Something was said by the hon. member about the rate. Everyone knows—or, at least, everyone else knows—that these various treasury bills have rates which bear a relationship to the maturity date. We in this country have not been accustomed to having one-year treasury bills. We had nine-months treasury bills back in 1955 under the former government, but if one looks at the figures in the United States, or at the relationship in Canada between treasury bills and the various maturity dates, it will be seen that practically uniformly the effective rate, that is the discount rate, or the "equivalent yield", is higher according to the length of the maturity. In other words, the discount is lower on the 91-day bills than it is on the six-months bills, nine-months bills or 12-months bills, and having regard to the rates obtaining latterly in the market on these very short term obligations the rate on the 12-months bill on our offering of up to $200 million is in line with the rates prevailing.

As I have said, Mr. Chairman, no minister of finance likes paying any more in the way of interest on the money that he must borrow than he is obliged to do. I do not intend to go back over the ground I covered on a previous occasion when I pointed out the extent to which the extraordinarily heavy demand for money today is a direct consequence of the rapidity of expansion and the forces of recovery at work in the Canadian economy which have forced interest rates to higher levels. This is not a situation confined to Canada. It is a situation which is paralleled precisely by the situation in the United States and it is reflected there in higher interest rates on all manner of securities. I have before me the rates paid on United States treasury bills—the 91-day rates. They show that the rate today is the highest prevailing during the entire period since last December. On 182-day treasury bills in the United States the rate prevailing today is the highest in this period—

An hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The equivalent rate is 3.489, and that is the highest rate in the period of which I am speaking, beginning last December. Our experience is not exceptional. It is precisely the experience of the United States, and for similar reasons, namely, that there is an extraordinarily heavy demand for money. Similarly, on a previous occasion in this house I discussed the results of the bidding on the 221-day treasury bills of May 15, and there the equivalent rate of discount was 3.565 per cent. Again, on May 11, on the 340-day United States treasury bills the rate was 3.835 per cent. So it is quite clear to anyone who has followed rates at all that the rates on treasury bills rise according to the length of maturity. And I have pointed out that the rate existing in the United States today on the 91-day treasury bills and the 182-day treasury bills is the highest in the past six months.

Again, let us take note of what has been happening in Canada. It is true that, as we discussed this subject a month ago in this house, the treasury bill rate was rising in Canada, and for the reasons I have mentioned—

Mr. Hellyer: Are there any other reasons?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There are always many reasons that operate, but we are speaking now of the effective and strong factors which are accounting for the movement of interest rates today, and while the treasury bill rate in Canada on the 91-day bills did rise in recent weeks, as we were reminded, the fact is that last week the treasury bill rate was down. The rate in the previous week was virtually the same on 91-day bills as it had been the week before that but, as I say, the rate last week was down whereas in the United States it rose. Similarly, on the 182-day bills the rate last week was down. In Canada, we have had offerings now over a period of the last four weeks on 182-day treasury bills, and the offering of May 29 sold at the lowest rate in this period. These are short periods, and I do not intend to draw any sweeping conclusions from these facts, but I think, in fairness, that when the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam undertakes to speak on this subject he should speak with knowledge of the facts and not in the manner he did today.

As far as the difference between interest rates in Canada and rates in United States is concerned, let me remind the committee that there has always been a difference in these rates. All effective interest rates in Canada have always been higher than those in the United States, and for a good reason. Canada is an importer of capital; Canada, as an underdeveloped country needs capital. The United States, on the other hand, is a country with a highly developed economy and a country which has a great reservoir of capital. Take any type of security at all—treasury bills, reserve bank rates, chartered banks rates, government bonds in the short or the medium or the long term field—and in every case you can find a differential, and over the long years there has always existed this difference as between rates in Canada and in the United States. There is nothing new in the present situation, and hon. members who try to make it appear that there is something new in this situation are, whether wittingly or unwittingly, misleading the public. This is a situation which has existed as long as Canada has existed, and it should not be misrepresented.

Then the statement was made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam that in permitting the banks which have taken this one-year treasury bill to include it in their 7 per cent reserve we are indulging in something highly inflationary. It is regrettable that the hon. member does not appreciate what inflation is. This is the same hon. member who was chastising the government a few days ago with regard to the tightness of money. Now he is saying, if his statement has any meaning at all, that we should not permit the banks to include their holdings of this one-year treasury bill in their 7 per cent reserve.

Mr. Regier: I did not say that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If the hon. member did not mean that, his statement was without relevance or significance to the matter that he was discussing.

To the extent to which chartered banks turn in holdings of this government bond maturing on July 1 and replace it with the 12-month treasury bill they will, as I pointed out in reply to the question of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River last night, be permitted to include this new obligation in their 7 per cent reserve holding, which they could not do before in the case of the bonds; but that is not an inflationary tactic at all. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. gentleman is contending that the rules in respect of what may be counted in the 7 per cent reserve should be tightened, then he in fact is proposing a tighter money policy.

Then he goes on to talk about the government putting its faith in the market place. Mr. Chairman, the government has to deal with the public to the extent to which the public holds its government obligations. We have to deal with those who are the creditors of the treasury, the people who have acquired those obligations. It is so interesting to hear this necessary process described as putting faith in the market place and being worthy only of the hon. member's denunciation. He says we should do something else. What is the something else? The only other thing, Mr. Chairman, is to turn loose the printing presses and debauch the currency, or to take the money from the people by compulsory means and that means harsh taxation or confiscation. This government does not propose to pursue any of those courses.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about taxation?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Therefore, I invite the hon. member to ponder well on this fact, that the government of that province which to him and those in his party who think like him is regarded as their paradise, the province of Saskatchewan, has done its financing in the market place and believe me, not so much in the market place of Canada as in the market place in New York. In the thinking of the hon. member it is all very well for the government of Saskatchewan to do these things and even to do them in New York. I am not criticizing the policy of the Saskatchewan government in this regard at all, but I do invite the hon. member to ponder well on why he castigates the federal government for dealing in precisely the same way with those who are its creditors in this country.

He is raising more bogeys today. He raised the bogey of an amendment to the Bank Act to raise the rate, an amendment to the National Housing Act to raise the rate. He has been told in this house, within the last week no less, that the government does not propose to introduce any amendments at this session to either of those acts, but he goes on raising those senseless bogeys.

Probably the last of those curious fallacies, those unique fallacies of the hon. member was his reference to the exchange rate as between the Canadian dollar and the United States dollar, and its bearing upon wider considerations affecting trade and the economies of the two countries. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to review the factors that enter into the present exchange rate. I did that in a recent debate in this house. Today the Canadian dollar is at a premium of approximately four cents over the United States dollar; but, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member evidently has quite misapprehended how this exchange differential has arisen as he has misapprehended the effect that it has on the terms of trade between Canada and the United States.

I doubt whether we shall hear a more extraordinary statement than the one he made this afternoon, namely that because of the existence of this premium Canadians had, as I understood him to say, last year paid a billion dollars more to the United States than they would otherwise have done.

Mr. Regier: No, I did not say that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is very hard to follow the hon. member in what he has to say.

Mr. Regier: I am convinced the minister would not want to misrepresent me. I said the profits, the dividends and the interest rates that were paid by the Canadian economy last year on United States investments in Canada exceeded a billion dollars. It had nothing to do with the value of the Canadian dollar.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, it would be very interesting indeed to see the hon. member produce the evidence upon which he bases that statement. You see, Mr. Chairman, it would require the assumption that there was moving across the Canadian border in terms of exchange translated into the exchange of the other country something over, I suppose, $25 billion, to have the difference in the exchange which varied throughout the year but averaged out at something like 3½ per cent, I suppose, for the whole 12 months, amount to $1 billion. However, it is a fantastic statement. The gross investment of United States capital in Canada is about $18 billion. The net is substantially less. The net United States investment in Canada today is approximately—I think if I said about $13 billion I would be pretty close to the mark. Evidently, the hon. member just takes all of the United States investment in Canada, adds to it substantially and then calculates the exchange rate on that and assumes that the whole amount moved across the border, and was changed from the currency of one country to the currency of the other country in one year. How utterly and sadly fantastic and, Mr. Chairman, we have to sit here and listen to such things in the Canadian House of Commons!

Mr. Regier: I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is very hard to understand what the hon. member does mean.

Mr. Regier: I will agree with that; it is hard for the minister.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am very pleased to receive that generous absolution at the hands of the hon. member. One final observation, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Pickersgill: Not final!

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Final for the time being. The hon. member for Welland, back on his favourite theme preaching gloom and making things look as black as possible, and hurting the country's credit just as much as gloomy and erroneous statements can hurt it—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Why say that?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —said that interest rates were going up week after week. I invite the hon. member to ponder on the fact that the rates on our treasury bills were down last week.

Mr. McMillan: That is the first time.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member says yes. Perhaps it would have been a little fair on his part if he had said that when he was speaking earlier—

Mr. McIlraith: He did say it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —instead of saying interest rates were going up week after week.

Mr. Chevrier: There is no fairer member than the hon. member for Welland.

Mr. McMillan: On a question of privilege; I did say that last week our interest rates on our 91 treasury bills were down in the market, and the differential with those of the United States was not as large.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member did say also—and I took down his words as he said them—that interest rates are going up week after week. There have been periods when they were going up, but why make things worse than they are, why distort the facts, always on the side of gloom? Let us rather, in deference to our duty as Canadians and the responsibility that is shared by all hon. members of this house in relation to the credit of this country, seek not to put an unwarranted gloomy interpretation or colour upon the facts, but let us deal with facts and not with gloom.

Mr. Hellyer: When did you develop that high and lofty attitude?

Mr. McMillan: Would the minister permit a question? Did they not go up yesterday when these treasury bills were sold to nearly 5½ per cent?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, this is the first offering in this one-year field in the history of Canada.

Mr. Regier: I regret very much that I have to differ so violently with the minister. I also regret that the minister had to reply almost immediately and that his officials were unable to prepare a speech which he might have been able to deliver because I am convinced that a prepared speech of that kind would have made for much more reasonableness than the one to which we have had to listen. In the first place, the minister again referred to his statement last night when he said, as found on page 4278 of Hansard, that the $200 million "has been very heavily oversubscribed". The minister knows very well that when you offer treasury bills there is just no such animal as oversubscription.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Nonsense.

Mr. Regier: There are offers of many kinds and varied amounts, and the government accepts $200 million of the best offers that are being made. It is simply ridiculous to claim that there was an oversubscription of an offering of treasury bills because, having regard to the way in which treasury bills are marketed, it is absolutely impossible for anyone ever to claim that an offering was heavily oversubscribed or even in any way oversubscribed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is nonsense.

Mr. Regier: I give the minister full marks for having the best interests of the Canadian people at heart, and I assume that when these offerings were opened yesterday at 5 p.m., I believe, the minister's advisers placed before him the $200 million of offerings with the lowest effective yield and the minister accepted them. There may well have been $1 billion or $5 billion offered to the minister. However, if he had accepted any of these other offers he would have had to pay a higher rate. I do not think the minister is able to argue successfully that the offering of treasury bills was heavily oversubscribed. We have never heard this terminology before with regard to treasury bills. When bonds are offered bearing a fixed rate of interest we can easily have oversubscription. When the government offers at par Canada savings bonds bearing a fixed rate of interest and having a fixed price there may be oversubscription. However, there never is oversubscription when you offer anything on the auction block.

I am not going to use terms that the minister loves to use such as "unadulterated nonsense". I thought he had forgotten that the other day when he only said that I was mixed up. I thought the minister was making considerable progress in his use of language with regard to opinions expressed by the opposition. However, the minister made one very serious error when he implied, I think even more than implied, that we in this group take satisfaction in a lack of faith in the government on the part of the Canadian people. I must inform the minister immediately that the only reason I am here and the only reason I rise at this time is not to express any satisfaction but to express our regrets at the lack of faith. I am attempting in my own humble way to advocate remedies which will restore the faith of the Canadian people in the monetary policy that the government of the day is pursuing.

I know that if you say a thing often enough maybe enough of the voters will believe you and the minister again expressed his belief that there was a heavy demand on the money available today. Again I must ask him, who is exercising the heavy demand? Is it the industrial heart of Canada? Is it the consumers of Canada or is it the minister himself who is exerting the heavy demand? I should like to refer to the announcement made a little while ago by the banks of Canada. As if by magic, according to the interpretation of the minister, the banks of Canada announced at the same time that it was necessary to curtail the issuance of credit for the expansion of Canadian enterprise. I would point out that it was none other than the Minister of Finance who expressed his needs to the banking institutions of Canada in no uncertain terms and who impressed upon the banks that his needs ought to come first as they were of so much greater importance and that the expansion of the Canadian economy ought to take a secondary role.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That was never said.

Mr. Regier: The minister, of course, completely ignored the main tenor of my remarks in which I asked the minister where he expected to obtain the rest of the capital needs of the government. Some $1,800 million has to be raised before March 31 next. He has already had to pay an interest rate of 4.49 per cent on his initial issue, so what kind of interest rate may he well have to offer before March 31 next?

The minister also went to great length to explain the difference between rates on issues for which he is responsible and on the offerings of the United States government. He indicated yesterday that an offering almost like the one that he put out yesterday, a one-year United States treasury bill, produced a yield of 4.05 per cent. I assume that is in terms of United States dollars which means that in terms of Canadian dollars the yield would be slightly under 4 per cent. However, the money invested is United States money so it would be 4.05 per cent. For years now our dollar has been worth more than the United States dollar and we fail to understand why an offering by the Canadian Minister of Finance should have to pay an effective rate of 4.49 per cent when south of the border, where their money is worth less, they are able to obtain money for 4.05 per cent.

The minister was very mixed up in his interpretation of the billion dollars that has to leave Canada to pay homage to United States investment in Canada. It had nothing whatever to do with the fact that our dollar is worth more than the United States dollar. I simply reminded the minister of the information that has been available on the financial pages of the newspapers for several months that out of the 1958 Canadian economy there had to be paid to United States investors in Canada, by way of earnings on United States investment in Canada, by way of interest rates on United States holdings of Canadian securities, a sum of money in excess of a billion dollars. The minister, himself, by listing United States investments in Canada tended to confirm these newspaper reports. He indicated that there was invested in Canada by United States investors a sum of money in excess of $18,000 million, and the return on that is somewhere in the neighbourhood of 4.5 per cent. I am not saying the return is excessive at all.

However, I am attempting to point out that the failure of the government of Canada to supply leadership to the Canadian people, to supply the incentive to the Canadian people to be responsible for the development of Canadian enterprise, the failure of their leadership to appeal to the patriotism of the Canadian people to have confidence in the Canada of tomorrow, leads us to rely more and more for our prosperity on the confidence and faith that others have in us and in our resources. This places us ever more in hock to outside interests. The longer this condition is permitted to continue, the longer we are postponing the event. Some day Shylock will demand his pound of flesh and the Canadian people will suffer the consequence. I know that this is not peculiar to the federal Minister of Finance. Almost all levels of government and very certainly most individual Canadians are living beyond their means. However, hitherto the federal ministers of finance have been the prime leaders in sponsoring the philosophy that we can continue to borrow to keep pace with eternal prosperity. Those days must end, and they will end.

The sooner that Canadians in all walks of life, under the leadership of the Minister of Finance, begin to realize that we have to buy for the growing boy a new set of breeches every year, that if necessary we have to reduce our expenditures in order that we might eventually own Canada ourselves, the better off we will be. However, the minister continues to place blind reliance on the money market, puts his head in the sand and hopes that maybe tomorrow the sun will shine. He compares himself with the minister of finance of Saskatchewan. There simply is no comparison between the authority and power of this federal Minister of Finance and the authority and power of the minister of finance of any province. I believe even the minister will agree that compared to other provinces, the minister of finance of Saskatchewan, Mr. Fines, has done well indeed.

The minister asks, what is our remedy? He offers what he imagines is our remedy. He says, by implication at least, that the C.C.F. is advocating we use the printing press. I believe the Minister of Finance knows better than that. Throughout its entire history, while the C.C.F. has advocated monetary reform, it has never advocated turning the handle of the printing press and turning out money for which there is no value. There is only one political movement of which I know that has advocated that, and that is the Social Credit movement. Let me warn the minister that if he pursues his present course of action, those irresponsible advocates of monetary reform are going to grow in influence throughout Canada. I am very annoyed, and I regret very much the evidence of the growth of a movement such as the Union des Electeurs in Quebec, where they are able to persuade municipality after municipality that the minister should use the Bank of Canada to finance, without interest, all the capital needs of our municipal governments. The list of municipalities advocating this measure is becoming alarmingly large.

This is an irresponsible recommendation and the minister well knows it is irresponsible. However, if the minister is going to follow his reactionary policies these counter movements are going to grow. You will find one city council after another throughout Canada endorsing the submissions of the Union des Electeurs. We have never advocated the issuance of more currency than is necessary to meet the needs of the Canadian economy. However, we have asked the minister to make a survey by means of a national investment board, royal commission or otherwise—let him decide whatever means he thinks best—of the credit resources available within the Canadian economy. We have asked for a survey of the credit needs of the various levels of government in Canada, of industrial enterprises and of individuals in Canada. The minister has, hitherto, laughed off all these recommendations.

I should like to spend many minutes more in offering many other recommendations as to how the minister might undertake measures that would relieve him of the very difficult situation in which I think he ought to admit he is. Our submission is that the sooner the minister admits he is in difficulty, the sooner we will begin to find a solution and, as real Canadians we will work our way out of the predicament in which we are now.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

[Mr. Regier.]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1960, the sum of $634,617,069.94 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada as set forth in the resolution concurred in this day in committee of supply.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-53, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1960.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a second time? By leave, now.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have not had time to look at the bill. Will the minister just assure us that it is in the identical form of its predecessors?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The bill is just in the usual form. There are four clauses which have now become standard and the schedules which fully contain the items in respect of which more than one sixth is being appropriated.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

Schedules agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT AND OPERATION, APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS, ETC.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the third reading of Bill C-49, to provide for the establishment of a national energy board.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, the bill before the house now for third reading is a much different and much improved bill from that presented to the house by the government. It will be recalled that at the second reading of the bill, when the principle was before the house for approval, the opposition agreed to the principle of the bill, namely that a national energy board be set up to deal with oil and gas pipe lines, the export of gas and power and certain related matters. But at that stage they opposed certain clauses in the bill; as a matter of fact they opposed strongly some of the individual clauses. The opposition argued that they were contrary to the type of provisions that should be in such a bill and indeed wrong in principle in many cases.

The main items we opposed on the second reading when we were approving the principle of the bill may be summarized in this way. I will not attempt to deal with them all but only with the main ones. We opposed the duplication of government services which we thought was inherent in the wide advisory powers given to the energy board under clause 22 of the bill. In other words, we argued that the board would be duplicating services already performed by such government agencies as the atomic energy control board, the dominion coal board and other bodies of a similar type.

Then we opposed at some length what we thought were the arbitrary and excessive powers which the minister or the governor in council, as the case may be, was seeking under the bill which was submitted. We thought those powers were quite excessive and that no case could be made out for them. The type of arbitrary power to which I am referring was, for instance, the minister's right to refuse to table reports and studies made by the board on matters of energy under clause 22 (1), that is to say reports and studies that were not of a confidential nature.

Then we opposed the arbitrary power, as we saw it, inherent in clause 49 which was a clause in part III of the bill which deals with the issuance of certificates of public convenience and necessity governing the construction and operation of pipe lines. The arbitrary power we opposed there was the right of the governor in council to exempt lines from certain of the effective clauses in the operation of part III of the bill. A similar power was contained in clause 85 (2) of the bill which permitted the governor in council by regulation to exempt any person or class of persons of any product or class of products or any transactions, persons or areas from the operation of all or any of the provisions of part VI of the bill which was the part having to do with the export and import of gas and power. We argued that that was an arbitrary power that was wrongly being sought by the governor in council.

Then another very important objection to the bill was on clause 87, which had to do with the import of oil. There were really two parts to our objection to that clause. There was the same argument as we applied to other arbitrary powers; the governor in council seeking arbitrary powers to impose import controls and quotas on the import of oil. We thought there was no emergency warranting that step and that no case had been made out for it, and we also opposed such an important matter of change in government policy as controlling the import of oil and putting an embargo upon it being decided by the governor in council. We argued that it should be determined by parliament before any such far-reaching step was taken.

On second reading we also requested that the bill go to a standing committee. I still adhere to that view, but it is neither here nor there now because we were voted down on it and our request was not acceded to. We thought and still think it was the type of bill which should have gone to a standing committee. There were many clauses in the bill which could have been better drafted by a standing committee, but as I say our request was not acceded to.

At the committee stage of the bill a great many amendments were put forward. I think there were some 30 in all. Seventeen amendments were adopted, 11 were rejected and two were withdrawn. But the effect of those amendments was very important. We think that those amendments materially improved the bill. Some of them went very far in removing our objections to specific clauses of the bill. Perhaps in fairness I should deal with some of these amendments, not in a detailed way, but in order to make my point. We did put forward an important amendment to reduce the number of members of the board from five to three. We thought that would make for a better board, a stronger board in all the circumstances bearing in mind the volume and nature of the work and the difficulty in securing an adequate number of able men. But the committee in its wisdom unfortunately rejected that request.

Then we put forward another amendment which we thought was of considerable importance but which was also rejected. That amendment had to do with a provision in clause 83 of the bill. It will be recalled that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) on second reading spoke about the desirability of being sure that in the export of gas the price charged by exporters to the United States was not less than that charged to Canadians in like conditions. The Prime Minister's remarks will be found at the bottom of page 4025 of Hansard for May 26 last, where he said:

> As to the price to be charged for gas and power, it must be just and reasonable in relation to the public interests. With the implementation of this legislation, no longer will there be any suspicion that the Canadian consumer is being forced to subsidize the foreign markets or that Canadian industries will be asked to pay higher prices for their industries—

I think there is a printer's error there and it should read "energy".

> —than those paid by foreign industries using Canadian energy.

We thought the bill should have such a safeguard in it and we put forward an amendment to clause 83 (b) to that effect. Clause 83 (b) is the clause having to do with an application to the board for a licence to export, and it was argued in committee that that matter was adequately taken care of by the provision in the clause as it stood, namely:

> —board shall satisfy itself that
> (b) the price to be charged by an applicant for gas or power exported by him is just and reasonable in relation to the public interest.

The government argued that that provision adequately took care of the situation and our amendment was rejected. We did not quite agree with that view, but in any event the amendment was rejected. But we do think now that in the light of the discussion on that point at the committee stage it is highly probable that the board, in interpreting the meaning of the words "just and reasonable", is likely to take some notice of the argument advanced on this clause in the committee stage and is likely to try to apply that criterion as far as it can. For that reason I am making no more of our suggested amendment at this point. I think it was a correct amendment and I regret it was not accepted; but we think, having regard to all the circumstances, that the board will probably take cognizance of it anyway under the requirement that they shall satisfy themselves that the price to be charged is just and reasonable in relation to the public interest. The bill still does not do in so many words what the Prime Minister claimed it would do in this respect; but that is a point which does not fall to be argued here.

As to amendments which were adopted, may I say this. First of all there was our objection to the arbitrary powers which I mentioned a moment ago contained in clause 49 of the bill. That is the clause permitting the governor in council to exempt lines from the operation of part III of the bill; that is the part having to do with certificates of public convenience and necessity in the construction and operation of pipe lines. That arbitrary power was removed from the bill in the committee stage. The government acceded to that, and I am not sure that they did not take our criticism and put it in the form of an amendment themselves. In any event, they acceded to our request and it was embodied in an amendment and that objectionable feature was removed from that clause.

Then there was the arbitrary power contained in clause 85 (2), which had the effect, we thought, of permitting the governor in council by regulation virtually to exempt gas pipe lines and gas exporters from the operation of the export provisions of the bill. We felt very strongly about that and so argued, and the government accepted an amendment which removed that objectionable subclause completely from the bill. It is quite true that a much more limited subclause was put in clause 87 relating to oil.

When we are dealing with oil products, there are, of course, a great variety of products and it is difficult to envisage any circumstance in which anyone would want to bring all of them under control; and while there might still be a case made for arguing against the arbitrary power of that clause, it is a very much more limited power and a case can be made for its retention, and I make no more of that point. The main point we were making was achieved by the removal of subclause (2) of clause 85.

Then, when we come to clause 87, the clause permitting the governor in council by declaration to extend the application of the bill to oil—to provide for regulation and control of oil imports and exports—we advanced a somewhat extensive argument. I sought to develop it as some length; I will not repeat what was said on that occasion, because it can be found on page 4028 of Hansard. But we did put forward arguments on two grounds. One of those grounds was the improper granting of arbitrary power. The other was that a decision of this nature was so important and so far-reaching in relation to trade policy that no action should be taken other than by a decision of parliament, and that parliament should have control of this matter. We maintained that there was no foreseeable situation in which there would not be sufficient time for parliament to deal with the subject should the need ever arise. We addressed ourselves, also, to a remark which the minister made as reported at page 3929 of Hansard when presenting the bill for second reading, on which occasion he said:

> The case with respect to licensing imports of oil is different and more complicated. I do not propose to argue the case fully today. It would be premature to do so until the second report of the Borden commission in respect of this matter has been received and considered.

We objected to the clause in the light of that statement, too. In any event, our arguments and objections on that point were recognized by the government, and the government, of its own volition, after our views had been expressed, brought forward an amendment which, while it did not fully meet the situation as we saw it, did go a very long way toward meeting our objection. Although the clause as amended does not permit parliament to make the original decision as to whether or not import control should be applied to oil, it does provide that if the government makes such a decision parliament shall have the opportunity of debating the matter promptly and of revoking the decision taken. So that while this could, I suppose, properly be called second best from the point of view of our argument, it does go a very long way toward meeting our wishes on that point, and materially improves the bill.

I have sought to deal with this subject fairly briefly at this stage, and I have endeavoured not to reopen old arguments. I think I have been fair in picking out only those amendments which best serve to illustrate the point I am seeking to make. There were a great many other amendments which I could deal with, some of them of considerable importance, but though they are important they do not illustrate the point I have in mind.

I may say that had the amendments with which I have been dealing not been accepted in committee I do not see how we could now accept the whole bill as it would have been presented to us. However, these amendments having been made, and having gone so far toward meeting the objections we raised, we believe that on balance the bill is very markedly improved. The adoption of 17 amendments goes a very long way in improving the measure. I do not suppose I ought to comment on the work which was done in committee—work in which I, myself, participated—but I think all hon. members will agree that the bill has been improved as compared with the form in which it was first introduced.

We on this side have been sharply critical of the government for not enunciating its policy on this important subject earlier. Now that this policy has finally been announced and the present measure presented to parliament; now that the discussion in committee has been completed, and the situation in the country and in the industry being such that action should be promptly taken, we feel that no useful or proper purpose would be served by our presenting any amendments on third reading. While we have some reservations about certain parts of the bill, we think it is sufficiently improved for us to be able to concur in the third reading at this time and we hope that the government, when the bill has passed through all its stages, will proclaim it immediately and set about the task, which I think will probably be a difficult one, of finding as competent a board as it can to exercise the powers granted by this legislation.

In this, we hope the government will be successful, because the influence of the board on the industry itself and on the economy of the country as a whole will be substantial. We, therefore, in the light of the explanations I have made, are prepared to accord third reading to the bill.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the basic position of the three parties in the house has not materially changed since second reading. The Liberal party voted for second reading of the bill. They are now more in agreement with that vote than they were when they made it, so that on third reading they are very much in favour of this legislation.

As far as we are concerned, we acknowledge that certain improvements have been made. We are pleased that the government has gone some distance toward improving the legislation which was brought before this house, and we are aware that the government has acknowledged, in moving certain amendments, the role played by opposition members in advancing various propositions and in making certain criticisms of the measure as originally brought down.

However, our fundamental objection remains; namely that under this legislation the consumers of this country, both householders and industry, will pay higher prices for natural gas and for oil than are necessary. The role of the federal government in this field should have been a more positive one, a more active one, and one which would have resulted in the lowering of costs of energy to Canadians consumers and Canadian industry.

We are still very much concerned that the government has failed to implement the recommendation of the Borden commission that, in proceeding with the setting up of an energy board and the establishment of rates, a return on the shareholders' equity alone should be considered, and not a net return on all the assets of a corporation which would result in a much greater return on the shareholders' equity. The failure of the government to implement that proposition in the legislation as guidance to the board, will, of course, mean higher prices for gas and oil in the future.

There are certain clauses in the bill which have been improved, and these have been outlined very thoroughly by the hon. member for Ottawa West. In our opinion, while the government has agreed to a certain curtailment of the all-embracing power for which provision was originally made in this bill, there are still too many examples of instances where the government has retained arbitrary powers for itself. I might refer, in particular, to clause 44 which reads:

> The board may, subject to the approval of the governor in council, issue a certificate in respect of a pipe line or an international power line—

I could refer to clause 47:

> Subject to subsection 2, the board may by order, with the approval of the governor in council, revoke or suspend a certificate if, in the opinion of the board, the person to whom it was issued has violated or failed to comply with any term or condition thereof.

We feel that in a case of wrongdoing or failure to abide by the terms of a certificate, power should not be retained by the governor in council to allow the company to break the terms of its certificate and still remain in existence without a penalty being provided. This could lead to very great abuses; it could lead to favouritism and it could lead to a type of pork barrel by a government that wished to play favourites under certain conditions.

Again, Mr. Speaker, we acknowledge certain substantial improvements in the bill, but there are certain provisions still remaining that we feel should have been improved by the committee. Clause 61 of the bill is not the only one that gives us concern, but is it one that is very ill-defined and has not been adequately explained by the minister. It reads as follows:

> Where the gas transmitted by a company through its pipe line from any place within a province to any place outside the province is the property of the company, such proportion as the board may fix of the differential between the amount paid by the company for the gas and the amount for which the gas is sold by the company shall for the purposes of this part be deemed to be a toll charged by the company to the purchaser for the transmission thereof.

In other words, under clause 61, it is not necessary for the board to control the difference between the cost of gas going into a pipe line and the price of gas coming out of a pipe line but only an undefined portion of that difference, which might, in the opinion of the board, be a very small part of the difference, and therefore it might result in very ineffective and inadequate action by the board in controlling tolls for the transmission of gas.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, we think the government should have presented an alternative policy to this house. Not only should the board have had more exact instructions, not only should the governor in council have had less power to set aside decisions of the board, not only should profits and returns have been confined to shareholders' equity, but once again we say that in our opinion a public utility such as this, something that is a natural monopoly, is a field for public ownership, no matter what the political theories of any political party may be, a form of ownership which would give to the Canadian consumer energy at the lowest possible price.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL TAX-SHARING ARRANGEMENTS ACT

FURTHER EXTENSION OF INCOME TAX RATE

The house resumed, from Tuesday, June 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) for the second reading of Bill No. C-41, to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a question of privilege. Last night you asked me whether I had participated in the debate. I indicated that I had not, that I had merely spoken on a point of order. I based my assumption on the faulty listing of the page number on the table of contents of Hansard of May 6. I must now apologize to you and to your advisers. I had spoken.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you. It was a mistake that might very easily arise from the way the index appeared.

(Translation):

Mr. Noel Dorion (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I was not in the house last night when the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) made his speech about the problem which is now before the house. On reading it however, I noted that, at one point, the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis) chipped in to insinuate that, during the speech, Conservative members from Quebec were hiding behind the curtains. That insinuation is all the more ill-willed and unjustified in that the hon. member knew—

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member address himself to the Chair.

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: I never said that the Conservative members were—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dorion) claims, regarding a vote in connection with provincial-federal relations, I said that the federal Conservative members had left the house. In fact, what I meant to say was that during a similar vote some members remained behind the curtains, and I maintain what I said.

Mr. Dorion: I take note of the correction made by the hon. member and I only wish to add that at the time everyone knew that many of us were attending the meeting of the special committee on broadcasting and I would have been most happy to hear the hon. member for Laurier myself.

Besides I doubt that what the hon. member for St. Denis just said or his remarks made the impression on the public he wanted to make. Indeed, in Quebec and elsewhere, it is well known that Conservative members from my province, far from following the lead of the hon. member for St. Denis and remaining silent for a lengthy period of time, did not wait 20 years before rising in the house and voicing their opinions on problems of interest to their constituents. Everyone knows that their thoughts and words have never been shackled or regimented. Everyone knows that never in the past 22 years has Quebec been represented by such free, such forthright and such outspoken members.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that the reference to my past attitude with regard to votes taken in this house, or to speeches I may or may not have made, has nothing to do with the matter that is before the house.

Mr. Dorion: Having expressed, in the first part of his speech opinions which, coming from him, have a hollow sound because they are so new, and which, I readily recognize, are in accordance with the doctrine of fiscal autonomy we have been preaching for years, the hon. member for Laurier attempted to show inconsistencies in our position and, in a thunderous voice, as I am told, he urged us to vote against a measure which, I must point out, originated back in the days when the Liberal party was in office.

What a strange logic. There is the result of the efforts he has been making—quite in vain—since his return to politics, to speak on behalf of the province of Quebec. Obviously, it is no easy task for him to shed his past, after he has had a share in the works of the federal government, with astonishing regularity and continuity, throughout the dark days when the provinces stood at the mercy of the decisions and dictates of its leaders, who rebuffed with scornful mockery anyone who dared to seek fiscal freedom for the provinces and thus sought to insure the upholding and respect of the constitution without which Canada, as it now exists, would have been no more than a marvelous Utopia.

The latter part of the speech made by the hon. member for Laurier, where he implies that Quebec Conservatives are renegades and threatens them with electoral come-uppance, conjured up in my memory a short story by Villiers de l'Isle Adam entitled Plagiaries of Thunder. The action took place in a faraway island where some huge aras, an Australian species of macaws, felt they could spread terror by imitating the thunder. One day an eagle happened by, recognized them and terrified them. The aras attempted rather unsuccessfully, to imitate the cry of the eagle, but could not from then on frighten the inhabitants of the island who had by now realized that, after all, the would-be eagles were mere parrots.

By this comparison I do not wish to minimize the merits and the high qualities of the hon. member for Laurier. But I want to tell him that his pronouncements on autonomy are, as far as I am concerned, strongly reminiscent of this story, and that we Quebec Conservatives will surely not allow ourselves to be frightened by plagiaries of thunder, whoever they may be and whencesoever they may come from.

The bill introduced today by the government is after all but the fulfilment of the following promise made in the speech from the throne:

> My government will recommend an amendment to the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act to extend for another year the increase made last year in the provincial share of personal income tax revenue.

In other words, the purpose of this bill is to maintain the 13 per cent income tax deductions granted to the taxpayers of the provinces where a similar tax is already levied.

Personally, Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation in saying, without any feeling of repudiating my convictions, that I am happy to support this bill for several reasons, particularly because it clearly renews the recognition of the constitutional right of the provinces to tax incomes and to exercise this right freely. The hon. members of the house know the origin of this bill. Last year, I had the opportunity to recall the battles that certain provinces have had to wage against the federal government since the war to obtain practical recognition of the exercise of a right which is specifically and clearly expressed in the Constitutional Act of 1867.

I have referred to the high-handed and uncompromising way in which some of them were treated at the federal-provincial conferences held between 1940 and 1956. I do not intend to go over this particularly tragical phase of the relations between the federal government and the provinces, during which our friends of the opposition were far from having those feelings of autonomy that they so glibly talk about now that they no longer have the responsibility of power. To keep within the limits of this legislation, I would like to relate briefly how the government of the day was compelled to change its mind and to adopt the act 4-5 Elizabeth II(1956) the beneficial results of which are only increased and extended under this bill.

During the provincial session of 1953-1954, the Quebec government which, until then and as was strictly within its rights, had refused to renew the tax arrangements passed with the federal government during the war, decided to set up a provincial income tax, thus affirming a constitutional and undeniable right. As a result and because the province was exercising a right which is essential to its freedom in matters of taxation, a number of taxpayers had to pay double tribute to the fiscal authorities.

What was then the position of the government, the surviving members of which now set themselves up as champions of provincial autonomy? What theory was to guide those who, during each election, kept on recalling in the province of Quebec the illustrious memory of Sir Wilfrid Laurier? Were they going at last to be guided by the ideas of that great leader who, as early as 1905, had said here in the House of Commons:

> It is a sound principle of finance, and a still sounder principle of government, that those who have the duty of expending the revenue of a country should also be saddled with the responsibility of levying and providing it.

Alas no! It must be said that the prime minister of this country was far from having in the province of Quebec assistants of his own calibre. Mr. Lesage, for one, far from recognizing the rights of the provinces, did not care a fig for them when, in April, 1954, he said:

> This double taxation is exclusively due to the decision of the Quebec government which now attempts to throw the blame upon the Canadian government. This reminds me of the little boy—

Mind you, I am still quoting—

> —who pulled the cat's tail and replied to his father, who had told him to stop: "I am not doing the pulling: the cat is."

Not content with that quip of questionable taste, he went so far as to set himself up as a prophet and went on to say:

> Some would lay down as a principle that any province which has not signed an agreement should be entitled to levy deductible taxes in proportion to the amount it would receive under the agreements . . . We can already see—> —the tremendous confusion that would follow the application of that principle subscribed to by the Conservatives at their last convention.

Of course, at that time Mr. Lesage never thought that the first one who would apply, at least in part, that Conservative policy would be none other than his own leader, Mr. Louis St. Laurent who, two years later, reducing to silence the small politicians surrounding him, putting aside all narrow, mean and political considerations, became the instigator of the 4-5 Elizabeth II act, chapter 29, adopted on January 31, 1956. Well, Mr. Speaker, that act is at the very origin of the bill that is introduced today, in which the principle of deduction is quite clearly stated.

I have read with interest the debate that has been held on that legislation. I have looked in vain for what was said on that occasion by the hon. member for Laurier and the other Liberal members of the province of Quebec. They were completely mum. Not one of those who, today, in the opposition, want to show us the way and who try to criticize our attitudes, not one of them has risen to denounce the remarks made two years earlier by Mr. Lesage, or at least to tone them down. Not one of them dared state the autonomist argument so loudly upheld by the hon. member for Laurier now that he is in the opposition.

In order to defend the conciliating attitude of Mr. St. Laurent and justify his new policy —a Conservative policy, according to Mr. Lesage—they had to resort to Mr. Walter Tucker, former Liberal chief of Saskatchewan and then Liberal member for Rosthern, whose speech was to be a source of inspiration for our friends opposite.

On that same occasion, the members of the Conservative opposition did not fail to make statements which are and I trust always will be a source of inspiration for this government. Thus, the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), recalled in clear and precise language that left no room for doubt the theory denounced two years before by Mr. Lesage and his friends, and which their leader, Mr. St. Laurent, was at that time consecrating by legislation with regard to individual and corporation income taxes.

(Text):

When this field is entered into or when negotiations are entered upon with a view to arriving at understandings or divisions of the fields of taxation between the dominion and provincial authorities, let us remember, as the dominion government is prone to forget, that the provinces are in those fields not by leave of anyone; they are there as of right. It is their constitutional right. When there are suggestions from the dominion government about allowing the provinces to occupy some of this field, referring to that as a concession, we have a measure, Mr. Speaker, of the error in the federal government's thinking.

(Translation):

The present Speaker of the house will allow me to recall what he himself said on that occasion:

(Text):

I think those who believe that the federal system means something in this country and should be preserved owe a great deal to the fortitude of the people of Quebec, who have maintained that position throughout the last 10 years since the war. But even Quebec felt the pinch of the conditions with which they were confronted, and in 1954 and 1955 met something of a crisis which required the province to levy income taxes of their own, something which proved to be an embarrassment to them, and certainly to the federal government, and which resulted in a concession from Ottawa, namely a 10 per cent abatement in the personal income tax field. I think that is probably the genesis of the new agreements or the new arrangements which are now under consideration.

(Translation):

That new trend in the fiscal policy of the federal government was to become still more pronounced and definite with the coming to power of the Conservative administration. In that same debate, the man who is now the head of this nation had forecast it as follows:

(Text):

When I go back to 1945 I remember the great hopes that were held; and I am in agreement with my hon. friend the minister in this regard that the matter is complex. It is one of the most difficult problems that parliament, or the government, can be called upon to deal with, because there are so many facets, so many difficulties and so many situations that demand not an arbitrary attitude but a compromising and considered one.

(Translation):

And later, admitting that that legislation was a step in the right direction, he added:

(Text):

Under our constitution the provinces were never intended to be beggars. The provinces have responsibilities, the provinces have fields of action, and the concentration of power and authority in the federal government with respect to taxation has had an adverse effect.

(Translation):

Such was the spirit which, under the new regime, was to form the basis of the relations between the federal state and the provincial governments. That spirit, all provincial governments at the 1957 conference were able to note and to appreciate, and give credit for it to this government. They realized that the atmosphere had changed, that they were entering upon a new era, that the provinces, from then on, would no longer be considered as vassals, obliged to bow to the federal state's will and demands.

After two days of discussion, before they separated, the representatives of the country and of the provinces who had taken part in those meetings agreed on the text of a press communiqué which included the following paragraph:

Possible changes in the Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act were discussed, but it was understood that no endeavour would be made to reach conclusion on this matter prior to further consideration of the subject by the dominion government, in the light of the public statement made by the provincial representatives in open sessions and the discussions which took place in committee.

In other words, since from then on conclusions would no more precede but follow discussions, since from then on, to reach those conclusions, the ten provinces as well as the federal state would be entitled to express their opinion, we could no longer afford the luxury of improvisation and hasty action. Besides, the law of January 1956 covered a five-year period, which has not yet expired. Meanwhile, as early as January 1958, this government hastened to increase that portion of taxes to be paid to the provinces, and to increase from 10 to 13 per cent the income tax deduction for the taxpayers of provinces that exercise their own power of taxation.

Considering the importance of the problem and the impact that a slap-dash solution might bring about, the government tried to avoid hasty steps. At the second but last conference, at the suggestion of Mr. Frost and by common agreement, a committee was formed made up of federal and provincial officials to study technical problems raised by fiscal and economic relations between the various governments. On January 15 last, the Prime Minister announced that recourse would be had to this committee to prepare a conference of finance ministers of the various provinces under the chairmanship of the federal Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to say, in the budget debate, how this policy seemed wise and forward-looking, in my opinion. The conference will make it possible to probe several aspects of this far-reaching problem of taxation in Canada. It will give rise to exchanges of views which are essential and which, I am sure, are such as to create an atmosphere of good will and understanding which is a necessity in a country with a constitutional organization such as ours.

In view of the abundance and variety of legislation, both at the federal and provincial level, in view of the frictions that are likely to occur from time to time, this conference will, I firmly believe, be the first step towards an agreement which, this time, will give due consideration to the requirements of the constitution, to its evolution since 1867, and to the legitimate needs and various views of the provinces and of the federal government.

This, Mr. Speaker, explains why and in what spirit I shall heartily vote in favour of the bill placed before us today by the Minister of Finance, convinced as I am that in so doing, far from transgressing any principles and convictions, I shall be doing my bit—in a very modest way, I realize—for the welfare and progress of the Canadian nation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, it is not easy to understand why the government's answer to the speech made by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) should be entrusted to someone who is not a member of the cabinet. I would have thought that a minister from the province of Quebec would have answered the statements of my colleague, the hon. member for Laurier, especially following his statements last night when he said, as found on page 4277 of Hansard:

[Mr. Dorion.]

As may be noted, Mr. Speaker, the election promises made by the Conservative party in the field of fiscal relations in 1957 and 1958 have been completely disallowed. The Conservative government, far from treating the provinces with more generosity than did the Liberals, as it had promised, takes over a greater share of direct taxation. It completely ignores the concrete proposals put forward by the majority of provincial premiers in November 1957. More than that, it even refuses to meet them again.

And finally my colleague said:

It is for all those reasons that the Conservative members from Quebec should now have the courage of their convictions and denounce such betrayal. They must do so, in the name of their principles; they must do so on account of the solemn pledge they made during the last federal election; they must do so for the sake of their electors to whom they gave that pledge, but they must do so also, and perhaps above all, on account of Mr. Duplessis who is responsible for their presence here in the house.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe those statements made by my colleague deserve an answer from someone who is a member of the cabinet in this government.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not question the hon. member for Bellechasse's (Mr. Dorion) right to speak. He spoke well and I think very highly of him. I respect him very much, but I think that it should be a responsibility of a minister of the Canadian government to reply at once to a speech as momentous as the one we heard last night, especially in view of the speech made last night in North Bay by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker).

I now address myself to the Prime Minister and to the speech he made last night in North Bay.

(Text):

I said, Mr. Speaker, that I thought that the speech of my friend the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) should have been replied to at once by a minister from the province of Quebec. I did not deny that the hon. gentleman who has just spoken was qualified in his own right to express his own views; but it seemed to me that, after the challenge made last night by the hon. member for Laurier, the reply ought to have come from one of the Quebec ministers, particularly in the light of the speech made last night in North Bay by my genial friend the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker).

Last night when the Prime Minister was in North Bay, he gave the impression that we were going to have a real dominion-provincial conference. There was no reminder there last night in that happy northern Ontario community of the promise made by the Prime Minister in the elections of 1957 when he told the people of Canada and the people of the province of Quebec that when he became Prime Minister, he would call a dominion-provincial conference and resolve once and for all these fiscal differences between the two senior levels of government. That promise now is gradually, the Prime Minister hopes, evaporating in the clouds, never again to be seen and, he hopes, never again to be referred to. Certainly it was not referred to last night at the meeting in North Bay where, according to the Globe and Mail —and I think that would be an authentic bit of reporting—he made the following statement.

> Mr. Diefenbaker said a four-point proposal by the Canadian government would be submitted to the conference. It covers:
> 1. The existing fiscal arrangements;
> 2. Future problems of fiscal arrangements and possible alternative approaches;
> 3. Economic and fiscal policies and their impact on intergovernmental financial relations;
> 4. Examination of the fiscal and economic outlook.

Then the Prime Minister went on to talk about national problems. I am sure that as a result of that speech many of the mayors concluded that there is going to be not a conference of the new order, of the new character with a new look but the kind of conference that was promised by the Prime Minister in the elections of 1957, one that was going to resolve once and for all this problem of fiscal differences between the two senior levels of government. But of course we all know now that we have had no conference. The conference which was held and which lasted for two days was adjourned. It was to be reconvened but it was not reconvened. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), exercising that ingenuity of his, sent a telegram without giving the provinces an opportunity to discuss the terms or the arrangements. Instead, the government may decide not on a conference of governments but on a study group, a seminar, as the Prime Minister indicated last night. We are going to have a conference—although this he did not explain—of officials. He did not explain that. He said, "We are going to have a conference and we are going to deal with these four subjects". He did not say that what we were going to have was simply a study group, a conference of officials which is nothing more, I submit, than a new delaying tactic devised by this government in the face of its heavy deficit position and more particularly at this time devised so that it would not embarrass the premier of Ontario who is engaged in a provincial election.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Shame.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says "shame". I agree with him and say "shame".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Shame on you, for making such a ridiculous statement.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Premier Frost has said that he wants another $115 million from this government. He wants it on the basis of a proposal that is now agreed to and supported by all of the provinces, namely on the basis of the new formula, 15-15-50. But because the Minister of Finance and his colleagues would be embarrassed if they were to accede to this request of the premier of Ontario I suppose, politically, they would say at this stage "We cannot accede to your request for $115 million", they have devised the new tactic of having a study group that is going to take place after the provincial election is held in Ontario on June 11 next.

Mr. Chevrier: That is a pet theory of theirs; I refer to study groups.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No wonder the Winnipeg Free Press in an editorial dated Wednesday, May 27 had this to say about the situation which has resulted from Mr. Frost's demand for more money which was not acknowledged by the federal government, particularly in the face of the other demands made on the federal government by other provincial governments, and particularly at a time when provincial elections in the province of Ontario are taking place.

Mr. Nesbitt: It sounds as though the federal Liberals are going to try to help out the Ontario Liberals after all, although not financially.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member for Oxford may be very much interested in this matter because he comes from Ontario. I am sure he supports the request of the premier of Ontario for more money from the federal exchequer. I give my hon. friend a chance to say whether or not he supports Premier Frost in his demand for another $115 million. From his silence I take it that he does not acknowledge the offer of an opportunity to indicate this intention but that he joins with me in looking upon this particular demand of Premier Frost indeed as an extremely embarrassing one for this government and also extremely embarrassing at this time for the premier of Ontario.

Mr. Nesbitt: Then you are supporting Mr. Wintermeyer?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes. I am supporting the man who I think is likely to be the next premier of the province of Ontario.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Here is what the Winnipeg Free Press said:

At an election meeting in Peterborough the other night, the premier of Ontario again put on the record what he hopes to get from the Conservative government at Ottawa through the dominion-provincial tax-sharing arrangements. Mr. Frost told the meeting that he was still going after Ottawa for $115 million of tax money. "I haven't forgotten it", he said. "A country lawyer hangs onto a thing like a pup to a root".

Ontario Conservatives may applaud Mr. Frost's tenacity;—

Says the Winnipeg Free Press.

—but they are unlikely to be joined by Mr. Diefenbaker and Mr. Fleming. Since the Conservatives came to power in Ottawa, they have carefully avoided a full-dress conference on tax sharing. Their reasons are pretty obvious. Mr. Frost is Mr. Diefenbaker's strongest ally in the provincial field.

I would put in parenthesis—and this is not the Winnipeg Free Press—that perhaps he is not any longer; I do not know. Then the article goes on as follows:

But if the Ontario premier is given what he asks for, what about the other provinces?

Mr. Diefenbaker is firmly committed to the principle of equalization of tax payments. Just a year ago he promised in Parliament that "every province will receive the same treatment" at the dominion-provincial conference.

So an extra $100 million or so to Mr. Frost would mean proportionately larger payments to the other provinces than they are now getting. But where are the extra hundreds of millions of dollars to come from? The cupboard at Ottawa is bare. Mr. Fleming is now operating with a large annual deficit.

Yet these are the alternatives: Satisfy Mr. Frost and add to the deficit; or leave the Ontario premier still hanging on to his root.

In the circumstances it is little wonder that instead of the full scale conference, Mr. Fleming intends to meet the provincial treasurers in July to talk things over, after which there will be an investigation of federal-provincial relations by experts from Ottawa and the provinces.

This is not, of course, what Mr. Diefenbaker promised—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I allowed the hon. member to read a large section of last night's debate before intervening. Now I think he is going to extremes in his reading of the Winnipeg Free Press.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Would you like the dictionary?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I just have another two sentences.

Mr. Speaker: While editorial comments are permitted they are to be used with moderation. I trust the hon. member has now read all he wishes.

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There is just one short paragraph which I think would render the whole editorial a little more apparent than otherwise would appear.

An hon. Member: It is a Liberal paper.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It does not matter where it is from.

This is not, of course, what Mr. Diefenbaker promised before he was elected. But such a conference, or rather the promise of a conference, serves one useful purpose so far as the Conservatives are concerned. It permits Mr. Frost to talk hopefully of an extra $100 millions in tax revenues, without in any way committing Mr. Diefenbaker or Mr. Fleming to do anything about it.

It is not perhaps without some justification that the heading of that editorial is "Mr. Frost's Bone". That is the whole point. This particular device which the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) have created is for the very purpose of not embarrassing Mr. Frost, at the same time being able to offer to the mayors and to the public some justification for not having fulfilled an election promise.

I would like to remind the Minister of Finance that this very study that he has in mind can really serve no valuable purpose. Is the study necessary? Certainly when the premiers met at the last conference they dealt with the proposal that there should be a sort of study. I think the words of the former premier of Manitoba in this connection, supported by the premier of Saskatchewan, deserve to be put on the record. What I am now quoting from is the conference proceedings including Mr. Campbell's statement, where he said:

It is the contention of our government that we do not need at this stage to go into a detailed consideration of new principles—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Who is this?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Campbell, a worthy public servant who was entrusted by his people to represent them in the Ontario legislature.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Ontario?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sorry, I mean Manitoba. You see, I am so confident about the result in Ontario that I want to elect everybody.

It is the contention of our government that we do not need at this stage to go into a detailed consideration of new principles regarding our fiscal problems. We have gone through all this several times in recent years. We have had a number of meetings on this question. Our officials have met often to discuss its technical aspects.

Then Premier Douglas is reported at page 79 of the proceedings as having said this:

The fundamental failure of the present fiscal arrangements lies not so much in the method of sharing as in the size of the shares themselves.

I suggest to the Minister of Finance that the discussion which took place at that conference between Premier Frost and Mr. Campbell, which will be found at pages 89 to 92 of the proceedings, indicates clearly that they recognize that the present basis of equalization—that is the average per capita yield of the standard tax rates in the two top provinces—had been accepted by the provinces as a workable compromise. There was no question about that as far as all the provinces were concerned. All the provinces are now in favour of the new formula 15-15-50. So the only question which really remains is that of the determination of the standard tax rates, and that is a decision which cannot be made by the officials either of the provinces or of the federal government. That decision can only be made by hon. gentlemen on the ministerial benches who now look at me. That decision cannot be made by the deputy minister of finance or by corresponding officials in the provincial governments. Does the Minister of Finance not agree that that is the only remaining question, as both Mr. Frost and Mr. Campbell indicated?

Therefore to hold such a conference in the face of the fact that these officials cannot make this decision is only to resort to a delaying tactic, so that when my hon. friend presents his next budget he will then be free to indicate something which he now regards as not being free politically to do, namely to say to Mr. Frost, "We cannot accept your further demand of $115 million." That is the only reason for the holding of this conference of officials on July 6.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If you knew the facts you would think differently.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I challenge my hon. friend now to indicate I am wrong. I say the only matter now outstanding between the federal government and the provincial governments is to determine the standard rate of tax. That is all that remains, and that cannot be decided by the officials, and my hon. friend the Minister of Finance knows that is the case. There is no need any longer for a long study by officials to answer that question. As a matter of fact, the Prime Minister never talked about a study. He said, "Elect my party and in the month of September we will call a conference and resolve this question once and for all". That is what he told the people of Canada, and that is what the mayors of Ontario understood him to say last night. By the way, when he met them last night he did not say anything about calling a conference at which the municipalities would be present. I see that according to a report in tonight's paper Mr. Mooney, the secretary of that organization, expressed great regret that the Prime Minister would not afford the municipalities the opportunity of participating in a conference.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask the hon. member a question. Is that the Mr. George Mooney who was a Liberal candidate in a recent federal general election?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I believe that is the same gentleman, and I may say he is a highly trusted gentleman. My hon. friend endeavours to cast some aspersions not only on that gentleman, but he also seeks to indicate that because a man has been a Liberal candidate he is on that account not to be regarded as a trusted and competent official. If my hon. friend the Minister of Finance does not have the same appreciation of Mr. Mooney that others have, he should note that at the conference at which the Prime Minister spoke last night to the mayors of our country thought enough of Mr. Mooney to continue him as secretary of their organization. What the Prime Minister did last night was to say, "Don't worry; we'll look after the municipalities. We realize you have heavy obligations to meet. We will take care of your interests as we sit down at the table with that demanding man, Mr. Frost".

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do really enjoy the frivolities, but when the hon. gentleman proceeds to quote what I said in that direction, perhaps he will quote me rather than rely upon his fantastic and imaginative interpretation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will very gladly quote what the Prime Minister said, but it will require my looking at the second page of my hon. friend's official journal.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Try page 10.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Page 10 says: "Conservatives having difficulty in industrial relations committee."

An hon. Member: Turn to the funnies page.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): So that my time shall not be wasted I will ask my colleague to look for it.

The real issue in this situation is that the differences which prevail between the provinces and the federal government have resolved themselves into one single question.

That question can only be decided by governments; it cannot and will not be decided by officials. All the facts which will be elicited at a meeting of officials in July will merely confirm, as Premier Douglas and Premier Campbell indicated, what they already have in their treasury offices.

Why does not the Minister of Finance now, before June 11, next Thursday, indicate frankly to the people why there has not been a conference called and why this problem is not finally resolved? Let the Prime Minister be as frank now with the Canadian people and with the parliament of Canada as he was during the election. Let him tell Mr. Frost why he cannot get his $115 million or, if he is going to get it, when he may expect it, instead of continually ignoring parliament and refusing to indicate why a promise solemnly made should not be carried out. Oh, the Prime Minister, that great actor, is obviously very irritated by what I am saying and expresses his irritation by laughter.

When he spoke to the municipalities, this is what he said, this is the report which was made:

> Mr. Diefenbaker assumed that in the forthcoming conference the provinces would naturally present the viewpoint of the municipalities. There was no indication by the Prime Minister that a federal-provincial-municipal conference would be suitable.

That is not what the Prime Minister told the mayors of Canada; that is not what he said when he told the municipalities: you are poor, and added that the federal government was rich. That is not what he told them during the election. He told them then that he understood their problems and would see to it that assistance was given to them from the federal exchequer to enable them to carry on and discharge their responsibilities. That was not the same thing as the Prime Minister indicated when he stood in Massey Hall in 1957. Mr. Frost put his hand on his shoulder, then and said: "There's my boy; he's going to give me my $115 million and I am going to see to it that we have a conference where these problems will all be resolved". Mr. Frost was waiting for this conference all last fall, and when, one day, he picked up the Globe and Mail and saw in the speech from the throne that there was not going to be a conference, I presume he called the Prime Minister at once and asked him: "How am I going to get out of this?" Of course, I am imagining some of this. And the Prime Minister said to the Premier of Ontario: "Don't worry, I will get you out of this. Donald is going to have a seminar; he is going to hold a study group. We will study this problem, and by the time the study is over the provincial elections in Ontario will be over and we shall be able, afterwards, in a statesmanlike way, to resolve this problem, not in the interests of the Conservative party but in the interests of the people of Canada."

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is what the hon. gentleman will say after this conference, and as sure as I am standing here now the Prime Minister of Canada and the Minister of Finance have no more intention of giving Mr. Frost his additional $100 million than I have of walking across this floor and sitting as a permanent supporter to the right of the Minister of Finance.

Let this government stop dodging this issue. Let them recognize that the only remaining difference is one which governments alone can settle, and let them once and for all face up to this problem of dominion-provincial relations as the government of Canada was expected to do by the electorate when this administration was entrusted with office in June of 1957 and March of 1958.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not for a moment pretend that in the two minutes which remain prior to the adjournment at six o'clock I can hope to do justice to the remarks which have just entertained us and enlivened the proceedings of this house, let alone to the remarks which have preceded the stirring and memorable observations which have just issued in a torrent from the mouth of the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin).

I think I shall content myself, in these few remaining seconds, by saying that the hon. member for Essex East was undoubtedly at his theatrical best today. The flights of imagination were simply superb. We have grown accustomed to expect these flights in the airy realms of fiction, but today the hon. member was undoubtedly at his incomparable best. It was a demonstration, indeed, of an hon. member preaching without a text.

It was a wandering exposition. The hon. member included some Liberal padding by reading from the Winnipeg Free Press and from speeches made by his colleagues. Subtracting that padding from his remarks, they seemed to come down to this—that the hon. member is a self-confessed imaginative citizen.

On motion of Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the leader of the house what the business is to be tomorrow?

Mr. Green: We should like to finish this debate and then go on with the estimates of the Department of Public Works and the estimates of the Department of Fisheries. On Monday we would take a supply motion with, by agreement, a vote at 8.15 p.m. I cannot tell the house what the business will be for next Tuesday as yet.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

6. Are they paid by the government or by individuals?
7. When will such work be completed?
8. What will be the aggregate cost of the said work?

Supplementary answer by: Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State):

An answer to the above question was printed in House of Commons debates of May 26, 1959 at page 4060.

The question was incompletely answered and the following part answer was omitted in the original answer.

1. The Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources requested the Department of Public Works on January 13, 1959, to construct a wharf on Ile aux Noix, on the site of the existing wharf.

2. The removal of the existing timber structure and its reconstruction to a length of 80 feet and a width of 20 feet.

3. Tenders are to be called on June 10, 1959.

4, 5, 6 and 7. Answered by No. 3.

8. The work is estimated to cost $21,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, June 4, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

THE MINISTRY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF APPOINTMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the house of a change in the ministry, in that the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra was sworn in this morning before His Excellency the Governor General as Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I might add, Mr. Speaker, that seldom when I rise does there seem to be this degree of unanimity in the response. I must express my own thanks for the manner in which the house has received the announcement.

I might add something more. I know hon. members in the opposition particularly would not want to be denied the opportunity of questioning the new minister when the public works estimates are before the committee, and until the conclusion of those estimates he will also continue to discharge his responsibilities as Minister of Public Works. I think I should add as well that until the end of this session, in any event, he will remain in his position as house leader.

I say no more than that. I simply wanted to place before the house this change. I merely add in the simplest words, and I know I speak for the members of this house and the people of Canada as a whole, my hope that in the discharge of this new field of responsibilities his achievements of the past will be maintained in the future.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my first reaction on hearing this news is the feeling that in due course, because of the heavy responsibilities of his new post as Secretary of State for External Affairs, as well as Minister of Public Works, he will probably have to give up the house leadership.

I want to assure him that if and when that happens we shall miss his kindly advice and his engaging admonitions. He will no doubt reserve them for international assemblies in the future.

We on this side of the house wish him well in a post which, I know from some experience, is as exacting as it is rewarding. There can, I think, be no greater privilege and perhaps no greater responsibility for a Canadian than that of speaking for his country in the councils of the world and to have what I might call a primary responsibility, under the Prime Minister, for shaping foreign policies at a time when everything we hope for—our destiny, our very existence—depends on the success of those policies in maintaining peace and strengthening security.

The minister, who has the regard, the esteem and perhaps I can say the affection of every member of this house, can be assured of our good will and our good wishes in his new work. He can also, I think, expect to receive—and I am speaking now for the official opposition—our support in every strong and forward-looking Canadian move that he may initiate to keep our country's position high and respected in the world and in pursuing the objectives that we all share, whatever the party to which we may belong, namely good relations among all peoples in a world of peace and freedom.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this group and on behalf of the people of British Columbia, as the hon. member for Kootenay West and as the honorary president of the 54th Kootenay battalion association, and as a former comrade in arms—something of which I am always proud—I extend sincere and warm congratulations to the minister on his appointment as Secretary of State for External Affairs.

While all members of this house wish him well and every success with his new responsibilities, the people of Kootenay West, regardless of party, will derive a particular satisfaction and pleasure from his appointment to this high office. The residents of his home town of Kaslo, where he was born, will be proud of this further distinction bestowed on a native son. His old comrades in the 54th Kootenay battalion will rejoice in his opportunity to serve in the front line of international affairs.

Mr. Speaker, the minister faces heavy responsibilities and tremendous issues and problems—and he has our good will in that respect—which include consideration of the abandonment of nuclear tests; proposals for progressive disarmament as the result of negotiation and agreement; the churning problems of the Middle East and the Far East. Those problems will tax his patience and his ability to the limit. In facing those problems the C.C.F. believe that Canada can best play a positive role and exercise a positive influence for peace by pursuing an independent but co-operative policy in international affairs.

This appointment provides the minister with an opportunity to paint some large brush strokes on the canvas of Canadian history to complement the many finer lines he has drawn during his long service as a member of this house and a member of this government. We sincerely hope, Mr. Speaker, that from this appointment, this opportunity and the essence of the minister's recognized ability and trustworthiness will be distilled solid achievements toward the building of world peace.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as one who has been in the political wars for nearly a quarter of a century I am really deeply touched and find it almost impossible to express my feelings. I am moved by the kind words spoken this afternoon, first by my old friend the right hon. Prime Minister. We have stood side by side in many a hectic debate in this house since 1940, 19 years ago, and for one very happy term we shared a desk. I believe it was the one now occupied by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) and the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson).

Mr. Benidickson: The wheels will turn, and they will turn again.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I am beginning to think there is something wrong with that desk, because it seems to house troublemakers now just as it did before; or perhaps I should have said "keen critics".

The words of the Prime Minister today will, I am sure, make hon. members realize what an inspiration it is to serve under him in the cabinet. These have been two very happy years, largely because of his inspired leadership.

The Leader of the Opposition, we all agree —though we do not always like to admit it— is one of Canada's great statesmen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Green: He is a Canadian who has made a great contribution in world affairs, and I am particularly grateful for the words of encouragement he has given me today after all his years of service in the Department of External Affairs. He has that happy personality and friendly way which have done so much to make this parliament a friendly parliament, the friendliest parliament in which I have had the privilege of serving.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, that was intended to be serious. As for the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), I am very touched by his remarks. As he has said, we were comrades in the 54th Kootenay battalion in the first war. About 44 years ago we enlisted in the city of Nelson in the same company, and from those days on there has been a great friendship between us. When he spoke today I think he spoke with a little bias in my favour. However, I shall pay great heed to the sage words he has uttered this afternoon.

I am also very grateful for the response given by the other members of this House of Commons. Sometimes I think we do not fully appreciate the great strength, for our nation, of parliament. It has become a commonplace in a way, and we do not always realize how vitally important it is in the life of a democratic nation. Last night I was thinking of some of the days in parliament since I have been here. About 19 years ago there was a terribly black day when France was falling and Hon. Norman Rogers was killed in an aeroplane crash. Because of that crash Canada lost one of her most promising public men. Everything was black; I have never known such a black day in my life. Yet there was no one in this house or in the Senate who spoke of surrender or defeat. The sitting was postponed for an hour because of the tragedy of Norman Rogers' death, but on that occasion, as on so many other occasions during the war, this house faced the terrible problems of the time and, I think, was a splendid example of what parliament should be.

I should like hon. members to feel that in this new post I shall always look to the house for help and guidance. After all, we have here a gathering of the representatives of Canadians from coast to coast, a great body of representatives who come to this assembly, and moving together I believe we can solve any problem which faces the nation. In these words I should like to include the members of the Senate—I know Your Honour will overlook it if I do not refer to them as members of the other place. They too have made a splendid contribution, and their old friends in the commons have often taken this little walk down to the other end of the building to visit them. In that body there is a wealth of experience and a wealth of common sense. I know that any secretary of state for external affairs will receive help from the members of the Canadian Senate.

It is rather thrilling to be in a position to represent one's nation, particularly when that nation happens to be Canada. Those hon. members who served in the first world war will remember the magic of those six letters "Canada" on their shoulder straps, and I am sure there was the same pride in the minds of young Canadians who carried those letters in the second world war. It will be a wonderful thing to be in a position to speak for Canada; but as the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Kootenay West pointed out, in these days it is not sufficient to have great pride in one's nation. We all realize that world events have moved so far in recent years that now the main thing is co-operation among all the nations of the world.

In this new post it will be my endeavour to keep that in mind at all times and to do my part to see to it that Canada maintains the high position in which she has been placed by my predecessors in this office.

I would not like to close without a word about my predecessor, Hon. Sidney Smith. Only those of us who sat with him in cabinet meetings could fully appreciate the sterling character of the man, a great individual. He came here from the presidency of the largest university in Canada with a record of achievement in the university field which I do not think has been excelled at any time in our country, and took on this portfolio. I am convinced that he accepted the portfolio in the belief that he should at least do his part to further the cause of peace in the world. While he was not privileged to carry on for a great length of time I know we will all agree that he did maintain the traditions of that post, that he set a very high standard, and that his service here was not in vain. In the days ahead I shall be trying to keep on the trail which has been blazed by Hon. Sidney Smith. I thank the hon. members very much.

TRANSPORT

GREAT SLAVE LAKE—COMMISSION TO INQUIRE INTO ROUTE OF PROPOSED RAILWAY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish now to reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Mackenzie River and in conjunction with the reply to make an announcement. The hon. gentleman asked me a question with regard to a statement made by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in an article respecting, as it is stated in the article—

> —the federal government's decision that a railway connection is to be extended to the south shore of Great Slave lake.

I would point out that in so far as that announcement was concerned there was nothing unusual in it, in that it had been specifically dealt with in the speech from the throne in 1958. With the leave of the house I should like to refer to one sentence in that speech from the throne preparatory to the statement I wish to make. The speech from the throne is recorded at page 5 of Hansard of May 12, 1958. These words were included in those uttered by His Excellency the Governor General:

> In order to promote our national development on the frontier in the north you will be asked to authorize the construction of a railway to Great Slave lake. My ministers regard this as a major step in the establishment of productive industry on an economic basis in the Northwest Territories.

Since that date the fullest consideration has been given to this question and a number of suggestions have been made as to alternative routes. There have been two major suggestions and I understand eight other alternatives. The proponents of each of these several projected routes have advanced their arguments in support of the particular venture or project which they have in mind.

With a view to hearing the representations that have been and can be made, and reviewing them, the governor in council has set up an inquiry under part I of the Inquiries Act to deal with the alternative routes for a railway line from northern Alberta to Great Slave lake. I ask leave to table copies of the order in council, the material section of which sets out the powers in question:

> —to inquire into and report upon the respective merits of the alternative routes which might be followed by a railway line to be built from northern Alberta into the southern portion of the district of Mackenzie, Northwest Territories, for the purpose of providing access to and contributing to the development of that portion of the territories tributary to Great Slave lake.

The commission in question will consist of three men, Mr. Marshall Manning, Q.C., of Edmonton, Mr. W. D. Gainer, an agricultural economist from the University of Alberta in Edmonton, and Mr. John Anderson-Thompson of Yellowknife, Mr. Manning being the chairman of the inquiry. I hope this group will be able to start a full inquiry very shortly, and will be able to report at as early a date as is convenient and possible.

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that upon hearing this announcement the people of the Mackenzie River district will be very sad indeed, when they consider that during the last election campaign there was no talk of which route would be followed. The route was chosen. I am sure this is another means of stalling the building of the railway, and I am certain that the people of Mackenzie district will look upon it in that way.

Proposed Legislation

Mr. Speaker: Has the Prime Minister leave to table the order in council?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PUBLIC SERVICE

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—ANNOUNCEMENT OF APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, while not announcing the appointment as of this date I wish to advise that the government has decided to appoint as chairman of the civil service commission Hon. Samuel Harvey Shirecliffe Hughes, now a justice of the high court of justice in the province of Ontario, the appointment to become effective on the termination of the present legal term on June 30. At that time his resignation will become effective and the appointment as chairman will begin on the next day.

Mr. Justice Hughes received his early education at Stoke Clark preparatory school, Guildford, England, and Stowe school, Buckingham, England. In Canada he attended Upper Canada College and the University of Toronto. He then attended Oxford, receiving his master of arts degree and became a Queen's counsel in 1955. In the same year, following a successful law practice, he was appointed chairman of the Ontario highway transport board, a position he held until his appointment as a justice in June of 1958. Mr. Justice Hughes, as I said a moment ago, will continue his services as a justice to the end of the term, when his resignation will become effective, and he will then be in a position to take over this high and responsible post.

INCOME TAX

AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND FINLAND FOR THE AVOIDANCE OF DOUBLE TAXATION

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-54, to implement a convention between Canada and the Republic of Finland for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PUBLIC SERVICE

CONTINUATION OF INCREASED PENSIONS FOR SUPERANNUATED CIVIL SERVANTS, ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL AND MOUNTED POLICE

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure respecting the adjustment of certain public service pensions to provide for increases, on a continuing basis, in certain pensions being paid to former civil servants, members of the armed forces, members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or their dependents; and to provide that the said increases shall be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PASSAGE OF SOVIET FREIGHTER THROUGH ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the new and distinguished Secretary of State for External Affairs arising out of a newspaper report in the Montreal Star of May 30, in which it is stated that permission has been granted by the United States treasury department for the passage through the St. Lawrence seaway of the Soviet freighter Ivan Moskvin, bound for Sarnia, Ontario, to pick up a cargo of carbon black, and that the Canadian and Soviet embassies have been informed of this decision. Would the minister care to comment on this report? Can he assure the house that the passage through the St. Lawrence seaway of a foreign vessel bound for a Canadian port will not depend upon any decision of the United States government?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having given me written notice of this question. I have seen the report in the Montreal Star to which the question refers, and it is not entirely accurate. My understanding of the situation is that Soviet representatives asked the United States authorities whether a Soviet vessel would be allowed to use the United States locks in the St. Lawrence seaway. In due course they were told that if an application were made to the seaway administration for the use of the United States facilities by this particular vessel, there would be no objection. The hon. member will, I am sure, appreciate that neither Canada nor the United States has treaty obligations with respect to shipping and commercial arrangements with the Soviet union.

It is, of course, correct that United States permission is required for any vessel to pass through United States waters and facilities, just as Canadian permission is required for any vessel to pass through Canadian waters and facilities.

I would prefer, Mr. Speaker, not to comment on this matter further at the present time.

FINANCE

PROPORTION OF LATEST TREASURY BILL ISSUE PURCHASED BY BANK OF CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Finance inform the house as to the percentage of the issue of one year treasury bills, which the minister announced in this house on Tuesday evening had been heavily oversubscribed, has been tendered for by the Bank of Canada and allotted to that bank?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it has never been the practice to disclose the purchases by the Bank of Canada or by any other subscriber to any federal obligations of any kind.

Mr. Robichaud: Is it correct to say that $50 million or over 25 per cent of the $200 million has been allotted to that bank?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The same answer, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

CHIPPEWA INDIAN RESERVE, SARNIA—SALE OF LAND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Is the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration now in a position to table the contract with Dimensional Investments Limited respecting the Chippewa Indian reserve?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I shall look into the matter. I have not yet acquired the information.

Mr. Hellyer: Can the minister tell the house why it is taking so long to duplicate a single contract, something which could be done by anyone in half an hour?

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO PROVINCES—CONDITIONAL PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. A few weeks ago he made one of my questions an order for return. May I inquire of the Secretary of State if I am going to get a return this year?

(Translation):

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have so many requests on matters of all kinds that if the hon. member would at least give me the number of his question, I might be in a position to make the necessary inquiry.

Mr. Denis: It is question No. 398, Mr. Speaker.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CHIPPEWA RESERVE, SARNIA—INQUIRY AS TO EXPROPRIATION PROCEEDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to direct another question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Did the minister receive an application from Ontario hydro for permission from the governor in council to institute expropriation proceedings on the Chippewa Indian reserve at Sarnia?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF ORDERS IN COUNCIL UNDER EXPORTS CREDITS LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce concerning the business of the house, and arising out of the announced intention of the government to bring forward a bill to amend the export credits insurance legislation. The minister will recall that under section 21 of that act provision is made for the tabling in the house of the orders in council required to be passed in connection with a certain class of insurance contract.

According to sessional paper No. 122N of February 17, 1959, there were two such orders in council passed concerning the sale of grain to Israel and to Poland. So far as I am able to ascertain these orders in council have not been tabled; I can find no record of them. Would the minister see that these orders in council are tabled, and any other orders in council that the act may require to be tabled, before the legislation comes forward for consideration in the house?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the matter will be looked into immediately.

AGRICULTURE

CHEESE—ALLEGED PRICE DISPARITY BETWEEN QUEBEC AND ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Augustin Brassard (Lapointe): I have a non-political question which calls for a non-political answer from the Minister of Agriculture. I must apologize for not having given him notice of my intention to ask this question. I should like to ask my question in French, so I wonder if he would use his hearing aid.

Inquiries of the Ministry

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, in view of the representations made to the minister by the Catholic Farmers' Union of the Saguenay-Lake St. John area concerning the substantial losses incurred by the producers of that area; in view of the minister's statement about the support prices paid on cheese f.o.b. Montreal, and in view of the fact that in Ontario support prices on cheese are paid at the receiving centre for those products, would the minister consider—and I ask him with due respect—looking into the possibility of granting to producers in the Saguenay-Lake St. John area the same privileges as are granted to Ontario producers?

(Text):

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think you and the hon. members realize that all my answers are agricultural and not political. I do not believe the phrasing of the first part of this question falls within that category. There have been no enormous losses, as mentioned by the hon. member, suffered by the cheese producers in any area in Canada as a result of the recent changes in the stabilization program. On the contrary, the cheese producers are getting nearly a cent a pound more than they were getting before. In other words they have gained rather than lost as a result of the changes which were made effective May 1 of this year.

So far as the price paid for cheese in Ontario and in Quebec is concerned, traditionally there has been a difference of half a cent a pound, and that difference remains. It has existed for many, many years. The price paid is at warehouses in both cases and not, as I believe the hon. member stated or implied, at different types of establishments.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): May I ask a supplementary question. Would the minister admit that on some occasions his answers are somewhat floricultural?

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member knows much more than I do about floriculture and horticulture, so I shall leave him to make his own deduction.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that he agrees that the producers in my region are losing half a cent a pound, I wonder if he would at least assure me that he will have the matter investigated and give a report in due course.

Mr. Harkness: I did not agree that the producers in the area are losing half a cent a pound. As I indicated, they are getting about 8/10 of a cent more per pound now than they were last year. This differential of half a cent a pound has existed traditionally for many years and results from what the people are willing to pay in the market for cheese in these various areas.

RESEARCH

REPORTED EXCHANGE OF RUSSIAN AND CANADIAN GROUPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): I should like to direct a question to the minister of northern affairs in regard to an article appearing in today's Ottawa Journal to the effect that it is the intention of his department to send groups to study research in northern Russia and to have a Russian team visit the Canadian Arctic. I wonder if the minister could tell the house if this Russian team will get permission to do this from his department or from the United States government?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I think the hon. member has been in the house long enough to know the answer.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

BOMARC MISSILE—REPORTED REDUCTION IN U.S. APPROPRIATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Will the Minister of National Defence comment on a Washington dispatch to the effect that the cut in the appropriation for the Bomarc program was in the appropriation for the Bomarc "B" ground to air missile?

Mr. Speaker: I take it the hon. member is referring to appropriations of the United States congress?

Mr. Hellyer: That is correct.

Mr. Speaker: That scarcely seems to be a matter under the jurisdiction of the Minister of National Defence.

[Later:]

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister in mind a satisfactory alternative to the Bomarc missile in case that missile should, under any circumstances, not become available?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Defence has many alternative plans in his mind to meet the various changing situations that may develop.

TRADE

INQUIRY AS TO FRENCH EDITION OF "TRADE AND COMMERCE"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, last Monday, June 1, I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he could give me a reason why Commerce Exterieur is not an exact translation of Trade and Commerce, and why it is published monthly when the other one is published bimonthly?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, Foreign Trade and its French language counterpart, Commerce Exterieur, is a publication of the Department of Trade and Commerce devoted almost exclusively to the promotion of Canadian export trade. The circulation of Commerce Exterieur has always been small, despite repeated efforts to increase it with the co-operation of the chambres de commerce in the province of Quebec and the Quebec department of trade and commerce. The paid circulation during the fiscal year 1958-59 was 183 subscriptions. On this basis, with printing costs amounting to nearly $10,000, average cost per subscriber was just over $54 per year.

In the light of these circumstances the department came to the conclusion that it was not justified in producing Commerce Exterieur as frequently as the English language counterpart. Therefore in February 1954—and I ask hon. members to note the date—when Foreign Trade was changed from weekly to once every two weeks, the publication of Commerce Exterieur was altered to once a month. Its content differs from that of Foreign Trade only in that certain material of secondary importance is omitted.

Mr. Caron: I have a supplementary question. Why is it that the subscription price is the same for both?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I will have to investigate that matter and find out the answer.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REPORTED PRODUCTION OF FILM OF CANADIAN ARCTIC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Is the minister aware that a European film company is producing a film in the Canadian Arctic? If so, will the minister tell us whether this company received permission to go to the Arctic from his department or from United States authorities.

Dominion-Provincial Relations

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice and give it all the attention it deserves.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

OTTAWA—STATEMENT ON DEMOLITION OF BUILDING TO PROVIDE PARKING AREA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) asked whether the old Free Press building was being demolished to make way for a parking area for the Bank of Canada.

My answer is that the property in question is owned by the Bank of Canada and does not come under the jurisdiction of the Department of Public Works.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL TAX-SHARING ARRANGEMENTS ACT

FURTHER EXTENSION OF INCOME TAX RATE

The house resumed from Wednesday, June 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) for the second reading of Bill No. C-41, to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, no one can suggest that the subject of dominion-provincial fiscal relations has not received plenty of debate in the course of the present session. On February 9 and 10 the house debated an opposition amendment to a supply motion on this subject. On March 11 I introduced the resolution preceding the present measure. It was debated that day and again on April 30, when the present bill was given first reading. The debate on second reading was continued on May 6, June 2, 3 and 4. The result of this protracted debate over a quite simple and clear measure has been that since March 31 the provinces, which are anxiously waiting to receive the benefit of the present measure, have been deprived of the benefit of the increased payments which it would provide.

It is perhaps not amiss at this point in the debate to recall what is the principle of this measure. It is to provide an increase in the payments out of the federal treasury to the provinces. It is to provide a division of the yield from the standard taxes which will be more generous to the provinces. Notwithstanding our own federal budget problems we believe, and show in this measure that we believe, more generous provision should be made for the provinces than was made under the Liberal regime that preceded us. We said so during the debate on the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act in the session of 1956. In proceeding as we are in this present measure we are carrying into statutory fulfilment the statements we made at that time.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister allow a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, that I shall be obliged to ask the hon. member to defer his question. I am working under a time limit. There will be a committee stage after this debate is concluded, and I shall be glad to deal with the question then.

When we came into office in 1957 we found nine agreements entered into between the dominion and the provinces in pursuance of this legislation. However unsatisfactory that legislation may have been, however unwillingly many of these provinces entered into those agreements, nevertheless those agreements were a fact and there could be no suggestion of any repudiation thereof. Those agreements in all cases run for the five-year period that the legislation is in effect, to March 31, 1962. That fact, namely the fact of the existence of the nine agreements, is something that must be taken into account by anyone who approaches fairly this present situation in the light of the statements made in the debates in this house in 1956 when the legislation was before the house.

It is a strange scene that we have witnessed in this house, Mr. Speaker, in the course of this debate. Those opposite, who in the days when they were in power were unyielding and unbending in the face of the pleas of the provinces and the municipalities, those same hon. gentlemen who took a highhanded, take it or leave it attitude in dominion-provincial conferences—

Mr. Pearson: Send them a telegram.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —now seek somehow to cajole this house and the Canadian people into thinking they have become the champions of the rights of the provinces. Mr. Speaker, it will take a better effort than they have been able to put up in this debate to make that pretence stick. They will need a better disguise than the one they have donned in the course of this debate. The clothes they have attempted to wear in this debate do not fit them at all. After their record they will never be able to appear in this house as champions of the rights of the provinces. They pretend now that more should be done for the provinces. Our answer must be put very simply in the form of a now famous question, Mr. Speaker, and I direct it to them: "Why didn't you do it?"

Mr. Pickersgill: We did.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You did not.

Mr. Pickersgill: We did in 1956, as the minister knows.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This measure which is before us today would not now be before the house at all if hon. gentlemen opposite had done what they should have done in 1956. How it galls them to be reminded of these simple facts, Mr. Speaker. Their whole attitude in this debate has been one of pretence.

The hon. member for Essex East yesterday made his great plea for the municipalities of this country. I say to that hon. gentleman, when he was a member of the government why did he not do it? Why did not his government do it? And I put these same questions to such hon. members as the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) who have spoken in this debate about the provinces. The fact that Newfoundland is so much better off today than it was in the days when the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and his friends constituted the government obliges one to ask why, in the face of this hypocritical pretence that they have been making in this debate, they did not do something to help out Newfoundland when they were in office.

Mr. Chevrier: The hypocrites are over there.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): They had a majority. They had surpluses. They had easier conditions to deal with. They could have done much more, but they did not do so. They did not do more because of a deliberate decision on their part. Now they pretend to be the big-hearted friends of the provinces. No province is going to be taken in or fooled or misled by this empty pretence and hypocrisy.

But for the change of government in this country in 1957 the provinces would have received nothing more than what was given to them in the legislation of 1956, namely the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act; not another cent.

Let me remind the house of the benefits which have accrued to the provinces, and through them to the municipalities, since this present government took office in June, 1957. In the first place—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Your Honour will recall that when those of us on this side of the house were attempting to debate this matter the minister said the principle in the measure was an increase from 10 to 13 per cent. The minister is now attempting to debate all sorts of matters of history which in our view do not have anything to do with the bill, and on which we were not allowed to talk.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Ever since this debate began, Mr. Speaker, hon. members opposite have strayed widely all over creation in the course of debate and have gone further and further astray as the debate has proceeded. We have now reached the eighth day and they are proposing something which, if it had any relevance at all in their mouths, should have been proposed and acknowledged by them some months ago.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure exactly what subject the hon. member was objecting to, but it is true that this has been a broad debate not limited strictly to the 3 per cent increase. Hon. members have taken the opportunity of presenting the amendment in its setting in the whole field of federal-provincial fiscal relations. As I say, I am not sure just what the objection is at the moment, but I do not see any error of debate.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, if I may; the measure before the house is the amendment to clause 12. While I am not arguing that the Minister of Finance should not be allowed to go beyond that clause, I think the point which my colleague the member for Bonavista-Twillingate is making is this, that while the minister should be allowed some latitude in dealing with clause 12, he should not be allowed to discuss the whole field of federal-provincial relations. If Your Honour rules he should, it is all right with us; but there will be another opportunity, I take it, and I presume the same treatment will be meted out to us.

Mr. Speaker: As long as the minister keeps within the matters which have been discussed so far in this debate I am sure no objection will be taken by the hon. member who has just spoken. I have not yet noticed the minister going beyond them.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order may I draw Your Honour's attention to what the minister said on May 6, as reported on page 3394 of Hansard, the first column. He said:

> The other provisions of the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act continue without change.

I might say this was when he was taking one of the seven points of order which he took when I was speaking. He continued:

> There is no change made in the agreements which have been entered into between the federal government and the provincial governments in pursuance of the act. All this does is to enable the federal government to pay to the provinces this additional 3 per cent yield from the personal income taxes for the present fiscal year. That is its complete effect, no more, no less.

I am suggesting that the minister, having taken a point of order, should abide by what he himself said was the point of order.

Mr. Chevrier: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member would agree that in a speech in reply the minister is entitled to refer to the matters which have been raised by the other side of the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would Your Honour agree that we are entitled to harass the minister to the same extent that he has harassed us?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I had thought, Mr. Speaker, that there was no question of "harris-ing" in connection with this subject any more in this house.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a very poor pun.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It sounds strange in the mouth of the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), who strayed widely into the subject of provincial politics in his intervention in this debate two days ago, to hear him take a point of order when I am dealing with a subject which is strictly relevant to the bill before the house.

Mr. Chevrier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I know the Minister of Finance is a student of the French language, but I am sure he must not have been listening to what I said, because I dealt with the federal aspect and did not deal with provincial politics at all.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I think that is not a point of order but more a matter of correction. If the hon. member finds that there is any error which needs explanation, then he might raise that matter at the conclusion of the speech of the minister.

Mr. Chevrier: I hope my hon. friend will be a little more accurate in his statements concerning my speech than he is at the moment.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I can summon to this house more witnesses to the accuracy of my observation than the hon. member can to his.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I was turning to what this government has done. I would refer to the fact that it has introduced the adjustment grant to the Atlantic provinces—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am rising again on a point of order. Surely Your Honour is not now going to permit the minister to discuss the Atlantic provinces adjustment grant, which we were precluded from discussing.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is not a fact that the hon. member was precluded. That is not a statement of fact, because he referred to this subject in his remarks.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister must not lose his temper.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There is no danger of my losing my temper, but there is great danger of the hon. member for Laurier losing all connection with facts and truth. Mr. Speaker, I said as well that we had provided this additional 3 per cent yield to the provinces from personal income taxes. What has that meant to the provinces? This is the measure of what the provinces have received which they would not have received had there not been a change of government.

Mr. Pearson: How does the minister know that?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The gross benefit to the provinces including the tax abatement was $73 million. Or if you take the direct cash payments, the benefit which accrued to the provinces as a result of the change in government last year, and last year alone, was $62 million not including the tax abatement.

Mr. Hellyer: What about the loss of interest charges?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If there is any loss of interest it is because of the way the opposition have been delaying the passage of this bill.

But for the change of government in 1957 many of the other sums paid out by this government in the form of other assistance to the provinces would never have been paid for the benefit of the provinces or for provincial institutions. I will not delay matters by referring to the subject of conditional payments and other payments made for the benefit of the provinces and provincial institutions. They are tremendous amounts and very much larger than they would have been if there had not been a change in government.

I point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that the former government had all the opportunities to do something additional for the benefit of the provinces and the municipalities, but they deliberately and firmly refused to do anything more than was provided in the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act. They were asked to go further but they stoutly refused. These are the members who now pretend that they are the friends of the provinces.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Here, Mr. Speaker, let me remind the house of what was said in official and authoritative terms on behalf of that former government. This is what Mr. St. Laurent wrote to all the provincial premiers on February 18, 1956:

> In view of the suggestion that we should meet again in committee to discuss these fiscal arrangements, I feel it would not be fair to the provincial governments if I failed to indicate at this time that the federal government believes its own situation in the next few years would not justify adding any substantial further financial commitments beyond those already proposed.

And they talk about harassing people in the house. Here is Mr. Harris saying to the federal-provincial conference on March 9, 1956:

> These proposals—

They are the proposals which—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I rise again on a point of order. The minister on three different occasions objected to my making reference to federal-provincial conferences. Surely the minister is not going to start debating the federal-provincial conferences of 1956 at this time.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member is referring to an objection which was taken to the discussion of the holding of future conferences, but many members have necessarily referred to federal-provincial conferences in this debate. I do not see how an incidental reference can be avoided. It has not been avoided by that side of the house and I do not think it is proper to ask that of the minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would point out that I was prevented from referring to the conference of 1957. I was actually stopped by the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member would look over the debate since that time I think he will realize—

Mr. Chevrier: Would the minister allow me to put one question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am sorry, but my time is limited. I have already said there will be opportunities to ask questions in committee, and I would be glad to answer questions then. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that no deduction is to be made from my time because of these senseless interruptions by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Chevrier: In view of what has just been said—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): My time is limited. This is Mr. Harris speaking to the federal-provincial conference on May 9, 1956:

> These proposals (10-9-50) go just as far as we can go at this time in providing fiscal need grants and in reducing the extent to which we are occupying certain tax fields.

And another quotation from him on that occasion:

> We believe that revenues of these magnitudes from these tax fields are consistent with the actual responsibilities at this time and what seems likely to develop in the next five years.

Here again is Mr. Harris speaking in the budget debate on March 20, 1956, as reported at page 2328 of Hansard:

> Having regard to our national responsibilities and commitments, we cannot see how we can go further. Under all the circumstances we believe our offer is eminently fair and that it is reasonable and realistic in the light of federal and provincial responsibilities

And let me refer again to the remarks of Mr. Harris, my predecessor, in the debate on this bill on July 16, 1956. Here are his words as reported at page 5988 of Hansard:

> It is our view that in the limits decided upon both questions have been met in so far as it is possible to reconcile the needs of our expanding expenditures with restricted if buoyant revenues.

And at page 5990 he said:

> I think it becomes quite clear that there is a very practical limit to our ability to dispose of our revenue sources and it is our view that this limit has been reached under present circumstances with these proposals at this time.

In those days the budgetary position was lush; the government had a surplus; yet those who were responsible for declaring the policy of the government at that time on this subject said "We cannot give the provinces another cent; we can go no further".

The last reference I wish to cite at this time appears on page 5996 of Hansard where Mr. Drew, referring to this subject, drew attention to another statement made by the then minister of finance, as follows:

> We cannot at this time make any further material concessions that would adversely affect our revenues.

So you see, Mr. Speaker, these hon. members who now come forward and try to pretend that they are the friends of the provinces and say something more should be done for the provinces are the very members who said, in 1956 when they were in the government, "Not another cent for the provinces". It will be clearly realized that that government, and those hon. members who have been the spokesmen for the opposition in the house during this debate, in those days banged, barred and bolted the door to the provinces in the face of their pleas for further assistance.

Thus today we ask parliamentary approval to increase the payments to the provinces, and point out that we are doing this at a time when budgetary conditions are much less favourable than they were in 1955 and 1956. The Liberal government of that day had a large surplus then, and its action at that time in refusing to do any more for the provinces can be compared with that of the Conservative government of today which has a deficit, but which is yet prepared to increase that deficit in order to increase payments to the provinces. There is the difference.

We have heard a great deal about unilateral action on the part of the government in this respect. Let us examine that empty assertion. A year ago we asked the house, and the house agreed, to provide this additional 3 per cent to the provinces for a year. We are asking now for an extension of those provisions for another year. We say that the extension will be worth $52 million to those provinces, on the basis of existing estimates. This is excluding the Atlantic provinces adjustment grant and the adjustment to the province of Quebec in terms of its right to collect certain corporation taxes. Or it is worth an estimated $66 million this year if one includes the additional taxes which the province of Quebec is in a position to collect under the terms of the act.

To listen to the speeches made by hon. gentlemen opposite one would think we were imposing some hard bargain on the provinces, inflicting some burden on them. The facts are the very opposite. I wish the hon. members on that side of the house would not depart so far from the facts when they speak on this subject. Here are the facts. The provinces want this additional 3 per cent; they are urgently asking for it; they are unanimous in asking for it. This is the situation, yet all the Liberal members in this house talk about a one-sided deal.

Mr. Chevrier: What about Mr. Frost?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The federal government is taking nothing in return. There are no strings attached to this additional payment. It is unconditional. We ask nothing from the provinces; the provinces can lose nothing in accepting it. Indeed, we need no further proof of the fact that the provinces are waiting urgently for their cheques in respect of this 3 per cent—

Mr. Chevrier: What about Mr. Frost?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And what about the member for Laurier and all the mistakes he has been making in this debate?

I have this to say, and I must be brief. There is a great temptation to go over all the mistakes which the opposition have been making in this debate, but there is not time. We have rarely seen a debate in which the opposition was so completely befuddled as in this debate on this subject, but let me mention two or three examples. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) was quite confused in what he had to say about these percentages and the relation of these percentages to the taxes collected, and there was an echo of the same misunderstanding in the speech made by the hon. member for Laurier the other evening. He referred to the increase in the federal tax rates and seemed to be under the impression that as a result the provinces were going to receive a smaller share of the yield. The standard corporation tax is, of course, directly related to corporation profits and thus the provincial share is constant, regardless of any change in the level of federal taxation up or down. The individual tax rate is related to the federal level, but is adjusted to the 1956 tax rates, so that there will be no effect on the provincial share from unilateral federal changes.

Thus, in 1958-59 we paid not 13 per cent but at the rate of 14.48 per cent in terms of the yield of that year, and in this year 1959-60 we shall be paying at the rate of 14.18 per cent in terms of the tax yield of this year. This stabilized provincial share was at the request of the provinces which did not wish their proportion of these tax fields to vary with federal tax changes. So, in effect, under this government, it has not been, as was the case under the Liberal government, a formula of 10-9-50; it has not even been a formula of 13-9-50. Last year, it was a formula of 14.48-9-50, and this year it will be 14.18-9-50.

Then we were told by the hon. member for Laurier that the federal government is collecting a larger share of the tax dollar. The fact is that as a result of the larger transfer payments we are making for the benefit of other governments the amount remaining to the federal government is relatively smaller than it was under the Liberal government.

Mr. Chevrier: The statement I made was not in accordance with the statement attributed to me by the minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Chevrier: This is a point of order. The minister has complained about the inaccuracy of my statements, and I think we should stick to the facts. The statement I made yesterday—

Mr. Speaker: I will give the hon. member an opportunity to make any corrections which he feels are necessary at the end—

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Chevrier: I have a right, in accordance with the rules of the house as I understand them, to rise and challenge the accuracy of the statement made by the minister. What I was dealing with was the percentage allotted to the provinces, and in the statement which the minister has just made—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the next error on the part of the opposition was on the part of the hon. member for Robichaud—

Mr. Pickersgill: Another error.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) who said at page 3406 of Hansard that the provinces will receive less in the year 1959-60 than they did last year, 1958-59. Of course he is wrong in that respect.

Mr. Pickersgill: The budget papers suggested that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The picture as disclosed in the budget calculations has been brightening. It was much brighter than at the time the estimates were prepared. On the basis of the 13-9-50 formula the cash payments last year, 1958-59, including the Atlantic provinces adjustment grant, were $423 million. This year they will be $473 million, an increase of $50 million. With the tax abatement the amounts will be larger. So much for the hon. member for Gloucester.

Now, sir, I come to the subject of the conference—

Mr. Pickersgill: The conference?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —not to go back to the discussion of February 9 and 10 but to deal with the conference that is to be held on July 6, which has been discussed at very great length by hon. members opposite in their remarks. In their comments in relation to the subject of this conference we have listened to the crowning Liberal misrepresentation and calumny. I suppose it should be expected from hon. members who when they were in the government took this steadfast, stiff-necked, take it or leave it attitude toward these conferences, hon. members who did so much when they were in power to embitter relations between the dominion and the provinces.

Mr. Chevrier: What about Premier Duplessis?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If the hon. gentleman who interrupts is not any better informed on that subject than he is on the subject under debate today I am afraid he has a long way to go before he will ever approach accuracy.

Mr. Chevrier: The premier is not very happy about the treatment accorded him.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): In the past under hon. members opposite federal-provincial conferences were called in order for the provinces to receive an announcement, the dictates of the federal government, what the federal government had decided beforehand it was prepared to do.

Mr. Pickersgill: That statement is not true.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The attitude of hon. gentlemen opposite in relation to these conferences when they were the government was always, "This much and no more; thus far and no farther." What is badly needed today, indeed the great need of the situation today, in this realm of dominion-provincial fiscal relations is—

Mr. Pearson: Another telegram.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —a deep, searching, comprehensive study—

Mr. Pearson: Another study.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —of joint common fiscal problems, joint or common to the two levels of government. This ought to be a study undertaken jointly on a co-operative basis between the two principal levels of government. Questions are arising constantly in relation to—

Mr. Chevrier: Reductions.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —the administration, application and interpretation of the existing agreements, but there are many more questions in regard to other aspects which concern federal-provincial fiscal relations. We have in mind a broad, thorough study because we are seeking long term solutions to these problems based upon joint study of them.

I appreciate that it is difficult for hon. members opposite to understand this kind of co-operative approach. The proposed study to be carried on through the committee of ministers, finance ministers and provincial treasurers, is the first full scale co-operative attempt to reach a solution of these problems in many years. In fact the last two comprehensive studies, that of the reconstruction conference of 1945-46 and the Rowell-Sirois commission of 1937-40, were basically federal exercises. Here we hope on a continuing basis to examine our problems co-operatively in an attempt to reach mutually satisfactory solutions. The approach has often been proposed in the past, but this is the first time anyone has ever done anything about it. It is no wonder that hon. members opposite do not understand a co-operative approach.

This conference of ministers will meet in Ottawa on July 6. It is to be attended by the provincial treasurers or ministers of finance representing all of the provinces. We have acceptances from all of them. As hon. members are aware, the provincial treasurers include three provincial premiers. They will speak for the governments of their provinces. It is this meeting—

Mr. Pickersgill: Study group.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) as recorded at page 3389 of Hansard, denounced in these words:

> —this pale imitation conference of bureaucrats—

—a quotation echoed by Mr. Wintermeyer in the Ontario election campaign two days later, when on May 7 he said:

> I suggest this conference is no conference of premiers at all but of bureaucrats and civil servants.

Mr. Pearson: Why did you not call it a year ago?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Having regard to the fact that it is to be attended by the provincial treasurers of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, to mention only two of the provinces, I wonder how those hon. gentlemen will like being referred to as bureaucrats by so distinguished a member of this house as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will take my chances on that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I turn now to the second aspect of this conference. After what is expected to be a two-day meeting of ministers—

Mr. Pearson: Two years.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —there is to follow, for as long as may be required, a meeting of the federal-provincial continuing committee on fiscal and economic matters. In view of the aspersions that have been cast on this committee by hon. members opposite, particularly the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, let me point out that this important continuing committee was one in the creation of which they participated. This committee grew out of a proposal made by the province of Ontario at the agenda conference of April, 1955 which preceded the federal-provincial conference of October of that year.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Has the minister unlimited time?

Mr. Speaker: No; the minister is limited according to the rules.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate will not be content until he trespasses on my time by his senseless and deliberate interruptions, these delaying tactics designed to consume my limited time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This hon. member has a long way to go before equalling the record established by the Minister of Finance in interrupting me during the course of my remarks on second reading of this bill.

Mr. Speaker: In view of what has been said the house should understand the situation. The minister's time apart from interruptions expires at 4.03. There have been four minutes of interruption, and I will allow him four minutes more to complete his speech.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Every province welcomed this idea and the committee was set up. In his opening remarks at the October, 1955 conference Mr. St. Laurent placed the question of establishing such a committee before the conference and the committee was set up. This idea commended itself at that time. I will not go into the subject in greater detail, because I recounted the history of this important committee on February 9, at page 846 of Hansard.

I say this committee had never been adequately used under the Liberal government. The Liberal government neglected it and kept it under wraps. Now hon. gentlemen opposite deride our attempt to make effective use of the talents of this committee. The provinces, on the other hand, have welcomed the use of this committee for this important study.

Mr. Pickersgill: How many times has it met in the last two years.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not only have the provinces welcomed it, but all have extended to us the fullest co-operation. That is perhaps what irks hon. members opposite. The fact is, however, that all the provinces have given us the fullest co-operation in the plans we are making for the conference on July 6 and the days that follow. This is the evidence of the determination and desire of the provinces to use the opportunity now being created in order to achieve constructive results of lasting value.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the provincial governments are much better judges of provincial rights and interests in this country than hon. members of the opposition in this house. The value of the meetings I am sure will be perfectly clear, because there are so many of these difficult and complex problems facing both the federal and provincial governments. That is why a much more extensive investigation and study has been called for in order to seek mutually satisfactory solutions. A plenary conference over two or three days can generally solve very little.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The experience of the previous government would indicate that it would likely result in an arbitrary position being assumed. If this federal government were to come to the table as did the previous Liberal government, with its mind all made up, little would be accomplished. Therefore the purpose of these conferences is to prepare the ground for subsequent negotiations although in the process they may be able to resolve some of the detailed technical and procedural problems. The value of this proposed conference is fully recognized by the provinces and the scope of its inquiries will be as unlimited as the provinces may desire.

Let me make it quite clear that as we see it this is the first step in a genuine co-operative effort to develop some mutually satisfactory long term solution. It is not a substitute for a plenary conference of prime minister and premiers but it is a necessary antecedent to the success of any such conference. So I say of the agenda that the agenda is being compiled in consultation with the provinces. We have invited their proposals on the widest scale. This is in no sense going to be an agenda dictated or compiled simply by the federal government. It is going to be an agenda compiled by co-operative effort on the part of the federal and provincial governments.

The meeting of the federal-provincial continuing committee which will follow will undoubtedly result in intensive studies being made not merely by federal officials but, we trust, by officials of all governments, and further exchanges and meetings, if they prove necessary, will be had because this committee will be reporting back to the conference of finance ministers and provincial treasurers and further meetings of the ministers will be invited to be held as may be necessary.

As to the municipalities, Mr. Speaker, there are many subjects in the proposed agenda now being prepared which will be of direct interest to the municipalities, and I am sure their interests in this conference will be effectively represented by the provincial governments.

My time has almost expired, but let me say in conclusion that the estimated value of this measure to the provinces on the basis of the federal estimate is $52 million in terms of cash payments and if you take account as well of the abatement of tax in the province of Quebec on income tax the benefit to the provinces is $66 million under this measure, and that does not include one cent of the Atlantic provinces adjustment grant. The provinces are going to share and share substantially in these benefits. Here are the figures of benefit with respect to the $66 million: Newfoundland, $1,820,000; Prince Edward Island, $11,000; Nova Scotia, $2,905,000; New Brunswick, $2,381,000; Quebec, $20,271,000; Ontario, $24,374,000; Manitoba, $3,559,000; Saskatchewan, $3,624,000; Alberta, $5,009,000; British Columbia, $1,895,000. These are the benefits that this measure will bring to these provinces. They are the benefits that this government is seeking to bring to these provinces today and we trust that the house will support us in our effort.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the minister permit a question for clarification? I should like to ask the minister if these are guarantees or estimates.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I said estimates, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pickersgill: You also said they were benefits to the provinces.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): They are based on the best estimate at this date.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Laurier wished to make some explanation of some misinterpretation of what he said. Did he complete his explanation?

Mr. Chevrier: I wanted to ask some questions of the minister and I should like to ask them now.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Is the committee not the best place?

Mr. Chevrier: However, if the minister prefers to have them asked in the committee I will defer them until then.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Fleming, Eglinton) which was agreed to on the following division:

Bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Alteration of act in its application to fiscal year ending March 31, 1960.

Mr. Pearson: I have a few questions I should like to ask in connection with this clause which modifies the formula, as has been pointed out by the minister from the 15-9-50 of income tax and federal succession duties. As my first question I should like to ask if this modification of the formula was discussed at any time at any conference with the provinces.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not specifically in any general conference.

Mr. Pearson: Was the modification mentioned in this clause taken up, before the government agreed on it, by the minister in any way with any province?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Before it was introduced and the house was asked to take action on it the provinces were communicated with, as was fully made known in the debates in this house over a year ago.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask the minister to confirm the view taken from his statement that before the government agreed on this modification it had taken it up in some form with all the provinces?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We had received representations from many of the provincial treasurers asking for some further federal assistance in respect of this measure and for an enlargement of the provincial share of the yield from the standard taxes.

Mr. Pearson: It is now quite clear, I think —and perhaps the minister would confirm my statement—that the modification as such was not discussed with any province before the government agreed on it. The minister previously stated that they had received representations from some provinces asking for further assistance in some form. But the minister has not answered my question, and by his not answering it I assume the answer really should be a negative one. My question was whether this particular modification of the formula was taken up with the provinces in any way before it was agreed on by the government. In other words, were the provinces consulted in advance about this particular modification of the formula?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): In the way I have mentioned, yes. I have referred to the communication with the provinces. I have referred to what preceded that communication, namely the request of provinces for an enlarged provincial share of the yield from these particular standard taxes.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Pearson: Then it is clear that the minister had communicated to the provinces the agreement reached within the government for the modification of this formula only after that agreement had been reached. The provinces were then communicated with, I understand by telegram. This was the only form of consultation—and of course it was not a form of consultation at all—though some of the provinces had already communicated to the government that they would like more fiscal assistance from the federal government. May I now ask the minister if this particular modification of the formula was discussed at any meeting of provincial federal officials before official agreement was reached within the federal government.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No. There was discussion at a meeting of officials in Halifax of the proposed Atlantic provinces adjustment grant. At that meeting the four Atlantic provinces were represented by their officials; but this particular modification or increase in the provincial share of the yield from personal income taxes was not discussed at that Atlantic conference.

Mr. Pearson: May I now ask the minister whether the government will, at the forthcoming July conference, consider favourably the provinces' request or the request of some provinces that this formula should be further modified to a 15-15-50 basis?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The Leader of the Opposition is asking me to commit myself or to commit the government to some specific increase. Obviously, while the conference will have the widest scope to discuss all questions, I could not possibly be expected to make a statement of the nature asked of me by the Leader of the Opposition at this point.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the minister what is the position of the minister with reference to the concrete proposal which was put forward at the November conference of 1957 by the premier of Ontario to the effect that the division should be 15-15-50 rather than the present 13-9-50?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): My position is this. The representatives of any government at this forthcoming conference will be perfectly at liberty to suggest for inclusion in the agenda the discussion of any matter relating to the subject of federal-provincial fiscal relations that commends itself to the conference.

Mr. Chevrier: I am sure that is the case, and I am sure that no one on this side of the house or on the other side of it would want to preclude the discussion of any proposal.

But that was not my question. My question to the minister was this. What is the position of the minister with reference to the proposal which was made by the premier of Ontario and supported by several other premiers?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have stated my position on that subject.

Mr. Chevrier: May I proceed a bit further? Am I right in assuming that the position put forward by the premier of Ontario and other premiers was to the effect that the rate should be increased to 15-15-50?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think that position was taken by the premier of Ontario. As I recall it, I do not think he was the only premier who took that position. I know Premier Roblin of Manitoba has taken it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Campbell took it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And others took it at the conference of November, 1957.

Mr. Chevrier: Has the minister given any consideration to the amount which would be required to meet that proposal?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, from time to time. But first, Mr. Chairman, we have to make calculations. This is a field in which calculations are being constantly made, because the payments to the provinces undergo change in the light of the yield from period to period from these particular taxes. We have to make an estimate at the beginning of the fiscal year as to what we think the yield is likely to be. That is modified from time to time, and consequently in this field we are making calculations very frequently. It would not be difficult, I suppose, to calculate what the amount would be on any given percentage or any formula, the one mentioned by the hon. gentleman which, I take it, he advocates, or any other formula as applied to a division between the dominion and provincial governments of the yields from these three taxes.

Mr. Chevrier: Could the minister give the house the amount of increase in taxation which will be required to bring this payment about and what it would mean in the way of dollars and cents to the province of Ontario.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have not worked this out myself, Mr. Chairman, but I am informed that on a 15-15-50 formula the additional yield to Ontario over and above what will be provided by the present measure would be roughly in the neighbourhood of $100 million. The over-all cost in respect of all provinces—that is, the cost to the federal treasury—would be approximately $275 million.

Mr. Chevrier: Before I ask the other question, would the minister while I am posing the question be good enough to get the analagous figure for the province of Quebec? The other question which I would like to ask now, and I come back to it again, is what is the—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am sorry, but I am not in a position to give what the figure would be for Quebec. That would raise questions as to the tax abatement, and the situation is not as simple to calculate in the case of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, I realize that. Could I get it at a later date?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am afraid I could not obtain it for my hon. friend today but I will be glad to send it to my hon. friend later.

Mr. Chevrier: I understand it is in the old tables and perhaps could be obtained.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The figure may have changed from the old tables, depending on the changes in the yields since.

Mr. Chevrier: Then I come back to the question again: What is the position of the minister with reference to this proposal, which means in effect an increase to Ontario of $100 million, and I am sure an increase to the province of Quebec of a substantial amount as well, with the other provinces' shares being increased in proportion? Will the hon. minister not tell the house what his attitude or opinion is vis-à-vis that proposal?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think this is the third time my hon. friend has asked me the same question. I must refer him to my previous answer.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I think notwithstanding what the minister has replied that the committee is entitled to an answer to that question. After all, it has been discussed not only here but elsewhere, and I think the least the minister can do is to tell the house what his attitude or that of the government is with reference to that proposal.

Mr. Pearson: While the minister is thinking or rethinking about that question, may I ask him if the impression which I got from his statement this afternoon about the July conference with the provinces is correct, that it is expected to last for two days only, and that its purpose is to initiate a broad-based examination of federal-provincial fiscal relationships by a joint committee of the provincial governments and the federal government? Is that the purpose of the forthcoming conference?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think the Leader of the Opposition has stated it rather more narrowly than I stated it in my remarks this afternoon, Mr. Chairman. The conference of ministers will open on Monday morning, July 6, at 10.00 o'clock. It will last as long as it is necessary to reach the decisions that the ministers may care to take at that meeting. It is expected in any event that the meeting will go two days. It may go longer, I do not know.

Immediately following that meeting it is expected that the meeting of the continuing committee will follow, and that meeting will proceed as long as may be required. The agenda has not yet been fully determined. There have been confidential communications between the dominion and provincial ministers in regard to it and, as I say, it is now in process of being decided upon between them. I may say that thus far the course of discussion and the response of the provinces indicate that the agenda will be a very wide one and the ministers will be called upon to decide what particular subjects they propose to take up, in what order, what priorities they intend to assign to different subjects, and what subjects they wish the continuing committee of officials, very competent officials indeed, to undertake.

Then at the meeting of the federal-provincial continuing committee the assignment which will come to them from the meeting of ministers will be undertaken and the tasks allotted, as that committee may choose.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, if the representatives of any provincial government at the forthcoming conference should initiate or introduce a proposal for a further modification of this formula to, say, 15-15-50, would that proposal be discussed at this conference and would there be an opportunity afforded of coming to a decision in regard to it at this conference?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am quite sure, Mr. Chairman, that there will be discussion of formulae. I cannot imagine this meeting proceeding very far without the question of the formulae being discussed and how formulae can best be made up, having regard to the interest of all parties. Whether any decision can be expected to be taken at that conference I doubt. I do not say decisions cannot be taken. If there were unanimity on some particular subject, I presume the conference, or those who represent the governments at the conference, can obtain instructions; but failing that situation where there is unanimity on such a subject, I presume these subjects would be embraced within the discussions and the studies to follow.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Pearson: May I go one step further and ask the minister if it is accurate to say that at this forthcoming conference there would be an opportunity for a representative of the government of Ontario to advocate a 15-15-50 formula and that there would be at least an opportunity for discussion and decision in regard to that formula?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): As I have stressed, the agenda is a matter for decision on the part of all concerned, and with regard to any answer I may offer with relation to the agenda I wish to make it quite clear that the decision as to what shall be included within the agenda rests with the representatives of all the 11 governments concerned. I have indicated that I would be surprised if there were no discussion about formulas and about matters related to formulas.

Mr. Pearson: Has the attention of the minister been drawn to a statement by the premier of Ontario made in Ottawa on May 29 that he is confident that this federal-provincial parley in Ottawa in July will put a further $100 million or $115 million or $150 million into the revenues of Ontario, and does he feel it is realistic to assume that any decision in this regard could be made in July?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have not seen the newspaper comment which the hon. member has read.

Mr. Broome: I wonder if the minister could give an explanation with regard to the figure for British Columbia, which appears to be receiving in extra grants $1,895,000 as compared with a figure of $5 million for Alberta and $24 million for Ontario.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The figures I gave at the conclusion of my remarks this afternoon are the estimated figures as of the present time and take into account all the elements including the stabilization payments, and the reason why the figure in the case of British Columbia, which is $1,895,000, is less than the figure of $5,009,000 for the province of Alberta is that British Columbia is a principal beneficiary from the stabilization provisions of this act. The two provinces which have derived most benefit from the stabilization principle are British Columbia and Prince Edward Island, and this lower payment arises because of that principle of a built-in floor from which British Columbia has derived a good deal of protection of its payments hitherto. That is why the increase in this case does not appear to be as much as in the case of its neighbour province.

Mr. Regier: I wonder whether I may ask the minister this: has the premier of British Columbia made any representations regarding the bill now before us in connection with another meeting of premiers with the Prime Minister and, if he has, what was the tenor of those representations?

I should also like to ask the minister to tell us as nearly as he is able what was the payment to British Columbia under the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act for the year ending March 31, 1958 and also for the year ending March 31, 1959. I should also like the minister to indicate the amount of the estimated payments to British Columbia for the fiscal year which will end on March 31, of next year, 1960.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There have been to my knowledge no representations received from Premier Bennett in regard to the present amending bill. As to the payments made to British Columbia, I can give the hon. member these figures: for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1958 the payments under this act amounted to $58.9 million; in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1959, $64.1 million; in the present fiscal year 1959-60 it is estimated that the payments on the basis of the formula proposed in the present bill will amount to $68.4 million.

Mr. Regier: I know the minister has stated that the premier of British Columbia has made no particular representations with regard to the bill now before us, but I wonder whether the hon. gentleman will indicate whether or not the premier of British Columbia has made any representations within the past six or eight months expressing his desire for a new meeting with the Prime Minister of Canada along with the premiers of the various provinces.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am informed that the purport of the letter from the premier of British Columbia in accepting the invitation to participate in the conference on July 6 indicated that he thought this meeting was a good idea as a useful and necessary preliminary to a plenary conference.

Mr. Regier: I hope the minister realizes that under the benefits of the legislation now before us the estimated payments to British Columbia will amount to $68.4 million. If we add to that all the various other payments being made by the federal government to the treasury of the British Columbian government, especially under the provisions of the national health insurance act it will be seen that contributions by this government to the revenues of the government of British Columbia will exceed one-third of the income of the government of British Columbia. Therefore, any slogan upon which the government of British Columbia may embark in favour of a larger amount of money from Ottawa will be based on a somewhat weak foundation inasmuch as Ottawa is even now paying in excess of one-third of the income of the government of British Columbia.

Mr. Denis: May I ask the minister if the change in the rate of standard income tax for the purpose of calculating the payment to the provinces is the only change made by the present government since it took office?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There have been a number of changes made in the terms and the amounts of the payments made by the federal to the provincial governments. May I mention just a few? There are, of course, the conditional payments—quite a wide range of them. I should be glad to go into them, but I think that would be outside the scope of the present debate and what is properly relevant to this measure. In the second place there are, of course, the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants, and in the third place the provision made for tax abatements and the 3 per cent increase.

Mr. Denis: Do I understand that the substance of the measure is the same and that this is only a question of amounts and rates—it is a question of money?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If the hon. member is confining his question to the unconditional payments made in pursuance of the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act, that is one thing, but to put his question as broadly as he has done takes in a great deal more territory. Unless he restricts it I would have to answer his question by saying that the payments are greatly expanded and there have been many additions and many changes always in favour of the provinces. On the other hand, if he is confining his question to the terms of the present act, the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act, last year's amending act added a new section 11 and a new section 12, and the present bill now before the committee would propose to amend section 12 by extending until March 31, 1960, the increase from 10 per cent to 13 per cent in the provincial share of the yield from the personal income tax.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister whether the government proposes to put forward any plan at the forthcoming conference for a further modification of the existing tax-sharing formula or any new proposal for a tax-sharing formula.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, we are prepared to discuss any suggestions that are made with relation to the formula and will co-operate in any study that is sought or desired by the provinces in relation to that subject. We are certainly not going into this conference laying down any hard and fast proposals.

Mr. Pearson: I was not sugesting that, Mr. Chairman; I do not think it could be inferred from my question that I was suggesting any such procedure as that would be adopted. I am merely asking whether the federal government apart from its expressed willingness to consider any proposal made by provincial delegations is itself going to put forward for discussion and consideration any modification of this tax-sharing formula or a new formula to replace the present one? Has the government any plans for that purpose? Is it to be a matter for consideration at the conference?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, there are so many hypothetical elements in the hon. gentleman's questions that I do not think I can usefully add to what I have already said to the committee on the subject.

Mr. Pearson: There is nothing hypothetical about the deduction one must draw from the minister's evasion. The deduction I draw is that the federal government is not going to propose any further modification of the present formula or any new formula because surely if the government on the eve of this conference had such a proposal to make it would at least be able to inform the committee of this fact. I am not asking for the details of the proposal but whether in fact the government will make any proposal to the conference along the lines I suggested.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think we will wish to know what the provinces have to propose in relation to formulas and in relation to all the other types of payments of which they are in receipt today. This conference will have to embrace consideration of the whole realm of payments whether conditional or unconditional.

Mr. Pearson: The government has had two years in which to find that out from the provinces but I will leave that particular matter as it stands. Surely the minister, though he may not have read the statement from Mr. Frost which I mentioned, must be aware that some provinces are expressing views in this matter which if they were carried out would represent an additional contribution from the federal treasury and if these views were accepted by this conference in July it might be possible and indeed necessary to have a further amendment made to this legislation because we will undoubtedly be here at the time this conference is being held.

For instance, in an interview in Toronto with the editors of the Toronto Star just the other day, Mr. Frost had some interesting comments to make. I quote from the interview. He was asked about the federal-provincial fiscal conference called for July 6 and was asked the following question:

> Templeton: Can we go to another subject? On the matter of the dominion-provincial fiscal conference which has been called for July 6, you have said that you expect to get a further $100 million at this conference—
> Frost: That was dramatizing.
> Templeton: When you say you were dramatizing, are you suggesting that you don't mean it?
> Frost: I certainly do mean it.

> Our position is well known. As a major objective we have advanced the much-discussed 15-15-50 formula which means about $100 million to Ontario in new revenue.

We must assume from this that at least one province is going to put forward a formula, if that statement means anything at all. We have the right to assume also that this conference lasting for two days as the minister said, unless something intervenes to make it last longer, will then adjourn and after the two days a study is to be made of the whole question. Now we have the right to assume that the federal government after all these months is not itself putting forward any proposal for modification of this formula or for a new formula, beyond that which is embodied in the bill before us at this time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to supplement what the Leader of the Opposition has just said and draw to the minister's attention the remarks he made at the close of the conference in 1957 as reported at page 102 of the proceedings:

> Now, sir, may I make a brief comment on the suggestions as to the form in which the conference might continue.

I want to found a question on this, Mr. Chairman. I continue:

> Suggestions were made yesterday on the part of two provincial premiers, I think, that an attempt should be made at this conference, which means today, to arrive at firm decisions. May I point out, sir—and I think this is in the minds of all of the provincial representatives—that we did call this conference as soon as possible after taking office. The new government has been faced with many burdens, including a number of conferences. This one was called as a two-day conference and the invitations were accepted on that basis.

Perhaps I might interject that two-day conferences seem to be the pattern. I continue:

> The proposals which have been submitted—

In other words, in November of 1957, all these provinces made their proposals and now they are going to be asked at a lower level —I say this to justify my reference to the forthcoming conference as a pale imitation of a conference—to come and repeat them, and still we have nothing from the federal government. I continue:

> The proposals which have been submitted all involve the expenditure of large sums of money. All of them require careful study.

This is the Minister of Finance telling us how this thing was going to be done two years ago. It is very different from what he is telling us now. I continue:

> Indeed, sir, we would be doing less than justice to them and the important sources from which they come if we did not undertake to give them careful study. Moreover, some of the proposals will necessarily involve extended planning and surveying before precise calculations could be arrived at or decisions based upon them.

That was a year and a half ago; a little more than that in fact. One question I should like to put at this time although I want to read a little more, is this. Would the minister tell us now what the result is of that planning and surveying and those precise calculations and what decisions have been based upon that year and a half of planning and surveying and precise calculating which he promised the premiers in November of 1957 he was going to do? I continue reading the minister's words at that conference:

> Therefore, in conclusion it seems to me that we are in this position. The provinces, which with one exception and one other exception in part, had entered into agreements with the former government effective on the first of April of this year, have in their statements indicated to us quite a marked difference in approach to the problem than one might have inferred from the signing of those agreements.

I should like to ask the minister, and this is the first time I have ever had the chance to do so, how he squares this statement with the statements he and the Prime Minister made before the election to the effect that this problem could be solved very simply by a single conference with all of the governments sitting down together and the conference reaching the agreements.

My second question to the minister is this. Is it intended that the conference in July should reach any conclusions or does the present government intend to treat this conference in exactly the same way as conferences have been treated by all governments since confederation, namely to listen to representations and then take its own responsibility before this house to this house, or does the minister think there is some other way of doing this? I think it is about time we had a precise answer to that question.

> Having regard to the extent, the number, the importance and the cost involved in the various important proposals which have been made, it is evident, sir, as you said at the outset, that with a purse necessarily limited it is highly important that this conference should not close later today without our having gone as far as may be possible in seeking further information as to the views of the provinces concerning priorities among the various proposals put forward.

I think that after a year and a half the minister could perhaps tell us what those priorities are, what it is proposed to do first and what precise line the government now intends to take in this conference about the various proposals that were put forward at the last conference. I am sure that these ministers of finance are not just coming here for a joy ride. They want answers to these questions they put a year and a half ago. Personally, I know some of them expect answers and it seems to me that the minister could tell us what the general nature of those answers is going to be if, indeed, the government is going to put anything before this conference, or is the government just going to let the provincial governments make another series of requests and after two days send them home again? It seems to me that unless we are given a precise answer that is the inference we would draw.

I would remind the minister, in view of what he said a little earlier this afternoon, that when that series of five conferences which preceded the introduction by Mr. Harris of the present tax-sharing arrangements act was held, while no precise proposals were made by the federal government at the first and second of those meetings the federal government did give a very clear indication to the conference and to the public of the lines along which it was willing to approach this matter. In fact that approach was modified on at least three, and if my memory serves me rightly—I have not checked this carefully—or four occasions before the then prime minister and Mr. Harris made the statement they did. After four modifications, after four discussions with the provinces, where they were listened to and when many of their ideas were accepted, finally the government had to take its responsibility as finally this government perhaps will have to take its responsibility, though this government certainly has a great capacity for putting off until tomorrow those things that other governments used to do when problems were urgent. I ask the minister, does he intend merely to ask the provinces to come here again and make more speeches and then send them home, promising them still more study groups, or is the federal government going to give them any answers?

Before I resume my seat, and so that the minister can answer all my questions at once, I should like the minister to tell me how much in total the provinces derived—I use the word "derived" because I know they did not receive it all from the federal treasury—because of the existence of the tax rental arrangements and the tax abatements in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1957, March 31, 1958 and March 31, 1959, without including the Atlantic provinces adjustment grant so that the figures will be strictly comparable.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman began by reading remarks attributed to me in the record of the dominion-provincial conference of November 25 and 26, 1957, and the portion he read appeared to be treated by him as remarks made at the close of the conference with reference to some possible future meeting of the conference and the way in which the conference might continue. He quoted these words:

> Now, sir, may I make a brief comment on the suggestions as to the form in which the conference might continue.

These remarks which the hon. gentleman has read from the record were not remarks made at the close of the conference at all. These remarks were made at the close of the public session on the morning of November 26 and were directed to the form in which the conference might proceed in the in-camera session which followed upon the adjournment of the public session. My remarks related to the later meeting in camera on that day. They did not relate to some future resumption of a plenary conference.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister permit me to ask him a question so that we can clear up this point? The minister also remembers that there was a communique issued at the end of that conference and that communique contained these words with respect to tax-sharing arrangements:

> Possible changes in the tax-sharing arrangements act were discussed but it was understood that no endeavour would be made to reach conclusions on this matter prior to further consideration of the subject by the dominion government in the light of the public statements made by the provincial representatives in open sessions and the discussions which took place in committee.

Does the minister say that the consideration promised then is completed and that this measure is the result of it, or does he intend to deal further at the forthcoming conference with the rather strong demands that all provinces, without exception, made for a larger share of direct taxes?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There is no such thing as closing off demands on the part of any government in this field except to the extent to which the former government closed them off by the terms of the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act and the agreements that were entered into prior to March 31, 1957, in pursuance of the terms of that act.

The second question that the hon. member asked related to the purpose and scope of the conference, as I followed his remarks. Of course the provincial treasurers or ministers of finance are coming here with a serious purpose. We are going into this conference with a serious purpose and I stated that purpose this afternoon. We are making an earnest effort by means of the proposed co-operative approach and co-operative study to follow to make a thorough review of this field. Many, many questions have been raised from time to time in relation to this field and so far as we are able we intend to try to find long term solutions or settlements of the difficulties. That is the purpose of everyone. I have described in my remarks this afternoon the scope and purpose of the conference. These have been subscribed to by the provinces as evidenced by their acceptance of the invitation and the extent to which they have participated in the steps that have already been taken in preparation for the conference and the agenda for discussion.

The third matter the hon. member raised was as to the gross payments made—

Mr. Pickersgill: Gross advantage derived by the provinces.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): From payments made under this legislation or its predecessor?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I should like figures to compare with those that the minister put in his budget papers. In other words, they would include either payments or tax abatements up to the amount because that is the only way you can get them comparable for the different provinces. I should like to have figures comparable with those which Mr. Harris gave when he introduced the measure originally in 1956.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, excluding the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants, the figures are as follows: For the fiscal year 1956-57, a total of $523 million; for 1957-58, $633 million; for 1958-59, $661 million, and that figure of course is subject to revision when the final figures are available. Then, for the present fiscal year, 1959-60, the estimate at this time is $753 million.

Mr. Pickersgill: $753 million—the minister estimates it is $100 million more this year?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, not $100 million, it is $92 million more, according to the present estimate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely there must be some error in those figures because there is no difference in the formula this year from that for the year ending March 31, 1959.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): But there is a substantial difference in the tax returns estimated.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister will from those figures agree, I think, whatever may turn out to be the situation in 1960—I am sure he would also agree a large part of the returns from 1959-60 would have arisen under the old formula and that only the 3 per cent will come from the new formula—he will agree with me, I think—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think the hon. member will agree, before he goes too far on that line, that had it not been for the amendment made last year to increase from 10 per cent to 13 per cent the provincial share of the yield from the personal income tax, the yield to the provinces in 1958-59 would have been lower than the figure for 1957-58 because of the decline in the yield from personal income taxes, which would have brought into effect the wider application of the stabilization principle.

Mr. Pickersgill: Was it not more a decline in the corporation tax? However, that is not really material. The point I am making here is that from the minister's figures it will be seen that the increase Mr. Harris proposed in 1956, and which came into effect for the fiscal year 1957-58, amounted to $110 million and this much boasted increase of this present government, which was going to be more generous, amounts to $29 million.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, that is not fair.

