SOMETHING TO THINK OVER.

You are aware that you cannot go without food and still retain your strength; yet you do neglect the exercise and recreation necessary to perfect health and long life. Why don't you buy a bicycle, ride it and add ten long years to your life? You can then, with clear brain and added energy, accomplish more than you do now, and in less time. With an easy-running Stearns Bicycle you can save enough time to enable you to make delightful outings. The Stearns is called the Yellow Fellow because of its orange finish; we have it in black if you prefer.

Items of Interest to Catholic Readers

The Icelandic Catholics.

The Rev. John L. Fredericksen, a Dane by birth, in an article entitled "The Catholic Mission in Iceland," in the current issue of the Irish Ecclesiastical Review, calls attention to the fact that Iceland has begun to compete with the "sunny South" for the favor of the tourist. There is a hotel at Spitzbergen, where many people come and make it a point of departure for seeing the wild, rough beauty of a country where glaciers, rocks, lava fields, hot springs and boiling wells are to be found in abundance, and where in the short summer there are only a few patches of living green. Mutton and fish form the principal diet of the Icelanders. Some adventurous Norsemen chose this barren land for their home because they were too fierce to endure kingly dominion; and they had no fear of poverty because, each year, they could salt-fish, pirates that they were, and come back laden with spoils, for long winter feasting, from the mainland. It was towards the end of the ninth century that these freebooters settled in Iceland, and a hundred years later the inhabitants were Christians. Even their rude fathers, who terrorized Europe, had some soft spots in their hearts, and many of them carried home Christianity; and there were others, less tender, who brought back Christian slaves.

A Strange Arbitrator.

The time came, therefore, when Iceland was called upon to decide what should be the religion of the island. A decision was reached in the year 1000 in this way: "The people were gathered, as every year they were wont to gather, in the parliament valley (Thingvellir). Christians and pagans stood face to face grasping their weapons, ready to fight the question out, when the voice of reason prevailed, and the proposal to choose an arbitrator was unanimously accepted. The religion of the whole people should be that which their arbitrator settled. The man chosen was a pagan Christian, and in the choice of him the Christians acquiesced. He stretched himself out on the ground, covered himself with a bearskin, and so remained motionless for three days. The Christians betook themselves to prayer. The pagan arbitrator at the end of the third day arose and declared that henceforth all Icelanders were to be Christians."

Icelandic Poets.

The people readily adopted the true faith, and Christian establishments flourished all over the island, and the history of the country and of every family was written by monk and layman, who composed "sagas" which have no equal, in their way, in any literature. These old sagas are known by heart; by the people, and nearly every Iceland has gathered from them the history of his family from the day it made its advent in the country. The Icelandic poets in early days were constant visitors to the courts of Northern Europe, where they became acquainted with the best literatures of the times. Much of the poetry these writers created still exists, we are told by Father Fredericksen, who says: "Some of their poems are beautiful religious flowers grown on the tree of Catholic faith. The most celebrated is the 'Lily,' which consists of a hundred verses in honor of Our Blessed Lady. It is in every respect a masterpiece. All poets would like to have sung the 'Lily,' is an Icelandic proverb. It was the work of a monk, and like the Stabat Mater, was written in prison. It opened the door to the poet and was the beginning of a new life." The old pirate people were much richer than their Christian descendants, who had to live on their own resources, and not on plunder from other lands, and consequently, they saw little of that great world which the original Norse settlers knew so intimately.

Robbed of Their Faith.

The people of the island were less than their progenitors, when the Danish compelled them to adopt the Protestant faith. In 1551, Jon Arason, their last Catholic bishop and poet, was beheaded because he was true to his religious convictions, and a legend says that when his followers were bringing his remains home to his church the bell began to ring, untouched by mortal hands, and did not cease to toll until the body was borne back to the church, when the bell burst and fell to pieces.

Not Forgotten By the Church.

