill which places decision-making in the region where it belongs. It is a Bill which gives small and medium-sized enterprises the tools they need to encourage economic growth and stability in the region. It is a Bill which adapts regional development programs to regional needs, not regions to the strictures of development programs. It is a Bill which will help create the environment needed for economic growth. It is a Bill which has the flexibility needed to encourage real growth and prosperity in the region.

I urge all Hon. Members to read this Bill carefully because I know that if they do, they will agree that this is a Bill for a future of growth and prosperity for Atlantic Canada. I will conclude by asking Hon. Members to act quickly on this Bill for the sake of the future of Atlantic Canada and Atlantic Canadians. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to participate in the debate today.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, since this Government took office in September of 1984, $1.5 billion per year has been removed from support for the Atlantic region. Under the provisions of this Bill and with the funding we understand will be available, the Atlantic region will get $200 million per year in each of the next five years. This will mean that even when this Bill is passed and the funding is allocated, the Atlantic regions will still receive substantially less in federal government assistance to develop the Atlantic region than it was receiving when the former Liberal Government was in power. I would ask the Hon. Member how he can square the brave words we have just heard him utter with the reality of what the Conservative Government has done.

Second, how can the Hon. Member and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) argue that the free trade deal will give the Atlantic region the ability to get involved in procurement in the United States when he knows and the Prime Minister should know that the determined needs of the American Government and large American corporations are very large? Even if Canadian companies can get into the market, something that is doubtful, the contracts would go to companies in Ontario and Quebec, companies which are much larger and could therefore bid much more successfully for those supposed American contracts.

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his very in-depth and well researched question. I think he has posed two very vital and important questions. The Hon. Member spoke of reality, so I would like to give him some.

The Atlantic agency has been given responsibility for all regional development programs relating to the Atlantic region including the following: the Atlantic Enterprise Program, the Industrial Regional Development Program, Enterprise Cape Breton and the economic regional development agreements. Along with these programs came the money to administer the programs.

The present level of expenditures under these programs amounts to approximately $196 million. That is a considerable increase over the regional development expenditures in Atlantic Canada by the last Liberal Government. Average expenditures under IRDAs and GDAs by the Liberal Government in the last three years of its mandate, 1981 to 1984, amounted to $146 million. Average expenditures under IRDAs and GDAs by this Conservative Government in the last three years amounted to $198.5 million. That is an increase in expenditures of over 35 per cent.

The Prime Minister and all Atlantic Ministers were not satisfied with this increase in expenditures and have therefore committed to the Atlantic provinces an additional $1.05 billion over the next five years, an additional $200 million yearly for five years.

The Hon. Member asked a question relating to freer trade. I am very glad to hear a realistic interest in that subject now being undertaken by his colleagues.

Living in New Brunswick and reading American newspapers, I have observed that in the New England states, there is a very low unemployment rate. There are large advertisements appearing in The Bangor Daily News every day asking for employees. There are not enough people to fill the jobs.

We can learn a lesson by getting into that market. We can build on the excellent universities which exist in the area. We can use the New England states, our natural trading partners along the Atlantic seaboard, as a market for our goods to enable us to expand. One mill owner has indicated that he will be expanding to the tune of 200 more employees which, while not much to people from central Canada, means an awful lot to us in Atlantic Canada.

In addition, what do the Americans want from the maritime provinces? I think they would like access to our two deep-water ports, Halifax and Saint John. If the Hon. Member examines the configuration of the Atlantic shelf as it extends out on the seaboard, he will find it is relatively shallow, with two big exceptions. Halifax and Saint John stick out into the Atlantic like two hungry jaws facing the Persian Gulf, from whence come the largest ships in the world. One of the things we can sell the Americans is a transportation facility extended all along the Atlantic seaboard.

I want to thank the Hon. Member for those searching questions and for giving me an opportunity to address important subjects.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I caught the reference by the Hon. Member to the development of the universities of New Brunswick, institutions in which I have a special interest because of my family background in that province. I know of the traditionally great love for learning among the people of New Brunswick, and one of the things I have been waiting to hear about in the debate today is the extent to which the educational institutions and programs available to the people of New Brunswick will benefit from this new Atlantic development program.

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, as some Hon. Members may know, this is a subject that I consider very important. It was the subject of a Private Members' Motion which all Members of this House approved of and passed. That Bill is now before the Standing Committee on Secretary of State for extensive study.

One of the lessons we learned from the New England states and their development is the necessity to build on the expertise in our universities. That is what they have done, and the spin-off benefits in new industry and research and development have been simply tremendous.

We in New Brunswick have developed a centre of excellence in the form of a forestry complex which has received assistance from all the Atlantic provinces, the federal Government, as well as other provincial Governments. It is developing new techniques and opening a window on research in the vital forest industry. It has blazed a path which I would like to see ACOA follow. I know that in that agency's mandate there is a directive to address that subject, and I am very pleased with that.

One of the things we might do, for example, is to look at the business administration school at the University of New Brunswick and work with it to develop an international marketing concept that could help the private sector in the Atlantic provinces to expand and to develop new markets and new opportunities for growth.

Another thing we can do in concert with our universities is to develop an innovation testing centre, a science mall, which will test new inventions and disseminate knowledge about them to people in the area so we can create more jobs.

Another area we can work together on in the field of education is training. That is a direct responsibility of ACOA. We could work with our universities in developing education, training new entrepreneurs and our workforce in order to help make Atlantic Canada a Mecca for entrepreneurs and highly-skilled people in order to take advantage of freer trade and the other opportunities which exist in our country.

Mr. Corbett: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate my colleague on putting a very succinct case for the Bill before the House today. There is probably no one in this House, and certainly no one in Atlantic Canada, who is more familiar with the details of regional development and regional disparities than the Hon. Member. I am sure that had he an opportunity, he would have dealt with the provisions of the Bill dealing with financing and co-financing and the co-operative programs, which can be implemented once the Bill is passed. These provisions have one purpose and that is the economic growth of the region.

I would ask the Hon. Member what he would suggest is the single most important difference between the ACOA and previous approaches to the problems of regional development in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his question. There are some significant differences. The depth of the measures open to the new agency is more extensive than under DRIE, DREE, or other programs of the past. I think that decisions being made in the area, after extensive consultations, is a factor, but if I have to name one single thing, and that is what he asked me to do, I would say that the ability of the agency to focus the resources of all Departments of Government and all agencies as well as its own funding component on the problems in the area is probably the largest and most outstanding difference compared to the former situation.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question with respect to federal government procurement. That is one way in which we can look for economic diversification in the Atlantic region. Industries in the region can develop provided they are assured of the ability to bid on federal government contracts through the Department of Supply and Services. The free trade agreement with the U.S. would preclude an area like the Atlantic region from any such preferential treatment. Therefore, I would like the Hon. Member to stand and explain what appears to be a situation where the Atlantic provinces would not be able to take advantage of any federal government procurement programs.

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his question and I will be glad to, in his words, stand and explain how the procurement program works.

There exists in the Department of Supply and Services a program where the Department attempts to procure goods and services for use in the Atlantic provinces from people in the Atlantic provinces. At this point we are not filling the need. We are procuring goods for use in the Atlantic provinces from outside the region. This program, which is designed to address this fault and remedy it, is now in place, working, but it needs an awful lot more fine tuning.

There are a lot more things that can be produced in Atlantic Canada if we give them a market. Federal procurement is one way of giving them that market. That is the reason the program is in place and operating. By combining that program with others under ACOA we could advance the region a great deal. I would like to thank the Hon. Member very much for his suggestion.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, in view of the hour I will make my question brief. I wonder if the Hon. Member is aware of the report of the federal-provincial task force on regional development laid before the First Ministers' Conference in Toronto in November which concludes that the resources applied specifically to regional development over the past 25 years have been small in relative terms. It says expenditures in Atlantic Canada were in the order of 3 per cent of total federal expenditures and are now less than that. It says that greater expenditures could well have had significantly greater results.

In view of that fact, and the reduction in regional development expenditures over the last three years under the current Government of $1 billion a year, replacing it with $200 million a year, could the Hon. Member tell the House whether or not he is satisfied with the level of expenditure on regional development programs in this country?

Mr. Howie: I can answer that very simply and say no, I am not satisfied with the level of expenditures on regional development. I will not be satisfied until those of us in Atlantic Canada are at a par with the rest of the country. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is not satisfied either. That is why we have this Bill before the House, which I am sure the Hon. Member, being from Atlantic Canada, will want to support.

I also want to indicate to him, as I did to his colleague, that expenditures for regional development in Atlantic Canada have increased by 35 per cent since this Government took office. That is a comparison of the last three years of the last administration and the first and only three years of this administration. I would like to refer the Member to the comparison of annual federal and DREE budgets from 1971-72 to 1983-84 when the Government took over. We did extremely well in the first year in terms of federal budget. We had 1.8 per cent of the spending power. In the last year we were down to 0.6 per cent. Therefore, the Hon. Member can rest assured that we have nowhere to go but up, and we did go up in the first three years we were in Government. The figures I have given are the expenditures, not the budgets. I compared the expenditures in the initial figures I gave to him and his colleague.

• (1600)

I want to thank the Member for his question. No one has a monopoly on the desire to see the disparities erased in Atlantic Canada, no political Party and no individual. All Parties have a very real interest in seeing this project work. We now need constructive suggestions and an awful lot of work. We must all get behind it. Someone said earlier that this was perhaps our last opportunity. I do not know whether it is or not, but it is a great opportunity of which we have to take advantage.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan)—Administration of Justice—Inquiry why Government opposed appeal of Luc Paquette to have criminal proceedings trial conducted in French / Right to hold trial proceedings in French in Alberta—Position of Prime Minister; the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse)—Labour relations—Air Canada strike—Suggested suspension of work stoppage; the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart)—Regional economic development—Montreal East—Loss of jobs at Canadian Vickers / Request for particulars.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, ATLANTIC CANADA, 1987

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I will pick up on the last statement made by the Hon. Member for York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie). He said that no one has a monopoly on compassion for the Atlantic area or on a wish to see the Atlantic area develop and advance. I think that is right. Governments of all stripes have been stymied over the years and the decades in trying to come up with something that will work.

In spite of all efforts by Governments over the years we are still behind in per capita income and the disparities still exist. What we have done until now certainly has not worked very well. I hope that this initiative works. I doubt very much that it is the last initiative. My own people in Newfoundland have been around for 400 years and I doubt very much that we will pack it in tomorrow. Whether or not this is the last gasp or the last kick at the can, I do hope it works.

However, I have very serious reservations and some questions that I want to raise about this particular deal. I do not want to get into a debate with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) on who has the best record in the Atlantic provinces. He tried to make the case this morning that what the Liberals did was all bad and inconsequential and that what the Tories have done since 1984 has been excellent and outstanding. I would let the people decide that. The fact that we returned three Liberal Members out of seven in the Province of Newfoundland during the Tory sweep is indicative that the people know what has been done for them and who has been doing it. I think our record stands up in retrospect.

However, I do not think that kind of debate gets us anywhere. We should be asking questions about this particular deal. First, with respect to the $1 billion, the Government is very good at moving money around. It is the old shell game. They take the money away and then give it back and announce that they are giving new money. They did the same thing with R and D last week. In his economic statement the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) reduced incentives for research and development, particularly for technological firms, then the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced that the Government was going to give $1.3 billion to research and development in Canada. They take it away one year and give it back the next; it is the old shell game.

We have not yet seen any new money out of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. The money which has been coming through is from the old DRIE program. We will wait and see whether any new money comes through.

The Minister of Transport said this morning that they were looking for ideas. That is a silly proposition to put forward. There is no shortage of ideas in the Atlantic provinces as to what needs to be done. If he looks on his desk he will see a pile of proposals from the Province of Newfoundland alone on what economic initiatives can be funded. To say that we are doing this because we want ideas from the Atlantic provinces is an absolutely silly proposition.

The Minister of Transport then said that Atlantic Canadians will have to depend on themselves to pull themselves up by their bootstraps. Well, we must give them the wherewithal, the context, and the proper incentives if we expect them to do that.

The main problem I have is that there is no commitment here to infrastructure. The Member for York—Sunbury talked about initiatives which he thought should be taken. He referred to two deep water ports. There is no provision under the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, in so far as I can see, to deal with such things as deep water ports. Indeed, there is no mandate for them to deal with infrastructure at all. It says that they will continue to administer the existing ERDA agreements, but there is certainly no commitment to money.

As a matter of fact, the Minister of Transport made it very clear when he spoke on first reading that this initiative was for business purposes. That is my main criticism of the initiative before us. It is all very well to talk about encouraging business opportunities in Atlantic Canada, but Atlantic Canada is weak in infrastructure. Until such time as you close the gap between the level of infrastructure in the Atlantic region and the level in the rest of Canada there will not be a level playing field and equal opportunity.

You can talk all you like about offering a man money to set up a new fish plant or to apply technology to his fish plant, but if he does not have a paved road over which he can truck fish to market in good quality what is the point of setting up that plant? The same applies if he does not have three-phase power or water and sewer in the community. These are matters which should be addressed but are not addressed in the measure presently before us. There is no provision here at all for infrastructure.

If there is a difference between the policies followed by the Liberal Party when in government and the policies followed by the present Government, this is the fundamental difference. We tried to respond to needs in terms of infrastructure. The Minister of Transport will know that we built roads. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) referred to the road up the northern peninsula this morning. That is one of the roads that was built under previous DREE agreements. The other road which was started was that from Plum Point in his riding to Englee and Roddickton in my riding, but it has not been finished. The road from Main Brook to the new St. Anthony airport has not been finished either, and nor has the trans-Labrador Highway.

There is an agreement for the TransCanada Highway and something like $10 million a year for the construction of the trans-Labrador Highway, but there is no new highways agreement in Newfoundland for secondary roads. We have had such an agreement before and are lacking that now. There is no provision in the legislation presently before us for carrying on with that kind of work.

I submit that that kind of work is very important. We have to build those roads and water and sewer systems. We have to put in place the necessary infrastructure, particularly in small rural communities, if there is going to be equal opportunity for people to compete in the future. Indeed, I think we should turn the clock right back to the beginning and take a good look at the Atlantic Development Board, the original vehicle to address regional disparity.

In the report which Mr. Savoie made to the Government he recommended the same sort of things. I want to read from a story in Atlantic Insight in which they talk about a return to grass roots. They quote Mr. Savoie who was raised in Kent County in New Brunswick.

• (1610)

He says that a return to a more grass-roots, self-sustaining approach would be the better alternative. The article goes on:

> Savoie used the old Atlantic Development Board (ADB) as a model for his new federal agency. Created in the early 1960's—

—created by a Conservative Government:

> —the ADB was given six years to spend $150 million to improve the infrastructure of the region. During this period the area's highways were paved, hydro plants were built and much needed information on the Atlantic economy was collected—

The article goes on to say:

> The board's last president, Ian MacKeigan, the 72-year-old former Chief Justice of the Nova Scotia Supreme Court, remains convinced that the ADB, with its local board of directors and less ambitious mandate, was a very better approach to regional development—

I suggest that this is true. All over Atlantic Canada one can see evidence of projects that were put in place by the Atlantic Development Board and which cannot be put in place by the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. It just cannot be done because it does not have the mandate and has no money to do it.

If we are going to make changes, I suggest we go back to the beginning and model the agencies on the Atlantic Development Board, to give it the flexibility and the money to invest not simply in business ventures but in infrastructure as well.

The Minister of Transport also said this morning that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will be an advocate here in Ottawa. That suggests one of two things: Either there is no advocate, or the one that exists is not satisfactory.

I resent that as a Member of Parliament. As a matter of fact, one could probaby make the case that this infringes on the rights of Members of Parliament. We are elected as advocates. People vote for Members of Parliament to come here and be their advocate, yet the Government is telling us that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will be an advocate. I resent that. Either the advocates are not there on the other side of the House or they are not doing their job. I think it is silly to talk about an agency being an advocate for an area.

There will be no benefit from being an advocate with other Departments because this legislation gives no guarantee that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will have any clout over other federal government Departments. It must be able to influence other Departments, particularly the Department of Transport and the Department of Finance. There is no indication that it will have any influence over those main line agencies.

While we need many new agreements, the one about which I feel most strongly is the renewal of the Labrador sub agreement. We were able to establish under that agreement much needed fisheries infrastructure on the Labrador Coast. We were able to build roads, put in water and sewer systems and were able to build nursing stations. That agreement has expired and there is no money to carry on that work. I would like to see that agreement renewed, but there is no provision for it in this legislation.

The whole issue of free trade has been mentioned. I think it is important to mention free trade in this context as well. I have seen no evidence that the Atlantic provinces will have any great advantage from free trade. As a matter of fact, no economist or other authority has shown me that there will be an advantage for the Atlantic provinces under free trade. I believe present disparities will be entrenched with the free trade agreement. If that is so, I think it is important that special provisions be made for the Atlantic area that would give us the necessary advantage.

The main problem I see with the free trade agreement is the provisions for energy. One of the fundamental economic measures one must take in Newfoundland in order to advance economically is the development of the hydro potential. In Labrador there is something like 10,000 megawatts of electricity. Yet that water is flowing to the sea every day untapped.

When the Premier of Newfoundland gave his support to the free trade deal, he evidently had some sort of commitment from the Prime Minister that he would get involved with the Government of Newfoundland and the Government of Quebec in advancing hydro development in Labrador. Yet Premier Bourassa announced recently a long-term, $1 billion agreement with the United States for the next 15 years with no new sources of energy, no development of the Lower Churchill. I do not know what commitment was given to the Premier of Newfoundland by the Prime Minister but there is no evidence that any work is going ahead to advance the development of that hydro potential.

It will be even more difficult because of two requirements under the free trade agreement. One is the requirement to sign a long-term agreement with the Americans, assuring them of a continuing supply of energy over a long term period. The second requirement, which is even worse, is that we must guarantee the Americans no differentiation in price. In other words, we must sell to the Americans at the same price as we sell in Canada. Until now we had the flexibility of offering a made-in-Canada price to industrialists and entrepreneurs who want to set up in this country. That will no longer be possible.

I suggest that the free trade agreement itself, in this particular aspect, limits industrial and economic development in the future.

The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency also vaguely refers to training and development. It states that one of the mandates was procurement, training and skills development, job creation, technology, infrastructure development.

I hope the record of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will be better in training and skills development than the record of the Government of Canada thus far. The record of the Government thus far has been to cut back on moneys available to young people for training and job creation. For example, there was the announcement during the Christmas recess that Challenge 88 will be kept at the same level it has been for the past two years. On the one hand, the Government talks about training and skills development yet, on the other, cuts back on existing funds. It has cut back on Established Programs Financing. The Minister of Finance announced that instead of proceeding with a 7 per cent increase over the next five years, he would only proceed with a 5 per cent increase, which means that the Province of Newfoundland will lose $181 milllion over the next five years for post-secondary education.

That is the record of the Government, yet we are told that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will become involved in training and skills development. There is no more important area with which it can become involved. It should begin with the problem of illiteracy, which is the greatest sore on the body politic. When we consider the level of illiteracy in this country, it begins with a rate of some 17 per cent in British Columbia, 20 per cent in Central Canada, and reaches a figure of 42 per cent in Newfoundland. While the program should begin by dealing with illiteracy, the reaction of the Government has been to throw $1 million nationally at the problem. Such an amount is peanuts, and virtually an insult.

How can we believe the Government is serious when it cuts back on Challenge 88, on Established Programs Financing and gives token lip service to a problem like illiteracy? While I hope the Government will take some brave initiatives for training and skills development, that has certainly not been its record so far.

I hope this policy succeeds because what Parties on both sides of the House have done so far has not been as effective as it should have been. Otherwise the disparities would be erased and the gap closed. I hope this works, but I have very serious doubts as does everyone else. A survey of the Atlantic provinces Chamber of Commerce conducted in October found that only 18 per cent of the Atlantic provinces Chamber of Commerce membership believed that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency had any chance of dealing with regional disparity. More than 25 per cent said the chances were poor and 48 per cent said the prospects for success were only fair. There is not a great deal of enthusiasm for this particular measure. In spite of that, I do hope it works.

• (1620)

I doubt very much, given the present mandate, the present policy and the present allotment of dollars, that we are going to see a brave new world in the Atlantic in the very near future.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) a question but before I do so I would like to preface it with a few remarks.

The Hon. Member, seems to believe, at least from the context of his speech, that the infrastructure, which previous Liberal administrations had tried unsuccessfully for a good number of years to put in place is the key to the success of regional development in Atlantic Canada. I would remind the Hon. Member that Atlantic Canada has first-class engineering firms. Its 13 universities and technical colleges have highly qualified researchers working in well-equipped facilities. There are high-tech firms, enterprises dealing in all the products of the new industrial revolution throughout the entire region. There are service industries and manufacturing firms the equal of none. These engineers, researchers, industrialists, manufacturers and businessmen are competitive. They are deserving and anxious for government contracts and export opportunities. These firms are the equal of none. They excel in every way. I would also remind the Hon. Member that one of the jobs of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is to ensure that federal Government decision-makers know that these enterprises exist and what they do and that national policies and programs reflect an awareness of these facts.

I would suggest that previous administrations have been deficient in doing so. The agency will also keep on top of what other federal Departments and agencies do and plan to do in order to ensure that those plans, if they have a bearing on Atlantic Canada, meet the aims of the agency. It will not take too long for other Departments to become aware that there is an advocate for Atlantic Canada, contrary to the remarks of the Hon. Member. That advocate is the federal Government, this federal Government. It will not be long before federal activity in Atlantic Canada is more unified and joint action by Departments and agencies commonplace.

A unique feature of this Bill reinforces the Minister's co-ordination activities. That is Clause 9. That part of the Bill states that when the Minister is satisfied that the implementation of a program or project authorized by any other Act would further the purpose of the agency, the Minister may conditionally or unconditionally undertake to transfer funds appropriated for the purpose of ACOA to supplement funds that the Minister responsible for the program or project has undertaken to expend. This unique co-financing provision means that the Minister for ACOA can transfer ACOA funds to another federal project or program if that will help ACOA meet its objectives.

That means that ACOA will not have to develop its own programs where there may be programs administered by another Department that will be doing the same job. It means that if there is a progam that would help ACOA foster economic growth in the region, but the program cannot be extended or fully used in Atlantic Canada because of a funding problem, ACOA can then add funds so the program can benefit Atlantic Canada.

The co-ordination and co-financing inherent in the Bill gives the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency the flexibility it must have to pursue its purpose of economic growth in the region.

The Hon. Member has suggested that infrastructure is the way. How does the Hon. Member square that with the fact that he was a member of the Cabinet of the Government during the period of time when infrastructure was being touted as the way for restructuring, refinancing, and making Atlantic Canada independent of the regional disparity that we see there today? That was the old Liberal approach. How does the Hon. Member square his speech of today with the fact that those programs obviously did not work? As my colleague, the Hon. Member for York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie) pointed out, $200 billion later we see that those programs have not worked. The Hon. Member stands and says he hopes this new program of this Government will work. He said that on at least three different occasions. Does this mean—after he tells us how his speech squares with the old approach—that he will indeed support the program, that it is worthy of his support and worthy of the support of all Members of this House?

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the approach did work. If that approach had not been in effect we would be a lot worse off than we are today. We at least held people in place. The gap has not been bridged but at least it is the same. I suggest that if that approach had not been taken we would have fallen further behind.

The Hon. Member talked about all sorts of good, solid firms, training institutions, research institutions, and so on. I submit that we really do not need a regional economic development package at all if the case he is making is that we have good, solid, substantial firms in Atlantic Canada. I submit that particularly in rural areas—and that is my main concern. Those are the people I represent—we cannot start to develop business until we have infrastructure in place. How can we have them all without water, sewer and proper energy sources? How can we have plants servicing areas and transporting a product to market unless we have proper roads? That does not make any sense at all. I submit that even though we have done some of that, we have not done enough. However, we as a Government started it, and I think the present Government should be continuing that program. There is no provision for that at all. None of the billion dollars can be spent on infrastructure, as I understand it. It does not have that flexibility. Sure, we can ask another Department to do it. We can ask the Department of Transport if we want. But transport does not have to do it and we do not have the money in the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency to do it ourselves. We had it before under DREE and under DRIE but we do not have it here. That is the difference.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I note there seems to be some difference of opinion among different residents of the Atlantic area from Labrador to New Brunswick. The Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal (Mr. Corbett) seems to be presenting a point of view that has also been reported in the Atlantic press. For instance, William Smith, who is a professor emeritus, economics, at the University of New Brunswick has been quoted as saying he does not think Ottawa has ever really understood what the real vital problem is, which is expanding the industrial base. I believe that was the argument Members from New Brunswick seemed to be making here this afternoon.

I note in his argument the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal was touting the high credibility of the engineering firms, which I expect received their high level of technology from building the bridges, and wharves and infrastructure that is perhaps fully developed in New Brunswick, but I understand from the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) that that is not the case in Labrador. Is this just a New Brunswick-Labrador problem or does the Hon. Member still honestly believe there needs to be more infrastructure built in all parts of Atlantic Canada? Is there a regional or geographical difference in the needs within the Atlantic area between Labrador and New Brunswick?

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, we can only speak as we find. I would think that the gap in terms of infrastructure is not confined to any one province. I suspect that there are probably areas of New Brunswick which do not have the type of infrastructure that Saint John and Fredericton would have. I suppose that there are areas of Nova Scotia and certainly areas of Prince Edward Island which are looking for an improved infrastructure.

As a matter of fact, this very day there is a plebiscite going on as to whether the people of Prince Edward Island should have a connection to the mainland. That is infrastructure. That is the point that I am making. This very day there is a judgment being made by the people of Prince Edward Island as to whether or not they want to improve their infrastructure.

How can one compete unless there is an infrastructure in place? One cannot. We cannot talk about putting icing on the cake until we have baked it.

I submit that there is a gap in infrastructure development between the Atlantic region and the rest of Canada. I suspect that that applies, too, to parts of northern Ontario. I suspect that if we were to ask the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) to describe parts of northern Ontario, he would tell us that in certain areas there is a need for upgraded infrastructure. I can tell Hon. Members that there is certainly a need in my area. There are parts of the Northwest Territories and Yukon which could use improved infrastructure. There are parts of Canada that are experiencing the same kind of choice that the people of Prince Edward Island are making today. That is the point I am making. It cannot be one or the other. There has to be an agency which deals with infrastructure and industrial development at the same time.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, as an Atlantic Canadian I would like to say how much I welcome this initiative and how much my constituents welcome it. In many ways we are two years ahead of the Atlantic region in most of my riding because we have the Enterprise Cape Breton Board, which is a system that parallels what is proposed in the Bill before the House today. We have an autonomous organization with tremendous flexibility and local control.

By way of disagreement with the Hon. Member from Newfoundland I would say that there is nothing in this Bill which precludes agreements dealing with infrastructure. In fact, when the Minister who spoke first today addressed the question, he said only that the $1 billion would not be some kind of slush fund to administer infrastructure programs. He made it clear that the money was earmarked for business to achieve productive employment for Atlantic Canadians. He also made it clear that infrastructure type programs were still possible under agreements with the provinces. He was referring here to ERDA-type agreements. The Bill is very clear in giving to ACOA total flexibility to introduce new programs and to bring forward initiatives that are deemed to be in the economic development interests of Atlantic Canada.

In closing my comments I would like to say that this is not something that is totally new. We do not need to reach into the clouds to speculate about what all this means. We have a precedent in Atlantic Canada. It is called Enterprise Cape Breton. It is an enterprise which was brought forward to reflect the philosophical direction of our Government. It is an enterprise which has been very successful. In fact, it has been so successful that in the last 12 months the unemployment rate in Cape Breton has dropped from the 21 per cent range down to the 15 per cent range. Success speaks for itself. The principles that have been embodied in this Bill are the principles that are working for the people of my riding.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member were to check the speech of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) on first reading he would see that the Minister said very clearly that this measure was not for infrastructure, that it is for business development. I do not have the Minister's speech in front of me but I was here when he made it.

Mr. O'Neil: That is the $1 billion.

Mr. Rompkey: That is right.

Mr. O'Neil: But there is other money. There are the ERDAs.

Mr. Rompkey: Where is the ERDA money? It is all running out. My ERDA has run out. I have ideas on the table now. Why does the Government not just renew the Labrador subagreement for a start? It has run out.

The danger is that other Departments will now say that because the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is in place we do not have to worry about the Atlantic area, we can worry about the West, northern Ontario and other places. There is a real danger that other Departments can get off the hook by simply pointing to this agency as the agency for the Atlantic area. Yet this agency has no provision, and certainly no funding, for infrastructure at the present time.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on Bill C-103. We in the New Democratic Party caucus agree in general with the thrust of any type of regional development program that seeks to decentralize decision-making, to build on the strengths of local development, which seeks input from local people who know the regions well and which seeks to stimulate that which is possible within a region. We have no problems with that. In fact, this caucus at the beginning of this Parliament put on the road a committee which travelled across Canada to look specifically at the ways in which we can create employment in areas that have difficulty in attracting investments and in diversifying economic bases. We then produced a document entitled Canada Unlimited. That document was presented to the Government. It is a compendium of positive proposals with respect to moving to full employment. The Government can talk from now until the cows come home and tell us that it has created 125,000 jobs since it has been in office, or 80,000—

Mr. O'Neil: One million!

Mr. Rodriguez: I hear a Tory from the wilderness on my left. Can you believe, Mr. Speaker, that a Tory from the left is saying "One million"?

An Hon. Member: What about Tories on this side of the House?

Mr. Rodriguez: The Tories in front do not count. Only the ones on the left count when they are being positive. The question that one has to ask oneself, is where are those jobs being created?

Mr. O'Neil: They are being created everywhere.

Mr. Rodriguez: I hear a lamb bleating—

• (1640)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry but I cannot seem to hear the Hon. Member. I would appreciate it if Hon. Members would allow him to say a few words.

Mr. Mayer: I suggest when the Hon. Member speaks that he face the House. It is difficult for us to hear him when his back is to the rest of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt has the floor.

Mr. Rodriguez: I suppose it all depends on the position of the Minister. I always face you, Mr. Speaker, which is the correct procedure. I know that where the summit lies and rests, Mr. Speaker, is right with you. If Tory Members find themselves to my back, I am sorry, but I cannot help that.

Mr. Rompkey: They are behind you all the way, John.

Mr. Rodriguez: I would rather have Tories behind me than Liberals.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: I want to comment on these jobs that have been created. The bulk of them have been created within a 60-mile radius of Metropolitan Toronto. In my region the latest unemployment figures show an unemployment rate of 13.3 per cent. In Newfoundland the rate is still at 18 per cent. Throughout the Atlantic region the rates are at very high, unconscionable levels. That is after three years of having a Tory Government in office based on a program of jobs, jobs, jobs. Those regions are still suffering regional disparities.

In its report of the week of August 22 the Economic Council of Canada comments on the, "starkness of regional disparities" in Canada's growth rates as a major problem.

As I stated, we drafted a report entitled Canada Unlimited, which is a compendium of very positive proposals with respect to building up the economies of areas like the Atlantic, northeastern Ontario, northern British Columbia, and the northern Prairies. We presented that to the Government. To date there has not been one move to implement any of those positive suggestions.

What we have here before us is Bill C-103 which is the Government's response. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) calls this response his "last kick at the can". He tells the people of the Atlantic that this is their "last kick at the can". I think that he should be put in the can. Then all of us can go and have a kick at it.

Can you believe, Mr. Speaker, the depths of hopelessness? This Minister is saying if ACOA does not work, that is it. The Government is giving up. That is what the Minister of Public Works has stated. He states that this may be the "last kick at the can" as far as development programs for the region are concerned. He then turns around and tells the people in the Atlantic region that they will be responsible for this program. The Government states that the people of the Atlantic will be responsible for the program. Of course, the suggestion is that if the program fails it is not the Government's fault. It is the blame-the-victim syndrome again. It is the fault of the Atlantic people not the fault of the federal Tory Government.

Earlier today we talked about the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) before he became Prime Minister running in the by-election in Central Nova in the Atlantic region. He no sooner got that seat than they never saw him again. He cut and run. It is only when he was embarrassed while appearing at the 300 Club in Halifax that he put his face back in Central Nova, after he had deserted the Atlantic region. I want to tell the Tories that this is their last kick at the can. If they have the courage to call an election shortly, they will find themselves kicked right out of the can.

In principle we have no problem with decentralization. But when we look at what is proposed for this program, we cannot agree with the funding. In effect when listening to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) this morning, and when listening to the Government and the Prime Minister, one would think that the Government is putting up $1.05 billion over five years and that this is a great pile of new money that it is putting into the Atlantic region. In fact, it is the old shell game.

Since 1984 when the Conservatives took power, they have cut approximately $1.5 billion annually from the various federal government spending programs in the Atlantic region. Can we remember those heady days when they were all gung-ho on cutting deficits? They had old Erik Nielsen—velcro lips—who proposed the program called the Nielsen report which drastically cut programs in the Atlantic region. Every day in the House we were screaming at the Government about the cut-backs. Well, they came to $1.5 billion annually. What the Government has removed, it is now telling us it will compensate the Atlantic region by putting $200 million a year back in over five years to come to $1.05 billion. That is a laugh.

In this Bill we also have the principle of decentralization. The Government states that it will decentralize. It is not going to be like the old DREE programs where Don Jamieson was the Minister here and all the bureaucrats in Ottawa decided which programs were going to go in the Atlantic region, in northern Ontario, and in other regions of the country. They stated that that will not be done any more. It was the old sleight of hand. They stated that they were decentralizing and setting up this agency with 19 members on the board. I will come to those specifics about the 19 in a moment. But there will be 19 members on the board. Not all of them have been appointed as yet. The headquarters will be in Moncton. There will be sub-head offices in each of the Atlantic provinces. There will be 300 bureaucrats.

The question you might want to ask, Mr. Speaker, is that not decentralization? I know that is what you are thinking, Mr. Speaker. I can see by the look that that is the thought you have in your mind. As much as I know that you would like to support that principle of decentralization, Mr. Speaker, it is not decentralization. When you strip away all of the verbiage and the rhetoric, the decisions are still going to be made here in Ottawa, and of all places, in the other place.

In the discussions on Bill C-22 the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) stated that it was an undemocratic place. They were not elected over there. Senator Lowell Murray will be the chief honcho for this operation. In fact, that is set out very clearly in Clauses 5, 6, 7, 20, and 21. The powers rest with the Minister who is a Senator and who is not elected. The powers rest over there. He will then appoint a chief operations officer, a chap by the name of McPhail. His duties are the duties of a Deputy Minister. The bureaucracy rests here. The Minister has the authority to approve or not approve any project. The Minister calls the shots, so the shots will still be here in Ottawa. That is not decentralization at all. In fact, Clause 11 reveals the close ties between the President and the Minister. It states:

> (2) The President is the chief executive officer of the Agency and, under the direction of the Minister, has control and supervision over the work, officers and employees of the Agency.

So what is the purpose of the board? The question then is, what does the board do? The board has no power. It is a roaring rabbit, a toothless tiger. That is what it is. It is the old program all dressed in drag. It is the old DREE without the bucks, or with money that was taken from the Atlantic in the first place.

What does the board, the agency, those 19 Tories do? They assist and advise—"assist" is the word. In the legislation it says that the board's purpose is to assist. We do not know what assist means. Does it mean assisting them with their fund raising for the Tory Party? So far most of them who have been appointed are baghacks and flicks for the Tory Party. I can go through the list for you because you may not have that information, Mr. Speaker.

• (1650)

That is not our view of decentralization. Decentralization for us means that the decision making rests there. If there is a board, then the board is accountable and it is accountable to the regions. Decisions have to be made in the regions, not here in Ottawa, as this legislation allows.

We also have a concern about commitment to regional development. As we see it, in spite of what the Government has said about its commitment to regional development, that commitment over the years has declined. Over the past 25 years less than 3 per cent of total federal economic expenditures have been applied to regional development.

In 1984-85, explicitly, regional development for all of the Atlantic region was in the order of $230 million. By the way, that is around 15 per cent of what the UI pay-out is in the Atlantic. Expenditures on DRIE's industrial incentive programs have decreased in real terms from $9 a person in 1969-70 to 1973-74 to $4 a person in 1984-85 to 1985-86. For Newfoundland, the reduction in the same period was from $9 a person to $3 a person. That is Tory progress; two steps forward and five steps back. Expenditures under GDA/ERDA has declined from $16 a person in 1974-75 to 1978-79 to $14 in 1984-85 to 1988-89. For Newfoundland, the reduction for the same period was from $126 a person to $80 a person. We believe that if you make a commitment to regional development then you have to follow through with the commitment in bucks. It has to be a commitment in decentralization.

The other thing concerning us about the way this agency has developed, and we have noticed it in the same way with the Northern Ontario Development Corporation, FEDNOR for short, is the insidious implementation of the patronage principle. It is another principle that we in the New Democratic Party criticized during the federal election of 1984 and have continued to criticize. When we look at the appointments to boards such as this agency, we find that patronage has crept into what ought to be the voice of the region. The people who are qualified in the region the people recommended by the region, should be sitting on these agency boards, but instead it has become a trough. The major criteria for placement on the board is the contribution you have made to the Conservative Party or some particular function you have within the Conservative Party.

The Prime Minister said in an interview just the other day that he was so concerned about any possible alliances between the New Democratic Party and the Liberals after the next election that he had better make sure to appoint more Tories on a patronage basis to boards and commissions so that Tory policy can continue after we have kicked the can and he is out of office.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Patronage has become a way of operation with the Government. It has become like breathing, as my colleague says. It is like slipping into a comfortable Gucci. The concern we have here is that nothing in the Bill sets out how nominees are to be put forward for this agency. There is no requirement that the board be comprised of any other group than the business sector. What about the spokesmen for labour, fishermen, farmers, the co-ops, the voluntary organizations and social agencies? This is an exclusive blue ribbon board, and I say that literally. That is what it is. The minute that happens, it loses credibility with the people for whom it should serve and people become very cynical about the whole process.

There is a certain skepticism about the way the objective of this whole agency works. On the one hand we had Mr. McPhail saying that the agency is only interested in specific projects, not macro-economic developments in the Atlantic, only specific economic endeavours. Then we have a Mr. Dineen who sits on the board and is quoted as saying "We are the board. The agency is interested in looking at the macro-economic principles of the region". We have this contradiction in what the leadership is saying, what the Deputy Minister is saying, and what the agency members have in mind.

Lastly, there is no provision in the Bill for an evaluation of the projects that have been approved. The only evaluation is at the front end of the operation before the grants or the loans are made. There is no process to evaluate the program after money is granted to a particular project. That was one of the downfalls of DREE. I suggest that the Government look at Canada Unlimited and try to implement some of the more positive proposals that would certainly create employment in the Atlantic.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member's time has expired. There are still 10 minutes left for questions and comments.

It being 5 o'clock, the House will now proceed with the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

LABOUR

SUGGESTED PARTICIPATION OF WORKERS IN PAID EDUCATIONAL LEAVE PROGRAMS

Mr. David Berger (Laurier) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing a measure enabling workers to participate voluntarily in paid educational leave programs, in order to foster their vocational training and their adaptability to the requirements of the labour market, thus reducing the impact of the devaluation of their skills and, by extension, overall unemployment, and encouraging economic growth and the security of Canadian workers.

He said: Mr. Speaker, at the outset, I would like to put forward the rather simple proposition that Canada's continued prosperity depends on the training of our workers. Further, it is clear that we are not doing nearly enough. It is perhaps trite to say but nevertheless I think evident, that it is time for action and leadership by the Parliament of this country and by its Government. It is time to do something to remedy the situation and to deal with a problem which is clearly evident, the problem that Canada does not do nearly enough training as compared to our competitors in the global market-place.

Furthermore, there are a number of well thought out policies which can be implemented immediately. My motion today addresses one such policy, that of paid educational leave, which was studied in 1983 by a task force set up by the then Minister of Employment and Immigration. Such a policy has been implemented successfully in a number of European countries and in Japan. The concept was endorsed recently by the Economic Council of Canada in its 1987 report entitled Innovation and Jobs in Canada.

Last week, I attended the National Conference on Technology and Innovation in Canada. I can report to Members of the House that the question of training of the workforce was a matter which received prominent attention in the workshops and the plenary sessions. Mr. David Culver, the Chairman of Alcan, reminded us in his keynote address of the social and cultural fall-out of modernization. He said that there is almost always a loss of jobs when a company modernizes itself or when a country goes through such a process. He stated that there is a clear role for Government to ensure that there is timely retraining for those who are displaced.

I would like to dwell briefly on some comparisons with other countries. Japan is perhaps the best example of dedication to training or retraining. We have now become familiar with the idea that the Japanese bank on employees' loyalty to companies to make it worth-while to train and retrain. They are not afraid that their employees will leave them for better jobs after investing considerable amounts in their training.

For every one hour of training received by a North American worker, the average Japanese worker receives approximately 100 hours of training. Indeed, similar figures were referred to by John Evans, the President of Allelix, at the conference in Toronto last week. He said that employees in the computer industry in Canada receive two hours of training for every 100 to 200 hours received in Japan.

The Nissan company recently opened a plant in Smyrna, Tennessee, I believe. It is quite remarkable but that company spent $63 million to train workers before the plant door was even opened and before even one car came off the production line.

In West Germany, the situation is similar. That country has a number of well developed vocational training programs which are largely credited as being the foundation of West Germany's economic success. These programs are administered co-operatively by the federal and provincial or state Governments. They use what is known as the dual system in which there is a mix of on-the-job and off-the-job training.

In 1984 and 1985, Siemens, a large manufacturing firm, took on some 10,000 apprentices. It spent an equivalent of some $250 million on these apprentices in addition to the $300 million it spends on training its ongoing personnel. This one company maintains a staff of 500 full-time teachers and 3,000 part-time teachers.

Of course, West German firms responded to the worldwide recession of 1982 by increasing, not decreasing, the number of trainees taken on by some 46,000 persons. In West Germany, there were 677,000 apprentices in West Germany. In 1984, one year later, this figure had risen to 706,000.

While the training figures of Japan and West Germany are increasing, Canada's are decreasing. In 1983-84, participants in what was known as the National Training Program which was run by the Department of Employment and Immigration totalled some 277,000 persons. This fell to approximately 206,000 in 1985-86. The National Training Program was absorbed by the Canadian Jobs Strategy in September of 1985 and became Skill Shortages and Skill Investments. In 1986-87, these two programs registered a total of 88,700 participants and it is estimated that in this fiscal year, 1987-88, only 117,000 participants will be involved in those two programs, Skill Shortages and Skill Investments. Again, that is 117,000 as compared to some 277,000 only three or four years ago, not even half the number.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, a policy of paid educational leave would make it possible for working men and women to earn days of leave for the purpose of education or professional training. The possibility of such a program was adressed in 1983 by the Skill Development Leave Task Force. It was one of several programs considered by this task force. Its members emphasized the fact that educational leave would offer equal opportunities for all only if it were biased in favor of the academically poor.

The experience in other countries has demonstrated that adult education is often the privileged domain of those men and women who have already benefited from a high school or even university education. An increased participation by blue collar workers and members of all classes of our society would depend on the implementation of special programs directed at minority groups or team workers in order to discourage the formation of a class of workers who are both unskilled and underpaid.

The National Advisory Panel which followed the task force study suggested that such leave could be earned at a rate of one day for every thirty days of work. In this case, Mr. Speaker, each working man and woman could gain as much as eight days of educational leave per year of work. The National Advisory Panel recommended then to the federal and provincial governments to adopt immediately legislative measures to implement such programs.

[English]

The Economic Council of Canada, in its 1987 research report entitled Innovation and Jobs in Canada, endorsed the concept of paid educational leave. It said:

> We would like to focus attention once again on the feasibility of implementing a paid educational leave policy in Canada.