Mr. Pickersgill: The figures are here. The minister has just given them. If the minister will subtract $523 million from $633 million, he will find that leaves $110 million. If he subtracts $633 million from $661 million, he will find that is $29 million. I have only done that mentally. I have not counted it on my fingers, but I think it is right, if the minister's figures are right. I am a little sceptical about the minister's figures because I think he told us in January, 1958, when he came into office and first told us about those telegrams of his in which he made other mistakes, that this was going to yield $62 million to the provinces. Now he tells us it is only $29 million.

Mr. McCleave: It is $28 million.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member tells me it is only $28 million, and I think that is correct. I thank the hon. member for Halifax for making the minister's figures look even more absurd. Here is this great generosity about which we have been told so much, this generosity about which the Minister of Justice went down to Newfoundland to tell the people, when a considerable portion of the total which he gave resulted from the action of Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Harris. I think it is time these facts were put before the public. This was the so-called take it or leave it attitude about which we heard so much, but the formula was actually the result of several conferences with the provinces in which many of their modifications were accepted and which yielded an additional $110 million. This operation by telegram turns out to have yielded $28 million, and I thank the hon. member for Halifax again for correcting my arithmetic.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. gentleman professes to want facts.

Mr. Pickersgill: Exactly, and I used only the minister's figures.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He has proceeded from that to draw some very fictional conclusions. I think he had better add to his store of facts and draw the proper conclusions from them. It is true that in the year I have indicated, 1957-58, the payments to the provinces under this present act amounted to $633 million, but had we not introduced a year ago the amendment to increase from 10 per cent to 13 per cent the provincial share of the yield from the personal income tax the provinces in the year 1958-59 would have received only $613 million, whereas they actually received, as a result of the legislation introduced by the present government, $661 million. In other words, they received $48 million more than they would have received under the former government if it had continued in office.

Mr. Pickersgill: That assumption, of course, is only an assumption; the hon. member does not know.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This does not include the Atlantic adjustment grants. If you add the $25 million given under the Atlantic adjustment grants, it will be seen that the increased benefits to the provinces since this present government came into office, in the fiscal year 1958-59 by way of unconditional payments alone, were $73 million.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is still substantially less, even with that arithmetic by the minister, than Mr. Harris provided in 1956. I quite agree with the minister, and I never said anything to the contrary, that he did not do as well because the country did not do as well when he was in office as it did when Mr. Harris was in office; that is self-evident. The minister told the house in January, 1958, that his best estimate was that this new arrangement would yield $62 million. He now says it yielded $48 million.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, that was according to the estimates at that time.

Mr. Pickersgill: In other words, we have a pretty substantial shrinkage, even of the minister's $62 million. I wonder if the minister could tell us what the difference was between what Ontario actually got in 1958-59 under this arrangement and what Ontario would have obtained if this arrangement had not been made.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The payment in 1958-59 which Ontario would have received under the 10-9-50 formula would have been $71,786,000. The payment which it has received under the 13-9-50 formula was $93,322,000, an increase of $21,536,000 as a result of the amendment introduced a year ago.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was about 10 per cent less than the minister estimated. I think his first estimate was about $23 million.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The figures I gave a year ago, I remind the hon. member, were given as illustrations based upon the figures for the previous year and such figures as were available at that time. We had not then arrived at the end or within several months of the end of the fiscal year 1957-58.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister also forgets he made a speech in the Montmagny by-election in which he gave solid figures that the people could count upon.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The figures I gave there, I think the hon. member will agree, according to the estimate made, were fair and proper.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister gave, in the by-election in October or September, whichever it was, the figures which he had given to the house in January, not a new estimate, which would have been lower.

Mr. Pearson: Now that the minister's estimates have been checked against the facts, may I return to another aspect of this matter which we were discussing a few minutes ago? The minister has said something about the desirability of reaching long term solutions. I think we can all agree with that, in principle, though this bill is not a long term solution any more than was the bill last year. He also indicated that the conference to be called in July has a serious purpose. I am sure it has. The conference called on September 16, 1957, when he invited the provincial premiers to Ottawa in November, was meant to have a serious purpose. The letter of invitation which can be read in Hansard at page 589 of that session, began as follows:

> My colleagues and I believe it would be useful and desirable to arrange a dominion-provincial conference—

This was in September, 1957.

> —to review the present pattern of tax-sharing arrangements.

That is a long time ago. At least it was one and a half years ago. At that meeting in November, as has been pointed out by my colleague the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, at that two-day conference the federal government made some proposals and the provincial governments presumably made some proposals and the conference adjourned so that those proposals could be considered. It was understood that the conference would resume and deal with those proposals and presumably come to some long-term solution.

Now, a year and a half later, the minister says, "We are going to have another conference at which we are not making any proposals"—or at least he would not indicate to us on this side of the chamber that they had any proposals to make—"but at which we will consider once again the proposals which may be made by the provinces." That is what he told the provinces a year and a half ago, namely that they would consider the provincial proposals. Is this conference in July 1959 called for exactly the same purpose, namely to consider provincial proposals which were made a year and a half ago?

We know what some of those proposals were. It is an open secret. We know that some of the provinces want a 15-15-50 formula. Mr. Frost is going around the country saying that is what they are going to get in July. He did not say very much about it a year and a half ago and he did not say very much about it in the intervening period. But he has said a great deal about it in the last little while. Perhaps he has some basis for what he is saying. If he has, perhaps the minister might let us know. Perhaps his basis for it is the attitude of the Prime Minister in 1957 during the election when he campaigned with Mr. Frost and applauded Mr. Frost's demand at that time for a 15-15-50 formula. I do not think we should blame Mr. Frost too much if, in June, 1959, he feels he may be able to have this formula accepted.

But I ask the minister this question. Is that all that is going to happen in July, namely that the provinces are going to produce the old formula, or the old modifications and the government is going to have another look at it for another two days and set up a committee to have a further look at it during the next two years?

Mr. Chevrier: When the minister was making his remarks a few minutes ago I intervened to ask a question but the minister thought it might be better dealt with at this time. The question I was going to ask had to do with the attitude taken by the minister with respect to the formula which was originally adopted by the former administration. The minister in his speech was extremely critical of that formula; that is, of course, the formula 10-9-50 which the present administration increased to 10-13-50 and is now seeking to extend for a further term.

But the point I wish to make at this stage is that while the minister was highly critical of our position and the attitude that was taken on this side of the house, I wonder whether he listened carefully to the speech made last evening by the hon. member for Bellechasse. The hon. member for Bellechasse was not nearly as critical of that attitude or that position as was the minister. I should like to refer him to what was said by the hon. member for Bellechasse as reported at pages 4304 and 4305 of Hansard. Of course, I am now paraphrasing his language but there he speaks of the conciliatory attitude of Mr. St. Laurent in dealing with this whole problem. He says that the formula and the principles laid down in the law known as 4-5 Eliz. II, chapter 29, to use his own expression:

(Translation):

—reducing to silence the small politicians surrounding him, putting aside all narrow, mean and political considerations, became the instigator of "that law"—

(Text):

In other words, he commends the former prime minister for the attitude adopted in that formula. Later on, in another part of the speech he went on to defend that conciliatory attitude. I am therefore somewhat surprised at the fact that there seems to be a divergence of opinion. Perhaps I should not be surprised because that is something that often happens on the other side of the house, namely that the government is divided.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friends shout "Oh, oh". We saw what happened with reference to the strike of the C.B.C. producers in Montreal. A portion of the government felt that the strike was legal and another portion felt that it was illegal.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: I realize, Mr. Chairman, that I am out of order; but I am out of order simply because I have been interrupted. I will now get back to what I intended to say and it is this. The attitude adopted by the minister and that adopted by the hon. member for Bellechasse seem to be at variance and that is indicated from the language, as I see it, in Hansard. That leads me to this question. Has the minister received any representations since the 1957 conference from the premier of the province of Quebec or made representations with respect to this measure. What are his representations with respect to this agreement which is now before us? Is the premier satisfied with the division as it is found in this formula? I am sure the minister will want me to remind him that following the conference of 1957 the premier of the province of Quebec left the conference and said to everyone who wanted to listen how happy he was with the manner in which the proposals had been submitted and with the treatment that had been meted out to various groups; and he went on to repeat that for a period of some months. In fact, when he was chastised about his reversal of form, I think his words were something like this, "We must be patient; we must wait because it will take a long, long time for the present government to correct the many mistakes that were made by the former administration over a period of 22 years."

You can see, Mr. Chairman, how well that statement of the premier of the province of Quebec was received by those who applaud on the other side of the chamber. But have they seen or read or heard of the statement that he made only several months later on at least three occasions condemning, not in the most violent language—I do not think that is his attitude generally—but in the most vigorous language the conduct of the present government, and going so far as to say that it is even worse than was the conduct of the former administration.

An hon. Member: How could it be?

Mr. Chevrier: I believe that he used the words—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, is this relevant to the bill that is now before the committee?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, the minister was allowed to roam all around section 12. Surely I may be allowed, as a preface to the questions that I intend to ask, to point this out. Surely I am entitled to point out a difference of opinion by one of the premiers of the provinces having to do with this kind of arrangement, an attitude which was entirely sympathetic in 1957 or shortly thereafter, and an attitude now which has been completely reversed and is in vigorous condemnation of the present attitude of the government. Before I proceed further, I ask the minister if he has received representations from the premier of the province of Quebec with reference to the formula which is now under discussion?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, may I take up the remarks made and questions put by the hon. member for Laurier before coming to the matters raised by the Leader of the Opposition. It is quite true the premier of Quebec expressed himself, I think it is fair to say, in laudatory terms of the atmosphere of the dominion-provincial conference of 1957. I know a great many of the delegates from the provinces expressed themselves to the same effect. They expressed the feeling that there was an entirely new atmosphere there quite different from the atmosphere which had prevailed in dominion-provincial conferences for some years prior to that time in view of the fact that there was no suggestion on the part of the federal government of any take it or leave it attitude, which marked a very strong change in the attitude of the federal government in 1957 as compared with the attitude of the federal government which had confronted them in previous conferences.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not what Mr. Frost said.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member for Laurier goes on from there to make statements about the attitude of the premier of the province of Quebec. I am not aware of any expressions of opinion on the part of the premier of the province of Quebec that jibe with those attributed to him by the hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Chevrier: The hon. minister had better read the newspapers.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It may be the hon. member is better informed on the subject than I, but I have not seen remarks which tally with those attributed to the premier of Quebec by the hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Chevrier: The hon. minister is not up on the reading of his press clippings.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): However, so far as his question is concerned I am not aware of any representations which have been made to us by the premier of Quebec with respect to the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act or the division of yields between the dominion and provincial governments thereby provided.

So far as the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition are concerned, I think they left a quite unfair impression. He seemed to suggest that the dominion-provincial conference of November, 1957 had not been a fruitful conference. The fact is that it was a highly fruitful conference. It was from that conference that the efforts to work out a satisfactory formula for an Atlantic provinces adjustment grant ensued, which reached a happy conclusion in the voting by parliament of the sum of $100 million for the four Atlantic provinces over the period of four fiscal years.

In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, it was out of or in the course of that meeting when the provinces stated their needs, and in the light of those statements and the further representations which were made to us by the provincial treasurers in the ensuing weeks, particularly urgent in the light of their need to prepare their budgets for presentation to their legislatures early in 1958, that we asked the house to increase the provincial share of the yield from the personal income taxes from 10 to 13 per cent. That amendment of last year, as I have indicated already this afternoon, has brought very substantial benefits to the provinces. They are asking for a continuation of those benefits, and this measure which we are asking the house to endorse now is one which I think I can assure the house is being urgently and anxiously awaited by all provincial treasurers.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think the minister's memory has failed him a little when he talked about the view taken at the conference in 1957 about a different attitude. I would like to read a little of what Mr. Frost said at this conference about Mr. St. Laurent. He said:

> As I say I would like today again to voice my appreciation for his ability as chairman of several conferences and meetings and my thanks for the infinite patience—

I underline those words to the minister, and also the words "several conferences". It was not just a two-day shotgun affair, Mr. Frost continued:

> —for the infinite patience he has invariably shown, for his unfailing courtesy which I think sprang from Mr. St. Laurent himself and from the fact that he is, basically, a Canadian gentleman and comes from that great race, two of the attributes of which are courtesy and understanding.

That is what the premier of the senior province said about Mr. St. Laurent and the way he conducted conferences when he was prime minister.

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, I realize that the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) cannot answer for the premier of the province of Quebec, but everybody knows that the attitude of the province of Quebec is utterly negative and that, far from helping in any way to settle this matter, the Quebec premier has always given a negative answer. At no time did he offer any serious alternative.

I have a question to ask and I should like to refresh the memory of the Minister of Finance. I shall even refer to the 50 Conservative members of this house who supported the attitude of the Quebec premier. Can the minister tell me if they have made any representations to him for a change in the principle of the act as passed by the former government. I shall get a bit closer still to the minister and ask him: Did the Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer), his colleague, make any representations requesting that this act which he said was unconstitutional, be made constitutional.

Moreover, in order to prove what I am saying, Mr. Chairman, I shall refer to a question and answer which appear on page 134 of the French edition of the official record of this house for 1957-58.

The member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, Mr. Maurice Breton, who was a good representative, said at that time:

> Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Solicitor General a question?
> When sitting in the opposition the hon. Solicitor General has, on various occasions, given expression to the well-known thought that federal subsidies are unconstitutional. The opinion which he voiced then was shared in every way by the government of the province of Quebec. In view of the proposed federal-provincial meeting on fiscal matters, could he tell us now if he will oppose the subsidies which his government seems to be preparing at this time?

That was October 18, 1957, and Mr. Balcer answered as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell my hon. friend that I am still opposed to subsidies such as were proposed by the former government. As to his question, it seems to be a hypothetical one, but I am—
> An hon. Member: A political one—
> Mr. Balcer: —and a political one, yes. I want to tell him that the proposals of the federal government are not yet known, but I am convinced that they will be made on a very different basis from those of the former government.

According to the answer given me by the hon. Minister of Finance a moment ago, I must say that the only change that was made in this legislation is the amount of money given to the various provinces. It is not a question of dollars and cents that will make a legislation constitutional or unconstitutional. If the act was unconstitutional before the amount was raised, it is still so after any increase. Now because the Solicitor General had promised his voters that there would be a change—for in his view the wording of this legislation made it unconstitutional and a violation of provincial rights—he should have made representations to the Minister of Finance, as should also all Quebec members, urging him to change the principles and the basis of a legislation which, he alleged, was unconstitutional.

I see that the hon. Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois) is smiling, but he has been more cautious than his colleague the Solicitor General, because when asked the same question at that time, he refused to answer and preferred to wait until the government legislation was before the house. He did not wish to commit himself, because he knew very well that whatever reason he would give, he would have to follow the instructions of the head of the government.

Therefore, I ask the hon. Minister of Finance whether Quebec members, including the hon. Solicitor General, have made any representations to him? If so, why were not those representations favourably considered and why does the government come up with that selfsame act which had been adopted under the Liberal regime? In fact, only the amount has changed.

To say that granting 13 per cent instead of 10 per cent brings more money to each province is self-evident, and that is what was argued this afternoon. However, I should like to know whether the hon. minister has received any representations from the Solicitor General or from the Quebec members, and, if so, why those representations were ignored.

Mr. Chairman, I demand an answer. Yesterday, I was told that I kept silent on the matter. I find that if anyone should not remain silent, it is the Minister of Finance, considering that his own legislation is under review.

It is true I have not spoken every day for 22 years, but at least, I did not tell lies and I never tried to mislead people. When I spoke, I spoke the truth, and when I supported certain policies in election campaigns, I supported them in the house too. There have been times when I spoke and voted against my own party since, having promised my electors I would take a certain stand, I behaved accordingly. Therefore I am not like those people who rebuke me and who say in their constituencies that something is white and then say here in the house that it is black. Mr. Chairman, I should like to get a reply from the Minister of Finance before he is accused of being speechless as I was accused recently. It seems to me it should be easy to know, Mr. Chairman, whether the minister has received any representations from Quebec members for a change in the principles of this legislation.

(Text):

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member does not seriously expect an answer to questions of that kind. He is asking me about discussions with my colleagues both in the cabinet and in the house. He knows perfectly well that these things cannot be disclosed.

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, whether representations were made or not, we realize that the minister did not take heed of the advice given him, and that this legislation which, according to hon. friends opposite, was unconstitutional two years ago, is still so today. Therefore, those who vote in favour of this legislation, and declare it constitutional because of a 3 per cent increase are, in my opinion, hardly logical. Those are the people who, during election campaigns, condemned that legislation which they now approve in the house.

(Text):

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to ask the minister one or two additional questions. Last year, if I understand this matter properly, the provinces received 13 per cent of the personal income tax. But the 13 per cent was based on the amount fixed in 1956, the 1956 rate, if you prefer.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The rate in effect in January, 1956.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes. Thank you. This year the government announced an increase in the rate of the tax on personal income and, if I understand the position properly, the provinces will on that account receive somewhere in the neighbourhood of $130 million. The share of the provinces remains unchanged. The point with which I am concerned at the moment is this: is it not a fact that the federal government gets a larger share of the personal income tax revenue because of the increase in the rate this year and that as a consequence the provinces will receive a lesser share in that field than last year.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): They may be getting a smaller percentage of the total tax levied on personal income, but their receipts in aggregate will be increased substantially, as I have indicated.

Mr. Chevrier: That is in part what I said in my statement yesterday and if the minister will look at it carefully he will find that although he took exception to it in his remarks, that is the effect of the statement I made.

Now, if I may, I shall pursue that further. Under the formula as it was first enacted, 9 per cent of corporation profits go to the provinces, while 38 per cent of these profits are assigned to the federal government. It follows from that that the proportion received by the provinces is 24 per cent of that received by the federal government. That is under the old system. This year, however, the government has increased taxes on corporation profits and I take it that this means that the proportion going to the provinces is 9 per cent of the corporation profits while the federal government's proportion will be 41 per cent. The consequence of this is that the proportion a province receives will be 22 per cent, so the relationship is now smaller. In other words, is it not a fact that because of the increase in the corporation taxes this year the provinces will be receiving less in that field?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There is nothing in the present measure which has any bearing upon the yield from taxes on corporations.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yesterday afternoon the hon. member for Bellechasse in his contribution to this debate made certain references to statements which were made on April 14, 1954 by the Hon. Jean Lesage, who was then a member of the government of that day. Those references gave an impression of what Mr. Lesage has said in the debate which, I thought, did not represent at all accurately the position which he, as a member of that government, took. It seems to me, as a member of that government at that time, that since the hon. member for Bellechasse was allowed to make this reference I should also be allowed to refer to the remarks which Mr. Lesage made in order to indicate clearly what position he did, in fact, take.

I am reading from the French Hansard at page 4319:

(Translation):

I would be the last one to suggest that the Quebec legislature had no right to impose such a tax. The constitution gives it the right to impose direct taxes within the province for provincial purposes. The problem is not whether the province has the right to tax personal income, for such a right is recognized.

(Text):

And a little later, he said:

(Translation):

In either case, Mr. Speaker, is there anything but the recognition of a parallel and concurrent right; in both cases, the Canadian government makes an honest effort to help the provinces, while eliminating the inconvenience of double taxation for the taxpayers, and the cost thereof for the governments.

(Text):

Now I have a question I should like to put to the minister. It concerns the question which was put by my hon. friend from Burin-Burgeo at the resolution stage.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

June 4, 1959

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor

Mr. Speaker: The house will resume the business which was interrupted upon the arrival of the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod.

[Mr. Speaker.]

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL TAX-SHARING ARRANGEMENTS ACT

FURTHER EXTENSION OF INCOME TAX RATE

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-41, to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act—Mr. Fleming (Eglinton)—Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Alteration of act in its application to fiscal year ending March 31, 1960.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, when we were interrupted by the arrival of Black Rod I was just at the beginning of a question to the minister and I think I had gone so far as pointing out that the question was asked at the resolution stage by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo. The minister will recall that on April 20 the Prime Minister, on the television network program "The Nation's Business", made a statement in which he said:

> In the very careful study which I have been giving to this whole matter, I find that since confederation Newfoundland has received a total of $300 million from the federal government, including the amounts for the current year.

Then he went on to show how this $300 million was made up. My hon. friend asked that comparable totals be given for all the provinces. The minister will recall also that a starred question was asked by the hon. member for Trinity-Conception requesting not merely the total but also breakdowns for the other three Atlantic provinces and for Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and that question was made an order for return before this debate began. I do believe, in view of the fact that these figures have been given and that the Prime Minister claimed on TV he had made a careful study of the matter, that comparable figures should be given. Obviously, the Prime Minister would not have said he had made a careful study of this matter if he had not compared the Newfoundland figures with the other figures. I would not suggest for a moment that the Prime Minister would have obtained the figures for Newfoundland and, without relating them in any way to the other provinces, put them forward as though they were something startling.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It should be noted, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. gentleman takes his starting point, not from anything said in the course of the debate on this measure at its various stages but rather from what the Prime Minister said during a television broadcast. What was referred to there embraced a great deal more ground, of course, than the bill now before the committee. It embraced not only the unconditional payments provided for under the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act, but all manner of conditional payments that the federal treasury contributes to the assistance of the provinces.

It is quite obvious that the type of material now sought is quite outside the scope of this measure and outside the scope of the present debate. This does not mean that the hon. gentleman cannot possibly obtain the information he wishes. As a matter of fact, there was an order of this house passed some days ago which, in its scope, embraced as I understand it the information now sought by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Pickersgill: Some of it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The information the hon. gentleman is seeking could be had at any time in the proper way. It is not relevant to this measure now before the committee. The hon. gentleman can certainly have the information. When it was requested I indicated it was not available then. The information, so far as it was within the possession of the finance department, was compiled in response to the order for return passed by the house, and that will be forthcoming in the ordinary course. It includes much that is quite outside the scope of the present measure.

Mr. Pickersgill: I must say, Mr. Chairman, there certainly seems to be in the opinion of the minister, one rule for one side of the house and one for the other, because in his speech closing the debate on second reading he made very considerable reference, without giving precise figures, to this very subject. It seems to be all right for the minister to traverse all kinds of ground but when anyone on this side of the house attempts to obtain information, then he is told it is outside the scope of the bill.

The purpose of this legislation is to increase the amounts the provinces will receive under the tax-sharing arrangements. It is hard to conceive of anything that could be more relevant, if we are to give proper consideration as to whether this is the right amount or the adequate amount, than knowing what the total amount is that the provinces have received.

There is another reason for asking for this information. The Prime Minister said he had given very careful study to this matter. The Minister of Justice went down to Newfoundland and gave figures on the same subject which turned out to be hopelessly incorrect, and which he said he obtained from the Department of Finance. This whole information relating to Newfoundland has, in our opinion, been used to create an entirely illusory impression on the public. We do believe, when we consider this problem of federal-provincial financial relations, that we are entitled to the information for all the provinces.

The minister says we can get this. My hon. friend from Trinity-Conception put a starred question on the order paper a week after this broadcast was delivered, that is to say late in April, and it is now June 4 but we have not received this information yet. It is all very well for the minister to say that we can get this information. It is true that we can put motions on the order paper; it is true we can put questions on the order paper which are then made orders for returns and are buried in the department of the Secretary of State, which seems literally to have become a burial ground for these returns. If the rules permitted me, I would say that I do know the department has this information. I know it would not take the minister two minutes, if he has brought them with him from the department, to produce the figures giving the comparable totals for all the provinces. I know this because I used to be a member of the government and, from time to time, I used to get this information. It did not take two months to get it, either. I cannot believe that the machinery of government has broken down quite to that extent in the two short years the hon. gentleman has been presiding over the Department of Finance, although we know there has been a very sad deterioration. I do suggest the minister would facilitate the passage of this legislation by giving this information here and now.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: I have another point that I want to take up, since I take it we are going to be denied this information. We are told we can get it, but it seems to be impossible to get it when you ask for it. The minister also talked about the beautiful harmony that had been established between the federal government and the provinces since this government came into office. When the hon. member for Laurier suggested that perhaps this harmony, in so far as the government of Quebec was concerned, is not as great as it seemed to be two years ago, the minister said he had not read anything to indicate the contrary.

I happen to have right here in my hand a clipping from one of the minister's favourite newspapers, Le Devoir, for April 2 of this year—I shall not quote this because it is not directly on the point—in which the premier of Quebec took the most violent exception to action taken by this government. This is only one of many that we could furnish.

But it is not only with the government of Quebec that we have this new harmony. Last week in another debate we witnessed—and I am not going to traverse it—the Prime Minister making attacks on the governments of two provinces in a single speech. That is something that did not use to happen when we were in office. I never, during the time that Mr. St. Laurent was in office, heard him make any attack on any provincial government, whatever the provocation.

If the hon. gentleman thinks his government has good relations with the province from which I happen to be elected, I think perhaps he is unique in holding that view. The fact of the matter is that since this government came into office there has been a most shocking deterioration in the relations between the federal government and the governments of the provinces. Part of the reason for that deterioration is that the provinces and the public were told in 1957 that a Conservative government would solve this problem at a single conference. Instead of that, we have this one year at a time business.

I ask you, Mr. Chairman, why do we have this bill brought back every year? The Leader of the Opposition pointed out quite clearly this afternoon that this government has not any intention of doing anything more than this for the currency of these agreements. Why does not the minister ask right here and now to amend this bill in committee and at least spare us this annual agony until 1962? He is not ever going to do any more and he knows it perfectly well. Mr. Frost is not going to get one nickel—and let the minister remember that phrase; he is not going to get five cents—of his hundred million dollars from this government; not five cents of it. This camouflage about this pale imitation conference, for which this government—as the minister admitted this afternoon—has no program at all, no agenda, no proposals, is all we have.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is untrue.

Mr. Pickersgill: Let the minister show them to us.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Tell us of them.

Mr. Pickersgill: I remember the minister standing in his place here and condemning Mr. St. Laurent when he was prime minister for not producing an agenda in advance for a Commonwealth prime ministers' conference in London. But here is a conference of Canadian governments about the business of the people of Canada and not one word can we get out of the minister as to what is going to be discussed there except the vague kind of generalities that the Prime Minister gave the mayors up in North Bay. I say that this legislation is simply an insult to parliament and an insult to the government of the provinces.

Mr. Chevrier: I should simply like to remind my hon. friend of something of which he was not aware before six o'clock when I brought to his attention the strong protests that had been made by the premier of the province of Quebec in connection with this whole taxation field and more particularly with this measure. The minister said that he was not aware of these statements. I should like to put a short quotation on the record.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think my hon. friend will agree that what I said was that I was not aware of statements that tallied with those he was ascribing to the premier of Quebec.

Mr. Chevrier: I stand corrected, Mr. Chairman. Let us see how the statement I am about to read tallies with what I said. I will leave it with my hon. friend to make the comparison when Hansard appears tomorrow. This statement was made by the premier of the province of Quebec and is to be found in Le Devoir of April 2, 1959. It reads as follows:

(Translation):

"Ottawa has no right to impose taxes in a province for provincial motives", declared the premier. "Only a province may levy taxes within the limits of its territory for provincial ends. When Ottawa imposes taxes in a province, for provincial objects, Ottawa is encroaching. Indeed, that is theft. For any encroachment with regard to those rights is both a violation and a theft."

(Text):

I did not go nearly that far. I tried to be moderate in my language and I would appreciate it if the minister followed that example sometimes when he makes his rather violent speeches in this house. But here the premier of the province of Quebec goes much further than I went. He says it is outright theft and constitutes a violation of the constitution of this country. I am not going any further than saying what I did say. I simply wanted to put this on the record so that there would be no doubt as to the words of the premier of the province of Quebec. I still believe that my hon. friend must have had some idea—general, special or otherwise—of this statement made by the premier of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Bourget: Can the Minister of Finance tell us whether, after the meeting of provincial treasurers at the beginning of July, there will be a formal conference of all the premiers of the provinces this year?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I cannot pinpoint any particular date for a plenary conference. That will depend upon a number of circumstances. However, I am sure that the steps which will be taken, both in the course of the ministerial conference in July and the meeting of the continuing committee to follow and the studies that will follow that again, will contribute greatly to making effective the work of any plenary conference when it may be deemed appropriate to call it.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is one more question I should like to ask the minister. He did not say anything in reply to my suggestion that he amend this legislation in order to make it apply until March 31, 1962. Since it extends only until March 31, 1960, if we pass this legislation in its present form, we are likely to be faced with the same situation again. As I said a year ago—I will not weary the house by repeating my words—when another year is up we will be faced again in another session with exactly the same kind of demand for urgent action at the last minute as we have this year. That is what is going to happen in 1960 if we pass this legislation in this form. What I say is this. Does the minister have any serious expectation of making any different arrangements between now and March 31, 1960? Has the government any plans to make any different arrangement?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The government has plans to discuss this and allied subjects with the provinces in the manner indicated and we look for fruitful results.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would just point out that the government not only had these plans but had promised in November, 1957 that it would discuss these matters with the provinces in the first month of 1958.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In May of 1957.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, in November at the conference, when the conference closed, it had made a promise. Oh, the hon. member for Essex East refers to the promise they had made in May of 1957. I am glad my hon. friend reminded me of those promises which were to the effect that the Conservatives were going to settle it all in one conference right after the election; they were going to sit down and settle the whole problem once and for all. But of course, as the minister so eloquently said that was the election before the last one; that has already been washed out.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That was a promise made to the people.

Mr. Pickersgill: Promises made to the electors do not count. The Minister of National Revenue told us that. But then we had a formal promise made to the provincial governments in November 1957—that is here in the proceedings—that they woud meet with the provinces before any further action was taken. That promise, of course, was not kept. The form the meeting took was telegrams, two of which were not received and all of which were filled with mistaken arithmetic which we understand was prepared in Queen's park rather than in Ottawa. We remember all these rather sorry episodes. That was two years ago, or practically two years ago. That was a precise promise. Now we have this pale shadow of a shadow of a shadow of a promise, the pale hope that maybe something will be done at this conference. They are not even going to call the premiers this time. They are just going to call the provincial treasurers and the bureaucrats to sit down to study without an agenda, without any terms of reference, apparently looking for inspiration.

Mr. Hardie: With no money.

Mr. Pickersgill: And as my friend the hon. member for MacKenzie River so eloquently points out, with no money. I think we can draw one of two conclusions. One is that this is going to be like the $40 million to the western wheat farmers; it is going to be a one-shot affair. Next year they will go back to the 10-9-50 formula. Maybe that is what is going to be done after the Ontario election. Maybe it is not going to be renewed at all in 1960.

I doubt if the government would go quite that far, but what do we know? It is only for one year in its present form. I suggest the minister come clean and admit he does not intend to let them have more than the 13 per cent for the rest of the currency of these agreements and ask us to amend the resolution so that we will not go through this painful debate again next year.

Mr. Bourget: If I may follow up the answer given me by the Minister of Finance, am I right in saying that we cannot expect any practical results from the conference which will be held here in Ottawa at the beginning of July and that there will be no formal conference of the prime ministers of the provinces this year?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The version now coming from the hon. gentleman does not bear very much resemblance to the statement on my part which he now purports to be summarizing.

Mr. Chevrier: Perhaps he is following the example of the minister.

Mr. Bourget: Might I tell the minister that we are not far from the truth, because in 1957 a federal-provincial conference was held here in Ottawa and we were told then there would be a federal-provincial conference at the beginning of 1958. We are now into June of 1959, a year and a half after, and that conference has not taken place. That is the reason I am asking the Minister of Finance, because all the premiers of the provinces are asking the same question: Are we going to have this year another federal-provincial conference which will give results; and not the kind of results we were given to understand by the Minister of Finance or the hon. member for Bellechasse last night when they were denying all the promises they had made in the last federal election, in the province of Quebec particularly, and I hope we will have an answer from the Minister of Finance on that very important question.

Mr. Chevrier: The silent minister.

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dorion) could perhaps say the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) is speechless, for he has repeatedly failed to answer our questions.

While we are on the subject, and as the hon. members from Quebec have suddenly decided that the act has become constitutional, because the amount has been increased, I must say that those were rather funny principles which they put forward during the election campaign, since they are supporting that legislation, except those who do not come out to vote and who are probably expecting to be among the appointees. Besides, I believe it is about time the parliamentary secretaries were appointed before strife breaks out in the Conservative ranks. So I take the liberty of quoting the statement made by the hon. member for Bellechasse in a speech at Honfleur, as recorded in the L'Action Catholique of March 29, 1958 I quote:

> The vengeance of Canada's present Prime Minister, Mr. Dorion predicted, will consist in handing back to the province of Quebec the autonomy it had been deprived of by the Liberal administration, and to restore to that province, which he has described as the very foundation of Confederation, all the sources of taxation and all the rights to which it is entitled under the constitution.

Mr. Chairman, it is doubtful whether the hon. member for Bellechasse would be able to answer this question, but since it primarily concerns the Minister of Finance, perhaps the minister would tell the house what sources of taxation have been handed back to the province of Quebec and to other provinces, by the hon. member for Bellechasse and the present government, who have been representing themselves as great champions of autonomy.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

318. General administration, $9,335,045.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman—

(Text):

Some hon. Members: Oh, no!

Mr. Bourget: What is wrong? Last year I spoke in English; am I not permitted to speak in French this time? It may be a new experience for our minister of external affairs to have a lesson in French! It may be very useful to him, particularly when travelling around the country of France. Nevertheless:

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, you will allow me to associate myself with all those who, this afternoon, tendered their congratulations to the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) on the occasion of his appointment to the post of Secretary of State for External Affairs. I may say that, if at times, during our discussions in this house, and more particularly with regard to the Department of Public Works, there were differences of opinion between us, the minister knows very well that we were in good faith and that we both wanted to work in the best interest of the department and of this country.

I am certain that the minister, whom I have known for 19 years, will bring to his new and significant functions the same devotion and zeal which he has shown as Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Chairman, honestly I feel a little ill at ease tonight, and I wonder if, before officially accepting the post of Secretary of State for External Affairs, the minister had not already used his great diplomatic talent, for when submitting the estimates of his department at this time, he puts me in a somewhat difficult position, because, during the 19 years I have been in this house, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has always inspired us great respect. Now, in saying this I do not mean that we had no respect for the present Minister of Public Works; indeed, he knows precisely what I mean under the circumstances.

Mr. Chairman, I want to assure the minister that my best wishes for success, and particularly also for good health will accompany him, as he knows from experience that his new post will oblige him to travel frequently and to work very hard. So once again, in my own name and on behalf of my colleagues, as our leader said this afternoon, we wish him good luck and good health.

Mr. Chairman, I do not propose, at this stage, to discuss in detail the estimates of the department on the first item; I shall limit myself to certain remarks of a general nature. I shall have the opportunity, a little later, on the study of other items, to come back to the matter.

Before I go on with my remarks, I should like to associate myself with the Minister of Public Works in congratulating all the employees of that department for their excellent work, as well as for their spirit of initiative and devotion in the exercise of their duties. I wish to tell them that the criticisms I shall make will in no way mean that they have neglected their work or that they are less efficient than last year. If some expenditures have been reduced or have not been made, it is by no means my intention to lay the blame upon the employees of the department, whatever their functions may be, but solely upon the government.

We recall that, when he introduced his estimates last year, the minister spoke for more than an hour and made a very detailed review of the projects carried out by his department in the fiscal year 1957-58.

He had then recalled all the works that had been done in the various provinces, forgetting however to say that a great part of those works or projects had been initiated or provided for by the previous administration.

Mr. Chairman, may I be allowed to recall certain words spoken by the minister on that occasion. As recorded on page 901 of Hansard for June 6, 1958, he said:

> There has been another interesting improvement in the work of the department, and this comes to light when one considers the percentage of the estimates which has been spent.
> I remember some years ago, particularly before an election, when the minister of public works of that time brought down estimates which were simply padded with items which the department had no intention of proceeding with in the fiscal year for which the estimates were tabled. I remember myself, as the opposition critic of the department at that time, referring to votes in different provinces, and it was fantastic the way those estimates had been padded for election purposes.
> In the year 1957-58, some 97 per cent of the allotments has been spent, compared with 91.7 per cent in the previous year.

The minister went on to say, on page 909 of Hansard for the same day, that in the case of many important projects, he had pushed the plans through in order to provide employment much earlier than would have been the case otherwise. And as reported on page 901, he stated:

> All these projects have been rushed ahead at a rate which would have left the former administration breathless and lying on the side of the road.

Well, let us take a look at what happened during the fiscal year 1958-59.

According to table 26, of page 65 of the budget papers tabled by the Minister of Finance on the day of his budget speech on April 9, the expenditures of the Department of Public Works for the year 1959 reached a total of $211.9 million, whereas the appropriation represented an amount of $237 million.

We find, therefore, that on a percentage basis, the efficiency of the department of Public Works, in 1958-59, dropped to less than 90 per cent, or to be precise, to 89.5 per cent, or 2.2 per cent lower than in the last year of Liberal administration, 1956-57.

However, in introducing his estimates on Thursday, May 21, the minister mentioned that the department's total expenditures reached $220.3 million for the 1958-59 fiscal year. Even if you accept this figure of $220.3 million as representing total expenditures for the last fiscal year, and if you subtract from that amount the $51.1 million represented by contributions to the provinces for the trans-Canada highway, which does not come under the direct responsibility of the federal government, there remains an amount of $169.2 million which was spent directly by the department.

On the other hand, the total amount of funds voted for this purpose for the fiscal year 1958-59 was $192 million, which is the difference between $237 million and the $45 million representing the estimated contributions to the provinces for the trans-Canada highway.

We can therefore realize that, in point of fact the efficiency of the department reached 88.1 per cent.

I would not like, Mr. Chairman, to irk the minister, especially today when he has just been appointed Secretary of State for External Affairs, but just the same, I hope, he will harbour no hard feelings against me if I use the very phrases he used with regard to us last year. In my opinion, it would be wise to remark here that the minister became quickly out of breath since within a single year the percentage of efficiency suffered a substantial decline. We can also infer that if in 1957-58, 97 per cent of the appropriations had been spent, this was undoubtedly due to the fact that most of the projects implemented during that year had been prepared by the former Liberal administration.

I have drawn up a table which gives us a rather good idea of the degree of efficiency in the Department of Public Works during the fiscal year 1958-59. After adding up the appropriations in the main and in the supplementary estimates, I compared them with the expenditures which were made during the year which are shown in table 26, on page 65 of the budget papers tabled in the house by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) on the occasion of his budget speech.

Under the heading "Public Buildings—construction and services—Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings", we find that an amount of $25.1 million was voted while $19.8 million were spent, that is a percentage of 78.9 per cent.

For other centres in Canada, outside of Ottawa, $43.4 million were voted, while $34.1 million were spent, that is a percentage of 78.6 per cent.

Under the item "Harbours and Rivers Engineering Services—Acquisition, construction and improvements of harbour and river works", we notice that $37.2 million was voted while $27.3 million was spent, that is, a proportion of 73.4 per cent.

And now, under the item "Development Engineering Services,—Trans-Canada Highway—Construction through National parks", which comes directly under the jurisdiction of the department of the federal government, $12.5 million were voted, while $10 million were spent. The proportion there is 80 per cent.

So we can realize that the degree of efficiency with regard to those various items, which concern construction more particularly, varies from 67.3 per cent to 80 per cent.

[Mr. Bourget.]

It is indeed strange, under the circumstances which existed in 1958-1959, having in mind the record number of unemployed at the time, that the Department of Public Works spent $22.8 million less than provided for in the estimates. It might be worth noting that, in fact, the expenses of the department for the year ending March 31, 1959, increased by only $14 million as compared with 1957-58.

Mr. Chairman, we found that we were very far from the glittering promises made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) in February 1958, when he was talking of his great special public works program to the amount of $1,185,000,000. Canadians, during the last fiscal year, have fully realized that that program was nothing but window dressing and represented only the normal expenditures of the government departments and agencies, plus some investments by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Some hon. Members: Hear! Hear!

Mr. Bourget: Now let us take this year's estimates, the estimates for 1959-60. It would be a good thing to point out that the estimates for the current year, as listed in the blue book, show a decrease of $18,665,715 in construction of public buildings and of $5,692,300 for harbours and rivers, thus bringing the total decrease to more than $24 million.

The supplementary estimates are not all known as yet but, judging from past experience, the supplementary estimates for the Department of Public Works usually amount to $14 or $16 million. We would then have, under these two important headings, a decrease of $8 to $10 million, including the supplementary estimates that will come later.

In fact, Thursday, May 21, the minister said that the estimated amount required for the year 1959-60 was $173.6 million, or $17.8 million less than the previous year. The minister indicated at that time that he was hoping that no one would criticize him for having reduced the expenditure. However I hope he does not expect us to congratulate him. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, this substantial decrease seems very strange to me, and I wonder what causes it. Would it be that the projects that the Minister of Public Works mentioned last year, when he introduced his budget last May 21st, are not ready? Yet he told us at that time, as found in Hansard of June 6, 1958, page 907, and I quote:

We intend to build up a proper shelf of public works which can be called on immediately.

Or is it that the treasury board, under the leadership of the hon. Minister of Finance, is too strict? However that is not what he said—I am referring to the Minister of Finance—that is not what he implied when he said the following, which can be found in Hansard of January 21, 1958, page 3569, and I quote:

Let me make it abundantly clear to every member of the house—I made this clear in the financial statement I made in the house on December 6—that the instructions that have been given by the government are to the effect that while we are seeking to reduce expenditure where expenditure is needless we have said that there shall be no reduction in expenditure where it means jobs, and we are seeking to increase construction in useful public works down the line. While next year we would unquestionably like to have a balanced budget, let me make it abundantly clear that we are not going to put a balanced budget above our firm determination to provide, through the agency of public works, jobs for unemployed Canadians.

Well, Mr. Chairman, committee members must certainly find it rather strange that the estimates of the Department of Public Works should be reduced in a year, when, as late as last April, according to statistics, there were more than 445,000 unemployed while, according to statistics supplied by the national employment service, there are 733,000 registered applicants looking for a job.

It seems that the government has been so dazzled by the "vision" it had before the election that it is unable to realize exactly the prevailing situation.

I feel that, instead of reducing estimates assigned to job-making construction projects, the Department of Public Works should have increased them. Thus, the minister would have been consistent, especially in view of the statements he made last year. But again we note that the government does not seem to be taking any action that would make unemployment less severe next winter than it was last winter.

Again, like last year, municipalities will no doubt be saddled with the responsibility of finding work for hundreds of thousands of unemployed. In my opinion, we would be justified in saying that we have heard a lot of empty talk from the government but we have not seen much action, that we have heard many promises, but that few have been fulfilled.

Before concluding my remarks, I want to say a few words about the trans-Canada highway. I do not want to speak lengthily on this subject, because I already had the opportunity to deal with the matter last February. However, I would like the minister to recall that, according to existing agreements, the construction of the trans-Canada highway should be finished by the end of December 1960.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I think it would be interesting for members of this committee, and also particularly for the provinces, to know in advance what the government proposes to do once the highway is completed.

I should like to ask the minister whether he intends this year to call a conference that would be attended by the ministers of highways of the various provinces, and I suggest to him or to his successor to avail himself of this opportunity to send a very special invitation to the hon. minister of highways of the province of Quebec.

Those are the short remarks I had to make, Mr. Chairman, and the minister can be assured that they have been made in good faith.

Before I resume my seat, I want once again to offer my congratulations to the minister and to wish him well in the discharge of his new responsibilities.

(Text):

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, the Department of Public Works inherits a tradition that finds its genesis in the mist of antiquity. I find on reading that throughout the ages it has been primarily concerned with mortar and water in its various forms. I think it is safe to say that the first well known public work was Noah's ark which was used to rescue mankind from the flood. The second best known public work was the tower of Babel which caused the confusion of mankind in a flood of languages. And so on down through the ages until we come to Canada's best known edifice, the printing bureau, built on a flood as the result of a freshet of errors and a cataract of public expenditure. History abounds with similar errors caused by ignorance and in some cases by cupidity. Fortunately, however, it is replete with illustrations that some person always came forward to take corrective measures to remedy these situations.

Some years ago Mr. Blair Fraser, Ottawa editor of Macleans magazine said in his column, which incidentally is read by thousands of people across Canada, "the public works department is the last patronage swamp to be drained". I am of the opinion that Mr. Fraser was a little too optimistic at that time. I think there are a few stagnant pools in the post office and transport departments, but even those pools are being drained to a certain extent and are in a much better condition in recent years.

A great many people in Canada agreed with Mr. Fraser's statement and a great number of people within the party that was in power at that time felt a general dissatisfaction with the public works department. I am told it was overloaded in the postwar years and that the organization was inefficient and insufficient. A great many people looked for action to remedy the situation.

You know, Mr. Chairman it is remarkable how history repeats itself—even in public works. It is known that the Assyrians and Nebuchadnezzar relied on the astrologers, astronomers and the generals, I find from a reading of history, for the planning of buildings, the building of canals and the building of gardens in the valley of the Euphrates. The Pharaohs, I find on reading history, used their generals to organize the labour required to build the pyramids. Napoleon consulted with his engineers and generals when drawing plans for a new and more beautiful Paris that could be easily defended against invaders.

In 1952 the Canadian government realized that the public works department required some reorganization and improvement. I think because of that realization the Hon. Robert Winters, an engineer, was appointed as the minister. I think all hon. members will agree he was a most capable minister. It was not long before he made history repeat itself. He began to look around the Canadian landscape and appointed a former quartermaster general of the Canadian army as his deputy. They both commenced a reorganization of the department with vigour and dispatch.

We were very pleased with this reorganization. The effect of the appointment of the former minister, the Hon. Robert Winters, and of the present deputy minister was soon noticed in the department and by the results obtained. We were extremely pleased because for years we in this group have been advocating planning in all government activities and in the economic organization of our country. We have taken a strong stand against patronage.

To be quite fair it is much easier to take a strong stand against patronage when you are not in power than when you are in power but we have always taken this stand throughout the years. I can see a certain sympathetic smile in response to that remark on the lips of the minister at this time.

[Mr. Herridge.]

As a result of the efforts of the two gentlemen to whom I referred the draining of the patronage swamp mentioned by Mr. Fraser was nearly completed. I think there are a few odds and ends to be cleared up yet mostly found among lower paid employees and casuals. I am not blaming the senior officials for that nor am I blaming the minister. It is very difficult to have your finger on every little thing that is happening in a department that carries on such large scale operations as does the Department of Public Works.

In 1957 the present minister was appointed and gave the "Green" light—large capital and small letters—for continued efforts to improve the efficiency and planning procedures of the department. This was no easy task, with his party out of office for 22 years. We are all human and, without a doubt, the minister was faced with the long time habits of certain persons who had been used to giving first consideration to Liberal members or defeated Liberal candidates and other persons influential with the party in power. That is a situation that takes some time to correct in fairness and properly. And then, there is always a minority when a party has been out of office that long that wants to feed from the nose bag of patronage.

I want to say right here that I have had something to do with the federal Department of Public Works throughout the years, on one occasion as a conscript employee, and on another as a close observer of a great deal of their work in my constituency, and as a friend of a great many of the officials going back over 50 years. The minister deserves great credit for his demonstration of his consistency, integrity and industry in the administration of his department and his unfailing courtesy to all members, regardless of party.

There is a tradition of public works in the minister's family. I remember the minister's uncle when he was a member of the provincial legislature of British Columbia. He was the first member responsible for getting a few miles of road built in that part of the constituency in which we live. He was responsible for getting the Sandon flume built after the big fire of 1900. He was interested in that. I know that in the early days he was active in public works which were of great concern to everyone in a country lacking roads, communications and so on.

This improvement in departmental organizations would be impossible without the cooperation, professional and administrative ability of the deputy minister, of the senior officials in Ottawa and the district officials and staff throughout the country. I think we should give credit to those who are in quite minor positions across Canada and who carry on their valuable work from year to year. I know that in the past some have received little sympathy or understanding from headquarters in Ottawa about the problems they have to face from day to day.

We in this group appreciated the minister's statement as to policy, planning and with respect to expenditures. He gave quite an adequate and informative synopsis of the proposals and activities of his department. We were interested in hearing about the proposals with respect to the trans-Canada highway. I was particularly interested in hearing about the program for the building of small, standard post offices throughout the country, which I think will receive unanimous approval. I found an excellent response in my own constituency to this planning ahead for the placement of these small post offices in villages and other locations. This brings the people of the smaller places in closer touch with the activities of the federal government, and I think it gives them a certain esprit de corps.

I happen to know that there is to be a building of that type built in a little village near where I live, in Nakusp. It is the first public building of its kind in that village, and it is very much appreciated. It will be a beautiful building and is situated in a pretty village. The erection of these small buildings in these smaller places, which serve the needs of the people in the smaller places which I think have been somewhat overlooked in the past, is excellent. I think it is an excellent program and is well planned ahead. I like the minister's idea of obtaining the sites upon which buildings can be erected at a time when that will be of the greatest advantage in aiding local unemployment.

I was interested also, in the minister's statement with respect to the co-operation of the research council, and the very sensible use of models to study all the considerations connected with large projects, particularly when the effect of water has to be considered. I think that is a very worth-while step indeed. I was interested in his statement with respect to the maintenance and repair of public buildings in the winter months, as I said before to the best advantage in meeting any local unemployment situation.

The C.C.F. believes that sound planning is required to secure the best value from the expenditure of public funds. It is obvious that the senior officials of this department have brought a great deal of order out of the former chaos as a result of planning since 1952. For instance, if you read the departmental report for 1952 you will find that it provides for reports from the deputy minister, the chief architect, the chief engineer, the treasury officer and the chief of legal services. I am not criticizing the organization of years ago which, before expenditures were so large, possibly was adequate.

We are very glad now, however, to note that under the supervision of the former minister and the present minister, and under the guiding hand of the deputy minister and his senior officials, the reorganization of the Department of Public Works has produced results. I have noticed that in this year's report, instead of reports from the few people I have mentioned in the 1952 report, we now have reports on departmental activities broken down into the harbours and rivers engineering branch, the development engineering branch, building construction branch and property and building management branch. In my opinion it was a very wise move to establish the property and building management branch. Then, we have the purchasing and stores branch, the administrative services and secretary, the economic studies branch, which is a very important thing particularly when expenditures are proposed for wharves or public buildings.

It is then necessary that the department have some idea of the future possibilities with respect to the development of the area in which the money is going to be expended. There have been occasions in the past when considerable sums of money were spent because the department lacked the economic studies branch and the economic activity of the community in which the expenditure was made declined very shortly after the building, wharf or public project was constructed.

Then we have the report of the financial services, information services, legal services, the personnel branch and so on. The reading of this report, and the breakdown into the various departments, gives one a clear indication that the department is well planned, well organized and in a position to undertake the large responsibilities that it has to accept at this time and the increasing responsibilities that will come throughout the years.

I should like to make a few suggestions before concluding, and I am only making a few general remarks on the administration item. We in this group believe that planning should be some years ahead, so far as possible, concerning prospective needs. We believe that the economic studies branch should be supplying the deputy minister and the minister with information that will allow them to get a very clear picture of the likely developments in any area, say, for the coming

10 years. I believe that this is necessary in order to plan properly and to have projects, as it were, on the shelf to be undertaken at any time to meet a local unemployment situation.

I should like to say a word or two about public relations. In my opinion public relations are a very important part of any federal government department's activities. Naturally, the ministers travel around the country and make occasional speeches at certain centres. The more they do of that, the better. But I am suggesting that even the deputy minister and some of the senior officials should have the opportunity of meeting and addressing representative public bodies such as chambers of commerce or, on occasion, ladies' organizations or trade unions, so that more and more people will get some idea of the organization and activities of the public works department of Canada for which they pay.

In addition to that, I think there should be developed as much communication as possible between district officials, local officials and local organizations. I say that even the local organizations in the smallest places should be given an opportunity to be informed of the department's plans, as to whether they are going to demolish a wharf, erect a building or where they are going to do some particular work. From my experience I have found that when the public, particularly in the smaller places, are consulted or matters are discussed—mind you, I know the department is responsible for making the final decisions—you build up a spirit of good will and you get the co-operation of the local people. I have this slight criticism, that I think on some occasions the department, possibly through lack of complete knowledge of changed conditions and circumstances, has decided to do something at the district office level without complete understanding of the local situation. I do urge that the minister's district officers and his local officials do everything possible to get the co-operation of and to consult representative local organizations.

Then I suggest it would be a good idea for the department to issue releases to the local press concerning any particular work. I think this would avoid a lot of rumours and misunderstanding about such things as the site, the date when construction is expected to commence, and so on. That is news to people, especially in the smaller places. Possibly it is not news to people in the larger places because their minds are occupied with all forms of gaiety and other activities, but in the country where people are generally more serious, somewhat more stable, they are interested in local business or local public buildings or a local wharf, and so on. I suggest there could be an extension of the practice of issuing press releases in the area so that people are kept well informed on the activities of the department, what it intends to do and when it intends to do it. In my opinion an informed public with respect to any department of government is a co-operative public. When it comes to administration all departments of government in a democratic society must seek to promote, in my opinion, the understanding and the co-operation of the people they aim to serve.

I have one other suggestion and it is this. Because of the vast areas that district engineers must serve I believe that senior officials, particularly in the district offices, should not be moved too frequently. It takes two or three years for a district engineer, for example, who serves the British Columbia and Yukon district to get to know the district he serves. He cannot be travelling all the time. He has a great deal of administrative responsibility. I suggest that senior officials should not be moved too frequently, that is at the district office level. I also hope that the minister's department is undertaking plenty of planning and that its economic studies branch is feeding the senior officials with information that will provide them with the opportunity to plan for the department to play its full role and part in meeting any unemployment situation that should occur in the winter ahead.

I have made a few general remarks with regard to general administration. I have some other matters to raise with regard to public buildings, construction and services, harbours and rivers engineering service branch and trans-Canada highway. At that time I shall leave the general and move to the particular. What I have to say will also include a few pleas on behalf of the constituents whom I have the honour to represent.

Mr. McGee: Before I commence my remarks I should like to assure the hon. member for Levis, who seemed to have misunderstood the reaction on this side of the chamber at the beginning of his remarks, that if there was any apparent disappointment expressed on this side, it was perhaps that we heard the rumour that in order to allow the Minister of Public Works to carry on with his new duties the estimates would be passed almost immediately this evening.

Mr. Bourget: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. McGee: Yes.

Mr. Bourget: Will he tell me what the hon. members meant when they said "Oh, oh" at the beginning of my speech?

Mr. McGee: That is precisely what I was going to explain. If I had been in a mood to echo that particular remark, it had as its intention an indication of disappointment perhaps that there would not be an expression from the house leader, that these estimates would now be passed in order to allow the new minister to go on to his new duties. My own reaction was disappointment. I have always looked forward to hearing the remarks of the hon. member for Levis. As remarkable as are the simultaneous translators here tonight, something is always lost in the translation.

If ever a man's head might be turned in my brief experience in this house, it certainly would be the head of the Minister of Public Works and now Secretary of State for External Affairs by the glowing tributes paid to him by the two opposition parties today on two separate counts. Those of us on the government back benches by our applause expressed our opinion concerning the events that took place at the beginning of the proceedings today. I think it would be remiss indeed if some expression of our opinion were not given concerning the former Minister of Public Works, although I am not just quite sure whether I am correct in that designation. He has left his imprint—and I am sure it will be a lasting one—on the job he is leaving. I would agree with the hon. member for Kootenay West in putting at the head of a list his courageous and tenacious attitude concerning the matter of patronage. This is something that has certainly required tenacity, stick-to-it-iveness and other similar qualities.

We have heard of the tremendous team spirit developed in the department. While most of us backbenchers have not been too familiar with the workings of that department, we can certainly understand how that team spirit should develop under the leadership of the minister. The extension of the tender system is part of the reflection of his attitude and his philosophy in connection with patronage which are well known. The imprint of which I spoke a few moments ago can be seen in the extension and expansion of public works and the co-operation of the department. But mostly, Mr. Chairman, I would think it would be the greatest source of satisfaction when leaving this portfolio to realize the tremendous number of young persons, young family people in this country who own their own homes, a situation attributable in no small number to the efforts of the Minister of Public Works.

This applies through the field of housing and one in particular in which I am interested and which I know a great many members share this view, namely that of limited dividend housing. Thousands and thousands of extra units are now available on a low rental basis to people who desperately need that accommodation. This will not be quickly forgotten by those people or those of us in whose ridings these developments have taken place. As I say, it must be a great source of satisfaction to the minister to leave that kind of an imprint on his department as he leaves.

But mostly, Mr. Chairman, and again I speak for the younger members in the house —I speak of the example that he has set for us in the performance of his duties in this house and in our caucus, his reform instincts, his integrity and his availability—and that has been mentioned by both opposition parties—not only to those on the government benches but to each and every member of the House of Commons. I have no wish to prolong the discussion on the estimates. I simply felt that this expression should be made not only on behalf of the G.F.A.—which, I may say, for the benefit of the group in the corner is a group of nine members in this area. We in this group should like to congratulate the minister and wish him the very best in the future.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, I should like to join with all those who have congratulated the minister on his new portfolio and to wish him well in his new sphere of activities. I am sure most of us today heard the Prime Minister's announcement with mixed feelings. While we rejoice with the minister at this broader scope for his undoubted talents and ability, nevertheless I think most of us felt a little bit sad—perhaps it was a selfish sadness —on losing from the portfolio of minister of public works a man who has won our utmost admiration, not only for his integrity but for the outstanding non-partisan manner and approach which he has always displayed in dealing with all our problems.

Personally, I want to thank him most sincerely for the sympathetic and kind consideration which he has always given to the problems which I have brought before him. In that I should like to include a tribute to his staff, not only here in the head office at Ottawa but also those who serve in the district office in Newfoundland. The minister is fortunate in having a most competent staff who are always anxious to do everything possible to help out with the problems of our province, and the only remark I should like to make about them is that I think they are perhaps the most overworked staff in the whole civil service of Canada, and possibly the most underpaid as well.

It is nice, of course, to have a minister who is kind and sympathetic to our problems, but we know that with all the goodwill in the world he must still get his expenditures authorized by the treasury board. The minister does not have the last say as to what expenditures will be made. Last year the Minister of Finance who presides over the treasury board allayed our fears when he stated, as reported on page 3569 of Hansard for January 21, 1958:

> Let me make it abundantly clear to every member of the house—I made this clear in the financial statement I made in the House on December 6—that the instructions that have been given by the government are to the effect that while we are seeking to reduce expenditure where expenditure is needless we have said that there shall be no reduction in expenditure where it means jobs, and we are seeking to increase construction in useful public works down the line. While next year we would unquestionably like to have a balanced budget, let me make it abundantly clear that we are not going to put a balanced budget above our firm determination to provide, through the agency of public works, jobs for unemployed Canadians.

Since then the Minister of Finance seems to have undergone a change of heart, because on April 21 he made another statement in this house which was quite different from the one which I have just quoted. This is what the Minister of Finance said on that occasion, as reported on page 2889 of Hansard:

> The treasury board this year has been tighter and closer in its scrutiny of estimates than ever before. A lot of these things are not talked about in detail everywhere, but let there be no doubt about it; the treasury board today is doing an effective piece of work.

Then the minister ended the paragraph with these words:

> There is a tightening of the rein on expenditures.

As long as the present Minister of Public Works held his portfolio these words did not chill our hearts quite as much, because we had confidence that the benign influence which we know the minister exercises over his colleagues would have an effect in softening the hard hearts of the Minister of Finance and his colleagues on the treasury board. But now that the minister is leaving this portfolio I think our fears have been renewed that his successor might not have that benign influence and that we may perhaps not receive as sympathetic consideration as we have in the past. We hope the Prime Minister will take these qualities into account when he appoints the new minister of public works.

The tightening up which the Minister of Finance referred to on April 21 is shown in the main estimates for this year. On page 67 we notice that there is an over-all decrease in expenditures of $14,900,293. Even when we subtract from that the $4 million in the supplementary estimates, we still have an over-all decrease of over $10 million. But the tightening up of expenditures is most marked when we consider the items of public buildings, construction and services and the items under the heading of harbours and rivers engineering services. There is a decrease in expenditure of over $19 million for public buildings and a further $5 million nearly under the heading harbours and rivers, making a total decrease of around $24 million. Even when we deduct the $3 million plus under these two headings in the supplementary estimates, we still have a decrease in expenditure of over $20 million.

I think it is unfortunate that these decreases have occurred under these particular headings, because they happen to be the very headings which provide jobs. We already have on our hands a substantial amount of unemployment, and I think it is reasonable to expect that the unemployment problem will be with us again next year, and a reduction under these headings is certainly going to aggravate that problem instead of alleviate it.

In my own province in Newfoundland we feel this very acutely, because under these two headings of harbours and rivers and public buildings, construction and services, there is an over-all reduction of nearly $2.8 million, which in a province that depends on public works for supplementary earnings is quite substantial. I know that part of this reduction has been brought about because many of the large projects in our province have now been taken care of. We also know that it is impossible to counteract this amount of expenditure under the housing program. Therefore, I should like to sound this warning to the Minister of Public Works and to his successor in office, that they keep this in mind when they are preparing the estimates for next year, because very drastic reductions under these two headings are going to cause some degree of hardship in my province.

Mr. Chairman, there are one or two other aspects of the estimates about which I would like to comment. First of all, I would like to commend the minister for the increase in the miscellaneous grants. This grant has been increased by $750,000 and that is particularly welcome in my province because, as I have said, most of the heavy works have now been completed and in the future there is going to be a larger and larger number of small works costing less than $25,000 which by law will have to be financed out of this miscellaneous grant. I thank the minister for this increase and I hope that next year's estimates will show a further increase.

I wish also to thank the minister for the increase shown under the heading "dredging, construction and acquisition of plants and equipment." One of our most urgent needs in Newfoundland is dredging. As we know, private dredging companies are still very busy and it is most difficult to get the kind of plant that we need. The minister may remember that last year I pointed out to him that we have a special need for shallow dredging equipment for the dredging of shallow harbours. We have none of that equipment being operated by the department in Newfoundland at the present time, and I hope that part of this vote will be used to acquire this type of dredging equipment.

Before I sit down, I wish to draw the attention of the minister to one very small problem. When small works are undertaken in small fishing settlements in my province—works such as the building of a wharf or breakwater—the common practice is to acquire the rocks required for the ballast by contract. That is possibly a very business-like way of handling this requirement but it has one serious drawback for my people, because when the fishermen pick up these rocks and sell them under contract they do not receive unemployment stamps. Had they been able to get these stamps last year many of them would have qualified, taking into account the stamps they receive while fishing, for seasonal benefits. I would ask the minister to take this into consideration and perhaps give a direction so that the department may acquire this material by day labour instead of by contract.

Like everyone else here I wish the minister the very best of success in his new undertaking.

Mr. Regier: I do not mean to delay the committee with many remarks I should like to make at this time with regard to the announcement which was made in the early afternoon. I know that the people of Canada will have heard the news with great happiness and satisfaction, and I know that particularly the people in the minister's home area in British Columbia will take a special delight in the announcement. I know that with elections coming hard and heavy for a number of years in Canada, Canada's position throughout the world has not continued recently to grow as we had been led to believe it might, and I know the minister will at an early date do much to enhance Canadian prestige abroad in the interest not only of world peace but of our economic interest as well.

All of us are deeply concerned about who the new minister of public works may be. We hope and trust he will be some one who will have an integrity equal to that possessed by the hon. gentleman who now holds that office.

I should like to make an appeal to the minister with regard to a number of issues, because I believe the hon. gentleman has a number of headaches which have still to be cleared up and I should like to see him make an effort to handle these difficult matters before he leaves his present office. The main question to which I should like the minister to give some attention is the problem facing us with regard to interest rates on loans for homes which are now being built and which will be built during the months and years ahead under the National Housing Act.

The minister realizes very well that interest rates under the National Housing Act are determined in the long run by the rates which the government has to pay on long term government issues of bonds, and as I understand it the yield on long term government issues or bonds at the present time is practically as high as the maximum interest rate allowed under the National Housing Act. The minister indicates that this is not the case. But even a one year issue yesterday returned a yield to the investors of 5.49 per cent. If a one year issue is able to produce a yield of 5.49 per cent, we must remember that it has always hitherto been assumed that long term issues return a higher yield and therefore any money which the government will have to borrow in the months ahead to lend to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will have to be supplied to this crown corporation at a very high rate indeed, and the margin between even 5½ per cent and 6 per cent is a very narrow one. The act allows for a margin up to 2 per cent.

The minister has let us know that the government has no intention of raising the allowable interest under the National Housing Act, and we were happy to hear that announcement. However, the minister announced in no uncertain terms some months ago that the government had no intention whatsoever of allowing the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to operate at a loss, and we are unable to reconcile the two statements. If the government intends to maintain the maximum allowable rate of interest at 6 per cent, then we believe the government will have to look things squarely in the face and admit that it may well be necessary in the public interest to agree to subsidize the operations of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. There simply is no other way out of this predicament. I believe the minister would agree that the situation is a difficult one. I know he does not like having to advise any branch of the government that it will be allowed to operate at a deficit. However, here I believe is a situation where an understanding of that kind will have to be reached, otherwise I am afraid that that organization, belonging to the pepole, will be unable to discharge its responsibilities adequately.

The other headache which must concern the minister and about which I hope some action can be taken is the amount of money which is available for housing or which it appears will be available for the purpose of housing. The returns from many other enterprises are so much higher now that there is a little less interest or, I should say, there is a lot less interest on the part of those who have investment money available to make such money available for housing at the 6 per cent gross level.

I believe that action will have to be taken and it may have to be rather strong action compared with any action that has been taken hitherto. I agree wholeheartedly that maximum interest rates should not be raised. However, it is equally vital that sufficient money for housing be made available and I am wondering whether consideration of amendments to the Bank Act and insurance and allied legislation may not be necessary whereby those with investment capital will be obligated, in certain years to be designated by the minister, to devote a fixed proportion to housing. That may be the only way in which enough money for housing can be found at the 6 per cent interest rate.

I have also assured a number of organizations at home that I would present a plea to the minister on his estimates, and even though he may be leaving the department I feel I must make the plea at this time. It has to do with the many low-cost homes that have been built in the past year. It may not have reached the minister's ears but there are a growing number of complaints that the quality of the buildings is not what it should be. Part of the reason seems to lie in the growing development of prefabricated sections of houses and in the growing tendency on the part of fly-by-night operators building N.H.A. homes not to hire union workers but to make use of moonlight labour and people who will work on week ends. When the taxpayers' money is being invested in housing I hope that their long term interest will be protected by suitable regulations or amendments to the National Housing Act whereby the quality of construction will be of a desirable standard.

The minister has performed wonders within the past 12 to 18 months with respect to the number of housing units that have been built. I believe that even the minister would now agree that perhaps the time has come to devote greater attention to the problem of slum clearance and the supplying of low rental housing. I know that a little headway has been made over the past years. However, for so many long years we did practically nothing in Canada with regard to slum clearance or the building of low rental housing units. I believe we have probably reached the time when a much larger share of the money being invested in housing should be directed toward slum clearance and the supplying of adequate low rental housing for those people who have no hope of ever owning a home of their own.

I think the minister also had something to do with another proposed project with respect to which I have not heard of much progress being made. It has to do with expenditures in connection with harbours and rivers in the lower mainland of British Columbia. For the past several years there has been a move afoot, a wise one I believe, toward the development of an enlarged public authority to deal with matters concerning the Fraser river. For some years the ex-mayor of New Westminster has called for the enlargement of the New Westminster harbour board. I do not think that is exactly what is wanted by the areas concerned or even by some people in New Westminster. I believe the minister has been partly responsible for helping the idea along that there should be what I like to think of as a river authority with representation from the interested organizations and municipalities all the way from Mission to the mouth of the river. I hope that can be expedited a little before the new minister is appointed. Heaven only knows from what area of Canada he may come and how much or how little he may know about the need for an over-all authority on the Fraser river. Before the minister leaves the department I should very much like to see him take a hand in the matter and get together with the Minister of Transport. I know he has all kinds of advisers from the lower mainland on his side of the house and I should like him to try to see whether some progress cannot be made in this regard.

Like those who have spoken before me I too wish the minister well in his new department. Some of those who spoke sounded as if they thought the minister was leaving Canada but I look forward to seeing him in Canada almost as much as he has been hitherto.

Mr. Smith (Lincoln): Mr. Chairman, my remarks at this time will, as usual, be brief, but I should like to draw to the attention of the minister one or two projects that I think the Department of Public Works should take into consideration in the very near future. The hon. member for York-Scarborough has expressed the opinion of this group with respect to the appointment of the minister to the Department of External Affairs. However, I must say that while I regret to see him leaving the Department of Public Works nevertheless I extend to him my most sincere and best wishes. I know he will do a good job in his new department and I think that the twinkle in his eye will be one of his greatest assets as Secretary of State for External Affairs.

One project that I feel the department should consider in the near future is the provision of a building for Canada's national war museum. I find it is one of the places most favoured by visitors to Ottawa and the present building is very inadequate from the point of view of providing suitable accommodation for the exhibits. I believe that consideration should be given to providing a new building. I understand there are quite a number of other exhibits that could be put on display and this would be quite an asset from the point of view of the visitors who come to the museum. As I have already said, it is a most interesting place, especially to young people. This is one project that I think should be considered.

The second involves a group rather than one project. In Ottawa today we still have a large number of the old wartime buildings constructed during the war. While I realize that the department is eliminating them as quickly as possible, nevertheless some of them are getting into a very poor state of repair and they do not do justice to the civil servants who have to perform their duties in some of these buildings.

I feel that is something we should consider very seriously at the present time. While Canada is importing such a quantity of manufactured goods from other countries and taking away jobs from people who are in industry, I think we should do everything in our power to speed up our national works projects.

I believe it was last year that the steps over on the east side of the building were replaced which meant a great improvement. I feel that consideration should soon be given to providing new steps in front of the building. In my opinion the present ones are barely in keeping with the dignity of the House of Commons of the dominion of Canada. I am not saying they are dangerous but they are not as good as they should be and I understand they have been there for a long time.

I recall that when the minister spoke on his estimates some days ago he mentioned that his department was much concerned about the building of small post offices throughout the country. I could easily ask for several in the various villages and towns in my riding but I am not going to be so vain as that. Nothing creates more pride on the part of people in a small town or village than a public building on which they can display a flag several times a year. These buildings are wanted by the people and are respected by them. They are a source of pride and satisfaction to the people in the community. I hope the minister will take all these things into consideration and build as many public buildings as possible.

A great deal has been said about what has been done in the building of homes under the National Housing Act and I shall not repeat what has been said. There is no question but that during the months in which employment has not been too good in Canada the building of houses has been of considerable assistance in providing jobs for the working force. While it may be true that the saturation point is being reached in some areas there are many places that require additional homes and I trust there will be no slow-down in providing money for the construction of these homes under the act.

This concludes my remarks at this time. I am particularly interested in the construction of the national war museum building and I trust the project will be undertaken as expeditiously as possible.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, on this happy day for the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green), may I join with those who have spoken before me to wish him much success in the diplomatic career he is undertaking. That appointment did not surprise me. There had been so much speculation on the matter. In fact, some were saying that this one or that one would be chosen, but I was convinced, and I do not want to belittle the other ministers, that the superior intelligence of the present minister, his remarkable energy, his devotion to work, the smile that he has kept since he became a member of the cabinet, and his consumate skill to have his estimates passed without too much difficulty, were already the indication of a first class diplomat. I am happy to join with my colleagues to congratulate him and to wish him great success in his new career.

Mr. Chairman, I rise not to test the diplomatic skill of the new Secretary of State for External Affairs, but merely to submit for his consideration a few projects which are very important for our area. I tell him right now that I shall be very brief.

A problem which has been with us for many years and still is, is the matter of the national capital. Every Canadian would like to regard the national capital as a model. It was Sir Wilfrid Laurier who, many years ago, said that everyone hopes to see Canada's capital develop into a Washington of the north.

Well, Mr. Chairman, the national capital plan will be quite incomplete unless adequate bridges are built to connect both sides of the Ottawa river. That is a matter of particular concern to the Minister of Public Works, since it comes under his department's responsibility.

New bridges across the Ottawa river are absolutely necessary if we want the numerous tourists visiting the national capital to take advantage of their stay among us to see the enchanting sites of the Gatineau, in those marvelous mountains that the national capital commission has adorned with beautiful roads and magnificent parks. We must at least give them the means to cross over.

At the present time, it is almost impossible to cross from one side to the other, at certain hours of the day. Furthermore, there are on the Quebec side more than 6,000 federal civil servants who must cross over three or four times a day, at least, to get to and back from work. In view of this, it takes them an hour or an hour and a quarter to cross over, while it should take them only fifteen minutes.

Such a situation cannot last indefinitely. Moreover, several residents of the city of Ottawa are employed on the Hull side and also have to cross the river to go to their work. It is almost inhuman to ask those people to get up at 6 o'clock in the morning in order to be in time for work at 8 o'clock on the other side of the river. Such is the situation! As a matter of fact, the present bridge is a disgrace for a national capital we are intent to beautify.

To my mind, the Minister of Public Works could instigate some movement to improve that state of affairs. I do not go as far as to say that the responsibility rests upon the federal government alone. This is an interprovincial bridge—

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I take it that tomorrow we will continue with these estimates and if they are completed we will take the estimates of the Department of Fisheries as announced last night?

Mr. Green: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is the intention. On Monday there will be a supply motion. On Tuesday we shall commence with item No. 7 on today's order paper, second reading of the act to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act; then item 15, which provides for additional judges in certain of the provinces. This is quite an urgent matter and consideration might be given to letting it go through all stages on Tuesday unless the opposition parties have some objection.

Mr. Chevrier: If it were the minister, I am sure there would be no objection. It being otherwise, I have some doubt.

Mr. Green: I am overwhelmed. We then propose taking item No. 12, the resolution preceding a bill to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act; item No. 5, second reading of an act respecting the Royal Canadian Mounted Police; item No. 11, the resolution concerning the Defence Services Pension Act.

The plan for estimates next week is to take those of the Department of Transport. I am not sure whether we would commence estimates on Wednesday or Thursday, but in either event we would take transport first.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AUTHORITY—EXPENDITURES AND INDEBTEDNESS TO MARCH 31, 1959

Question No. 410—Mr. Argue:

1. What is the total amount of money the St. Lawrence seaway authority has paid on accounts from the beginning of construction work until March 31, 1959?

2. What is the outstanding indebtedness of the St. Lawrence seaway authority as of March 31, 1959?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

The St. Lawrence seaway authority advises as follows:

1. $255,727,144.62.
2. $293,495,747.50.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—CONTRACTS WITH LA SALLE ENGINEERING, MONTREAL

Question No. 438—Mr. Argue:

1. Has the St. Lawrence seaway authority entered into any contracts with the La Salle Engineering Company of Montreal since January 1, 1955?

2. If so, what was the date of each contract, the location and nature of each, and value?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

The St. Lawrence seaway authority advises as follows:

Questions

1. Yes.

2. (a) July 17, 1956; St. Lambert, Cote Ste. Catherine, upper and lower Beauharnois and Iroquois locks; supply of anchor bolts for lock machinery; $38,103.25.

(b) July 18, 1956; St. Lambert, Cote Ste. Catherine, upper and lower Beauharnois locks; supply of anchor bolts for taintor valves in filling culverts; $2,116.40.

(c) October 1, 1956; Cote Ste. Catherine, Beauharnois and Iroquois locks; supply of anchor bolts for wire rope fenders; $2,073.06.

(d) April 12, 1957; upper and lower Beauharnois locks; repairs to 50 anchor bolts; $250.

(e) September 5, 1957; upper and lower Beauharnois locks; supply of nuts and washers for anchor bolts; $9.63.

(f) September 9, 1957; St. Lambert lock; supply of anchor bolts with nuts; $85.

(g) March 24, 1958; St. Lambert lock; supply of nuts for anchor bolts; $69.70.

(h) August 5, 1958; soils laboratory, Cote Ste. Catherine division; supply of two tampers for piezometer installation; $31.90.

(i) August 12, 1958; soils laboratory, Cote Ste. Catherine division; supply of two tampers for piezometer installation; $31.90.

(j) August 18, 1958; upper and lower Beauharnois locks; supply of nuts for anchor bolts; $772.81.

(k) August 26, 1958; upper and lower Beauharnois locks; supply of sleeve nut reducers for anchor bolts; $169.16.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, June 5, 1959

The house met at 11 a.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

STATEMENT RESPECTING PROCEEDINGS ON MONDAY, JUNE 8

Mr. Speaker: I understand that an arrangement has been made about Monday's proceedings. I would appreciate it if the house would give unanimous consent to an order to give effect to this arrangement which, as I understand it, is as follows: Supply motion; debate to be limited to one day; amendments to be disposed of at 8.15 p.m. on Monday and the main motion to be disposed of at 10 p.m. Is that arrangement acceptable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

AIRPORTS

MALTON—JUDGMENT OF EXCHEQUER COURT ON PROPERTY VALUATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the Prime Minister a question based on reports of a judgment rendered yesterday by the exchequer court with regard to property valuation at Malton airport. Is it the intention of the Prime Minister to make a statement concerning the matter covered by this judgment in which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) and the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Pallett) are mentioned?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I read the article in question and the reference to the judgment. It is my purpose to examine the judgment and the surrounding circumstances. However, I think I should say at this time that in so far as any reference to any hon. member in this house is concerned, and in particular to the hon. member for Peel, the integrity and honesty of purpose of that hon. member leaves no question in my mind.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. In view of statements made in the judgment—and I am not quarrelling in any way with what the Prime Minister has said—has the Prime Minister considered referring this matter to the appropriate standing committee of the house so that it may be given the fullest and most impartial examination?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to answer that question directly at the moment, because I find it rather difficult to understand the suggestion that there might be any question of partiality up to the present time and that therefore there should be some investigation by a house committee so as to ensure impartiality. I do not understand the meaning of that suggestion. However, as I said a moment ago I shall look into that point and give the matter the attention it requires and deserves.

TRANSPORT

PORT BORDEN-CAPE TORMENTINE—REQUEST FOR IMPROVED FERRY SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. I should like to ask the minister what steps his department is taking toward providing an additional ferry for service between Borden, Prince Edward Island and Cape Tormentine, New Brunswick.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I wish to thank the hon. member for Queens for having given me notice of his intention to ask this question.

The Department of Transport has carefully reviewed the need for additional ferry service between Borden and Cape Tormentine. The advisability of purchasing the Vacationland for this service was carefully considered, and I wish to advise that in the opinion of the department the ship, as is, would not be suitable. To make the Vacationland suitable for the service involved would require changing the form of the ship, adding accommodation, a complete conversion of machinery and fitting the vessel with firefighting and other equipment required for this class of ship in Canada. These necessary alterations it is estimated would cost approximately $2 million, and the ship could not be ready for use until well into 1960.

It is proposed to undertake as early as possible the construction of a new ferry for this service, with a view to placing a ship in service some time in 1961. The ship proposed would be adequate to meet the increasing demand for automobile transportation and would be suitable for service elsewhere should the construction of a causeway to Prince Edward Island result in this vessel not being required between Borden and Tormentine.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): May I ask a supplementary question. I wonder if the minister would say what steps are being taken to provide service in this interim period. Second, can he say when the report on the causeway is likely to be received by the government?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I think I have already outlined the steps which have been taken this year to make additional service available. The planking of the Scotia II will make it possible to transport about 60 additional cars per trip. I would suggest that the hon. member refer his question regarding the causeway to the Minister of Public Works under whose department this matter comes.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I was not able to fully follow the statement made by the Minister of Transport, but I wonder if the minister could tell the house whether the departmental officials have determined what kind of vessel is going to be built. Will it be of the same nature as the Abegweit?

Mr. Hees: We are working on that matter with a great deal of care at the present time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Argue: Then if I might refer my supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works, I wonder if he could say when the report regarding the feasibility of the causeway is likely to be received.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago when presenting the estimates of the Department of Public Works I explained that a report from the consultants had been received a week or so earlier and that it was being considered by the department. In addition, these reports have to be considered by several other departments, including the Department of Transport. Therefore the Minister of Transport may be able to answer this question in due course.

Mr. Argue: Do I take it from the minister's reply to the question that the report was favourable and recommended this construction?

Mr. Green: Now the hon. member is fishing, Mr. Speaker.

GRAIN

WHEAT—FINAL PAYMENT ON 1957-58 POOL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister now in a position to inform the house what the final payment will be on the 1957-58 wheat pool, which was closed out lately?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the final accounting of the 1957-58 wheat pool which was closed out on May 15 has been completed. An interim payment was made in March in respect of this pool amounting to over $38 million. The basis of the interim payment was 10 cents per bushel on all grades of wheat excepting high quality milling grades of Durum wheat upon which the interim payment was 15 cents per bushel.

The final payment will amount to over $33 million—$33,874,398.61, to be exact—after providing for payment costs and the Prairie Farm Assistance Act levy. The average final payment will, therefore, amount to just under 9 cents a bushel—8.98856 cents per bushel in exact figures. Total prices realized by producers for the principal grades of wheat delivered to the 1957-58 pool are higher than the total prices received for the preceding crop year. The Canadian wheat board has advised me that it is in a position to commence issuing final payment cheques to producers immediately.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Since the final payment is somewhat less than the estimate made by the farm organizations in asking for deficiency payments, will the government now give serious consideration to their request?

Mr. Churchill: I would point out that the final payment is higher this year than it was last year. It is higher by 4 cents on No. 1 northern, by 4 cents on No. 2 northern, by 2 cents on No. 3 northern and by 2 cents on No. 4 northern, increases which show that this year was a much better one than last year.

Mr. Argue: I wonder if I may repeat my question. My question was this. Since the farm organizations had estimated that the final payment for all grades would be 4 cents higher than last year, and since that has not transpired, is the government giving consideration to deficiency payments?

Mr. Churchill: This question keeps arising in the mind of the hon. gentleman from Assiniboia. Representations have been made to us with regard to deficiency payments. Only recently a delegation representing the farm organizations was in Ottawa presenting their suggestions, and the answer given was that their proposals are being given consideration. And their proposals had to do with the question of deficiency payments.

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE ADDITIONAL PAYMENTS TO PRODUCERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether any legislation of any kind is to be introduced this session providing for additional payments to grain growers.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to have that question asked by the hon. gentleman. Over the years when he sat on this side of the house that very question was asked from time to time and invariably the answer was that consideration was being given to this question. While I do appreciate the interest he has in this regard I do not intend to add anything to the remarks made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Prime Minister could say whether the consideration being given to this question by this government is likely to result in action any more than did the consideration given to it by the previous government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would suggest that the two sides get together.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might direct a further supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In the light of the statement he made the other day that the government had no further legislation in contemplation except that of which indication had been given to the house, do we take it that there is no further legislation in contemplation?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. gentleman remembered what I said the other day. However, I stated something which he apparently has forgotten; that if any matter arose that required action then I would ask the house to give consideration to further legislation made necessary by reason of arising exigencies.

Mr. Pickersgill: Still a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did the Prime Minister not say "any matter now unforeseen that required action"?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The government does not intend to do anything; that is clear.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I take it from the Prime Minister's little sermon that any legislation of this kind is not foreseen?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I shall allow these hon. gentlemen to indulge in any conjecture it pleases them to follow.

Mr. Pearson: Thank you very much.

HEALTH INSURANCE

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—INQUIRY AS TO INTENTION TO PARTICIPATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. H. Phillips (Prince): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the premier of Prince Edward Island is reported in the Charlottetown Guardian as declaring that the Prince Edward Island hospital insurance plan now meets the requirements for participation in the national plan, can the minister advise if an agreement has been entered into with Prince Edward Island?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The answer to the hon. member's question is no. No agreement has been signed with the province of Prince Edward Island. There has, however, been correspondence; a series of letters has been exchanged between the premier of that province and myself on the subject.

Mr. Phillips: Would the minister consider tabling the correspondence between his department and Premier Matheson?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I would be very pleased to get in touch with the premier of the province and ask his permission to do so.

QUEBEC—INQUIRY AS TO INTENTION TO PARTICIPATE

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Has any progress been made with the province of Quebec in reference to this matter?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I think since the last time I answered a similar question the situation has not changed. There have been indications that they are interested in the program.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if he would show the same interest toward the province of Quebec as he is showing now, quite properly, toward the premier of Prince Edward Island? If the hon. gentleman took some initiative it would help.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CHIPPEWA RESERVE, SARNIA—SALE OF LAND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Is the hon. lady now in a position to table the contract with Dimensional Investments Limited respecting the Chippewa Indian reserve at Sarnia?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry there was some delay in producing this contract, due to a misunderstanding with reference to the material being prepared in answer to the hon. gentleman's other question. I am sure I shall have this copy ready for tabling some time during the first part of next week.

Mr. Hellyer: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell the house if any approach was made to the department by Ontario hydro with a view to acquiring the lands required from the Chippewa reserve directly from the department?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, that is a pretty broad question and I would have to make inquiries. I answered a similar question yesterday, the answer to which was correct; but if the hon. member is asking for information over a certain period of time I would have to make inquiries.

PARLIAMENT HILL

INQUIRY AS TO WITHDRAWAL OF STAFF PARKING FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Could the minister explain to the house why employees' parking facilities on the hill have been discontinued?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, there has been some change within the last few days with regards to parking on the hill having in mind the desirability of enabling tourists from all parts of Canada, and the United States as well, in some numbers at least, to park on the hill.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Was this change made by the cabinet without reference to any other authority?

Mr. Green: I think a change of this kind is the responsibility of the cabinet.

Mr. Pearson: What about Mr. Speaker?

Mr. McIlraith: What about parliament?

[Mr. Hellyer.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

BOMARC MISSILE—REPORTED DELAY IN INSTALLATION

On the orders of the day.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence based on an article which appears in this morning's Globe and Mail written by Philip Deane. Could the minister explain to the house the reason why the Bomarc "B" will not be available for installation at Canadian bases until 1963 rather than 1961, as the minister informed us earlier this session?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): That seems to be a statement made by Mr. Philip Deane. I suggest that the question be directed to him.

Mr. Hellyer: A supplementary question. Can the minister assure the house that the Bomarc "B" will be available and installed on Canadian bases in 1961?

Mr. Pearkes: The present plans are that the Bomarc "B" will be available at the end of 1961.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Tell the Americans that.

CIVIL DEFENCE

REPORTED ANNOUNCEMENT OF PLANS BY DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether he is in a position to give the house the plans with regard to civil defence which were announced by an official of his department yesterday, plans which are to become effective on September 1.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am not aware of any such plans having been announced by any official of my department.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will send the minister the clipping.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT—REQUEST THAT CANADIAN STUDENTS HAVE PRIORITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jean Paul Racine (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

(Translation):

My question has to do with a Canadian Press dispatch, dated June 3, from London, entitled:

Jobs in Canada for 500 British students.

The item states they are coming over in five specially chartered planes.

My question is this: in view of the fact that many Canadian students have to quit college because they cannot find holiday jobs in industry, I wonder whether the right hon. Prime Minister could assure the house that Canadian students will be given priority over the many foreign students who, according to that Canadian Press dispatch from London, are already here or are expected to come here this summer.

(Text):

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice, look into the dispatch in question, and be in a position to reply on Monday.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RUSSIA—INQUIRY RESPECTING TREATY OBLIGATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question arising out of the statement he made in the house yesterday that Canada has no treaty obligations with the Soviet union with respect to shipping and commercial arrangements. Now that the minister has had a chance to examine the treaty in question, does he still feel we have no treaty obligations with the Soviet union covering this matter?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question of the Leader of the Opposition is that the treaty has lapsed, as he must know, and that in its terms there was no specific provision dealing with the question of shipping. Furthermore, it did contain a security clause which would have enabled Canada to deny passage.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Does the minister not recall that the Minister of Trade and Commerce said that while the treaty had lapsed, its provisions were still in effect pending a renewal of the treaty?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, this is really immaterial in dealing with the present situation. The answer I gave yesterday sets out the facts accurately.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, a further supplementary question. Does the minister then feel that the present treaty which the Minister of Trade and Commerce has said is still in effect would justify discrimination against Soviet shipping in the Canadian seaway?

Mr. Green: Now I am afraid the hon. member is not being a peacemaker in his suggestion at this time. As I understand it, the other day the Minister of Trade and Commerce outlined that negotiations were under way and it was hoped that agreement would be reached, and I believe this is still the position.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I think this is an important matter. I ask the minister to state whether in his opinion this treaty is still in effect pending negotiation for its renewal?

Mr. Green: I have already outlined the position to the Leader of the Opposition, and I think there is no need to go any further.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether he still feels that the treaty is in effect pending its renewal.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the arrangements are simply these. Pending the outcome of negotiations, Russia is still receiving most favoured nation treatment as far as Canada is concerned. When negotiations are complete another agreement between the two countries will likely be signed. So far as the present arrangements are concerned, there is no substantial change.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask the minister, then, whether this most favoured nation treatment, which he says is still in effect pending negotiations for renewal of the treaty, applies to shipping as well as to other matters?

Mr. Churchill: Under the treaty that was signed some years ago most favoured nation treatment was given to Russia. Then there was a further supplementary agreement with reference to the purchase by Russia of a substantial quantity of wheat. This treaty lapsed some time ago and negotiations are now under way. We have not made any change in the arrangements with Russia, and will not until we have concluded the negotiations that are under consideration.

Mr. Pearson: So the most favoured nation treatment is still in effect.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

FEDERAL GRANTS TO NEWFOUNDLAND AND OTHER PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): In view of the statement made by the Minister of Finance last evening that he had tabled a part of a return to a question made an order for return—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not say tabled.

Mr. Pickersgill: That he had sent it to the Secretary of State's department; I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon—would the minister, if the other returns are not in, consider tabling a partial return, as there are many hon. members who would like to have the information?

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): I shall have to verify that and let the hon. member know next Monday.

TRADE

STATEMENT ON FRENCH EDITION OF "TRADE AND COMMERCE"

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yesterday the hon. member for Hull asked me a question concerning the two publications of the Department of Trade and Commerce, Foreign Trade, of which 24 copies per year are published, and the French version, Commerce Extérieur, of which 12 copies per year are published. He wanted to know why the subscription price is the same for both publications.

The number of copies of Foreign Trade printed each month is 4,349. The number of copies of Commerce Extérieur is only 534. This makes the cost per copy of printing Commerce Extérieur very high, about $1.55, compared with only 25 cents per copy for printing Foreign Trade. In spite of this the subscription price for Commerce Extérieur is kept at $2 per annum, and this is no change from the decision made in 1954 under the former administration.

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): May I ask a supplementary question. Does the minister not think, after the promises made that they would right every wrong, that this excuse he has given shows a weakness on this point?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is now getting into a debating mood rather than an inquiring mood.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR TABLING OF ORDERS IN COUNCIL UNDER EXPORTS CREDITS LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yesterday the hon. member for Ottawa West inquired about the tabling of certain orders in council as provided for under section 21 of the Export Credits Insurance Act. I would not like the impression to be left that there has been any failure to table reports that are required. In order to make the situation clear I should like to refer to section 21, clause 5 of the act, which reads as follows:

> All orders in council made under this section while parliament is in session shall be laid before parliament during such session and, if made while parliament is not in session, shall be laid before parliament at the next ensuing session.

The practice over the years has been to collect the various orders in council passed under section 21 of the act during the year and table them at one time toward the end of the session. However, I have arranged to have the orders in council issued under section 21 tabled in the house early next week rather than at the end of the session, so that when the bill concerning this act comes before the house members will have full information concerning the business that has been transacted during the course of the year.

RESEARCH

REPORTED EXCHANGE OF RUSSIAN AND CANADIAN GROUPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): I should like to direct a question to the minister of northern affairs arising out of an article in yesterday's Ottawa Journal concerning an exchange of officials between Canada and Russia to study the Arctic. I wonder if the minister could tell us how far he has gone with this plan.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing particularly new about this. I think about a year ago there was a discussion of an exchange of visitors between the Soviet union and Canada, and it was proposed that there should be a visit to the Arctic regions of Russia. That is as far as it has gone. The proposal has been put forward, and that is all I can say at this time.

Mr. Hardie: Has any invitation been extended to Russian officials to visit Canada?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): There is a general exchange of visits between the two countries, and in connection with that general exchange each country puts forward various proposals that it would like to have accepted by the other country. These proposals have gone forward, but we have not heard anything since.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rea in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

318. General administration, $9,335,045.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, last night, yesterday evening, at ten, when I had to suspend my remarks, I was referring to the need for a new interprovincial bridge, in view of the fact that the national capital attracts very many visitors, also because of the considerable number of civil servants who work either in Hull or in Ottawa, and on account of the magnificent sites which exist in the neighbourhood. As a matter of fact, of late, the chambers of commerce on both sides of the river have given continued attention to this problem. At a sort of forum, sponsored by the French chamber of commerce of Ottawa, we have discussed that matter rather fully, replying to all questions that were put to us. As a result, the members came to the conclusion that someone should take the initiative, otherwise nothing concrete would be achieved. Besides, I remember that, in this regard, as early as 1955, Mr. Winters, predecessor of the present hon. minister, had earnestly attempted to get the provincial governments to participate in the construction of that bridge. We know that the Ontario government did not make any formal pledge at that time, but in any case I note that, on October 29, 1955, Mr. Frost said:

(Text):

In connection with the proposed Ottawa-Hulll bridge, it is of course understood that this is merely for a preliminary meeting which in no way will commit any of the governments to this project.

Will you please contact Mr. Allan, to whom I am sending a copy of this letter?

(Translation):

This was an indication that the Ontario government was at least ready to give serious consideration to the matter. Moreover, as a result of that letter, Mr. Allan made the following reply dated November 29, 1955:

(Text):

I have noted your invitation to appoint an engineer to serve on a committee in connection with the proposed bridge, and am pleased to recommend Mr. J. B. Wilkes, district engineer in Ottawa, as a member of the proposed committee.

(Translation):

This shows that, as early as 1955, the Ontario government had intended to give the matter serious consideration. On the other hand, I note that even in 1957, the Quebec government ignored the matter entirely. In fact, I have here a copy of a letter written by Mr. Winters to the premier of the province of Quebec, in which he made the following statement:

I informed you on November 10, 1956 of our intent to set up a committee to go into the matter of rebuilding the approaches to the existing bridges between Ottawa and Hull, the possible location of a new bridge, and a preliminary assessment of the costs involved. I invited you to send a representative to this committee.

The committee has prepared a report, and I enclose for your information a copy of the proceedings of its last meeting, held December 14, 1956, together with a copy of the report from the consulting engineer recommending construction of a new bridge.

I shall welcome any comment you may wish to submit concerning this proposal.

That letter went unanswered. Now apparently the only objection which remains at this time is the opposition of the Quebec premier who, in answer to a question, in the provincial legislature, said: "If Ottawa want bridges, let them build themselves some."

The matter, it seems to me, should be outside of politics. The situation is such that we cannot put up with it much longer. That is why I ask the minister if he could not intimate to his successor—as the session is soon to be prorogued so that he will probably be replaced in this post—that the Minister of Public Works in Ottawa should be the very man to go ahead and continue the work already begun by his predecessor, Mr. Winters, so as to convince the provincial authorities both of Ontario and Quebec of the fact that in the national capital the position is becoming more intolerable every day.

I know that, if the minister were to consider this request, talks might be resumed and, with some good will on the part of provincial governments—in as much as the minister has already stated with regard to this matter that the federal government is still prepared to pay its share—and, as I said, with some good will and good grace on the part of provincial governments, we could in two or three years see at least the beginning of a solution to that problem, which is the dearest wish of the people of both cities.

Now, Mr. Chairman, would you allow me to take up another point. There are in the Ottawa area many government buildings, most of which, except perhaps the national printing bureau, are on the Ontario side of the river. Some of those buildings are quite a distance from parliament. In fact, some of them are as far as Manotick, several miles from downtown Ottawa.

In the Quebec part of the national capital area there are very few federal buildings. Yet the various governments have expressed the wish that an area of about 35 square miles on the Quebec side be included in the national capital plan.

I wonder why there are not more federal buildings located in the Quebec area, where they would be much closer to the parliament buildings. I am not, of course, referring to structures which are part of the experimental farm; it is only logical and reasonable that these should be out there, I am referring particularly to those buildings which accommodate the various divisions of the Public Works or the Post Office department, and have been erected still farther from the centre block. In the Quebec part of the national capital area there are very few such new buildings.

Mr. Chairman, I know that when in the committee of public accounts, the project of building the National Printing Bureau on the Quebec side was under discussion the first question asked by a member of that committee was: "Why should the National Printing Bureau be located in Hull?" Such attitude shows that some people are narrow-minded to a degree that we, who are broad-minded, are unable to understand. Some people seem to think that no public building can be erected on the Quebec side. Yet the ridings of Gatineau and Hull comprise space that would be most appropriate for new federal constructions. The federal government would thus be enabled to spread its bounties on both sides of the national capital.

Mr. Chairman, I have not brought up this problem for the purpose of criticizing the present Minister of Public Works. I know he has not had the time to consider all those matters in the short time he has been heading the department. I am pointing out the situation not because of anything that happened in the past, but rather to avoid problems that might arise in the future. Let the Quebec part of the national capital receive greater attention, and I am convinced that everyone will be happy.

Mr. Chairman, I had promised to be brief. In closing, I wish to repeat what I was just saying, that the Minister of Public Works, in view of his new appointment, will soon be stepping out of his present job, and will also be relinquishing his duties as house leader. However, before resuming my seat, may I be allowed to make a suggestion to the government? There is in this house a man whose knowledge of the standing orders and procedure of the house is truly remarkable, a man who reasons with perfect logic and who has been presiding over the proceedings of a particular committee with such fairmindedness that he should be the unanimous choice of the cabinet to succeed the hon. Minister of Public Works. I therefore suggest to the government that they consider appointing the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Small) in that capacity, in view of all his outstanding qualifications.

Mr. English: Mr. Chairman, it is with pleasure that I associate myself with all members of the house in warmly congratulating the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) on his appointment to the important function of Secretary of State for External Affairs. That mark of confidence on the part of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the compliments showered upon him by members of all political parties represented here, prove that the minister has all the qualities required to fulfil this task.

If we rejoice upon his appointment, it is nonetheless true that we are a bit sorry to see him leave the Department of Public Works, which he has headed since 1957 and which he had administered with devotion, wisdom and in the interest of the whole country.

For my part, I know I have taken much of his time. The requests I have put to him have been many, and if they were more numerous than those of other members, it is because the beautiful constituency of Gaspe, which I have the honour to represent here in the house, is one which has been the most neglected in the past. Mind you, Mr. Chairman, those requests were not made for political reasons, but rather in the interest of a constituency which is rich thanks to its fisheries, its forests and its mines, but hardly developed from an economic standpoint, and that on account of a scarcity of means of communications, both by water and by land.

I have asked for a fishing harbour for Newport, and I may say that my request was considered with close attention by the minister, by his devoted deputy minister and by the whole staff of the department. The authorities came to the conclusion that my request was justified, and they granted it in favour of the city of Newport, and therefore of the constituency of Gaspe. Thanks to the subsidy which the department decided to grant for the construction of a convenient fishing harbour, I am proud to announce to the house that the Quebec United Fishermen will build a filleting plant at a cost of more than one million dollars and that plant will help improve the lot of fishermen, and at the same time, will provide jobs for more than 150 persons.

That is, Mr. Chairman, something which is practical for the development of my constituency. Attention was given not only to the interest of a small group, but to the whole community, including those poor fishermen.

I know I have put other requests to the minister, and, as I said a moment ago, they were numerous.

One of those dealt with improvements to be made to the harbour of Grande Riviere, which comprises a population of fishermen and a federal biology office as well as a provincial fisheries school. The Robin, Jones & Whitman Company of Paspebiac, would be interested in the building of a fish processing plant. That company is willing to invest $500,000 in such a plant. It is ready to start construction as soon as the Department of Public Works decides to undertake the work that is needed on the harbour. I am confident that the minister and his officials will act upon this request, so that the parish may have the benefit of a new important industry.

Mr. Chairman, I have also called for improvements to the Chandler harbour, which has been the subject of representations for many years. The Gaspesia sulphite plant is located in that city, and many ships call at this port to take on cargo. However, the ships have to put up with considerable difficulties, because at the slightest indication of a storm they have to get away from the wharf and keep out at sea for hours and even days, thus further increasing the cost of lumber transportation; this, in turn, prevents companies from paying as much for the wood as they pay in other communities with more adequate transportation facilities.

The city of Chandler has a magnificent port, where ships can dock at any time of the year. In the wintertime, there is no ice to obstruct traffic. I have here a photograph taken in February, which shows that there is no ice to prevent shipping, so that ships can come in and take up cargo throughout the year.

If you want to have an idea of that industry, which is vital both for the town of Chandler and the constituency of Gaspe in general, I must tell you that in 1950 the company spent for wood alone an amount of $2,352,000; in 1956, it spent $4,258,000. That same company has paid in wages in 1950, $1,461,000, and in 1956 $1,983,000. It adds up, for 1956, in purchases of wood and in wages, to $6,241,000. Besides that company intends to enlarge its plant, which would provide more work to the labourers.

In that case too, we are waiting, for I am sure the minister will do something to improve the situation. The officers of the Department of Public Works have undertaken a study of that project. A scale model has been prepared. I have had the opportunity to look at it with a delegation which had come from Chandler to meet the Minister of Public Works and his deputy. I am sure that this project will materialize in the near future. I realize that all the requests I have made cannot be answered overnight, especially when those made on behalf of my constituency are so numerous. I am confident that in the near future, the minister will give consideration to the development of that area, one which has been neglected in the past.

I would like to add a few words about Gaspe harbour, one of the most beautiful of natural harbours. Unfortunately, it has remained in its natural state, just as created by Providence. There again, it would be possible to do something, because we, in the Gaspe constituency, have, like everyone else, paid taxes; unfortunately, we have never got back part of that money for the improvement of the economic situation of the area. As I said last year, we cannot take advantage of all the good legislation adopted by the government, as do other constituencies; we get practically no benefit under the National Housing Act, that excellent piece of legislation.

In conclusion, I once more thank the minister and all his staff for the consideration they have given in the past to the problems of Gaspe.

(Text):

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I have a very brief remark to make about paraplegics and public buildings, but before I do so may I second the remarks of the hon. member for York-Scarborough on behalf of the G.F.A. on the new honours which have come to the minister. We have watched his progress with a great deal of interest, and as he continues to rise in the affection of the house he nears the day when he too will become a member of the G.F.A.

My remarks regarding paraplegics are very simple. I have had representations from time to time, as I know other members of this committee have, in which the paraplegic associations have expressed some concern about the architecture of public buildings. Particularly they do wish that the federal government in its building program would give some lead, direction or example to the other groups building in this country by so arranging the entrances that it is possible for people in wheel chairs to enter and leave public buildings with the utmost of ease. I hope when the minister rises to take part in this debate he might deal specifically with the representations that have been made by the paraplegic associations.

Mr. McWilliam: Mr. Chairman, I wish to extend congratulations to the minister on his appointment to the external affairs post. He must, even with his usual modesty, feel a sense of pride on his selection to this most important post in international affairs. It becomes, I think, a recognition of 24 years of faithful service as a member of the parliament of Canada, and for the past two years as a federal cabinet minister in the important portfolio of public works; also he has fulfilled the difficult assignment of house leader. It is a deserved appointment for many reasons, not the least of which is his 24 years of faithful service as a member of parliament. Of course his many other attributes are good reasons for his selection. Every good wish goes to the minister in his role in international affairs. He will now serve Canada in a wider field, and I join with others and say to the minister good luck; good deliberations in the best interests of Canada.

The minister in his remarks on May 2, when opening the main public works estimates, stated that the total departmental expenditure for the year 1958-59 was $220.3 million, an increase of $8 million over the year 1957-58. This year's total amount requested, exclusive of statutory items, is $173.6 million, a decrease of $17.8 million compared to last year's amount. The supplementary estimates tabled on June 1 provide an additional $700,000 for New Brunswick under the heading "harbours and rivers, engineering services". Under the heading of public works for New Brunswick the amount shown for 1958-59 is $2,005,000, and the amount for 1959-60 is $490,000.

Under the heading of public buildings in the Atlantic provinces the 1958-59 total was $6,938,475 compared with the 1959-60 total of $4,248,475, a difference of $2,690,000. Under the heading dealing with public buildings in New Brunswick there are two votes for the completion of the construction of public buildings at Campbellton and Grand Falls and three votes for the construction of new buildings at Moncton, Sackville and Saint John. Almost the whole decrease of $1,746,000 under public buildings for the three maritime provinces falls to the lot of New Brunswick namely $1,515,000 or 87 per cent of the total decrease.

Under the provision for harbours and rivers in New Brunswick in this year's estimates, Northumberland-Miramichi has only three small wharf repair jobs; Escuminac breakwater repairs at $59,000, Lower Newcastle wharf repairs at $26,500 and Newcastle wharf repairs at $70,000 for a total of $155,000, which is more than will be required since the low bids on these jobs are below the estimated costs.

There are many single items in the list of projects for other parts of New Brunswick which amount to many times the total amount to be spent in Northumberland-Miramichi, even though there are a number of small projects needed in that constituency. These include small landing wharfs, extensions to existing wharves and dredging to improve the Miramichi fishing industry. I trust that when the further supplementary estimates are brought down many of these projects will be included.

I ask the minister to grant the request recently made by the fishermen of Manuels post office and have the necessary survey undertaken immediately. I also request the minister to have his New Brunswick officials make a complete survey of Miramichi fishing facilities with a view to constructing new facilities where none presently exist, and improving existing ones to ameliorate the lot of the fishermen who, as primary producers, toil the hardest for the least return received by any segment of Canadian workers.

When the amendment to the Trans-Canada Highway Act was before the house earlier this session to increase the amount of the fund, I urged the minister to promote a second trans-Canada highway in the northeast section of New Brunswick. This secondary highway would provide a much-needed complete artery from Campbellton to Moncton, filling in the missing link in the highway transportation system in that area at Chatham, where a serious traffic bottleneck exists. Perhaps the minister would give consideration to presenting legislation next session which would make it possible for the federal and provincial governments to enter into agreements for the construction of vital secondary transportation arteries.

In connection with highways other than primary or secondary trans-Canada highways, the citizens of northern and eastern New Brunswick are aroused over reports that a corridor road is to be constructed between central Canada and southern New Brunswick through the state of Maine. Reports state that federal assistance will be provided in conjunction with the provinces of New Brunswick and Quebec. While it is realized that the federal government has no jurisdiction over any highway which the provinces of New Brunswick and Quebec might construct, and that it certainly has no jurisdiction within the state of Maine, it is on any grounds inconceivable that the federal government would assist in any way in the construction of this proposed corridor road, a highway which would have an extremely adverse economic result in the northern and eastern sections of New Brunswick. The people in this area would appreciate the minister's views with regard to such federal assistance, and on their behalf I plead with the minister to use his influence to turn down any requests for aid.

A newspaper report which appeared in the Moncton Daily Times of May 9, 1959 stated that proposal of the provincial government to assist in the construction of a tourist wharf in the town had been accepted by the committee of the whole of the Shediac town council. The proposal was that the Shediac town council should provide $16,000, the provincial government $24,000 and the federal government the remaining $120,000.

Requests have been made by the Chatham town council for federal financial assistance toward the construction of a highway bridge, a project of much greater importance than the tourist wharf. Requests were also made to the provincial government in this connection, but both requests for assistance toward this bridge project fell on deaf ears. Apparently the ears are more receptive in the case of a tourist wharf. How can government assistance toward the construction of a tourist wharf be reconciled with refusal to grant assistance toward the building of a bridge on a main provincial highway? I am not objecting to assistance to the town of Shediac for a tourist wharf in this lobster capital of the world. I feel, however, that other undertakings are worthy of support, undertakings of a more vital nature which unfortunately have not been assisted.

On May 4 of this year, as reported in the Commercial-World of May 7, 1959, representatives of the Chatham board of trade, R. J. Martin, M.L.A., J. W. Clarke and E. J. McKinnon, met with the Chatham town council and requested a grant of $1,000 in order to continue the campaign for a bridge at Chatham, $400 of this amount to be used to defray the expenses of a delegation to Ottawa to be undertaken—and here I quote from the newspaper—"in an effort to get a commitment from public works Minister Green relative to the proposed bridge." The request for $400 to defray expenses to Ottawa was granted. The remainder was held in abeyance, with a decision to be made when the delegation had presented its report.

I do not know whether this delegation did visit Ottawa. If the delegation has in fact met the minister, then the citizens of Chatham and the surrounding area will appreciate learning from the hon. gentleman the results of the representation. The outcome of the meeting is awaited with great interest, and I hope when the minister sums up our discussions he will make reference to it. The May 6, 1958 issue of the Chatham Gazette reporting on a meeting of the bridge committee with the Minister of Public Works at Chatham a few days earlier stated:

> At the conference held with Hon. Mr. Green every assurance was given the committee by Mr. Green that he would co-operate in every possible way and explore every available channel to enhance the erection of this bridge. It is therefore planned that the committee will, if necessary, journey to Ottawa and discuss the matter further with the hon. Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Green: What date was that?

Mr. McWilliam: The May 6, 1958, issue of the Chatham Gazette. The same newspaper article also stated:

> The bridge committee which met Hon. Howard Green, federal Minister of Public Works, here in Chatham, is now seeking to arrange a conference with Hon. Hugh John Flemming, premier of New Brunswick, to explore prospects for immediate action for the survey and erection of this bridge.

Premier Flemming took no action toward a survey, the first essential step. However, the town council of Chatham authorized a survey which was completed recently at the town's expense. I do not know if the minister was misquoted in this newspaper article or if his remarks were received with too much optimism and were elaborated upon. Perhaps the reporter at the meeting was carried away with enthusiasm and misquoted the minister, because knowing the minister as I do I think he would be very careful in what he said about assistance in the erection of a bridge that forms part of a highway within a province.

On the other hand, if the minister was reported correctly then perhaps he will inform the committee what channels he explored to further the erection of the bridge. Perhaps he will tell the committee if he contacted the provincial authorities in this connection and, if so, with what results. Whatever action was taken by the minister, it is obvious that the federal government does not assume any responsibility.

On February 4, 1959, nine months less two days later, the minister was asked the following question by myself as recorded at page 674 of Hansard of that date:

Has the federal government any responsibility for New Brunswick highway No. 11—of which the proposed bridge at Chatham would form a part?

His reply on that occasion was as follows:

No responsibility in respect of New Brunswick highway No. 11. Should a bridge be constructed, however, there would be the normal approval required under the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

This approval, known to most people, is to safeguard against obstructions to water navigation and does not provide for financial assistance. In view of the government's answer of February 4 of this year, it appears that nothing of a concrete nature can be gained by sending a delegation to Ottawa unless the provincial minister of public works were a member of the delegation and the plans of the provincial government were placed before the federal minister and were known to the members of the Chatham board of trade delegation.

This same newspaper article of May 6, 1958 promoted the view that it is essential that conferences be held with the provincial department of public works at Fredericton, seeking federal co-operation. Although conferences were held they brought no tangible results. It is my view that before any assistance can be secured at the federal level the provincial government must make its position clear; otherwise efforts will get the same runaround for this vitally needed bridge which is the treatment that has been received for some time.

On page 453 of the book of estimates there is an item of $360,000 to be voted for an investigation to determine the feasibility of constructing a proposed causeway across Northumberland strait, including the opening of a test quarry. The minister's statement in connection with the proposed Northumberland strait causeway was not very encouraging to the people of Prince Edward Island and many others. The minister outlined what was encountered in this survey with respect to tidal and ice conditions that will result if a causeway is constructed. He spoke of other factors that will be considered, following which the economic feasibility of the project will be decided.

If the minister is in a position to give an approximate date when a report will be issued or when an interim report will be made public, the people of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick would appreciate such an announcement. In any event they look for a report at the earliest possible date and urge that the matter be expedited. Now that the economic survey has been undertaken they are keenly conscious that the $184 million South Saskatchewan dam project is under way.

A disturbing incident took place recently that is detrimental to the building up of an efficient staff for the performance of a public service. Following the change in government in 1957 the employees of government dredges No. 23 and No. 24 were retained. Provincial officials in charge of the dredges expressed complete satisfaction with all these employees, who were trained men giving good service. Attempts were made in 1957 through political channels to have certain individuals fired. No changes were made in 1957 or in 1958, and crews were kept intact despite further political efforts.

One reason for the previous failure of political efforts to have certain members of the crews dismissed was that none of the crew members took any part whatever in the political campaigns of 1957 and 1958.

When operations commenced this season four of the crew were not called for work and to this day they have received no notice that they would be continued in employment. Four new men were taken on as replacements. These were men untrained in this type of work, with no previous experience on the water or with dredging equipment. In our experience with dredging equipment the dismissal of men who have served faithfully over the years is a retrograde step in the building up of the public service. The action was taken solely on political grounds, despite what the minister said with regard to employees of his department retaining their jobs as long as their services were satisfactory and they did not take part in politics.

Mr. Brooks: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member a question? Are these permanent employees about which the hon. member is speaking or temporary employees who are hired every year?

Mr. McWilliam: The minister well knows they were temporary employees hired each year, but regardless of that—

Mr. Brooks: I might say that I know that in past years they were hired by the former government because they were political supporters of the Liberal party, and were hired on the recommendation of the hon. member who now has the floor.

Mr. Pickersgill: Are you suggesting the same thing is happening now?

Mr. McWilliam: Regardless of that, Mr. Chairman, these men gave good service over the years and relinquished any political affiliations. I maintain they are deserving of better treatment than they received, because of the excellent service they have faithfully rendered over the years.

Perhaps the minister tried to retain those experienced workers, as is indicated by the fact that no dismissals were made in 1957 or 1958, right until this year. However, it appears that the local political pressure became too strong, and the minister finally agreed to the termination of the service of trained personnel in favour of inexperienced men—and I trust the Minister of Veterans Affairs will listen to this—even displacing war veterans by non-veterans.

The minister's answer to the starred question evaded giving any good reason for the dismissals. The only answer given was that the jobs were seasonal positions, a very weak reason. In my opinion it was the machinery used to dismiss faithful and experienced employees who were branded as Liberals but who, despite what any local Conservative patronage committee may say, took no part in the 1957 or 1958 election campaigns. I trust the Minister of Veterans Affairs will note this, too. I probably realized at the start that the story—

Mr. Brooks: I have noted a whole lot regarding the hon. member's constituency, and the main thing I have noticed in the past is this. In the years when his party was in power all the men who obtained employment were of his party and were recommended by him, and anyone belonging to any other party had no chance at all.

Mr. McWilliam: Well, that is the view of the Minister of Veterans Affairs, and I know everybody realizes it is purely a political point of view on these matters. I am sure that in his long experience as a representative of the people when he was in the provincial government, and now that he holds the patronage here with the federal government, the minister never recommended any Liberal for any job under his jurisdiction.

Mr. Brooks: You do not know that.

Mr. McWilliam: From the point of view of building up the public service and protecting the rights of employees gained through services rendered, and for the maintenance of a good level of production for public money expended in this essential service, it is unfortunate that this action was taken.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I repeat my request for a survey of fishing facilities directed toward new construction and improvements to existing facilities for the Miramichi fishing industry. On behalf of the fishermen who are primary producers of many species of fish from Miramichi waters, who toil under great handicaps, who are deserving of adequate facilities to assist them in their daily labours, I urge the minister, in co-operation with the Minister of Fisheries, to authorize a complete study and survey. At the same time a survey should be made of wharf and dredging facilities for the export and import trade of the Miramichi.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I shall transgress only a short time on the committee's time to avail myself of this opportunity to congratulate the minister on his new appointment. It is perhaps the only opportunity that hon. members will have during this session to offer congratulations to the minister. I want him to bear in mind that this is not meant to contribute to a delay in the passage of his estimates.

Since he came to the cabinet almost two years ago the Minister of Public Works has done a very commendable job and a tremendous service to Canada, particularly to the Atlantic provinces. There are in the province of Newfoundland—indeed in the maritime provinces—many outstanding works which are evidences of the great interest of the Minister of Public Works in the less endowed areas of Canada.

I want to assure the minister of the high esteem in which he is held in my constituency in the province of Newfoundland. The interest he has taken in my province, as I say, has been made manifest on many occasions. My one regret is that because of time, because of the many demands on the minister, he has not had an opportunity since becoming Minister of Public Works to visit the province of Newfoundland and see for himself just exactly what a tremendous job is being undertaken by his department in that province.

I could speak, for example, of the mammoth St. John's harbour development, which in a few years' time will make this old seaport of St. John's into a great modern harbour. I think, too, of the community stage program, which has received a fair amount of criticism from some hon. members here and in other places as well. But I will say this with regard to that community stage program, Mr. Chairman. It is the first concrete and definite step that has been taken in many years by the federal government to materially aid the Newfoundland fishermen. It is my hope that this community stage program which is now in course of development stage—perhaps it could be termed an experimental stage—will be enlarged and extended in the years ahead.

Perhaps the greatest criticism that has been made of the community stage program is that it is inadequate in that it covers only 20 of the hard-pressed Newfoundland fishing centres; but we must realize that this is something new, and it must proceed slowly on the basis of trial and error. I can only hope that as this community stage program proceeds it will meet with that degree of success which was intended.

Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Public Works has now been called upon to serve his country in the very important field of world diplomacy and world politics. I think it is a great tribute to his ability that he should be called upon to serve Canada in these troubled times. In paying this little tribute to the minister, as I said before, I do so with a certain amount of regret because he is leaving the portfolio of public works. To those who follow in his footsteps I suggest that he has set a standard which will be quite difficult to maintain. However, I am sure the minister will always retain that interest in Canadian affairs generally for which he has been noted down through the years.

Public works in a province such as Newfoundland play a more important role than in perhaps any other part of Canada, because they contribute not only to the material improvement of harbours, rivers and public buildings but also contribute greatly to the economy of this retarded area. One has just to scan the minister's estimates for this year to see that many important works are now being undertaken by the Department of Public Works which I suggest should have been started years ago. They have been started now because of that greater degree of interest which exists in the Department of Public Works.

I think of the huge wharf reconstruction at Bay de Verde; the wharf extension and shed at Bell island; the wharf reconstruction and extensions at Carmanville and Catalina; the harbour improvements at Codroy on the west coast; the huge wharf now under construction at Goose Bay, Labrador; the breakwater construction at Grand Bank; the building of the large wharf at Harbour Breton on the south coast; the wharf construction at Harbour Main; the harbour improvements at Port aux Basques and, of course, the $13 million St. John's harbour development. There can be no greater tribute to the tenure of office of the present Minister of Public Works, Mr. Chairman, than can be found in the estimates for the coming year.

In conclusion I should like also at this time to pay tribute to the hard working staff, the district engineer and the staff, of the Newfoundland region. Nowhere else in Canada do public works present such a challenge as in Newfoundland and, as I said before, nowhere else in Canada are public works so important. I would recommend to the minister and to his officers that they bear this in mind when they view the various requests that come from time to time for additional staff. There have been additions to the staff of the Newfoundland office in recent months, but with all due respect I suggest that the staff of the Newfoundland office is still inadequate. They make up, perhaps, for lack of numbers in the quality of the personnel employed in the public works office in Newfoundland.

Mr. Tucker: I feel that first I must express my personal regrets at the departure of the now acting Minister of Public Works from that post. I offer him my sincere congratulations upon his appointment to the position of Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am sure this house is of the belief that he will do his best in that important post, just as he has in the past during his term as Minister of Public Works. We all wish him every success. While not always agreeing with his decisions I must admit that I found the acting minister a very fair man in all his dealings. I now wish him well. I believe in sending flowers while the minister is alive and can smell them. I had hoped that he would remain in office until all the wharves in my riding had been constructed or repaired. I hope when his successor is appointed he will give a sympathetic hearing and reasonable consideration to the many requests which he is sure to receive from me from time to time.

I feel that I should also publicly pay tribute to the officials of the Department of Public Works in their sincere endeavour to do their best in the interests of all concerned at all times. I extend my sincere gratitude to all the officials.

In my riding of Trinity-Conception there are many fishing communities, some of which are very important because of the quantity of codfish produced and the many fish plants that are located there. I am glad the Department of Public Works has tried to assist the fishermen in these areas. For instance, at Harbour Grace approximately $136,000 has been spent during the past five years on harbour improvements for the benefit of the fishermen. At Catalina island, in the northern part of my riding, approximately $745,000 has been spent during the past five years. Approximately one-quarter of all the Newfoundland salt codfish is exported from the Catalina island area. A model fish plant is also located at this harbour and is operated by Fisheries Products Limited.

There is a large federal experimental salt fish drier at Catalina on the premises of S. W. Mifflin Limited. A dredging program was also carried out here, but more dredging is required to make it easier for ships to enter and leave the harbour. A coastal wharf has been built and now a fishermen's wharf is being constructed. In the Bay de Verde and Port de Grave area the department has also spent much money during the past five years. These are two very important fishing centres, and we know these expenditures have been justified.

There are still, however, many more areas in which public works improvements would be of great economic benefit. Many of these areas have already been brought to the attention of the minister from time to time by way of petitions, letters and telephone calls, and I must say that I have received reports on all but, as may be expected, they have not always been favourable. For instance, last year I presented a petition to the Department of Public Works for a wharf at Dildo South, where there is a large whaling and fresh fish operation and from which point I believe the only mink feed delivery service in Canada operates, catering to some 25 mink ranchers in the Blaketown area. Last year about 25,000 mink pelts were produced, which brought some $500,000 to Newfoundland. However, more fresh fish is needed to provide additional feed for the mink. I understand the Department of Public Works, after making a careful survey, is considering the construction of a wharf there. This will be of great assistance to all the people in that general area.

There are many places where the fishermen have requested extensions to the present wharfing facilities. The following places come to mind: Britannia; Caplin Cove; Chance Cove; Deer Harbour; Gooseberry Cove; Green's Harbour, eastern end; Heart's Desire; Lead Cove; Little Heart's Ease; New Harbour; Norman's Cove; Spaniard's Bay and Sunnyside. Requests have also been received for the construction of wharves from the following settlements: Bishop's Cove; Burnt Point; Butter Cove; Grate's Cove; Green's Harbour, western end; Hillview; Harbour Grace south; Melrose; Monroe; Queen's Cove; Sunnyside; Thornlea and Winterton. Many of these requests were made last year, and I am sure the Department of Public Works will give them serious consideration.

When those wharves have been extended or constructed, Mr. Chairman, I shall have much pleasure in furnishing the names of other settlements which need public works attention. Once again I suggest that docking facilities be established at Harbour Grace and Clarenville in order to take care of the boats requiring docking facilities, because the Canadian National Railways dock at St. John's is not able to cater to the boats and schooners requiring its facilities.

A fishermen's landing is also badly needed in Carbonear, and I am hopeful that the department will take care of that matter this year. I am convinced that the present plan for community stages should be continued, as I am sure they will prove to be extremely beneficial. I strongly suggest that, because of weather conditions, much of the public works construction be carried out in Newfoundland during the early spring or the late fall rather than in the winter months.

I believe the federal government should also give increased financial assistance to Newfoundland to complete the trans-Canada highway, because Newfoundland has not a standard gauge railway and consequently cannot cater to the trade of the province adequately and at competitive cost in any favourable proportion as compared with the situation in the other provinces of Canada. It is the duty of the federal government of Canada, to provide Newfoundland with a railway service in keeping with that in the rest of Canada, to keep the cost of the transportation of goods, etc. into and out of Newfoundland at the same level as in the other provinces. Consequently any extra financial assistance given to Newfoundland to complete her portion of the trans-Canada highway will only square up matters with the province of Newfoundland. Newfoundland then will not be receiving in proportion any more favourable treatment than that which the other provinces of Canada are receiving from the federal government.

Mr. Stewart: Without unduly delaying the passage of the estimates I should like to be permitted at this time, on my own behalf, on behalf of the people of my constituency and of the people of the province of New Brunswick generally, to express to the Minister of Public Works our appreciation for what he has done for our province during his tenure of office. The universal approval of the announcement made yesterday indicates the cherished position he holds in this house, and I think that is the position he holds in the minds of the Canadian people generally.

For a long period of time the present Minister of Public Works has been held in very high esteem by the people of my province. I feel that I would be remiss in my duty as a member from that province if I did not convey to him at this time our feelings and our appreciation of what he has done for us. I should like also to convey on behalf of the people of my constituency, particularly the people of Campobello island, appreciation for his co-operation and for the assistance he has given to that part of New Brunswick.

The Minister of Public Works has brought to that department a realistic appreciation of the problems confronting the people of New Brunswick, particularly the fishermen of my constituency. He introduced and sponsored through this house the Campobello-Lubec bridge bill which provides for a connecting link between the island of Campobello and Lubec in the state of Maine. On Tuesday of this week the governor of Maine signed the bill which provides for the construction of this connecting bridge. When the film is made of the play "Sunrise at Campobello" depicting the early life of the late Franklin D. Roosevelt, possibly the stars of the cast will be able to journey to the island of Campobello over a bridge made possible in part at least through the efforts of the present Minister of Public Works.

The people of Campobello wish him well in his new appointment. They are sorry to see that he is leaving the department he now heads. I am sure they would wish me to express to him our appreciation of what he has done and to wish him well in his new field. We are confident that his success in the future is assured in keeping with his past record.

Mr. Chevrier: My remarks will be brief and will be directed toward one aspect only of the minister's activities. However, before I embark upon them perhaps the committee will allow me to reiterate my congratulations to the minister on his appointment to this new and high office to which he has been called by the government. May I say to him that I am delighted that he will remain house leader for the rest of the session but that, on the other hand, I am sorry that because of the importance of his new duties he may not be able to carry on those duties during the following session in 1960. No one will miss him more than I. I am happy to say that during the time he has occupied that office of house leader our relationship has been of the happiest kind and certainly one of great co-operation.

I rose to speak about port development along the St. Lawrence. I am particularly interested in this matter not only because of my close association with it during the almost ten years in which I held the position of Minister of Transport and then in another position as president of the St. Lawrence seaway authority for three years.

Again I want to bring to the attention of the minister and his officials the importance of adequate port facilities all along the seaway. It has been said repeatedly by economists that more money is now being spent by industry from the lower St. Lawrence right up to the head of the lakes for industrial development than on the seaway itself. If that is the case, and I believe it to be, then it is of equal importance that the ports which come under the jurisdiction of the minister be adequately equipped.

I speak first of all, of course, of the ports in the province of Quebec. I am particularly interested in them. But before doing so I should like to remind the minister of a suggestion I made in 1957 and again in 1958 both to the Minister of Public Works and to the Minister of Transport, but to which apparently little or no heed was paid. Perhaps it was not thought to be important at the time. However, I believe circumstances have shown that it was important.

The recommendation I made was that a body be set up to make an economic survey of all the regions of the St. Lawrence seaway and how those regions would be affected, including the ports, from one end to the other. While I was not successful in 1957 in convincing the government that this was something that should be done, I was successful in getting a recommendation in the annual report of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. While I do not have it available at the moment, and I do not want to delay these estimates, it is clearly a recommendation in the report of 1958 that an economic survey be made of all the regions and areas affected by the seaway.

Mr. Green: I am sorry; I did not hear the last few words.

Mr. Chevrier: —an economic survey of the different geographic regions of Canada affected by the seaway.

Now I come back to these ports. I am particularly interested, of course, in the lower St. Lawrence ports, because they come neither under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport nor under the jurisdiction of the national harbours board; I think they fall under the Department of Public Works. I refer to Seven Islands, Baie Comeau, Rimouski and other such ports. I happen to know that at Baie Comeau there is a vast development going on now arising out of the seaway, and that is the construction of a large grain elevator which it is estimated will look after new traffic such as the grain shipments which it is expected will come down the seaway.

I suggest that if private industry can go to the length of an expenditure of that nature—I have not the figure before me now but I know it is a matter of many millions of dollars—the Department of Public Works should give consideration to providing facilities at that fast-growing community.