Father Fredericksen says that he came to Iceland about two years ago, and continues as follows: "Of course God's Church had not forgotten the people of the far North, but intolerant laws, which the Icelanders had not made themselves, had closed the doors to the old Church. This was only changed in 1874, when the land got a free constitution; but, even their circumstances did not permit the starting of the Icelandic mission. Iceland belongs to Denmark, and Denmark itself had not enough of men and means for mission work at home, for it is itself a Protestant country, where Catholic faith has but recently begun to spread. Such consideration for a long time prevented the sending of a priest, in spite of Rome's insisting that one should be sent. At last, two years ago, Rome became so urgent that the Danish bishop could not regard it as heaven's will, and, consequently, trust in Providence. The present writer happened to have the good fortune to be chosen to the post, for which old predilection had disposed his mind."

Two Noble Victims.

One of the worst Communists of the age, who had advocated all kinds of outrages, was Blanqui. He had fallen into the hands of the Versaillesists, and it was proposed to exchange him for the venerable and beloved archbishop, but M. This refused to consider the subject. He has been criticized severely for this, but the writer says: "There was much talk of a trial, and there can be no doubt, had the archbishop been tried and condemned, that M. This would have done everything to save him (the archbishop). None, however, outside of Paris, dreamed of what was to happen, and the fate of the archbishop and the sixty-three other innocent and patriotic men, who were murdered without mercy or justice, was as amazing as it was shocking to the world. To the victims themselves and those who knew the wretches in power, their imminent danger was known from the first." When here was talk of a trial, Judge Bonjean of the Court of Cassation, who had been arrested, offered to defend the archbishop. "Ah, my dear," the prelate replied, "look out for yourself." You will have enough to do in that quarter, I think. The American minister visited the archbishop often, after forcing the Communists to allow him to do so, and he was charmed by Monsigneur D. R. boy's grave, gentle and cheerful bearing. Among the other victims was the Abbe Daguerry, curé of the Madeleine. His life was exemplary and he was a man of great simplicity of character. He was not ambitious of ecclesiastical honors, though he had been the instructor of the Prince Imperial, and at seventy-four, though he had been offered a bishopric, he was simply the curé of the Madeleine, and his reply to all propositions for his advancement was, "I have lived at the Madeleine, and I shall die at the Madeleine, and be buried at the Madeleine." The Communists slaughtered this saintlike priest, who was well known for his charity in the poorer quarters of Paris, and they carved over the door of his church the inscription, "Liberty, Equality and Fraternity." The Communists clamored for the blood of men like this, and no one was more eager for their death than Henri Rochefort. On the night of the murder a company of forty men, calling themselves Avengers of the Republic, and wearing the uniform of the National Guard, appeared at the prison, and forced the director to give up his prisoners. These assassins rushed up to the first story, and their captain called out the numbers. Number one was Judge Bonjean, the next was Abbe Daguerry, and the last was the archbishop, which was fervently given, and the procession was then formed and marched to the courtyard, which was so dark that lanterns were sent for. The condemned were perfectly composed while awaiting the coming of the lights, and the archbishop said, "I am no hero, but I hope I shall die as becomes an honorable man." Judge Bonjean said, "I wish that my wife could know that I die with her memory next my heart." After the firing party was formed, the bishop advanced, and in his own name and that of his fellow victims gave to those who were about to slay him his blessing and forgiveness. Notwithstanding the horrible jeers and curses which greeted this, two of the firing party actually advanced, and, kneeling, begged the aged prelate's blessing, but their companions kicked and cuffed them, and they were obliged to rise. Against the stone wall the prisoners were ranged, and as each made the sign of the cross a volley rang out, quickly followed by another, and the innocent man went to their heavenly reward. But murder did not satisfy the slaughterers, for these wretches decorated the bodies of their victims and cast them into a ditch, where they remained until the following day. It is not necessary, at present, to go into further details of the outrages of that terrible time. More private behaved like heroes at the hour of death, and some escaped through the opportune arrival of troops of the line. Three archbishops of Paris have been murdered, including, besides Monsigneur Darboy, Archbishop Affre, who in 1845, was killed at a barricade while endeavoring to make peace, and Archbishop Sibour, who, in 1857, was assassinated by a fanatic.

Irish Settlers and Slaves.