With respect to funding, the national advisory panel, in 1984, again recommended a 1 per cent personal income surtax and a 3 per cent corporate income surtax in order to raise the approximately $500 million necessary to operate such a program. One reason for calling for such a surtax was to encourage the participation of all workers. As I said earlier in my remarks, it is mainly the well-educated who benefit from various forms of continuing education and adult education in Canada. As I also said, special measures are required, such as including workplace delegates to encourage all workers to participate in the program.

The national advisory panel, in considering its funding mechanism, thought that by paying for such a program through a personal income surtax all workers would be prompted to involve themselves in retraining because they would be paying for it. They would see this on their tax bill every year and therefore would be encouraged to get a benefit from some of their tax dollars and get involved in some form of ongoing educational program.

At the time that recommendation was made, I had certain concerns about the funding mechanism. As you will recall, in 1984 we were perhaps 18 months into a recovery from the 1982 recession. The balance sheets of Canadian companies had been hit hard. I felt that a corporate income surtax would be hard to contemplate. No one likes to contemplate the idea of increased personal income taxes either. At the time I felt that the federal Government ought to share the cost of establishing a universal paid educational leave program on a, for example, fifty-fifty basis. I felt that federal funds could be made available through reallocation of and savings in existing programs, including industrial support programs.

We are far too ready to put money into bricks and mortar and new machinery but reluctant to invest in our workforce. To this day I feel that there is room within the various industrial support programs for the retraining of workers, and my views on the funding mechanism have not changed over the course of the past couple of years. We have seen very stiff increases in personal income taxes imposed by the Conservative Government since the 1984 election and I feel that an additional income tax is probably out of the question in the minds of most Canadians. Therefore the federal Government ought to share the cost of establishing such a program, as I said, on a fifty-fifty basis. The part not paid by the Government would be paid by the employer and employee, with the amount subject to negotiation between the parties.

You will see that my motion is presented in the way of a recommendation. It says:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing a measure enabling workers to participate voluntarily in paid educational leave programs—

It is framed in that fashion because, as you know, Private Members cannot put forward Bills which entail the expenditure of money. That is a government prerogative and requires Royal Assent. If we did not have this restriction you would see a Private Members' Bill which would propose actual legislation to implement such a program. It would probably contain recommendations for funding in the first year of the program and perhaps in several subsequent years.

However, as I said, because Private Members cannot put forward a Bill in that fashion, I have framed this motion in a very innocuous fashion. All I am asking the Government to do is to consider the advisability of such a program. I would like to suggest to my colleagues that such an innocent proposal is worthy of their support.

A I said, this idea formed the basis of a task force study in 1983. It was subsequently sent to a group of business leaders and union personnel and government officials. Some 250 people from across Canada studied the matter and a national advisory panel recommended that legislation be introduced to put the idea into practice. The Economic Council of Canada endorsed the concept in 1987, and there is widespread recognition that we are not doing nearly enough to retrain our workforce or, more correctly, permit it to engage in various forms of ongoing training.

Therefore, I hope my colleagues in this House who support this proposal will do so and hopefully we will be able to pass this motion by the end of today's debate and therefore a very sensible recommendation would be sent to the Government.

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to Motion No. M-27 put forward by the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger). The idea he suggests is indeed an excellent one. It shows foresight and a grasp of what Canadians truly need to prepare for successful entry into the labour force. The Government must have measures in place to foster vocational training. We must help Canadians adapt to the requirements of the labour market. The Government has done so to some extent. After all, one million more Canadians are working today than were when the Government took office. More will be done when the free trade pact with the United States takes effect.

While the motion was no doubt presented with great sincerity, it was brought forth with a surprising lack of knowledge. I cannot quite believe that the Hon. Member is not aware of the fact that to a large extent the very measures he talks about are already in place and have been for more than two years. Many people, including some in my riding, have benefited from the programs.

I refer, of course, to the various components of the Canadian Jobs Strategy. The Canadian Jobs Strategy has six different aspects which do exactly what the Member in his motion says we need. I would like to describe briefly two of the initiatives of the Canadian Jobs Strategy. One is called Job Development and the other Job Entry.

The Job Development option is designed to assist one of Canada's most serious human resource problems—the long-term unemployed. It combines work experience and training to update and adapt the skills of people who have not had a steady job for six months or more. Job Development is not an ineffective make-work program as it was in the previous administration under a different name. It concerns itself with what is truly important. It helps people improve their permanent employment prospects by enabling them to acquire relevant skills.

As you may know, Mr. Speaker, Job Development offers employers a wage subsidy to hire and train workers offering them the skills they need to meet the demands of a changing market-place. Businesses, community groups, municipalities, the voluntary sector, and even individuals can act as employers. People participating in Job Development initiatives can count, not only on training at the work site, but on classroom instruction as well. That training is thorough because the initiatives can last for up to one year. People can learn a lot in that amount of time.

As I mentioned, sponsors receive wage subsidies. I am happy to be able to add that they also receive financial contributions toward capital costs and training. If they hire disabled people, they can receive up to $10,000 toward the cost of any structural alterations which may be necessary. Sponsors also receive up to $40 per day per client to cover training costs. The program may also pay for the hiring of a project manager.

As we all know, the Canadian Jobs Strategy uses whatever works best to train the long-term unemployed. Non-profit agencies need not be intimidated by Job Development because the program may cover up to 100 per cent of a project's total costs.

I do not wish to recite program details. Results are what count and results are what we have. I am sure that my hon. colleague will be pleased to know that close to 122,000 Canadians will have participated in Job Development projects by the end of this fiscal year. That is 122,000 individual Canadians being readied to meet the modern labour markets, demanding requirements. More than $623 million will have been spent to make them ready. As you can see, Job Development is helping many Canadians.

Let me give one example of a Job Development initiative. In Penticton, British Columbia, Kenwood Furniture Factory started operations in 1986 and, with the help of Job Development backing, was able to hire 18 unemployed residents to train as machine operators. The duration of the project was from March to October, 1986, at a cost of $142,000. During this period Kenwood's over-all staff grew from 35 to 110 employees.

What is more, this company has maintained its interest in local disadvantaged workers based on the success of its Job Development experience. Further agreements have been signed with Kenwood to the benefit of the company, the local economy, and, of course, the individuals who are now a productive part of the local workforce.

The Hon. Member will be pleased to know that Job Development is not the only initiative we have to help people in the various ways he suggested a while ago. Another feature of the Canadian Jobs Strategy is Job Entry. Since 1985 the Government has had in place this innovative and forward-thinking program designed to harness the employment potential of a vast and hitherto under-tapped labour pool, that represented by youth entering and women returning to the job market.

The unemployment rate for high school drop-outs is now almost 30 per cent. Altogether, including those who have not completed secondary or post-secondary education, there are more than 400,000 young people who cannot break into the workforce. A similar challenge faces many of the 200,000 women who annually re-enter the work force after working for several years in the home. Some of them are unsure of themselves, underestimate their abilities, or feel intimidated by employers looking for relevant work experience. Job Entry and Re-entry will give them the necessary confidence. To acquire skills and experience these groups require an integrated program of training and work experience to enable them to become active members of the labour force. Job Entry, yet another component of this Government's comprehensive Canadian Jobs Strategy is such a program.

Job Entry, if we are talking about youth, or Re-entry, if we are talking about women returning to the labour market, helps Canadians who are having difficulty making the transition into the labour market. With a combination of up to 52 weeks of skills training and practical work experience Job Entry or Re-entry provides for individual needs while at the same time addressing local labour market requirements.

How does it do this? For starters, the amount of financial assistance that participants receive while on training is based on their individual circumstances. Supplementary allowances are paid where cases warrant it to help defray the costs of child care, transportation, and living away from home. Moreover, business, labour, community groups, the public sector, and even individuals provide the source for the project co-ordinators who design the training plans, recruit and assess participants, and place them with the work site hosts.

In this way, Mr. Speaker, Job Entry and Re-entry projects address both sides of the question. They give participants the chance to do on-the-job training and gain experience while they are at it. They give participants a chance to prove their worth to prospective employers. In addition, they provide training and experience in skills that employers in Canadian communities require to meet their present and future needs.

The Government is committed to encouraging economic growth and the security of Canadian workers of today and tomorrow. To do this we must invest in our citizens. So far this year the Government has invested approximately $415 million in the Job Entry and Re-entry Program.

Is this approach working? The answer is a resounding yes. Across Canada more than 150,000 people are currently involved in Job Entry and Re-entry projects. The placement rate of previous participants is very high.

In closing, I agree with the Hon. Member for Laurier that the Government should have in place measures to allow workers to keep their skills up to date and relevant to the changing labour market. I repeat that these measures are alive and well through the components of the Canadian Jobs Strategy. They will be expanded upon when the free trade pact takes effect by January 1, 1989.

In addition, these initiatives under the CJS are much more than the paid educational leave programs that the Hon. Member mentions in his motion.

• (1730)

The vision of our strategy, which looks to tomorrow's as well as today's worker, is much more far-reaching.

Therefore, I can tell the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) that this Government not only meets but exceeds by a wide margin the demands set forth in this motion.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the motion of the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger). It provides a sense of vision of what can happen to Canada's workforce.

My riding of Hamilton Mountain has seen shutdowns of many plants and factories. We must recognize the implications of these plant closures. It may affect an individual who has worked 20 years on a plant floor, expecting to finish his working life there. A sudden plant closure brings a whole sense of insecurity and loss of self image. As we tend to consider the implications of such closures on the whole economy, we forget the individual implications of these kinds of closures. Not only do individuals lose a sense of purpose and identity, the pressures on the families often result in the disruption of communities.

This motion identifies that there need not be a crisis if such programs are put in place. We have also recognized, certainly in the last 25 years, that human development takes place not only at the school-age level, but throughout one's life as information, growth and education takes place. I hope such growth could occur throughout one's lifetime.

If a policy such as the one suggested in this motion became public policy, it would not be necessary to constantly to revert to the kind of CJS, program as the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom) has discussed. He is speaking of how we meet immediate problems that develop from a high unemployment rate.

Today we are in a post industrial society, which often frightens many people. Therefore, we do not deal with the implications of such a society and what changes will take place in the workplace not just in the immediate future but 25 years from now.

When we consider jobs of the future, we must also look at a workforce about which we can be proud in Canada. It is a workforce that is very skilled, well informed, and includes people who care about their production and creativity. If we allow them to make choices and garner some skills and information, we will have a workforce and indeed a society that begins to move steadily and efficiently into other levels of work without losing that self confidence which is so important to individuals.

There are various ways and means to implement such a policy. I agree that it should be cost-shared with the federal Government, the employer and employees, along with some built-in guarantees, to avoid some of the problems experienced with the pension funds. There must be a guarantee that this fund is specifically for educational leave programs.

I agree with the notion that it is a shared policy which everyone controls.

We should consider the experience of other countries, such as Sweden, where there has been a major restructuring of the economy, with a literally full employment situation. Such policy has allowed an entire workforce to move from a plant that is inefficient and switch to a new market.

Such a program would decrease individual pressures on families. The sense of security within families is related to the sense of security people have in the workplace. Paid leave for educational purposes would mean that an employee may choose to take such a leave and return to the original job. That is quite different from what the Hon. Member for Willowdale was describing.

Many studies have indicated that these employees who have taken such leave return to their jobs much more productive and satisfied with their job situation. It gives them a sense of security that they will not have to flounder forever if there is a decision to close the plant in which they work. As well, such a policy would prevent the type of roller coaster mentality as we have seen in Hamilton in the last two years where employees hear that their plant may close, then will not close. A program like this would provide a sense of security that the employee has other skills with which he can approach other companies. This in turn provides a sense of self worth and the confidence to be able to make a living and a contribution within the same community and the family unit.

Paid educational leave also helps people to recognize the resources that exist within their communities. This can only stabilize and build a local community, which is very important.

I have been amazed at the number of people to whom I have talked who have not been aware of the range of skills that are required within their communities. Many people who are laid off are afraid that they will have to move from their community and disrupt their family.

I hope the House will approve this motion because it is very innocuous, as the Member suggests. It simply suggests that the House is willing to have a vision and recognize that society is not static, but one in which we want to deal with the challenges of the future and ensure that our adult world is as prepared as our youth.

I urge the House to support this motion and, in conclusion, I want to complement the Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger). He has shown some vision in his concept of employment and unemployment. Surely the House can accede to such thought and support this motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to deal today with Motion No. 27 in the name of the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger), which reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing a measure enabling workers to participate voluntarily in paid educational leave programs, in order to foster their vocational training and their adaptability to the requirements of the labour market, thus reducing the impact of the devaluation of their skills and, by extension, overall unemployment, and encouraging economic growth and the security of Canadian workers.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to indicate to my honorable friend and the other members of this House that the government addressed this issue quite some time ago. Ever since this government came to power, training and on the job experience are elements which go hand in hand and their complementarity is one of the major tenets of our philosophy.

Mr. Speaker, this is why, immediately after coming into office, we reviewed existing programs to assess their compatibility with the Canadian labour market and the effectiveness of existing training programs. We quickly realized that the programs were out-dated and did not meet the needs of Canadians, and we immediately got to work.

We had to consider a number of components, such as the economic situation, the employment situation, the gap between training and available jobs, as well as the distribution of potential participants. We also wanted to learn the opinion of all participants on the labour market. We then initiated extensive consultations to inform and contact all groups and individuals concerned, employers, employer associations, workers, labour organizations, business people, training institutions and the voluntary sector.

Thanks to the information we received from all these people, we were able to develop a strategy which takes into account the structure of our labour force and the necessary changes and establishes a link between training, current economic activity and real jobs. This program, the Canadian Job Strategy, was developed in co-operation with all parties involved and is aimed at improving the Canadian labour market.

Mr. Speaker, the Jobs Strategy implemented in 1985 provides training for Canadians. It takes into account the need not to be overtaken by the constant evolution of the labour market.

The Job Strategy involves a complete re-organization of job-related Government programs, as well as a new direction to develop and use fully our most important resource, the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, the Job Strategy in fact reflects a certain philosophy. This strategy, which is targeted to the needs of Canadians, is flexible, dynamic and able to adjust to the requirements of our regions, industrial sectors and individual Canadians.

The Canadian Jobs Strategy is not a panacea, Mr. Speaker. However, in the light of the considerable success it has already achieved since it was implemented, it has proved to be a very effective remedy for unemployment and either partial or total lack of training. It is also a formidable tool for adjusting individuals and communities to a constantly changing labour market in this country.

I am not going to give you a detailed description of all the programs involved. I will leave that to my colleagues. However, I would like to enumerate briefly some of the types of training and job experience that are part of the Jobs Strategy.

I will start with training. One formula alternates work and education, which is particularly useful for students who want to test their skills during their studies and for young drop-outs who want to go back to school.

Training in industry helps the trainee acquire technical skills that can be used immediately on the job.

Another formula provides a combination of theoretical training and practical experience. Training is given in an educational institution or in a classroom on the employer's premises. Practical training is acquired on the job.

Next, job creation.

Businesses may be set up by individual workers or by groups of unemployed workers. Students can start their own businesses, especially during the summer.

Our summer employment programs help create several hundred thousand jobs. We also help declining communities. If there are visible signs of economic renewal, we designate the community under an assistance program which helps set up agencies to examine the situation and take appropriate action.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Jobs Strategy deals with all aspects of the labour market, be it training or job experience, and focusses on all parties concerned: employers, workers, the unemployed, students, and communities.

The Jobs Strategy has provided ways of meeting the challenge of technological change by dealing directly with the problem of training. The Strategy makes the most of human resources and helps Canadians to acquire the training and skills they need to obtain useful and durable employment.

Mr. Speaker, in the riding of Portneuf which I represent, the Canadian Jobs Strategy has helped hundreds of workers to find gainful employment. It has helped many small businesses to create jobs and give their employees the appropriate training.

Mr. Speaker, I was elected to this House in September 1984, and as soon as I opened my constituency office it was invaded by tens or hundreds of unemployed who came to ask for help in finding jobs. At that point I told them we are working to put in place a program to help them re-enter a changing labour market. Even though technologies have changed, we are going to give you the tools, the skills needed to find a job and keep on contributing to this country's progress and development.

When in 1985 we introduced the Jobs Strategy Program, I must tell you that it met with a most enthusiastic response in my area. You have no idea how many requests I received from companies, small businesses wishing to take part in that program, to help create jobs. But I wanted to ensure that those jobs were really permanent. Because there was a lingering fear, since for 20 years the Canadian Government had been creating programs and all the time only temporary jobs were involved. We, the seniors, remember the Canada Works program, 20 weeks at work, 50 weeks unemployed, and if when you came back you were chummy with the powers that be at that time, you had a bigger chance of finding work again.

We said no. We are going to give equal opportunity to all to find meaningful jobs. This is what the program makes possible. I must tell you, Mr. Speaker, that in my area, the rate of job retention is above all expectations. Officials at the Job Development Centre in the Quebec area tell us, they tell me: Mr. Ferland, this is one of the best programs we have had to administer and work with. It is a pleasure to work with that program, because when we are dealing with a firm, when we are dealing with an unemployed, we are almost certain he or she will have a permanent job.

And I made my own survey. It has no claim to being a scientific survey, but I found that almost every single participant in that program now has a permanent job, not always with the firm for which he or she was trained and in which he or she was trained, but a job with another firm. They had a real opportunity to find meaningful employment, real jobs as we say in our part of the country.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleague for Laurier (Mr. Berger) to read the available literature on the Jobs Strategy Program. He will find out that the numerous aspects involved in that program meet the training needs of Canadians. He will have to admit, Mr. Speaker, that what I am saying is true. If he wants more information, I am convinced that the people who work in Canada Employment Centres would be delighted to explain to him in detail how this program works. They are in a position to tell him that this is probably the best program ever implemented by the Canadian Government to help Canadians of all ages find permanent employment and, therefore, participate in the development of their region and their country, as well as provide a decent living for their families.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude by saying that, already, we can safely say that the Canadian Jobs Strategy has proven its worth.

• (1750)

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for

Laurier (Mr. Berger) for bringing forward what I consider to be a very important idea. I am disappointed that the government spokesman seemed to have missed the point. That Member spoke about the Canadian Jobs Strategy and in particular about Job Entry. These deal primarily with the unemployed. What the Hon. Member for Laurier is proposing, and quite rightly so, is what I think is generally accepted across the country that is to say that there have to be training and retraining programs for people who are already employed.

In this respect as an example the Kenwood furniture factory which hired the unemployed was mentioned. However, what about the workers who are already working for Kenwood? They have a right to retraining, too. The point is this. As technology develops it develops more rapidly all the time. The businesses which will succeed are those which apply technology. However, as technology is applied, jobs are eliminated. Thus there is a rapidly growing need for retraining. This is a serious and fundamentally important issue. It is important in big business and in small business. Some companies do this already.

The Hon. Member for Laurier mentioned that in Siemens there are already 500 teachers in that company alone. I believe he mentioned 10,000 people who were taken on as apprentices. Imagine that within that company, Mr. Speaker, there are 500 teachers to do what is being done in high schools and universities of that size in Canada.

The important thing is that Canadian workers who are now employed in big and small business and who are the victims of changing technology have a right to training and retraining. This is an investment. Just as one invests in capital, one can invest in human capital. That is the point. Not only do they have a right but it is productive, efficient and effective for a company to carry out that type of retraining if it wants to have workers who are up to the mark. Matters can no longer be dealt with on an ad hoc basis. There needs to be put in place a program of this kind across the country, particularly if we are to enter into a free trade situation with the United States.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), when he announced the $1.3 billion for research and development, put it in the context of free trade. He said that if we are really going to compete with the Americans then we have to be up to the mark on research and development. I submit that that is only one part of the equation. We must also be up to the mark on training and retraining. There must be a concomitant government package to match that R and D initiative on training and retraining. It is essential. It is particularly essential for single industry towns.

For example, let us consider the Iron Ore Company of Canada of which the Prime Minister was formerly the head. It has an in-service training program. However, there is no guarantee to those workers that they will have paid educational leave on a regular basis. When that mine closes down, as it will inevitably close down some day, and if there is no alternative for employment in that area, then the only thing that those workers will have to fall back on, since there is no income guarantee for them, is their ability to find another job. I am not talking here about unemployed workers. I am talking about workers who are already employed in that particular mining industry. Whether or not they are able to find other jobs depends on their level of training and whether they are up to speed with their colleagues and other citizens across Canada.

If the Government insists that we enter into a free trade arrangement with the United States—and I do not mean by any stretch of the imagination to support that initiative—and if the Government believes there must be a commitment to R and D, then it has also at the same time to agree that there must be a commitment to paid educational leave for workers. If that is not done then our firms will not be able to compete in the market-place and our workers will be disadvantaged.

This is an idea whose time has come in Canada, as it has in other countries, other competitors in the G-7 such as West Germany and others. In that country a measure such as this is already in place. I make the point again that we are not talking about programs for the unemployed. We are talking about programs for workers who are already employed and who desperately need to be constantly upgraded if they are to be up to the mark. It is a human right and it is an economic investment.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me to enter into debate this afternoon on the Hon. Member's motion regarding part of the Canadian Jobs Strategy. The Hon. Member's point of view is with respect to vocational training and educational leave. I find it interesting that perhaps the Hon. Members is somewhat naive with respect to what has happened over the last three years concerning the attitudes and the direction the Government has taken in doing the very thing for which he asks. Clearly, he did not review the work done from the time the Liberal administration left power. If he had done that he would have found that a tremendous effort has since been made and will continue to be made in the very areas about which he presents his motion. It is not difficult to understand that perhaps he has not researched this matter the way in which he should have researched it.

To illustrate my point I will refer to something that is taking place in my own backyard, right in my own constituency of Selkirk—Interlake. In this area what the Hon. Member asks for is being done on a bigger scale than it was ever done before. I refer to the Selkirk Training Centre, with which he may or may not be familiar. Over the course of the years I have taken a very keen interest in the work done at just one facility, and there are many, which has adopted part of the Canadian Jobs Strategy, the Job Entry and the Job Development Programs. The one to which I am referring is a training plant. I am glad he recognizes the need to move more in the direction of training for those who find themselves in limbo either because of being transferred from a plant that was closed or because they have become redundant and do not have the skills to go on to something in the immediate area.

The Hon. Member has said that this has happened to a vast group of Canadians. It has happened to a number of young Canadians in the age group of 17 years of age to 24 years of age who did not exercise the ability to train themselves or to put themselves into a position from which they might become employed. This is the very area in which the Selkirk training program works. We have put in as much as $400,000 a year in funds. The most important fact after all my years in working with this group is the success rate it has achieved.

I have the statistics in front of me which go back for three years. In the first year it is estimated, from about the 60 people taking training, that the re-employment ability of those trained hit 35 per cent. Last year it hit 70 per cent. This is as a direct result of entering into this type of training. That is the type of success that we would like to achieve and that the Canadian Jobs Strategy has achieved in my area. If it has not done so in the area of the Hon. Member, I would recommend that he go to the Minister and discuss some of the projects, like those I have in my riding, in order that he can help those people who are less fortunate. Perhaps this would be a good exercise for the Member and make him aware of what is going on in the Canadian Jobs Strategy.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 is deemed to have been moved.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT OPPOSED APPEAL OF LUC PAQUETTE TO HAVE CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS TRIAL CONDUCTED IN FRENCH/RIGHT TO HOLD CRIMINAL TRIAL PROCEEDINGS IN FRENCH IN ALBERTA—POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, on November 30 and December 1, 1987, I asked questions of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) concerning a decision in February, 1986 by a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench in Alberta. That decision provided that an accused, a Mr. Luc Paquette, could be tried in Alberta for a federal offence, possession of drugs for the purpose of trafficking, entirely in the French language.

In other words, that court decided that Mr. Paquette had a right to a trial with a French-speaking judge, jury, and Crown Attorney. This right had been sought by Mr. Paquette under Part XIV.1 of the Criminal Code of Canada, and in particular Section 462(1). As I stated, Mr. Paquette was successful at the trial level.

Unfortunately, the federal Government, this Mulroney Government, appealed this ruling to the Alberta Court of Appeal, opposing the accused's right to a French language trial. I note that this is the same federal Government which purports to support the extension of the French language throughout the country. This is the same Government led by a Prime Minister who said to me in the House of Commons on November 30, 1987:

> Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says it is terrible, when in fact this Government has never failed to promote both our official languages.

When the Prime Minister states that his Government has never failed to promote both official languages, how does he account for the fact that his own Attorney General appealed Mr. Luc Paquette's right to a French language trial? Why did the Government go to court in Alberta to block Mr. Paquette's right to a French language trial?

To be clear about it, the Prime Minister did reply to me in the House on December 1, 1987, that the Alberta Court of Appeal decision in the Paquette case was rendered in two parts. First, the Court of Appeal did rule that the French language can be used as a right in criminal proceedings in Alberta because Section 110 of the former Northwest Territories Act is still in force in Alberta for criminal matters. The Prime Minister replied to me in the House that the federal Government supported this aspect of the case.

However, what the Prime Minister failed to indicate, and why I rise again tonight, was that according to the Alberta Court of Appeal, the Northwest Territories Act only gives the accused the right to speak French with the use of an interpreter in court. In other words, there is no obligation under the Act to provide a French-speaking judge and jury.

I have confirmed in Alberta, and spoken to Marjorie Mora, who is the lawyer for the accused, that there are enough French-speaking judges and Crown Attorneys in Alberta, and that other trials were already taking place there entirely in French prior to the federal Government becoming involved to block Mr. Paquette.

In his answers to me, the Prime Minister failed to refer to the second part of the Paquette decision. He failed to indicate why his Government wanted the Court of Appeal to overturn the finding of the trial judge who held that the individual was entitled to an entirely French trial, and who held that Alberta's failure to proclaim Part XIV.1 of the Criminal Code was a violation of the Charter.

This is not the only time that this Government has opposed the right to a full trial in the French language. A short while ago, in a case called Ringuette v. the Queen, I am advised that the federal Government appeared before the Newfoundland Court of Appeal and successfully opposed the right of an accused to a trial in the French language under the same Part

XIV.1 of the Criminal Code. Neither Alberta nor Newfoundland have proclaimed those parts in effect. I want to ask the Prime Minister as I asked him in December, why the Government has not moved on its own to proclaim in Alberta Part XIV.1. The federal Government has the right to do so pursuant to the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1985 which this Government brought in and which gives it the right to proclaim the provision in force when the Attorney General of the province and the federal Minister of Justice have not reached an agreement on an appropriate proclamation date.

• (1805)

Surely that date has arrived by now. That section should be proclaimed in effect. Shame on a government which goes to the court of appeal to prevent someone in the official language minority group from being tried fully in his or her own language.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on November 30 and December 1 last year, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) asked the Prime Minister to explain the position taken by this Government in the Paquette case, where the Alberta Court of Appeal recently handed down a judgment on language of trial rights.

The Prime Minister pointed out that our Government has never failed to promote both official languages of this country, and everybody, including the Hon. Member for York Centre, knows he is right. He also said that in the Paquette case, the judgment consisted of two parts, and that Bill C-72, which concerns the status and use of official languages in Canada, will soon correct a situation that had been allowed to persist by the previous Government. It is easy for the Hon. Member for York Centre to criticize now he is on the other side of the House.

Mr. Speaker, on September 11, the Alberta Court of Appeal handed down the first half of its decision in the Paquette case. This part dealt with the appplication of Section 110 of the Northwest Territories Act to criminal proceedings in Alberta. In a majority decision, the Court maintained that Section 110 was still in effect in Alberta with respect to criminal proceedings, and as a result, and as maintained by the Attorney General of Canada, anyone has the right to use French or English in the course of such proceedings.

In the second half of the judgment rendered on November 27, 1987, the Court of Appeal decided that Part XIV.1 of the Criminal Code, which gives an accused the specific right to be tried before a judge or a judge and jury who speak his or her official language, was not yet in force in Alberta. The Court of Appeal rejected the argument that the mechanism adopted in 1978 to provide for gradual implementation of this section violated equality rights provided under the Canadian Charter of rights and freedoms.

As Minister of Justice, the Attorney General of Canada has actively pursued consultations with the provinces to ensure that Part XIV.1 will come into effect throughout the country. Furthermore, as indicated by the Prime Minister, Bill C-72, the proposed Official Languages Act tabled by the Minister of Justice in the House on June 25, 1987, will amend the Criminal Code to clarify and consolidate language of trial rights and ensure that Part XIV.1 comes into force no later than January 1, 1990 in all provinces across Canada.

Mr. Speaker, on this side of the House, we do more than talk—we act!

LABOUR RELATIONS—AIR CANADA STRIKE—SUGGESTED SUSPENSION OF WORK STOPPAGE

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, on December 14 I raised a question with the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) with respect to the settlement of the Air Canada strike. That strike being settled notwithstanding, I wish to return to the subject because of the wide implications that strikes and lock-outs have for the consumers of Canada as well as for labour and management.

Very frequently we think the only parties to a labour dispute are the employers and the employees, but the people very often most affected by a work stoppage are members of the consuming public. Think of the strikes we have had in the past 12 months in Canada which have had a direct bearing upon customers, members of the public. There was the police strike in Saint John, New Brunswick, the teachers' strike in Metropolitan Toronto, the Canada Post strike across the nation, the strike in Prince Rupert which closed the grain terminal and has brought a great loss to the farmers of western Canada.

I quote from a newspaper report concerning the impact of the Canada Post strike on small businesses. The writer said "Small firms, always the most vulnerable during economic disruptions, are starting to feel the pinch from the three week old postal dispute".

• (1810)

Over and over again we are aware that a strike or lock-out not only hits hard the people on the picket line or in the offices of the companies involved, it hits hard the people who are depending upon the flow of supplies and services, the people who are the members of the consuming public and have some right to be served, a right that is often denied them by the two participants in the dispute.

Tonight I raise the questions: who looks after the consuming public? Who cares about the customer? Who cares about the member of the public who has apparently no rights at all in a labour dispute except the right to wait passively and independently for two other parties to settle a dispute that so profoundly affects his or her life? It seems to me that it is time for Governments to take this very seriously. If they do not speak up and act on behalf of the consuming public, who will?

I would urge the Governments of Canada to consider very seriously a conference involving both the Canadian Government and the provinces together with representatives of management and labour so that there could be some consensus built for an alternative to the strike as the ultimate weapon. I say that the strike is now out of date. There are much better alternatives. Some of them have been tried in other countries. There are labour courts and various forms of arbitration. All these deserve some further and more serious consideration within Canada so that justice can be done for people who have so long been denied it and who have a right to be heard. I plead with the Parliament of this land to hear their plea and to act for them. If we do not, who will?

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question. Although it pertains to the dispute between Air Canada and its machinists which, as we are aware, was settled last December, the part of the Hon. Member's question having to do with the inconvenience to travelling consumers as a result of the shut-down of Air Canada operations is still very pertinent.

This was a dispute in which the consumer, the travelling public in this case, had no say in the issues or the actions of either party to the negotiations. Yet the consumer was very seriously inconvenienced by the shut-down of the airline, which happened at a time of great importance to travellers and their families. Appointing a mediator to help guide the parties to a timely and early settlement yielded the results the Government was looking for and proved to be the most effective course of action.

The Hon. Member is aware that our collective bargaining system has been vital to the economic and social progress enjoyed by Canadians. It is an adversarial system and, as such, labour-management disputes will occur. The vast majority of collective agreement negotiations in Canada are concluded without work stoppages and without government intervention. I want to assure the Hon. Member that where consumers are affected or threatened by industrial conflict, the Government will take appropriate and decisive action to resolve the conflict and maintain industrial peace, as we did with the Air Canada strike.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT—MONTREAL EAST—LOSS OF JOBS AT CANADIAN VICKERS/REQUEST FOR PARTICULARS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, once again I rise concerning an answer I received from the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion in November 1986, and the matter still is the problems and difficulties experienced by the people of Montreal East.

Mr. Speaker, at that time I told the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion what were the difficulties and how the Government could react quickly to avoid a haemorrhage and continuing job losses as a consequence of business close-downs.

We set up at that time, with the people of Montreal East, the representatives of employees, the political representatives of either municipal or provincial levels and from all political leanings, and myself with my colleagues at the federal level—Back then, in 1985, Bombardier employed 450 people, Canadian Steel Wheel employed 250, Canadian Steel Foundries 300, Vickers 650, Daoust-Lalonde 100. La Parisette had 100 employees; SKD Technology, 170; the Gulf Refinery, 450.

• (1815)

Right now, Mr. Speaker—on Friday all elected representatives, unions and management of Montreal East sounded the alarm, made an urgent call to the Government to act, and the situation is as follows: pressures were made and succeeded in convincing the Government to help Bombardier, to secure a contract for the construction of fifty locomotives. Four hundred and fifty jobs will be saved. But at Canadian Steel Wheel, sixty-five jobs out of 250 will remain. At Canadian Steel Foundries, 125 jobs out of 300 will be left. Vickers has completely shut down because of the decision of the federal Government to destroy Quebec shipyards. Daoust-Lalonde: out of business. La Parisette: out of business. SKD: out of business. Gulf Refinery: thanks to the Quebec Government, to Mr. John Ciaccia, 250 jobs have been saved.

In addition, we learned that morning that Angus had eliminated 30 positions, which meant a loss of 30 jobs in the East, and the CIP announced 200 lay-offs Friday following the plant close-down. According to the report of the Pichette Committee, there are now 22,000 unemployed and 10,000 welfare recipients in East Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, today, during the Oral Question Period, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister for Science and Technology (Mr. de Cotret) replied with statistics and bragged about Government achievements, but the people of East Montreal are in an unfortunate situation. If people representing various political ideologies at the provincial level, such as the Parti Québécois and the Liberal Party, as well as representatives of the various labour federations, which normally do not see eye to eye, decided to meet on Friday, it is because the problem is urgent.

I would like to remind the Parliamentary Secretary of what we are asking, and I trust that she will reply to me. What all the people of East Montreal want is an investment of $50 million, $25 million from the federal Government and $25 million from the provincial Government, to create a business restructuration and modernization assistance office. This is urgent, Mr. Speaker. If it had been done when we first requested it six months or one year ago, these lay-offs and plant close downs could perhaps have been avoided.

We also ask for a special fund for on-the-job training. As businesses modernize and change, we need money to train people who are now employed and to help those who are unemployed to adjust.

In view of the large number of older workers, it is also important for the Government to revive the labour adjustment program, which provided for pre-retirement benefits in the textile and footwear industry, and to designate East Montreal as the Liberals did for outlying regions when there were problems in the asbestos industry, for instance. We also ask the Government to take other types of initiatives, such as a net employment tax credit for businesses offering jobs in East Montreal, as well as training and job entry programs to help new businesses provide employment in that sector. The Government should help such new businesses to train their workers.

In closing, we also ask that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) speed up the process to bring the Soligaz project forward in East Montreal.

Again, Mr. Speaker, these people have had four or five sessions with spokesmen for the federal Government, not to mention twelve-odd meetings, press conferences and demonstrations. Sad to say, I think the Conservative Government is not really concerned about the needs of Montreal East and the greater Montreal region. As you may recall, our representations finally got the Government to appoint a ministerial committee, the Picard Committee, the Pichette Committee, more committees and studies, and during all that time jobs were disappearing and the poor workers were being penalized. Now we have the "Bouchard Act" which amounts to discrimination against older workers and cutbacks in unemployment benefits. All the people I mentioned are losing their jobs, like the Vickers workers who will be laid off next week and who will be penalized because they will be denied benefits and the contributions they made to their pension plan. They will not be entitled to unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the Parliamentary Secretary has some good news to announce, not only statistics indicating more jobs were created in the western and northern regions of Montreal. What these people want to know once and for all is what is going to be done to help needy Montreal East residents.

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) must be delighted to sit in opposition today and to be able to speak for and on behalf of the workers of Montreal East, because at the time he was a government member and could speak out on their behalf, he never said a word. He was a famous nonentity. Mr. Speaker, need I remind the House that this Conservative Government has inherited this lack of leadership from the Liberals and that it is now really trying to do something. I suggest it has already done something. There are good news; good news indeed! The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) mentioned some good news for Montreal East today during the Oral Question Period.

The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie has failed to mention, anxious as he is to politicise the issue, that as recently as January, the government had awarded to the Bombardier firm a contract worth over $100 million for the construction of 50 diesel electric locomotives. The Hon. Member has mentionned Bombardier. We have replied to that. He did not mention for instance that this contract will create directly over a two year period the equivalent of over 2,000 person-years of full employment and improve the position of this company on international markets.

He has also failed to mention, which is understandable, that the government announced in December a federal contribution of $9.6 million to the Société pétrochimique Kemtec to build a paraxylene and cumene treatment plan. Mr. Speaker, this project is good news indeed for Montreal East. To date, the government has helped develop some 76 projects in Montreal East, bringing private and public investments in this area to a total of $295 million. I suggest this is good news. If the Hon. Member wants to have more, he should listen. In Montreal East, the Federal Government has created over 2,500 new jobs and maintained 2,500 existing ones.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we have done what we had to do, that is continue to help the people of Montreal East, an area which is indeed badly underprivileged and which is on the way to regain the place it deserves, and I am sure that the Hon. Member will recognize with the House that the conservative government has reacted positively, and I am sure and I can guarantee that we will continue to see to it that the workers of Montreal East continue to have jobs, stable jobs, permanent jobs, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.23 p.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

STRIKING—FORTY-SEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, the Forty-seventh Report of the Striking Committee.

Mr. Speaker, if the House gives its consent, I intend to move concurrence in this report later this day.

ENVIRONMENT AND FORESTRY—FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, the first report of the Standing Committee on Environment and Forestry, entitled: High-level Radioactive Waste in Canada: The Eleventh Hour.

[English]

Pursuant to Standing Order 99(2), the committee requests a comprehensive response.

In this report, Mr. Speaker, your committee has tackled the thorny issue of the safe storage and disposal of highly radio active nuclear waste. If one thing is certain about nuclear energy, whatever its future, we must find methods to dispose of the wastes which it creates. Governments and the nuclear industry must do everything possible to understand and address openly the public's real concerns about this issue.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I think you would find that the House would be disposed to allow a Bill on notice standing in the name of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) dated January 18, 1988, to be called for introduction. I think you would find that there would be a disposition to allow that Bill to be called for debate later this day and also a disposition to have committee stage of the Bill taken in Committee of the Whole immediately following second reading.

Mr. Speaker: Is there such consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PETITIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct pleasure to present on behalf of a number of Canadians a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106.

These petitioners feel that the very fabric of Canadian sovereignty is threatened by the proposed Mulroney-Reagan trade deal, as they call it. Because the Government has no mandate to negotiate a free trade deal with the United States these petitioners are asking Parliament to ensure that a national debate takes place on the trade deal and that this debate result in a national general election before such an agreement is actually signed.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of Canadian citizens mostly from Edmonton concerned about the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. They point out that it will deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and would undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to dissolve and to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty, in accordance with the Standing Orders, to present a petition from a number of residents of Canada; from Oshawa, Toronto, Richmond and other places, pointing out that this Government has no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States and that such an agreement would deny to Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future. It would undermine our ability to build a distinct society, distinct from that of the U.S., and not only fails to secure access to the U.S. market, which was the key objective, but it threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

Therefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of Canadians concerned about the trade deal that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and President Reagan have initiated, chiefly because of its threat to Canadian sovereignty, and because there was no mandate given to the Government to negotiate the deal, and it will ultimately reduce Canada's ability to plan the economic, social and cultural programs Canadians need.

The petitioners, therefore, request that this debate result in a national general election before such an agreement is signed.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the responsibility and the privilege of presenting a petition signed by the residents of Warren, Ontario, Hanmer, Ontario, Timmins, Ontario, Sudbury, Ontario, and Sarnia, Ontario.

These petitioners claim that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States and, furthermore, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised.

Further, the trade agreement negotiated by the Mulroney Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control effectively foreign ownership and to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians or to equalize opportunities between the regions.

As a result they therefore pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a list of petitions from a number of points in my riding calling on the Government to dissolve Parliament to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of residents of the City of Thunder Bay who protest that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had actually promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised.

Whereas the agreement negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control effectively foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians and to equalize opportunities between the regions, and since the agreement denies Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future, it undermines our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States, the petitioners call upon this Parliament to dissolve and allow the Canadian people the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition certified by the Clerk of Petitions in January of this year.

The people of Canada who have signed this petition indicate that they believe Canadian sovereignty is threatened by the proposed trade deal. They believe the Government has no mandate to negotiate the trade arrangement with the United States and they believe that it would reduce Canada's ability to plan the economic, social and cultural programs Canadians need. They also believe that the deal would integrate Canada further into the North American defence industry base.

For these and other reasons they call upon the Government to have a national debate on this issue and they wish that we will have a national general election before this deal is consummated.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 in which the petitioners say that the Government has no mandate to negotiate a free trade deal with the United States, that the trade deal would reduce Canada's ability to plan the economic, social and cultural programs we need.

For these reasons they ask the House of Commons to ensure that a national debate takes place on the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal and that this debate result in a national general election before any agreement is signed.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I too have a petition that has been duly approved. It is in the proper form and it is signed by a number of constituents in the Toronto area.

These petitioners state that considering a Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement between Canada and the United States would have a fundamental impact on Canada's economic, cultural and political independence, and considering that such an agreement implies the loss of jobs in many sectors and regions, they the undersigned request that the Parliament of Canada obtain a clear mandate from the Canadian people through a national debate on the alternatives available to Canada and that this debate result in a national election prior to the signing of any such agreement.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition from citizens of Canada concerned about the trade deal.

The petitioners say that considering a Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement between Canada and the United States would have a fundamental impact on the economic, cultural and political independence of Canada and that it implies the loss of jobs in many sectors and regions of Canada, the undersigned request the Parliament of Canada to obtain a clear mandate from the Canadian people through a national debate on alternatives available to Canada and that this debate result in a national election prior to the signing of any such agreement.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, question No. 202 will be answered today.

[Text]

CONSTITUENCY OF VICTORIA—HALIBURTON—SMALL CRAFT HARBOURS

Question No. 202—Mr. Scott (Victoria—Haliburton):

1. What is the current annual cost of maintaining small craft harbours in the constituency of Victoria—Haliburton?

2. Will the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans allocate more funds to repair and maintain small craft harbours across Ontario and particularly in the constituency of Victoria—Haliburton and, if not, what plans does the government have to protect itself from potential legal actions that may be the result of continued use of unsafe facilities?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): 1. Since its inception in 1973, the Small Craft Harbours Program has expended $2,190,543 in the constituency of Victoria—Haliburton. The 15 year average, therefore, is $146,036.20.

2. In June of 1987, Cabinet approved the funding of the Harbour Revitalization Program whereby harbour infrastructure repairs or construction are ongoing throughout the country. This three-year program will permit us to catch up on the backlog of important work which was neglected in the past. At the termination of the Program, the Small Craft Harbours Branch budget will be established at $70 million annually, a 44 per cent increase, to ensure that harbour facilities are properly maintained in the future and that users are not faced with unsafe conditions.

Specifically, in the constituency of Victoria—Haliburton, a $75,000 wharf repair project was announced for Sturgeon Point and a $80,000 wharf repair project was announced for Virginia Beach under the Harbour Revitalization Program.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, ATLANTIC CANADA, 1987

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, January 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the debate was interrupted yesterday the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) had completed his speech. The question and comment period following the Hon. Member's speech is now available to Hon. Members. If there are no questions and comments the Chair is prepared to recognize Hon. Members for debate.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the speech made yesterday by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). He talked about the sham involved in this Bill. The Government has been taking $1 billion a year out of regional programs and is now putting $200 million a year back in. The Government is calling it decentralization. Rather than decentralization would this not be better characterized by the word "abdication"? The Government is really abdicating its responsibility to look after the concept of regional development. It is shuffling this responsibility to an agency and underfunding the agency at the same time.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my hon. colleague for the question. He is absolutely correct in his suggestion that it is an abdication of the responsibility to eliminate regional disparities, particularly in Atlantic Canada, which is supposedly the purpose and principle of Bill C-103.