Mr. Green: May I ask the hon. member a question. On May 21, at page 3915 of Hansard,

I dealt with the construction going on in the lower St. Lawrence area. Has the hon. member seen that?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, I have, but I was wondering if the minister felt that was enough under the circumstances, because there will be great development in that area. I would say it is anticipated that there will be great development because of this increased movement and the fact that the ships will go from the head of the lakes now right down to Montreal and other St. Lawrence ports without transshipment. Therefore new, more modern and more up to date facilities are required at these ports; and while I have seen the minister's statement I was just wondering if that was going far enough.

I am going to curtail my remarks, but I do want to deal with the ports in the province of Ontario. I spoke at Port Arthur some weeks ago, and I was astounded to find that practically nothing had been done at the lakehead toward development. I know the minister has had a survey group look into the actual conditions and possible future harbour and other requirements along the St. Lawrence river as a result of the completion of the seaway, and one such group went to Cornwall, Belleville, Kingston, and other ports right up to Toronto.

There is quite a bit of discussion right now as to what should be done at the city of Cornwall, and I am sorry to say there is not nearly as much being done there as there should be. There are places, for instance like Kingston, that are complaining that they are off the beaten path, some distance away from the deep channel; but notwithstanding that, Kingston is going to become quite an important port for down river traffic. In fact one large corporation has already indicated its intention of making the city of Kingston a base for future developments.

What I am coming to now is this. Take a place like the city of Cornwall. That port is right on deep water. Both extremities have deep water facilities of over 27 feet, and can therefore take the 25½ feet draft vessels. It seems to me that in the two years the government has been in office more attention should have been given to that community. I know that representations have been made by the hon. member for Stormont, but I am sure he will not mind my rising in the House of Commons at this time because of my close association with that community, and I do not rise for any other purpose than to be helpful. All I say is that there are all the facilities in the world, and I do wish the minister would give some special attention to that port.

On the whole I rose simply to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that in the United States large sums of money are being spent in anticipation of future traffic, and it seems to me that we should be giving the same attention on this side of the international line.

Mr. Pascoe: May I call it one o'clock?

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Pascoe: I realize that the minister would appreciate getting his estimates through this committee as expeditiously as possible. We wish to assist him in that regard, so I will take only a very brief period of the time of this committee.

However, I wish to express my appreciation, and the appreciation of the constituents of Moose Jaw city, to the minister with regard to the construction of our new federal building which was made possible by the hon. gentleman's decision shortly after he assumed office as Minister of Public Works. The new federal building in Moose Jaw is now rising rapidly and will be open early next year. The final vote for $600,000 for the completion of the building appears in the estimates before us. Last year there was a vote of $500,000 for the new building, and newspapers give some idea of its proportions.

Moose Jaw city has been built up very greatly in the last two years, particularly in the northwest and southwest areas, and I contend that this is due very largely to the housing program of the Department of Public Works. The minister can be very proud of the success of his efforts in this regard, and I trust that his successor in the department will follow his fine example.

Through the fortunes of constituency redistribution I also represent the outer—the growing—areas of Regina city, and here, also, the minister's housing program has been the means of very rapid expansion. I know his efforts, and the efforts of his department, are very greatly appreciated. At the present time there is a program for a large rental housing project in north Regina an area which, as I said, is included in Moose Jaw-Lake Centre. I have had something to do with the arrangements for this proposed project and I hope the minister will be in a position to make a definite announcement in the near future.

Of course, as a Moose Jaw resident I will draw the minister's attention to the need for further extensions of this program in Moose Jaw. There are other items included in these estimates dealing with repairs and improvements to various public buildings in Saskatchewan. Some of these buildings are, I am sure, in Moose Jaw-Lake Centre. We welcome this extra work and this indication of the minister's continued interest on our behalf.

Before I resume my seat I wish to take this opportunity to offer my personal congratulations and the congratulations of the people of Moose Jaw-Lake Centre to the minister upon his appointment as Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am sure that after all the statements which have been made by previous speakers, all of which I endorse wholeheartedly, the minister will know that he has the best wishes of all members and of Canadian people in his new call to service for Canada. We can rest assured that the external affairs of this country are in good hands. Once again, while he is still Minister of Public Works I wish to thank the hon. gentleman on behalf of Moose Jaw-Lake Centre for the co-operation he has always given us in tackling our problems, particularly our housing problems.

Mr. Granger: In common with most hon. members I am very interested in the estimates of the Department of Public Works. I come from a riding where most of the people live in seaport towns or small outport settlements and their interest in marine works in particular is very keen indeed.

I should like for a moment to talk about the value of small works in such places as these, places where very often the sea is the highway and the boat and the wharf take the place of the car and the road. Most of these places are fishing settlements and some of these settlements are exposed; they are not all built in good harbours; they are built in shallow coves where some improvement on nature is necessary if the fishermen are to pursue their vocation over a period of reasonable length.

In some of these fishing settlements a small breakwater can make all the difference between a short fishing season and a long one, or between a fishing season which is constant and one which is interrupted by storms which compel fishermen to haul up their boats. Small breakwaters, not costing very much money in some instances, can make half decent small harbours; practical harbours where boats can remain at anchor during a storm.

Then there are places where for physical and economic reasons breakwaters are not practicable. In such places, small slipways, complete with either power winches or hand winches could be utilized for hauling boats out of the water rapidly when storms approach and then enabling them to be launched fairly quickly when the sea is again fit for fishing.

Then there is the small landing wharf. Apart from being a place where boats may tie up and the catch may be landed these wharfs become a focal point for fishing activities and, in many cases, they are used for purposes far beyond the original intention of the wharf. They are used to dry nets, to handle fish and to land supplies. Many of these small wharves cost very little and the funds for their construction come out of the miscellaneous or general vote. It is for this reason that I should like to suggest that the minister consider enlarging this miscellaneous vote so as to take care of a greater number of these small marine activities.

The community stages program which began last year will, without doubt, become one of the very best programs thus far instituted for the benefit of fishermen. Just as the small public wharf becomes a focal point for fishermen, so on a larger and more efficient scale is the community stage for the whole fishing community and I do hope that this program will be extended and, if possible, enlarged.

While I do not think I should attempt to name here all the places where community stages should be built, I should like to suggest that St. Anthony, one of the most important fishing towns in the north does need something in the way of community stages. I do not think one community stage would be sufficient there owing to the layout of the town. Two or three should be considered.

I should like to speak briefly about one or two larger projects. Before doing so I should like to thank the minister for the program which has been instituted this year in my riding calling for the completion of the wharf at Battle Harbour, Sop's Arm; the important wharf at Goose Bay mentioned this morning by my colleague the hon. member for St. John's East; and at Hampden, Harbour Round and Ming's Bight and Williams Harbour on the Labrador. I understand, too, the department will be lengthening and enlarging the Canadian National Railways docks at Lewisporte.

All these are vitally needed. I do not want to appear to be greedy and simply say that "these things ought ye to have done and not to have left the other undone". I am very pleased that these projects are being built this year. I do hope, however, that special attention can be given to the port of Botwood this year. This is an important point of shipping for central Newfoundland.

For several years the people of Botwood have urged the construction of a public wharf for their seaport town.

There are some places along the coast of the Labrador where small wharves are necessary. There are places like Baie Verte in Newfoundland, where the asbestos mines are being developed and where a large coastal wharf is needed. I may perhaps be forgiven for calling attention to Woodstock. In connection with this place it was pointed out by the department that it not being a port of call for the C.N.R. steamers a coastal wharf was not necessary. While the C.N.R. pointed out that there not being a wharf at Woodstock, their steamers could not make it a port of call. Within the next twelve months I hope there is sufficient co-operation between the department and the other organization so that some consideration may be given to co-ordinating the building and completion of the wharf with the calling of the steamer.

With respect to public buildings I should like to repeat what I said once before. Small public buildings, even as large public buildings are monuments to Canada. This should be kept in mind when they are being designed. I do not suggest that buildings as large or as ornate as the parliament buildings should be built in small towns but I do suggest that when a building is designed it should adequately portray what Canada is. It should be neat, attractive, well proportioned and adequate and should be designed to house all federal government services in the community.

To illustrate my point I shall refer to Glenwood to which reference has already been made. A post office is badly needed in Glenwood. The Canadian National Telegraphs is putting in a new telephone system which will require a building. Unless there is proper liaison between the two bodies the C.N.T. will have its own small building and the post office will have its own small building. We will have two small buildings, when instead we could have a larger and better building that would be a credit to Canada and honour the name it will bear. At the same time it would be more economical.

I feel rather strongly about the value of these buildings in terms of the impression they create on people in the community and particularly young people who grow up and form their impressions of Canada from the type of buildings on which they see that proud name written.

I should also like to mention the buildings which are nearing completion in St. John's. The customs building and the post office building are both nearing completion. My understanding is that the previous administration had a program of building to follow the completion of these structures so that employment would be maintained at a reasonable level. There were to be fisheries, transport and unemployment insurance buildings. As we near completion of the buildings now under construction I trust that the department has in mind plans for future building.

It is a matter of personal pride for me to know that harbour developments are getting well along at St. John's. I supported that development last year and perhaps I may be pardoned for saying that this was planned under the previous administration.

I wish to repeat that a large miscellaneous vote is important. Small wharves, breakwaters, slipways and winches are all vitally important to the development of our fisheries and to the provision of a constant source of employment to those who are engaged in the fishing industry.

I should like to conclude by offering my sincere congratulations to the minister on his new appointment. My pleasure is somewhat tinged with regret because he is leaving the Department of Public Works. I am sure he will bring to his new duties the same spirit of fairness and dedication he has displayed in his present position. I wish also to pay tribute to the officials of his department who year after year work constantly and steadily in the interests of Canada.

Mr. Regnier: Mr. Chairman, it is a privilege for me to have the opportunity of paying a tribute to the new Secretary of State for External Affairs on behalf of the people of St. Boniface. Yesterday the hon. member for York-Scarborough paid tribute to the minister on behalf of the people in his corner and at this time I should like to pay the same tribute on behalf of those in this corner. This may not be the most privileged part of the house but we in this part of the chamber feel that the minister has been more or less a father to us all.

Sometimes we feel jealous of the opposition parties who are given greater privileges than are we who are members of the Conservative party and who sit in this remote corner of the house but we know this is done because the minister is a great lover of the freedom of parliament and he is really letting hon. members of the opposition parties have as much rope as possible. However, knowing what use they have made of the rope, we also feel the minister has a great love for us in this corner.

I should also like to thank the minister who is also deputy premier and leader of the house for the great benefits that the people of St. Boniface have received since this party came to office. St. Boniface, which is the most important French-speaking city west of the Ottawa river, has been given a satellite television station. It has been given also a channel of equal importance to that given to the English-speaking Canadians. On behalf of the 68,000 French-speaking people of Manitoba, and I might say also on behalf of the four million French-speaking people of Canada, I thank the minister and the present government.

The present minister has the reputation of a man of integrity and of action. One of the great things he has done has been in connection with national housing. Many of those houses have been constructed in Manitoba, but I deplore the fact that none of the minimum cost houses has yet been constructed there. It is not the minister's fault. I believe this plan should be advertised more and I am sure that if minimum cost houses are being provided for the people of Canada it is because the minister feels for the people of less wealth. I believe it is a great thing for them.

I am sorry to see the minister go, but I should like to leave some observations with him regarding national housing. This week I received a plan design having to do with Canada's first family H-bomb shelter in connection with civil defence. It is called "The Telegram Family H-Bomb Shelter" for individual dwellings designed in collaboration with civil defence headquarters. I would greatly appreciate it if under national housing a few of the houses were constructed with a shelter and advertised to see what kind of demand there would be for houses with a shelter constructed in the plan. I know there is a great difference of opinion among people generally regarding civil defence. I believe that some leadership should be given by the government. Since the government is interested in the construction of houses for people, they should set the example by constructing a few houses at the start with a shelter. We know that in Sweden no one can construct a dwelling unless he first obtains a permit. He has to agree to spend at least 2 per cent of the value of the dwelling upon a shelter. If this is feasible, knowing the present minister is a man of action, I know that before he leaves his department he will do something in this connection. Thank you.

Mr. Robichaud: I want to join with other hon. members who have spoken so far in this debate to congratulate the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the high assignment which has been imposed upon him by the Prime Minister. I wish him well in his new portfolio.

[Mr. Regnier.]

My first remarks, Mr. Chairman, on the first item of the public works estimates will be very short. I have two or three questions which I wish to ask the minister, and I am seeking information. First, I should like to know from the minister what decision has been taken with regard to my repeated requests and demands for improvement to the present wharf at Maisonnette? Maisonnette is one of the many fishing communities in my constituency. It is a small bay, a shelter, where we have over 40 fishing boats. Those fishermen are in urgent need of more improvements. Their landings last year amounted to over 1½ million pounds of fish. Their present facilities are definitely inadequate. I hope that the request and the demands from the Maisonnette fishermen, which I have placed before the department on many occasions, will be looked at favourably.

Another project which is urgently needed in my constituency is an improvement to the Tracadie gully. The entrance to that gully is practically blocked off by an old, partially demolished breakwater which is a menace to navigation and to the safety of the fishermen. Last year I was notified by the Department of Public Works that the national research council was to undertake a study to determine what could be done to improve the entrance to the Tracadie gully. I would like to know the results of this study? I was also notified by the department that a hydrographic survey was to be undertaken during the present summer, the 1959 season. I should also like to know from the minister what has been done so far to carry out this survey. I know the fishermen of the area are asking that a small causeway be built between Ferguson gully and Tracadie gully. I am inclined to agree with the fishermen that it would improve the entrance to both gullys, which I understand have been a problem to the engineers of the department.

The last question which I would like to ask the minister is what is the situation with regard to the request which has been received for a public building in the town of Shippegan? The present facilities, providing space for the post office and for the three or four offices of the Department of Fisheries, are definitely inadequate. Representations have been made by the town council of Shippegan and by the local chamber of commerce. I should like to know what progress has been made or whether a decision has been reached by the department to provide the town of Shippegan with an adequate public building?

I wish to close my short remarks. I may have one or two small questions to ask on the different items later on. I should like the minister to give us information on the three points I have mentioned.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I wish to congratulate the minister on his appointment as Secretary of State for External Affairs.

(Translation):

It is an honour that redounds to his family, his constituency and the whole of Canada. I am convinced that he will be a credit to his country and will be one of the most prominent men of our international life.

Mr. Chairman, at one time the federal government would build retaining walls along river banks. That practice was discontinued a few years ago.

I have here numerous requests made by the city of Joliette and neighbouring communities, as well as from the city of L'Assomption and from the municipalities of L'Epiphanie and Charlemagne, asking for the construction of retaining walls in order to protect public buildings such as colleges, convents or properties with river frontage.

I should be very glad, if at all possible, to know the exact reason why the government decided in the past to discontinue such a policy.

(Text):

Mr. Batten: I do not intend to long delay the estimates of the minister, but I should like to discuss two or three particular topics at this time. In the northern part of Newfoundland, north of Flower's Cove, in the straits of Belle Isle, there is a large concentration of population in seven or eight settlements. In only one of these settlements so far have we been able to provide any marine construction. Those people who live on this section of the Newfoundland coast are the people who are engaged in the cod fishery and because of the prevailing weather and the distances from the fishing grounds, they must use fairly large and fairly heavy boats. These people who live in these settlements have no protection for these boats. When storms are coming they must of necessity have these boats hauled up and the next morning they have to launch them again. Obviously, a great deal of time is lost in doing this. One can understand, too, that at times these men lose a great deal of their equipment. I have corresponded with the minister about a number of these places and I should like to urge now on behalf of these people that consideration be given to their needs.

Coming farther south along the west coast of Newfoundland, there is an island known as St. John island. This island, for a number of years, has been the site of a large lobster pool. The fishermen in St. John bay have now decided that they want to build a fishing establishment on this island, because part of the island has a fairly good harbour protected from the spring ice floes and from the prevailing storms. They, of their own accord and at their own expense, have provided the timber. They have had it cut and landed on site to provide the inshore establishment that will be required. They have been able to provide everything for themselves except a wharf. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that industry of this type on the part of people who want to help themselves should be rewarded. I believe, too, that they should not only be rewarded for their own work but also for the fact that industry in this particular section in which they are engaged will, I believe, turn out to be economically sound. I would hope the minister would give consideration to building a St. John island wharf that would be suitable for the use of the fishermen who will be using this island during the fishing season.

May I make a reference at this time to another fishing settlement on the west coast of Newfoundland known as Parson's Pond. Parson's Pond is a fairly large settlement as fishing villages on the west coast go, and it is composed of a fairly large number of very industrious men. The problem that exists there is, in all probability, not a very simple one. Some dredging is needed and there is cribwork needed around the small harbour itself, as well as a fishermen's wharf.

Two or three years ago the provincial government built a road down through this section which goes across Parson's Pond and it was necessary to build a temporary bridge at that time. I made inquiries of the minister and he replied that further consideration would be given to construction work at Parson's Pond when he could determine what effect this bridge would have on the flow of water from Parson's Pond out to the sea. During the coming season a permanent bridge will be built and I would think there would be sufficient information now to enable a determination to be made of the effect this bridge would have. I would recommend that the minister give very careful consideration to the possibility of marine construction at Parson's Pond.

Farther south along the west coast of Newfoundland we come to the very historic harbour of St. George's. This harbour is formed by a sandy bank which goes out from the mainland and forms a settlement known as Sandy Point. In the last four or five years storms have broken through Sandy Point and as a result what formerly formed the harbour of St. George's is now being gradually washed away. I fear that if this is allowed to continue, in time not only will the harbour of St. George's be destroyed but there will also be a tremendous effect on the fisheries that are carried on in that particular area. I believe that the job of preventing any further erosion now would not be very expensive, but as time goes on and the gap at Sandy Point gets bigger and bigger, Sandy Point will become nothing but an island. In the long run this will be detrimental to the people of St. George's, and the harbour which has been a shelter for ships for so many years.

Last year the minister was able to initiate construction work at Codroy. I visited the settlement in the fall and I saw the work going on there. A good job was being done. I am sorry it was not possible for the company that was given this contract to resume work at an earlier period this year. During the past few months we have had particularly good weather in that section, and I believe a good deal of work could have been provided for the people if the company had decided to go ahead with the construction earlier in the year. I know there are some particular difficulties in the way here, but I would hope construction of these harbour facilities at Codroy would be resumed at the earliest possible date.

I have said before, Mr. Chairman, and I repeat that public works are particularly important in Newfoundland. I think that one thing that is of real importance is that these public works be started as early as possible in the year. The people who live in the Codroy area now are people who over the last five or six months have had no opportunity to earn any money. The result is that those who were dependent on the construction of Codroy harbour and those who were hoping to use this harbour for fishing are finding that the going is a little difficult. If this construction had been started earlier in the year it would have been possible for some men to get employment and possibly also for the fishermen to use what would be there. I would hope that this construction would be started as early as possible because it affects, not only the people in my riding but also a large number of people who live in the constituency of the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo. As in many places in Newfoundland, harbour construction very seldom concerns the one place where construction is to be completed; it also concerns many small places in a certain area. Codroy is a very good example of that.

I have had some correspondence with the minister concerning a peninsula on the west coast of Newfoundland known as Port au Port peninsula. The people who live there are essentially fishermen. Years ago they were engaged almost 100 per cent in the fishery, but with the coming of the United States air force at Stephenville a number of these men sought work in the construction of this base. Many of them have remained there. While a great many men are able to find jobs at the United States air force base at Stephenville, there are still many more who have to find employment in some other way. Those who live on the Port au Port peninsula must, of necessity, find employment in the fishing industry. I have forwarded to the minister a list of settlements on the Port au Port peninsula which are in urgent need of some marine construction. In fact, I think in one of my letters to the minister I recommended that a survey be made of the whole peninsula to determine what could be done to encourage the fishermen in the trade which they have followed for so long. I hope that the minister will be able to give consideration to these particular places. The time may come—and I know we all hope so—when maybe the world will be in such a position that we shall no longer need these air force bases. When that time comes the great centre of employment for people in this area will have been taken away, and these people will be obliged to go back to fishing.

I would suggest to the minister that careful consideration be given to this matter when construction in the various settlements in the Port au Port peninsula are being considered. A community stage program is one which I think has a great deal of merit. I know that at the moment it is only in the experimental stage. However, from what has been done so far and from the information which the minister has been able to gather, I believe that he or his successor will be able to carry on this program. Port au Port would be one place in Newfoundland—there are others, of course—where this program could well be applied.

Finally, I should like to extend to the minister my personal congratulations on his being appointed Secretary of State for External Affairs and also to extend to him my personal good wishes. I know that not only will he represent Canada with dignity and diligence but also that in the councils of the world he will earn for himself that personal respect which his own country has accorded to him.

Mr. Keays: Mr. Chairman, may I also extend my congratulations to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am sure that he will bring to his new post the same dignity and savoir faire which he has brought to the portfolio of public works.

On several occasions I have made requests to the Department of Public Works, drawing to their attention the state of affairs that exists in the Magdalen islands with regard to the need for harbours and port facilities. For many years politicians have promised the construction of harbours or wharves here and there. Being one who never makes a promise except that of representing the people to the best of my ability, I do not believe that I have failed in bringing this matter to the attention of the Department of Public Works. Unfortunately, until this year few of the projects had been realized. We are grateful to the Department of Public Works for sending to the islands in October last a team of experts from the Department of Public Works as well as the Department of Transport who have, I believe, prepared a report which is quite favourable to the request of the people of my riding.

As you know, Mr. Chairman, the lot of the fisherman is a hard one. He is subject to the whims and fancies of nature over which he has no control. However, we must bear in mind the fact that he can control the port facilities so that he may be able to approach the shores or leave the shores. Can you imagine that in this age a fisherman who has no land whatever is obliged to buy a 1,600 pound horse, that he is obliged to feed it and acquire the necessary gear to attach to his boat in order to haul his boat off the sands into four feet of water. If the least adverse condition makes it impossible, then the fisherman must spend his day on the sand watching others get their day's catch. This necessarily creates much wear and tear on the boat and the cost of maintenance is exorbitant.

We know that this is 1959. We cannot conceive of a situation where methods of one hundred years ago are still in use. No one can believe that a fisherman should subject himself to such slavery. Personally, I believe it is incomprehensible. To raise their boats on the slips or to have their boats thrown on the shore are not conditions consonant with the expectations of this era. I could name places like Etang des Caps, Millerand basin and Oyster basin which are places that have been studied by the officials of the Department of Public Works. These places definitely need quick consideration and development. There is a loss in production which runs into thousands of dollars. There is the physical slavery of those who must pursue that trade.

I know it is the desire of all Canadians to alleviate the sufferings of those who are less fortunate than themselves. I am sure that the expenditure of the money that would be required could be easily justified. Economically speaking that may not be so. However, these are circumstances in which I do not believe we should consider only the economic advantage but rather the survival of twelve thousand people who wish to pursue their trade as it is the only one they know.

In the report that has been made by the department I understand that some of the projects are subject to study by the national research council. For this fact we are grateful to the government. We know that in the future no money will be spent haphazardly but that after consideration of the locality and construction a project will be built which will give long service to the people using it. I trust that the minister will take into consideration the fact that, although many requests are being made throughout the country for the study of projects by the national research council, these people who are fishermen—and fishing is their only means of livelihood—will get, not a preference above all other projects but a fair chance of having some of these projects studied.

In conclusion may I suggest this to the Minister of Public Works before he takes off on his world tours or to meet other people. I invite him down to the Magdalen islands on the week end to see some of these spots. I am sure that the scene which would meet his eyes there would touch a soft spot in his heart and result in bringing to these people the needed facilities.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the minister does not want to deprive me of an opportunity of making a few observations on the first item on his estimates. Perhaps if some of the other hon. gentlemen would like to make their speeches first I could sit down and allow them to do so. The minister will recall that a year ago I took him on a tour around my constituency and that tour was to a very limited degree fruitful. I think perhaps he has lost his chance to visit Newfoundland now he has moved into higher spheres. Incidentally I do not intend to join others in their obituaries of the minister. I will wait until the flowers really are needed. In the interval I suspect the minister will go on being a politician and I want to keep my hands clean so I can attack him whenever I wish; but that is irrelevant, sir.

I feel that the minister ought to take another tour around the coast of Newfoundland, especially around those beautiful coasts north of Bonavista which was first discovered by Cabot in 1497. That, I might remind the minister, was the beginning of the British empire to which he has always been so much attached. We could end up in Twillingate and have the best lobsters in the world if he could come right away quickly while still Minister of Public Works and on the way he could authorize a lot of wharves, breakwaters and post offices. But I will make a deal with the minister. This is one of the deals one makes which are open and aboveboard. It is open to diplomacy, openly arrived at—I hope. I make the offer to the minister that if he will undertake to draw my speech of last year to the attention of his successor—who I dare say will be the hon. member for Montreal St. James, who is so well qualified for that post—and will get his secretary first to scratch out the few places where something has been done, then I will not make the speech again today. I wonder if the minister would like to reply to that? Of course, I have not finished.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, being still a politician, as the hon. member says, I have to be a little careful about these promises. However, I will be very glad to draw that to the attention of the new minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I have a few things to add this year. There is one thing I would like the minister to tell me when he replies, and that is whether the department has in fact any plans for developing a slipway at Bonavista about which there had been a good deal of talk at one time or another in the press. I would also like to add my support to the appeal made by the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador for an increase in the vote for small works. These works are very, very valuable, out of all proportion to their cost. I would like to ask the minister, who is now going to become a real elder statesman and perhaps will be able to look at these problems as a whole and transcend that endless quarrel between the Minister of Public Works and the Postmaster General about who is responsible for the little post offices, to direct his statesmanlike mind to this question in the future and see if something could not be done for the small places where there are no premises to rent and where the kind of post offices which exist at present are really no credit to Canada at all, and see if, even though the revenues may not be very great, something can be done about them.

I would just remind the minister that the nature of the problem is this, that where the old Newfoundland government had a post office the department will replace it always without question. But where a place has grown large since that time, although the revenues in that place may come to be higher than the revenues of many of the places which were large at an earlier stage, the department has always applied the mainland rule and said that nothing would be done. This is impossible to explain to any Newfoundlander and I think it is an antiquated rule that, after ten years, ought to be abolished. I am not mentioning any of the places where I would like to see these buildings constructed because the minister has them in his files. There is only one single work I do especially want to ask the minister to commend to his successor, and that is the extension to the wharf at Newman's Cove. This has been on my conscience because it was in the program while we were still in office and it did not get done in 1957, and for one reason or another it has not been completed since. This is a very important fishing settlement where the fishery is growing and it really does need special attention. Beyond that, as I say, having lost my schooner on the very night I made that voyage around the coast last year, I hesitated to make the voyage this year and I thank the minister for what he said to save the voyage.

There is just one other thing I cannot refrain from putting on the record. Not long ago I had a letter from the chairman of a public meeting of the citizens of Deadman's Bay, and there is just one paragraph I would like the minister to commend to his successor. I will not read any of the critical parts of this letter, but I think this part ought to be on the record as a guide for the future. This is a description of what happened when we were in office. This gentleman says:

> When the Liberals had to share it—

That is to say, the labour of public works—

> —every man had his part. It was all shared alike both work and sticks.

I hope that will be done too by the minister's successor.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, no matter who the minister may be, and I mean including myself, this discussion has been very helpful to the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Chevrier: Cannot you give us some idea?

Mr. Green: Considering the estimates is a very useful way of finding out what improvements can be made in the work of the department. My experience with the Department of Public Works has convinced me that it is an extremely efficient department, trying to do a job for the Canadian people. While in opposition I had the responsibility of criticizing the department from time to time, and in that way gained quite a good idea of how it functioned. I would like to repeat again today my great admiration for the work done by my predecessor, the Hon. Robert Winters, and the deputy he took with him from his former department, Major General Hugh Young, who is still the deputy of the department. They with other officials have built up an excellent team with an excellent team spirit, and it has been one of the most pleasant jobs I have ever undertaken in my life to work with them in this department. I am sure that hon. members will find that the same attitude and the same efficiency will be shown by the department in the years which lie ahead.

After all, it is the great building department of the government services and as one hon. member said last night there will be a steadily increasing amount of work to be done. I believe that future construction by the federal government will be in excellent hands as long as the department is managed as it has been by the present officials.

I do not intend to thank hon. members again for their words of encouragement to myself. I did that yesterday. But I should like to say that I have never felt so humble as I do now having listened to all those words of praise. Last evening I got a message from my colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration pointing out she could not recognize who he was they were speaking about. I must admit I felt very much the same way.

I cannot deal with all the points which have been raised by hon. members, but I should like to deal with some of them briefly beginning with the remarks made by my old friend, the hon. member for Levis. I may tell him that in the department he is considered as a fine member with whom to work and as a great friend. I would have expected that from my association with him down through the years and that is his reputation in the Department of Public Works today, after the splendid work he did as parliamentary assistant.

The hon. member commented on the fact that the estimates of the department this year are lower than they were last year. That, of course, is true, but when one takes into account the increase in the construction work being done by this department for other departments the actual money which will be spent will be almost as much as in the last fiscal year. The hon. member knows that it is not always easy to get over the hurdles placed by the treasury board. I am learning to have considerable respect for that august body. They really did very well for the department this year in view of the fact that taxes were being raised and there were many other problems to be faced.

Then the hon. member referred to the fact that we had not spent as large a percentage of the vote during the last fiscal year as had been spent in the year 1957-58. One very good reason for this was the severe weather during this last winter. That has handicapped the department in a good many of its projects. Then the hon. member asked about a possible conference with the provinces to discuss a new highway program upon the expiry of the present agreement. That agreement continues until the end of 1960, and there is no intention of calling such a conference during the present calendar year. I have had useful discussions with some of the provincial ministers. Last week I met with the minister of highways for Saskatchewan and the minister of public works for Manitoba. All the provincial governments are very much interested in what the policy of the federal government is to be, and I am hoping that next year it will be possible to clarify the situation. It is a little difficult, as I do not see how there can be such a clear-cut policy as the trans-Canada highway policy—the situation is so different in the different provinces. Possibly some policy may have to be adopted which will allow one type of aid in one province and another type of aid in another province in order to serve the national interest. We are, however, very much aware of a need for a decision on this question.

Then the hon. member for Kootenay West had several very useful suggestions to make. He emphasized the need for planning ahead and, of course, that is essential, particularly in a building department of the type of the Department of Public Works. There is a very good economics branch in the department and very useful work is being done in planning projects. Of course, efficiency can always be increased, but I think the department is doing very good work in this regard.

The hon. member also suggested that officials of the department should go around and speak at different centres across the country. That idea has considerable merit, although, like politicians, officials of the department could get into trouble by saying the right thing at the wrong time or vice versa. I do not know just how far a policy of that kind could be followed, but I do agree that good public relations are essential, and I think that is what the hon. member had in mind. He suggested, for example, that the local papers should be informed of plans involving their communities. This would be very helpful and we shall see what we can do along these lines.

Mr. Herridge: What I particularly had in mind with respect to senior officials was something strictly non-contentious, a subject for example, such as "your federal department of public works and its organization". I was thinking that when it was convenient, and when the officials were in these areas, they might address rotary clubs or chambers of commerce or organizations of that kind.

Mr. Green: Well, those suggestions will be given mature consideration.

I do not intend to deal with the questions which have been raised on housing. They can be covered when we come to the items submitted on behalf of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. But I do appreciate the comments which have been made by various hon. members.

The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo had some interesting suggestions to make. He wondered why we let out the hauling of rocks by contract rather than engage people to do it. I am not sure whether I shall be able to follow out the suggestion he made, but we will consider it. He commented on the reduction in expenditure on buildings in Newfoundland. This is because the two large buildings in St. John's are practically complete. These big buildings are the ones that cost the large sums of money. The cost of 15 or 20 small buildings would be equal to the cost of one large one.

The hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador said he thought there had been a plan for a succession of government buildings in St. John's once the two now under construction are completed. We are endeavouring to make the necessary arrangements for a building for the unemployment insurance commission but sufficient progress has not yet been made to go ahead with that building. The officials are not aware of a plan for a succession of buildings in that city.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about the fisheries building? That certainly was under discussion when we were in office.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, that building is to be paid for by the Department of Fisheries and we are to build it. It should have been included in my remarks as a building to be constructed shortly.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam advocated the establishment of a Fraser river authority to supervise the development of that great river. An attempt is being made to further the co-operation of the different bodies involved with the river but at the moment there is no plan for an overriding authority. That may come eventually but there would be many difficulties to be ironed out before a movement of that kind could be made.

The hon. member for Lincoln suggested that there should be a new war museum. I heartily agreed with that comment but unfortunately that comes under the Department of National Defence so we cannot do very much about it. He also referred to the temporary buildings in the capital city. That again is a difficult problem. The policy for some years has been to build permanent buildings just as quickly as possible but the government can go only as far as the funds permit and I believe we have to have a sense of proportion and distribute the money that is available, to the extent that can be done, fairly across the country. It is very tempting to build these wonderful new buildings in Ottawa right away or just as fast as possible but experience dictates that one has to go a step at a time. Eventually all the temporary buildings will be replaced.

The hon. member for Hull mentioned the need for another bridge across the river. I agree with him that this need exists. There have been difficulties in reaching agreement as to the financing for such a bridge. It would be interprovincial and I think everyone would agree that the three governmental bodies should join in the erection of such a bridge. At the moment I cannot give the hon. member any idea as to when this objective may be attained but I shall see to it that my successor is made aware of the need for such a structure.

The hon. member for Gaspe spoke of the needs of his constituency. He happens to have one of those ridings which has a very long coastline like the ridings in Newfoundland and along the west coast. We are trying to provide harbour improvements there as quickly as possible and considerable progress has been made. I must say he is a very persistent advocate of work in that riding. In fact, I find that most hon. members are becoming steadily better at the business of urging that things be done in their constituencies.

Mr. Bourget: So was the previous hon. member for Gaspe.

Mr. Green: Of course, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is a past master in this particular type of undertaking. I was somewhat afraid that he was going to take me on another tour of his riding. Perhaps that is the reason I met his request so quickly.

The hon. member for Halifax pointed out the need for consideration being given to paraplegics when constructing public buildings. I agree with his suggestion. We have just recently changed the entrance to the new public building being erected in Souris, Prince Edward Island. The officials assure me they will do the best they can to see that these Canadians are not handicapped because of the type of entrances placed on public buildings.

The hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi felt there had not been sufficient money spent in his constituency but I would remind him that we have just finished a public building in Newcastle which cost nearly $350,000.

Mr. McWilliam: Built by the former government, I might add.

Mr. Green: No, we put up practically all the money.

Mr. McWilliam: The contract was awarded before the election.

Mr. Green: I think we have done fairly well in this respect.

Mr. Pickersgill: Have you named it?

Mr. Green: The hon. member also referred to the bridge over the Miramichi at Chatham and wanted to know what the policy of the government is with regard to that bridge. He quoted from what I believe is his family's newspaper. In any event it is a good newspaper and the paper quoted my remarks at some length for which I am grateful. The situation there is that this bridge is not on the trans-Canada highway and there is no basis at the present time on which the federal government could share in the costs. However, under a highway policy to follow the completion of the trans-Canada highway policy this bridge would be covered if the particular highway were made part of the system which was to receive assistance from the federal government.

This is what I pointed out to the committee which met me while I was campaigning without much success in this riding a little over a year ago. I have not had a delegation from the riding visit me here. I took it from the hon. gentleman's remarks that he was under the impression that such a delegation had been here but I think that was wrong.

Mr. McWilliam: If I may interrupt with the minister's permission I would like to say that I quoted from the Chatham newspaper, the Gazette. I have no connection whatever with the paper, not that I would be averse to having the minister quoted at length in any paper with which I were connected.

I tried to point out to the minister at that time that I felt—and I think he will find it in Hansard—the reporter who covered the meeting was a little over-optimistic in what the minister said. I share the minister's view that the provincial government is responsible for the bridge until such time as a road is built which becomes a section of the trans-Canada highway.

Mr. Green: The hon. member referred to a proposed road running from Quebec through Maine into New Brunswick. The officials of the department have no knowledge of any such projected road. He also mentioned Shediac.

Mr. McWilliam: A tourist wharf. Perhaps I can tell the minister that it was a meeting of the town council and the provincial secretary-treasurer of the province of New Brunswick said that in regard to the proposal the federal government would share up to the amount of $130,000 in the construction of a tourist wharf.

Mr. Green: With respect to the proposed tourist wharf at Shediac, the town authorities and the provincial government have presented a proposal to the department whereby the construction of a wharf to improve facilities for the tourist industry might be undertaken on a shared cost basis. Our officials have carried out an investigation and the estimated cost of a suitable structure would be in the neighbourhood of $160,000 to $175,000. There is no doubt that Shediac is a very popular resort area, and tourism plays a big part in the economic life of this community. There is a small element of fishery involved as well. However, to date the department has not completed its examination of this proposal, so that no decision has been reached.

The hon. member also referred to some employees on a government dredge whom he said had been dismissed. There were no employees dismissed. There were no employees whose terms of employment were terminated. I must make it perfectly clear that employees on the dredges are hired for the summer. When they finish the work they have not any right to consider that they are entitled to come back again the next spring. In many cases they have been rehired, but there is absolutely no right to this. I really think that the members of the opposition have not very much complaint against me for the way in which I treated employees who were in the employ of the department before we took office. There might be more cause for complaint from this side of the house on that score.

I was interested in the statement made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate when he read from a letter. I have been saving a letter of reference for nearly a year. This is from Wreck Cove, Nova Scotia dated December 27, 1958.

Mr. Pickersgill: How do you spell the name?

Mr. Green: It is Wreck Cove, Nova Scotia. I do not know whether this is a name for the hon. member or not. The letter is addressed to:

Mr. Robert Muir, M.P.,
Sydney Mines,
Nova Scotia.

Dear Sir:

The work at the shore at Wreck Cove which has been under way since November 10, is just about completed.

If there had been any discrimination in connection with the employing of men on this project, you would have been advised of same before now. So, since there was none, I think it only fair to advise you accordingly.

This work, under the foremanship of Alex Smith, has been carried on in a very fair manner. All the available men in a given area were employed on this project without any consideration as to political affiliations.

We want you to know, as well as Mr. Smith, that we deeply appreciate the fairness shown in employing men at Wreck Cove.

Wishing you the compliments of the season, I am

Yours truly,
Norman J. MacAskill
President, Victoria County Liberal Association.

It is really dangerous to read that letter in the committee but I did so simply to prove that while we may not have been perfect, we have done pretty well.

The hon. member for Trinity-Conception said he wished me to smell the flowers while I was still able to do so. I greatly appreciate that remark. He also dealt with the trans-Canada highway in Newfoundland. I agree that there is a special problem in that province in connection with this highway, a problem which will have to be dealt with as a separate one.

The hon. member for Charlotte spoke of the Campobello-Lubec bridge. As he pointed out, the governor of Maine has now signed a bill authorizing that state to participate; therefore, we shall be getting ahead with the construction in the very near future. The real credit for this bridge goes not to the Minister of Public Works, but to the hon. member himself who has been most helpful and, of course, most persistent in getting action on this bridge.

The hon. member for Laurier raised a very important problem in connection with the opening of the seaway and the development of the lower St. Lawrence river. We all realized that the seaway would bring tremendous changes to this part of Canada; in fact, to a very large part of Canada, but I do not think any of us realized just how extensive those changes would be. The department has done a great deal in the way of making plans for new harbours, various other projects and in the lower St. Lawrence, but I have reached the conclusion that a great deal more will have to be done. This seaway development is going to be of even greater importance than most of us expected.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to advise the minister that his time has expired, but I assume the committee will give him unanimous consent to continue.

Mr. Pickersgill: For the last time.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, I am very grateful to hon. members for giving me extra time. We have an excellent team in the government service which was set up, incidentally, by my predecessor, a team consisting of officials from the Department of Transport and the Department of Public Works, and on occasion representatives of other departments are called in as well. In my time in the department this team has done excellent work, visited many centres in Canada and along the seaway. They have investigated conditions at Kingston, Brockville, Morrisburg, Prescott, Cornwall, Dorion, which is in Quebec, Collingwood, Ontario, the lakehead harbours, Midland, Oshawa, Port Colborne, Sarnia, Sault Ste. Marie, Whitby.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And Windsor?

Mr. Green: Oh, we have a very detailed investigation for Windsor. Then, there is Riviere du Loup, Pointe au Pere, Pointe au Pic, Rimouski, Matane, Chandler and Gaspe. And further investigations will be made. There is a great deal of money to be spent on these developments.

The hon. member for Laurier referred to the lakehead. We are just getting the contracts let there, the first contracts, and there is to be about $7.5 million spent.

Mr. Chevrier: There was great dissatisfaction there about two weeks ago when I was up.

Mr. Green: I really do not understand why there should be dissatisfaction because we are moving right ahead with this program, and it is going to be very expensive. I believe it will meet the needs of the lakehead cities.

He asked also about the work being done in the lower St. Lawrence, and I have here the figures for that. There has been about $5 million spent there in the last four years on the different developments, such as Baie Comeau, Pointe au Pere and so on. There will have to be more money spent there, and we shall try to keep abreast of the business developments.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre referred largely to housing matters and I shall answer his questions later in the afternoon.

The hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador advocated small works in small places. I agree with him that there is more satisfaction to everybody in works of this kind than in the big projects because they mean so much to the people who live in the small communities. The department has tried to keep this thought always in mind, and we will have a look at the proposal that there should be more winches and small landing wharves. Several of the Newfoundland members dealt with the policy of constructing community stages which is shared by the Department of Fisheries and the Department of Public Works. I am very glad that this policy has proven to be successful. We have our work cut out for the current year, but we shall certainly have a look at the possibility of extending that plan.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the minister would permit me to ask one question at this time? Does the minister think it would be possible to line up these projects early enough to permit the timber to be cut in the fall and construction started early in the spring? This would make a great deal of difference to the whole economy of Newfoundland.

Mr. Green: It is the intention to do that from now on. We ran into difficulty last winter when it was not possible to do the work because of the winter weather.

Then the hon. member also mentioned trouble between the Canadian National Railways and the Department of Public Works in connection with harbour improvements at Woodstock, Newfoundland. Our version of this trouble is that the Canadian National deserves all the blame.

Mr. Chevrier: Where is the Minister of Transport?

Mr. Green: The Minister of Transport just left the house. Perhaps the hon. member could ask him about that particular project.

The hon. member for St. Boniface dealt with the need for building houses with bomb shelters. This is a new idea which we could have Central Mortgage and Housing investigate. One never knows what will have to be done in these days, and it may be that some policy along this line will have to be adopted.

The hon. member for Gloucester asked about three different projects, and I have reports here on all of them. In so far as the wharf at Maisonnette is concerned, the department has been considering various methods of improving harbour facilities for the fishermen at Maisonnette for some time now. However, its location has made our problem quite difficult in that the obvious manner of improving conditions would include dredging where the bottom is composed of rock. If we could only find a harbour bottom composed of mud, it would be much simpler to get this work done.

Maisonnette is situated on the south shore of bay Chaleur between the two harbours of Blue Cove and Caraquet where good facilities are presently maintained. The department carried out improvements at Blue Cove last year and received tenders on June 3 for a large reconstruction project at Caraquet.

The existing facilities at Maisonnette constitute a high water landing only. Even a 200-foot extension to the outer end of the existing wharf would only provide 2½ feet of water and this would be of little value. Any dredging along such an extension would be costly and involve considerable rock blasting, possibly endangering the structure. The minimum work which could be considered of real benefit would include dredging a 50-foot wide channel and a basin adjacent to the wharf. The estimated cost of this would be about $160,000 and in rough weather it would not afford very good protection for boats. The capital outlay required to provide improvements appears large when compared to the benefits to be derived. Nevertheless, I understand there has been a growth in the fishery in this area and the department is continuing its investigations as to the best method of improving the facilities. The federal Department of Fisheries is going to undertake a review of the economic conditions and future prospects. When the results of their study are known, we will be in a better position to assess the merit of the proposal for improved facilities at Maisonnette.

The problem at Maisonnette is not simple and does involve large capital outlays. I might refer to recent attempts by local fishermen to improve their lot. These fishermen got together and hired a bulldozer in order to cut a channel through the sandbar located close to the existing wharf so they could have more protection for their boats. However, I understand the sand movement caused the cut to fill in as quickly as it was bulldozed. These fishermen are to be highly commended for their initiative and efforts in this regard, and it is regrettable that these efforts were not more successful.

In so far as Tracadie is concerned, I may say a preliminary study of this project has been made. The results indicate that a much more comprehensive investigation will be required before the department will have sufficient information on which to base a decision. The assistance of the national research council has been sought and they have visited the location to determine what additional data is necessary for their work.

Either a mathematical analysis of conditions at the entrance to this harbour or a model study will be required. It may be necessary to request the Canadian hydrographic services people to carry out a complete sounding survey of the area.

The department maintains a wharf at Tracadie village, and I believe the fish landings at this structure have been maintained at a good level over recent years. Our problem at Tracadie concerns the entrance to this harbour, which is actually known as Tracadie gully and is only a channel running through two sand beaches. Years ago a considerable expenditure was made to protect this channel but, of late, indications are that nature is having its own way and the channel is being maintained without our help.

We are examining the need for: (a) removing the north breakwater; (b) constructing a causeway between the beach and Pointe Bouleau; and (c) the need for developing a deep draft harbour. The investigation to date indicates the cost of removing the ruins would not be commensurate with the benefits to be derived, and until the results of all studies are available no decision can be made on the other portions of the proposed work.

Then, the hon. member mentioned the building at Shippegan, New Brunswick. The department is considering a building for 1960-61. This would house the post office, fisheries and the unemployment commission and would require about 2,000 square feet of usable space. The item has not been placed as yet before our accommodation committee in the department nor is it in the planning vote. No site has been obtained. He also referred to the causeway to Prince Edward Island and asked about the report.

Mr. Robichaud: I think it was the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi.

Mr. Green: I gave a report when I opened the estimates on May 21. I was somewhat startled to see this big heading in the Guardian of Charlottetown of May 26: "Green Causeway Report Big Bluff" says premier. I think the premier of that province has been a little bit rough with us in connection with this proposal. Quite large sums of money have been expended on getting a report from consultants. As I pointed out two weeks ago, the report has been in the hands of our departmental officials for a matter of only two or three weeks.

The consolidation of the consultants' report, along with the reports on costs of remedial works, land damage and detailed report on the geographical survey, shore line, ice conditions and detailed tidal survey with prediction of the changes in tidal conditions resulting from construction of a causeway is now virtually complete within this department. These reports will be forwarded to the other government departments concerned for their review within the next week. It will take a little while to have the reports studied by the various departments but there is actually no delay in connection with this project and there is no intention of having any delay.

The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm I think urged a change in policy with regard to protection walls. The department builds these walls where the erosion is caused by navigation or where walls have been built previously by the federal government. We have done our best to do this work on a fair basis. Hon. members will know better than I can tell whether or not we have been successful in that effort.

The hon. member for Humber-St. George's in his very thoughtful remarks stressed early construction, as did the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. He also dealt with the possibility of United States air bases being closed, with the result that the fishermen would go back to their former occupation and would require these facilities. We are sympathetic to the needs of the fishermen in Newfoundland. It has an extremely long shoreline with a scattered population, with people living in very small centres. Every effort will be made to meet their requirements. I was glad to hear the kind words that have been expressed about the officials of the department in Newfoundland.

Mr. Pickersgill: There are not quite enough of them.

Mr. Green: The hon. member for Ile-de-la-Madeleine gave us an interesting picture of the situation in that part of Canada which is cut off from the mainland and from what I understood has a very sturdy type of citizen. We had a survey made there by our interdepartmental team. The report they brought back was not only a good one but it was good reading. It was extremely interesting, particularly to one coming from the west coast where the conditions are completely different.

There are certain works on the Magdalen islands which are to be studied in conjunction with the national research council. They consist of Oyster pond, Portage du Cap and Etang des Caps.

As to Oyster pond, an amount of $500 was authorized on May 13 of this year for current survey work to be done by district officials. This is to obtain preparatory information for the further study by national research council. The problem at this place is to effect an entrance into Oyster pond. The national research council are to study the effects of the littoral drift problem in order to determine what different possible entrances may be affected. If, in the preliminary investigation, it is indicated that construction would be warranted and a model study is indicated, this will be undertaken by the national research council.

With regard to Portage du Cap and Etang des Caps, the problem here is to arrange some means of getting the fishing craft from their hauled out position on the shore into the water. Again, this is a matter of studying the littoral drift to determine if any effective means of launching and withdrawing the boats from the water can be built, other than what would be required to build a structure extending out into deep water. Such a structure would be very long and would be of excessive cost. It is in an effort to build something within practical economic limits that the assistance of the national research council has been requested.

In addition to the above works, studies have been undertaken by district officials at Havre Aubert for the development of a protected harbour. An amount of $2,000 was authorized on May 4 of this year for this study which includes soundings and borings.

Finally, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was very kind this afternoon. He did not go into details of any extent. He asked for a shipway at Bonavista.

Mr. Pickersgill: A slipway.

Mr. Green: A shipway.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the minister would like to build a shipway that would be all right.

Mr. Green: A slipway. Under miscellaneous works there is an item for this year of $14,950.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is good.

Mr. Green: As to Newman's Cove, an item for wharf extension was considered for the 1959-60 estimates but was not approved. It is still in our planning program for 1960-61. No building is being considered or requested there apparently.

Mr. Pickersgill: No building is what?

Mr. Green: No building is being considered or requested at that particular community.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not suggest there was. It was an extension to the wharf there in which I was interested. I hope that any difficulties there have been may be overcome in the case of that particular wharf and that the minister will give a big recommendation to his successor.

Mr. Green: One of the hon. members referred to Glenwood. There a small 600-foot building would hold both the post office and the Canadian National Telegraphs.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could I ask the minister if that is Britannia or Glenwood?

Mr. Green: Glenwood.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then that is the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador.

Mr. Green: This is under consideration for winter works but I cannot give any definite assurance as yet. Mr. Chairman, I think that covers most of the questions raised by the hon. members, and I would be glad to deal with any other items when we are considering them.

Mr. Chevrier: I wonder if the minister and the house would allow me one word before this item passes, because I am sure the house has given careful consideration to the administrative item concerning the minister's department. What prompts me to rise again are two matters. First, I think it was very fitting of the minister a moment ago to pay tribute to his officers upon his departure from his department. I think it is a nice gesture on the part of the minister who is about to sever connections with his department to refer to the close association which he has had with trusted officers in the department. I would like to add, if I may, a word to what the minister has said and to recall to the house the names of three of the officers who have been closely associated and connected with his department.

When I came to Ottawa, I am almost sorry to say 25 years ago—sorry because of the length of time—the then deputy minister of the Department of Public Works was James Hunter. He was, as the minister may recall, a very efficient and competent deputy minister. He held that office for many years. He was exceedingly sympathetic to representations made by members of parliament from all sides. He knew his department thoroughly. He took decisions with dispatch, and he was, I believe, all in all a very satisfactory and highly regarded public servant in the department. So much so was that the case that I believe that was one of the reasons why the building which now houses the Department of Public Works bears the name of the late James Hunter. I think I would have been remiss had I not risen to pay this tribute to him, not only because of my personal association with him over many, many years, but also because of the excellent reputation which is still associated with his name in the department.

After he left he was succeeded, I believe, by Mr. Emmett Murphy. As the house knows,

Mr. Emmett Murphy is now quite ill in a hospital in Ottawa. He is a graduate of Queen's University, an engineer of talent who had been associated with the work of the construction of the Welland canal and who, particularly during the war years, did a commendable job in the department of munitions and supply and I believe afterwards in the department of reconstruction. In his later years he became deputy minister of public works, and he did during the time that he was in office a very commendable job. The minister has referred to his own deputy minister, and I will not add to what he has already said.

The minister was also kind enough to pay a special tribute to his predecessor, the Hon. Mr. Winters, whose name has been mentioned on two or three occasions as being a minister of very high calibre, and we on this side of the house thank the minister for the reference which he made to the efficiency of his predecessor, indeed a minister of great talent.

I would also like to refer to another minister with whom I sat in the house for many years and who, like the Minister of Public Works now, held the position of house leader for a long time. That was the Hon. Alphonse Fournier, the former member for Hull, who is now a member of the Exchequer Court of Canada. While I was not in the ministry when he was sworn in—I came in later—I know of the tremendous amount of work and painstaking care which he gave to the duties that were entrusted to him, and I felt that on this occasion the minister would not mind if at this stage I said a word about his devotion to duty.

Now may I just take another few minutes and I will resume my seat. I would like to tell the minister that I think on the whole he is adopting the right attitude in so far as port development and port facilities are concerned. But what I have great fear of is this. I do not think there is the over-all planning that there should be. It seems to me that when the planning is entrusted to two and three departments there is bound to be some confusion. In the first place, I think there should be—I do not want to repeat what I said earlier—an economic survey of the whole area from the lower St. Lawrence right up to the head of the lakes. I also think that the minister or his successor should entrust the house with the plans that the department has for the development of these ports. It is a nice thing to be able to say that $5 million is spent here, $8 million spent here, and $10 million spent there. That looks good, but having regard to the movement of the traffic, I do not think anybody quite knows just how the traffic is going to move. I realize it is not an easy job and that is why it seems to me that there must be a planning of works in these ports in conjunction with an economic survey. Where is the traffic going to move? What kind of traffic will it be? The plan that the minister has should jibe with that which the Minister of Transport has or the national harbours board; otherwise there is bound to be confusion.

Let me remind the minister of what he used to tell me when I took up my estimates in the Department of Transport concerning the national harbours board and the port of Vancouver. I remember I used to come down with the estimates concerning Vancouver and cite large amounts. The minister was grateful for the amounts which went for port development and port facilities in the city of Vancouver, but repeatedly he would come back and say, "I want to know what the plans are for the future in the city of Vancouver", and he had every right to demand them. We on this side of the house will not insist unduly about that, but I wonder whether the minister would be good enough to bring this to the attention of the gentleman who will succeed him, because this is a matter which cannot be done over a period of months. It is a matter which must take time. All of us are interested in this problem, and I am sure no one is interested more than he and his officers. Everyone must realize that there has to be an over-all plan and that that plan must fit in with those of the various departments. I just give that in conclusion as another thought which I trust the minister will give attention to.

Mr. Green: I would like to join in the tribute that the hon. member has paid to the other Canadians who have taken such a great part in the work of the department. His proposal for a larger, broader kind of plan with regard to the whole seaway area will certainly be given consideration, and I will take care to draw it to the new minister's attention.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, there is one matter I would like to bring to the attention of the minister in his capacity as Minister of Public Works. However, before doing that, this is the first opportunity I have had from my seat in this house to say to the hon. gentleman that I would like to offer him my very sincere congratulations upon his having been selected by the Prime Minister to succeed the late Dr. Sidney Smith as Secretary of State for External Affairs. The hon. gentleman, the hon. member for Royal, the hon. member for Laurier, and I are the only members of the class which came here in 1935. Excuse me, I have omitted a future postmaster general the hon. member for St. Denis. We five are the only ones of that class now in the house. On this account each of us feels he has a special relationship with the Minister of Public Works. I wish to tell him, sincerely, that I hope he will be happy in his new assignment. I know he will bring to it qualities of integrity and honourable approach. I sincerely trust he will be able to make a contribution to good relations between Canada and other countries in these difficult days.

I hope that as Minister of Public Works he will give me ready co-operation in a matter about which I now intend to say a few words. The minister spoke earlier in the day about the satisfaction he derived from smaller works in smaller places. It is about one of those works that I wish to say something. I have here a long petition which comes from a group of my constituents who live in the township of Rochester near the village of St. Joachim, Ontario, in the riding which I have the honour to represent in this house. The petition has to do with the river Ruscomb and its outlet at lake St. Clair. This is a matter which was looked into in the middle of February by the department at my request. The department caused a survey to be made, and the district engineer made a report on that occasion which I think on the whole gave strong support to the request made by my constituents.

The petition has to do with properties which are located on the Ruscomb river approaching the mouth of lake St. Clair, including Rochester beach, what is known as the Renaud subdivision, the Tellier subdivision and certain other areas along both sides of the river Ruscomb.

There has to be some deepening of this river and some work at the mouth touching lake St. Clair. This is not a matter which will involve much expenditure, but as an indication of the constructive way in which my constituents have approached this matter, may I say that they have put forward the idea that this might be a joint operation in which the province of Ontario could participate. They hope that the river Ruscomb outlet may be cleaned and deepened, thereby saving the banks and generally providing a satisfactory approach to historic lake St. Clair.

I would be very grateful if the minister could give this matter his consideration, and I hope this will be one of the hon. gentleman's final acts as Minister of Public Works. Other hon. members have suggested that he should recommend strongly to his successor that this or that action be taken. I would ask him, on the merits of this particular case, to make a favourable decision himself and give my constituents the opportunity of remembering that as a result of the intervention of their member they received from the man who was minister of public works, now Canada's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, the rectification of this situation in a way which I believe the situation warrants.

Mr. Pickersgill: And it is an international water.

Mr. Green: I will certainly undertake to look into it.

Mr. Caron: A while ago the minister said that the bridge is a project to be undertaken by the three governments. But one question which I put to him was not answered. From 1955 to 1957 the minister of public works of that day took the initiative in order to try to bring all the governments together with regard to this matter. Would the minister not do the same and take the initiative in an effort to reconcile the views of the governments concerned? I do not know whether he would succeed. I know that the premier of Quebec might be just as difficult for our future Minister for External Affairs to deal with as Mr. Gromyko or Mr. Khrushchev. Now that he is in diplomacy, the hon. gentleman may succeed.

Mr. Green: I would point out that the efforts of my predecessor were completely unsuccessful, so perhaps a different kind of approach is necessary. I would not like to have the impression go out that the premier of Quebec is as difficult to deal with as the two others to whom the hon. member has just referred.

Mr. Bourget: Could the minister tell us what has been the increase in the number of employees in the department since July, 1957?

Mr. Green: In the fiscal year provision is being made for an increase of 67 in the number of employees in the department.

Item agreed to.

322. New Brunswick, $490,000.

Mr. McWilliam: Does this vote include the crash program for all public buildings or does that come under another vote?

Mr. Green: No, that work is done under miscellaneous works.

Item agreed to.

323. Quebec, $5,931,000.

Mr. Bourget: Has any progress been made regarding the post office in Quebec city.

Mr. Green: Architects are at present working on the plans and we hope to call for tenders in the month of November or thereabouts. There are still some difficulties to be ironed out between the city and the C.N.R. with regard to the site. As the hon. member knows there has been a great deal of trouble about getting a site.

Mr. Bourget: When I was in Quebec last week I saw the old station still standing on the site proposed for this new post office. I wonder if borings have yet been taken.

Mr. Green: Borings have not yet been completed. They are being done by the department.

Mr. Dumas: Under this heading I wonder if the minister could give me some information. At page 425 I see there is an amount of $200,000 voted for improved accommodation for government services in Rouyn.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, the plans are about 80 per cent completed. We hope to call for tenders in about two months.

Mr Dumas: This is in addition to the post office building, I suppose?

Mr. Green: Yes.

Mr. Dumas: Has the government purchased the land for this building?

Mr. Green: The site has been selected and surveyed and at the present time appraisals are being taken to determine the value.

Mr Dumas: So the land has not been acquired yet?

Mr. Green: No.

Mr. Denis: I am not jealous about the other provinces but I see that most of the provinces have a slight decrease under this item whereas the province of Quebec receives $6 million less than last year. I wonder if the minister could explain why this decrease is so large compared with that for Ontario? Ontario receives almost the same amount as last year. Is it because we do not need any more public buildings in the province of Quebec? There must be a reason that does not appear in the estimates.

Mr. Green: The reason is because of the completion of some very large buildings in the hon member's own city. If he will turn to the harbours and rivers vote he will find that the vote for Ontario is being decreased by nearly $6 million.

324. Ottawa, $16,505,000.

Mr. Bourget: I wonder if the minister could say something about the repairs made to the Jackson building? This may come under another item but I wonder if we could discuss it now.

Mr. Green: On Saturday, October 25, 1958, at about 8.20 a.m., an explosion occurred in premises located at 246-48 Slater Street. It is alleged to have resulted from the ignition of natural gas which had escaped into that building. The crown-owned Jackson building, situated directly across the street from the explosion, suffered great damage. The structural frame was unharmed but practically all windows and doors, practically all interior partitions and the majority of the lighting fixtures and building fittings received maximum damage. The contents were also severely blown about. Fortunately, there was no loss of life or severe injury in the building. If the blast had not occurred on a Saturday morning there might have been hundreds of people killed or seriously injured.

The damage was such that the building was uninhabitable. The three departments who occupied the building were housed elsewhere; the income tax branch in the trade and commerce building, the headquarters of the Department of National Health and Welfare in the Copeland building and the civil service commission in No. 1 temporary building. To bring the building back into use as quickly as possible, the remedial work was divided into four phases to allow planning for the occupants to go forward while repairs to the fabric to the building were being effected.

Phases 1 and 2 have been completed. In these contracts the exterior and interior fabric of the building was renewed and space on the lower three floors was prepared for the income tax branch. They occupied the building during the last week of March.

Phases 3 and 4 will complete the renovation of the building and the building services, and the preparation of the upper floors for the use of the civil service commission and the Department of National Health and Welfare. These latter two departments are scheduled to reoccupy the building in October.

An information has been filed in the Exchequer Court of Canada, naming as defendants the Consumers' Gas Company, who distribute natural gas in Ottawa; Addressograph-Multigraph of Canada, Limited, who were tenants in the building where the explosion occurred; and the Lumor Interests Limited, who were owners of the same building. We are claiming from them damages in the amount of $1,220,820, as well as the costs of the action and such further and other relief as the court may deem meet.

I might say that the property and building management branch of the department did a wonderful job at the time of the accident. They did a splendid job in quickly housing these different governmental branches. The explosion occurred on Saturday and provision for temporary accommodation was made for Monday morning. It was an outstanding piece of work.

Mr. Bourget: What is the total cost of the repairs?

Mr. Green: It is estimated that the cost of the repairs will be about $860,000 to which must be added the cost of damage to furniture and equipment.

Mr. Bourget: Were the contracts awarded after negotiations with two or three contractors or were tenders called for the work at each phase?

Mr. Green: Quotations were obtained from five firms for the emergency repair work which had to be done at once. The other and far more expensive part of the reconstruction has been done following tendering.

Mr. Bourget: May we have the names of the five firms with which negotiations were made?

Mr. Green: I will have to send for that information.

Item agreed to.

329. British Columbia, $1,950,000.

Mr. Herridge: I want to bring to the minister's attention something brought to my attention last summer. I made a point of visiting both buildings. I refer to the unsatisfactory state of ventilation in the Trail and Nelson new public buildings which are both very excellent. I understand this is about the only deficiency concerning which complaints have been received. The postal officials in the Nelson building took me down to where they sort the mail and for two hours I watched them sort it. I was amazed at the amount of lint that comes from the bags, gets into the air and is not carried away. I thought it was a most unsatisfactory state of affairs and a poor environment for postal employees to work in. I would ask the minister to have that situation investigated. I think they have a just complaint about those lint particles floating in the air. They complain of coughing, throat troubles and things of that sort.

In addition, I should like to ask the minister whether consideration has been given to installing air conditioning in those buildings? There have been particularly strong demands from persons who have to occupy the building at Trail. As the minister knows, this is a particularly hot place in the summer because of the lack of surrounding tree cover, and so on. In this respect it differs from other parts of the district.

I have one other question. I know that the estimate does not come within the minister's jurisdiction but his department undertakes the construction of headquarters for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police when it is required to do so. I notice that with respect to the Crescent Valley headquarters no expenditure of money was made in 1958-59 but there is an estimated expenditure of $35,000 for 1959-60. Can the minister explain to the committee just how that program is being undertaken?

Mr. Green: The difficulty in the post offices at Nelson and Trail may be caused by faulty ventilation, or it may be a question of the post office equipment. Apparently the Post Office Department is responsible for normal cleaning equipment. However, the officials will look into the situation in both these buildings. Was the hon. member for Kootenay West referring to Pleasant valley?

Mr. Herridge: Crescent valley. The public address system is most unsatisfactory. The Hansard reporters cannot hear us at times. I was referring to Crescent valley, just below the main headquarters of the Sons of Freedom.

Mr. Green: This particular headquarters is included in the R.C.M.P. buildings for this year, but apparently no work has been started on it as yet.

Item agreed to.

331. Improvements generally—

Not more than $25,000 to be expended on any one project without the approval of treasury board, $700,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to say that I think the minister did not entirely understand my reference to small buildings for post offices. I said I was not going to mention any names because they were in the minister's files. He suggested he did not have any names. If he has any doubt about whether he has them in his files I would be glad to repeat the information, although I will not take the time of the committee to do it here. There are several places.

Mr. Green: They must be in the files. I did not understand the hon. member's question.

I have further information with regard to the R.C.M.P. headquarters at Crescent Valley. Tenders will be called within the next two weeks for that building.

Mr. Herridge: Thank you very much.

Mr. Bourget: Will the minister give us a breakdown for Ottawa of what has been spent out of that $400,000 and a breakdown by provinces? I do not want it for everything, just a breakdown by provinces.

Mr. Green: The expenditures under this vote last year are as follows: Halifax, $9,-833.95; Prince Edward Island, $900; Saint John—this will be for the province of New Brunswick; Halifax will be for Nova Scotia—$25,040.10; Quebec, $3,504.30; Montreal, $10,-009; Ottawa, $136,783.30; Ontario, $10,953; Winnipeg, $19,706.43; Saskatchewan, $14,-621.98; Alberta, $28,597.79; Vancouver, $35,-675.10; total, $295,634.95.

Item agreed to.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, just before you leave your seat, I think there was a general understanding that the committee would be prepared to resume, but I presume you have to leave the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: It being five o'clock, it is my duty, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, to report certain resolutions and request leave to sit later this day or at the next sitting of the house, as the case may be.

Progress reported.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether you might ask the house for unanimous consent to go right back into committee in order to save as much time as possible to help the minister get through his estimates.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): It is my understanding that there is unanimous consent to suspend the hour for private and public bills.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rea in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

Harbours and rivers—

Engineering services—

Acquisition, construction and improvements of harbour and river works—

Construction, acquisition, major repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for, harbour and river works listed in the details of the estimates, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended on individual listed projects—

335. Newfoundland, $4,128,200.

Mr. Pickersgill: Vote 335, of course, as the minister realizes is the most important vote in the whole of the estimates for his department. I am not going to make belatedly the speech I might have made earlier, but I do want to ask the minister two questions because I am sure there is a great deal of interest in these two subjects. The first is, is the minister now fully satisfied that the harbour at Port aux Basques is entirely satisfactory? The second question is, can the minister tell us, very briefly, what progress is being made in harbour development at St. John's?

Mr. McGrath: I omitted to mention on the general item, Mr. Chairman, the fact that it has been decided to locate community stages in the easterly part of St. John's harbour known as the battery. This decision was reached because of the importance of this area as a fishing centre. It is not generally realized that there are over 200 fishermen actively engaged in fishing out of St. John's, and who contribute a great deal to the economy of the city of St. John's. The majority of these fishermen are located in that part of the harbour known as the battery.

My point is that they have no facilities there, and there have not been any facilities for fishermen at that location down through the years. In view of this fact the Department of Fisheries, and the Department of Public Works, in their wisdom, decided to locate community stages there. This part of St. John's harbour is not part of the city of St. John's and is not serviced by the municipality. I wonder, therefore, if the minister and his officials would give consideration to conducting a survey to ascertain what facilities might be provided in addition to the community stages to facilitate the fishery in this important part of St. John's. I am thinking of such facilities as a fisherman's wharf, some sort of breakwater to protect the boats and the gear of the fishermen.

The other point I should like to make now, Mr. Chairman, is that in view of the work that is currently being undertaken at Bell island with respect to the extension of the wharf and the erection and construction of a new warehouse, and bearing in mind the fact that a new ferryboat is now under construction to service Bell island, would the minister and his officials take into consideration for next year's estimates the provision of a breakwater at Bell island which would provide a basin for shipping and provide artificial harbour facilities? It would provide also a very much needed breakwater to project the ferry landings at Bell island.

Mr. Green: With regard to the harbour at Port aux Basques, it would be a very bold or foolish minister of public works who would say that everything is as it should be in that harbour. The dredging is not yet quite completed, and it will require a year or two in order to be sure that the harbour is now in good shape.

Mr. Pickersgill: Are the breakwaters finished?

Mr. Green: Yes, the breakwaters are finished. In so far as harbour development at St. John's is concerned, I gave quite a full statement on that on May 21 and it can be found at page 3914 of Hansard. There is nothing to be added.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was out of the house at the time, and I apologize to the minister.

Mr. Green: There is nothing I can add to the statement, except to say that the three contracts have been awarded and the work is actually in progress on two of them. The third tender has only been awarded within the last few days and it will be about a month before the work actually commences.

My officials tell me that the department will be able to make those surveys which the hon. member for St. John's East has requested, and we will look into his suggestions.

Item agreed to.

336. Nova Scotia, $5,150,500.

Mr. MacEwan: I have just a few remarks to make on this item. The matter which I have to discuss is one which is already within the notice of the minister, but I thought at this time there might be a few facts which I should place before him.

The county of Pictou, the riding which I represent, has been very well treated by the minister since I have been a member. This year we have various types of projects going ahead in areas like Cape John, Pictou, Skinner's Cove, Caribou and Bailey's Brook. The matter I should like to bring to the attention of the minister is one that was mentioned some time ago, that is the matter of a breakwater at Little Harbour. There are many little harbours throughout Nova Scotia, but there is one in which I am particularly interested. I have been informed by the minister's department that borings will be taken later this summer in the area to ascertain the type of situation there in order to make a fair estimate of what a breakwater would cost.

My personal knowledge of this area indicates that this is the only place along the Northumberland strait which is not provided with the necessary facilities for fishing. I visited there in May of 1958 and at that time added to my personal knowledge of the area. What is particularly important is that the fishermen use the only harbour, known as Black point, and in order to enter the harbour they have to pass over a shallow stretch of water. Perhaps like the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate I could make an agreement with the minister that if a breakwater is not possible in this area, probably dredging would be the alternative. This is something which will have to be carried out in a few years. A breakwater might be the most reasonable in this location.

The area which has been suggested by the fishermen for this construction, and in which the department is carrying out test borings, is known as Roaring Bull point. I would bring that to the attention of the hon. member for St. John's East to indicate that there are picturesque names throughout the east other than in Newfoundland. From my personal knowledge, as I have said, I would say it is necessary to construct a breakwater in this area in order to give the fishermen a place to keep their traps and help out generally with the fishing in that area.

The fishermen there are of the best type. If the Minister of Public Works will take cognizance of the statistics recorded by the Department of Fisheries he will find there are approximately 12 boats in that area. The lobster catch especially is as high as in many areas in which there are larger numbers of boats and in which a great deal of money has been spent on the construction of breakwaters and other things.

In addition, I have made representations about Pictou Landing where repairs are necessary to the wharf. The P.E.I. Produce Company, which is a pulp company, has been taking ships in there for a few years. It is expected that they will have a good year this year, and I am told repairs are necessary for that. This company is also looking into the matter of building a fair sized sawmill in the area for their overseas trade. This makes the repairs to the wharf even more necessary.

I do not expect the minister will reply about the Little Harbour area. We will wait and get the results of the borings, then we will have the technical information necessary. I just put that forward as being the only area in which I have requested anything new in this constituency. I hope consideration will be given to it.

Item agreed to.

338. New Brunswick, $4,388,000.

Mr. McWilliam: Under this item under harbours and rivers and engineering services, the total amount for the province is $4,388,000. When I spoke on the general item in this regard the minister referred me to the large amount of money that was spent at Newcastle for a federal public building. I wish to point out to him that while we appreciate that, nevertheless it is of no benefit to the fishing industry. In the details at page 442 we find three items in this group. One is Escuminac, breakwater repairs, $59,000; another is Lower Newcastle, wharf repairs, $26,500; and the third is Newcastle, wharf repairs, $70,000. Of these three items, there is only one, namely Escuminac breakwater, which will be of any benefit to the fishermen on the Miramichi.

I just urge the minister again to take another look at the matter and to recommend to the minister who will take over his portfolio and to urge upon him that he make a survey of the fishing facilities required on the Miramichi in order really to improve the Miramichi fishing industry. I would suggest that he act in co-operation with the Minister of Fisheries. There is a need, I would say, in many cases not for large works but for small landings or small dredging operations which would assist the industry and also assist the fishermen.

Item agreed to.

339. Quebec, $5,757,900.

Mr. Leduc: For many years the Maniwaki council and board of trade have asked for a wharf to be erected or built on Riviere Desert, Maniwaki, Quebec. Lately the chairman of the board of trade of Maniwaki announced at a meeting that the public works department would this year build this wharf. Can I get from the minister whether this is really the truth?

Mr. Green: The officials are not aware of any vote for that project. Would there be any other name under which it would come?

Mr. Leduc: No; Riviere Desert.

Mr. Green: At Maniwaki?

Mr. Leduc: Yes.

Mr. Green: An amount of $5,000 is provided in the miscellaneous works vote for a wharf at Maniwaki.

Mr. Bourget: There is an item here for $135,000 for wharf improvements at Riviere du Loup. Can the minister tell us what will be the total cost of wharf improvements at Riviere du Loup and what kind of design will be used to improve the wharf? May I ask the minister whether sheet piling has been used there—that is what I wanted to know—or whether some other design has been used.

Mr. Green: No, sheet piling is not being used on that wharf. The total expenditure is to be $285,000 for the whole project. Some of that amount was spent in the last fiscal year.

Mr. Bourget: I will probably be asking the chief engineer next week what kind of design will be used.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Chairman, for the last two hours I have not heard anyone congratulating the Minister of Public Works on his appointment to the external affairs portfolio. Therefore I hope no one will mind if I take just a few seconds in which to extend my congratulations to the minister. After throwing bouquets at the minister, I may have a few criticisms to bring before the committee in relation to some matters which may be of no importance to many constituencies but which are of great importance to my constituency of Chambly-Rouville.

First I want to thank the minister for the attention with which he has favoured my constituency. I thank him for the large amount provided for the constituency of Chambly-Rouville on the Richelieu river for retaining walls. The minister did not have the reputation of handing out too much money on this item but, whether I am lucky or not, I think Chambly-Rouville will get its fair share this year.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, I want to emphasize the case of the city of Beloeil, one of the finest municipalities in the province of Quebec, where retaining walls had already been erected in various places in front of this or that owner's lot or in front of another property located a little further. They used to build retaining walls to please certain people who reciprocated the same favour to the member around election time.

Since the Conservative government was elected, this policy was somewhat abandoned. The intention was to be fair towards everybody, although in other ridings they are in the same situation. This government is being charged with favouring supporters of the Liberal party while failing to do the same thing for supporters of the Conservative party.

I should like to put this on the record of the house so that it be known that we favour that policy because it is fair to everyone. The completion of the retaining walls, partially built by the Liberals, is an illustration of what the Conservative party is now doing to repair the mistakes made by the previous government and to fulfil the promises made by the members, particularly those who represented the constituency of Chambly-Rouville.

A moment ago, I heard an hon. member attempting to claim for himself the credit which is due to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) for carrying out a program in his constituency. He said that the work had been carried out at the time of the Liberal party. Perhaps the program had been started by the Liberal party, but it was carried to completion under the Conservative regime. I am surprised to hear people say we are piling deficits upon deficits, but if we are doing so, it is to finish the work begun by the Liberals.

Mr. Chairman, let us now say a word about the retaining wall in Beloeil; it was an old dream of the former secretary of state, Mr. Roch Pinard. I imagine that the former Liberal member of the legislative assembly, the present mayor of Beloeil, will soon write a letter to the minister somewhat similar to the one which the minister read into the record earlier this afternoon.

The Conservative party, once again, will fulfil a promise of the Liberal party. I understand the wish of some officials that certain promises be fulfilled; well, I would ask their co-operation to fulfil another promise of the Liberal party.

In Chambly, at the mouth of Chambly canal, there is some erosion caused by navigation.

I am not the only one to believe that, on the basis of reports from the department or from certain officials of the department, stating that very little erosion was being caused by navigation, the department refuses to build a retaining wall. I do not agree with them and I ask the minister to give instructions to his department to make a further study of the matter. It might be convenient to make it a practice of consulting the member who, when something is not done right, receives the representations and the criticisms of all the voters, but seldom receives congratulations from his opponents. When there is something wrong, the practice should be to consult the people's representative and to ask his opinion, particularly about retaining walls and especially when it is a matter of building such walls.

I do not know who has been consulted about that retaining wall, but I do know that the matter should be studied. I know that a letter will be sent to the minister by the city council of Chambly, since the erosion is due in part, at least, to navigation, a situation which seems inevitable at the mouth of the Chambly canal. I wonder if it is recognized in the department that erosion is partly due to navigation. I wonder if it would not be necessary to build there, either this year or next, the retaining wall already begun in 1932 by the Conservative party, over a length of about 1,000 feet, continued by the Liberal party over a length of about 100 feet, and which should be continued by this government over the rest of the required length.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that the previous speaker should have felt called upon to play politics with the matter of retaining walls.

The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) has no doubt noticed that, since we took up his departmental estimates, certain of the items carried quite rapidly, out of our feelings of friendly co-operation. I also think that, in view of the appreciation we have expressed to the minister, the hon. member might have refrained from indulging in petty politics, considering that he sits on the government side. Of course, I realize why he does so. He was brought up in that kind of atmosphere, and I deeply regret the fact that he made his remarks at a time when we were bidding farewell to the minister as the minister responsible for public works.

I will say this to the hon. member. If there were promises made in the past—and I have some knowledge of the matter, having served as parliamentary assistant to the former minister of public works under the former Liberal administration—it was because the appropriations voted for the current year had been exhausted, and that in such circumstances, as is probably still being done by the present minister, the members were told: Well, next year, some job will probably be undertaken in your constituency. There has been absolutely no change from the previous situation. The policy followed by the present Minister of Public Works is the same as the policy followed by the former administration.

I can see no excuse for the hon. member raising this point of petty politics on this item. I shall refrain from any further comment, because I promised the minister that we might perhaps complete our study of his estimates today. I do hope, however, that other members will not rise to discuss politics when we are talking business.

341. Manitoba and Saskatchewan, $272,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, on item 341 I wonder if the minister could tell me what the wharf at Steep Rock, Manitoba, is used for? I have not been there since 1914 and I am rather curious.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, Steep Rock is a community of about 300 people located on the east shore of lake Manitoba, 140 miles by road and rail from Winnipeg. The village is the site of a lime rock quarry operated by the Canada Cement Company. One million tons of lime rock are crushed and shipped to the Canada Cement Company at Fort Whyte, outside Winnipeg, each year. Cattle, local farm produce and in the wintertime fish, are also shipped from Steep Rock.

The existing wharf is a rockfilled, timber crib work structure 85 feet by 14 feet, with a rock and gravel approach 30 feet long. The seaward side of the wharf is protected by rock riprap. The wharf originally 63 feet by 14 feet was constructed in 1927-28 for the sum of $2,605, and extended to its present length in 1939-40 at a cost of $1,437.51.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was wondering what the wharf was used for. I know these things are produced there but they are all shipped by rail.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words with regard to this item which relates to harbour improvements at The Pas, Manitoba. Before asking the minister a question I would like to say to him that the people of that area were very appreciative of the speed with which the officials of his department acted last summer when this work was intended to be done. At that time it was felt by the people of that area that a more desirable site could be found in the near vicinity to where these harbour improvements were going to take place, and just previous to the work being started they requested that a new site be investigated. I understand the new site has been selected, and the question I would like to ask the minister is if it is felt by his department that this $70,000 in the estimates for this work will be sufficient to complete this development as planned last year? I understand that the plans last year called for a slightly higher amount of money, and I am wondering if this $70,000 is felt to be enough to complete the harbour improvements at The Pas?

Mr. Green: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The project was estimated at $70,000. I have now a better explanation for the wharf at Steep Rock.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure it is a very good thing. It is a wonderful place.

Mr. Green: I laid a good foundation, but here is the whole story. This amount of $16,000 is required for the construction of an extension to the wharf to provide additional berthing and landing facilities. The existing structure is not long enough to accommodate the barges and other craft using it, since only the inner side, with 85 feet of berthing space, can be used. There are no other public wharves on lake Manitoba.

The wharf is used by cattle ranchers on Peonan point, four miles west of Steep Rock, who transport cattle and supplies by barge to and from Steep Rock, the nearest road and rail link. Their only alternative is to go by road around the north end of lake Manitoba to St. Martin on the C.N.R. This is a journey of 35 to 40 miles and the road becomes impassable in wet weather. For these reasons, the route is no longer used. The ranchers on Peonan point are the only ranchers who transport their cattle by barge to a shipping point. Other ranchers on both sides of lake Manitoba are close to a highway or railway, so that there is no advantage in crossing the lake.

The wharf is also used by small private and tourist boats and a few aircraft. Fishermen ship supplies over the wharf in the late fall of the year. Total craft using the wharf are two barges, three boats—over 30 feet—with inboard engines and 50 smaller outboard powered boats. The value of produce, supplies and equipment shipped over the wharf each year is estimated as follows: cattle, $80,000; fuel and gas, $4,000; machinery, $20,000; food, etc. $4,000; fishing equipment, $12,000. The two cattle barges are 54 feet and 60 feet long, respectively. An average of two trips per week are made by the barges between June and freeze-up. Approximately 1,800 head of cattle are at present on Peonan point and this number is expected to increase.

Does that satisfy the hon. member's curiosity?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, except that the minister's officials have made one mistake. There are two other public wharves on lake Manitoba, built by the department in co-operation with the government of Manitoba at the narrows for the purpose of the ferry there. I should like to have this on Hansard, because I expect to be asking the minister's successor in a year or two to build a couple of wharves to provide a ferry to Twillingate island and I do not want to be told that there are no precedents.

Mr. Hanbidge: I note that this item deals with Manitoba and Saskatchewan. I should like to ask the minister how much money has been allotted in respect of harbours and wharves in Tramping lake and Muddy lake in the Kindersley riding.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the minister should ask for notice.

Mr. Hanbidge: Maybe it would be easier if I asked him how much was being spent in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Pickersgill: About $100 million on the Saskatchewan dam.

Mr. Green: We are putting all our money on the Saskatchewan dam.

Item agreed to.

343. British Columbia and Yukon, $4,224,000.

Mr. Herridge: I must preface my brief remarks on this item by drawing to the minister's attention the expanding economy of the Kootenay district and its continuous growth and every evidence of very large expansion of the forest industry, in the future. We have at the present time the operations of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company which are also expanding, and we have a very large development of the forest industry.

During last year 300 million feet of lumber were sawn inside the Nelson forest district, a good indication of what is to come, and at the present time construction has started on the foundations of a $50 million pulp mill at Castlegar. So it is not a question of providing services or buildings in a declining economy or in a country where there will be ghost towns. The minister knows that well enough.

I want to bring to his attention the changing pattern in navigation on the lakes. As the minister knows, up to a few years ago we had sternwheel steamers on passenger service and large steam tugs working for the lumber companies, hauling railroad barges or barges carrying iron ore for mining companies. The sternwheel steamers have ceased to operate and the pattern of navigation now is a larger number of small diesel tugs—they are not required to be as large in order to be as powerful—plus a great increase in the use of the lakes by small pleasure craft. Last year about 100 small craft came up the Columbia river, some from as far as Portland at the mouth of the Columbia being portaged around the dams in the United States by low-boys. I was told by some of these visitors from the United States that the increase in this traffic this year will be quite considerable, with every expectation of a rapid increase as the years go by to tourist camp operators. To indicate what that means, there were 22 of these small craft from the United States which arrived on the Saturday preceding Labour Day at St. Leon and Hot Springs and before they left they left $1,200 in cash. That was only 22 out of 80 that came up the river from the United States on Labour Day. Some went to Revelstoke, others came down the Kootenay river and were launched at various places on the Kootenay lake. The visits of these small craft are of great importance to the district and a great help to tourist resort operators who, as the minister knows, have to skim their cream in about four months of the year. I mention this to illustrate the stability of the economy and the changing pattern of navigation which, I think, was not fully understood by some of the minister's district officials a year or so ago.

It is a strange thing, but in the Kootenays we get overlooked on so many occasions. We had few visits from cabinet ministers of the Liberal government during the years it was in office. We have had a few more since the present government came to power by the Minister of Public Works but purely on account of the fact that his home town is in my constituency, and we are most fortunate in that respect. However, I think that with the lure of larger works on the coast district engineers are inclined to fail to realize to the fullest extent the importance of the federal Department of Public Works to our district.

I must say that the people in Boswell are delighted with the launching way that has been built there, and I am informed a considerable number of United States craft have already this year been launched there. The same applies to the people of Kaslo and the people of Burton who are very pleased that reconsideration was given to the demolition of the Burton wharf and to its reconstruction and improvement as a wharf and launching way.

I suggest to the minister that very serious consideration should be given before the demolition of any wharf is undertaken. I was sorry a few years ago that the Halcyon wharf was demolished. I was inspector of that wharf when it was built. The piling was sound; only a few planks needed replacing. The hotel Halcyon had burned down, so there was apparently no use for the wharf. However, that wharf was the only wharf between Arrowhead and Nakusp at which tugs could tie up in the event of a storm. A number of skippers have told me they wish the wharf was still there to tie up to. I urge that consideration be given to the new needs for a wharf before there is any further demolition undertaken.

There is a great increase in the ownership of small water craft in the Rossland-Trail district. The residents of that district would like to see a launching way at a site below Trail the name of which I forget at this moment. It is a suitable site. If this work cannot be undertaken this year

I urge consideration of its construction next year. There will be a large use for a launching way near Trail.

The chamber of commerce of the village of New Denver is anxious to have a launching way built there at an excellent site. The minister knows all about it. I hope it will be included in plans for next year with respect to the navigation welfare of Kootenay West.

I must say how pleased the people of the district are that the department decided to build a new wharf at Galena bay. There will soon be a great deal of traffic at that point. The traffic is increasing every year. Possibly the minister does not know that it is likely that the road between Nakusp and Galena bay to the very wharf in question will be completed this year. It is partially completed now. Three or four days ago my son-in-law informed me that another construction crew is expected to start working soon on the portion between St. Leon and Galena bay. It is fortunate that the department has decided to rebuild this wharf because it will be at the apex of two routes of traffic going north, one from the Kootenay lake the other from Nakusp. We were very pleased that the department decided to make provision for the construction of that important wharf in the estimates this year.

Now I have a few suggestions to make before I sit down. I suggest that everything be done to keep the permanent staff employed rather than bringing in other persons. The dredge has a crew of experienced men. A number of these men have worked on the Arrow lakes for many years. At certain times they are laid off and the dredge employed on day work for the department. I suggest that in the type of construction that has to be undertaken with launching ways and wharves on Arrow, Kootenay, Slocan, and other lakes day labour is cheaper than contract work. That was demonstrated when the Nakusp wharf was built. I was informed by the officials that they saved several thousand dollars with day labour. An outside contractor has to make allowance for bringing in equipment and other costs. These men are experienced and know what to do. When you employ these men you are employing men who have had experience with running pile drivers, building wharves and works of that type. I suggest that every effort be made to keep the permanent crew on the dredge employed for as great a part of the year as possible in this way.

I mentioned that every consideration should be given to the maintenance of the present wharves as long as they can be repaired at any reasonable cost.

[Mr. Herridge.]

I was in Trout lake recently. There is a small wharf at the north end. It is an isolated spot with only seven permanent residents. Didn't I enjoy, what shall I say, the evidence of the democratic spirit that exists there. I was told an oil man came in and bought the hotel and spent about $40,000 on it and put in a cocktail lounge. He told the old trappers and prospectors, one of whom was in our battalion, "I do not want you old birds around here. I intend to attract high class clients." They had a vote on the question and all voted against the cocktail lounge. He lost out by failing to give consideration to the old time pioneer residents of whom I am very fond.

I suggest that wharf be kept in repair, as it is used as a launching way in the summer. It is a good sound wharf. There is a necessity for a similar small structure at the south end of Trout lake near Argenta. Tourists drive up from the south and fish in Trout lake and then pull up their boats at the north end.

The members of the Nakusp launch club of which I am a member brought to my attention the fact that they were interested to note that a breakwater had been built at Okanagan Landing last year. They wanted me to put in a plug for them. I do not suggest that this could be done overnight but if there is any more money available for this purpose I urge the minister and the deputy minister to give consideration to this. Money would be well spent on such a breakwater.

I now mention the question of dredging and pay particular tribute to a man employed by the department who knows dredging. He has had experience in the Royal Navy and as captain of a dredge. He has worked on wharves and river improvements for many years. This gentleman is in charge of floating equipment in the office in Vancouver. If the minister or the deputy minister have any questions about floating equipment in the interior of British Columbia I suggest that they take the advice of this gentleman. He is a practical person with experience.

I now bring to the minister's attention a problem arising out of the great increase in the lumber industry in the Kootenays. Millions of additional feet are being sawn every year. Millions of feet of logs are being towed from the north arm of the Arrow lake down to the mills at Nakusp. At the present time there is a narrow channel dredged toward Arrowhead for various craft to approach the wharf. It is quite wide enough for that purpose but not wide enough for tugs towing logs. It is possible for a tug to come out towing one million feet at high water but from medium water on it is very difficult. The tug cannot proceed west far enough to turn the boom into the channel without touching bottom. In extremely low water the channel is not wide enough to allow the logs to go through. One million feet of logs were tied up for several days on two occasions last year. The captain could not swing the boom in question. Sometimes if they cannot go far enough west to make the turn the wind will blow the boom to the shallows on the east side of the cut. I know there are about ten million feet of logs coming out of the north arm this year.

There is a new sawmill being build at Arrowhead and another at Nakusp. It is expected all the mills there will require fifty million feet of logs this year. I am not blaming the department for the situation because these developments are happening, as it were, overnight. I suggest that a survey be made of the situation with respect to the dredging of the mouth of the Columbia toward the present Arrowhead dock to see if the cut could not be widened to some extent, and possibly some of the easterly bar taken off so tugs towing booms would not have difficulty making the turn.

At the present time the channel is far too narrow. I have been asked by those interested in the lumber industry and particularly the men towing logs to bring this to the minister's attention. I am quite sure that if the minister's officials went into the district they could get a very good description of the difficulties that occur at the present time from the captains of the tugs and other craft.

This concludes my suggestions, Mr. Chairman. The minister knows that I never ask for anything that is not absolutely essential.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the minister replies to the hon. member, knowing his enthusiasm for the interior of British Columbia, I am hoping he is not going to start building wharves for seven people on the lakes of British Columbia when there are 700 in many places on the Atlantic coast who still need wharves.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I should like to explain that the wharf is built.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member referred to another place just like it.

Mr. Herridge: Geographically.

Mr. Pickersgill: What I rose to ask the minister—I meant to ask him on the item with regard to Newfoundland—was that is it the department's firm intention to go ahead with all the works that are specified in this year's program?

Mr. Green: We are hoping to be able to do so, but we cannot be sure.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is no present plan to cut out any of them? Can we be given that assurance?

Mr. Green: That is right.

Mr. Payne: I will take but a brief moment. Before this item passes I feel it is rather essential that a word or two be said on the matter of the British Columbia west coast which has very aggravated problems.

I must in my first remarks thank the minister for his splendid construction of a breakwater at Gibsons, British Columbia, thereby showing the good wisdom he has displayed in constructing this facility. I may say it has been open for six weeks now and it is already overcrowded with west coast fishermen. I trust that in order to overcome the overcrowded situation the plans for the Powell river-Westview breakwater will proceed without delay.

The main matter which I wish to bring up at this time is the matter of policy. I think it should be brought to the attention of the committee. I am sure the minister is fully conversant with this matter and will discuss it with his successor. It has to do with the increasing need for protective facilities for the thousands of small boat owners and operators who are plying the British Columbia coastal waters in increasing numbers as the weeks go by. In the past summer it was estimated that on weekends on the lower mainland area of the coastal waters somewhere in the neighbourhood of 14,000 to 15,000 craft were at sea. At the present time no policy exists within the structure of the federal government or the provincial government to provide shelter. This means that in the event of a sudden blow some weekend there would be no safety shelter available and without such shelter we can, I am sure, look forward in the future in our west coast waters to one of the world's great maritime tragedies. What the answer is I am sure I do not know; but I would submit that this matter is deserving of immediate and early study. Possibly it should be approached from the point of view of assessing a proper licence fee to those who are operating this type of craft in order that this shelter may be provided. I want to bring this forward as a suggestion which might be passed on to the incoming minister of public works.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before we proceed any further I would like to say on behalf of those on our side of the house that we would be prepared to sit for a while after six o'clock because we know the minister would like to devote his full attention to his new department.

Mr. Herridge: Speaking for this group, I agree with the suggestion.

Mr. Green: I am grateful; I appreciate this kindness very much.

Item agreed to.

345. Remedial works where damages are caused by, or endanger, navigation or federal government structures; and the completion of protection works already under way, $800,000.

Mr. Bourget: Just one question; I wonder whether the minister could give us a breakdown of the projects that were undertaken last year and a list of those that are going to be undertaken this year. I do not want to delay the passage of the estimates. Therefore, if the minister would be kind enough to send me a list for last year and this year I shall be content. I know the deputy minister knows the kind of list I want.

Item agreed to.

352. Towards an investigation to determine the feasibility of constructing a proposed causeway across Northumberland Strait, including the opening of a test quarry, $250,000.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I would not want to lose the popularity of hon. members by making any lengthy remarks. The congratulations and felicitations that I would have liked to offer to the new Secretary of State for External Affairs I shall withhold for the time being because I do not want to delay the minister in putting through his estimates. I should like to congratulate him on the remarks that he has made this afternoon with relation to the work he has done on the Prince Edward Island causeway. This is very encouraging. This is an old, old project in Prince Edward Island but not as old as the project mentioned by the hon. member for Kootenay West the other night. For many years the people of Prince Edward Island have hoped that the isolation and insularity that they have experienced in the winter time would be overcome. A connection between Prince Edward Island and the mainland was a big factor in bringing us into confederation when steps were promised to curtail the disadvantage that existed.

I want to tell the minister that we do not want to urge his officials to rush their report. We realize that this is one of the great engineering feats to be undertaken on the continent. We appreciate the fact that he has brought into the survey outstanding experts not only from his own department but from Europe. We are impressed with the amount of time and money that have gone into this problem. Not too long ago it seemed that this project was a little too staggering for the imagination. When the leader of the opposition in the Prince Edward Island legislature mentioned this project in 1940 a few members told him he was daft. Now considerable progress has been made and we look forward to the day when a great deal more optimism will emerge than has yet emerged.

Judging by the minister's statement, he has been given a good deal of advice. Before he says farewell to the Department of Public Works I should think he could do nothing more on a grand scale than to give the necessary push to this great project, a project that will mean not only so much to the province of Prince Edward Island but to the whole maritime region. I am happy that the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi is present. So vast is this, and so great are the prospects for the whole Atlantic region I think it may be classed as one of the great national development projects that will have a profound effect on the whole country. I do thank the minister for what he has done. I hope that those who come after him will follow his example and perhaps push the matter considerably farther so that the day may come when the present minister will be driven across that link as the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and he will recall what he did in the earlier days.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the item passes I should like to say that as a member of the government which intiated this study, I am very pleased with the hon. gentleman's remarks.

Mr. Phillips: I do not wish to delay the estimates, but I would like to concur in the remarks made by the hon. member for Queens. There has been some criticism of the fact that the report has not been made public. I am sure all thinking people will realize that the officials require a great deal of time to study the report very thoroughly.

There are one or two proposals to which I should like to draw the attention of the minister. The first is a proposal submitted for the carrying of the rock by means of water transportation. I should like to see this proposal investigated as I believe it could save a considerable sum and cut down on the length of time required to construct the causeway.

The vote also includes an amount for the opening of a test boring. I wonder if the minister could tell us at this time the results of the opening of the test boring on the New Brunswick side?

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. member's question I would say it is too early to make any comment concerning that boring.

Item agreed to.

Trans-Canada Highway—

355. Construction through national parks, $13,405,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask the minister if he can tell me how much paving will be done in Terra Nova park this year?

Mr. Green: It is not expected there will be any paving done this year.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am a little disappointed to hear that. The minister does expect the grading will be all completed this year?

Mr. Green: Yes, the grading is to be completed.

Item agreed to.

356. Contribution to the province of New Brunswick towards construction of dam on Tantramar river, New Brunswick, $84,375.

Mr. McWilliam: This appears to be a new work because I do not see that there was anything voted for it last year. Is it something to finish up a dam that was started some time ago, and not completed? If it would save time, perhaps the minister could let me know by letter tomorrow.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, the explanation is quite lengthy, but I should be glad to let the hon. member have a copy.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the committee would agree to have the explanation put on Hansard because a lot of people in New Brunswick would be interested in reading the minister's reply.

The Deputy Chairman: Will the committee give unanimous consent to allow the minister to place the answer on Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

(Editor's note: The answer above referred to is as follows:)

PUBLIC WORKS

Development Engineering Services, Highways Division, Contribution Towards Construction of Dam over Tantramar River, N.B.—$84,375 (New Item)

This amount is required to cover a contribution by the Department of Public Works to the province of New Brunswick, in respect of the construction of a dam over the Tantramar river, which will form a part of the trans-Canada highway. This work is being done by the maritime marshland rehabilitation administration under an agreement with the province of New Brunswick. This structure is to serve the dual purpose of a marshland protection work, as well as a section of the trans-Canada highway.

Order in council P.C. 1957/684 dated 9 May, 1957, authorized the construction of the Tantramar river dam under the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act, and granted to the Minister of Agriculture authority to execute with the province of New Brunswick an agreement for the construction of the dam, which was to include provision for a highway crossing. The basis of sharing in the cost was that the federal government (Department of Agriculture) would undertake 77.5% of the cost and the province of New Brunswick the remaining 22.5%. In addition, the arrangement was that half of the payments made by the province to the maritime marshland rehabilitation administration were to be paid by the federal Department of Public Works (Highways Division).

The above arrangement is altogether similar in principle to one which was made with the province of Nova Scotia in the fiscal year 1955-56, with respect to a contribution towards the construction of a dam at the Ingonish river. At that time the deputy attorney general, Department of Justice, advised that he was unable to find authority under the trans-Canada highway agreement for a contribution by Canada to the province and advised that if it was decided to proceed with the joint project that the best method would be to enter an appropriate item in the estimates. In view of the fact that the cost of the dam was increased in order to make provision for a roadway crossing for the trans-Canada highway, it was considered that the item should be included in the public works estimates.

The contract for the Tantramar dam has now been awarded to the Modern Construction Company at a cost of $528,010. In addition to this amount, it is estimated that other items will bring the total to $750,000. Under the above mentioned order in council, New Brunswick's share of this amount is 22½% or $168,750. The share of the federal Department of Public Works is, therefore $84,375. This amount would be subject to downward revision if, when all accounts are in for the project, the total expenditure is less than $750,000.

Item agreed to.

359. Miscellaneous works not otherwise provided for: a maximum of $15,000 may be expended in respect of any one work and, with the approval of treasury board, that maximum may be increased to $25,000, $2,400,000.

Mr. McWilliam: I judge that this vote for miscellaneous works includes this winter program for small federal buildings. In that regard, I should like to ask the minister concerning a building contemplated for Blackville, New Brunswick. It was on the list he put on Hansard, I think it was on May 21, when he spoke on the estimates. I should like to know if it is the intention to erect that building next winter. I understand there is a proviso in connection with some of these buildings in that the lease on the present quarters has to expire before construction will go ahead. I should like to know, with regard to the Blackville post office, if that will be erected during the coming winter?

Mr. Green: Yes, we plan to erect that building during the next winter, provided there is no difficulty such as a question of site.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before this vote carries, may I ask if this vote includes small wharves and other work in the harbours and rivers field?

Mr. Green: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I am pleased then to note the very considerable increase. I hope the minister will suggest to his successor that a lot of it be spent in Newfoundland.

Item agreed to.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the house leader would give us the best indications he could of the business for next week? Perhaps he could indicate it for the whole week.

Mr. Green: I gave the business last night, but there is one addition and that is third reading of the act to amend the federal-provincial tax-sharing agreements, which I overlooked last night. This would be called first thing on Tuesday. Otherwise, the list would be as I stated.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I should like to express deep gratitude to the hon. members for the way in which they rushed through these estimates here today. I feel rather badly because there were some questions asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam about housing, and one or two other members asked questions. I shall try to give them answers privately.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think I should like to leave the record just the way it is. I do not think we rushed the estimates through. We gave them pretty good consideration, and we tried to give the minister the kind of consideration, in view of the very heavy responsibilities he has now assumed, to which he was entitled.

Mr. Herridge: For once, I am in complete agreement with the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Pickersgill: It will not happen again.

It being ten minutes after six the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

CAMP GROUND AND PICNIC AREA DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Question No. 397—Mr. Roberge:

1. In what fiscal year was the "camp ground and picnic area development" program initiated?

2. What provinces have entered into an agreement with the federal government in each fiscal year since the inception of the program up to March 31, 1959, and what is the amount paid to each of them in each year?

3. What provinces have not entered yet into such an agreement?

Questions

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1. The first program covering the period January 2, 1958, to May 31, 1958, was initiated on January 2, 1958.

The second program covering the period November 1, 1958, to May 31, 1959, was initiated on October 30, 1958.

2 and 3. All provinces except Quebec entered into an agreement with the federal government to take part in the first program.

All provinces except Quebec and Prince Edward Island entered into an agreement with the federal government to take part in the second program. Prince Edward Island, however, is continuing this work under the trans-Canada highway camp ground and picnic area program.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

318. General administration, $9,335,045.

Public buildings construction and services—

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—

Construction, acquisition, major repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for, public buildings listed in the details of the estimates, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended on individual listed projects—

319. Newfoundland, $1,085,000.
320. Nova Scotia, $1,025,000.
321. Prince Edward Island, $90,000.
322. New Brunswick, $490,000.
323. Quebec, $5,931,000.
324. Ottawa, $16,505,000.
325. Ontario (other than Ottawa), $13,330,000.
326. Manitoba, $1,207,000.
327. Saskatchewan, $1,775,000.
328. Alberta, $2,535,000.
329. British Columbia, $1,950,000.
330. Yukon and Northwest Territories, $2,968,000.

331. Improvements generally—

Not more than $25,000 to be expended on any one project without the approval of treasury board, $700,000.

332. Maintenance and operation of public buildings and grounds, and to authorize commitments against future years in the amount of $1,300,000, $43,293,000.

333. Furniture and furnishings for government departments, $2,549,820.

334. Work in the interests of fire prevention, $174,263.

Harbours and rivers—

Engineering services—

Acquisition, construction and improvements of harbour and river works—

Construction, acquisition, major repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for, harbour and river works listed in the details of the estimates, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended on individual listed projects—

335. Newfoundland, $4,128,200.
336. Nova Scotia, $5,150,500.
337. Prince Edward Island, $1,092,000.
338. New Brunswick, $4,388,000.

Supply—Items Passed

339. Quebec, $5,757,900.
340. Ontario, $6,223,500.
341. Manitoba and Saskatchewan, $272,000.
342. Alberta and Northwest Territories, $230,000.
343. British Columbia and Yukon, $4,224,000.
344. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $275,000.

345. Remedial works where damages are caused by, or endanger, navigation or federal government structures; and the completion of protection works already under way, $800,000.

346. Repairs and upkeep, including reconstruction and replacements for the maintenance of services; wharf repairs at Ste. Angele de Laval, Quebec; and to authorize commitments against future years in the amount of $420,000, no new works to be undertaken, $2,800,000.

Dredging—

347. Maintenance and operation of plant and contract and day labour works, $3,606,075.
348. Construction or acquisition of plant and equipment, $2,632,500.
349. Maintenance and operation of graving docks, locks and dams, $882,195.

Development engineering services—

350. Canada's share of the cost of international and interprovincial bridges, as detailed in the estimates, $2,500,000.
351. Towards replacement of low level Burlington canal bridge, $2,700,000.
352. Towards an investigation to determine the feasibility of constructing a proposed causeway across Northumberland Strait, including the opening of a test quarry, $250,000.
353. Roads and bridges—maintenance and operation, $186,175.
354. Testing laboratories—operation and maintenance, $818,622.

355. Construction through national parks, $13,405,000.
356. Contribution to the province of New Brunswick towards construction of dam on Tantramar river, New Brunswick, $84,375.

General—

357. Advance planning of projects including acquisition of sites, $1,500,000.
358. Balances required to complete any projects undertaken in previous fiscal years and for which no specific provision is made in the fiscal year 1959-60, $800,000.
359. Miscellaneous works not otherwise provided for: a maximum of $15,000 may be expended in respect of any one work and, with the approval of treasury board, that maximum may be increased to $25,000, $2,400,000.
360. To supplement, on approval of treasury board except where less than $1,000 is required, any of the appropriations of the Department of Public Works, $700,000.

Central mortgage and housing corporation—

361. Expenses incurred in constructing and supervising construction of married quarters, rental housing, schools and related services on behalf of the Department of National Defence, $900,000.

480. Advances to central mortgage and housing corporation for the purposes of subsection (1) of section 37 of the National Housing Act, 1954, in respect of housing projects for veterans and for housing projects at Gander, Newfoundland, for sale or rental, $60,000.

564. General administration — further amount required, $197,000.

Public buildings—

Construction and services—

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—

Construction, acquisition, major repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for, public buildings listed in the details of the estimates, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended on individual listed projects—further amounts required—

565. Ottawa, $696,000.
566. Ontario (other than Ottawa), $600,000.
567. British Columbia, $35,000.
568. Work in the interest of fire prevention—to extend the purposes of vote 334 of the main estimates for 1959-60 to include the making of a grant of $5,000 to the Canadian joint fire prevention publicity committee, $1.

Harbours and rivers engineering services—

Acquisition, construction and improvements of harbour and river works—

Construction, acquisition, major repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for, harbour and river works listed in the details of the estimates, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended on individual listed projects—further amounts required—

569. Newfoundland, $109,000.
570. Nova Scotia, $265,000.
571. New Brunswick, $700,000.
572. Quebec, $101,000.
573. Ontario, $973,000.
574. British Columbia and Yukon, $50,000.

Development engineering services—

Trans-Canada highway—

575. Construction through national parks—further amount required, $200,000.

General—

576. Balances required to complete any projects undertaken in previous fiscal years and for which no specific provision is made in the fiscal year 1959-60—further amount required, $300,000.

Central mortgage and housing corporation—

577. To reimburse central mortgage and housing corporation for losses sustained by it during the fiscal year 1958-59 as a result of the operation of federal-provincial projects undertaken under section 36 of the National Housing Act, 1954, $127,667.

Central mortgage and housing corporation—

606. Advances pursuant to sub-section (4) of section 36 of the National Housing Act, 1954, in respect of housing and land development projects undertaken jointly with the governments of the provinces during the fiscal year 1958-59, $22,000,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, June 8, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

REPRESENTATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO CREATE NEW CONSTITUENCY OF KEEWATIN-FRANKLIN

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-55, to amend the Representation Act.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Explain.

Mr. Nielsen: The purpose of this bill is to correct a wrong that has been of long standing in Canada, that is to provide to Canadian citizens living in the area described in the bill the right to vote in federal elections, a right which would affect some 8,000 to 10,000 qualified citizens in the area concerned.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AIRPORTS

MALTON—STATEMENT ON JUDGMENT OF EXCHEQUER COURT ON PROPERTY VALUATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether, now that he has had an opportunity of reading the judgment of the exchequer court concerning the expropriation of land for Malton airport, he has any further statement to make on this matter at the present time.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, last Friday the Leader of the Opposition asked this question:

I should like to direct to the Prime Minister a question based on reports of a judgment rendered yesterday by the exchequer court with regard to property valuation at Malton airport. Is it the intention of the Prime Minister to make a statement concerning the matter covered by this judgment, in which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) and the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Pallett) are mentioned?

In the course of my reply I said, amongst other things:

However, I think I should say at this time that in so far as any reference to any hon. member in this house is concerned, and in particular to the hon. member for Peel, the integrity and honesty of purpose of that hon. member leaves no question in my mind.

I wish to thank the Leader of the Opposition for the support he gave me in this regard when he said:

Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. In view of statements made in the judgment—and I am not quarrelling in any way with what the Prime Minister has said—has the Prime Minister considered referring this matter to the appropriate standing committee of the house so that it may be given the fullest and most impartial examination?

I repeat that I very much appreciated the attitude taken by the Leader of the Opposition in entirely supporting me when I said that the honesty and integrity of the hon. member left no question in my mind.

In conformity with the answer I gave, I have read carefully the judgment of the exchequer court and I have also had an opportunity of discussing the matter fully with the Minister of Transport and the hon. member for Peel. On the basis of those discussions and studies the opinion I expressed on Friday is fully confirmed. There is nothing which brings into question the integrity and honesty of the hon. member for Peel, and in so far as the minister is concerned there is, of course, no reference whatsoever throughout the entire judgment which in any way to the slightest degree suggests any impropriety.

I feel I should give some particulars regarding the suggestion that this matter might be referred to a committee. According to the judgment, which I have before me, the matters in question having to do with the valuation of land in the Malton area had their origin in the expropriation proceedings of 1954. During the period from 1954 until June 10, 1957, the hon. member for Peel acted in the capacity of solicitor with regard to this matter for some 14 or 15 veterans in that area who felt that justice was not being done to them in the offers made by the department in respect of the land expropriated.

From June, 1957—and I want to underline this—following the change of government the hon. member for Peel thereafter ceased to have any connection with the legal end, disassociating himself from that position. His endeavours were to secure what he believed to be justice for these particular constituents and veterans. It was not until January, 1959, of course, that the hon. member became chief government whip.

I carefully considered the position on the basis of an examination of that judgment and also in the light of past authorities in respect of the submission to a committee of matters such as these concerning the privileges of any hon. member of parliament, and I found no case in which any such submission to a committee was ever provided for except where it had been alleged that there was on the part of an hon. member improper conduct resulting in his personal gain. Of that there is not one scintilla of evidence in the judgment or elsewhere as far as the hon. member for Peel is concerned.

I think I should refer to the authorities so the record will be complete in this regard. I say, first, that on the basis of the experience of the past and of the traditions of this house, all the cases referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections since 1867 had to do with alleged improper conduct whereby a member allegedly had used his public position in order to further his private interest. Those cases go back to 1877. In 1877 there was the case of a newspaper owned by Hon. T. W. Anglin, M.P. which became a party to a contract with the Post Office Department concerning the insertion of advertisements relating to the public service. However, parliament having been prorogued no action was taken by the house.

In 1890 J. C. Rykert, M.P., was charged and found guilty of having used his influence to get for one John Adams a grant of certain timber limits. This was brought before the committee and Rykert resigned his seat, having been found guilty.

In 1891 charges were brought against Hon. Thomas McGreevy, member of parliament and member of the Quebec harbours commission in connection with tenders and contracts. The committee found a conspiracy between the contractors and the member in question. A contracting firm had taken the member's brother as partner and given him an interest in the firm in order to obtain a contract. McGreevy resigned his seat.

There was the case in 1915 in which A. deW. Foster, M.P., was found by the public accounts committee to have acted as a purchasing agent for the government in the purchase of certain requirements for the army. That committee reported to the house, recommending thorough investigation and action by the Department of Justice. Before such action was taken, A. deW. Foster resigned his seat. There were four other cases of a similar nature in which the action taken resulted in the charges against the member being rejected.

That in general summarizes the situation under which the rights of parliament are subject to that jealous scrutiny which at all times must be maintained. In every case there was moral wrongdoing or the achievement of personal gain. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, under those circumstances and reinforced by the objective attitude taken by the Leader of the Opposition when he confirmed me in the general statement I made during the course of my remarks on Friday, there is nothing to be placed before any committee.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, in view of the Prime Minister's reply and particularly in view of his reference to myself perhaps I might be permitted to make an observation. It is quite true, as the Prime Minister has said, that I stated in the house on Friday that I had no quarrel with what the Prime Minister said on that occasion. Of course I would have no occasion either to quarrel with or support any statement the Prime Minister made on that occasion, because it was a preliminary statement pending the examination which at that time he promised to make.

Naturally I am glad to confirm what I said on that preliminary occasion. We on this side will now study the Prime Minister's very important statement today. If that statement seems to require further discussion in the house no doubt there will be an opportunity later to refer to it.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he does not agree from a study of the judgment—and I had not an opportunity of making that study last Friday—that there are contradictions between statements in this judgment about a member of parliament and statements made outside the house on the same matter by the same hon. member, contradictions which in fairness to all concerned should be cleared up?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I know of no contradictions such as are suggested by the Leader of the Opposition. I may say a committee is not set up for the purpose of resolving contradictions. The circumstances under which a committee is set up are very clearly shown to be based upon a charge or charges made by a member of this house. All of us know what happens when charges are made. If charges are made, the house has the opportunity of determining whether they should be submitted to a committee. And if any hon. member makes a charge he, of course, has to substantiate that charge, and if he fails to substantiate the charge the parliamentary tradition, indeed all the experience of the past, indicates that such a member having made a charge unconfirmed and unsupported may be himself adjudged guilty of a breach of the privileges of the house.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, when prime minister, in the House of Commons debates of 1907, at page 5664 of Hansard, with all his regard for the traditions of parliament and the necessity of their maintenance inviolate, made this statement that is most pertinent and applicable:

> The house, I hope will not depart from the sound traditions which have come to us from England and according to which there could be no inquisition into any man's conduct or standing except on charges made specifically.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In connection with the expropriation of properties at Malton airport, did the member for Peel recommend to the minister the appointment of an independent appraiser?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a supplementary question. Did the minister give any assurance to the hon. member for Peel that he would recommend to treasury board settlement of the various expropriation cases on the basis of the appraisals made by the independent valuator?

Mr. Hees: I assured the hon. member that the appraisals made by Mr. Clare would be presented to treasury board for their examination.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, now, Mr. Speaker, in view of what was said by the president of the exchequer court in the case, would it not be desirable for the minister also to make a statement concerning this whole matter?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, the whole matter has been very clearly set out by the presiding judge in his judgment and, being a distinguished lawyer himself, I do not think the hon. member for Laurier would ask me to comment on the judgment of the court.

POLYMER CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO STRIKE SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. W. Murphy (Lambton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he can report anything new to the house on the Polymer strike at Sarnia.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I said last week that Mr. Taylor, the mediator who was appointed, was away because of a commitment made previous to his appointment. He has arrived back and is in Sarnia. Talks between both parties and Mr. Taylor will be resumed.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. This is substantially the reply given by the Minister of Labour to me the other day. In view of the fact that this strike has been under way now for many weeks, and in view of the fact that the families of the strikers are experiencing much hardship, does the Minister of Labour not think the situation is one that now warrants vigorous intervention on his part?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I am fully aware of the circumstances involved and the suffering and the hardships. The vigorous action to which the hon. member refers has been undertaken through the appointment of our mediator, who is a very capable man. The onus and the responsibility rest to a great degree on both parties concerned, as to their willingness to negotiate and arrive at a settlement.

RESEARCH

REPORTED INTENTION TO LAUNCH CANADIAN SATELLITE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of conflicting press reports, one report stating that the Prime Minister had announced at Prince Albert that a Canadian satellite would be launched in 1961, and other reports attributing to certain defence research officials that the satellite would merely be a United States satellite with certain Canadian instruments attached to it. Can the Prime Minister tell the house just what is involved, and if this is to be in fact a Canadian satellite or merely a United States satellite to be launched from a Canadian base?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in so far as my statement at Prince Albert is concerned, it was in keeping with a joint announcement made in the month of April by Canada and the United States in connection with joint rocket vehicle and satellite experiments. I also dealt with the matter on another occasion.

In order to keep the record straight may I say that in so far as my remarks are concerned, and I repeat that they were in keeping with what had already been said on previous occasions, the background of the program is as follows. Canadian scientists are of the opinion that work on space research has now passed beyond the stage of hurling a satellite into space. They believe there is valuable scientific data on the properties of space that can be collected, analysed and considered.

Some time ago the defence research board and the defence research telecommunications establishment approached the appropriate United States authorities with proposals for a co-operative program of development in this field. In view of the fact that Canadian scientific personnel have the ability to make their contribution to the world's pool of knowledge in this field, we believe that Canadian technicians and scientists should be given that opportunity. They have proven themselves outstanding in conception, design and craftsmanship in the production of fine electronics components.

In so far as a satellite is concerned, the United States already has expensive and complex bases for launching earth satellites. It will be a considerable time, if ever, before it will be economic for Canada to establish her own satellite launching base. We do not believe that Canadian scientists should be held back on that account, and intend to give every possible encouragement to them to pursue this program and add to the collective pool of knowledge which can be turned to peaceful pursuits.

The purpose of launching satellites, as I have said, has now passed into the field of collecting valuable scientific data. The Canadian defence research telecommunications establishment at Shirley's bay is fully qualified to participate. When the satellite has finally been completed at D.R.T.E. it will be launched into a north-south polar orbit crossing the United States and Canada from the Vandenberg air force base in California, utilizing the multimillion dollar facilities I have already mentioned which are available there.

I mentioned that the launching would take place in 1961. I see some reference to the fact that this date has not been finally determined. The information I have received now is that it will not be launched earlier than 1961. With those explanations I think the hon. gentleman will understand the situation.

Mr. Argue: Can the Prime Minister say how many Canadian technicians will be involved in this joint project, and whether the establishment of production facilities will result in substantial employment for Canadians? Will he also comment on the report in the press that Premier Frost has said that Moosonee is to be the launching site?

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I realize the obvious interest hon. gentlemen opposite have in the statements made by Premier Frost, but I have nothing to say with regard thereto. The general plans at the moment are that the launching will take place in the manner I have indicated. I am unable to give the hon. gentleman the details as to the numbers engaged, but I can say this. Canadians are engaged and are making a worth-while contribution to this highly desirable objective.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): In view of what the Prime Minister has said, will he explain exactly what he meant—and I quote from the text of his statement—when he said on Saturday "a Canadian satellite is to be launched in 1961"?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is exactly what I meant, namely a Canadian satellite. I would call a Canadian satellite one in which the instrumentation is supplied by Canada. After all, the instrumentation is the operative part of any satellite.

FISHERIES

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—REPORTED RESTRICTION ON CATCH OF GASPEREAU

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. H. Phillips (Prince): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Press reports give the impression that the Department of Fisheries has prohibited fishermen from taking gaspereau in the North river, Prince Edward Island. Are these reports correct?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I think there has been some misunderstanding here. Regulations which have been in existence for over 20 years prohibit the seining of gaspereau in river mouths and confined spaces because this method would allow the extermination of a run. In conformity with the regulations, fishermen who are operating in this way have been prevented from doing so further, but they are free to catch gaspereau in this area up to the causeway in the North river by the gill netting method, which allows a sufficient escapement to permit the run to continue to exist.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

WELLAND CANAL—SUGGESTED PRIORITIES FOR CANADIAN SHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the congestion and still further delays on the Welland canal, and the charge made recently that Canadian ships are being discriminated against, is the minister giving consideration to the establishment of a system of priorities in the light of what has happened in the last few days?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to be able to assure the hon. member and other members of the house that the congestion at the Welland canal has now been, for all practical purposes, overcome. At nine o'clock this morning there were only four vessels waiting to enter the canal upbound at Port Weller and only four waiting to enter downbound at Port Colborne.

As I have said on several occasions in this house, about three weeks ago I instituted a system of partial priorities by which vessels carrying bulk commodities would alternate with package freighters. This system of priorities was discussed in my office during a session lasting about one and one half hours with the presidents of several large Canadian shipping companies and the president of the Steel Company of Canada. At the conclusion of that meeting all were eminently satisfied with the system of priorities worked out. I hope the hon. member and other members of the house feel that the steps that were taken at that time have been successful. I sincerely hope, as I know he does, that the Welland canal will be able to continue to operate satisfactorily in the future without too much delay.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. In view of the minister's statement and also of the proposed visit of a convoy of United States naval ships, 32 in number, which will enter the seaway on June 26 or thereabouts, does the minister not think it desirable in the circumstances that this convoy of ships be allowed to remain in Montreal for several days rather than to go up the seaway and add to the congestion?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I thought the hon. member might ask this question and I therefore came prepared. I am referring now to the statement by certain people that this United States flotilla might cause a delay of three days.

I would say that this is an exaggerated statement. I may say that the number of naval ships involved is 27, not 32. If the 27 naval ships were to present themselves upbound over a period when the canal would have been otherwise fully engaged in transiting commercial vessels, the delay would possibly be the best part of two days. I am informed that the plans of the United States navy contemplate passage of 27 ships between June 23 and June 28 inclusive.

It is not possible at this date to estimate accurately the result in delay to commercial vessels if this number of naval vessels have to be passed through in addition to the commercial traffic. At present the canal is handling both upbound and downbound traffic without appreciable delays; and as I have said, at nine o'clock this morning there were only four vessels awaiting entry at Port Colborne and four at Port Weller. This is considered to be a normal situation. However, a sudden influx of naval vessels, in addition to the regular flow of commercial vessels, could quickly restore the congestion we have just overcome.

I can assure the house that steps have been taken to bring to the attention of United States authorities the serious effect on United States, Canadian and other commercial shipping which could result from the passage of this considerable number of naval vessels. I have suggested to the United States authorities that the number of vessels might be reduced without reducing the effectiveness of the display, and that the ships which do pass through the canal do so at the rate of no more than two per day in order that the least possible delay be caused to commercial shipping. I have been assured that serious consideration is being given to my representations, and I expect an answer from the United States authorities in the course of the next few days.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

BOMARC MISSILE—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF BASES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Defence whether any Bomarc bases are at present under construction in Canada.

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, a start has been made on the construction of a Bomarc station near North Bay.

Mr. Pearson: I have a supplementary question. Will the minister comment on the report of a statement he made in Winnipeg, I think it was, that no final decision has yet been made with regard to the use of the Bomarc?

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Speaker, I made no such statement in Winnipeg. I was asked whether, if the United States tests on the Bomarc proved that the weapon was not effective, would Canada go on with the development of that weapon. I explained that the whole development of the Bomarc is being carried out by the United States and that if the tests proved this weapon to be ineffective, of course Canada would not go on with the development by herself. To tell the truth I thought it was a rather foolish question, until I remembered that under the previous administration development of the Sparrow was carried on after the United States found that it was ineffective.

Mr. Pearson: I have a supplementary question. Does the minister not agree that it might be wise to postpone expenditure on bases of this kind until the Americans have made up their minds whether or not they are going to use the weapon?

Mr. Pearkes: No, Mr. Speaker. I think it is a wise precaution to be ready to receive this weapon as soon as it is made available by the United States authorities.

[Later:]

Mr. Pearson: I apologize for pressing my curiosity about the Bomarc, but could the minister give us the earliest approximate date upon which the Bomarc "B" could be made available to the R.C.A.F.?

Mr. Pearkes: My understanding is that it will be in 1961.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask a supplementary question. Could the minister give us the approximate time it takes to construct a Bomarc base?

Mr. Pearkes: I think it is about 18 months to two years.

(Translation):

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State? According to press reports of some months ago, indeed several months ago, work was to go ahead on the building of a base for the Bomarc missile in the Macaza area. Can the Secretary of State tell us whether this work has begun? If so, how many men are employed on the project?

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am not the Minister of National Defence and, therefore, I am not in possession of this information.

Mr. Denis: A supplementary question. My question arises out of a statement made by the Secretary of State, when he was not Minister of National Defence. He stated at the time—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: If the first question was directed to the wrong minister, it seems to me that a supplementary to the same minister would be out of order.

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence? Could the minister tell us if work has started on the establishment of a Bomarc missile base in the Macaza area? If so, how many people are employed on the project?

(Text):

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the area around Mont Laurier is one of the areas in northern Quebec which is under consideration for a second Bomarc station.

HEALTH INSURANCE

NEW BRUNSWICK—INQUIRY AS TO INTENTION TO PARTICIPATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. McWilliam (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has an agreement been signed between the federal government and the government of the province of New Brunswick in connection with Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McWilliam: I have a supplementary question. Can the minister advise the house as to the cause of this delay?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, negotiations have been going on for some time, and it is contemplated that an agreement will be signed between the federal government and that of the province of New Brunswick in a very short time.

POSTAL SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO RESTORATION OF TWICE-DAILY MAIL DELIVERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. May I say that we are glad that he is back home after a week's absence. I am informed that he went out west to do some work for his department.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Denis: I am also informed that he was to—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Denis: The question will come in a minute. I understand that he was to investigate the possibility of establishing twice a day mail delivery. Is this information well founded; and if not, why?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): No, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Will the hon. lady be in a position today to table the contract with Dimensional Investments Limited respecting the Chippewa Indian lands?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I expect to have this document ready for tabling later this afternoon. I may just mention that the other day the hon. member for Trinity was a little critical of the time it took to produce this document. I am sure when he sees it he will realize why it would take so long to produce this rather voluminous document with a great deal of statistical material.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I could ask the Secretary of State if he is yet in a position to table the return concerning which I made inquiries on Friday?

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): Several departments are concerned, and I have not received all the information which is required by the hon. member.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the Secretary of State consider tabling the information which he has received from the Department of Finance?

Mr. Courtemanche: As soon as I have received it.

(Translation):

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Could he tell me when I can expect an answer to the two questions I asked him, the first on March 12 and the other on April 8? They are recorded under numbers 266 and 317.

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I must tell the hon. member for Essex East that I shall have to check, as I do not recall if those documents were procured.

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): As a supplementary question, may I expect my question to be answered before that of the hon. member for Essex East?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CHIPPEWA RESERVE, SARNIA—INQUIRY AS TO EXPROPRIATION PROCEEDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): The hon. member for Trinity asked the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration on Friday whether Ontario hydro had made any approach to her department with a view to making a direct purchase. Is the hon. lady in a position to answer that?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Yes. The answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Trinity is yes; an approach had been made, and it was suggested to the hydroelectric power commission that they discuss the matter with the Sarnia band. This was done, and at a meeting on August 21, 1958 the band authorized the commission to negotiate with the individual Indian locatees for the purchase of the land they wished to acquire. One week later, on August 28, 1958 the band council withdrew this authority and in turn authorized the Crown Trust Company to negotiate options from the locatees. The reason given in the band council resolution is as follows:

> This is being granted with the full knowledge that previous authority was granted the hydroelectric power commission to take options and deal with the locatees for other portions of our reserve. However, council takes this action because they feel that the offer from the Crown Trust Company of Canada will be of greater benefit to the whole band, and by this resolution revoke the authority granted to the hydroelectric power commission.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT—REQUEST THAT CANADIAN STUDENTS HAVE PRIORITY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I rise merely for the purpose of referring to an answer I gave at page 4265 of Hansard to the hon. member for Beauce, who had asked me a question. I said I would reply on Monday. However, as of today there is no information in respect of this matter. The department has asked for a report from the London office, and they expect that the answer can be supplied tomorrow.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—REPORTED FRENCH REQUEST TO SHARE IN ATOMIC SECRETS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he cares to comment on a press report which has just come over the wire to the effect that the president of France has served notice that France is going to make no further commitments to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization unless and until the United States and Britain share their atomic secrets with that country?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I think I could make no helpful comment on that dispatch at the moment.

CIVIL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that we are approaching what may be the end of the session, in the unforeseeable future; in view of the fact the minister has not, in 18 months, made a comprehensive statement on civil defence, and in view of the fact there has recently been a conference with the provinces on this matter, will the minister indicate when he proposes to make a full statement on this important matter on behalf of the government?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is not correct in stating that there has not been a comprehensive statement on civil defence. Last year, at the time my estimates were being considered, I did make a statement, and my estimates will be before the committee again shortly. At that time I shall be pleased to deal with the subject again.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will the minister say when he will be prepared to give us what is the government's policy with regard to both shelter and evacuation?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I think I have answered that question several times as put by the hon. member. I have said that this is being given prior consideration.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would the minister kindly indicate what that means?

SUPPLY

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO IMPLEMENT PROMISES

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): So that I may relieve members on the treasury bench of any suspense they may have in the matter, I can say that it is my intention before I resume my seat to move an amendment which in effect will ask the house to regret the failure of the government to implement promises made before the last two elections to the people of the Atlantic provinces.