A little colony of Irish monks preceded the Norwegians in Iceland, and were settled near one of the northern bays, which is still called St. Patrick's Bay. Irish people were not scarce in the island in the early days, for the Norwegian chief, touching at Ireland, brought over to Iceland many slaves, who subsequently became free and were the ancestors of a great number of the later population of the country. A legend tells of the beautiful daughter of an Irish king who was carried off to Iceland, and, after becoming the wife of her captor, became the mother of one of the proudest Icelandic families. During the long years of her married life, so great was her sorrow at leaving her native land, she never spoke a single word. A model wife, perhaps, her rude husband thought.

An Earnest Laborer.

The place of the present mission had been chosen thirty years before Father Fredericksen went to Iceland, by Abbe Bandoir, a French priest who was the first missionary to the country since the "Reformation." He was there eighteen years, but died of cancer just when his labors had begun to promise success. He left behind him an old chapel, at Reykjavik, which the present missionary has had cleaned and repaired for services. He had only one Catholic family to start with, but he was surprised to see that Protestants attended the services the whole winter, and at every sermon the church was full. He has by collections, built a new church and two small hospitals, and Catholic Sisters of Mercy have arrived to help him and his assistant priest in their charitable labors. They not only care for the Icelanders, but also for poor French fishermen who visit these shores. Father Fredericksen says that when he gets over the first difficulties he will make an appeal for the poor laborer, who now number two hundred in a widely scattered population of seventy-five thousand.

The Days of the Commune.

In her third and concluding article on the Commune of Paris, in the current number of Munsey's Magazine, Mollie Elliot Sewall refers to the arrest and confinement of sixty-four persons by the commune. These were designated hostages, and among them was Monsignor Darboy, the archbishop of Paris. The majority of the prisoners were priests. The clergy, with a few exceptions, were the only people of consequence left in the city who were deemed worth seizing as hostages, for no priest or any member of a religious order of men or women sought safety in flight from Paris, in the days of the siege. All remained at their posts, even though death came to them through the discharge of their religious duties. Our minister, Mr. Washburne, and the British ambassador, Lord Lyons, recognized, by their efforts, numbers of the imprisoned nuns and Sisters. Both priests and nuns abstained from meat during the siege, and gave their portions of animal food to the poor and the sick and the old.

Time flies, but truth marches

"with solemn step and slow." It is only now, after three hundred years, that the world is finding out the facts of the infamous Gunpowder Plot, though they have been stated times without number. The Protestant historian Fox declared that "the Popish Plot story must always be considered an indelible disgrace upon the English nation." Macaulay, more recently, vehemently denounced the infamy of that concoction. Strange fact that, although Titus Gates and others engaged in the conspiracy suffered the penalty of their discovered perjuries, the plot-story continued for centuries to do its appointed work of exciting anti-Catholic frenzy! However, among scholarly Protestants, at least, the Gunpowder ghost will never stalk again. Mr. Gardiner, the most eminent historian of England after Lord Acton, has been constrained by Father Gerard to acknowledge the injustice done to save him (the archbishop). None, however, outside of Paris, dreamed of what was to happen, and the fate of the archbishop and the sixty-three other innocent and patriotic men, who were murdered without mercy or justice, was as amazing as it was shocking to the world. To the victims themselves and those who knew the wretches in power, their imminent danger was known from the first." English Catholics, and to express his profound regret that the infamous plot was ever ascribed to them.—Ave Marie.

The Catholic Truth Society of England, whose publications are frequently mentioned in these columns, was founded some years ago with a capital of $60 by twelve priests and laymen, none of them prominently known. Its twelve subscribers have now become twelve hundred, and its annual income is $20,000, all of which is devoted to the spread of Catholic literature. Its publications are numbered by millions—the sale of a single volume, "The Simple Prayer Book," having reached half a million copies. The English society has also been the parent of similar organizations in other countries.—Ave Marie.

To Make Converts.