In fact, all Canadians recall that when the Conservative Government came to power it was on a kick of cutting the deficit. As a result, it embarked on program cuts in Atlantic Canada. Since 1984 cut-backs have been in the amount of $1 billion.

Mr. Riis: Cut-backs?

Mr. Rodriguez: That is right. We all remember when the big kick was to cut the deficit. The deficit was the enemy and we were supposed to cut it. Atlantic Canada felt the heel of that jackboot and $1 billion was cut from the economy of Atlantic Canada by the federal Government.

Mr. Riis: Unemployment is high there.

Mr. Rodriguez: Of course unemployment is high. Those were the days when we kept reminding Canadians that Tory times were indeed tough times. The Atlantic is well aware of that.

Having cut $1 billion from federal spending in the Atlantic the Government is now blowing the trumpets and saying that it is giving $1.05 billion of new money.

Mr. Riis: That's dishonest.

Mr. Rodriguez: It is absolutely a sham. It is dishonest. It is the old shell game. This is not new money. The Government is in fact giving back to Atlantic Canada the $1.05 billion. In fact, it is even less than was cut from the economy of Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Riis: Are you sure about those figures?

Mr. Rodriguez: I am absolutely sure. I refer Hon. Members to the documentation on the specific areas which have been cut to which I referred in my speech yesterday.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, there is confusion and cynicism in Atlantic Canada about the intentions of the Government in this area. This agency was announced in October of 1986 and again in June, 1987. This legislation was put before the House on December 18 and we are at second reading stage today. Is it not appropriate under these circumstances for the legislative committee which will be considering this legislation to travel to the Atlantic region and hear submissions from Atlantic Canadians?

The Government says it has consulted. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) said there were consultations going on, but not while the legislation is before the House and not on the basis of what the legislation contains. Would the Hon. Member care to comment on that?

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) for the question which allows me the opportunity to expand on that aspect. The program was announced in 1986, reannounced in 1987, and finally brought to the House in the form of legislation in 1988. There is a considerable amount of confusion as to the objectives and goals of this agency.

I pointed out yesterday that the board which will be directing the activities of the agency is only there to assist the Minister. The Minister and the Deputy Minister are here in Ottawa. There is no decentralization. This is a continuation of the concept that everything that will happen in Atlantic Canada will be determined here in Ottawa. In fact, the Deputy Minister of this agency, Mr. McPhail, said that the agency will not be concerned with macroeconomic programs in Atlantic Canada. That is, in fact, contradicted by Mr. Deneen, who said that they are concerned about programs for Atlantic Canada in a regional perspective. Indeed that is what the Prime Minister said.

There is so much confusion with regard to the aims and objectives of this agency, the functions of the board, and the evaluation of the programs which may be approved for economic development in Atlantic Canada that I think it is an excellent suggestion that the legislative committee studying Bill C-103 go into the Atlantic region and listen to input from people who live in the region. Their suggestions for how this Bill can be improved and how their lives can ultimately be improved are extremely important. I agree that the legislative committee should travel throughout Atlantic Canada and get the input of people living there. That is very important to the success of any regional development program in any region of Canada, but particularly in the Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Parliament from Atlantic Canada and one who is excited about the agency and its creation, it is my pleasure to address some comments today to Bill C-103.

Bill C-103 establishes six basic operating principles of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency; consultation, decision-making in the region, emphasis on small and medium enterprises, adapting regional development programs to regional needs, creating the environment for business and economic growth to flourish with flexibility.

Consultation is a key part of the Government's fresh approach to regional development. Since the formation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency was announced on June 6 there has been extensive consultation in every area of Atlantic Canada with provincial governments, businessmen, and representatives of labour groups.

The consultation process means that the key regional development decisions will be made with the advice of true experts on regional problems and regional opportunities, the people who live and work in Atlantic Canada and care about Atlantic Canada. It is the small and medium enterprises which create the jobs in our economy and Atlantic Canada is no different. The agency will build on that job-creating ability of small and medium enterprises to create and sustain the economic growth Atlantic Canada needs. Through the extensive consultation process, the agency will be able to adapt broad federal regional development programs to best meet the needs of Atlantic Canada.

The agency marks the end of regional development policies and programs imposed from outside the region. An environment will be created in which business can grow and prosper. The agency will encourage an understanding throughout the region of the very important role of business to the economy, and create an atmosphere in which men and women of ideas can turn their ideas to the economic benefit of the region.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in order to prepare for the announcement of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, had asked Dr. Donald Savoie, an Atlantic Canadian, to do consultation work throughout Atlantic Canada. Mr. Savoie was the head of the Canadian Institute for Research on Regional Development at the University of Moncton, and he has a broad extensive background not only in regional development but also dealing with Government. At one time I believe he served as special assistant to now Senator Roméo Leblanc. He was to meet with other Atlantic Canadians, businessmen, provincial governments, university officials, labour representatives to discuss how regional development could be more effective in Atlantic Canada.

As a result of that fresh look at regional development programs, we have the creation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. Perhaps the most important result of this extensive consultation process has been the creation of a network of men and women throughout Atlantic Canada who know about the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, who know the ACOA staff and who know they can use ACOA to improve the region's economy. That is the sole purpose of ACOA. It is, this Parliament willing, the legislative purpose of the agency as set out in Clause 4, "to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada and, more particularly, to enhance the growth of earned incomes and employment opportunities".

ACOA will help improve the region's economy by taking responsibility from existing regional development programs and adding new programs. The Prime Minister has promised to maintain the present level of funding for existing programs like the Atlantic Enterprise Program, Industrial Regional Development Program, Enterprise Cape Breton and the Economic Regional Development Agreements, about $196 million a year.

The Government is also committed to putting $1.05 billion in new money into the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency over the next five years, which is roughly $200 million a year. This means ACOA will administer almost $400 million each year in regional development funds in Atlantic Canada for the next five years.

Just how that $400 million a year will be used is currently stated in Clause 4 and Clause 12 of Bill C-103, which outline the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and what it will do. Clause 4 states that "the purpose of the agency is to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada and, more particularly, to enhance the growth of earned incomes and employment opportunities".

Clause 12 adds to that, saying that the agency will place: "particular emphasis on small and medium-sized enterprises, through policy, program and project development and implementation and through advocacy of the interests of Atlantic Canada in national economic policy, program and project development and implementation".

The human meaning of that dry, legal language is that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will develop the most important resource of Atlantic Canada, the people of Atlantic Canada.

The commitment to the people of the region is the key part, the important part of the Government's fresh approach to regional development. Regional development must be based on local involvement, must be based on the local economy, must be developed mainly by local people who are those with the most intimate knowledge of what will work and with the greatest stake in making development work.

This is the first real regional economic development policy that will not be dependent upon ideas that are made and formulated in Ottawa. It will not be, once again, the flow of ideas from Ottawa because that is what Ottawa thinks is best for Atlantic Canada. This agency will utilize the innovative thinking, the entrepreneurial spirit and ideas of Atlantic Canadians who know best what the Atlantic Canada economy needs and what will work in Atlantic Canada.

This Bill gives Atlantic Canadians the tools to develop their economy in a way that no previous development Act has ever done. It throws out a challenge to Atlantic Canadians to show that they, with their enterprise and their initiative, can do the job.

We know Atlantic Canadians can create their own opportunities. As a Member of Parliament from Atlantic Canada, I can assure the House that we need and want the opportunity for economic growth. We want to use our entrepreneurial talents. This Bill gives us the financial resources and the leeway to utilize our entrepreneurial talents, to make it work in Atlantic Canada.

Let there be no doubt that there is entrepreneurial talent in Atlantic Canada. Between 1978 and 1985, Atlantic Canadian entrepreneurs created 20,000 new enterprises, each with fewer than 100 employees, to give the region 70,000 small and medium sized enterprises.

This is not regional development imposed from Ottawa. It is regional development with roots in the region.

To ensure that the purpose of the Bill will be met and that the agency will help Atlantic Canada direct its own economic development and build on its human resources and its abundant natural resources on the land and in the sea, Senator Murray will be advised by a 19-member board of men and women from and of the region.

When examining the board, we must take into consideration the role which these 19 people have been assigned. The role of the board is to give policy advice. It will direct the staff to conduct studies and formulate policy options. It will review program proposals and innovative or unusual projects, and will recommend policies or decisions to the Minister. The Minister retains the executive power of decision-making but will be strongly guided by the recommendations of the board which consists of these 19 members from Atlantic Canada.

While most people have understood and welcomed the creation of this board, and the strong advocacy capacity, some have suggested that a decision-making board which would focus on projects and specific cases where it could make final decisions, would be more appropriate.

This argument misses the point. Of course, the group of people on the ACOA board could make good decisions on specific cases. They have the experience to do so, but if they had to examine even a partial share of the hundreds of cases that come before ACOA they would have to become full-time employees of ACOA. Even then, there would be no time for the vital job of guiding the broad policy developments of the agency.

Of course, the board will have all the information on the cases and project decisions of ACOA and will comment on these program delivery decisions as appropriate. Indeed, this kind of independent, objective review of program results will be a big contribution by the board to the operations of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities agency.

The agency will be an advocate for Atlantic Canada, defining and promoting the interests of Atlantic Canada at regional and national levels; promoting an Atlantic perspective and ensuring that Atlantic Canada gets fair and reasonable consideration, and a fair and reasonable share of the benefits from national policies and programs.

Following the Prime Minister's announcement about the establishment of the agency in St. John's, Newfoundland, on June 6, responsibility for economic and regional development agreements was transferred to Senator Murray and ACOA. Under this Bill, the strategy and management of the ERDAs is a responsibility of the agency.

Discussions are now being held on a new series of economic and regional development agreements with each of the four Atlantic provinces.

Clause 6(2) of the Bill says that the Minister for ACOA may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, enter into agreements with the government of any province or provinces in Atlantic Canada respecting the carrying out of any programs or project of the agency.

Clause 13(h) gives the agency power to enter into contracts, memoranda of understanding or other arrangements in the name of the agency.

Clause 18 of the Bill deals with the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Board, made up of 19 people from Atlantic Canada, as I mentioned. Their main job is to assist the agency in the exercise of its powers and performance of its duties and functions. New Brunswick and Nova Scotia have five members each on the board, and Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland have four members each. Members are owners and operators of small and medium-sized enterprises, representatives of provincial governments, regional development commissions, and of labour.

I have a list of the members of the agency. I want to mention some of the occupations which describe the broad range represented by the board of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. One board member is an acting chairman of the cabinet secretariat from the Province of New Brunswick. Another is president of Canada East Tours, located in Bathurst. Another individual is the owner of Atlantic Mini-Fridge Company, located in Moncton. This person used to work for the old Department of Regional Economic Expansion, and saw some of the benefits government programs were offering to Atlantic Canada. He took the initiative, formed his own company, and has done extremely well. He has offered his expertise and experience to the advantage of all Atlantic Canadians, by serving on the board of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

The President of Assumption Mutual Life, located in Edmundston with headquarters in Moncton, is another member of the board. The regional librarian for the Saint John Regional Library is another member of the board as is a member of the Canadian Advisory Board from Marsh McLennan in Halifax.

Despite some of the criticisms we heard in the House yesterday, another member of the board is the international representative of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers located in Sydney, Nova Scotia.

Another is partner in MCS Ventures located in Halifax. There is the executive director of the Eastern Shore Development Commission in Halifax County. There is the President of Stewart Restaurant in New Glasgow. Prince Edward Island is represented by a director from the Atlantic Ventures Trust in Charlottetown. There is the president and general manager of M.F. Schurman Limited in Summerside. It is represented by a well known lawyer from Prince Edward Island, and from the Government side, the secretary to the policy board of the Government of Prince Edward Island. Newfoundland is also well represented with the manager of the National Life of Canada located in St. John's, the Assistant Deputy Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, the president of General Industries Limited and the president of North Limited, which is located in Goose Bay, Labrador. These people have offered to share their talent and expertise to help Atlantic Canadians take full use of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

Since that board was appointed on August 31, a great deal of activity has taken place with respect to Atlantic Canada and the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. The agency spends a great deal of time addressing itself to Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation. That is a topic I will leave to a representative from Cape Breton. I am sure they will be able to give a first-hand impression of what Bill C-103 will do with respect to the Cape Breton Enterprise Corporation and what it offers to the people of Cape Breton.

I have outlined briefly what this Bill will do for Atlantic Canada and Atlantic Canadians once it is passed by Parliament. Since June 6 when the Prime Minister announced the formation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency there have been consultation meetings held all across Atlantic Canada. A head office has been established in Moncton and certainly as the Member of Parliament for Moncton, I can tell Members that it is a pleasing thought to us to have in Moncton a headquarters of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency which, in essence, is really a national agency.

We welcome the people who will be employed in that agency. We are sure they will find Moncton an excellent place to work, to live and to bring up a family, and possibly, after successful years with the agency, an excellent place to retire.

Offices have been set up in every provincial capital. Staff has been hired and work has been done on a policy framework for the agency which has resulted in the Bill before us here today.

ACOA has been administering and delivering existing regional development programs since it was created. It has cut red tape and streamlined the delivery process to get funds to those who need them in the shortest time possible. Over 90 per cent of the applications under AEP, IRDP and ECB can now be directly approved by the regional vice-president. This has made the approval process much simpler and faster.

In the six-and-a-half months since the agency was established, it has approved 451 applications and authorized $68 million in contributions to the Atlantic Enterprises Program. These approvals have meant that business has been able to create 1,704 new jobs and has enabled these businesses to retain 2,648 additional jobs. We are now asking Parliament to give us the authority to do the full and complete job we must do to bring Atlantic Canada into full partnership with Canada's economic life.

This Bill creates an agency which will allow Atlantic Canadians to make decisions about their economic future. This Bill creates an agency which Atlantic Canada can use as an instrument to mold so that Atlantic Canadians can seize the opportunities of the future. It does not repeat the mistakes of the past. It does not expect Atlantic Canadians to adapt to programs best suited for central or western Canada. In fact, this Bill gives Atlantic Canadians, through the agency, the tools needed to adapt national programs to meet the specific needs of the region.

The agency takes into account the dramatically different economy, industrial base, environment and cultures of the Atlantic Canada region in a way that is fresh and exciting. We have targeted, in particular, small and medium sized enterprises, those locally owned and locally managed, as the best way to improve economic performance in Atlantic Canada. Smaller enterprises have a proven record of creating new permanent jobs. The job of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is to encourage local growth. We know this can best be done by increasing the number of small and medium sized enterprises operating and flourishing in Atlantic Canada.

ACOA will develop the abundant talent and ability of Atlantic Canadians. This is a new partnership for Atlantic Canada of private and public sectors, a development partnership with improved and faster decision-making authority. It is an agency completely supported by all members of our caucus from Atlantic Canada, not for narrow partisan reasons but because this agency, this approach, is the best for Atlantic Canada. It is an approach not of desperation but of concern for the region and optimism about the region's future.

It has been my privilege to assist my colleagues in caucus, as well as Members of the Cabinet, Senator Murray and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) in this House and outside this House. This is an important Bill. It is important for the future of Atlantic Canada and for the future of Canada. I know we can move quickly on this Bill. I know Members all agree that we should and must move quickly to ensure Bill C-103 receives the full support of Parliament and the Senate so it can be put to work fully and extensively to bring benefits to Atlantic Canadians.

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, the president of the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce, Mr. DesBrisay, has been mentioned in the media as having suggested that the board, just mentioned by the Hon. Member in his address, should be a decision-making board with authority over the agency. I wonder if the Member would share with us his thoughts on this proposition and the reaction of the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce to the decision of the agency not to accept that proposition?

Mr. Cochrane: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have a chance to respond to the question of my colleague. There has been ongoing debate in Atlantic Canada about the agency. It has been basically premature debate because the agency is only six-and-a-half months old. We are now looking for legislative authority to put the agency into operation. One of the critics has been Mr. Rick DesBrisay, who is the president of the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce. I happen to know Mr. DesBrisay and probably know from where he is coming when he speaks.

I might add that a number of other members of the Chamber of Commerce, particularly in the greater Moncton Area and throughout Atlantic Canada, have expressed a concern to me that perhaps this president is not speaking on behalf of all their member agencies. Perhaps he has an axe to grind. I think anyone from New Brunswick knows his background politically and the involvement of his father in the previous Liberal Government from 1960 to 1970. More importantly, I think, those of us in Atlantic Canada who were involved at the beginning of this agency realize that he felt he was the best person in Atlantic Canada, believe it or not, to be the president of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. He came to see me. He lobbied fully with bureaucrats in Ottawa and with other Members of Parliament in Atlantic Canada so that he could receive the appointment as president of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

Knowing that, I have a very difficult time looking with any seriousness at the comments coming from this individual, supposedly on behalf of the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce. He does not necessarily represent each individual Chamber of Commerce. We know where he is coming from politically. I think we know he feels a sense of rejection. He felt he had the best ideas for that agency and because we did not accept him and because Don McPhail, a previous ambassador, was chosen to be the president designate, he feels the agency is out of touch and out of tune and, basically, out of touch and out of tune with his thinking, his point of view, his background, and his own personal objectives.

I am pleased to have a chance to tell everyone that perhaps some of the criticism is coming forward for a reason not strictly in the best interest of Atlantic Canada. The application that was submitted by the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce was rejected. I think the board would be receptive to seeing a new application. However, the basic reason for that rejection was that the money was going to be used to assist volunteers in a program, and by its very legislative mandate the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is designed to put people to work, to earn money, to make a living and, hopefully, to pay taxes. It was not meant to promote a volunteer program.

If the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce wishes to rework that application, I am led to believe it will be given consideration by the board. Certainly, in rejection of the application there was no element of blacklisting of that Chamber of Commerce. At the same time, I think people must read and note the comments of the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce, particularly through its spokesman, Mr. DesBrisay, keeping in mind his background, his involvement and his interest in this agency and its creation.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief comment. I hope that the Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane) was not leading the House to believe that because a person's father may have voted one way in the past that his son would vote the same way or act the same way politically. I would like to relate to him a recent experience in Newfoundland which took place in July of last year. At that time a great number of people whose fathers did not vote for the New Democratic Party, and a great number of people whose mothers did not vote for the New Democratic Party, voted for the new Democratic Party. I do not know what goes on in New Brunswick. We will see what will happen in the next federal election. At that time there may be a great number of people who will not vote the way their mothers or fathers voted.

I now wish to ask the Hon. Member a question. Does he agree with the Minister of Public works, (Mr. McInnes) who said in March of this year that this is the last kick at the can for Atlantic Canada? Is this the last shot? Will we throw up our hands if this does not work? Does the Hon. Member agree with that approach? If he does, does he think $200 million a year for five years is sufficient to look after regional development in terms of the regional inequities and the regional disparities that exist in Atlantic Canada?

Mr. Cochrane: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I was not casting any aspersions on Mr. Des-Brisay's ability to look at good legislation and good programs of the Government and therefore have the possibility of changing his ways of the past. I was more or less drawing attention to the fact that the background is somewhat relevant when looking at the criticisms that are coming forward.

I appreciate the Hon. Member's question with regard to the last kick at the can in Atlantic Canada. I do not believe that. This is one program that is specifically designed for Atlantic Canadians. I think that it is our best kick at the can. I wish to assure the Hon. Member that after a five year period, if we find that this program does not work, the Government will look at other solutions, as it has done in the past. We will not just go to a group of bureaucrats in Ottawa and ask what is best for Atlantic Canada. We will continue to consult with Atlantic Canadians.

It is our best kick at the can. It is the best opportunity we have seen for a Government program to help Atlantic Canadians. I can assure the Hon. Member that it will be successful. It has all the elements of being a successful program, not only because of the $200 million that the Hon. Member and I have mentioned, but also because of the $196 million a year that it will administer through AEP, the ERDAs and the IRDP. The $400 million for each of the next five years gives us a chance to put Bill C-103 to work for Atlantic Canadians by Atlantic Canadians. It really represents the best effort that has ever come out of this House with regard to helping the people of Atlantic Canada help themselves.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I am certain the people of Moncton are happy that the head office of this agency will be located in their city. I want to ask the Hon. Member how many of the people who will be employed in the head office of this agency will come from the hundreds who were laid off when the CNR shops were closed? Does the Hon. Member have any information as to how many of those have already found employment or what are the prospects for those who worked for the railway for so many years?

Mr. Cochrane: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with the Hon. Member's question. One of the reasons it was decided to locate the headquarters of the agency in Moncton was that Moncton was going through some difficult times. I can say that as a Member of Parliament from Moncton I have been going through some difficult times, along with my constituents.

There are approximately 300 jobs across the system associated with the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. I am led to believe that in the area of one-third of those will eventually find their way into the regional headquarters in Moncton. A number of the DRIE support staff have been seconded to work for the agency. As well, some new people have been employed. We are certainly pleased to have the 100 or so highly paid bureaucratic jobs located in Moncton.

As to the second part of the Hon. Member's question, hopefully, some people from CN might find their way into this agency. However, the reality is such that this agency performs basically a bureaucratic function, whereas most of the people at CN were involved in industrial activity.

Of the 1,020 people who were affected by the shut-down only 130, in the end, will find themselves without employment security which will guarantee a job until the age of 65, a transfer elsewhere in Moncton, or a transfer elsewhere in Canada, primarily to Montreal or to the city to which the Hon. Member represents. The 130 people received up to 80 per cent of their salaries and benefits for a period of time that related to the number of years that they worked for the company. Of the 1,030 only 130 are left seeking long term employment activity.

I can assure the Hon. Member that this agency will give some of the enterprises in Atlantic Canada an opportunity to expand and, hopefully, to employ some of these people. My job will be to ensure that is does that. My job will be to ensure that the business community in my area will be able to attract some of this $400 million per year into Moncton to find employment opportunities for these people. That is an objective of mine, and, I am sure it is one which the Hon. Member shares. I am sure that all Members of this House who will be supporting Bill C-103 also share that objective.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I, too, am happy to be able to participate in this debate. The comments of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane), about those who dare to criticize the formulation and, indeed, the implementation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency was a character assassination which I do not believe is becoming of that Member.

Regional development has been on the minds of many Canadians, particularly those of us who reside in Atlantic Canada, for quite some time. Suffice it to say that for me as a Member of Parliament from Atlantic Canada I believe it to be the most pressing issue that Governments, both national and provincial, must consult, address and, hopefully, solve.

The fight to lessen regional disparities did not begin in September of 1984. Policies of the past were put forward with the same hope and desire to lessen those disparities before September of 1984. Unfortunately, many of those programs were not as successful as one would have hoped.

However, it is worth noting the effect, as was indicated by the so-called expert in the person of Dr. Donald Savoie, who submitted a report to the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in May of 1987, that some of the previous policies have had on lessening regional disparities, particularly those in Atlantic Canada. I do not subscribe, nor do Members of my Party subscribe, to the statements made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), the Minister responsible in this House for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, when he said that all programs of previous Governments were bad, did not address the issues and were not successful.

I remind the Minister and, indeed, all Members opposite, of what Mr. Savoie said in the introduction of his report that he gave to the Prime Minister. He stated that, "If we have learned anything about the problem of regional development during the past 30 years in Canada, it is surely that there are no panaceas." That must be the same for this particular agency in that it, too, is no panacea.

It is also worthwhile to note that on pages six, seven and eight of this report to the Prime Minister he writes about regional equity in public services. He states:

> Federal transfers to the provinces and to individuals in Atlantic Canada over the years have had an important impact on the economic structure of the region. Unfortunately, this fact has been too often overlooked. By concentrating on standard economic indicators of employment and per capita income, we have never focused sufficiently on the important progress that has been made in the region in recent years.

Those are the words of Dr. Donald Savoie set out in his report to the Prime Minister in May of 1987.

• (1200)

The report further states:

> Federal transfers to provincial governments and to individuals have enabled the Atlantic provinces to close the gap with the other regions on a number of fronts. By 1979-80, the total fiscal capacity of the Atlantic provinces fell within a relatively narrow range, 85-99 per cent of the national average. This brought the Atlantic provinces much closer to the national average of provincial expenditures per capita in 1979 than they were in 1962. Federal finance officials report still more progress in recent years with all four Atlantic provinces now close to 95 per cent of the national average (after all federal transfers).
> Increased provincial expenditures can indicate improved public services, as has been the case in Atlantic Canada.

He goes on to quote and itemize some of those.

On page 7 of the report it states:

> Federal transfer payments have not only increased the capacity of provincial governments to provide services to their residents but have also enabled individual Canadians in 'have-not' regions to acquire basic household necessities. Regional disparities in this respect, extremely wide twenty years ago, are now virtually non-existent.

Dr. Savoie gives the example that Newfoundland moved from 38.3 per cent in 1961 to 97.1 per cent of the national average in 1981 for the indicator "households with refrigerators", and the report goes on and on.

The policies of the past, although they have not met our expectations, hopes, or desires, in a way have tried to alleviate some of those problems. I wish to put that on the record in order that all Members will be cognizant of what has taken place, and indeed of the words of Dr. Donald Savoie, the expert, as indicated by Members opposite.

This debate in the Conservative Party has raged on from 1982, through 1983 and 1984 leading up to the federal election where the Conservatives won with an overwhelming majority, and I believe the largest majority in Atlantic Canada for quite some time. That majority was predicated on the fact that they and they alone had the answers, or many of the answers with regard to the lessening of regional disparity in Atlantic Canada.

That was prior to September of 1984. Many Members on this side of the House, and many residents of Atlantic Canada, automatically assumed that the Government of the day, knowing full well the difficulties and the problems of that particular region, would have a program or a series of programs which could address the fundamental problems in the Atlantic economy.

From September 4, 1984 we had to wait more than two years until October 1, 1986 for the Government to put some words on paper with regard to regional disparities. As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, those were the words which were contained in the Throne Speech by the governing Party. That was October 1, 1986, and here we are in January, 1988 now dealing with a Bill which, if one goes by the words and sentiments expressed by the Minister of Transport responsible for Atlantic Canada opportunities, will be our panacea. It has been almost four full years before the problem of regional disparities in Atlantic Canada are addressed in a substantive manner.

I suggest to you, Sir, that perhaps the critics of this agency may have a point in that we are on the route or the path to a general election only months ahead, and that this is mere window dressing on which to run the next federal election.

The critics, as commented by the Hon. Member for Moncton whom I believe was rather unfair in his assessment of the criticism coming from that particular organization in Atlantic Canada, are real, because our expectations, our hopes and dreams of lessening disparity have been fueled by a governing Party which has repeatedly stated that it would have the answers and the programs to address those most serious situations.

The time lag is one major problem. But let us look at the moneys that the Government of Canada is committing to regional economic development in Atlantic Canada. Much has been said of the billion dollars. In fact, the Prime Minister has gone on record to talk about new money to the tune of $1 billion. Canadians, and particularly Atlantic Canadians, ought to be reminded that since 1984 the Government has reduced the financial wherewithal in terms of regional disparities by approximately $1 billion annually for a deficit or a reduction in regional development expenditures of $3 billion. The Government has now stated that in place of that it will allot $200 million annually, adding up over five years to $1 billion. That is another example of the lack of sincerity and lack of political will of the governing Party and its huge majority.

One would have to conclude the ineffectiveness of the whopping majority of Conservative Members from Atlantic Canada, and in particular the Cabinet representations, in what we are receiving in Atlantic Canada in view of those obvious, startling revelations in terms of the reduction of moneys allocated toward regional disparities.

Much has been said about the ERDA program. The Minister of Transport responsible did not argue or debate. This program will terminate in June, 1988. That is one program gone. The Minister of Transport does not say that even though that ERDA program had substantial shortcomings, some moneys, not a great deal, have gone into Atlantic Canada. That will no longer be the case.

In fact, at page 14 of his report to the Prime Minister, Dr. Donald Savoie stated that the total expenditure from 1984 to 1985 in Nova Scotia amounted to roughly 3.7 per cent of the total budget, while during that timeframe in the Province of Ontario roughly 41.8 per cent of the moneys under the ERDA program were spent there. We got a teensy-weensy, little bit of money, but then again that program will be gone in June, 1988. There is no new money to replace that particular program.

It is, what my colleague from Newfoundland has said, less money being spent on regional economic development in an attempt to massage the media into believing that somehow by the introduction of ACOA, Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation, and all the other programs with all the different names—by massaging them together somehow the people of Atlantic Canada will be tricked into believing that the new Messiah is on the horizon, when it has taken four years for the Prime Minister and his Cabinet colleagues from Atlantic Canada to put this legislation before the House of Commons.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker that that is not negligence by the Government of Canada, that is not negligence by the Prime Minister or the Atlantic Ministers in that Cabinet, it is gross negligence that they would treat a region of this country with such disrespect by making it wait for almost four years before introducing legislation to address the seriousness of regional disparities, and thereafter substantially reducing the moneys being allocated to reduce regional disparities in our region. What an insult. What is even more insulting is that those Members of Parliament from Atlantic Canada who sit on the government benches say nothing of the disrespect that this Government has shown to our region.

Many questions have to be asked at the committee stage, in the House, and perhaps during third reading. We would like to know the remuneration that the President of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will receive. We want to know the annual budget that this will have both for operating and capital purposes. However, yesterday we heard very clearly from the Minister of Transport that there will be no money set aside for the purposes of infrastructure moneys, none whatsoever.

We will want to hear from Canadians in that region about the concept of an 18-member board. Is it merely to enhance the economic viability of 18 Tories in Atlantic Canada? Is that the purpose of it? It has had four meetings since its inception. We will want to know about it from the Minister and indeed from Canadians living in Atlantic Canada.

We also want more information and more answers with regard to Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation in terms of its budget, both on a yearly basis and for the next five years. We want to know the rationale for having the president of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency also sitting as the president of the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation.

I have been told—and I hope that I am wrong and that Hon. Members opposite will set the record straight—that the president of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will reside in Halifax. However, its head office will be in Moncton, and the head office of Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation will be in Sydney, Nova Scotia. Residency of the president is not the most important aspect of the debate, but it has bearing on the programs and the sensitivity which one accumulates over a period of time by residing in a particular community. We want to know the rationale for that.

There is a clear demarcation between the previous Cape Breton Development Corporation and the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation. The president will not reside in Cape Breton. Presumably he will reside in Moncton if in fact the headquarters are to be there.

We want to know why the Government of Canada has fixed the sum of $100 million on loan guarantees which Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation is allowed to make. Why has it fixed them at $100 million? Is that not an impediment with regard to the flexibility of that particular corporation in terms of its dealing with future businesses as well as with the public and private sectors?

It was interesting to hear the comments of the Minister of Transport yesterday in the House of Commons. I think he devoted the sum of one paragraph to the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation. In his last sentence he said:

DEVCO will retain a clear commercial mandate to continue the coalmining operations of DEVCO.

Let it be said that the Government has made a complete and utter mess of the coal division of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. It has gutted the coal division, starting with the statements made by the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) when she said, on one of her many junkets across the country, particularly in western Canada, that they did not want the Cape Breton Development Corporation exporting any of its product on the international market.

Talk about disparities, Mr. Speaker. I know the Government will talk about the investment tax credit which we put in place, by the way, and about certain economic activities taking place on the Island itself. Everyone including myself wants to see more of that taking place in terms of real economic dollars, but the Government does not talk about the 604 employees who were gutted from the Cape Breton Development Corporation. It does not talk about the way in which that corporation deals with compensation of miners who work underground, sometimes going down seven miles underneath the ocean floor. The Minister of Transport has made no reference to that. The Government does not talk about the preretirement need to fix a certain sum of money to ensure that individuals who may take an early retirement will not be at the poverty level for one year or for the rest of their lives because if they accumulate any outside income it must be calculated in the figure in terms of the income they receive from the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

We have not heard from the Minister responsible with regard to research and development expenditures at the coal division of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. I have said to coalminers, to their executives, to their families, and to the loved ones of people who have lost their husbands in the coalmines that we in Cape Breton cannot continue to develop a coal industry by merely extracting from the ground, or beneath the ocean floor, quantities of coal to be shipped to the surfaces and burnt in power plants. Moneys must be received for research and development in terms of products which come from coal, whether it be a carbo-gel, or a form of oil and coal to be used in a variety of purposes which is environmentally safe. The Government has done little if anything to assist or to enhance that aspect of the Cape Breton coal division.

In terms of the price of coal, the Government of Canada has directed DEVCO to reduce its price to the Nova Scotia Power Corporation. It is funding the private sector to usurp the role which Cape Breton has been playing for a good number of years in the mining of coal and providing it to the Nova Scotia Power Corporation.

Those are a few of my concerns, not all of them, with regard to the legislation, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, and the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation. They are substantial, but in summary I should like to reiterate two points. It has taken the Government four years to introduce legislation to address what it knew in 1983 and said in 1984 was a serious problem. Second, to reduce the budget and the expenditures to the tune of $200 million to replace a $1 billion assessment by previous Governments is not only an injustice but an insult to the people of Atlantic Canada. It is totally wrong for the Government of Canada to pursue that course of action.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the comments of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Dingwall). I would like to ask him whether the following is a misrepresentation of his views.

I quote from the October 1986 edition of The Chronicle Herald of Halifax wherein the Hon. Member is quoted as admitting that his own Party lost the political will to stimulate economic growth in the region in the last years of the Trudeau Government. I wonder whether the Hon. Member was misquoted in that context.

Would he also tell us what reaction he had when the former Prime Minister, the now Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), dropped the Minister responsible for regional expansion or regional development from Cabinet? What was his reaction to that? Has the position of his Party changed since then?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) for his question. He reiterated a quote which he found in The Chronicle Herald. I do not know whether it was absolutely accurate, but I think the sentiment I expressed was well described in the article to which he referred.

I take the Hon. Member back—and I am sure he has done his research thoroughly and effectively—to a debate in the House of Commons in 1982 when the Government of the day, my Party, brought forward amendments to change DREE to DRIE. At that time many Members on all sides of the House expressed grave reservations. I was one of those Members who believed that that change was wrong and said so on the floor of the House of Commons. I indicated to Hon. Members opposite that it ought to be changed if I was proven right, and I think I have been proven right.

I think the Hon. Member will attest to the fact that those policies which were put in place did not fundamentally address the concerns of Atlantic Canada. Equally so, the plan which is now being put into effect, some four years or five years after the Conservatives have come to power, is no panacea for righting the wrongs in terms of regional disparity. I do not have a monopoly, nor does the Government and certainly not the New Democratic Party, on all the answers and all the panaceas for regional disparity. That is my response to the first question the Hon. Member asked.

• (1220)

The Hon. Member mentioned the dropping of a regional Minister of DRIE at the time. The Hon. Member will recall, as I am sure his research has found, that there was a cabinet committee set up specifically to deal with regional economic disparities. One of the problems the Hon. Member will find about this particular agency, as we found in 1982, 1983 and 1984, is that this agency will become the sole economic tool for development in Atlantic Canada. There will not be the co-operation of the Department of Transport or the Secretary of State for expenditures. The government Departments will say, "You have a budget of $200 million; you want us to construct an airport or a wharf in St. John's East, so go to that pool of money under the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, that is where it is at".

That is one of the underlying shortcomings and deficiencies of this program. I say this to the Hon. Member, who I believe, and I say this with great sincerity, shares my view or at least has expressed similar sentiments, that regional disparity cannot be fought on the back of one small agency of the Government of Canada. It must receive the attention of the Prime Minister. There must be a national commitment to rectifying those disparities within the region. That cannot and will not be done, as evidenced before by other Governments which tried, by deluding ourselves into thinking that one agency with 300 people, a budget of $200 million less $800 million from previous Governments, will address in any fundamental way the disparities in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, in the interests of honesty, fairness and facts, since the Hon. Member mentioned four years as it related to the present Government, would he not agree that four years ago there was a Liberal administration of which he was a part?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, again the Hon. Member has brought to my attention his ability, his astuteness and his awareness, and he wishes to show the House that he has a major in mathematics since he can count better than I in terms of months. What the Hon. Member may have missed in some of my statements is that it was his Party that led in part a debate on regional economic disparities, particularly relating to Atlantic Canada, some four years ago in the House of Commons when the Right Hon. Prime Minister was the Leader of the Official Opposition. I say to the Hon. Member that in part, he is correct and in part, I am correct.

Mr. Jardine: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) spoke of regional disparity in Atlantic Canada and the almost four years it seemed to take before the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency was implemented as though to imply that during this period of time, the Government had been standing still. I would like to bring to his attention that since 1984 there has been a total of 35,000 jobs created in my own Province of New Brunswick. In comparison, there was a net loss of 1,000 jobs in the period between 1980 and 1984.

The unemployment rate has fallen by almost 3.5 percentage points during that same period of time. Total unemployment rose by 19,000 during the term of the last Liberal Government. In contrast, unemployment in New Brunswick has fallen by 7,000 since September, 1984.

Given these figures, one would ask if we really need this program. Well, indeed we do, without a doubt. In New Brunswick, there is still an unemployment rate of some 12.7 per cent, and I daresay that is reflected across Atlantic Canada.

It has been said that there are no political yards to be gained by trying to do something in the Maritimes because they are so fiercely partisan that they can agree on nothing. Perhaps the Hon. Member would be so kind as to prove this wrong and to tell the House what is the one single most important achievement of this Bill.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, on the final point, one of the Bill's objectives is that it will attempt to use money, time and effort for entrepreneurial development. I believe that that is an important and positive feature of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, something to which I have subscribed for quite some time. That is on the positive side.

The Hon. Member believes that the Government has been doing something for the last four years. The Hon. Member is quite right, but he refuses to acknowledge that conditions within the international economy and particularly the North American economy have improved dramatically. In large part, that has not been because of the Government of Canada but because of world international conditions.

Perhaps the Hon. Member has had some difficulties understanding and accepting this, but this is a Government that has done a lot about regional disparities in Canada between 1984 and January of 1988. It has done a great deal. It has slashed expenditures for regional economic development. It has raised taxes to an almighty God high, the highest we have ever seen in this country. That is what it has done for regional disparities in Atlantic Canada.

Of course, the Government has cut substantially the number of public servants across Canada, something which affects the Atlantic region more than any other region in Canada. For the Hon. Member's own edification, I give him the example of the cancellation of the decentralization program which was set to help the constituency of my colleague from Cape Breton—The Sydneys. That is a clear example of what the Conservative Government did for regional economic development.

We agree that the Tories have done a great deal for regional economic development. They cut the budget, they waited for four years to introduce new legislation and they reduced their commitment to the people of Atlantic Canada to a mere blinking of the eye.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in the run up to the election of 1984, the Conservative Party made hundreds of promises. It promised that it would continue existing programs and that it would bring forth new programs. Those are promises that to a large extent have been ignored since the Conservatives won the election.

The promises have been ignored because the major objective of this Conservative Government has been its insistence that before anything can be done to help the people of Canada and the many regions of Canada which need assistance the deficit which it says is unnecessarily high must be reduced.

When looking at this Bill, an Act to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, we must keep in mind that since its election in 1984 this Conservative Government has reduced funding for federal Government programs in Atlantic Canada by $1.5 billion annually. Now it proposes, if and when this Bill is passed, to give this new agency $1.5 billion, not $1.5 billion annually but $1.5 billion over a period of five years. That is just $200 million a year.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) talked about Atlantic Canada before the election he promised that the Conservative Government would pump new money into Atlantic Canada. We see that instead of pumping new money into Atlantic Canada the Conservative Government has reduced very substantially the funding for Atlantic Canada.

• (1230)

The objective of this agency, as outlined by Senator Murray, is that it will concentrate its efforts almost entirely on the private sector helping individual companies get going. I wish that members on the government side would look at the experience in the United States, particularly in the have-not states, the southern states of the U.S.A. They have come to realize that low wages will not produce jobs, certainly not good jobs. They have come to realize that they cannot compete in a meaningful way, in a way that will help their people as long as the infrastructure which they provide is so poor compared to the western states, the northern states and the central states. States like Mississippi have the lowest per capita expenditure on education. Sewer and water systems are poor, electric power rates are high and roads and bridges are in poor shape. These have-not states cannot compete and they have begun to realize that.

The Canadian Government ignores that evidence from the United States and ignores the evidence we should have accumulated in Canada by now. Without providing the required basic infrastructure, physical and human, Atlantic Canada will not be able to improve and certainly will not be able to compete with more prosperous areas in Canada.

Under this Conservative Government the commitment to regional development and assistance to Atlantic Canada has declined substantially. I talked about the $1.5 billion reduction annually for Atlantic Canada. Let us put that in more precise terms. Explicit regional development expenditure in 1984-85 for all of Atlantic Canada was about $230 million. That is just 15 per cent of the unemployment insurance payments for the area. Expenditures under DRIE's industrial incentive programs have decreased in real terms from $9 a person in the 1969-74 period to $4 a person for the 1984-86 period. Expenditures under the GDA and ERDA programs has declined from $16 a person for the period 1974-79 to $14 in 1984-86. Even the Conservative Government of Newfoundland has estimated that a minimum requirement for funding this agency so it could do its job properly would require an expenditure of $366 million a year instead of the $200 million which is being put forward by this Bill.

I was struck by some of the remarks made yesterday by the Conservative Member for York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie). He said in part that this agency will build up the research capabilities of the area's universities to ensure that regional enterprise is fostered. We can build on the excellent universities in the area, he said. Then he compared the large scale unemployment in Atlantic Canada with the New England States which have a low rate of unemployment.

The Hon. Member from York—Sunbury and other Conservative Members should ask why there is that difference. First, the United States, under the Reagan administration, has been involved in a tremendous and major increase in expenditures for the production of armaments. Even the Conservative Government which is proposing to build nuclear submarines, tanks and ships could not visualize a similar rate of expansion for the building of armaments in this country.

There is another very good reason. The universities in the New England States, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Harvard University, Boston University, and the University of Massachusetts have been very heavily involved in scientific research and development funded to a large extent by federal and state Governments. That research and development has led to the spin-off of a large number of new companies involved in high technology areas. We have nothing like that in Canada and we are not likely to get anything like that, given this Government's approach to research and development.

I remind Members of Parliament that before the 1984 election the present Prime Minister castigated the then Liberal Government because Canada's expenditure for scientific research and development was one of the lowest of any of the countries belonging to the OECD and Japan. While other countries were allocating 2 per cent to 2.5 per cent of their Gross National Product to scientific research and development, Canada's rate of expenditures was just about 1.3 per cent, half of what other countries were doing.

The present Prime Minister quite properly castigated the then Liberal Government and promised that a Conservative Government would double the rate of expenditures to 2.5 per cent, but what is the record and the reality, Mr. Speaker? The reality is, as the Prime Minister had to admit at the recent Conference on Scientific Research and Technology, that this year, after over three years of Conservative Government, we are still devoting only 1.3 per cent of our Gross National Product to scientific research and development.

What happens as a result of that? Canada is the only major industrialized country with trade deficits in all of the major high technology groups including aerospace, data processing machines, drugs and electronic equipment. Canada is also failing to educate sufficient numbers of scientists and engineers who might sustain the necessary economic transformation. If we do not have that transformation, we will have more unemployment, more people working at low wages because the resource-based industries on which we have always depended are facing increasing competition from Third World countries with much lower wage rates than we have, and our resources are, to a large extent, being rapidly depleted.