I am sure this is one occasion when even with the greatest ingenuity—and I have no doubt that the greatest ingenuity will be employed in this case—it will be very difficult for the administration to get up, when I have completed, and say, "you did not do it; why didn't you do it?" I say this because the things about which I intend to speak this afternoon are things which the hon. gentlemen opposite, particularly their leader, promised and undertook to do; and because they are promises which, except in one or two cases where I will indicate the contrary, were not made by us and were not made by the federal government before 1959.

Thus there can be no question of any obligation on the part of the Liberal party or of the former Liberal government to undertake these things. Indeed, I am not sure that many Liberals would subscribe to all the promises that were made. But whether they would or not, the fact is that they were not made by Liberals and they were not made by the Liberal government and, as I intend to show in a moment or two, with one or two exceptions they have not been carried out, either.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if I might interrupt the hon. member to ask for better attention. There seems to be more than the usual amount of competition, and I hope it will soon subside.

Mr. Pickersgill: I appreciate your courtesy in making that suggestion to hon. members. It is not a favour which I have ever asked myself; on the whole I have been reasonably successful in securing the attention of the house, and I certainly have no complaint to make about lack of attention in respect to those things which, from time to time, I feel it expedient to say.

As I said when I began my remarks, the stock answer to every suggestion on our part that the government should do what they promised to do has been, for the past two years, "Why didn't you do it?" I pointed out that nearly all the promises to which I will refer today were promises made by the Conservative party and not by the Liberal party. It was presumably in large part by virtue of those promises that the Conservative government obtained the substantial measure of support it did succeed in getting, particularly in the second election, in the four Atlantic provinces—a majority in all the provinces but one and, I regret to say, all the members in two of those provinces in 1958.

There is some evidence that some of the people in those provinces, perhaps a majority of them, are already beginning to have second thoughts. I should like to think they are having second thoughts because they now feel that the Liberal program which was placed before them in 1958 was so much better than the Conservative program that they should have voted for it. However, I do not flatter myself that this is the case. The view I hold is that what they are doing is what people all over the country are doing, namely judging the government, not the opposition, because it is the government which has the responsibility, having received so overwhelming a mandate, for carrying on the affairs of this country. It is not the opposition which has that responsibility, and the eyes of the country are, in my view, focussed upon the government, and it is the government which is being judged.

Mr. Starr: Like in Manitoba?

Mr. Pickersgill: It was the government of the province, if the hon. gentleman will recall, that was being judged in Manitoba. I would be more inclined to say "like Toronto in the constituency of Trinity" if the hon. gentleman wants the last judgment which was made on this government by electors in a federal election. And I may say that the hon. gentleman's friends in Manitoba were very anxious to dissociate themselves from any contamination by the federal government; indeed, the premier said after the election that the election had been decided purely on provincial issues.

Mr. Hees: What about Montmagny-L'Islet?

An hon. Member: What about Springfield?

Mr. Pickersgill: Considering what the vote was in Springfield in March, 1958 I do not think the hon. gentleman can take a great deal of satisfaction over the very narrow win his party managed to scrape up there.

An hon. Member: And Montmagny-L'Islet.

Mr. Pickersgill: I might suggest to some of the hon. members who are sitting in what is usually called "the rump" that it is really a waste of time to interrupt me this afternoon, because under the rules of the house I have unlimited time, and nothing they may say will prevent me from completing what I intend to say, though it may remind me of a few additional points.

I was suggesting that this government is being judged already on the record of its performance, and while I do not regard the evidence of Gallup polls as infallible—the only evidence which we in this house can take as infallible in these matters is the evidence of the election itself—we do know that ever since 1943 when these Gallup polls were first taken in this country they have, on the whole, been a fairly good indication of what the vote would be in both federal and provincial elections. Hon. members will recall that in the most recent Gallup poll in the four Atlantic provinces the support which was indicated for the Progressive Conservative party by those who were asked questions was below that which it was indicated would be given to the Liberal party.

As I say, I do not attach any exaggerated importance to that, but considering the overwhelming support which was given to the party opposite in at least two of those provinces at the last election, I do think there is an indication that there is a very marked change in sentiment in that part of the country.

I have no doubt whatsoever that the government will claim credit, and very considerable credit, for two things which have happened in the Atlantic provinces since they took office. I for one will say right off, as I said when the legislation was introduced and as I have said publicly and privately ever since whenever I have had occasion to speak about it, that I give the government full credit for the special grants to the Atlantic provinces. The measure, which was brought in by the Minister of Finance in January of 1958, provided the sum of $25 million a year for a period of four years, up until the tax-sharing arrangements presently provided for by law expire.

This measure was a source of considerable and very badly needed financial help to the Atlantic provinces. In the light of the experience in the past two years in those provinces I think there is not much doubt that if this action had not been taken the governments of at least some of those provinces would either have been obliged to curtail existing services to some degree or to impose additional provincial taxation. Indeed, one of the provinces, the most populous one, has proposed additional taxation in any case, though that taxation is earmarked or related to a specific and particular measure.

One of the reasons there has been the necessity for this increased financial assistance to the treasuries of these provinces is precisely the economic conditions through which the country has been passing. I do not intend to go into great detail on that subject, but I should like to give one rather striking illustration. In the month of March of this year the relief costs which had to be met out of the treasury of the province of Newfoundland—though, of course, half of this is reimbursed by the federal treasury under the unemployment assistance legislation—amounted to $324,884.

That may well be the peak month of the year. We certainly hope it is, but it may not be. It may be that when the figures for April are available they will be higher still, because it must be remembered that these relief costs do not immediately vanish with an increase in the level of employment in a province. As the spring advances more and more persons come to be out of work, particularly in this province where the proportion of seasonal workers is greater than the national average. There come to be more and more people out of work who have also exhausted their benefits under unemployment insurance and who are obliged therefore to resort to provincial or local relief.

There is no doubt that these costs alone have been very materially increased in all the Atlantic provinces, particularly in this last year, much more than in the year 1957-58, because there was a much bigger backlog of unemployment insurance benefits in 1957-58 than was available in this past fiscal year.

However, I come back to my original point. I want to give the government full credit for what I believe is bound to be required as long as the Atlantic provinces have a lower level of economic activity and on the whole lower incomes than the rest of the country.

I wish to turn to what I consider should be a permanent part of our federal-provincial financial arrangements, and that is some special arrangement for all the provinces and not just for the Atlantic provinces. As I pointed out to the Minister of Finance at the time of the introduction of the Atlantic grants, I think a formula should be worked out between now and 1962 that is capable of application to all the provinces and not merely to the Atlantic provinces, a formula that will be embodied in whatever may succeed the tax-sharing legislation. I do not intend to labour this point at all. I was simply making the point that I do give the government full credit for having taken this step.

I know it could be said, "Why did you not do it in 1956?" Well, I think the principal reason we did not do this in 1956 is illustrated by what we did do in 1956. We increased the payments or the abatements to the provinces under the tax-sharing arrangement from something over $500 million to substantially over $600 million over the whole country. This represented assistance of a considerably larger amount than is represented by all the things the federal government has done in this field in the last two years. Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Harris, in statements that were referred to by the Minister of Finance the other day, indicated quite properly that they felt, at that time, that as much of the national budget had been devoted to this field as it was felt possible to devote on that occasion.

Notwithstanding that, as the representative of a constituency in the Atlantic provinces I am very glad this government has seen fit to do more in this field. As I say, I am not criticizing it in any way, but am merely making what I think is the constructive suggestion that when it becomes a part of our regular fiscal policy, as I hope and expect it will, it will be based on a formula that could be applied, for example, to the province of Saskatchewan if it should ever find itself in conditions at all approaching those which so regrettably occasioned the original tax-sharing proposals of 20 years ago.

We hope that will never happen. We hope too—and this, of course, was pointed out by Mr. Kirk, the former member of this house for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare at the time the minister brought down this legislation—that the day will come when the level of economic activity and the level of incomes in the Atlantic provinces will be such that what are essentially deficiency payments to these provincial governments because of lower incomes in those areas will no longer be necessary. But that will be some time in coming, even if we have in the future the kind of advance in those provinces that we have had in the past 20 years, and about which I intend to say something a little later on.

The other thing for which the government will undoubtedly seek to take credit, of course, is the program for assistance in the development of thermal power and assistance in interconnections through assistance to transmission lines between the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, assistance which I am glad to note the Prime Minister offered to extend to a transmission line in the province of Newfoundland in a recent message which he sent to the premier of Newfoundland and which I understand is under very active consideration there at the present time.

About this I cannot offer the government any similar congratulations. In all but two respects this program, of course, is precisely the program that was announced by the former minister of finance in his budget in 1957, and expanded upon by the then minister of northern affairs and national resources, Mr. Jean Lesage, in this house before the election of 1957. There were two adaptations made in this program, neither of them in my opinion advantageous to the Atlantic provinces.

I want to say a word about each of them. The first was with respect to ownership. In the original proposals made by Mr. Harris and Mr. Lesage it was suggested that the federal government should own those new facilities, those new thermal plants and those new transmission lines, but that the province should have the option to buy them at its convenience. Under the existing legislation what happens is that a loan is made to a province, a long term loan at the current borrowing rate of the government of Canada, with the usual allowances. And I make no criticism of that; but let us consider for a moment the effect of this change. Under the system we proposed the federal government could have gone ahead, if the province wanted —and, of course, we could do nothing under either scheme unless a province wanted—with thermal plants and even with transmission lines somewhat in advance of the demand for the power, and the federal treasury would for that period, until the demand caught up, have carried that burden. It would have been some burden upon the federal treasury; we knew that. We intended that, we proposed that, when the original scheme was put before parliament.

Under the present scheme the province must start paying interest on the loan and start amortizing the loan immediately. So there would have to be, in view of the much more restricted financial base that each of those provinces has, if you like more prudence; but I would rather put it this way. There has to be a real certainty of an almost immediate demand for the power or it is not going to be developed. What we were suggesting was that we should go a little ahead of the demand, provide the additional power and have it there as an attraction, as a sort of magnet for the development of users of the power.

Of course if the level of economic activity that existed in 1956 and early 1957 had continued that would not have been a problem, because it was quite clear that if the curve of demand was going to continue at the rate it then was going on there would be no doubt about the demand, but we have seen that these things can change very quickly. We have seen, for example, that in the case of Beechwood, which the government of New Brunswick considered was very necessary to that province and very urgently needed, they have found it necessary to export some of this power to the United States.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I ask a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Would the hon. member like to take time to tell us why the old administration was not interested and did absolutely nothing about Beechwood?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, I would be glad to, but I do not know whether it would be very profitable to the hon. gentleman, to the house or to anyone else. The first reason, of course, was that up until that time the federal government had never taken part in power developments in any part of Canada except in the Northwest Territories; that the development of hydroelectric power was one of those things that was either left to private enterprise in some provinces or in others it was an exclusively public responsibility; and to take a step in one particular province in one particular case without having a policy which could be applied in the right circumstances right across the country was something which was—I think I can speak for my leader—then and is now and I hope always will be contrary to the policy of the Liberal party.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Then you will stay where you are.

Mr. Pickersgill: Maybe we will stay where we are. Maybe the hon. gentleman thinks that a little special bid to someone here and a little special bid to someone somewhere else, without principle, is the right way to get into office. I am not sure it is the right way to stay in office. I think before I am finished I may be able to show that to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the minister's question could be left until I have finished answering the first question.

The second reason, of course, is that the Beechwood project was one that at the time was considered to be entirely within the capacity and the resources of the province. What we felt it was desirable to do when the province represented that it needed still more power, and very substantially more power than was going to be available from Beechwood, was to provide something constructive and additional, and that is in fact what was proposed in 1957.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): May I ask the question now?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Promises to Atlantic Provinces

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I would like to know this. When the hon. member asked the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) whether he agreed with that statement, did he not assent?

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I shall let the Leader of the Opposition speak for himself. Perhaps I should not have said that.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, seeing that I have been asked whether I nodded assent, I might tell the minister that over here we base our policies of assistance on principle and not on hand-outs.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Beechwood was a hand-out.

Mr. Nowlan: Beechwood was a hand-out; that is a nice one.

Mr. Pickersgill: Was it not? The hon. gentlemen think that embarrasses me. It does not embarrass me a bit.

Mr. Pearson: Nor me.

Mr. Pickersgill: Nor does it embarrass anyone on this side, including the members from the province of New Brunswick.

At the time the present administration asked parliament to vote assistance for Beechwood, the project was completed. All the federal government were doing was taking over the mortgage, and that was all we were doing. It was not anything new or constructive. I put a series of questions on the order paper. I have not them here at the moment, but they will be found in Hansard for 1957 and 1958. I asked the Prime Minister, or I asked the government and the Prime Minister replied, whether or not assistance on the same principle would be applied to other provinces. I was told in the answer that it would be. I sought vainly in the debates on two bills by every device of questioning that I could think of—and I do not think, sir, I am entirely without ingenuity in this field—to find out what that principle was, and there was—

Mr. Pearson: There was not any.

Mr. Pickersgill: The government could never tell us what that principle was. I asked the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources who raised the question, over and over again what the principle was on Beechwood so that we in Newfoundland could apply the same principle there, and I could get no answer.

The minister perhaps knows that at the very time Beechwood was being built a thermal plant was being built in St. John's, Newfoundland, the interest rates that private interests had to pay were even higher and in consequence the cost to the consumers was going to be higher. I hoped the policy on Beechwood was going to be a policy that was going to have some similar application in Newfoundland.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): What private power plants are we helping now?

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, on that point, sir, it does not appear to make any difference to the consumer of electricity in a province whether he gets the power from a private power plant or from a publicly owned plant. What he cares about is how much it costs. It does seem to me that if we are going to say we will provide the help to completed plants, we will take over the mortgage and the cost of certain publicly owned ones in one place because we have a political debt to pay and we will not do it in another place because we have not, that is a pretty good definition of what the Leader of the Opposition describes as a hand-out.

Mr. Pearson: That is the only principle they have over there; political.

Mr. Pickersgill: Quite. However, sir, this question of Beechwood—as no doubt hon. gentlemen opposite expected it would be—is a diversion from the main point, and I come back to my main point. I do not think there is any doubt whatever that if there had not been a change of government in 1957 there would have been thermal plants built already in Nova Scotia and probably in New Brunswick using coal; and I emphasize that because that is my second point. That is the second point of difference between our policy and the policy of the present administration.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): This might have taken place?

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, the only reason it would not have happened is if the government of New Brunswick and the government of Nova Scotia refused to have them built. I do not think, once the election had been over, there would have been any danger of that because both premiers came up here in the spring of 1957 and accepted the scheme in principle, and it was only later on, late in May, that they began to have scruples about which we heard a good deal on the hustings.

Mr. Nowlan: That is sheer nonsense.

Mr. Pickersgill: It happens to be quite factual.

Mr. Nowlan: You were out campaigning in the maritime provinces.

Mr. Pickersgill: They did in fact come here, and they both made public statements to the press. I have not got them under my hand but I could produce them for the hon. gentleman to read although I know I do not need to, because he knows perfectly well that statements were made that our scheme was accepted in principle. I grant that acceptance of a plan in principle does not mean that all the details will be accepted, but I have not the slightest doubt that if there had not been a change of government this is what would have happened.

I say so for this reason, that under the policy with respect to coal enunciated in 1957 by the then minister of public works, while we were still in office, we took the view and said publicly that these plants must charge against consumers only the cost of the cheapest fuel and that the federal government would give a subsidy so that coal would never be more expensive than the cheapest fuel. In other words, if oil were cheaper we would give a subsidy as between the cost of oil and the cost of coal, but if coal were cheaper there would be no subsidy. That was our policy.

What was the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite with respect to coal? They said they would reduce the price of Nova Scotia coal to the price of Pennsylvania coal in Ontario. That is the difference between the two, and I suggest that in the one case it was certain coal would be used because it was bound to be as cheap as oil. The province is certain to do so if the province wants to use it. Of course if the government of either of these provinces of its own motion prefers to have oil used, notwithstanding the coal problem in the maritimes, that is another matter, and naturally we could not have compelled them to do it. However, I fancy that public opinion would have taken care of that situation in the circumstances I envisage.

But it is quite conceivable, of course, that in certain circumstances, at certain times and with certain kinds of oil or oil by-products their cost might be even lower than the cost of Pennsylvania coal in Ontario, and if that should be the case then the subsidy the present administration is offering would not be sufficient to make coal the cheapest fuel. These are the two differences and, as far as I know, the only differences between what we proposed and what hon. gentlemen opposite embodied in their legislation.

But there is a very great difference between what I think it is reasonable to suppose would have happened under our proposals and what in fact has failed to happen under proposals of hon. gentlemen opposite; because I understand that with the exception of the Trenton plant in Nova Scotia, which incidentally was started by the previous Liberal provincial administration, no firm commitment has yet been reached after two years for federal aid to any thermal plant in either Nova Scotia or New Brunswick. If my information is not entirely up to date I would, of course, be glad to have it corrected, but according to the last information given to us by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources that was the situation.

When we come to the other promises in the program of hon. gentlemen opposite, and I intend to take them up in some detail, we find that the record is very different. These promises appeared in many forms and guises before the election of June 10, 1957, but I have here a very large, almost full-page, advertisement which appeared in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of June 8, 1957. May I say that the advertisement was inserted by the Progressive Conservative party of Canada, so I do not think there is any doubt that this may be said to have represented the official position of the whole party. It was not inserted by the local party in the Atlantic provinces, though it was directed to the Atlantic provinces. It reads as follows:

> Before you vote read "the Atlantic resolutions" endorsed by every Progressive Conservative candidate in the maritimes, a call for united action at Ottawa. We, the Progressive Conservative candidates from the 31 federal constituencies in the Atlantic provinces, believe that just demands of the Atlantic community for recognition of their economic problems and special needs urgently require more united and forceful representation in the parliament of Canada.

I refrain from any comment about that.

> In keeping with the growing co-operative spirit of the people of the Atlantic community, which has already led to the creation of APEC and to the conference of Atlantic premiers, we are resolved to stand together in support of these measures which will help to overcome the historic disabilities which have limited and even denied opportunity to this area. We believe our young people have the right to opportunity at home and we are convinced that only by united action by all individuals and at all levels of government and through constructive efforts of private organizations can this right be made real. We believe that all those who live in this Atlantic community are entitled to the benefits of opportunity and security which shall be no more but certainly no less than all Canadians have the right to enjoy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was going to say, sir, that these are general sentiments that all of us would applaud, but the applause preceded my observation. But I come now to the particular points, and I doubt if there will perhaps be the same appreciation of them.

> National resources development program. We emphatically endorse John Diefenbaker's policy calling for a national development program; we will urge that such a comprehensive program permit federal assistance to the Atlantic provinces for the purpose of developing our resources for the maximum benefit to the Atlantic economy and give as well proper recognition to the differing needs of the provinces and to their varying financial capabilities.

I come now to the second point, because I should like to discuss the two of them together. After all, the first one is pretty nebulous but the second one is much more precise. It is called "Decentralization of Industry."

By united and resolute representation from the members of parliament from the Atlantic provinces, we believe that all Canadians will support a federal program of industrial decentralization. We will urge that (1) the Atlantic provinces receive a more equitable share of defence contract expenditures; (2) that crown corporations be established in the area; (3) that special fiscal consideration be given to private enterprises—

I draw that to the attention of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, who seems shocked at the suggestion that any help should be given to private corporations.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Private power.

Mr. Pickersgill: I continue:

—which will encourage the location of industry in the Atlantic area and, further, encourage the processing of our natural resources here.

On these three specific points there are still certain questions on the order paper that were asked by the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Granger) and myself, but one of the questions based on these resolutions was answered last Wednesday by the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. O'Hurley), who asked leave to put his answer on Hansard because he said it was too long to read. I agree with him that it was far too long to read, but I think there was another reason why the minister was not particularly anxious to read it, in that in spite of its length, it says precisely nothing.

What was promised was a more equitable share of defence expenditures. The minister indicated, when I asked him a question about this matter in the committee on estimates a year ago, that a scheme was under consideration for providing a more equitable share of these expenditures in the Atlantic provinces, but it is perfectly clear from reading this answer that no such scheme exists; because these were the minister's words as found in the second paragraph of the statement:

My department continues to rely, wherever possible, on countrywide competition to obtain the best value for the money spent and to provide an opportunity for all competent and interested Canadian suppliers to compete for defence supplies.

I do not question the minister's figures, and that it may be that a slightly larger—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the hon. gentleman say what is the date of his reference to Hansard?

Mr. Pickersgill: Last Wednesday, June 3, 1959. In the last fiscal year a slightly larger percentage of defence expenditures were made in the Atlantic provinces, although total expenditures were slightly lower. I am sure that is a fact. I have not attempted to verify the minister's statement, but on examination of these expenditures I think it will be found that a high proportion of them would have been on what might loosely be called real estate, that is to say the developments of camps, fixed installations and things of that sort. I might say that to the best of my knowledge no new defence establishment has been founded in the Atlantic provinces by the present administration. My leader says some may have been closed. About that matter I have not any precise information but certainly I know of no new one that has been opened.

I think many of those engaged in defence activities in the Atlantic provinces are extremely worried, particularly in the light of the rather uncertain state of the armament of the Royal Canadian Air Force, as to what its role is likely to be. I know that many others in the army are extremely worried about what their role is likely to be under the uncertainty which now seems to hang like an impenetrable cloud over the Department of National Defence. Whether any defence establishments have been in fact closed yet, I do not know. Oh, my leader is usually right. There is the naval establishment at Port Edward. If it has not been actually closed, its activity was certainly seriously curtailed; and that is in Cape Breton of all places. I am very grateful to my leader for the reminder.

Mr. MacEwan: Who prompted you to say that? Did Henry Hicks tell you to say that?

Mr. Pickersgill: It happens to be a fact. I happened to recollect it for myself. I have not found it necessary very often to get other people to tell me what to say in this house or elsewhere. I am quite willing to take the responsibility in this house or elsewhere for whatever I may say, even if sometimes I do not say the wisest things in the world. I am quite willing to admit that I have never fancied myself so much that I thought I was an invariable fount of pure wisdom.

I now come to the other two points of this second clause. The second one is that crown corporations are to be established in the area. There may have been crown corporations established in the area, but if there are, apart from the extension to the area of the Northern Canada Power Corporation or whatever the name of it is which was in existence before that time, and I think it was even designated for the purpose by the previous administration, I am not aware of any other federal crown corporations that have been established for the purpose of promoting the decentralization of industry in the Atlantic provinces. If there have been such crown corporations established and I have overlooked them, and if any member of the government points them out, I shall certainly be glad to make a rectification.

The third point is that special fiscal consideration be given to private enterprise which will encourage the location of industry in the Atlantic area and further encourage the processing of our natural resources. I presume that means fiscal considerations given in the Atlantic area that were not going to be given in other parts of the country. I know of no such considerations. Indeed, far from having any fiscal considerations in this field, we have had fiscal "deconsideration" if I may coin a word, because of the necessity under which the government has found itself to increase the corporation tax in order to attempt to fill part of the vacuum in the treasury. In addition, of course, the legislation which is now before a committee of this house to increase the charges upon employers and employees under the Unemployment Insurance Act will not have the effect of promoting industrial development either in the Atlantic provinces or anywhere else.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I ask a question at this point because I think it is quite important?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The hon. member says his government would not have helped Beechwood because it would have been a special consideration. A minute or two ago he criticized us for not having done something that is a special consideration in itself. Can he bring those things together and at least be consistent about his speech on this occasion?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, I can be very consistent. I have always thought I ought to pay my own promissory notes but I never thought I was under any compulsion to pay those of the hon. gentleman. I did not sign this advertisement but the hon. gentleman did so. It seems to me that all public men should be judged by the same standards, namely do they keep faith with the people, do they keep their promises. I did not contract nor did any member of my party that special fiscal consideration would be given for this purpose. There is therefore no reason why we should be in favour of it when we charge other people with failing to keep their promises.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Why will not the hon. member give us credit for putting Beechwood in under this special fiscal consideration?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman is entitled to take all the credit he wishes for Beechwood; I do not care how much credit he takes for Beechwood. I merely state that Beechwood did not appear to me to be different, in principle, from other power developments, even in New Brunswick, or elsewhere across the country as a whole. That was the reason we did not see fit to do it. It seems to me that was a perfectly honest and straightforward attitude, and it has been expressed many times previously. It was given by Mr. St. Laurent before the election because Mr. St. Laurent, as the hon. member knows, never attempted to conceal even unfavourable things or things that might be unfavourable in a particular locality, and it was all the more credit to him, in my opinion.

I should now like to draw attention to certain other supplementary statements that were made in the elections of 1957 and 1958 that seem to me to relate fairly directly to these two points. I have not finished with this document yet but I should like to deal with the natural resources program and the decentralization of industry. I have not paid much attention to what was said in those elections by anyone except the Prime Minister, simply because I did not think it would be fair to take too much of the time of the house in dealing with them, even though my time is not limited. I should now like to draw attention to the statement made by the Prime Minister at Cambridge, Nova Scotia on June 3, 1957 as reported in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of June 4 of that year. According to this report in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald the Prime Minister said:

> The federal government had overtaxed the people by $500 million last year, he said, and this would likely be increased to $700 million this year "if they remain in office". Mr. Diefenbaker said his party advocated "equal opportunity for all Canadians".

I will read on:

> In Nova Scotia, he said, the average personal income had decreased 5.9 per cent from $886 in 1946 to $815 in 1955. The Canadian average personal income increased during the same period from $1,025 to $1,078.

I presume the Prime Minister verified those statements. I have not attempted to do so. He went on to give similar figures for Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. Then the press report continues:

> Mr. Diefenbaker advocated a national development program encompassing decentralization of industry which, he said, would help Nova Scotia to keep her sons and daughters at home.

No details, of course, were given in that report. Then on April 29 at Charlottetown as reported in a Canadian Press report in the Ottawa Journal, of April 30, we find these words:

If some of the economic conditions in the maritimes existed in western Canada, members of parliament from the west would soon let the country know about it.

That is the Prime Minister. To continue:

He could not understand how the maritimes time after time elected Liberal members "who make their greatest contribution in the silence they preserve".

A moral can be drawn from that, which I will leave the hon. members on the other side of the house from the maritime provinces to draw for themselves. Then, I continue quoting from this article:

And at Charlottetown (the above had been said at Summerside) with the province's four Conservative candidates on the platform behind him, he added: "You people in Prince Edward Island want action. Then, send these four candidates to the House of Commons. We'll give you action."

I believe the people of Prince Edward Island, with the exception, of course, of the Atlantic provinces grants which were very acceptable and which were made before the second election, would be interested in what the additional action has been.

Then, at St. Stephen—this is from the Saint John Telegraph-Journal of May 4, the Prime Minister is reported to have said on May 3:

At St. Stephen, Mr. Diefenbaker spoke of maritime rights and said the eastern provinces should not be "back-benchers in a confederation of equals".

The Conservative party had made confederation possible. If elected, it would work out with the provinces a new deal that would remove the "inequities that too long have held back the maritime provinces".

Then, he quotes the same figures again for income and he added:

"That's a challenge which should demand action."

I might say I took this particular quotation from St. Stephen because at Milltown, which is immediately adjacent to St. Stephen, there was at that time a textile plant which was in operation. The last thing I heard about that textile plant was in February when I was in Fredericton, and the machinery had been sold to someone in the Dominican Republic.

Mr. Grafftey: Who was it that objected to our dumping duties?

Mr. Nowlan: Is that the St. Mary's plant to which the hon. gentleman refers?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, this is Milltown. The other plant is at Marysville, near Fredericton, and it is in operation. I read in the Fredericton Gleaner, which is I believe a very reliable newspaper, that the machinery in the Milltown plant had been sold to someone in the Dominican Republic.

Then, there is a Canadian Press report in the Montreal Star of June 3, 1957 in which the Prime Minister is reported to have said at Lunenberg:

—economic conditions must be made such "that maritimers will be encouraged to stay in the area rather than migrate because they cannot get their proper share of the economy.

"I want to see that all Canadians get their share. That is the abiding purpose of my life."

This is a very noble sentiment. The Minister of Labour has told us that in certain parts of the Atlantic provinces today the federal government is paying expenses of people to move away to other parts of the country where they can get work.

Then again at Campbellton, New Brunswick, on May 4, as reported in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of May 6; the Prime Minister is reported to have said:

—the Liberal government for years has been content to allow export of raw materials for processing in other countries.

Here is a quotation:

"If we're to build the country and provide jobs . . . it cannot be done by exporting employment to the United States in the form of raw material."

A Conservative government would carry out a program or regional development "to round out Canada's first 100 years as a nation."

This was said at Campbellton. Well, what about raw materials—

Mr. Grafftey: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. gentleman would allow me to continue and I would be delighted to answer his question in a moment. In that area, at Campbellton and in the Bathurst area, as hon. members know, unhappily the very considerable minerals discovered there are not being exploited at the present time. I read some of the reports of the Iron Ore Company and the other companies mining in Labrador and Ungava and they claim that their exports of iron ore are increasing.

Then, here is another quotation from the same place, and this is in direct quotes:

We in this party have launched in every part of this country a national development plan, and the purpose that we have in mind is to assure that your sons and daughters may remain within this province, instead of being forced by economic necessity to leave for other parts of Canada or the United States.

Everyone would like to see that, of course, but the fact is that what has happened does not correspond with what was hoped for.

Then again at Campbellton, in that same speech, and this is in direct quotes:

In order to persuade business firms it is to their advantage to process our raw materials here in Canada, we must show them by tact and other inducements that they will save money by processing those materials in Canada. I say this to you: If we form a government we will introduce legislation which will provide such inducements for we intend to see that Canada shall become the great industrial nation which her raw materials make possible.

We have not seen this legislation. Then, the Montreal chamber of commerce were told on February 19, 1957, and this was about inflation and tight money, by the Prime Minister:

The dread problem of inflation will not be met by regulations which while effective against the individual permit government to have and enjoy the sole privilege of contributing to inflationary pressures.

Then, there is this:

Federal government expenditures constitute the biggest inflationary factor in our economy.

Federal government expenditures are very considerably more today than they were when that speech was made.

Then, at Truro on May 1, as reported in the Globe and Mail for the following day, the Prime Minister said about this tight money policy:

Through its tight money policy, he added, the government has throttled the capital investment which maintains economic growth, supports welfare expenditures and provides full employment.

Small and medium businessmen, farmers and fishermen have been squeezed and even forced into bankruptcy by government policy, he added. "We contend and have contended that this is economically unsound", he said.

As a result, he added, provincial governments and school administrations have had to pay excessive interest rates to finance vital public works and improvements. There has been regional discrimination, Mr. Diefenbaker charged, in the distribution of available credit with the maritimes and western provinces bearing the brunt of this inequality.

I think in the maritimes, the western provinces and everywhere else today there is no provincial government, no school administration, that can borrow money at the interest rates which were prevailing in February of 1957. If these things were going to be remedied, the remedy has been worse than the disease.

There is another report of the same speech at Truro, and this is from the Halifax Chronicle-Herald:

The little man—the farmer, the fisherman and the small businessman—is being crushed by the Liberal government's tight money policy, John G. Diefenbaker, national leader of the Progressive Conservative party, said here Wednesday night. The real causes of inflation in this country are over-spending by the federal government and too-high taxes, he said.

Then, at Cambridge, Nova Scotia, on June 3, 1957:

Unemployment in Canada had reached the 300,000 mark because of the tight-money policy, he said.

He said that the tight-money policy had struck a "hard body blow" at small business in Canada and he promised that a Progressive Conservative government would bring into operation a policy whereby a loan fund would be available at low interest "so that small business won't be driven out by larger groups".

Well, where is it?

Then in the second election, in 1958, the Prime Minister made one or two references to interest rates. At that time interest rates were not as high as they were in 1957. In Calgary, according to the Winnipeg Tribune of March 15, the Prime Minister claimed the day before —that interest rates had fallen sharply as a result of government action since last June from a high of 4.33 per cent to 2.89 per cent in recent weeks.

When they fall, of course, it is the result of government policy. But when, as has happened almost all the time since the conversion loan, they rise, then it is the fault of the Americans or of businessmen who are borrowing money from the chartered banks —the fault of everyone except the government. There were several similar references during the 1958 election campaign.

I should like to make one other reference to the topic of small business. In the election of 1957, speaking of the need for assistance to small business, the Prime Minister was reported as follows in the Campbellton rally of May 4:

We intend, as well, to do something to assist small businessmen in this country. They find themselves today caught, irretrievably caught, in a situation whereby they cannot survive. We believe the time has come to provide very much after the fashion of the federal government in the United States, assistance to small business, to enable the backbone of our national business, the small businessman, to survive and to prosper.

And even in the election of 1958 something was said on this subject. At Summerside on February 27, as reported in the Charlottetown Guardian of the following day, the Prime Minister announced:

—that if his government is re-elected it is their intention at the first session of parliament to give consideration to a system whereby small business may be able to expand on reasonable terms, and have available to it a system of financing which is being considered to enable small business to meet its responsibility in expanding and assuring extra jobs. A community will continue to prosper and expand if small business expands, he said.

And a very similar statement was made at Yarmouth on March 26. So much for the first two of those resolutions. The third had reference to the power development, and I have already dealt with it. The fourth had reference to transportation and this is what the Conservative candidates pledged themselves to do about transportation:

> We are committed to the original pledge given to our people at the time of confederation that freight rates would be adjusted and transportation facilities would be provided so that our geographic position would not prejudice our producers in having reasonable access to the markets of Canada.

I could go on and make several references to statements made by the Prime Minister on this subject which are in much the same vein, but I see that I am taking an inordinate amount of time. It seems to me that this is a very clear statement of what the electors were led to expect from a Conservative government. But what has happened? What has happened is that freight rates have gone up. Freight rates have not been adjusted so as to give maritime producers greater access to the markets of central Canada; the exact reverse has been the case. It is true that some small amelioration of the increase has been made by this parliament at this session or, at least, it has been provided for—precisely how it is going to be made is not yet very clear. But the fact is that these rates are higher and, certainly, the transportation facilities are in no way improved compared with what they were before this statement was made.

Then there were also some specific pledges made particularly about the Chignecto canal and about the Newfoundland railway which I do not intend to deal with at this time.

Then the next item in what I call the Atlantic charter of the Tory party is the capital projects program. Here is the promise:

> We favour the immediate institution of an Atlantic capital projects program which will provide federal capital assistance for provincial projects designed to enlarge the basic economy of the area.

That is a great hope, but all it is is a hope. We have heard nothing about it since. Certainly, we have heard nothing about it in this parliament.

Then there is another promise, the one concerning the Canadian coastguard. "We shall press", members of the Conservative party said, "for a Canadian coastguard". At this point I think I should also make one reference to what the Prime Minister himself had to say about this question in 1957 because I want to make it clear that the Prime Minister was committed on this point. At Cambridge, Nova Scotia, on June 3, he is reported in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald the next day as follows:

> Mr. Diefenbaker also advocated a Canadian coastguard service to assure that marine disasters were kept at a minimum.

A similar statement was made at Lunenburg later the same day.

We know the history of the coastguard. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees), when he was first asked about this after the election, came into the house and read verbatim a statement which had been made by his predecessor, the same statement which, I think, was originally made by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) about the service which we now have. No change whatever has been made in that situation, and no explanation or apology has been offered for the total failure to do anything to implement this particular specific promise.

The seventh of these points has to do with the fiscal needs of the Atlantic provinces. I had something to say on this subject at the beginning of my speech and I need not repeat that again.

I wish to say something about the coal situation in the Atlantic provinces. I do not need to say anything further about coal in relation to power development, because I have already dealt with that question. But promises were made that the production of coal would be increased, and the bitterest and most unfair and distorted criticism was expressed of Mr. St. Laurent because of a statement he made at Fredericton during that election campaign in which he said that in his view the value of coal for purposes other than as fuel was such that he would not take the responsibility for expenditure to increase the production of coal. But Mr. St. Laurent also said that no one wanted to see coal mining towns become ghost towns any more than anyone wanted to see the gold mining towns of northern Quebec and northern Ontario become ghost towns, and that steps must be taken to maintain existing production. The Conservative party, on the other hand, took the view that production should be increased, and gave an undertaking accordingly. I suggest, in the light of the prospects for markets, that that was a wholly irresponsible attitude to have taken. At the same time it was suggested that because Mr. St. Laurent had stated he could do nothing to increase coal production he had suggested that existing production would be curtailed, whereas the whole tenor of his speech was in the opposite direction.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has the hon. member that speech with him? If so he might read it to us.

Mr. Pickersgill: I had it here the other day, and if the Prime Minister would look up the index to Hansard he would find the precise references there. I cited them in reply to the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacLellan) who agreed, finally, for the first time, with my interpretation of what had been said. But the words speak for themselves; they are on Hansard for this very session.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thought it was the same speech; that is why I asked.

Mr. Pickersgill: It so happens that the Prime Minister is somewhat mistaken in his recollections because it was not a speech at all. I simply rose to ask for permission to correct an error that had been made by one hon. member on the other side of the house who was making a speech and on looking at it I do not think the Prime Minister will find it is the same speech.

Mr. MacEwan: You will not find any agreement with your interpretation, either.

Mr. Pickersgill: On the contrary, the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond did agree with my interpretation.

Mr. MacEwan: The hon. member will recall that it was the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis). If the hon. member reads further on in that speech he will find that the hon. member for Cape Breton South did not agree with his interpretation.

Mr. Pickersgill: We could go on arguing for a long time but all the substantial parts are on Hansard. In the mind of any person who reads that speech objectively those parts are incapable of any but one interpretation. At some other time I should be glad to go over the speech word by word with the hon. member and if he can show me that I am wrong in that statement I shall be glad to get up and apologize in the house. I have a few quotations concerning the coal situation which I should like to place on the record. The first is from a speech made by the Prime Minister in the hon. gentleman's own riding, at New Glasgow on April 30, 1957, as reported in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of May 1. Apparently turning to the premier of Nova Scotia who was on the platform with him, the Prime Minister said:

> If we form a government I tell you, Mr. Premier, there will be subventions for coal in these provinces, according to your request and to the demands of the people.

Mr. MacEwan: And there were.

Mr. Pickersgill: At Amherst on May 2, as reported in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of May 3, the Prime Minister was reported as follows:

> He said the subventions on coal mentioned by the federal government—

That is the Liberal government, of course. I continue:

> —are nothing more than a subsidy which Nova Scotians already have to compete with the central provinces.
> "What we want", he asserted, "is coal subventions within the province."

Mr. Coates: That is what we got.

Mr. Nowlan: That is what we asked for and that is what we got.

Mr. Pickersgill: Subventions on coal consumed within the province?

Mr. Nowlan: For industrial use.

Mr. Pickersgill: Speaking in Minto, New Brunswick, on June 3, 1957, as reported in the Saint John Telegraph-Journal of that date the Prime Minister said:

> The Liberal government is not taking action to help the coal industry. There should be federal treasury aid toward the cost of freighting coal within the maritimes.

At Cambridge, Nova Scotia, on June 3, 1957, the Prime Minister was reported as having said:

> "—there is something strangely peculiar about the fact that Nova Scotia coal delivered in New Brunswick is higher in price than it is when delivered in Montreal. There is a need, and we undertake to supply that need by providing a subvention on maritime coal.

It seems to me that those quotations suggested that there was going to be a general subvention on coal used in the maritime provinces for all purposes within those provinces. I am sure that is the plain meaning that would be taken from those words.

What has been the situation in the coal industry? There has been a steady decline in production and unhappily an even greater decline in consumption and there is very little if any real hope for the future of the industry. Indeed, now we are having applied what has become the almost universal remedy of this government that applies to all these problems when they become urgent—we had it with the Pine Point railway the other day —another inquiry has started. That is what happened.

I wish now to say something about the fisheries and I shall commence by quoting what the Prime Minister said in his speech at Cambridge, Nova Scotia, on June 3, 1957, as reported in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of June 4:

> Touching on agriculture and fishing, he said that there was a need for a prices board which would make provision for support prices—fair and reasonable—set at the start of the production season.

Mr. MacEwan: The hon. member is filibustering his own speech.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Prime Minister also had some things to say about the 12-mile limit. I will admit I am not going to attach undue importance to that because he found as we found that it is one thing to want something that you have to get from other countries and it is another thing to get it, but this promise of a prices board which would make fair and reasonable provision for support prices set at the start of the production season is certainly something entirely within the control of this parliament. It could be done if the government saw fit to do it.

An even more categorical statement was made by the Prime Minister in the 1958 election at Charlottetown as recorded in several newspapers. This speech was made on February 27, and was reported in the Toronto Star of February 28:

Prime Minister Diefenbaker intimated here last night that a Conservative government will place a floor price under fish and contended the agricultural support bill passed last session will provide "crash insurance" for all farm products.

There is no question that there and at Halifax, Saint John, Yarmouth and a number of other places in the Atlantic provinces, in fishing areas, the same sort of assurances were given particularly in the 1958 election. We have had floor prices and deficiency payments for almost all agricultural products except potatoes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Corn?

Mr. Pickersgill: There is not much corn grown in the Atlantic provinces although at certain seasons there may have been some who thought that corn was being distributed.

Mr. Phillips: Fermented or otherwise?

Mr. Pickersgill: There is just one other reference I should like to make at this point. This statement appears in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of March 25, 1958, reporting on a speech made the previous day in Halifax by the Prime Minister:

His government, he told the audience, was moving to stabilize prices for farm produce, and consideration is now being given to bring about "the application", on a similar basis, of this measure as it affects fish products.

At Yarmouth, on March 25, as reported in the Gazette of March 26, in a Canadian Press release, the Prime Minister is reported to have said:

Prime Minister Diefenbaker today promised federal price supports under fish and a firm stand on protection of Canadian inshore fisheries against foreign trawlers.

The report of the same meeting carried in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of March 26, contained the following:

"The great difficulty for the fisherman", he said, "is that the price of things he must buy is going up, while the price of what he has to sell is not keeping pace.

If there is any industry in this whole country of which that is true it is the fishing industry. The article continues:

We have in mind to provide for the fisherman, legislation similar to that provided for agriculture. Under the latter program, he said, a floor price was decided in relation to the farmer's costs.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Of course, nothing of that kind has been forthcoming. Not only that, but in view of the failure of the fisheries in some parts of the Atlantic provinces and particularly on the northeast coast of Newfoundland last season it is regrettable that nothing happens when other ameliorative steps are suggested.

In many ways, of course, the gravest situation of all is that which has resulted in the Atlantic provinces because of the disproportionate incidence of unemployment in those provinces.

In the same speech in Charlottetown to which I have already referred and on many other occasions throughout the country is recorded the Prime Minister's most definite pledge of all. This has been placed on the record on several occasions but I do not apologize for putting it on again. This is to be found in the Toronto Star of February 28, reporting on a speech made in Charlottetown.

"I will make one more promise," the Prime Minister asserted. "I make this promise. My pledge is to every man and woman in this nation who is unemployed. So long as I am Prime Minister no one will be allowed to suffer in this nation."

The latest figures, I think, speak for themselves and are very eloquent. The latest figures, as produced in the release on the unemployment situation for the month of April, which were released on May 20 last, for Canada as a whole show that while in March the unemployment was 8.6 per cent of the labour force;—and these are the lower, or D.B.S. figures, not the very much higher figures in the listings of persons actually seeking work—in April, 1958 they were 8.62 per cent. In April, 1959 we were very gratified that it was only 7.3 per cent. That is still a very high level of unemployment for the nation as a whole. But when you compare the national figure with the figure for Newfoundland, which on April 19, 1958 was 24.07 per cent, and April, 1959, 28.2 per cent, there is not much ground for feeling very optimistic. When you take the three maritime provinces you find it was 16.93 per cent in April, 1958 and it is still 12 per cent. There is not much ground for optimism. These figures, of course, are very much higher than they are in Ontario; higher still than they are in the prairie provinces where the unemployment is the lowest in the country, or even in British Columbia. Quebec, of course, comes fairly close to the maritime figure.

There is no doubt that if at the present time we had on a national basis unemployment at the level it is in the four Atlantic provinces today it would be a major calamity to this country, and for that area it is a very serious thing. To a great extent at least the suffering is ameliorated because that area is part of the national economy and it enjoys the advantages of the national social security and other national welfare benefits. They do not provide employment but they do at least take away some of the rigors of unemployment that were felt 25 years ago; nevertheless, it is a serious situation that calls for serious action. I should like to commend to the government, before I conclude what I have to say, the series of editorials which appeared in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, an independent newspaper, entitled, "A Blueprint For Atlantic Advance". I am not going to take the time of the house to read them or even to quote from them; I just draw them to the attention of hon. members. I think all hon. members have probably at one time or another received a copy—certainly, all of us from the Atlantic provinces, I am sure, have—containing some very valuable suggestions for action which, it seems to me, should be considered, not in the way in which this government so often considers problems but with a view to early action.

Now, sir, having taken rather longer than I had intended to take, I shall conclude by moving, seconded by the hon. member for Kent, New Brunswick (Mr. Michaud);

That all the words after the word "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

this house regrets the failure of the government to keep its election promises to the people of the Atlantic provinces, and regrets further its failure to take measures to strengthen, in the light of acute unemployment in the area, the basic economy of the Atlantic provinces.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the house that I will not be taking as much time as the hon. gentleman who has just preceded me, for obvious reasons, but one in particular, namely that this debate is very much abbreviated, as we know. If time permitted, there are 11 other members here from Nova Scotia besides myself, everyone of whom would like the opportunity of standing and refuting the alleged arguments which the hon. gentleman has made this afternoon, in addition to the hon. members from New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. Therefore, I am going to try to be relatively brief.

The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton), to whose department the hon. member made specific reference, will probably have some things to say in connection with this, and then we hope there will be time to deal with other matters.

In the first place, Mr. Speaker, this is an intriguing debate, and it was rather intriguing to hear some of the advertisements read which were dated June 8, two years ago. Two years ago, the day after tomorrow, this government was elected to office, and I do not know of any greater compliment that could be paid to a government than a motion such as this, at this late date, which we hope is near the end of the session. It is one of those substantive motions which presumably is to criticize the actions of the government in connection with its administrative responsibilities, because the rules say that it is the administrative responsibility. What do we have? We have an hon. member spending an hour and a half reading election advertisements which were published two years ago, and that is all they can say about this government after it has been in office for two years. Certainly, no other government could have received that compliment at the hands of the opposition.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No other government made as many promises.

Mr. Nowlan: No other government made such promises. Look at the statement made by Mr. Henry Hicks when he came back after being up here and seeing how the preceding government had promised and had failed to carry out its promises. What of the statement made by the late lamented personal friend of mine and of us all, Hon. Angus L. Macdonald, when he was premier and came up here and attempted to get certain promises from the government. As a matter of fact, he did get a promise about the development of power. He got it back in 1945 or in 1946, and it was not until 1956, 10 years later, as a deathbed repentance by Hon. Walter Harris, who saw that the sands of time were running against him and the tide was going out, that he brought in this alleged maritime provinces development to redeem in part a promise they had made over 10 years before to Angus L. Macdonald when he was up here as a head of a maritime delegation.

Speaking of promises, I remember the posters in the election of 1955 or 1953. What were they; what did we see? We saw a picture of the Bluenose, the motor vessel, steaming from Yarmouth to Bar Harbour at 12 or 14 knots an hour, with a bone in her teeth, carrying passengers galore and yet, as a matter of fact, as we found out only a few days before, although they had a bottle of champagne ready for the launching of the ship, they forgot to put the engines in the boat. My hon. friend talks about promises!

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the minister a question? Is the Bluenose not operating pretty successfully?

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, very successfully, indeed, after we drew attention to the fact that she could not operate until they put in the engines.

The solicitude of the hon. member for the maritimes is really touching; it is just touching. I remember how he always used to respond so sympathetically, when he sat on this side of the house, to the arguments which we advanced on behalf of the maritimes. You could see the gleam in his eye; you could see the approbation. I am sure that he must have urged his colleagues to do some of the things which he talked about this afternoon but apparently he was unable to convince them.

He regrets the low standard of the economy. He referred to unemployment in the maritime provinces. He said that if the same degree of unemployment prevailed in the nation as a whole it would be a national disaster. I think, Mr. Speaker, that there is some justification for such a statement if the figures that the hon. member gave are correct. I have no doubt that he checked them but, after all, they deal with seasonal unemployment there. Lumbering operations have stopped. There is a great deal of unemployment in the fishing industry at the moment and these figures are not representative of industrial unemployment whatsoever in this nation.

I should like to draw to his attention something that originated with the dominion bureau of statistics. I have not got their publication, to tell the hon. gentleman the truth, but he quoted with approbation a few moments ago an editorial from the Halifax Chronicle-Herald and I can tell him that this statement is reproduced in an editorial in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of today.

> The employment expansion in the Atlantic region was greater from March to April this year than in the same period of the last three years. In April an estimated 459,000 persons had jobs, about 18,000 more than in March and 24,000 more than a year ago.

I think that disposes of the hon. member's argument. In addition, Macleans Building Reports has a rather interesting commentary. These provinces which are so poverty stricken, these provinces which have been so grossly betrayed by this government, these provinces which have sunk to such a hopeless level, according to the dire and gloomy statements of the hon. gentleman, what is their record with respect to building? In Canada as a whole for the first five months of this year construction is down below the level of last year but in the Atlantic region there is a gain of 9.6 per cent this year compared with last year, the largest gain in any area in the Dominion of Canada. In the Atlantic area nearly $100 million has been applied for by way of loans for construction within the first five months of this year.

Of course the economic situation there is not as good as one would like to see it. One never is satisfied. We are looking forward, we are hoping and planning and we intend to make progress day after day and year after year. We have made and are making substantial progress in the maritime provinces and the figures to which I have referred at least bear that out. The hon. member referred to the platform on which we agreed and I must express my appreciation for his compliment on the draftmanship of some of us who were present at those Atlantic conferences. He also paid the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) a great compliment by reading at great length extracts from speeches made by him in various parts of the maritime provinces. I had the pleasure of hearing him at the meeting in Cambridge in my own constituency, at Halifax and at the wind-up meeting of the campaign in Sydney. I can vouch for the fact that the Prime Minister made these statements. I can vouch for the fact that he intended them to be believed. I vouch for the fact that the Prime Minister and the government are carrying out the pledges which were made at that time.

This government has been in power for two years and during that time an election and an economic recession have intervened. We do not pretend to be supermen. We do not pretend to be able to achieve miracles. We do not pretend that we are perfect. But we do say that in the two years we have been in office we have done more for the maritime provinces, for the Atlantic area, than the former government did in at least the preceding 25 years. The hon. gentleman could not help himself, of course, but he was good enough to give us credit for the maritime adjustment grants which we introduced at the first session after we came into office whereby the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland each receives $7,500,000 as a special adjustment grant and the province of Prince Edward Island receives $2,500,000, a total of $25 million, this to last during the currency of the dominion-provincial agreements.

These adjustment grants were sought from the preceding government for years. The maritime premiers representing all the maritime provinces made pleas for these or comparable grants and every time they were turned down. They were coldly rebuffed because it was taken for granted that the people of the maritime provinces, having voted Liberal for so many years, would continue to do so and therefore they did not have to pay any attention to their pleas and they just took them for granted. It was not until, as I said, the handwriting was seen on the wall that the previous government attempted to deal with the situation at all.

My hon. friend has gone to some length this afternoon to prove that the coal subvention policy inaugurated by this government for the development of thermal power within the maritime provinces was the same scheme as was proposed by the preceding government and particularly by the Hon. Mr. Winters and the Hon. Mr. Harris. I say categorically, without going into the details, that there is practically no similarity between the two programs whatsoever. One was a deathbed repentance brought about on the eve of an election whereby the former government saw that they would have to do something. They did not know what they should do. They had not given any consideration to the problem and apparently did not have anyone to advise them very well. As a result they came up wtih some sort of crackbrained scheme which would not have worked. The proof that it would not have worked is to be found in the fact that the provincial governments of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island—I believe I am correct with respect to Prince Edward Island—said that the scheme would not work and they would not accept it.

We campaigned in May and June of 1957 primarily on the thermal scheme. That was the main matter which we discussed. At that time we said that their plan would not work because the plants were to be owned by the federal government. I noticed that my hon. friend was a little bit vague this afternoon and said that somehow they could be transferred to the provincial government.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the minister does not want to be unfair.

Mr. Nowlan: I certainly do not.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was very precise about it. I said they were to be owned in the first instance by the federal government with an option to purchase by the provinces.

Mr. Nowlan: What the option to purchase was was one of the terms which was always in dispute because there was correspondence, as my hon. friend knows, and telegrams between the premiers of the two provinces and the responsible officers here as to the definition of those terms. There was no satisfactory definition as far as the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick were concerned. Our proposition was that these plants would be built by the federal government and sold outright to the provinces so that we would have a centralized operation instead of the Northern Power Corporation coming in and operating the power plant in one place and the province operating the plant in another place, which we said was absolutely impractical and impossible.

As to the question of the use of coal, the former government's proposal was that coal should be provided, as I recall it, so that energy could be produced at cost. There was no definition of "cost" and none was ever suggested. Mr. St. Laurent said that whatever the cost was that was the cost that would have to be paid for power. As has been pointed out by the Prime Minister and by every hon. member from Nova Scotia who came here in 1957, as was pointed out by the premier of Nova Scotia, that was absolutely ridiculous. Unless there was some definition of "cost" how could it be known whether there would be any benefit to the province? It might be that the costs would be far greater than we were paying and no purpose would be served whatsoever by the federal government building these plants or transmission lines. In the proposals submitted by this party the matter of "costs" was determined. It was agreed that a subvention would be paid so as to permit the coal to be competitive with coal landed in Ontario and reduce the cost of power to what we thought would be a price competitive with that for power produced by coal in other parts of Canada. Those were two of the major differences between the two schemes.

Of course one might say that this is political but it is not an effective answer. All of these matters were raised during the 1957 campaign. The claims pro and con were made by the respective parties, the Liberals saying theirs was better. They never said it was identical with ours. We were saying that we had something that was different and that was better. What happened? On election day ten out of twelve members supporting the scheme advocated or supported by the premier of Nova Scotia and advocated by this party were elected and only two of the hon. gentlemen supporting the other scheme were elected. Then six months later those two fell by the wayside and 12 members were elected to this house. That is the judgment of the people of Nova Scotia as to the relative merits of the two schemes.

I must say this. My hon. friend also, in dealing with the statement made at Fredericton by the then prime minister, had something to say about it. He has the same difficulty, although he smoothed it over, that they had in trying to explain it to the electors and as did a colleague of his, the minister of public works at that time from Nova Scotia, who attempted to explain the speech on the platform in Nova Scotia, failed and quit trying to give any answer at all because he said it was not understood. That was the only explanation that was given. Certainly no one else ever understood it and it has not been understood today either. Certainly the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate understands it less than does anybody else. At any rate, if you accept that speech at its face value, the coal would still be under the ground under any circumstances.

Something has been said about coal. Perhaps I should say a word about coal right now. I did not want to interrupt my hon. friend because I have interrupted him several times. He stated that in the election we promised that we would increase the sale of coal. There is no doubt that we promised subventions.

Mr. Pickersgill: To increase the production of coal.

Mr. Nowlan: To increase the production of coal. There is no doubt that we made a promise with respect to subventions on the movement of coal in the maritime provinces and I stand by that promise. I do not recall —although I do not deny it; I should like to see the record—that any specific promises were made with respect to an over-all increase in the production of coal or the consumption of coal as compared with those areas. But this is something of what we have done in so far as coal is concerned. When we came into office we increased the preference on Canadian coal for use in dominion public buildings so that coal would get a preference of 20 per cent in competitive bidding against other coals. As a result of that preference it is estimated by the department that the increased consumption of Canadian coal amounted to over 200,000 tons a year. We have paid out money already on this thermal scheme to which the hon. gentleman referred. It is not something that is going to be done in the future; it was not something that was going to be done when the province requested that it be done. I can assure you that, in my opinion, the province would never have requested this federal government or any federal government to carry out the scheme which they proposed at that time. Hence the scheme would not have been in being at this time.

This government has paid subventions on the movement of coal within the maritime provinces, a matter to which the hon. gentleman referred dubiously. He rather questioned the accuracy of the Prime Minister's report. The Prime Minister was dealing with specific and definite suggestions for the use of thermal plants in the maritime provinces to generate power for industrial use. Since we got the scheme into operation we have paid out over $1,692,933 in subventions on the movement of coal in the maritime provinces for thermal plants there. That subvention is used to reduce the cost of power not to the householder but to industrial plants only so that we can assist in the development of industry. All of that benefit has been passed on for industrial development within the maritime provinces. I may have a word or two to say on that matter a little later on. That of course, was an entirely new subject but it was something which we promised. We said that if we were elected we would inaugurate this dual system of assisting in the building of thermal plants and transmission lines in the maritime provinces. That has been extended to Newfoundland as well. That was one phase of it.

The other phase was that we would pay subventions on the movement of coal in the maritime provinces to service these plants so that the benefit would be passed on to the industrial consumer. As I said, on that subvention alone we have paid out over $1,692,000. As to the movement of coal, there is no doubt, as the hon. gentleman said, that coal production suffered in this country. I want to point out to him this fact, although he undoubtedly knows it. Coal production has suffered in every coal producing area in the world as far as I know, certainly in the western world or the free world. The degree of unemployment here, bad as it is, has been less than elsewhere. To any man who is unemployed even for a day, it is a serious thing to him. To be unemployed for 40 days is an extremely serious thing. There have been miners who have been unemployed for a period of 40 days in the maritime coal fields. I think all of that is over. There may be a few of those left in one or two pits. But had it not been for the subsidy policy which this government inaugurated and put into effect the degree of unemployment would have been double or treble what it has been during this year. As I said—and I want this to be understood—the degree of unemployment in the past year in the Nova Scotia coal field has been less than the degree of unemployment in any other coal field in the western world—and the figures to prove that are there from the dominion coal board. Whether you take as an example Germany, Britain, Virginia, Pennsylvania or wherever you go, the number of men employed two years ago, the increase of unemployment is greater in every other coal field in the world. That is not a mere accident, Mr. Speaker. That fact is in part at least—and in substantial part—owing to the generous subsidy provisions which this government put into effect in order to maintain a high degree of employment in these Nova Scotia coal fields and so that the Canadian product was upheld and its place was not taken entirely by coal imported from the United States.

Last year, the fiscal year ended in March 31, we moved 425,928 tons or in round figures 426,000 tons of coal into Ontario—despite a drop in industrial demand, despite a tremendous fall off in United States imports—at a cost of $1,938,000. It is the first time Canadian coal moved into Ontario in any appreciable quantity since before the war or since about 1937 or 1938. This government, by a subsidy policy has brought Nova Scotia coal back into the markets of Ontario, as I said at a substantial cost. This coming year, the year ending March 31 next, it is estimated that we will move into Ontario alone 850,000 tons of coal as compared with 450,000 tons last year or twice as much and the total cost of that movement will be over $12 million for the entire subsidy program, or $4,300,000 more than we paid out last year. Yet my hon. friends ask what we have done for the maritime provinces.

In the past, when we have been suffering from recession, when we have not had surpluses but have had deficits, we have gone ahead with our social security measures and have done everything that this government has done. We are also providing 50 per cent more for the movement of our coal from the maritimes to Ontario than was ever provided by our predecessors. Of course, we also established a new principle in connection with it. The Nova Scotia government is acting in partnership with us and to the extent of 20 per cent of the increased subsidy to a maximum of $500,000 the Nova Scotia government will co-operate.

Mr. Speaker, one could go on to speak at length on the coal matter, but I do not think it is necessary. I think the record of this government is clear in so far as coal is concerned. Despite the unfortunate period in which we have been operating, despite the shrinkage in demand, the industrial recession and everything else, I think it is clear that we have established here a record of which any government could be properly proud and of which the people in the coal mining areas of Nova Scotia, the maritimes and Cape Breton are appreciative. Make no mistake about that. The situation is one which is giving and will continue to give this government concern because we want to see the coal industry put on a firm basis. We want to see employment maintained there.

My hon. friend made some remarks,—I do not want to be unkind and I do not want to say sneering remarks—light remarks, about the fact we were taking the same attitude toward this problem as we were taking toward other serious problems. Here is a news story in the Cape Breton Post Record which is headed, "No More Idle Time". Then, underneath that heading there are the words, "Government praised". This news story reads in part as follows:

Promises to Atlantic Provinces

> Because of increased government subventions, there will be no more idle times this year in Nova Scotia coal mines, after June, district vice-president Stephen Delhanty told the regular session of the Princess local of the united mine workers of America Saturday night.
> He highly commended the federal government along with the provincial government of Nova Scotia for coming forward with assistance, without which there would be a great deal more distress in the coal industry in this province.

I could go on reading that laudatory article for quite a few minutes, Mr. Speaker, but this is a case where repetition is not necessary. The facts are so obvious they speak for themselves, and there is no necessity for repeating them.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the minister goes on to another subject, perhaps he will permit a question. Did I understand the minister to say, as I think he did, that he did not recall any promise made by his party before the election of 1957 to increase coal production? I have here an advertisement published by his party which contains this sentence:

> Your Progressive Conservative candidates are in favour of a policy that will increase coal production.

Mr. Nowlan: We were certainly in favour of it and we supported a policy which has increased and will continue to increase substantially the demand for coal in the thermal plants of the Atlantic provinces. As I pointed out here a moment ago, the answer to that is that last year we increased the market in Ontario from 450,000 tons to 510,000 tons and we hope to increase it this year to 850,000 tons.

My hon. friend made some reference to the fact that we were going to refer this matter to a royal commission. He infers that this is a delaying procedure. I have already answered that. If there is any delaying procedure in what we have done in the last two years, in the accomplishments we have attained, then the miners of Nova Scotia will pray for more and more delay, and a continuance of it. Make no mistake about that.

We also realize that the coal industry is in a critical condition. There are problems facing that industry which have to be solved, and this is true all over the world. The competing fuels, gas and oil, as well as the possibility of atomic energy which is on the horizon, create a situation which deserves the most careful study, not simply the short term planning that we have had to do, frankly, since we came into power. We have been faced with one crisis after another, and the preceding government did nothing whatever to alleviate this problem. We did work out an interim solution, and we are continuing to do that. We want also, however, to arrive at a long term solution so that maximum employment can be provided in the coal fields.

It is because we are trying to make a long term study of the problems of that industry, and not because we are trying to sweep them under the carpet where our opponents left them, that we intend to refer this matter to a commission or some other body for study and report. Then, we shall arrive not only at the short term solution, as we have done, but also a long term solution, which will work in concert in the years to come.

My hon. friend read the catalogue from A to Z, as I have said, and referred to every speech the Prime Minister made, to all the advertisements that were published, and as I have said this points up the fact that we did have a positive program to put before the people. I do not intend to follow him on all the matters with which he dealt. He referred to transportation. It is true that we are suffering from a transportation problem. I wonder who would expect us to satisfactorily solve the transportation problem of the maritime provinces or in fact any area, but particularly the maritimes and the far west, in two years? I would think hon. gentlemen opposite would be amongst the last to deal with transportation, and reflect upon it, after having failed to deal with it during their term of office. As I recall it, the Turgeon commission was set up under the regime of the preceding government. If I recall it, the Turgeon commission made certain recommendations with respect to horizontal increases. They deprecated them and suggested that some alternative should be found.

When was that report, Mr. Speaker? My hon. friend at least has the advantage of knowing the subject on which he is going to speak, but we have to answer as we stand here, without any preparation and without any material in front of us. My own impression is that the Turgeon commission report was somewhere around the early fifties, 1951 or 1952. What has been done since 1952? We still have horizontal increases piled one upon the other, with all their detrimental effects.

Mr. Chevrier: Is the hon. member aware that the royal commission on transportation chaired by Mr. Turgeon made no substantial recommendations with reference to horizontal increases?

Mr. Nowlan: I do not know how you spell that word "substantial".

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Mr. Chevrier: I will take out the word "substantial", then.

Mr. Nowlan: There will not be any semantics about it. As I said, I am speaking from memory and I do not have the Turgeon commission report in front of me. If I am not mistaken, the Turgeon commission in its report referred pointedly to horizontal increases—perhaps the reference was in the report of one of the commissioners, I shall qualify it to that extent—and their detrimental effect.

Mr. Chevrier: Does my hon. friend recall that when he was on this side of the house he and the Prime Minister, amongst others, said that if they were in office they would remove the effects of horizontal rate increases? What have you done about it?

Mr. Nowlan: As I said, my hon. friend is also now going back into what was said by us several years ago. This is a compliment. As I said, we have not accomplished everything that we set out to do because there were so many things left undone by the preceding government it is going to take us some time. I do not want to prophesy, but I doubt very much if we could accomplish everything that should be done in the first four years. We will probably have to be re-elected for eight, ten, twelve or fourteen years in order to correct all the ills that were left behind by our predecessors.

However, we have taken two positive steps in connection with this matter of transportation. We have taken steps in connection with the problem referred to by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill)—his reference was lengthy and possibly exaggerated—that is, the incidence of freight rates upon the east and the west. We have provided a sum of money to alleviate the impact of these increases. This is a temporary thing because it will not cure the disease from which the people in the east and in the west are suffering, namely, high freight rates. Frankly, I doubt if anybody else can prescribe a cure at the moment, and that is why we have set up this royal commission. We do not want to sweep the problem under the carpet, but we want to make an exhaustive study of the problem. The instructions are to proceed with that study as rapidly as possible so that we can get an answer to the problems and carry out, in so far as it is humanly possible, the pledge we made with respect to transportation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Nowlan: Surely.

Mr. Pickersgill: Has the minister not forgotten, in his catalogue, that in the year 1957 the previous administration, which he says did nothing, increased the subvention under the Maritime Freight Rates Act by 50 per cent for all freight shipped out of the maritime area?

Mr. Nowlan: I have not the figures in front of me, but if there was an increase of 50 per cent that shows how miserably low it was prior to that.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the minister another question? If the minister thinks it was so miserably low why did the government not increase it?

Mr. Nowlan: We did increase it. We increased it as soon as we got into office.

Mr. Chevrier: You did not.

Mr. Nowlan: Perhaps I misunderstood the hon. member.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was referring to the subvention under the Maritimes Freight Rates Act which was increased from 20 per cent to 30 per cent—a substantial increase—by the previous administration in 1957.

Mr. Nowlan: I beg your pardon, I thought you were referring to something else. But in this connection I want to point out that when the increase in rates came into effect after the last decision of the board of transport commissioners we immediately took steps to alleviate the burden on the Atlantic provinces. We also took steps to alleviate the weight on the purchases of feed grain under the feed grain subvention measure. In various other ways, too, we sought to modify the burden imposed by the new rates.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just as we did.

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. gentleman and I could disagree about this from now until doomsday without getting anywhere. I am prepared to let the record stand as it is.

The hon. gentleman quoted from the Halifax Herald blueprint for the Atlantic provinces. I agree that this is useful reading and I think it should be read by every member of the House of Commons from east to west. The Halifax Herald has done a great deal of work on this subject. But I would point out that the hon. member referred only to this one book, which refers to the future, and avoided reading any of the editorials which have appeared from time to time in the past and which have so often commended the government for its work in dealing with problems which have been outstanding for a quarter of a century. I suggest the hon. member might also have referred to a few of those tributes.

As I said, I do not think there is any point in discussing further the question of coal or transmission lines or of the subvention on the movement of coal within the maritime provinces. The record is there. It is a record which everyone may see, and I am sure it is one which has met with the approval of the people of the maritimes, and which will continue to do so.

There have been other things which this government has done in connection with the maritimes, not all of the same calibre as the subvention or the $7,500,000 grant. For instance, we have the federal government deciding to build an institution at Springhill, a federal government institution which will provide substantial employment after it has been built. Recognizing the special problem of that town, the government has made a special contribution as, of course, it should, as a measure of assistance following the disaster. Thus we have taken a step which we feel will help in the industrial development of the town.

I am reminded of this, also. The hon. gentleman deplored the lack of industrial development in the maritime provinces. I wonder if he saw in the papers on Friday reports of the fact that a Swedish firm had announced its intention of building a $40 million paper mill in the province of Nova Scotia, work to begin within a few months. This will mean the spending of over $10 million a year in the province in wages and in the purchase of pulpwood, and it represents one of the greatest contributions to the industrial development of Nova Scotia, other than the coal industry, which has ever taken place in this country.

I am not saying that the present government deserves any particular credit for this, because this has been primarily the achievement of the provincial government.

Mr. Pickersgill: And the preceding provincial government.

Mr. Nowlan: The preceding government? No, because Hon. Mr. Hicks, after reading about it in the paper—and no doubt he read all of the Halifax Herald, not just favoured extracts from it—said that this development would be of no use to Nova Scotia at all and was not in the interest of the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Nowlan: O, Lord.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the minister not aware of the fact that it was Mr. Hicks who began the negotiations for the Swedish company to come there?

Mr. Nowlan: Exactly in the same way as the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) commenced negotiations for health insurance back in 1916 or 1917 when Mr. King first thought of it. At any rate, Mr. Hicks was quoted in the paper as saying that this would not be in the interest of the province of Nova Scotia. It shows how they learn nothing, or how they forget nothing. Who was it, the Bourbons or the Liberals; it is synonymous, anyway. But in 1925, 1926, and 1927 when another government in Nova Scotia established the Mersey Paper Company, which has been more important to the development of the industrial life of southwestern Nova Scotia than anything else, the Liberals attacked it and criticized it and said it would be no use to Nova Scotia. Now history is repeating itself with regard to the situation in the eastern part of the province. But that is simply an aside.

This government does not claim credit for this particular development, except that if the hon. member is correct in saying that Mr. Hicks deserves credit in originating this —and I do not for one moment accept that; I know it is not correct—if that is correct, then he obviously failed because it was necessary to get this government in power in Ottawa in order to create the proper climate so that the development could proceed. So much for industrial development.

The hon. gentleman was worried about the location of defence forces in Nova Scotia and in the maritime provinces. Had the hon. member listened to the radio this morning he would have heard about an R.C.A.F. plane coming from a constituency of which I am rather proud—coming from the R.C.A.F. station at Greenwood—which took off from that base yesterday, flew to Ireland, turned around and came back non-stop and then landed at Gander, unable to proceed further because of the weather. We have there one of the largest air bases in the western world. That base was constructed many years ago, but it has been developed and is still being developed, and served by those magnificent planes with those excellent people looking after them. It is going to be one of the bases for anti-submarine warfare. At least it will be prepared for this vital role in the defence structure of this country. I do not know of a single defence base, certainly in Nova Scotia, which has been closed.

There is a large camp outside Fredericton which was built by the preceding government, and I know that according to the press —and the press may be wrong; apparently all speeches made by Liberal leaders at Fredericton are suspect and possibly not accurate—report of a speech made by the Liberal leader at Fredericton he said that two cabinet ministers in the maritime provinces have been able to maintain defence bases in their constituencies but that if he were elected to office those bases would be closed and the men would be moved to Fredericton.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Nowlan: Those bases, at least, have not been closed as yet. I do not intend to develop this further.

The figures were put on the record the other night by the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. O'Hurley) showing the increase in defence production orders in the maritime provinces during the last year as compared with the preceding year. There has been a substantial increase. As at March 3, 1958 the contracts awarded for construction and maintenance in the maritime provinces amounted to $22,500,000, representing more than 22 per cent of the total awarded for the period for all of Canada. That is a substantial increase. Although smoke stacks may not be dotting the horizon at the moment the foundations have been laid whereby through thermal power and otherwise assistance can be given to the development of industry. This government is different from the preceding government, it is using the instruments at hand including subventions on coal and consequent industrial development, and through the Department of Defence Production, will insist on a fair distribution of orders throughout the country and increase substantially the demand and the market for maritime products. This will be done through the government generally and perhaps particularly through the Department of Defence Production.

I have taken more time than I intended to take. That is the usual fate of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and myself. We are both Irish and perhaps we suffer because of that.

I mentioned that matter of Springhill and industrial development. Some industrial representatives from Springhill were talking to me today about certain matters on which they wanted certain information in order to establish another industry in that area. I have no doubt that because of co-operation between the provincial and federal governments there will be substantial developments there in years to come.

Reference was made to transportation problems. Only the other day the announcement was made of another ferry service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland to augment the existing service. Investigations are continuing with respect to the Prince Edward Island causeway and the results will be known before too long.

Consideration must also be given to the program of maritime marshland reclamation. This was brought in under the previous government but the expenditures have doubled and trebled during the years we have been in power and substantial works are being carried on at the moment.

I must say to my colleague, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough), that the industries in her city are setting a wonderful example for all of Canada. They have established a trend which is deserving of emulation. A textile plant operating in Hamilton moved to Yarmouth and is now providing substantial employment there. I commend this development to the attention of hon. members opposite and to people generally.

The hon. member referred to a textile plant in New Brunswick. I am not sure which one he meant but perhaps it was the Marysville plant. It is true that the machinery at the Marysville plant was up for sale and I believe was sold about a year and a half ago. But what has happened? An officer of the plant was in to see me within the last few days. The plant has been completely re-equipped with modern and efficient machinery and approximately 250 to 300 people are employed in that plant today.

The hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) referred to Beechwood and there are other developments to which reference could be made including new bridges. Talk about pledges. There are two bridges under way in New Brunswick including the one at Campbellton which has been promised for years and years in every federal election and was then forgotten until the next election came along.

One could go on and on but I have detained the house long enough. In conclusion I repeat what I said at the outset. This government in my humble opinion and I believe in the opinion of the maritime provinces generally has done more for the Atlantic provinces during the two years less two days it has been in office—that is not a fully accurate calculation because we did not take office immediately—than was done by previous governments in the 25 years they were in office and we will continue to do so during the years just as we will continue to work for the increased development of all of Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, before the hon. gentleman really resumes his seat I wonder if he would permit me to ask him a question which I did not want to interrupt him by asking. He stated during his speech that the scheme that was proposed by us for power development had not been accepted and never would have been acceptable to the government of Nova Scotia. Could he explain how it was that the present government of Nova Scotia had a bill adopted by the legislative assembly of Nova Scotia approving the thermal scheme that was submitted by us?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I have not the history in front of me and I am not prepared to answer that question. However, I strongly doubt the accuracy of that statement. I do not know how the premier could pass a bill approving of this project when he campaigned against it and in fact stood with the Prime Minister on a platform and publicly denounced it stating that his government would not accept it under any circumstances.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, well, a lot of people wondered about that.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. gentleman permit a question before he resumes his seat? Is the minister aware of the statement made by the president of Canadian Cottons Limited to the effect that the textile industry is in a very bad way. It has closed down the mill in Hamilton and threatens to curtail operations in Cornwall by 50 per cent.

Mr. Nowlan: I fully realize that the president made that statement and that the industry is facing problems now as it did when we came into office when a substantial degree of unemployment prevailed. I was merely pointing out that at least in the maritime provinces in contrast to the gloom referred to by hon. gentleman opposite the picture is a little brighter.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, all of us listened with a measure of delight to the reply that was made by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan). I noted among other things that again he made light of election pledges. This is not the earliest occasion on which he has told us that election promises in effect ought not to be debated at any great length in the house. His argument was that we rather ought to be debating the actions or inactions of the government instead of making continuous reference to election pledges. I can assure the minister that he will have to plead many more times yet before he persuades the opposition that it ought to ignore election pledges on the basis of which the government of the day was elected.

I thought the minister today was a very modest man indeed in that he admitted there were still many unresolved problems in the maritimes. He claimed that the government is carrying out its election promises but he also reminded us that the answers involved long term solutions. Perhaps his plea that the government be re-elected three or four times is one reason for the delay and procrastination we have witnessed that has been allowed to continue in regard to election pledges that were given to the people of the Atlantic area. As I have said, the minister was a modest man today, much more modest than another minister who only several days ago told the people of western Canada that this government has already carried out its election pledges.

The minister claimed that the present government has done more for the Atlantic region in the last two years than the former government had done in 25 years. I regret very much that the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Van Horne) is not in the house at this time. I understand his health is not the best and we are hoping that he will be here again very soon. I should have liked him to be present today because I am convinced that he would not agree with the claim of the minister to the effect that this government has done more in the short space of its life for the Atlantic area than other governments have done in 25 full years.

I doubt very much if the unemployed miners in the Atlantic area would agree with that. I doubt if the producers of pulpwood would agree. I doubt if those engaged in kind. I doubt whether those connected with agriculture would support a claim of that health services, education or municipal governments would agree that more has been done in the last two years than in the previous 25 years.

The minister made a claim in regard to unemployed miners. He read an editorial to indicate that in the Cape Breton area there would be no more short time in the coal mines there. However, I have a telegram which was received this morning by my house leader, and it says:

> Membership of Phalen local 4529 united mine workers of America request assistance of low rate interest loan be made available to members affected by cutback. Household appliances are being seized by finance companies. Immediate assistance needed.
> Allan Foley
> President

I have another wire which was received last week from the head of district 26, united mine workers of the maritimes. Both of these telegrams originated in Glace Bay and the contents of the telegrams received certainly indicate that the miners are very much concerned about the problem of the lack of employment of a 40-hour week nature.

The minister made certain claims on behalf of the government's action. He said that more money had been voted this year to keep freight rates from rising again. He mentioned subventions on coal used within the maritimes, and he actually mentioned the extraordinary grants that were voted this year of $25 million for each year of a four-year period. However, in the main, the situation in regard to the Atlantic area of Canada is not being improved. It has not been improved for a long time. I should like to put on the record a clipping which indicates what the premier of Newfoundland had to say. The man is Premier J. R. Smallwood. He made a contribution at one of the earliest meetings of the Atlantic provinces economic council, and in reference to the federal government he said:

> If they—

And by "they" I assume he meant the federal government. I continue:

> If they are to show statesmanship they should make every province economically strong. Before we become second-class citizens of Canada, we will show the other maritime provinces how to get out of confederation.

This is taken out of a leaflet issued by the Progressive Conservative party, advice to their candidates, and the leaflet is headed "Federal-Provincial Municipal Relations".

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Was that the 1957 election?

Mr. Regier: I believe to all intents and purposes it was in the 1957 election, at least as far as I can assert.

There we have a leader of the government in one of the four Atlantic provinces who indicates that unless there is some sign of new leadership, of assistance on the part of the national government so that all Canadians may live as Canadians, he intends to show the maritimes how to leave confederation. I do think, Mr. Speaker, we ought to take what he says with a grain of salt because recently we have become used to some of his brave remarks. However, just the thought that he should be making that kind of statement, and that the Conservatives of the day should have decided that it was worthy of reprint, indicates that the problem is an old one.

The people of the Atlantic area have a claim on the people in other areas of Canada. In the first place, they have made a very great contribution to our very form of government in other parts of Canada; they have supplied many of the leaders in the fields of education, industry and of government in other areas of Canada. They played a large part in the early years in the development of other areas; and, therefore, when they now ask that they not be left behind they are merely asking that we begin to recognize the sacrifices and the contributions that they have made in the years gone by so that other areas of Canada might be opened up and developed. It is for this reason that they are not very excited about the prospect of opening up of the north. They feel, and I believe rightly so, that the raising of the levels of incomes of maritimers ought at least to have priority over the opening of yet another vast new area in Canada. They feel that they have not yet received adequate compensation for the opening up of western Canada.

The policies of the government in regard to the Atlantic area in the main, outside of the items listed by the minister, have been a continuation of a policy of neglect and a policy of procrastination. I notice in a news release, a Canadian Press dispatch of January 6, 1959, where:

> Alvin Hamilton, federal minister of national resources, said Monday the government has plans to revitalize Alberta's coal industry.
> He said the government is expected to announce further details of the plan during the next session of parliament.

We have not heard of those plans as yet. However, if the minister has very extensive plans in mind, whereby he hopes to revitalize that enterprise in Alberta, I am sure that those who have an interest in mining in the maritimes would also like to see him announce a plan whereby their enterprise might be revitalized.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I will send the hon. member a clipping from the Lethbridge Herald describing a new future for the Crowsnest pass.

Mr. Regier: I thank the minister and I shall look at the information in the newspaper he mentioned. I hope he will be equally aggressive in the restoration of the coal mining industry in the maritimes. It may well be that the government has decided that the policy enunciated by the Hon. C. D. Howe may be the right one; that if there is any area in Canada in which it is hard to obtain employment, maybe the best policy is to advise the people that they ought to leave the area. We remember very well one time when the implement workers came to Ottawa and presented a brief asking the government of the day to institute policies that would mean greater employment in their field of endeavour. In effect the advice they received was that if you cannot find employment in the farm implement industry you ought to move elsewhere where employment may be available.

Promises to Atlantic Provinces

I hold in my hand a clipping from the Montreal Gazette, dated May 1. This is also a Canadian Press dispatch out of Bell island, Newfoundland. It says:

> The federal government has termed this island of 12,000 people a "labour surplus area" which means it will pay the cost of moving miners and their families to other parts of Canada.

This is altogether different from the pledge that was made to the people of the Atlantic provinces by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) when he said that he would institute a new deal for them so that their sons and their daughters would not have to leave home. Now they declare the area a labour surplus area and help to finance the movement of people out of the district.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Would the hon. member permit a question? Does he recall that the A. V. Roe Company closed their mine suddenly and left 500 or 600 men out of work? Does he not remember that?

Mr. Regier: I am not prepared to take up the cudgels on behalf of any of the operators of these mines. However, I find it difficult to appreciate how in a number of Atlantic areas you have huge stocks of unsold coal and miners who are unemployed and yet we take the taxpayers' money to deepen the St. Lawrence seaway so that iron ore from Labrador and Quebec can be moved up the St. Lawrence seaway and, together with United States coal, be used to supply employment for people other than Canadians.

The minister said that it would take time to achieve greatness. If we are going to help the Atlantic area it might well be an act of greatness if ways and means could be explored whereby the iron ore of Labrador and Quebec might be smelted by use of the energy resources of the maritimes rather than using the taxpayers' money to subsidize the export of that iron ore so that outsiders can benefit and with the further result that, over a tariff wall, we have to buy back American manufactured goods. I believe that would be a wiser policy rather than to sit idly by and blame A. V. Roe or any other company that happens to make a decision that a mine must be closed.

We realize that the house has just passed the national energy bill. I can remember so well that my first reactions to maritimers came from impressions I gathered from one of the leading representatives of the maritimes in the House of Commons for many long years, Mr. Clarie Gillis, the former member for Cape Breton South. He sought the establishment of a national energy board for many long years while he was in the House of Commons. He meant such a board as would give adequate consideration to the place that coal might some day play in the development of Canadian industrial enterprises. Yet we find that the government of the day is establishing a national energy board which, under the legislation, will completely ignore that vital source of energy.

The people of the maritimes engaged in the fishing industry were assured that they would be given support prices and that such support prices would bear a relationship to the cost of production. Agriculture in the Atlantic area was also given assurances. In the meeting at Summerside on February 27, 1958 the Prime Minister said that each year before the crop year began the farmer would know the lowest price he would receive. I might add that it now seems that each year the farmer knows that he will receive a lower price. However, the farmer was assured that he would know the lowest price. The Prime Minister went on to say that that price, in order to assure the farmer of his fair share of the national income, would have to bear a fair relationship to the cost of production of the farmer and the Prime Minister added that that was what the farmers had been asking for.

We know that we have the Agricultural Stabilization Act. However, in the implementation of that legislation the prices that have been determined up until now have always borne a relationship to the prices paid in the previous ten years and the minister has never yet announced a floor price with any indication that it was being fixed at that level because he had taken the cost of production into consideration.

One member who has taken part in the debate has mentioned the need of adequate transportation for the people of the Atlantic area. The people of Prince Edward Island particularly need ferry service now, not the assurance that a new ferry is going to be built which will be available years hence, not the assurance that a survey of a causeway is being made. If the minister cannot invent more adequate reasons for not buying the ship Vacationland than he gave to the house the other day he can expect the people of Prince Edward Island to be very disappointed. It is pointed out in an editorial in the Charlottetown Guardian that the Vacationland can be bought for $3 million. It is also pointed out that it is estimated that the cost of making it adequate would be another $1 million and that a new ferry would cost at least $8 million and would not be available for several years yet. The minister mentioned 1961. We have heard these announcements on other occasions with respect to other matters. It might well be 1963 or 1964 and the people of the island feel that they cannot wait that long. May I call it six o'clock?

[Mr. Regier.]

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): May I adjourn the debate?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has asked to call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Speaker, when the house rose for the dinner recess I was emphasizing the fact that we owe much to those who live in the Atlantic provinces. Our leaders of the past and many of our leaders of the present were raised and educated in the Atlantic areas. The expense of the opening up of the rest of the dominion was to a great extent absorbed by those who now live in the Atlantic provinces. As Canadians they have rights. They are not asking for any hand-outs. I have noted with interest how at meetings of dominion-provincial premiers even such men as the premier of British Columbia and the premier of Saskatchewan have asked that the federal government do all within its power to help those in the Atlantic area. I, along with the Minister of National Revenue, realize that helping the Atlantic provinces is going to take a great deal of money, a great deal of energy and a great deal of imagination on the part of the government of the day so that the time may arrive when those living in the Atlantic area will have their economy restored to the point where their people can also have equal chances with us in the field of personal income, education, health and all the other matters that all of us are desirous of having. This requires a new deal as the Prime Minister indicated at election time, it calls for a time of greatness, not little bits and little pieces. It does not call for neglect or for procrastination so that, in the words of the Minister of National Revenue, the Conservatives might win two or three more times yet. It needs action now. The time of needed greatness that was mentioned is now.

It has often been mentioned that the resources of the Atlantic area are limited. Even if that were so we would be able to point to the people of Norway who, with their limited resources, have been able to achieve a standard of living that is almost unequalled in the western world. However, it is our contention that the resources are available. I indicated that we might well embark on a program of smelting the iron ore that is available in Labrador and in the province of Quebec. All these resources—the energy resources, the iron and the water—are available. We have the basic resources. Transport is not a serious problem.

I should like once again to refer to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) and to what he said in the speech he made in Calgary. These are his words:

> Canada must broaden and diversify its economy and the only way we can do that is make use of all our resources.

In the Atlantic area we have available resources that are not being utilized to the full. Even regardless of new resources and new enterprises, what about the enterprises that are now established? I maintain that our government should be able to do a great deal that would help the enterprises that are now established.

One of the first things I would advocate would be that the government encourage the people of the Atlantic area to have more purchasing power. One of the ways in which they might be able to do this is to encourage the establishment of unions, especially for those who work on the sea, the fishermen, and those who work in the woods of Newfoundland. Another thing which our government might do is to encourage Canadian ownership of the enterprises and industrial resources of the Atlantic area. This statement applies especially with regard to ownership of the coal mines and ownership of the enterprises having to do with the woods in that area. The Prime Minister assured Canadians that he would encourage the co-operative movement. Very little, if anything, has been done in this regard on the part of the government of the day. I believe that the government of Canada ought to encourage the activities of the Atlantic provinces economic council. Our government ought to consider the interests of the Atlantic area when amending tariffs and when considering freight rates.

Over the lunch hour I looked at what the Minister of Transport had to say last week. He said that the alterations to the Vacationland would cost $2 million. Even that amount in addition to the purchase price of $3 million would mean a total cost of $5 million. For the sum of $5 million the people of that island might have improvement almost immediately rather than having to wait for years hence for the possible expenditure, after many elections, of $100 million or more on a causeway. The province of Newfoundland needs regular railroads and it needs highways. The province of New Brunswick needs highways. All of those people need vast expenditures on behalf of health and educational services.

The Prime Minister won 25 of 33 ridings in the Atlantic provinces. He won them on the basis of his assurance that a new deal was on the way. The present practice of delay and procrastination, of only a little bit now and then, only enough to keep them at bay for the time being and of assuring them of a little bit after another election, is hardly good enough. This is a time for greatness. Four out of the ten provinces are involved. In this area Canada was begun. The potentialities are great for the building of Canadian unity and for real national development. Unless action is taken we may see a demagogue arising in the years ahead. We have had in the past some indication that the area is not averse to demagogues. We may have arising a demagogue who may make such an appeal to the electorate there that we may end up by being four Canadas rather than one. I am sure that none of us wants that to happen.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, my time is limited so I will reserve my comments for one or two key points. First of all, I think those of us in the house this afternoon recognized that the speech by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) set the Liberal party on a new low of imagination for the future of this country. I well recall one year ago in presenting the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act that for five days the hon. member was the leading member of the opposition in filibustering that bill, even to the extent of carrying the debate on into third reading. Now he stands up and says that it is a good bill. What a conversion in one year!

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. minister—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Pickersgill: I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member has completely misrepresented the position I took this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is the last member in this house to talk about misrepresentation. This afternoon he told this house that the previous prime minister of this country, Mr. St. Laurent, had offered coal subventions to the Atlantic provinces. I know the record as to this coal subvention equalization offer made by the previous government on April 29, 1957, less than six weeks before an election as a death bed repentance; it was only for one plant, the first one and no other. The hon. member claims that he has been misrepresented, but those are the facts and the records, and all he has to do to verify them is to contact the leader of the Liberal party in the province of Quebec, who took the records from my department to make sure that he could defend himself if he were attacked.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not true. Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege again, a question which concerns every member of the former administration in this house. The statement made by the hon. gentleman about my former colleague, the present leader of the Liberal party of Quebec, is unreservedly untrue.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): All my hon. friend has to do to establish the truth of my allegation is to read the records of Hansard when the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet, as he then was, put them on the record.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. minister, but it being 8.15 o'clock p.m. it is my duty pursuant to special order made Friday last to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith the question and any amendment now before the house.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS—SUGGESTED ADDITIONS TO MEMORIAL CHAMBER COATS OF ARMS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, this is the time which is usually taken up by hon. members stating grievances. At the outset I should say that Yukoners are somewhat hardened to the apparent lack of awareness, shall I say, of the Yukon on the part of a great many Canadians in all parts of the country. There exists a general unawareness of the very existence of the Yukon. This is a situation that apparently obtains across Canada. As one travels across the country one sees the coats of arms of various provinces displayed in air line terminals and other public buildings but the coat of arms of the Yukon is not in evidence. This is also true of Canada House in New York.

The very fact that the building is called Canada House suggests to me and other Yukoners that it should be representative of all of Canada and yet we find there an absence of the coats of arms of the Yukon and of the Northwest Territories. My concern this evening is not with this isolated instance. This is but one of a great many instances one could cite illustrating what I have referred to as a lack of awareness of the existence of the Yukon or, if you will, an absence of a tendency to include the Yukon in this sort of thing.

My observation this evening is much more serious and concerns the representation of all parts of Canada in the memorial chamber in this building. Before I pursue this thought any further I should say that upon my discussing the absence of the coats of arms of the Yukon and Northwest Territories in the main rotunda of this building last year with the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) action was taken between the last session and this and we now see these two coats of arms carved and evident in the rotunda of the building. In the memorial chamber, however, their absence is still felt.

On Armistice day in 1928 the then prime minister opened the memorial chamber with these words:

> In the name of the people of Canada in proud and grateful remembrance of 60,000 of her sons and daughters whose lives were given in the cause of freedom, I unlock the doors of this memorial chamber, and declare it henceforth open to the public.
> Here upon its walls is inscribed the record of their deeds, and upon its altar will rest the book of remembrance containing their names. This then is the very heart of Canada wherein their memory will be cherished forever.

The point I wish to make is that among the 60,000 dead of the first world war there were a goodly number of Yukon citizens who lost their lives. In this regard I might just mention that in November of 1914, Mr. J. W. Boyle of Dawson City, Yukon, later Lieutenant Colonel Boyle, on his own initiative raised the Boyle mounted machine gun detachment. It consisted of some 50 of all ranks. Boyle clothed these men in frontiermen's uniform and despatched them to Vancouver, where they were billeted at his expense. Included in that group was Hon. George Black who once occupied the chair in this house. The detachment was attached first to the 29th battalion and then to the 2nd Canadian Mounted Rifles Regiment. In June, 1915, the Yukon detachment, as it was then called, accompanied the latter unit to England, without horses or guns and was stationed in the Shorncliffe area. On the same ship bearing the detachment to England and I believe later to France was another former member of this house, the late Mrs. George Black. Some of the personnel went to France as reinforcements for the 2nd Canadian Mounted Rifles—converted from cavalry to an infantry battalion of the 3rd division—and other units in the field.

On June 14, 1916, now 33 strong, the detachment was renamed Yukon motor machine gun battery and brought up to an authorized strength of 4 officers and 55 men. Captain H. R. Meurling, an instructor at the Canadian machine gun school, assumed command. The battery went to Bramshott early in July, to join the 4th division as divisional troops. Motor cars and motorcycles were received later in July and six Vickers machine guns early in August. The unit crossed the channel on August 12, 1916, and became E battery of the 1st Canadian motor machine gun brigade.

The battery served at the Somme, October-November, 1916; Vimy Ridge, April, 1917; Hill 70, August, 1917 and Passchendaele, October-November, 1917. On March 22, 1918, the second day of the great German offensive, the motor machine gun brigade was ordered to the Somme in support of the British fifth army. It left the following day, and for twelve days harassed and hindered the enemy's advance.

On May 23 Captain Meurling was promoted and given command of another MG battery. On June 8, E battery, till then still known unofficially by its Yukon title, was broken up and absorbed into the 2nd Canadian motor machine gun brigade. Its commander at that time was Captain F. W. Thompson. The Yukon battery earned a number of decorations in the field, although details regarding decorations received and casualties suffered are not readily available.

In the memorial chamber the altar rests upon black marble steps which were the gift of Great Britain. Above it and around the steps of the altar are the Royal arms, the arms of Canada and the coats of arms of the provinces. The coats of arms of the Yukon and Northwest Territories are not included among the coats of arms of the provinces nor are they included in the golden book of remembrance embossed within which are the names and ranks of all casualties suffered across Canada during the first war. I feel that all hon. members of this house will agree with me, after having heard a brief history of the part that Yukon volunteers played in the last war, that she has earned her right to be included in the memorial chamber.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this government cure the omissions of the past by investigating the circumstances which I described this evening with a view to finding some way of carving the Yukon coat of arms on the altar of the memorial chamber. If the circumstances equally apply to the part played by the Northwest Territories in the first war, then I would suggest that the coat of arms of the Northwest Territories also be included. There is even a strong argument for its inclusion under any circumstances.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on the same subject?

Mr. Benidickson: On the same subject.

I think the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has chosen a most appropriate time for advancing a discussion of this kind, a time when we are all aware that our sovereign is on the high seas in her ship with the prince, coming to our shore.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Benidickson: She is flying to Newfoundland; that is correct. In consequence of that, we are all the more conscious of matters that are sometimes neglected over here, such as armorial bearings, heraldry and the like. Particularly because of the greater attention that is now being directed toward the north, to the Yukon and to the Northwest Territories, I think it is most appropriate that the hon. member has brought this up. I want to assure him that there would be strong support for this from this side of the house. I know that if the hon. member for Mackenzie River (Mr. Hardie) were in his seat at the moment he would certainly endorse this suggestion, as we all do on this side of the house. The hon. member for Yukon would be the first to admit that the approach must be a twin one for recognition of the crest of the Yukon and those that are in that fairly recently dedicated territory as well as in the Northwest Territory.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that those in charge of those matters, at a time when we are so concerned about traditions of this kind, should get the utmost attention from the government in the matter not only of our national crest but, as the hon. member has indicated, in the matter of the Memorial Chamber, and recognition in the building and in other places.

GRAIN—REQUEST FOR EQUALIZED DELIVERY QUOTAS

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the grievance I should like to raise this evening has to do with the grain producers of western Canada. Before launching into that, Mr. Speaker, I hope I may be allowed merely to say that had I not been dealing with this general subject I would have been very happy at this time to add the support of this group to the very pertinent remarks of the hon. member for the Yukon.

The issue that I wish to raise has to do with the very low delivery quotas prevailing at the present time in western Canada. It has to do with the very drastic falling off of lakehead shipments of grain through the seaway and the general adverse results as far as western grain producers are concerned. I have raised this matter a number of times this session on the orders of the day and I have received from the ministers evasive replies, misinformation and apparently a complete unawareness of the very adverse conditions prevailing at a great many marketing points. There are many reasons, perhaps, or a number of reasons why this situation is as bad as it is, but certainly one of the most important reasons is the fact that since the opening of navigation, lakehead shipments have been much lower this year than a year ago. I hold in my hand a Canadian Press report which appeared on June 1, and which reads in part as follows:

> Fort William. Only 55 million bushels of grain have been shipped from the lakehead during the 1959 navigation season compared with 104 million bushels in the corresponding period of 1958.

I had hoped when I raised this grievance, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) would be in his seat. In his absence, I sent a note over to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees). In fairness to the Minister of Transport I must say that he replied to me that he had a previous engagement which would make it impossible for him to remain in the chamber.

Mr. Creaghan: On a point of order, the minister is in the building, but perhaps not in his seat.

Mr. Argue: That has nothing to do with his note. Surely, the minister will acknowledge that what I said was completely accurate. I do not have to produce the note, surely.

The very drastic drop in shipments of grain through the lakehead is apparently brought about by the inability of the St. Lawrence seaway to handle grain shipments, along with other shipments, in the same volume this year as last year. Since the seaway opened there has been one report after another of congestion, of inability to move ships quickly through the canal, and generally of a situation of very great inefficiency. Because of this congestion, because of a lack of priority for Canadian basic products, the seaway has been unable to provide facilities for the shipment of large quantities of grain this year as compared with last year.

There was an editorial in the Montreal Gazette on June 1 dealing with the congestion of the Welland canal, and it had this to say:

Last year it was possible for Canadian ships to pass through the Welland canal in nine hours. This year it is taking up to 58 hours. Not only are the costs of these delays being added to what Canadians must pay, but the level of tolls, imposed for the opening of the waterway, is yet another addition to the cost structure.

It goes on to say:

Unless Canadian shipping is given reasonable priority in the Welland locks, the Canadian economy may be seriously injured by the St. Lawrence waterway instead of being aided by it, and this surely, after all that has been said about the waterway, would be the height of irony.

Because of the inability of grain shipments to be taken through the seaway in substantial quantities I suggest that now is the time for the government to consider this problem and to act. I was pleased this afternoon to hear that the Minister of Transport has made a request to the United States that its flotilla of ships that are to appear in the seaway should go through the canal locks at the rate of only two a day. I would go even further. I would say that if the appearance of those ships in the seaway is to adversely affect the shipment of Canadian products through the seaway, as would appear from reports in today's newspapers, reported by people who are authorities on the seaway, then it would be far better if United States ships stayed at home and if grain, iron ore and other Canadian products went through the seaway. Authorities are telling us that if they all go through at the same time it would make such a tie-up and such a mess that it will take a period of three weeks to unravel the conditions that are brought about by the appearance of so many ships.

Mr. Benidickson: These are military ships.

Mr. Argue: Yes, they are military ships, it does not matter what ships they are; they are going to block the canal.

I raised this question on May 21, Mr. Speaker. I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce to comment on the very drastic drop at that time from 72 million bushels being shipped through the seaway a year ago to 33 million bushels this year, and the minister replied as follows, as reported at page 3870 of Hansard:

I did not require notice of this question from the hon. member. The 47 Conservative members from the prairie provinces are also interested in this matter and have been talking to me about it in the interval. We are not dependent upon one lone figure to draw our attention to these important facts in Canada.

Then he goes on with a real clincher.

I make no comment with regard to the shipping and the seaway facilities; that is not my province.

Grain Shipments through Seaway

The Minister of Trade and Commerce, under whose department comes the sale, delivery and export of grain, says "I make no comment" as a result of a drop of 50 per cent in the shipment of grain through the seaway. I raised this question again on June 1. I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce the following question, as found at page 4196 of Hansard:

I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, arising out of the very drastic reduction in shipments of grain from the lakehead. Can the minister explain why shipments from the lakehead since the opening of navigation have dropped from 86 million bushels last year to only 42 million bushels this year, and whether anything is being done to speed up shipments through the St. Lawrence seaway?

The minister replied that farm deliveries were good and that quotas were satisfactory. He did everything but deal with the question I raised. Then I tried a supplementary question.

Mr. Harkness: What date was this?

Mr. Argue: June 1, page 4197 of Hansard. I asked the minister this supplementary question:

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to know whether there might be some improvement in this very drastic reduction in shipments out of the lakehead, and I am asking the minister whether he can make any statement on that point. I would like him to comment as to why almost consistently since the opening of navigation Canadian exports are down this year as compared with a year ago.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce replied:

Mr. Speaker, that last statement is quite incorrect. Canadian exports are holding up extraordinarily well.

Then I went on to say:

I am not talking about the year in question; I am talking about recent weeks since the opening of navigation. The graph put out by the minister's own department shows a very substantial reduction. I can send it across to the minister.

I tried the same question the next day and I had figures to substantiate the statement I had made before, namely that Canadian exports had dropped. I asked the minister to explain why Canadian exports from April 22 to May 20 this year were just 15.9 million bushels compared with 25.1 million bushels in the same period last year. After some crossfire the minister replied as follows:

It may well be that exports of wheat during the month of April have been slightly lower than a year ago—

He did not know that the day before but on June 2 he admitted they were down. They were down in April following the opening of navigation and they have been down in May of this year. I have in my hand the latest figures taken from the Canadian wheat board statistical summary and the board of grain commissioners weekly report. Overseas clearances of wheat from April 11 to May 27 this year amounted to 25.3 million bushels and in the same period last year exports amounted to 35.9 million bushels.

I am glad that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) is in his seat, I ask him if this very substantial drop in exports is not a serious matter, if it is not so important that the government should reply and explain why this very drastic drop in exports of Canadian wheat has taken place since the opening of navigation. When I put the question to the minister that the falling off of shipments from the lakehead might be having an adverse effect on Canadian exports he said no. He said that we had sufficient grain on hand at seaway ports and that even though the St. Lawrence seaway has been unable to handle the volume of grain that was handled a year ago there is enough at the seaway ports to take care of all exports.

I would suggest that that puts the matter in an even more serious perspective in that it shows that there has been no loss of export markets because grain was not available and yet, as I have said, from April 22 to May 27 there has been a drop in exports of wheat from 35.9 million bushels in the same period a year ago to 25.3 million bushels this year. These figures show that since the opening of navigation exports of Canadian wheat are not running anywhere nearly as high as they were a year ago and the situation in the present crop year, which has so far not been as bright as last year, is being made even worse in relation to the export sales of the other major exporting countries.

I have in my hand a Canadian Press article which appeared in the Globe and Mail of June 8 and is based on a dominion bureau of statistics report. It reads in part as follows:

> Canadian wheat and flour exports in the August-March period dropped to 188,100,000 bushels from 197,600,000 a year earlier despite a 9 per cent gain in the total market of the big four wheat shippers, the United States, Canada, Argentina and Australia.

From August to March of this year Canadian wheat exports were down 9.5 million bushels or 5 per cent from a year ago. In the same period United States exports were 298,200,000 bushels, up from 255,500,000 bushels a year ago, or an increase for the United States of 43 million bushels or 17 per cent. Argentina's exports were up to 62 million bushels this year from 48,500,000 a year ago, an increase of 13.5 million bushels or 28 per cent. Australia's exports were also up to 50,400,000 bushels this year compared with 46,400,000 bushels last year, an increase of 4 million bushels or 9 per cent.

In the wheat picture in the world today Canada's exports are down while exports by the United States, Argentina and Australia have increased substantially. When we ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce why Canadian exports are down he first of all denies it. Later he says that the reduction in the shipment of grain through the seaway has not adversely affected Canadian exports. So I ask, why has there been such a substantial falling off in Canadian exports since the opening of navigation compared with a year ago? If the grain does not go through the lakehead and through the seaway, if the grain pipe line, as it is called in popular terms, is plugged at Fort William and Port Arthur, this can only mean a falling off of deliveries of wheat and other grains by Canadian wheat producers.

For the period from April 22 to May 27 I find that a year ago farmers delivered 40.7 million bushels of wheat and that in the same period this year there has been a decrease in deliveries of more than 13 million bushels to just 27.3 million bushels. Deliveries from the farms are falling off as one would expect with such a drastic reduction in shipments of wheat and other grains through the lakehead. In the period April 22 to May 27 total deliveries of all grains from farms amounted to 49.4 million bushels a year ago and this year the figure is just 35.8 million bushels, a reduction of approximately 20 per cent this year compared with last year.

Mr. Speaker, the end of the crop year is not far away. The end of the crop year is July 31. Between now and July 31 the Canadian wheat board and the Canadian grain trade have approximately seven weeks in which to provide relative equality of treatment for the grain producers in the prairie provinces. Over the years I have been a strong advocate of a quota system but of a quota system that is equalized during the crop year. No one can expect that quotas can be equalized every day. Everyone who knows anything about the grain business nows that there are certain reasons why grain from time to time is taken from certain delivery points and not from certain other delivery points. But surely it should be the objective of any administration as well as of everyone who is attached to the grain trade in Canada to see to it that in so far as it may be possible provision is made for equal delivery quotas for all producers by the end of the crop year.

What is the situation now? The latest weekly report from the Canadian wheat board which came to my office today shows that of the three prairie provinces, Alberta is in by far the best situation. For regular quotas there were six points on a four-bushel quota; 135 points on a five-bushel quota; 170 points on a six-bushel quota and 174 points on a seven-bushel quota. In the province of Alberta 70 per cent of all regular delivery quotas were in excess of four bushels per acre, that is of the regular delivery quotas.

In the province of Saskatchewan, as to regular delivery quotas, there were 69 points on a three-bushel quota; 551 points on a four-bushel quota; 318 points on a five-bushel quota; 82 points on a six-bushel quota and 36 points on a seven-bushel quota. Unlike Alberta which has 70 per cent of its points on quotas in excess of five bushels per acre, Saskatchewan has just 11 per cent of the marketing points on this kind of quota in excess of five bushels per acre.

In Manitoba the situation is as bad and perhaps even worse. In Manitoba there are 88 points on a three-bushel quota; 219 points on a four-bushel quota; 50 points on a five-bushel quota; 12 points on a six-bushel quota and 3 points on a seven-bushel quota. In the provnce of Manitoba only some 4 per cent of the marketing points are on a quota in excess of five bushels per acre. This is a tremendous discrepancy. This means that for the great majority of the areas of western Canada, at those points most producers face a marketing quota of three bushels, four bushels or five bushels per acre. Yet at the same time there is a substantial number of points on a six-bushel and a seven-bushel quota. I am hoping that an extraordinary effort will now be made within the next few weeks to bring up the points with a low quota so that there can be greater equality of treatment in western Canada.

I have in my hand a number of maps and charts showing the quota situation prevailing in Saskatchewan on June 1. On looking at these charts one finds that marketing points for the special quota for tough and damp grain, are concentrated in northeast Saskatchewan. A number of times on the orders of the day I asked the government to give special consideration to providing what I termed emergency quotas for the delivery of tough and damp grain. This action apparently has now been taken. I would be interested in finding out when it was taken. I am given certain information that would suggest to me that it is something that has taken place only in recent weeks. In any event I think it has been a good action, namely that farmers who have tough and damp grain should be given an opportunity of marketing as large quantities as possible before the grain deteriorates and is lost.

However, I also have in my hand a chart of the seven-bushel quotas per specified acre. These quotas are not emergency quotas dealing with tough and damp grain; they are regular quotas to take in regular grades of wheat as the farmers deliver it. There is still a substantial concentration of these marketing quotas in northeastern Saskatchewan. The quotas prevail in an area which extends northeast from Saskatoon and southeast from Prince Albert. With the exception of a very few—and there are a few—other points on a seven-bushel quota, the great majority of the points on this quota are concentrated in that area. The six-bushel quota is somewhat more evenly divided but it is still more prevalent in the northeastern and now in the northwestern part of Saskatchewan. The five-bushel quota and the four-bushel quota are scattered about the province but the four-bushel quota is concentrated to a large extent in the southern part of the province of Saskatchewan.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, if I have not already made it clear, that these maps have to do with Saskatchewan only. The quotas in southern and southeastern Saskatchewan are extremely low and I would suggest that they constitute at this time an emergency situation. In the Saskatchewan wheat pool district 3A the latest quotas are as follows: 14 points are on a three-bushel quota; 75 points are on a four-bushel quota and only 13 of the points in that area are on quotas in excess of five bushels. This means that farmers in this area as well as other areas of Manitoba, in other areas of Saskatchewan and perhaps even in some areas of Alberta have not had an equal opportunity, or anything approaching an equal opportunity, to deliver grain at this time.

This situation has been brought about certainly in some substantial degree by the great failure of the St. Lawrence seaway facilities and failure of people in the grain business to pay attention to the need for putting shipments of grain out of the lakehead through the seaway. The Minister of Trade and Commerce says he has no responsibility. If he wants to abrogate his responsibility, if he wants to give it to some other minister, I suggest that the responsibility after all lies with the government. I suggest it is the responsibility of the government to take extraordinary measures to remove the bottlenecks in the seaway and to make certain that Canadian shipments of grain from now to the end of the crop year are given absolute priority of movement through the seaway. It will be too late if the bottleneck has been removed after July 31. Some of the farmers will find they have ended the crop year without an opportunity to deliver a fair quota of grain and they will be crippled economically because the government has failed to deal with this situation. There has been a transport controller in the past; perhaps the government needs a transport controller today, but it is certainly necessary for someone in authority to see that grain shipments are moved out of the lakehead to protect Canadian overseas markets and to give grain producers on the prairies between now and the end of July a chance to delivery quotas on a more equitable basis.

I would suggest secondly that the government should take emergency action of whatever kind may be necessary to provide all of the box cars that are necessary at low delivery points to give the farmers at those points an opportunity to deliver grain up to I would say at least a 7-bushel quota.

Third, if the government still denies that this situation is as I have pictured it, then I would say that there should be a thorough inquiry by a committee of this house to ascertain why lakehead clearances have dropped by such a drastic and alarming amount as compared with last year. I say that such a committee should inquire into why Canadian exports since the opening of navigation are down, and should inquire why delivery quotas have discriminated to such an enormous degree against producers in certain widespread areas of western Canada.

As a fourth step that I suggest the government needs to take, and I would suggest is morally bound to take, they should decide and announce in this house their policy on deficiency payments and their reply to the grain producers and the briefs they have presented to the government. When we have asked the government what they are going to do about the submissions made by the farm organizations, we get this pat reply. "The government is giving the submission consideration." The submission was submitted to the government on March 10. It has been giving consideration to this now for three months. How long, Mr. Speaker, must the government give consideration to this important submission before it decides on its policy?

Mr. Morris: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. For our guidance, would it be possible for the hon. member to tell us how he can relate—my friend is too anxious to get up.

Mr. Argue: Well, I have the floor.

Mr. Morris: The hon. member took his seat; will he allow me to put my question? How can the hon. member relate deficiency payments to his grievance that wheat was not moving this year through the lakehead? How does the hon. member relate these two and bear upon the rule of repetition in the house on deficiency payments?

Mr. Argue: Now my friend has raised two points of order, and until the house takes a decision on deficiency payments it is in order to raise the question at an appropriate place, and it is relevant to the question under discussion. I shall answer the hon. gentleman, Mr. Speaker, by merely referring to what I said when I opened my remarks. I said that I wished to raise a grievance having to do with the general grain situation on the prairies. Then I went on, after having made those opening remarks, and talked about the drop in shipments through the seaway. I raise this fourth point, Mr. Speaker. Under the general grain situation and the general grievance affecting the grain situation that I have presented tonight I say that it is time this government quit procrastinating and time they quit fooling the prairie grain producers that in fact they are really giving the question of deficiency payments serious consideration.

I asked a supplementary question of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) after the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) had raised this point on May 26. I asked this question as recorded on page 4011 of Hansard of that date:

> Can the Prime Minister say whether, following the consideration that is now being given, a decision will be made during the present session of parliament so that if it is necessary to introduce legislation in order to implement the government's decision, that can be done?

To that the Prime Minister replied as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I would not want to answer that question directly, for the reason that it depends on the length of time during which consideration is given to the request.

The Prime Minister left it open for himself and the cabinet to give consideration to this request, and has done so for months to come, certainly for weeks to come, until the session is ended and until it will be impossible for the house to deal with any legislation that might be required if a decision were favourable. Mr. Speaker, in the name of the grain producers of western Canada I ask the government to come to their assistance in these last weeks of the crop year to provide priorities for the movement of grain through the lakehead, to provide whatever box cars are necessary to allow producers at low delivery points the opportunity to deliver at least a 7-bushel or 8-bushel quota as is being provided for other groups. In the meantime I ask, if the government denies the facts which I have presented, for a thorough inquiry by a committee of this house as to why lakehead clearances are down, as to why exports have fallen, and as to why delivery quotas are discriminating against so many marketing points and against so many producers in western Canada. I ask the government to take emergency action to remove the bottleneck in the shipments of Canadian grain so that Canadian producers may have the opportunity to deliver substantial quantities of grain before the crop season ends.

Finally, I make a plea that the government ends its procrastination to make a decision and informs the house as to what its decision is on deficiency payments, so that if a favourable decision is made, as I trust it will, parliament during this session will have the opportunity to pass whatever estimates or whatever legislation is necessary to implement that decision.

Mr. Pascoe: May I ask a question, Mr. Speaker? Is the hon. member now changing his story, and will he not admit that most farmers have enough wheat on their farms to fill an 8-bushel quota?

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, if a farmer has an 8-bushel quota, it does not mean that he has the grain to deliver the quota. I am merely asking this very simple thing—

Mr. Pascoe: Will the hon. member answer my question? Have they enough to fill an 8-bushel quota?

Mr. Argue: Some have and some have not. Mr. Speaker, there are 235,000 or a few more holders of permit books on the prairies. Some have enough grain—

Mr. Pascoe: Will the hon. member give an idea how many they could have?

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I do not think this is a very pertinent point. The pertinent point is whether the farmers in the prairie provinces will have the opportunity to deliver an 8-bushel quota. If they have not the grain at home then they cannot take advantage of that opportunity. There are certain quotas and a certain limited number of points in the west today that are on what are called limited quotas, and in the definition of the Canadian wheat board these are quotas which are now in existence at certain marketing points at a figure high enough to take deliveries. I think the Canadian wheat board can give these statistics to my hon. friend, but I will give him the answer. As of May 25, 1959, in Saskatchewan—and I can give the figures for the three prairie provinces—1,056 points were on regular quotas and only 31 points were on a limited quota, namely on quotas at 31 points which, in the opinion of the wheat board, were ample to take care of the grain which farmers had ready for delivery in those districts. The fact is that many thousands of western wheat producers at this time are crying out for the opportunity to deliver grain, and quotas are being denied to them.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, there are three subjects which, I believe, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) raised, and I suppose I should be the last one to deal in the house with deficiency payments and the movement of wheat.

However, there is a matter in which I am particularly interested, and that is the first part of the grievance which the hon. member for Assiniboia raised, namely the bottlenecks on the Welland canal and on the seaway resulting in a lack of grain deliveries and leading, also, to difficulty in the movement of grain. The point which the hon. member makes has to do with drastic reductions in grain deliveries out of the lakehead; his point was that Canadian exports have declined since last year. I am not in a position to challenge that statement, nor do I, but what I do say is that if that is the case it is not due to anything that is happening on the Welland canal. The proof of that lies in the fact that up till now, when barely more than two months of the navigation season have gone by, almost twice as much traffic, notwithstanding what is happening, has gone through as in the same period last year.

However, that does not derogate from the fact that the government and the Minister of Transport are not applying the right policies to remedy what is happening, and to that extent I find myself in accord with the hon. member for Assiniboia. We all know that the early delays on the seaway were caused by ice conditions.

Mr. Harkness: If the hon. member intends to speak about matters other than this question of grain deliveries I wonder if he would mind if I replied to that aspect of the debate now, and then we could go on to the other subject.

Mr. Chevrier: I am sorry, but I have to go out of the house to a meeting, and I am ten minutes late. I think I can dispose of this within the next few minutes, but I do want to bring to the attention of the house the fact that here are reasons for the bottlenecks which have arisen, and that the congestion could, in my opinion, have been averted. I think that if a decision had been taken in the first place to open navigation on a fixed date, and not postpone it twice, there would not have been that congestion of ships at Montreal waiting to enter the seaway, creating a bottleneck which afterwards continued in the Welland canal.

Grain Shipments through Seaway

I made a suggestion during the question period which was turned down without any consideration whatsoever being given to it. That was that the introduction of sector gates at the Thorold locks of the Welland canal such as those which exist in the lower locks would speed up traffic considerably. I have since been informed by competent engineers that this is a fact and that their introduction would help tremendously in the movement of ships.

I think, in all fairness to the Minister of Transport, that it is still too early to come to a decision on the present position of traffic on the seaway. I think that the seaway must be given a trial period, and this trial period would certainly be not less than the length of the navigation season and perhaps more. One cannot in two or three months make a decision as to what should be done. But there is one thing which I hope will be considered by the minister. I asked him this question and he hedged in his reply: whether or not the engineers of the special projects branch of the seaway authority should not now be giving careful consideration to the duplication of certain of the Thorold locks on the Welland canal. While the engineers are doing that, it might be possible to arrive at a suggestion, with other studies—one or two of which I am going to make—as to whether or not traffic conditions can be substantially improved.

I think, too, that there is a very serious lack of co-ordination between three bodies in the Department of Transport—the national harbours board, the seaway authority and the St. Lawrence ship channel authority. Those three bodies, I am sorry to say, did not work in co-operation during the early part of the navigation season, and it is because of this lack of co-operation that, in my opinion, there has been the first delays which have since been continued.

I am glad that the Minister of Transport announced today that the flotilla or convoy of United States ships will, perhaps, not be introduced into the seaway. My suggestion is that it should be allowed to remain at Montreal and that it be not allowed to go into the seaway at all, because if there is congestion now, as reports in the press indicate, and as even the minister's statements —some of which are quite contradictory— indicate, there is certainly no reason in the world to clutter up the canal more than is the case at the present time. All this traffic, however, goes to show that the seaway is certainly going to be a success, as has been suggested in the house, at this time of the year so early in the period of navigation.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Then there is the really important question of whether or not there should be discrimination against Canadian ships. I raised the question on the orders of the day, and was told, in reply, that there was a system of priorities in existence which staggered a foreign ship and a Canadian ship in so far as bulk cargoes were concerned and it was felt that there should be no change in the procedure in the meantime because, I think the minister said, there were four ships waiting to enter the canal at Port Weller and about five waiting to enter the canal at Port Colborne on the downward movement or vice versa. That is a matter for which the government is responsible. I remember quite well what the statements were in so far as discrimination was concerned when the matter was discussed many years ago, but whether or not in view of what is happening there should be a system of priorities affecting Canadian traffic is a matter for the government to determine. But I say that the government should determine that as soon as possible having regard to the reports which have been made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) from time to time.

I think that the minister should at the first opportunity—that is Wednesday when his estimates are being discussed in this house—make a statement on this subject. He is in possession of the facts; he has the reports from his engineers and he is familiar with the statistics which have been compiled concerning the movement of ships. I think he owes it to the house and to the country to make a complete statement on the present position—not partial statements such as we have heard from time to time in the question and answer period. That is not sufficient, and I think that until such a full statement is made it will not be possible for us to make up our minds about the seriousness of these delays on the canal and the confusion which has been reported. I therefore invite the minister to make this statement at the earliest possible moment.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to go into transportation matters at all in my discussion this evening. However, I should like to make a few comments on the speech made by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). The hon. member as usual attempted to paint a picture of gloom and anticipated despair on the western prairie as a result of the inability of farmers to market their grain. Nothing could be further from the true facts than the type of picture he attempted to leave in the minds of hon. members in this regard.

Mr. Argue: You cannot get away from the facts and statistics.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member repeated time after time with somewhat monotonous regularity the statement that Canadian exports are down this year. At one point he said that Canadian exports of wheat are drastically down this year. Naturally he implied all of the evil results that would flow from our exports being drastically down.

What is the true situation in this regard? The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) put the figures on the record only a few days ago, on June 1, when he stated that up to the end of March of this year exports of wheat and flour were just under 9 million bushels below the figure for the same period last year. That is the drastic decline to which the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) referred. Last year exports of wheat from this country amounted to 316 million bushels—

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The minister will recall that in my remarks I was referring to the drastic reduction in exports since the opening of navigation. In order to be completely fair I took the exports from the beginning of the first full week following the opening of navigation.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is not a point of order. That is an argument.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member is not advancing a point of order but merely engaging in counter argument. The hon. member repeated time after time that our exports of wheat are drastically down.

Mr. Argue: Since the opening of navigation they are drastically down.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. gentleman attempted to paint a picture of gloom and despair as far as the western farmer is concerned. The true picture as I said is depicted by the information placed on the record by the Minister of Trade and Commerce on June 2 as reported at page 4242 of Hansard. Our exports are down just 9 million bushels below a year ago. Down 9 million bushels from what? From 316 million bushels which we exported in the last crop year as compared with 267 or 268 million bushels exported in the previous crop year. The hon. member neglected entirely to point out the fact that in the first year this government was in office we managed to secure a marked increase in the exports of wheat from Canada.

Mr. Argue: Now you are falling behind again. Exports are down.

Mr. Harkness: Three hundred and sixteen million bushels were exported in the last crop year as compared with 267 or 268 million in the previous crop year.

Mr. Argue: You are falling behind once more. Exports are declining.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. gentleman is now talking about a drop of 9 million bushels from the figure I mentioned up to date. We have not yet reached the end of the crop year. The hon. gentleman described it as a drastic decline which is a typical example of the exaggerated language in which the hon. member unfortunately engages.

As a matter of fact, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the chairman of the wheat board, various members of the wheat board, and various members of the government including myself have stated on several occasions during the past months that we expected our exports of wheat this year to reach at least 300 million bushels. We still expect our exports to reach that figure. The amount we have exported thus far gives every indication that this target will be reached. If we do reach exports of 300 million bushels then all the other complaints the hon. member has been making about quotas will disappear.

Mr. Argue: Not at all.

Mr. Harkness: This will mean that practically all the farmers in western Canada will have been able to deliver all of the wheat they wanted to deliver to the elevators. When you subtract the amount they want to retain for seed and so on there will be few farmers in western Canada who will have any wheat that they have been unable to deliver.

Mr. Argue: We will see on July 31.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member went on to say that Canadian exports are down whereas Argentine and Australian exports are up. What he neglected to say was that Australia had a crop failure last year and actually imported wheat from Canada. As proof that Canada is not doing well the hon. member pointed out that Australian exports are up. Naturally they would be up if Australia had no crop failure this year as was the case last year. With typical lack of logic the hon. member attempted to take an extraordinary year as far as Australia is concerned to prove his point that Canada is not doing very well in wheat exports. We know that Australia last year actually imported wheat from Canada. That is an indication of what a completely unfair, biased argument the hon. gentleman advanced and illustrates the incorrect impression he attempted to convey.

The hon. gentleman went on to exclaim that there were very low delivery quotas. Rather than being low, delivery quotas are the best they have been for a number of years. They are better than they have been for a number of years in the past. I do not have on hand the exact period this would cover but they are better than they have been for a considerable length of time. The hon. member read off a long list of delivery quotas but neglected to refer to what the Minister of Trade and Commerce told him as reported at page 4197 of Hansard of June 2 when the minister said:

> If he has any further worry with regard to the quota distribution in the prairie provinces, may I assure him that this year at this time there are 264 stations on a 7-bushel quota per specified acre; last year there were none. This year there are 308 stations on a 6-bushel quota per specified acre; last year there were 341. Generally the picture is much better than it was a year ago.

The hon. member having been told this and knowing it of his own knowledge still rose in his place and said that delivery quotas are low and that a serious situation exists in western Canada because farmers cannot deliver their grain.

I have in my hand the Regina Leader-Post of Friday, June 5, 1959 which contains an article entitled, "Board Not Concerned by Small Wheat Export" which is a statement of the wheat board.

Mr. Argue: I thought there was a big wheat export; you said there was.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. gentleman should let me make my speech. I did not interrupt him. The article states in part:

> The Canadian wheat board Thursday announced new increases in grain delivery quotas at provincial points.
> The following increases are effective immediately—

That is, effective on Friday. The article then lists 24 points that are to be put on a 4-bushel quota, 50 points that are to be put on a 5-bushel quota, 19 points that are to be put on a 6-bushel quota and 16 points that are to be put on a 7-bushel quota. These are all Saskatchewan points. The article then lists increases that are to be effective on Monday; in other words, today. A further 34 points are to be put on a 4-bushel quota, a further 96 points are to be put on a 5-bushel quota, a further 28 points are to be put on a 6-bushel quota, a further 5 points are to be put on a 7-bushel quota and a further 11 points are to be put on an 8-bushel quota.

In other words, due to the fact that we have been exporting grain at a very satisfactory rate this year the delivery quotas are rapidly going up in Saskatchewan and Manitoba. They were already somewhat higher in Alberta as the hon. member said. I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman, if he read this newspaper article—

Mr. Argue: No, I did not.

Mr. Harkness: Certainly he should not be making speeches such as he made in the house when delivery quotas on Friday last and today were considerably increased in the very province about which he was complaining.

Mr. Argue: The picture I painted was accurate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must remind the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) that he is not entitled to speak from his seat when another hon. member has the floor. It would be appreciated if he did not constantly interrupt the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness). If the hon. member for Assiniboia wants the floor he may have it at some other time.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I do not mind the hon. member interrupting because I know this hurts a little and therefore I expect to hear him squeal to a certain extent.

Having disposed of this complaint raised by the hon. member for Assiniboia that very low delivery quotas obtained this year and having indicated that exactly the reverse is the true situation I should like to turn to the remarks the hon. gentleman made about low shipments from lakehead ports. Just the reverse is the case. I should like to say something about what he had to say about low shipments from lakehead ports. I should like to ask him, or any other hon. member here, if any exports have been lost as a result of the lower shipments from lakehead ports this year. There is not an hon. member in this house who can say that any has been lost.

Mr. Argue: Why then are they down?

Mr. Harkness: In this same paper is a statement from the wheat board in which they state:

> A spokesman of the Canadian wheat board said there is no problem,—

He is talking about small shipments from the head of the lakes this year. I continue:

> —there is no problem, as plenty of wheat is in store at eastern elevators right now.

In other words, we have not lost the sale of a single bushel of grain because the shipments on the lakes are lower this year than they were last year. The hon. member was building up a great big strawman, and then trying to make a big fellow of himself by punching holes in it, by talking about those low grain shipments from the head of the lakes this year. This has not lost us a bushel of exports, not one, and therefore, this was all shadow-boxing by the hon. member for Assiniboia.

Then, he made an attack on the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) in connection with his saying that he had no comment to make on the transportation difficulties on the great lakes. After reading what the Minister of Trade and Commerce had to say, which was as follows:

I make no comment with regard to the shipping and the seaway facilities—

He made a great point out of the fact that the Minister of Trade and Commerce takes no interest in this; he apparently does not care about the seaway shipments, and so forth and so on, and this was a terrible dereliction of duty on the part of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but he completely neglected to read what the Minister of Trade and Commerce said after that, which was as follows:

The situation with regard to export trade is being maintained. The fact that the shipment of grain from the lakehead is not as great as it was last year has no effect on our export market at the present time, because there is sufficient grain in position further east to handle these exports. Our exports of wheat are continuing at a good figure. We still expect to reach the quota that we set earlier in the year.

This is on page 3870 of Hansard of May 21. The quota that we set earlier in the year was 300 million bushels, which I mentioned a little while ago. If we reach the 300 million bushels, which I feel quite confident we will, which the members of the wheat board feel quite confident we will, then the number of farmers who will have been unable to deliver the grain they wanted to deliver will be very, very small indeed. As a matter of fact, Mr. Wesson, the head of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, when he was down here on his last trip about 10 days ago, I guess, in connection with deficiency payments, made that very statement to us, that in his opinion the four and five bushel quotas which existed at most points would be more than sufficient to take the grain that the great majority of farmers in western Canada wanted to deliver, let alone going to six, seven and eight bushels quotas which the hon. member was talking about. I would suggest he should get some better information from Mr. Wesson and some of the other people who know something about the grain business and the grain situation in western Canada than the type of information with which he has been attempting to give a completely inaccurate picture to the house this evening.

Mr. Argue: May I ask a question? Will the minister assure the house that all marketing points at July 31 will have at least a seven bushel quota?

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member knows to begin with that this is not my department, and I am not in a position to give any such assurance to the house, as a result of that.