In the course of the notable address delivered by Cardinal Perraud at the recent St. Augustine celebration in England His Eminence said: "Before parting from you permit me to repeat to you the advice which the Bishop of Hippo addressed to the Catholics of Africa when he urged them to devote themselves to the conversion of the Christians who were separated from the true Church. Yesterday you heard an echo of that advice in the beautiful letter which His Holiness Pope Leo XIII. addressed some days ago to His Eminence, and which was read after the Pontifical Mass at Rheinfelden. 'This is what St. Augustine said, and it is not pleasant to think that the name of the great Bishop of Hippo was given to your apostle of the sixteenth century and that that saint was his patron at baptism? By prayer you will speak to God of those brethren whom you seek to win back to the whole truth; by charity you will be to them the penitentiary interpreters and representatives of that Good Shepherd who seems to have loved the wandering and wounded sheep with a love of predilection. (Ezech. xxxiv, 16; St. Matt. x, 6; Luc. x, 24; St. John x, 16). In your relations with those who have not like you had the happiness of preserving the deposit of your ancient traditions, you will avoid bitter reproaches, hard words and irritating reprimands and controversies. With the intelligent compassion of a man who had himself had painful experience of errors of the head and heart, the Bishop of Hippo said: 'Let those show themselves pitiless towards disidents who know not at the cost of what exertions and pains the truth is found; how difficult is it to cure the mental vision so as to render it capable of looking on the Sun of Justice, and what groanings and sighs must go up to God before His thoughts are understood even in a slight degree.' Treat them with a gentleness truly Christian and Catholic, those brethren whose return you ardently desire. 'Strive above all to make them live the truth by showing them in your own life that it is lovable and attractive and how earnestly they should wish to possess it. Moreover, in the matter of faith—I am still following St. Augustine—there is no question of quarrelling as if for the division of a disputed inheritance, or of having recourse to transactions which may be legitimately employed in procedure with regard to temporal affairs. Truth is not bargained for or divided. It is what it is in its entirety, but those who hold it do not impoverish themselves—on the contrary, they enrich themselves—when they share the treasure with those who have been deprived of it.'

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The St. John Sun says: "George McArthur as a builder has probably smashed all maritime records. In thirty-two hours he erected a brick building 60x4, 10 stories high with basement, for Aid. McArthur, on Paradise row. In the thirty-two hours Mr. McArthur had the building all ready for roofing."

LA GRIPPE SCOURGE. Who has not been a Victim?—Who has not had just the Experience of Mr. Curtis?—Who may not have the Relief South American Nervine Afforded Him?

"As a result of a severe attack of La grippe I suffered greatly from weakness and loss of appetite. I saw the benefits of the curative powers of South American Nervine and determined to give it a trial for my case. Purchased it, and almost immediately began to improve. My strength returned to me very rapidly. When I had taken three bottles I had developed a voracious appetite. I am as well to-day as ever I was, and am satisfied that I can attribute it to South American Nervine, and so words of mine in recommending it will be true to the point."

D. W. Campbell, manager of the Beaver line, was in Ottawa the other day in connection with the proposed mail contract. He confirmed the report that his company has chartered the Galia of the Ounard line. She is faster than any of the vessels at present plying on the St. Lawrence.

HOW THEN YOU LOOK! Do you like to hear it? If not, take Scott's Emulsion. 'Twill fill out your sunken cheeks, and give you a plump figure. Why not have a plump figure? Don't let disease steal a march on you.

After serious illness, like typhoid fever, pneumonia, or the grip, Hood's Sarsaparilla has wonderful strength-giving power.

The boiler of the Royal City saw mills at Vancouver, B. C., exploded on the 3rd inst, while the men were eating dinner around it. Several men were killed and many injured.

CATARHUS IS A DISEASE. Which requires a constitutional remedy. It cannot be cured by local applications.

Information has been received at the mounted police department to the effect that Inspector McLeod and his police patrol, which is endeavoring to reach the Yukon country by the overland route from Edmonton, reached Dinevan on September 30th.

FAIRLY STAGGERED. Mr. Samuel Huphris, retired carriage manufacturer, Strathroy, Ont., says: "For long I have been afflicted with kidney trouble and often had to give up my work."

SEVERE ASTHMA RELIEVED. DEAR SIR,—We have used Norway Pine Syrup in our home a great deal. I have a little boy who has asthma for five or six years, (he is only 10 now), and during the severe attacks he would be greatly relieved by using the syrup.

Much in Little. It is especially true of Hood's Pills, for no medicine has so great curative power in so small a space. They are a whole medicine.