In an OECD survey of the number of scientists and engineers per 10,000 people in the labour force, Canada had just one-third as many as Japan, less than half of the number in the United States and just over half the number in West Germany. There are approximately 50,000 businesses in Canada that depend on technology and only 2.5 per cent of the total, about 1,250, are involved in any research and development. Contrast that with the United States where there are 15,000 firms spending $110 billion annually on research and development at a rate of three times ours as a percentage of domestic product.

At the recent conference on scientific research and technology the Prime Minister announced that the Government would be allocating another $250 million a year to the universities for scientific research and development. That sounds very good until you compare that announcement with the announcement made just about the same time that the private sector companies in the U.S.A. involved in the production of computer chips are, this year, investing the same amount of money, $250 million, into a new research facility located in one city in the United States, that of Austin, Texas. That is only a small illustration of how far behind we are falling.

When the former Liberal Government announced a cut-back and limits on transfers to post-secondary education under the Established programs Financing program, the then Conservative Opposition voted against the proposal. What has the present Government done? In the Budget which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) introduced in 1985 we saw a proposed further cumulative loss to the provinces of nearly $6 billion between 1986-87 and 1990-91 of which $1.6 billion represents losses to post-secondary education institutions across the country.

What does that mean for post-secondary institutions in Atlantic Canada? From 1986 to 1990 the universities will lose; Newfoundland, $37 million a year; Prince Edward Island, $8 million; Nova Scotia, $55 million; and New Brunswick, $45 million. That is almost $200 million right there. These reductions will severely compromise the ability of the universities to carry out the research and teaching they should be doing, particularly since these universities have already, over the years of Liberal Governments, had their funding reduced.

We see a similar situation with the granting councils. The Government recently attempted to hide its negligence in funding university research by announcing a matching grant scheme. In February, 1986, the Minister of Finance announced that the Government would match private sector contributions to the three granting councils up to a maximum of 6 per cent annually.

Even the most optimistic projections on the dollar value of the matching grant schemes indicate that funding to the granting councils will be only marginally increased over the frozen base budget level. If you compare the matching grant scheme to the proposed five-year plans prepared by the granting councils themselves, there is a short-fall of hundreds of millions of dollars. The five-year plans that the granting councils developed were to meet the research goals and technology development strategies outlined by the federal Government, so the continued inadequate funding is inexcusable and tragically short-sighted. That means that the claims which the Member for York—Sunbury and other Conservative Members have made will simply will not materialize.

Let us look at the granting councils. In May of last year Dr. Bois, the President of the Medical Research Council, told the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare that the Medical Research Council had to implement a whole range of Draconian measures to cope with the current fiscal crisis. Among the measures that they adopted was that the approval rate of new operating grants from the February, 1987 competition was limited to approximately 25 per cent, even below the usual low approval rate of 30 per cent, and actual funding of the approved applications was delayed from July to October forcing disruptions in many planned research projects.

One of the areas in which new and important discoveries which will save hundreds and thousands of lives are being made is the field of medical research. Whole new industries are being established as a result of these discoveries. Just when that is happening all around the world the Conservative Government cuts back and freezes funding for the Medical Research Council.

Let us look at the National Research Council. Before the Prime Minister became Prime Minister he said that the National Research Council, which acts as Canada's main research laboratory, needed a funding increase of at least 20 per cent to bring its budget up to $400 million. That was four years ago. In May, 1987, the President of the National Research Council told the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology that the NRC budget had just reached $408 million. However, he also pointed out that in the preceding 12 months there had been $31 million worth of decreases at the NRC including a $4 million cut-back in science funding in British Columbia and $19 million in reductions to the NRC's regular programs.

At the same time as it is ignoring well-established and productive research at the NRC and University Granting Council the Government is plunging headlong into the vague area of space research, where there is no demonstrable track record, without the approval or agreement of any reputable scientific advisory committee.

Let us look at some of the areas in which government research has been important, for example, the business of food production and utilization of agricultural products, which is the most important and largest industry in Canada and is very important to Atlantic Canada. Twenty-five per cent of Canadians are involved in producing, researching, processing, servicing, and other parts of the food industry. It should be obvious that research in this area is tremendously important. In 1970 Canada's agricultural expenditures were 3.7 per cent of the total federal expenditures. By 1978 they had dropped to 2.4 per cent and are now only 1.9 per cent of total federal expenditures. Of this, only 10.9 per cent was devoted to agricultural research. In fact, between 1985 and 1987 federal expenditures in science and technology activities in agriculture declined by over $14 million.

Let us look at forestry, another area important to Atlantic Canada. Forest products industries represent one of Canada's largest industrial sectors accounting for about one job in every seven. It is very sad, therefore, to report that Canada is the only Government in the western world with a forestry ministry but no forestry research capabilities because the former Conservative Government in 1979 sold the forestry lab.

I think I have indicated very clearly what has happened under this Government. I will summarize what has happened in the way of cuts in university research funding. From EPF $5.5 billion nationally will have been cut by 1990. Important cuts have been made to universities in Atlantic Canada which have always been under-funded.

As my colleague, the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), has indicated, this is a major effort to flimflam the public. It is another public relations effort to convince people that the Government, which has in fact done so many things to hurt Atlantic Canada, is finally going to rectify the mistakes it made and give Atlantic Canada the help it needs. The help it is getting is substantially less than the help it got under the former Liberal Government, which help was itself inadequate.

For all those reasons we intend to vote against this Bill.

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker was kind enough to refer to my remarks in the House yesterday, and for that I thank him. Being mentioned by such a distinguished and highly respected parliamentarian is a very distinct honour for me and I am very grateful to him.

He mentioned in particular my allusion to the locomotive economy aspect that could be adopted by Atlantic Canada if we are able to trade more freely with the State of Maine and learn lessons from the way they have built on their great universities led by Harvard and MIT. He correctly points out that Canada's ability to purchase military installations and armaments is certainly not comparable to that of the United States. I should point out to him, however, that in the Province of New Brunswick we have the largest army training area in Canada and it is the largest employer of skilled and semi skilled persons in central New Brunswick. We also have more defence installations per capita than in any other part of Canada. These bases provide a large number of jobs.

The Hon. Member mentioned forestry and the lack of research. I should tell him that under construction in the City of Fredericton is the largest and most modern research facility in forestry in Canada. It is called the Forestry Complex. It is a product of the Government of Canada, being the largest contributor of funds, along with the Maritime Provinces and the University of New Brunswick. It opens a window on research for the vital forest industry which, as the Hon. Member mentions, employs one out of seven people directly and indirectly, and is a leading industry and stimulant of employment in the Province of New Brunswick and indeed Atlantic Canada.

He may also be interested to know that the Government of Canada is setting in place an incubation centre for science, a science mall to test new inventions and spin-off new industries. ACOA is negotiating with the University of New Brunswick for an international marketing function to take full advantage of the great stimulant to Atlantic Canada in freer trade, which I believe his Party also opposes.

CADCAM, Computer Assisted Design and Computer Assisted Manufacturing Centre at the University of New Brunswick, and the Advancement of the Research Productivity Council are all efforts of this Government to build on science and on technology and research to create jobs in Atlantic Canada. I am sure the Hon. Member will be very pleased to hear that before he gave us his wise advice we had already heeded and implemented it.

The Repap Mill which has been built in the riding of the Member for Northumberland—Miramichi (Mr. Jardine) has cost several hundred millions of dollars, most of it coming from the private sector. This does not appear in our budgetary estimates or public accounts, but it is part of the Government's attempt to get the private sector to invest in the area by inducing them with incentives and encouraging them to create jobs. That has created several hundred jobs in the area of highest unemployment in the Province of New Brunswick.

I am sure the Hon. Member will be pleased to see that we are already implementing many of the very wise and excellent suggestions he has made in his remarks and for which I would very much like to commend him.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, of course I am pleased to be advised that the Government has instituted a number of programs which will help improve the deplorable record in the area of scientific research and development. However, I remind the Member for York—Sunbury that, according to the Prime Minister, we are still only devoting 1.3 per cent of our Gross National Product to scientific research and development. That is only half of what most other countries are doing.

Let me refer to the forestry industry. That is one of the largest employers in Canada and is a very important industry in Atlantic Canada. Our record is a disgrace. For every two trees cut down, at most only one tree is replanted. Even industry sources are telling us that some 25 years from now the distance from which companies will have to bring wood to their mills will make it uneconomic to keep their plants and mills operating.

Let us consider the example of other countries. Sweden has had social democratic government for 45 of the last 50 years. Most of the forests in that country are owned privately, but that social democratic government—which some Tories believe is absolutely opposed to free enterprise—co-operated with the private owners of the forest lands so that for every tree which is cut another tree is planted. Furthermore, they have made major efforts to develop new, better and faster growing trees, some of which they obtained from British Columbia. They are growing and planting trees in the millions.

Most of the forests in this country are owned and controlled either by the federal or provincial governments. These governments, which almost invariably believe in the free enterprise system, have done virtually nothing to insist that the private companies to which they give licences plant a tree for every tree they are permitted to cut.

The profits of these companies over two generations have been astronomical. Yet what have they done for this country? As a result of their negligence and refusal to co-operate in planting trees to replace those that they cut down, they have brought the industry to the point where, according to industry sources themselves, we will be facing a major catastrophe in the next couple of generations.

While I am happy that the Government has taken some hesitant steps in the right direction, there is still a long way to go. The Conservative Government is fixated in the belief that it must cut back the deficit, which is caused to a large extent by the fact there is almost 10 per cent unemployment. These people are receiving Government assistance instead of being productive workers and paying income tax and sales taxes.

While I applaud some of the things the Government has done, it has a long way to go before it meets the needs of the people of Atlantic Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the hour, before I commence my remarks perhaps I could call it one o'clock and make my entire speech when I am recognized later.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

SMALL BUSINESS

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE NEW EARLY RETIREMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, in August 1986, the Conservative Government abolished programs under which workers in the footwear, clothing and textile industry could take early retirement. It is now January 1988, and a new program is still not forthcoming.

In Montreal's East End, several businesses . . . For instance, last week CIP closed its doors, and the week before, the Vickers shipyards. Thousands of jobs in the East End have been lost, and once their unemployment insurance runs out, people between the ages of forty-five and fifty will not be able to take early retirement.

I urge the Government to keep its promise to introduce a new early retirement program within a year. It has now been more than a year, Mr. Speaker, and we have yet to receive a response from the Government. The people in the riding of Saint-Léonard—Anjou who have been seriously affected by these measures want the program now.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

1988 CEREBRAL PALSY TELETHON IN QUEBEC—OPPORTUNITY TO SHOW GENEROSITY

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the 1988 cerebral palsy telethon in Quebec will be held on February 6 and 7. Quebec has a reputation for being generous, and this year, Mr. Jean Perron, President of Normick Perron in Abitibi—Témiscamingue, is the honorary chairman. He speaks on behalf of between 12,000 and 15,000 handicapped individuals. The objective is to develop and improve rehabilitation services in Quebec, while focusing more on the social integration of these individuals. Whatever the nature of their handicap, they have a right to be intellectually independent, to have a social life and to participate in recreational activities that will enhance their lives.

Mr. Speaker, these people deserve our respect and our contributions, and we have until February 7 to demonstrate our generosity in Quebec.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

SITUATION IN MONTREAL'S EAST END—URGENT NEED FOR GOVERNMENT INTERVENTION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, in their replies to questions about the situation in Montreal's east end, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and the Prime Minister mentioned statistics that failed to reflect the real situation.

I would like to remind Hon. Members and this Government that 22,000 people are unemployed in Montreal's east end and 10,000 on welfare. Since 1985, Daoust-Lalonde Inc., La Parisette, SKD, Vickers and CIP have closed. There were 185 lay-offs at Canadian Steel Wheel, 175 at Canadian Steel Foundries, 200 at Gulf, 30 at Angus. A total of 1,800 jobs were lost. This morning in the northeastern section of Montreal, Leviton announced 250 lay-offs.

Mr. Speaker, it is high time the federal Government intervened and injected $25 million to set up an office to help restructure the economy. Funding is necessary for manpower training, and considering the age of the workers who were laid off, thanks to the federal Government, the worker adjustment program that operated in conjunction with unemployment insurance should be reinstated to provide these people with early retirement benefits.

HUMAN RIGHTS

ISRAEL—TREATMENT OF PEOPLES IN OCCUPIED TERRITORIES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, when thousands of people are imprisoned in camps and many are intimidated and denied even food; when women thus seek food in stealth and then watch it trampled by troops with vicious arrogance; when even children, protesting their oppression as they must, fall before lethal ammunition; when the angry leaders of an angry people are deported from their own land, and when the nations of the world condemn these excesses of the occupying army of Israel, our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) commends the restraint of the oppressive conqueror. Have human rights thus become to our Government something less than universal?

Mr. Prud'homme: A courageous statement. At long last someone is speaking up.

LABOUR RELATIONS

WOMEN BANK EMPLOYEES' STRIKE IN ANTIGONISH, N. S.

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of all Members a struggle being waged by 11 women in my riding. They are members of Local 2107 of the Union of Bank Employees, and employees of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce. They have been on strike in Antigonish, Nova Scotia, since November 23, 1987. They are seeking wage parity with bank employees doing the same work in Halifax, and with employees of the local credit union who are doing this work as well.

Many of these strikers have years of experience but have not been rewarded for their performance. Negotiations broke off at the end of September and the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce has not shown interest in resuming the talks.

I urge senior management of the bank to show good faith by resuming negotiations with these employees. Their cause is just and their case is reasonable.

FISHERIES

ISSUANCE OF OFFSHORE LOBSTER FISHING LICENCES IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, once again the Government has shown it cannot live up to the trust of Canadians. Last week the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) issued four offshore lobster licences to companies in Nova Scotia. The Premier of Nova Scotia has also objected to the awarding and issuing of these licences.

The Lobster Advisory Council, a group which advises the Minister on such matters, has come out against the awarding and issuing of these licences. In fact last Friday its members threatened to resign unless the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans cancelled these licences.

• (1405)

The fishermen of Nova Scotia are extremely upset that the Government of Canada has issued four new licences to the offshore fleet, denying other Canadians that particular right, bypassing the advice and the counsel of the Lobster Advisory Council. This flies in the face of the way in which this has been done for years. In fact the integrity of the management of our lobster fisheries in Atlantic Canada is at stake.

I urge the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to reconsider his position and to cancel these lobster licences issued to those individuals in Nova Scotia.

TRADE

SUPPORT FOR CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, the great news continues. A recent Decima poll indicates that free trade with the United States is gaining support and now has the favour of the majority of Canadians. This is good news for those of us who believe that it is just what the doctor ordered for the Canadian consumer.

The Economic Council of Canada has predicted a decline in the consumer price index which could give between $700 and $1,000 in additional purchasing power to the average Canadian. In Alberta we would call that substantial, and recognize it as a means of insulating our economy against a recurrence of the dark days of the early 1980s.

Many Canadians already buy extensively in the United States. The duty they pay at Customs upon their return amounts to additional tax and lost savings. Eventually free trade will eliminate these duties while encouraging more Americans to come north.

It is high time for all Members to get onside and to tell Canadians the truth about free trade. It will mean lower prices, wider selection, and higher quality goods for everybody. The bottom line is more money in the pockets of the average consumer.

THE ENVIRONMENT

APPLICATION OF PROVINCIAL ECOLOGY LAW IN CASE OF FEDERAL INFRACTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government cannot set itself above provincial legislation on the environment, especially now that as a result of Bill C-74, the federal Government is becoming increasingly dependent on provincial governments to protect the environment. It therefore comes as something of a shock that the federal Government should challenge the application of provincial legislation in a case where there has been a federal violation of that law.

[English]

Where is co-operative federalism when we really need it in the field of the environment? This is an absolutely deplorable situation. In Bill C-74 the Government depends more than ever before on provincial Governments in the field of the environment. Then, when a provincial Government, in this case Ontario, applies the law the federal Government uses Crown immunity to hide behind its own infractions of provincial environmental laws.

We need tough, national standards on the environment. We need respect for provincial laws on the environment, on the part of the federal Government. The federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) ought to tell the Department of Justice not to proceed with an appeal and use legalistic ways to avoid its own responsibility.

IMMIGRATION

SENATE'S DELAY IN PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, each day hundreds of individuals who wish to circumvent Canada's immigration laws use fraudulent methods to gain access into Canada. This assault on our immigration system is the result of 20 years of Liberal neglect.

The Government acted by passing Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 which would curb the abuse and at the same time send out a clear message that individuals who lie and cheat would no longer have access to Canada. Yet this legislation has not become law due to the lack of the Liberal Senate's approval.

The Liberal Senate seems determined to assure the survival of the old system. This brings us to an interesting juncture. The two opposition Parties which used every means to discredit Bill C-55 and Bill C-85 are now demanding action on the PLO terrorist who lied his way into Canada. Had these Bills become law this terrorist would be denied the claim of refugee status as an avenue of appeal.

Another terrorist, Francesco Piperno, used the refugee route to remain in Canada for 10 years. When he decided to leave there was still no decision on his case.

Therefore, the bluster shown by the Opposition is hollow. It should be directing its thunder toward the Senate where the laws demanded by the Canadian people are presently stalled.

LABOUR RELATIONS

RAILWAY DISPUTE—OPPOSITION TO EXTENSION OF ARBITRATION DEADLINE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express the concern of many people who work for both the CNR and CPR about the possible extension of the period of time for the arbitrator. I am sure that many Members of Parliament who have rail workers in their ridings have been hearing from these rail workers. They feel that, given the fact the strike occurred so long ago and the arbitrator was appointed so long ago, it is high time a decision was made and they were given a new contract.

We would urge upon the Government that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) see to it that the arbitrator does his work by the deadline that he has presently. In that manner, rail workers will know as soon as possible exactly what type of settlement they will get. There should be no further delays. Justice should be done.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORTING OF POLITICAL EVENTS AND POLLS

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, CBC news is in the news these days, and for good reason. Many people believe that CBC stands for "Can't Balance Coverage".

Last summer when the NDP topped the polls, CBC news ran it as a lead item, followed by in-depth analysis, followed by commentary that predicted the socialization of Canada.

In December when the Government overtook the plummeting NDP, which had dropped to third place in the polls in only six months, it was barely even mentioned on the CBC.

Just last night the so-called "National" did not see much national importance in the resignation from the Liberal Party of a former cabinet Minister and leadership candidate. Now the CBC wants to deliver its version of the news 24 hours a day. Why should it? It cannot even get the good news right!

INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF FRENCH-SPEAKING PARLIAMENTARIANS

ELECTION OF A CANADIAN AS PRESIDENT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, from January 4 to January 10, 1988, a general meeting of the International Association of French Speaking Parliamentarians was held in Yaoundé, Cameroon.

The Association represents forty parliaments from every continent in the world. Although the proceedings of the meeting were of considerable interest, the most noteworthy event was without a doubt the election of a Canadian as president.

For the first time in the twenty-year history of the Association, a Canadian was elected president of this illustrious body. Although it is not customary to offer congratulations during the period set aside for oral statements, I am sure that in the circumstances, all Members of the House will want to join me in congratulating Senator Martial Asselin on his election as president of the Association.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: Of course, Hon. Members are delighted that a Canadian has been elected president of this prestigious organization, but we are particularly pleased that the president is a man who has made his mark within this organization and who is eminently worthy of his new position. Bravo, Martial!

FREE TRADE

NEW DEMOCRATS' TRADE OPTIONS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the leader of the socialist party has given his blessing to the document entitled New Democrats' Trade Options prepared by his comrades the Hon. Members for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) and Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Our priorities regarding trade options are based on the governement's intervention. Small businesses, which have permitted the creation of 800,000 permanent jobs since 1984, large businesses, the banks, the Conseil du patronat du Québec are wrong to support free trade. And yet, they are the ones who pay 92 per cent of the salaries in Canada, that is of almost 12 million Canadians.

Canadian businesses which sell for 95 billion dollars to the United States are not clever? We should ignore their positions in our negotiations?

Because Bob White makes money with the Auto Pact, because he fires the shots for the comrades of the socialist Members of Parliament, it means free trade is good for the automobile industry, for Oshawa.

The study prepared by the socialist comrades must be discussed and published all across the country. There are parties like that whose interest is not to be known!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGED INABILITY TO LOCATE MINISTERIAL APPOINTMENT BOOK

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the ongoing investigation into the corruption, breach of trust, and fraud charges against the Conservative Member for Gamelin (Mr. Gravel) has been hampered by a report that crucial Crown evidence has not been found. The Department of Public Works has been unable to locate the daily appointment book of the then Minister, the Conservative Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle).

All parliamentarians have a stake in ensuring that all of the evidence necessary to ensure a just conclusion of the case of the Member for Gamelin is available. I would strongly urge that the Government investigate the situation and either locate this important document or lay criminal charges against the parties who have destroyed it.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—PLEBISCITE VOTE IN FAVOUR OF FIXED LINK CONNECTION WITH MAINLAND

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the people of Prince Edward Island went to the polls in a plebiscite, after five or six weeks of debate and discussion, and voted 60-40 in favour of a fixed link crossing to the mainland. I was delighted to be present for several days in Prince Edward Island and to talk to many people there during that debate and that discussion.

Apart from the historic decision itself reached yesterday, the democratic experience on the Island shows once again to all Canadians the importance of this additional form of democratic expression in our country. We should not be ever shying away from direct democracy but seeking additional ways to supplement it. This is why I think that it is a singular lack that we do not have a statute at the federal level which would permit plebiscites.

The self-definition that Islanders went through in the debate and discussion was very healthy. It is a positive thing. Canada is a strong country because it is so democratic. When we find ways to make it more democratic, it will be stronger.

POLITICAL PARTIES

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S TRADE POLICY

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Well, Mr. Speaker, here you have it—the New Democrats' trade option, by author Steven Langdon. It is an amazing, amazing booklet of 59 pages, of which the first 34 are all about the Conservative free trade pact.

If you go on and read further, Mr. Speaker, and because the Liberals wanted to rip ours up I will help them start with this one, the next seven pages are a bunch of quotes going back to Tommy Douglas. This is how they are going to help free trade, as the New Democrats see it.

If you go on further, Mr. Speaker, you will see that they like GATT. That is their system. They are going back to the GATT system, and that is the only way they are going to solve any trade problems.

If you get to about page 57, by that time, Mr. Speaker, it is easy to rip up. Look at that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE IMBALANCE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows that Canada's trade surplus with the United States is now $10 billion a year lower than it was when he assumed office, and that despite his vaunted special relationship with the President. As if that were not enough, Clayton Yeutter, the United States trade representative, told The New York Times this week that the United States will attempt to reduce its world-wide trade deficit by forcing, and I am using his words, "a major adjustment in countries like Canada".

We know that the Prime Minister sold out our energy, that he sold out our farmers, and that he sold out our financial markets in order to obtain, in his words, "a better trading relationship with the United States".

What is his response now that the senior United States trade officer has said that the purpose of that relationship is to persuade and force Canada to sell less to the United States and buy more from the United States?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would want to look at the exact comments of Ambassador Yeutter. Quite frankly I have not seen the text to which my right hon. friend refers.

The trade agreement with the United States of America is designed to create greater prosperity, more jobs for Canadians, and greater fairness. All objective studies so far indicate that there will be a very substantial increase in employment.

As a result of our trading patterns over the last three years, and those on which we have been working, for example, in the last 12 months, as we were informed in December, 474,000 new jobs were created in Canada. That is the largest number of jobs created in a 12-month period since Statistics Canada began collecting statistics.

[Translation]

OBJECTION TO CANADA CONCEDING TO UNITED STATES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as usual the Prime Minister will not answer this question. But the trade agreement he signed with the United States does not provide guaranteed access to the American market.

After all the concessions he made, will the Prime Minister tell us whether he will now yield to the Americans who want Canada to reduce its trade surplus with the United States? Does he not understand that in fact the Americans want his agreement with them to make up for their trade deficit at the expense of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition is taking a rather funny approach. Canada's economic growth rests primarily on international trade with the United States, and the situation is improving on a daily basis.

Here is where the Government stands: more active trade not only with the United States but with other nations of the world, including Japan among others, whose Prime Minister I met over the weekend.

Now I know full well that the Leader of the Official Opposition is against the free trade agreement regardless of the fact that, among other things for instance, Quebec Premier Bourassa has just stated again that the free trade agreement is an absolutely essential mechanism to ensure the economic future of Quebec and Canada.

As far as I am concerned, the facts are there. We have made our choice. Our choice is to promote stronger bilateral and multilateral trade, our position is to create jobs, and the position of the Leader of the Official Opposition is quite simply to tear up the agreement. In 1988 and 1989 it is not good enough to tell Canadians: I will tear up something. We know you are against it. What are you in favour of?

• (1420)

EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am trying to outline the naivete of the Prime Minister's position. The top American trade official has admitted and stated that the United States will step up its efforts to eliminate our trade surplus with the United States, and the Americans have the power to do that because they retain the right under the Prime Minister's trade agreement to use their protectionist trade laws against us.

Article 1904 of the trade agreement with the United States continues to allow the United States to apply its trade remedy laws against Canada, and therefore continues to give the United States the power to force Canada to reduce and continue to reduce its trade surplus with the United States. Will the Prime Minister not admit that his agreement has merely consolidated and facilitated the American intent to reduce our trade surplus to zero?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, for a former Minister of Finance this is really quite a shameful statement to be making. This is a remarkable statement either made maliciously or in deep ignorance.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You don't understand.

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend says that we do not understand. Surely he should not be surprised if the United States, stuck with a large trade imbalance, is stepping up its efforts to reduce that trade imbalance. The reduction of that trade imbalance will eventually have beneficial effects upon the world economy.

We are stepping up our efforts to increase our trade around the world because trading around the world creates jobs at home. What my hon. friend has done is make a choice for the past, and this Government is speaking with confidence about Canada's youth and is leading us into the 21st century with new trading opportunities, new jobs, and new wealth for all Canadians.

UNITED STATES TRADE DEFICIT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister. He said that the American position is one that would be tied to generally increased trade over-all. I would like to tell him, if I might, of the statement made by Mr. Yeutter in The New York Times of Sunday, January 17. When asked how the U.S. intends to reduce its trade deficit, he said that they cannot reverse a $170 billion figure with countries that they may have a surplus with so there will have to be major adjustments in western Europe, Japan, and also in countries like Canada, and that it doesn't necessarily mean that they will all go to a deficit position but some of them will. That is a very clear statement of objectives on the part of a chief trade spokesperson for the United States Government.

• (1425)

Why is it that this Government has refused to acknowledge its very clear objective? Why has it signed an agreement that gives the Americans carte blanche to reduce their trade deficit but to increase ours?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the fact that there is a very substantial trade imbalance in the United States with some of its trading partners is well known. The fact is that added up to some $175 billion. That was reduced just last month by approximately 20 per cent or 25 per cent which was good news to the markets around the world, but the main problems of the U.S. come from Japan, western Europe, Taiwan and South Korea with which countries there have been a lot of unfavourable trade imbalances.

Surely my hon. friend should not be surprised if the United States of America, confronted with a quite colossal and unhealthy trade imbalance against it, seeks with Japan, West Germany and others to bring its trade into better balance. Surely this is the object of the entire exercise multilaterally, to trade on a fair and more equitable basis, providing job creation and equality of opportunities around the world. One of the important aspects of this is to ensure that the American economy is capable of buying products from Third World countries at terms that provide for Third World growth.

This is part of a very complex and challenging situation, but surely there should be no objection whatever with the declaration of policy by the United States of America whereby the Americans seek, by legitimate trading instruments, to reduce what has become a very substantial deficit for them.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has forgotten something important. In this statement, Mr. Yeutter doesn't just mention western Europe and Japan. He specifically mentions Canada. He specifically says Canada will have to make adjustments. He specifically suggests we will have to face a trade deficit with the United States because we are a country with one of the largest trading surpluses with the U.S. Anybody can figure out, even Tory mathematicians will figure out, that if the Americans are going to reduce their deficit, ours will go up. That will mean a loss of jobs, a loss of employment and a loss of growth in this country.

Why are the Prime Minister and his Government ignoring this clear statement by Mr. Yeutter? Why have this agreement that gives Mr. Yeutter the means to achieve his purpose, which is to reduce his deficit but add to ours?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this really, when we examine it, will be one of the least impressive questions asked by my hon. friend among a very long list that he has asked over a period of time.

I told the Leader of the Opposition that I have not seen Mr. Yeutter's statement. I will look at it carefully and I will compare his statement with the interpretation placed upon that statement by the hon. gentleman from Winnipeg. The President of the United States, who is the boss of Mr. Yeutter, conveyed on January 2—

Mr. Boudria: He is your boss too.

Mr. Mulroney: I am sorry?

Mr. Boudria: He is your boss too.

Mr. Mulroney: —the impression of the Government of the United States that it was seeking more trade with Canada, more trade around the world, which is our position. That is exactly what we are doing. We seek ways to liberalize trade so that we can create more jobs at home.

Surely if my hon. friend is suggesting that Mr. Yeutter wants to change the trade balances using unfair trading practices, that is a different kettle of fish. If he said that, we will drag him before the GATT and before our binational panels very, very quickly. I might even bring in the Hon. Member from Winnipeg as a character witness.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF CONVICTED TERRORIST—WARNING FORWARDED BY CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Immigration I have a question for the Solicitor General.

On July 18 past in a memo to the Minister of Immigration, his Deputy Minister included the following words:

> CSIS notified the immigration department that Mr. Mohammad was believed to be en route to Canada and was due to arrive in two hours. All immigration and custom staff were immediately alerted. Unfortunately the flight arrived just as the staff was changing shifts and he was admitted.

Those words were taken precisely from that memo.

Considering the nature of this memo that went to at least one Minister of the Crown, and perhaps to others, considering that CSIS in terms of its information and headquarters in Ottawa had full documentation on Mr. Mohammad, how could the Minister account for his rather ridiculous statement made yesterday that it took the Government of Canada another two months to identify this man as a terrorist?

• (1430)

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, Canada cannot and will not become a safe haven for terrorists.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: The Emperor has no clothes.

Mr. Axworthy: Somehow they found us. I don't know how, but they found us.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Weiner: Our intent is to apply the full force of the law to ensure the expulsion of this individual from Canada. Terrorists will not be allowed to remain in this country.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, this is outrageous. It was the Solicitor General who gave a completely foolish and misleading answer to the House yesterday, not that Minister who has otherwise given a foolish and misleading answer to the House today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DELAY IN TAKING ACTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I will ask either Minister to deal with this question because they are in the business of buck-passing.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Remember your image—gentility.

Mr. Kaplan: Remember yours, Joe.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I hope they will answer the question this time. The Government knew last February that a known terrorist came into the country. No meeting of senior officials took place until June and the Minister himself was not informed until July. A concrete decision to act against this known terrorist was not taken until October and it was not acted upon in terms of informing that known terrorist until December.

Will the Minister not agree that while they were taking all kinds of action in this country against legitimate refugees they allowed a well-known international terrorist to stay in the country 11 months without any action by the Government? Will he tell the people of Canada why?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, with the greatest respect the Hon. Member is incorrect when he says that we knew that a known terrorist arrived in this country in February. We did not.

There was no positive identification at that time. We did a police security check on him in Europe based on false and misleading information which he gave to us. Based on that he was given his clearance and allowed to come to Canada.

We received subsequent information. CSIS officials interviewed Mr. Mohammad the day after he arrived in Canada. He still denied that he was the known terrorist. Three days later the RCMP interviewed him. Fingerprints were taken which were sent to Europe, and no positive identification was made on that gentleman until May, 1987. That information was then turned over to Immigration officials in June and they began their investigation.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister now knows that the same man has been licensed as a security guard in Ontario. That ought to be of some concern to the Solicitor General, among others.

I do not accept the rationale the Minister has given for the ignorance of the Government of Canada up until the month of May. Given what the other Minister said just a minute ago, does it not sound just a little hypocritical for the Government to say that it is concerned about terrorists when, according to the Minister's own words, the Government knew last May but took no action against this known terrorist until December? Account for that.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Jelinek: You're the biggest hypocrite, Ed.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, with the greatest respect, I have a little trouble with the Hon. Member's question because the Hon. Member and members of his Party would be the first to criticize the Government if we did not follow the due process of the law.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kelleher: Mr. Speaker, we made the positive ID in May. We turned the information over to Immigration in June. They immediately commenced their investigation. They went to the Minister in October, who ordered that proceedings be started. We have followed the due process of the law. We are doing everything we can, and no one wishes more than this Minister or this Government to rid this country of this terrorist.

REQUEST THAT DEPORTATION PROCEEDINGS BE EXPEDITED

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Immigration and it, too, concerns the convicted terrorist who was granted landed immigrant status. The Minister and his officials have been saying over the last 24 hours that deportation will take five years, if not more, to complete. However, the Minister will know that in cases involving the national interest and national security these cases and files are routinely granted expedited processing to produce an initial decision within weeks or months.

Has this individual actually been served with a deportation notice? Has an inquiry been scheduled? Can the Minister ensure that the Government will request of our respected institutions, whether SIRC or the Refugee Advisory Committee, that this matter be expedited as the national priority and not dragged on as though it is some average, run-of-the-mill case file?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, we have collected strong documented evidence to build a strong case for deportation. We interviewed the immigrant in the month of December and indicated to him that deportation proceedings would be going ahead very soon. The next step in the process is a formal hearing before an immigration adjudicator. That will take place very soon.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is basically saying that after a full year the Minister and the Government have still not filed a notice of deportation and scheduled a hearing. The Minister should be ashamed of this embarrassing situation and should at least correct himself and the Government's negligence.

DEPUTY MINISTER'S OPINION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Solicitor General. Given that last summer the Government called in the Army to ensure security and identity of refugee claimants, does the Minister agree with the report of the Deputy Minister of Immigration who claims that this convicted terrorist does not constitute a threat to Canadian safety? If he does, on what reasons does he base his decision?

Can the Minister explain why this individual was not arrested or detained, at least to guarantee that he would not escape or go underground during the inquiry process, which would really complete the circle of this extremely bungled case?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I believe this question has already been answered. However, I will repeat the answer for the benefit of the Hon. Member. We did the positive ID in May. It was turned over to Immigration in June. I repeat my original admonition that surely the Member would want us to follow the due process of the law.

Heinous as this crime is, and as much as we would like to get rid of this gentleman as quickly as possible, the due process of the law must be followed. We must have a sustainable case. I can assure the Hon. Member, without going into security details, that this man is under very close observation.

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt Question Period except to ask Hon. Members to observe the clock and also observe that we have only had time for five questions. I would ask Hon. Members to couch their preambles in a brisk and succinct form. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan.

AIR SAFETY

AIRPORTS—BYPASSING OF SECURITY CHECKS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, we have learned how easy it is for a convicted terrorist to get into Canada, even when CSIS and the Immigration Department know which flight he is arriving on.

My question is directed to the Minister of Transport in relation to his responsibility for airport security. In Section 3.4 of the May 19, 1987, notice of approved security measures that he issued, why is there an exemption for certain air passengers to bypass normal security checks, even though those passengers could come into contact with or gain access to planes or passengers subject to normal security clearance at Canadian airports?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, natually I would have to know which clauses are being referred to and what particular passengers. There are certain exceptions for certain passengers. The hon. gentleman will have to give me more information.

It would be very helpful to have a little advance notice for a question like this if the hon. gentleman is really interested in getting an informative reply.

ACCESS TO RUNWAYS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister's staff could advise him that we have been inquiring about the particular sections which actually allow a passenger on planes equipped for 60 or less passengers to bypass normal security procedures. This means that they could go into an airport terminal, out onto the tarmac with a weapon or bomb—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Angus: —and come in contact or adjacent to another aircraft where individuals have been secured. It is a serious breach of the quality of air security about which the Minister has been boasting. How soon will he move to change that so that the travelling public in Canada as well as those going into some American airports are protected?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is not a question, this is poppycock.

Mr. Angus: It is right here, John.

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentleman is talking about domestic security in our air system here in Canada. His question leads one to believe that he wants all passengers guarded or in chains so that they cannot possibly get out.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentleman's Party are the people who are against any strict measures for security. They are against any tightening of the Immigration Act. They are against the tightening of anything until they think it is to their cheap partisan advantage to raise noise in the House about something.

AGRICULTURE

FREE TRADE—LIST OF CONTROLLED IMPORT MERCHANDISE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Agriculture). Under the Free Trade Agreement, yogurt and ice cream are not included in the list of controlled import goods and this omission was strongly criticized by the Union des producteurs agricoles du Québec. The Minister of Agriculture had promised to initiate negotiations in this regard. I would like to know what progress has been made in these negotiations.

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, when our Government initiated the free trade negotiations, we undertook to safeguard our marketing boards and all other mechanisms which protect Canadian farmers. We indeed discussed this issue last December with the Department of International Trade, and my colleagues, the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister for International Trade, and myself finally decided to include products such as yogurt, ice cream, and about ten other dairy products on the list of controlled imports, which, added to the reference to Article 11 of GATT in the Agreement, should please the 42,000 Canadian dairy producers, including the 18,000 in Quebec, who know that they can rely on the Canadian Government.

IMMIGRATION

ADMITTANCE OF CONVICTED TERRORIST—DEPORTATION NOTICE QUERY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Immigration. It concerns the terrorist in Canada. Will the Minister confirm whether or not the necessary documentation for deportation has been served on this particular individual? He has not answered that question yet. Have the necessary documents been served on this individual and will the Minister indicate whether his Department is aware of the whereabouts of this individual?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I answered quite clearly that we have been collecting the evidence, the strong documentary evidence. The next step in the process is the hearing before the immigration adjudicator, which will take place very soon.

Mr. Nunziata: Surely Canadians are entitled to some straight answers to some straight questions.

WHEREABOUTS OF INDIVIDUAL

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I will put the question again. Have the necessary documents been served on Mr. Mohammad, and is the Government aware of the whereabouts of Mr. Mohammad today? Yes or no?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, yes.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

ROLE IN ADMITTING CONVICTED TERRORIST TO CANADA

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. In June, 1986, the Standing Committee on Immigration recommended to the House that the procedures for investigating security clearance of prospective immigrants be tightened. It said that CSIS was too slack.

In November, 1986, CSIS headquarters in Ottawa knew that Mr. Mohammad was in Spain. When Mr. Mohammad, this terrorist, applied to enter Canada in December, 1986, why did the CSIS liaison officer in Spain not even bother to consult with CSIS headquarters in Ottawa who would have told him, if he had bothered to ask, that this person was a terrorist and should not have been allowed into Canada at all?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the hon. gentleman that I am well aware of the results and report of the Standing Committee that was delivered in June, 1986. As a result of that, in September, 1986, three months later, I requested the Security Intelligence Review Committee, in writing, to prepare an investigation and report for me into those procedures that might be brought forward. I just received that report last week.

With respect to the liaison officer in Spain, he received false and misleading information, as I have told you. It was on that basis that he asked for a police check in Europe and received a nil return. He then conducted a personal interview and, as a result of that, under the standing procedures as he is entitled to do, he made a decision that no further investigation was required and advised the immigration officer in Madrid that the security clearance should go forward.

Mr. Robinson: Instead of just checking with the Madrid authorities, why did the liaison officer not check with headquarters in Ottawa as he should have done?

[Translation]

FUNCTION OF CSIS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): My supplementary is for the same Minister. Next Thursday, the CSN will make public very important evidence showing that the CSIS paid officer Mark Boivin to act as agent provocateur in the Quebec labour movement and that, in this capacity, he urged various criminal and dangerous acts. How can this Minister defend a security agency which targets democractic organizations such as the CSN and shows its total incompetence when dealing with real terrorists attempting to enter Canada?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have advised the Hon. Member on a number of occasions that CSIS does not target peace organizations or labour organizations because they are not within the mandate of CSIS. There is no investigation or evidence to date that has revealed to me that it is exceeding or acting beyond its mandate.

As far as terrorists are concerned, as a result of the Osbaldeston Report which was brought forward over a month ago, we are concentrating and making counterterrorism a prime objective of CSIS and of the Government. We will continue to do so.

CRUISE MISSILE TESTS—REQUEST FOR HALT

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He knows full well that in a post INF world both superpowers will be putting more emphasis on air-launched and sea-launched Cruise missile weaponry systems. Therefore, today it is more important than ever for the two superpowers to put Cruise missile systems on the START agenda as a priority.

Why does Canada not cease the testing of the Cruise and demand that Canada's long term foreign policy objectives and defence interests be given top priority in that START agenda?

• (1450)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the short answer to that is, as the Hon. Member has indicated, that the question of Cruise missiles is included in the START negotiations. It is a matter of negotiation between the United States and the Soviet Union. If an ally of the United States took an action that broke the solidarity of the West on questions in negotiation with the Soviet Union, that would weaken the prospects of progress being made in those negotiations. That may be the interest of the Liberal Party of Canada, although that is hard to know, but it is certainly not the position of this Government.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs knows full well that the Liberal Party remains committed to our NATO alliance, unlike our colleagues in the New Democratic Party.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Frith: But there is absolutely—

An Hon. Member: Good stuff!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: A divorce is so messy.

INCLUSION OF CRUISE MISSILES ON START AGENDA

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Is the Secretary of State for External Affairs therefore indicating to the House that Canada cannot within its obligations to the NATO alliance push forward our long-term foreign policy and defence interests by demanding at the NATO councils in Europe in Canada's interest—and I might add all of those countries in the circumpolar regions of the world share the same interests—that Cruise missile weaponry systems be placed as a priority on the START agenda?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, they are on the START agenda. They are on the START agenda, explicitly discussed by the Soviet Union and the United States. The House should bear in mind why it is we got an INF agreement. When my colleagues, the Minister of Communications and the Hon. Member for Victoria, were representing Canada, as was the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of National Defence, we were part of the two-track decision of NATO. The two-track decision of NATO was a position of solidarity within the western alliance. We held to that solidarity. The Soviets knew they were not able as a consequence to split the West and achieve their goals so they had to agree to negotiation.

What worked on the INF can work on strategic systems, and this Government intends to continue as we have in the past to recognize that solidarity in the West leads to progress in arms control.

EFFECT ON FLOW-THROUGH SHARES

Mr. John MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Everyone, the business community and individuals across Canada, agrees there had to be a reform of the tax system. However, with the October 19 stock market drop and the present uncertainty in the investment market, there are some real and great concerns among the prospectors and developers in the mining sector which must be addressed.

Can the Minister indicate whether he is prepared to discuss the impact of tax reform on flow-through shares financing with this vital resource sector in the very near future?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has raised an interesting point. What I should point out to him is that since October 19 there has been extremely little equity financing of any sort, be it flow-through shares or large industrialized company shares. We have indicated in the response to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs on tax reform on December 16 that we were prepared to, and did, make some significant changes to flow-through shares to ensure they were one of the most attractive vehicles in the equity markets, and I believe that will be the case.

I also said at the same time that, after depletion is phased out, we are prepared to consider alternative mechanisms should exploration activity decline as a result of economic factors. However, in specific answer to the Hon. Member's question, yes, I would be prepared to meet with representatives of the industry should they so desire.

SHIPYARDS

FUTURE OUTLOOK IN QUEBEC

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. At the end of the year, the Prime Minister said in an interview on TVA that the future looked rosy for Quebec's shipyards and that they would have enough contracts to maintain the three yards in Montreal, Sorel and Quebec City. What happened between December and January? Why will two of the three yards have to close down very shortly? Where are all those contracts the yards were supposed to get? What is so rosy about the future of 600 skilled workers who are about to lose their jobs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is mistaken about the federal Government's role with respect to Quebec's shipyards. Since we were sworn in, this Government has provided the yards with $97 million for modernization purposes. The Goverment has awarded $550 million in contracts to yards in Quebec. In addition, another $900 million or so in contracts is being awarded at this very moment and will be in the months to come. All things considered, including the modernization program started by the Quebec Government, by Mr. Johnson and his colleagues, I said that unlike the impression some people would like to give, the future looked very encouraging for yards in Quebec. I believe that in the light of action taken by the Parliament of Canada for the benefit of the Quebec yards, all Canadians may be proud of what we have achieved.