Mr. Argue: That is the answer to your own speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

The estimates of the following departments were first taken up and entered for consideration:

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

General administration—

106. Departmental administration, $2,461,599.

PRIVY COUNCIL

298. Payment, notwithstanding anything in the Financial Administration Act or the Senate and House of Commons Act respecting the independence of parliament, to each member of the Queen's privy council for Canada who is a minister for whom no salary or allowance in addition to the allowances under section 33 and section 44 of the Senate and House of Commons Act is provided (the acceptance of which shall not render such member ineligible or disqualify him as a Member of the House of Commons) of a salary of $7,500 per annum and pro rata for any period less than a year, $15,000.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

General administration—

380. Departmental administration, including fees for membership in the international organizations listed in the details of the estimates, $2,636,084.

Progress reported.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL TAX-SHARING ARRANGEMENTS ACT

FURTHER EXTENSION OF INCOME TAX RATE

On the order:

Third reading of Bill C-41, an act to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act —The Minister of Finance.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Perhaps we would be ready to go on at this stage.

Mr. Green: If the hon. member wished, we could call it ten o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire what the business will be for tomorrow and the rest of the week?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, the list would be as I indicated on Thursday and Friday night. If we go into estimates this week it would be the estimates of the Department of Transport.

Mr. Chevrier: Would that be on Wednesday?

Mr. Green: It depends on what progress we make.

Mr. Chevrier: What estimates will follow the estimates of the Department of Transport?

Mr. Green: The Department of Justice.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the house leader whether any determination has been made of the date on which the defence estimates will be discussed?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I cannot say that; I will let the hon. member know just as soon as possible.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

DR. RICHARD S. MACNEISH—BACKGROUND

Question No. 287—Mr. Argue:

1. At what universities did Dr. Richard S. MacNeish, presently an employee of the national museum of Canada, take his degrees?
2. At what universities did Dr. MacNeish take post graduate training, and under whom did he study?
3. Is Dr. MacNeish a veteran of any war?
4. If so, in what armed forces did he serve, and in what war?
5. What positions had Dr. MacNeish held previous to his appointment to the staff of the national museum of Canada?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1. University of Chicago.
2. Harvard University, University of Michigan and University of Chicago; names of professors studied under not available in departmental records.
3. Yes.
4. United States of America forces; world war II.
5. District supervisor, museum project, works progress administration; archaeological supervisor, Illinois state museum; archaeological supervisor and fellow, University of Michigan; director, archaeological field school, University of Kentucky; director, second Tamaulipas expedition, Mexico, under auspices of Wenner-Gren foundation for anthropoligical research, New York City.

University of Michigan, passed preliminary examination for Ph.D. 1956; anthropology; Professors L. A. White, J. B. Griffin, A. C. Spaulding, R. K. Beardsley, F. Thieme and E. Service.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, June 9, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

BROADCASTING

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. G. E. Halpenny (London) presented the first report of the special committee on broadcasting, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

AIRPORTS

MALTON—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF JUDGMENT AND EVIDENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister table in the house a copy of the judgment, No. 151177, of Mr. Justice Thorson in the Drew case?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall secure a copy. There is certainly no reason why it should not be tabled.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask another question arising out of the one I have already asked. Will the Prime Minister also table the transcript of the evidence heard in this particular case?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the transcript of the evidence is naturally available to anyone who desires to secure it and will pay the necessary fee. I see no reason—this, of course, is always subject to reconsideration —why that evidence should be tabled. If the hon. gentleman, being a learned member of the bar, would simply make the necessary application and pay the proper fee, no doubt he would be able to secure a copy of the proceedings.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct another question to the Prime Minister. As a result of our examination on this side of the house of the judgment of Mr. Justice Thorson and, in particular, in view of the fact that such further examination of the judgment and the Prime Minister's statements on the matter have not removed our apprehensions in this case, I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether he will provide an opportunity for a parliamentary examination in order to elicit the facts and clear up contradictions.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of removing contradictions. The committees are set up in respect of matters affecting the privileges of parliament. If the hon. gentleman in the ordinary course desires such an investigation then he will make the necessary charge, and when the charge is made action will be taken in accordance with the principles that at all times have been applicable to parliamentary procedure.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Did the minister make a formal submission to treasury board in connection with the valuation of Mr. Clare?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I said, I believe all the pertinent evidence in this case was dealt with very effectively by the presiding judge. As I said yesterday, I feel sure that the hon. member for Laurier, being a distinguished barrister, would not ask me to comment on the findings of the court.

Mr. Chevrier: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. This question has nothing to do with the findings of the court. It is a simple question as to whether or not the minister did make a submission to treasury board.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, treasury board was made aware of the findings of Mr. Clare.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I follow up the question I asked of the Minister of Transport in which he replied that the findings of the appraiser were made known to the treasury board. May I ask if those findings were made known to the treasury board notwithstanding the recommendation of the minister's own officers that the valuations were too high?

Mr. Hees: Those findings were examined by the treasury board staff, Mr. Speaker, and the opinion of the members of the treasury board staff was that the valuations could not be accepted.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask one further question of the minister. Did the minister agree that his department would be bound by the valuations of Mr. Clare, as asserted by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Pallett)?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows very well, having been minister of this department for some eight years, that no minister can be bound by any valuations that are not passed by treasury board.

Mr. Chevrier: That was not the question. I am quite aware of the circumstances—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member is conducting a cross-examination.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GLACE BAY, N.S.—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO UNEMPLOYED MINERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Did the Prime Minister receive a telegram from Mr. William H. Marsh, president of district 26, united mine workers of America, Glace Bay, to the effect that 200 workmen are presently without income in the district, and their unemployment insurance benefits having expired, immediate financial assistance is urgently required? Would the Prime Minister say whether the government is considering taking any action that would be of assistance to these unemployed workers?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I speak from recollection and it is difficult, because of the number of telegrams that come to me, to remember all the details. I speak subject to correction, but my recollection is that a telegram to that effect was received. Following its receipt the necessary consideration will be given to the telegram.

Mr. Argue: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask if any consideration has been given to an extension of benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act that would cover these unemployed workmen.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman was kind enough to forward me a copy of the telegram which he received, which indicates that a telegram in the words used was sent to me on June 8. That was yesterday, and the hon. gentleman will understand that consideration of a matter such as was communicated by telegram yesterday afternoon would not have been possible as yet.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT—STATEMENT ON REQUEST THAT CANADIAN STUDENTS HAVE PRIORITY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Beauce asked me a question on June 5, the translation of which is as follows:

In view of the fact that many Canadian students have to quit college—

And so on.

—I wonder whether the right hon. Prime Minister could assure the house that Canadian students will be given priority over the many foreign students who, according to that Canadian Press dispatch from London—

Which he had already quoted.

—are already here or are expected to be here this summer.

The press report in question indicates that some 500 students intend to come forward to Canada and the United States with a view to taking summer employment. A report has just been received from the Canadian immigration office in London establishing that the commonwealth migration council plans for only 70 of these students to come to Canada. In the past there has been a summer exchange of students between Canada and the United Kingdom. The body that is in charge of this matter has been advised that only those students can come forward who are assured of employment in advance. While it is not proposed to do away completely with the exchange of students, it has been pointed out that only those may come who have available summer employment in advance of their arrival here.

TRADE AND COMMERCE

REQUEST THAT SIGNS BE PRINTED IN BOTH LANGUAGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Boivin (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should have liked to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but in his absence, I shall address it to the Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce. On Saturday, June 6, La Presse published a picture showing that literature handed out at the Trade and Commerce Department stand, at the International Trade Fair being held in the Show Mart in Montreal, is exclusively in English. Does the minister propose to have that literature printed in both French and English, as was done by other countries taking part in the fair?

(Text):

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Minister without Portfolio): I shall take this question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSING

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—INQUIRY AS TO CHANGE IN PERSONNEL OF HOUSING AUTHORITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works, notice of which has been given. Has any change been made recently in the board of the St. John's housing authority? If not, is there any in contemplation?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, as the house will probably remember there was some difficulty a few weeks ago in connection with the St. John's housing authority. Objection had been raised by the federal government that it had no representation on that authority. The membership consisted of seven persons. About two weeks ago three of them resigned, and negotiations have been going on since that time between the two governments. Yesterday I had a very friendly talk with Premier Smallwood and recommended to him three very responsible citizens of St. John's for appointment to the St. John's housing authority. He has promised me that they will be appointed within the next day or two. Appointments are made by provincial order in council.

I believe it will now be possible for the housing authority to carry on with the full co-operation of both governments, and I would like to thank both hon. members from St. John's and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) for helping to bring about this result.

FISHERIES

WEST COAST—INQUIRY AS TO STUDY OF COMMERCIAL FISHING LICENSING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Drysdale (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Is it intended to provide Professor Sinclair with any assistance in order to enable him to report on his study of commercial fishing licensing on the west coast before the end of this year?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. Professor Sinclair, of the University of Manitoba, has been re-engaged for the summer months in order to complete his work on the study of commercial fishing licensing on the west coast. We have provided additional clerical assistance in the Vancouver area office to process the statistical information so that Professor Sinclair's work, we hope, will be completed and available for study by officials of my department later this year.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST THAT SIGNS BE PRINTED IN BOTH LANGUAGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Boivin (Shefford): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. I will address my question to him in French.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is the minister aware that all printed matter at the Canadian Air Force stand, at the International Trade Fair held at the Show Mart in Montreal, is in English only and that the clerk in charge at the stand is not bilingual? Is it the minister's intention to correct this situation by making that literature available in both French and English, and by appointing a bilingual person who could answer visitors questions in French and in English?

(Text):

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): I shall be very pleased to look into that question and see what can be done.

BOMARC MISSILE—REFERENCE TO REMARKS OF MINISTER ON JUNE 8

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of National Defence not wish to correct Hansard, which reports him as saying yesterday that the Bomarc will be ready in 1961, when he actually stated that it would be ready by the end of 1961?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): I have always said that the expected date by which the Bomarc will be ready is the end of 1961.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will the minister note that at page 4414 of Hansard he is reported as saying, "My understanding is that it will be in 1961"?

An hon. Member: What is the difference?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Quite a difference.

AGRICULTURE

CHICKENS—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO INCREASE CONSUMPTION OF BROILERS

On the orders of the day:

Dominion-Provincial Relations

Mr. Marcel Boivin (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture as a result of the visit of the delegation of Canadian broiler producers who came to Ottawa. Since no action has been taken on their request, and since broiler prices continue to drop, is it the intention of the Department of Agriculture to do something to promote the consumption of broilers in this country?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the consumption of broilers is really very high. It has increased quite materially during the last four or five years. I know of no action which the Department of Agriculture can take to increase what is already a very high rate of consumption of broiler chickens.

NATIONAL REVENUE

BOISSEVAIN, MAN.—SCHOOL ATTENDANCE OF CHILDREN OF CUSTOMS OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue whether his attention has been drawn to an editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press of last Thursday entitled "Manitoba's Old Crow", which refers to the fact that customs officers at a port south of Boissevain, Manitoba—incidentally, that is the right way to pronounce it—are obliged for financial reasons to send their children to school in North Dakota. If the situation is as represented, would the minister consider trying to do something to have it corrected?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): My attention has been drawn to the article in question. One opinion is that the situation is due to a regulation laid down by treasury board when the great friend of the hon. member who just asked the question, Mr. John Deutsch, was secretary of the treasury board and insisted on that procedure being carried out.

I have asked my officers to review the matter. As a matter of fact I was discussing it with the deputy minister this morning. We will give the matter the most careful consideration and will advise the hon. member as to whatever steps may be taken to deal with it. It does appear rather strange that children of Canadian customs officers should have to stand and swear allegiance to the United States flag.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL TAX-SHARING ARRANGEMENTS ACT

FURTHER EXTENSION OF INCOME TAX RATE

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-41, to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the minister a question. Can he tell us whether or not it is the intention of other premiers to come to the conference on July 6, that is other than the premier of Quebec, and can he tell us whether or not before the end of this year there will be called a conference of the two senior levels of government in the matter of fiscal relations?

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the house if the hon. minister answers this question—no, it is not a substantive motion.

(Translation):

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): Mr. Speaker, my first words will be to thank the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dorion) for being here today, because I advised him of my intention to answer certain statements he made in the house on second reading of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I have found the hon. member for Bellechasse quite different from what he had shown himself to be before coming to this house. It seems that the hon. member had been entrusted with the task of answering, on behalf of the Quebec Conservatives, the excellent speech of the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier). Well, Mr. Speaker, as I shall presently explain, the hon. member for Bellechasse has in no way taken up the challenge issued by the hon. member for Laurier to the Conservative members from the province of Quebec.

To the great surprise of all those who heard him, the hon. member for Bellechasse declared himself in favour of this bill and, together with several of his fellow-members, he voted for the passing of the bill on second reading. Moreover, I am certain—because he told me so—that the hon. member will vote in favour of the bill on third reading.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to recall in this house that, in order to mark time, and probably also to direct the attention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) to himself, the hon. member of Bellechasse thought it preferable to put aside the bill then under review and to embark upon a lengthy statement on the Plagiaries of Thunder. Hearing the hon. member made me think of a student of rhetoric who wants to show off before his teacher in order to get good marks. Well, Mr. Speaker, I shall leave my friend, the hon. member for Bellechasse to his Plagiaries of Thunder, and put him in the presence of facts so as to prove to the house how often he can change his mind and also change his colour, like a chameleon, according to the place where he happens to be.

During the last election campaign, I noted several statements by the hon. member for Bellechasse which indicated to what extent that man could change his mind. When he wanted to become a member of parliament, he was saying one thing; but now that he wants to become minister, he says quite another thing.

Mr. Speaker, I say to the hon. member for Bellechasse that if, during the last election campaign, he had expressed the same opinions concerning fiscal arrangements which he did the other day in this house, he would never have been elected, no more than he could hope to become minister if he expressed in the house opinions similar to those he did express in Bellechasse.

Alas! Mr. Speaker, the poor taxpayer!

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think before the hon. member pursues these election issues further I should remind him and the house that this is the third reading of Bill C-41, which has one clause only, to provide for the continuation of a provision with respect to income tax in federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. On third reading the debate is not on the principle of the bill; the debate is on the bill itself as it is presented to the house for final approval.

That is a very different matter from debate on second reading. What the hon. member is saying would perhaps have been appropriate on second reading; in fact I have no doubt it would have been, but on third reading I feel that hon. members should observe the precedents. I refer hon. members to Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 418, which states:

> All amendments which may be moved on a second reading of a bill may be moved on the third reading with the restriction that they cannot deal with any matter which is not contained in the bill.

In other words, only what is contained in the bill is before the house on third reading. Supplementing that, May's sixteenth edition at page 421 states that generally no matter ought to be raised in debate on a question which would be irrelevant if moved as an amendment.

I think it has been the practice of this house to confine the debate on third reading strictly to the contents of the bill itself, and I would ask the hon. member to bear that in mind. If anyone disagrees with my interpretation I would be glad to hear him now, so we shall know what are the limits of this debate.

(Translation):

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am of the opinion that the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) has the right to reply to the speech made the other day by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dorion). This is just what the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville is doing and I do not see why he should be prevented from doing so.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry; I cannot accept that proposition at this time. As I said before, and as the hon. member for Essex East will recall, it would have been relevant in the course of debate on second reading, but one cannot expect to reply at this stage to something which was said in committee or on second reading or at the resolution stage, unless it is relevant at this stage and will stand on its own feet.

(Translation):

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, in a few moments we shall be called upon to vote the third reading of Bill C-41 to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act and to allow the deduction of 13 per cent. Now, I should like to tell the house that the hon. member for Bellechasse, when he was visiting his constituency—

Some hon. Members: Order! order!

Mr. Dupuis: —and precisely on the matter of provincial autonomy and fiscal arrangements now being considered, the hon. member for Bellechasse, as I say, had promised something altogether different from what he said in the house the other day.

Mr. Dorion: My remarks were misreported to you by Mr. Lamontagne.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I hope the hon. member will take note of what I said previously. The autonomy of the provinces is not involved in this bill. This bill is purely an arrangement for the extension of a specific provision of the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Agreements Act, and I would ask the hon. member to confine himself to that subject.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I say a word on behalf of the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville. As I see it, citation 418 deals in effect, as Your Honour has said, with the principle of the bill on third reading, and the principle of the bill concerns not only section 12, which is now before the house, but also concerns the other sections. It is my submission that the hon. member in dealing with the general aspects of the federal-provincial tax-sharing agreements legislation has the right to put on Hansard certain statements made by those who are members of this house.

Mr. Speaker: I can only accept the hon. member's submission in so far as those statements are relevant to the clause of the bill. To my mind the debate on the principle of the bill on second reading is a broad debate, and there was no restriction at that time covering the whole range of federal-provincial arrangements, conferences and all those matters. But when we come to third reading the house has disposed of the principle of the bill. It has disposed of the amendments, if any, in committee, and it has settled on one clause, which is all that is before the house now. It is only in so far as it is necessary to go outside the bill to explain what the continuation of this section involves that such extraneous matters would be relevant. To my mind that is not a very wide field and I hope hon. members will accept that view and keep their attention directed to the bill as it has been accepted in committee.

Mr. Chevrier: I think the hon. member can do that, sir, but the point is that in dealing with the clause as it is now before the house the member is entitled to more than the ordinary latitude because of the fact that the tax-sharing agreement embraces an over-all formula. I think in so far as the formula is concerned, which formula has been adopted by the Department of Finance and the government and is being extended in this case, the member could discuss that in relation to what another member has said about the particular federal-provincial agreement.

Mr. Speaker: I would be glad to hear any other hon. member, but I have not accepted what the hon. member for Laurier has said because this amendment continues a 13 per cent rate instead of a 10 per cent rate. The whole of the tax agreement of 1956 is not in issue in any way in this bill; the only thing which is in issue as I conceive it is whether or not the rate of allowance with respect to income tax shall be 13 per cent or 10 per cent. I may be wrong about that, and if I am I shall be glad to be so shown; but unless I am convinced to the contrary it seems to me that there is only this pretty narrow range for debate.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, with respect, it is quite clear that the position advanced by the hon. member for Laurier is quite untenable and entirely at variance with the citation you quoted from Beauchesne. The effect of this very short bill is simply to change one figure in the main act, namely the figure 10 to the figure 13, with respect to the current fiscal year. That is what it does and that is all it does.

Mr. Speaker, there is no occasion whatever for hon. members opposite to complain that they did not have ample latitude. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dorion) spoke in this house in the debate on second reading on June 3. The hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) could have spoken if he had chosen. The hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) followed the member for Bellechasse on that occasion and had ample opportunity to discuss what was said by the hon. member for Bellechasse. Then the house moved on from that stage, having approved the principle of the bill by unanimous vote on June 4.

That matter, I take it, is conclusively settled by the vote of the house. There was a vote of 156 to 0; therefore, Mr. Speaker, if there ever was a case where the rule set forth in Beauchesne which you quoted, clearly applies it is surely in this situation. With great respect I submit the hon. member must confine himself to the terms of the bill now under debate.

(Translation):

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, I distinctly remember, as we all do, that in 1956, when the act that is being amended was introduced, Conservative members were fully against the proposal. Of course, the figure was not 13 per cent then, but 10 per cent. However, they were against it. Therefore, when the hon. member for Bellechasse, together with his colleagues from Quebec, attempt to show that this bill is quite in order, and when they support it, after objecting so strenuously to its principle, I say, Mr. Speaker, that we have here an about-face that must necessarily be brought to the attention of the people.

Mr. Speaker, we are now considering an act which, in 1956, was recorded in our statutes under No. 4-5 Elizabeth II, chapter 29. Now, Mr. Speaker, that act, which was approved on January 31, 1956, was taken up in this house by our hon. friends, many of whom are still with us today.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Dupuis: And, Mr. Speaker,—

(Text):

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is quite clear that the hon. member is not adhering to the ruling you have given. He is just going right ahead with the same speech he was making when you rose to set forth the rule.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I urge that the hon. member be required to adhere to the clear rule which you have quoted and laid down.

Mr. Speaker: I shall follow the hon. member's discourse with that consideration in mind. So far, however, it does not seem to me that he has strayed. I hope he understands that I will be critical and will ask him to desist if he goes beyond the proper scope of the discussion of this bill and its setting in connection with the other act of 1956. It does not involve the other sections of that act; it involves only what is contained in this amending bill.

(Translation):

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for your decision, which I think is completely fair and to the point.

Mr. Speaker, see how that little "Rebecca" from the Roberval constituency (Mr. Tremblay) is enjoying himself. It is so funny!

Mr. Speaker, as proof of what I was just saying, let me show you what were the feelings of our hon. friends who are still in this house today with regard to the action taken by the St. Laurent government, which was the same action as is being taken today by the present government.

The hon. member, who is now the Solicitor General of Canada, the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer), speaking on this act, namely Chapter 29, 4-5 Elizabeth II of the statutes, made the following statement on July 16, 1956, as recorded on page 6032 of Hansard; he came out against that very act for which he will be voting today. Now, however, the government is of another colour and here is what he said:

—I feel that, while the federal proposals acknowledge for the first time that the provinces have a certain right to direct taxation, that acknowledgment is still utterly inadequate, for the federal government should not dry up the source of that taxation in order to pile up unjustified surpluses.

Mr. Balcer: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dupuis: As for the man who is now looking at me and says "hear, hear", instead of being ashamed as he should, he said that constitutional rights arising out of confederation were no more respected than before by that attitude of the government.

Mr. Balcer: The attitude of the Liberal government.

Mr. Dupuis: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do say that the Solicitor General, at the present time—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am afraid I cannot agree with the course the hon. member is following. The constitutional right is not involved in this bill at this time. No constitutional issue arises, as far as I can see, in the choice which the house has before it between a 10 per cent allowance and a 13 per cent allowance with respect to the federal income tax.

Mr. Pickersgill: With respect, Mr. Speaker, speaking on the point of order, may I say this. Surely if 10 per cent is unconstitutional changing it to 13 per cent would not make it constitutional, and that is the point which the hon. gentleman is arguing.

Mr. Speaker: That is precisely why I say the constitutional issue is not involved. Changing it from 10 per cent to 13 per cent does not change any constitutional aspect. It is a matter of mathematics. The debate is a very narrow one, and I ask the hon. members to recognize that fact and deal with it accordingly.

(Translation):

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that, in July 1956, on the third reading of the bill, the debate had been much wider. I see, for instance, that certain members who are trying to prevent me from talking today, were much more... I respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that, on third reading of the bill, the hon. member for St. Pauls (Mr. Michener), had himself dealt with that bill, and I could read the quite general statements that he made and which gave the debate more latitude than the house is prepared to allow today.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member to whom reference is made by the hon. member who has the floor was out of order at the time. I shall be glad to take note of the reference if the hon. member will give it to me again.

(Translation):

Mr. Dupuis: The following is from page 6420 of Hansard of 1956:

Mr. Roland Michener (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker,—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is not necessary for the hon. member to read that. I have indicated my view about the scope of this debate. I know that debates often go beyond what the rules allow. The authority I have cited seems to me to be conclusive. I will make a note of the citation to which the hon. member refers and will have a look at it, but in the meantime I wish he would proceed with his speech and try to keep within the limits I have set.

(Translation):

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, may I go on. I will definitely not talk about hockey, but I must absolutely talk about this bill. I understand that my Conservative friends from the province of Quebec would prefer that I do not talk about it.

Some hon. Members: No, no. We like it.

An hon. Member: But your constituents will not like it.

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friends do so enjoy listening to me, may I have, with the unanimous consent of the house, all the necessary liberty to talk about the bill—if they are having such a good time. May I have the unanimous consent of the house?

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, I have asked—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member resuming his seat?

Mr. Dupuis: I ask that unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, be given to afford me an opportunity of making my speech in order to answer the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dorion).

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Dupuis: My hon. friends from the province of Quebec told me they would be greatly interested in listening to what I have to say. Therefore with the unanimous consent of the house I should like to proceed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I have no objection to asking the house, but from what I have heard already I think I know what the answer will be. Does the house wish to relax the rule in favour of the hon. member?

Some hon. Members: No.

(Translation):

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, I realize that those who say they want to listen to me are not very sincere. Mr. Speaker, the house is considering today a section of 4-5 Elizabeth II, Chapter 29, whose effect will be to extend for a further year the rate of 13 per cent which is deductible from federal income tax in the provinces having an income tax of their own.

Mr. Speaker, in 1956 we had the same law which is now under review and I cannot but remind the hon. members who are now in favour of this law that they then voted against it on second and third readings. And remind them I must, in order to prove my assertion that while these hon. gentlemen found fault with this law when they were sitting on this side because it had been introduced by a Liberal government, they now favour this same law which the Conservative government now considers excellent.

Mr. Speaker, during the debate on the section increasing personal income tax deductions to 13 per cent, I remembered the other day that my hon. friends proclaimed throughout the province and throughout the country that this provision was unconstitutional and contrary to the principles of confederation. Today, Mr. Speaker, I must rise and tell the house that this act was constitutional in 1956, is still so today, and that if anything has changed, it is the stand of my hon. friends opposite who have abused the good faith of the public. When I think that in a moment the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dorion) will vote for this bill, I say that, if he had promised the people—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member should not be allowed to make a speech like this on third reading.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order? Would he state his point?

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would do well to keep to the discussion on third reading and not make a speech which might be appropriate on second reading.

Mr. Dupuis: I am not making a speech on second reading, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pigeon: I note, Mr. Speaker, that the arguments the hon. member is advancing are not relevant to the remarks just made by Your Honour. This makes me think of the mountain which gave birth to a mouse, i.e. a mouse of a speech.

Some hon. Members: That is not a point of order.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I have been following the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) in what he has just been saying and when the point of order was taken what he was saying was not irrelevant.

(Translation):

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, I say that we Liberals were defeated precisely because we were accused of violating under this bill the rights which confederation granted to the provinces. If those hon. gentlemen had acted differently in their ridings, if they had said during the last federal election that they were in favour of this bill, they would not have had the confidence of the people. Such is the situation.

As a matter of fact, I shall quote a statement directly connected with the subject we are studying today, a statement made by the hon. member for Bellechasse who was complaining that the legislation before us was violating provincial prerogatives and depriving the provinces of some of their powers. According to L'Action Catholique of March 29, 1958, page 2, the hon. member for Bellechasse said, at Honfleur:

> The revenge of the present Prime Minister of Canada, predicted Mr. Dorion, will be to give back to the province of Quebec her autonomy, which was wrested from her by the Liberal administration, and to return to that province all sources of taxation and all rights guaranteed to her under the constitution.

And that is precisely, Mr. Speaker—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid the hon. member is getting back to his original fault. He assured me that he was reading a quotation which related to the subject under discussion, but I am afraid it is not related and unless he can confine himself to the subject under debate I shall have to ask him to desist.

(Translation):

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your good advice. Yet, the hon. member for Bellechasse did not think he was out of order in referring to Mr. Duplessis' act, introduced in 1953-54, which has no relation at all to this bill. I respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that you gave the hon. member for Bellechasse full latitude to refer to that point.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I believe you have sufficiently indicated to the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville that he is out of order—

Mr. Chevrier: Why are you rising on a point of order?

Mr. Fortin: —but he keeps coming back to it, and he is now indicting, in the house, the hon. member for Bellechasse. We want to hear him discuss the bill; and if he wants to limit his remarks to the bill, he should refrain from indulging in personalities, because in doing so he goes against the Speaker's ruling.

Mr. Dupuis: I must point out to my hon. friend that I am not addressing myself to the hon. members who claim that Quebec is a province like other provinces but to those who say that it is unlike other provinces. I fail to see why the hon. member should feel slighted. I cannot see how it can be said that I am taking a particular member to task, when I am criticizing, in a particular member, the attitude of a whole group which, in the last federal election, abused the good faith of the voters.

Mr. Speaker, in considering this bill, we should take care to respect provincial rights; however, those rights were just as much respected when the original bill was introduced under a Liberal government. Some rights are unchanged and unchangeable, undisputed and undisputable, unviolated and inviolable, uncontested and incontestable; the Liberal government has always respected those rights and today, the Conservative government is serving proof to the people that our legislation was good, because they are bringing it back unchanged before the public. Then, always referring to the section before us, I shall remind the hon. member for Bellechasse that he quoted certain words spoken by a well-known personality. As a matter of fact, with regard to that precise matter, that is what the Hon. Jean Lesage said on Sunday, March 16, 1958, at L'Islet:

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Dupuis: Wait a moment, you are suffering and you shall suffer, just wait. This is what Mr. Lesage said:

> I say to you, whatever our opponents may promise, and whatever their criticism may be, the Conservative government will bring no basic change in the system of subsidies and equalization payments, if it is returned to power.

You can see today how right Mr. Lesage was at that time.

Mr. Speaker, since I am not allowed to answer the hon. member for Bellechasse as I would have liked to, I must limit my remarks. However, I am anxious to see those members rise, especially the ineffable Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer) who is looking at me with his artless grin; I am quite anxious to see the Solicitor General rise with his Conservative friends and vote today in favour of a Liberal legislation which he condemned in the past.

And here is my last word, which could always be of some use to my Conservative friends from the province of Quebec: "Autonomy, if you had not existed, we would have had to invent you to serve the purposes of these gentlemen."

An hon. Member: How pretty!

Mr. Johnson: Ask the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget) who is making petty politics now.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Division

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister of Finance a question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Essex East has already spoken.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I asked the minister a question.

Mr. Speaker: I know.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): You are not in the labour committee now.

Mr. Speaker: Unless the minister wishes to reply I have no means of dealing with the matter. The hon. member for Essex East has already spoken. Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to on division and bill read the third time and passed.

BRETTON WOODS AGREEMENTS ACT

AMENDMENT INCREASING AMOUNTS PAYABLE TO INTERNATIONAL FUND AND BANK

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-52, to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act.

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, we supported this measure at the resolution stage on May 20, and we still support it. I want to ask the minister two or three questions. I have noticed that over the last couple of years—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I suggest to the hon. member that if he has questions he should reserve them for the committee stage.

Mr. McMillan: These questions have to do with the bill itself, and it is pretty hard to assign them to a particular clause in the bill. Over the last couple of years I have noticed in the New York Times and other papers certain criticism of Canada's contribution under the Bretton Woods agreement. I should like to refer to one article in the Montreal Star of May 1, 1958. I do not do so by way of criticism but because I wish the minister's comment on it. The article is headed "World Bank Load 'Unfair' to Canada." It reads in part as follows:

> Canada and the United States are beginning to feel they are carrying an unfair share of the load in the world bank and the international monetary fund.

It is claimed in the article that at that time there was no recession in Europe while there was in Canada and the United States, and the view is expressed that the European countries should carry a heavier load. There is reference to West Germany being most frequently criticized because she had benefited to the extent of accumulating $5 billion in gold and foreign exchange reserves. The article goes on to state:

> The present West German quota of contributions to both the bank and the monetary fund are regarded in New York and in Canadian financial circles as ridiculously small, especially in view of the fact that the number of countries enrolled in the two organizations has gone up by half since they were formed.

I understand that the West Germans resisted vigorously the proposal that they put up any more money. I have simply quoted from this article to get the minister's comment. Evidently there was some criticism in Canada, and I wondered whether it came from the government or where it originated. We are not offering it as a criticism, but we would like to have some comments from the minister on this. I should like also to ask the minister if he is aware whether or not individual Canadians buy bonds in the international bank, and if so, to what extent.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): When we last had this matter before us on May 20 I indicated that I might have something more to say at this stage about the international finance corporation. At that time I expressed some amazement at the fact we were a member of the international finance corporation when no resolution had ever been introduced into the House of Commons requesting that the House of Commons approve Canada's participation in the international finance corporation.

I have had a look at the records and I know the minister is aware of the fact that parliament never gave legislative authority for our association with this organization. However, as he intimated there was a vote passed in the year 1955. The only mention of the money involved, and of Canada's participation, occurred not in the house at all but in the estimates committee on July 5, 1955, under vote 789, "to authorize the purchase of 3,600 shares of stock of the international finance corporation, being Canada's subscription as a member thereof for the amount of $3,600,000, United States, notwithstanding that payment may exceed or fall short of the equivalent in Canadian dollars, estimated as of May, 1955, $3,555,000".

An hon. member of the committee asked, "Is this a usual expenditure?" Then Mr. Harris replied:

> It is the first time it has appeared. The bank is not yet in existence but is expected to be by agreement of the various countries during the course of the fiscal year and we will buy our share of the stock in it.

This is a very odd way in which Canada became a member of an international organization. The minister of finance of the day announced, not to the House of Commons but to an estimates committee, that this was an unusual outlay of money, and he announced that Canada was going to become a member. Our group has reservations about our membership in this organization, because this is not a world-wide organization established to assist the peoples of other nations with the approval of the regimes or the governments of those nations. This is a means whereby an international agency is established which has the right to invest and make money in private enterprises in various areas of the world.

The organization has undertaken so far to help the Siemens company of western Germany to establish an electrical manufacturing plant in Brazil. It has assisted a branch of the Kaiser corporation to establish an automobile plant in Brazil. It has assisted numerous other large industrial organizations or concerns to invest in some of the underdeveloped areas of the world. The corporation is a money making organization. For example, the term of the loan to the Siemens company reads "... 6 per cent interest and option on shares". I notice that in all cases except one the organization has taken for itself options on shares.

I assume from reading the report of the minister that the corporation then markets these options. It has made no little amount of money. In the year ending June 30, 1958 it had a net income of $2,358,276. The net income the year before was $1,675,382. I can see a danger in this organization. I know the minister has made the claim that this is an affiliate of the international bank. However, I do not find that it is really an affiliate at all. It may be operating in close consultation with the international bank. However, the purposes of this organization are altogether different from the purposes of the international bank. The international bank is designed to assist in the development of the underdeveloped areas of the world, with the approval of the governments concerned and also with the approval of the governments whose money is being used. In this case neither the approval of the people whose money is being used has been sought or obtained, nor the approval of the government of the country in which this corporation intends to invest its money.

I feel that the taxpayers of Canada have been misled, because when there was a revote of this money on August 14, 1956, no one asked anything about it; no one made any explanation at that time; nor did they do so the year before when the initial money was voted. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that August 14, 1956 was near the end of a lengthy, eight month session, so there was no debate on the item. I hope that some day the government is going to bring this matter before parliament in the form of a resolution or legislation, so that we may have a debate on whether or not it is expedient that Canada become a member of the international finance corporation and participate in its activities.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): I should like to say a few words on this subject. I quite realize that there was a worth-while and comprehensive debate on this legislation at the resolution stage. At that time I believe a question was raised, however, and I hope the minister will say something about it, either before we pass second reading or in committee. I refer to the announcement of President Eisenhower in August when he indicated, as did our own Prime Minister, that it seemed to be of advantage to increase the liquidity of the two funds to which we have been giving attention in this debate.

But there was a No. 3 item which some of us thought might get discussion at New Delhi at the annual meeting, namely President Eisenhower's idea about the international development bank. So that we may have it on the record, President Eisenhower indicated that he would like to see the international monetary fund contributions increased by 50 per cent. He indicated before the assembly in New Delhi that he would also like to see the capital of the world bank doubled; but he added that he felt there should be the establishment—and that is the word I read in the New York Times—of an international development bank as an affiliate of the world bank. I wonder if the minister, who attended this conference on behalf of Canada, would indicate to the house, or later to the committee, just what the difference is between President Eisenhower's conception of a new affiliate of the world bank and the one which I confess the minister did describe in the debate on May 20 known as another affiliate of the world bank, namely the international finance corporation. I hope the minister will comment on that.

In addition, I wonder if the minister at some stage before we complete approval of this legislation would indicate whether or not, having surveyed the scene, he concludes that the new resources of the world bank will come chiefly from new national contributions, or will they come, in the case of other countries, mostly from borrowings in the United States by the members of the world bank?

In addition to that, the last figures which I saw indicated that the world bank on concluding their last public report of June 30, 1958 indicated that in the current year they had loaned $711 million, which was stated to be three-quarters as much again as the average of the three preceding years. Perhaps there is a new figure available to the house with respect to world bank activities since this last figure which is available to me as of June 30, 1958.

Another question which I should like to ask the minister, about which I am not clear —I probably have not completed adequate research—is this. Has the United States congress yet done down there what is being asked of us here? Another question I would like to ask is, am I right in thinking that in dollars and cents the result not only of the increase in contributions of 50 per cent in the case of the international monetary fund and 100 per cent in the case of the world bank, but also by virtue of the extra percentage of over-all assessment which Canada has agreed to bear in the case of each one of these organizations, amounts to $100 million? That is to say, if the straight 50 per cent were used in the case of the international monetary fund and the 100 per cent increase were used in the case of the world bank, am I right in thinking that the effect would be, without the new percentage assessment that was agreed to by the minister, that we would be asked for $200 million less than is contemplated in the legislation before us?

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, before the minister makes his closing speech, I would just like to make one comment with regard to the speech to which we have just listened. Until I heard the hon. member's speech I had thought that this institution and its aims were acclaimed by every right minded citizen of the world as an attempt whereby those who were in a position to do so assisted others not in a position to take care of themselves. I thought it was an attempt to help people help themselves, but apparently there seems to be something sinister about it. Apparently because this institution has helped some private institutions to get on their feet we must regard it with suspicion and seek some dark and unworthy motive. I would like to ask the hon. member whether the employment provided and the production produced by these companies, private as they are, which are now helped by the institution which we are further to hear about, is a benefit or a curse? It seems to me really that sometimes those of us who spend a great deal of our time in doctrinaire considerations get away from practical considerations.

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I can be very brief. It seems to me that the points raised by hon. members of the opposition in their remarks could better have been made in committee, because in almost every case they led to questions being asked. However, the questions have been asked and perhaps I can deal briefly with them.

Mr. Benidickson: Our latitude is a little wider on second reading, as the minister will realize.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I thought that as we had agreed on the principle of the bill the latitude afforded in committee for questions and answers is much greater than on second reading.

Mr. Benidickson: That has not been the ruling in this parliament, particularly when the minister was piloting through legislation.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is again mistaken. He has been here long enough, I think, to know the rules of the house and how they ought to be observed.

Let me begin with the first point which was raised. The subscriptions of these countries are carefully considered on the basis of various economic factors, and I catalogued a number of these in the discussion on the resolution stage on May 20. The government is satisfied that the Canadian subscription in each case is eminently fair. It takes account of the position of Canada in the world, particularly in world commerce and trade; and it is always to be borne in mind that the reason why many countries are seeking to increase their subscriptions to the bank and the fund is that it puts them in a better position to receive aid from these institutions if required.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) asked about the extent of the Canadian subscriptions. Canada's subscription in the past to the international monetary fund has been $300 million. Had the Canadian subscription been increased simply by 50 per cent, which is the general increase, her subscription would have become $450 million. We are asking the house to approve a subscription of $550 million, which means $100 million in excess of the 50 per cent increase.

In the case of the subscription to the international bank for reconstruction and development, Canada's subscription hitherto has been $325 million. The general percentage of increase as applied to all subscribing countries was 100 per cent. Canada's increase of 100 per cent would have brought her subscription to $650 million. She is actually taking a subscription, if the house approves, of $750 million, which is therefore an increase of $100 million over and above the general rate of increase.

I was also asked, Mr. Speaker, concerning the marketing of bond issues of the international bank. There have been three issues of bonds of the international bank which have been marketed in Canada. One has been paid off and two are outstanding in the aggregate amount of $40 million. I am told that these have been bought mainly by Canadians, and in addition Canadians have also bought some of the issues of the international bank which have been floated in the United States in United States dollars.

I was also asked about the new resources—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does the minister know what the market value of the bonds are at the moment, roughly?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, but I can give figures as to the way in which the general rise in interest rates on this continent has affected the rates of the world bank.

Mr. Speaker, I was asked about the new resources of the international bank. It is quite clear that with these increased subscriptions the bank's resources are going to be increased and its ability to market its securities in new borrowings will be considerably improved. In speaking at the resolution stage on May 20 I indicated the fact that the bank's resources—indeed the resources of both the bank and the fund—have been taxed in recent times by the heavy demands upon them and that these increases in the resources of both institutions are necessary if these institutions are to carry on their beneficent work.

Mr. Benidickson: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, we are on second reading. I think probably these questions can better be left until the committee stage, if that procedure meets with my hon. friend's convenience.

I was somewhat surprised at the attack made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) on Canada's membership in the international finance corporation and the extraordinarily flimsy grounds upon which the hon. member based his contention that somehow or other Canada has not legally or properly subscribed to the capital of this particular international institution. Mr. Speaker, I must again refer the hon. member to what I said as reported at page 3855 of Hansard in the discussion of this matter on May 20.

There is no question about the legality of the proceedings taken by the Canadian parliament at that time. The former government that was in office at that time, if it had so chosen, could have asked parliament to approve a resolution in this respect. It could have done so. It did not do so. The fact that it did not do so does not render Canada's association with the international finance corporation illegal in the light of the action that parliament took. An appropriation bill passed by parliament is just as much a legislative enactment of this parliament as is any other measure that is passed by this parliament. In this case the government of the day, instead of introducing a formal resolution or a formal bill relating to Canada's joining the international finance corporation, chose to ask parliament to approve a subscription for 3,600 shares of the capital stock of the international finance corporation. It did so in the estimates and, I must say, it did so not on one occasion but on two occasions. If the hon. member thinks now that this matter went through parliament without adequate discussion, then I must recall to his mind the responsibility that he shares in that respect along with others, because he was one of those who decided on those two occasions to forego the opportunity to raise the matter for discussion.

Mr. Benidickson: Except that there was not actually a second vote of money, was there? One vote lapsed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The matter was before the house twice and it was voted upon.

Mr. Benidickson: That is right. There is no quarrel there.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The first vote lapsed. That was the reason for the second one. I refer the hon. member to what I said at the resolution stage as reported at page 3855 of Hansard of May 20:

> Accordingly an item was inserted in the estimates for the fiscal year 1955-56. This item, No. 789, was discussed in the estimates committee on July 5, 1955.

It was on that occasion that an hon. gentleman who was or had been a member of the same party as that of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, namely Mr. Thatcher, questioned this item and was given certain information. Because sufficient signatures to bring the corporation into existence were not obtained in that fiscal year that vote lapsed and the government of that day accordingly inserted in the supplementary estimates for the year 1956-57 another item, namely item 731.

Mr. Benidickson: A repeat.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That item is quite clear in its provisions. It reads as follows:

> 731. To authorize the purchase of 3,600 shares of stock of the international finance corporation being Canada's subscription as a member thereof for the amount of $3,600,000 U.S., notwithstanding that payment may exceed or fall short of the equivalent in Canadian dollars, estimated as of May, 1956 (Revote).

It is shown as a revote. That item was passed in this house on August 14, 1956. While the hon. member may say that that was late in the session and that the item was not discussed then as it might have been, the fact is that it became law. The hon. member had his right to discuss it and to question it if he was not satisfied with it. It became law and it is in the appropriation bill for that session. Hence there can be no question at all about the legality as well as the propriety of Canada's adherence to the international finance corporation. Canada has acquired the 3,600 shares for a payment in United States dollars of $3,600,000. Canada has taken her part in the affairs of the institution.

I think the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam again has misconceived the nature of the functions of the international finance corporation. He apparently views it with horror, distaste, and disapprobation because it seems to be encouraging and assisting private enterprise. That seems to be the whole burden of the hostile attitude which he demonstrated toward the international finance corporation in the course of these discussions. In amplification of the record, Mr. Speaker, I must say that the hon. member chose to refer only to cases in which the international finance corporation has made investments jointly with large corporations. The international finance corporation has in fact made a couple of such loans where the investment looked to be useful from the point of view of economic development and the corporation was satisfied that the investment would not have been made unless the international finance corporation shared in it. I may say that the international finance corporation has also made a number of quite small loans. One it made recently was as small as $140,000.

I think it is quite clear that while the international finance corporation has not yet played a leading role in the unfolding record of assistance through these international organizations, nevertheless there may yet be a useful role for this corporation to play. It, of course, does not compare in size or importance with the international bank for reconstruction and development with which it is affiliated. It does not compare in size and importance with the international monetary fund. But there certainly was, in the view of the countries which are members of the international bank, a place in this mechanism of international finance organizations for such an organization as the international finance corporation and for such a function as it is qualified to perform. Otherwise they would not have entered into it. Fifty-seven countries are now members of the international finance corporation. I think that is as effective testimony as one needs to call in order to establish the useful role that this corporation may be called upon to play.

Mr. Speaker, on May 20 I expressed the same view with regard to the legality of Canada's subscription to the capital stock of the international finance corporation, and stated that my predecessor had been assured by the Department of Justice that the procedure which he was following was sound legally.

I was asked a question just now about the rate on the bonds of the international bank. I may say that the interest basis on which the bank operates in fixing the rate of interest on loans is to charge a rate which is composed of the approximate cost of the money obtained by the sale of its own debentures plus a statutory commission of 1 per cent plus an amount of approximately one-quarter of one per cent to cover overhead. The bank's loan interest rate is now 6 per cent. In July, 1957 it was 5⅝ per cent and by October of that year it had risen to 6 per cent. It was reduced to 5¾ per cent in December of 1957. In May 1958 it was 5⅜ per cent. As I have indicated it has risen since that time in keeping with the rise in interest rates on this continent. These changes reflect conditions on the world capital market especially on the New York market where the international bank does most of its borrowing.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

On clause 1—Payment of subscriptions out of C.R. fund.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, would the minister care to answer a few of the questions I raised?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, Mr. Chairman. The hon. gentleman asked me about the loans of the international bank in 1958-59 to date. The loans in 1958-59 to April 21 amounted to $559,475,000.

Mr. Benidickson: Have you any yardstick such as I used quoting from a report of the bank that the loans as of June 30, 1958 were three-quarters beyond what had been loaned in the last three years taking the average?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Certainly the volume has been steadily rising in recent years. The demands on the bank have been higher than ever before and it was out of that situation that emerged the proposals for the increase in the subscription.

Mr. Benidickson: I also raised the question about the Eisenhower plan which was couched in the words "development plan". I have in front of me a clipping from the London Times. I take it that one of the senior delegates from the United States did refer to this at New Delhi. This purports to be a dispatch from New Delhi to the London Times while the annual conference was taking place and the date is October 9. It confirms the remarks I made when we were discussing this matter on second reading. It refers to a new effort on the part of the United States government to promote economic development.

I suggested that I had read another dispatch in the New York Times to the effect that President Eisenhower had a three-fold outline of suggestions to the United States delegation for the New Delhi conference. I do not have this dispatch before me but my notes indicate that the suggestions included an increase in the I.M.F. fund, an increase in the world bank fund and the establishment —that is the word as it appears in my notes —of a proposed international development bank as an affiliate of the world bank. The dispatch was dated August 27.

The Minister of Finance will recall that the Leader of the Opposition on May 27 made reference to this as reported at page 3855 of Hansard. I just wondered if the minister could recall the distinction between what might be involved in this proposal which was given a great deal of publicity across the world and the very full explanation of the work of the international finance corporation which I willingly admit the minister gave to the house on May 20. What is the distinction between those two possible affiliates of the world bank?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, may I first turn to a question the hon. member asked me earlier about ratification by the United States congress. I am informed that congress completed ratification yesterday.

Mr. Benidickson: Along the terms of the schedule outlined by the minister?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, quite, that is to say, the United States subscriptions as set forth in the table I put on Hansard on May 20.

The hon. gentleman now asks me about an organization which he refers to as the international development bank. The name that this proposal bears is the international development association. I was asked a question about this a fortnight ago by the Leader of the Opposition. He referred to it in the discussion at the resolution stage of the present measure on May 20.

The international development association, I wish first of all to make clear, has nothing to do with the international finance corporation. The suggestion emanated from Washington and discussion on it was current in Washington about a year ago. It was known at that time as the Monroney plan. The father of it was Senator Monroney. The gist of this plan was that a new organization might be set up to provide loans in hard currency available to countries in need of loans in hard currency which would be repayable by them in soft currency. They would be permitted to repay in their own currencies.

The discussion at Washington in the spring and early summer of 1958 had proceeded to a point where it was thought that it might be the intention of the United States delegation to the meeting of the governors of the international bank and the international monetary fund at New Delhi in October to bring the matter forward as a proposal there. However, that was not done. The matter has been rather dormant in the interval. There have been indications in the press of late that the subject is to be revived. When I was asked about this on May 20 by the Leader of the Opposition I indicated that the Canadian government has not had occasion to express an opinion or take a position on the matter as yet because it has not received any proposal in sufficiently concrete terms to enable it to do so.

Mr. Benidickson: I am quoting again from my notes. The minister will recall that President Eisenhower introduced this concept of an international development bank and described it as a possible affiliate of the world bank. The minister will also recall that a somewhat similar suggestion concerning a commonwealth bank was advanced by Prime Minister Macmillan. Both President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan visited Canada during 1958 and I am sure both of these concepts were advanced to the government. There was a discussion with Prime Minister Macmillan about his idea of a commonwealth bank. Was there any discussion of this at New Delhi?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Benidickson: I raised a supplementary question on second reading which the minister quite properly did not want to answer at that point. I raised it because I felt he was not answering my main question fully. My question was this. The minister has explained to us that Canada's contribution will be made out of the exchange fund. We have United States currency and assets out of which we can make our contribution under the obligations of the statute in front of us.

My question was whether the minister, as a result of his attendance at this world meeting and as a result of additional information that comes to him steadily, could inform us whether it was his opinion that the additional contributions from other members of these two international finance organizations would come from reserves that they have, such as we have, in United States funds, or whether they would really in fact come from additional borrowings that these members would have to make in the United States?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am told, it is expected that the countries which are raising their subscriptions will be able to do so out of their own exchange reserves.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, it is some time since I have been intimately connected with some of the activities of these two organizations. Can the minister inform the committee as to whether or not any loans have been made by the bank to Canadian corporations or persons? Certainly, I am quite sure the answer will be no in the case of Canada. Canada has not had any exchange difficulties which would warrant any appeal to the international monetary fund. We have had no difficulties since 1947, and we did not borrow at that time.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There have been no loans to Canada from the international bank.

Mr. Benidickson: Similarly, would that be so with respect to the international finance corporation, even though the minister indicated some of their lendings have been in relatively small amounts. There have been none to Canadian persons or corporations?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): None in that case at all, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McMillan: I wish to ask one question. I understand that Canada's security holdings in the bank were 3.3 per cent. Do these amendments change that percentage materially in the bank or in the fund?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not materially.

Mr. Benidickson: Following up the question of the hon. member for Welland, I had asked just what the dollar value was of the increase in the percentage, which the minister confirmed was $100 million in each case. Can we have for the record just the change in the percentage of national contributions before New Delhi, as of now, as a result of the agreement made at New Delhi?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That can be worked out. I will be glad to send that to my hon. friend.

Mr. Benidickson: I do not think it is in the book.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No. It will depend, of course, on the ratifications. And, of course, account must be taken as well of the fact that changes in membership are going on all the time. There are new additions to the membership.

Mr. Benidickson: The minister indicated—and I think he was devoting his attention at that point clearly to the international finance corporation—that it was supported by agreements to subscribe to stock by 57 members of the world bank.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The international finance corporation.

Mr. Benidickson: What is the actual number of countries which subscribe to the world bank as against the 57 which belong to the international finance corporation?

Mr. Fleming: Sixty-eight.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, is it not correct that the world bank also makes loans available for private investment in the many under-developed areas of the world?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, sir.

Mr. Regier: Is this not the only essential difference between the world bank and the international finance corporation? The world bank makes these loans available at as near cost as possible, with the approval of the nation or of the government of the country that is lending the money and also with the approval of the government of the nation in which the investment is made; whereas, on the other hand, loans made by the international finance corporation are not made at cost. One of the aims of that organization is to make money and the loans need not have the approval of the government whose money in the main is being used, and does not need the approval of the government or the nation in which the investment is being made.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not think I can do better, in stating the purposes and functions of these two institutions and comparing them than to draw attention to what I said about them at the committee stage in the statement I made on May 20, at pages 3852 and 3855 of Hansard. Hon. members will find this in the second column on page 3852. I pointed out:

> The international bank has, by direct loans and by arranging for investment from other public and private sources, contributed to the long-term economic growth of many countries, particularly those in greatest need of development capital. It has also provided a pool of competent technical personnel to assist countries in working out sound development programs.

As to the international finance corporation, I said at page 3855 of Hansard, in the second paragraph:

> The international finance corporation is an affiliate of the international bank for reconstruction and development with membership open only to governments which are members of the bank. Its objective is to further economic development by encouraging the growth of productive private enterprise in its member countries, particularly in the less developed areas.

Then I pointed out the means available to the international finance corporation for pursuing that purpose. There are three of them:

> (1) Investing in productive private enterprises, in association with private investors and without government guarantee of repayment, in cases where sufficient private capital is not available on reasonable terms.
> (2) Serving as a clearing house to bring together investment opportunities, private capital—both foreign and domestic—and experienced management; and
> (3) Helping to stimulate the productive investment of private capital both domestic and foreign.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time, by leave now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

Judges Act

JUDGES ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE SALARIES FOR ADDITIONAL JUDGES

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Judges Act to provide salaries for three additional puisne judges of the superior court of Quebec, for two additional judges of the supreme court of British Columbia and for two additional judges of the supreme court of Alberta.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, the resolution is short and self-explanatory. Its purpose is to authorize the introduction of a bill to provide salaries for three additional judges of the superior court of Quebec, two additional judges of the trial division of the high court of Alberta and two additional judges of the supreme court of British Columbia. These additions have in every case been requested by and the necessary authority has been provided under appropriate provincial legislation. What is now necessary is for this parliament to amend the Judges Act to provide the salaries which will make it possible for us to make the appointments.

(Translation):

Mr. Meunier: The Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) is introducing a bill providing for the salary of a greater number of judges for the superior court of the province of Quebec, the supreme court of British Columbia, and the supreme court of Alberta.

I may say that, in a general way, we are in favour of that proposed legislation since, as the minister explained, those new judges for each of those provinces, have been requested by each province concerned, which are responsible for the administration of justice.

There is no doubt that with the increase in population in Canada, the number of people amenable to courts increases, and that, sometimes, too long delays in the solution of cases become a denial of justice.

The province of Quebec is requesting the appointment of three judges to the superior court for the combined districts of Abitibi, Rouyn-Noranda and Timiskaming, of Chicoutimi and Rimouski, the appointed judges to reside in those respective districts. Those three judicial districts are under the Quebec territorial division and are quite a distance from it. There is no doubt that a judge residing in each of those districts will improve the situation of the people concerned and will be of service to the population in general.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Those appointments, which have been recommended and requested for many years by the bar association of each of those districts, were long overdue. It has never been known why those requests have been postponed until today by the Quebec governmental authorities, because autonomy is in no way concerned in that matter. The future will probably tell.

In conclusion, I hope the minister will appoint to those positions of judges men of integrity, learning and legal knowledge, who will be able to fulfil efficiently their role for the welfare of the people under their jurisdiction and of the population in general.

(Text):

Mr. Broome: I should like to say a few words on this resolution. There have been several articles in Vancouver newspapers pointing out that the supreme court of British Columbia is roughly nine months behind in its work. If the ordinary citizen has to make use of such facilities it is certainly not justice that he should have to wait that long before his case is brought to trial.

I want to mention one other point and I suppose it is only on the resolution stage that I can do so. I refer to the fact that there is no age limit with respect to judges except those of the Supreme Court of Canada and in my view this may tend to be reflected in lower productivity as judges increase in age. I know that it is a question of the constitution but I think that something should be done so that the same age limit that applies to judges of the Supreme Court of Canada will be applied to judges in the various provincial supreme courts and courts of appeal. I can see that we will have to continue adding judges all the time if we happen to come to the point where the average age of our judges approaches 80 years. This is not to say that a judge who is over 75 may not be fully competent to take care of the work he has to do. If judges are to continue beyond 75 then it should be done by way of extension but preferably retirement at 75 should be made compulsory.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I want to take advantage of this resolution to ask the minister if he can explain the fact that notwithstanding that legislation was introduced last session providing for six new county court judges in Ontario five were appointed and one appointment which was made available for my own county of Essex was not proceeded with. I am not blaming the minister for that situation—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —but perhaps the minister can explain—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —why the appointment has not been made—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —when legislative authority was given for that purpose. I would be very grateful to the minister if on this measure he would explain that fact.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have asked the minister a question. He may want to get the resolution through quickly.

Mr. Fulton: I doubt very much if the question asked by the hon. member for Essex East is in order. It has nothing to do with the resolution to amend the Judges Act to provide seven more judges of the various superior courts. However, in order to avoid a controversy as to the rules, the short answer is that the amendments to the judicature act of Ontario introduced last year did not provide specifically for a vacancy for the district to which my hon. friend refers. It is true that in discussions I had with the attorney-general there was some reference to the district as being one that might require some attention but my understanding is that the situation there has improved recently. Five judges have been appointed and I expect to be making the appointment of a sixth judge shortly.

The attorney-general of Ontario is anxious to proceed with some reforms of the county court of Ontario which involve an enlargement, as it were, of the areas to which district court judges could be sent and it is my intention, in compliance with the request of the attorney-general of Ontario, to appoint one extra judge, the sixth for whom a vacancy was provided, on that basis.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is to say, my hon. friend is saying that if the attorney-general takes every step that he must take in order to make that appointment effective there will be the fullest co-operation from my hon. friend in the appointment of an extra judge in the county of Essex, making three judges there. Is that the effect of my hon. friend's answer?

Mr. Fulton: I do not think so, Mr. Chairman. As I tried to explain, the legislation passed by Ontario last year did not provide for the specific designation of six extra vacancies to six specific counties. It is true that the five so far appointed have been designated to specific counties but the attorney-general of Ontario is anxious to proceed on a somewhat different basis for the purpose of testing out a reform he has in mind. I intend to appoint the sixth judge but there is no assurance that he will be appointed with any specific designation to the county of Essex or the district in which Windsor lies.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does my hon. friend not think that he owes an explanation for bringing forward this legislation making possible the appointment of an additional judge to the county of Essex? When this matter was raised a year ago my hon. friend told me that the responsibility for not having proceeded with the appointment lay with the attorney-general and that the reason given was that the latter had in mind the desirability of rotating judges and he thought that kind of arrangement might be made in the county of Essex. Now my hon. friend comes forward and tells us that the Ontario government has taken legislative action which precludes the possibility of a third judge there.

Mr. Fulton: I never said any such thing. I do not know whether my hon. friend is deliberately desiring to misunderstand what I said but I said absolutely no such thing as the hon. member now suggests.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, explain the thing.

Mr. Fulton: I do not think my hon. friend wishes to listen to an explanation. I have explained it twice. At no time did I say that the responsibility rested exclusively in the attorney general of Ontario. What I said was that the legislation introduced in Ontario last year provided for the appointment of six extra judges, but it did not specifically create vacancies in the districts of Ontario to which those judges were to be appointed. As a result of a discussion with the attorney general of Ontario it was agreed that five of the judges should be appointed and assigned to specific districts, specific county courts, but with regard to the sixth appointment it was the desire of the attorney general of Ontario, as I said, to test out a new approach to the structure of the district courts of Ontario.

It is, therefore, the intention to appoint a sixth judge without assignment to a specific district. This sixth judge will then be available to serve in any district where a backlog of cases exists or the absence of a judge or any other feature makes it desirable for him to proceed to hold court.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is quite clear that I did not misunderstand the situation at all. Since my hon. friend used the word "deliberately" one could have readily objected to that but I thought, in the interest of the passage of this item, I would not. It is quite clear now that the situation is.

Last year my hon. friend took authority to appoint six judges, one of them to be appointed in the county of Essex.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege: I have attempted to explain three times that authority was not taken on that basis. I never said authority was taken on that basis.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I ask my hon. friend to look at the words he used in the house, and I am not going to change what I said.

Mr. Fulton: If my hon. friend will give me the reference in Hansard—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have not go it readily at hand.

Mr. Fulton: My hon. friend is stating what is not correct.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am stating that is the situation as outlined by the Minister of Justice, and which he obviously fails to recall perhaps deliberately or perhaps because he has just forgotten. The fact is that is the situation which the minister outlined. He also told me, in answer to a question, that if there was no action taken that was the responsibility of the attorney general of Ontario.

Now it is quite clear what the situation is. The attorney general does not intend that there shall be a third judge in the county of Essex. In view of the public statement made that there should be a third judge, we are now told by the Minister of Justice that it is not his intention or it is not the intention of the attorney general to appoint a third judge in the county of Essex. Now, that is the situation. If the Minister of Justice had come to parliament last year and had not taken the authority we would not have been in the situation that now confronts us and there would not have been, on the part of certain very worthy individuals in my county, the embarrassment that has flown from this action—and they are not supporters of this government either. As a result—

Mr. Stinson: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —there has arisen all this confusion and bungling on the part of the attorney general of Ontario and this Minister of Justice.

Mr. Fulton: My hon. friend will say, if I attempt to answer him as he should be answered, that I am now provoking bad feeling and holding up this legislation, but I cannot allow this to go unanswered. The hon. gentleman has done an entirely unwarranted thing. Without having had the courtesy to give the committee the Hansard reference he has misstated what I said last year. I challenge him to find anywhere in Hansard what he says I said, and until the hon. gentleman does so he must proceed under a cloud in this committee, having misstated what was said and having been challenged to prove it and then being unable to find it.

In any event, his question is out of order, and I say flatly that he has misstated what was said last year when the amendment to the Judges Act was introduced and the result of the amendments introduced in Ontario. I state that as a fact. I am not prepared to pursue the matter further because the whole discussion has been out of order. What we are now seeking to do is have an amendment to provide for the salaries of additional judges in the superior courts, and the county courts in Ontario are in no way affected.

(Translation):

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, could the minister indicate on what date the provinces involved in this proposal have advised the federal government that their legislation with respect to the appointment of additional judges was in force?

(Text):

Mr. Fulton: The notification from Alberta was received by letter from the attorney general of Alberta, dated April 1, informing me that the act of the Alberta legislature was passed and assented to on March 31, 1959. The notification from Quebec was not received, if I may say so, directly, but we received information that the legislation had been passed. I wrote to the attorney general of Quebec and received a letter in reply dated March 16 confirming that the provincial legislation provided for three additional judges to the superior court, and that it had been adopted unanimously by the legislature.

I was informed by the attorney general of British Columbia—rather I have here a letter from the deputy attorney general of British Columbia addressed to the deputy attorney general, dated April 11, which advised that the provincial legislation amending the supreme court act of the province to increase the number of judges by two was approved at the session of the legislature held in the spring and was assented to on March 20, 1959.

The Chairman: Order, it being five o'clock, we must proceed to private bills.

Mr. Chevrier: Before you call it five o'clock, Mr. Chairman, may I say that, in order to assist the business of the house we on this side of the house would be prepared to waive our right to deal with private and public business that is generally dealt with between five and six o'clock.

Mr. Green: I am very grateful to the hon. member for Laurier for making that suggestion. I understand that the hon. member for Assiniboia has also agreed to this course.

The Chairman: I must remind the house that when such a proposition is made it must be made while Mr. Speaker is in the chair.

Progress reported.

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to consideration of private and public bills, the former having precedence pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15. Is it the will of the house to waive the provisions of the standing order this day and revert to the business which was interrupted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

JUDGES ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE SALARIES FOR ADDITIONAL JUDGES

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Fulton—Mr. Sevigny in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Judges Act to provide salaries for three additional puisne judges of the superior court of Quebec, for two additional judges of the supreme court of British Columbia and for two additional judges of the supreme court of Alberta.

Mr. McPhillips: I should like to say a few words in connection with this resolution. So far as my province of British Columbia is concerned, I am in agreement with the fact that we need two further superior court judges. There is no question about that. However, there is something in connection with the administration of the supreme court of British Columbia which is, from time to time, causing a lot of trouble. The people of British Columbia, by legislative enactment, provided that superior court judges should be resident in certain parts of the province. This act provides that there should be a resident judge in the interior of the province and certain resident judges on Vancouver island and in the cities of New Westminster and Vancouver.

Under the administration of the previous chief justice and the present chief justice of the supreme court, there has been a tendency —I would say more than a tendency—to require all the superior court judges to reside in our large commercial city of Vancouver and from there to fan out like the spokes of a wheel all over the province. I appreciate, Mr. Chairman, that the government of Canada has nothing to do with this in the sense of legislation; but the law is there, and I do suggest that should the province of British Columbia come along and ask the Canadian government to provide salaries for two more judges which are needed, the government of Canada could very well say, "We think you are right and do need two more judges, but we will not pay the salaries for two more judges unless you follow the law as it exists in your own province of British Columbia with regard to the residence of these judges".

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Fulton thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-56, to amend the Judges Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a second time? By leave, now.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, before the bill is read a second time, I should like to put a question to the minister which I meant to put in committee but I was called out for a moment, and it is this. Is there any provision in the existing law for the payment of the salary of a fourth judge in the supreme court of Newfoundland? If not, could provision not be made for that purpose in the existing legislation, in view of the professed interest of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the minister in having such an appointment made?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-56, to amend the Judges Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think that having moved this measure I have spoken first, and therefore if I answer the question of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) I presume I am closing the debate. If that is in order I would be glad to answer his question.

I will send out for the information, but I regret I am not able to speak with absolute certainty. My impression, however, is that there is no provision at present in the Judges Act for payment of a salary of a fourth judge in Newfoundland. It is my understanding that there is no authority, as it were, for us to ask parliament to provide such a salary until the provincial government has taken the necessary step of providing a vacancy. I understand that the position is that the provincial government has a statute which provides for a fourth vacancy, but that statute requires proclamation. This is one of the matters upon which I had a friendly discussion with the premier of Newfoundland on the occasion of my recent visit. Because the discussions were private I am not able to go further at the moment than to say that it was discussed, and it would be my hope that the province of Newfoundland—mind you, only if it sees fit—might proclaim its act and take the necessary steps to bring it into force. At that time I am certain that this government and parliament would give sympathetic consideration to the necessary legislative enactment to provide for the salary.

Mr. Broome: Before the minister sits down, I wonder if he would comment on my suggestion with regard to the retiring age of judges?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, that is a matter which has been of concern to successive governments. My understanding of the situation is that it would require a constitutional amendment because the provisions with regard to the appointment of judges and their tenure of office are provided under the British North America Act, and being judges of provincial courts of the type we are discussing today I understand it is not the type of subject to which amending action by the dominion parliament alone would be appropriate. It would require an agreement with the provinces, and that type of constitutional amendment, as hon. members know, is extremely difficult to obtain.

With regard to the principle suggested that there should be an age limit of 75 upon judges in superior courts, I am in entire agreement with that. At the present time the judges of the county courts and of the exchequer court and the Supreme Court of Canada have an age limit of 75. It seems an anomaly, to say the least, that if the judges of the highest court in the land must retire at 75, and the judges of the county courts, if I may say without offence, at the other end of the scale, must also retire at 75, that the judges of the trial and appeal courts of the provinces should not be subject to the same age limit. It is a matter which, I believe, is increasingly commanding the interest and concern of the bar association, and there is a possibility that the bar association may take it up with provincial governments. In that event there may be some hope for agreement and ultimate amendment, and certainly any move in that direction would receive my own enthusiastic support.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, may I ask the minister if there are copies of the bill available so that we may look at it?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, the bill has been printed for some time and copies should be available for distribution.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, we have not got them at this time.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, while you are leaving the chair to take the chair in committee, I will send out and get copies, because I am sure they are in the distribution office.

The house in committee, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, while waiting for the bill to be distributed, I thought I would like to ask a question of the minister; I think he requires no notice of it. He is aware that in Rainy River in Ontario the district court judge was asked repeatedly to serve in a congested court in Toronto. The result was that for almost two years his services were so much in demand in Toronto that he was not available for the court in Rainy River to which he was appointed. A short time ago the minister saw fit to appoint him formally to the Toronto court, but I would like to point out to the minister that in consequence of this co-operation during the past two years at least the members of the bar are complaining very frequently about the lack of attention to the business of the citizens of Rainy River. I wonder whether or not the minister could inform the committee whether he has some optimism about having somebody in that court in the near future who would give full time service to the duties of the district?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I can. The hon. gentleman has been kind enough to discuss with me personally on two or three occasions and I appreciate his interest in the matter. It is, as he knows, an area which is not one of the easiest in the provinces, and that presents certain problems in connection with making these appointments, but I expect the problems will be resolved in the near future. In the meantime as an earnest of my intention I would remind the hon. member of the fact that when a vacancy arose in the other part of that district, at Kenora itself, the appointment was made with considerable dispatch, and I expect that this one will be made quite shortly.

Mr. Benidickson: I agree, Mr. Chairman, and I did compliment the minister personally upon the dispatch with which he dealt with the vacancy in Kenora. In the circumstances

I can say no more about it. I have no doubt as to that matter. The long period of absences with the consequent pile-up of unfinished business I think exists in my district in the southern area of Rainy River. I just urge the minister to give the matter his close attention. I compliment him upon his appointment and dispatch in the other area.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister made an error in referring to dispatch. I had not intended to ask a question but I should like to ask the minister whether he can tell me what is the longest period in which there was a vacancy in the chief justiceship of a province.

Mr. Fulton: I am afraid that I have not that information here. May I suggest to the hon. member that, if it is important to him, I can get it and that he ask a question on my estimates.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to have the information. I should be quite happy to have it given on the minister's estimates.

Mr. Fulton: If our records show it, I will get it.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 and 3 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE ACT

AMENDMENT TO REVISE AND CONSOLIDATE CERTAIN PENSION PROVISIONS, ETC.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the revision and consolidation of certain of the pension provisions of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund of superannuation and other benefits to members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and their dependents and for matters incidental thereto, and to provide further for certain administrative changes in connection therewith.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

Mr. Fulton: I think it would be appropriate if I made a short statement on this resolution. The main purpose of the bill which will follow the resolution, if it is adopted, is to provide a separate statute regulating the pension provisions for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and to bring the pension provisions available to members of the force more closely in line with the Public Service Superannuation Act or rather with the provisions available to those having their pensions under that act.

The main provision in the present Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act providing pensions to members of the force are found in part V of that act which was introduced in 1949. But this provision covers only a limited number of members. The original provision for payment of pensions to members of the force was made in 1889. Since then five different parts have been added to the act dealing with contributory and non-contributory pensions with only occasional attempts having been made to integrate one part with the other. The result has been to create confusion and to make it almost impossible to explain correctly the various pension privileges to personnel in terms that can be understood. In addition, as a result of the conglomeration and unscientific nature of the pension provisions in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act there have arisen a number of anomalies and cases of hardship with which it is at present impossible to deal.

The purpose of the present proposed bill is to rationalize the pension provisions under one general heading and to take care, in so far as it is possible to do so by legislation, of the hardship cases.

Perhaps I might try to outline briefly for the committee the main changes that will be accomplished. As I have said, the first change is that instead of the pension provisions available being found in the same general act as that which covers the constitution and the organization of the force itself, the pension provisions will now be contained in an entirely separate statute. The new feature affecting members serving under parts II and III of the present act which have relation to pension, apart from additional opportunity being afforded them to elect to have all their service count under part V, is the provision that they may receive disability pensions for injuries sustained on duty as well as their service pensions.

At the present time members who have served under parts II and III on retirement are entitled to a retirement pension. But if later it is found that they suffer from a disability which was incurred on service they are unable to obtain benefits that are available to almost every other person in a comparable position, namely a disability pension in addition to the service pension. That anomaly is now being removed under the new bill. Hence, the provisions which will be found in the bill will take care of all cases that we know of where hardship results from disability which did not occasion retirement. It will also assist these former members who sustained disabilities and are in receipt of a small service pension.

Some of the other anomalies, or what I might describe as anomalies, which will be taken care of—I refer to anomalies causing hardship—are as follows. It is desired to permit certain members who transferred from the British Columbia provincial police to count their service with the Imperial forces, something which is not permitted at present under the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act but which they could have counted for pension purposes had they continued serving in the British Columbia police.

Another type of case is that of a member who is presently required to serve out his full term of engagement even although he may have completed his full pensionable service before the expiry of his term of engagement.

A third type of anomaly which presently exists is that a member of the force must serve ten years in the force under the present provisions before becoming eligible for a disability pension. This bill would permit a pension with only ten years' pensionable service. This is important, Mr. Chairman, in order to cover the cases of transfers to the force from other branches of the public service.

The normal provision with regard to transfers between branches of the public service is that a transferee from one branch to another can count for pension in his new branch all his service in the former branch. Under the provisions of the present Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, if a public servant transfers into the force from any other branch of the public service his former service does not count toward his police pension. Under the new bill that service will count toward police pension and all that will be necessary is that he have ten years' pensionable service.

Another anomaly is that a member reaching the age limit for his rank with less than 20 years' service in the force cannot receive a pension at all. This provision produces particular hardship in the case of some transferees from provincial forces. It is proposed under the new legislation that ten years' service in the force will qualify a member for a service pension on reaching the retirement age.

It is necessary, in addition, to rectify certain anomalies such as the following. At the present time a member discharged for misconduct with between 20 years and 25 years of service may receive a larger pension than one retiring voluntarily with the same length of service. This is by reason of the provisions of section 97(c) of the present act. This seems entirely unjustified and the situation is being taken care of under the new bill.

Again there is no flexibility at present with regard to pensions on retirement for misconduct. A member so retired with between ten and twenty years of service must receive either two-thirds of the normal pension or nothing. The new bill will permit such a member to receive anything from nothing up to a full pension at the discretion of the treasury board so there will not be the arbitrary division into two-thirds or nothing.

Again at present under part V a commissioned officer cannot retire voluntarily with full pension even though he may have completed 35 years of pensionable service. He must be compulsorily retired. It is intended to permit such an officer to receive a pension when he has completed 35 years of service or attained retirement age.

I said earlier that one of the main purposes was to bring the provisions for pensions available to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police more closely into line with those available to public servants under the Public Service Superannuation Act. This will be achieved in the following respects. First, it is intended in conformity with the modern approach to pensions available to public servants to provide that the police pensions in future be granted as a matter of right whereas at present under the provisions of the act they are at the discretion of the governor in council.

Second, the Public Service Superannuation Act now makes provision for deferred annuities whereas under the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act the maximum period of pensionable service in the force is 35 years. In the past if a member retired voluntarily with under 20 years of service he could receive only the return of his contributions. Our new bill will provide for either the return of contributions or a deferred annuity to commence at the age of 60 unless the member in the meantime becomes disabled, when he will be able to receive an immediate annuity, or if he should die his widow would receive a pension. This is in line with the provisions of the Public Service Superannuation Act.

Also the Public Service Superannuation Act provides for the payment of a residual amount of pension contribution to the estate of a member following the death of his widow and after his children have reached 18 years of age. This bill includes the same provisions.

I believe that covers the main features of the bill which will be introduced when the resolution is carried. As I said at the beginning, it is intended to bring the pension provisions available to members of the police more closely into line with those of the Public Service Superannuation Act and in so doing to provide authority or coverage under which we can take care of certain anomalies which have arisen in the past applicable particularly to the cases of those who transferred to the force from provincial forces and to certain hardship cases that I have referred to under the heading of those who have retired on merely service pension and are later found to be suffering from a disability incurred during service but who are not entitled to the service pension in addition to their disability pension.

If there are any other particular points that I should cover they will no doubt occur during the debate on second reading and the discussion in committee and I shall be glad to clear up any difficulties then.

The one final remark I should like to make is that it is a matter of great satisfaction not only to members of the force and the officers who are in charge of administering the pension for the police to see these improvements and modernizations in the pension provisions but it will, I am sure, be a matter of satisfaction to the house and to the country as a whole to see this action taken whereby the hardships, anomalies and injustices of the past can be removed for the future.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, we have listened with interest to the statement made by the minister on this resolution. On the whole we agree with him and the government that it is a good thing to separate the present act into two acts one for the administration and discipline of the force and the other for pensions.

I was extremely interested in what the minister had to say about correcting anomalies and preventing hardships to members of the force. Of course, these hardships are checked only as they arise and probably it was not possible to correct the situation previously.

I think I need not say any more at the present time. We will reserve what we have to say on the principle of the bill until we have seen the legislation and compared it with the present act. We will then put questions to the minister in committee.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Fulton thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-57, to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

R.C.M.P.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

LEGISLATION RESPECTING ORGANIZATION AND DISCIPLINE

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): moved the second reading of Bill C-34 to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker this is the second of the two proposed Royal Canadian Mounted Police bills, this one dealing with the organization and administration of the force and the disciplinary provisions under which the members will serve. It represents a substantial modernization and streamlining of the provisions governing organization and discipline.

At the outset I should like to pay tribute again to the serving members of the force from the commissioner down. I wish to make it clear that the bulk of the recommendations for this improvement and modernization came from the police themselves. I know that sometimes certain persons have given the impression that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police suffer from, shall I say, a certain rigidity in their approach to organizational and disciplinary problems. I think it is significant, and I want to emphasize the fact to the house and through the house to all those who are interested, that it has been my experience since assuming responsibility for the force that all members and particularly the officers, as I have said from the commissioner down, with whom I have come in contact have been most concerned to modernize this act and bring about certain changes which in their view would make the administration and the code of discipline of the force both more up to date and more democratic. This is not for a moment to say that there are any improper or reactionary attitudes on the part of anyone in the force; indeed, quite the contrary. I am not suggesting that under the former act there was anything undesirable. I am suggesting simply that it is a tribute to the modern and progressive outlook of the responsible officers of the force to find that they themselves are the ones who have brought forward and pressed for the modernization of their own act.

Perhaps the house would like to have a brief summary of the main provisions of this bill. With respect to the organization and administration of the personnel of the force it will be found that the bill will allow for greater flexibility and yet at the same time it will retain and in some respects improve the system by which there is an over-all control of the force by the government and responsibility of the force to the government.

R.C.M.P.

One respect, for instance, in which there will be greater flexibility and yet a proper retention of control is in the feature that the position of the civil servants who serve with the force will now be regularized. In the past, the commissioner could appoint several categories of special employees. Under the new bill there will be only one category of supernumerary special constables. All others serving with the force will be provided for on the establishment proper of the force, except only casual employees under prevailing rates, in which case treasury board approval will be necessary for the employment of such persons. Therefore, it will be seen that there is a considerable improvement and streamlining in respect of the relationship between the force and the civilian personnel employed with the force.

Particularly, I should point out to the house that the result of the bill will be that the nebulous in-between group of employees, employees who are neither civil servants nor actual members of the force, will disappear when this bill becomes operative.

With respect to another category of member, namely those who form the R.C.M. Police reserve, there is no substantial change made in this position, but a number of details have been eliminated and the general provisions for the administration of the reserve have been made more flexible.

One other point that should be noted in connection with changes in the administration of personnel is that there is provision for a new rank, the rank of chief superintendent. This rank will be interposed between the present positions or ranks of assistant commissioner and superintendent. The effect of it will be that the position of assistant commissioner will be one grade higher. This, I think, is entirely appropriate in view of the fact that in the majority of the provinces with which we have contracts for the service of the R.C.M. Police the contract divisions, as they are called, are commanded by an assistant commissioner. It is, therefore, I think, entirely appropriate that the position of assistant commissioner should be upgraded.

With respect to those features in which, as I have said, the administration has been modernized, I would point out the following. There are a number of provisions being deleted which, while some may regret that they are seeing the official indications of the end of an era, nevertheless do indicate that in the amendments in this bill we are taking account of the fact that conditions have changed. By way of historic interest and illustration of what I have said may I direct the attention of the house to section 18 (2) of the present act which provides that:

[Mr. Fulton.]

> No constable shall so enter any hut, tent, wigwam or dwelling, unless accompanied by or under the order of a commissioned officer.

When I noticed this provision was being deleted I asked the commissioner about it. He explained to me that this was the sort of provision that in its wording and in its implications goes right back to the year 1874 when the force was first founded and their main duty was to deal with Indians on the western plains. In fact, their almost exclusive duty was to deal with Indians on the western plains, and in order to ensure that there might be no untoward incidents it was necessary to provide that while they had the right of search and entry, no constable should actually enter a hut, tent or wigwam unless accompanied by an officer. This, in so far as it reflected the ambit of the duties of the force of those days, has of course been entirely outmoded by the modern day conditions and the modern responsibilities under which the force operates and the responsibilities which it discharges and these provisions, for instance, are no longer necessary.

Then, again, in the new bill, one will see evidence which gives ample proof of the fact that a good part of the responsibility discharged by the force now arises under the contracts with the provincial governments and, indeed, with a number of the municipalities in all provinces except Ontario and Quebec.

I should perhaps mention that with respect to pay and allowances there is streamlining in the sense that in many cases functions formerly discharged by the governor in council are transferred to treasury board. I can reassure the house, however, that there is no loss of government control in that. If there is any difference of opinion, of course, the minister can take the matter to the full cabinet.

Another example of changes which take account of present-day responsibilities of the force is found in the provisions regarding disposition of property. This is a new provision because property comes into the possession of the force throughout the Northwest Territories, and we find that it is throughout the Northwest Territories where they discharge many functions not discharged by police in other parts of Canada. They have a multiplicity of welfare functions in connection with the Indian and Eskimo native populations, as I saw at first-hand during the course of a visit that I paid to the western areas of the district of Mackenzie immediately after Easter. There is, however, no legislation similar to that in the provinces to cover the disposition of the property coming into the custody of the police under these circumstances, so we now have to make provision in our own act to provide for the manner in which and the circumstances under which this property will be disposed of.

I turn now to the provisions regarding discipline. Here, as I have said, the emphasis is upon making the procedures more democratic and of eliminating wide and arbitrary powers which were contained in the former act. Again I want to emphasize that the fact that these powers are eliminated and modified should not be taken and is not to be taken as an indication that there were abuses in the past; but we have felt that when we are introducing legislation to amend and to modernize the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act then, in accordance with the pattern and indeed with the desire of the senior officers of the force itself, it is better to provide what I call a democratic procedure, and particularly to provide for a review and appeal procedure in connection with those disciplinary cases.

The matter has been approached on the basis that we should create two categories of offences, minor offences and major offences. It is provided that offences against a standing order, rule or regulation which formerly involved the possibility of very severe, indeed harsh penalties for relatively minor or new offences will now be dealt with only as minor offences.

The reason I say that, Mr. Speaker, is that it was quite possible, and it always must be quite possible, to change standing orders and rules and regulations. No one, of course, is excused from an offence or from responsibility for an offence by reason of the fact that he did not know of the change. It was, however, quite possible to provide new offences in this manner and the circumstances were such that a member committing one of these new offences might find himself subject to very extreme penalities.

We have therefore provided, as I say, that all offences against standing orders, rules or regulations will be dealt with as minor offences and we have provided conversely that major offences are in general only offences against the provisions of the act itself. In providing these two categories of offences we think we have rationalized the difference in procedure and brought in a more up to date and more satisfactory code of discipline.

We have provided also for an appeal to the commissioner in the case of convictions for minor offences and, which is entirely new, we have also provided for a board of review to which appeals can be taken in the case of a conviction for a major offence.

With respect to custody, it is interesting to note that at the present time there is nothing in the act which prohibits the holding in custody of a member of the force charged with an offence for an indefinite period without trial. I am not saying that this was done but it was the view of the commissioner that it should not be possible to do so and that the act should be changed so as to make it impossible. We are providing in the new act safeguards and limits as to the time during which an offender can be held in custody without formal trial and disposition of his case.

With respect to the tribunals before which disciplinary cases were heard, we have removed the distinction between officers and members of the force so far as trial for minor offences is concerned and the tribunal in all cases will be the same. With respect to major offences, these must now be reported to the commissioner and the trial will be held under arrangements made by him, which removes any chance of bias in the tribunal that might result from the fact that an officer would otherwise possibly be trying one of his own men. It is now provided that the commissioner himself must arrange for the tribunal before which the trial will be held.

With respect to the laying of the charge, if a member of the force is charged with a minor offence an officer may lay the charge on his own authority but if he is accused of a major offence then the officer must report to the commissioner who will decide whether a charge should be laid and, if so, what charge.

One other important and interesting development which I think the house will approve is that for the first time we are embodying in statutory form provisions establishing the rights of an accused member of the force with respect to his trial. At the present time his rights are left to the regulation or discretion of the officer conducting the trial. We are making an attempt here and I think a successful attempt, to write into the statute the rights of the accused with respect to the holding of his trial so that he will know and have in statutory form that protection which is also available to a person tried before the civil or criminal courts.

With regard to punishment we have specified clearly that disciplinary offences must be dealt with in the disciplinary courts of the service itself, but it is also proposed that where an offence partakes of the nature of a criminal offence and is, as it were, a mixed service and criminal offence, we will confer with the attorney-general of the province in which the offence is committed so that if it should be his desire that the matter should be proceeded with by way of a charge in the criminal courts of the province that desire can be taken account of.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, we have also provided in an entirely new feature of the legislation for the right of appeal by a member convicted of a disciplinary offence and have also provided for a board of review for those convicted of major offences. It is my view that this represents a substantial and important step forward in the bringing into line of the provisions of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, in so far as organization and administration of the personnel are concerned and in so far as their code of discipline is concerned, with the conditions under which members of the force now serve and into line with the responsibilities which they must discharge, so that under the new act all members of the force and the country as a whole can feel that the best traditions of the force are being continued in the present age and carried forward into the future.

(Translation):

Mr. Gabriel Roberge (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I hope you will allow me to transgress the standing orders of the house in that I shall not be speaking from my place, but rather from here, where I find it easier to have a discussion with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) in connection with this bill.

As I said at the resolution stage with regard to the preceding item, we on this side of the house feel that it is good policy to separate the part dealing with administration and discipline from the part dealing with pensions for the R.C.M.P.

I have studied the bill quite closely. I have gone over it again and again, and I sincerely believe it is an improvement on the former provisions which, as the minister has emphasized, have been in force since 1874, though they have been amended from time to time over the years.

As regards the very organization of the force, I see no reason for objecting to this bill. Perhaps there may be a few minor points, which we shall be raising at the committee stage. We have no objection to voting for the principle of the bill.

I also note that there have been changes made in the second part of the bill, which deals with discipline; major and minor offences will be defined, as was pointed out a moment ago by the Minister of Justice.

As to the procedure that is being established by the bill, I believe it is sound. The government is to be specially commended for following the advice of the very officers of the force with regard to the institution of a right of appeal for all members of the force who have been put on trial and who feel they have been wronged by the decision rendered by the officer in charge.

To sum up, we will vote in favour of the principle of the bill, and we shall certainly co-operate with the Minister of Justice to get through the second reading and also probably, through the committee stage in the course of the evening.

(Text):

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I was able to hear only a part of the statement made by the minister, but I can certainly approve of the objectives as he set them forth and particularly those changes which would make certain provisions applying to the R.C.M.P. more democratic. I had expected the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), who takes a great interest in mounted police matters, would be here at this time but because of other business he is unavoidably away from the chamber this afternoon.

We shall have a number of comments to make in the committee stage, and particularly we will question some of the provisions in the bill that seem rather harsh and which we think could be further liberalized. This is probably a particularly good year or particularly appropriate session in which to bring forward such a bill when the R.C.M.P. has been surrounded to some extent by rather widespread controversy. In a nation like ours we think any step forward toward bringing democracy and democratic procedures to the discliplinary measures in the R.C.M.P. and administrative measures is a step in the right direction.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Before the bill carries, I should like to say a word both on my own behalf and on behalf of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) who, unfortunately, could not be here today. There are certain incidents which happened recently with respect to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police which we, in this party, intend to debate on the minister's estimates. We think that a more appropriate time to do so than on the second reading of this bill. I wanted to make it very clear, for my own part and the Leader of the Opposition asked me to make it clear for his part, that the fact we were not debating these matters now does not mean we do not consider the matter one of the most important to be debated during this session of parliament.

With respect to one clause of the bill, because I, too, may not be here when we reach the clause, having to do with agreements with the provinces, we do think it would be desirable for the minister to consider very carefully whether some changes should not be made in it to have parliament spell out precisely what the obligations are instead of leaving that for definition by the governor in council and in the contracts.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if, in view of the fact we have made very good progress this afternoon we could call it six o'clock so there would be a continuous discussion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, would the minister indicate the major differences between the interpretation clause and the one in the former act?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I think in the discussion on second reading I indicated the main differences between this bill and the former act. At that time I pointed out the main purposes of the bill were to streamline and modernize the provisions regarding the organization and administration of the force with respect to its personnel, and to modernize and bring up to date the provisions regarding the code of discipline of the force. I would think as we come to the specific clause that I could deal more intelligently with any points which hon. gentlemen care to raise at that time.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Interpretation.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, I did ask a question on clause 1 which I meant to ask on clause 2. Would the minister be kind enough to indicate to the committee the difference between clause 2 in this bill and section 2 in the former act, and give the reasons why some definitions are now omitted?

Mr. Fulton: This bill, Mr. Chairman, as I explained, is a bill to streamline and modernize the provisions of the act, and it has been found with respect to clause 2, which is the interpretation clause of all bills, that there are a number of definitions that are not necessary to be placed in this clause. Some of them recur later; others are not necessary. If the hon. member would direct my attention to a specific point then I could probably deal with it, but in general I can only say that we have found these are the only definitions which it is necessary to insert at this point.

Mr. Roberge: The one I am concerned with especially is in the former act, where there was a definition of the word "constable", and there is none in this bill.

Mr. Fulton: The reason for that is that the two main differences which it is found desirable to continue are the differentiation between "officer" and between "member". "Constable" is a rank and not a status under the new act.

Mr. Roberge: Clause 2 (c) defines the word "member" as a member of the force. Does that definition also include an officer?

Mr. Fulton: Yes. Officers are also members of the force, and if my friend refers to 2 (e) he will find that "officer" means a commissioned officer of the force. But both officers and all other ranks are members of the force.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, may I ask this question, more or less just as a matter of curiosity. Are there any warrant officers in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

Mr. Fulton: No, we have no status or rank as such. There are officers, non-commissioned officers, and constables of various grades.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 3 agreed to.

On Clause 4—Employment of force.

Mr. Godin: Would the minister explain the great change in this clause as compared with the section in the previous act, especially the possibility of the governor in council directing the force to act outside of Canada? I feel this is so broad in its aspect and ramifications that it may involve the government of this country in matters which the cabinet alone should not deal with.

Mr. Fulton: The fact is that the force is employed at present at many points outside Canada, and we felt it was desirable to regularize the situation in the new act.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 5—Commissioner.

Mr. Crestohl: I would like to ask the minister whether the appointment of a commissioner is for a fixed term or for life, or is it at the pleasure of the governor in council?

Mr. Fulton: The appointment of the commissioner is an appointment at the pleasure of the governor in council.

Mr. Roberge: Was it the same under the former act?

Mr. Fulton: The relevant provision of the former act was section 6 (1), which read:

> The governor general may by commission appoint a commissioner of police, who shall be called the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and may also appoint by commission a financial comptroller of police.

There is no change in effect under the new bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister said that the tenure was at the pleasure of the governor in council. On what does he base that, since there are no express words?

Mr. Fulton: It is, as I understand it, an appointment at pleasure, subject of course to the fact that the commissioner is also an officer of the force, and his length of service and conditions as to retirement, and so on, are regulated by the general provisions of the force which are applicable in that regard.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the governor in council retain a commissioner in the force without his being retained as commissioner? That is to say, if the governor in council was pleased to dispense with his services as commissioner, would he continue to be a member of the force?

Mr. Fulton: I think that is rather a hypothetical question. I would imagine that if the governor in council indicated that the services of the commissioner were no longer acceptable as such, the person holding that position would feel it incumbent upon himself to resign from the force.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not true, of course, in the case of chiefs of staff of the army or of the other armed forces.

Mr. Fulton: That may be so.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 6—Other officers.

Mr. Roberge: Subclause (1), as the minister pointed out this afternoon on second reading, establishes a new rank, which is chief superintendent. Those officers, of course, are appointed by the governor in council. Then on subclause (2) it is said:

> The maximum number of officers in each rank shall be as prescribed by the treasury board.

I wonder why in this subclause we see the words "treasury board" instead of "governor in council"?

Mr. Fulton: I explained, as I recall it, on second reading that a number of the duties or functions which were formerly the obligation of the governor in council have been transferred to treasury board. As the hon. member knows, generally speaking the establishment of departments, and in this case of the R.C.M. Police, is an establishment approved by treasury board, and so it has been considered advisable to provide here that the establishment for officers shall similarly be approved by treasury board.

So it has been considered advisable to provide here that the establishment for officers shall similarly be approved by the treasury board. As I explained this afternoon, if at any time there were a difference of opinion between the police advisers and treasury board as to what should be the establishment of officers, it would be open to the minister to carry any unresolved conflict to the cabinet itself, that is to say to the governor in council, for resolution.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister say whether the establishment of the armed forces is determined by the treasury board or by the governor in council?

Mr. Fulton: No. I am afraid that I could not answer that question offhand. However, I would imagine that over-all decision rests with the governor in council, exactly as it does here, should there be any conflict.

Mr. Crestohl: Clause 6, subclause 3(a) provides that the governor in council may appoint persons to be officers. Will the minister kindly explain whether that means that the governor in council has authority to appoint persons from civilian life to be officers although they did not come up in the ranks of the force or is it restricted—"persons" there meaning in the general sense of human beings—to those coming up in the ranks?

Mr. Fulton: The only answer I can give is that "persons" means anybody and the governor in council would be authorized to appoint somebody from outside the force to be an officer in the force if the governor in council saw fit to do so. For instance, I recall that on one occasion—and possibly it has happened on more than one occasion—persons from outside the force have been appointed to be commissioners of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. That is true in the case of two commissioners, I am informed; but it would be an unusual practice. I cannot imagine the circumstances arising that would necessitate it, but they might; and it is thought desirable to retain that power in the governor in council.

Mr. Crestohl: Whilst there is on record the fact that two commissioners were appointed from civilian life, is there anything on record showing that officers of other ranks were appointed from civilian life? I can see a difficulty developing there in the ranks themselves. Men who come up in the ranks would like to feel that they are given certain priority. However, if the section were to read that the governor in council may appoint commissioners from civilian life that might probably be more acceptable than to say they may appoint officers of all ranks from civilian life.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. member for Cartier has put his finger on an extremely important point. It appears to me—and I do not profess to know very much about the armed forces—that this gives a great deal more power to the governor in council than he has with regard to the civil service. This provision may be in the existing law, but that would not necessarily make it desirable. As I say, this seems to me to give a great deal more power certainly than the governor in council has in the case of the civil service. There does not seem to be any kind of provision here for any sort of merit system whatsoever.

Mr. Fulton: May I point out that under the provisions of the present act the power is equally wide or possibly wider.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not interested in that.

Mr. Fulton: It reads as follows:

6(2) The governor in council may by commission appoint a deputy commissioner and one or more assistant commissioners of police, one or more staff and other superintendents, and inspectors, detective inspectors, sub-inspectors, surgeons, assistant surgeons, veterinary surgeons and assistant veterinary surgeons of the force, and the governor in council may in any commission issued under the authority of this sub-section limit the time during which the same shall continue in force.

There is no limitation at the present time upon the ranks—

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister has not dealt with my point at all.

Mr. Fulton: There is no limitation upon the ranks or area from which the officers may be drawn. I am quite frank to admit that the same wide authority is continued under clause 3(a) of the present bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: That was what I pointed out to the minister when I first made my observation, namely that it appears to be the case in the existing law but that fact did not necessarily make it desirable in these modern times. We were given to understand on second reading that the purpose of this bill was to improve the present situation. We have the merit system in the public service. Certainly the government, from such experience as I had with governments, has not had the appointing of the officers in the armed forces. This seems to be a rather antiquated system. I do not suppose it operates in fact at all. I suppose practically all these appointments, except the very highest ones, are simply rubber stamped by the governor in council and it could not be otherwise. I am just wondering whether there is not a defect in the law here that ought to be remedied.

Mr. Fulton: It is pointed out to me that, for instance, there might be a particularly outstanding provincial police officer whom it was desired to bring into the Royal Canadian Mounted Police but if we did not have such broad power it would not be possible to do so. May I also assure the hon. gentleman that this government does not rubber stamp things in the way the former government did.

Mr. Pickersgill: That rather cheap and unworthy observation is not very becoming of the minister and it certainly was not called for at all. I might point out to the minister that if he would take the trouble to read the Civil Service Act he would find that provision is made in the Civil Service Act for the kind of exceptional cases he has in mind; and in order to deal with exceptional cases it is not necessary to have an unlimited system of patronage such as that which exists by law and which the government intends to perpetuate here.

Mr. Crestohl: Can the minister ascertain from his officials whether, apart from the appointment of a commissioner on two occasions from civilian life, there is on record the appointment of officers of other ranks from civilian life.

Mr. Fulton: From my own knowledge I can think of one or more officers in a provincial police force who were brought in and appointed as officers of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I am assured by the officials in front of me that there have been many cases since 1932 of such appointments. But I am also assured that since 1932 such appointments have been confined to serving officers of other police forces.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 7—Other members.

Mr. Roberge: I take it that the words "treasury board" in subclause 2 are there for the same purpose as in clause 6.

Mr. Fulton: That is correct.

Mr. Roberge: Subclause 4 reads as follows:

The commissioner may appoint any member and any special constable appointed under section 10 to be a peace officer.

If I read this subclause in conjunction with clause 17, especially subclause 3 of clause 17, am I correct in saying that there is duplication? Under clause 17 (3) the commissioner may appoint every officer and every member to be a peace officer. It seems to me that subclause 4 in clause 7 is not useful.

Mr. Pickersgill: It seems to say exactly the same thing.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps I have not followed correctly the hon. member's question. The appointment of members to be peace officers is particularly important, as I understand it, throughout the northern territories. There are also cases where we appoint special constables and this is a power that is desirable in the event of unforeseen circumstances. We may have to appoint special constables and give them the power of peace officers. Perhaps I have not appreciated the hon. member's question.

Mr. Roberge: I agree with the minister's statement. I have no quarrel with giving to the commissioner power to appoint members or special constables as peace officers. However, what I said was that under clause 17(3) of the bill before us the same power is given as is given in clause 7(4). I should like to know the difference.

Mr. Fulton: I do not think my hon. friend is quite correct because clause 7(3) and (4) authorize the commissioner to appoint any member or any special constable as a peace officer. Clause 17(3) makes it clear that any person appointed has his powers in every part of Canada. They are complementary clauses. One does not repeat the other. One provides for the appointment of peace officers and the other makes it clear that these officers so appointed have their powers in all parts of Canada.

Mr. Roberge: Clause 17, subclause 3 provides that every officer and every member appointed by the commissioner to be a peace officer has all the powers, authorities, protection and privileges that a peace officer has by law and is a peace officer in every part of Canada. I do not really see the difference.

Mr. Fulton: I can only repeat again that clause 7 gives to the commissioner the authority to appoint members as peace officers. Clause 17, subclause 3 makes clear what are the powers of persons so appointed to be peace officers and also makes clear that they have their power and authority in every part of Canada.

Mr. Roberge: I have no further objection to that.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 8 and 9 agreed to.

On clause 10—Supernumerary special constables.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, this clause is headed "Supernumerary Special Constables". My first question is why this superfluity of language? This seems to be rather a cumbersome title for special constables.

The clause goes on to state that the commissioner may appoint without pay special constables supernumerary to the strength of the force. What would be the purpose of appointing supernumerary special constables? Under what circumstances would people be appointed without pay? One can hardly understand that persons would act in that capacity for any period of time without receiving some remuneration.

Mr. Fulton: The reason for the terminology is that such special constables are supernumerary to the establishment of the force and they are special constables of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police so appointed under such circumstances as railway constables who may be supernumerary special constables of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or under special circumstances Indian affairs constables, or constables appointed to carry out the duties of the Indian affairs branch with respect to Indian reservations.

Mr. Herridge: The words in which I was interested are "without pay" in the first line. I want to know under what circumstances people would act as constables without pay.

Mr. Fulton: I am told that the principle there is that all men so appointed are also employees of such people as railway companies or the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. Therefore we designate them as supernumerary special constables in order that they have the necessary authority but it is not necessary to duplicate their pay.

Mr. Herridge: Does that mean that a Canadian Pacific Railway Company constable could be appointed a supernumerary special constable and would have the authority of a Royal Canadian Mounted Police constable wearing the uniform of the C.P.R.?

Mr. Fulton: No. I am told that he may be employed as a supernumerary special constable but he has only the powers and authority of a peace officer throughout Canada.

Mr. Herridge: I am not a member of the legal profession. What does that mean, only the power and authority of a peace officer?

Mr. Fulton: He has the power to make arrests between one province and another and has such authority as is not held by a person who is not a peace officer.

Mr. Herridge: What companies in Canada are granted the privilege of having their constables made a special part of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police force?

Mr. Fulton: I am informed that only two companies have this duty—not privilege. These are the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways. These are the only two companies that may employ a supernumerary special constable. In addition there is the Indian affairs branch.

Mr. Herridge: Do these constables wear a badge to designate their appointment or do they have a card of identification? A person might object to being arrested by a C.P.R. constable but might acquiesce if arrested by a supernumerary special constable of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Mr. Fulton: I am informed they have no badge but a certificate of identification.

Mr. Herridge: On their person?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, it is their duty to carry it on their person, I am informed.

Mr. Benidickson: The minister made reference to employees of the Indian affairs branch of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. Is there anything new proposed in the bill in this respect irrespective of the type of employee of the Indian affairs branch empowered with the prerogatives of a peace officer?

Mr. Fulton: There is no change between clause 10 and section 8, subsection 6 of the present act. There is some shortening of the language but if hon. members take time to compare the two they will find the provisions are identical.

Mr. Benidickson: Is there a particular type of employee of the Indian affairs branch that is given this prerogative?

Mr. Fulton: They are designated as Indian constables of the reserves and the Indian affairs branch asks us to designate certain personnel of that branch as constables.

Mr. Benidickson: Does the minister contemplate any particular enlargement in the number of people that will be so designated in the department?

Mr. Fulton: No, Mr. Chairman.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 11—Civilian staff.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman the explanatory notes indicate that this is new. I heard the minister comment on this clause this afternoon. I would like to know whether civilian employees are hired by the force directly or under the Civil Service Act as it now stands?

Mr. Fulton: At the present time there are four categories of employee working in or with the force. There are the regular members, special constables, employed civilians and civil servants. There has developed an increasing tendency to intermingle the four groups and particularly the regular members, special constables and employed civilians have been intermingled in the technical and specialized personnel. This has led to a great deal of confusion and some difficulties as between these various types of employees. It is desired now to regularize the situation so that authority for the appointment of technical and specialized personnel under the Royal Canadian Mounted Police will be so regulated that such personnel may be ranked with uniformed personnel as members of the force subject to special instructions to be set out in the regulations with the same stated conditions and benefits.

The object of the legislation is to divide all personnel working with the force into two broad groups: First, enforcement personnel consisting of those employed, or likely to be employed, on duties requiring the status of a peace officer, and those include members of the force and special supernumerary constables. The second broad group is civilian personnel who will be those employed on the specialized clerical or maintenance duties and requiring qualifications other than those of peace officers. And these will be broadly speaking, as I said this afternoon, civil service members employed with the force and such prevailing rate employees as are authorized from time to time by treasury board.

Mr. Roberge: I understand that. What I want to know is this. Are the civilian employees under the present act, not under the bill, hired through the civil service commission or directly by the force?

Mr. Fulton: They are hired directly by the force. The civil service commission, however, sets their rates of pay.

Mr. Roberge: There is no application to the civil service commission or il n'y a pas de concours?

Mr. Fulton: There is no competition. There are not the usual civil service procedures followed, I understand. Under the new arrangement that will be done; but civilian members working with the force will be regular civil servants. With regard to prevailing rate employees, they will not be regular civil servants; they may be taken on and let out casually but their establishment, the numbers who may be employed, will be set by the treasury board.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is any provision being made to protect the status of the existing members of the staff; that is to say, to integrate them into the civil service?

Mr. Fulton: That, I understand, is done under the R.C.M. Police superannuation bill that we—

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the civilian staff be covered by that legislation or by the Civil Service Act, since those people are civil servants?

Mr. Fulton: The civil servants will be covered by the Public Service Superannuation Act.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the minister has not got my question. There are a certain number of civilian employees now. The minister told my friend from Megantic that those employees had been hired by the force; therefore, they are not in the civil service. Now, it is usual in legislation of this sort, of which we have had many examples in the last 15 years, in the integrating of a group of employees into the civil service, to put some provision in the legislation to protect the status and indeed to integrate those people into the civil service and give them the status of civil servants. There does not seem to be anything in this legislation. I wonder whether the minister will take a look at that and see if it should not be done?

Mr. Fulton: I think the hon. member has a point. I will be glad to look at it to see if it requires an amendment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could we not let this clause stand?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McGee): Is it agreed to let this clause stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 11 stands.

On clause 12—Reserve.

Mr. Broome: Mr. Chairman, I am rather interested in this. I have a number of friends who are members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police reserve and I was wondering whether the minister might give an idea as to the functions and duties of this group? The reason I am asking is that I know how much work the reserve officers I know put into training with the R.C.M. Police. I am wondering whether they are being utilized to the full and the advantage that may be taken of them?

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Fulton: Well, broadly speaking, their duties are described as to be of assistance to the regular members of the R.C.M. Police in the event of any situation arising where they would be of assistance and their services were utilized on such an occasion, for instance, at the Quebec conference which required a large number of trained and qualified personnel which could not be met from the members of the force.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 13—Tenure of officers.

Mr. Pickersgill: From the explanatory notes I have no doubt that this is what the law is now, but I wonder whether this is what the law should be in the second half of the twentieth century, or whether the minister would not consider, or has not already considered, whether he should not substitute "good behaviour" for "during pleasure"?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, that has been considered and it is not considered advisable to do so because this is a disciplinary force, and to administer the discipline and maintain the integrity of the force it is considered that the clause in its present form should remain.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, I should like to draw the minister's attention to subclause 2 of clause 13, which reads in part:

> Every member other than an officer shall upon appointment sign articles of engagement for a term of service not exceeding five years—

This means that anyone who applies to be a constable and his application is accepted has to join for a term of five years. That is quite proper. However, the clause states that such a member may be dismissed or discharged by the commissioner at any time before the expiration of his term of engagement. It says nothing about his being discharged peremptorily or for cause. As the clause reads now, while there is a contract between the force and the member, it is only a unilateral contract. I can understand that a young man would enlist for a term of five years and feel secure, that he has an appointment for five years and that he cannot be dismissed just at the will of the commissioner; but the clause should state that he can be dismissed for cause or for some other reason, but not a peremptory dismissal. Does the minister not think that the clause needs to be changed to clear up such an unusual situation?

Mr. Fulton: No, Mr. Chairman, I do not. As I have already explained, in addition to the requirements of discipline, there are a number of special circumstances that may arise such as medical disqualification that comes immediately to mind, unsuitability not connected with any disciplinary offence or an offence against the regulations; a variety of reasons why it is desirable to terminate the services of a member of the force.

Mr. Crestohl: I thoroughly agree with that. I think the clause should state something to that effect, and say that a constable under those circumstances may be dismissed for cause.

Mr. Fulton: The difficulty there is that—and that is the reason why the broad powers are left—if there is the requirement of assigning a cause it usually ends up as a blot on the man's record.

Mr. Crestohl: A cause such as ill health?

Mr. Fulton: He would still have to have a finding of his physical condition which makes it impossible for him to continue as a member of the force. On the basis of my knowledge of the way the act is administered I am quite convinced that this is the proper way to keep the power of the commissioner to dispense with the services of members of the force, and it is very often in the member's own interest. In addition, I would point out that there is a maximum period of five years and members may purchase their discharge within that period.

Mr. Pickersgill: I must say I have listened with greater astonishment than I have listened to anything since the present government took office to the words we have just heard from the Minister of Justice because what he has said is precisely what I used to say about not giving the reasons for not allowing persons who had no right to come into Canada to come into Canada. The minister sat over here on this side of the house day after day when my estimates were up during the time I was in office and complained about the denial of human rights because we would not give the reason why we did not let people come into Canada as immigrants. But here we are dealing with Canadians serving in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and he objects to having the words "for cause" in case it might be embarrassing or be a blot on their record.

Mr. Fulton: Not at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the minister would let me finish.

Mr. Fulton: It is so absurd it is not necessary.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is one great difference between the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Finance. When the Minister of Finance meets an argument to which he knows of no reply he describes it as nonsense, when the Minister of Justice meets a similar argument he calls it absurd, but neither of these expletives is a reply to an argument.

I may say that I think there is a good deal in what the minister has said, just as I was quite convinced and am still convinced that the position I took with respect to this matter when I was minister of citizenship and immigration was a correct position, and I notice that the present government has not changed it. But it does come rather strangely from the minister to hear him say that Canadian citizens serving in the force, their livelihood depending upon their service, may be dismissed without any cause being given.

Mr. Fulton: After that tirade I would point out that there are two great differences. First, with respect to service offences we have, unlike our predecessors, provided for an appeal procedure, which is something my hon. friend refused to do when he was minister of citizenship and immigration.

Mr. Pickersgill: That, of course—

Mr. Fulton: Will my hon. friend let me finish now? The other point is that the two situations are entirely different. In the one we are dealing with the rights of Canadian citizens as Canadian citizens. Here we are dealing with people who have enlisted voluntarily in a force and subjected themselves to a code of service discipline which, of course, is something I do not think my hon. friend would appreciate.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I say that the minister is wrong on both counts. The appeal procedure which I set up when I was minister is the only appeal procedure which exists in the department.

Mr. Fulton: What that has to do with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act I do not quite understand.

Mr. Pickersgill: There has been no change whatsoever. I have inquired repeatedly and the appeal procedure I established is still there. It deals with appeals from landed immigrants and it does not deal with appeals from visitors.

Mr. Fulton: On a point of order, the only way to arrest this outflow of ebullience is to raise a point of order—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McGee): Is the minister rising on a point of order?

Mr. Chevrier: He does not know what he is rising on.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister is the essence of politeness.

R.C.M.P.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McGee): Order. Is the Minister of Justice rising on a point of order?

Mr. Chevrier: He does not know.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, I was, and I know rather better than my hon. friend.

Mr. Chevrier: Let us see whether you do.

Mr. Fulton: My hon. friend seems to have got out of the wrong side of the bed this morning. I have not taken issue with him. I do not know what my hon. friend is getting so exercised about.

Mr. Chevrier: I am getting exercised about your uncouthness.

Mr. Fulton: You are getting exercised all right. I fail to see what the appeal procedure or any other procedure under the Immigration Act has to do with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act which we are discussing clause by clause at this time.

Mr. Pickersgill: On the point of order, I did not begin to discuss the appeal board. It was the hon. gentleman who brought up the subject and I was merely replying to his observations and not going one iota beyond that, nor do I desire to. I now desire to deal with the other misstatement of the minister and I will not go beyond it either. The minister said that in the one case we were dealing with Canadian citizens. The fact of the matter is that we were dealing with non-Canadian citizens, foreigners who desired to come to this country, become immigrants and settlers and possibly citizens, so the minister is wrong about that.

(Translation):

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Chairman, I would like to give the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) the opportunity to practise his French a little. I shall therefore ask my question in French.

Section 13, subsection 2, decrees that the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police may dismiss or discharge a member of the force for various reasons. I wonder if the minister could tell us if there may be an appeal against the commissioner's decision and, if so, why it should not be included in this section.

(Text):

Mr. Fulton: Dismissal, as I have mentioned before, may be upon a number of grounds such as medical unfitness or possibly conviction of a criminal offence. Those are two which come more readily to mind. Any person who feels himself unfairly dismissed from the force may, of course, appeal to the commissioner for a review of the dismissal. The appeal procedure is provided in a later clause of the bill.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, in order to give the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) a chance to practise his knowledge of French, I shall make a remark in my own language.

The only objection which the minister seems to have against inserting the words "dismissal for cause" in this section, seems to be that he wants to enable the commissioner to dismiss an officer without cause, for no cause whatsoever! Does the hon. minister not give too much latitude to the commissioner in this way? Let us, for instance, suppose that some day or other, the commissioner feels irritated with an officer. Then, according to this section, he might, without any reason, dismiss that officer though the latter may have signed up for five years.

As I understand it, the expression "engagement for a term of 5 years" does not mean very much, because 24 hours after a man has signed up, the commissioner may, under section 13, for no cause whatsoever, dismiss an officer who thought he was engaged for a period of 5 years.

I fail to understand why the words "for cause" could not be inserted in subsection 2 of section 13. You might mention any reason: because of illness, of politics, because of disability or incompetence; but, to my mind, the expression "for cause" would be enough to allow a commissioner to dismiss such and such an officer it would also give the opposition an opportunity to ask why such and such a person had been dismissed from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and to obtain an answer.

(Text):

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate very much indeed the opportunity I am being given to exercise my French but since I do not have sufficient command of that language to answer extemporaneously and at length perhaps my hon. friend will forgive me if I take advantage of the simultaneous translation system to answer in my own language.

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: He is getting lazy.

(Text):

Mr. Fulton: The commissioner must always give the reason for dismissal. That is the first point on which my hon. friend is incorrect. The commissioner cannot dismiss on the ground of whim or fancy without assigning a reason. The reason would be because of medical unfitness or because of conviction for this or that offence. The commissioner does not just make a ruling that the man is dismissed. As I have said, a man is entitled to request a review and on such a review there should be reasons given for his dismissal.

Furthermore, while there is no great importance attached to it, in order to keep the record straight I should point out that, as I understood the translation, my hon. friend used the word officer as though to suggest the commissioner could dismiss an officer under these circumstances. I point out that the provision of the clause makes it clear that the powers of dismissal of the commissioner under this clause are confined to members of the force.

Mr. Godin: "Member" seems to be defined to include an officer as well, according to the new definition as it has been explained. Therefore, it could apply to both.

Mr. Fulton: No, if my hon. friend will look at subclause 2 he will see that it says:

> Unless appointed for temporary duty, every member other than an officer shall upon appointment sign articles of engagement for a term of service not exceeding five years, but any such member may be dismissed or discharged by the commissioner at any time before the expiration of his term of engagement.

The reference is to "any such member".

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): The Minister of Justice was very kind in making what he thought was a reply to my question, but he did not give an answer to my query. I asked him why there was no mention in subclause 2 of clause 13 of the fact there would be an appeal from the decision of the commissioner. Of course, I do not expect that there would be an appeal for health reasons, but for any other reason I do not see why the subclause should not mention that there would be an appeal. The minister did not answer my query about that.

Mr. Fulton: That is covered in the standing orders.

Mr. Crestohl: The minister quite properly explained that the commissioner would not dismiss anyone without cause. He cited some of the reasons why the commissioner might dismiss a constable. If that is the case, and I certainly think it is, why should the bill not say that the commissioner may dismiss a constable, either for cause in a general sense, or for certain specific reasons? A constable is bound by a contract for five years, which he signs, and I think he should be entitled to some protection if he is to be dismissed for what he may believe is an improper cause.

Mr. Fulton: May I point out to the hon. gentleman that while there is an agreement that the constable signs for a term of five years, a constable has a right to purchase his discharge. This happens with regularity.

Mr. Crestohl: Just what does that mean, he can purchase his discharge?

Mr. Fulton: I understand they pay a tariff, if you want to call it that, of $5 a month for the unexpired portion of their term of service. After all, a constable has received a certain amount of expensive training at the taxpayers' expense. It is therefore considered undesirable that he should be allowed to break his contract without penalty, and this is a relatively minor penalty.

The situation, therefore, is not entirely unfair to the constable. I am sure my hon. friend will appreciate, and hon. members who have asked this question will appreciate, that where you have a disciplined force such as this force is and must be on every term of engagement there is what I might call a period of experiment. It may well be found that either the member does not like the force and the conditions of service to which he has bound himself, and he is allowed to purchase his discharge, or that the officers in charge of the force find that, while this was a worthwhile experiment, unfortunately so-and-so is not going to make out well as a constable of the R. C. M. Police. Therefore, rather than have some formal hearing with disciplinary charges, in the sense my hon. friends seem to want to force on us, the commissioner, upon the report of duly qualified officers, makes a finding that this man is unlikely to become a useful member of the force so he dismisses the man from the force. There is no blot on the man's character or record. There is no trial such as would have to be held if the commissioner had to assign a cause. It has been invariably found in organizations of this nature that that is the best way to arrange a separation from the force, and particularly from a force of this kind and character.

Mr. Fortin: Should an applicant be under 21 years of age, for instance, would the force require additional signatures from the parents or tutor of the applicant?

Mr. Fulton: No, I am informed that is not necessary. Perhaps I could supplement the answer I gave earlier with regard to appeals. I said they were covered in standing orders, and I have here paragraph 140 of the rules, regulations and orders of the R.C.M.P. It reads:

> If any member of the force, other than a commissioned officer, should feel himself aggrieved by a recommendation made for his dismissal or discharge from the force, or by a conviction and punishment awarded him under the provisions of section 31 of the act, he may, within 48 hours, appeal to the commissioner in writing, stating in detail his reasons for making such appeal.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): After listening to the minister one would conclude that his interpretation of the clause means that a dismissal or discharge must follow an act by the commissioner himself. I call the minister's attention to the words in the second subclause, "any such member may be dismissed", but subclause 1 provides that officers of the force hold office during the pleasure of the governor in council.

Now, the commissioner obviously is not the only one who can dismiss the policeman; it must be that the governor in council has authority under this clause to provide for a dismissal. It is one thing to dismiss a police officer at the instance of the commissioner and even there, as hon. members on this side have argued, that dismissal must be with cause, but surely any action taken by the governor in council certainly ought to be on the basis of cause and on the basis of reasons given. There is nothing in this clause that would restrict the governor in council from exercising powers which he may want to exercise for one reason or another. The officer in question may have taken some action that is contrary to what the government feels, in its interests, should have been taken, or for some reason or another may want to dismiss the policeman. If there is strong ground, as I believe there is, for arguing that no dismissal by the commissioner shall take place without cause, I submit that there is a much stronger argument for insisting that whatever action may be taken by the governor in council must be taken with cause.

The minister may argue that subclause 1 does not mean what I say it means, namely that the governor in council is not given any powers under this clause to dismiss the individual concerned. However, subclause 1 can only have one meaning, that is that the governor in council has authority to dismiss. I suggest that the Minister of Justice, with his well known love for safeguarding the individual and the subject, should not in this particular instance endow the governor in council with powers which, when the minister sat on this side, he was so fond of reminding us the governor in council should not possess.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, I move the following amendment:

That paragraph (2) of clause 13 be amended by adding after the word "discharged" in the fourth line thereof the words "for cause".

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McGee): Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I think I must say, simply on the basis of the discussion so far, that no good reason has been advanced for the insertion of those words. I point out that the insertion of such words would make it impossible to dismiss a man by reason of medical unfitness or other physical disqualifications; they are wide enough to make it impossible to discharge such persons. Therefore I must oppose the amendment.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would the minister give consideration to the suggestion I made? Does he think it has any merit? If not, will he say so with his characteristic peremptory quality?

Mr. Creaghan: Mr. Chairman, may I have a word on this amendment? I have been somewhat concerned with this clause but I cannot agree that the amendment would have the effect of creating any problem, as I see it. Certainly the commissioner, as the officer in charge of a police force, must have a great deal of authority over his men, similar to that we expect to see in other government departments. My opposition to the clause as it was originally drafted is that I believe senior members of the force should be given some protection, and if the minister will consider adding the word "first" in the fifth line, it would then read:

—the commissioner at any time before the expiration of his first term of engagement.

In other words, if a man is found unacceptable, that fact would become known during his first five years of engagement, and I think the minister should give some consideration to limiting the commissioner's powers by leaving him the authority, providing it is restricted to the first five years of service.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member who has just resumed his seat would move an amendment to that effect, I would be pleased to second it.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McGee): I think we should dispose of the amendment before the committee before proceeding to any discussion on other proposed amendments.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I am just getting up to repeat the remarks of the hon. member for Cartier. We would be very pleased to second such an amendment if it were moved at the appropriate time.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, if I may say a word on this amendment, cannot the minister give some better reason than he has already advanced for opposing the amendment moved by the hon. member for St. Denis? After all, it seems it is not a word which is superfluous. The minister has said that he would be precluded from dismissing someone because of medical unfitness, but it seems to me that does not apply because "for cause" certainly would cover medical unfitness. I wonder whether the minister would reconsider the position which he took and perhaps accept the amendment as it is?

Mr. Montgomery: Mr. Chairman, just in case this comes to a vote, I want to put myself on record as being against any such amendment. Any member who has any experience with a disciplinary force would not want that amendment and would not want those words in there. So I for one will vote against the amendment.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I have been asked a direct question, and I think I would have to rest upon the provisions of paragraph 140 of the standing orders, which I have already read and I will now read again. It provides that any member who feels himself aggrieved by a recommendation made for his dismissal or discharge may within forty-eight hours appeal to the commissioner in writing stating in detail the reasons for making such appeal.

I have indicated that in my view the standards of conduct of this force and the standards of discipline and of honour insisted upon by the officers in charge of the force are such that to vary this provision would strike a serious blow at the whole standing of the force. I have been at pains to explain that it is not a one-sided situation. A man who joins the force and finds he does not like the code of discipline, or any other aspect of the service, may without any grievous penalty sever himself from the service. By the same token I think it must be left available to those in charge of the administration of this force, if they find a man not suitable for the standards of physical, moral or other disciplinary conduct which they lay down to say, "Well, we regret you are not able to make the grade, and therefore without any blot on your service or any formal inquiry or charge being laid we dispense with your services."

To accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member would mean that there would have to be an inquiry, as I understand it, of a formal charge, and therefore a man whose severance from the force would be in the best interests of all concerned could not go out except upon the basis of having a blot on his record. I think that would be a very undesirable and unfortunate principle to introduce into the code of service of a force such as the R.C.M. Police.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, I think the minister has made a very sound, logical and plausible explanation, but I would like to refer to section 140 of the standing orders which he read, when he spoke about the right of an appeal. Does that also apply to all constables of the force, or to officers only?

Mr. Fulton: That applies to any member who feels himself aggrieved by a recommendation made for his dismissal. It applies to members other than commissioned officers.

Mr. Roberge: Is it not a fact that these regulations from which the minister quoted are regulations which may change from time to time, and therefore would the minister not consider adding the words "for cause" in the bill?

Mr. Fulton: Regulations are made and published only with the authority and approval of the governor in council.

Mr. Roberge: But they may be changed.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, they may be changed, it it is true, but only with the approval of the governor in council.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have listened to this discussion very carefully and listened to the minister's explanation, but I cannot yet see why he cannot accept the amendment. Because even if a person were dismissed or discharged for cause, that cause may be illness or unsuitability, and the language of the bill is quite fair to the individual and would not necessarily mean, as far as I can see, a blot upon his character.

Mr. Denis: Any good cause.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McGee): Is the committee ready for the question?

(Translation):

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Chairman, before the question is put, I would like to point out to the minister that he has not answered the question of the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Roberge). The hon. member for Megantic would like to know if regulations are not changed from time to time. The minister answered that they were, but subject to the assent of the governor in council. Even if such changes are subject to the assent of the governor in council, it remains that regulations are changed from time to time, and that they can do what they want.

I shall therefore ask the minister to give us some explanation on this matter.

(Text):

Some hon. Members: Question. Question.

(Translation):

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): No, Mr. Chairman, I want an answer to my question and I wish to point out that the minister has not answered the question of the hon. member for Megantic.

(Text):

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): No. I want an answer to my question.

Mr. Fulton: I had not understood that the hon. gentleman was asking a question. I understood him to be making an observation. His observation was that he did not agree with what I said or that he did not like it. I am sorry, but I do not attempt to dictate the hon. member's likes and dislikes. If he does not agree with what I have said, I am sorry about it, but that fact does not cause me to change my opinion. This matter has been carefully considered. This is a provision that has been in the legislation for some time. It is a matter about which I have concerned myself for some time in order to assure that there is no unfairness. It is safeguarded in the regulations. It is true that the regulations may be changed with the approval of the governor in council.

I do not think I can do any more than I have already done by way of explanation of the reason for this provision.

My hon. friend wants to insert the words "for cause". I pointed out that the words "for cause" have a definite meaning in law. That meaning in law goes far beyond the type of situation which may arise under which it is in the best interests both of the individual concerned and the force itself that he should be separated from the force. I am sorry, but with the best will in the world may I say that I cannot accept the amendment because, in my submission, it strikes at the very roots of what we describe as a disciplined force. For that reason I cannot accept the amendment.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McGee): Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Denis) negatived: Yeas, 19; nays, 72.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McGee): I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 13 carry?

Mr. Roberge: On clause 13(1) may I say this. We have heard the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and the hon. member for Essex East urging the minister to change the wording of that subclause inasmuch as we should like to have the officers appointed during good behaviour instead of during the pleasure of the governor in council. I therefore move the following amendment:

That subsection 1 of section 13 be amended by deleting the words "the pleasure of the governor in council" and by inserting after the word "during" the words "good behaviour".

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McGee): The committee has heard the question.

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Mr. Brassard (Lapointe).]

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McGee): Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Roberge) negatived: Yeas, 18; nays, 73.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McGee): I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 13 carry?

Clause agreed to.

Clause 14 agreed to.

On clause 15—Oath.

Mr. Roberge: Is there any difference between this clause 15 and the former section 15 of the act?

Mr. Fulton: I think the two are exactly the same. Clause 15(1) and (2) are exactly the same as section 15(1) and (2) of the present act.

Mr. Roberge: Subclause 3 is deleted?

Mr. Fulton: Yes; clause 3 is deleted.

Mr. Crestohl: An officer or constable must take two oaths. One is the oath of allegiance and the other is an oath of office. That requirement, I imagine, indicates in this indirect fashion that only a British subject can be a member of the force. Am I right in my understanding?

Mr. Fulton: That is correct.

Mr. Crestohl: Then can the minister inform the committee whether the force sometimes avails itself of the services of men who are not even residents of Canada?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, the force makes use, particularly in overseas posts, of civilian employees who of course are not members of the force. My hon. friend will note that this clause relates only to members of the force. It is only members of the force who are required to take these two oaths.

Mr. Crestohl: Would those persons take only one oath?

Mr. Fulton: No. They are not members of the force at all.

Mr. Crestohl: Do they take any oath?

Mr. Fulton: Those civil servants, of course, would be required to comply with whatever provisions are laid down in the Civil Service Act. This clause relates only to members of the force.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 16—Authority where commissioner absent.

Mr. Roberge: I note that in section 11 of the former act there is only one paragraph.

In this clause there are two paragraphs. Will the minister indicate the substantial difference, if any?

Mr. Fulton: I think the only difference is the addition in subclause 2 which provides that in the event the commissioner and all the deputy commissioners are absent or unable to act the senior assistant commissioner is granted control and management of the force for the time being. This is a provision added out of an abundance of caution in case the rare event should happen that all the officers mentioned in subclause 1, who are the same officers mentioned in section 11 of the old act, should be absent or unable to act.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 17—Justices and peace officers.

Mr. Roberge: I take it this is almost the same as section 12 of the present act except that the phrasing is different?

Mr. Fulton: That is correct, yes.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 18 agreed to.

On clause 19—Municipal by-laws.

Mr. Roberge: Would the minister consider standing this clause together with clause 20 as agreed before recess?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Chairman. That was an arrangement I made with my hon. friends and particularly at the request of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate who has to be absent this evening. I agreed that if we reached these two clauses we would request the committee to allow them to stand.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McGee): Is it the pleasure of the committee to give unanimous consent to allowing clauses 19 and 20 to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clauses 19 and 20 stand.

Clauses 21 to 24 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 25—Offences.

Mr. Roberge: This is a long clause containing a number of subclauses. Would the minister indicate subclause by subclause if there are substantial changes from the present act?

Mr. Fulton: The offences provided by the present act which have been eliminated from the proposed bill are subclauses (c), (d), (m), (n), (s), (v), (w) and (x). I should point out that all the subclauses I have referred to, although they do not appear in the new clause 25, are made minor offences. The intention is to include them in the regulations. I explained this afternoon that only those offences outlined in the act from now on will be regarded as major offences. All offences against provisions of the regulations and standing orders will be regarded as minor offences. We have removed from the act the subclauses I have mentioned but they will be reincorporated in the standing orders and regulations and any infraction thereof will be a minor offence from there on.

Mr. Herridge: I have two questions to ask the minister. The first is with respect to subclause (d) which reads:

> Every member who—
> (d) directly or indirectly receives or solicits any gratuity or reward without permission of the commissioner; or any bribe.

This seems a rather immoral clause. Under what circumstances would the commissioner of mounted police instruct a member of the force to receive a bribe?

Subclause (j) reads:

> Every person who—
> (j) makes an anonymous complaint to the commissioner or to the government of Canada or any province or any department thereof, or to any minister of the crown or member of parliament or a provincial legislature;

Would that subclause include a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who was a constituent of a member of parliament who might wish to write a letter to his member of parliament about a matter that concerned him?

Mr. Fulton: I regret to say I do not understand the hon. member's question. I understood him to raise a question concerning subclause (d) and he concluded by asking about members of the force who write to their members of parliament. I do not understand the connection.

Mr. Herridge: I know the microphone does not work very well in this corner and possibly I am not working very well either. Would subclause (j) prevent a member of the force writing to his member of parliament about a matter that concerned him?

Mr. Fulton: I think that is quite clear, yes. That has been a long standing provision of the act with regard to members of the force.

Mr. Herridge: Does that mean a member of the force could not write to his member of parliament about some legislation about which he was concerned not connected with his duties as a member of the force or with the present act?

Mr. Fulton: Surely it is quite clear that if the member of the force signs his name then there is no offence. The offence here lies in making an anonymous complaint.

Mr. Herridge: That is the information I sought.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, who would be prosecuted for writing an anonymous letter?

Mr. Fulton: A member of the force who was detected in that course of conduct.

Mr. Herridge: The minister did not fully answer my question as far as I could hear. With respect to subclause (d) under what circumstances would the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police give a member of the force permission to take bribes?

Mr. Fulton: My hon. friend will know that he has misread the subclause. It reads:

Every member who—
(d) directly or indirectly receives or solicits any gratuity or reward without permission of the commissioner, or any bribe;

Therefore the permission of the commissioner can relate only to the receiving of a gratuity or a reward. It is obvious from the wording of the subclause that the permission of the commissioner could not relate to the receiving of a bribe.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 26 and 27 agreed to.

On clause 28—Custody.

Mr. Roberge: In subclause 2 of clause 28 I note for the first time in the bill before us there is reference to a commanding officer. Would the minister explain exactly what is meant by a commanding officer?

Mr. Fulton: The commanding officer would be the senior officer at the divisional or subdivisional level.

Clause agreed to.

Subclauses 29 to 33 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 34—Trial.

Mr. Roberge: Subclause 3 of clause 34 reads:

An accused may be represented and assisted at his trial by another member and if the accused requests that he be so represented and assisted, his request shall be granted.

Will the minister consider allowing a member of the force, or an officer to be represented by a lawyer at his trial at his own expense?

Mr. Fulton: This was considered and discussed with the commissioner but it is considered it would not be feasible to permit members of the force on trial within the force to be represented by a lawyer, because of the nature of the circumstances surrounding the alleged offence. It might well be that the circumstances of the offence were such that they could not be divulged to another person not a member of the force.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, if I am not wrong, there are some lawyers within the force.

Mr. Fulton: There are some members of the force who have been trained, yes.

Mr. Roberge: Who are lawyers or who have legal training. Would it not be a good thing to put in this clause:

An accused may be represented and assisted at his trial by another member who has legal training.

Mr. Fulton: The subclause says:

An accused may be represented and assisted at his trial by another member and if the accused requests that he be so represented and assisted, his request shall be granted.

And certainly every effort will be made. I would think that—unless there was some absolute physical impossibility—if the member specified any member of the force who was a lawyer, that request would be granted if at all physically possible.

Mr. Roberge: This clause shall be construed in such a way that the accused member has a choice of the member who can assist him?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, within the limits of the exigencies of the circumstances.

Mr. Fortin: The subclause reads:

The accused shall be brought before the officer who is to try the offence.

I should like to know—

(Translation):

—if the rank of officers is considered? Is it a senior officer who hears those cases or any other designated officer?

(Text):

Mr. Fulton: In the case of a major offence, it would be an officer especially designated by the officer to try the offence. In the case of a minor offence, it would be any commanding officer, any officer at the divisional or subdivisional level; but in the case of a major offence, it would obviously be a very senior officer who would be appointed as the officer to hold the trial.

Mr. Fortin: Would this senior officer be an officer trained in legal matters, a lawyer, or a man who had some training in law?

Mr. Fulton: He would be an officer who had been thoroughly and completely trained in police matters and, as a result of that training and experience in such matters, would have acquired a good deal of legal knowledge, because my hon. friend will appreciate that a good deal of the training of R.C.M. Police members—and officers are promoted from members—indeed all R.C.M. Police officers have to know how to conduct trials or to conduct cases before the courts of the land and therefore, in the course of that experience, such an officer would acquire a great deal of practical legal knowledge.

Mr. Forgie: Subclause 3 says:

An accused may be represented and assisted at his trial by another member.

There is nothing in this subclause to prevent an accused from employing a solicitor or a lawyer.

Mr. Fulton: The subclause merely provides that an accused may be represented and assisted by another member of the force.

Mr. Forgie: That is not what it says. It says:

An accused may be represented and assisted at his trial by another member and if the accused requests that he be so represented and assisted, his request shall be granted.

This does not preclude the appointment of a solicitor to appear on his behalf, surely.

Mr. Fulton: It does preclude the appointment of a solicitor who is not a member of the force because, as I pointed out, there are a number of members of the force, and there will be increasing numbers, who also have legal qualifications.

Mr. Crestohl: This is rather a difficult clause. Is defence counsel especially assigned to a member who is under an accusation?

Mr. Fulton: No defence counsel in the ordinary sense of the word, if my hon. friend is using the expression to mean lawyers retained from outside of the force. I have explained that a member may be represented and assisted by another member of the force if he desires, but because of the nature of the information that may be involved in the charge and in the surrounding circumstances, it is simply not possible to provide generally that members charged with an offence may be represented by counsel from outside the force.

Mr. Crestohl: I understand that very well; it is quite right, but does the force not appoint a defence counsel to give the accused the benefit of having the best legal service which he may desire, assuming that there is no member of the force who has legal training? Is he then left without any legal services? I understand that in the army and in the air force outside counsel are appointed. I can understand why outside counsel should not be brought into this, but certainly the force should have men trained in the law who can appear in a court which is the equivalent of a court martial, since it is a trial by officers of the force. Adequate defence counsel should be provided.

Mr. Fulton: I am sure that my hon. friend, with his broad experience, must have seen many occasions when members, sergeants, staff sergeants and even corporals and the like, have appeared and conducted themselves very competently in the criminal courts of the land. As I said, in addition to that, which is a normal part of police training and usage, and which is the basis on which our members get much experience in court work, we have a number, and the number will increase, of members of the force who are qualified as solicitors, but they are also members of the force. I make this general observation now. The legislation provides that a member charged with an offence under this clause may be represented and assisted by a member if he so requests. The member must still specify the other member who he wishes to have assist him, and in every case, unless it is a physical impossibility, that request will be complied with.

Mr. Crestohl: Is the other member of the service so requested duty bound to accept the brief in advance?

Mr. Fulton: He would be detailed.

Mr. Hanbidge: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister whether this is something new, because I remember appearing for a mounted policeman about 25 or 30 years ago when he was charged?

Mr. Fulton: The provision is new, yes. As I said this afternoon, we have provided something new here; thus, we have written into the legislation and given a statutory basis for the rights of the member of the force charged with an offence under the act. This is the first time this has been done.

Mr. Hanbidge: So far as the penalty or punishment is concerned, would the minister be in favour of saying that the accused constable would have the right to the best legal assistance he could get?

Mr. Fulton: From among the force, yes. That is provided here.

Mr. Hanbidge: That is just within the force.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, for the reasons that I have explained. We have plenty of members in the force who have very extensive legal experience.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 35—Sentences.

Mr. Roberge: When I was in the army a soldier who was tried could address the court after he was found guilty and before sentence was passed. Was a like system studied by the force in connection with this clause?

Clause 35 provides that if the presiding officer finds the accused guilty of the offence he may sentence the accused to punishment. There is no provision for the accused to have the opportunity to address the trial officer in order to seek a lighter sentence.

Mr. Fulton: I think this must be read with the preceding section which says that an accused may be represented and assisted at his trial by another member. I would think it would be most unusual if the presiding officer did not give the accused or his representative the right to address the court before sentence was passed. It will be noted that we have provided in subclause 6 of clause 34—again this is new because we felt it appropriate to write it into the act for the first time—that the rules of evidence at a trial shall be the same as those followed in proceedings under the Criminal Code, and while it is not specified here I think it would be normal that the presiding officer would grant that right. I would suggest that if we find that at such trials these rights are not given we would then consider the necessity of writing it into the act, but certainly it would be our view that all those procedures normally followed at criminal trials should be followed in trials under this part.

Mr. Herridge: I wish to express the same fear as has been expressed by the member who spoke before the minister. Under this clause the presiding officer is prosecutor, judge and jury. The minister suggests that if they find from experience that this does not work they will consider remedying it but I think this sort of thing should be written into the legislation in order to protect the rights of the individual rather than wait for experience to prove it necessary.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 36—Punishment for major offence.

Mr. Maloney: Mr. Chairman, with respect to clause 36, subclause 1, I wonder whether the minister, through his advisers, could furnish us with any information at all, even approximately, as to the number, if any, of members of the force who were punished by imprisonment within the last two or three years.

Mr. Fulton: I am told that I am on dangerous ground in giving any estimate at all but that it would be not more than five in a year out of a force of some 5,500.

Mr. Maloney: What I really wanted to know was whether there in fact had been any and that answers my question. It strikes me, with great respect, that the vesting of the power of imprisonment in officials such as presiding officers, untrained as they would be in the law and having in mind the fact that the accused has not the benefit of any real counsel for the defence in the sense of counsel at the bar, has potential dangers inherent in it. The powers seem to be akin to the powers conferred upon the military, which, of course is understandable, but which I dislike to see imported into an organization such as the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Would the minister consider the possibility of studying the matter I have raised with a view, at some later date, to conferring back upon the courts the power that this section vests in a presiding officer?

Mr. Fulton: I appreciate the feeling behind my hon. friend's remarks. I point out to him that this whole group of sections constitutes, in so far as procedure is concerned, a broadening of the powers of review and a liberalizing of the procedures which have hitherto been applicable. I point out to my hon. friend that clause 36 to which he has referred relates only to major service offences. The penalties outlined in the clause are no more severe than those which have hitherto been applicable for such offences and it is provided by a later clause, because of the very thoughts which the hon. member has expressed, that every such sentence shall now be subject to review by a board of review. This is quite new. The board of review is appointed by the minister and every such sentence, no matter what the actual nature may be, whether it be a term of imprisonment or a fine or loss of pay, is now subject to review by a board of review which is a procedure not previously available to the convicted person. We have taken a very appreciable step forward toward ensuring that there will not be an arbitrary, unjustified and harsh sentence imposed not warranted by the nature of the offence.

Mr. Crestohl: Can the minister tell the committee whether the procedure would be the same in the event of a capital offence within the ranks of the force?

Mr. Fulton: That would be a criminal offence and without question would be tried in the criminal courts. We would not attempt to try that by a service court.

Mr. Crestohl: Even though the offence was committed within the ranks? There would be no fear that some evidence might be disclosed which the force would not want disclosed?

Mr. Fulton: We would not have any jurisdiction. The only offences which we have jurisdiction to try in the service court are those enumerated in clause 25 and murder is not one of them.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 37—Damage or restitution.

Mr. Roberge: Subclause 4 of clause 37 reads as follows:

Where a person has been convicted of a service offence, the officer presiding at the trial may order that any article by means of which the offence was committed be forfeited, and any article so ordered to be forfeited may be disposed of as the commissioner directs, but any money—

This is the part I am concerned with.

—or the proceeds of any property shall be paid into the consolidated revenue fund.

This clause deals with money raised by disposing of property. Under subclause 3 of clause 23 a benefit trust fund is established. I wonder why under this clause the money should be paid to the consolidated revenue fund while under the other clause it is paid to the benefit trust fund.

Mr. Fulton: The reason is that the benefit trust fund is a very ancient and well established fund of the force into which are paid the amounts specified in clause 23 which sets it up. Actually it does not set it up but continues it from the former act. Subclause 4 of clause 37 is a new provision and relates to property that has been used for the commission of a crime. It is considered hardly appropriate that the moneys, if any, recovered from the disposition of such property should be paid into the benefit trust fund but rather should be paid into the consolidated revenue fund. It is not one of the items considered as an appropriate source of moneys to be paid into the benefit trust fund.

Mr. Roberge: Inasmuch as the fees, costs and fines paid by the accused are paid into the benefit trust fund, why should the money received from the disposition of property not go there?

Mr. Fulton: As I said, I do not believe it is an entirely appropriate source of revenue for the benefit trust fund. I, and certainly the officers of the R.C.M. Police, are anxious to see the benefit trust fund swell. If the hon. member could carry his point with the treasury board, I would be happy to see it. We have had some difficulty with treasury board in having the benefit trust fund continued at all, so we thought this sort of money should be contributed to the consolidated revenue fund.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 38 to 40, inclusive, agreed to.

On clause 41—Appeal.

Mr. Herridge: This clause 41 reads:

A member who has been convicted of an offence under this part shall be furnished with a written transcript of the evidence at the trial if he so requests, and he may within forty-eight hours after the receipt of the written transcript, appeal to the commissioner by serving on the officer who presided at the trial or on the member's commanding officer, a written notice of appeal setting forth the grounds upon which the appeal is made.

My question is this: Here, after a member can be held, according to the act, at least 30 days before he is tried—

Mr. Fulton: No, we have cut that down, as I explained this afternoon. We have cut down the time within which he can be held without trial, and I think it is 8 days now.

Mr. Herridge: I apologize to the minister. I was in a committee this afternoon and did not hear that. My point is that the 48 hours seems a very short time for a man to have to prepare his appeal. He may not be able to get the evidence together; he may not be able to get the matter prepared and there may be certain circumstances that delay him. It does seem to me that 48 hours is a very short time in which to allow a man to prepare his appeal under this clause. I should like to ask the minister the reason for the short period of 48 hours, and his comments?

Mr. Fulton: I think what my hon. friend does not appreciate is that there is a substantial difference between the notice of appeal and the appeal itself. This is only the notice of appeal and it sets forth the grounds upon which the appeal is made. It is not an elaborate document. It is usually a document of not more than half a page, so it is not difficult for a member to prepare a short statement setting out that he appeals and a summary of the grounds upon which he appeals. It has not been the experience to date anyway that 48 hours is an unreasonably short time within which to require that notice be served.

Mr. Roberge: On that very point raised by the hon. member for Kootenay West, I may say that I had the same thing in mind that 48 hours would not be enough time to allow an accused member to give his notice of appeal. The accused member may be far away in the north or at some remote detachment or he may be sick and the mail delivery may not function properly, not because of the minister but because of the temperature.

Mr. Fulton: I think I can set my hon. friend's mind at rest. Trials for service offences would be held at division or subdivision headquarters. They would not be held away out at a detachment post in the wilderness, in the Arctic, so the affected member would still be at subdivision headquarters.

Mr. Roberge: That is quite true, and I agree with that. If the trial is held at a subdivision office, the member may be only reprimanded, he may only lose seniority, and then rejoin his old post which may be far away from headquarters. He would receive the written transcript of the evidence there, and he would still have only 48 hours. He would be far away from the subdivision office. At this point, Mr. Chairman, I should like to move an amendment. I move:

That clause 41 be amended by substituting the words "eight days" for the words "forty-eight hours" in line 4 thereof.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McGee): The committee has heard the amendment. Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment (Mr. Roberge) negatived: yeas, 16; nays, 51.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McGee): Shall clause 41 carry?

Mr. Crestohl: Would the minister accept this compromise to satisfy the difficulty that the clause creates? I can understand that a notice of appeal should be given as quickly as possible, and 48 hours appears to be reasonable.

Mr. Fulton: I would be willing to accept 96 hours.

Mr. Crestohl: I want to go beyond that. I want to ask the minister whether he could not leave the 48 hours or 96 hours for the notice of appeal and allow 8 days for the reasons for appeal. It is a simple thing to give a notice of appeal and to say, "I desire to appeal". It is a much more difficult thing to set forth in that document the reasons for your appeal. The reasons given in the document might afterwards be held against the appellant. The appellant may want the benefit of counsel to discuss his reasons for appeal.

If the minister would, therefore, leave the time for notice of appeal at a reasonable period, 48 hours or 96 hours, and would allow the man at least 8 days to submit his grounds for appeal, this might be a reasonable compromise.

Mr. Fulton: I think my hon. friend is also guilty of confusing the notice of appeal and the argument of the appeal itself. I am sure my hon. friend has had broad experience as counsel on appeal cases. I must say that my experience has been that one of the easiest things to draw is a notice of appeal. You simply put in everything you can think of and a lot of things you know you will not rely upon at the hearing of the appeal itself. Then, you send it off. There is not all that difficulty to which my hon. friend refers in filing a notice of appeal, stating briefly the grounds upon which the appeal is based. This is quite a different thing from preparing the case for appeal for which a great deal more time is required and will be given.

Mr. Crestohl: I would agree with the minister if we are dealing with a man who had the benefit of counsel all the time. If that were the case, the minister would be right. I am not confusing the notice of appeal with the grounds for appeal. Here, what is required within the 48 hours is not only giving notice but also setting up your grounds for appeal. This is a very unusual thing for a constable to be able to do as efficiently as it should be done in order to have a proper defence on the appeal.

Mr. Roberge: I have noted that the minister said he would be agreeable to changing the 48 hours to 96 hours. We, on this side of the house, would accept that if the minister would have an amendment moved.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps we could stand this clause and go on to the next one.

Mr. Roberge: May I call it 10 o'clock?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McGee): Shall clause 41 stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause stands.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McGee): Shall clause 42 carry?

Mr. Roberge: It is ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the minister what the business is for tomorrow, and would he give us also the agenda for Thursday and Friday?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker tomorrow we shall take the estimates of the Department of Transport, and following that the estimates of the Department of Justice.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to the order of the house passed on June 2, 1959.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

NATIONAL MUSEUM—RESIGNATION

Question No. 264—Mr. Argue:

1. Have there been any resignations from the national museum of Canada since February 28, 1959?

2. If so, what were the names of the persons who resigned, what were their positions, how long had they been employed at the museum, and for what reason did they resign?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1. Yes.

2. Thomas Edward Lee; human history branch, biologist 3; since June 10, 1950. It was indicated recently to Mr. Lee that, instead of working autonomously and reporting directly to the acting director of the human history branch of the national museum, he would probably be required to follow the usual channels of communication and authority within the branch. Mr. Lee indicated his dissatisfaction with this likelihood and submitted his resignation.

DR. RICHARD S. MACNEISH—PUBLICATION OF ARTICLES

Question No. 288—Mr. Argue:

1. Have the publications of Dr. Richard S. MacNeish, presently an employee of the national museum of Canada, ever been criticized in the professional journals?

2. If so, (a) In what North American professional journals have such critical articles appeared since 1950? (b) What was the date of each publication in which a critical article appeared, and the name of the author? (c) What publications of Dr. MacNeish were under criticism in each case, and what was the nature of the criticism?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1. Yes.

2. (a) (i) American Antiquity, vol. XVIII, No. 3, January, 1953. (ii) American Antiquity, vol. XIX, No. 2, October, 1953. (iii) Pennsylvania Archaeologist, vol. XXIII, No. 2, July, 1953. (c) (i) Kincaid, A Prehistoric Illinois Metropolis, University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill. 1951. "In spite of the foregoing criticisms, the Kincaid report is a major contribution to archaeology of the Nissippi Valley area."

(ii) The Archaeology of the Northeastern United States in Archaeology of Eastern United States, University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill. 1952. "In conclusion, in this reviewer's opinion, MacNeish's paper constitutes a distinct contribution to the literature of northeastern archaeology."

(iii) Iroquois Pottery Types: a Technique for the Study of Iroquois Prehistory, national museum of Canada, bulletin No. 124, Ottawa, 1952. "These errors do little to inspire confidence. Yet they do not necessarily destroy the validity of MacNeish's argument which is, quite briefly, that the roots of the pottery styles popular among the 17th century great lakes Iroquois were strongly nourished by local traditions dating back to at least Point Penninsula times. Nor is there reason to doubt the validity of the pottery classification, other than the fact that the whole study is suspect. That the monograph contains some merit, not all of it original, no critic would question."

(iv) An Early Archaeological Site near Panuco, Vera Cruz, American Philosophical Society, Philadelphia, 1954. "Highly detailed and as complex as the problems with which it is concerned, this monograph will be of less interest, perhaps, to those who are not specialists in the American field. But when we have a few more like it, we will begin to have some knowledge of the beginning of civilization in Meso-America."

(v) Prehistoric Settlement Patterns on the Northeastern Periphery of Meso-America, Viking Fund Publications in Anthropology, New York, 1956. "The work of MacNeish on the northeastern periphery is notable not only because of the discovery of early maize in this region but also because of the extent to which it has been possible to sketch in a long development sequence (of the type that is still conspicuously absent in the archaeology of nuclear Meso-America) for the Tamaulipec region. Why we do not get these earlier development levels in Mexico and Guatemala is certainly still something of a mystery, but it is evident that we are coming closer to the core in this able research of MacNeish's, and I hope it will be pursued with vigor."

(vi) An early Archaeological Site near Panuco, Vera Cruz, American Philosophical Society, Philadelphia 1954. "As a contribution to knowledge of the early archaeology of the Huastec area of Mexico, this report is most significant."

(vii) Prehistoric Settlement Patterns in the New World, Wenner-Gren Foundation for Anthropological Research, New York, 1956. "These shortcomings are not monumental and Prehistoric Settlement Patterns in the New World can form the basis for a truly significant contribution when someone draws the findings into a monographic report."

(viii) An early Archaeological Site near Panuco, Vera Cruz, American Philosophical Society, Philadelphia, 1954. "MacNeish's contribution has been to add materially to our knowledge of the period in one area and to attack with daring and skill the more general problems of the Preclassic. It is a highly significant addition to one of the most important problem areas in Meso-American archaeology."

NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES—U.S. PERSONNEL

Question No. 394—Mr. Argue:

1. Are any American citizens presently employed in any capacity in each branch of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources? If so, how many?

2. What is the name of each of these persons, the branch of the department in which he is employed, the position each holds, and the duties each is responsible for?

3. What was the date each person was appointed to this position, and by what authority?

4. On what date did each of these persons first enter the service of the government of Canada, what date did they take up subsequent positions, what was the nature of each position and the duties involved, and under what authority were appointments made to each position?

5. How long had each person been a resident of Canada before taking service with the government, what positions had each held prior to this appointment?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1. Yes. 5.

2. Barry, T. W., national parks, biologist 1, ornithology; MacNeish, R. S., national museum, biologist 5, archaeology; Langston, W., national museum, biologist 3, palaeontology; Crum, H. A., national museum, biologist 3, national herbarium; Oschinsky, L., national museum, anthropologist 2, archaeology.

3. In same order as set out above: May 17, 1957, Civil Service Commission, Barry, T.W.; June 20, 1949, Civil Service Commission, MacNeish, R. S.; October 20, 1954, Civil Service Commission, Langston, W.; September 20, 1954, Civil Service Commission, Crum, H. A.; September 2, 1958, Civil Service Commission, Oschinsky, L.

4. May 17, 1957, Barry, T.W.; June 20, 1949, anthropologist 3, MacNeish, R.S.; January 1, 1953, anthropologist 4; April 1, 1955, anthropologist 6; April 1, 1956, biologist 4; April 1, 1958, biologist 5; archaeology, on April 1, 1955 in charge of the archaeology section; biologist 3, palaeontology, Langston, W.; biologist 3, national herbarium section, since appointment to museum, Crum, H. A.; anthropologist 2, archaeology section, Oschinsky L.

5. Barry, T. W., no prior residence in Canada; was performing postgraduate studies in ornithology at Cornell University before appointment.

MacNeish, R. S., no prior residence in Canada; director, second Tamaulipas expedition, Mexico, under auspices of Wenner-Gren foundation for anthropological research, New York City.

Langston, W., no prior residence in Canada; lecturer in palaeontology, University of California.

Crum, H. A., no prior residence in Canada; was performing research work at Duke University before appointed.

Oschinsky, L., no prior residence in Canada; visiting lecturer in physical anthropology, University of Arizona.

C.M.H.C. AND N.H.A. LOANS

Question No. 419—Mr. Garland:

1. How many direct loans have been made by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation from (a) January 1, 1959 to May 1, 1959; (b) what were the figures for the same period last year?

2. How many National Housing Act insured loans were made by approved lenders (a) from January 1, 1959 to May 1, 1959; (b) what were the figures for the same period last year?

3. How many applications for loans re-construction of "minimum houses" have been approved by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation since January 1, 1959 to May 1, 1959 (a) throughout all Canada; (b) in Northern Ontario?

Answer by: Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works):

(1) Direct loans made by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation:

*(a) January 1, 1959 to April 30, 1959: loans, 2,942; units, 4,458.

(b) January 1, 1958 to April 30, 1958: loans, 140; units, 1,311.

In addition, 7,656 loans for 10,336 units were made by the approved lenders as agents of C.M.H.C. under the small home loans program from January 1, 1958 to April 30, 1958.

(2) Insured loans made by approved lenders:

*(a) January 1, 1959 to April 30, 1959: loans, 9,657; units, 11,162.

(b) January 1, 1958 to April 30, 1958: loans, 8,042; units, 9,454.

(3) Applications for loans approved by C.M.H.C. from January 1, 1959 to April 30, 1959 for the construction of minimum houses (plan No. 2,000 and adaptions thereof).

(a) Throughout all Canada: 137 units.

(b) In northern Ontario: 27 units.

* Figures shown in (1)(a) and (2)(a) are preliminary for April.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES—U.S. EMPLOYEES

Question No. 430—Mr. Argue:

1. Are there any American citizens presently holding positions in the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources?
2. If so, how many are there in each branch?
3. Have any of these persons taken the (a) oath of allegiance; (b) oath of office?
4. If so, how many, what are their names, positions, nature of employment, in what branch, and how long have they been employed with the department?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1. Yes.

2. One in national parks branch. Four in the national museum of Canada.

3. (a) Yes. (b) Yes.

4. (a) The following have signed the oath of allegiance:

Questions

Crum, H. A.; biologist 3; national herbarium; national museum; since September 20, 1954.

Oschinsky, L.; anthropologist 2, archaeology; national museum; since September 2, 1958.

(b) The following have signed the oath of office:

Barry, T. W.; biologist 1; ornithology; national parks; since May 17, 1957.

MacNeish, R. S.; biologist 5; archaeology; national museum; since June 20, 1949.

Langston, W.; biologist 3; palaeontology; national museum; since October 20, 1954.

Crum, H. A.; (see above).

NATIONAL MUSEUM—RESIGNATIONS SINCE MARCH 12, 1959

Question No. 445—Mr. Argue:

1. Have there been any resignations from either branch of the national museum of Canada since March 12, 1959?
2. If so, what were the names of the persons, in what branch were they employed, in what position, how long had they been employed there, and for what reason did they resign?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1. Yes.

2. A. W. Cameron, natural history branch, biologist 3, since November 15, 1948, to accept a post at McGill University.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, June 10, 1959

The house met at 11 a.m.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

Second report of standing committee on industrial relations—Mr. Small.

STARRED QUESTIONS

RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM, ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Question No. 94—Mr. Granger:

1. Have any measures been taken since March 31, 1958, to implement a national development program of federal assistance for developing the resources of the Atlantic provinces, having regard to their differing needs and varying financial capabilities?
2. If so, what are those measures?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): The answer to the first part of the question is yes. The answer to the second part is that having regard to the differing needs and varying financial capabilities of the Atlantic provinces, a number of important measures have been undertaken to aid them in developing their natural resources. Included in the estimates currently before parliament are the following specific items which are clearly marked as referring to resource development in the Atlantic provinces, and which total more than $40 million.

The answers that follow, Mr. Speaker, cover four pages of single space typing. I am going to ask permission to put this on record as part of my answer. I also point out that this answer is not complete because there are bits of information coming from other departments. Up to five minutes before eleven o'clock this morning this is the answer I had received. It does not include, of course, various plans that we have under way with some of the premiers of the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Speaker: Do I understand that the rest of the answer refers to items in the estimates?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Partially, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The minister proposes that this lengthy answer be incorporated in Hansard at this point. Is it the pleasure of the house to permit the answer to be given in this way?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

66968-9—286

(Editor's Note: The information above referred to follows:)

Vote No. 35. Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act $2,357,195.

Vote No. 212. Payments in connection with the movement of coal under conditions prescribed by the governor in council $10,089,350.

(S) Subsidy payments under an act to place Canadian coal used in the manufacture of iron and steel on a basis of equality with imported coal (chap. 34, R.S.) $300,000.

Vote No. 213. Subventions in respect of eastern coal under agreements entered into pursuant to the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act $1,700,000.

Vote No. 352. Toward an investigation to determine the feasibility of constructing a proposed causeway across Northumberland strait, including the opening of a test quarry $250,000.

Vote No. 356. Contribution to the province of New Brunswick toward construction of dam on Tantramar river, N.B. $84,375.

Vote No. 419. Maritime Freight Rates Act $14,100,000.

Vote No. 447. Advances to national harbours board for capital expenditures, Halifax $933,500.

Vote No. 477. Advances in accordance with agreements entered into pursuant to the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act $11,627,000.

Apart from these, there are many other specific items, particularly in the estimates of the Departments of Public Works and Transport, which relate to the Atlantic provinces. In addition, these provinces share fully in various nation-wide developmental programs, including the fisheries conservation and development program; the trans-Canada highway; the geological, hydrographic and other technical surveys; the facilities of the industrial development bank; the housing activities of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation; and various argicultural programs.

The geological survey have stepped up their program in the Atlantic provinces. For example, this year they are "fielding" 14 separate field parties out of 77 for the whole of Canada. This represents roughly 18 per cent of their total effort.

Starred Questions

The government has also offered to share in the capital cost of transmission lines related to the proposed development of bay d'Espoir, Newfoundland.

The two most substantial measures, in terms of the magnitude of financial assistance, come under the Department of Finance. These are the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants, which provide $25,000,000 a year for four years, and the loan to New Brunswick in respect of the Beechwood power project, amounting to $29,500,000.

During 1958-59, the Department of Agriculture spent $1,421,282 on more than 35 projects in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick designed to protect agricultural lands from tidal flooding. Expenditure for the same purpose in 1959-60 are estimated at more than $2,300,000 as indicated above under item 35 covering the vote for the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act. The Department of Agriculture has also extended increased aid to the Atlantic provinces on lime assistance and freight assistance as outlined below:

The lime assistance policy was changed on March 4, 1958, under authority of P.C. 1958-6/336, to cover 60 per cent of provincial lime assistance costs without the per ton maximum of $1.50 which applied previously. This has resulted in the following increased tonnage and assistance over the previous year.

	1957-58		1958-59
	Tons	Federal Assistance	Tons	Federal Assistance
Newfoundland	2,607.71	$ 3,911.35	4,476.30	$ 32,944.33
Nova Scotia	46,831.45	70,217.84	73,649.75	101,291.85
Prince Edward Isld.	24,260.56	36,390.68	29,609.81	53,387.02
New Brunswick	32,129.62	48,194.42	41,070.92	85,694.09
	105,829.34	$158,714.29	148,806.78	$273,317.29

The freight assistance policy was also changed on November 27, 1958, under authority of P.C. 1958-1628 effective December 1958, to provide subsidy on all but 5 cents per 100 lbs. of the increase in freight rates applicable on feed grains and millfeeds to the Atlantic provinces.

FREIGHT ASSISTANCE PAID

	1957-58		1958-59
	Tons	Federal Assistance	Tons	Federal Assistance
Newfoundland	16,631	$ 396,554.54	16,285	$ 399,633.89
Nova Scotia	130,359	1,903,239.40	133,103	2,063,146.30
Prince Edward Isld.	21,012	306,775.20	25,697	394,946.20
New Brunswick	72,469	970,984.60	88,633	1,254,356.90
	240,471	$3,577,553.74	263,718	$4,112,083.29

Under the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources there have been several important measures of assistance to the Atlantic provinces. For example, since March 31, 1958, financial aid was provided for the development of camp ground and picnic sites during the months of April and May, 1958 and again during the winter of 1958-59, commencing November 1. In addition, assistance was offered in the development of camp grounds and picnic sites along the trans-Canada highway.

Of particular benefit to the Atlantic provinces is the $150,000,000 roads to resources program initiated by this government. The terms of this program have been broadened to include the tourist industry as a resource so that the Atlantic provinces may benefit fully from the federal financial assistance available. The cost sharing formula has also been made more flexible to meet the differing needs and varying financial capabilities of these provinces. In the four Atlantic provinces, the program is expected to produce approximately 1,500 miles of roads and federal assistance will total some $30,000,000.

The Saint John river board was set up on 24 March 1959 by agreement between the governments of Canada and New Brunswick for the purpose of making basic studies regarding the best use of the water resources of the Saint John river basin in Canada. The primary purpose of the study is to determine the effect on the existing and potential developments and on other water uses in New Brunswick of storage possibilities in the Saint John river basin, particularly those storages on the upper Saint John in the state of Maine which are being studied by the international Passamaquoddy engineering board in relation to the proposed Passamaquoddy tidal project. While the primary purpose of the study is directed towards the effect of storage development on the power picture in the province, the effect on other water uses, such as flood control, navigation, pollution abatement, fish and wildlife preservation and the possibility of the reduction of the silting problem in Saint John harbour is to receive careful consideration as well. The board's report is due on 30 June 1960 and the estimated cost of this investigation is $150,000 which will be shared equally between Canada and New Brunswick.

Finally, on October 30, 1958 the federal government offered to the provinces financial assistance for the construction of forest access roads and trails for the period November 1, 1958 to June 30, 1959. In the Atlantic provinces, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have signed agreements with the federal government which provide for a federal contribution of 50 per cent of expenditures made or wages paid whichever is the lesser. The amount of the federal payment is not limited in any manner other than the above-mentioned condition.

The following table shows the estimated total provincial expenditure and the estimated federal share for the above mentioned period.

Province	Provincial Expenditure	Federal Share
Newfoundland	$125,000	$ 62,500
Nova Scotia	86,344	43,172
New Brunswick	20,000	10,000
	$231,344	$115,672

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—ESTABLISHMENT OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

Question No. 99—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. Have any crown corporations been established since March 31, 1958, to promote industrial decentralization in the direction of the Atlantic provinces?
2. If so, how many and for what purposes?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government has been able to deal effectively with the responsibilities in regard to the Atlantic provinces without establishing new crown companies for the purpose mentioned, although it should be noted that one crown company, the industrial development bank, has opened a new branch in New Brunswick for this purpose during the period.

Mr. McIlraith: Then the answer to the question is no?

NEW BRUNSWICK—REPAYMENT OF BEECHWOOD LOAN

Question No. 101—Mr. McWilliam:

1. What payments of (a) principal; (b) interest accrue due during 1959, on account of the $29.5 million Beechwood loan to the province of New Brunswick?
2. On what date, or dates, are these payments due?
3. Have any such payments on this loan been made to date?
4. If so, on what date, or dates, and in what amounts were payments made as to (a) principal; (b) interest?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer to part 1(a) is $3,215,858.49. The answer to part 1(b) is $1,143,125.

The answer to part 2 is April 8, 1959.

The answer to part 3 is yes.

The answer to part 4 is April 8, 1959 in the amounts set out in the answer to part 1.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

JEAN C. LESSARD

Question No. 447—Mr. Argue:

1. Is a Mr. Jean C. Lessard presently employed with the St. Lawrence seaway authority?
2. If so, what position does he hold?
3. What positions has he held since first entering government service, what was the nature of each, date of appointment, length of service, salary, and expenses submitted yearly?
4. Was Mr. Lessard appointed to any of these positions through a civil service competition?
5. If so, to which ones, what was the number and date of the competition, how many persons competed, what names were on the eligible list and in what order?
6. If not, under what authority was Mr. Lessard appointed to each, and by whom was he recommended?
7. What qualifications did Mr. Lessard possess for each of the positions he has held?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

RADIO STATION CJON, ST. JOHN'S NFLD.

Motion No. 119—Mr. Argue:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, reports and other documents, exchanged between any federal government department, any cabinet minister, and radio station CJON St. John's, Newfoundland, since January 1, 1953, regarding the use of the station facilities and/or any financial transaction.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): The government is prepared to accept this resolution subject to the usual reservations, and also subject to the availability of the documents referred to going back to 1953.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion, subject to the reservation expressed by the minister?

Motion agreed to.

DAWSON CREEK, B.C., AIRPORT

Motion No. 121—Mr. Regier:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the federal government and municipal governments and/or individuals, since January 1, 1956, regarding the airport at Dawson Creek, British Columbia.

Motion agreed to.

PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION OF ATOM SMASHER

Motion No. 122—Mr. McIlraith:

For a copy of the correspondence exchanged between the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Canadian Association of Physicists since January 1, 1958, in connection with a proposal to construct in Canada an atom smasher.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this is satisfactory. The more precise language of the Canadian Association of Physicists was "high energy laboratory" rather than the phrase "atom smasher".

Motion agreed to.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SALE OF LAND, SARNIA—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the failure of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration as disclosed in the agreement with Dimensional Investments Limited to protect the interests of the Sarnia band of Indians by entering into an agreement for the sale of Indian lands at approximately $2,000 an acre which were resold immediately to Ontario hydro at approximately three and a half times the price received by the Indians, resulting in an immediate profit to Dimensional Investments Limited of between $800,000 and $900,000.

[Mr. Argue.]

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the hon. member if he can inform me whether the agreement referred to has been tabled in the house?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I should like to have some assistance in this matter. Certain points occur to me to which I would ask members to direct their remarks. First, the matter of urgent public importance appears to involve the sale of the property of a band of Indians and therefore is somewhat local in character, affecting the property rights of certain individuals and not the public generally. Second, the question occurs to me whether this is an administrative responsibility. The Indian Act provides, of course, for jurisdiction over such matters by a minister of the government, but I am not familiar enough with the details to know whether the sale is one which is made by the Indians themselves or by the government. Then, of course, there is the further question of urgency of debate. My recollection is that this matter was extensively discussed in the press last week and earlier, and that may have a bearing on whether there is urgency of debate which would warrant the interruption of our proceedings.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could say a word on these points since I am asking leave—

Mr. Speaker: I think I should hear the hon. member who is presenting the motion. Will he direct his remarks to the points I have raised, or any other arguments which he thinks support the motion?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is precisely what I was proposing to do. On the first point, whether this is a matter of national importance, of course the superintendent general of Indian affairs is a trustee for the Indians, and the sale was made by the minister, or by the crown, and the minister was agent for the crown. There can be, therefore, no question about this being an administrative responsibility of the government. It is true that the prior consent of the Indians has to be obtained, but the action is taken by the government, by the minister, and on the responsibility of the government. So I think there is no question about that.

I believe the disposal of any Indian lands in any part of the country is surely a trust the performance of which, as a national responsibility, is most urgent and most important. I could quote many eloquent statements on that point by the Prime Minister when he sat over here.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I had a lot of good examples when the hon. gentleman was the minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Prime Minister can speak, perhaps, when I am finished. But on the question of urgency—

Mr. Fulton: You seldom stop long enough for anyone else to speak.

Mr. Pickersgill: On the question of urgency, I may say there were articles in the press but I did not feel I could properly found my case on articles in the press. The hon. member for Trinity has sought for some considerable time to get the relevant document. The document was not tabled until Monday evening at approximately 10 o'clock. Had it been available on Friday I think we would have had no case, because the matter could have been brought up on the motion to go into supply. This opportunity having been denied us, and of course the minister's estimates having been completed, there is no opportunity to discuss the subject on her estimates. It did not appear to me there was any other opportunity to bring this matter up.

It is urgent in another way. I think it is urgent to know whether this high price which was paid by Ontario hydro was something the Indians lost or whether it was something that was done extravagantly by another government. This is important, in view of the fact that we live in a democratic country and certain decisions have to be made tomorrow. It seems to me that—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Prime Minister laughs as though elections were laughing matters, and as though the people were not entitled to be informed about public affairs before they vote.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not entering the argument, but the fact that an election is being held tomorrow in one of the provinces is not a matter of urgency in the House of Commons.

Mr. Pickersgill: On the Prime Minister's point, since the Prime Minister was permitted—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the hon. member who has the floor not to bring in provincial elections.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think it is a matter of urgent importance to this house to know whether this land that was sold to Ontario hydro for $7,000 an acre was worth that, in which case the Indians should have got the $7,000, or whether it was not worth it. It is for that reason that it seems to me it is urgent that this parliament, in this session, should have an opportunity to discuss this matter, and there is no other opportunity that I am able to see available under the rules.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate really let the cat out of the bag when he referred to the Ontario election tomorrow, and went on to say that this house should be able to deal with the question of whether or not another government has been extravagant.

Mr. Pickersgill: A breach of trust by this government.

Mr. Green: If he can succeed in moving the adjournment of the house on this occasion, then a day or two before the election in Alberta, which I think is on June 18, we may have another motion of the same kind. Surely this is reducing the rule for making motions of this kind to an absurdity. All the authorities clearly state that the debate itself must be urgent, and the only element of urgency in this matter is the Ontario election tomorrow.

Mr. Pickersgill: Breach of trust.

Mr. Green: The hon. member also says there will be no other occasion on which to discuss this question. May I point out that we have one other supply motion. It will probably be called a week from Monday. I am sure the members of the government, including the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, will be delighted to discuss this subject should hon. members across the way have the courage to raise it then.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is in effect nothing more nor less than a propaganda motion and that the request made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is really not made in a very serious way.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I think the question of the Ontario election tomorrow is an extraneous matter and should be so considered by Your Honour. I believe the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) made an error of judgment when he advanced that as a reason for urgency of debate. I would suggest that there is urgency for debate on other and more substantial grounds. The urgency for debate is brought about not because there may be a motion to go into supply a week from Monday when, if it is the opinion of the official opposition at that time this is the most important matter on which to move, they may move in this field. Rather, it is an urgent matter because it brings the action of the government under a cloud.

It is an extremely serious charge that is alluded to in this motion that is being advanced. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration who is responsible, as has been pointed out, for giving permission for this land to be sold, tabled the agreement only Monday night. This is a motion that is being presented quickly thereafter in order to deal with the question, in order to get at the facts and see whether or not the Indians were denied money that should be theirs or whether for some other reason the Ontario hydroelectric commission paid a scandalous amount. These matters are urgent in that they should be dealt with and cleared up—if the government can clear them up—at this time.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I am prompted to enter this debate particularly because of some of the expressions of opinion by the leader of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Before the hon. member proceeds I would remind him that it is not a debate. We are discussing the interpretation of the application of rule 26 to the specific points that were raised. I trust that he will not stray into the field of the provincial election.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of straying. I wish to deal with the three points Your Honour asked my friend the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate to deal with, but before dealing with them I thought it in order to tell the leader of the house that he was more persuasive in his arguments when he spoke as the Minister of Public Works than he is when he speaks as the new Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He was speaking as leader of the house.

Mr. Chevrier: A moment ago he indicated that we lacked courage in not raising this matter on the motion for supply. It strikes me that if the government were courageous it would accept this invitation to adjourn the house and deal with the matter.

The points which Your Honour asked should be dealt with are the following. First, Your Honour asked for assistance in connection with the matter of the regional or national aspect of the debate. I think it is quite clear that because of the fact that the superintendent general of Indian affairs acts on behalf of all the Indians in this country, and not only on behalf of one of the bands, the matter becomes one of national interest rather than local interest.

Then it is quite clear on another point. The responsibility of the administration is such that when matters of this kind, such as sales of land, are approved they must be approved by the governor in council, and the superintendent general in his responsibility as trustee must recommend to the minister approval of sales of this nature. In that respect I do not think there can be any doubt but that there is a responsibility as far as the administration is concerned.

I cannot agree with the argument by the leader of the house that this matter can be held over until a motion for supply is made, because there has been no indication as to when that is likely to come up, and the urgency of the debate lies in this fact, that the estimates of the hon. minister have been disposed of—

An hon. Member: What about the supplementary estimates?

Mr. Chevrier: I am asked from the rear, what about the supplementary estimates. Well, I presume they will not come up until the end of the session, which may not be for two or three weeks. I presume that the ordinary estimates of the other departments would have priority, since the minister has already disposed of her estimates. So that is not an argument. The point of urgency is that there is no immediate opportunity to deal with a matter of this nature, which to me is all-important because of the reason given by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate—the exorbitant profits which have been made with regard to Indian lands, and for these reasons I suggest that the debate should be adjourned and this subject discussed.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): There are just one or two additional points I should like to make. I wish to refer, first, to the specific citation in Beauchesne regarding the question of whether a matter must be of national importance before it can be made the subject of such a motion as this. Your Honour has no doubt read paragraph 5 of citation 100 at page 90 of Beauchesne's fourth edition which says:

> The adjournment of the house cannot be moved with reference to critical conditions generally prevailing in certain parts of the country.

It is clear from the motion that it relates to a specific and isolated sale. If there were allegations made with regard to the sale of Indian lands generally I should be prepared to admit that that was a matter of general application, but this motion is confined to a specific sale. I am not suggesting that this makes the content of the motion less important, but it certainly puts it outside the scope of the rule which must be observed before the adjournment of the house can take place at this time.

On the question of the urgency of debate, I would remind Your Honour that you have to consider, it seems to me, two questions. The first is, is there any other way in which this matter could be discussed in the reasonably foreseeable future without the necessity of adjourning the house, and second, whether the necessity for dealing with the matter is so urgent that the house should immediately be adjourned.

May I remind Your Honour that a committee has recently been set up to review the Indian Act. I understand that that committee is holding a meeting today, and this would certainly provide another forum in which this question and others relating to the administration of the superintendent general of Indian affairs could be discussed.

It seems to me that this does dispose entirely of any suggestion that the house should be adjourned at this stage. Further, on the question of whether this matter requires to be dealt with now as one of urgency, may I remind Your Honour that this sale is an accomplished fact. It is not as though the sale were about to be made and it was necessary, therefore, to discuss at this time whether or not it would be advisable to make it; or, from the point of view of hon. gentlemen opposite, to argue to prevent the sale. This sale, as I say, is an accomplished fact. There are other times at which it can be discussed, either in the committee or in this house on a supply motion or on the supplementary estimates. Since it is an accomplished fact, and with these other opportunities for debate being available, I submit that it clearly is not necessary to adjourn the house now in order to discuss it.

Thus on these three grounds—first, that it is a matter local in its import; second, that there are other occasions on which it can be discussed; and third, that the motion deals with an accomplished fact and is, therefore, not one which requires immediate discussion today—I submit that the motion is one which cannot be accepted.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I just want to add one word. At page 89 of Beauchesne a definition is given of a definite matter of urgent public importance. Paragraph 2 says it must be so pressing that public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention; and I think the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate indicated the type of interest he had as he revealed the reason for the motion at this time.

In any event, I want to give hon. gentlemen opposite every opportunity to discuss this matter at the earliest possible date. The hon. member for Laurier said he and his friends did not know when it could be discussed. The estimates of the minister had already been completed, he said, and he did not know when the supplementary estimates would come up for consideration.

We had intended to move to go into supply a week from Monday, but in view of the arguments put forward here today I now offer to have the motion made next Monday, so the final motion for this session will be brought before the house and every opportunity will be given to discuss this matter.

Mr. Chevrier: I suppose I should be allowed to say a word in answer to the Prime Minister. The practice in connection with motions to go into supply, particularly toward the end of the session, has been that they have been staggered from time to time. If the Prime Minister wants to change it, that is quite in order with us, but the point is this. If the government is so courageous as the Prime Minister indicates, here and now is the time and place; now is the time to adjourn the debate and accept the opportunity to discuss this matter. Apparently the Prime Minister does not want to discuss it now. He wants to put it off until another time. I submit to him that here is the opportunity, and not at a later time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In that regard, may I say this. I do not want to press the opposition; I want to assist them. But I note that as soon as I made the offer I did, the staggering was done on the other side.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I might be allowed to say a word about one of the points raised by the Minister of Justice. With regard to what he said about the committee, it seems to me that the terms of reference of that committee are quite clear, namely to examine the Indian Act, not to examine the administration of the department. The minister's argument on that score clearly falls to the ground.

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members for a very complete and useful discussion of the application of rule 26 to this particular motion. If I might deal with the last point referred to—the suggestion of the Minister of Justice that as a joint committee is now dealing with the Indian Act it might be an answer to the motion—may I say that to my mind it seems that if the matter is one which comes under the rule it should be possible to bring it before the house itself.

It seems to me that the complaint is that certain property of a band of Indians has been sold for too little money, that the best price has not been obtained. I accept the proposition that it is the administrative responsibility of the department to do the best it can with these sales, just as it is its responsibility in connection with any sale or purchase of public property to get the best price or pay the least price it can. That is a continuing responsibility. But this particular motion relates to a sale that has been completed, as was pointed out by the Minister of Justice. It is an accomplished fact. What the motion seeks to do is to criticize, condemn or question the government for having made the sale on the terms it did. It is more specifically a motion of censure of the government for something it has done.

Property rights are always important to the people involved, but I think the fact that this is a property matter involving property rights puts it in a different category from other motions we have had. It strikes me that if we were to allow the procedure of the house to be interrupted every time the administration of the government with respect to the sale or purchase of property was challenged it would open a very wide door and would tend to disrupt the proceedings of the house.

With respect to the rule that the matter must be of public importance and so pressing that the public interest will suffer if not given attention, subsections 2 and 5 of citation 100 of Beauchesne's fourth edition have been referred to, and perhaps this aspect is not so clear because the administrative action of the government is always a matter of general importance and in this case it relates to a fairly local occurrence.

In coming to the question of urgency of debate let me say this. As I have already said, this appears to be basically a motion of censure on the administration and would more properly be dealt with in that way. We could accomplish very little by debating whether the price is or is not adequate, and by a motion to adjourn the house we could not correct the situation. However, the matter is one which any hon. member of the house is entitled to bring up at an appropriate time.

Having regard to the fact that this sale has been a public issue for ten days—I am not sure when the sale price first became known—we were in debate on Monday night when we had a supply motion and airing of grievances; but I do not rest my decision on the timing of the filing of this document, I want to make that clear. The clerk reminds me that the sale was made some time ago. The urgency of debate seems to work against the mover of this motion.

There will be an opportunity shortly to discuss this matter. As it is not of such national scope and as the motion would not be corrective of anything which is pending except as a means of criticizing the government, it seems to me the opportunity should be taken when it can be taken on a later occasion. I am not, therefore, prepared to accept the application for leave to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26.

[Mr. Speaker.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—REPORTED FRENCH REQUEST TO SHARE IN ATOMIC SECRETS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he is now in a position to comment on the strongly reported suggestions that the government of France is not prepared to make any commitments to NATO until the United States and Britain have shared their atomic secrets with France. This question was asked by the Leader of the Opposition on Monday and my hon. friend said he would give consideration to the question later.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. On that occasion I said I could not make any helpful comment at that time, and I still believe that to be the situation.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

STATEMENT ON PASSAGE OF UNITED STATES NAVAL SHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport arising out of what I believe would be a very undesirable display of naval power by the United States in the St. Lawrence seaway if projected plans are completed. My question is this. Has the minister anything to report on his representations to the United States that the passage of United States naval vessels through the St. Lawrence seaway should be reduced to two a day? Would he care to comment on the story in this morning's press that the United States navy has announced that it will go ahead with plans as previously scheduled?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. This morning I asked the president of the St. Lawrence seaway authority to give me a report on this matter, and it is as follows.

Before the opening of navigation and in connection with arrangements for the royal visit our officials gained knowledge of the intended passage of United States naval vessels. At that time the size of the flotilla was not known and our immediate interest and concern, in discussion with the royal tour organization, was that the vessels would be so spaced as not to cause congestion at the time of the official opening. It was our understanding that in so far as protocol was concerned, arrangements had been made between the United States state department and our Department of External Affairs. No one at that time could have foreseen the accumulation of shipping arising from the delayed opening of navigation due to ice conditions. Also, the influx of large ocean vessels was much greater than anticipated. Up to June 7, 248 ocean vessels passed through the Welland canal upbound as compared with 122 small ocean vessels up to the same date in 1958.

With the co-operation of the United States seaway corporation a meeting was held with United States naval officials at Ottawa on May 26 at which I outlined the situation at the Welland canal and requested that they report the same to their superior officers, with a view to considering preferably a reduction in the total number of vessels or, alternatively, the spacing of their movement over a longer period. At that time they replied that their plans had been practically completed and ships assigned, and that they could do no more than report the situation to their superior officers.

That is the end of the report of the president of the St. Lawrence seaway to me. When I was advised of the result of this meeting I discussed the situation with the United States ambassador on Friday, May 29, urging a reduction in the size of the flotilla and spacing of the ships at not more than two a day in order to minimize congestion. To this moment I have heard of no adjustment in the plans of the United States navy, though I was speaking to the United States ambassador about this matter as recently as one hour ago.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the minister prepared to discuss this matter with the government at Washington in an endeavour to avoid further unnecessary congestion of the St. Lawrence seaway when, in the words of the Minister of Transport, it is already congested far beyond anything that had been anticipated?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it would be unfortunate indeed if the impression should go abroad either in Canada or in the United States that this matter is not being dealt with in a very friendly and considerate way by both governments. I might add one or two facts to the statement made by my colleague the Minister of Transport.

Under an agreement known as the Rush-Bagot agreement which dates back to 1817 it is necessary when one of the two countries wishes to bring a naval vessel into the great lakes to obtain the consent of the other country. There was an exchange of notes between Canada and the United States early this year with regard to the proposal of the United States navy to bring 28 naval vessels into the seaway. Canada agreed that this course could be followed. At that time, of course, no one realized the difficulties that would arise in getting the vessels through the Welland canal. I do not think either nation expected that there would be this tie-up and, of course, it affects the United States as well as Canada, so that everything has been done in good faith in connection with this proposal.

My department has made representations through the Canadian embassy in Washington, and I am very hopeful that some satisfactory method of solving the problem can be reached at a very early date.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add just one word, arising out of the preamble to the question asked by the hon. member for Assiniboia. Whatever may be the difficulties which might follow from the numbers of the United States flotilla—that has been discussed by my colleagues—I would not want the idea to go forth that the hon. gentleman represented the views of the members of this house and of the people of Canada when he said "in view of the undesirable display of United States naval strength in the great lakes". That was a preamble unnecessary for the discussion of the objective nature of the question, and I want to make it perfectly clear that it does not represent, as I understand it and know it, the views of the Canadian people.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Since this matter has been so informally discussed perhaps I could say just one word to express to the Secretary of State for External Affairs the approval of those who sit on this side of the house of his attempt to point out to the United States the difficulties that would exist under the circumstances. There is no doubt in our mind that when the agreement was made the circumstances were not at all the same as they are now. No one had any idea that the conditions would be such as they are, and in view of the fact that there is an undertaking in the Rush-Bagot agreement, I think all the minister can do is to make the necessary representations to the United States. I am sure that if they are done in the proper way, as the minister will unquestionably bring them forward, the United States will understand that there should be, if not a stoppage of the movement, at least a substantial staggering which will not add to the confusion which already exists.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, since other comments have been made on this, I should like to ask the indulgence of the house to make a further comment myself.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member was responsible for the course taken by giving an apparent expression of opinion when he asked his question. If the house does not object to his speaking again, I have no objection.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, following the comments of the Prime Minister the hon. member for Laurier made comments. I feel that I—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I think leave of the house should be obtained to extend this discussion, and it is apparent that the house does not wish to give that leave; therefore I think the hon. member will have to conform to the procedure and ask a question if he has one to ask. Otherwise he should terminate his remarks. Just to make sure, might I ask the hon. member for Assiniboia whether he had a personal explanation to make because he felt that anything he had said had been misinterpreted to his discredit? If that were so I would give him the floor; otherwise what I said would apply.

Mr. Argue: The Prime Minister made some extended comments on what he called the preamble to my statement. Following the comments of the Prime Minister the hon. member for Laurier himself made some comments. I was merely asking that the house extend to me the same privilege and the same courtesy which was extended to the hon. member for Laurier. If the house does not wish to do so I have no complaint.

Mr. Speaker: I wanted to know whether the hon. member felt that anything that had been said in the course of what turned out to be a debate was a reflection on him?

Mr. Argue: I will deal with that later.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST THAT WAITING PERIOD BE WAIVED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister received from a miners' local union in Nova Scotia a telegram urgently requesting that the waiting period regarding unemployment insurance be waived? If so, has he any comment to make on this most important matter?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I did receive such a request. This was brought to the attention of the commission and Mr. Marsh was notified of the position of this request as it relates to the Unemployment Insurance Act. I have not the reply with me, but I wish to assure the hon. member that a reply has been sent and the matter was set out very clearly in that reply.

HARBOURS

MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR COMMENT ON REPORTED EXPENDITURE OF $100 MILLION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Egan Chambers (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister clarify the suggested expenditure of $100 million to be made on Montreal harbour, as reported in the Montreal Star of June 9?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I wish to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in advising me of his intention to ask this question. The total to be expended on Montreal harbour beyond the $57 million now approved will be determined after a study has been made of the findings and recommendations of the Montreal harbour planning committee. This committee has now started to work under specific terms of reference related to the future needs of the port of Montreal.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT—INQUIRY AS TO THIRD READING OF BILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): May I direct a question to the leader of the house. Can the minister tell us when he intends to proceed with the unemployment insurance bill No. C-43?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker; I am sorry, but I cannot give the hon. member that information at the moment—perhaps next week.

Mr. Caron: A supplementary question. Did I hear the minister correctly when I thought he said "perhaps next week"?

Mr. Green: Yes.

TRADE AND COMMERCE

STATEMENT ON REQUEST THAT LITERATURE BE PRINTED IN BOTH LANGUAGES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Boivin) asked a question about the trade and commerce stand at the international trade fair in Montreal. His question reads in part as follows:

> On Saturday, June 6, La Presse published a picture showing that literature handed out at the trade and commerce department stand, at the international trade fair being held in the show mart in Montreal, is exclusively in English.

I do not understand how a picture can show what is being done exclusively, but the answer is that with very few exceptions the literature being distributed is available in both French and English. There was some delay in receiving the printed French language signs for the department's stands, but that was remedied and appropriate French language signs were put in place early last Sunday evening.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO CALLING OF CONFERENCE ON FISCAL MATTERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance now the question I asked him yesterday, and which he did not answer, on third reading of the bill having to do with the tax-sharing agreements. Has the minister been advised that the premier of Quebec proposes to attend the conference of officials in Ottawa in July, and can he say definitely now whether, after that conference of officials, the government will call a conference of governments before the end of this calendar year?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the hon. gentleman is somewhat confused. I have had no communication from Premier Duplessis indicating that he proposes to attend the conference. I did read in the newspaper the day before yesterday that the premier had stated that he and the minister of finance of the province of Quebec, Mr. Bourque, would attend the conference of ministers.

The hon. gentleman asked me whether the premier was going to attend the conference of officials. Of course the answer is certainly no. The intimation in the press statement was that he was going to attend the conference of ministers. I must ask the hon. gentleman to put his facts straight and distinguish between the conference of ministers, which happens in the first of the week, and the conference of officials which will follow the meeting of the ministers.

So far as the second part of this question is concerned, I was asked a similar question at the committee stage of the bill in question, and I gave an answer at that time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, you did not.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. gentleman evidently was not present at that time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Then I am all the more surprised—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You did not answer.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —that he did not ask his question at the proper time. The question was asked and was dealt with at that time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I sugegst to the Minister of Finance that this is a question which ought to be answered. Is the government going to call a conference of the two senior levels of government, the federal and provincial governments, in the matter of fiscal relations before the end of this calendar year, pursuant to the promise made by the Prime Minister? That is a simple question which even the Minister of Finance ought to be able to understand.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has, of course, as he has been doing quite frequently of late in a good many places, smuggled in one of his propaganda speeches without any foundation under the guise of asking a question in the house. This is not an unfamiliar tactic on his part. He is trying to put words into the mouth of the Prime Minister—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I could not do that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —without justification. We have been all over this question. The subject of dominion-provincial relations has had nine days debate in the house now from the time the hon. member introduced it first on February 9, and I suppose as long as the session lasts he will go on talking about this subject, asking the same questions and making the same erroneous and misleading statements.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, in view of my failure to elicit any information in the public interest from the Minister of Finance, may I ask the Prime Minister if it is his intention as head of the government to see that before the end of this calendar year a conference is held between the heads of the provincial governments and the head of the government of Canada, together with the finance and treasury ministers? Does the Prime Minister not think that this information ought to be given—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has asked one complete question, and although it seems to me to be based on a broad policy issue with respect to which he can hardly expect an answer on orders of the day I am not going to reject it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, with great respect I must say to you that this is a perfectly proper question. We have been denied any information on this subject from the government, and I am entitled as a member of the house to ask what the government's intentions are in this particular. I do not think it is open to anyone in the house to suggest that we in this small group have not the right to put questions to the Prime Minister of this country.

Mr. Speaker: I will give the Prime Minister the opportunity to answer, but may I say that the right is a right to ask questions and not to insist upon answers.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not the point.

Mr. Speaker: There is a distinction between questions as to the intention of the government and as to policy, and it seems to me that this question involves policy.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The hon. gentleman knows, of course, that the question is not proper on the orders of the day.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Why isn't it?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Questions on the orders of the day deal with matters of immediate importance and urgency. In so far as the general answer is concerned, it has been given over and over again. All my hon. friend is trying to do with all these observations is to create a smokescreen that the opposition is being denied information.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We are.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They have been given the fullest possible information, irrespective of what he says.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask the Prime Minister again, and I have a right to ask this question. We have been asking this question since the beginning of this session, and the government should answer now. Is it the intention to call this conference before the end of the calendar year or is it not?

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has asked that question already and has received an answer both from the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister. There is no point in his repeating the question. I am sorry to say that I cannot accept that question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the hon. member on a point of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have asked the Prime Minister a perfectly proper guestion. He has the right to say that he does not intend to give an answer, but unless he takes that position we are certainly entitled to receive from the head of the government of this country an indication on a matter of this great importance. I do not think, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have heard the hon. member's point of order that he is entitled to an answer of a specific kind, and I cannot accept that as a proper point of order.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. What is the position of a premier of a province who attends a meeting of ministers? Does this mean that other premiers of provinces as well can come along to this meeting?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I think it would not be proper at all on my part to comment on that question. I have had no communication from the premier in question as to his intention. I pointed out when this matter was under discussion—and it is obvious we are entering into a prolongation of the debate that was concluded several days ago—that there are three provincial premiers in this country who are themselves provincial treasurers. It is expected that those three provincial premiers will be attending the conference in their capacity as provincial treasurers.

Mr. Chevrier: May I follow that up? That may be true to some extent but the premier of the province of Quebec is not provincial treasurer, as the minister knows, and the point that interests me is that an announcement has been made and reported in the press that the premier does intend to come. That is what prompted my question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The government does not want to tell us anything.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The government sits here—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And tells us nothing.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —and watches the transparent showmanship of the hon. member for Essex East and thinks it is completely synthetic.

Mr. Chevrier: You are losing your temper again.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

REPORTED GIFT OF ISLAND TO CANADA BY LATE JOHN FOSTER DULLES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Would the minister care to comment on a Canadian Press dispatch respecting the gift of Duck island to the people of Canada by the late Mr. Dulles, and the suggestion that the island be made a game sanctuary and perhaps renamed in honour of the donor?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I have heard of this matter, but I will have to take the question as notice and see what is going on.

AGRICULTURE

PORK—DISPOSITION OF SURPLUS HELD BY GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Would the minister care to comment on a Canadian Press report based on information attributed to officials of his department, in which it is stated that there are 70 million pounds of frozen pork in the possession of the government, and that in addition the government will have about 25 million pounds of canned pork on its hands by the end of June? Has the government any plans to dispose of these huge quantities of surplus pork?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, to begin with I do not know where the newspaperman who wrote the article got his information, but his figures are not entirely accurate.

With respect to the allegation in the article that there is no storage space left to store pork and other products, I should like to point out that on May 1 public cold storage occupancy was approximately 83 per cent of capacity compared with 84 per cent in November of 1958. In other words, there was very little difference; in fact there was a little less than last November. The figure was higher than on May 1, 1958 when it was about 65 per cent. Cooler space occupancy was about the same on May 1 in both years.

As far as the disposal of pork is concerned, we have been selling some of the pork both in the local market and in the United States. We also have several deals pending for the sale of some of this pork abroad. In addition, during the months of July and August, as many hon. members are aware, the runs of hogs are very much reduced and we expect to move a considerable amount of this pork into consumption during the summer period.

Mr. Argue: When the minister says he intends to move this surplus pork into consumption, does he intend to move it into consumption in the Canadian market, and is this not likely to bring about a further depression of pork prices? I should also like him to comment on the further statement attributed to these officials that the 25 million pounds of canned pork will likely be given away.

Mr. Harkness: I do not think there is any statement like the last one referred to by the hon. member in the press article which I read. In any event, officials of the department have no authority whatever to make any statement with respect to whether pork will or will not be given away, and I am sure that no such statements were ever made. The pork we hold in storage at the present time will be moved into the Canadian market during the summer months when, in nearly every year, the runs of hogs are not sufficient to meet the current demand.

Mr. Argue: May I ask a further question. Will this pork be placed on the Canadian market only if the price remains above the floor or at the floor?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, we are selling this pork, and we have sold a certain amount already, at no cost to the stabilization board. In other words we are selling it at the price we paid for it plus the storage charges. We are going to continue to sell all the pork we can on that basis.

The hon. member stated that this procedure would cause a further depression in pork prices. There cannot be any further depression because the price is at the floor and has been at the floor for some considerable time. Naturally, any action we take to dispose of this pork is not going to put the price below the floor because we guarantee that.

Inquiries of the Ministry

(Translation):

POSTAL SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO MAIL TRANSPORTATION BY ROCKET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Postmaster General a question? La Patrie of June 7 reported that, in Germany, transmission of mail by rockets had been tried out. In view of the fact that a similar test has been successful in the United States, as reported in yesterday's La Presse, is the Postmaster General in a position to comment on those reports which are of special interest to his department?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The two experiments in the transmission of mail by rockets show that, for the past 20 years, postal services throughout the world have tried everything to improve mail transportation.

(Text):

However, I might point out, Mr. Speaker, that here in Canada, while we have not been sending mail by rocket, we are among the very few countries in the world which send all first class mail up to eight ounces in weight by air where it may thus be advanced in delivery. The result is that a letter posted in Vancouver one day will be delivered in most parts of eastern Canada the following day, and vice versa if it is going in the other direction. At the moment I believe that is quite satisfactory, though I do believe that for those who travel by submarine the new development in the United States will be quite helpful.

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: As a supplementary question, if the American Bomarc, which has been purchased by the Department of National Defence should prove inefficient for defence might the Postmaster General consider making use of that missile for mail transportation?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: The great solicitude of the hon. member for St. Denis for details of the administration of the post office department sometimes leads him into error so far as the rules are concerned.

HIGHWAYS

MANITOBA—INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the minister of northern affairs whether an agreement has recently been entered into with the government of Manitoba for federal assistance to a large highway project direct to the north?

[Mr. Harkness.]

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): The discussions with Manitoba were completed some time ago and an agreement has been drawn up. Manitoba has signed the agreement, and it is a question of getting approval here finally completed.

Mr. Pickersgill: The agreement has not been concluded, as I understand it.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, all the facts of the agreement have been completed for some time, and it is a question of going through the formalities of the signing.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

392. Departmental administration, $2,587,500.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, at the outset of this discussion on the main estimates of my department and the subagencies reporting to me I will, with your permission, spend a few minutes in summarizing, for the benefit of this committee, the more noteworthy items contained in our programs for 1959-1960.

The grand total of the several dozen appropriations, including statutory items, is $262,587,000, and that represents a slight increase of $1.1 million over the amount approved for the fiscal year 1958-59. From this it will be evident we will be maintaining the substantially accelerated tempo of last year's capital program, when we provided an additional $41 million. Maintenance of the proposed level of expenditure will enable us to perform many activities in such a way as to materially assist the country's economy and, at the same time, cope with the increasing demands from industry and the public generally in the field of transportation.

For the convenience of the members I intend to deal with the three main divisions of my department in the order of their appearance in the blue book. Before doing so, however, I wish to mention one general matter which is of special interest to all of us, namely the matter of our personnel establishment. Examination of the printed details in the estimates will show that the department is contemplating a total of 14,700 positions, either full-time or part-time, for this year. Although this represents a drop of 400 from last year, it does allow for transfer of 1,040 positions to the St. Lawrence seaway authority due to transfer of the main line canals. Thus it will be seen that in fact we are providing 640 additional positions in other sections of the department.

The main additions included in this figure are 114 for manning of new vessels; 240 in telecommunications because of the transfer to the department of the Northwest Territories and Yukon radio system and installation of new radio aids for aviation and marine at numerous additional sites; 167 to cope with the additional work load associated with general control of civil aviation, particularly air traffic control.

Budget planning for our canals section in the coming year will, of course, bear little resemblance to that of previous years. The combined requirements for operation and construction will total $3¾ million in comparison to last year's $11.5 million. The only sizeable projects pertain to the Canso canal, where some $0.5 million will be spent on a mooring wall and fenders. Apart from the general votes a special appropriation of $3 million is included this year to cover the estimated operating deficit on non-toll canals transferred to the seaway authority, that is to say the Lachine, the Sault Ste. Marie canals and the remaining portion of the Cornwall canal, as well as capital expenditures on these canals and the second Welland canal.

One of our departmental responsibilities which continues to expand is that of marine steamer operation. Especially is this so in our work of co-ordinating the movement of cargo required for normal government resupply and for Canadian and United States military installations in the far north. During 1958 that tonnage totalled 78,000 tons, or double the 1957 volume. All planning associated with operations and building in the Arctic must be hedged with some uncertainty because of the extraordinary factors to be considered. For this reason it is difficult to anticipate transportation needs. However, we do believe there will be no lessening of the volume transported by water last year.

I am indeed happy to refer to the take-over in 1959 by my department of the last segment of the sea supply for the D.E.W. line. In 1958 the government, through the agency of Northern Transportation Company, took on the resupply of those stations in the central region, and my department became co-ordinator for the Foxe basin area. The United States government agencies with which we worked expressed unqualified approval of the capability displayed by Canadian resources and equipment, both governmental and commercial. As a result we have reached agreement that the department will extend its responsibility to the last segment, that is those radar stations on the east coast of Baffin island. Before leaving this item I do wish to pay tribute to the splended co-operation we have received from the various United States government agencies involved.

On the capital side, our marine steamers' fiscal requirements will fall off somewhat, not because of a decrease in physical volume but rather because several of the large items will be in either the planning stage or the completion stage. Before the 1959-60 fiscal year expires we expect work should be virtually completed on several new or replacement units, such as three supply and buoy vessels, which will operate from ports in the Atlantic provinces; a diesel electric icebreaker for service on the eastern seaboard and in the eastern Arctic; an icebreaker-supply ship type for the west coast and Arctic; a number of service vessels which will enable us to release obsolete units operated for many years on the St. Lawrence river; and autoferry vessels which will service Bell island, Newfoundland, and Pelee island, Ontario.

During the past year departmental officials, in collaboration with Canadian National Railways, have made a thorough study of ways and means of improving the Newfoundland coastal steamship services, which have been hampered by the shortage and inadequacy of vessels employed, the insufficiency of berthing space, storage areas, etc. In view of the findings thus made the government has decided to construct additional passenger-cargo vessels. The estimates now before this committee include the sum of $2,300,000 toward the cost of two of these vessels, and I expect a third to be added in next year's estimates. In addition, the Department of Public Works will commence the construction of freight sheds and wharf improvements at Corner Brook and Lewisporte, and vote 416 contains approximately $800,000 for this purpose.

Continuation of the program, under way for the past few years for modernization of our marine agency depots will be pushed along this year. The expenditures related thereto will form the largest single type of commitment in vote 402, which will differ very slightly in size. We are planning on a reduced financial outlay for the St. Lawrence ship channel service. Capital commitments pertaining to general improvement of the channels in the St. Lawrence and Saguenay rivers will be unchanged, but our maintenance dredging proceeded at an extraordinary rate in 1958 and a reduction is therefore expected. This, however, will be temporary only, since this work has been held back during construction of the seaway, and needs to be expanded again if the channel from Montreal is to be improved as required.

At this point I come to the air services of the department, for which we are budgeting more than 60 per cent of our proposed departmental fiscal outlay. Administration and operation of the telecommunications branch which, among other responsibilities, maintains the hundreds of air and marine navigational aids throughout Canada, will require a sum very close to the $17 million mark. In dealing with the staffing problem I have already alluded to certain heavy assignments we must add to this work load.

There is one other major item. I refer to the proposed purchase of four Decca navigator chains to assist marine navigation on the eastern seaboard. Evaluation studies carried out during the past two years have demonstrated the value of this navigation system, especially in periods of poor visibility.

Our responsibilities in the circle of international communications will require our technical officers to devote a good deal of their time and effort to work associated with a number of important meetings. During 1959 the international telecommunications union, an agency of the United Nations, will have a conference in Geneva to revise the convention of 1952. In addition there will be a radio conference in Geneva to revise the international radio regulations which cover many vitally important matters, such as frequency allocations.

In the area of radio aids construction and acquisition of equipment, we are contemplating the expenditure of $14 million. Five years ago the department inaugurated a program for combining marine and aeronautical stations in order to avoid duplication of manpower and equipment. One of the new stations will be at the new Prince Rupert, B.C. airport on Digby island. The other station to be replaced is the historic station on Signal hill, St. John's, Newfoundland, at which point Marconi received his first trans-Atlantic radio message.

Another noteworthy part of the year's program is the emphasis we will be giving to the development of radio and electronic systems to assist air traffic control communications by extending the distance over which a controller in an air traffic centre may talk directly to a pilot.

So much for the telecommunications branch. I shall now deal briefly with the meteorological branch. Too often we find that the public mistakenly think of the meteorological service in terms of public weather forecasting only. That, of course, is one of the important functions, but it is only one of many. Special weather forecasting is performed for shipping in the Atlantic and Pacific coastal waters, great lakes, St. Lawrence river, etc. Air navigation, both civil and military, in all sections of the country, as well as over the Atlantic, Pacific and polar regions, depends heavily on the advice of the weather expert. The agricultural, forestry and transportation industries rely extensively on the findings of research endeavours performed on their behalf.

One of the very interesting activities to which special attention will be given this year is related to preparation of forecast charts at various levels of the atmosphere. The objective there will be the development of methods of preparing these charts by numerical means using highspeed electronic computers. The appropriation for operation of the branch will also this year contain an item of $370,000 to cover aerial ice survey. In previous years the Royal Canadian Air Force performed a considerable amount of the Arctic flying for this purpose, but the over-all requirement has grown to the point where it is deemed advisable to turn over the work to commercial operators. The reconnaissance will range from the lower St. Lawrence and gulf area as far north as the Arctic archipelago.

Finally I shall touch on the civil aviation requirements. Our national investment in facilities and equipment provided for the use of those who travel by air is indeed most substantial. The adoption of faster aircraft, the steady upward climb in traffic, the development of the more remote areas of our country, and the constant demands from the public generally, commercial interests and public officials, for more and better airways, airports, etc., all make inevitable some increase in expenditures for maintenance and operation. We are therefore expecting that the numerous items of costs for these purposes will be approximately 17 per cent higher than those of last year. Some $365,000 additional will be needed to defray maintenance costs for new or enlarged air terminals. Several millions of the increase arise from new or broadened tasks allocated to the department at a considerable number of isolated or semi-isolated locations such as Fort Nelson, Whitehorse, Goose Bay and Frobisher, where costs of materials, transportation, salaries, messing, repairs and upkeep and the like are so much higher.

It has been decided that the Department of Transport will take over operation and maintenance of the United States air force airstrip at the Cambridge bay station in 1959. I might add that we are continuing to give consideration to the possibility of a similar take-over at other sites in subsequent years such as Cape Dyer, Hall lake, Cape Parry, Tuktoyaktuk.

The function we perform with regard to air traffic control along our airways, and especially in the vicinity of airports, is another case in point. Last year I reported an increase of 25 per cent here. For 1959-60 we have succeeded in levelling off to an appreciable degree; none the less some $350,000 extra must be provided. On this segment of our supervisory responsibility the advent of the jet age has a particularly telling effect, for it means the testing, purchase and operation of a dozen and one types of expensive electronic devices. Here in Canada we are as yet still on the threshold, and we will not begin to feel the real impact until 1960 when our first commercial jet transports enter the picture.

In establishing the level of our 1958-59 construction program to meet civil aviation requirements it was necessary for parliament to apportion to the related vote a sum of money which represented an increase of 80 per cent. On February 5 of this year when the Minister of Finance tabled the main estimates, he explained that this program would remain at the same high level. Nevertheless we are providing some $600,000 more for administration of this service. Those two statements—the same level of activity but sharply increased administrative costs—do appear rather contradictory. The explanation lies in a decision of treasury board that partial costs of air traffic control and related services previously recovered from national defence should in future be absorbed by the transport appropriation.

In the time at my disposal I could not hope to single out what might be considered the large expenditures. This vote totals $63 million and of the hundreds of items—and I use the term "hundreds" intentionally, because the list runs to more than 50 pages —many certainly come under the category of "large". I will therefore confine my remarks to some general observations about our program.

Present expectations are that within the next year we should be able to complete, or almost complete, major terminal construction at such places as Halifax, Montreal, Gander and Ottawa. In addition, very substantial progress will be made on new terminals at a number of other points, Regina, Winnipeg and Toronto, to mention a few. Upwards of $15 million is earmarked for miscellaneous work; for example, new airports at Three Rivers and Sherbrooke; new runways; improvements to existing runways; taxiways; buildings for ancillary services, etc. at dozens of airports from coast to coast.

Mr. Chairman, in concluding my remarks I should like to say I fully appreciate the somewhat sketchy nature of my statement. I would hope, however, that hon members will likewise appreciate that the very diversity of my department's responsibilities and operations makes it difficult to report in more detail. I trust, too, that my statement will be of assistance to them in their consideration of our estimates.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I think the committee will, on the whole, be appreciative of the comprehensive report which the minister has given on the activities of the various branches of his department. After all, the Department of Transport is one of the most important, if not the most important in the government service, and it would have been unfortunate if the minister had not seen fit, as he has done on at least two occasions in the past, to bring forward a detailed statement concerning some of the things which have happened during the course of the year and some of the projects which he has in mind for the future.

However, I may tell the minister without any hesitation that I am keenly disappointed in the fact that there are two matters at least which were not dealt with in his statement. I had some occasion to refer to the first of these matters the other evening. It seems to me that there should be made today an over-all statement by the minister in connection with the operation of the St. Lawrence seaway, and I am sorry that the hon. gentleman has not yet seen fit to make such a statement.

As the committee knows, there have been some obstacles and difficulties; there has been a great deal of misunderstanding, and unfortunate publicity has been given to the seaway, first, at the end of last season when all those ships were cluttered up in the ice in the Lachine canal and in Montreal harbour; next, at the opening of navigation, when because of difficulties arising from ice conditions navigation had to be postponed, and finally because perhaps—and I hope this is a fact—an inordinate number of new ships entered the canal. All this goes to show that the success of the operation is, as I believe, assured, but I hope the minister will take the committee into his confidence and tell us the whole story about the present position from the entrance to the seaway at Montreal right up to the head of the lakes.

There are two serious bottlenecks. There is the one at Welland which was mentioned here the other evening. I know I need not tell the minister this, but when I was near Lancaster for a public ceremony less than a week ago there were no fewer than 25 ships waiting at anchor to enter the Eisenhower lock. I should not have said "Lancaster"; it was in the vicinity of Glenwalter in the county of Glengarry. These ships were tied up because of conditions that existed further down the river.

Now, the point which occurred to me is this. Are the facilities, as they were anticipated, sufficient to meet the position as we find it today? I have some personal ideas on that. The minister knows what they are but I have not the facts at my disposal and the hon. gentleman has, and I think he should tell the committee and the country what the over-all position is. I am sure he would agree that it takes at least one navigation season, if not more than one, to ascertain whether the facilities are adequate to meet the traffic, and I invite him now, as I did the other evening, to make such a statement at the first opportunity.

There is another matter which is of interest to us on this side of the house and I am sorry, once again, to note that the minister saw fit to make no reference to it. I refer, of course, to the Drew case which was disposed of by a judgment of Mr. Justice Thorson. In the question and answer period the minister on one occasion, if not on more than one occasion, used words to this effect; that the hon. member for Laurier had had eight years experience, it is actually nine, and would surely not want the Minister of Transport to comment on a matter of this nature. But I can tell the minister this, in all humility; that it would seem to me that in the circumstances surrounding this case I would have felt impelled to add to the statement which he made today and clear up some of the contradictions which appeared on the face of this matter.

I do not intend to go any further now than to ask the minister to rise in his place at this time and make a statement on this subject, because there are a number of inconsistencies, a number of contradictions and a number of questions arising out of the judgment of the president of the exchequer court. If the circumstances are as the minister would have us believe they are, as indicated in the question and answer period on the orders of the day, then let him tell us. I know the minister well enough to be aware that he is a frank person. He is the last one who would want to hide anything from the committee. There are some contradictions and inconsistencies here, and I think the committee is entitled to know how they came about.

Now then, what are some of them? There is the appointment of an appraiser by the minister. The minister, I believe in answer to me, said that he appointed an appraiser. Was he an independent appraiser? The court found that he was not. The court found that the appraiser was under the direction of some other person, and that he could not therefore be independent. The minister knew, of course, that the appraiser was one of the political organizers of the hon. member in question, and if the minister told us frankly what were the circumstances surrounding that particular aspect of the transaction I believe the committee would feel better—

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Chevrier: Certainly.

Mr. Balcer: Is he laying a charge against the hon. member in question at the present time?

Mr. Chevrier: Oh, well, Mr. Chairman, this matter can be discussed on the estimates of the Minister of Transport in this committee. It is quite clear that there is more than one way of disposing of a matter of this kind. It can be brought up and discussed under several headings. Surely I am not going to be interrupted in asking the Minister of Transport certain questions on a matter of this importance. If I am, then I want to know, and if I am not then I intend to proceed.

I have said that an appointment was made by the minister, and I believe we should be given the facts concerning the appointment. There is another very obvious contradiction in what the minister replied to me concerning an alleged agreement that the valuator's report would be accepted by all parties. Will the minister tell the committee whether or not that is so? Will the minister tell the committee whether or not he made a submission to treasury board concerning these valuations? Will he tell the committee whether, if he did not make a submission to treasury board, he did invite one of the officers of his department, the assistant deputy minister, to discuss with treasury board the valuations that were placed on these properties?

I remember that quite some time ago there was difficulty in the Malton expropriations —I think as far back as the time I was there—because of the zoning regulations and it was not an easy matter to dispose of the expropriation of these properties. It might well be that because of the fact that there was delay in the expropriation of these properties, it was felt that haste should be the password and that matters should be proceeded with much more expeditiously than they had been in the past, but that does not derogate from the fact that if that is the case then everything that was done should have been done in accordance with the best traditions of the Department of Transport.

I have some knowledge and a great deal of admiration for the officers of the Department of Transport, as the minister knows. I do not think that there are any more zealous employees in the public weal anxious to see that where funds are expended they are properly expended and that where funds are spent for a particular purpose they go in payment of what is a just, reasonable, equitable and fair valuation having regard to the circumstances. Well, now, was this the case here?

Before I proceed with the rest of my remarks—I have interrupted them to some extent in order to deal with this matter which in my humble opinion is of importance—I ask the minister now whether in all fairness to himself, his officers, the committee and the country he should not rise in his place and tell us the circumstances surrounding this matter, and I invite him so to do.

Mr. Hees: I shall be very glad to do so, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, before the minister replies to the hon. member for Laurier I should like to have the opportunity to present a few remarks on item 1. Although other hon. members of this group will be making some comment as time goes on, I do not intend to deal with the matter raised by the hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Hees: If I may interrupt the hon. member for Assiniboia, Mr. Chairman, may I say I should be very happy to listen to the hon. member but I thought the hon. member for Laurier was interrupting his remarks to ask me if I would reply to questions as we go along, and I am very happy to do so. It is perfectly satisfactory to me to do it in any way at all, and I should be very glad to reply to the hon. member for Laurier right now.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the position of the minister. I know he is desirous of replying to the hon. member for Laurier. The procedure in discussing the first item has been that a spokesman comes forward from each party. In addition to that I have another engagement immediately after 2.30 in a standing committee of this house. I know what is in the minister's mind; he wants to show that he is prepared to deal with this question now. I realize that, but I should like to have the opportunity of making some remarks at this time.

I was about to say I did not wish to deal specifically with the matter raised by the hon. member for Laurier. The questions he raised are pertinent and I hope the minister will give a comprehensive and full explanation of the circumstances surrounding this case.

This morning on orders of the day I once again raised the question of United States naval vessels, 27 in number, entering the St. Lawrence seaway toward the end of June. In the introductory preamble to my question I said I considered this an undesirable display of United States naval power. Although two members of the government replied to the question, the Prime Minister seized the opportunity of grabbing these words and making his own comments. After the Prime Minister sat down the hon. member for Laurier very appropriately said that since more comprehensive remarks had been made on this question he would like to make some comments of his own. When the hon. member for Laurier sat down I claimed the floor. The Speaker decided to ask the house whether I would have unanimous consent in order to make some comments and hon. members on the government side refused that consent when the question was put.

I regret that action on their part. I believe it was most unfair and discourteous. I doubt if there is anything very much for them to gain by acting in that way. I repeat, however, what I said before, namely that it would be a great error to have this United States naval flotilla coming into the seaway toward the end of June, although arrangements had been made previously by agreement with the Canadian government, and although it is understandable that many people in the United States and some people in Canada would like to see this tremendous display when the President of the United States and the Queen are here. Under the economic circumstances surrounding the St. Lawrence seaway at this time it would be a great error for 27 ships to present themselves at the seaway and delay the commercial use of the seaway for a number of days and, as has been said by people who understand the operations of the seaway, probably cause the type of congestion and tie-up which would take some weeks to unravel.

In his comments on the orders of the day the Prime Minister referred to the United States as a friendly nation. Well, of course, that is correct. The United States is a friendly nation, and we have friendly agreements with the United States. We have friendly discussions with them and I would suggest that, as two friendly nations discussing this question, the United States should give sympathetic consideration to the request now made by the Canadian government that the size of the flotilla should be reduced at any rate when it goes through the seaway.

The United States authorities, probably standing on rather firm legal grounds or technical grounds in the sense that a prior agreement had been arrived at between Canada and the United States, takes the position that these 27 ships should proceed. But notwithstanding that prior agreement, notwithstanding that the Canadian government made a very serious error in judgment as far as the condition of the St. Lawrence seaway is concerned at the present time, as the minister said earlier today, I think there should be a reduction in the number of ships passing through. Undoubtedly if the Canadian government had known about the congestion that was to take place in the seaway this agreement never would have been entered into.

Canadian shippers of iron ore, Canadian shippers of grain, Canadians generally whose livelihood depends on the efficient use of the seaway will resent very greatly any interference with its operation which results in economic disadvantage to themselves and economic dislocation to the country through a display that is not necessary. Although the hon. member for Laurier may amend his remarks of the other evening, I think he was correct when he said the flotilla should stop at Montreal and should not proceed through the seaway.

There have been great disappointments in the operation of the seaway. People who depend on the seaway for the shipment of iron ore and other Canadian products are coming to the conclusion that unless suitable action is taken the St. Lawrence seaway will not result in a saving in costs as had been anticipated. I hold in my hand a great many statements, statements for example by men like T. R. McLagan, president of Canada Steamships, saying that our Canadian products should have priority in going through the seaway, and that unless steps were taken to provide such priority increased costs would result.

There has been a very serious bottleneck at the Welland canal, and consideration has been given to providing twin locks and taking other measures to provide a more efficient seaway. The seaway has been built at great cost to this country. The seaway authority can now spend some $335 million, as authorized by parliament and although this is a much larger sum of money than it was originally expected it would be necessary to spend there is no assurance whatever, as far as I can see, that this amount will do the job and result in the completion of the seaway.

There have been many reports of congestion; there have been many reports of difficulty in navigating the locks; there have been many reports of inefficiency, of serious errors having been made in the construction of the seaway. A few weeks ago it was my privilege to be taken by a longtime friend of mine, who is himself an engineer and worked on the seaway for a considerable length of time, to view the various locks and facilities around Montreal. On examination although, of course, I do not claim to have any particular knowledge of the seaway—

Mr. Henderson: Since I came to parliament this is the first thing I have heard the hon. member say he did not know.

Mr. Argue: I appreciate that compliment from my hon. friend.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, at one o'clock I had been saying that I had the opportunity a few weeks ago to visit the St. Lawrence seaway in the vicinity of Montreal and to inspect the various locks in that area. I also said that I was in the company of an engineer who had been an inspector on the seaway itself. One needs only to glance over the sides of the St. Lambert locks, the Cote St. Catherine locks and the Beauharnois locks to see the huge bulges in the walls. These bulges appear to extend out about eight inches, and this is an almost unbelievable error in engineering and construction. This situation does not apply merely to one of the locks but is a consistent fault in almost all of the locks to which I have referred.

There has been a great deal of reference to boats striking the sides of the locks. If the eight inch bulges were not there boats could and undoubtedly would still scrape the sides but I am certain that because of these eight inch bulges on either side the likelihood of boats striking the walls as they go through the locks is increased. There are steel guards along the locks in sections about three feet long which are supposed to be bolted together. There is provision for a bolt to bind one guard to another. In a great many instances the bolts are not there at all and instead of the guards coming closely together they are a quarter of an inch or perhaps as much as half an inch apart. It was pointed out to me that as cables are used to draw vessels along it is quite possible from time to time for the cables to get caught in the spaces between the guards. The spaces are there at least in part because the bolts are missing that were to be used to connect the guards.

As one might expect, the gates are huge. They are called mitre gates. Again, it was pointed out to me that unlike other gates there is only one mitre on these gates. The mitre is at the top and when the gates come together the mitre at the top assures that their closing will be synchronized and that they will come together correctly and in line. But with only one mitre at the top it has been stated that logs that have gone to the bottom could become jammed in the gates at the bottom and thus spring the gates, and the springing of the gates could cause very serious difficulty for the seaway.

I was also informed that the spare gates which are in the walls and supposed to be available for use cannot be used because the facilities to move them are not available and therefore for the time being at least the spare gates cannot be used. When the gates are shut they are to be relatively watertight. I believe that to mean that there may be some sweating and some very minor leakage of water when the gates are closed, but what it does not mean is that water will spurt through the gates. Some of the gates do not admit as much water as others but in some cases water is spurting through the gates. Water is coming up from the bottom a distance of three or four feet, I would judge from looking down, which means that the spurts of water come out under a great deal of pressure.

It was pointed out to me that as the end of navigation approaches and freezing weather sets in the leaks in the gates will bring about a substantial accumulation of ice which in turn will have to be knocked off and will make the seaway facilities more difficult to use. I was also informed that the bolts in the gates are in many instances one-sixteenth of an inch smaller than the holes in which they are placed. The difference between the size of the bolt and the hole in which it is placed allows water to leak around the bolts and this could also be a source of substantial trouble in the future.

In addition to the substantial quantities of water coming through the gates when they are closed, when the gates have been opened and the water has left the lock and the gates are being shut again one can see water coming up between the cement reinforcement blocks against which the gates are shut. Generally these substantial blocks of cement are in two sections and water can be seen coming through at the place where the two blocks fit together. Moreover, in the upper Beauharnois lock one can see water shooting up through the cement itself in the reinforcement blocks to which I have referred. In fact, the cement appears to be quite porous in that particular lock. If these reinforcement blocks are so porous as to allow water to come up through the cement I am certain that their life will indeed be limited.

Perhaps on a project of this magnitude it is inevitable that some faulty construction will appear but I understand that the faults to which I have referred were pointed out by the inspection authorities and that steps were not taken to correct them. If this is the situation, I think it is a very serious one and I believe there should be a very full inquiry into the matter.

I am suggesting that, although the government has refused it in the past, there should be a full inquiry by a House of Commons committee into the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway, into those very substantial faults that appear, and that there should be brought before that committee competent engineers who are acquainted with the seaway to testify as to why this faulty construction exists and to what extent it, in fact, endangers the life of the seaway.

The hon. member for Vancouver East placed a question on the order paper some time ago dealing with the construction of the Cornwall island high level bridge. The answer to question No. 5 is rather important. Question No. 5 reads:

> Are the river piers of the Cornwall bridge down to bedrock? If not, what is the distance from the bottom of the piers to bedrock on (a) the Canadian side; (b) the American side?

The answer is found on page 935 of Hansard for February 11, 1959, and is as follows:

> No, the piers were designed for and are founded on extremely dense glacial till.
> Main pier, No. 12--(a) west shaft, 20.1 feet; east shaft, 19.7 feet.
> Main pier, No. 11—(b) west shaft, 23.8 feet; east shaft, 23.9 feet.

This huge bridge, built at a cost of many millions of dollars, has piers which are not down to bedrock but merely placed on dense glacial till. I wonder why the extra expense was not incurred to put the piers down to bedrock? I am informed again that the cost of putting the piers down to bedrock would have been a relatively few thousand dollars compared with the many millions of dollars that were spent in the construction of this bridge. In reply to the hon. member for Vancouver East, there was further information given to show that there was a movement in one of the piers. I quote:

> Cable-bent pier No. 13—top of west shaft—easterly ⅛ inch and southerly ½ inch; Top of east shaft—westerly ½ inch and southerly 1 inch.

This shows the movement of the piers, and again I am informed that movement arises out of the fact that the piers were not put down to bedrock. I feel, Mr. Chairman, that there should be a full inquiry into the construction of the Cornwall bridge, that there should be a full inquiry by a committee of this house as to whether or not the bridge is, in fact, properly constructed and whether or not it is a bridge that will last the normal length of time it would have been expected to last if it had been built down to bedrock.

I am told, once again by an engineer, that this bridge is doomed because the piers are not on bedrock but are on glacial till and cannot last the length of time that would be expected to be the normal life of that bridge. Mr. Chairman, that is a very strong statement, that statement I think coming from a man who was connected with the seaway, not the Cornwall bridge in particular but with the seaway, is one that warrants the most thorough investigation. If this bridge has been constructed in a faulty manner, this committee should inquire as to whether or not the bridge is, in fact, safe.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Argue: Yes.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the hon. member tell the committee who is the engineer who gives this information?

Mr. Argue: I do not know whether I should divulge the name—

Mr. Pickersgill: Just gossip.

Mr. Argue: I do not intend to be backed down on this.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just gossip.

Mr. Argue: It is not gossip.

An hon. Member: Give the name, then.

Mr. Argue: I did not ask this gentleman whether I could use his name on the floor of the House of Commons. I asked him whether or not, as an engineer connected with the seaway, he would be prepared to appear before a committee of the House of Commons to substantiate the things he said to me, the things I am relating this afternoon—

Mr. Chevrier: In view of the fact the hon. member is using this information and making it in part his own, does he not think that in fairness to the committee he should tell the committee who the engineer is?

Mr. Argue: I think I have gone sufficiently far—

An hon. Member: Too far.

Mr. Argue: Somebody says, "Too far"; I want to make this quite clear, that the engineer in question did not ask that I withhold his name. However, since I did not have his specific consent to use his name at this time I would prefer not to use his name.

Mr. Drysdale: You would have to do so if it went to a committee.

[Mr. Argue.]

Mr. Argue: The gentleman is prepared to go before a committee. He is prepared to substantiate the things I have said or corroborate them. Of course, the reference to how the piers are situated in the Cornwall bridge needs no substantiation. The facts are contained in the answer given.

Mr. Chevrier: There is absolutely nothing the matter with the Cornwall bridge.

Mr. Hees: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Is this gentleman to whom he is referring as an engineer a certain Mr. Grant who was employed on the seaway?

Mr. Argue: The answer is no.

Mr. Hees: Is he a certain Mr. Stirling?

Mr. Argue: The answer to that is no. I suppose the minister can keep on fishing. I said that this was a young man with whom I had gone to university and who has been a friend of mine for many years. I do not believe that makes him any less valuable as an engineer. I have not seen him for some time.

Mr. Drysdale: What kind of engineer is he?

Mr. Argue: I think a very good engineer.

Mr. Drysdale: Is he a civil engineer or a mechanical engineer?

Mr. Argue: I would say a civil engineer. I have seen myself the bolts missing from the guards; I have seen the bulges in the walls of the locks; I have seen the leaks through the gates; I have seen the water spouting up through the concrete as though the concrete were porous. I have seen plenty of evidence that would suggest to me that there should be a full inquiry and that the engineering staff that had to do with the seaway should be called before a committee, as well as other competent engineers and witnesses that any member of the committee might wish to have appear.

I believe this is a serious matter and should be dealt with soon. Accusations concerning the seaway have come, not only from this side of the house but from the hon. member for Carleton earlier in this session. At some later stage, he decided to say nothing about his original charges. On the basis of what I have seen, on the basis of information given to me by a man whom I believe to be a competent engineer—I am not myself saying that the things I have not seen are incorrect—I have stated the things I have seen myself and I am asking that a full inquiry be made.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the hon. member permit another question? Has the hon. member seen—he has seen a lot of things—the contract which was entered into between the seaway authority and all the contractors which provides for the construction to be completed in accordance with the plans and specifications?

Mr. Argue: I have not seen the contract. I have a motion on the order paper for the production of a number of contracts. However, I am certain the contract would show that the bolts connecting the guards should be there and the holes should not be empty.

Mr. Drysdale: That is without seeing the contract.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the minister whether he is going to reply to the questions which I put to him before the luncheon recess?

Mr. Hees: Yes, I should be glad to do so. First of all, the hon. member for Laurier asked for a report on the operation of the seaway to date. I expect to be making in the not too distant future a report on the seaway authority and I feel that a little bit more time is required in order properly to assess the operation of the seaway, it being a little bit too early to make a proper assessment at the present time. With regard to the operation of the locks and so on, they are being studied very carefully and their operation compared to the operation of the United States locks or at least with the Eisenhower and Snell locks, which of course are United States locks, in order to see whether our locks are operating as well as theirs. As the hon. member knows, they have been in operation for a longer period of time than ours.

As to the Welland canal, as I have mentioned in this house already, we are examining all possible means of speeding up the operation of the canal. Specific matters that we are examining are possible construction of mooring walls between certain of the locks, and also a comparison is being made of the time taken in opening and closing lock gates at Welland as compared with the time taken to operate other lock gates in the new section of the seaway, down in the St. Lawrence section.

With regard to the other matter which the hon. member raised, namely the question of the land expropriations at Malton, I have jotted down a few points which I think would be of interest to him and to the committee. They are as follows. When I assumed office I found that while the great majority of the land expropriation cases at Malton had been settled, there were a number which had been outstanding for a long time. The department had had several different valuations made by individual appraisers, as well as by the departmental real estate staff. However, the member from that area quite sincerely believed that the valuations made and received by the department were too low and urged a further valuation. In view of the sincere belief of the member of parliament concerned that these valuations were too low and were unfair to his constituents, I felt that it was desirable that there should be a further appraisal made, and I agreed that this should be done. I also assured the hon. member that the results of this further valuation would be studied with the greatest care not only by my own officials but by officials of treasury board as well, in order to ensure that it got the fullest possible consideration. I did not go beyond that.

I was satisfied with the real estate qualifications of the individual who was suggested to me by the member from the area for the purpose of this appraisal and his services were retained. When his report was received it was studied in great detail by officials of my department and by officials on the staff of treasury board, as I had undertaken. Both were of the opinion that the valuations submitted were too high, and should not be accepted by the federal government. I made no formal submission or recommendation of these valuations to treasury board but, as the hon. member for Laurier knows, it is quite customary for matters to be discussed informally, both with treasury staff and at the board itself, without formal recommendations having been submitted; and this is just what happened in this case. Since both my department and treasury board felt that these valuations could not be accepted, the matter was allowed to proceed in the exchequer court in the manner provided by law.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, may I ask just a question or two. Did the minister not know that the valuator was the political organizer for the hon. member for Peel? Did the hon. member for Peel not tell him that?

Mr. Hees: No; I did not know that.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister did not deal with another question. Was there an agreement between the minister and the suppliant, Mrs. Drew, as alleged by her, that both parties would be bound by the Clare appraisal.

Mr. Hees: The answer is no, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask who discussed the agreement with the minister?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I have taken considerable time and trouble to prepare a full statement on this matter. I have read it and I think everything I can possibly say is there. It describes everything that I had anything to do with in connection with this whole matter. If it is not clear to the hon. member now, I am very much surprised. I have done my best to tell him of everything that went on, holding back nothing. I feel that I have made a good, full and clear statement outlining the whole proceeding.

Mr. Chevrier: I am sure the minister has done his best. I commend him for having gone to the trouble of making the statement which he has now made and which he had not made this morning. But although he has gone that far, I do not think he has gone far enough. I think it is our privilege here, on the estimates, to obtain further information if we feel it is desirable to do so. I asked a question and the minister avoided it by saying that he had made a full statement. The statement is good as far as it goes, but I should like some further clarification of it. Since the minister has said that there is no agreement such as the one I have suggested in my question, then I ask the minister who discussed the agreement with him because the judgment clearly states that there was a discussion of an agreement between the hon. member for Peel and the minister that both parties would be bound by the appraisal. I therefore ask the minister if he discussed the agreement with him.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I am not quite clear as to what agreement the hon. member is referring. I have told him that there was no agreement except that the valuation made by Mr. Clare would be examined by my officials and by the officials of treasury board. I cannot make the situation any clearer than that.

Mr. Chevrier: The agreement to which I am referring is the one mentioned in the judgment of Mr. Justice Thorson wherein he stated that there was an agreement between the member acting on behalf of the minister and the parties that they would be bound by the appraisal of Mr. Clare and further that he got these people to sign an agreement to that effect. The minister has seen the judgment.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, as I said earlier, it is not my place, as the hon. member knows, to discuss this judgment which has been given by the presiding judge and I do not intend to do so. I have told the hon. member for Laurier all I know of this case and the exact manner in which I became connected with it. I can tell him no more and I cannot say it any more clearly than that.

[Mr. Hees.]

Mr. Chevrier: Can the minister say whether there was an agreement.

Mr. Hees: I have no idea what went on, if anything, between the hon. member for Peel and this Mrs. Drew.

Mr. Chevrier: Then am I to take it that as far as the minister knows there is no agreement such as the one I have suggested.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I have said that I have no knowledge of any agreement.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask just one further question. Was there any correspondence between the minister and the hon. member in this case?

Mr. Hees: Yes. I think there were a couple of letters that I wrote to him discussing this thing in the early stages.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister table that correspondence?

Mr. Hees: I think that correspondence was introduced in the court case. I have no hesitation in tabling it.

Mr. Pickersgill: There are a couple of questions that I should like to ask the minister about the statement he made. He said he was satisfied with the real estate qualifications of Mr. Clare. Can he just give the committee what those qualifications were.

Mr. Hees: I said that my departmental officials were satisfied with his qualifications. I am not a real estate expert.

Mr. Pickersgill: No; that is not my point.

Mr. Hees: The real estate branch of my department was satisfied that Mr. Clare is a competent valuator and one capable of carrying out fairly such an evaluation.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would not expect, of course, that the minister would have this information in his personal possession. But the officials of his department would not satisfy themselves of this fact without having some kind of documentary evidence of the previous experience of the gentleman. I wonder if we could be told how many years he had been an evaluator and what kind of evaluations he had done, and what previous experience he had had. Surely, in view of the very unusual functions which had been given to him by the department, and the taxpayers' money which has been spent, it is only reasonable that we should be given such information as this.

Mr. Hees: There is no problem about this. I will be very glad to produce that information. Hon. gentlemen opposite are trying to get an atmosphere of mystery into this, a cloak and dagger atmosphere. There is nothing to hide. This man is a competent real estate evaluator and I would be very glad to tell the committee on what basis the department decided he should be given this job. The hon. member said this was an extraordinary assignment which he was given. It is nothing of the kind. This kind of evaluation is being done all the time by outside evaluators. What is so extraordinary about this assignment? Would the hon. member mind saying?

Mr. Pickersgill: Not at all, but I think we are supposed to be questioning the minister, not the other way around. One of the extraordinary features is that this appears to have become a cause celebre in the courts. That is not usual in these matters, though it does happen from time to time. I am not seeking to cast any reflection of any kind. I am merely trying as a representative of some of the taxpayers to find out what this man's qualifications are, and I understand that the minister is quite prepared to give us this information as soon as he can get it from the department.

Mr. Chairman, I spent a good many hours of my time between 1953 and 1957, not as a member but as one of the substitutes on the treasury board. I sat there for a good many hours and took a great deal of interest in the work. I think I can claim to have a reasonable familiarity with the procedures, and I was interested in what the minister has told us about the relationship of this whole matter to the treasury board. The hon. gentleman said he gave the hon. member for Peel an undertaking—and I will stop at once if I make a mis-statement—that he would bring this valuation to the attention of his senior officials and of treasury board officials. I have not looked this up, and if I am wrong I stand to be corrected, but I think on an earlier occasion—the first time the minister mentioned it—he said he had undertaken to bring it before the treasury board.

Mr. Hees: If I said that, what I had in mind was the treasury board staff.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister did not mean the treasury board at any time. I want to be completely fair about this. In other words, there was never any undertaking given to the member for Peel that this valuation would be submitted to the treasury board?

Mr. Hees: No. As the hon. member very well knows, if a matter is submitted to the treasury board it goes with the recomendation of the minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: Exactly.

Mr. Hees: That was not so in this case.

Mr. Pickersgill: There was no undertaking given to submit it to the treasury board.

Mr. Hees: I have tried to make that clear a number of times, that there was no undertaking by me to submit it to treasury board. I asked that these valuations be examined by the treasury board staff who are experts in this whole matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: Quite. I am merely seeking to establish the facts. The minister could, perhaps, just reply to my questions in the same spirit as they are being asked. The minister did say in his statement, however, that there was an informal discussion with the treasury board. Now the treasury board is a committee of the cabinet, and I am not seeking to pry into cabinet secrets or anything of that sort. I have no intention of doing so, and I am not going to ask about the nature of that discussion. But I do say that in the years when I was a member of the treasury board—and I can be wrong—I do not recall a single instance where a matter of this kind was brought before the board, as distinct from the officials, without a formal submission from the minister concerned. When we were in office the board was very busy with submissions from ministers, and the minister, if I apprehend his statement correctly, said that it was not an unusual thing for a matter of this kind to be discussed by the board. What I am trying to get at is this: did the board have this valuation before them and discuss it?

Mr. Hees: I should like to correct the hon. member. I said, when I made my statement, that it was quite customary for matters to be discussed informally; not "matters of this kind" particularly.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is the last part of that sentence—

Mr. Hees: It is right here.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the minister read the whole sentence? Perhaps that is the simplest way.

Mr. Hees: Very well. I said:

> I made no formal submission or recommendation of these valuations to treasury board but, as the hon. member knows, it is quite customary for matters to be discussed informally both with the treasury staff and at the board itself without formal recommendations being submitted and this is just what happened in this case.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am glad to have my memory refreshed. Now my question is simple. Was this discussion a discussion with the board as opposed to a discussion with officials?

Mr. Hees: It was not discussed as a formal submission by myself. I am advised that the members of the staff discussed it informally with members of the treasury board.

Mr. Pickersgill: But it was never before the board?

Mr. Hees: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: Fine.

(Translation):

Mr. English: Mr. Chairman, I listened with great interest to the report made this morning by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) on the activities of his department. I congratulate him warmly for the magnificent work he has been doing until now. I also thank him for the interest he has always shown towards the problems of my constituency, and I am sure that that interest will take tangible form in the near future.

Among those problems, there is one I am keen on solving, since it is of interest, not only to the people of my constituency, but of that of Riviere du Loup, Rimouski, Matane and Bonaventure.

Mr. Chairman, it is inconceivable that in 1959—more than four centuries after Jacques Cartier landed at Gaspe—a part of my area, so rich in forests, fisheries and in ore of all sorts, should be deprived of a railway, that indispensable means of communication for the economic development of a country.

At the present time, several mining companies which have staked claims in that area are waiting only for the building of the railway, from Matane to Sainte Anne des Monts, to develop those mines. Several important corporations are also interested in establishing industries there but, they too are waiting for that indispensable means of communication.

The Gaspe area has been isolated for a long time. Until 1938, there were no decent roads and no electricity; but today, electrification has been extended throughout my county; and you know, sir, that electricity is as indispensable as a railway to the development of an area. We therefore only lack a railway to develop the natural resources of that constituency.

The province of Quebec has not been favoured very much with railway construction. In the Canadian National Bank monthly bulletin for February, 1959, we note the following:

A rapid glance on the railway map for 1956 reveals that the provinces have not been equally favoured. Federal statistics break down as follows the length in miles of railroads by province:

Newfoundland	934
Prince Edward Island	285
Nova Scotia	1,391
New Brunswick	1,799
Quebec	4,940
Ontario	10,516
Manitoba	4,974
Saskatchewan	8,721
Alberta	5,680
British Columbia	4,015
Yukon	58

Further on, the bulletin goes on to say:

There is no doubt that the province of Quebec is clearly less favoured than other areas; with 30 per cent of the population, it has only 11 per cent of the railroads. Existing railroads in the province are often only sections required to link the Atlantic with the Prairies. Why, for instance, was not Abitibi linked with Montreal by an extension of the Montreal-Mount Laurier railway? Why postpone the building of the Matane-Gaspé section, which would serve so interesting an area?

Well, Mr. Chairman, you have there an outline of the railway situation in Quebec, as confirmed by the statements in the monthly bulletin of the Canadian National Bank.

We read also in the Daily Report of the Canadian National Railways, for February 1959, the following:

(Text):

New Gaspe Line Would Help Campbellton—Construction of a railway between the town of Gaspe and Matane would enhance the position of the city of Campbellton as a distribution point for the entire Gaspe peninsula, believes the Saint John Telegraph-Journal of February 25, 1959. "It would mean that, in addition to the present railway service to Gaspe and the highway transport system to all points, the entire area would be served by rail.

Completion of the Campbellton-Cross Point highway bridge across the Restigouche river in about a year will mean that only the bridge will lie between Campbellton and the Cross Point station on the present railway line to Gaspe. Rail shipments for Gaspe at present go westward from Campbellton to Matapedia and thence eastward again to Gaspe. With completion of the bridge, such shipments could be trucked to Cross Point for shipment eastward without making this rail detour as at present.

Rail shipment from Campbellton to points east of Matane on the St. Lawrence would go by way of Matapedia to Mont Joli, thence to Matane on an existing rail connection and then by way of the proposed new railway line. This would apply up to some point between Matane and Gaspe where the optional distances around the peninsula become equal."

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, when, in 1957, I made my maiden speech in this house, I urged the government to build this railway line between Matane and Gaspe. I mentioned the matter again in 1958, and I am proud to raise it again today.

As I was saying a moment ago, we have a great wealth of natural resources, as well as qualified workers in Gaspe. Our young people are strong and, what is more important, they have pluck. There are many good sites for new industries, but investors are not taking any chances, because there are no means of transportation. The northern part of the Gaspe peninsula is completely isolated.

In 1959, at a time of prosperity and of high technical progress, barges are still being used to carry goods from Montreal or Quebec, and they can be used only in the navigation season, which lasts 4 to 5 months. That is a striking and dangerous inconsistency for the economic life of that part of the country, and also for the family life of its people. Having to find work elsewhere in order to support his family, a father has to spend a large part of the year away from his wife and hardly ever sees his children. The children, left only to the care of the mother, often leave home at a very early age. It is easy to realize the moral responsibility of the government in the face of such chaos.

The authorities realize this, they are aware of the situation, and if I raise the matter again it is because I know that something can be done and, I hope, will be done. I want each of my honourable colleagues to know that my constituency, which stretches over a distance of 320 miles and is populated by large families, is not seeking any favours. However, it wants to share in the general prosperity of this great country, and it is calling out loudly, sometimes desperately, for its due. My constituents will feel they have largely received their share when a railway is built between Matane and Ste Anne des Monts.

Oh, Gaspesians are patient alright. Indeed, they have been asking for this railway for 20 years. For 20 years, the previous administrations have considered the matter as insignificant. However, the people of Gaspe showed that their patience can reach a limit, and placed their trust in the Conservative party. I know that this government, and particularly the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees), will see that this problem is settled, and I do hope it will be soon.

I do not believe that Mr. Gordon, for whom I have great respect, can decide whether a railway is important or not for the Gaspe peninsula. Members are elected to point out to the government the needs of their constituents. If action on this project is left to the bureaucrats, the member's prestige will suffer, and I know that such is not the intention of the present government.

Before closing, I must also commend the government, and particularly the Minister of Transport, for the improvements made to the railways between Matapedia and Gaspe. Up to 1957, a trip between those two points took 11 hours, whereas the same trip now takes six hours. The train is always filled with passengers, and I am sure the Canadian National Railways is not losing money on it. I hope that, by 1960, I shall be able to rise again in this house, not to press for this railway, but to thank the government for carrying out a project that is dear to the hearts of the member and the people of Gaspe, namely, the construction of a railway linking Matane and Ste Anne des Monts.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I have no wish to delay the passing of these estimates, but I would like to deal with an urgent issue. On behalf of the municipal authority and the citizens of Repentigny, I would ask the Bell Telephone Company of Canada to put in the extended sector service in the town of Repentigny, one of the most progressive collectivities in the federal riding of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

Mr. Chairman, the municipal authorities of Repentigny, the chamber of commerce and the citizens' association, have, on many occasions, approached the Bell Telephone Company of Canada asking it to grant, as far as possible, the service asked by the people of that progressive locality. Mr. Chairman, the Bell Telephone Company of Canada is treating Repentigny as if it were an underdeveloped locality. I would not like that company to think that this town is part of a Colombo plan country, but it is located in Canada, i.e. in a wealthy progressive country which is setting the pace for the whole world in this field.

At this time in Repentigny, almost 400 subscribers of the telephone company still use the crank-up telephone, a 30 year old gadget. The company goes on multiplying users of a single line and we are now up to 16 on the same one, which, in this case, can, indeed be called a party line.

Mr. Chairman, the Bell Telephone Company of Canada is a public service corporation which has to keep abreast of the progress of towns like Repentigny. The company has made an $11 million profit during the first quarter of 1959, i.e. $3 million more than in the same period of 1958. Company profits have gone up from $7,299,118 in 1946 to $29,146,855 in 1956. Those revenues are, as a matter of fact, only apparent ones, for the real profits are much more considerable. The company has increased its depreciation reserves to $247,347,199 and its deferred taxation reserves to $58,133,562.

The Bell Telephone Company of Canada has practised automation on a high scale reaping enormous profits. Telephone subscribers should also benefit accordingly.

Before concluding, may I be allowed, Mr. Chairman, to read out, or to give the substance of a brief submitted by the chamber of commerce of Repentigny to the president of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada. These are the points made to the company by the Repentigny chamber of commerce:

(a) the chamber of commerce considers that by the crank up telephone service part of the town of Repentigny is isolated from the rest of the locality within the same territorial limits from the public site known as the Chateau du Fleuve;

(b) The chamber of commerce considers that there is complete confusion in the telephone service, because that part of the town has to communicate through the St. Paul l'Ermite central to speak with another point within the same town of Repentigny and that moreover, in order to communicate with subscribers living east of the town, it is necessary to resort to long distance service.

(c) The chamber of commerce considers that the Repentigny central should be autonomous, and that causes for discrimination within the limits of one and the same municipality should disappear.

(d) The chamber of commerce considers that the town of Repentigny should enjoy direct service with Montreal, like other municipalities in the area which have such service;

(e) The chamber of commerce considers that its territory is definitely situated within the 15 mile radius, and that every effort should be made to admit this geographical fact, rather than to attempt to evade the issue by any means, either by dealing with it from the point of view of "central to central", "sub-branch", or any other angle which does not agree with the facts.

(f) The chamber of commerce feels it is very easy and even necessary to set up any telephone central on Bourdon Island;

(g) The chamber of commerce considers that a study should be made and reports submitted on the possibility of using the cable facilities as they exist on the LeGardeur de Repentigny bridge (there are 12 of them, we are told).

Mr. Chairman, that problem has been existing in the town of Repentigny for some years. The town of Repentigny has enjoyed extraordinary development in recent years. It has residences of great value and, once again, after all representations made by your humble servant, by the authorities and associations of that town, I ask, once and for all, the Bell Telephone Company of Canada to settle that problem in order that the progress of that town in the federal constituency of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, be not paralyzed.

I would also ask the company if, in English speaking centres—

The Chairman: Order. I must point out to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm that he has been out of order for quite some time. It is with regret that I must interrupt him, but I cannot allow him to go on with his remarks about the Bell Telephone Company, in connection with Repentigny, in this debate.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, you will excuse me. I thought the Bell Telephone Company of Canada came, to some extent, under the transport commission, which in turn, as far as its estimates are concerned, comes under the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees).

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, before I come to the main part of my remarks, I should like, with your permission, to address a few words to the hon. member for Gaspe (Mr. English).

I congratulate him on the speech he has just delivered about the construction of a railway in his peninsula. It is one I have been hearing about for a long time, since I have been here in the House of Commons, but I should like to remind him also that the Prime Minister, who is now in the house, has also made very pertinent statements during the election campaign about that railway. Therefore, without casting any reflection on him, I will say that one of the peremptory statements he made was to the effect that in his opinion, there was no railway extension which deserved more sympathy and a more generous study than that of my hon. friend because, he said, he believed in a national development program for Canada, and the building of that railway was one of the projects which should be contemplated.

Now, during the sittings of the committee on railways, canals and telegraphs I inquired from the president of the Canadian National Railways whether he intended to include, in the estimates for 1959-60, an amount for the construction of that railway, and he bluntly replied no.

I hope the hon. member will continue putting pressure on the government and on the minister for the carrying out of this project, and I can assure him that we, on this side of the house, will give him our hearty support.

(Text):

Mr. Diefenbaker: After 22 years you are going to suport that? Why did you not do something when were in power?

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the Prime Minister for the interruption. It is true that we were in office for 22 years but there was no promise made either by the former government or by the minister of transport. I hold in my hand —and I do not want to delay my own remarks—a clear-cut undertaking by the Prime Minister—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Read it.

Mr. Chevrier: —when he was in that area that he would give careful consideration to it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what I did.

Mr. Chevrier: The Prime Minister said "read it", and I will read what he said at Mont Joli and at Ste. Anne des Monts on February 26, 1958:

> The line is the type of project that we have in mind for opening up Canada, the type of project that should receive first consideration in any national development program.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is right.

Mr. Chevrier: I say it does not look very much as if that railway has received much consideration because when the president of the Canadian National Railways was here he stated positively that no funds were included in the estimates of the Canadian National Railways for either 1959 or 1960 to deal with a matter of this kind.

(Translation):

Mr. Tremblay: You have kept promising a railroad in my area for 22 years.

(Text):

Mr. Chevrier: I want to turn to another problem which is of importance to me and I think to the committee generally, but before I do that I will not take the opportunity of attempting to reply to what was said by the hon. member for Assiniboia although I could deal with the matters which he raised because I had some association with them in the early stages. I think I shall leave that to the minister who is much more capable than I am to deal with it because he has the facts at his disposal, and I do hope that before the first item of his estimates is disposed of he will deal with the charges that were made.

I rose to deal with another matter affecting the St. Lawrence seaway, namely one which has to do with the development of power and navigation in the Lachine section. It is not only of importance to those who live in the metropolitan area of Montreal but it is, I know, of importance to the officers of the St. Lawrence seaway authority and those of the Department of Transport. I refer now, of course, to the joint development of navigation facilities and power facilities in the Lachine section. As the house knows, the seaway authority proceeded to develop navigation facilities in the Lachine section independently of power following approval of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act in 1954 and thereafter. This is a matter which has engaged the attention of the public for some time in the Montreal area and I shall attempt to deal with it as objectively as I can.

It has recently been stated that the Quebec government had good reasons for not carrying out the development in conjunction with the St. Lawrence seaway authority; that had Quebec proceeded with the development of power at Lachine the cost would have been far in excess of what it will be if Quebec goes ahead alone, and that this decision is based upon the opinion of qualified hydro experts. That is not what the qualified experts of Quebec hydro thought for a long time and, as a matter of fact, over a long period of years.

In 1948 the government of Canada established what was known as a board of engineers to deal with the improvement of the Lachine section of the St. Lawrence waterway. The board was composed of distinguished engineers, Mr. R. A. C. Henry, then chairman of the air transport board; Dr. T. H. Hogg, who was at one time chief engineer of Ontario hydro; Dr. Arthur Surveyer, an outstanding engineer in the city of Montreal; Mr. Guy Lindsay and Mr. C. W. West, then employees of the Department of Transport. At the time of this report the engineers who made the report asked the experts of Quebec hydro for their opinion on this whole matter and Quebec hydro undertook to organize an enginering staff to carry out the investigations necessary for the preparation of estimates covering a combined navigation and power project.

As a result, Quebec hydro after extensive studies submitted five different projects for the consideration of the board and the board, after reviewing these projects and in consultation with the representatives of Quebec hydro, selected two projects for power development which embodied the best features of the five projects submitted, either of which would provide the navigation facilities required and permit full utilization of the power available. The estimates of cost prepared by the engineers of Quebec hydro were adopted by the board with some slight increases.

I should like to refer to page 9 of this document, which is a public document tabled in the house, and ask that it be given consideration. On page 9 there is a detailed statement of the cost of improving the Lachine section for navigation alone. That is fixed at $87 million. On page 10 there is a detailed statement prepared by Quebec hydro of the cost of improving the Lachine section for power, and that amounts to $213 million. That makes a total of $300 million for the development of navigation and power in the Lachine section. Then there is another detailed statement on page 10 showing the cost for a joint power and navigation development prepared by the officials of Quebec hydro in the amount of $266 million. Therefore anyone who looks at this report can see at once that there would be a saving of $34 million were the matter to be proceeded with jointly rather than separately, and these are the estimates prepared by the engineers of Quebec hydro. This is not only prepared by them but it covers a power development in the vicinity of Victoria bridge to the extent of 1,200,000 horsepower so that in accordance with the figures of Quebec hydro's own officials a joint development in 1948 would cost $34 million less than a separate one.

I should like to consider for a moment what transpired later. This is what happened. The then chairman of Quebec hydro and other officials thereof made their position clear to the officials of the St. Lawrence seaway authority. They stated that, speaking for themselves as private citizens and not as members of the hydroelectric power commission of Quebec and without having had any discussion with the premier of the province, they thought it would be extremely unwise to separate the development of the Lachine section into navigation and power. They thought that the development should be done jointly according to the plans prepared by the board of engineers in 1948 with which I have been dealing.

Mr. Balcer: May I ask the hon. member from what document he was quoting?

Mr. Chevrier: I am afraid the Solicitor General was not in the house when I gave that information. I am quoting from the 1948 report of the board of engineers.

Mr. Balcer: What was the last document?

Mr. Chevrier: So far as the last document is concerned, I have stated that the Quebec officials thought that the development should be done jointly according to the plan prepared by the board of engineers in 1948, with the modification that the canal should be on the south side rather than on the north side. Is there anything my hon. friend would like to ask?

Mr. Balcer: I should like to make the record clear. You have quoted the chairman of the hydro commission as having made a certain statement independently, speaking personally, and not as chairman of the hydro commission. I am wondering what kind of document you are reading from.

Mr. Chevrier: I will tell my hon. friend what kind of document. If my hon. friend will take the trouble to go to the pertinent department and consult the file he will find that everything contained in my speech is on the record.

An hon. Member: Don't lose your temper.

Mr. Chevrier: I will do my best not to. He will find there that there is no doubt that all along the line the engineers of Quebec hydro felt that this should be a joint development rather than a separate development. So interested was Quebec hydro in the joint project that in 1951 it made a revision of the costs I have mentioned for a joint development in the Lachine section. This estimate amounted to $360 million without interest during construction, and that was made in October of 1951.

No further estimates were made by Quebec hydro as far as I am aware but the engineers of the Department of Transport made a further estimate on the basis of the price level in midsummer, 1953, and that estimate amounted to $400 million for the project which I have been discussing. The estimated cost of the construction of the canal for navigation alone in the Lachine section, adopting the location on the south shore, was approximately $125 million without interest during construction.

Still later, in May of 1954, the then chairman of the Quebec hydro commission—this is not just conjured up—made the suggestion that if an arrangement could be arrived at with the province of Quebec similar to that which was arrived at between the federal government and the province of Ontario in 1941 then his opinion was that he would be willing to recommend the joint development in the Lachine section if the federal government would do both works, the navigation works and the common works, and finance the whole project, Quebec hydro agreeing to pay back on the following basis, one-third in five years, one-third in ten years and one-third in fifteen years. That is not conjured up. That is a matter of record which my hon. friend can see if he will go to the trouble of looking at the files.

Then, in 1956 a commissioner of Quebec hydro announced in New York city that the Quebec government was going to develop power at Lachine and in January of 1959 a member of the Quebec government was reported to have made a similar announcement. Notwithstanding these two announcements, the province has not proceeded with the development.

However, it is well known that a firm of engineers has been appointed to study the problem and that plans for a two stage development, one at Heron island capable of developing 850,000 horsepower and the other below the Victoria bridge, capable of developing 350,000 horsepower, have been prepared. These engineers have now been appointed for three years, and surely the public is entitled to know what their recommendations are, and what the plan is. After all, all of the engineering reports beginning with the international section and going right down to Lachine including Beauharnois, ever since they have been made from 1921 on, have been made public and submitted to this house. There is no reason why any other plans having to do with this matter should not be made public so that at least those of us who have an interest in it, the engineers who have an interest in it, could study them and give them consideration.

The question arises, why are they not produced? Why are they not made public? What is now envisaged clearly is a two stage development in that area. It may be possible to develop Lachine in two stages. Either one of these two stages might well cost the province less money if done separately, but they will cost the province more money if done together. What has always been envisaged is the development of 1,200,000 horsepower of electricity. It now looks as if the province is hedging on the development at Victoria bridge, alleging that frazil ice down the river is going to affect the potential. The question is rather this: Has the construction of the diversionary railway Victoria bridge precluded the province from a one stage scheme? The Canadian National Railways have now proceeded to construct that bridge on the assumption that there would not be a joint development of power and navigation in the vicinity of Victoria bridge. Proceeding with a one stage scheme might well mean the raising of two bridges instead of one, with a consequent loss of power below Victoria bridge amounting to 350,000 horsepower.

I come now to another matter which is germane to this discussion. It is the fact that the federal government made a substantial contribution toward the development of power in the international section. It is inconceivable to me that the federal government, if it had been asked to make an analogous contribution in the Lachine section or in the Beauharnois section, would not have made it. Now, what were those contributions? As the committee knows, the federal government did not proceed on the basis of the 1941 agreement upstream. This was discarded in the international section. It proceeded on another basis, that is that Ontario would pay for all the power facilities and the federal government would pay for all the navigational facilities, so that the old division of 37½ per cent navigation as opposed to 62½ per cent power was discarded for the time being, each party paying its own costs.

Nevertheless, Canada agreed to contribute no less than $30 million for the development of power in the international section, $15 million before the work was started. There are some parts of that sum of money that are going to be voted during the consideration of the minister's estimates now. The federal government agreed to contribute $15 million toward the development of power in the international section. This was in lieu of so-called common works. Then, later on, when an impasse arose over the tailrace dredging to be done downstream in accordance with the order of approval of the I.J.C., dated October, 1952, there was a large amount of work that had to be done amounting to about $37 million, and of that the power entities agreed to pay $12 million leaving a balance of $25 million, $15 million of which was absorbed by Canada, again as assistance toward power development in the international section.