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL COMMITMENTS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. If it is supposed to be encouraging that Quebec gets to keep only one of the three yards, one wonders about the alternative if the situation is as disastrous as it seems to be to everyone except the Prime Minister.

Mr. Bourassa said he was very disappointed that no portion of the contract for the second set of six frigates had been awarded to shipyards in Quebec. What specific commitments is the Government prepared to make in response to the Quebec Government's request to ensure continued employment in Quebec's shipyards?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I realize that like any premier who has shipyards within his jurisdiction, Mr. Bourassa would have liked to see major contracts awarded to his yards. The Government decided that it was important to award contracts to New Brunswick, a province that suffers from very high unemployment and that also has the requisite expertise for producing the ships at lower cost. However, nearly one-third of the contracts awarded to St. John . . . the benefits of the contract are filtered through to Quebec through the Paramax contract. In addition, as I said before, $950 million in contracts is being awarded, and many of these contracts will benefit the yards in Quebec. Furthermore, now that the Government has tabled its White Paper on National Defence, several billion dollars in contracts will be awarded to modernize our defence fleet, and a major part of these contracts will be awarded to yards in Quebec. That is why I said the Canadian Government had served the Quebec yards very well and that the future looked rosy for the Quebec yards.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PROTECTION OF CITIZENS—REQUEST FOR CHANGES TO JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact this House recently voted against the reintroduction of capital punishment and, even more significantly, in light of the recent brutal killings in Alberta and British Columbia by alleged repeat murderers recently released by the judicial system, I would like the Minister to explain to this House and to all concerned Canadians the actions he proposes to take to change the necessary legislation and judicial system to ensure the protection of all of us here in Canada? Most important, when is this action going to be taken? Could the Minister give us a date when legislation will be tabled in this House, please?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question from the Hon. Member who is very much interested in this issue and who has spoken to me on a number of occasions in support of a sensitive judicial and justice system. We have not waited. We have taken a number of initiatives with respect to the judicial system and changes to the Criminal Code. An unprecedented amount of legislation and a number of initiatives have been taken by my predecessor, now the Minister of Transport, and myself.

• (1500)

We are looking at some fundamental questions, including the whole question of sentencing. The Archambault Report has been delivered to me. It is a matter which is now before the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General. Indeed, I hope to have an opportunity to discuss this matter with my provincial counterparts in the very near future. These matters will be dealt with with the usual expedition for which I am known.

REQUEST THAT FULL LIFE SENTENCES BE SERVED BY RAPIST-MURDERERS

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Solicitor General. In view of the circumstances of the question that I put to him yesterday, which has been put to him again today, is it too much for the Canadian public to expect that convicted killers who are sexual deviates should be kept in jail for the full term of their sentences rather than to be let out on parole? Should not life mean life?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I advise the Hon. Member that as a result of the passage of Bill C-67 last year we are now in a position for the first time to keep inmates, who meet the criteria under the Bill, in prison for the full length of their term. Since the introduction of that Bill some 25 per cent of all people who have come before the special parole board under the provisions of such a hearing are now being detained until the full length of their term has expired.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question in Question Period. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond .

FISHERIES

ISSUANCE OF OFFSHORE LOBSTER FISHING LICENCES IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Yesterday, in response to a question put by my colleague from Cape Breton—The Sydneys, the Minister tried to smear the name of a prominent Nova Scotian family. At best his answers can be described as very misleading.

Why has the Minister told his Lobster Advisory Committee one thing with regard to the issuing of new lobster licences only to turn around and issue four new offshore lobster licences to companies in Nova Scotia? Will the Minister not do the honourable thing now and cancel those lobster licences as has been requested by Members of Parliament and, indeed, by others?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question which allows me to clarify a statement I made in the House yesterday. In deciding to issue four new offshore lobster licences I followed carefully the advice of the Canadian Atlantic Fisheries Scientific Advisory Committee. I followed a set of prescribed criteria set out by my Department to ensure absolute fairness in the awarding of those licences to the best qualified individuals that is to say to ensure that it was a Canadian company with the capacity to harvest this additional resource and to create the additional economic opportunity that would be represented by processing that resource in Nova Scotia.

I must say that if in any way I created the impression that there was anything untoward in the awarding of previous licences, I must indicate today that licences were awarded and obtained in the 1970s according to the same appropriate, objective, and fair kinds of criteria that were the basis on which my decisions were made.

REQUEST FOR CANCELLATION OF LICENCES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Six months ago the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans assured the Lobster Advisory Committee that he would issue no more licences without consulting it. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has now broken that undertaking.

On Friday last members of that committee demanded the cancellation of those licences. They have been joined by the Premier of Nova Scotia and by the Leader of the Opposition in Nova Scotia calling for the cancellation of those licences. Will the Prime Minister now seize the opportunity to stand in the House and cancel those licences in order to rid his Government of the perception and the symbolism of patronage and sleaze at its worst?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that, as is usually my practice, extensive consultation occurred and no undertakings of the sort which have been inferred were made. I did follow the advice of the Canadian Atlantic Fisheries Scientific Advisory Committee to the effect that a new exploratory fishery could be justified west of Sable Island, that there would be no impact on the inshore lobster landings, and that other quotas not be increased.

I have followed that advice and established practices to the letter.

POINT OF ORDER

CLARIFICATION OF EARLIER RESPONSE

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, it has been brought to my attention that on a series of questions asked by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) I had heard only the second question which was with respect to whether or not I knew where the individual was. I answered yes to that question. There was no intent on my part to answer both questions.

I wish it clearly shown to the House that I was answering the second question which was with respect to whether or not I know where the immigrant is. The answer to that question is yes. I did not hear the first question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a question of privilege, it is a point of clarification.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the point that was being made at the time the question was asked was whether or not the Minister knew or had taken the proper procedures. Was he aware that procedures had been taken today to make sure that this individual was subject to the due process of law? The Minister said yes. Is he now telling us that it is no? That makes a difference to the case.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The clarification has been made.

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister to clarify his answer so that all Members of the House can understand what he is talking about. But there were two questions put to him very simply. He answered yes the one time to both questions. Is he now telling us that he wants to answer no to the first one and yes to the second? Is that what he is telling us? Will he clarify his point?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): He has already done that. The Hon. Member can ask the question again tomorrow.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PRINCE RUPERT GRAIN HANDLING OPERATIONS ACT

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-106, an Act to provide for the resumption of grain handling operations at the port of Prince Rupert, British Columbia, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to the Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is my unhappy task to inform the House that once again the parties to a collective agreement have failed to accept their responsibility to resolve their differences. I refer to Prince Rupert Grain Limited and the Grain Workers Union Local 333 whose dispute has deprived Canadians of an important grain export facility. There is no indication or reasonable expectation that the dispute between the parties will be resolved in the foreseeable future, notwithstanding the fact that a sensible, formal proposal was placed before the parties which would have settled this dispute and avoided the intervention of Parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is difficult for a Minister of Labour to have to make such an assessment. Our system of free collective bargaining is founded on certain fundamental principles of democracy which our society relies on to resolve differences between competing interests.

Like many of the relationships which we each encounter in our lives, labour relations are adversarial relations. Yet the basic principles which govern these relations generally ensure that these competing interests are reconciled without irreparable harm to the parties involved or to innocent third-parties.

• (1510)

[English]

Such is not the case in Prince Rupert. In Prince Rupert there are two opposing interest groups, Prince Rupert Grain Limited, representing interests of six grain handling companies, and the Grain Workers Union Local 333, representing the 69 employees at the terminal. These parties have effectively said to the Canadian public, "We don't care about your interests or about collective bargaining. We will pursue our own private interests no matter what the cost to the national economy or to the overseas reputation of Canada".

This attitude is absolutely unacceptable, Mr. Speaker. It really does not matter who is right and who is wrong in this dispute, or even whether there is a right or wrong side to these issues. What is unacceptable is that the parties have made up their minds that they are not going to settle their differences through the democratic mechanisms which are provided by our Labour Code.

While both parties claim to have the interests of western farmers uppermost in mind, they both appear quite prepared to wait it out while the most efficient grain terminal in the country sits idle and Canada's international reputation as a reliable supplier of grain is destroyed.

In the most recent exercise aimed at resolving this work stoppage, I summoned the parties to Ottawa to meet under the auspices of the Associate Deputy Minister of Labour, Bill Kelly. Mr. Kelly's skills as a mediator are well known to all in this House, and he has justly earned his reputation. However, it did not take Mr. Kelly too long to conclude that the parties are so entrenched in their respective positions on the issues that no compromise was possible. He then made a formal proposal to them that they agree to submit their dispute to arbitration for final and binding resolution.

This is a method which has been used on three occasions in the past to resolve bargaining impasses in the grain terminals in Vancouver between the B.C. Terminal Elevator Operators Association and the Grain Workers Union Local 333. It should have been crystal clear to the parties that Mr. Kelly's proposal was the obvious solution if they wished to avoid a legislated end to this dispute.

Even with this certain knowledge, they chose to continue their disregard for both the public interest and the principles of sound labour management relations. The union placed an unacceptable pre-condition on its acceptance of Mr. Kelly's proposal, while the employer rejected the proposal in its entirety. Indeed, the employer characterized the notion of arbitration on the key issue of manning as "irresponsible". One would have to wonder by what stretch of logic they considered it less than irresponsible to allow this dispute to continue.

Through their actions, the parties have effectively abrogated their responsibility to resolve their dispute, and made it quite clear that if the Prince Rupert Terminal is to be restored to operation, it will be through Government action, and not their own.

This is not what our collective bargaining system is all about. I find the attitude of these parties not only disappointing, but shameful. It is shameful in its disregard for the farmers of western Canada who are being held hostage to the intransigence of these two disputants, and shameful for its disregard of our collective bargaining system.

It is abhorrent for a Minister of Labour to have to recommend to Parliament that the right to be responsible for your own destiny be taken away from anyone, but the Prince Rupert Grain Terminal Limited and the Grain Workers Union Local 333 have left me with no other choice. This Government cannot allow the western economy to be further jeopardized by the private disputes of these parties.

[Translation]

For those who might question my assessment, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment to describe the efforts which have been made to promote a resolution of this dispute through the accepted collective bargaining process.

[English]

When the collective agreement which applied to this bargaining unit expired on December 31, 1983 the parties were aware that the new, highly automated terminal on Ridley Island would become operational during the life of the next collective agreement, and that there were transitional issues that would have to be faced. The parties agreed that issues that were common between Prince Rupert and Vancouver would be dealt with in the context of the bargaining that was taking place between the union and the B.C. Terminal Elevator Operators Association.

These negotiations, which were conducted with the assistance of a conciliation officer and, subsequently, a conciliation commissioner, eventually concluded in May, 1985 with the signing of a three-year agreement. During the period of these negotiations, the new terminal in Prince Rupert was brought into operation. Although the issues which had been theoretical in 1983 were now very real, the parties remained unable to resolve them.

The conciliation commissioner my predecessor had appointed, Mr. Vince Ready, continued his efforts throughout the remainder of 1985, and in January, 1986 produced his report and recommendations for settlement. With certain reservations, the company accepted Mr. Ready's recommendations, but the union did not. In March, 1986, the Vancouver Regional Director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, Mike Collins, was appointed as a mediator.

Meanwhile, the union pursued its efforts to have the scope of its bargaining unit expanded through applications to the Canada Labour Relations Board and the Federal Court of Appeal. Negotiations between the parties continued on an intermittent basis between April, 1986 and November, 1987, but neither side gave any evidence of its willingness to compromise on the fundamental issues. The union commenced strike action on December 9, 1987. Mediator Collins once again convened the parties, but to no avail, and on January 4, 1988 he terminated his involvement. Even at that point, I was unwilling to accept that so important a dispute could not be resolved through negotiation.

I summoned the parties to Ottawa to meet with my Associate Deputy Minister, Bill Kelly. Mr. Kelly explored every possible avenue for settlement of the dispute. When it became clear to him that neither side would make any compromise, he made a formal proposal to them which would, if accepted, have resolved the dispute and ensured the immediate resumption of terminal operations.

In addition to recommending that they implement the terms of the collective agreement now in effect for the Vancouver grain terminals, Mr. Kelly proposed that the parties voluntarily agree to submit their outstanding differences on manning in the grain centre, job classifications, and security personnel to an arbitrator for final and binding determination.

While the union agreed to the concept, they imposed an unacceptable condition on the process by insisting that a specific individual be named as the arbitrator. As anyone who has had any involvement in quasi-judicial proceedings is well aware, it is a fundamental principle that the individual or tribunal with the decision-making power must not only be impartial but must also appear to be impartial.

While I have the utmost respect for the individual proposed as arbitrator by the union, the very fact that he is the choice of one party to the dispute immediately raises apprehension in the mind of the other party. That individual's acceptability as an arbitrator is then seriously compromised. By stubbornly insisting on this condition, the union was effectively rejecting the mediator's proposal.

For its part the employer maintained its position that it would not voluntarily agree to submit these issues to a third party. In its reply to Mr. Kelly's proposal the employer claims that the subject of manning in the grain centre, which is the primary issue in dispute, was placed before the Canada Labour Relations Board and decided in the employer's favour. Thus, it contends that it would be irresponsible for it to agree to submit the issue to arbitration.

There is no logic to this response whatsoever. The matter which was placed before the CLRB for determination had to do with the inclusion or exclusion of certain positions from the bargaining unit. The board determined that the operations foremen in the grain centre are excluded from the scope of the union's bargaining certificate. However, at no time did the CLRB consider the issue of manning, which refers to the level of staffing that will exist in the grain centre. It is abundantly clear that the parties are unable or unwilling to resolve the manning issue through the negotiation process. If there is ever to be any hope of resolving this impasse, arbitration provides an ideal forum for an impartial hearing and determination of the interests which are involved.

Frankly the attitudes of this employer and this union are irresponsible. Given the extreme importance of Prince Rupert in Canada's grain export program, one might suspect that the parties are quite prepared to have Parliament make the difficult decision they are unwilling to make for themselves. Both sides are well aware that the Government cannot permit this terminal to remain idle for the months or years it might take before the parties decide that they should resolve their impasse.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the employees in Prince Rupert want to go back to work and get the grain moving again. I know that the western farmers desperately want the Prince Rupert terminal reopened. The will of the Canadian public, as expressed through their representatives here in this House, must in this case take precedence over the will and interests of the immediate participants to the dispute.

[English]

Let me turn now to the specific provisions of the Bill which will accomplish the resolution of this long-standing dispute. Not surprisingly, we are not asking Parliament to deviate from the proposal for settlement which the parties had an opportunity to accept voluntarily. The clear purpose of this approach is to send an unmistakable message to any negotiators who think that they can achieve more through legislation than through collective bargaining. Parliament will not reward parties who propel their disputes to our level for resolution.

In addition to providing for an immediate resumption of terminal operations, the Bill requires the parties to incorporate the terms of the agreement between the B.C. Terminal Elevator Operators Association and the Grain Workers Union in Vancouver into their collective agreement. In fact, this merely formalizes the existing informal arrangement in which the employer has been implementing any changes that have arisen from time to time as a consequence of the Vancouver agreement.

In respect of the three issues which caused the impasse in negotiations, the Bill calls for the appointment by the Minister of Labour of any arbitrator to make a final and binding determination of these matters. A 45-day time limit is established for this process, subject to extension only if the parties mutually agree.

The public's patience with these parties is exhausted. They have had more than four years to resolve their differences. They have imposed the consequences of their dispute on western grain producers while continuing to reject every opportunity for a settlement through accepted dispute resolution mechanisms. The Government has an obligation to the farmers of the country to restore the export of their grain products through Prince Rupert, and this is precisely what we intend to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada, I would like to speak on Bill C-106, an Act to provide for the resumption of grain handling operations at the port of Prince Rupert, British Columbia, which has just been tabled. First, I wish to emphasize that we have co-operated with the Government to allow this Bill to reach the floor of the House of Commons as soon as possible. We agreed to forego the required 48-hour notice on the Order Paper and for the Bill to be introduced in the House of Commons today rather than Wednesday. We also agreed to the Bill being referred to a committee of the whole rather than a legislative or a standing committee, which would have made for a longer debate on this Bill.

[English]

If we have co-operated with the Government to try to ensure that the Bill passes the House of Commons quickly, it is because we think that it is about time the Government did something to get the grain moving again. Prairie farmers are already facing very difficult conditions. I am informed that on average the price of grain is about $110 per tonne, a level which is about half what it was five years ago. Needless to say, farmers are having a very rough time.

We are watching the United States and the European Economic Community systematically drive prices down. The American export enhancement program has a budget of $1.5 billion, which it is using to subsidize grain sales, sometimes in our traditional markets, and which has eaten away at some of our markets.

The only good news which prairie farmers have had recently is that sales have been good. The Canadian Wheat Board has been successful in selling grain. I am told that in 1986-87 we had record sales. However, it is one thing to conclude contracts with other countries to sell grain, and it is something else to deliver the commodity especially when grain terminals are at a standstill. The strike has cost us sales as the Canadian Wheat Board could not sign contracts for sales to be delivered prior to late March or early April.

Canada's reputation as a reliable supplier in what I consider to be a very competitive market was running the risk of being damaged.

• (1530)

This is what I mean when I describe the situation under which the farmers must live. This is what I mean when I say that it is about time that the Government did something. The elevators are clogged, the grain is not moving. The problem, though, is that the solution, the back-to-work legislation, is not exactly the solution we would have liked to have seen.

The Government is again indulging in what has become almost an addiction, and that is to wait until there is no other solution than back-to-work legislation. The Government seems to have fallen into the habit of wielding the billy stick whenever there is a labour dispute in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, other solutions were available to the Government. There were attempts to communicate with the parties involved, but there would surely have been a way to bring them to agree to binding arbitration instead of introducing back-to-work legislation.

In a press release last week, the Leader of the Official Opposition and Leader of the Liberal Party urged the Minister of Labour to meet last weekend with the two parties involved in the labour dispute which has shut down grain handling operations in the port of Prince Rupert to convince them to submit to binding arbitration. The Leader of the Opposition stated that the Minister should be ready to propose the name of an arbitrator to the two parties involved. However, the Minister chose not to meet with the parties involved and decided instead to introduce this Bill.

[English]

I am amazed at the fact that the Minister was not able to pass to the two parties this very simple message: "If you do not agree voluntarily to go into binding arbitration, it will be imposed upon you by back-to-work legislation". If that message had been passed properly, I am sure the two parties would have realized that an agreement had to come about and that it would be in their interests to agree voluntarily and have a say as to who the arbitrator would be. Now that will be imposed upon them. An arbitrator will be appointed, according to the Bill. Whether they like it or not, the parties will have to live with that individual who will be appointed.

Mr. Henry Kancs of Local 333 of the Grain Workers' Union had agreed in principle to go back to work voluntarily without a billy stick over his head. I agree that he was talking about a condition. He would have liked to have Mr. Justice Emmett Hall as the arbitrator, but he also said that someone else acceptable to his local could do as well. The employer did not agree to having Mr. Justice Emmett Hall as the arbitrator, but the employer did not disagree in principle with binding arbitration. In other words, the Minister could certainly have used words that would have helped these people understand that it would be better for them to agree voluntarily, first, on the principle of going back to work and, second, on the individual who would act as an arbitrator, and that if they did not do so, it would be imposed on them anyway. The Minister failed to say that. It is a failure on behalf of the Government to get the parties to understand what their interest in this dispute was.

I would like to turn to some of the details of the strike. This strike is not about money. This strike is about jobs. It is about the jobs of the people who staff the grain terminal at Prince Rupert.

I would like to quote a representative of the union, Mr. Henry Kancs of Grain Workers' Union Local 333, who said the following in a press release of last week:

> This dispute is about jobs—union jobs. The sacrifices our members are making on the picket line are not for selfish reasons. It is so union members can share in the future world of computer technology and not become a relic of the past like the grain shovels we once used. We are intelligent enough to participate in the future. We already do it at other elevators.

A big part of the problem is that some jobs will be lost because of computerization. The union and the workers understand that, but they would like to see some of the remaining workers trained to work on those computers rather than having people come from large urban centres to operate these new electronic machines while the union members go on welfare or on unemployment insurance. That is what the strike is all about.

It is not an abusive use of the rights of workers when one considers that they have been out of a contract for four years. They waited for four years before going on strike last December, and they went on strike simply because they want the assurance that the people who will operate the modern, up-to-date grain handling equipment will be union members. I think it is only fair that they be given a fair chance to be trained to operate these computers rather than having computer operators come from the central part of Canada. That is the root of this strike. It is not strange that people would walk out to try to protect some of their basic rights as these people have done.

I mentioned earlier that the union membership was willing to return to work voluntarily without back-to-work legislation. I would like to quote again from the same press release put out by Local 333 of the Grain Workers' Union. Mr. Kancs said:

> —two days after the strike began, I was approached by farmers and other organizations to return to work and accept an inquiry by former Supreme Court of Canada Justice Emmett Hall. I agreed to recommend this to our members with no conditions attached. The Company rejected this proposal from the farmers.

This must be put on the record so that the people of Canada who are watching these proceedings will know exactly what the score is.

After quoting these documents, I would say that the Government and the Minister failed to recognize the willingness expressed by the workers to try to avoid back-to-work legislation and to use methods that are more like the ones we would like to see used in this country, methods by which management and workers agree by themselves.

Let us take a look at this piece of legislation which, in my opinion, is what we have become accustomed to seeing in this Parliament. It is the standard back-to-work legislation. It extends the collective agreement until the end of 1989. It amends it by including the items that have been agreed to so far by the two parties. It appoints an arbitrator who will have to deal with three specific items; namely, the staffing of the grain terminal which is at issue, the classification of those workers and also the issue of whether or not security personnel will be included in the same bargaining unit. This arbitrator will have 45 days to complete his report unless the parties agree to an extension.

What we find abusive in this Bill are the same stiff penalties that we will never become accustomed to but that we have become accustomed to seeing in each and every piece of legislation which the Government tables in the House to bring workers back to work.

Let me take a quick run through this particular part of the Bill. For example, an officer of the union or representative of the employer who will contravene the present Act will be subject to a fine of no less than $10,000 and no more than $50,000 a day for an offence. We will be talking to this later when we come to the Committee of the Whole. On previous occasions, for instance in the postal strike, we have tried to educate the Minister to understand that one does not need penalties that high to get people to live up to their responsibilities in a country like Canada. Our judges and tribunals do not need a minimum penalty of $10,000 set out if the judge is to have the flexibility to determine what type of fine it will be.

We hope that this legislation nevertheless, and as unhappy as we are with its tabling, will get through the House as soon as possible because we want to get the grain moving again. We believe farmers have suffered enough from this breakdown in transportation of cereals. We hope the legislation will solve the problem. We have no hope that it will improve employer-employees relations generally in Canada because we think it is another bad example of the Government moving in and swinging the axe or the billy stick to try to put people up against the wall. We have no hope that it will change the attitude of the Government, but if we can get the grain moving again, at least we will accept that.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Children—Television documentary on runaways; the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy)—Trade—Free trade—Elimination of control by Canadians over American investment—Request for details / Control over American investment; the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie)—External Affairs—Haiti—Possibility of Canadian initiative at United Nations.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PRINCE RUPERT GRAIN HANDLING OPERATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cadieux that Bill C-106, an Act to provide for the resumption of grain handling operations at the Port of Prince Rupert, British Columbia, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill C-106, an Act to provide for the resumption of grain handling operations at the Port of Prince Rupert, British Columbia, I would like to state on behalf of our caucus that we are upset that this legislation was necessary. We believe that legislation of this nature, although perhaps not the exact legislation that we have before us, has indeed become necessary. During the negotiation and mediation process the two groups were unable to come to any satisfactory conclusion of negotiations. A long strike, although it helped to bring the issue to the public's mind, again did not result in the issue being resolved in a collective agreement.

We oppose the legislation as it is written not only because we find it unfortunate to have it in front of us but because the Government is insisting on retaining its regime of heavy fines, fines which quite often the employer can afford to pay but which are crippling to the individual if he or she ends up in a situation of being fined.

That is a problem and one of the major reasons we cannot support the legislation. Having said that, as you, Mr. Speaker, know, we have agreed to allow the legislation to pass the House of Commons. When we get into clause by clause study later on today we will be putting forward some amendments and voting against some parts of the legislation in an attempt to improve it. We believe that there are changes which could make this legislation better.

For Canadians there is no more difficult decision than whether to support workers who are trying to preserve their jobs or whether to support farmers who are trying to make sure that their grain or other commodities get to market. Canadians tend to sympathize with both groups. Some, depending on where they live in this country, may support one group over the other, but in almost all cases, whether you are a farmer, a worker or involved in some endeavour, you recognize that the issues can be important to both the farmers and the workers. It is not an easy issue in legislation of this nature. You cannot really say that the farmers are at fault, because they are not at fault, they have legitimate concerns. You cannot say the workers are at fault, because they too have legitimate concerns. Legislation of this kind quite often creates a very emotional debate, a debate that sometimes gets quite unreasonable in the way Canadians treat each other.

I find it unfortunate that the two parties could not come to an agreement. In this case I think we have a situation where other methods were suggested to resolve this dispute. The appointment of former Justice Emmett Hall was not suggested just a week or two ago; it was suggested before Christmas. The union representative at that time said they would be willing to have the workers go back to work if former Justice Emmett Hall were appointed to arbitrate the issue. The union representatives went on to say that if it were not former Justice Emmett Hall, perhaps some other acceptable person could be brought in. They made that an option, an option which could have resolved the issue before Christmas or, at least if it did not resolve the issue, it could have resolved the work stoppage and allowed the grain to flow. But that was not done, Mr. Speaker. A month passed, mediation was attempted by the Associate Deputy Minister, Mr. Kelly, and that did not work. Now we are getting legislation in this House that is basically doing what could have been done a month ago.

At no time during that process did the employer agree to allow the issue in dispute to go to binding arbitration. As recently as yesterday, Party leaders were receiving telexes from the employer denying that the issue was whether or not the jobs in question should be part of the collective agreement. The employee was saying that that should not be dealt with by an arbitrator or by the House of Commons because it was strictly a management right. If the issue could not be settled through negotiations and if it could not be settled through mediation and if a strike could not settle the issue, what other mechanism was left but arbitration to settle the dispute?

In the communication which the owner sent out yesterday, it it was claimed that the issue had been resolved in the past by the Canadian Labour Relations Board and, therefore, there was no reason for it to be settled through arbitration. Again, that is not the truth. As a result of that communication and through the co-operation of the Department's labour officials, I have the previous decisions that were made concerning Prince Rupert. They did not deal with the specific issue which is causing the work stoppage at this time. They dealt with foremen and the position of a supervisor, but they did not deal with the whole category of workers. It is obviously a very important issue in dispute which must be resolved.

I find it unfortunate that there is a management attitude in some parts of the country that if it is dirty work, it is union work, but if it is computer work where you punch buttons, it is management work. There are a lot of highly trained people in the Public Service, engineers, doctors, and other professionals. There are people in the largest companies in this country who have degrees and are members of unions. However, there is an attitude that if you are playing with buttons on a computer, as opposed to working with a shovel, it cannot be a union job. That attitude will never lead to the settlement of a dispute.

Prior to Christmas the union offered to have the outstanding issue of whether the jobs in question should be done by union members or non-union personnel put forward for arbitration. The union was doing a service for the people of Canada and especially the farmers of western Canada.

I know that all things are not all black and white. I know there may be a reason why former Justice Emmett Hall, with all of his qualifications, was unacceptable to the employer, but surely to God they could have suggested appropriate, qualified and experienced people who are as respectable as former Justice Emmett Hall. They did not do that. Hence we have the legislation before us today.

Although we will not support the legislation I am glad to see that many of the more objectionable clauses in the legislation ordering the postal workers back to work have been dropped from this legislation. One of the concerns we had with the postal worker legislation was that the arbitrator was referred to a particular report which management liked and the workers did not like. We were also upset about what we considered to be an unconstitutional clause in that legislation which denied union members the right to run for re-election for up to five years after they contravened the legislation. We believe that that was completely uncalled for. Some of those things are not contained in this legislation, and to that extent we believe it is an improvement.

However, there is a contradiction in that in the postal workers' legislation where the Government liked the conciliation report it referred to this report and said that the arbitrator must look at it. Just a few minutes ago the Minister said that he would not appoint former Justice Emmett Hall because the union suggested him.

I suggest that former Justice Emmett Hall is respected by all Members of this House and by Canadians right across the land for the work he has done in such important areas as medicare and transportation. He has experience with regard to grain transportation, the very issue of this dispute. If we cannot accept him as an independent-minded arbitrator just because the union suggested his name, then we obviously apply a double standard in back-to-work legislation. Something was acceptable to the Post Office, therefore we put it in the legislation. When something is acceptable to the grain handlers and to most Canadians, we do not put it in the legislation. The Minister said that he will not accept that.

I think there are some problems with the legislation, although I believe it is necessary at this time. I find it very unfortunate that the two parties did not get together and resolve the dispute, but I do believe we could make this legislation better. I hope that in the time we have before us today, after we hear from the Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), in whose riding this dispute is occurring, and from others from western Canada who are concerned about the plight of farmers, the Minister will accept some amendments and send a clear message that when someone as respected as former Justice Emmett Hall is named as a possible mediator perhaps we in this House should respect the fact that that person was available, qualified, experienced, and should have been used.

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to rise this afternoon to speak on this Bill introduced by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux). The Minister of Labour has given Members of the House a very detailed account of a dispute which has gone on for more than four years. The strike by Grain Workers' Union Local 333 has halted the flow of grain at Canada's newest inland terminal, Prince Rupert Grain 2. This facility is owned by Prince Rupert Grain Ltd. and incorporates state of the art computers and equipment. It has just begun to demonstrate its potential in terms of its role in the prairie grain transportation system. I believe it would be useful to look more closely at the PRG 2 operations to give us an indication of the significance of this work disruption to the grain economy.

During the recent parliamentary break I took the opportunity to visit all of the RM councils in my constituency which were having their first meeting of the year. I was able to visit 22 of 27 rural municipalities. That covers a pretty sizable chunk of southwestern Saskatchewan which I represent. Each municipality mentioned the Prince Rupert grain situation. They made mention of the fact that the dispute had been building for years because they had no contract and could not imagine why that situation was allowed to exist. It is not a matter of pointing the finger at either union or management. Both have a responsibility which certainly is not being lived up to.

The grain elevator facility at Prince Rupert was constructed to give the West Coast a second outlet for export grain markets. The facility was rated at the time of its construction to have an annual export capability in excess of 3.5 million tonnes. During the 1986-87 crop year exports totalled 4.2 million tonnes. That level of throughput was achieved using a two-shift operation for the first five months in the crop year beginning August 1, 1986, and a three-shift operation for the last seven months ending July 31, 1987. Under certain conditions with maximum throughput PRG 2 has the potential to reach even greater production and to play an even greater role in West Coast exports.

It should be mentioned that one of the outstanding features of the PRG 2 terminal is its ability to clean grain at a very high rate. According to the description of the facility published by the company, the terminal has the highest throughput of any grain cleaning elevator in the world. Its high performance, which results from state of the art engineering and technology, allows gain to be cleaned about as fast as it is unloaded.

• (1600)

The significance of this cleaning capacity is that it avoids the potential bottleneck in processing grain and contributes to PRG-2 being one of the most efficient grain terminals in the world.

The Prince Rupert terminal is serviced by CN Rail which transports grain through the mountains and connects thousands of grain producers to the terminal. Grain is received on one of the four tracks at the terminal and each of these tracks is capable of accommodating an entire train. The terminal storage bins can hold approximately 210,000 tonnes and shiploading is done at a very high rate through three tower mounted spouts. This gives us an indication of the operation of Prince Rupert Grain No. 2.

What is perhaps most outstanding about PRG2 is the fact that all of the grain-handling functions and grain flows at the plant are remotely controlled and monitored by computer from the elevator grain centre.

As has been described earlier by the Minister of Labour, it is the manning of this computerized grain centre that is one of the key issues in dispute between Prince Rupert Grain Ltd. and the grain workers union.

Earlier I referred to some 4.2 million tonnes of grain exports through PRG2 in the last crop year. This level of export gives the terminal an annual throughput efficiency of approximately 20 times its capacity, compared to perhaps 10 to 13 times capacity at other grain terminals. PRG2's throughput efficiency gives the terminal a very significant role in grain exports. Fourteen per cent of the 1986-87 crop year exports went through Prince Rupert. Prince Rupert's share to December 6, 1987 is unchanged at 14 per cent. In 1986-87, grain exports from the West Coast, that is Prince Rupert and Vancouver combined, amounted to over 16 million tonnes, and PRG2's share of West Coast grain exports amounts to 26 per cent.

It is interesting to note that the facility PRG2 is 80 per cent owned by the prairie co-operatives. It has been mentioned that the Prairie co-operatives also own most of the other ports that load grain into the export market. There has been some suggestion that their position is that the grain will move through their facilities, albeit at another point, and therefore they are not as anxious to settle this particular issue as they might be.

This strike has gone on for more than a month. In fact, it began on December 9 of last year and has been in effect for the better part of five weeks. That is a long time for a terminal to be left idle when our export grain commitments are at an all-time high.

There is no question that responsibility for settling the issue lies with the two parties in dispute. They have demonstrated a complete lack of responsibility, which has resulted in these collective bargaining negotiations breaking down and has caused the present impasse and consequent impact on grain shipments. The parties in dispute have shirked their responsibilities by failing to come to an agreement. Both union and management have a role to play, and it certainly has not been carried out.

The shareholders as well as the union have known for the past four years that this issue must be settled. The manning of the computerized grain centre is in dispute, and this issue must be resolved.

The dispute now poses a severe threat to the prairie grain economy in terms of lost grain sales and in terms of our international reputation as a reliable supplier of grain.

It is indeed a most unfortunate situation. Not only are the grain handlers at this facility out of work, we also hear reports of ships lying idle in the port, waiting to load. As well, there are railway cars to be unloaded at the terminal. Some 80,000 to 90,000 tonnes of grain would normally flow through this terminal in the course of a week. If this situation is allowed to continue, Vancouver elevators would be the only terminal export point available until spring. As Hon. Members are aware, Thunder Bay operates on a reduced scale during the winter. Only a relatively small amount of grain is shipped by rail to the Lower St. Lawrence transfer elevators during the winter months. As long as the Prince Rupert dispute is not resolved, each day will add to the current congestion.

The other problem associated with moving the grain down to the Lower St. Lawrence elevators is the increased cost. That, in addition to the demurrage paid for the ships that are in a position to load, must ultimately be borne by the prairie producers who have no input in this impasse.

This labour dispute points out very clearly that strikes and lock-outs are not the answer. If we must resort to the Government instituting compulsory binding arbitration, as in this particular case, perhaps disputes should never be allowed to get to this stage. Perhaps we have reached the time when we should consider measures such as the Private Members' initiative introduced by the Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) last summer when we debated this very issue. Perhaps the time has come to consider such a solution.

I have attempted to describe what I see as the very significant role that this relatively new grain terminal facility plays in the prairie grain economy. PRG2 is a significant new grain export facility, with 26 per cent of West Coast grain exports going through the port. It has the potential to become even more significant in the years ahead.

This work stoppage has brought a halt to the flow of export grain through PRG2 and, in doing so, prevents the realization of the efficiency potential of this important national asset. The company and the union have failed to make the compromises that would resolve their long drawn out dispute, even with the repeated efforts made by the Minister of Labour through conciliation and mediation, including the assistance of Canada's top mediator. The parties have brought their dispute to a critical stage and the Government has no alternative but to require the resumption of operations and the resolution of the issues through arbitration. I urge all Hon. Members to support the Bill and work toward its immediate passage.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, my riding of Assiniboia is the largest wheat producing riding in Canada. During the Christmas break we had no end to calls from farmers who were concerned about this strike.

The Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig) alluded to that somewhat, but I am surprised by the position of the Opposition in regard to the action the Government is taking. It would almost appear that many of them do not understand the conditions facing the farmers.

• (1610)

We in the agricultural and grain producing areas have been through difficult times. We have faced a very low price. We have faced other difficulties. I am surprised at the insensitivity of the Opposition in this respect. I would like to hear from the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw. I am sure his experience has been the same as mine. The telephone rang steadily during the break. Farmers were calling to ask what can be done about this. Surely there must be a better way than tying up the country. The cost of demurrage alone, which the farmers end up paying through the Canadian Wheat Board, is very significant. Certainly, the Government has a responsibility to look into this matter, and the Minister has done so.

Mr. Gottselig: Mr. Speaker, I had the same comments put to me in discussions I had with the rural municipal councils, for example. Each time this matter was raised they wanted to know what was going to happen. I told them we would get Bill Kelly involved and if he could not solve it, it would not be possible to solve. They want the port operating. They are not necessarily only pointing the finger at one side. Both parties in the dispute have a responsibility to bear. They obviously have not lived up to their responsibilities or this situation would not have developed.

As the Hon. Member pointed out, the problem is that the producers we represent in western Canada feel totally helpless and frustrated. They ask why the situation has been allowed to happen. That is what we have to deal with. We must put a process in place that settles these disputes before they reach this critical stage or before the present contract expires, and if they cannot settle, we must have the next step firmly in place so we do not have this disruption.

Another example is the Air Canada strike which disrupted Christmas plans for everyone across Canada. The parties in dispute seemed to be totally insensitive to that situation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If there are no more questions or comments, debate.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have a chance to say a few words with respect to the Bill before us today, Bill C-106. I think the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Gustafson) has pointed out the problem. The Government has dillied and dallied around on this matter for too long. It is just getting around to taking action today with respect to this dispute between the grain handlers and the Prince Rupert grain terminal.

The problem has been with us for three or four years and the Government has not really taken any action until earlier this month when it appointed Mr. Kelly as the mediator in this dispute. It became very clear after Mr. Kelly had completed his mediation attempts that only compulsory arbitration, hopefully, joint voluntary compulsory arbitration, could resolve the dispute. That is why the Leader of her Majesty's Official Opposition issued a statement last Friday calling on the Government to call in the parties to propose a suitable arbitrator between the two parties and seek a negotiated settlement thus avoiding this back to work legislation. It seemed clear at that time that if a suitable arbitrator could be found the union involved would go back to work on a voluntary or agreed basis. Unfortunately, after those negotiations last week it appeared obvious that that could not happen. The wheat pools are concerned that an arbitrated settlement may strike at the prerogatives and normal powers of the employer in this case. They see it as a dangerous precedent because the decision that is made with respect to the management role in the operations of this terminal may reduce that role, and some of that management role would be turned over to the union's employees at the terminal.

There seemed to be almost an inevitability that the only solution was compulsory arbitration, as the legislation before us proposes. Clearly, action had to be taken. This morning in the Standing Committee on Agriculture the Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board suggested that every month the terminal moves $70 million worth of wheat and other grains, and the strike has been going on for over a month. If the terminal is shut down the grain simply does not move. At the other end of the equation, when wheat has to be moved from prairie points to the East Coast ports, there is at least a $15 million loss in additional costs which are not received by the farmers.

We are facing an incredibly difficult time in the grain industry today with prices running at half of what they were five years ago. There is no clear indication that the American Farm Bill will not ratchet down prices another notch or two in this coming year. The Americans are putting up more and more money in the Export Enhancement Program. The budget has been increased to $1.5 billion in direct violation of the trade agreement that they would not take pre-empted strikes and actions against Canada. The Wheat Board has been selling grain at a maximum rate. We hope the free trade agreement will not have an adverse affect on that body which is doing such a marvellous job in selling our grain and maintaining extremely high quality, which is putting our grain in demand around the world.

The contracts are being put off for delivery from the West Coast by the Canadian Wheat Board now into March or early April because of the strike. There is no question that prairie agriculture is suffering from this strike. We need to take the action which is proposed before the House today in order to maintain Canada as a reliable supplier and retain its reputation as the best wheat producer and the highest quality wheat producer in the world. We want to see this legislation enacted so that the dispute can be resolved. Perhaps if the Minister had acted last Friday and called in the parties, proposing a series of acceptable arbitrators, we could have had a voluntary agreement and would not have to take the legislative route which is being proposed here today.

We want to study this Bill clause by clause so we can have a more detailed question and discussion kind of format. We believe it is essential that the Port of Prince Rupert be brought back into operation and that grain starts to move on an urgent and immediate basis so that the grain industry, so vital to our entire national economy, can get moving again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments? Debate.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I do not enjoy participating in these kinds of debates involving the ordering of workers back to work. However, it appears that in this situation there were not a lot of options because of the intransigence of the employer. I want to spend a moment on that because I know the Minister crafted his speech to condemn equally Prince Rupert Grain Limited and Local 333. However, there is a larger picture about which Hon. Members should be reminded.

The problem, as Members here know, is that Local 333 has been without a collective agreement for three-and-a-half, going on four years. There are reasons for that. There are reasons for a great many of the delays.

There has been a funny deal in the works ever since 1980 when the federal Government agreed to provide Prince Rupert Grain 1, the old waterfront elevator, to the consortium of Alberta Wheat Pool, Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, United Grain Growers, James Richardson and Sons, Cargill Limited and Manitoba Pool Elevators, an elevator estimated at some $50 million plus in value for $1. The federal Government, as well as the taxpayers of Canada, put in something in excess of $30 million in infrastructure on Ridley Island to Prince Rupert Grain 2, a truly amazing and modern state of the art elevator.

People in Prince Rupert do not forget easily, nor do I. Prince Rupert lost some 60 grain jobs as a direct result of the closing of PRG 1 and the opening of PRG 2. There was a direct loss in wages to the Prince Rupert economy of $3 million per year and almost double that if we take into account the lay-offs and movement of CN workers as well as the dislocation of other people in the economy as a result of the direct loss of those very important and longstanding historic jobs in Prince Rupert that have been there for more than half a century.

Just after the last election I asked a question of the then Minister of Transport, the present Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), about the old grain elevator. I knew then, and the same is the case now, that it would long be necessary, as are the jobs, to the Prince Rupert economy. On November 21, 1984, as reported at page 457 of Hansard, he said:

> On the issue of the Prince Rupert Grain Terminal, I share the Hon. Member's concern. I am deeply disturbed by the prospect of the loss of jobs. I had an opportunity to meet with members of the union during the course of the election campaign, at which time I set out to explore whether there were other ways and means by which the existing terminal could be utilized. There has been some demonstrated interest in that. I think there is a way in which that terminal might be used for non-grain services, such as specialty crops, pellets and things of that nature. I will be discussing this with some members of the provincial government, and other interested parties, with a view to attempting to maintain that facility, even on a one-shift basis, to help alleviate some of the problems affecting workers. More important, in the long term we should make sure that we do not close down a facility, something which we may regret later on.

That is the signal that the Deputy Prime Minister sent to the grain workers at Prince Rupert. The signal that he sent to Prince Rupert generally is that we are going to keep the old elevator going and get the new elevator under way.

By the time of the opening, farmers were receiving 30 cents more a bushel by using Prince Rupert. Of course, there was a saving to those countries which were sending freighters to pick up grain, a saving of 500 miles each way, particularly for grain vessels from the Orient. Thus Prince Rupert has a great many reasons for being popular, not only with the farmers who receive a better price for their grain by moving it through Prince Rupert. Countries buying grain from Canada receive a better deal because it is even closer than Vancouver.

So there was a change in capacity from 1.2 million tonnes with just PRG 1, which in 1983 was about 15 per cent of West Coast exports, to 3.5 million tonnes, the potential throughput through PRG2, which now, as other Members have pointed out, was 26 per cent of the West Coast exports last year. During the 1983 crop year over 4 million tonnes were shipped through Prince Rupert, providing a very substantial benefit and gain to the farmers of Canada.

I agree with what other Members have said. We have to keep in mind not only the interests of Prince Rupert, the grain workers or anyone else in particular in the local sense of this issue, but the farmers. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), reminded me that 500,000 tonnes were diverted from Prince Rupert to the Lakehead at a $30 per tonne loss to prairie farmers. Once demurrage, storage and so on is added on to that, one finds that this dispute from December 9 until now has been very costly to the farmers of Canada. There is no doubt that that loss amounts to millions and millions of dollars.

There may have been other measures the Government could have taken. On December 14 the grain workers offered voluntarily to go back to work. They have always wanted to go back to work. Of course, they suggested at that time, and continue to suggest, Mr. Justice Emmett Hall as being an entirely appropriate person to arbitrate such a matter. I agree. I think that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) agrees, although he has made some suggestions today that, by the grain workers continuing to suggest Mr. Hall and Prince Rupert Grain Limited not liking the suggestion, that may have made it impossible for him as a Minister to appoint Mr. Hall.

As I stated earlier, the Minister crafted his speech to be equally condemnatory of the union and of Prince Rupert Grain Ltd. I hope he will keep in mind that he should take great care in whom he chooses as an arbitrator. For whatever reasons, the Minister has not included a clause in the Bill requiring the mutual consent of both parties to the appointment of an arbitrator for this very important matter.

Records were set and broken regularly at old Prince Rupert Grain 1 prior to its demolition. It was one hell of a hard-working group that put that all together, with the kind of antiquated equipment it had, particularly in terms of boxcars and in terms of bringing them in, loading them and moving them out very quickly. Some 40 per cent of the union jobs have been lost since 1985. The jobs went from 115 down to 51, while the number of supervisors has grown from 6 to 15. As I pointed out earlier, that is a direct income loss to the Prince Rupert area of $6 million per year in wages alone.

While Prince Rupert Grain 2 has been a welcome facility in terms of high technology and its ability to move a great deal of farmers' grain, it has been a really sore point in Prince Rupert, especially in terms of the promises of more jobs and how great it would be. The great promises from Prince Rupert Grain Ltd. never came to be. In fact, Prince Rupert generally lost, in a net sense, as a result of the new elevator.

As the union pointed out in evidence given to various tribunals and in press releases, it is not opposed to technological change but wants the right to perform the same jobs as are performed by members of the same union in Vancouver. In 1984 the employer would not recognize Local 333's right to continue with its collective agreement to represent employees on Ridley Island. That gives one some idea of the kinds of bad faith that was demonstrated by the employer very early on in the relationship in terms of the development of the Ridley Island site.

The Canada Labour Relations Board upheld the union's right to do so. The employer then laid off 76 employees from Prince Rupert Grain 1. I wish to point out that the Alberta and Saskatchewan Pools have unionized workers operating the computers as panel control operators in Vancouver. They are the principal owners of Prince Rupert Grain 2. We have to understand the nature of this difficulty. The Minister touched on the matter of manning the grain centres as being the principal problem. He pointed out the discrepancy between what Prince Rupert Grain Ltd. is saying publicly and what the CLRB ruled on. The position being taken by the company is quite different from both the interpretation of the Minister of Labour and what the CLRB ruled in relation to manning the grain centre. It ruled in relation to foremen but never ruled in relation to the level of staffing. There are also the questions of job classification and security to be considered.

The point I want to make is that the same principal owners of Prince Rupert Grain 2 have unionized workers doing these panel jobs in Vancouver, but are making that the key issue blocking a satisfactory settlement through collective bargaining at Prince Rupert.

● (1630)

The employee classification at Prince Rupert Grain 2 has been done by the employer without regard to Prince Rupert Grain Terminal No. 1 in terms of grandfathering, the collective agreement, or the Vancouver operations. I would like to know on the basis of what logic, let alone law, the employer has attempted to stuff that down the throats of Local 333, which, Mr. Speaker, over the last three and a half years has been about as cool-headed a group of bargainers as I have ever seen.

The employer did not respect seniority rights. In fact, many laid off workers were forced to move and find other work while they were waiting for a decision from Prince Rupert Grain Ltd. The employer then contracted out the watchman's work. There has been no agreement since 1983. As the Minister and other Members have pointed out, that is almost four years.

Over the past few weeks the Minister of Labour appointed Bill Kelly to find a solution. The Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) attempted to paint some type of picture that the Opposition have created the delay. We know that the House was sitting on December 14 when the farmers made a proposal, which was then supported by the Grain Workers' Union Local 333, to have arbitration at that point. That was some six weeks ago, so it is hardly appropriate for the government side to be attempting to paint it as some nefarious deal cooked up on the opposition benches.

Of course, the employer refused voluntary arbitration, as Mr. Kelly suggested. Let us not forget that the Minister must exercise care in his choice. I listened with care to his reasons why Mr. Justice Emmett Hall may not now be suitable. Mr. Justice Emmett Hall could in fact end up being the arbitrator in this matter. I listened with care to the reasons of the Minister, and even though it is not in the Bill, I would hope that when looking at his short list the Minister might at least call Prince Rupert Grain Ltd. and Local 333 with a suggested short list to see whether or not mutual consent could not be obtained in that manner.

All along the union has been prepared to accept an agreement negotiated and concluded in June, 1987 in Vancouver. It is the other three contentious issues which, as I have demonstrated could easily have been resolved. Rather than suggesting Mr. Justice Emmett Hall, Henry Kinks of Local 333, could have suggested me. I could have resolved these matters in five minutes, but I am not sure that that would have been entirely appropriate.

I know that farmers across the country are listening to this debate, I know that the grain workers are listening, and I know people in Prince Rupert are listening. But I will speak now for a moment to the farmers. They must ask just who is the employer at Prince Rupert Grain 2 and how well are they being served. How well is the country being served when the grain workers are being treated so shabbily year after year at Prince Rupert? At a time when the U.S. Farm Bill is hurting Canadian farmers, and low prices, high debt, and high costs are all harming Canadians farmers and their families, I think those farmers, particularly those associated with the Alberta Wheat Pool, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, United Grain Growers, James Richardson and Sons, Cargill and Manitoba Pool Elevators should be scratching their heads and wondering how it is possible that a collective agreement and a dispute such as this has to wind its way to Parliament to find resolution.

Farmers may well hold the key. We do not need some type of specialized dispute settlement mechanisms as proposed by the Member from Swift Current. We need some cool heads at Prince Rupert Grain Ltd. and with the cool heads that there have been at Local 333 I think we will find the way out of future disputes, if the farmers take that key. They know what the problem is and they can look at how this dispute has come to be. I think that they hold the lever and the key in replacing some of the management at Prince Rupert Grain Ltd. in order that this type of dispute does not rear up in the future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the chair.

Clauses 2 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 7—Arbitration

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, I move the following amendment:

That Clause 7 of Bill C-106 be amended by

(a) striking out lines 28 and 29, on page 3 thereof, and substituting the following:

"Arbitration 7. (1) Retired Justice Emmett Hall is hereby appointed as arbitrator and the Minister shall refer to him all matters"

(b) by striking out lines 31 and 32, on page 3, and substituting the following:

"classification and security personnel that, on the date of the coming into force of this section, are in dispute"

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in favour of this motion. I wish to put on the record the fact that there are two sides involved in this dispute. As it is viewed by many prairie farmers who are also shareholders somewhat at arm's length in Prince Rupert terminals, they see the problem being not only a problem with workers but also a problem with management. They are quite cognizant of the fact that the number of management positions has increased from six to fifteen with this new terminal. They are also very much aware that the amount of unionized workers has decreased by more than a half. They are quite familiar with the old cries of some pro-management writers about featherbedding.

That is not the case with the unionized workers here. The unionized workers have lost a considerable number of jobs and a considerable amount of power. On the other hand, what they are looking at with some distrust is a rapid increase in the amount of management positions from six to fifteen, as I stated. These are generally very highly paid positions. They are starting to wonder if they are not being held up to ransom by some of these high paid workers on the management team. They are beginning to use words like "job-napping" to refer to the ransom that this increased group of managers are engaging in in this particular negotiation.

It is very important that the arbitrator be cognizant of both the needs of the farmers and of the needs to get the grain moving, as has been relayed to the agriculture committee this morning by the Deputy Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board. In order to meet commitments, the Wheat Board has been forced to divert 500 tonnes of shipments through Thunder Bay and St. Lawrence ports at a net loss to producers in direct income of some $30 per tonne for each tonne so diverted, a loss of 15 million.

We could add to that the cost of demurrage for ships sitting in Prince Rupert harbour, which will be taken out of the final returns to wheat, barley, and oat producers. As well there are the storage charges which terminal operators have been able to put in their pockets during the course of the strike. Farmers are paying all these costs. They are paying for increased high-cost management, for the delays, and for the terminal having been down for 30 some days. It has become a very expensive proposition.

I regret that the two sides did not agree to the back to work proposal before Christmas. I understand that it was rejected by the group of 15 managers. As a result, this strike has been going on much longer than it needed to. There is no choice except to put an arbitrator in place. I hope the House will accept the long experience of Chief Justice Emmett Hall who is cognizant of all problems in the grain industry. He would be acceptable and is held in high regard by workers, management, farmers, railways, and elevator companies. I think he would be an excellent choice. It will take an arbitrator of that standing in the community for this particular difficulty to be permanently resolved.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques want to speak on the amendment, or does he want to wait until we have disposed of it and then speak?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Chairman, I have a statement to make on Clause 7 and a question for the Minister once we have disposed of the amendment.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the particular amendment, for the reasons I gave in my speech earlier today, and with the greatest of respect for the individual who has been specifically named in the House, we cannot accept that amendment.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Amendment (Mr. Murphy) negatived: (Yeas, 6; Nays, 27.)

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 7 carry?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Chairman, we were at a stage last week where it appeared that the two parties were fairly far apart. The individual who put forward a proposal which was quite worth-while was the Deputy Minister, Bill Kelly, who is with us in the House today. He made a proposal for binding arbitration to be voluntarily agreed to by both parties. This came close to ending the strike without the use of back to work legislation. On behalf of my Party, and I guess on behalf of all Hon. Members of the House, I should like to congratulate Mr. Kelly.

Unfortunately, for the proposal to go forward additional moves had to be made. The Leader of the Opposition made a very concrete suggestion last Friday in a press release. I should like to quote the first paragraph of it for the benefit of Hon. Members. It indicates: "Liberal Leader John N. Turner today called on Labour Minister Pierre Cadieux to meet with the two sides involved in the Prince Rupert Grain Terminal strike this weekend to persuade them to accept binding arbitration. He said the Minister should be ready to suggest the name of an arbitrator to the parties".

This suggestion was in fact meant to put into action the proposal which had previously been put forward by Mr. Bill Kelly.

I should like to ask the Minister whether he went to the trouble last weekend to meet personally with both sides to try to see if there was a possibility for the sides to agree to binding arbitration on a voluntary basis instead of having it forced upon them by back to work legislation, and also to try to test them with regard to the possible name of an individual, who would be agreeable to both parties, to act as an arbitrator. Did the Minister try that last weekend?

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, with respect to binding arbitration, whether it be voluntary arbitration or involuntary arbitration, Mr. Kelly who was appointed to this dossier tried personally to get both parties to agree to voluntary binding arbitration. The union accepted it with a condition.

When I received the union's qualified acceptance, I communicated by telex with the employer or employers in order to get their response to the proposal made by Mr. Kelly, which included voluntary binding arbitration. The employers at that point responded indirectly, and again I went back to them to get their response on the principle of binding arbitration. The employers refused the principle of going into binding arbitration because, according to them, the manning issue was a management issue which should not be subjected to arbitration. They refused that concept.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, I have two brief questions for the Minister. I am not sure whether either of them is a proper question. However, since he has rejected the proposal for an arbitrator in the person of former Chief Justice Emmett Hall, does he have another arbitrator in mind? If he cannot answer that question, would he at least tell us if people who have been acting on this case will still be acceptable as potential arbitrators when he gets around to nominating them? Specifically, could Mr. Kelly still be nominated for this job?

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, I was about to ask my hon. colleague to qualify his question by asking to whom he was specifically referring.

I want to make a particular comment in respect of the individual to whom the NDP refers. The first time that the name appeared was in the context of mediation. At that time my understanding was that that suggestion was formally refused by the employer.

Mr. Collins who was mediator in this particular dispute at that time reactivated the meetings with the parties, which unfortunately led to a dead end. Then I appointed Mr. Kelly in order to intervene in the dossier and to try to mediate the dispute. That was not possible, and then he made the formal proposal which unfortunately was not totally accepted by the employer and was unfortunately not totally accepted by the union in the sense that it qualified its acceptance.

Obviously, once this particular Bill is accepted, I will consider some options in respect of the appointment of an arbitrator. With respect to Mr. Kelly specifically as a public servant, I am informed that he would not accept such an appointment.

• (1650)

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I have a very quick question for the Minister of Labour relating to the mutual consent clause which is found in a great deal of legislation. With such a clause, both parties would have either an individual or a short list proposed to them. Quite often when a final binding solution is put forward by the arbitrator, it tends to stick better and be more acceptable if both parties at the beginning agreed to a person to arbitrate.

I wonder why the Minister has not included a mutual consent clause in this Bill. Perhaps he could expand on the proposal I made while I was speaking. I proposed that he could, here on the floor of the House, agree that when he comes up with a short list, he would be prepared, though it may well be the Minister who will have to decide alone who the arbitrator will be—to meet privately and see if there is a mutually acceptable and consensual arbitrator.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, I thank my hon. colleague for a very interesting question which makes a lot of sense. We are not always used to that in this House, but with respect to the—

Mr. Frith: Especially on your side.

Mr. Cadieux: We don't ask questions, we answer them.

With respect to the consent clause being in the Bill, my hon. colleague has answered part of that question himself by saying that the Minister may have to decide himself. That is obviously one of the reasons why I would not wish such a clause to be in the Bill.

With respect to possible consent by the parties to the choice of an arbitrator, I can assure the House that, as we have done in the past, we can consult with the parties and ask them to provide us with a list of possible candidates, say three candidates, just for the sake of argument, and then I would make my own decision, taking into consideration their suggestions and mine, which may be the same or different. We have done that in the past and I am obviously prepared to do that again.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, Clause 7, subclause 3, calls upon the arbitrator to have, within 45 days of being appointed, dealt with all the issues before himself or herself. In Bill C-85, which was passed in August of 1987, there was a similar clause, though I realize it was not quite the same clause, relating to back to work legislation for the railway. In that piece of legislation, we gave the arbitrator 60 days. Since then, the Minister has given the arbitrator an extension to March of 1988. I understand that another request has come forward for the arbitrator in the railway case to be given even more time to finish his work. I do not know whether or not the Minister wants to comment on that, but I think it is a very important issue.

When we do pass legislation saying that an arbitrator has only so much time to do his work, then the parties involved and the people concerned expect justice within that period of time. Bill C-85 was passed without any pay increases for the workers and the management was able to do all sorts of things in the meantime. Each and every time the arbitrator's time to do his work is extended, we are being unfair to the people involved. The House did pass the legislation in the form in which it was passed with an understanding that the work would be done within 60 days. That has not happened in the case of the railway arbitration. It is dragging on and on, and I think it is actually resulting in an injustice to the workers involved.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, if I understood correctly, the question addresses Bill C-85 more than it addresses this particular legislation. Consequently, I do not think this is the appropriate forum in which to deal with that particular issue. However, I will acknowledge that I have received some representations from various parties about the possibility of an extension. I have not received any formal request for extension, and I can assure the Hon. Member that should I receive such an extension, I will look into the situation.

I have given instructions to my officials to look into the situation right now because of those representations. I can assure my hon. colleague that I will deal with it in full knowledge of what is going on if it comes to me.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Chairman, on the same subject, we too were aware of the fact that the arbitration decision in the rail strike is taking a long time. This is all because an extension could be granted by the Minister.

I would suggest an improvement in this Bill. I would suggest that an extension could be agreed upon by the two parties. If the two parties decided that they wanted to give the arbitrator one more month, they themselves could make the decision to wait before getting a collective agreement. If they were to reach such a decision, it would be because they came to the conclusion that they had better wait for an additional period of time in the hope of getting a better agreement.

This is something to be remembered for the next legislation of this kind, although I hope that this kind of legislation will not be coming to the House too often. I think the Minister knows our position on back to work legislation, which is that we resent and hate it, but the problem exists in the back to work legislation that settled the rail strike. They are without a settlement and we hope that if an extension is again requested by the arbitrator, the Minister will turn it down. It is about time that these workers saw the end of the process and were finally able to enjoy their own collective agreement, although part of it will be imposed on them by outside sources.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 7 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 7 agreed to.

Clauses 8 and 9 agreed to.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if we might not seek unanimous consent not to see the clock in order to continue progress on this Bill, with the understanding, of course, that if we were able to finish the Bill within a reasonable time, we would complete discussions on the Bill and then proceed immediately to Private Members' Hour and allow the Hon. Member to have a full-hour's debate on his Bill if so required.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, in an effort to complete discussions on this legislation today, we are prepared not to see the clock, with the clear understanding that Private Members' Business would be a full hour. Of course, we anticipate that the Secretary of State for External Affairs would be in support of that Bill. We would like to see debate for the entire hour.

The Deputy Chairman: Is that so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

On Clause 10—Offence by individuals

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Chairman, I want to refer to Clause 10 of the Bill. Unfortunately it would seem that the Government got used to imposing penalties which, in our opinion, are much too severe.

Allow me to read Clause 10(1)(a), page 4 of the Bill, and I quote:

(a) of not less than $10,000 or more than $50,000—

—each day, applicable to—

—an officer or representative of the employer or the union—

—who contravenes any provision of this act.

Mr. Chairman, we agree on the principle that a law must contain such penalties that people will want to abide by the law. However we think that the penalty I have just referred to in the case of an officer of the employer or the union is much too severe.

• (1700)

[English]

In the same way the penalty for a single individual who would contravene the Act is a minimum of $500 and a maximum of $1,000 per each day that the infraction occurs. The employer or the union is likely to be subjected to a fine of not less than $20,000 and not more than $100,000 per day. These are penalties which have never been seen before this Conservative Government came to power. As well, these fines make a mockery of the flexibility a judge has in making a decision in a tribunal. Why impose a minimum fine? If there were no minimum fines and if those minimum fines were removed from the Bill, keeping the maximum fines, although the maximum penalties are very high, a judge would still have the flexibility to impose a fine which is reasonable and appropriate to a violation. We think that these penalties are unfair and not appropriate to the situation, especially the question of a minimum penalty. To try to deal with that I offer the following amendment:

That Clause 10 of Bill C-106 be amended:

(a) by striking out the words "less than $10,000 or—" from line 26 on page 4 of the Bill

(b) by striking out the words "less than $500 or—" from line 31 on page 4 of the Bill

(c) by striking out the words "less than $20,000 or—" from line 38 on page 4 of the Bill.

The effect of this amendment would be to remove the minimum penalties mentioned in Clause 10 of the Bill, allowing a judge to use his educated judgment in handing down the proper sentence to anyone who violates the Act. We do not think it is desirable or fair to have a judge strapped into having to hand down a minimum fine of $10,000 for one day's contravention. It is barbaric. We think the judiciary should enjoy the same flexibility in this piece of legislation as it enjoys with others. This is the reason for the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, I want to speak on the same issue as my colleague from the Liberal Party did concerning Clause 10. I want to speak in support of his amendment.

A similar argument was placed before Committee of the Whole on Bill C-86 in the postal dispute. The Minister as a lawyer is well aware of the arguments put forward at that time, and he is also aware of how justice abhors minimum fines and penalties in any legislation.

I think all Members of the House are aware of the minimum sentence of seven years in jail for importing narcotics. We have had instances of young people caught with a very small amount of marijuana or a drug like that who are subject to a minimum sentence of seven years in jail. It is obviously an abhorrent type of measure. I say that despite the fact that we are talking here about a situation where the employer or the union contravenes the Act and there is a minimum fine of $20,000. In this case, the union is anxious to have binding arbitration while the employer is not and, on a matter of principle, we cannot have in legislation the kind of minimums stated. The judges of this country who deal with offences and contraventions of legislation are very well prepared to deal with them.

I will give one example because I think an example is worthy of note even though it may be theoretical. If we look at Clause 3(b) of the Bill we read:

every employee shall, when so required, forthwith resume the duties of that employee's employment.

Forthwith, Mr. Chairman, has been interpreted by many courts as to its meaning; namely, that it has to be done right away. If somebody did not report for work right away for some reason, then it may be a very minor period of time, it may be a very minor offence, but it is still subject to a minimum fine. There are also provisions in Clause 4(b) which require a union and each officer or the representative of the union to take all reasonable steps to ensure that employees comply with Clause 3(b).

Some judge might decide that the union or an individual should have done something which the judge thought was reasonable but they did not, and that union or that individual could be found guilty under this Bill. It may have been a minor or a technical breach, yet a minimum fine would apply.

The Minister of Justice has left the Chamber, so I would like to ask the Minister of Labour to respond to this point. It is a very serious precedent not only to have a minimum penalty in this legislation but in other legislation and I ask him to reconsider the inclusion in a Bill of this type of minimum penalty. There are ways of making sure that the seriousness of the offence is recognized by the judiciary by placing maximum fines or providing for other penalties other than fines. Having a minimum fine in place is not an appropriate measure in dealing with this type of thing.

We have many examples across the country of labour disputes where court orders are issued and sometimes individuals are brought before the court for contempt. In those situations judges deal with the contempt of court order, if there is one in place. This is a similar kind of matter where there is an order from Parliament to return to work. Without any minimum fines or minimum approach, judges across the country are well able to deal with the seriousness of crimes committed in similar circumstances. Sometimes jail penalties are provided and sometimes very large fines, sometimes fines as large as those proposed here are imposed.

Could the Minister of Labour tell the House why it is that he is including this type of minimum fine in the Bill when there is an opportunity to accomplish the same object without this measure?

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, I have had the occasion to reflect on these particular fines on a number of occasions now since they were placed in Bills C-24, C-85 and C-86. I recall that we had a particularly long debate on Bill C-86 in this regard. I have acknowledged, and I will acknowledge again today, that these fines are severe. We have been using fines consistently in these types of back to work legislation. In this case I would like to point out that if the parties had agreed to voluntary binding arbitration we would not be here today considering back to work legislation and considering these penalties. As in the past we have not supported amendments in this regard. I believe that on Bill C-86 my colleague from Saint-Jacques proposed the same amendment, which we did not support then and we will not support today.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Clause 10 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 11 carry?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Clause 11 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 12 carry?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Clause 12 agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cadieux moved that Bill C-106, an Act to provide for the resumption of grain handling operations at the port of Prince Rupert, British Columbia, be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I just want to take a few seconds to mention again that it is not one of my greatest moments as Minister of Labour when I have to rise in this House to introduce back to work legislation. However, in this case I think everyone will agree that this was the last option. Notwithstanding the fact that we may not agree totally with all the clauses of the Bill, this legislation was necessary in order to get the grain moving again in Canada to help our farmers and to maintain our reputation as a grain exporter throughout the world.

I think we should give credit when credit is deserved. I want to thank my colleagues in both opposition Parties for their co-operation in the speedy passage of this piece of legislation.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) just said that it is not pleasant for him to stand in the House to introduce back to work legislation. I can tell you that it is certainly not pleasant for me, as the spokesperson for labour for the Liberal Party of Canada, to see him bringing this regressive type of legislation to the House of Commons time after time, especially when these Bills contain overly harsh penalties such as we discussed earlier.

We have been trying to amend the Bill. The Minister will recollect that we tried to make him understand when dealing with Bill C-86 that these penalties were too stiff, were unnecessary, and were tying the hands of judges. I do not think our arguments were well heard because he has brought back the same type of measure as was contained in Bill C-86. Our only hope is that after the passage of this Bill operations will resume as soon as possible, that the grain will get moving, and that we will be able to safeguard our markets and deliver grain to people who have concluded contracts with us.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak for just a few minutes on third reading. We have done much today to expedite the passage of this legislation. It is in third reading after just over two hours of debate. Much of the legislation is familiar to us in that we have seen a fair number of Bills in the last six months which contained similar words and clauses. It is, therefore, not new to Members of the House. We recognize that, there having been a breakdown in negotiations, a long strike which has not resolved the issue, and since mediation has not worked, there is a necessity to go to arbitration. However, as I said earlier, there are still some problems with this legislation.

As the Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) said, this legislation is very strict in terms of the minimum fines it provides for. An individual who has every intention of abiding by this legislation but is unable to do so will be fined a minimum of $10,000. That person may not be in Prince Rupert today, tomorrow, or Thursday when this legislation is proclaimed. It has been a long strike and the people have not all stayed in that community.

That type of clause is obviously meant as punishment for people who deliberately disobey the law. However, people who may have gone away to visit family, or could not pay their mortgage because they have not been working for the last while and have gone to live with family elsewhere, would be subject to a minimum fine of $10,000 a day.

When there is a dispute in the City of Thompson, where I am from, there is usually a cooling off period, a certain amount of time to allow people who are out of town to return to town and resume work. Those are the types of things that should be done.

This is not the first time the Minister has introduced this particular clause, and I hope that if he believes it is necessary to have minimum fines in the future he will make them subject to a wilful disregard of the legislation. He has not included that and, as a result, has a very dangerous clause which could be used against any individual. I am not talking about a hypothetical situation. The law is the law and someone, especially after a bitter labour dispute, may try to enforce the law in a way which would not see justice done.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being after five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

CANADA-ALASKA BOUNDARY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved that Bill C-222, an Act respecting the international boundary between Canada and the State of Alaska, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased once again to bring a Bill regarding 54-40 or as we know it on the north coast of B.C., the A-B line, before the House for debate. Many Members of the House will know that just over a year ago the legislative committee chose this as one of the Bills to be brought before the House for a vote. Through a variety of calendar changes ranging from the changing of opposition days and government days to the proroguing of the House, Bill C-222 did not get to the floor of the House for a vote. I am hoping that before 20 minutes after six this evening Members of the House will allow this Bill to come to a vote so that it can either go to committee or be passed into law.

Everyone who has followed the rather sad history of the disputes in relation to 54-40 will know how important it is that a statutory and parliamentary vote be taken putting the A-B line into law, not to send a message to individual Canadians but to send a collective message to Washington that we are tired of the steps they have taken throughout this century to try to capture a part of Canada which has always been Canada and is supported by many treaties.

I would like to thank my colleague, the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), who spoke on this Bill the last time around. I hope that the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) and others will take the opportunity to participate in this debate today because I think it is an historic moment for this House to pass Bill C-222 into law. It entrenches the boundary lines from Cape Muzon to Cape Chacon, to the opening of the Portland Canal.

Let me outline the location of that boundary. The Alaskan Panhandle which comes down the north coast of British Columbia and ends just above the Queen Charlotte Islands where an area known as Dixon Entrance Lies. Prince Rupert lies in that immediate vicinity and there is extensive fishing in Dixon Entrance.

The history of the A-B line essentially begins in 1825 with a treaty that was struck between Russia and Great Britain. At that time, and well into the century, Britain produced our treaties for Canada. That was followed by another treaty in 1867, after what was probably the greatest land transaction in the history of the world when the United States purchased Alaska from Imperial Russia for $15 million in gold. Just as in 1825, the 1867 treaty included very specific references to 54-40 as being the southern terminus of the territory that was acquired from Imperial Russia.

There was some trouble in that area during the gold rush period in 1897 and 1898, up the Stikine, through various of the transboundary rivers and over the Chilcoot.

As well, President McKinley was assassinated in 1901 and was succeeded by President Teddy Roosevelt. He was a rather notorious and rowdy President, who did not like the trouble among the miners in the disputed area between Alaska, British Columbia and the Yukon. He threatened then Prime Minister Wilfrid Laurier with sending troops into the area north of Prince Rupert and up into the transboundary areas to quell this so-called uprising.

Not many who have studied history will forget the cry of "54-40" by the Americans back in 1884. That became a famous slogan of the United States that wanted to move the boundary from Oregon all the way up to join the southern terminus of Soviet territory at that time, 54-40 and further up so that the United States would effectively have been all of North America.

The events in 1903 were unfortunate in relation to the rest of the Alaskan Panhandle. However, it supports very strongly my Bill because the Hay-Herbert Treaty was brought forward. Teddy Roosevelt wanted to ensure that there were no Canadian MP's who did not understand how serious he was. He appointed his Secretary of War, E. Root, the Secretary of State, Henry Cabot Lodge and George Turner, the senior Republican senator from the State of Washington.

As I stated earlier, at that time Great Britain was responsible for making our treaties and therefore sent Lord Alberton from the House of Lords. We also had on our side the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Quebec and a lawyer from Toronto. That was the Canadian contingent, up against the Secretary of War, the Secretary of State and the senior Republican senator from the northwestern United States.

Unfortunately, Lord Alberton voted with the three Americans on six of the seven boundary questions and gave up about 10,000 square miles of Canada to the United States. This included all of the headwaters and the beautiful inlets up the north coast of British Columbia which were never part of the 1867 treaty or 1825 treaty. These were given to the United States, effectively closing off the northern half of British Columbia from access to ice-free ports, of which Stewart is the most northerly ice-free port on the West Coast of North America.

There was a four to two vote on the six questions of the Panhandle, but a unanimous vote on the A-B line, 54-40. It was unanimously ratified, placed into the Hay-Herbert Treaty, an international treaty, passed through all of its necessary legislative means in the United States, which entrenched the A-B line as the international boundary.

Finally, in 1909, six years after the Americans had taken charge of a big chunk of Canada, an Order in Council finally wove its way through the august chambers here when Cabinet met and said it should do something about the A-B line. By 1911, Canadians not only in British Columbia but right across the country were still enraged about the 1903 rip-off. The newspapers from 1903 to 1911 will show that Canadians continued to be angry, whether in Toronto, Moose Jaw, Prince Rupert or elsewhere. People everywhere felt very badly about how we were treated.

It is interesting how history collides with itself from time to time. At that time the Government of Canada had initiated free trade talks with the United States. It was the dispute over the A-B line that brought about a quick end to those talks. The people of Canada rejected the free trade talks with the United States in 1911.

For many years the A-B line disappeared into the mists of time until a conscious decision appears to have been taken in Washington by the State Department to start harassing Canadians, almost simultaneously with the kind of boundary harassment we saw on George's Bank and have now come to see on a more regular basis in the Beaufort in relation to the 141st meridian between Alaska and Yukon.

In June, in 1981, a vessel known as Sable Mist was boarded. This caused a great furor on the north coast of British Columbia and protests by fishermen who closed off the Port of Prince Rupert, ferry traffic movements and so on.

In July, 1981, a number of American vessels attempted to come to fish in Canadian waters south of 54-40. Those six fishing vessels were ordered back out of Dixon Entrance.

In May, 1984, the Secretary of the Interior of the United States offered 40 square miles of Canada off the Queen Charlotte Islands for sale. That did not attract too much attention for some days and, in fact, the Federal Register, Volume 49, No. 63, published March 30, 1984, offered this particular sale of a chunk of Canada by the U.S. Secretary of the Interior to various U.S. oil and gas companies.

I raised that matter in the House and the Minister promised and subsequently sent a note of protest to Washington. In the next publication of the Federal Register, the sale was withdrawn.

The Learmonth Bank, the area in the Dixon Entrance above which many anadromous and non-anadromous species tend to school, has long been of interest to both Canadian and American fishermen. It was in relation to the Learmonth Bank in 1984 that the Storus and Brooks Bay were boarded inside Canadian territory by the U.S. navy and coast guard. Again, notes were sent by Canada to Washington.

The issue became more involved when President Reagan and Secretary of State George Shultz became more interested in the A-B line. There were a number of reasons for this.

There was enormous fishing value, enormous gas and oil potential. Polymetallic sulphides have already been located on the ocean floor. There are military reasons as well. The Americans want to move various Trident submarine related activities into the southern Panhandle area. This has raised jurisdictional questions and so on.

There is a very serious test of Canada's will and our ability to stand together on an issue which exists even today.

It was just two years ago that George Shultz appointed Ed Derwinski as the U.S. negotiator for the A-B line. He is a 25-year member of Congress and someone we know through the Canada-U.S. group and other meetings. He is a very knowledgeable and respected member of the U.S. House.

Finally, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), under pressure from British Columbia fishermen, myself and others, wrote in August, 1986, to the Secretary of State, Mr. Shultz, saying no to the negotiations. That was a puzzling period of time. I think it is important that I quote from Hansard to show how woolly-minded the Secretary of State for External Affairs was on this issue. One can only wonder what kind of advice he was receiving from various bureaucrats and officials at the Department of External Affairs to have even considered entering into negotiations on the A-B line. It has always been Canada's boundary. Why would any government want to get involved in negotiations? If would be the same as if some bum walked in off the street into your home, Mr. Speaker, and said: "I would like to negotiate this house. Why do you not get out?" What was being proposed out of the Department of External Affairs was that someone could come in and say: "This house is actually mine. Let us negotiate a price. How about $50?" A preposterous situation began to evolve. On March 21, 1986, I was questioning the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the House about why he was having discussions with British Columbia about appointing a negotiator on the A-B line. I said the following, as reported, at page 11747 of Hansard:

> —the article in Maclean's is not an editorial. It quotes Canadian officials. I wonder if the Minister would explain to the House why he and the B.C. Government are discussing the movement of West Coast Canada-U.S. boundaries like the A-B line. Does not the axiom "if it isn't broken, don't fix it" hold in the case of Canada's sovereign boundaries?
> RIGHT HON. JOE CLARK (SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS): Mr. Speaker, it is often difficult to know if opinions put forward in Maclean's magazines are stories or opinions. Whatever they are, this one was false.
> With regard to why we are discussing with the Government of British Columbia whether or not it would be useful for us to discuss with the United States a negotiation to bring clarity to a situation about which there is now dispute, it is precisely because clarity is better than a lack of clarity. I made it very clear on several occasions that if it is not in Canada's interests to enter into those negotiations, we will not do so. If, once in those negotiations, it is not in Canada's interests to conclude an agreement, we will not conclude an agreement.

• (1730)

I think that stands as an all-time Canadian great of woolly-mindedness. If that is clarity of the Canadian position on the A-B line, it is an astonishing state of affairs. Nevertheless, I give the Minister full credit. He finally did write to George Shultz to say no to the negotiations after Mr. Derwinski had been pulling together various files and so on in relation to this matter.

I will not bore Members of the House with the enormous amount of legal writings, academic investigations and so on which have been done in relation to the A-B line. There is an abundance of evidence, including from American sea captains, mariners and so on, who all agree that 54-40 historically has always been Canada's international boundary with the State of Alaska and the United States of America.

What I am pleading about with the House today, Mr. Speaker, is to set aside whatever kind of orders various caucuses might be under in relation to this Bill and to think for a moment of how simple this Bill really is. What I am suggesting is something which previous Cabinets have gone part way with. In 1909 an Order in Council passed through Cabinet identifying 54-40 as our international boundary with the United States running from Cape Muzon to Cape Chacon to the end of the Portland Canal. However, what is happening is that there are funny things going on within the Department of External Affairs and between Washington and Ottawa in relation to a whole variety of things. I do not think any part of Canada be it marine, submarine, island or offshore, should, under any circumstances, be part of negotiations, whether in relation to free trade, hotel conventions or some other boundary area. I think it is of fundamental importance. This was entrenched in 1825, in 1867, in 1903, and substantiated many times since then.

All I am asking for in this Bill is to allow a vote to occur this evening to send it to committee. If Hon. Members have more questions, why not send it to committee? The Bill is fundamentally simple. It simply entrenches the boundary in statute as are other boundaries in this country.

I stood in this House and supported the Secretary of State for External Affairs following the voyage of the Polar Sea when he brought legislation forward to bring closing lines in the Arctic Archipelago. I congratulated him as a Canadian and as a Member of this House, as someone who recognized that the right thing in terms of sovereignty was being pursued by the Government on behalf of all Canadians. It is not a partisan issue when members of different Parties rise to support something that is right.

This Bill has been chosen by a legislative committee consisting of a majority of government Members. Very important questions were asked. I see some of the members of the committee here this evening. That Bill was chosen to be voted on. That is this Bill, Bill C-22. However, because of the prorogation of the House last year, it missed its opportunity to be voted on.

We have the opportunity now to either vote on the Bill or to send it to a committee where it can be amended or redrafted. If Members have questions, I have piles of information, legal, academic, you name it. I can answer, I am certain, or find the source for an answer to any question Hon. Members might have.

I plead with Members of the House to focus the debate this evening and direct it towards a vote to send the Bill to committee or to pass it into law. I think it is important for Canada and I think Canadians have waited far too long in this century and are the last to make absolutely certain, statutorily, that 54-40 is our international boundary with United States.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on this Bill put forward by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), Bill C-22. I know that several of my colleagues from British Columbia from this side of the House will also have the opportunity to speak on it today. It is the kind of Bill where it would be helpful if we could actually use maps, because I think it is a difficult thing for those hearing us perhaps to visualize what we are talking about with respect to this boundary. Lacking that possibility, I will try to explain in words some of the concerns I have about the Bill.

Although I laud the Hon. Member's intentions, I must say to him that I do not support either the technical wording of the Bill or his approach to the resolution of this particular boundary issue. As the Hon. Member has said, in purporting to recognize and declare that the Canada-Alaska land boundary is the boundary established in 1903, Bill C-22 merely states a fact that is disputed by no one in either Canada or in the United States. If the Bill did no more than this, I would still be obliged to criticize it as being redundant and unnecessary. That is because, by its very redundancy, it calls into question all of Canada's extensive boundaries with the United States. Why should we create uncertainty where none now exists?

It seems that Bill C-22 purports to deal with more than the boundary dividing the lands of Canada and Alaska. Clause 2 of the Bill, states:

> For greater certainty, the Canada-Alaska boundary includes the "A-B line" running from Cape Muzon to Cape Chacon to the mouth of the Portland Canal, and a line running headland to headland from Cape Muzon to Langara Island, . . .

That does not translate the intention into clear legislative terms.

Mr. Fulton: I rise on a point of order. I would just like to point out that there is no reference whatsoever to a headland to headland boundary from Cape Muzon to Langara Island. That was removed several years ago from a completely different Bill. I would hope the Member could perhaps address her remarks to Bill C-222, not Bill C-22. Bill C-222 is presently before the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not really a point of order. It is a point of clarification. The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) has the floor.

Mrs. Collins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I am quite familiar with Bill C-22. I am quite aware that this is Bill C-222. I am sure it will not provide a headache, hopefully, for the Hon. Member or anyone else in this House.

Indeed, there is no doubt that the A-B line was indeed established by the 1903 Alaska boundary award and that it divides the lands of Alaska and Canada. That is the view of both Canada and the United States. But the United States insists that it is the land boundary only in the sense of a line for the allocation of the land territories alone and not for the allocation of sea areas under the sovereignty or jurisdiction of either country. Canada, on the other hand, has always taken the position that the A-B line is not only a boundary dividing the land but a maritime boundary as well, and that the waters south of that line are Canadian, together with the sea bed under them.

Regrettably, Bill C-222 would seem to adopt something like the U.S. view of this matter instead of the Canadian view. The language of the Bill, given the history of this dispute, requires greater precision if it is to avoid being interpreted in that way.

I think that there are problems with the drafting of the Bill. One might say that that can be fixed up when and if it goes to committee, if they deal merely with technical areas. However, these problems are also symptomatic of different difficulties that could arise if we ignore the language of Bill C-222 and address its apparent intention instead.

Imagine for a moment that the Bill before us did enshrine in a clear statutory form the longstanding Canadian position with regard to the A-B line in Dixon Entrance. We would still have to ask ourselves whether such a Bill would truly achieve its objectives, or whether it might harm the very interests it seeks to protect. These objectives and interests would be to secure Canada's maritime sovereignty in the Dixon Entrance beyond all doubt of challenge. But could any Bill do this?

The answer is clear. No domestic law or other unilateral action can of itself resolve a boundary dispute with another sovereign state. International law and practice lay down a few basic guidelines for the settlement of maritime boundary disputes between neighbouring countries. I think, as my colleague will recall, these were well stated by the Chamber of the International Court of Justice in its 1984 decision in the Gulf of Maine case. I quote:

> No maritime delimitation between states with opposite or adjacent coasts may be effected unilaterally by one of those states. Such delimination must be sought and effected by means of an agreement, following negotiations conducted in good faith and with the genuine intention of achieving a positive result. Where, however, such agreement cannot be achieved, delimitation should be effected by recourse to a third party possessing the necessary competence.

Of course, it can be said that the A-B line in Dixon Entrance is itself the result of a third party settlement by the Alaska Boundary Tribunal. That, indeed, is Canada's position regarding the status of the A-B line as a maritime boundary. The United States, however, does not accept that position. Successive Canadian Governments have recognized that the only way forward in this matter is either by negotiation or by international adjudication. So far, negotiation has been the preferred route, although it has not yet brought about the result that we in Canada would like to see.

Any Bill enshrining the A-B line as a maritime boundary in Canadian law might well rule out the possibility of a negotiated settlement and virtually force Canada to refer the dispute to third party proceedings. Is that what the Hon. Member for Skeena wants? Is that what the House wants? International adjudication is a valuable last resort, but one to be entered into by design rather than by mere accident.

Hon. Members will be aware that discussions on the West Coast boundaries were suspended in 1979, pending the conclusion of the Gulf of Maine case. With that case behind us, the U.S. Secretary of State, George Shultz, suggested that special representatives be appointed to oversee discussions and possible negotiations on West Coast maritime boundaries.

Before responding to Mr. Shultz, the Secretary of State for External Affairs sought the views of the Government of British Columbia. He also heard from numerous groups and communities on the West Coast. Having carefully weighed their views and the attitude of the provincial Government, he concluded that now is not an opportune time for Canada to resume discussions with the United States on West Coast maritime boundary matters. In reaching this conclusion the Minister was conscious of the sensitivity of the issues involved, particularly with respect to Dixon Entrance, and the need to allow some breathing space to ensure the smooth implementation of the Canada-U.S.A. Pacific Salmon Treaty.

At the same time, however, the Secretary of State advised Mr. Shultz that he intends to keep the situation under review and to leave open the possibility of taking up his proposal for discussions on the boundary at some future time when circumstances may be more propitious.

Whether we negotiate now or later, or whether it is ultimately decided to refer the question to third party settlement, we must still ask ourselves whether any version of Bill C-222 might advance the Canadian position. I have already indicated that domestic legislation would not resolve the problem under international law. But could it have some effect on the United States? Let me ask the question another way.

How would Canada react if the U.S. Congress were to adopt a law of its own regarding the maritime boundary in Dixon Entrance? Such a law, we can be sure, would incorporate an equidistant line dividing Dixon Entrance equally between Canada and the United States. That, of course, is the U.S. position regarding the maritime boundary in Dixon Entrance. So far, the United States has only declared its position in a public notice in the U.S. Federal Register, and has done so on the express condition that such notice be without prejudice to any negotiations with Canada.

A law adopted by Congress in response to some variation on Bill C-222 might not include a condition of this kind, as Bill C-222 does not. No doubt Canada would protest a unilateral attempt by the United States, France, or Denmark, to settle a disputed boundary by domestic legislation. But what credibility would our protest carry if we ourselves had acted in the same way?

There is no way in which any version of Bill C-222 can help to resolve the dispute with the United States over the maritime boundary in Dixon Entrance. Any such legislation would only aggravate the dispute. It would induce a more forthcoming attitude by the United States. Indeed, it would virtually guarantee the opposite result and place us in a situation from which we could probably only extricate ourselves by international adjudication.