The point I make is this. It is inconceivable that the federal government would contribute $30 million toward power development upstream without being morally and equitably, if not legally, bound to contribute a similar amount downstream. By refusing to accept the advice of Quebec hydro, therefore, the government of Quebec lost an opportunity of a similar payment. Since the government of Quebec has, to all intents and purposes, decided to isolate itself in this, as in so many other matters, it would appear that a contribution of this magnitude may well be lost to the province forever. I think the house should know about this, as well as about a letter which was written by the late Mr. Mackenzie King, on March 12, 1941 to be exact, to the then premier of Quebec dealing with development in the Lachine section and in the Beauharnois section. He wrote saying, you have the right to develop power there jointly with us for navigation purposes, and we will do thus and so in the Beauharnois section and the Lachine section. I am quoting from page 71 of the correspondence and documents tabled in this house dealing with the great lakes-St. Lawrence basin development, 1938-1941:

> With this end in view, the government of Canada would be prepared to undertake that, if and when Quebec takes over the control and operation of the Beauharnois development, there will be paid to the government of Quebec, by the government of Canada, the sum of $7,972,500.

This is nearly $8 million. As I have indicated before in this committee, that sum is worth far more now when you compare the value of the dollar in 1959 with what it was then. I say, therefore, it is unfortunate that these sums which were legally undertaken by the federal government, were at least morally and equitably committed in these documents as well as in the contribution in the international section. I say that because the government of Quebec has lost a great opportunity to obtain a substantial payment toward two projects which are urgently required in the area.

I did want to speak about one or two other matters. I know that there are members here who want to speak, so I will not delay the committee. Perhaps I could conclude my remarks by thanking the minister for agreeing to table the correspondence with the hon. member for Peel, as he undertook to do earlier. I wonder whether he would not be good enough, while doing that, to let the committee have the minute of treasury board appointing the appraiser and which, I take it, defines his functions, and any other papers relating to his appointment and to his duties.

Mr. Winch: Still dealing with one matter affecting the St. Lawrence seaway, I was wondering whether the minister could give us an up to date report on the situation with regard to the relationship of the department or the seaway authority with the various contractors and their payments, especially their demands or requests for additional payments. I was most anxious to have an up to date report because the committee will recall that on March 9 the house authorized an order for return in the following words:

> For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, reports, briefs and other documents exchanged between the Minister of Transport or his deputies, and any official or agency of the government and any person, persons, or organizations, since December 1, 1958, dealing with claims made by contractors for payments from the St. Lawrence seaway authority.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, that order for return was passed in this house on March 9 and the department finally filed the return under sessional paper No. 165E on May 21. I will admit that it was quite a voluminous return and I have read it carefully. But I have one question I should like to ask the Minister of Transport. In view of the wording of the return, for all reports, briefs and other documents exchanged with any person, persons, or organizations since December 1, 1958, can he assure the committee that this sessional paper No. 165E fully conforms to the order of this house with regard to the filing of all documents?

I may say that I have been advised that it does not contain all the documents, especially a number which I had in mind when I moved for the order for return. I know that there are certain individuals who seem to be persona non grata with the department as far as their names or their actions are concerned. I do not know the exact qualifications nor do I have a great deal of information about certain individuals, but I know that at approximately 11 o'clock this morning I was handed an affidavit. I was not going to put myself in the position of saying that certain papers which should have been filed had not been filed merely on the statement of an individual about whom I do not know a great deal. I felt that if that person wanted to put his information in the form of an affidavit, I myself would be protected when I make the statements I am now making. I am informed through the medium of this affidavit—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Order. Would the hon. member indicate whether he is going to ask the committee for permission to file the affidavit? Before he proceeds I should like to know that.

Mr. Winch: I will give all the information you want.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Is the hon. member going to reveal the deponent of the affidavit?

Mr. Winch: It is an affidavit. I most certainly will do so.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Does he wish to file it?

Mr. Winch: I have no reason for not doing so. I have read it so I could table it with the committee. It is an affidavit that was made by Rothwell Grant in the city of Montreal in the province of Quebec. The affidavit was sworn before a notary public, commissioner et cetera in the city of Ottawa on the 14th day of April of this year. In the course of this affidavit it is stated that the Minister of Transport met with certain individuals here in Ottawa in the minister's office on the 22nd day of December, 1958 and certain information was given to the minister and certain photographs and photostats relating to the seaway construction together with copies of documents were shown to him and at his request were left with him. The affidavit further states that on two other occasions the same information was supplied to his department. According to the affidavit his department has had and he has himself seen and received the following:

> (i) Minutes of a meeting of seaway general contractors dated February 4th, 1958;
> (ii) Report to St. Lawrence seaway authority contractors on meeting with Mr. F. B. Common, dated February 7th, 1958;

(iii) Notes of a conference of St. Lawrence general contractors, dated February 12th, 1958;
(iv) Draft outline for brief to Canadian government by a group of contractors on the St. Lawrence seaway;
(v) Sumary of situation;
(vi) Warnock-Hersey progress report No. 129.

I do not know of any information other than what is contained in the affidavit except this. If that information is correct—and it is a sworn statement; and I am not blaming the minister because he cannot go around collecting all the documents and everything —if he met with certain people; if he saw certain photographs and documents; and if not less than three copies were in the hands of his department even prior to that time, then I think we are entitled to know by whose authority officials override an order of the House of Commons for a return for all correspondence, telegrams, reports, briefs and other documents exchanged between the Minister of Transport or his deputies and any official or agency of the government, and any person, persons, or organizations since December 1, 1958.

I am not going to say anything more than that. I hope the minister will give an explanation or clarify the situation. Beyond that, I feel there is still a strong interest among the general public and among the members of this House of Commons with regard to what the situation is in connection with the claims of the contractors and the position of the government in respect thereto. I know that several weeks ago certain information was given by the minister. I am hoping that he can now bring us up to date on the situation.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I shall be very glad to do so. With regard to the other matters of which the hon. member spoke, wherein he stated that certain material had been withheld from a return, may I say that I am not familiar with that matter although I certainly will have it checked up. If there is anything which should have been submitted and which was not submitted, I will certainly see that it is submitted. I would appreciate it greatly if the hon. member would give me the affidavit so that I can check the material to which he has referred.

Mr. Winch: Yes. I am filing the affidavit.

Mr. Hees: As to the situation in connection with claims at the present time, as of today claims have been received amounting to $38,959,957 on 30 contracts.

Mr. Chevrier: May I interrupt the minister there?

Mr. Hees: Yes.

Mr. Chevrier: May I just ask if there is any change between that statement and the one he gave in the house in answer to a question?

Mr. Hees: Yes. I am told that the total has been increased. The present status is as follows:

	Amount of claim	Amount paid
Claims settled ..	$1,484,028	$746,899
Claims refused ..	7,167,412
Awaiting disposition	30,307,617
	$38,959,957

These figures do not include a claim of unstated amount under contract 6 in 1956. Negotiations resulted in a unit price adjustment costing $1,918,564.

The authority has reached conclusions on four claims totalling $3,490,457 on which negotiations are pending. A great deal of work has been done on the remainder totalling $26,817,160; but pressure on the engineering staff in connection with the final phases of construction, and a great variety of problems in readying the seaway for operation, has prevented them from concentrating on the claims.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Order. Before the committee proceeds further we should straighten out the matter of the affidavit referred to by the hon. member for Vancouver East. Some leeway was allowed in the debate, because nobody raised a point of order and the chair felt itself in the hands of the committee. It is not in order for the hon. member for Vancouver East to ask to table the document, but it would be in order for him to ask that it be included in the record of the debates today.

Mr. Winch: It is here for all members to see.

Mr. Chevrier: I wonder if it would be possible to see that document? I should like to see it very much, because I have heard a great deal about this gentleman and I should like to read the affidavit. How this should be done I do not know, but if it has been used I think it should become the property of the committee.

Mr. Winch: It is of great length. I do not see how I could ask that it be placed on record in Hansard.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): The committee could receive the document for the use of members without the necessity of if being printed in Hansard, if it is so agreed.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

(Translation):

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, at this stage of the consideration of the Department of Transport's estimates, I should like to make a few remarks in order to draw the hon. minister's attention to certain problems affecting particularly the constituency I represent.

May I be allowed, first of all, to address very cordial thanks to the hon. minister who, since I have been member for Roberval, has always welcomed with much sympathy the representations I made to him on behalf of the citizens I represent.

I was listening a moment ago, with attention and at the same time with some amusement, to the remarks made by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) about the railway situation in the province of Quebec, and, in particular, about the Gaspe railway which was referred to by my colleague from Gaspe (Mr. English). He stated in particular that his party had not indulged in promises about railways. I readily understand that the hon. member for Laurier should say such things, since, having been absent from the province of Quebec for so many years, he is certainly not aware of what has been said in my constituency and in my district about the railways.

Mr. Chevrier: On a point of order. I say that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) interrupted me earlier, it was not to deny that he had made promises in that constituency, but to ask me if the government had made promises during the 22 years we were in office. I replied that neither the government nor the minister of the day had made promises about the Gaspe railway, whereas the Prime Minister clearly did make promises in the statements he made out there.

The hon. member should not shift his ground; he may refer to the Prime Minister's statement, but he has no right to shift the subject.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I admire the scruples of the hon. member for Laurier on that matter, but what I wanted to say was that the hon. member for Laurier is in a very weak position to talk about promises which have been made by the government, by the cabinet, by members or candidates, because my district and my constituency have heard so many Liberal promises about railways that only a stranger like the hon. member for Laurier, in my opinion, can refuse to admit that we have been deceived, and many times, about the railways. But that is not my point, Mr. Chairman. Besides, I do not propose to take too much stock in what the hon. member for Laurier has said.

What I want to emphasize once again in this house, is the urgent need for the Chicoutimi-Lake St. John district that the railway line between Chicoutimi and Quebec be completely rebuilt. The rebuilding of that railway line is absolutely necessary. It is urgent today and that urgency takes on special character because of the industrial development which has taken place in our district and is still increasing.

Mr. Chairman, my colleague from Gaspe pointed out earlier that the province of Quebec has not been particularly favoured in the way of railroad construction. I think that remark applies even more aptly to the Chicoutimi-Lake St. John district and to my constituency, since for more than 25 years, all kinds of public organizations, bodies and municipalities have repeatedly asked for the rebuilding of this line between Chicoutimi and Quebec, and at a time when those representations should have been sympathetically received since a certain prosperity would have allowed the Canadian National Railways Company, at the time, to undertake the rebuilding of that Quebec-Chicoutimi line.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, it was in the years between 1939 and 1957 that the Canadian National Railway Company should have considered the building or the possibility of rebuilding that line, at a time when the economic situation was good, especially at a time when the requirements for railway transport were extremely great in our district. However it was not done, for despite all the representations that were made, despite all the pressures by public bodies, the government of the time and the Canadian National Railway Company ignored the repeated requests of the public men and of the population, in spite too of all the promises that were made successively in our district by Liberal members or candidates.

Mr. Chairman, I would point out to the hon. Minister of Transport that, as I indicated a moment ago, the industrial development now going on in my area as a result of its closeness to a mining centre, namely that of Chibougamau, makes the need for rebuilding this Chicoutimi-Quebec railway line a matter of even greater urgency. And here, Mr. Chairman, I am not raising a new fact. I need not even quote statistics, because the house has heard so many appeals, in the last 20 or 25 years, from members from the province of Quebec. I refer in particular to the former independent member for Chicoutimi Mr. Paul Edmond Gagnon, to the hon. Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Balcer), and to members who, every year, pointed out to the house the problem of rebuilding the Chicoutimi-Quebec railway.

The present situation is deplorable. Please note, Mr. Chairman, that it is not my intention to lay a charge against the Canadian National. I simply wish to set the facts again in their proper light. The railway line from Chicoutimi to Quebec, including the section serving the Lake St. John area, is inadequate, does not meet present requirements of modern transportation, and does not meet the requirements of industrial development that has taken place in our area.

Mr. Chairman, this railway line from Chicoutimi to Quebec, which includes a section from Chambord to Dolbeau, and another as far as Alma, could also be extended so as to circle Lake St. John, because it is not normal, in our modern times, that a railway should not serve all the people of an area such as ours.

That request was possibly made in the past. I refer to it now, however, because a railway line circling the whole of lake Saint John, it seems to me, would be of great advantage to the citizens of my constituency as well as to those of adjoining constituencies. While it might not be possible for obvious reasons at the present time to carry out that project, it is one that must be considered. Those suggestions should also be considered because they are in the best interest of an expanding area whose development is bound to be even greater in years to come.

Mr. Chairman, this matter of the rebuilding of the Chicoutimi-Quebec railway must not however throw into the background other projects such as for instance, the one my hon. colleague from Chicoutimi (Mr. Brassard) has in mind, namely the construction of a railway into northern Quebec.

The other day again, I listened with much amusement and interest to the remarks made in this connection by the hon. member for Laurier. I found this former minister of transport had a remarkable solicitude for our area, a solicitude which has not always been his, of course, especially when you remember the circumstances which surrounded the construction of the Chibougamau-St. Felicien railway.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Tremblay: Of course.

Mr. Chevrier: Is the hon. member aware of the fact that when the former Liberal administration ran the affairs of this country, it was the one which introduced a bill—will you please excuse me, Mr. Chairman, for showing you my back—regarding the construction of the Beattyville-Chibougamau railway line, and the one between Chibougamau and St. Felicien? If, so, how can he make the statements he is making now, knowing very well that it is the former Liberal administration which had legislation passed to that effect?

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I am extremely glad that the hon. member for Laurier should have given me a short lesson on the history of the province of Quebec which he knows so well.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to teach the hon. member a lesson, but he should at least stick to the facts.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the hon. member for Laurier that I am perfectly aware that, under the previous Liberal administration, when the hon. member for Laurier was minister of transport, a program was initiated for the construction of a railway from St. Felicien to Chibougamau and from Chibougamau to Beattyville; but those who took over—and the people of my area are among those who showed interest in that project and in the debate which followed in the House of Commons—know very well the representations then made by the ex-member for Chicoutimi, Mr. Paul Edmond Gagnon and by the Solicitor General, when they asked that both these railway lines be built simultaneously so that the interest of the Saguenay-Lake St. John area would not be prejudiced.

Mr. Chairman, you know that the stretch from Beattyville to Chibougamau, or I should say from Chibougamau to Beattyville has been completed by now and that we are still waiting for the completion of the stretch from Chibougamau to St. Felicien. Moreover, the hon. member can certainly not make up stories about this to the people of my area; my fellow-citizens know very well what that delay in building that stretch from St. Felicien to Chibougamau has meant for them in the industrial and economic fields.

Mr. Chevrier: Do not make up stories yourself; because you are not sticking to the facts.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Laurier had the opportunity to make his speech a moment ago and I would ask him to show the same courtesy towards me as I showed towards him.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I am quite prepared to show the same courtesy to the hon. member for Roberval, provided he states facts and does not attempt to gainsay them as he tried to do a moment ago.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I could also rise on a point of order and say to the hon. member that he has no right to impute motives to me.

(Text):

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): I would remind the two hon. members who have just taken part in this debate that we are wandering a bit from the resolution that is now under consideration by the committee. I would ask the hon. member for Roberval, when he resumes his feet, to stay more closely to the resolution so we may avoid repetition of the exchange between the two members.

(Translation):

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I have come to the very matter I intended to deal with. I am talking in general about the estimates of the Department of Transport. I am dealing with problems of my district, and in particular, with that of railways, a problem which has taken a particular aspect because of the rebuilding by the company of the line between St. Felicien and Chibougamau, completion of which we are still waiting for and which, besides, has been for my constituency a source of financial, economic and industrial disappointment.

I was saying, at the time I was interrupted, that nobody can teach lessons to the people of my district about that matter or tell them about the consequences of the delay in building that railway.

Mr. Chevrier: Do not try to teach me lessons either.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, there is no need for me to mention to the hon. member for Laurier the articles published in the newspapers at the time of that debate in the House of Commons in 1954. However, the hon. member must recall the statement which appeared in Le Devoir at the time of the debate on the bill dealing with the building of the Chibougamau-St. Felicien railroad, when the speech made by the hon. member for Laurier was described as directed against Quebec by that newspaper. However, Mr. Speaker, I am quite willing to keep strictly to the matter under discussion—

(Text):

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Order. The matter under discussion is the first item of the estimates of the Department of Transport relating to departmental administration. I would ask the hon. member not to offend against the spirit of the ruling that was made by the Chair a few moments ago and to stick to the matter of the departmental administration of this department.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Keep to the subject under discussion.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, on that question of the Chibougamau-St. Felicien railway, may I be permitted to point out to the present Minister of Transport that the considerable delay in the construction of the St. Felicien-Chibougamau railway branch was a source of financial and economic difficulties and a handicap to the industrial development of my area. Mr. Chairman, in view of the sympathy with which the Minister of Transport received my representations, that the construction of this railway branch be speeded up, I am sure that his department is ready to give the representations made by the citizens of my riding all the attention they deserve. I feel that the Lake St. John-Saguenay area, and more particularly my riding, are now at the crossroads in economic and industrial development, and the lack of an adequate railway should not be allowed to prevent this area from sharing in the tremendous industrial growth which is in evidence elsewhere in the whole province of Quebec.

Mr. Chairman, allow me to point out to the Minister of Transport the matter of level crossings which is a source of great danger and of serious difficulties in my riding. Railway crossings are a source of danger, no matter what a senior official of the Canadian National may have said about them a little while ago. When there are three or four of these dangerous level crossings in a single city, and I am thinking in particular of my own city of Roberval, I feel that one should not rely exclusively on good common sense, but rather strive to eliminate those sources of danger.

Mr. Chairman, before concluding my remarks, I would also ask the Minister of Transport to consider the possibility of rebuilding certain stations on the railway line going through my county, in particular the station of St. Prime. I know that officials of the Canadian National came to investigate the matter. They stated that the traffic and the revenue derived from the Canadian National's operation in the riding of Roberval, and particularly in that sector of the railroad, did not justify building that station. Well, I wondered at that time whether all officials of the Canadian National were necessarily well placed to know the exact needs of a given locality. In this case, I think that the member for the riding is in the best position to explain the needs submitted to him by the citizens of his county.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, allow me to remind again the Minister of Transport of the problem of the Roberval airport. The minister has welcomed, with such understanding, all representations I made about that airport that I am a bit uneasy about reminding him again of that project. We received very definite assurances from the Department of Transport, and I am sure that, in the very near future, the minister will be in a position to follow up the guarantees he gave me, which will allow my area and my county in particular to benefit from an adequate airport in keeping with the needs of the population.

Mr. Chevrier: Would the hon. member allow me to ask him another question? He was so polite with me a moment ago. I should like to ask him this: is he aware that the Roberval airport was built under a Liberal regime, when the hon. member for Laurier was minister of transport?

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I would point out to the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) that the contribution of the Liberal government at the time was rather small, and that the cost was borne in large part by the city of Roberval.

(Text):

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I have only three matters that I should like some information on from the minister. I assure him I will be very brief. The first matter has to do with Scandinavian Air Lines, better known as S.A.S. The minister is well aware—

Mr. Chevrier: I thought it was "sauce".

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): Sauce or S.A.S. The minister is well aware that at the present time they have refueling rights at the city of Winnipeg. Up until a few weeks ago anyone travelling on Scandinavian Air Lines who wanted to go to Winnipeg was not allowed to disembark at the city of Winnipeg but had to continue on to Los Angeles, disembark there and take transportation from Los Angeles and come all the way back to Winnipeg. This in itself is rather a ridiculous situation, rather ludicrous. I can well understand with regard to air agreements with different countries how this could come into being. However, within recent weeks there have been two occasions during which passengers have been allowed to disembark from these flights at the city of Winnipeg. I realize there might have been extenuating circumstances for the disembarkation. However, I would like to know from the minister first whether or not there has been any change with regard to the rules and regulations on landing rights in the city of Winnipeg of this air line. I think there should be but, if not, what is the proper procedure for certain people who might want to disembark from this air line at the city of Winnipeg. If so, what is the procedure?

My second matter, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Hees: May I answer these questions as we go along? The hon. member perhaps knows that the arrangements for disembarking passengers of an air line at any particular airport are worked out between the two countries concerned and there never has been such an agreement worked out between Canada and S.A.S. for Winnipeg, and there has been no formal application ever made to us by S.A.S. for that right. Perhaps the reason for that would be that S.A.S. would have to give the equivalent right to a Canadian air line in return for that privilege. I am very glad to assure the hon. member that if S.A.S. does approach us on a formal basis and would like to discuss this matter we shall be very glad to discuss it with them.

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, the only reason that I bring it to the minister's attention is that within recent weeks there have been two occasions when a passenger has been allowed to disembark at the city of Winnipeg. The people in the city of Winnipeg are not aware of the reasons for this, why it was done, and there is perhaps a little bit of confusion in their own minds with regard to the procedure to be followed if this is done, or the reasons for it being done.

Mr. Hees: I am advised that if this was the case, as it must be if the hon. member says so, it would in all probability be because of particular hardship cases or something of that kind. There would be particular circumstances surrounding the case and it would not be regular practice.

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): Then, Mr. Chairman, I understand that if Scandinavian Air Lines want this right all they have to do is to apply to the minister for consideration?

Mr. Hees: They do not automatically get it; it is a matter of their approaching us and we shall be very glad to talk it over with them and possibly work out a mutually satisfactory agreement.

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): Perhaps the minister could answer my next two questions together. The first has to do with the extension of the Winnipeg airport and its facilities. I understand that certain tenders have been called and contracts have been let, but I was wondering whether the minister might give us some sort of progress report and perhaps some sort of intimation as to when those contracts may be completed, when the extension of the Winnipeg airport facilities may be completed; some sort of report as to the progress at the present time.

I want to be very brief. My second point has to do with the lay-off at the present time on the Canadian National Railways at the Fort Rouge and Transcona shops. Neither of these shops is in my constituency, but the people who are affected by those lay-offs do reside in my constituency. I have received some representations. The news reports of those proposed lay-offs have been conflicting, to say the least. There have been a number of conflicting reasons advanced for those lay-offs. I would ask the minister, if at all possible, to give the committee the reasons for the lay-offs and perhaps some information on what is being done for those people who are laid off in regard to re-hiring by the Canadian National Railways or in regard to the unemployment insurance commission.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the last question, I am afraid I am not familiar with this particular case because it is something that comes under the management of the Canadian National Railways. But I will be very glad to speak to the management of the railway and get an answer as soon as I can for the hon. member. With regard to the Winnipeg airport, there are a number of contracts and I wonder whether the hon. member would indicate which contracts he is interested in. Is he interested in the contracts dealing with the new terminal building?

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes.

Mr. Hees: I am advised that the preparation of the contracts is now under way and we are in the process of submitting to treasury board an economic study of the whole project to justify the letting of these contracts. I can assure the hon. member that we are getting ahead with the whole project just as fast as we can.

Mr. Granger: Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak briefly about a number of matters which interest my district considerably. As the constituency of Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador stretches from the airport at Gander north to the airport at Goose and then on to cape Chidley in the far north, naturally transportation and communications are of paramount importance to us. I have in mind particularly communications along the Labrador coast. In many small places the only means of communication are small radiotelephone sets. They serve a very good purpose in so far as they are available but there are altogether too few of them. Particularly during the winter time, when practically all transportation ceases except by air, the radiotelephone set is the only means of communication with the outside, the only means by which a doctor can be summoned or other messages sent in time of need.

As I have pointed out to the department on a number of occasions, more of these radiotelephone sets are required. I am told that the situation today is not as good as it was some years ago and in this connection I should like to read from a report prepared by Mr. George Sellars, M.H.A., the provincial member for Labrador South. He says:

> Before wireless telegraphy became established, Canada supported a telegraph line along the Quebec north shore which extended to Red Bay. When a wireless was opened at Belle isle for communicating with steamers operating via the straits of Belle isle route a station was also established at Chateau, Point Amour, Point Riche, Newfoundland and Grindstone island and on up the St. Lawrence river. As improvements were made the stations at Chateau and also at Point Riche, Newfoundland, were closed and Belle isle worked Point Amour and Point Amour worked direct with Grindstone. Subsequently, Belle isle has been working Grindstone direct so that Point Amour is now working mostly as a radio beacon.
> In the early days there were several wireless stations established in eastern Labrador chief among them being Battle Harbour which in the early days of wireless communicated with Fogo and Fogo communicated with St. John's by land line. Later Battle Harbour communicated with St. John's (Signal Hill) direct and Fogo station closed. Along Labrador there were wireless stations located at the following places, viz: Fishing Ships Harbour, Venison Island, Hawkes Harbour, Domino, Flat Island, Grady, Smokey, Halton, Makkovik, Hopedale, Cartwright, Cape Harrison.

Today the situation is: Battle Harbour, due to close this summer and to be replaced by a telephone; Marys Harbour, radiophone operated by Grenfell mission and used for communication with St. Anthony; Port Hope Simpson, logging centre, 25 miles up Alexis river or bay; Fishing Ships Harbour, private—Fishery Products—out in winter; Snug Harbour, private—Fishery Products—operates June to October; Hawkes Harbour, private—whaling company—now closed; Square Islands, private—B.W. Powell; Frenchman's Island, Department of Transport; Black Tickle, Department of Transport; Cartwright, Department of Transport; Parks Harbour, private, S. B. Fequet and Son.

Two large settlements in Sandwich bay and widely separated, Paradise and Separation Point, should have radiophones as should other settlements, particularly Paradise, Separation Point, Spotted Island, Batteau, Hawkes Harbour, George's Cove, Williams Harbour, Fox Harbour, Cape Charles, Marys Harbour.

The Minister of Transport suggested people of Spotted Island should form co-op and purchase radiophone and operate it without cost to D.O.T. after getting a $10 licence from Moncton.

Marys Harbour cannot handle commercial correspondence. There is only one nurse there and her time is fully occupied and it is very unreasonable to ask her to handle communications.

The decision to have Labrador traffic routed via Cartwright and Goose presents almost insurmountable difficulties. The high Mealy mountains are directly between Cartwright and Goose and in my experience these mountains are the birthplace and habitation of every known kind of atmosphere disturbance and static, so much so that it cannot be relied on for a constant communications channel.

Besides the cost of sending a telegram from Newfoundland to Labrador was until lately 55 cents. What will it cost via the maritimes and Quebec to Goose and Cartwright to destination in Labrador? The government of Canada ought to provide us with the same land line service that it provides over the same line for Quebec. Our portion of the line has not been repaired while the portion through Quebec is kept in A-1 condition. Why should they let our portion of the line go into decay?

That was written by the provincial member for Labrador South. The point I am trying to make is that improved communications are needed along the Labrador coast. These communications form the only means by which the people of these isolated places can keep in contact with the outside world in order to make their needs known and obtain medical aid when it is required. As was stated in the letter, some of the sets are privately owned, some are owned by the Grenfell mission which operates on that coast and a number of places have no means of communication whatsoever.

Another matter of vital interest to Labrador and northern Newfoundland is air strips. Last year the Newfoundland department of highways built an air strip at Nain on the Labrador coast, helped to complete one at North West River, the seat of the Grenfell mission in Labrador, and began one at St. Anthony, the headquarters of the international Grenfell association. The one at Nain is being used. I believe the one at North West River is being used but needs to be extended. The one at St. Anthony needs to be completed. In addition, another air strip is badly required at Cartwright in Labrador while Baie Verte, Roddickton and Port Saunders are centres in northern Newfoundland that should be considered, as also should La Scie, although I understand that it will probably be difficult to get a suitable location at La Scie. I might also mention Hopedale in northern Labrador.

I hope that the minister will be able to do something about the construction of these air strips or some of them during this season. Large air strips are not needed. Small gravel strips on which Beaver aircraft can land are sufficient in most places, although it might be desirable to extend the runways at North West River and St. Anthony to take larger aircraft. Basically what is required are gravel or dirt strips on which Beavers can operate. They would be used largely by the planes supplied to the Grenfell mission by the Newfoundland government. These planes are used extensively for servicing the coast and to bring in patients to the Grenfell mission hospitals. I might add that at Nain eleven people died two years ago because a plane could not land there with serum.

The Newfoundland government built a small airstrip at Nain last year. As I mentioned, the value of this airstrip is particularly high during the periods of freeze-up and breakup. During the summer the planes can operate on floats, and during the winter they can operate on skis. However, during the periods of freeze-up in the fall and breakup in the spring they can use neither skis nor floats and strategically located airstrips are essential so that air services can be carried out during the whole 12 months.

I should like to mention a word or two here about Goose Bay. During Easter I was fortunate enough to be able to visit Goose Bay. While there I saw, to some extent, the preparations for defence, the superb communications, and sensed to some degree at least the global thinking of the warriors who were there. Suddenly the world seemed very small and Canada seemed a lot safer. I should like to pay tribute to those who operate this great airfield and those who are in command. I should like to mention in particular Mr. James Murphy, the head of D.O.T. at Goose Airport, Group Captain W. Swetman, Officer Commanding the R.C.A.F. Station, Col. A. J. Beck, Wing Commander, U.S.A.F., Magistrate Terry J. Corbett and Sergt. Pat Byers R.C.M.P. There exists among them a high degree of working co-operation which is equalled by the efficiency.

Now, I should like to say a word about Gander, where a native Newfoundlander, Mr. Rex Tilley is doing a fine job for the Department of Transport. A hotel is badly needed at Gander because I understand that passengers show little enthusiasm for spending the night there. A large modern terminal will soon be opened by her Majesty the Queen, something of which we are all proud. This, in itself, is a source of gratification to everybody, not only those who are interested in Gander but those who are interested in Canada because Gander is the only part of Canada which many people see. People going through from one continent to another often pause at Gander, and I think it is only proper that a fine terminal should be there as a monument to Canada because Gander is the real gateway to Canada. Gander is the first part of Canada that many people see coming from the other side. As I say, a hotel is really needed. Often planes have to remain there overnight and the accommodation at the present time is poor.

A suggestion has been made that Gander should be a free port. The flying public, I understand, prefers to make stops at places where the facilities of a free port exist. Recently there has been a tendency to by-pass Gander, particularly with the development of large, long range aircraft. I would suggest that nothing be overlooked which would make it attractive for people to stop at Gander. Then, the pressure from passengers may influence the airlines to make Gander an extra stop. I will add, too, that some of the pilots seem to be objecting to regulations respecting vaccination, etc., and I hope the Minister of Transport will speak to his colleague the minister of health to see if there cannot be some relaxation of these regulations commensurate with safety.

No word about Gander would be complete without a word of praise for Eastern Provincial Airways. They have an unexcelled record for safety and service. This company has flown many miles since its inception and its safety record is excellent and the stories of the mercy flights undertaken are legion. They perform a very vital part in the communications in Newfoundland, particularly in the more remote parts of the province. I do not believe any word about Eastern Provincial Airways would be complete without mentioning its general manager, Mr. A. J. Lewington, its traffic manager, Mr. Marsh Jones and its maintenance manager, Mr. William Harris.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): The Chair is allowing latitude to the hon. member, but he does seem to have brought some matters into the debate this afternoon which are perhaps not under the general heading of administration of the Department of Transport.

Mr. Chevrier: May I just intervene here? The hon. member is dealing with Gander airport, which is directly under the Department of Transport. I think that any of the matters affecting Gander airport are subjects for debate at this time. There is no doubt that all the facilities concerning Gander fall within the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport and it would seem to me, in all deference, the hon. member would have the right to deal with all the aspects of Gander.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): The hon. member has been very good in that his extraneous references at least commend themselves to the Chair because they are brief. I have allowed latitude and my opinion is unchanged. I would, therefore, ask the hon. member to follow the spirit of the Chair's attitude.

Mr. Granger: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to transgress, and I shall try to remain within the rules. I did want to mention in connection with the airport at Gander the fact that Gander recently assumed the status of a full-fledged municipality and elected a new town council and mayor. I know the mayor and town council will continue to work cooperatively with the Minister of Transport, as they have been doing, in connection with the many matters which affect them both.

I should like to say a word about Canadian National steamers, and ask the minister if additional ports of call could not be added to their schedule. I am well aware of the fact that the more ports of call there are, the longer any one scheduled trip will take. However, it is possible that a few more ports of call could be added without unduly lengthening the present schedule for a round trip. I would appreciate if he would give careful attention to this matter. As I said, I know it is impossible for steamers to call at every little port without making their trips extremely long, and this would create a hardship on the public as a whole. But I do hope that, where possible, additional ports of call will be added.

If I may return briefly to the two matters which I mentioned first, the need for communications on Labrador and the need for more airstrips. If I should leave the minister feeling sympathetic toward these requests then I will be very happy indeed.

Mr. Macquarrie: The minister would probably expect that a member from Prince Edward Island would have a word to say about transportation. I am sure that all his predecessors down through the years have known that this is one subject that is dear to us in Prince Edward Island. With my usual laconic brevity I should like to mention one or two aspects of the activities of this department.

I will not speak at length about the car ferries because the minister has heard much about it from myself and my colleagues for a long time. However, I would say that it is of the utmost importance that speed be of the essence in the construction of a new ferry in this area and in the interim I would urge on the minister that every measure be taken to make full and maximum use of existing facilities. The planking of the Scotia II is an important step but I wish he would, with the C.N.R., look into the prospects of making more trips with the existing ferries when the traffic demands it. I am convinced that there could be more and later trips which would help move cars and a great number of people wanting—and wisely so—to go to Prince Edward Island. This main transportation link is one which connects with the railway because that was a vital term of our confederation agreement that we were to be kept in continuous and efficient communication with the mainland. In that aspect there is an important consideration, namely that we have a speedier rail service from Moncton down to Cape Tormentine. It takes an interminable time to make that short trip which ties in with the major transportation link. That would be a vast improvement. I know the minister is convinced of the importance of that matter.

Mr. Hees: If I might just answer the question of the hon. member in order to show how quickly we accede to requests in this department. I am pleased to tell him that officials of the Department of Transport, the C.N.R. and the Department of Public Works are at Borden and Tormentine today doing just what he has in mind, namely improving transportation facilities, as he has so correctly outlined in his speech.

Mr. Macquarrie: In order to show my deep appreciation I think the best thing I can do is to move immediately from that subject, say a word or two on one more matter and then resume my seat. For a long time we have been interested in improving the airport in Charlottetown so that it might have a runway which would allow for the landing of larger aircraft. I am happy that work is progressing there on the building of a 7,000-foot runway. I think that will make a great improvement in the transportation picture in our province and, of course, in the whole Atlantic area. The hon. member who has just spoken mentioned the airport facilities in Winnipeg. I may say that in that regard Charlottetown is ahead of Winnipeg. We have there already a new and enlarged terminal offering twice the space to visitors and travellers. That facility has proven of great convenience. For that I should like to say that the minister's energetic and swift action is much commended.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, although there are several interesting matters which I might usefully discuss on the estimates of the Minister of Transport, I have chosen to say a relatively few words on a project which is not new to the committee nor to the house but which I think is a timely one to be brought back before the committee at this time. I noticed a while ago just how quick the Minister of Transport was in answering requests from hon. members. I sincerely hope that the request that I shall make will receive the same quick action that we saw just a few moments ago.

I propose to say a few words about the Richelieu waterway or the Champlain waterway as some prefer to call it. As hon. members know, for many years there has been some traffic along the Richelieu river across lake Champlain and down the Hudson river to New York. Because of the nature of the waters it has not been possible for any ships of any size to go through this canal. But ever since the turn of the century representations have continually been made to the government asking it to create a navigable waterway from the St. Lawrence to the city of New York on this particular route. As the years went on and the recommendations and representations were more and more numerous the government decided to have the international joint commission study the project. In 1937 the international joint commission made some recommendations which I think would be useful if they were put on Hansard. At page 17 of the interim report of the international joint commission on the Champlain waterway we read as follows:

> Taking into consideration the fact already mentioned that neither the engineers nor any of the interested parties who appeared before the commission in support of or in opposition to the proposed waterway, were of the opinion that it could be justified, if at all, except as an extension of or in connection with the St. Lawrence deep waterway and the fact that the St. Lawrence waterway is not yet assured and in any event could not be completed and put into operation for a number of years; and the further fact that it is impossible to foresee the changes that may take place in transportation in the meantime, or to estimate the bearing the completion of the St. Lawrence waterway might have on the advisability of constructing the improvement now under consideration,—

And this part is important.

—the commission recommends that the present report be considered an interim report, and that it be authorized to retain jurisdiction over the matter until the St. Lawrence waterway has become an accomplished fact and the commission has had an opportunity of studying the effect of its operation upon the proposed Champlain waterway.

Of course this recommendation of the international joint commission at that time put a wet blanket on the project of the Champlain waterway. But once the St. Lawrence seaway had been decided upon, and more particularly as it approached its completion, there were increased activity and increased interest on the part of officials, municipal and civic, both in Canada and in the United States. Over the past few years I remember how many meetings were held either in Sorel or in Plattsburg with officials both of municipalities along the Richelieu river and those in the United States. Chambers of commerce had made repeated representations to the government and many other civic organizations have made similar representation.

Just about a year ago a United States-Canada delegation presented a rather complete and thorough brief to the Prime Minister. According to the Prime Minister's statement, it would appear that he was greatly interested in and taken up with the project. As a result, he promised that he would come to the area in Sorel and travel on the Richelieu river in order to see the project at first hand. Unfortunately—and I can well imagine that it was unavoidable—he was not able to carry out that particular promise. On this occasion I should like to extend to the Prime Minister a further invitation to come to Sorel at which time we will make it amply possible for him to visit what I think is a natural project and one which would be a most useful economical project.

On the United States side there has been as much if not more interest in this particular project. I could cite I do not know how many newspapers on the activities that have taken place in the United States and the comments that have been made on this project. But I think perhaps the greatest evidence of interest in the United States would be given if I quote an article that appeared in La Presse on April 28, 1959:

(Translation):

Consideration is given to a canal connecting Sorel to New York.

Washington, 28, (PCF)—A submission was made yesterday to the American congress for a $10,000 appropriation to allow for continuation of a preliminary study of a proposed canal connecting New York to the St. Lawrence. The present waterway through the Hudson river and lake Champlain provides a channel which is 12 feet deep on the United States side, but shallower in Canada, in the Richelieu river.

(Text):

I believe it is quite evident that the United States has this project very much at heart and that we in Canada should see to it that a similar study is made. I am not sure whether it will be necessary, as written in the interim report of the international joint committee, to set up another body to conduct the study or whether, as stated on page 17 of the report, the present report could be considered an interim report and that it be authorized to retain jurisdiction on the matter. I am not sure whether or not the international joint commission would automatically go into this study or not but I should like to have the minister assure the committee that a study will be made at this time for the realization of a project which, to me, is an important Canadian project.

I think it would be useful at this time to read into the record the conclusions which were arrived at by the international commission. I quote from page 15 of the report:

Directing itself therefore, to the questions: Is it advisable to improve a waterway from Montreal through lake Champlain to connect with the Hudson river; and what is the estimated cost of such a waterway; the commission finds:

(1) That there are five possible routes for a waterway from Montreal to the Hudson river by way of lake Champlain, the last-mentioned being an all-water route and the remainder overland routes, as follows:

(a) From lake St. Francis on the St. Lawrence river to lake Champlain via the Chazy river.

(b) From lake St. Francis to the Richelieu river three miles south of the city of St. Johns.

(c) From Caughnawaga, on the St. Lawrence river, to Fryer's island on the Richelieu river.

(d) From the St. Lawrence at Longueuil to Fryer's island on the Richelieu river.

(e) From the St. Lawrence river at Sorel up the Richelieu river to lake Champlain.

I should like to draw the attention of the committee, in particular to what follows. I continue the quotation:

In the case of all five routes the existing waterway would be followed through lake Champlain and by way of the Champlain canal to the Hudson river at Albany.

(2) That of these five routes, the last-mentioned (e) is the most practicable from an engineering standpoint and the least impracticable from an economic point of view.

I think I should remind the committee that this report was written in 1937, and that the development which has taken place in that area since has confirmed to my mind that from an engineering standpoint it would be far more favourable than any of the other alternatives and that from an economic standpoint it would be of the greatest advantage to all concerned. We recall that according to the first plans the St. Lawrence seaway canal was supposed to run on the Montreal side of the river, but for some reason or another the plan was changed subsequently and the canal now runs on the south shore of the St. Lawrence. If any of the other alternatives were adopted it would mean that the Richelieu waterway would have to cut through the St. Lawrence seaway. It seems to me that there is already sufficient bottling-up around the St. Lawrence seaway without causing additional hazards in that area.

The other reason is that the channel of the Richelieu river, like that of the Hudson river, can only be a maximum of 12 feet. Because of the narrowness of both rivers, if the draught of the river were to be lower than 12 feet it would cost a fortune to sustain the river banks along both these routes. As a matter of fact, also, in favour of the natural water route, in 1937 there was some preparatory work done on the Richelieu river and a considerable amount of money was spent. The dam at St. Ours was reconstructed to take navigation at 12 feet. The Fryer's island dam was also built in prevision of the Richelieu waterway from lake Champlain right down to Sorel, and as a matter of fact the greater part of the Richelieu river as it is now is already 12 feet and it would to my mind cost very little to make it 12 feet all the way.

From an economic standpoint it seems to me that most of the ships which would be using the Richelieu waterway would come from below Montreal and below Sorel. They would be ships transporting paper and iron ore and would normally come up the St. Lawrence to turn into the Richelieu at Sorel. I think very little shipping would be made directly from Montreal to use this water route. Also in past years there has been a considerable evolution in the industrialization of the south shore and it would appear that within a relatively short number of years there will be several steel industries located there. All these industries would be greatly assisted if freight could move via the Richelieu river and on to New York rather than going up to Montreal and having to wait in order to get into the St. Lawrence seaway canal and from there having to enter into another canal and cross territory in order to reach the Richelieu river at St. Johns. I think it would be a serious mistake to divert ships in this way. I think it would be unprofitable to the companies to which I have referred and I think it would be endangering the seaway by cluttering it up with more ships than it has already. It seems to me that the seaway has enough trouble as it is without causing any further inconvenience.

So I make the suggestion to the minister and say that the time is now ripe for a study to be made of the project. I personally feel that the most logical, most economic and best route would be to follow the natural route of the river from St. Johns to Sorel. I think it would be less costly and would prove far more effective than any other means.

I sincerely hope that the minister will look into this matter very seriously and if it is at all possible for him to do so to have either the international joint commission or some other body study the possibilities of this project. I invite the minister along with the Prime Minister to visit this area. We would be happy indeed to travel along the Richelieu river with them to follow the route which we believe to be the most desirable and in the best interests.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, may I refer back to a question asked earlier by the hon. member for Laurier. He asked me to state the qualifications of Mr. Clare and also to give the authority for his appointment. I should like to do that now.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I am grateful to the minister for what he is going to do but what I asked was if the minister would be prepared to table the order appointing Mr. Clare and to state his qualifications.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Clare was not appointed by an order of the treasury board but by a letter from the regional manager of the real estate branch of this department in Toronto which I have here. I will be very glad to table that letter.

Mr. Clare is reported to have been a realtor in Port Credit and Toronto township for the past eight years; an appraiser and salesman for Harold A. Clarke, realtor, for two years; a graduate of the University of Toronto extension course in sales and advertising; an appraiser for the South Peel board of education, for the village of Port Credit and for the township of Toronto hydroelectric commission. He is also a director of the South Peel real estate board.

He was appointed by a letter, which I will table, from Mr. A. A. Speer, regional manager, real estate branch, Department of Transport, Toronto, written on October 23, 1957, and addressed to Mr. Clare. I would like very much to be able to table the letters I wrote to the hon. member for Peel but unfortunately they are not available. Because of the heat the department closed down at four o'clock as did other departments and we were unable to get into the files. I will be very glad to table that correspondence tomorrow morning.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister does not anticipate that he will finish his estimates tonight does he?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I am always one of those who hope.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Perhaps I could ask the minister what he is attempting to do at this time. Does he ask that these documents be tabled or did I understand him to ask that they be placed on the record of Hansard?

Mr. Hees: I would like to make this part of the record of Hansard.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Is it agreeable to the committee that the document held by the minister shall become part of the record of Hansard?

Some hon. Members. Agreed.

Dear Sir:

The above mentioned properties were included in an expropriation by Her Majesty the Queen in the right of Canada, by registration No. 79365, on the 12th of February, 1954 in the interest of the proposed future development of Malton airport.

The claimants mentioned herein have indicated their desire to have settlement decided by Exchequer Court. In this connection we have been authorized to engage your services to conduct appraisals of the properties concerned, basing your valuations on property market values prevailing in this particular area as at the date of expropriation, namely the 12th of February, 1954.

It may be possible that additional appraisals may be required and, if this is the case, we will again communicate with you.

Should you require any further information with regard to these properties please do not hesitate to contact the undersigned.

In submitting individual reports would you kindly include your invoice, in quadruplicate, showing the cost of your services in order that payment for same can be arranged.

We look forward to receiving your kind co-operation in this regard.

Yours very truly

A. A. Speer

Toronto

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): I would remind the committee that only official documents can be tabled. We can receive unofficial documents such as the affidavit referred to earlier by the hon. member for Vancouver East. It may be placed before us and filed for the information of hon. members but it is not tabled.

Mr. McGee: Mr. Chairman, normally when an hon. member rises in committee or in the house with a pile of books or documents on his desk it is sometimes indicative of rather extensive notes but far be it from me to involve myself in the problem of reading speeches.

In respect of some issues and particularly one now current in my constituency I receive letters and in this instance I suggest that by comparison Perry Como is a bit of a piker. The letters and documents in the folders on my desk refer to a matter which I am sure is well known to the minister. It concerns the Canadian National Railways by-pass over the north end of Toronto. The greater part of the proposed route to be followed falls within the boundaries of the constituency of York-Scarborough.

Perhaps before putting a specific question to the minister I should give the committee some background concerning this matter. The original proposal for this proposed by-pass and the route it was to follow was put forward by the Canadian National Railways some time ago. It was greeted with mixed feelings in various areas and it is not surprising that many individuals owning and occupying homes in or near the proposed route of the by-pass were most upset and concerned. Judging from the many letters I have received on this subject and as a result of my personal observations in the constituency over the proposed route there is not on the part of the people concerned any specific argument or disagreement as to the necessity for the by-pass itself. The economic benefits that will flow into the area and into metropolitan Toronto in general are conceded to be valid in every respect.

There have been a number of ratepayer groups formed in various sections of my constituency and neighbouring constituencies involved in this matter. When the original route proposal was announced maps were made available to residents in the area. Various groups were formed, some of them outgrowths of existing ratepayer groups, and some special groups were organized to look into the matter with a view to making recommendations in respect of this proposed route.

I must say that the officials of the Canadian National Railways and the minister have been most co-operative in acceding to my demands that every reasonable consideration should be given to persons who are likely to be affected by this route and in the main that pledge and undertaking has been met.

More recently a group of ratepayers was formed in the Thornhill area comprising some engineers qualified to examine and assess various aspects of engineering data which I quite freely confess are beyond my grasp. This committee met on many occasions and expended a great deal of time, effort and money in examining an alternative route which was then proposed to the C.N.R. based on the general conditions set down in the original announcement. This alternative route would largely by-pass the village of Thornhill, move northward along existing C.N.R. lines and would cross Yonge street at a point which in the view of the committee would affect fewer people. This route in the view of the committee would be consistent with the original undertaking given by the Canadian National Railways.

The alternative route proposal was studied by the engineering division of the railway and within the last week the project director of the railway company wrote to the people concerned in the following terms:

> A detailed study of the second route was undertaken and, on completion of our studies, we expressed the view that this route failed to compare favourable with the one originally chosen by us.
> Since the last meeting with your committee of engineers, we have again studied the second route and have confirmed our decision that there are no compelling characteristics to this route over that originally selected by the Canadian National Railways—

I would like to repeat, Mr. Chairman, I am not qualified to judge the relative engineering merits of these two alternate routes but I would appreciate some comment from the minister concerning this when I resume my seat. This group having advanced specific reasons of a humane nature concerning the possible effect on schools, school children, the health of the residents in the Thornhill area; having examined this question in a manner and to a degree that certainly surprised me; having dealt with such matters as degrees of sound emitted by diesel engines, the amount of dust, and so on, suspended in the air, and many other related factors; having done this, having conducted a count of the adjacent homes affected by this original proposed route and, as I say, having obtained more engineering data, they received what in their view and in their opinion, as a result of the letters I have received this week, amounted to an out of hand refusal. I certainly feel that if there are good and sufficient reasons why this original route must prevail we are all prepared to adopt a reasonable attitude in this regard. I would respectfully submit, Mr. Chairman, that this group is entitled to a point by point rebuttal of the proposals they have put forward and an answer to the reasons they have advanced in support of their case.

I do not wish to detain the committee. I am ready to resume my seat and ask the minister whether he would submit to my specific demand for a further review of this matter and certainly a more specific and detailed rebuttal of the proposals put forward by this group.

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I shall be very glad to accede to the hon. member's request. If he will give me the correspondence to which he has referred I shall be glad to forward it to the management of the Canadian National Railways and request that this matter be given fuller consideration and a full and detailed answer given to the people on whose behalf the hon. member has just spoken.

While I am on my feet I should like to answer questions put to me earlier by the hon. member for Assiniboia. He complained about certain work on the locks of the St. Lawrence seaway which, in his judgment, had not been properly finished. I have spoken to the president of the St. Lawrence seaway authority and he has given me the following report: The hon. member referred to the construction work which, according to his information or judgment, did not appear to be satisfactory. In a work so complicated and extensive as the seaway, with a good deal of winter construction, there are likely to be individual items of work which in the first instance do not meet the specifications. It is the responsibility of the engineering staff to insist upon remedial measures and satisfactory work, failing which there are retained funds to protect the public interests. I am assured that this course has been followed in seaway construction and that where work remains to be done sufficient funds to cover the same are held back.

Mr. Phillips: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few brief remarks on the transportation estimates, as transportation has always been one of our most important problems. Recently we have seen considerable progress made in solving some of those problems. First, there was the reduction in the freight rates and more recently the announcement of a new car ferry which will be designed to meet our specific needs in carrying the increased car and truck traffic across the Northumberland strait. The announcement was very well received and the people of our province are grateful to the Minister of Transport for the consideration he has given the province.

An effort was made to stampede the federal government into purchasing a second-hand car ferry which was designed for a different purpose. We are pleased that the new car ferry will provide adequate service and will be designed to meet our own specific needs. There is some concern among the residents of Prince Edward Island that the new car ferry will be operated, as is our present car ferries, by the Canadian National Railways. They are concerned that the railway will attempt to arrange the ferry schedule to meet the requirements of the railway and not the car and truck traffic. I would like to see the minister give consideration to having the Department of Transport operate the new car ferry when it is completed in 1961, or perhaps have a private company operate the ferry instead of the C.N.R.

While the car ferry is under construction there will still be a considerable problem in meeting the increasing traffic, and every effort should be made to adapt the present ferry schedule to meet this traffic. A great deal of assistance can be provided by having the greatest amount of freight and the so-called gas runs carried later on at night. While the car ferry will provide relief in the near future for our transportation problems, I do not think it is entirely a permanent solution. When the causeway report is referred to the Department of Transport I hope the minister and his senior officials will give it immediate attention.

During the past winter the Canadian National Railways tested a new type of reefer car for transporting our main product, and that is our famous potatoes. The new reefer car will carry a greater amount of potatoes and, therefore, this I hope will provide cheaper transportation costs. I am pleased with this type of research and would like to see a great deal more funds and time spent on research in the C.N.R.

There is some concern in the maritime provinces that we will suffer adverse effects from the seaway. I do not believe that this is necessarily so. With a bit of initiative and some new steps I believe that the maritime provinces could benefit greatly from the St. Lawrence seaway.

I was impressed by two articles I saw in the New York Journal of Commerce of January 30 and February 2. These articles referred to the sea-train operations which operate from New York down to the gulf area in the southern states. The sea-train operations consist of loading both freight cars and large trailer trucks on boats and taking them to the gulf port. They are then unloaded and both the freight cars and the trailer trucks complete their journey over rail lines and roads. I feel that this should be investigated with the idea that we might have similar operations from the maritime ports, especially Saint John and Halifax, to the great lakes areas.

Some reference has been made to the efforts of the hon. member for Peel to get a settlement for certain people in his riding. He has received some criticism but the amazing thing to me is the fact that he was able to get the real estate branch of the Department of Transport even to offer a settlement. I have been trying for a couple of years to get some action with respect to several cases and I have not got very far. I suggest that the Minister of Transport put a little pep into this branch of the department. I know he is quite capable of doing so.

Mr. Macdonald (Kings): Mr. Chairman, before the first item is passed I should like to make a few remarks with regard to the transportation problems concerning our province and particularly my own constituency of Kings. I hope the committee will not be bored with the repetition of our island problems but I know it is appreciated that because of our insular position we are very "transportation conscious" and all our people are very sensitive to our problems in that regard.

Last week I spent a few days in my constituency visiting the very many fishing harbours all along the coast. I should like to say a few words about navigational lights. Our larger harbours have been pretty well taken care of for a number of years but unfortunately the smaller ones have been more or less neglected. I want to commend the government on the installation of the new small lights of the Wallace and Tiernan type, which are being installed in a great many of our harbours and which have proven very successful besides being very economical to instal and maintain. I should like to commend them also for the rebuilding of lightkeepers' accommodations. When I visited Souris I found, not very far from the splendid federal building which is being erected, that the foundation had been completed for a new lightkeepers' dwelling in that area. This is the second one replaced under this government.

In the waters off the eastern part of Prince Edward Island we have a great abundance of fish which has attracted a great many draggers during the past few years. Representations have been made by the dragger owners' association for the erection of a ship to shore telephone service at East point. There is a small one operated by a private company at Souris but it is not nearly adequate to look after the problems that the draggermen have when at sea. We all realize that this is a very dangerous occupation and a very monotonous one at times, and there is a great lack of adequate communication with the mainland. The only suitable place for the erection of such a station is at East point and I would strongly urge the minister to give early consideration to the problem of the dragger fishermen in that area.

We in the maritimes have been very interested to note that the icebreaker facilities of the department have been enlarged this year. I want to thank the minister for providing assistance to the sealing industry during the past two winters. On several occasions icebreakers of the department provided assistance at a critical time and it was greatly appreciated by those engaged in that industry. Now that these icebreakers are in operation I should like to mention that prime consideration should be given to the ports of Souris and Georgetown in my constituency which are the latest to remain open in the province. I might say that sometimes at the tail end of the season the whole province depends on the use of these two ports for the export of large shipments of potatoes, particularly to southern United States markets, and it is very important that we have good icebreaking service. We have been fairly successful to date and I hope that with the new facilities available we will have no difficulties whatsoever in that regard.

In passing may I say with regard to icebreaking on the St. Lawrence that I believe there is a limit to what we can do in bucking nature. I know that during the last season winter set in more quickly and severely than had been expected, but I do not think so much expense is warranted in any year to try to keep the St. Lawrence open.

I should also like to submit that a landing strip should be constructed in Kings county. I may say that this was recommended to the royal commission on transportation, often known as the "Turgeon Commission", and we feel that we are at a considerable disadvantage economically in our county because of the fact that we have never had an air strip there. There are many advantages economically and otherwise which would follow the construction of such an air strip and I hope the department will give strong consideration to this in the near future.

One of our main problems with regard to transportation, of course, is the connection with the mainland. As has been said over and over again, one of the terms under which we entered confederation was that we would be provided with "continuous and adequate transportation to the mainland", and ever since there have been a great many problems involved in maintaining that link. I am not going to go into the whole history because it is very lengthy and has been given on very many occasions.

We know that the present service is by large icebreaking ferries which carry railway cars, and it has been considered for a number of years that this service is not sufficient. Various other solutions have been discussed, for example, the building of a tunnel or a bridge and latterly the building of a causeway. I might say that the last suggestion is perhaps the most practical and economical. The previous government talked about the construction of a causeway for some years but I know they did not do a great deal about it because I have a letter in my office from the Department of Public Works stating that they spent only $6,600 in investigating the possibility of building such a causeway. That is insignificant in comparison with the over $600,000 which has been spent or appropriated to be spent on a thorough survey to determine whether or not a causeway is feasible.

There are, of course, many factors to be considered such as: tides, ice conditions, the effect on fisheries, the availability of fill near the point of construction and armour rock for the sides of the causeway, whether a railway track will be included in the project, and so on. However, we are still hopeful that the project will be declared feasible and we are awaiting with interest the final report on the causeway survey. Even if it is declared feasible, of course, it would be a project which would take a number of years to complete. Meanwhile, the traffic to and from Prince Edward Island continues to grow. We appreciate very much the recent action taken to help the situation by the appropriation for a new boat at the earliest possible time. We feel that the construction of a new boat and the expansion of all the available facilities, such as the minister mentioned were being investigated, will be of great assistance in alleviating our transportation problems. I can assure the minister this is greatly appreciated by the people of Prince Edward Island.

I have a rather long range request. I should like to suggest that if the causeway becomes a reality and some of these boats are available, a new service might be inaugurated between Pictou and Georgetown, P.E.I. Both of these points have splendid harbours, and we have no hesitation in saying that we feel the service will be very popular and very well patronized. In summing up, Mr. Chairman, I would just ask the minister and his departmental officials to give urgent and early consideration to three points I mentioned, namely: the ship to shore station at East point; the expansion of the icebreaking service next fall, and the construction of a landing strip in Kings county.

Mr. Herridge: I have been most uncomfortable this afternoon, Mr. Chairman. I have perspired, occasionally retired, and now I feel like expiring. I have been looking around for the reason and suddenly my eyes fell on the calendar, June 10. It was on a former June 10 in 1957 that there was a political volcano erupted in Canada and, unfortunately from our point of view, a lot of Conservative lava flowed over some jolly good C.C.F. members. We are working hard during these months, and we expect they will come to life again before the next election.

I am going to make a few very brief remarks on this item. I have a few other remarks to make on the particular items, but I like to deal with particular matters under the particular items so that the minister has the appropriate officials in front of him, although I know the deputy minister is familiar with most of these matters.

For a number of years I have raised my voice in this house on behalf of the people in the southeastern portion of British Columbia in protest against the inadequate service on the Kettle Valley railway. I want at this time to thank the minister for the part he has played in making arrangements with the board of transport commissioners to hold public hearings in Nelson on June 22. I can say, Mr. Chairman that there has been an excellent response to that opportunity by the people in the southern interior of British Columbia. They will let the board of transport commissioners know what they think about the present service. I can assure the minister and the board there will be strong representations from chambers of commerce, from trade unions and from other bodies who, when they make their representations before the board, will speak for all the people in the southern interior of British Columbia, regardless of party.

I just want to take this opportunity to bring a matter to the attention of the committee, and it entered my mind because I have been dealing for a few minutes with the curtailment of service and the inadequate service on the Kettle Valley railroad. It was brought to my attention by a very old gentleman in my riding who has had a lot of experience throughout the years in northern Canada, and who has made a very close study of the railroad needs of the country. I promised him to bring this matter before the house. While doing this, I want to say that I remember, in conversation with him, reading the minutes of the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines or possibly the committee on government railways, I am not sure—I am getting on in years and my memory fails me on occasion—where there was a reference to the thousands of miles of railroad owned by the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific in the United States, while we in Canada are suffering a curtailment of passenger service in various places and the abandonment of passenger service in other places.

It is my opinion, Mr. Chairman, that not only should we make a study of freight rates and the cost of freight rates to the carrying on of business in this country, but I think there should be some study given by the government and its agencies to the level of passenger service required to meet the needs of the people of Canada. I think there should be some study made and some co-ordination of the present services. There should be some study of the necessity for building railroads to meet the needs of the future. I think we should begin to look at this question now, and the proper authority to give the lead on that question is the government of Canada and particularly the Minister of Transport. I make that suggestion, and when the minister replies I should like to get his comments. I do not make that as a suggestion—

Mr. Hicks: I wonder if I could ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Herridge: Certainly.

Mr. Hicks: Does he not think it was the action of his neighbours, the Doukhobors, that caused the curtailment of passenger service and the higher freight rates in that area?

Mr. Herridge: Nothing of the sort; the Canadian Pacific Railway took advantage of the situation created by a few indecent bombs to curtail the service as quickly as possible; that is the opinion in my district. Anyone can prove that by the fact that there are freight trains running 24 hours a day, while the passenger trains are running in the daylight. All the bridges have lights and there are handcars to proceed over the bridge first to make sure it is safe. If the needs of the people are considered by the persons concerned, if the board of transport commissioners and the officials of the Canadian Pacific railway get together, I am sure they will be able to work out something that will be satisfactory to all concerned, especially if they enter these negotiations in the right spirit and with good will.

I mentioned this need for a study particularly of the railroad requirements of Canada with respect to passenger service, the existing railroads and the need for extension of them.

Before concluding, I want to bring the minister's attention to a map which has been supplied me by this very old gentleman who has studied the problem for years. I promised him I would bring this up in the house. He suggests there is an opportunity in the future for a third national railway to serve the more northerly portion of Canada. I see the minister opening his mouth and looking with despair, but I said an opportunity in the future. According to this gentleman's map, there is an opportunity in the future for a third national railway to serve the northern portion of Canada by connecting up a lot of railways that exist today. His plan here shows the railway starting at Winnipeg, going to Hudson Bay Junction, Birch Hills, Meadow Lake, Boyle, Athabasca, McLennan, Hines Creek, and eventually to Prince Rupert.

I just told this gentleman I would bring his suggestion before the committee. He has been very keen about it. I think he has written some letters to former ministers of transport throughout the years, and possibly to some officials in the department. In making these few remarks, I am keeping my word to this old gentleman. When a person takes the time to buy books, travel at his own expense and study a problem, even though his solution may not be the correct one, I think it is the proper attitude on the part of anyone in public life to do anything they can to recognize that spirit. This old gentleman, who is nearly 90, is still interested in the development of Canada. I wish there were a good many young people between the ages of 15 and 20 who were as interested in the development of this country at this time as this old gentleman. I bring that matter to the attention of the minister and I should like to have his comments when he replies at a later date.

Mr. Hees: I should be very glad to look over that study and the recommendations which the hon. member has just mentioned. It sounded extremely interesting. If he would be good enough to let me have it, I and my officials will be glad to give it careful study.

The Chairman: Shall vote 392 carry?

Mr. Henderson: I do not like to take up much time of the committee but there is something I should like to mention. I obtained a good bit of notoriety in the papers in connection with the Banks case. Apparently Mr. Banks has been moving in on a ship's crew and telling them that if they hire certain people they would jerk the crew off the ship. I have here a sworn statement made by a man who had worked fifteen years on a boat. Banks told him at eleven o'clock on June 2 that he would have no ship if they hired the man. The gentleman's family is hard up against it. He spent fifteen years working for these people. Banks told him distinctly he would take the crew off the ship if the man were employed. What kind of country have we?

The Chairman: Shall vote 392 carry?

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to join with my colleague the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres in dealing with a matter which is of extreme importance not only to himself but to all Quebec members, particularly those in the Montreal area. I refer, of course, to the Champlain cut-off or the Richelieu waterway as it is often called. It is a question which has been under discussion for some years. It is one with which the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres is more conversant than am I. It is one that should be engaging the attention of the House of Commons at this time.

I say that, Mr. Chairman, not only because of the representations which have been made to many hon. members, and more particularly to hon. members opposite, but also to several of the ministers of the present government. I know that groups and associations have banded themselves together in order to make the requisite recommendations in favour of this waterway. I think the time has arrived, first, for the appointment of a board of engineers to consider the economics of this waterway. I do not suggest that the time has arrived to go beyond that point yet. But in order to have a perfect understanding of the problem that is before us there must be at least some sort of economic or engineering study; and that is what I want to plead for on this occasion.

The committee knows the matter engaged the attention of the international joint commission many years ago. The matter came before the international joint commission because it concerned, I presume, boundary waters; it concerned waters which had to do with the Richelieu river and the canals of Canada, including the Champlain and St. Ours canals, as well as the Champlain waterway together with the Hudson river. Because of the fact that several states of the union were interested in the project, the matter was referred to the international joint commission for determination. That was done back in 1937.

The international joint commission at that time considered a number of alternate routes. It is not my intention at this time, because of the hour, to go into these routes seriatim. There were two routes which extended from the south shore of lake St. Francis to the city of St. Johns. Consideration was given to a number of other routes, one of them going from Caughnawaga to the Richelieu river and another following the Richelieu river itself.

The point I wish to make at this time is that the international joint commission felt that the time had not arrived to make a determination of the issue and they asked that the matter be held in abeyance, that the report which they made in 1937 be considered as an interim report and that as and when the great lakes-St. Lawrence seaway was developed the international joint commission should be seized of the problem again.

It is quite clear why the international joint commission made that decision. At that time consideration was being given to the great lakes-St. Lawrence waterway. It was inconceivable that this cut-off should be built when so many discussions and so many negotiations had been carried on in connection with the other project. But now that the other project is in fact completed; now that the official opening will take place; now that we know what is going to happen I think the time has arrived first for the appointment of a board of engineers to consider the economics of the Champlain-Richelieu cut-off and, next for referring the matter to the international joint commission so that it might give the proper consideration to it.

The Minister of Transport or the government might feel that the international joint commission is the body itself to appoint the engineers to deal with the matter. But to my mind there is no doubt that the time has now arrived to give this matter consideration. I say that the time has now arrived to give this matter consideration because of the fact that a board of engineers dealing with a matter such as this will take many months, perhaps a year to report; I do not know how long they might take. Because of that fact I think the government should be giving the matter more active consideration.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to call it six o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask what the business is for tomorrow and Friday?

Mr. Green: We shall continue with these estimates and then take the estimates of the Department of Justice.

Mr. Chevrier: What about Monday?

Mr. Green: I cannot give the hon. member that information.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

JEAN C. LESSARD

Question No. 448—Mr. Argue:

1. Is a Mr. Jean C. Lessard presently employed with the St. Lawrence seaway authority? If so, in what position?
2. Does Mr. Lessard hold any positions with crown corporations or boards?
3. If so, which ones, in what capacity, from what date, and at what remuneration?
4. Is Mr. Lessard a director or officer of any other non-government company?
5. If so, what companies, in what position, from what date, and in what business are these companies engaged?
6. Has any department of the government, crown corporation, the Canadian National Railways or the St. Lawrence seaway authority, contracted, purchased or had any business relationship with any of the companies with which Mr. Lessard is connected since his association with them?
7. If so, what departments or government bodies or agencies, what was the nature of the business, the date, and value of each transaction?

Question

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

The St. Lawrence seaway authority advises as follows:

1. Yes; vice president:
2. Yes.
3. Cornwall Internationl Bridge Company Limited, president, 1 October 1957, no remuneration; Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, director, 1 March 1957, no remuneration.
4. No.
5. Answered by 4.
6. Answered by 4.
7. Answered by 4.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

Fifteenth report of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills—Mr. McCleave.

ROYAL VISIT

COMMEMORATION FUND FOR RESEARCH IN CHILDREN'S DISEASES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, one week from today Her Majesty the Queen will once more set foot on Canadian soil. As Canadians prepare to welcome her, I think it is appropriate that I should make an announcement which I feel sure will be of general interest. The Queen has always shown a personal interest and concern in and devotion to the welfare and physical well-being of children; therefore in place of the usual presentation it has been considered desirable that the commemoration of her visit take the beneficiary form of a fund which would provide new hope for Canadian children.

This matter has been brought to her attention and she has been graciously pleased to approve the proposal of the Canadian government that a fund for research in children's diseases be established. With Her Majesty's consent the fund will be known as the Queen Elizabeth II fund for research in children's diseases.

The purpose of the fund will be to provide financial aid to institutions and individuals in Canada engaged in research in children's diseases, a field of medical science in which many problems remain unsolved.

The amount of the fund will be $1 million, for which amount the government will shortly ask parliament for its acceptance. I should add, too, that without in any way constituting a suggestion, much less a direction in this regard, if any provincial or municipal authorities desiring especially to mark the visit of Her Majesty would desire to do so, the Queen has signified that she would be happy if the fund were to be the beneficiary of any additional contributions which might be offered from such sources.

May I express satisfaction that it is possible, in thus commemorating her forthcoming visit, to manifest in her name as Queen of Canada support for the efforts being pursued in all parts of the country toward the progressive elimination of the scourge of diseases affecting children.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all members of the house will have heard with great pleasure the Prime Minister's announcement. In so far as we on this side of the house are concerned, we warmly support this proposal as a most imaginative and constructive way of commemorating Her Majesty's visit. If there could be additional contributions to the fund by provincial and municipal authorities and perhaps even by private individuals, that might make the fund even more important in carrying out the great work which the Prime Minister has mentioned.

I am quite certain that Her Majesty will get a great deal more satisfaction from this kind of gift than from another mink coat or piece of jewelry. I am also satisfied that Canadian children in the years to come, because of the work done through this fund commemorating her visit, may have cause to remember the visit with even greater joy than would ordinarily be the case.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the C.C.F. group feel that the Prime Minister's announcement is most appropriate. We believe that Her Majesty and Canadian citizens generally will welcome and support the proposal to provide a million dollar fund for research into children's diseases as a most suitable indication of the esteem of Canadian citizens for Her Majesty. I am certain that Her Majesty will derive great personal satisfaction from this tribute in the realization that for many years to come the fund will be used to improve the lives and increase the hopes and happiness of certain of Her Majesty's subjects, those who are stricken in childhood, so their future may be brighter.

CRIMINAL CODE

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-58, to amend the Criminal Code.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Proposed Legislation

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT AND CRIMINAL CODE

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-59, to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code.

Mr. Pickersgill: Explain.

Mr. Fulton: I would appreciate the opportunity of making a short explanation. This bill contains one clause which would provide the governor in council with the power to appoint ad hoc commissioners and to pay them such remuneration and allowances as might be set. When the bill was first submitted it was thought there would be no need for a resolution. Since notice of the bill appeared in Votes and Proceedings a question has arisen as to whether, with that clause in the bill, it would require a resolution. However, the bill is now on the order paper and in view of the time factor this session and since it is not absolutely essential to have this provision in the bill at this session, it is my suggestion that the matter be dealt with by my giving notice that at the committee stage, after second reading, I will move to delete that clause. This would have the result that there would be no financial implications in the bill and, on that basis and with that explanation, I would ask the house to give consent to the introduction of the bill at the present time.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to give consent to the introduction of the bill, on the basis of the minister's explanation?

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCE ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE PROPERTY IN COUNTY OF GATINEAU

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the schedule to the Prime Minister's Residence Act to bring certain property in the township of Eardley, county of Gatineau within the scope of the act.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND OPERATIONS, PROVIDE FOR MAXIMUM GUARANTEE OF BANK LOANS, ETC.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act to extend its operations for a further period commencing on the 1st day of April, 1959 and ending on the 30th day of June, 1962; to provide that the maximum amount of bank loans made in the new period and guaranteed under the act shall be three hundred million dollars; to provide further for certain changes in connection with the administration of the act.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—INQUIRY AS TO WITHDRAWAL OF CANADIAN AIR SQUADRONS FROM FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence whether he can give the house an assurance that the Canadian air division in France under the NATO command will not be affected by any orders that may be issued to the United States squadrons by the NATO commander, moving those squadrons out of France.

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): At present there are six squadrons of the air division located in France. Four of these squadrons are equipped with the F-86 and two with the CF-100. These aircraft are not equipped to carry nuclear weapons, so the question of their redeployment hardly arises at the present time. I think, therefore, I can give the necessary assurances to the Leader of the Opposition.

RUSH-BAGOT TREATY—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF EXCHANGE OF NOTES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether, if it has not already been done, he would table the exchange of notes modifying the Rush-Bagot treaty concluded, I think, last spring, to make possible the passage of 27 United States vessels through the Welland canal?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I will be very glad to do that.

COAL

DOMINION COAL BOARD—SUGGESTED USE AS SALES AGENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Has the minister of mines given any consideration to the proposal by the united mine workers of America that the powers of the dominion coal board be enlarged so that it can act as a coal sales agency?

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): I shall take the question as notice and have an answer prepared for tomorrow or Monday at the latest.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO ATTENDANCE OF PREMIER OF QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the statement made by the premier of Quebec, appearing in several newspapers, to the effect that he will attend the meeting of ministers to be called here in July, will the premier be welcomed at the next meeting and will he be entitled to take part in the discussions?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, I have had no intimation on this subject except what has appeared in the press as alluded to by the hon. gentleman. I expect that any provincial premier coming to Ottawa at any time is assured of a welcome.

Mr. Chevrier: Does it follow from the minister's answer that he is also assured of taking part in the discussions?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That will be a matter, I take it, for decision on the part of the government of Quebec as to its representation at the conference. It will certainly not be the intention of the federal government to put obstacles in the way of the selection by a province of whatever delegates it may choose.

Mr. Chevrier: Would that answer apply also to all other premiers of provinces, whether or not they are ministers of finance?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We do not attempt to draw distinctions between provinces.

[Later:]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Would the Prime Minister consider, with a view to relieving the Minister of Finance of all the embarrassment which will obviously be caused by having his uninvited guest turn up, inviting the premiers of all the provinces and having a real conference in July?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The only embarrassment which I perceived was that caused to the questioner a moment ago, and not to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Pickersgill: But does not the Prime Minister think that in view of the fact that the premier of Quebec has announced his intention of coming it would be a very beneficial thing to invite all the premiers and have a real conference?

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENTS BY CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Michaud (Kent, N.B.): Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Could he tell us whether positions held in what are known as semi-staff post offices of the Post Office Department come under the civil service commission? If so, are those positions filled after public notices have been put up and an oral or written competition has been held to that effect?

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his question. The reply is as follows: Assistants appointed to semi-staff post offices are appointed by the Postmaster General.

Postmasters of semi-staff post offices come under the civil service commission. Those positions are advertised by the commission, offered to patrons of the post office concerned and filled on the basis of a written and oral competition.

However, when the Post Office Department recommends the appointment to a postmastership of an assistant postmaster with ten years' service, the commission may, if satisfied that the employee concerned has the required qualifications, ask the governor in council to approve waiver of the Civil Service Act so as to proceed with the appointment without a competition being held.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

NORTHROP AVIATION—REPORTED READINESS TO LET CONTRACTS IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Can the minister comment on the statement issued a few days ago by Northrop Aviation to the effect that they were ready to let contracts in Canada?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): I have read articles in various newspapers about the letting of contracts worth several millions of dollars in Canada. I can only state for the time being that any aviation company is at liberty to make propaganda for its own planes. In the Department of Defence Production several suggestions have been made for contracts, and we are working on them. If Northrop are interested in placing contracts, as they have stated in the press, we have not been officially advised of it. We are certainly interested.

Mr. Fisher: May I ask a supplementary question. Can the minister say whether Northrop have any contracts for aircraft at the present time which might fit into the Canadian defence picture?

Mr. O'Hurley: At the present time my answer is no.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

FEDERAL GRANTS TO NEWFOUNDLAND AND OTHER PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I would like to ask the Secretary of State if his department has yet received the partial return which the Minister of Finance told us over a week ago had been sent to his department in response to a request by the hon. member for Trinity-Conception; and if so, would the minister table it?

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think I will be able to deposit everything tomorrow.

SPORTS

REQUEST FOR HOUSE OF COMMONS SOFTBALL TEAM SCHEDULE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of tourists and others seeking high class entertainment, could I ask the hon. member for Waterloo North the schedule of this year's House of Commons softball team?

Mr. O. W. Weichel (Waterloo North): I may advise the hon. member for Halifax that the first game will be played on Wednesday, June 17 against the protective staff, and on Wednesday, June 24 we shall be playing our friends in the press gallery.

An hon. Member: Friends?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether this is business of the house or orders of the day.

[Mr. Fisher.]

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. McCleave in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

392. Departmental administration, $2,587,500.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, last evening when the house adjourned I was discussing a matter which had already been introduced by my colleague the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres, and that was the all-important question, for a number of us, of the construction of the Champlain waterway or cut-off, as it is often called; or again, the deepening of the Richelieu.

I think I had almost completed my remarks, and I will not detain the house unduly, but there are one or two additional points I would like to make. However, before making them I think I should say this, that after the house adjourned one hon. member, with whom I am friendly, indicated to me that perhaps it would not be opportune to give consideration to this question when there is at the present time so much uncertainty about additional facilities at Welland. While I welcome that suggestion from the hon. member, which I think is very much to the point, it does seem to me, sir, that the two projects are not exclusive of each other.

Before I return to my original point I would like to pause here for a moment to remind the Minister of Transport that on an earlier occasion I asked him whether or not consideration was being given by the seaway authority engineers to the duplication of facilities at Welland. He avoided the question, as he sometimes does in his very elusive manner. But here may I make this suggestion to the minister. I said before that it is too early to determine now whether or not the facilities at Welland are sufficient. It would take at least one navigation season in order to determine that, if not two, but as the committee knows much of the work on the St. Lawrence seaway has been completed and many of the trusted officers and engineers have been forced to find work elsewhere.

Would it not be an excellent idea if some of those engineers who were associated with the special projects branch of the Department of Transport were retained in order to make a study of the cost and the economics of duplicating the single locks in the Welland canal? There is no doubt if that job were to be done it would take some years and would cost substantial sums of money. Therefore it seems to me to be opportune at this time for the special projects branch of the department to give consideration to that suggestion. I wonder whether the minister when he replies would not be so good as to let the committee know whether this matter will be attended to, if it has not already been started.

I come back now to the question I was discussing in the first place. I do not think that by any stretch of the imagination these two projects are exclusive one of the other. On the contrary, I believe that if the Richelieu and Champlain cut-off were constructed it would add to the potential and increase the traffic of the St. Lawrence seaway. If I could pause here for a moment I should like to bring to the attention of the committee one of the findings of the international joint commission dealing with the Champlain waterway in April of 1937, concerning the costs.

After having come to the conclusion that five routes had been under discussion the commission stated that the estimated capital cost and annual carrying charges for the construction of a 12-foot waterway from the St. Lawrence to the Hudson via lake Champlain would be approximately $12,884,000 and $953,000 respectively; that the estimated annual cost and annual carrying charges for the construction of a 14-foot waterway would be approximately $50 million and $2,738,000 respectively, and that the estimated capital cost and annual carrying charges for the construction of a 27-foot waterway would be approximately $342,205,000 and $17,646,000 respectively. This will give the committee some idea of what was envisaged in 1937 by way of cost for the three depths of waterway, 12-foot, 14-foot and 27-foot.

My colleague the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres dealt with the technical aspects of the waterway from the United States side right up to the international border and then on up the St. Lawrence river. In the remarks I am making now I am not suggesting any route, because the commission in its report had under consideration five different routes and it may be that with the St. Lawrence seaway having been developed new routes not under consideration at that time should be considered today. I am certainly not in a position to say so. I believe that is a matter for a board of engineers. That is why I reiterate the statement I made last evening and on several previous occasions, that a board of engineers be established which would study the economics, the cost and the traffic aspects of this route.

I need not tell the committee that the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys as well as the Minister of Defence Production, I believe, if not the Solicitor General as well, have received very strong representations in connection with this matter. I am sure their interest in this project is as keen as my own. I have not the slightest doubt that these three hon. gentleman have brought to the attention of the government the various aspects of the problem. However, having had some experience in government I know that very often it is not possible for ministers to rise and say everything they would like to say on occasions such as this because of government policy concerning this and other matters affecting other parts of Canada. I am sure they will not disagree with me when I rise and put forward for the attention of the government the various aspects of this problem.

It seems to me that the time has arrived, as stated in the report of the international joint commission, for that commission to be seized de novo of the problem. I believe the international joint commission should be asked to consider it once again. It strikes me that because of the time limitation mentioned in the original report, in which it was stated that this matter should not be considered until after the St. Lawrence seaway had been completed, the time has now arrived for a study of it. It is not too much to ask the government to study it. It would not be a commitment. I think the people interested are entitled to know what are the economic, traffic and financial aspects of the problem, and the only way to do that is through the establishment of a board of engineers or the reference of the question to the international joint commission.

I am sure if the government were to do that it would be a step in the right direction. I need hardly say that I am delighted the Prime Minister is in his seat. I know he takes great interest in problems of national development, and this certainly is one which envisages both Canada and the United States. I ask him if he will not give the matter consideration in the light of the remarks I have just made.

There is one other matter I should like to discuss before I resume my seat. I have taken it up on other occasions, but to me it is a problem of great importance. As the committee knows, once the St. Lawrence seaway was completed a number of canals disappeared. The Soulanges canal disappeared—not physically, I hope, but it disappeared from a point of view of navigation—because the route is now moved from the northern part of lake St. Francis down through the Beauharnois canal. The Lachine canal does not disappear but will continue to service industry so long as industry remains there. The movement of the 27-foot draft ships will be up the south shore through the new locks at St. Lambert and Cote St. Catherine. As hon. members may be aware, several of the Ontario-St. Lawrence canals will disappear including the Farran's Point canal, the Rapide Plat canal, the Williamsburg canal, the Cornwall canal and the Iroquois canal. In fact they are gone now. They are under water save and except about 2½ to 3 miles of the Cornwall canal. With the disappearance of these canals—if not physically, as I have said, at least from the point of view of traffic—also go the employees, and that is the point I want to deal with. I ask, what will happen to the employees of these canals? I know the minister has the problem under consideration; I know the minister and his officers have given this problem pretty serious consideration. I know that in some cases they have succeeded in finding jobs which were adequate for people who have been displaced, which were equal to the jobs they had before; but I also know of a number of cases which I personally took up with the minister where that has not been possible, where that was not done. I am now asking the minister whether he will bring the committee up to date on the position of all these employees of the Department of Transport on the various canals. These employees have been there for many years, some of them I think for as long as 35 or 40 years, and others have been there a shorter length of time.

In answer to a question which I put on Hansard it was indicated to me what the position was at that time. I think it was indicated that in the eastern district, that is concerning the Lachine canal, there were about 230 employees affected. It was indicated that in the central district, which included the Soulanges and Beauharnois canals, there were 136 employees affected, and in the Ontario-St. Lawrence canals, the western district, there were 225 employees affected, making a total of 591. In the return I think it was indicated that it had been possible to find employment under the St. Lawrence authority for 432 of those employees, leaving 159 without work. I believe that was in April of this year, and I hope the position is better now than it was at that time.

So as not to rise again on the matter, I would like to bring certain things to the attention of the house. The minister may remember that on a similar occasion some years ago, in 1954 as a matter of fact, the Department of Transport disposed of certain assets in British Columbia to the British Columbia Telephone Company. These telephone services were operated by the Department of Transport. An agreement had been made with the British Columbia Telephone Company under which the employees of the Department of Transport would be taken on, and the officers of the Department of Transport did their best to make sure that no one would lose employment because of the transfer. They succeeded in large part but they did not succeed in full and when I came before the house with my estimates there was no one more insistent than the British Columbia members that there should be no one who, having been an employee of the Department of Transport, should suffer because of the transfer and because of the exchange.

I was impelled by the strength of the argument to indicate to the officers of the department that I left a great deal more should be done than had already been done. I remind the committee that on that occasion more than one member said that the financial treatment because of the transfer was much better with the new corporation than with the Department of Transport, although certain superannuation benefits were perhaps not as good.

The result was that the Minister of Justice, then the member for Kamloops, as he still is, rose in the house and spoke at some length on the matter. After a full discussion of the whole matter by parliament, after parliament had been given the views not only of the member for Kamloops but also of a number of the members from the C.C.F. party, it was felt that no one should be left without employment because of that transfer.

I am happy to report that in the discussion which followed I think most members of the house felt that the arrangement made was satisfactory. I am not going so far as to say, sir, that no one was left without employment. No, that was not the case. I think I was able to report that, dealing with certain other employees of the Department of Transport who were displaced because of radio matters—260-odd members—employment had been found for every one of them with the exception of 7, and among those there was, of course, the difficulty of age.

I am sure the officers of the Department of Transport and the minister himself will want to see to it that no injustice is done in this case. May I go a step further and make this statement. I hope it will not be found to be an exaggerated one. I believe it is the responsibility of the Department of Transport to see that every one of those canal employees who has been displaced is given a job similar or closely similar to the one he had before. I know that is a difficult task. I know it is not easy when you move from one branch of government to another to meet that requirement. But I know the sympathetic attitude of those who are dealing with this problem. I am sure they will keep that in mind. I am as convinced now as I have always been that when, because of a great public project, a large body of men are displaced there is an obligation, certainly a moral and an equitable obligation, on the part of the state to see to it that similar employment is given to the man who has been displaced.

I do not want to deal with individual cases; I have taken them up with the minister. He has been very courteous in his treatment of those individual cases, but there are a number of individual cases where the employment found is not nearly comparable to that which existed before. On behalf of all those employees I ask that consideration be given to the matter with the end in view of seeing that no one is left without employment.

I wonder whether the minister could bring me up to date on the present position.

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I shall be very glad to. First of all, the hon. member for Laurier suggested that the St. Lawrence seaway authority keep a nucleus of engineering staff for future planning and operations. Several months ago the president of the St. Lawrence seaway authority spoke to me about this matter and made that suggestion to me. I readily agreed that this was desirable, and it has been in operation for some time now.

The hon. member mentioned what might be done to speed up operations in the Welland canal. That is under active study at the present time, and it would appear that the most effective thing we could do would be to introduce mooring walls between certain of the locks. It is estimated that this should increase the over-all capacity of the canal by about six ships per day.

The hon. member spoke about the Richelieu canal, and I should like to read him a short report made to me by the members of our economics division and the public works engineers who are working on this project at the present time. It reads as follows:

> The previous cost estimates are now being revised in the light of recent alternative plans and present-day costs by the Department of Public Works, and when these are completed some estimate can be made of the volume of traffic required to justify improvements to the present canals and studies will be made to determine probable traffic available.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask who are the members of the committee dealing with this matter?

Mr. Hees: There are no specific members. It is our regular economics staff and the engineering staff of the Department of Public Works. Between the two of them they are handling it. If the hon. member wishes I can find out later who they are.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not want to insist, but were they given terms of reference to deal with the report of the board of engineers of 1937?

Mr. Hees: These are the terms of reference under which they are working. First of all, we are trying to find out what the economic justification might be for proceeding with work of this kind, and the probable engineering costs.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not want to pursue it unduly, but has the economics branch of the department the mechanics to do this? My understanding is that the economics branch consists of a group of efficient officers who deal with problems of an economic nature, but are there any engineers attached who can go down to the area and study the problems of traffic, the volume of traffic and so forth?

Mr. Hees: Yes, the public works engineers are doing that end of it and our economics branch is capable of producing a preliminary economic study.

The hon. member also asked about the replacement of displaced personnel from our canals branch. When I last reported to the house on April 9 I reported that at that time there were 61 Department of Transport canal personnel who were still unplaced. Of the surplus of 61 considered eligible for employment, 3 have since been given regular appointments and 29 casual employment, leaving a total of 29. In all the seaway authority has given employment, regular and casual, to 407 former Department of Transport employees, and I might add that as time goes on we are endeavouring in every way to find employment for those whom we have not yet been able to place. I think the hon. member is particularly interested in the Lachine canal section. There are only 4 there physically capable of doing the heavy work required who are still unplaced.

While I am on my feet, yesterday the hon. member—

Mr. Chevrier: May I interrupt the minister? I think he would want me to say this. So far as these employees are concerned, from what the minister has said and what I know there appears to be an improvement over the situation indicated in the return made in the house. I am grateful to the minister for that improvement. The minister has said there are 29 canal personnel still unplaced, but I would ask him to give consideration to the fact that many of those 61 employees who have been placed have not found comparable jobs. Would he ask his officers to direct their attention to that point, and also to the fact that of the 61, 29 are casual workers. While it is much better to have casual work than none at all, and I agree that is a step in the right direction, none the less casual workers only work during the season of navigation lasting seven and a half to eight months, and will be without employment for four to four and a half months. Would the minister ask his officers to see if it is not possible to find employment for all these displaced people from now until the end of the year?

Mr. Hees: I am very glad to be able to assure the hon. member that we will do our very best to do just that. Yesterday the hon. member for Laurier asked if I would have included in Hansard the correspondence I have had with the hon. member for Peel regarding the Malton expropriations. I have here all the correspondence that was referred to in the court case and also any other correspondence that I or my department have had with the hon. member on this matter. I am glad to include this correspondence in the record. I will also be glad to send an extra set to the hon. member for Laurier. I am afraid he is going to be disappointed with it, but I am sending him absolutely everything.

Mr. Chevrier: I am never disappointed.

The Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the house that these letters be put on Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[For text of letters referred to above, see appendix].

Mr. Hees: Before I sit down I want to finish the questions that were brought up yesterday. The hon. member for Vancouver East suggested yesterday that the return to address No. 67, calling for the production of correspondence, documents, etc. dealing with claims made by contractors for payments by the St. Lawrence seaway authority, was not complete, and to substantiate his remarks he produced and laid on the table an affidavit of Redmond Grant which referred to documents which the latter presented to me in December, 1958. Attached to the affidavit was what purports to be a record of the proceedings of a meeting of contractors discussing ways and means of presenting their claims to the government. These appendages to the affidavit are marked "confidential".

The matters which concerned me in connection with Mr. Grant's submission were complaints of faulty work in the construction of piers for the Cornwall island south channel bridge and in the painting of mitre gates. I did not concern myself with the "confidential" documents relating to contractors' claims. I did not know how they came into the possession of Mr. Grant or whether he was authorized to make them public. As I said some time earlier this session when the debate was taking place on the St. Lawrence seaway and when I was asked if I was aware of this report of contractors' meetings, I said I had no knowledge of it and I did not. It is not a matter that I have any recollection of Mr. Grant having discussed with me when I met him in my office some time last fall.

Return No. 67 was, of course, compiled from the official records in the normal way. I reviewed the return before submission, and as far as I knew it represented a proper and complete return in the terms of the address. Any references to contractors' claims in the submission made to me by Mr. Grant were incidental and confidential, and the propriety of including these documents in the return was certainly questionable. As I have said, the matters complained of by Mr. Grant which concerned me were his suggestions of improper workmanship by seaway contractors.

As to the Cornwall island south channel bridge, I was very familiar with that matter and followed closely the remedial measures required. In answer to a question by the hon. member for Vancouver East, complete details were furnished and I shall repeat the gist of the information then given:

> The Foundation of Canada Engineering Corporation Limited was retained by the seaway authority to review all field information, the decisions made and the procedures followed in the construction of the piers, and to give an opinion as to the adequacy of remedial measures undertaken. A preliminary report, dated January 11, 1958, included a statement that ". . . and the remedial measures being taken are reasonable ones".
> In view of the concern subsequently expressed in some quarters as to the adequacy of the piers, the corps of engineers, United States army and the seaway authority appointed an independent board of consultants to investigate and to rule or recommend on the matter. This board comprised Emil H. Praeger of Praeger-Kavanagh, consulting engineers, New York; G. F. Ferris, president of Raymond International Inc.; and D. F. Murphy, chief structural engineer of Foundation of Canada Engineering Corporation Limited.
> The board first met on April 4, 1958, when it approved of the remedial measures adopted. Following a thorough investigation of all features of work performed, the board, in its final report dated October 14, 1958, stated that the piers and the soil on which they rest are now adequate to safely sustain all dead and maximum live loads.

As to Mr. Grant's complaint concerning the painting of mitre gates, the president of the seaway authority reported to me as follows:

> There has been a suggestion that unsatisfactory work was accepted in connection with the painting of certain lock gates, as reported upon by the Warnock Hersey Company Limited, who were employed as inspectors. Certain objectionable features were observed and remedial measures were taken, or are to be taken, to restore the vinyl system of painting to an acceptable condition. The chief engineer of the St. Lawrence seaway authority has reported as follows:
> "Although, as indicated by the inspection company, the surface texture and appearance of the painting does not strictly comply with the requirements of the specifications, this can be observed only by close examination and will certainly not be apparent when the gates are placed in service.

"The important feature is that, despite the somewhat uneven surface, the paint has been applied to at least the minimum specified thickness and its adhesive properties are excellent. It is expected that the durability of the paint will be as great as that contemplated.

"Some of the walkways, handrail and diagonals had been shop painted without first having received a wash coat, with the result that there was improper adhesion. These parts were recleaned and completely repainted to specified requirements.

"The authority may be assured that neither the Warnock Hersey Company nor the authority engineers will accept workmanship inferior to the specified, except for the somewhat rough surface texture in some areas which are of insignificant importance."

It is the practice of the authority to retain sufficient security to ensure proper completion of the work.

The house may be interested in the status of Mr. Grant, who issued the affidavit. He was employed by the seaway authority in their inspection branch in May, 1957 at $300 a month. He resigned in March, 1958 when his salary was $310 a month, giving poor health as the reason for his resignation.

The hon. member for Vancouver East and perhaps also the hon. member for Assiniboia appear to be concerned by reason of the representations they have received from Mr. Grant, and perhaps others, concerning faulty work by contractors on seaway construction. I know there have been difficulties, arising partly from the urgency of having to complete the work on schedule. On the other hand there is a danger in exaggerating the situation and leaving an improper impression on the public. I make the suggestion that I would be very glad, at any time that would suit the convenience of the hon. members for Assiniboia and Vancouver East, to arrange a meeting at Ottawa at which the responsible officials of the seaway authority would discuss with them the complaints they have received, and indicate to them the action which has been taken by the authority. I would be very glad to arrange such a meeting, and to see that all relevant documents are made available to them.

Mr. Fisher: I would like to make a reference to the minister, since I am speaking for the first time on his estimates. About a year ago I was travelling west by train and I was in company, fortunately I will say, with a number of young Progressive Conservatives who were returning from a gathering in the east. They began discussing the future of the party, and they were in almost unanimous agreement that the Minister of Transport was going to be the crown prince or was the crown prince of the party. I was telling them I thought they should wait a bit and see how the crown prince performed with this particular department before they went overboard. In so far as his performance in this department is concerned, and it is one I have followed more closely than any other in the House of Commons, it has not been one that has impressed me very much.

I have a strong impression that the deputy minister has too much work to do and that there needs to be one or two more deputy ministers in the department. I hope when the parliamentary assistants are handed out this department will get a couple of them, because I think the very situation that developed in connection with the Malton land deal is an indication that perhaps there should be a bit closer rapport between the elected assembly and the officials of this department.

The Malton case interested me many months ago. I put a question on the order paper which, unfortunately, could not be answered because a decision had not yet been rendered by the court. I have no question or doubt about the integrity or honesty of the hon. member for Peel. In many ways I admire the stand he tried to take throughout the whole situation, but the problem brings up the whole question of the functions of a member of parliament. The hon. member for Peel had some constituents with a very definite grievance. This grievance was turned down in a court of law, in effect, but long before that he brought it to the attention of the minister. According to the evidence he gave he got some kind of undertaking from the minister, in the presence of some of the minister's officials, as to what would be done. Unfortunately the minister could not follow up on the undertaking to the hon. member for Peel, and we have to accept the fact that there is confusion as to just what was said or just what was accepted at that particular meeting.

In my opinion this particular case has significance because one often hears that opposition members are ineffective and, in a sense, are just futile mouthers of words; that one needs to be a government member in order to get anything done. This seems to be a case where a government member, a member with a strong enough personality and ability to be appointed whip of the party, was not able to achieve his particular goal. In a sense I almost regret it, because I think in this particular case he had some real worth and some real justice behind his request.

What does a member of parliament do when he has a constituent problem such as this, and he gets some kind of undertaking from the minister or from the officials to investigate the matter? There seems to be a kind of no man's land in here in which the position of the member of parliament is extremely indefinite. I do not know whether it could be or should be defined, but certainly I think this is one demonstration of the lack of power and the lack of influence of the member of parliament. I am not speaking particularly of the member of parliament for Peel. I think this is an indicator, in a general way, for all members of parliament.

We are continually getting requests from our constituencies: would we try to do something about a certain situation, a personal grievance or a regional area grievance. We take it up with the officials and the minister and in some cases we get attention, while in other cases we get the brush-off. The Department of Transport seems to be one of those in which we get the brush-off more often than we get attention, but certainly it is not as bad as the Department of National Defence or some of the others.

In this particular kind of case, what position has the member of parliament in so far as his word is concerned? What undertaking could we have? It seems to me one of the faults in this case is that we do not have any kind of written account as to what took place at this particular meeting. I first became interested in this case when it was brought up in the Telegram by one of the columnists. The position she took was harshly critical of the minister. I was attracted by her phrase that these people had been "Heesed out". Later another correspondent for the same paper, Mr. Peter Dempson, wrote a long story which appeared on November 14 and November 15 of last year, trying to present the matter from the minister's point of view.

I cannot make out from this, or from the story given to the house, what is the minister's conception of the position of a member of parliament, and I would suggest that in future dealings with all members of parliament he should try to put something on record so we shall not misunderstand what the minister wants, or means because I am confident that the hon. member for Peel did not realize that the minister did not have the authority to give him an assurance.

In closing my remarks on this subject I should like to reiterate that there is no question at all in my mind about the integrity of the hon. member for Peel. I think he was honest and direct throughout the whole course of these events, but we are still left in the position that the individual member of parliament, whether supporting the government or the opposition, has a very peculiar relationship and a very indefinite relationship to many of the purposes he is seeking to achieve. My own comment on that is that anything we can do to increase, I will not say the power but certainly the scope and the ability of a member of parliament to perform a more important function than he is performing at the present time should be under consideration at all times by the government and the house.

The next point I wish to raise in dealing with these estimates arises from a great deal of contact which I have had in the last ten days or so with people who work with the Canadian National Railway and who are interested in the Canadian National Railway, and I wish to bring this up in fairness to the president of that railway, Mr. Donald Gordon. Following the meetings this session of the standing committee on railways, the impression has gone widely abroad that Mr. Gordon treated members of that committee in a rough, tough and nasty fashion and that he, in a phrase, put the members of parliament in their place.

Mr. Chairman, I attended every meeting of that committee and I did not get that impression, though it is certainly the impression that is abroad in the country. In consequence, many employees of the C.N.R. who have always doubted Mr. Gordon's knowledge of railway problems have been incensed about this and have said, "What are you members of parliament going to do about the president telling you off?" To be fair to Mr. Gordon, he made his remarks on the functions of the committee after he had been persistently asked by me to make his comments on the work of that body.

I have been on the committee for two years and I have gone back over its records in previous years, and I am as willing as any other member of the committee to admit that its performance could be improved. That is why I wanted to get suggestions from the president as to what he thought about the ways in which the committee could be improved. I was disappointed that the committee did not bring to the house any of the recommendations which Mr. Gordon said he would give us. It seems to me that we could take a better look, in committee, at the operations of the Canadian National railroad; but I want to put it clearly on record, as perhaps the most persistent questioner in the committee, that I had no feeling at any time that Mr. Gordon had told us off. As far as I am concerned he only gave us information which he was asked to give. My only regret is that somehow that committee did not function well enough to enable us to enquire more deeply and in a more informed manner into the operations of the railway.

I cannot resist making some remarks about lakehead harbour and shipping, and, in particular, the lakehead harbour commission. We have had a provincial election campaign going on, and right at the centre of it in our region has been the lakehead harbour commission. I remember telling the minister months ago that if the government is going to appoint Conservatives to this commission it should remember that there are smart Conservatives and some Conservatives who are not so smart, and I appealed to him to appoint some smart Conservatives.

We put through the bill setting up the lakehead harbour commission last August. The commission held its first meeting only about three weeks ago. All that delay, coupled with the fact that an expert from the Department of Transport did not reach the lakehead until May 18 to consult with the local people, is an indication to me of the correctness of my remarks on an earlier occasion about the way this department operates. I have a very definite feeling—and this is one of the concrete examples—that the burden of work is too heavy on the senior men in this department. Otherwise how can one explain that a commission which is given authority to get moving last August does not hold its first meeting until May 18, after the first foreign ships are through the seaway?

In a political sense this has not redounded to the credit of the Progressive Conservatives either federally or provincially, but that is aside from the point. We need a lakehead harbour commission which has members with a great deal of initiative and background, people who will work hard and really set up something which will make our lakehead one of the best ports on the lakes. But if the performance of this commission up to now is an example, it shows that there is a sad future ahead.

One of the things in connection with this commission which has bothered me is the fact that several of its members are definitely employees of interested parties. I raised this point with the minister before and he decided not to make it an issue, but the fact remains that the C.N.R. owns a great deal of property in the harbour, while Canada Steamship Lines has a very active business into the harbour and also owns a shipyard there. Yet employees of both the Canadian National Railways and of the Canada Steamship Lines are members of the commission. These two employees happen to have been appointed by two cities; they are appointed members. That, of course, is the responsibility of the cities. Evidently the minister did not feel that he could or should check that. But the other three members are chosen by the minister, and I should like to ask the minister if he could explain how he came to make these particular choices. I should also like him to explain the relationship of his government to the provincial government with regard to the provision of transport facilities out of the lakehead harbour in this interim period before the terminal is completed.

One of the most enjoyable things about the election campaign is that it brought Premier Frost into our area on two occasions, and on each occasion he made the point that he was a partner with the federal government in this magnificent lakehead harbour development and all that was going to follow from it.

We are still left with the situation that between the Manitoba border and the lakehead we have no decent road as far as any kind of heavy traffic is concerned, and I should appreciate it very much if the minister would explain to me what conversations he has had with the provincial authorities about the provision of proper routes out of the lakehead harbour.

There is very definite concern in our particular region over the Welland canal toll structure, and a very definite feeling that the government should consider whether it would be possible to abandon these tolls at the end of this shipping season. I know there is a feeling which extends very widely in western Canada, judging by newspaper reports that such a step should be taken, and I know this feeling is also very strong in the Hamilton and St. Catharines regions. I hope this is something which the minister will have his experts consider.

One of the points which come up many times along the lakes is the whole question of shipbuilding. I have often wondered whether some of the present cabinet ministers have not given their speeches of a few years ago to the hon. member for Laurier. The hon. member has been making speeches around the country, including one at the lakehead, about the need for Canada to have both a salt water and a fresh water fleet. This is very much along the old line taken by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and some of the other members of the cabinet, including the present Minister of Transport.

We have had indications that the shipbuilding industry along the lakes is in for pretty heavy weather, specifically at the lakehead, and I would like to ask the minister if at some time during the discussion of his estimates he would review the shipbuilding situation and the prospects for the shipyards along the great lakes. I know there is very definite confusion at the lakehead as to our inability to obtain any substantial contracts. The issue is confused, and in view of the fact that the shipyards are a subsidiary of a much larger concern, in effect Canada Steamship Lines, I would very much appreciate it if the minister could give us an outline in this particular field.

One of the questions I would like to ask the minister, which could be answered when we are dealing specifically with the radio regulations, and I want to give him notice of it, is whether it is still impossible for anyone to get a radiotelephone in his car if he is not a British subject or a Canadian citizen; that is, as an individual. If this is so I would like an explanation in that regard. I would also like from the minister later on an explanation as to when his department is going to abbreviate its regulations and make it easier for a model enthusiast to use radio frequencies in controlling various models which he may use in his hobby. If the minister would give me that information later it would be very much appreciated.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourbonnais: Mr. Chairman, yesterday we heard the former president of the St. Lawrence seaway bewail the fate of employees who after working on the canals, were transferred, and have not yet found a job on the seaway. I remember that when the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) was president of the seaway, in 1957, men who had been employed on the Soulanges canal went to see him so as to find out what was going to happen to them. He then told these men that they should not expect to be transferred to the seaway, on the grounds that the employees at the Beauharnois canal had not been so favoured when they had found themselves without a job.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but that is not at all what I told those men. There has been no question of a transfer. I am certain that the hon. member does not wish to be unfair to me.

Mr. Bourbonnais: Of course, I do not want to be prejudicial to the hon. member in any way. But when the employees of the Soulanges canal went to see the former president of the seaway, he told them that the member for the riding of Beauharnois would have a say in the replacement of employees and that they should not expect to be favoured with employment at Beauharnois. I was told of this by good old Liberals who had no reason whatever to lie about it. That was the sort of guarantee they received under the former administration.

[Mr. Fisher.]

Mr. Dupuis: On a point of order. Have you any proof of this? Have you any documentary evidence of the truth of your allegation?

Mr. Bourbonnais: The best evidence is that I was told about this by good Liberals.

Mr. Dupuis: Name them.

Mr. Bourbonnais: Certainly. Albert Sabourin and Ivan Castonguay.

Moreover, since the change of administration, about 60 of the 130 permanent and temporary employees of the Soulanges canal have been transferred to the seaway, while 20 or 30 kept their work at Soulanges, and several others were transferred to Lachine. Those men could be asked about the guarantee that was offered them by the Liberal party under the former administration and about the security they are now enjoying thanks to the present administration.

Yesterday, Mr. Chairman, I heard the former president of the seaway complain and express his disappointment about the bad publicity received by the seaway late last season, when a great many ships were icebound in the Lachine canal and in Montreal harbour as a result of sudden very cold weather and an early fall.

Contrary to the statements of the hon. former member for Stormont—now member for Laurier, by grace of importation—I hold excellent publicity was given that misadventure in Montreal harbour. Every day—not to say every hour—radio, TV and all newspapers reported the progress made now by nature, now by the icebreakers, or again by canals or Montreal harbour employees. To prove this, I would say that, as soon as the seaway was opened this year, as soon as it was ice free, so many large freighters sailed into the waterway that there was a bottleneck at the entrance. This proves that, if there really was some bad publicity last fall, shipowners refused to believe it. Anyhow, it was not as unfavourable as the hon. gentleman from Cornwall would have us believe by making statements which have no basis whatever on facts.

I wonder why our hon. friend should have done this? Is it to distort the facts? It is a well known and widely used Liberal practice to sow doubt in people's minds, to make equivocal statements, and to lie in thought as well as in words, wilfully and with impunity.

Mr. Chairman, yesterday we heard the hon. member for Laurier demand a public statement by the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) about a so-called contradiction referred to by the president of the Court of the Exchequer. I wonder whether he himself could not make a statement on professional ethics because one day, at the time when my hon. friend was president of the seaway—around 1956—a professional engineer working for the seaway authority was denied the right to leave his job—by the then president, the Hon. Lionel Chevrier—to take another job with the Miron Manibeque Company, a firm which then had contracts with the seaway. My good friend, sometime president of the seaway, argued that professional ethics did not allow a professional engineer working for the seaway authority to quit his job and take on another one with a contractor working under that same authority.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend, who professes sacred respect for professional ethics is now a member of the legal firm Geoffrion and Prud'homme, lawyers for the Canit-Canamont company which has now claims against the seaway authority. In other words, the former president of the seaway, who laboured from 1954 to 57 to see this great scheme carried through, and who necessarily is privy to all its secrets, is now preparing to tear down part of his handiwork on behalf of a few contractors who happen to be his friends. If this can be described as professional ethics, it surely needs a genuinely Liberal mind to see it in that light.

After I am through with my remarks, I should like to hear my good friend make a statement on professional ethics, instead of calling for such a statement from the present Minister of Transport.

Yesterday, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member (I mean the former member from Cornwall) referred to the popularity of the seaway. He should have consulted the railway companies, the manufacturers of rolling stock, railway employees, canal employees, and people in Montreal, Lachine, Vaudreuil, Soulanges and Cornwall, before making statements on the popularity of the seaway. I am not saying that the seaway should not have been built, but this is a far cry from saying it is popular. Perhaps it is popular with the shipping companies and a few others, but I would point out that one of its drawbacks, one of the main obnoxious features lies in the fact that railway companies stand to lose plenty because of it.

The cost of railway operations in that area is bound to go up. That is partly the reason why the railways, both the C.N.R. and the C.P.R., are planning to hike their passenger rates 17 to 37 per cent. Recently, under pressures from every municipality in the district from Montreal to Rigaud, the board of transport commissioners held hearings in Montreal and all the parties concerned were able to express their views.

If those increases are authorized, several of those municipalities will be quite seriously affected. The municipalities of Pointe Claire, Ste. Anne de Bellevue, Dorion, Comeau, Hudson and Rigaud, especially the last four, many of whose people commute by rail to their jobs in Montreal, will find their future development greatly jeopardized unless other steps are taken to make it less expensive for those people to travel to and from work.

If it were proven that the railway companies are operating their commuter service at a loss, I would support any measure designed to maintain the present level of rates.

Since large amounts of money were spent for research on war equipment which proved unnecessary, manufacturers of rolling stock could also be subsidized, but for much more human and permanent reasons.

Practically all our passenger cars and diesel locomotives are of entirely American design. I feel it would be in everyone's interest if certain research was undertaken to produce passenger cars of purely Canadian design which would be much more economical and, at the same time, more comfortable for commuters.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to call the attention of the house to some of the arguments put forward by the municipalities in their submission to the board of transport commissioners, in an effort to avoid an increase in commuter rates.

Unquestionably one of the most interesting resolutions was the one prepared by the municipality of Ile Perrot, part of which reads as follows:

Whereas, since the last rate increase, the service has been cut down instead of being improved,

Whereas a rate increase can only be an economic burden for the present users of the regular service;

Whereas, on economic grounds too, the rate increase will fail of its purpose by cutting down the number of train users.

Whereas any increase is likely to jeopardize the demographic expansion of our region;

Whereas the municipalities' power of taxation over railways is limited;

Whereas the service to employees has been curtailed and that, in the interest of commuters, the service should be improved, and no existing train should be changed or eliminated;

Resolved—

Mr. Chairman, those are some of the reasons set forth by the municipality of Ile Perrot.

As for the municipality of Rigaud, the reasons given are as follows:

(Text):

Since 1945 the commuter rates have increased to the point where if the proposed revision is granted the cost per trip from Hudson to Montreal will have increased by approximately 400 per cent from the rate in effect in 1945. This means the virtual elimination of commuter rates.

The financial gain to the railroads from this rate increase will have an infinitesimal effect on their total revenues consequently one can only assume that by this action they are attempting to avoid their obligations as a public utility. Is it too much to expect that they have a responsibility to the public as well as to their share holders, etc.

(Translation):

Now, Mr. Chairman, here are other reasons put forward by the municipality of Hudson:

(Text):

The Canadian Pacific Railway intends to impose a 34 per cent increase in rates on Hudson commuters. This follows a recent 100 per cent increase. The following points might be considered:

1. That the above rate increases are abnormally high over a relatively short period.
2. That it is doubtful logic to isolate one minute phase of a public utility's operations.
3. That commuters out of Montreal seem to be merely pawns in a game involving freight rates and western farmers.
4. That there are many obvious economies that the Canadian Pacific Railway could effect in their operations.

(Translation):

Those, Mr. Chairman, are the reasons put forward by the municipalities in urging the railway companies to reconsider their intention of raising commuter rates.

If I refer to this matter after speaking about the St. Lawrence seaway, it is because the seaway might well be a big asset for the country as a whole, but to the prejudice of a section of the population, and not the least important one in the country.

(Text):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member during the course of his remarks, complaining about the questions I posed and the attitude I took concerning the case of the hon. member for Peel, left the impression that my position was more vulnerable than that of the hon. member for Peel because of the fact that the firm with which I was associated in the city of Montreal was acting on behalf of certain claimants who had claims against the St. Lawrence seaway authority.

I want to say here and now that I am not in the legal sense a partner in the firm of Geoffrion and Prud'homme in the city of Montreal. I have a working arrangement with this firm and I have an office in the firm. The claim was made by the hon. gentleman that the firm of Geoffrion and Prud'homme acted for Miron and Manibeque. I believe that to be the case, but this case was in the hands of the firm of Geoffrion and Prud'homme long before I had any association with the firm.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourbonnais: Mr. Chairman, according to the Parliamentary Guide—

(Text):

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Bourbonnais: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

(Translation):

It is stated in the Canadian Parliamentary Guide that the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) is a member of the legal firm Geoffrion and Prud'homme. I got my information from the Parliamentary Guide and if the hon. member for Laurier says that he has an office next to that of Messrs. Geoffrion and Prud'homme, well, he is their legal advisor. That is his privilege, but let him not talk about professional ethics.

(Text):

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I did not say I had an office alongside of the firm office. I said I was not a partner in the legal sense of the word, that I did not participate in the profits of the firm, that I had a working arrangement such as many lawyers have in larger cities, and that the hon. member should accept my word because I make this statement now on my responsibility and on my honour as a member of parliament. I add further that I have no interest in the claim which Geoffrion and Prud'homme have on behalf of Miron and Manibeque, which they had long before I had any working arrangement with the firm.

Mr. Regnier: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few brief remarks. I want first of all to thank the minister for his courtesy and prompt action whenever I have made a demand on behalf of the constituents of St. Boniface. In my constituency is located the progressive town of Transcoma. There are Canadian National Railways shops situated in this most important industrial town in the area which employ hundreds of people from Transcoma. I should like to thank the minister for his assistance in maintaining a high level of employment in Transcoma so far; but at the present time there seems to be a fear that lay-offs may take place soon. I should like to bring this to the attention of the minister. Anything he can do with the Canadian National Railways to avoid this lay-off will be greatly appreciated.

In the city of St. Boniface work was started last fall in connection with the Symington yards. This work will require the expenditure of many millions of dollars and will employ hundreds of people from the city of St. Boniface. The people of St. Boniface are interested in the improvements which are being made at the present time to the Winnipeg airport; I believe the expenditure there will amount to over $10 million.

Yesterday I listened with a great deal of attention and interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in connection with the disembarking privileges of the S.A.S. or Scandinavian Airlines. I remember an incident which happened about two years ago. A passenger had booked passage from Sweden to Winnipeg. He got off the plane when it stopped for refueling at Winnipeg and as Winnipeg was his destination he attempted to remain there, but he was arrested by the St. James police and forcibly put back on the plane. I believe this was an infringement of human freedom and rights.

I understand, of course, the explanation the minister gave yesterday that Scandinavian Airlines cannot disembark passengers in Winnipeg because no application has been made for such privileges by the Swedish government. It is a matter of negotiation between the governments concerned. However, if the Swedish government does not initiate negotiations I believe the Canadian government should do so, because after all this is something of great importance to the Canadian people living in Winnipeg, St. Boniface and in the province of Manitoba as a whole.

In the city of Winnipeg we have no direct communication with any large centre. We have to book passage from Winnipeg to Toronto or Montreal and then land at some place in Europe where we do not intend to go. Since there are the facilities of Canadian air lines right in Winnipeg, I believe Canada should take the initiative to provide the same privileges to the citizens of Winnipeg that are accorded to the citizens of Toronto and Montreal, where they have planes going direct to Europe.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the hon. member permit a question with reference to the incident to which he referred? He said he thought it was an infringement of human rights. Does the hon. member not think it was also a breach of the Canadian Citizenship Act to put a Canadian citizen, who always has the right to come into Canada, on a plane and take him out of the country?

Mr. Regnier: Mr. Chairman, that may be so. I know it seems unreasonable. I do not care under what heading the breach is made, but there was much indignation in Winnipeg at that time and it is time such things were corrected. The minister gave us a full explanation yesterday, but I would appreciate a further explanation.

Mr. Hees: I would like to explain to the hon. member that there is direct service from Winnipeg to London. For quite some time T.C.A. has had direct service from Winnipeg to London. You do not have to go to Toronto or Montreal; you can fly direct.

Mr. Regnier: I thank the minister for his explanation. I am glad to know that I was wrong in part, but my submission is that if you desire to go direct to Stockholm I do not see any reason why landing privileges and the embarkation of passengers and even the unloading of cargo should not be permitted in Winnipeg. After all, this is a matter of making trade for Winnipeg. It is of great importance to the city of Winnipeg to have direct air service with the world. I think it would bring great credit to Canada if we were to stop thinking all the time of the almighty dollar and saying, we want to prevent competition. I believe we should take the initiative with the Scandinavians if Sweden is not going to do so. Thank you.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): At the very beginning of my remarks I should like to offer my congratulations to the minister on the way he handles the administration of his department. I know he has taken a few lessons in French. I am now going to proceed with my remarks in that language, and I hope to hear from him when I am through with my brief remarks.

Mr. Pickersgill: In the same language.

(Translation):

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words about two matters concerning not only my constituency, but also the Saguenay-Lake St. John area in general.

First, I should like to say a word about the rebuilding of the railway line serving the four constituencies from both Montreal and Quebec.

We have listened with great attention—and when I say "we", it is not the plural of majesty but the "we" of plurality—we listened, as I say, with great attention, to the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) recalling the promises made by Liberal members or candidates during election campaigns.

I believe everyone back home wants and has always wanted the Montreal-Chicoutimi and Quebec-Chicoutimi railway line rebuilt. Everyone talked about it during the election campaigns.

The former member for Roberval, Mr. Villeneuve, brought up the matter in this house. Mr. Gagnon—and I shall not show the same bias as was shown by other members—who is a former independent member from Chicoutimi, also dealt with the matter of rebuilding the railroad between Chicoutimi and Montreal. My predecessor in this house, who was also an independent, called for the rebuilding of this railroad. Mr. Andre Gauthier, the former member for Lake St. John, also made the same request. Mr. Spence, a former Conservative member for the Roberval constituency—I think the hon. member for Roberval might at least have mentioned the work done in this field by one of his predecessors—Mr. Spence, as I say, also urged the rebuilding of the Montreal-Chicoutimi line.

As regards the rebuilding of this particular railway line, Mr. Chairman, there is a point I wish to mention to the hon. Minister of Transport. The automobile dealers association, which extends to the four ridings in my area, has been trying since 1955 to get preferential rates for the transportation of automobiles from Oshawa or Windsor, Ontario, to Chicoutimi, Jonquiere and other parts of the four constituencies of the district. Talks were then held between representatives of the Canadian National Railways—whose names I do not think I should give here—anyway between authorized representatives of the Canadian National Railways and the association. Unfortunately they ended in a stalemate with the result that the contract for the transportation of some 2,000 cars from Windsor or Oshawa, Ontario, to the Lake St. John-Saguenay area was given to a competitor of the Canadian National Railways, which means that our national railway must have lost about $340,000 on this item alone since 1955.

That question was thoroughly gone into by Canadian National Railways officials, and I should say that they must have done their best to try to reach an agreement; nevertheless, the Canadian National Railways have been losing about $340,000 a year since 1955.

It seems to me that the Minister of Transport or his officials could try to bring that question again to the attention of the Canadian National Railways authorities, in an effort to find a solution to that problem. Since 1955, the Canadian National Railways have lost more than $1 million in freight revenue in our region.

Preferential tariffs exist for some other parts of the country and I wonder why it would not be possible to have in our region what is called an "agreed charge" or a preferential tariff.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like to say a few words about the civil airport or the absence of a civil airport in the constituencies of Chicoutimi and Lapointe.

There is an RCAF airport there where aircraft of presidents of companies or individuals are not allowed to land or take off. I submitted the matter to the minister, to his able officials, and I know that it is under study.

If the Department of Transport are still interested in the developments of civil aviation, as they used to be at one time, I wonder if they could not hasten the day when it will be possible to build a civilian airport—I am no fanatic—not necessarily within my riding, but within the boundaries of Jonquiere-Chicoutimi, where a civilian airport is urgently needed. If they should build it in my riding, of course, I would not complain. However, I realize that a lot of money has been invested in St. Honore, and I have a feeling there would be no complaints should the department choose to put in a civilian airport in St. Honore, in the riding of Chicoutimi. I am sure that the people in my riding would understand that, for the sake of economy, it was necessary to build the civilian airport in Chicoutimi riding.

Should the airport be erected in that part, in my opinion it would still promote civil aviation development in the whole area. Moreover, since early May in 1959, a company has been granted a permit for what is called a flying school. It no doubt will use the facilities of St. Honore airport. But the time has come for the department to send out inspectors who shall then report to the minister for him to take decisions. I know that the minister is a man of energy and capable of quick decisions. We have had some proofs of it before and I wish he would give us others.

I have listened to the hon. member for Roberval speaking of the former minister of transport, the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) and mention his attitude concerning the building of the St. Felicien-Chibougamau railway. There is practically no abuse which he has not used against the hon. member for Laurier. I was not in the Department of Transport when it was headed by the member for Laurier, but I know, for one thing, that the construction of the Beattyville-Chibougamau-St. Felicien Railway was decided by a Liberal administration. I also know that it was under a Liberal administration, that is under my former chief, Mr. Marler, that the decision was taken to construct the second part of the St. Felicien-Chibougamau railway. Let me repeat, I am no fanatic like a few other members whose fanaticism in certain cases is equalled only by the high opinion they have of themselves. Fortunately that does not apply to all members. However I should like to remind my hon. friend for Roberval that Mr. Gagnon was not the only one who was interested in the construction of the Chibougamau-St. Felicien Railway.

(Text):

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Order. The hon. member for Laurier did answer the points which the hon. member who has now taken his seat seems to be bringing before the committee again. I think there was a satisfactory solution to the problem when it arose at that time, and I would ask the hon. member to keep away from that particular subject when he resumes his remarks.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, would you allow me to express an opinion on the words you have just spoken? I did not reply to the hon. member for Roberval; I asked questions, to which replies were made. I did not have the opportunity of replying, and I do not think it can be considered that questions are in the nature of a reply. I would ask the Chairman if he would not allow the hon. member to continue.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): The Chair does acknowledge itself in error. I misunderstood which member the hon. member who has just taken his seat was referring to. I confused him with another speaker.

(Translation):

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): I remember also, Mr. Chairman, that my predecessor, Mr. Girard, had called for the construction of the railway between St. Felicien and Chibougamau. Mr. Andre Gauthier, Mr. Georges Villeneuve and Mr. Spence have already mentioned it. But, one thing I know is that Messrs. Gauthier and Villeneuve came to see Mr. Marler, I don't know how many times, to ask him to come to a decision regarding the construction of the railway between St. Felicien and Chibougamau. They even had appointments,—how many, I don't know,—with the former minister of transport to point out to him that a railway should be constructed between St. Felicien and Chibougamau. There is in this house, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Tremblay: On a point of order. What I should like to ask, Mr. Chairman, is really—

(Text):

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Is it a question or a point of order?

(Translation):

Mr. Tremblay: I should like to ask in this house—

(Text):

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Is it a point of order?

Some hon. Members: Order! Order!

(Translation):

Mr. Tremblay: On a point of order. Mr. Chairman, I never said in this house that those who discussed—

(Text):

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Order. Members are now offending against the Chair's ruling. We are dealing in committee with the general administration of the Department of Transport and I would ask that hon. members taking part in the debate confine their remarks to departmental administration and not speak as they have been doing in the last few minutes.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Chairman, when the committee took recess at one o'clock, I had been speaking about the construction of the railway between St. Felicien and Chibougamau. I should like to say a few words now about the construction of a civilian airport at Roberval.

I remember very well that, when I was with the Department of Transport, the mayor of Roberval at that time, Dr. Plante, had approached the minister to obtain additional grants for the Roberval airport. I have here, Mr. Chairman, the amounts paid on a proportional basis between the city of Roberval and the department. In 1955-1956, the department paid $25,000; in 1956-57, the department paid $20,000, while in 1956 and 1957, a sum of $4,600 was allotted to the airport. Thus, an amount close to $50,000 was paid under the former administration. In 1957-58, to give the full statistical data, the department paid or promised to pay $65,000. I think it is quite fair to submit that the former Liberal administration did its full duty, as was right, for the construction of the airport at Roberval. The same remark holds good, of course, for the Alma airport.

Mr. Chairman, before resuming my seat, I should like to refer to the most unseemly remarks concerning the hon. member for Laurier, which were made by the hon. member for Roberval and by the hon. member for Vaudreuil-Soulanges (Mr. Bourbonnais). Almost nothing was left unsaid to besmirch his good name. If all members had the sterling qualities of the hon. member for Laurier, I believe there would not be cause for complaining about the way the affairs of this country are managed.

The hon. member for Laurier was minister of transport for nine years and president of the St. Lawrence seaway authority for close to three years. He devoted every minute of his time to those two great organizations of this country. If there be in this house a member who can boast of his record, I believe it is surely the hon. member for Laurier. But there will always be individuals bent on petty politics and in some cases on tearing down their fellow citizens.

Mr. Bourget: They will never be able to do it.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): I am not ashamed to say I would like to have the merits of the hon. member for Laurier, and I am sure that if the hon. member for Roberval had them he would be occupying some other seat in this house.

An attempt was made to refer to a report published by le Devoir that the hon. member for Laurier is against Quebec, but I would suggest to the hon. member for Roberval that he read le Devoir for October 23, 1956. He will find there an article which will prove very interesting for him, with regard to his party and certain of its leaders.

Mr. Chairman, I will conclude my remarks by saying that I support the suggestion made by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) concerning the personnel of the Department of Transport.

The Department of Transport is one whose activities are related to so many economic sectors of our country that it is important for the minister to have at his service the people required to carry the heavy load of work which must be done every year. It was my great privilege and opportunity to work there for almost three years, and I know most of the chiefs of the divisions of that department as well as the deputy minister. It is a very great satisfaction for me to commend them and to say, even if some members do not like it, that the employees and the officials of the Department of Transport are doing an almost super-human job. I hope that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) will see to it that more help is given to the deputy minister and to the chiefs of divisions who sacrifice themselves continuously.

I hope also that the Minister of Transport will do me the favour of saying a few words on the civil airport at St. Honore when the opportunity arises.

(Text):

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Chairman; I should like to answer the hon. member's question about airports. I recognize the problem in the Chibougamau area in regard to airport requirements. The needs of the R.C.A.F. at Bagotville are such that they have been unable to open their military airport at that place to all types of civil traffic.

We have reviewed the general area from the point of view of other locations for a field, and have the matter under continuing study. However, the type of requirement that is involved is not for an airport to handle scheduled airline traffic but rather to handle local and itinerant scheduled and private aircraft. Airports in this category under present government policy are normally established on a cost-sharing basis, and it is therefore important that some municipality or group of municipalities be found which would be willing to assume responsibility for the local part of any cost-sharing project.

Now, Mr. Chairman, while I am on my feet I should like to answer two questions that were put to me by the hon. member for Port Arthur. First of all, on the matter of the road west from the lakehead, this is obviously the responsibility of the appropriate municipal and provincial authorities who are, I feel, quite competent to deal with it. I have not, therefore, presumed to intervene in this regard.

He also asked me a question as follows: "Can one have a car telephone if not a British subject?" The answer is yes, under three conditions (a) if a landed immigrant, who has not been a landed immigrant for more than six years and is employed by a British subject who is the licensee of the radio station; (b) if a United States citizen licensed in the United States for an amateur radiotelephone, in which case he may operate an amateur radiotelephone in his car in Canada; (c) if the vehicle is employed in the operation or maintenance of a pipe line or other industrial facility extending across the border of Canada and the United States, or if the vehicle is engaged in the public carriage of persons or goods between Canada and the United States, and if the person is duly authorized by the minister or the government of the United States and the radiotelephone is used for communication with stations of either country that are licensed to be operated in the same type of service.

Another question was what is being done to simplify the radio regulations. The answer is that new radio regulations were promulgated on April 1, 1958 and are continuously under review with simplification being a prime objective.

(Translation):

Mr. Eudes: Mr. Chairman, may I be allowed on this item to point out through you to the Minister of Transport a matter which was raised last year at the same time by my colleague the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets).

At first sight the matter seems to be of a local nature, since it affects particularly the people of Hochelaga and Maisonneuve-Rosemont counties.

On second thought however, if one takes time to consider the relations existing between the general and local interests, a question of principle is involved that cannot be evaded or made light of.

I am referring to the railroad tracks which run from Moreau street, cut through Hochelaga, Maisonneauve-Rosemont and Mercier counties, along the St. Lawrence river, and toward the north-east of Montreal island right up to the end of the island. Built in 1913 by the Canadian Northern Quebec Railways Company, those tracks have since then been taken over by the Canadian National Railways.

Although, unquestionably they have considerably hindered the commercial expansion and housing development in Hochelaga and Maisonneuve-Rosemont counties, those railway tracks were for some years very useful and even essential. For instance, three passenger trains, including one that went as far as Chicoutimi, used those tracks daily in both directions. The tracks were also used by many east or westbound freight trains on the north shore of the St. Lawrence river.

That was in another era. In 1913, the section of the Montreal island crossed by those tracks in Hochelaga and Maisonneuve counties, was almost entirely comprised in the town of Maisonneuve which has since been annexed to the city of Montreal.

At the time, that section of the island had a population of a few thousand.

Those tracks were then running across vacant lots, intersected by a few sparsely built streets.

Today the population there is well above 200,000.