The Hon. Member for Skeena might well respond that Canada cannot be forced into third party proceedings against its will. Strictly speaking he would be right, since the United States and Canada are under no binding reciprocal obligation to refer their disputes to an adjudication. But if we reject negotiation and refuse adjudication, the result is an impasse, something like the situation we were in earlier today with the Prince Rupert grain situation. An impasse could lead to incidents. Incidents can lead all to easily to confrontation. Each side scrambles to stake out its claim at the expense of the other. I need hardly spell out the implication of such a development in the Dixon Entrance area.

Clearly, there must be a way to deal with this issue which is mutually satisfactory to both sides. To be sure, there have been incidents from time to time, but thanks to a policy of mutual restraint these have been isolated and have remained manageable.

Any version of Bill C-222 would put this delicate equilibrium at risk, with unpredictable implications for fishing patterns and offshore resource exploration in the disputed area. The impact on the halibut fishery could prejudice local interests. And what about the implications for the Pacific Salmon Treaty? Surely, the last thing we should contemplate at this stage is to say or do anything that might interfere with the successful implementation of the salmon treaty.

We have other outstanding maritime boundary questions to resolve with the United States. They include those seaward of Dixon Entrance, those seaward of Juan de Fuca Straits, in the Beaufort Sea, and both landward and seaward of the boundary fixed by the International Court of Justice in the Gulf of Maine area. In addition, we have boundaries to settle with Denmark in the Lincoln Sea and with France off the coasts of Newfoundland and St. Pierre and Miquelon.

I have only spoken of the possible implications of Bill C-222 for Dixon Entrance. I do not wish to address its possible implications for other areas in question in the limited time I have. Let me only say that I doubt whether they have been given adequate thought in the preparation of the Bill before us today.

We do not need legislation to protect Canada's position in Dixon Entrance. We do not need it to convince ourselves of the rightness of Canada's position there. We do not need it to convince the United States of our own convictions. Finally, we do not need it for the greater certainty that Bill C-222 promises but does not truly deliver.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to rise and to debate Bill C-222, the Bill put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). My hon. friend has been raising this issue both in the House of Commons and through Private Members' initiatives for some time. It is important that we recognize that at the moment we are speaking about the principle of the Bill. We are not debating the clause by clause details of the Bill. There will be ample opportunity in committee to do that, and there will be ample opportunity in committee to bring forth witnesses both in terms of international law, particularly witnesses who are expert in boundary disputes, and academics who have studied this particular matter and put it in an historical context.

Anyone who has examined the whole phenomenon of the 54-40 line in terms of the boundary between Alaska and Canada on our West Coast, would recognize that back in 1903 when the International Alaska Boundary Tribunal got together, the representatives of Canada and the United States, it was unanimously agreed that the so-called A-B line or the boundary of 54-40 was to be the southernmost limit of the Alaska panhandle, and clearly indicated that that would be the boundary between the two countries.

I am not even certain what the dispute is, in the sense that all this Private Member's Bill does is to agree to what the International Tribunal unanimously agreed to back in 1903, that yes, this is the boundary. Mr. Speaker might say, if it was agreed to in 1903 and this Bill simply confirms that, what is the discussion? The discussion is that now the United States has decided that it does not accept that particular ruling in this area of our West Coast.

I am concerned about the fact that our Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has not said, "That's it. There is no discussion. There is no need to negotiate. We agreed to this boundary, you agreed to this boundary, and that is it". In a sense we are wimping out here as a country. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has been sending that type of message to the United States when he stated that we are not prepared to negotiate now. That implies that perhaps we would be prepared to negotiate in the future. We should have sent a much stronger message to the United States and simply said that we are not prepared to discuss this now, in the future, or ever because the decision has been made and we are quite prepared to stand by the original decision.

If the United States is unprepared to accept that, if it in fact wants to deviate from this original decision and move that boundary more down into Canadian territory, that is their problem. We should not do anything to facilitate those negotiations or the American case in terms of achieving more territory that rightfully belongs to Canada.

It is obvious that the United States wants to do that for military purposes in terms of movement of submarines and other military activity along our West Coast. It is obvious because of the very important fishing grounds in that area. It is obvious because of the potential oil and gas reserves in that area.

Of course, as my hon. friend from Skeena reminded us, there are some valuable minerals on the floor of the ocean in that particular area that the United States would desire. For a whole set of reasons that is a very valuable piece of territory which presently belongs to Canada that the United States wants. It is now prepared to continue pressuring Canada until it obtains that boundary change. I do not see why we as a country do not say, "No, we are not interested. We have established the A-B line, we have established the boundary at 54-40, that is it".

As on so many other occasions, and I do not wish to list all the requests that the United States has made of Canada in the last number of years, virtually every single one we have agreed to. In other words, all the Americans have had to do is to ask, and we shall agree. This is simply another one.

I am afraid that our Secretary of State for External Affairs was not firm, steadfast, and definite in his response, because he certainly left a very clear implication that we were not negotiating at the moment, but in the future we can consider this matter.

There is an international court in place for this very matter. If the United States wants to challenge the original 1903 decision, if it wants to question the unanimous decision made by those individuals designated by Canada and the United States to determine this border, that is its problem. It has a right to take this to the international court. But for goodness' sakes, it ought not to be our role to facilitate that process and give any indication at all that we are prepared to give more of our territory to the United States, particular such valuable territory off the West Coast of Canada.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise to speak to Bill C-222 put forward by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) regarding second reading and reference to a legislative committee of an Act respecting the international boundary between Canada and the State of Alaska.

This is a subject that I have taken part in at the Canada-U.S. meetings when we meet annually. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, as has been alluded to, you have also been part of those discussions. Nevertheless, there is a debate that goes on between our two countries regarding the preciseness of this boundary. This afternoon I would like to lay out and to point out just what Canada's position has been down through these many years.

We have already heard that we should be enshrining in statutory form a long standing Canadian position with respect to the A-B line in Dixon Entrance. Unfortunately, it could be seen to support the U.S. position instead, as what has been put forward here this afternoon. Nevertheless, it may be worthwhile to outline briefly for the House the colourful history of Dixon Entrance. It is in this history that we find the origins both of the A-B line and of Canada's position with respect to the status of Dixon Entrance.

I realize that some of these points may have been alluded to, but by way of making the record as factually correct as we possibly can, I should repeat them in the chronological order in which they should be presented.

Today, when Canadians think of the boundary between Canada and the United States in Dixon Entrance, they think of the A-B line as set out in the Alaska Boundary Award of 1903. However, this award was preceded by over 75 years of disagreement and dispute over the position of the boundary between the territories of Great Britain and Russia, and later of the United States and Canada, in this area.

In 1821, the Tsar of Russia issued a decree reserving to Russian subjects the right to engage in commercial activities on the coast of North America north of latitude 51 degrees N.

In 1825, Russia and Great Britain concluded a treaty delimiting British and Russian possessions in the area. Articles III and IV of the treaty provided for a line commencing from the southernmost point of what is described in the treaty as Prince of Wales Island, lying in the parallel of latitude 54° 40' N. and ascending along Portland Channel. The treaty also provided that Prince of Wales Island should belong wholly to Russia.

In these treaty provisions we find the origins of today's A-B line. The post-1825 history of the relations of Russia and Great Britain, of the United States and Great Britain, and of the United States and Canada must, however, be examined closely in any consideration of the articles of the 1825 treaty that relate to the A-B line.

Between the 1825 treaty and 1867 when Russia ceded Alaska to the United States, there is only one recorded incident of relevance to the interpretation of the treaty. In 1834, the governor of Russia's American colonies issued an order to prevent foreign ships from trading with Indians in the straits and territories of Russia northward of latitude 54° 40' N.

The British protested this order after a Hudson's Bay Company ship, the Dryad, was prevented, contrary to the terms of the 1825 treaty, from sailing up the Stikine River to establish a post 10 marine leagues inland. The Russian Government subsequently repudiated the governor's order.

In 1867 Russia ceded Alaska to the United States. The treaty of cession defined the eastern geographical limits of Alaska in the same terms as those used in the Russian-British treaty of 1825. After 1867 trading activity in Alaska, northern British Columbia, and the Yukon increased continuously and rapidly. Since access to these parts of Canada was easier by sea than by river and mountain passes through Alaska, British and American interests were often in conflict. For the most part the issues were on the exact location of the boundary on the mainland between Canada and Alaska. There is apparently no record of any intergovernmental discussion of an issue involving the legal status of the sea north of the 1825 line.

With respect to the waters south of the 1825 line, an incident in 1897 illustrates the Canadian view. In that year, a Canadian fishery protection cruiser warned a United States fishing vessel that United States vessels were not permitted to fish anywhere in Hecate Strait or in any other territorial waters off the coast of British Columbia. Although this Canadian assertion of jurisdiction was protested by the United States, it constitutes early evidence of a Canadian claim to the waters of Hecate Strait and Dixon Entrance.

In the 1890s the growth of activity in the area made the need for a definitive settlement of the entire boundary between Canada and Alaska more pressing. The matter was discussed throughout the decade by the Canadian and British Governments on the one side and the United States Government on the other. In 1892 a convention was signed providing for a joint survey of the territory adjacent to the boundary, but the task was not successfully completed. By the beginning of this century, the views of the Governments concerned were irreconcilable, negotiation had failed to settle the dispute, and arbitration seemed the only solution. In 1903 Great Britain and the United States agreed to refer the interpretation of the 1825 treaty to arbitration.

The arbitration treaty of 1903 put three questions to the arbitral tribunal, the answers to which would give an authoritative interpretation of the relevant article of the 1825 treaty. Those questions were as follows: first, what is the intended point of commencement of the line; second, what channel is the Portland Channel; and, third, what course should the line take from the point of commencement to the entrance to Portland Channel?

The first and third of these questions are obviously the most relevant to the subject under discussion, and the third question is of particular interest.

The arbitral tribunal was able to reach quick agreement on the first question before it. The point of commencement was Cape Muzon on Dall Island and not Cape Chacon, the southernmost point on Prince of Wales Island.

The second question—which channel is Portland Channel—gave rise to one of the key controversies in the whole case. In deciding the issue, the tribunal opted partially for the British view, drawing the line north of Pearse and Wales Islands but then through Tongass Channel to run south of Sitklan and Kannaghunut Islands.

The third question was also the subject of some dispute. Great Britain argued that the line should be a straight line drawn from Cape Muzon to the Portland Channel provided that if that line intersected Prince of Wales Island, the whole island would, in accordance with the 1825 treaty, still belong to the United States. The United States contended that the line should run along latitude 54 degrees 40' N. In the end the tribunal accepted the British argument and drew a straight line from Cape Muzon to the entrance to Portland Channel. This is the line that has become known as the A-B Line.

The 1903 Alaska Boundary Award gave rise to a storm of protest in Canada. The complaints concerned the location of the boundary on the mainland, and particularly the division of the four islands at the entrance to Portland Channel. Much of the Canadian outrage was directed at the British jurist, Lord Alverstone, who was suspected of selling out to the Americans.

In spite of this hostile reaction, the line drawn by the tribunal, which established the contour of the Alaska panhandle, was accepted as definitive by both Canada and the United States so far as it concerned the land, but a dispute ultimately arose with respect to the waters.

Following the 1903 award, Canada continued to assert exclusive fishing rights in the waters of Hecate Strait and Dixon Entrance. I have already mentioned an incident in 1897 when Canada issued a warning to an American vessel found fishing in Hecate Strait. A similar incident occurred in 1905 and, as on the previous occasion, the United States protested the Canadian action.

In 1909 the State Department received further complaints from United States fishermen and, as a result, the Secretary of State wrote to the British Ambassador at Washington to request an official statement on the British position with respect to the waters of Hecate Strait. This led to the adoption in 1909 of an Order in Council asserting Canadian jurisdiction over both Hecate Strait and the waters of Dixon Entrance south of the A-B Line. This same position was maintained in another Order in Council in 1914.

In 1910, however, the United States officially asserted its position that the waters of Hecate Strait and Dixon Entrance beyond the three-mile limit were not British waters.

Since World War I, various incidents have occurred that tend to support Canada's position regarding the status of the A-B line. For example, in 1924 a United States cruiser seized a Canadian fishing vessel in Clarence Strait seven and one-half miles north of the A-B line and five miles from the nearest United States shore. The United States reportedly justified this seizure on the ground that the vessel was fishing well north of the international boundary. This incident would appear to suggest that the United States considered the A-B Line to be a boundary for both land and sea.

It is also worth noting that at least until 1921 the International Boundary Commissioners concerned with fixing the Alaska boundary did not treat the A-B line differently from other sections of the Alaska boundary. In particular, during the 1920s the American Commissioner tried to persuade his Canadian counterpart to agree to request their Governments to move the boundary line from Cape Muzon to the middle of the Dixon Entrance, because its position at Cape Muzon was anomalous, as it meant that there was no United States territorial sea off Cape Muzon.

In the 1940s there were unsuccessful attempts to settle the issue by negotiation. Efforts to negotiate a settlement were made again in the 1970s, but these efforts too did not succeed.

Throughout the years from the 1890s to the present Canada has maintained that the waters of Dixon Entrance are Canadian, and Canadian practice since that time has been consistent with that position. In this regard several more recent Canadian measures are particularly noteworthy. For example, in 1964, when the fishing activities of Russian and Japanese vessels off Canada's West Coast began to increase, the Canadian Government issued a warning for them to stay out of the Dixon Entrance and Hecate Strait. Both Governments heeded the warning and, apart from a few minor incursions, their fishing vessels have not entered these waters.

In addition, in 1971, under the authority of the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act, Canada delimited its exclusive fisheries jurisdiction within Dixon Entrance and Hecate Strait by means of the A-B line and a line drawn across the Dixon Entrance from Cape Muzon to Langara Island. This action by Canada was protested by the United States. Nevertheless, Canada's position on the status of Dixon Entrance and Hecate Strait has remained unchanged.

I opened my remarks today with a reference to the long and colourful history of the Dixon Entrance question. All Members of the House will agree that this brief account of that history and of state practice in the area generally supports the view that the A-B line is the boundary for both land and water inside Dixon Entrance. That is Canada's longstanding view, and it is this view that Canada can and must affirm in any negotiations with the United States.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I should first like to express appreciation to the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher) who has just done much to clarify the disputed area, if I can use that word. As was pointed out by the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins), it is a pity that we cannot have large maps here so that everyone can see the different parts of which we are speaking. However, I think the speech just delivered is the best one can do without a map.

I notice that several of our colleagues from British Columbia are participating in the debate tonight. It is nice to hear correct pronunciation of all these places, which is rather startling, as we who come from Esquimalt—Saanich and such places know. However, tonight there has been a welcome absence of those mistakes.

In discussing the question of the Dixon Entrance, it is important to remember that boundary delimitations are more than a matter of law and that they may have a significant impact on the allocation of resources, both living and non-living. In the brief time allowed to me I should like to focus on the natural resource potential of the area surrounding Dixon Entrance.

First it should be noted that the subsurface geology of Dixon Entrance has not been studied extensively, but certain inshore tests, seismic profiles, and extrapolations based on wells drilled in Hecate Strait and on Graham Island have offered some clues to assist us in estimating the prospects of oil and gas in and around the area in dispute. The results of these analyses indicate, for example, that the volcanic and sedimentary rocks under Dixon Entrance may be sufficiently thick and deep to permit the generation and entrapment of certain hydrocarbons. In general, though, the over-all oil and gas potential in the area is believed to be modest at best.

In the time I spent in Prince Rupert many years ago, it was entirely a fishing town. I see that the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) is shaking his head. I was there long before he was born and spent considerable time in Prince Rupert. Of course, some people say that in Prince Rupert a short time seems like a long time, but I enjoyed the hospitality of the people of Prince Rupert and of the civic Government there.

In those days, the city was practically overrun with Americans. There were more American troops there than there were Canadian plus the local inhabitants, but everyone got along very well. We certainly had sufficient fish resources, shrimps, crabs and the like to instil a lifelong love of seafood in anyone who spent any time in Prince Rupert.

The frequency of exploration activity in the area is modest. The first federal permits for oil and gas in Dixon Entrance were acquired in August of 1961 by Husky Oil, a Calgary and Edmonton corporation. Following a perfunctory seismic exploration program, these lands were subsequently surrendered. In December, 1964, Pan American, which is now Amoco Canada Petroleum, filed on permits North and West of Graham Island including the area of Dixon Entrance North to the A-B line.

At the same time, outside the Entrance, permits were taken up to an equidistant line, with a caveat placed on those submerged land areas impinging directly on the line. Seismic exploration and onshore geological surveys were also undertaken in the area in 1966. Successes, however, were few and far between, as evidenced by the fact that the permits in and outside the Entrance were surrendered in December, 1967.

South of Dixon Entrance in Hecate Strait and Queen Charlotte Sound and within the Queen Charlotte tertiary basin, Shell Canada acquired exploration permits for about 3.5 million hectares. The company conducted geological mapping and offshore seismic surveys and drilled exploratory wells in the period from 1967 to 1969, with generally negative results.

In 1970, Shell entered into a farm-out agreement with Chevron Canada Resources whereby Chevron would earn an interest in the Shell offshore area by conducting seismic surveys and by drilling two deep exploratory wells. Some of the wells I invest in are too deep, that is, t-o-o, so much a foot.

Currently, submerged lands held by the petroleum industry for exploration purposes include two blocks held by Petro-Canada Resources Ltd. in Dixon Entrance, a small block by Union Oil Company of Canada located immediately northeast of Graham Island and the northern end of a large block of Hecate Strait held by Shell Canada Resources and operated by Chevron Canada Resources under the terms of the farm-out agreement to which I have already referred.

The United States has also indicated some tentative interest in the oil and gas potential of the area. Indeed, in 1984, the United States took the first steps toward calling for bids for offshore leases that would have included an area claimed by Canada outside Dixon Entrance. This action prompted a Canadian protest. Subsequently, Canada was informed by the United States that the proposed offers of lease sales had been withdrawn due to lack of interest by the petroleum industry.

Notwithstanding Canadian holdings and some United States interest in the area, little new has been learned about the resources base in the area since the late 1960s. This is due in large part to a moratorium on exploration and oil tanker traffic in the area which was imposed in 1972 by our federal Government.

The 1972 moratorium was intended to prevent crude oil tankers travelling through Dixon Entrance, Hecate Strait and Queen Charlotte Sound en route from the Trans-Alaska pipeline terminal at Valdez, Alaska. Subsequently, a federal Order in Council indefinitely relieved existing offshore exploration permit holders from their obligations to conduct exploratory drilling in these waters and prohibited any further drilling.

In 1981 the Province of British Columbia declared the area an inland marine zone. At the same time, an indefinite moratorium was placed on offshore exploration in Johnston Strait South of Telegraph Cove and in the Straits of Georgia and Juan de Fuca. These respective moratoria are still in effect.

In June, 1984 the federal and British Columbia Ministers of the Environment appointed a five-member environmental assessment panel to conduct a public review of the environmental and related socio-economic effects of any renewed program of petroleum exploration off the West Coast of Canada North of Vancouver Island.

At that time, consideration was being given to lifting the moratorium so that exploration programs could be pursued. Accordingly, the West Coast offshore exploration environmental assessment panel was asked to develop recommendations on the terms and conditions under which petroleum exploration could proceed in a safe and environmentally responsible manner.

During the course of the review, the panel gathered information on the environmental and related socio-economic effects of the proposed offshore exploration program and held two series of public forums in November, 1984 and in the latter part of 1985.

Chevron Canada Resources and Petro-Canada were designated by the federal and provincial regulatory bodies as proponents of the offshore oil and gas exploration activity. As proponents, they were expected to develop information on environmental and socio-economic effects that might result from exploration activity in their area of interest and to explain and answer questions related to this information during the public hearings. In November 1984, Petro-Canada withdrew from the review process, explaining that it had other higher priorities.

During the course of the environmental assessment panel's review which is now completed, participants raised a variety of concerns, the most serious of which related to the biophysical and socio-economic impacts associated with the level of risk and the potential for a major oil well blowout. Other significant concerns and issues raised included the social and cultural impacts on the area's residents, the biophysical effects associated with seismic surveying and routine exploratory drilling and compensation programs for losses and damages which might result from a major oil well blowout.

After careful consideration, the panel made a number of recommendations including (a) that a two-year seismic survey program such as that proposed by Chevron might proceed—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, the Hon. Member's time has expired. It is 6.19. There is still a minute left.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, we have time to vote and I suggest we do that.

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, I think this is an important matter and deserves a full discussion, more than can be given it in the next minute or two available.

What I had in mind—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hour provided for consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

CHILDREN—TELEVISION DOCUMENTARY ON RUNAWAYS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, have you ever had the opportunity to visit the Eaton Centre—not the West Edmonton Mall—I am referring to the Eaton Centre in Toronto? I can see by the smile on your face that you have been there and you have visited many of the delightful shops and wonderful stores. I know you are aware that the Eaton Centre in Toronto is a people place. It is filled with fountains, trees, walkways, and hundreds and hundreds of people mill about. I bet you did not know that originally when the Eaton Centre was built people thought it would be a gigantic flop. It does a booming business, but it does a booming business in more than one way, that of runaway teenagers.

The police in Metropolitan Toronto and the social service agencies indicate that if there is one place in Metropolitan Toronto area that runaways tend to concentrate and head for it is the Eaton Centre. There at the Eaton Centre they are met by all sorts of weird people. They are met by drug users, drug pushers and pimps. These people offer runaway teenagers a helping hand. They befriend them. They offer them help and a place to stay. Sometimes that place to stay may only be an abandoned house or an abandoned hotel, but they give them the guiding hand. In addition to that they offer them other things, like drugs. Pretty soon after they have taken the opportunity of utilizing all the things being offered by these "wonderful" people, they are into all sorts of things themselves. They are into drugs, drug trafficking, breaking and entering, muggings, street soliciting and prostitution.

There have been a number of cases of individuals of this sort reported in our own press in Toronto, one of them the Kristy McFarlane situation, a 17-year old girl who was found dead of a heroin overdose in a stairwell of a hotel. Another case which has been reported very recently and extensively in the press is that of Kelly Anne Mombourquette, a 14-year old runaway who lived in stairwells, walked the streets and recently, at the preliminary hearing of three people charged with her murder, there was a report that she had died a very, very violent death.

We would like to think these are very isolated cases, but they are not. There are many other cases of runaway teenagers. There have been cases that I am aware of in my own constituency and I suspect there are cases of which you are aware as well. You and I, Mr. Speaker, I, anyway, and I am sure, the Parliamentary Secretary saw the television documentary program back in September entitled Runaways. That program indicated quite clearly that this is not a phenomenon unique to Metropolitan Toronto. It is something that occurs in all parts of Canada, whether it be Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Alberta or British Columbia. Runaways was a shocking program to me in many aspects, but particularly the last scenes. You will recall in the last scene where you and I, the viewers, came face to face with a teenage runaway who was engaged in the process of taking a syringe and shooting up with heroin or with some other drug, sitting there talking to us just a few feet in front of us on our television screens. If nothing else shocked us, that certainly did. It certainly shocked me.

What can we do as a Government and a country to help runaways and their families like this? The Government has already taken a number of initiatives one of which is a pilot program to deal with runaway victims of child abuse. The Government recently announced a drug program which involves a health aspect and more criminal legislation to seize the profits and proceeds from this sort of crime. Of course there is tighter enforcement. Prostitution is another aspect of the problem. We have had new legislation passed within the last few months dealing with street solicitation and prostitution. Then there is child pornography, and before the House right now is Bill C-54 which deals in an important way with that dreadful problem. Missing children is another aspect, and again recently the Government has undertaken a program to deal with missing children.

You and I and the Parliamentary Secretary, Mr. Speaker, know very well that there are other things we should be doing, many other things. Things have been suggested such as the use of street workers, and the Children's Aid in Metropolitan Toronto is doing that sort of a thing now. The suggestion has been made of support groups to support the parents and the teenagers to try to get them back together again. The mother of Kristy McFarlane suggested that we need more protection for witnesses to testify against the people who lure the runaways into these illegal activities. We need more shelters for runaway teenagers. We need more programs on child abuse. Quite frankly, we need something to enable the police to deal with the situation, not just when teenagers who have run away are considered to be at substantial risk.

There are many things that we should be doing, and it only takes political will on the part of the Government. Tonight I expect the Parliamentary Secretary to stand up in his place and tell us that the Government has that firm political will. I hope he will spell out in detail specific steps which the Government intends to take to deal with this dreadful problem in Canadian society, the problem of runaway teenagers on our streets.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, on September 10, 1987, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) asked a question on the subject of runaway youth and the CBC television special Runaways, the problem of street children and youth. I wish to take a few minutes to tell Members about some of our Government's initiatives directed at the problem of runaways and to place these initiatives within the context of concerted action on the broader matter of family violence.

The television special vividly introduced many of us to a problem which is representative of a set of related problems experienced by many Canadian families. These include child sexual abuse, spousal assault, drug abuse, child prostitution and pornography and abducted children. Together these problems challenge the response capacities of our social service, health, police and court systems. This Government is committed to addressing these problems and has been deliberate in formulating action.

Bill C-15 on child sexual abuse became law on January 1, 1988, and Bill C-54 on pornography was introduced on May 4, 1987. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police have established a national missing children's registry. The Department of Justice has collaborated with provinces in establishing a tracing service. Within their various mandates, we have mobilized the Departments of Justice, National Health and Welfare and Indian Affairs and Northern Development; the Ministries of the Solicitor General, the Secretary of State and the Status of Women and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to plan collaboratively comprehensive action on the prevention of family violence. The breadth of involvement of government Departments serves to demonstrate the various and many factors which must be considered in responding to these pervasive problems.

While the federal Government may take limited, unilateral action on family violence, it must be recognized that provincial and territorial Governments constitutionally provide front-line services. As well the voluntary sector has long been a source of family support.

Our success in preventing and treating these problems will only result through collaboration with provinces, territories and voluntary groups. In recognition of this fact, a special adviser on child sexual abuse was appointed on August 25, 1987, and has initiated consultations aimed at a national strategy on this problem. Further, officials of National Health and Welfare and other Departments are planning to begin consultations with provincial and territorial Governments on all aspects of family violence.

The problems introduced by the TV program Runaways are complex in their origins and in their solutions. Regardless, all in this House would agree that we must give our every effort to their treatment and prevention. I believe that these few comments indicate to Members that we are making that effort.

TRADE—FREE TRADE—ELIMINATION OF CONTROL BY CANADIANS OVER AMERICAN INVESTMENT—REQUEST FOR DETAILS/CONTROL OVER AMERICAN INVESTMENT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, this adjournment debate relates to an exchange I had with the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) on October 7. I was dissatisfied with the response I received from her at that time. My question was asked in an attempt to point out to the Hon. Minister the fact that more than 99 per cent of the new jobs that had been created in Canada between 1978 and 1985 had in fact come from Canadian controlled companies, that American-controlled companies had made next to no contribution to job creation in this country and yet Canada was abandoning any effective means of trying to get better performance from foreign-owned companies, particularly American, because of the trade agreement which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) signed with the President.

I am always impressed by the ability of the Minister for International Trade to believe anything she likes so long as she tries hard enough. That is certainly the case in this particular instance. I suggested that under the agreement Canadians would not be allowed to say anything at all about American investments. She said that she did not understand the NDP's what she called "obsession" with American firms. She said:

> The American firms that we are talking about will still be subject to monitoring by Investment Canada.

I have taken the trouble to look at the agreement, Mr. Speaker. As you well know, the current limit on Investment Canada reviews is of takeovers and investment of over $5 million. According to the agreement, that will be raised to $25 million in respect to American firms taking over Canadian ones after 1989, to $50 million after 1990, to $100 million in 1991, and to $150 million in 1992 and thereafter. In other words, there will be a 30-fold increase. That effectively means that almost all takeovers by American firms of Canadian firms will not be subject to review. Therefore, the Minister's statement that Investment Canada will continue to subject these American firms to monitoring is just plainly not true.

The Minister said:

> We insist that we have sold out nothing.

However, if you look at the elements of the agreement with respect to investment, they indicate that the parties are not to impose export, local content, local sourcing, or import substitution requirements on each other's investors. Effectively the Government of Canada, acting for the people of Canada, will no longer have the ability to try to insist that foreign-controlled companies coming from the United States which are active in Canada act on behalf of Canada or to implement a Canadian industrial strategy. The Minister said that we have given away nothing. In fact, we have given away our power to have an industrial strategy insofar as it affects foreign-controlled companies with parent companies in the United States.

The Minister then said:

> We have protected our right to invest in America.

That was never in question, Mr. Speaker. The statement by the United States that they will give national treatment to Canadian firms investing in the United States is all very well, but there have never been particular problems at that level. When Dominion Textile recently tried to take over Burlington Industries, we saw that there are problems at the state and local levels in the United States. National treatment does not get you freedom from state and local interference in Canadian takeovers or investment in the United States.

It is ironical that the Americans, who have such a large control of their own economy, jump up and scream when Canadian firms go from 5 per cent to 7 per cent control of a particular industry, whereas we have tolerated 50 per cent or more control in many of our industries.

The Minister then said that the Government welcomes foreign investment because foreign investment creates jobs. She rejects utterly the evidence from Statistics Canada which I sought to cite in the House of Commons which is absolutely compelling. That evidence indicates that over the course of time from 1978 to 1985 Canadian-controlled companies created 876,400 new jobs while American controlled companies created only 1,500 new jobs on a net basis. Yet in the same period the share of total corporate profits by American companies rose from 31 per cent of the total to 43 per cent of the total. American controlled companies saw their profits double to $17 billion. It is particularly telling to note that for every $1 billion in profits, Canadian companies created 5,700 jobs. For every $1 billion in profits, American controlled companies created 17 jobs and no more.

• (1835)

The Minister has no understanding about the degree to which Canada is being shortchanged by foreign investment and foreign-controlled companies in this country. There has been a buying spree by American companies in Canada, which has been documented by Investment Canada and which affected firms with 100,000 employees in 1986-87. There is no indication that we will be able to have any condition at all to make sure those companies act on behalf of Canadians, to protect Canadian jobs, do research and development here in Canada, buy from Canadian sources, and develop unique Canadian inventions in Canada. None of that will be required. Furthermore, we have the evidence that these companies are not creating jobs.

I stated during Question Period on October 7 that the Government was giving up our right to protect Canadian jobs. I cited the situation at Firestone.

The Minister said my allegations were absolutely false and without foundation and did not deserve a further answer. Fortunately, the rules of the House allow me to seek a further answer and I call on the Minister to support her spurious allegations which are totally in contradiction with the facts. The facts are that Canadian companies have been creating the jobs in Canada in the last seven or eight years and American-controlled companies are taking the profits but not creating the jobs. Yet the Government wants Canada to enter into a free trade agreement that will abandon any means by which our Government and Canadians asking the Government to act for them can ensure that there is a requirement of good corporate performance and citizenship by American companies which are operating and moving into Canada. I call on the Minister or her Parliamentary Secretary to refute my case.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Council of Canadians obtained figures from Statistics Canada on employment levels, indicating a difference between the number of jobs created by Canadian firms and firms under foreign control between 1978 and 1985.

We can draw three conclusions from this information. First, there is a very close correlation between employment levels and business size. Everybody knows that small businesses are responsible for most of the increase in employment levels in Canada.

Second, over the period in question employment dropped in manufacturing and increased in the service sector, whether firms were Canadian or foreign-owned.

Third and last, the information does not indicate that foreign investment is harmful to the economy or that foreign-controlled companies are less likely to create jobs.

Mr. Cassidy: That sounds too good to be true!

Mr. Hudon: I suggest the Hon. Member take a deep breath to get some oxygen to his brain.

A careful analysis of the Statistics Canada figures would also have considered the investment policy of the Government at the time. Remember, we are talking about the period between 1978 and 1985. During that time, foreign investment in Canada was discouraged with policies like the National Energy Program and the Foreign Investment Review Act. In fact, between 1978 and 1985, the number of foreign-controlled firms dropped from 3,838 to 3,179. Since there were fewer large firms that were foreign-controlled, it is not surprising that large companies contributed less to raising employment levels then small companies.

New foreign investment will be crucial to economic growth, innovation and trade within a free-trade zone. Consequently, within the framework of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, both countries have developed a set of principles that will help increase transborder investment flow. Canada has retained the right to monitor significant takeovers by U.S. investors. The minimum review level for direct takeovers will be raised to $150 million in four years, in other words by 1992. By that time, about two-thirds of all non-financial assets in Canada will still be subject to review.

Mr. Speaker, monitoring of indirect takeovers, involving the transfer of control of a foreign-controlled business to another business will be gradually phased out over the same period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.41 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[English]

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

IMPLEMENTATION OF PROVISIONS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, last June 30, on the last sitting day of the session, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) got the co-operation of the Opposition to pass amendments to and extend the life of the Farm Improvement Loans Act. This was done on an urgent priority basis to help tens of thousands of farmers get lower interest rates on their bank loans. The latest information is that over 50,000 farmers are insolvent and in serious financial difficulty. This legislation could have helped them in consolidating and refinancing debts on a wide range of agricultural costs.

What has the Minister of Agriculture done to proclaim and implement the legislation, Bill C-78, since he asked for our help on an urgent basis last June? Exactly nothing! This is the same contemptuous attitude he has displayed toward the farm debt crisis since 1984. Seven months after we rushed this legislation through there has still been no action. I call on the Minister to take action and implement this legislation immediately.

HOUSING

SITUATION IN TORONTO—AVAILABILITY OF BUILDING SITES

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, one reason housing prices and apartment rents in Metropolitan Toronto have sky-rocketed is because population growth has exceeded the apparent supply of land available for residential construction. However, this shortage is more apparent than real. There is an almost hidden supply of land which could be made available for housing and, ironically, it belongs to three levels of government: municipal, provincial, and federal.

I have in mind land around the head office of none other than the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the Armed Forces Base at Downsview, land devoted to the Scarborough Expressway which apparently will not be constructed, and provincially owned land around Pickering expropriated years ago for abortive airport construction.

If we increase the supply of land we can reduce the cost of housing. Surely all Governments concerned should want to initiate such an action to meet this basic human need. I therefore urge that an inventory of government land in Metro be taken and that representatives of all three levels of government confer on the most effective way of distributing it.

TRADE

OMISSION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA REPRESENTATIVE FROM FEDERAL ADVISORY PANEL

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, Premier Vander Zalm is angry because the Conservatives did not include a British Columbia representative on a federal advisory panel on the effects of the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. This is a tragic oversight because many British Columbia workers and industries will be hurt by this deal. We should have had someone on the council who would speak up for our interests.

However, instead of simply blaming the Conservatives Mr. Vander Zalm should take a good part of the blame himself. He was too quick to jump on the free trade band wagon without looking at the disastrous consequences on such industries as fish processing, plywood production, and wine-making. Mr. Vander Zalm is at fault because, instead of looking after British Columbia's interests, he trusted the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), a man who has shown all Canadians that he cannot be trusted.

HISTORIC EVENTS

ANNIVERSARY OF PROCLAMATION OF UKRAINIAN INDEPENDENCE

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, this Friday marks the seventieth anniversary of the proclamation of Ukrainian independence. In 1918, following the fall of the Tsarist Empire, the Ukrainian Parliament proclaimed an Independent National Democratic Republic, and based that democracy on the revered freedoms of speech, press, religion, assembly, association, and human rights.

It was a short-lived democracy as four years later a Russian communist regime conquered the independent state. But the spirit of that freedom has lived on in every Canadian of Ukrainian descent.

1988 also marks the millennium of the introduction of Christianity to Ukraine. It was King Volodymyr, later St. Volodymyr, who, 1,000 years ago, converted his people after learning of the splendid services being offered by the Church of St. Sophia in Istanbul. Upon receiving baptism from the Patriarch of that city he began building the first of Kiev's great churches, the Church of the Tithe.

1988 is an important year for Ukrainians all over the world—the millennium of the introduction of Christianity and the seventieth anniversary of the proclamation of an independent Ukraine.

ACID RAIN

URGENT NEED FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I think the people of Quebec have every reason to blame Conservative Members, and I am referring particularly to the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine), the Hon. Member for Sorel and the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers), for their failure to act and for letting the Government close the shipyards.

And this morning—and I must say I support the representations made by my colleague and our environment critic, the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia)—we heard that the UPA, the Quebec farmers' association, is organizing a conference to discuss acid rain.

This will involve participation by scientists from various countries as well as participation by the provincial Government. And now, it seems the federal Government has refused outright to provide any financial or technical assistance.

I urge Conservative Members from Quebec City and the Hon. Member for Lévis to wake up and put pressure on the Government to defend the interests of Quebecers at this conference and to provide funding to help farmers cope with environmental problems.

REFUGEES

PLIGHT OF PALESTINIANS

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland—Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, they live under occupation, they have no recognized homeland, they have no passport, no freedom of movement, no vote, and little hope. They live on the most crowded piece of land on this earth. They are literal wards of the United Nations. They are the homeless Palestinian refugees.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the name "Palestinian" has become synonymous with terrorist and terrorism. This belies the tens of thousands of moderates; men, women, and children, who seek what we enjoy—peace, security, and freedom.

The children born into desolation, growing up in despair, have turned in pitiful frustration to battling a modern army with sticks and stones. Now we hear that food and clothing donated by United Nations relief agencies, Israeli Arabs and Jews, have been blocked from entering the relief centres.

Enough is enough, Mr. Speaker. It is time for this House to express its outrage and indignation.

TRADE

RECYCLING OF GOVERNMENT INFORMATION PAMPHLETS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, news that the lavish written praise of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) efforts in securing a free trade agreement is being recycled and used as toilet paper struck me as being appropriate. Although there was little demand for the original packaging, I am sure the recycled product will not go to waste.

• (1410)

When the Government promised the free trade agreement would bring "jobs, jobs, jobs", an unsuspecting public did not realize that the jobs would be in the bathrooms of the nation.

Many Canadians have suggested that they would tear up this free trade agreement. Perhaps, instead, we should follow the Government's example and turn it into toilet paper. The agreement itself would surely be of the two-ply variety, and useful in cleaning up the propaganda that we have been hearing from the government benches.

Meanwhile we are told that the Government is getting set to produce yet another three million pamphlets that it hopes will be attractive to Canadians. Millions of taxpayers' dollars have already been wasted. I say, "Stop the presses". It is time the Government realized that all the glossy pamphlets in the world will not convince Canadians that the Prime Minister has secured a fair deal for Canada.

HOUSING

SITUATION IN TORONTO—GRANT OF LAND MADE BY CARDINAL CARTER

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, in his New Year's message, Cardinal Carter, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Toronto, said: "In our city there are many for whom there is no place. As 1987, the International Year of the Homeless comes to a close, our work has just begun".

At the same time Cardinal Carter and the Roman Catholic Church put their money where their mouth is by giving a valuable parcel of downtown Toronto land to Street Haven, a group that provides housing for needy women.

Now that all of the conferences and studies sponsored by CMHC in connection with the International Year of the Homeless have been completed, hopefully the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation will provide the same leadership demonstrated so well by Cardinal Carter.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND FIXED LINK WITH MAINLAND—CALL FOR ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, following the referendum on a fixed link for Prince Edward Island to the mainland, Premier Joe Ghiz has requested an immediate full scale environmental impact study of the options under consideration. However, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) called this request "the kiss of death" because it would delay the project by two years and cost several million dollars.

The Minister's credibility as the environmental conscience of the Government is badly damaged. His desire to make political hay in his home province clouds his judgment and is bad news.

Canadians are shocked. I urge the House to support Premier Ghiz in his call for a full environmental assessment. The Federal Environmental Assessment and Review Office supports Premier Ghiz and so do, I am sure, most Islanders. The environmental impact assessment is and must be given first priority in the fixed link project. This is the only sensible way to proceed, and the Minister of the Environment should be ashamed.

MINES AND MINING

VAL-D'OR, QUÉBEC—IMPORTANCE OF FLOW-THROUGH SHARES

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on December 20 last year in Val d'Or, 800 people demonstrated to show their full support for flow-through shares financing of the mining exploration, after the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tabled his tax reform proposals.

Thanks to the support of Minister Savoie, the Government of Quebec has made a two-year commitment to a rate of 133 1/3 per cent.

Mayor Pelletier of Val d'Or said that just because people in the Abitibi area were unemployed, that did not make them outcasts.

Abitibi-Témiscamingue has benefited enormously from this plan, which has caused the unemployment rate to drop from 24.8 per cent in 1984 to 6.3 per cent today. What is at stake is the federal Government's commitment to a rate of 133 1/3 per cent for 1988-89. In 1987 more than $500 million was injected in mining exploration in Quebec.

So far, only Mr. Savoie, the Quebec Minister, has defended the flow-through shares plan in Canada, while our neighbour in Ontario, the provincial Minister of Mines (Mr. Conway), has failed to take any action at all.

Today, prospectors in Quebec and across Canada are in great difficulty following the tabling of the tax reform proposals and the recent stock market crash.

Mr. Speaker, I intend to continue my fight to get the Minister of Finance to revise his position.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to a report released yesterday by the Standing Committee on the Environment and Forestry. It is a report on high level radioactive waste in Canada, entitled "The Eleventh Hour".

This report is one of the results of parliamentary reform. This was a subject that the committee chose to study itself and one which no Government in the past was ever willing to refer to a committee. It makes many good recommendations, many of which I have been promoting myself in the House over the years. That is why it is a rather good day for me and others who want more attention to be paid to the whole question of nuclear energy in Canada.

In particular I want to call the attention of the House and Canadians to recommendations concerning moving more control over nuclear issues away from the Department of Energy Mines and Resources and toward the Department of the Environment where those issues properly belong.

I also call attention to the final recommendation which states that a moratorium on the construction of nuclear power plants in Canada should be imposed until the people of Canada have agreed on an acceptable solution for the disposal of high-level radioactive waste.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

IMMIGRATION

ADMITTANCE OF CONVICTED TERRORIST—WHEREABOUTS OF INDIVIDUAL

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question pertains to the case of the convicted terrorist who was granted landed immigrant status by the Government. I address my concern to the Right Hon. Prime Minister, who, I believe, must begin to respond to what is now clearly a national concern.

We have the spectacle of a man who received immigrant status despite being sentenced to 17 years for blowing up an aircraft and killing a person, who then walks past our immigration officials at Toronto International Airport despite an alert advance warning. He is then permitted to settle in the community of Brantford for a full year—

Mr. Hawkes: Question.

Mr. Marchi: —without a comprehensive response by this Government. We now have reports in the press today that indicate this individual has fled that community and gone underground.

Given that the Minister of State for Immigration yesterday in this House substantiated that the Government knew the whereabouts of this individual, can the Prime Minister reassure the House and Canadians that the Government knows the precise whereabouts of this individual as of today? If it does, why has the Government failed to apprehend the individual in order to secure his physical presence at any inquiry and for the protection of Canadians who are growing increasingly concerned about this man's presence in our country?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the next step in the process for deportation has been taken. Legal proceedings have been initiated. A deportation hearing has been set for next Monday.

NOTICE OF DEPORTATION HEARING

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has avoided the first part of my question.

Mr. Andre: There was no question. That was a speech.

Mr. Marchi: I return to the Minister of State for Immigration. The Minister has confirmed that a deportation inquiry has been scheduled. Has the notice been served without knowing the whereabouts of this individual as of today? Or does the Government know precisely the whereabouts of this individual in Canada at this moment?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member and all Members of this House, and the people of Canada, that our surveillance is continuing. Our surveillance is there, it is continuing, and in light of the fact that proceedings have now been commenced and a hearing set for Monday, I feel any further comments by the Solicitor General at this time would be inappropriate.

LOCATION OF INDIVIDUAL IN QUESTION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I return now to the Solicitor General. Here is a Minister and a Government that established a hearing, established a date, but they are not going to have any clients, because it is one thing to say you are pursuing and surveilling the individual, but Canadians also know that you missed him in Spain, you missed him at the Toronto Airport, and you had to take days to track him down in Brantford. I am asking the Minister very clearly, does the Government at this present moment know the precise whereabouts of this individual? If it does not have the precise whereabouts, can it at least have the integrity and courage to come forward and say so and to tell Canadians what it is going to do about it?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that shortly before I entered the House, at approximately five minutes to 2 p.m., I was informed of his whereabouts, where he is. I knew at that time, and we are continuing our surveillance.

[Translation]

QUERY WHETHER DEPORTATION ORDER SERVED ON MR. MOHAMMAD

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Immigration). Earlier, the Minister was rather vague in his statement about deportation proceedings. I would like to ask the Minister more specifically: Has the individual concerned, has Mr. Mohammad been issued a deportation order personally, yes or no?

• (1420)

[English]

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated clearly that the legal proceedings have been initiated. The man is here illegally as a convicted terrorist. Our primary objective is to get this man out of the country. He either leaves because of the threat of deportation or because of a deportation order issued under due process.

[Translation]

QUERY HOW TERRORIST MANAGED TO ESCAPE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is still being very vague. He tells us that legal proceedings have been initiated. We understand what that means. However, he refuses to tell us outright whether a deportation order has been issued to this individual personally. The question in everyone's mind is, of course: How could a terrorist and convincted criminal disappear under the very noses of the Government authorities who were supposed to be watching him?

[English]

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, any further remarks would be inappropriate. We are doing everything we need to do to make sure that within due process we are carrying out our wishes, which are to resolve this issue as quickly as possible.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED REFUSAL BY GOVERNMENT OF ISRAEL TO ALLOW DELIVERY OF FOOD TO PALESTINIAN REFUGEES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last night we all saw on television how the Israeli government was preventing the delivery of food to Palestinian refugees. Has the Canadian Government informed the Israeli government that this action is totally unacceptable?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I share the views of the Leader of the New Democratic Party on the food issue. This kind of action is unacceptable.

[English]

Food should not be used as a weapon. We have reports from the United Nations that, while starvation is not occurring in those camps, serious hunger is. We hope that all parties will agree that food not be used as a weapon in this circumstance or in others.

POSITION OF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I think that all Canadians will appreciate the answer that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has just given in the House. In addition to expressing that opinion here in the House of Commons, has the Government of Canada expressed that opinion directly in the form of a protest to the Government of Israel?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, the Hon. Member did pose that question earlier and I did not respond to it. We have not delivered that message in the form of a protest to the Government of Israel. The reason for that is that we are holding very active discussions with parties in the Middle East with regard to this situation to try to see if there are ways in which we might contribute to some kind of solution.

I do not want to be misinterpreted as suggesting that a protest may not ensue. I am simply describing a process in which Canada is trying to make its views known to all parties in a way that is as effective as possible. Naturally, I am quite prepared on such an issue of grave importance to offer to the Hon. Member and to others in the House any kind of briefings that they might find helpful as steps to leading Canada to be able to contribute to a resolution of a situation that is rapidly becoming more dangerous and that is involving actions that are becoming less acceptable.

• (1425)

PROPOSAL TO HOLD INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, again I express the appreciation of the members of my Party, and I am sure of the people of Canada, for the sentiments expressed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. All Canadians, and people throughout the world, including a great many Israelis, obviously, are disgusted by the increasing amount of violence used by the Government of Israel, and I think we should make that very clear, as a people directly.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: On the same constructive approach that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has taken on this, as the Minister knows, the Foreign Minister of Israel, Mr. Shimon Peres, has made a very specific proposal for an international conference as a useful process for resolving the ongoing problems in this region, a proposal which regrettably has been rejected by the Prime Minister of Israel.

I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he will give public endorsation of this important means of resolving an incredibly unacceptable situation?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We want the violence to end. We want the disregard for the United Nations resolutions to end. We think that the situation is serious and holds the prospect of becoming more serious.

With regard to an international peace conference, it has been our view, and expressed for some time, that a conference of that type acceptable to the parties, which means the Government of Israel, among others, is far and away the preferred course for us to follow. We are looking for ways in which we can encourage all parties who must agree to that process to prefer that type of approach, through conference, to the instability and the violence that are unfortunately spreading in the Middle East.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND FIXED LINK WITH MAINLAND—REQUEST THAT ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT BE MADE

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment, and it has to do with a press release. The people of Prince Edward Island, and indeed all Canadians, were annoyed to witness the spectacle of the Minister of the Environment suggesting that a full environmental assessment of the proposed fixed link to P.E.I. may well have given the project the "kiss of death".

As an Islander who voted "yes" the other day in the plebiscite, and I believe I speak for most Islanders, we did not vote "yes" for a proposed link that could have any environmental effect on the Northumberland Strait, and indeed on the farmers and fishermen of Prince Edward Island.

I wish to ask the Minister today is he prepared to give this House and all Islanders the commitment that a full and comprehensive environmental assessment will be carried out before any proposal for a fixed link, in any form, is considered by the Government of Canada.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to a "press release". I presume he meant a press report.

There is no news release from me or from my Department indicating that the federal Government will not apply the most rigorous standards of environmental inquiry to this project. It will be subject to the same rigors of environmental inquiry as any other federal project. No discrimination will be brought to bear on this one in favour of the fixed link for Prince Edward Island merely because that fixed link happens to relate to the province from which the Minister comes.

I give that commitment to him and, through him, to anyone who is interested in the subject.

PROTECTION OF NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT FISHERY

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to follow that up. It is a release or a story in The Globe and Mail.

Mr. Gormley: Unimpeachably true.

Mr. Henderson: I am sure that it is unimpeachably true.

I want to be sure of what the Minister is saying here, all Islanders want to be sure, and indeed all Canadians want to be sure because the protection of our environment has to come first and foremost.

The fishery in the Northumberland Strait needs to be protected. We want a full and comprehensive environmental study done immediately—not to delay the project for any great length of time—but the Minister is quoted as saying that, if we do not go ahead with it now, and we have a full environmental impact study or inquiry, it will delay the project until 1992.

There should be a one-year delay to ensure that Canadians and Prince Edward Islanders are guaranteed that there are no adverse effects to our environment, I ask the Minister today, and I ask the Government today, to get on with a full environmental impact study in order that we can get that link across there and we can all be assured that the fishermen, the farmers, and the people of Prince Edward Island are protected.

• (1430)

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants a highly selective gathering of half-truths, I commend to him the article in The Globe and Mail this morning on the front page. If he wants the full truth, I refer him to an article on the front page of the Charlottetown Guardian, another great national paper, which quotes me at length as saying that there should be no doubt about this Minister's intention to follow the full federal environmental assessment and review process.

It was one of the conditions which the Premier of Prince Edward Island identified among nine or so others. The Minister of Public Works has given his commitment, as I have, that those conditions will be met. I reconfirm our commitment now. The federal environmental assessment and review process will be followed to the letter in this project as in every other relevant project.

IMMIGRATION

ADMITTANCE OF CONVICTED TERRORIST—ARREST QUERY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Immigration. The Minister has heard the Solicitor General tell this House that Mr. Mohammad entered this country last February fraudulently, in violation of Section 104 of the Immigration Act which authorizes the Government then to deport him, and further that the officials interviewed him on December 9.

My question to the Minister is this. Why did he not direct the officials to arrest Mr. Mohammad on December 9 according to law and hold him for an inquiry under the Immigration Act to bring about his deportation according to law?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, we wanted to bring forward a strong case for deportation by having strong documentative evidence. We did that. When we met the candidate or the immigrant in the month of December, it was to advise him in no uncertain terms that we would be advancing with deportation proceedings.

The process is working very, very well, and I do not think that it would be helpful to interfere with that process today.

REQUEST THAT INDIVIDUAL BE ARRESTED

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, this Government, as the Minister well knows, has detained hundreds of immigrants, hundreds of refugee claimants, every year, on the legal ground that they are unlikely to appear for an inquiry into the question of their deportation.

Given the record of Mr. Mohammad in already, according to the Government, having defrauded the Government, having lied to the Government, why did the Minister give such exceptionally privileged treatment to Mr. Mohammad by refraining from detaining him and, since the Solicitor General has said that he knows where he is, will the Minister agree to arrest and detain Mr. Mohammad today, or does the Government prefer to let Mr. Mohammed go into hiding and escape?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the process is advancing very, very well. It would not be helpful to make any careless comments such as was made by the Leader of his Party yesterday, which has caused distress to an innocent Canadian citizen who now finds himself in jeopardy.

It is possible that some members of the Opposition may now want to talk to the other Chamber about Bill C-84 to see if that could be advanced very quickly. It is possible that some of those who have spoken against it, now want to speak in favour of what we are trying to do, which is to keep terrorists, saboteurs, and spies out of the country.

TRADE

RECYCLING OF GOVERNMENT INFORMATION PAMPHLETS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It concerns an issue which is literally rubbing Canadians the wrong way.

How can the Prime Minister justify the wasting of $13 million of taxpayers' money to print useless propaganda propping up a bad trade deal and subsequently turning 80 tonnes of this printed propaganda into nothing else but toilet paper?

Does this not show that Canadians do not want to be subjected to this kind of brainwashing? Is this why the Government is resorting to this rearguard action plan?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker—

Ms. Copps: Take the toilet roll and drop it.

Mr. Tobin: Pick up the roll and run with it.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, if the Opposition can dispense with toilet jokes, I can give them some information about this subject, and that is that of course there has been a great demand by Canadians—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, this is no way to wipe the slate clean, and Canadians won't accept it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

[Translation]

ALLEGED CARELESS EXPENDITURE OF FUNDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, some of the documents that were recycled as toilet paper may have cost as much as $40 each. Canadians want an answer from the Prime Minister. We are fed up with the devious, two-ply attitude of this Government. Is the Prime Minister willing to make a commitment here and now before the House that he will stop wasting taxpayers' money on useless and frankly ludicrous projects? Yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we would like to dispense with this tissue of lies—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: —and wipe this issue clean by pointing out that there has been a tremendous demand by Canadians for information related to the free trade agreement. There have been close to 10 million pieces of documentation made available to Canadians.

Naturally we are working hard to ensure that Canadians get the most current information available. Therefore we have been sending out, after the agreement was signed, the up-to-date material on the agreement. In the process about 5.9 per cent of the documentation has been considered obsolete because it has been overtaken by updated information, and it is being recycled, which is the policy of the Government. I am advised by officials that 5.9 per cent on a demand driven item like information on the free trade agreement is considered very low by government standards.

We will continue to attempt to give Canadians the most up-to-date information on the free trade agreement.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—RESUMPTION OF UNITED STATES ARMS DELIVERIES TO CONTRA FORCES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns the announcement in Washington about the resumption of arms deliveries to the Contras and President Reagan's decision to seek additional funding for the Contras, coming only days after the Nicaraguan Government has taken steps, its latest in a series of steps, to comply with the peace process.

Will the Minister take this opportunity to tell the House and to tell Canadian people, and for that matter to tell the international community, that Canada finds these actions by President Reagan to be jeopardizing the peace process and to be unacceptable?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the decision to which the Hon. Member refers is an American decision respecting an American policy. The policy of the Government of Canada and the analysis by the Government of Canada of the situation in Central America are different.

Our view is that the elemental problems which must be addressed there are problems that are local in nature, and that the most important initiative which has been taken has been the initiative taken by the five Central American Presidents. We are, as I am sure the Hon. Member is, encouraged by the fact that the five Central American Presidents continued to make progress on the Aria's peace plan in their meeting last weekend.

• (1440)

The Member would know that the Presidents asked the Ambassador for Guatemala to Canada to brief officials of my Department on progress and that the five ambassadors accredited to Canada from those countries have asked for a meeting tomorrow with me in which I look forward to discussing practical ways in which Canada can contribute to the continued movement forward of progress on the plan established by the Central American leaders themselves as to how to bring peace to that region.

ARIAS PEACE PLAN—POSITION OF CANADA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, that is precisely the point. Progress is being made and one of the points that President Arias himself, who won the Noble Peace Prize for his leadership in this area, has made absolutely clear is that the United States must not do what President Reagan has announced he will do, if the peace process is to succeed.

If a country like Costa Rica, which is much more beholden and vulnerable to U.S. influence and power than presumably Canada is, can make that kind of statement, why can't the Secretary of State for once get up and say Canada is opposed to continued aid to the Contras?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is an old debate. There are some who believe that the most effective way for Canada to contribute to peace in Central America is to attack the United States.

We believe, as I indicated clearly in the statement I made on my return from Central America, that that kind of pre-occupation is not only fruitless but is counter-productive in terms of the influence that we may be able to have at some point along the process in encouraging compliance by all parties who must in the largest sense comply with the Central American peace plan.

There is a role for Canada to play, a constructive, substantive role. We are not sitting on the sidelines offering advice to other Governments. What we have to do is maintain intact our ability to contribute in distinctive Canadian ways to a peace process in Central America, and that is what we are doing.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

FUNDING OF MUNICIPAL NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY CANDIDATES IN TORONTO

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board.

The Ontario Government has made it illegal for supporters of political Parties to make contributions to political municipal candidates. However, now the NDP supporters in the Metropolitan Toronto area are laundering contributions to municipal candidates through the New Democratic federal Party rather than the NDP provincial Party of Ontario the way it used to be done.

Will the President of the Treasury Board ask the Commissioner of Elections Canada to investigate this NDP tax scam? Will he also introduce new legislation to ensure that the NDP can no longer rip off the taxpayers of Canada? Usually scams are illegal.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have raised this matter with the Chief Electoral Officer. I think the Hon. Member knows that under the provisions of the Income Tax Act, specifically relating to the Elections Act, it does not place specific restrictions on the way in which the money is spent although there is a clear intention that the money should be used for purposes relating to federal elections.

I will certainly take the Hon. Member's representation into consideration, and in view of the fact that we are currently reviewing the Elections Act and intend to bring in some changes, perhaps it might be the wish of all Hon. Members to clarify this issue in an amended form.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF MONCTON MAINTENANCE SHOPS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister is aware that CN has announced a closure of the shops in Moncton as of September 30. The foundry and rail shop components of the Moncton facility are found nowhere else in CN's entire railway system. Thus, when the shops close, some of that work will have to be done somewhere else and will have to be contracted out. In addition, CN will have to increase its staff at its Montreal facility in order to repair Bombardier locomotives, work which has traditionally been done at the Moncton shop.

In light of the fact that some workers could be rehired in Moncton to do this work and maintain some components of the Moncton shops, will the Government for once show some concern? Will this Minister intervene, at least at this moment, to save the remaining 350 jobs?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, CN is a Crown Corporation that is, of course, competing with the private sector. The assurance we can give is, that if the company is competitive, employees will keep their jobs. The reliability of CN employees and the quality of their work are guarantees for a successful future.

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF GOVERNMENT TO ACT TO SAVE 350 JOBS IN MONCTON REGION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, those words are cold comfort for the Moncton workers, considering they were promised there would be no massive lay-offs in the region. It is a fact that if the Minister were prepared to intervene and instruct CN to maintain some components of the Moncton shops—I am thinking of the foundry and the rail shop—350 jobs could be saved.

How can people in New Brunswick be expected to believe this Government is sincere in its efforts to promote regional development, when it has consistently refused to take action to save the 350 jobs that could be saved in the Moncton area?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, this Government has demonstrated its concern for promoting regional development and alleviating regional disparity.

I repeat that CN is a Crown Corporation that operates on a commercial basis, and that it must be competitive. Markets have to be identified, and I am convinced that thanks to the excellent quality of the work done by these workers, we will be able to find a solution.

So we have to be competitive and we have to identify demand.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REFUSAL TO HOLD PUBLIC HEARINGS INTO ESTABLISHMENT OF CF-18 TEST RANGE IN SAGUENAY REGION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence.

According to the Quebec Minister of the Environment, the Department of National Defence has refused all public hearings on the F-18 firing range in the Saguenay.

Why is the Conservative Government refusing to give the people in this major area at least the same right to provide input as it gave prior to expanding the airport at Saint-Jean? Why the double standard?

[English]

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member is not aware but DND has already completed an environmental study. All municipal councils in the area, and in the county in particular, have indicated their support for the firing range to go ahead. At least five public meetings have been held at which the commander of the base in the region was in attendance. Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to know those facts too.

REQUEST THAT IMPACT STUDY BE MADE PUBLIC

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Minister reffered to an impact study. The Department has refused to publish this federal impact study.

Why is the Minister refusing to publish this study? What is he trying to hide by refusing public hearings and keeping this impact study under wraps? When is it going to be released?

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the impact study has been made available, I understand, to four Departments in the Province of Quebec. The four Departments that have an interest in it have been getting together, and I understand that the Department of National Defence is now in official negotiations with the Province of Quebec on this matter.

SHIPYARDS

QUEBEC SHIPYARDS SHARE OF WORK

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question to the right honourable Prime Minister refers to the Quebec shipyards.

The House will remember that not so long ago, the Federal Government asked the Quebec Government to purchase the Lauzon and Vickers shipbuilding yards. In a letter, the former had promised the latter to be very generous and to lavishly award contracts to the Quebec shipyards.

Yesterday, the Prime Minister stated on television that the Quebec shipyards are doing fine and that they would get their share of the $950 million contracts still to be awarded.

The Prime Minister will certainly agree that Quebecers are sick and tired of promises that do not materialize. Could the Prime Minister spell out what percentage of these $950 million contracts still to be awarded will go to Quebec shipyards? Could the Prime Minister indicate whether it will be 50 per cent, 60 per cent, 10 per cent or 20 per cent? We want a clear answer and a firm commitment!

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): First of all, Mr. Speaker, this question having already been raised, I should like to indicate to my honourable friend that since taking office, the government has provided directly to the Quebec shipyards $97 million to streamline its operations. It has awarded them contracts worth about $550 million; there are other contracts worth $950 million which are being studied or calls for tender which could benefit Quebec shipyards.

I suggest, therefore, that the statements made by my honourable friend are wrong, that his premises are wrong, and that the reality of the situation indicates a promising future for the industry in question.

REQUEST FOR FORMAL COMMITMENT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer the question. When he says that the federal Government gave $97 million to upgrade the shipyards, it is true that it allocated funds to buy cranes, to buy soldering irons, to enlarge the piers. But he forgot to award contracts to build ships. This is why Sorel and Vickers have both shut down, they have no ships to build.

What we want to know is whether Quebec will be awarded contracts to build or repair ships. About the $950 million, can anyone be sincere and honest and say that Quebec will get 60 per cent of the contracts, a formal commitment? No false promises!

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): False promises! Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote the president of the company involved. At a press conference about which Le Devoir wrote an article on Thursday, January 7, 1988, he had this to say after unveiling his restructuring projects: "On the other hand, on the basis of contracts already on the books—" Contracts already on the books, not promises, contracts already on the books. "—and due for completion by 1990, the Marine president expects an increase in the number of workers directly involved in production. That group of workers will increase from 1,557 in 1987 to more than 2,900 in 1990." That is not a setback, that is progress!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—PLIGHT OF PALESTINIANS—REQUEST THAT MEMBERS RECEIVE BRIEFING

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland—Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the concern expressed by a number of Members of the House regarding food supplies getting through to the Palestinian refugees, would the Minister be prepared to arrange a specific briefing for all Members of Parliament having an interest in this matter?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would certainly be prepared to do that, either through the standing committee or through some other arrangement which might be agreed to by either the External Affairs critics of the various Parties or the House Leaders. I would want to set that up as quickly as possible. I would also think the House might find it valuable to have that briefing extend to a broad range of questions and not simply that of access to food by persons in the camps.

REVENUE CANADA

REVIEW OF FARMERS' MACHINERY PURCHASES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. He will recall that last spring he ordered a halt to his officials who were harassing farmers who applied for investment tax credits under provisions of the Income Tax Act. His officials were in effect rewriting the valuations for the used equipment involved.

He is aware that his Department has recommenced this practice and I am wondering if he can tell the House under what part of the law he permitted this to go forward and why his Department is pursuing this harassment of farmers over the question of whether or not the implement dealers allowed them too much for their trade-ins.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I know my friend opposite would not want to misstate the facts inadvertently. He is perfectly correct that last April 19 this audit was terminated. Some of the conditions that our auditors discovered are being processed in an orderly way. The audit has not commenced again. On the other hand, no sector can be given absolute immunity from regular taxation audits.

I give my undertaking to the House and individual Members that if there are any difficulties they will be looked at very sympathetically.

APPLICATION OF DEPARTMENTAL GUIDELINE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister explain to the House why these tax forms filed in 1983 and 1984 are now being subjected to a guideline just published by his Department last fall?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I just want to point out to the hon. gentleman opposite that the integrity of our tax system is based on self-assessment and equitable treatment. Occasionally there have been reassessments in connection with these matters based on economic circumstances. However, I repeat that all those reassessments have been done in a completely proper manner and with the maximum amount of flexibility and equity, recognizing that the agricultural sector in western Canada has had some difficult times in recent years.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LUBICON LAKE INDIAN BAND'S LAND CLAIM—DOCUMENT PREPARED FOR CANADIAN EMBASSIES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs and concerns the land claims of the Lubicon Lake Indian people. I would like to preface my question by thanking the right hon. gentleman as the senior Minister from Alberta for taking an active personal interest in this issue and for agreeing to meet with Chief Ominayak sometime tomorrow.

My question concerns a document prepared by the Minister's Department for distribution to Canadian embassies and consulates around the world. I would like to quote just a small part of it:

> Although the Band has endeavoured to portray itself as impoverished and near extinction, this is hardly the case . . . The level of social services delivered to Band members is comparable to those provided to other Indians in Canada and is comparable to those available to all Canadians.

Does the Minister believe this to be an accurate description of the existing conditions of the Lubicon Lake Indian Band?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, without getting into the question of whether or not I am responsible for every word and action of every official of my Department—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —I believe that document is an appropriate document for the Department to have sent to our embassies.

• (1500)

I am pleased to be able to play a role with my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, in trying to bring to a conclusion, quickly and in Canada, a land claim which the Government believes is legitimate and which the Government has been acting vigorously to have resolved in a way which is just.

REQUEST THAT DOCUMENT BE WITHDRAWN

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, there are no water or sewer facilities in the community. Ninety-five per cent of the people there exist on welfare. One-third of the community has been tested positive for tuberculosis. That is hardly a situation comparable to anywhere else in the country.

Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs have this document withdrawn from the embassies and consulates? In addition to that, will he offer a formal apology to the chief, the council, and the people of the Lubicon Lake Indian Band?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the assistance provided to the Lubicon Lake Band is exactly the same assistance as is provided to other bands in Canada. The level of social assistance is the level which has been established across Canada. It is available to the people of Lubicon.

With regard to the matter of sewer and water, the Hon. Member knows that it is not unusual in areas of rural Canada, including the area in which I live, that running water is not available to small communities. In this case the Government of Alberta, when installing water pipelines to a nearby community, offered to provide that same pipeline for running water to the Lubicon Band and the offer was rejected by the Band.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED IMPROPRIETY IN USE OF CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Earlier today in Question Period the Member for York East (Mr. Redway) made what I believe is a very serious allegation by suggesting that Members of the New Democratic Party were using the Income Tax Act and the Elections Act with impropriety.

The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) has done the House a real service by indicating that there were no improprieties in this case, that no rules or laws were broken. In fact, the Income Tax Act and the Elections Act make this practice not an illegal practice and an acceptable one under the circumstances.

I would like to ask that the Hon. Member for York East do the honourable thing. I suggest that he was not attempting to suggest that illegal activities were taking place, but the term "laundering money" certainly has a very clear implication in our culture and society that when groups are laundering money they are doing something illegal, something that is certainly wrong.

I suggest that the Hon. Member for York East may have something to say, that he would retract any suggestion that any impropriety was being conducted.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, it was certainly not my intention, nor will it ever be, to make an unparliamentary remark in this House.

My understanding of a question of privilege is that it must apply to an individual Member of this House as distinct from an entire group or Party. Therefore, I submit that this is not a question of privilege.

It may very well be that the term that was used has a variety of meanings and I certainly do not want to suggest for a moment that it is definitely illegal. It certainly was not the intention of the legislation to allow this sort of thing. I am sure that the Hon. Member would agree with that.

However, Mr. Speaker, if you feel that this is an unparliamentary remark and that this is a legitimate question of privilege, I am certainly quite willing to withdraw the remark.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I respect the views of the Hon. Member which he has made known. He has indicated that if this remark is considered to be unparliamentary he is indeed prepared to withdraw the remark.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that when members of a political Party are accused of laundering political contributions, when in fact that is not taking place as the Deputy Prime Minister so adequately pointed out, the honourable thing for the Member of Parliament for York East to do would be simply to withdraw that suggestion and allegation to clear the air once and for all.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, a search of Beauchesne's has indicated to me that this is not an unparliamentary term. However, if you feel in your judgment, Sir, that it is an unparliamentary term; if you feel in your judgment that this is a legitimate question of privilege, then I will certainly accede to your desire.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has raised, on a question of privilege, a matter referred to by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway). The complaint is that the use of the word "laundering" implies, in my own words, something illegal, dishonest, or improper. The Hon. Member for York East, in defence, says that privilege, strictly speaking, has to apply to an individual, not to a corporation or a Party.

Technically the Hon. Member has an arguable point. However, one of the reasons certain things are not permitted is that if they were permitted they would create disorder or a difficulty in the Chamber. In this particular case it would appear that the reply of the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) in itself might have been adequate to assuage the feelings of any other Hon. Member. However, the Hon. House Leader for the New Democratic Party has raised this complaint.

The Chair might suggest that under the circumstances the Hon. Member for York East might rise and indicate, if in any way he was implying dishonesty or illegal activity on behalf of a member of the New Democratic Party, that it would be withdrawn.

The Hon. Member for York East takes an interesting approach. He has stated that if I find that what he said was unparliamentary he will withdraw it. The Chair is always reluctant to find anything more unparliamentary than it already has to deal with. The suggestion of the Chair is that under the circumstances, without any particular ruling on my part, the Hon. Member for York East would want to indicate that he was not implying something dishonest or illegal in the strictest term against any member of the New Democratic Party. I call upon the Member for York East to assist the Chair.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I know that my friends in the NDP would like me to resign at this stages.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Redway: I truly feel, Mr. Speaker, that you were elected by all of us, including myself, to rule on matters in this House. I know quite well that you understand your responsibilities, Mr. Speaker. Therefore, Sir, I await your ruling as to whether this is unparliamentary. If you find such to be the case, I most certainly will withdraw it. If, however, you find that not to be the case, que sera sera.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to pursue this. We are beginning a new year, 1988. This is the first week that Parliament is sitting in the new year. I think the House Leader and the Deputy Prime Minister would indicate that there has been an incredible amount of co-operation by all parties. There has been an attempt, at least, at a mood of civility, co-operation, and working together in a positive way for the best interests of the country.

I find it difficult when an Hon. Member, in this case the Hon. Member for York East, stands in his place and suggests that members of the New Democratic Party were laundering money when such was not the case. The Deputy Prime Minister said that such was not the case. There is no question that it cast a certain pall over Members of my Party and Members of the House of Commons.

• (1510)

If this is what we can expect, and the Member for York East will not withdraw his remarks but wants to use language that may not be covered in our publications as being definite unparliamentary language but which I think any sensible parliamentarian would certainly identify as being unacceptable and unparliamentary when used in such a way, I simply appeal to the Member to do the honourable thing and make it very clear that he was not imputing any illegal activities, any dishonest activities and that there was no impropriety whatsoever occurring in the use of these funds.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I could ask the Hon. Member for York East if he can advise the Chair whether he intended to accuse any Member of the Chamber, NDP or otherwise, of doing anything illegal or dishonest?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, what I intended to do was find out whether, in fact, this action is illegal and dishonest. That was the purpose of my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. We have his answer, Mr. Speaker, and if you feel, in all the context of this, that this is unparliamentary, I shall certainly withdraw it.

Mr. Speaker: I am asking the Hon. Member for York East if in anything he said in the question he intended to impute dishonesty or illegality to any Member in this Chamber. The answer is yes or no.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is no, certainly not, only to make an inquiry of the Deputy Prime Minister, who is in charge of this legislation, to tell us, one way or the other, what the interpretation of those acts were.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York East has most certainly brought the matter to the attention of the House and to the country. The Hon. Member for York East has also made it quite clear that he was not imputing dishonesty or wrongdoing to any Member of this Chamber. I think that is where the matter ought to be left. I thank Hon Members for their intervention.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (D), 1987-88

A message from Her Excellency the Governor General transmitting Supplementary Estimates(D) for the financial year ending March 31, 1988, was presented by Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the House.

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the House Leaders and I think you will find agreement for the following proposal. I move:

That, notwithstanding Standing Order 82(16), Supplementary Estimates (D) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1988, laid upon the table earlier this day, stand referred to a committee of the whole; and

That immediately upon the Committee of the Whole reporting the said Supplementary Estimates, the Appropriation Bill based thereon shall be introduced and proceeded with forthwith at all stages.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY SAFETY ACT

PROPOSED REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties. I think you will find unanimous consent to receive and place the following motion. I move:

That, the Order for second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-105, an Act to ensure the safe operation of railways and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof, standing on the Order Paper, be changed to read second reading and reference to the Standing Committee of Transport.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a number of Canadian residents from Ontario and Quebec who have expressed their deep concern that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a trade agreement with the United States. They note that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in the course of bilateral trade negotiations, had promised that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised.

In view of the very adverse impact of the proposed trade agreement, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of Canadian citizens, equally concerned about the free trade deal which the Prime Minister has initialled with the President of the United States.

In particular, they are concerned that the deal threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians and to equalize opportunities between the regions. For these and many other reasons, the petitioners call upon Parliament to be dissolved so that the people of Canada may have the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade deal.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I would like to table three petitions which have been certified correct pursuant to the Standing Orders and read as follows:

Your petitioners humbly state that the Mulroney Government has sold Canada without obtaining anything in return; that Canadian industries still lack protection against American trade laws; that the United States has obtained everything it wanted in all major sectors, including agriculture, energy, the automobile industry, financial services and investment; that the jobs of thousands of Canadians are threatened, and that the Conservative Government has made no provision for adjustment assistance to help retrain Canadian workers.

Wherefore your petitioners humby pray Parliament to condemn the Government for signing the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement.

• (1520)

[English]

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Madam Speaker, I have the privilege and responsibility to present a petition under Standing Order 106 with respect to the Canada-U.S. free trade deal. The petition is signed by residents of Sudbury and Ontario.

The signatories are concerned that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States and that in fact the Prime Minister promised during the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised. They are concerned it has been.

Therefore, these petitioners are calling upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour to present a petition signed by many citizens from Hamilton. These petitioners are concerned that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a trade agreement with the United States, and the trade agreement negotiated by the Mulroney Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership and to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interest of Canadians or to equalize opportunities between the regions.

Therefore, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national election.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure, indeed, an honour, to rise pursuant to Standing Order 106 to submit a petition on behalf of a number of constituents who point out that the Conservative Government has no mandate from the people of Canada to conclude a trade deal with the United States. They believe that the proposed trade deal would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and would undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

Therefore, the petitioners ask Parliament to now dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade deal during a national general election.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION REGARDING THE HOMELESS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Madam Speaker, the three petitions I am tabling today were signed by ninety-nine residents of Vankleek Hill, Ottawa, Ontario, but the majority of the undersigned are residents of my riding, Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic in Montreal. The undersigned deplore the fact that more than 100,000 people in Canada were homeless last year; that the number of homeless young people, women and families is increasing steadily; that the number of affordable housing units continues to decrease, and that the Government has yet to do anything to deal with this problem.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray Parliament to take immediate action to ensure that all Canadians are given decent and adequate housing and provide social reintegration programs to help these needy Canadians become part of our society again.

[English]

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, it is my privilege and responsibility to present a duly authorized petition from a number of constituents from Lake Cowichan, Duncan, Youbou, Cobbie Hill, who are concerned about the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal.

They point out that the Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude such a trade agreement with the United States. They complain that the negotiated trade agreement threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership and to develop Canadian energy resources or to equalize opportunities between the regions.

Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to dissolve and give the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the trade deal through a general election.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, it is my duty and honour, according to Standing Order 106, to present a petition from a number of residents of the well-informed and alert people of the constituency of Spadina, who call upon the Conservative Government to reconsider the fact it had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement and that in fact the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised us during the course of the negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised. Yet the trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future. It would undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

Therefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and privilege pursuant to Standing Order 106 to present to the House a petition, certified correct by the Clerk of Petitions, from a number of Canadians who are concerned that the Conservative Government has no mandate from the people of Canada to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States, and that the trade agreement which was negotiated by the Mulroney Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interest of Canadians or to equalize opportunities between the regions.

This proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

The undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, I also want to table a petition concerning the Free Trade Agreement between our Prime Minister and President Reagan of the United States. Your petitioners feel that the very fabric of Canadian sovereignty is threatened by this trade agreement; they feel that the Conservative Government has no mandate to negotiate a trade deal with the United States: they feel that this trade agreement would undermine our ability to plan the economic, social and cultural programs Canada needs. Therefore, your petitioners are asking for a national debate, followed by a national general election before such an agreement is signed. Madam Speaker, this petition is signed by a group of Chinese and Vietnamese Canadians from Toronto.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Madam Speaker, as a Member of Parliament, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a number of Canadian electors. It has been certified correct according to Standing Order 106 by the Clerk of Petitions.

Because the very fabric of Canadian sovereignty is threatened by the proposed Mulroney-Reagan trade deal, because the Mulroney Government has no mandate to negotiate a free trade deal with the United States, because the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal would reduce Canada's ability to plan the economic, social and cultural programs Canadians need, and because a Mulroney-Reagan trade deal would integrate Canada further into the North American defence industrial base, the undersigned ask Parliament to ensure that a national debate takes place on the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal and that this debate result in a national election before such an agreement is signed.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour to present a petition from my constituency on the subject of the Canada-U.S. trade deal. It is signed by residents from Windsor, Belle River, LaSalle, Harrow and from other communities within my constituency.

The petitioners believe the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States and that this trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future. They believe it would also threaten the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

• (1530)

For that reason those who have signed this petition humbly call upon the Parliament of Canada to dissolve and to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or to reject this proposed trade agreement through a general election before it is signed and finalized.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, it is my honour and privilege under the provisions of Standing Order 106 to present a petition to the House. It has been certified as to form and content by the Clerk of Petitions.

It is a rather special day for this particular petition because it is signed in part by employees of Canada Post, Postal Station F, by both inside workers and letter carriers. I say it is significant because these are the same people that Canada Post is trying to muzzle in their right of free speech to speak out against programs of Canada Post that will affect service to Canadians.

The petition is about the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement, the bad deal. The petitioners, some of whom are also members of the Thunder Bay and District Labour Council, object to the terms of the agreement. They question the impact of the agreement. They believe that it would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and would undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the U. S.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election. I am ready, Madam Speaker.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Madam Speaker, I too have the privilege and responsibility pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 106 to present a petition which has been duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions as correct as to form and to content.

This petition is signed by a large number of residents, principally of the City of Edmonton in the Province of Alberta. They, like so many other petitioners whose petitions have been heard today, petition Parliament that the Government having had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude the trade sellout with the United States should, in effect, dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to choose in a general election whether Canada's future will be Canadian or American.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to table in the House a petition signed by residents of Shediac, Grande Digue, Cap Pelé, Scoudouc, Haute-Aboujagane and Cormier Village.

Your petitioners humbly state that the Mulroney Government has sold Canada without obtaining anything in return; that Canadian industries are still not protected; that the United States has all the major sectors; that the jobs of thousands of Canadians are threatened.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray Parliament to condemn this Government for having signed the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Question No. 232 will be answered today.

[Text]

NORTH AMERICAN WATERFOWL MANAGEMENT PLAN FUNDING

Question No. 232—Mr. Caccia:

1. As a result of the signing of the North American Waterfowl Management Plan (NAWAMP) in May, 1986 has there been any expenditure of government funds and, if so, in what amount?

2. Are there any government funds allocated to be spent in relation to NAWAMP in the remainder of this fiscal year or in the two following and, if so, for what purposes?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): 1. Yes. By the end of the 1987-88 fiscal year, approximately $4 million (A-Base budget) as well as $3.7 million (government grants to the Wildlife Habitat Canada Foundation, based on the sale of the Canada Wildlife Habitat Conservation stamp).

2. Yes. For the remainder of this fiscal year, funds will be spent on the continuation of planning and implementation of the NAWMP program, as well as on wetland preservation in support of the NAWMP. For the fiscal years of 1988-89 and 1989-90, spending will be directed towards soil conservational; improved protection and management of waterfowl habitat, particularly on the Prairies; and cash incentives to land owners to manage marginal lands for waterfowl habitat enhancement.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW

On the Order: Private Members' Business:

October 17, 1986—That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of increasing political, diplomatic and other support for the "Front Line States" in southern Africa in light of increasing South African economic, military and political pressure on those states.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, there have been discussions between the Parties regarding Motion No. 69 as it stands on the Order Paper regarding the Front Line States. I would simply ask that the Chair seek unanimous consent for the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) in whose name this motion stands to have it withdrawn.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I would concur with my colleague. There have been discussions to that effect. Certainly, Members on this side have no objection.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent for the motion to be withdrawn?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, ATLANTIC CANADA, 1987

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, January 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I will resume the remarks that I began a day ago with regard to Bill C-103, an Act to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation.

What we see before us is a Bill that takes control over regional development programs that are now in the Atlantic region, namely, the Industrial and Regional Development Program, IRDP; the Atlantic Enterprise Program, AEP; the Small Business Loans Act as it relates to the Atlantic region; the ERDA subagreements; and the Atlantic Supplier Development Program.

What we have here was presented with some fanfare. It was described as a $1 billion program. We found out that it was $1.05 billion spread over five years. In reality what we are talking about is some $200 million per year. This is fairly familiar to Members of the House who have been watching this sort of sleight of hand with numbers, which has become a hallmark of this administration, particularly over the last few years.

Since 1984, from which date we do our analysis, it has been estimated that assistance to the Atlantic area by the Conservative Government has been cut by something approaching $1.5 billion annually from various federal Government spending programs as they once applied to the Atlantic region. These $1.5 billion annual reductions in expenditures over three and a half years are scarcely compensated for by something in the order of $200 million per annum in their place. So the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency comes to its task with greatly reduced funding and much reduced ability to address the particular regional development problems of that area.

I wish to review some of that decline in the commitment in the last three and a half years. To be fair, some of that decline was in place even before the present Government took over. The fading years of the Liberal administration saw some backing away from economic development into the Atlantic region as well.

• (1540)

Over the past 25 years less than 3 per cent of total federal economic expenditures have been applied to the concept of regional development. Exclusive regional development expenditures in 1984-1985 for all of the Atlantic region were in the order of $230 million. To put that into perspective, it amounts to approximately 15 per cent of the amount put into unemployment insurance payments for that area.

In the five year period between 1969 and 1974, inclusive, expenditures under the DRIE industrial incentive programs have decreased in real terms. In 1969-1970 they amounted to $9 per person which declined to $4 per person in the 1984-1986 period. Over time one can see the backing away of federal assistance to the Atlantic region that has taken place in Canada.

In looking at specific areas in Atlantic Canada, the decrease from $9 to $4 on a per capita basis was even more sharply in decline for the Province of Newfoundland where the reduction for that same period of time was from $9 per person down to $3 per person. The commitment to regional development programs, regional development funds from the rest of Canada to Newfoundland has been even less enthusiastic than for the Atlantic region.

During the same period of time in Ontario the amount of regional expansion funding was $10 per person, as opposed to $9 per person in Atlantic Canada. That dropped to $4 per person, as opposed to $3 per person for Newfoundland.

The disparities that the programs that have been put into place were attempting to take care of and ameliorate have in fact not changed greatly. In fact, it appears that a lot of the development programming and development funding has accrued to the more developed parts of the country at a rate that is equal to or exceeds the rate that is applied to Atlantic Canada which, by most of the indicators that we have to judge these things, is the least developed and the most in need of development funds.

The role and the assessment of regional development took place as a federal-provincial task force which published its report in May, 1987. The task force focused on five main areas where it thought that direct regional development policy ought to be centred in the next decade. It stated that the key elements of the agenda are highlighted if one focuses on those five main areas. Number one was to design the transfer system in ways that encouraged productive employment supported by income security measures.

There they are telling us that the types of employment encouragement that occurs under these types of programs should be fairly long term employment to the point where they support themselves and are not simply short term designed to employ people for a short period in the summer months and then make them eligible for unemployment assistance during the winter. This is sometimes considered to be job creation and leaves the impression that there has been more real activity achieved by these development programs than in fact actually happens.

In number two the task force is recommending that there should be a reorientation of education and training systems as a key component of public investment in regional economic development. Throughout the debate on this particular Bill we have been hearing that the Atlantic area does have many long term, long established well-known traditional educational institutions. It has very well established university and post-secondary institutions. Yet a great many of the graduates from these institutions have difficulty remaining in the Atlantic area. This is particularly true of the Cape Breton region. A great many expatriates find their way to central Canada in order to make use of their education and training.

In number three the task force reported that there should be a diffusion of innovation and technology as a prerequisite for structural improvement of the less advantaged regions. I have listened to the debate with great care and I have noted that a number of speakers have pointed out that this initiative in Bill C-103 ignores the need for infrastructure. This third recommendation of the task force is attempting to point out that there does have to be certain prerequisites in an area in order that industrial development can take place. It is necessary to establish certain basic services in order that an industry or a region can take off.

As the agricultural critic I am concerned when I see certain parts of the maritime provinces in Atlantic Canada where Agriculture Canada does not appear to be encouraging the type of commitment to research and development that we have come to expect from Agriculture Canada.

For instance, in the Kentville area of the Annapolis Valley over time, and not willy-nilly but very deliberately, we have developed a poultry industry. It is an area that has become a centre of excellence for development in the poultry area. There are several large feed companies and some research going on with regard to feeds. There is an Agriculture Canada research centre which is doing research on a great many things, but it is one of the better institutions for poultry research. It has perhaps done more poultry research than the two other main research centres that are doing poultry research in this country. It has been particularly useful to the region where hatcheries, broiler production, processing, veterinary services, distribution and processing, research into the development of new ways of processing poultry, and handling new ways of feeding and housing poultry have all been going on for some time. It is largely based around the college at Kentville and the Agriculture Canada research centre.

On June 11, 1985 one of the poultry barns at the research centre burned down. It is now January, 1988 and that barn has still not been replaced by Agriculture Canada. There were three, but the loss of that one unit reduced the research capabilities of that station by almost 40 per cent.

Poultry research has to go through cycles. There has to be a certain amount of product going through when doing genetic, disease, and nutritional research. When one barn disappeared it took 40 pens out of the research project. It meant that approximately 40 per cent of the program had to be cut back.

• (1550)

Agriculture Canada does not have a system of insurance for its facilities. It engages in what it calls reinsurance, which I think is a wise business decision. It does not pay out a lot on insurance premiums. When it loses a building or some equipment, it is simply replaced out of its budget.

The problem was that the estimated replacement cost of the building was in the neighbourhood of $350,000 to $400,000. We were told that in the House in answer to a written question on December 17, 1985. It was said at that time that the estimated cost of replacement would be about $400,000. As to who would build the barn, on what date it would be completed, and whether it would be the same size as the previous barn, that information was still not known a year and a half after the fire.