If we consider this population on the basis of the area it occupies, we surely arrive at one of the highest ratios of population density in Canada.

This increase in population, and the general progress, have wrought a complete change in the make-up and the topography of this Montreal area.

Since the central station was built, the Moreau station was torn down. High-level railways were built in the north-western district on Montreal island. New streets were opened up. Numerous public buildings and thousands of new housing units were erected.

Passenger trains which used to stop at the Moreau station come now to the central station.

Except in rare cases, freight trains are now using these new high-level railways which were built further north on Montreal island.

However, these tracks are still there to serve, between Moreau and Viau streets, less than a score of rather averaged-sized plants, about eight of which are located in the Hochelaga riding. They are also used daily to carry a tank car train from the oil refineries in eastern Montreal. Near Moreau street, in Hochelaga, those cars transfer from C.N.R. to C.P.R. tracks.

Such today, on the basis of their necessity fifteen years ago, is the relatively negligible purpose served by those railroad tracks.

Besides, this "usefulness" factor is of very minor importance.

Indeed, the presence of those tracks gives rise to a problem which involves a much more important factor, the human factor. The mere study of the route followed by those rail tracks immediately reveals the implication of the human factor.

Starting in the neighbourhood of Moreau street, the tracks run eastward, along a line following Lafontaine street, across Ontario street and then along Rouen street.

Between Moreau and Viau streets, they cross more than 25 streets, which means that many level crossings.

Those 25 streets are situated on the island of Montreal, where the residential population attains one of the highest percentages of density.

From Notre Dame street, which runs along the busy commercial wharves of eastern Montreal, those streets are used not only by the local population but also for the daily transport of thousands of motor vehicles from all parts of the metropolitan area.

I am thinking more particularly of Pius IX boulevard, one of the most congested arteries of Montreal which crosses the entire island of Montreal between Pius IX wharf and the Prairie river bridge.

I also have in mind Ontario street, which is crossed by those tracks at the Valois intersection.

Ontario street is one of the largest commercial thoroughfares of Montreal. From both sides, and particularly in the ridings of Hochelaga and Maisonneuve-Rosemont, Ontario street is bordered by shops representing invested capital of several million dollars. Public transportation buses constantly use that thoroughfare, with their large loads of passengers travelling to or from the centre of the metropolis or other large thoroughfares that cross the city.

On Ontario street, as on Pius the IX boulevard, and all other streets crossed by railway tracks, the traffic and movement of the population are particularly intense in the early morning and in the late afternoon.

At those hours workers and school children are travelling to or from work or school.

Let me point out that, between Moreau and Viau streets, some twenty schools and convents, about ten churches and eleven playgrounds are situated in the vicinity of the tracks.

Therefore, several times a day, thousands of citizens, walking or riding, have to cross the tracks either to go to some of those public buildings or to reach main perpendicular streets or thoroughfares such as St. Catherine, Adam, Lafontaine and Ontario.

Now it is generally during that period of the day when that heavy traffic of people and motor vehicles is at its peak that this train of tankers or other freight trains, happen to block one after the other, all streets between Viau and Moreau.

[Mr. Eudes.]

Ensuing delays and inconveniences can readily be realized.

That undesirable situation reaches its peak in the neighbourhood of Moreau street, where shunting of cars takes place between our two big railway companies.

Over an area which frequently covers six or seven streets eastward from Moreau street, the coming and going of those cars paralyse the traffic for periods of as much as half an hour at times, in flagrant and repeated violation of article 314, chapter 234 of the Railway Act, which limits such obstruction periods to five minutes.

At the corner of Prefontaine street, I personally have seen fire department vehicles immobilized at the crossings and having to wait there for more than fifteen minutes on account of that shunting of cars.

When that violation was later brought to the attention of the C.N.R. authorities, a member of the legal department of that company replied, very seriously, that in such circumstances, the vehicles had only to use some other street. As if it were possible to have those huge trucks back up and turn around in narrow streets, crowded over a distance of 100 feet with other vehicles that cannot move for the same reason!

It seems to me hardly necessary to describe the serious inconveniences as well as the numerous and grave prejudices which those railway crossings cause to the 200,000 persons who live in the constituencies of Hochelaga and Maisonneuve-Rosemont.

Those twenty-five railway crossings, or thereabouts, present a constant danger, especially to the thousands of children who live nearby or who, of necessity, have to cross them. For reasons of economy, I presume, the traditional gate guards have given way to signal lights which constitute a very weak means of defence against the mortal dangers that can be caused by the passage of a train across a densely populated street.

Finally, from the aesthetic point of view, those tracks are a disgrace which should no longer be countenanced in an era when town planning strives and manages, even in industrial areas, to introduce constructions and arrangements pleasing to the eye. The very presence of the tracks is, no doubt to a large extent, the reason for the considerable delay in developing that part of Montreal east, as compared to the west end of the metropolis.

Since 1951 the association of businessmen of eastern Montreal has repeatedly and urgently requested that those tracks be left unused, or removed. Practical and positive solutions were submitted to the authorities concerned, by that association. From Viau street the westbound tank-cars could use the national harbours board trackage. Car shunting could then be made without obstructing traffic.

It must also be pointed out that the few plants served by the branch line extending from Viau street to Moreau street use their privilege only from time to time.

They might more easily, and probably at a saving, receive or ship their goods through other means, for instance by trucks travelling between those plants and the railway lines along the Montreal waterfront.

The C.N.R. legal division, taking a practical down-to-earth point of view, has replied to the association of businessmen of eastern Montreal that its recommendations and suggestions could not be considered.

Of course, the suggested relocation of these tracks would involve some expense for the railways but this would be of a very minor character, and the loss of revenue would be negligible.

That is precisely the problem. Must we allow a railroad company and perhaps 20 industrial firms to go on enjoying privileges which are neither essential nor necessary, to the detriment of the rights of over 200,000 people who pay exactly the same taxes as their fellow citizens who do not have to put up with the many serious problems arising from the presence and use of these tracks.

I should be grateful to the Minister of Transport if he would kindly look into this problem and get in touch with the C.N.R. authorities in order that the decision taken in this regard be seriously reconsidered, in the light of the broad principle as to whether individual interest should take precedence over public welfare.

Mr. Brassard (Chicoutimi): I do not want to delay the adoption of the estimates of the Department of Transport. I just want to say a few words to support the hon. members for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) and for Lapointe (Mr. Brassard) who, like so many others who have sat before us in this house, and like many public organizations, have pressed for the rebuilding of the Chicoutimi-Quebec Montreal railway line.

I notice particularly that the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) now supports those requests. With the zeal of a convert and his experience, I have no doubt that he will help us obtain the rebuilding of that railroad which, incidentally, like other railroads and canals in Canada, is essential to any region, and in particular, to a region like mine which has many natural resources, a large mining centre and a surplus of population which requires new industries to prevent unemployment.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Lapointe has requested a civil airport, and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) has made a statement about it. But I want to point out to the house that the civil airport of Chicoutimi is already built. It was built during the last war at a cost of several million dollars and, for the information of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill), who seems to be jealous of the profits that people can make on government properties, let us say that that land was sold by the former administration at a price of $22,000 and that the man who bought it made a net profit of more than $172,000 by reselling the hangars alone which were on the land. Yet, the airport still exists, and its runways are like new.

Besides, may I point out to the house that the airport is used by light aircraft despite the absence of any protective system, of any aid to navigation, and only last Sunday, I saw aircraft and motorcars playing hide and seek on the runways. Therefore, I ask the Minister of Transport to send some protection officers there so that they may put an end to this situation before anything too serious happens.

A last word concerning Chicoutimi harbour. Now that the St. Lawrence seaway is completed, this harbour is not equipped to handle deep draught ships. The channel should be given a depth of 27 feet so that ships plying the seaway could go up the Saguenay to Chicoutimi. It would be enough to deepen the channel over a very short distance to allow the port of Chicoutimi to operate in the black, to the advantage of the nation as a whole.

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to return to one question which has already been considered by the committee but on which we would like some further information, and that is the question of the expropriations at Malton airport. The minister did give some information yesterday and some papers have been tabled, but there are still some details which we would like him to supply and to which we think we are entitled. We pursue this matter on this side not in any cloak and dagger atmosphere but entirely to secure information on the passing of the minister's estimates, and I think it is our duty to try to get that information on a matter which has certainly caused a great deal of concern on this side of the house.

This particular expropriation about which I am talking, as the members of the committee know, went before the exchequer court. There was a petition in which the suppliant in this particular case sought to recover a sum of money, being the amount of a valuation made by an evaluator, on the ground—and I am now quoting from the judgment of the exchequer court——that there was an agreement between Her Majesty acting through the Minister of Transport as herself with Mr. Clare—

—who was the valuator—

—to appraise the property and that both parties should be bound by the amount of his valuation.

Yesterday the minister said there was no such agreement. That was a categorical and definite statement on his part. But, Mr. Chairman, there have been equally categorical statements made on this particular aspect of the matter by the hon. member for Peel to the effect that there was such an agreement. I now quote from the judgment again, page 7, one sentence which reads:

When Mr. Pallett was asked what line had been indicated to him in the discussion, his answer was "Whatever valuations were made by the independent valuator would be accepted by the Department of Transport."

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, so far as the member for the riding is concerned, he was equally categorical in his statement that there was such an agreement. In confirmation of that I can quote again from the record of the judgment, page 10 of my copy, the following sentences:

There was of course he said the conflicting evidence of what took place in the minister's office on September 14, 1957. Mr. Pallett asserted that the minister had accepted his proposal that there should be a valuation by an appraiser approved by the department and acceptable to the owners and that both the owners and the minister acting for Her Majesty should be bound by such valuations.

It is understandable that we should be in a state of some confusion as to what actually happened. It is unfortunate that the hon. member for Peel, no doubt for very good reasons, cannot be in his seat this afternoon to give us his version of what actually happened and his interpretation of these remarks I have just quoted, which indicate that certainly in his mind there was no doubt as to whether there was or was not an agreement, an agreement which, as was indicated later in correspondence by an officer of the minister's department, would have been of doubtful legal validity under the Expropriation Act and which would have established a most undesirable precedent as we could well understand.

Following this matter up I should like to ask the minister a few more questions. Perhaps he will let me place all my questions on record before he rises to answer, or if he prefers another procedure I will be glad to follow any that he wishes to adopt. If he wishes to answer my questions as we go along I would naturally be agreeable to following that procedure.

My first question on this matter is, how many qualified persons evaluated this particular property—the Drew property, which was a test case for ten others, I believe—before the minister decided to appoint an independent valuator? Would he give us the details of the valuations before the independent appraiser was appointed?

The second question is, were these earlier valuations by the departmental officials and the persons appointed by the department considered satisfactory by the department? According to the judgment the assistant deputy minister of the department did consider them satisfactory.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, as there are a number of questions perhaps I could answer as we go along. In the first place I am advised there were approximately half a dozen valuations done. The exact valuations, of course, I do not have here. I will be very glad to give them to the Leader of the Opposition, but he will quite understand that I do not have them in my head and we do not have them at the table at this time. The answer to the second question is yes.

Mr. Pearson: My third question is this.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Pearson: Surely.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Where in the judgment does it say that the earlier valuations were considered proper? I am attempting to follow the hon. gentleman's address.

Mr. Pearson: If the Prime Minister would look at the bottom of page 5 of the judgment he will find it. There may be another reference to it, but certainly there is one at the bottom of page 5. Mr. Booth, who I think is the assistant deputy minister of the department—

Mr. Hees: Yes.

Mr. Pearson: —pointed out that the department was satisfied with the valuations that had been made and that they were valid. If the Prime Minister would like me to read the rest of that sentence I would be glad to read it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes.

Mr. Pearson: The minister has now said there were six valuations made.

Mr. Hees: I said approximately six.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, approximately. My next question is, is it not a fact that the hon. member for Peel, though approximately six valuations had been made, did request a further and what is referred to as an independent valuation because these previous valuations, presumably all six of them, had been too low? My next question is, did the hon. member for Peel recommend to the minister—

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could answer the hon. gentleman's previous question before he proceeds. Yes, the hon. member did request that another valuation be made. There is nothing out of the way in that he should, because as the member of parliament representing these constituents he was absolutely convinced—I know, because I talked this over with him on many occasions —that these valuations were too low and were unfair, and his whole purpose in seeing me and pursuing this matter was to get for his constituents what he considered a fair deal. He was never at any time requesting any more than fair and equitable treatment for them.

There was nothing out of the way in the course of conduct of the hon. member, as the Leader of the Opposition is trying to imply. Even though there had been five or six valuations before, there was nothing out of the way in his requesting that a further valuation be made, because he is a very conscientious member of parliament and was striving only to see that his constituents got a fair deal.

I am beginning to understand, Mr. Chairman, why this witch hunt is proceeding. I found it very difficult yesterday to understand it but now I know, having thought it over during the evening. It is simply this. Hon. members opposite in the Leader of the Opposition's party find it very difficult to understand how a conscientious member of parliament operates. Members of the party to which he belongs are not interested in doing a thorough, conscientious job for the little, ordinary people in their ridings, people who need help, the small people who are very often pushed around by bureaucrats.

The hon. member for Peel believed that during the previous three years, 1954, 1955 and 1956, before we came into office—and he saw me about it immediately after we did assume office—the people had been pushed around. Rightly or wrongly, he was convinced that they had been and they, too, were so convinced. As a conscientious member of parliament he came to see me and said, "I am convinced that these people are not getting a square deal; these valuations are too low, and I would like a further independent valuation to see what it comes out at". I replied that I considered this a reasonable request and said we would have an independent valuation, and that is the reason we had it.

The Leader of the Opposition appears to find it extremely difficult to understand why a conscientious member of parliament would go to work like that for his constituents. Members of the Liberal party seem to feel that if someone in the capacity of the hon. member for Peel, the capacity of a member of parliament, does try and obtain a square deal for his constituents, in some way he is getting a kick-back or some kind of nefarious reward. That is the whole implication of what the Leader of the Opposition and those associated with him have been saying.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, that is a false and a base inference the minister has made from any statement I have made on this matter in the house, and I ask him to withdraw it. I never suggested that the hon. member or anybody else was getting a kick-back.

Mr. Hees: I did not say you had suggested it. No one over there has had—shall we call it the courage?—to come out and lay a charge. It has all been innuendo, it has all been underhand and it has all been sneering. Hon. gentlemen opposite have risen and in an obsequious way have prefaced their remarks with statements like, "I should like to ask a few questions, Mr. Chairman", or "I do not wish to take up the time of the committee but there are questions to which we must get answers", or "We must see that our money is properly spent." Of course, you must see that money is properly spent, but in this case you are implying by everything you do and say—and this applies to all other hon. gentlemen who have taken part in this discussion or raised questions—that there is something wrong, crooked, nefarious or sinister about the actions of the hon. member for Peel.

From my personal dealings with the hon. member I am prepared to say without hesitation that all the time he was working 100 per cent for the good of the people of his constituency. It may seem strange to the Leader of the Opposition to learn that members of this party have always been dedicated to the principle of doing a good job for the ordinary little people in their ridings, the constituents they represent.

I want to tell my hon. friend this. The very fact that he and those in his party have difficulty understanding the conscientious efforts of the hon. member for Peel emphasizes what is one of the main reasons why we are sitting here and the Leader of the Opposition and his supporters are sitting on the other side of the chamber. The reason is that the Liberal party forgot the little people of this country. That is why the Leader of the Opposition and his party are going to sit on that side of the chamber for quite a while, until they move a little farther down the chamber and sit to the immediate right of where they now are; and the next thing we know the Leader of the Opposition will be rising in his place to speak for his party and will preface his speeches with the words, "Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this group I should like to say."

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, the minister has obviously been thinking over the matter and the result of his thoughts has been that brilliant, impassioned political speech he has made which has elevated this subject to a higher plane, in his estimation. Now, the minister said we did not have the courage—he said a lot of other things which have nothing to do with the questions I asked him—to pursue this matter in the regular way. I tell him that we have a sense of responsibility over here, and before we decide whether or not to pursue this matter in another way we want to get the facts and give the minister a chance to tell us the facts.

Mr. Hees: And you got all the facts; you got every fact that you asked for.

Mr. Pearson: If the member for Peel were in his seat he probably could add a lot to the facts as well. He has made statements on this matter outside the house; he has said nothing in the house—

Mr. Hees: Who, me?

Mr. Pearson: The member for Peel; when we get the facts, or when we have done our best to get the facts we will make our decision. None of this impassioned eloquence of the minister will have any bearing on that decision.

Mr. Hees: You keep on asking and you will get the answers.

Mr. Pearson: This afternoon the minister has become the champion of the little man who in this situation, the expropriations at Malton, was he said, being pushed around by bureaucrats, the bureaucrats presumably being the officers of his own department.

[Mr. Hees.]

Mr. Hees: I said that is what the hon. member for Peel felt because he had been dealing with your government for three years and getting nowhere.

Mr. Pearson: I stand corrected. The minister said it was the member for Peel who said the little men in his constituency were being pushed around by bureaucrats. The bureaucrats were the officers, the civil servants, of the minister's own department. Does he accept that criticism of them by the member?

Mr. Hees: I will answer that question right here and now. The hon. member for Peel came to me less than a month after we had taken office. He did not know anything about the civil servants in my department. He had dealt only with the government that had been in office for 22 years, and because of its callous attitude toward people such as those he represented he felt that it was about time there was a new deal for the people he represented. I have found since I came to that department that the people who are working under me are absolutely first class in every way, but the hon. member for Peel, a month after we took office, had no way of knowing that and he thought the people working for the government were the same kind of people as the members of the cabinet from whom he had been trying to get some action and had been getting none for three years.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, let me pursue these zealous efforts of the member for Peel and the minister to secure a new deal for those little people in the riding of the member for Peel. As the result of their joint actions a test case was taken to the exchequer court. What was the result of that action? Did it give the little people he is talking about the increased valuations they thought they were entitled to? It did not. It confirmed in substance the valuation that had been made by his own officers, whom he now refers to as bureaucrats. The minister can sit down for a second.

Mr. Hees: I was sitting down, but I will stand up and I will say simply this. I am saying that the hon. member for Peel, having dealt with the members of the former government, felt that he was dealing with bureaucrats and he did not know there was any difference between them.

Mr. Pearson: Repetition does not make reputation.

An hon. Member: You guys should know.

Mr. Pearson: Let us see what happened, now that the minister has become so excited about this. In his efforts, with his colleague from Peel, to protect those little people in

Malton and get them what the member thought was a better valuation for their property, which had been evaluated already by six officers of his own department, whose valuation in substance was confirmed later by the Exchequer Court of Canada which showed—

Mr. Hees: May I ask the hon. member a question? Does he think the hon. member for Peel as member of parliament for his constituency, was doing wrong in trying to get the best possible deal for the people he represented? Was there something wrong in that?

Mr. Pearson: Of course not.

Mr. Hees: Well, all right; don't try to imply that there was.

Mr. Pearson: There are ways and means by which these things should be done, and if the minister will give me a chance I will follow through how the hon. member attempted to serve, no doubt to the best of his ability, the interests of his constituency. The minister has not said anything about the statement of the hon. member for Peel that there was an agreement. He said this before the courts, that there was an agreement between him and the minister that the independent valuator's valuation would be binding on the government and on the owners of the property. What has the minister to say about that? He says there was no such agreement, yet the hon. member for Peel in the court proceedings is reported as saying there was. What has the minister to say about that?

Mr. Hees: I said yesterday and I say again that there was no agreement.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then the hon. member for Peel was wrong.

Mr. Pearson: What has the minister to say about the statement of his colleague from Peel who, in an effort to protect his constituents, says there was? What about the statement of the hon. member for Peel?

Mr. Hees: I have no doubt that the hon. member had an idea that there was an agreement. The Leader of the Opposition probably does not realize that people can make mistakes and perhaps misunderstand what one person said or another person said. He obviously was under the impression that an agreement had been made, and I am very definitely of the opinion that there was not an agreement made, and that is the case as it stands.

Mr. Pearson: It may be said that it was very sloppy work on the part of the minister.

Mr. Hees: Well, perhaps it was.

Mr. Pearson: Now the minister says that perhaps the member for Peel may have been under a misunderstanding.

Mr. Hees: He could have been.

Mr. Pearson: I will repeat what the member for Peel said in the exchequer court. I think he is a lawyer, and he knows what he is saying before a court. He said that whatever valuations were made by the independent valuator would be accepted by the Department of Transport. That is his statement, which directly and specifically contradicts what the minister has said, and then the minister wonders why we get up in the house asking some questions. I will ask him some more.

Mr. Hees: Go right ahead.

Mr. Pearson: I am going right ahead. Did the member for Peel recommend to the minister an independent appraiser? The recommendation came from the member for Peel. Was that independent appraiser one of his political organizers?

Mr. Hees: These questions were all answered yesterday. If the hon. member had been in the house yesterday he would know perfectly well that these questions have been answered. He knows perfectly well from the record that an independent valuator was named. His name was Mr. Clare. I said yesterday I had no idea that he was any political affiliate of the hon. member for Peel. I answered these questions yesterday, but you want to drag them out again, to produce them again, to try to create some cloak and dagger atmosphere and imply that there is something nefarious about this. If that is all you can think about as questions on the estimates of the Department of Transport, if this is the only kind of thing you are interested in, it shows how little interest you take in the operations of the government.

Mr. Pearson: We ask these questions because we have an interest in the operations of government under the jurisdiction of my hon. friend.

Mr. Hees: Keep asking them.

Mr. Pearson: I will ask him a couple of more questions.

Mr. Hees: Let us have one that is at least a sensible question; we have not had one yet.

Mr. Pearson: I know how you feel about it.

Mr. Hees: I get tired of answering them two or three times over.

Mr. Pearson: Does the minister agree that if the efforts which were unsuccessful, because the courts prevented their being successful, to increase this particular valuation had been successful, similar increases would have been required for several others because this was one of 10 cases, and the whole question of 180 valuations would have been reopened which had been previously completed to the satisfaction of this group—

Mr. Hees: This is one of those hypothetical questions which has no bearing on the case at all. This question came before the courts and was decided on its merits. The hon. gentleman knows how it was decided. His question is simply a hypothetical one, if so and so happened and something else happened, what would be the result, and so on.

Mr. Pearson: I suggest to the minister that if this case had been decided in the way the member for Peel wished it to be decided, by increasing the valuations to the point which he thought was fair, then the 180 cases which had been decided would have had to be reopened. There is nothing hypothetical about that. Let me ask the minister this. How many other properties did this independent evaluator, Mr. Clare, evaluate in addition to the Drew property, and what was the amount paid for his services?

Mr. Hees: I think he evaluated 12 properties, and we will be very glad to get the amount he was paid. It has no bearing on the case whatsoever, but like all the other answers to all the other questions we will be very glad to give it. You have had the answer to every question you have asked.

Mr. Pearson: I am grateful to the minister for his promise to produce that information. Perhaps he will also produce this information, and I know he has not got it here. Will he give the committee the values set by Mr. Clare for each of the properties and the price previously offered by the department as a fair settlement for that property?

Mr. Hees: With a great deal of pleasure. It is on record. There is no problem in giving it. If I had it here I would give it right now.

Mr. Pearson: Then may I ask one final question at this particular moment. Were the valuations for the 180 or so properties that had been satisfactorily settled and accepted, and where everything had been satisfactorily concluded, made by departmental appraisers and evaluators?

Mr. Hees: By departmental and by independent appraisers as well.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman—

An hon. Member: Junior counsel.

[Mr. Hees.]

Mr. Chevrier: —I have listened to the minister bring forward his estimates on a number of occasions.

Mr. Pearson: This is the first time he ever got mad.

Mr. Chevrier: I have also noticed how cool he is as a rule when he discusses his estimates in the house, but within the last 15 minutes or so he has been anything but cool. In fact he was extremely excited.

Mr. Hees: I get excited when I hear an attempt made to smear a colleague. That is why I get excited.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, the minister has said there was an attempt made to smear a colleague. That is quite unparliamentary and it is also quite untrue. The minister does not know the difference between an attempt to smear and an attempt to get the facts.

Mr. Hees: To me what you are doing is an attempt to smear.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I repeat without hesitation that there is no attempt either on the part of the Leader of the Opposition or on the part of myself in the statements I wish to make and the questions I should like to ask to smear anyone in any way whatsoever—

Mr. Grafftey: Nonsense.

Mr. Chevrier: —and if there is any doubt about that I can cite two cases that occurred when I was on the other side of the house and refer to what happened on similar occasions. Perhaps there will be silence if I do cite them. I do not want to go into these matters now, but I think we are entitled to ask these questions. We are entitled to ask them because it is our responsibility to get the information. It may be that some of the information does hurt.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: If it does, I am sorry; nevertheless I think the minister should, as he has done, do his utmost to give us the facts so that, as the Leader of the Opposition said earlier, we will then be able to determine what our course of action should be. The minister put on the record today copies of the correspondence. I, of course, have not had the opportunity to read it all but I did read one letter, and I should like to put the second last paragraph on the record. Perhaps I should put the whole letter on the record. It is dated at Ottawa, October 24, 1957, addressed to the minister, and reads as follows:

Dear George:

Re: Malton airport expropriations

I hate to bother you with such things, but I have had a telephone call and a telegram; Bill Beach has had telephone calls; and apparently Speers, the land agent in Toronto, has made the statement that he and not the minister is running the department in Toronto.

I take it that Speers is the district appraiser of the Department of Transport in Toronto.

I have had a talk with Earl Clare, whom you appointed for the purpose of evaluating small holdings, and he tells me that Speers was in Ottawa today, apparently with some proposal to the deputy minister or assistant deputy minister that Clare be taken off the job.

Clare has already promoted the public relations of the Department of Transport more than the land agents have done in the last three and a half years. He has taken the time to examine each house and sit down and talk over the valuations which the owners want, with each owner. Needless to say, he will come to his own valuation.

Now I come to the second last paragraph.

I have known Clare for many, many years and he is not going to be influenced by Speers or any home owners. You may or may not hear of this through your deputies but, if so, I suggest that they be told in no uncertain terms that Speers is to get off Clare's back and let him do the valuations in his own way; if not, it defeats the purpose of appointing him.

No answer is expected and this, I suggest, might be ripped up and thrown away.

Well, I am not surprised that the last paragraph is in the letter, but in view of the second last paragraph I ask the minister this question. The minister has said here is a man who is so anxious to assist his constituents and do the very best he can to get a good deal for the small people, does the minister now think the sentiments contained in that second last paragraph are the kind of sentiments that should be expressed in the light of what has been discussed this afternoon, and does he think this is good administration on the part of a member of parliament?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Peel was only anxious to see that these valuations should be fair valuations, and in expressing that opinion he was only saying that in his opinion that was the way to see that the valuator, Mr. Clare, could carry out a fair and independent valuation which would get a square deal for the people whom the member for Peel represents in parliament.

Mr. Chevrier: The point is that the valuation was to be increased substantially and if one reads the judgment, which is quite clear in that respect, it leads one to believe that the moment these valuations were accepted then the 180 other cases would also have to be reopened. Whether or not they were adequate valuations I am not saying at the moment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask the hon. member where there is any support for that conclusion in the judgment? I have the judgment before me.

Mr. Chevrier: Oh, there is no support for that in the judgment at all.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: Now, just a moment. The Prime Minister asked me a fair question and I answered it frankly. Of course there is no suggestion of that in the judgment. It was not being considered. But I am making the point now that the moment you increase the valuations on 11 properties, how on earth are you going to leave the properties of 180 other people living alongside in the same district without increasing their valuations? It just cannot be done. I know that similar cases have taken place before—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the hon. member mention any cases—he will know, of course, because he was minister of transport—where final settlement had been made and thereafter as a result of court proceedings some adjoining property was valued at a higher amount which required the reopening of the other cases? He said he knows of cases.

Mr. Chevrier: I did not say that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I took it that way.

Mr. Chevrier: The Prime Minister interrupted me before I finished my sentence.

What I was going to say was this: I know of cases in the Department of Transport where valuations having been made and a series of claims having been disposed of and the compensation money paid, adjacent owners came along and said, "We are not going to accept that valuation". Then, pressures were brought about, not only by groups but by municipalities, associations and even members of parliament who said, "We do not believe that valuation is a fair and reasonable one; we think it should be increased because of increased prices in the area, because industry may since have been located in the area," or because of other reasons of which I am not reminded at the moment. But we took the position at the time that it is up to the exchequer court to determine what the compensation was, and the moment the exchequer court determined what the valuation was, then that made the position quite clear in so far as the other expropriatees were concerned.

I come back to the statement I made earlier that while there is no mention in the judgment of the 180 other persons, the moment this valuation was accepted, the moment this agreement was made as was suggested and as was said in the judgment, then the other 180 cases would, of necessity, have to be opened. This being the case, then the federal treasury is in a pretty serious position in so far as these people are concerned because I am sure the Department of Transport or the government would not want to treat a group of expropriatees in one part of an area in one manner by paying them one price, and another group just alongside differently by paying another price.

Mr. Hees: If I may answer that, I would say that you have a distinct group of 180 people who were satisfied, who had signed with the department and whose deals were complete. So far as we know, they are quite satisfied. You had one small group of 12 people who said that they were not satisfied and it is, in a free country like this, your right to be either satisfied or not satisfied with the deal that is offered. These people said they were not. The hon. member for Peel felt that they had a good case and he decided to try to get them a square deal, to get them a fair valuation. That is all he tried to do.

I should like to ask the hon. member this. If in his riding there were a group of people who were satisfied with a certain valuation and a small group who were not, would he then say to them, "Oh, no, you have got to take what you are offered because 180 other people have been quite satisfied; I cannot go to the government because if you have been done a grievous wrong and if we look into it and find you have been done a grievous wrong we could not pay you any more because this would mean opening up a lot of other cases and that would cost the government a lot of money." If the hon. member were representing 12 constituents who felt they had a raw deal, would he not go to the government and fight tooth and nail to get them what he considered to be a square deal? Would he or would he not do that?

Mr. Chevrier: I have no objection to my hon. friend's interruptions or his questions.

Mr. Hees: This is a free and open debate.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, certainly. He states that the group expropriated earlier, the 180, were satisfied with their valuation.

Mr. Hees: As I understand it; they would not have signed if they were not.

Mr. Chevrier: I accept that statement, but does the minister think for one moment the man next door who noticed the increase in valuation would be satisfied? Does he think for one moment that as soon as a neighbour gets an increase of $5,000 or $10,000 for his property, the man who settled before will not come back and ask for a similar increase?

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Hees: I will answer that right now.

Mr. Chevrier: Just a moment; that is what took place in a number of cases in the Department of Transport. All you need to do is consult your own officers in connection with expropriations.

Mr. Hees: I will answer that right now. In other words, if you have 20 constituents and 19 of them feel they have had a square deal but the 20th feels he has not—

Mr. Pearson: You have had six valuations already.

Mr. Hees: Just a minute; would the hon. member say, "I will not try to have your case opened up because if I do try, and even if I feel you had a raw deal, it would mean that the government would have to open up the other 19 cases and give them a similar deal." If that is the hon. member's attitude, then he will not be back next time.

The Chairman: The Chair has allowed the debate to continue for the last half-hour, but for the sake of relevancy I think it is about time we examined the situation. The Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Laurier have both said that no attempt has been made to smear the hon. member for Peel or any other member, and the Chair is ready to believe that no such attempt was actually made.

However, these repetitious questions and repetitious answers have continued and it seems that the present basis of this debate is a hypothetical question as to whether or not, if this valuation had gone through, 180 individuals would have protested the former valuation to which they had agreed. It is impossible to expect a debate to be continued on such a hypothetical basis. I regret to say that unless hon. members of the opposition explain clearly the purpose of all these questions and answers, and the reason for this debate I shall have to declare this debate out of order because it is not relevant to the item under discussion.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, if you so declare then there will be no doubt about the position which we, on this side of the house, will take. We will accept the ruling of the Chair, but I tell you in all honesty and in all sincerity, that I do not believe that would be an equitable decision. However, it will be up to you to determine, sir.

I do not want to pursue the matter unduly, but I am not going to let the Minister of Transport get away with the last statement he made, that if I continue asking these questions I will find myself without a seat.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, no.

Mr. Hees: I said, if that was your attitude toward your constituents you would not be back. I asked you a question.

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend need not worry too much about what is likely to happen in my constituency because—

Mr. Hees: That is what George Marler said.

Mr. Chevrier: But my hon. friend's colleagues on the other side have done their best on two occasions not only to defeat me but to see that I would no longer be a member. They have not been successful. I do not imagine, judging by the popularity of the present government in the province of Quebec now, that they will be successful in the next election.

There are one or two questions I should like to ask the minister. Before I do, I should like him to comment on this particular part of the judgment of Mr. Justice Thorson, at page 16:

> I have no hesitation in rejecting Mr. Clare's valuation. I do not believe that he was a free and independent appraiser. He admitted that Mr. Pallett, who had recommended his appointment, said that he wanted a good price and on his cross-examination, after long hesitation, he admitted that Mr. Pallett had instructed him to put as generous a valuation as possible on the properties and he told Mr. Speer, the Department of Transport's agent, that it was difficult for him to carry out his instructions.

Would the minister care to comment on that paragraph?

Mr. Hees: As I have said to the hon. member several times, and as he knows, being a distinguished barrister, it is completely wrong to ask me to comment on a judgment which has been rendered.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not true, of course.

Mr. Chevrier: That is so if the case were sub judice, but it is not. It is a judgment, and so far as I know it is not under appeal.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is still within the period within which an appeal could be taken.

Mr. Chevrier: That does not make it sub judice; it becomes sub judice the moment the appeal is launched. An appeal not having been launched, it is proper for anyone to comment on it and therefore it is proper for the Minister of Transport to comment on it, but every time I ask him questions concerning the judgment he always comes back and says in his very breezy and easy manner: you should know better, you are a lawyer, and so forth. But that is not an answer to the question. Either the minister answers the question or he does not. If he does not answer it, then that is fine. We accept that. If he chooses to answer it, that is another matter again.

Mr. Hees: I have answered every question which the hon. gentleman has put to me. He asked for material, and I have given it to him. This morning he asked for correspondence and I gave him far more than was necessary. I gave him all the letters that could be found.

Mr. Chevrier: What do you mean by "far more than was necessary"?

Mr. Hees: I think it is completely wrong to ask a member of parliament to comment on a judgment of a presiding judge and I do not intend to do so.

Mr. Chevrier: All right, I will leave it at that. I think the hon. gentleman is in error, but he is entitled to his opinion just as much as I am to mine.

Mr. Hees: It is the only time I have refused.

Mr. Chevrier: Now I should like to ask the minister this: what is the position of the department with reference to the ten other cases which have not been disposed of?

Mr. Hees: We have offered, I am advised, immediate settlement at valuations comparable to that in the judgment.

Mr. Pearson: Is it not the intention of the minister, then, to give these other cases the benefit of the judgment of an independent valuator.

Mr. Hees: I am abiding, as I am sure the Leader of the Opposition would, by the judgment of the court.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I am speaking for this group. We have listened very carefully to the discussion of this matter and we want to be very fair about it. First of all, let me say that we think it is most unfortunate that the hon. member for Peel is not in his seat while the estimates of the Minister of Transport are being discussed. It seems to us that everyone should have realized that this matter would have been brought to the attention of the committee.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but having read in the press of the intention of the Leader of the Opposition to bring this matter up on Monday —that is what the press said—I got in touch with the hon. member for Peel and had him here. Every opportunity was given at that time for making any statement which the opposition wished to make—I am not referring now to the hon. member for Kootenay West and his associates. It was known the hon. member for Peel would not be here for the ensuing three days and he was here when it was stated in the press that there was going to be some suggestion, insinuation or something of that kind made against him.

Mr. Pearson: On that point, would the Prime Minister give the basis for his statement that we were going to bring this matter up on Monday?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Only the reference in the press to the effect that one of the hon. gentlemen opposite was going to bring it up. There was some reference, either in the press or on the radio, indicating that the Leader of the Opposition intended to press this matter. Immediately I communicated with the hon. member for Peel. The hon. gentlemen first raised this matter last Friday. I noticed then that there were innuendos and implications made, and that the question was likely to be raised again. The hon. member for Peel was here on Monday, available to answer any questions. He was here in the house. From then on he intended to be absent for the next two or three days, and all I can say is this: up to the present, there has been nothing other than these suggestions and inferences and innuendos for which the Leader of the Opposition is not prepared to take responsibility. He realizes that if he goes farther than he does in his suggestions, the fullest opportunity will be given to him to establish any alleged wrongdoing. There has been no suggestion yet of that because from the very beginning he said there was none.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps we can finish off this question of procedure. I should like to tell the Prime Minister that I am willing to take responsibility for every statement that I have made on this matter, and there is no basis for any statement on his part that I am running away from that responsibility, as he will find out when we get the information. Then the Prime Minister had the effrontry to suggest that because it was stated somewhere in a newspaper that we might be bringing this matter up on Monday he instructed the member for Peel to be here on Monday.

As the Prime Minister knows perfectly well, and if he does not I will refresh his memory, on Friday I first raised this matter and the Prime Minister said he would make a statement later. On Monday he made a statement, and I said at that time we would examine that statement and decide what course we should take. There was no opportunity to deal with this matter until the estimates of the department came up. That would be the first opportunity. The Prime Minister knows himself that the estimates of the Department of Transport could not come up before Wednesday, so his excuse for the hon. member for Peel not being here is a very feeble one indeed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let us be clear. The way in which this has been done in the past when this—I will not call it McCarthyism—has been indulged in is to face the issue. At any time the hon. gentleman can make the necessary motion, as Sir Wilfrid Laurier once said. I hope he will take that course, because on the face of the facts he will realize he can go no further than make suggestions—

Mr. Pearson: I know something about McCarthyism, and I say to the Prime Minister that McCarthyism means when a man is charged before you know the facts.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what you are doing.

Mr. Pearson: When we get the facts we will decide what action should be taken. Does the Prime Minister say that that is McCarthyism? Let me remind him of some of the things he used to do over here when he was attacking the government without a complete basis of information. His suggestion that our effort to get the facts from the minister is McCarthyism is not worthy of him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will not enter into that discussion. I will simply say that the Leader of the Opposition has followed a course of innuendo but is fearful lest he go beyond that.

Mr. Chevrier: I deprecate the statement which the Prime Minister has just made to the effect that the Leader of the Opposition has followed a course of innuendo rather than proceed in the manner in which the Prime Minister indicated on the orders of the day, I believe on Monday. The Prime Minister is too good a lawyer not to know that this is not the only method by which a matter of this kind can be proceeded with. The Prime Minister has been in the house far too long—

Mr. Diefenbaker: What would be that other method?

Mr. Chevrier: I will come to it in a moment. The Prime Minister has been in the house far too long to try to throw the burden over to this side of the house and to attempt to scare the opposition into not pursuing this matter.

Mr. Hees: He has encouraged it.

Mr. Chevrier: That is exactly what the Prime Minister tried to do the other evening. If he is encouraging it, why does he not allow us to debate this matter as it should be debated, not by seeking information and asking questions and prying it out, as we have to do. The position is this: the Prime Minister hastened, on the orders of the day, to say that the opposition would be given all the opportunities they wanted. Let them debate it all they like, he said. Let them have no complaint about the government. We are complaining now about the manner in which this question is being handled, and I suggest to the Prime Minister that if he is so courageous he should give us an opportunity to consider this matter fully. Why does he not have the hon. member for Peel make a statement so that we may know exactly what the facts are.

I said a moment ago that I would remind the Prime Minister of another occasion. Does the Prime Minister remember an occasion on which the leader of the opposition in this house charged the Right Hon. C. D. Howe with certain interests having to do with the C. D. Howe Company? Does he remember that was a clear cut charge in express language or in any way you might put it? It was debated in this house day in and day out by innuendo and in every other way. It was talked of outside the house and it was talked of here. Was the leader of the opposition asked to resign because he was not able to substantiate his charge? Of course he was not. Surely this is not a new procedure. Surely because no charge is laid against an hon. member is no reason to deny information to those of us who want that information? I am sure the Prime Minister, he who has been speaking about introducing a bill of rights, would be the last one to do so. That is one of the foremost things concerning a bill of rights, that we should be entitled to information. Well, let us have that information.

Mr. Hees: What information do you want that you have not been given? You have had every question answered, and every piece of material has been given to you.

Mr. Chevrier: My friend gets exercised a bit—

Mr. Hees: I just want you to answer.

Mr. Chevrier: It is not for me to answer, but you.

Mr. Hees: I will answer any question you ask, except to comment on the judgment of the court, because I will abide by the judgment of the court.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Order. I would ask hon. members to please address their questions through the Chair. I would also remind hon. members that the hon. member for Kootenay West was on his feet and making a speech, which I allowed hon. members to interrupt to deal with a specific point about the role of the hon. member for Peel. If they have concluded their remarks on that particular matter I would ask the hon. member for Kootenay West to continue with his remarks.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, may I make one short comment and then I will resume my seat; I am sure there will be no objection to it. The hon. minister has just stated that he will abide by the judgment of the court. I am glad to hear him make that statement. The judgment of the court is a clear cut condemnation of the member for Peel.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I want to express my sincere appreciation for the hon. members exhibiting the tolerance which permits me to continue with the speech I started some minutes ago. We have listened very carefully to this debate and I can truthfully say that the hon. members of this group want to be as fair as possible on this issue. It is very easy to get worked up on one side or the other.

I said in my preceding remarks that we had hoped that the hon. member for Peel would have been in his seat. We think it would have been more appropriate on this occasion, but the Prime Minister has apparently explained that. We have listened to the questions asked by the Leader of the Opposition and other very important people in the front benches of the official opposition and to the answers given by the Minister of Transport. I must say, Mr. Chairman, that I could not sleep last night again. I am a very bad sleeper on occasions. However, I read an article in Maclean's magazine about the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Hees: Not that.

Mr. Herridge: It mentioned his ability as a cadet and as a boxer. I was a boxer on one occasion and got knocked out on the same occasion. I was also a soldier and I would pay tribute to his record overseas, and as a political organizer and businessman. I do think this afternoon that he has exhibited a certain amount of ability to lay down what I would call a good smoke screen, and I do not think he has answered these questions directly enough. We in this group think it is most unfair for this issue to be left up in the air. It is most unfair to the member concerned and to the house. From what I can judge from listening very carefully, there are serious contradictions between statements made by the hon. member for Peel outside of this house and statements given to this house by the minister. I think that is accepted by everybody. There are very serious discrepancies between the statements made by the hon. member for Peel outside the house and the statements made by the evaluator before the exchequer court. If statements made by a person giving evidence before the exchequer court are not correct, then that person has committed perjury.

To indicate how this type of situation creates doubt, confusion and suspicion, unfairly to the member for Peel and unfairly in the general approach of this house to this question our group received yesterday and today phone calls from various parts, and also letters in today's mail. These clearly indicate that it is a question which the public of this country would like to see cleared up. There is confusion, there is doubt and there is concern. I will be quite frank, Mr. Chairman, and say after listening to the questions and answers, in my opinion the hon. member for Peel exercised what I would call immature and poor judgment. That would be my opinion. But I think in fairness to him the whole matter should be cleared up, and on that account this group would support the request of the official opposition that a committee be appointed to inquire into the whole matter to settle it once and for all.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): The hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wish to say something about the matter which is being discussed.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): The hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine.

Mr. Keays: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to delay unduly the passing of these estimates, but I would wish to relieve the high pressure area which exists to our right and give them a little bit of the cold front.

I would like to bring to the attention of the minister a financial problem which affects the people of my riding. As you know the telephone system there is administered by the telecommunications branch of the Department of Transport. I would not be so naive to say that the expenditure of the department over the past few years is totally economically justified, but knowing the policy of this government of bettering the lot of people who live in areas such as mine, which is an insular area, the improvements which have been made to date have been quite satisfactory. I know it will be very difficult to obtain the revenue necessary to write off this expense. However, steps have been taken to increase the revenue, and one of the steps has been the monthly rental rate, which has been increased considerably and also accepted very reluctantly by my constituents. However, it is accepted.

Another matter concerns the toll charges which are now being put into force by the department. As you know, sir, the Magdalen islands are comparable to a large village. In the centre section, Grindstone, is located the commercial and industrial centres. There you find the hospital and all the doctors of the islands and those in the east end and the west end of the islands must call Grindstone island quite frequently. As the minister is aware only one exchange exists. For those who must call Grindstone daily at the rate of 15 cents per call this becomes very expensive. I would ask the Minister of Transport, owing to the recent increase in the monthly rental rate, to give consideration to delaying this toll charge for some time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to say anything about this matter of Malton valuations at all until the Prime Minister made his intervention this afternoon. I could not help but feel that one point had not been made by anyone and that it seems to me is the most obvious of all. In his judgment the president of the exchequer court has made statements about a member of this house which certainly call into question—and I am not calling it into question; it was the president of the exchequer court who did it—the propriety of his conduct as a member of this house.

I would not have thought it would have required the Leader of the Opposition or the humblest member of this committee to bring up this matter. I would have thought that the hon. member for Peel himself as was his right and, I suggest, his duty, under our rules, would have taken the first opportunity to give this committee the explanation to which it is entitled and which it has not received. I do not intend to say anything more about the hon. member's conduct when he is not here; but I do want to say a word or two about the conduct of the Minister of Transport and I wish to make these comments in a very non-controversial way because I as a minister was faced with a precisely similar situation to the one with which the minister was faced.

I was faced with expropriations which were being made by the organization over which my friend the hon. member for Laurier provided in his capacity as president of the St. Lawrence seaway. I was acting as a trustee for the persons who were being expropriated in the Caughnawaga Indian reserve. A very high proportion of those cases had been settled. Proposals were made to me, not by a member of parliament it is true, but proposals similar to those made to the Minister of Transport when he first came into office, that the department should try to deal in a different way with the group of dissenters from the way in which the majority of those who had assented had been treated. I said that was an impossible course for the government to take and that the vast majority of these people having accepted, on a certain basis, the government could not subsequently give better treatment to others, and ever face the public.

I therefore think the minister was wrong to appoint this special evaluator. In my opinion, based on such experience as I have had, he should have told the hon. member for Peel that he could not entertain this proposal, that the settlements had been made with all these other people in comparable circumstances and that those who were not satisfied had their recourse to the courts and that that was the place for the cases to be settled.

The Chairman presiding over this debate prior to your taking the chair, Mr. Chairman, raised the question as to whether this matter was relevant. It seems to me it is entirely relevant. One hundred and eighty of these cases having been settled on a certain basis it would, in my view, have been the height of inequity for the government of its own motion to give better treatment to the remaining twelve. Those people could take the matter before the courts and try to get better treatment as one ultimately did, but that is another matter.

I am not criticizing the minister very strongly for this because I realize that, in 1957, he was new, inexperienced and eager, but I do say that I think the minister was guilty in this particular instance of a very serious error of judgment.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a clarification in respect of what I said a moment ago to the Leader of the Opposition. I said I accept the judgment of the court. Not being a lawyer, I did not quite realize what I was saying. What I intended to say was that I accept the decision of the court in regard to the settlement to be made and I intend to follow it in regard to the other cases that remain.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I was going to ask the minister a question about that, but I must say it slipped my mind. Is the minister satisfied not only with the conclusion reached by the court but with the reasons for judgment given by the president of the court?

Mr. Hees: As I said to the hon. member for Laurier, I think it would be quite wrong and I do not intend to comment on the judgment of the court. What I do say is that I accept the decision with regard to the payment to be made.

Mr. Pearson: Therefore, Mr. Chairman, the minister allows these other statements in the judgment to stand?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I do not comment on the judgment in any way whatsoever. As I said, I simply accept the decision of the court with regard to the payment to be made, that is all.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word about an airport in my constituency. The situation there has been all muddled up. This coming Sunday there will be between 75 and 100 airplanes landing there. The situation is not the minister's fault. He has done everything he can and I think the muddling was done at the other end. I do wish he would undertake to look at this problem and see if action can be taken.

Mr. Hees: I will be glad to look into it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Chairman, on May 5, 1959, as reported at page 3373 of Hansard, I asked the following questions:

1. Have any requests been received by the government from individuals, associations or corporations to purchase or use a parcel of government owned land on the west bank of the Richelieu river at St. Jean, south of the Canadian National Railway bridge between St. Jean and Iberville?
2. If so, from whom, and for what purpose?
3. What action is being taken by the government?

In response to these questions I received the following replies:

1. Yes.
2. Messrs Robert and Bernard Goineau—for the installation of gasoline pumps and a repair shop for motor boats.
3. A lease has been offered to the applicants who have not yet indicated acceptance of the offer.

Could I ask the minister if he has a copy of that lease. I asked for it and never received it.

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I am advised that the lease has not been signed yet but as soon as it is I shall be very glad to table it.

Mr. Dupuis: Could the minister tell me what is in the lease? Could the minister advise me of the contents?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I have not got the lease with me at this table. I shall be glad to tell the hon. member tomorrow on the appropriate item or if he wishes to speak to me I shall be glad to give him the information at any time.

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Chairman, I respectfully submit that I asked for a copy of the lease over a month ago. I feel that the minister has had ample time in which to give it to me. He gave me all the documents referring to that purchase—

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, could I clear that up now. I am advised there is no lease yet. It is simply a proposal that has been sent but it has not been signed. When there is a lease I shall be glad to let the hon. member know all about it.

Mr. Dupuis: The minister tells me there is no lease. Can he explain the answer I received on May 5 at which time I was advised that a lease had been offered to the applicants who had not as yet indicated acceptance of the offer?

Mr. Hees: Yes, I can explain that very easily. A lease has been offered; that is to say, a proposition has been made. It has not been signed as yet, however, and there can be no lease until it is signed. When it is signed I shall be glad to give the hon. member all the information he requires.

Mr. Dupuis: Can the minister tell me what proposals were made to the people concerned?

Mr. Hees: I do not carry this information in my head and my deputy minister does not have it at the table. This information is in the department and I will be glad to give it to the hon. member tomorrow. If he would like to come to the department he can find out all he wants to know about it. There is no problem involved in getting the information.

Mr. Dupuis: I am very sorry, Mr. Chairman, but I am not satisfied with that answer. This is a very important matter of great interest to my constituents. The minister received a demand from Mr. Robert Sauve whom he knows very well as the defeated candidate in my riding. The demand was dated June 9, 1958. I should like to continue in French because I know the minister is competent in this tongue and I would like to be well understood.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, according to the documents given to me by the Minister of Transport, on June 9, 1958 he received from Mr. Robert Sauve, of St. Johns, a request to the effect that Messrs. Robert and Bernard Goineau should be allowed to set up gas pumps and a workshop for yacht repairs on the federal site I mentioned.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the minister to that matter. I have no wish to condemn his attitude, but I want to warn him of the existing situation before the lease is signed. If a lease has been offered, before the minister decides what he proposes to do, I want to warn him that the population of St. Johns will not view with favour the fact that the department or the Minister of Transport is giving a piece of public property to private citizens.

If the government disposed of a great stretch of land in that sector on the banks of the Richelieu river, we might perhaps consider such request to dispose of public property, but at this time, that site is the only one in the town of St. Johns, which gives access to the ships, boats and yachts, so that if use of that public site were alienated it would mean a discrimination against the people of my riding and my city.

Mr. Chairman, may I recall the steps that have been taken—and I want to be clearly understood: the Conservative candidate, Mr. Robert Sauve, asked the minister on June 9, 1958, to give Messrs. Robert and Bernard Goineau the opportunity of operating gas stations and a repair shop on a public site. Moreover, the mayor of the town of St. Johns, who is a friend of the defeated candidate, wrote to the minister on August 25, 1958, telling him that he had been told of such request having been made in favour of Messrs. Goineau. But the mayor of St. Johns never asked the town council to pass a resolution concerning Messrs. Goineau's request. Though the mayor of St. Johns signed the letter himself, no resolution was passed by the council to that effect.

Second, I point out to the minister that he received a petition from the Sorel yacht club in support of the request made by the Goineau brothers. Well, Mr. Chairman, I must say that Mr. Beaudry is unknown to me, that I am not familiar with the Sorel club, and that nobody in St. Johns can know about it, as it is not in our area. Mr. Beaudry, from Sorel, is scarcely welcome to say that it would be interesting to settle Messrs. Goineau on that lot.

Third, Mr. Sauve wrote several letters—for that is all he can do, poor man—and now, the chamber of commerce of St. Johns, in a communication bearing the signature of its secretary, Mr. Jean Frederick, wrote to the minister, telling him that his organization had received a request from the Goineau brothers, and that it had always favoured the installation of gas pumps, the improvement of the government land, when it was a case of providing yachts with an easy access to the river.

There again, Mr. Chairman, I would point out to the minister that there is no official resolution from the chamber of commerce of St. Johns; there is only a letter signed by the secretary, Mr. Jean Frederick.

I would ask the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Johnson) not to divert the minister's attention and to resume his seat, even though he should want to be appointed parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Johnson: With pleasure.

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Chairman, I would once again remind the minister—

(Text):

Mr. Grafftey: Court clown.

(Translation):

Mr. Dupuis: Would the hon. member please repeat what he just said?

(Text):

Mr. Grafftey: I called you the court clown.

(Translation):

Mr. Dupuis: My hon. friend and constituency neighbour refers to me as a clown; allow me to point out to him that, in his own constituency he is referred to as "drafty".

I now continue, Mr. Chairman. On November 13, 1958, the junior board of trade of St. Jean-Iberville sent a letter to the minister under the signature of its secretary, Mr. Jacques McNulty. Well, Mr. Chairman, once again the junior board of trade did not send the minister a copy of an official resolution, duly adopted at a meeting of that association. All this to ask the minister, before he grants a lease to the Goineau brothers (and the minister will certainly not be cross with me if I rise in my seat today before the evil is done, because there is nothing unrepairable, it has not been done yet) to kindly consider the following:

First, it is the only piece of land that the citizens of St. Johns can utilize to get to their yachts or boats.

Second, it is absolutely inconceivable that individuals should be given a piece of land belonging to the public, a piece of land which is being used continually by the public and which, furthermore, is the only piece of land that the public can use to get to the Richelieu.

Third, if individuals should be given exclusive use of that piece of land, I respectfully submit that the minister should ask public tenders in order that the government may get the best offer possible. It should, furthermore, make a serious inquiry in order to know what are those people's plans about that piece of land.

Mr. Chairman, I respectfully submit that the minister, before he takes a decision, should consider the matter and make a detailed inquiry, so that next year I won't be obliged to rise in my place here to tell him: "You gave to individuals a piece of land which belongs to the public."

The minister cannot hold a grudge against me for having warned him of what is coming, but if the minister gives a piece of land belonging to the public, I must warn him that he shall certainly hear about it in forthcoming sessions.

(Text):

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I will be very glad to look into this matter. I am very appreciative of the hon. member bringing it to my attention. He asked for some details on the proposed lease. I am advised that it is a plot of land 220 feet by 120 feet, of which one-third is under water. The rental rate proposed is 60 cents a square foot for the two-thirds of the land above water and 30 cents a foot for the one-third below the water. I am glad to advise him that representations have come to us along the lines that he has been indicating, and I shall be glad to give the matter the very serious consideration that he has suggested we should give it.

Mr. Dupuis: I thank the minister very much.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on tolls on the Welland ship canal. I have spoken in the house several times against the imposition of tolls on this canal because I have said it would toll-lock lake Ontario.

The greatest percentage of the industry in Ontario making use of the water-borne traffic is situated around the shores of lake Ontario and along the Welland ship canal. Areas around the shores of lake Ontario are the source of very little raw material, so that most of the raw material has to be brought in through a toll area. In today's Globe and Mail there is an article by Mr. Forgie of the Ontario Paper Company, Thorold, an outstanding economist, and he urges that the Canadian people recognize the importance of the great lakes waterway system. He predicts that otherwise the development of Canada as a trading nation through the advantage of having the seaway can be strangled by the broad application of policies which have not been fitted to serve local and particular needs. He notes that Premier Frost has come out against the imposition of tolls on the canal. With reference to the particular position of the Ontario Paper Company at Thorold he says:

> We have built docking facilities to load newsprint, pulp and pulpwood and have built up a fleet of ten ships which transport our raw materials and finished products throughout the great lakes system. We gain no benefit from improved depth facilities on the canal, yet we cannot move a ton of paper or a stick of pulpwood without paying a toll on a facility which has been completely paid for through taxes.

I realize, however, that the Welland canal tolls are just being charged for the cost of the deepening. The article continues:

> He said the principle of tolls had been introduced in such a way that a Canadian ship leaving a lake Ontario port is no longer able to proceed freely through the great lakes system.

I might say that the shippers along the canal are at a very great disadvantage now. It is costing them more to bring in pulpwood. It is costing the Steel Company of Hamilton more to bring in iron ore and their ships cannot make as many trips per season as they did in previous years. There is a lot of talk—we have heard it in parliament—about enlarging the Welland ship canal or duplicating a certain number of locks. I think this is particularly bad for our area because the manufacturers in the area think that it will add to the cost of shipping in future years. Also, the plants that are there will not expand because they are afraid of higher shipping costs.

The minister said a few minutes ago that only members of his party speak for the small people. I am trying to speak now for the small people in our area, the men who want to keep their jobs. The Hon. Charles Daley, minister of labour of Ontario, has made many pronouncements against tolls on the Welland ship canal and I know that Premier Frost came out again tolls about a month before they were imposed. According to the press two or three weeks ago, at the time of the christening of a new ship at Port Weller, Mr. Daley and others made protests in the presence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and according to the press and some people who were there the minister, after listening to the protests, said that he would take up the matter with the cabinet in Ottawa.

I asked him in the house if any protest had been made and his answer was in the negative. I do not know whether or not I worded my question properly. He may have thought that I was asking whether any written protest had been made. But in the presence of a good many people who were present that day protests were certainly made to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and he said they would be taken up with the cabinet in Ottawa. I should like to ask the minister today if he has been receiving further protests from people about tolls on the Welland canal and if the Minister of Trade and Commerce has conveyed the protests made on that day to the members of the cabinet.

Mr. Hees: Did the hon. member mean to ask whether the matter has been discussed since the Minister of Trade and Commerce returned? I think the hon. member knows that what is discussed in cabinet cannot be spoken of in the house, but I can assure the hon. member that the Minister of Trade and Commerce brought it to my attention.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, yesterday on this item I referred to the St. Lawrence seaway and to what in my opinion are some very important faults in the construction of the seaway and made certain statements resulting from my own personal observations. I asked the minister at that time to consider referring the whole question of the seaway to a standing committee of the house for discussion and examination. I felt that this was necessary not only because of the apparent serious construction faults but also because of answers given to questions asked in the house as to the movement of piers, steps taken to bring about repairs to piers, remedial measures as they were termed, and the very startling revelation in my judgment that the piers of the Cornwall bridge do not go down to bedrock. I take it that the minister is refusing an inquiry by such a committee. I think he is making a very serious mistake.

Almost daily we see further evidence of difficulties of all kinds in the operation of the seaway and this suggests to me that not only with respect to construction but also to operation there are a great many things that require the most thorough and serious examination. There is a report today that it is impossible now for the dominion bureau of statistics to obtain accurate reports of tonnage going through the seaway. I have in my hand an article by Clark Davey in this morning's Globe and Mail which reads in part as follows:

> A change in method of reporting ship movements and cargo statistics has left the dominion bureau of statistics without any accurate records for the first weeks of St. Lawrence seaway operations. The seaway authority is expected to issue its own report shortly on the number of ships and total cargoes handled to the end of May.
> However, D.B.S. officials said they have been unable to obtain an accurate break-down of commodity figures essential to economic studies of the seaway's impact and of changing traffic patterns.

The article goes on to say that D.B.S. officials have endeavoured to find out the quantity of goods going through the seaway but that the clerks have all been moved to the seaway office in Cornwall where they receive the forms from the ship owners or agents. The article continues:

> The clerks, in turn, transmit the information to the dominion bureau of statistics. In many cases, D.B.S. officials said, the ship owners or agents are simply not filling in the forms. In many other cases the information they provide is incomplete or wrong. They said repeated checks would have to be made and it would be several months, they expected, before the system was operating satisfactorily.

This may not sound too important to the minister but I think it is important that accurate statistics be readily available as to the traffic through the seaway. Surely if we are to know the value of the seaway it is absolutely essential that such statistics be readily available. This is another instance of inefficient operation. As stated by the dominion bureau of statistics, because of the lack of information it is impossible to report accurately the amount of traffic going through the seaway.

I related to the committee yesterday what I had seen so far as the locks near Montreal are concerned, and what I believe to be very serious errors in construction. This morning the minister made a number of statements in the house and referred to certain things that had been said in this debate yesterday. I had asked about the Cornwall bridge. I had asked why the piers did not go down to bedrock. I see no explanation from the minister as to why the peirs did not go down to bedrock. I see no statement by the minister which would suggest that the piers should not have gone down to bedrock.

The minister quotes from information with which he has been supplied to the effect that certain remedial measures were taken. He said that a preliminary report dated January 11, 1958 included the statement that the remedial measures being taken are reasonable ones.

Mr. Hees: I should tell the hon. member, since he asked why the piers were on glacial till and not on rock, that glacial till has practically the same density as rock and is considered by our engineers, the consulting engineers and the United States engineers, to be eminently satisfactory as a foundation for this bridge.

Mr. Argue: I would suggest, with great deference to the minister's knowledge in this field, that there are a great many eminent engineers who would say it was tragic, in this instance, not to have the piers put down through the glacial till another 20 or 24 feet to bedrock.

Mr. Broome: Could the hon. member give his authority for that statement?

Mr. Argue: I am going to come to that. I wonder if the minister would allow such authorities to appear before a parliamentary committee and give this kind of evidence as to whether or not, in their opinion, this is in fact the right type of construction.

Mr. Hees: May I just point out to the hon. member who was not here this morning when I gave my statement in some detail in answer to his question that I said I would be very happy to have him and the hon. member for Vancouver East, who asked these questions and who seemed to be genuinely worried about these matters, meet with our engineers who will answer all these questions; who will tell them how we operate; what our problems are and how we overcome them.

Mr. Argue: I was quite aware of what the minister said this morning. That is no answer to the suggestion that I made, a very serious suggestion that this whole question should be referred for study to a parliamentary committee, where these things could be studied out in the open and where the public would have a chance to learn the evidence and to decide whether or not serious errors, in fact, had been made. I do not believe, in answer to a serious request that such a public inquiry be held, parliament should accept or that I should accept this kind of offer to meet behind closed doors where the public has no access to the information, with officials of the department—

Mr. Hees: If I might just add there—

Mr. Argue: I have the floor.

Mr. Hees: If you are asking for information, or if you are just talking for publicity, let me know.

Mr. Argue: I have the floor.

Mr. Hees: If you are asking for information, I will give you some, but if you are making a speech for the press gallery—

Mr. Argue: I have the floor now.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Order; it is extremely difficult for the Hansard reporter to take down the remarks of two gentlemen who try to speak simultaneously. The hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. Argue: Apparently the minister knows as much about the rules as he does about some of the other things about which he professes to be an authority. I do not accept as a sound offer on behalf of the government that there should be this kind of closed inquiry and that the hon. member for Vancouver East and I should chum up somewhere with the officials of the department so that we can be given a lesson on what took place.

Mr. Hees: You can have every question you want to ask answered.

Mr. Argue: The minister is very sensitive about this, he is very edgy on this point. He is unable to contain himself over there. Every time I make a point he jumps up and he makes an interjection.

Mr. Hees: I thought you wanted information.

Mr. Argue: He tries to claim the right to speak when he has no right to speak. I do not mind him being sensitive. I do not wonder that he is sensitive when it is said these things should be looked into in a public way. The minister did not refer, in any statement that he made, to the leaks to which I referred yesterday in the gates; he did not refer to the water spouting up through the concrete; he did not refer to the guards that were to have bolts connecting them, and in certain instances the bolts are missing—

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): So are some of yours.

Mr. Argue: What was that?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I just said some of your nuts and bolts are missing, too.

Mr. Argue: I knew that for some time about the hon. gentleman with respect to the same thing. After these very helpful and encouraging interruptions, I would say that the offer the minister has made surely cannot be considered a proper reply to the statements I have made concerning the faulty construction. I did not have to get advice from anybody to see the bulges in the walls of the locks. I had expected that the engineers and the construction firms, the people who built the locks, would build walls of a straight character. It is no wonder that with these additional bulges we hear so much about scraping because the walls, even to the naked eye, are badly constructed.

The minister admitted that remedial measures had been taken with reference to the piers. Remedial measures were necessary, I would suggest, because there had been faulty construction, because there had been a movement of the piers. However, when we suggest there is something wrong the minister says, no, there is nothing wrong. If you want to find out, just come along sometime and we will arrange a nice, cosy private meeting with the responsible officials of the seaway authority to discuss the complaints that have been received. I would suggest we have a full scale inquiry, not only as to inefficiency in the construction of the seaway as has been suggested, but also into the apparent inefficient operation of the seaway and as to why we have these jams, delays and bottlenecks about which we have read.

The further statement now that for some reason or another records of goods going through the seaway are not accurate and cannot be obtained in a ready fashion, the statement which the minister has made is, I feel, not one which can be accepted. I do not think that this is an answer at all. It simply by-passes the statement I made yesterday. And I think the minister's reply this morning substantiated the claim that I made that this is a subject about which there should be a full parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am now going to make the speech I have always intended making on the estimates of the Department of Transport and I assure the minister that I am going to be speaking for the little people of Newfoundland as indeed I have tried to do on many other subjects besides the minister's estimates in seeking to further the interests of the fishermen, though I have not been able to do much to soften the hard hearts of members of the government in this respect. But the heart of the Minister of Transport is, perhaps, softer than those of his colleagues and I want to start by supporting very warmly the appeal made to the minister yesterday by the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador and the plea I made on behalf of that hon. member a year ago when he was not able to be in the house. The hon. member stated the problem, but I should like to say something about the background to this problem.

At the time the terms of union were negotiated ten years ago it was decided by the then government that the telegraph and telephone service formerly operated by the department of posts and telegraphs of Newfoundland would be taken over by Canadian National Telegraphs but because, for certain historical reasons, telecommunications in Labrador had not been under the administration of the posts and telegraphs of Newfoundland no similar action was taken in that area. Labrador is an integral part of the province of Newfoundland and it does seem to me that the people of Labrador—I am sorry to say I do not represent them though I would love to; they are represented very adequately by my hon. friend from Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador—deserve an improved service. I would remind the minister, as I may say I reminded some of his predecessors—I say this in the presence of one of them today—that the large centres are better served. The minister smiles and I know that he thinks he is doing a lot better than previous ministers. This is one respect in which he can show his interest in the small people about whom he was speaking. I hope he will get up and tell us that it is the intention of the government to reorganize these communications or, alternatively, entrust the whole problem to the C.N.T. As a matter of fact, I think the second course would be better than the first. I can understand that the minister should not want bureaucrats to be running a telegraph service, if I may use the minister's word, but I think the C.N.T. is much better equipped. And I should like to add that despite occasional criticisms that are heard in Newfoundland—and I may be taken to task by some of my constituents for saying this—I think the Canadian National Telegraphs has done a marvellous job in Newfoundland in the last ten years. I think it is really remarkable the way they have increased the efficiency of the service and modernized it under very difficult conditions, and I am informed that they have been somewhat surprised to find that when they had modernized their equipment and improved the service the financial position was improved instead of the reverse.

I would suggest to the minister that no matter how much recovery is made this year, we are going to have seasonal unemployment again next winter in Newfoundland, and if any way can be found to have advanced planning, perhaps on a larger scale, for the modernization of the telephone and telegraph system in order to provide employment, it would be welcome. I know you cannot cut the poles in winter but you can put them up. After all the minister does have to take the over-all financial responsibility for the budget of the C.N.T. even if it is not a direct responsibility, and I think this is another way in which he could help very constructively.

I also want to say a brief word about something which I would not have mentioned today but for one thing, namely, the absence of the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador from the city today. I refer to the question of the port of Botwood and the pilotage there. I do feel that this situation at Botwood is a very special one. It is important to keep this port open for the longest period of the year in order to maximize the returns of the pulp and paper industry and to enable them to keep the maximum number of men in employment. There are some special difficulties which I will not discuss now, but I say that I have always found the department exceedingly co-operative in these matters. I know I can say the same for my colleague, the hon. member for that district.

While I am still dealing with the problems of my hon. friend from Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador I do not think he would mind if I also endorsed what he had to say about the hotel at Gander. Gander, after all, is only five miles and a few moose away from my constituency, and it is a place to which I generally go when I am going to my constituency. It is a place in which I have taken a great interest and a place in which the taxpayers of Canada have invested tens of millions and, no doubt, hundreds of millions of dollars. And it is in our view the most important airport in Canada if not in the world.

There is a real danger that unless a little more energy and initiative is put into getting a hotel there as near as possible to the terminal there will be increased pressure on the part of the international air lines to avoid Gander whenever they can, and this very big investment may be lost because of a relatively small matter. I know the department does not want to run a hotel, and I do not blame them, but I think that rather than jeopardize the whole investment in Gander they should consider even that. However, I think there are other ways in which the problem could be taken care of.

I should like the minister to tell us, if he can, and if there is anything to tell, just what it is we read in a mysterious way about the free port on the south coast of Newfoundland. We keep reading items in the papers and see it suggested from time to time that the members from Newfoundland are neglecting their duties because they are not supporting this project which we are told the Minister of Transport is terribly eager to advance. I think the public in Newfoundland would like to know. Certainly I would like to know, and I am sure my friend from St. John's East would also like to know what the score really is, if there is any score.

So as not to leave out any canal in the country I am not going to ask the minister about the canal across the Avalon peninsula, which would shorten the journey to Europe appreciably. The minister can put that down for his long term planning.

Mr. Hees: The late late show.

Mr. Pickersgill: However, there is that other canal which would shorten the journey from Newfoundland to New York, and whose construction would appeal to a great many people in the Atlantic provinces. I should like to ask the minister how far he is getting in his studies concerning the Chignecto canal. Perhaps the minister would not mind telling us what progress has been made in implementing the promise given in St. John's in the 1957 election of which I will remind him. According to the Globe and Mail which, as the minister realizes, is a very reputable newspaper, the Prime Minister said in St. John's in April, 1957:

> Newfoundland's narrow gauge railway should be converted to the standard gauge because the present line retards development, adds to the cost of transportation and therefore makes it more difficult for Newfoundland industries to compete in domestic mainland markets on the same basis as other provinces.

I am sure the minister agrees completely with that statement of the Prime Minister, and the people of Newfoundland would be delighted to hear what progress is being made.

Then there is one other thing the minister might tell us. Shortly before we went out of office the government instituted an interdepartmental inquiry in co-operation with the Canadian National Railways on transportation in the Atlantic provinces, and I think we would like to be brought up to date on the progress of that survey, particularly on those concrete things which have been accomplished as a result of it.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has given me quite a few things to answer here. First of all, he mentioned communications in Labrador, and I was very interested to hear what he recommended in that regard and we will certainly take up this matter with Canadian National Telegraphs.

With regard to Botwood, I am very glad to be able to tell him that next winter an icebreaker will be based in Newfoundland, probably at St. John's and this should help very materially in meeting the situation at Botwood and other localities in Newfoundland.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister would not consider basing it at Twillingate?

Mr. Hees: I will take it under serious consideration! The next matter he mentioned was the need for a first class hotel at Gander. I agree that it is a very real need which we have appreciated for some time, but as he knows the Department of Transport is not in the hotel business and we would welcome very much any approaches made to us by outside interests who would like to build a hotel there. I must say from what I have seen of it that I think a hotel built there would be a financial success.

The next question he mentioned was the question of a free port. All I can say there is that I would suggest he talk to the editors of the Financial Post; they seem to be the only ones who know very much about it. They have discussed it in quite some detail, but they have not talked to us and I do not know anything about it.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I might interrupt the minister for a moment, the government is not making any serious study of this matter at the present time, then?

Mr. Hees: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Chairman. Then the hon. member mentioned the Newfoundland railway and changes in the gauge of the Newfoundland railway, but I have had no report on that recently from the Canadian National.

Next he mentioned the Chignecto canal, and I would like to read a report made for me on that matter. This was submitted by the economics division of the Department of Transport and it reads as follows:

> Estimates of cost have risen greatly since the surveyor commission estimated in 1931 the cost of a smaller project than now being studied at $48 million. The estimates now run from $90 million to $140 million. An alternative plan has been submitted by the Foundation Engineering Company and this too has been referred to engineers for study. The question of hydroelectric power development in connection with a canal has been given consideration, and thus far it would appear that engineering opinion is generally agreed that the two projects could be treated independently; in other words there would be no substantial savings from a joint project.
> At the same time the department has undertaken to obtain information on the possible economic value of a Chignecto canal. In view of the comparatively heavy cost of construction this is an important aspect of the question but not one on which it is easy to reach definite conclusions. We know of certain items of traffic that might use a Chignecto canal but whether the canal is capable of attracting sufficient long distance traffic from present routes to justify its construction is still problematical.
> Both the engineering and economic studies are continuing and reports should be received some time this summer.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the minister could say who was doing the engineering study and who was doing the economic study?

Mr. Hees: The public works engineers in consultation with our own engineering staff. The economic study is being carried out by the economics division of the Department of Transport.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Could I ask a supplementary question regarding the canal. I wonder if the minister would say if those who have facts regarding the economics of the canal and possible use of the canal should make them known to this economics division, or should they wait to be called on—

Mr. Hees: We are most anxious to get any information we possibly can about possible users of a canal in that area. We invite most seriously anyone who has any information about possible users of the canal to come forward and either get in touch with me or get in touch directly with Mr. George Scott, the director of economic policy of the Department of Transport, because it is most important we get that information and without it we cannot get ahead very quickly on the economic study.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the minister leaves the Chignecto canal, I think he gave a lower figure of $90 million and an upper figure of $140 million. Was that the range of cost for one scheme or was that two different schemes?

Mr. Hees: That is the range for two different schemes. The Foundation Engineering have submitted—

Mr. Chevrier: Is it Foundation Company (Maritimes) Limited?

Mr. Hees: It is Fenco Engineering. They have submitted a proposition whereby the canal would have only one lock. The other plan is for two locks. We have had several meetings with this company and discussed the possibilities of using one lock, and those discussions are still going on.

Then the hon. member asked about studies going on in the department, and I would like to give some examples of the main projects which are being studied. First of all there is the Maritime Freight Rates Act. This is a study to decide whether any changes or adjustments in the present level of assistance might be justified. A traffic sample is being analysed to reveal the present distribution of the benefits by areas and commodities. Second, there is the Newfoundland coastal services. This is based on a detailed survey by the Canadian National Railways and direct investigations by departmental staff, and a decision has been taken to provide three new vessels for these services. Third, the Newfoundland-mainland ferry services. A subcommittee comprising departmental and railway officials has been given the assignment of assessing future needs in these services and making recommendations. Fourth, the Prince Edward Island ferry services and the causeway. Traffic analyses and forecasts have been made to serve as guides for future needs of these services. I am advised that out of that study came the new ferry which was announced for Prince Edward Island about a week ago. Fifth, the Nova Scotia-New England ferry services. Traffic analyses have been made of these services to determine whether additional capacity is required at this time. Sixth, the Chignecto canal, and I have just dealt with that.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister has not indicated that there was any consideration being given at any place in this survey to the possibility of the federal government, in order to relieve some of these services which do not pay very well, as we all know, substituting for them assistance for highways which would provide in some cases a better alternative.

Mr. Hees: This has been included in the items which are under study, but no conclusions have been arrived at so far.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the minister expect a definite report to be made, or are these studies all independent of one another?

Mr. Hees: These are all separate studies and are being dealt with as they come forward, and the reports will be made separately at various times.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is one question the minister did not answer, and I know he just overlooked it. I refer to my suggestion that he should step up the modernization of the Canadian National Telegraphs in Newfoundland. I was hoping he would tell me he would double the budget particularly for the northeast coast.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member missed the part of my remarks in which I dealt with that.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Chairman. The minister referred to the Labrador in which I have an interest as a citizen but in the northeast coast I have an interest as a member and the minister has told us how important it is for members to represent their constituents.

Mr. Hees: I will certainly be very glad to include the northeast coast in my inquiries to the railway.

Mr. Brunsden: Mr. Chairman, the profound knowledge, sound or otherwise, exhibited by the last two speakers should hold a backbencher to his chair. I am particularly intrigued by the hon. member for Assiniboia for the reason that like myself he comes from the prairies. He is too young to have driven an ox cart. He knows something about horses. He speaks with authority with respect to deficiency payments. As a matter of fact he is an authority on every subject that arises affecting western Canada.

Mr. Hees: Or eastern Canada.

Mr. Brunsden: Today the hon. member for Assiniboia blossomed forth as an authority on a highly technical subject, the St. Lawrence seaway. I am chagrined that as a fellow citizen of his on the prairies I know so little of the subjects on which he speaks.

There is a question with respect to transportation in Canada which is probably involved with the St. Lawrence seaway in a minor way. We have heard a lot in this committee with respect to rail and air transportation and today we heard from one who presumes to speak with authority on water transportation. I want to bring to the attention of the minister the fact that we in western Canada are relying more and more on air transportation, a statement with which I am sure the hon. member for Assiniboia would agree. We feel that there is a need on the part of the Department of Transport to give reconsideration to air terminal facilities on the prairies.

I did not speak in the debate on the speech from the throne but had I done so I would have talked to the house about my own city of Medicine Hat. It has a population of some 30,000 and is a strategic point with respect to transportation and yet it is a point lacking in proper air terminal facilities. It is my hope that within the next few months the department will reconsider the entire question of air terminal facilities not only across Canada but will consider along with the hotel at Gander the need for proper landing and takeoff facilities in our smaller western centres. We in Medicine Hat are restricted at the moment with respect to the type of plane that may land. We are losing a lot of services we might otherwise have. We require reconsideration of the entire problem of our runways, and our general airport facilities.

The Minister of Transport has many irons in the fire and is confronted with many problems. It is not my wish to press him with this particular one but it is important, as I am sure everyone from western Canada will agree, that we have in the not too distant future a thorough review of the entire air terminal facilities situation in western Canada.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I will just detain the committee a moment. I have three items for the consideration of the minister. He may deal with them when I finish speaking or when the specific items are reached in the estimates.

The first question I wish to raise is the need for the provision of additional facilities at the Canadian National Railways Newfoundland hotel at St. John's. A very good case has been made out for the provision of additional facilities at the hotel in the past few years by many prominent groups in St. John's. I am thinking particularly of representations made to the minister by the Newfoundland board of trade. While I realize this is a matter concerning the internal operation of the railway I would ask the minister to give consideration to this request in the light of representations that have been made over the past few years. As the minister is probably aware this is the only major hotel in that part of the province. I believe it is one of the few hotels operated by the C.N.R. that operates at a profit. It is not necessary for me to take the time of the committee to point out the necessity for the provision of these additional facilities because, as I said a moment ago, an excellent case has been made out for this by prominent groups in the city of St. John's and I would ask the minister to take this into consideration.

The second point I would ask to be considered is one with which I dealt with briefly last session during consideration of the minister's estimates. I refer to the need for provision of Canadian National express services at Bell island. At that time the minister assured me he would take up this matter with officials of the railway and inform me directly. After studying the question, the railway advised that it was not considered feasible to proceed with this service. I would suggest that the railway should consider the provision of vital services solely on the basis of need and not on the basis of economics. We realize we are here to try and cut down on the expense of the railway to the extent we can but at the same time as members our primary function is to urge the provision of essential services for those parts of the country where they are badly needed. An express service is vitally needed for Bell island. I would ask the minister if consideration could again be given to this question and if the matter could be re-opened with the Canadian National Railways with a view to providing express service to serve the 13,000 citizens on Bell island.

My third point concerns the provision in the estimates of this department for the construction of a new ferry to service Bell island. Perhaps when we reach this item or after I resume my seat the minister could report on the progress to date of the auto ferry for Bell island and advise when it is expected that this boat will be finished. Perhaps it will be possible for him to give an indication as to when this vessel will be placed in service.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, in checking the remarks I made earlier today about the Department of Transport I realized that I insinuated it was the most inefficient department of government and I thought I should take this opportunity of adding one or two comments to support my earlier remarks. One thing that perturbs me is the tendency to have questions directed to this department made orders for return. We just do not have the answers. I think specifically of one that I am very much interested in namely the lakehead harbour commission appointments. I asked for:

> A copy of all correspondence since August 1, 1958, exchanged between the federal government and the municipal authorities in Fort William and Port Arthur, Messrs. Milton Vibert, Arthur Widnall, Norman R. Wilson, and Harold G. Blanchard, concerning the appointment or selection of the lakehead harbour commissioners.

The names that I read off are all good, stalwart Conservatives. I want to get information on how those harbour commissioners were selected. I remember that the minister scored, according to the Canadian Press, in this house back on March 20. The Canadian Press report says:

> Transport Minister Hees suggested to a C.C.F. M.P. Thursday night that defeated Conservative candidates are wider awake than successful C.C.F. ones.
>
> He was asked by Douglas Fisher (C.C.F.-Port Arthur) why the names of the new lakehead harbour commission were announced by the defeated Conservative candidate in that area.
> "Perhaps it is because the defeated Conservative candidate is more on his toes than the member for Port Arthur," replied Mr. Hees, as government supporters thumped their desks and laughed.

I think the minister knew at the time that I had the information of who the appointees were to be for several months. As a matter of fact, his deputy minister told me several weeks before that, and in this particular case I was just being polite. I feel it is not the business of a member of parliament, government or opposition, to make announcements that should come from the department. I would like to suggest to the minister that the very fact it was the defeated Conservative candidate in Fort William who announced this is an indication of the kind of little game he is trying to play in order to boost his own stock as the crown prince. Since I did not get the information in connection with these local Conservatives, I would ask the minister whether he was aware that the man who has become the chairman of the harbour commission, Mr. Irwin, was a brother-in-law of the provincial member for Fort William?

Mr. Hees: The answer is no, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Fisher: He did not know that. I might say it is, I think, the kind of information he should have known. I would like to ask the minister whether he can tell me anything more about this gentleman, Robert Alexander Cecil Henry, that I have been trying to find out about and still have not had any satisfactory answers?

Mr. Hees: What is it that the hon. member wants to know? Has the hon. gentleman not been answered with respect to Mr. Henry?

Mr. Fisher: The question has been passed but no information has been available yet on the orders of the day.

Mr. Hees: I am advised that the answer is ready because the deputy minister advises me that it went across his desk several days ago. I will see that it is hurried up.

Mr. Fisher: Does the minister think it might be considerate on his part to see that members who are interested in his department receive information such as this before his estimates come up? Does he not think it would be considerate to make a strong effort to clear up all these things so that we would have some information available to us that would be of help to us?

Mr. Hees: Some of the questions that hon. members, particularly hon. members from the group to which the hon. member belongs, ask require a great deal of searching from a number of different agencies. For example, the Department of Transport is spread over 13 different buildings in the city of Ottawa and there are a great many agencies and sections. I can assure the hon. member that there is no intention to hold back information. I think he knows that. We get it as quickly as we can. If we have been slow in this case I am sorry for it. He will get it just as quickly as possible. There has been no intention of holding back information at all at any time.

Mr. Fisher: I would not like to suggest there was any intention to hold back information. It is just the fact that information has been very slow in coming. I think the point the minister has just made that the Department of Transport is a huge department is true. It is very definitely a growing department, spread out all over Ottawa. This is another point to support something I said before and I will say it again. We need a new look at the administration of this department. I think we need a couple more deputy ministers to look after the various phases of it. It is so difficult for a member to document and lay down his impressions. My impression of this department is that it is not one of the better administered ones of the government and I think one of the reasons is that there is too big a load on the present deputy minister. The channels have not been worked out. This is my personal impression from a great number of contacts with the department. When I compare it with other departments such as the Department of Labour I find that it does not show up very well. From the Department of Labour we get replies very quickly. I know perhaps their problem is simpler but there are a number of government departments which are right on the bit in all their relationships in so far as correspondence, phone calls and that sort of thing is concerned. That is not the way with the Department of Transport.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I do not apologize at this time for bringing up another matter. The only reason I bring it up now is that it concerns at least two if not three of the divisions of the Department of Transport and I feel I should take it up at this time. I refer to the Dorval airport outside of Montreal.

As the minister knows, there is a great deal of dissatisfaction in Montreal at this time about the progress made in connection with the airport. That dissatisfaction has been engendered not only from groups and associations which are particularly interested in the airport but from others as well. I know of no newspaper in Montreal, in either the French or the English language, which has not severely criticized the Department of Transport on the progress made in recent years. I propose to criticize the department on this score, and it may be that the minister will find that I am responsible to some extent for some of this. If he so finds I will accept it; but none the less, the fact is that for the last two years the government has been in office and there has been little or no progress made.

I refer first to an article which appeared in La Presse of Montreal on June 3, 1959, entitled:

Une "stratégie sinistre"?

There can be no doubt about the feeling of those who read this article that there is a differentiation in the department between what is happening in Montreal and what is happening elsewhere. I will not go any farther at the moment.

Then there is the very serious complaint that appeared in the Montreal Gazette and the Montreal Star and in the statement made by the Montreal tourist and convention bureau. I may tell the minister at once that I was wholly dissatisfied with the answer he gave me on the orders of the day in which he indicated that far more progress had been made under his administration than under the former administration. I have no objection if he wants to say that and repeat it ad infinitum, but that does not derogate from the responsibility which rests on the government to get on with the airport in Montreal.

I am in the airport in Montreal at least once a week and sometimes more often, and I agree with the statement of the Montreal tourist bureau that it is a shame as to what has happened. I know that the position is, well, we will not do anything with the old airport until the new one is ready. That, of course, is a very tempting conclusion to come to and perhaps the natural one in all the circumstances; but if the new airport was coming along I think people would be able to put up with the difficulties in the old one, but the new airport does not seem to be moving at all. As a matter of fact, it is growing at a snail's pace.

What did the Montreal tourist bureau have to say? I will not deal in personalities; I will deal objectively. They state that the first view given travellers entering the country through the local airport is simply disgusting. Why would the Montreal tourist bureau want to make a statement like that unless there was some foundation for it? There is some foundation for it. All hon. members have to do is to go there and see. Particularly when various flights come in simultaneously, you just cannot get through the general area in the airport building, let alone all the other difficulties that take place. La Presse, in an editorial in the June 3 issue, said this:

(Translation):

Since the actual beginning of the works at Dorval, which was about five years ago—

(Text):

Listen to this carefully because I know the minister understands quite well.

(Translation):

—there has been time to start and complete the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway, to dot Montreal with skyscrapers, to build a number of airports in other cities, to make improvements to the Toronto airport on two separate occasions and to draw plans for a new air terminal in the Queen city that will likely be ready before that of Montreal. And when the Minister of Transport is questioned about it in parliament, he is satisfied to give a politician's reply and say that the present government is progressing more rapidly than the previous one. Unfortunately, the facts far from confirm such a breezy answer.

(Text):

I may add that I go to Malton airport from time to time and I am delighted with the progress that has been made there. There is a real attempt to expand the airport and divide the various areas so that with a little bit of common sense travellers know where to go quickly and can move to and from the building with dispatch. But why should not that be done in the city of Montreal?

I raise this in conjunction with another matter and I am sure the minister will not blame me if I bring it up. I refer to the air agreements. There are some of us who are beginning to have apprehensions about what is likely to happen to the international airport at Montreal. The minister announced the other day an amendment to the United Kingdom air transport agreement and one of the bargains made in the agreement was that in exchange for certain rights which T.C.A. was to get in the United Kingdom and onward B.O.A.C. would get additional landing rights elsewhere, namely at Toronto.

Nobody is going to find fault with this but what I do become apprehensive about is that in the Financial Post of June 6, 1959 there is a statement to the effect that six trans-Atlantic carriers now landing at Montreal are seeking similar rights to go on to Toronto. If this is going to be the case, if the minister, the department and the government in their negotiation of air agreements make the situation such that the importance of Montreal from an air standpoint is going to be far less than it has been in the past, then I think that is a serious matter. I do not charge the minister with anything personal in this regard. I know that he has in mind the general development of aviation in Canada, as have his officers. On the oher hand, I do know that when you start negotiating across the table for changes in an air agreement you have to bargain here and bargain there. Where you give in here you must get something elsewhere, and if in the bargaining it is Dorval airport that is going to be left holding the bag then I am afraid that the situation will certainly be a serious one.

I protest as strongly as I can about the delays at the Montreal airport. I am not the only one protesting. Anyone who knows what is going on is doing the same thing. The press is very apprehensive about the matter and so are those people who are air minded. So are the air lines which have to rely on facilities in order to move travellers from one airport to another with dispatch and efficiency. I should like to get some information about the airport and ask the minister a few questions. In the first place, I believe it was in 1953 that I made the announcement in the house concerning the new Dorval airport and the estimate of costs. Then, in 1954, I believe, my successor, the Hon. Mr. Marler, announced additional plans and stated that partial plans only were ready at the time, that no general plans were made and that the department felt that that was the best procedure. I think he also gave an estimate of the costs at that time.

In 1956 and 1957 real progress was made. Things moved pretty fast and from nothing but a foundation we began to see indications of what the building would look like. I believe that in 1957 the deputy minister thought that the work would be completed in 1958 but that the installation of electronic equipment and getting the premises ready for the air lines would occupy several months in 1959, clearly leaving the impression that the airport building would be ready for business and for operations in 1959. The other day, in answer to a question which I asked the minister, and I will leave out the personalities, he announced that the building should be finished in 1960. In my opinion this is not satisfactory. I should like to know why it is that there are so few men employed. I may be wrong in the statement I am making but this is the information I have and the minister will correct me if I am in error.

I am informed that as of June the Foundation Company of Canada indicated that they only had 47 men on the job and all the other subcontractors had less than 50. Anyone knows that a building of that size and type would require at least 300 to 400 men at the present time. If these facts are so, I do not know why this is the case but I think the house is entitled to an explanation.

I am also disturbed about the effect that the air agreement is having on the position of T.C.A. As the minister knows, T.C.A. has its head office in Montreal. Both the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific have their head offices there. IATA and ICAO have their head offices there. It is really the headquarters of aviation in Canada. It has been stated in a committee of the House of Commons that one decision of the government, without going into it in detail and therefore making the matter contentious, will have the effect in 1959 of reducing T.C.A.'s profit position by about $1½ million and in a full year by approximately $3 million. If that is the case, then the decision which was made concerning the amendment of the air agreement with the United Kingdom will, I am afraid, enhance the deficit position of T.C.A. that much more.

I have perhaps been too long on this, but I wondered whether the minister would not be good enough to summarize the position in so far as Dorval is concerned. What was the first estimate? What was the next estimate? What was the first estimate made in 1953? What was the estimate made in 1954? Were there any additional estimates made from that time until now? How many contracts have been awarded, and what are those contracts? I know the last question is not fair, in so far as supplying the information today is concerned, but perhaps the minister might table it at a later date. What are the various subcontracts that have been given? What is the present progress on all these subcontracts? What has happened to the representations which were made from both sides of the house for the airconditioning of the airport? It may be that has a bearing on the whole subject.

What progress has been made with regard to the installation of these facilities? Can the committee take it now, as an assumed fact, that the new airport will be ready for operation in 1960 as the minister indicated earlier? I would appreciate it if I could get answers to these questions.

Mr. Hees: Yes, I am glad to be able to say we feel confident the airport will be ready for operation next year. I am glad to assure the hon. member that the work is going ahead. As he has said, there has been a temporary slowdown lately and this was caused by certain holdups at treasury board. They have all been overcome and the contracts have been passed. The work is going ahead.

I might give some information on the details. The terminal building itself is in an advanced state, with the office floors and the basement virtually completed, the remaining work being related to the finishing off of the public waiting room and airline operating space on the main and mezzanine floors. This work is now proceeding. In addition, there remains completion of the main power plant installation in the building, the construction of the fingers and aeroquays, the installation of the hydrant refuelling system, the construction of the new main heating plant which will serve the building and the whole airport, and the paving of the apron in front of the building. The first stage of tender calls in connection with hydrant refuelling work and the heating plant is under way, and the final stage of tender calls will go out shortly. The plans for the fingers and aeroquays are at present being modified. Initial plans for this purpose, while satisfactory in concept, had to be studied in detail from the point of view of cost of construction in relation to the overall cost and revenue position of the terminal as a whole. It was found that the cost of the structures would be rather high and would make it difficult to maintain our objective of self-sufficiency of operation and decision was taken, without varying the concept, to try to modify the plans as regards construction costs. This planning should be completed during the summer, so that construction work may commence thereafter in time to permit the opening of the building, as I previously stated, sometime next year.

With regard to the new air agreement giving B.O.A.C. the right to go into Malton, I might say that we did not seek to enter into any new air agreement with the British. We have been under considerable pressure, ever since I came into office over the past two years, to do so. Talks finally took place just last spring and, as I say, we were under great pressure. I think the minister understands these matters very well. It would have been impossible for us not to conclude the agreement which he has mentioned.

Mr. Chevrier: Thanks for the compliment.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Hees: It shows the esteem in which I hold the hon. member. What Canada has received as her part of the agreement was simply an attempt to balance up the granting of landing rights at Malton to Great Britain. The fact that certain airlines will be flying into Malton instead of into Dorval, I can assure the hon. member is no responsibility of the government. It is the result of decisions of the airlines themselves as to what airports they make their flights.

I can assure the hon. member we look upon Dorval as a very important airport. We are in no way trying to undermine it. I regret at the present time the people who use Dorval airport are inconvenienced because of a lack of space. The reason that we enlarged the temporary building in Toronto is that the new airport there will not be ready for some four years. I am advised we have also enlarged the trans-Atlantic terminal in Montreal. Perhaps we should have taken steps a year or so ago to enlarge the present air terminal building in Montreal. I am advised that the domestic space at Dorval has been enlarged also.

I do agree with the hon. member for Laurier that there is considerable congestion there. I use the airport a great deal myself, and I know the conditions. I am very sorry it is so, and I can assure him we are pressing on just as hard and as fast as we can to complete the new air terminal building. It will be a good one, and I feel that satisfactory progress will be made in the near future. There has been a slowdown but, as I say, that has been overcome and we feel confident that the new air terminal will be opened next year.

Mr. Chevrier: I wonder if I could follow that up with just one or two questions. What is the present estimate of the cost of the building?

Mr. Hees: The estimate of the cost of the building itself is the same as I gave last year, between $15 million and $16 million. All the other facilities I have mentioned will bring the total to somewhere between $25 million and $30 million.

Mr. Chevrier: What was the original estimate of the cost of the building in 1953?

Mr. Hees: I am advised that there were no plans drawn in 1953. I am unaware of the original estimate, so I will see if I can get it.

Mr. Chevrier: I understood there was an estimate made and announced in 1953, and another in 1954 by your immediate predecessor.

Mr. Hees: I am advised that the first figure after the completion of the plans was $12 million plus.

Mr. Chevrier: What year was that?

Mr. Hees: There was an earlier estimate that was lower, but that was the first estimate after the first set of plans was completed, and that would be, I think, 1955.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask just one or two other questions? Why was it found preferable to give the contract in various parts rather than one whole contract?

Mr. Hees: I am advised that this was an attempt by the previous administration to get the work started sooner.

Mr. Chevrier: How many contracts were given? Perhaps I should not press for that because that is demanding too much information, but perhaps the minister could—

Mr. Hees: I think we have got it here.

Mr. Chevrier: All right.

Mr. Hees: The contracts which have been allotted to date are as follows:

Excavation, piling and foundation: Canamont Construction Co.—August, 1955—$1,126,496.
Structural steel: Dominion Bridge Co.—May, 1956—$1,134,035.
Curtain wall: Williams & Williams (Eastern) Ltd.—September, 1956—$1,700,000.
Flooring, steel decking etc.: Canamont Construction Co.—June, 1957—$1,136,000.
Cut stone (supply only):—Deschambault Quarry Corp.—$171,000.
Granite (supply only): Adru Granite Inc.—$68,829.
General (finishing) contract: The Foundation Co. of Canada Ltd.—$8,508,079.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister has said that this was the plan followed by the previous administration and I believe this is the case. How many of these contracts were given by the present administration?

Mr. Hees: Only the general finishing contracts.

Mr. Chevrier: Does the minister mean that all the other subcontracts were given before he came into office?

Mr. Hees: As far as I can see from these figures before me.

Mr. Chevrier: Is this policy of dividing up contracts for one building into several contracts followed in other cases in the Department of Transport, say in the case of Uplands?

Mr. Hees: I am advised that this is not the case in the smaller contracts, but at Malton we did separate excavation and steel from the other parts.

Mr. Chevrier: It is a fact, is it not, that that is a better method of procedure because it should allow one to get on faster with the work rather than wait until all the plans are ready and get out one contract.

Mr. Hees: That is correct.

Mr. Chevrier: I was somewhat nonplussed at the statement made by the minister that delays occurred because of the treasury board. Could the minister say how long these lasted and why these hold-ups took place at the treasury board?

Mr. Hees: Because the treasury board now requires to be given detailed economic studies at the time any additional expenditures are recommended so that the board can get a comprehensive idea of the whole picture.

Mr. Chevrier: Does that mean that every submission, even for a progress payment, must be accompanied by one of these economic studies?

Mr. Hees: Not for progress payments but for authorization of additional funds.

Mr. Chevrier: Am I right in assuming that when a subcontract is completed and a final payment is due, say in the case of the cut stone or curtain walls—I have forgotten the figures given by the minister, but supposing the amount was $1,500,000—would the treasury board in connection with each one of those subcontracts make an economic study of the situation before authorizing payment?

Mr. Hees: No. The items the treasury board required to be held up for a complete study were finishing the ground floor, the construction of the corners at the fingers, the power plant installation and certain extras such as additional loud speaker and electrical equipment.

Mr. Chevrier: Why were those studied and not the others?

Mr. Hees: This is a new procedure which has recently been introduced.

Mr. Chevrier: A final question. I cannot agree with the minister's statement that amendments to air agreements are not the responsibility of the government but are the responsibility of the air lines.

Mr. Hees: If I conveyed that impression I conveyed the wrong one. What I intended to say was that if the air lines such as the air lines which are presently using Dorval only, intend to use Malton as well and split their flights between the two, that is a matter for their decision.

Mr. Chevrier: I realize that these airlines should make representations to the minister suggesting an amendment or opposing it, but surely a decision having been taken to negotiate the agreement, whether with the United Kingdom or Australia or some other country, when that agreement is enacted and signed it becomes the responsibility of the government.

Mr. Hees: There is no question about our accepting that responsibility. We do of course.

Item agreed to.

Mr. Hees: Before we proceed to the next item might I temporarily revert to the first item to give these answers which I promised to supply?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McGee): Has the minister permission to do this?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hees: I was asked by the Leader of the Opposition several questions about Mr. Clare, the evaluator employed at Malton. Mr. Clare made twelve evaluations for the department. He was paid a total of $3,001.43 by the department.

I have here also a list of the appraisals which Mr. Clare made. I was asked to supply this information, but instead of taking the time of the committee by reading it, I ask permission to have it included in the record.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McGee): Has the minister permission to include this material in today's edition of Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

393. The St. Lawrence river joint board of engineers—Canadian section, $61,500.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask what is the present position of the St. Lawrence river joint board of engineers? As the minister knows, the board was appointed by the government to supervise the plans and specifications, and this work has been carried on over the last four years. I presume that its duties have now come to an end or are about to come to an end. What will happen to the members of the board and what will their future duties be, if any? Is the board to be wound up?

Mr. Hees: They will remain until all power works have been completed, which will be in 1960 or in 1961 and they are carrying on with a reduced staff.

Mr. Chevrier: Meanwhile what is happening to the other body, the St. Lawrence river board of control? It was appointed by the international joint commission and falls under the jurisdiction of the minister and it carries on the work of the joint board of engineers after the seaway has been constructed.

Mr. Hees: It is still in existence but it has no staff of its own as a main body.

Item agreed to.

Canal services—

394. Administration, $128,500.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Chairman, since I have heard the hon. member for Richelieu-Verchères inviting the Prime Minister to visit the Richelieu river in connection with the canalization of the Richelieu river, I would like to state here that I have already invited the Prime Minister to visit the Chambly canal and I expect a favourable answer. I would also like to invite the Minister of Transport to visit the Chambly canal. He would then be greeted royally and entertained as only the people of my riding can entertain.

Speaking of the Richelieu canal, I would like to refer the hon. Minister of Transport to the brief from the city of Sorel to the federal government for the modernization of the Richelieu-Champlain canal presented by a delegation presided over by Dr. Robert Fiset, mayor of Sorel, accompanied by many mayors from communities along the Richelieu banks in my constituency. This brief was supported by a delegation consisting of representatives of a number of United States and Canadian chambers of commerce, municipalities, service clubs and other interested groups and all of which are situated in the area to be served by the proposed improved Richelieu-Champlain canal. May I mention here a study made by Clayton Sinclair in the Montreal Gazette of Saturday, May 31, 1958, on page 4 of that issue. Mr. Sinclair gives a fair résumé of the situation on the Champlain canal. He says:

Like a cute youngster, the Richelieu canal has never been able to prove to its elders that it's growing up.

Industry is springing up along its shores but the function of the 409-mile water route, linking Canada's St. Lawrence river ports with New York city, is still basically the same as it was when it got its start 113 years ago.

One of the oldest canals in Canada, the Richelieu has stood by while other inland waterways took their turn at modernization.

Now, its boosters think it's about time that some serious thought is given the Richelieu system. In the past, they say, it's been a matter of governments preferring to leave traffic patterns as they were instead of destroying the beauty of the Richelieu setting.

Once, this was sufficient. But now, with industry spreading out from Montreal and above everything else, the development of Quebec's north shore gulf area, the Richelieu's potentialities are challenging.

May I add here that a recent announcement has been made that an important steel plant is being built at Contrecoeur near Sorel. These developments, together with more development either on the Quebec north shore or this part of the south shore from Sorel to Varennes would amply justify the government in undertaking and examining the possibility of developing the Richelieu seaway from Sorel to St. Johns, via the Chambly canal. Speaking of the Chambly canal, may I add a little information which would justify the government in looking to see if it is possible to widen the Chambly canal at the seaway between Chambly and St. Johns.

In the same study by Clayton Sinclair we read:

Chief among these—

That is, those who are using the Richelieu river.

—is the north shore gulf region, where iron ore for Pennsylvania smelters, newsprint for New York printing houses, and aluminum, would originate.

Eastern paper mills produce one million tons of newsprint annually for the New York area, of which only 26,000 tons now move by the short Richelieu route.

Added to this are the huge annual shipments of iron ore from Seven Islands and other ore ports in the gulf.

Closer to home, Sorel, at the mouth of the Richelieu, each year ships 250,000 tons of titanium slag and pure iron to American Atlantic ports.

Mr. Chairman, the Richelieu lies about 43 miles down river from Montreal. It is a quiet river which occasionally floods its banks in the spring, but it is serene for what is the remainder of a seven-month navigation season from the latter days of April to early November. This justifies my contention that we should look forward to the development of this seaway canal along the Richelieu river.

May I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Chairman, while we are dealing with the canal services item, I wish to point out to the minister a problem we are faced with in my constituency and which is related to the problem discussed this afternoon by the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis).

Along the Chambly canal, which runs between Chambly and St. Johns, there are many pieces of land that are of practically no use to the federal government at the present time. Under the circumstances, it would be fair and normal for the Department of Transport to rent this land for a certain consideration, not a nominal rent, but a reasonable amount.

We have parcels of land at Chambly that serve absolutely no purpose to the federal government, and perhaps I should recommend to the minister to have the matter looked into so as to determine whether it might be possible, as is done in St. Johns, to rent this land to private individuals, who might use it to build a club house and operate a boating club, or a repair shop, a restaurant or some other services which would be of use to people interested in various water sports.

That is more or less what was done at St. Jean, in the case referred to this afternoon. Those people are ready to sign a lease with the federal government, involving quite a large amount. Thus the federal government will be getting an income from this land, which so far has not been in use and has brought no income to the government or the Department of Transport.

It so happened, in the case referred to this afternoon by the member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville, that enterprising people decided to invest money to build a club house, an equipment store, a pleasure yacht and outboard motor repair shop, a restaurant, thus making various services available to yachtsmen, and particularly to those who own yachts on which they can live and which constitute some sort of a house.

That is being done in order to serve the people of the locality, that is the town of St. Johns—and that is what could be duplicated at Chambly. What have they done in St. Johns? They have reserved, or rather they intend to reserve, out of the land that belongs to the federal government, a parcel to be used as a "slip" which would allow those who are not members of the proposed yacht club to go down to the river and moor their craft.

This takes on a quite particular aspect in our region. We are very close to the United States border; many of our merchants do a brisk business with American tourists. Many tourists take the Richelieu to—

(Text):

Mr. Chairman, I should like to hear myself speaking not because I like the sound of my own voice but because I should like to hear whether or not I am in fact talking. Some hon. members in the chamber are speaking more loudly than I am. I understand that to many this may be just another case, but to my constituents who number about 25,000 it is a most interesting and important problem.

(Translation):

As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, those tourists coming into our area contribute to its prosperity. They moor their craft at Sorel or elsewhere along the Richelieu river, more particularly at Beloeil, where the yachting club has a very beautiful site. They also tie up at Chambly and like to stop at St. Johns, as it is still nearer home for them.

As far as the town of St. Johns is concerned, some protests appeared in the American press, with regard to the way tourists coming with their yachts were being given the cold shoulder. That is what was printed in an American paper. Now, a group of efficient businessmen in St. Johns want to remedy those conditions. They are on their way to obtain from the government, which is to be commended for it, the permission to operate that yachting club.

When the season is favourable to swimming, the yachting club of St. Johns moves the yachts from their wharves or from their reserved moorings, thus allowing the children to bathe more conveniently without any danger of accidents and particularly without being exposed to refuse resulting from people living on the yachts.

Moreover, that same yachting club allows boats with outboard motors to put down buoys quite near to the spot where children, and even grown-ups are bathing.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville should have considered it necessary to imply—perhaps he did not do it on purpose, but he gave us that impression—that the people he named this afternoon, i.e. the Goineau brothers, proposed to build a boating club for purely selfish reasons, namely to make a few dollars at the expense of the people of St. Johns. Having asked for information, I found that, far from having concocted such a deal with the help of the Conservative candidate, Mr. Robert Sauve, those people had undertaken the negotiations with the support of various local personalities and a number of people interested in yachting.

Those people also claimed that the Goineau brothers had taken steps in 1949, and that they had, at the time, the support of the Hon. Alcide Cote, former postmaster general, as well as that of a former member, Mr. Armand Menard, both of whom also took steps in that direction.

I even learned that in 1956 a delegation of the junior board of trade, formed of about six representatives headed by one Mr. Lemaire, had come to meet the authorities of the Department of Transport to discuss that problem and that my good friend, the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau), had considered it his duty to encourage those people, together with the then member for St. Johns, Mr. Armand Menard.

I mention those circumstances in order to re-establish the facts, since I had some knowledge of them, to a certain extent, and because I am surprised that a member should, in this way, level charges in the house against persons who are not here to defend themselves, but who are doing their best to conclude an honest matter in the general interest of the population of St. Johns, and who have been openly taking steps for the last ten years. If those persons have at last succeeded, so much the better: it is all to the credit of the government, it is all to their credit to have persisted, as it is to the credit of the former minister Cote, who took personal steps in that direction. Moreover, it is all to the credit of former member Menard, and of the member for Dollard, who was not afraid to commit himself with that delegation. However, it is less to the credit of one person who, for fear of losing the political merit of such action, has accused someone who is not here in this house, a Conservative candidate who as a good citizen of St. Johns made representations and endeavoured to reach a fair, equitable and especially profitable solution, since the federal government is now renting lands which previously yielded nearly nothing.

(Text):

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, while we are on this item of canals, I should like to refer the minister to a project of considerable interest and importance to the residents of the city of Ottawa and also of the Ottawa valley generally. I refer to the project to make the city of Ottawa an ocean port. I believe that a few weeks ago the minister received a delegation which was representative of a large section of the Ottawa valley and included officials from the city of Ottawa, the city of Hull, the eastern Ontario development association, the federation of chambers of commerce of western Quebec, the county officials of the counties of Pontiac and Renfrew, officials of the Ottawa river development association and many others.

I know that this project is linked with a far larger project in magnitude, namely the making of the Ottawa river, lake Nipissing and the French river a seaway. In such a case the seaway would be the strong right arm of the present St. Lawrence seaway. It may not be a project that is ripe at the present time and at this particular moment I do not want to enter into all of the technical aspects of the question. Suffice it to tell the committee that this matter has been explored and looked into by engineers of the Department of Transport and also by other competent authorities since as far back as 1885. Even at that time, without the technical means at their disposal that we have today, it was found that the project was certainly feasible and possible.

What prompts me to bring this matter to the attention of the committee at the present time is that the province of Quebec at the present time is contemplating harnessing the rapids at Carillon. The province of Quebec expects to spend a sum perhaps as high as $200 million on that project within the next few years. There are locks at Carillon but they have a draft of only about 8½ feet. They will have to be replaced, and if they are to be replaced I submit that the department should investigate seriously the possibility of replacing them with a draft of sufficient depth to accommodate commercial navigation and also deep-sea navigation. By so doing there will be a direct connecting link between the capital city and the present seaway, and that would certainly add greatly to the advantage of the industrial development of the Ottawa valley and would also accommodate industries which exist today.

I refer to one case especially, namely the Hilton mines, which at the present time are shipping iron ore by railway to Toronto and to parts of the United States. With the deepening of the Ottawa river channel from Ottawa to Montreal the ore could be shipped by water, thereby effecting a considerable saving and bringing about other advantages. That is the reason why the numerous associations I mentioned at the beginning of my remarks interviewed the minister a few weeks ago. They think the time is now ripe to take the first step, the relatively simple step, of deepening the Ottawa channel for a distance of 119 miles. It is estimated that the cost will amount to between $15 million and $20 million. The first step that can be recommended now is the replacement of the locks at the Carillon dam.

I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the minister look into the possibility of appointing some engineers to investigate this matter and to report to him, and he in turn could report to the committee and to the house. I think in so doing we shall be taking the first step toward the improved development of the Ottawa valley and indeed of the entire country because, as appears now, in a few years the present St. Lawrence seaway facilities may become inadequate. If that should happen, the ultimate route would normally be the Ottawa river, lake Nipissing and the French river which, after all, were the first water courses over which the pioneers and the developers of this country passed, and which were in days gone by the great navigational streams of our country. By looking forward in such a way we shall be planning in a logical way for the future development of our country.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, I want to take up two or three matters under item 394. Actually, they now come under the jurisdiction of the St. Lawrence seaway authority. The Department of Transport reached an agreement with the municipalities of St. Catharines, Merritton and Thorold concerning the clean-up of the old Welland canal which runs through these three municipalities. One contract was completed earlier this spring above the municipalities, but I had expected, since the agreement was reached some time last fall, that the work within the municipalities would be under way early this spring.

The minister announced in the house that this work was being taken over by the St. Lawrence seaway authority and I was wondering whether that was the cause of the delay. Conditions in that area are particularly bad at this time. The canal carries raw sewage as well as waste products from the mills, with very little dilution. The sewage collects in pondages along the canal, and I must say that the odour is certainly very disagreeable in this warm weather. I do not think I could use adjectives strong enough to describe it but the canal certainly smells to high heaven. There is one saving grace, however. In humans the sense of smell soon tires. I think that probably is a good thing as far as the Department of Transport is concerned. Otherwise a lot of people would be down here complaining to the department. I do not think it is a healthy condition for the area. Children play near the canal and sometimes they even fall in. I have been told of cases lately where that has occurred. It seems to me that this work should be under way. I should like the Minister of Transport to tell me how soon the contracts will be let and if any of the municipalities have been holding up the work.

There is one other question I should like to ask with respect to Welland ship canal employees who were formerly employees of the Department of Transport but are now employees of the St. Lawrence seaway authority. Do they retain their full employment, seniority and pension rights under their new employer?

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Chairman. First of all, with regard to the second Welland canal clean-up, I am pleased to be able to report that tenders for the construction of concrete conduits and miscellaneous grading in the towns of Thorold and Merritton were sought early in June. The closing date for bids is June 23. This represents the second stage of the work. It is expected that tenders will be called in the fall for the third stage which will cover landscaping. The answer regarding personnel of the Welland canal now taken over by the St. Lawrence seaway authority is that they retain all rights formerly held under our canals branch.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask one or two questions about canals? What is the future of the Soulanges canal?

Mr. Hees: We have not yet determined that. It is under study at the present time.

Mr. Chevrier: During the navigation season there will be no employees on the Soulanges canal other than I presume, watchmen.

Mr. Hees: Just watchmen and the maintenance staff.

Mr. Chevrier: What is the position with respect to the Lachine canal?

Mr. Hees: It is being operated by the seaway authority at the present time.

Mr. Chevrier: I want to say a word about the Lachine canal and I understand the position is the same on that part of the Cornwall canal which remains in operation. My understanding is that industry is to be serviced on the Lachine and Cornwall canals as long as 14-foot draft ships desire to go into these canals. But I am also informed that instead of having the usual lockmen on the canals the lockmen are staggered and that where there were three or four or five groups of lockmen there is only one group now because of the changed position. I am informed that on the Lachine canal, for instance, there are three lockmen on duty and that when a ship comes through the lockmen jump in a motor car, rush up to the next lock, lock the ship through and then continue to do likewise until the ship has passed through all the locks. Let me tell the minister that is not the proper way for the government of a country such as Canada to operate a canal. I think there should be the same service as there was before on the Lachine canal and other canals that are in operation. I do not mean that you should have the same number of lockmen. That would not be a logical thing to do but I think that there should be the requisite number of lockmen and I do not think the lockmen should be staggered in the way in which it is being done now. I know there are protests in my area about it.

Mr. Hees: In answer to that question, as the hon. member knows the traffic is greatly reduced. I am advised that this method is working satisfactorily and that there is no hold-up of ships going through the canal.

Mr. Chevrier: I know there is no hold-up but there are protests from the men. Protests from the lockmen have been brought to my attention with respect to both canals. I would ask the minister to take another look at the situation with a view to seeing if something better cannot be done.

Mr. Hees: I am always glad to take another look.

Item agreed to.

397. Operating deficit and capital requirements of canals and works entrusted to the St. Lawrence seaway authority with the approval of the governor in council, and to authorize, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act or any other act, the disbursement by the authority of revenues derived from the operation and management of such canals and works, $2,934,815.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister explain this vote?

Mr. Hees: We carry the funds in this vote for the operating deficit and capital requirements of the Lachine, Sault Ste. Marie and Cornwall canals.

Mr. Chevrier: Does this mean that from now on there will be a vote in the Department of Transport estimates that will look after canals which are under the jurisdiction of the St. Lawrence seaway authority or that have been assigned to the St. Lawrence seaway authority and which are not provided for under the St. Lawrence seaway authority vote?

Mr. Hees: That is correct.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Marine services—

398. Marine services administration including agencies, $849,800.

Mr. Bourget: The minister will recall that during the month of April I put a question on the order paper regarding the case of Octave Bujold of Chandler, Quebec, an employee of the Department of Transport who was dismissed. The question was divided into six parts and was as follows:

1. Was one Octave Bujold of Chandler, Quebec, employed by the Department of Transport?

The answer was "yes".

2. If so, in what position and for what length of time?

The answer was:

As wharfinger, Chandler wharf, Quebec, from August 13, 1937 to October 31, 1958.

The third question was:

3. Was he dismissed from this employment?

The answer was "yes."

4. If so, on what grounds and on whose complaint?

The answer was:

(a) Participation in politics; (b) the hon. member for Gaspe.

The fifth question was:

Was an investigation conducted into the circumtances surrounding the dismissal?

The answer was "yes".

6. Was the employee given an opportunity to be heard?

I should like the minister to bear this question and answer in mind. The answer was "yes". A little later I put a notice of motion for production of papers on the order paper asking for a copy of all letters, notices, declarations, affidavits and other communications leading to the dismissal of Octave Bujold of Chandler, Quebec. This motion was passed by the house on April 27 but so far no documents have been tabled. After the answers were given to my first questions, as found at page 2924 of Hansard for April 21, I got a letter from Mr. Octave Bujold saying that he had never been informed of an inquiry being conducted and had never been asked to appear before a board of inquiry or before anyone in charge of such an inquiry. After receiving the answer from the minister that the employee concerned was given an opportunity to be heard I find it strange that this is denied in a letter and affidavit I have received from this man. I read the affidavit in French:

(Translation):

I was never questioned by any investigator and was never given the opportunity to be heard on the matter.

I am absolutely unaware of the accusations that have been levelled against me, nor do I know the names of those who would have made such accusations.

I have never participated in any political activity, neither in the 1957 election nor in that of 1958.

(Text):

I do not want to accuse the minister because I know he is not the only person responsible. Nevertheless, I find it strange that this man, who was accused of taking part in political activities, did not have a chance to appear before a board to defend himself, particularly after the minister stated that he was given that opportunity. Surely, the minister must have some comments to make.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, in making that reply I was acting on the advice that this man had been given an opportunity, which is the procedure I require in these cases. I shall be glad to look into this case for the hon. member and find out just what did happen. I shall be in touch with him then, as soon as I have that looked up. I appreciate his having drawn this to my attention.

Mr. Bourget: I would also bring to the attention of the minister that Mr. Bujold, in March I think it was, wrote a letter to the minister. I should like the minister to inform the house if he has answered that letter.

Mr. Hees: I am afraid I do not know offhand, Mr. Chairman. I write and sign anywhere from 100 to 150 letters very day, but I shall be glad to check that up and let the hon. member know.

Marine service steamers—

399. Administration, operation and maintenance, $15,957,187.

Mr. Chevrier: How many steamers are there now in existence, and how many are being constructed?

Mr. Hees: We have in the department 200 ships of all kinds, including Arctic landing craft, and approximately 33 seagoing vessels.

Mr. Chevrier: How many of those are under construction?

Mr. Hees: Those are in operation, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chevrier: I understand that there are some new ones.

Mr. Hees: We have 17 under construction, including ferry vessels.

Mr. Chevrier: How many of the 17 are in the Montreal and Quebec districts?

Mr. Hees: Six, Mr. Chairman; four in Quebec; one at Sorel; and one in Montreal.

Mr. Chevrier: These are new ships?

Mr. Hees: New ships, yes.

Mr. Chevrier: Perhaps I could add a word in connection with another matter. Where is the Labrador, which was taken over from the department of defence, and what are its duties at the moment?

Mr. Hees: She is leaving Halifax in the near future for Arctic patrol and convoy duty.

Mr. Chevrier: Does she do duty in the far north with the Howe and the d'Iberville?

Mr. Hees: No, she is operating separately. She is going to Thule, in Greenland, to Foxe basin and to Baffin land. Part of this work is for the United States air force.

Mr. Chevrier: This is the vote, of course, which covers the icebreakers. I wonder whether the minister would not, briefly, give the committee some indication of the icebreaking operations upstream from the city of Quebec?

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The pattern that we have followed in icebreaking between Quebec and Montreal is related primarily to the prevention of flood dangers in the Montreal area and helping local river ports. As I indicated, the river from lake St. Peter to Montreal does not remain open unless the icebreaker fleet is capable of keeping the channel open. It has been normal for us to use three icebreakers from Quebec up to maintain a position from which the channel could be opened in time to prevent serious flooding that could otherwise occur.

In mild winters this can be done by keeping the channel open to Montreal for the greater portion of the way. In some severe winters the main objective is to work up from lake St. Peter to Sorel continuously and, in the latter part of January, drive up to Montreal in time to reach it before the flooding danger occurs.

Mr. Chevrier: How did the operation work out this winter, for instance? I understand the icebreaking operation began this year much earlier than is the custom. I should like to know what the progress was upstream from Three Rivers, for instance?

Mr. Hees: Icebreaking this year was very heavy in the early part of the season because of the early, severe freeze-up, but much better later on. Because of the heavy ice in the early part of the season we had one extra icebreaker up in that area.

Mr. Chevrier: Which one was that?

Mr. Hees: The Montcalm.

Mr. Chevrier: Is it the intention of the minister to increase the fleet of icebreakers now that the St. Lawrence seaway is in operation? As the minister knows, there was a great deal of confusion at the opening of navigation as a result of ice conditions and as I indicated, the lack of co-ordination between the various branches of the Department of Transport. I think I am safe in saying that there was not the co-ordination that should have existed between the ship channel branch, the national harbours board and the St. Lawrence seaway authority. I can understand how that could arise.

I am wondering if, in order to avoid that next year, it is not possible to have some sort of liaison between the three branches so that there will be harmony in the operations. There is no doubt that during the course of the spring, prior to the opening of navigation, there were ships all over the place. There were ships that came up expecting to enter the seaway at a fixed date which were not able to do so. There were ships at Montreal; there were ships at Lanoraie; there were ships at Three Rivers; there were ships anchored all through lake St. Peter. It seems to me if these ships coming in to use the seaway are not given some indication as to when navigation is likely to open, and there is no co-ordination between Montreal harbour, the ship channel and the national harbours board, then there is likely to be confusion.

I can understand how, at the beginning of a new project, it is difficult to have everything working as smoothly as one would expect. But I hope that, as a reult of what has happened during the course of this season and the opening of navigation, experience has been gained. I come back to my original question. Is it the intention of the minister to augment the fleet of icebreakers from Quebec to Montreal?

Mr. Hees: No. Our general icebreaking fleet will be increased this year but it is not planned to increase the number of icebreakers used from Quebec up. I may say that the hon. member's suggestion with regard to better co-ordination is a good one and we will look into the matter very carefully indeed.

Mr. Chevrier: May I go a step further? The minister was probably not here when the estimates of the Department of Public Works were passed and the Minister of Public Works gave some indication of the port facilities on the north shore and the establishment of a new station in lieu of Pointe au Pere. The question that arises now is this. Are icebreaking operations required to keep some of these ports open all year around. For instance, I am thinking of Rimouski and the ports along the north shore such as Baie Comeau and Seven Islands. I understand that there are one or two new ports to which consideration is being given by the Department of Public Works. I presume these ports are serviced by the Department of Transport in so far as the movement of traffic is concerned and that when traffic is required to be moved out or when traffic is on the point of coming in during the winter months it is the Department of Transport that is called in to help. What I am asking now is this. What are these points where icebreaking operations are required and what are the vessels assigned to this work?

Mr. Hees: One of our new icebreakers is going to be assigned to work all winter in that area.

Mr. Chevrier: Which one is that?

Mr. Hees: It has not been decided yet, but it will be one of the new ones. It probably will be the Montcalm. I am advised that the ports remain fairly well open and we are usually called upon to provide only convoy assistance. We shall be providing more assistance than we have been providing in the past because of this icebreaker that will be stationed there all the time. We anticipate being able to look after the needs of that important area.

Mr. Bourget: How many icebreakers will be assigned to help winter navigation between Quebec and the lower St. Lawrence?

Mr. Hees: There was one in operation in that area this year and we will be adding one during the next year, that is to say during the coming winter. That will make two of them.

Item agreed to.

400. Construction or acquisition of vessels and equipment, $13,575,000.

Mr. Broome: Mr. Chairman, I should like to draw the minister's attention to a press dispatch appearing in the Journal of Commerce under dateline of Victoria, B.C., reading as follows:

> Canada's status as a shipbuilding nation is "disintegrating" and faces an uncertain future after completion of present contracts, according to Harold Husband, president of the Canadian shipbuilding and ship repair association and of Victoria Machinery Depot Ltd.
>
> Attending the trial run of the recently completed R.C.N. destroyer escort Terra Nova, Mr. Husband saw an—

And this is in quotation marks.

> —"especially dark future for the west coast shipbuilding industry". Out of 13 vessels under construction for the Department of Transport only 2 are being built on the west coast, he said.

We are all alive to the necessity of maintaining ship repair facilities on both coasts. It is impossible to maintain these repair facilities on the basis of repairs only. They must be supported by new construction. The Department of National Defence realizes the national importance of maintaining such facilities on both coasts and naval vessels are distributed in a fair proportion between east and west. What I am asking is that the minister take into consideration the requirement of maintaining these services on the west coast. Although it is well recognized that costs are higher on the west coast, yet the advantages to be gained make it almost imperative that within reason these higher costs be disregarded and that a portion of the ships be set out for west coast building. I do not like to remind the minister, but I will do so—that the higher wage rates on the west coast came about through wage controls during wartime when, under directives from Ottawa, wages were arbitrarily increased to higher levels on the west coast than on the east coast. I should like to point out that the officials of the Department of National Defence assert that ships built on the west coast are well worth the premium.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the item carries I should like to say that I was pleased indeed by the minister's announcement this afternoon that an icebreaker was going to be stationed in St. John's. Is this one of the new icebreakers?

Mr. Hees: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Aids to navigation—

401. Administration, operation and maintenance, including fees for membership in the international organizations listed in the details of the estimates, $5,945,892.

Mr. Herridge: I should just like to make a few brief remarks on this item on aids to navigation because they are of growing importance in the constituency which I represent. I am referring particularly to the Columbia river, the upper and lower Arrow lakes, the Kootenay river, Kootenay lake and Slocan lake because of the considerable increase in the number of tugs and the increase in the number of small water craft, particularly those coming up the Columbia river from the United States. As I have said before this session, some may come from as far south as Portland being portaged around the dams in the United States south of the international border. Some come down the Kootenay river into Kootenay lake. Some come in by road from the various ports and then are launched at suitable launching places and other points on the Kootenay lake or on the river or on the Columbia river or the upper and lower Arrow lakes and Slocan lake.

There is an increasing need for better marking, and provision of more marking, particularly with respect to lights in the rivers and buoys and in some cases markers. I want to say that the people of the districts are pleased, particularly those interested in boating, that the department has marked the river between Castlegar and the international boundary. It was a most dangerous part of the river to leave unmarked. There were many craft coming up the river without much knowledge of the channel, the hazards and so on. They appreciate that improvement.

However I want to bring to the minister's attention the fact that it is necessary to have river marking between Arrowhead and Revelstoke. I might say the same applies to the marking of isolated rocks and things of that sort on the lakes. The local people locate these hazards and sand bars and so on and then press the department to do it. I think that is largely occasioned by the fact that the department uses employees of the Department of Public Works as agents and they are extremely busy indeed.

This matter of the marking of these lakes and rivers and looking after the lights is becoming increasingly important and requires constant attention. As I have said, I think it was five years ago I went down the Columbia and one of the captains told me there were 11 buoys out, a most dangerous situation. I was told they had been out for three months and there was nobody to replace them because the person who was paid to do it never went near the place. That was just because the persons who supervise this work are too busy with other work to check frequently. I am of the opinion that, particularly with respect to the southern interior lakes, possibly the time is coming when somebody should be especially appointed to have jurisdiction over aids to navigation. I think of high water on the Columbia, when a good many of these buoys are washed out. No one notices it for two or three months. A tug comes along or particularly a small craft from the United States, and the first thing you know it is on a sand bar. I think it might be in the interests of the public generally as well as for better administration if someone were given particular charge of watching these buoys, blinker lights and things like that on the interior lakes.

I am not blaming anyone for this situation, as years ago there was just the occasional blinker light or buoy, and so on, because the captains knew the routes. Intensive marking was not required as is required today to make the rivers and lakes safe for watercraft. I do hope consideration will be given to marking the river from Arrowhead to Revelstoke. For instance, last year about 85 small craft came up from the United States and 12 of them went to Revelstoke. I see them all if I am at home because they pass my ranch and many come in to see me. But out of the 12 which went to Revelstoke, I heard four had their propellers badly damaged because there are no markers on the river. It is the type of river which needs checking every spring because buoys are washed out during high water and floods. Last year if the river had been marked at least 50 of the small craft would have gone on to Revelstoke, but most of them did not proceed beyond the head of the lake because they did not have the courage to face the journey ahead of them on a somewhat swift and unmarked river. I would urge the minister to have this matter checked. I have mentioned it to the officials in Victoria, as have the Revelstoke chamber of commerce and all the chambers of commerce down the lake to Trail. I have brought the matter up before, but at that time there was a shortage of funds and nothing could be done. But it is a most important matter for those using the river.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, this is an important point which the hon. member has brought up, and I will advise him that in Kootenay lake last year we put in 16 new beacons and we are putting in more this year. We are handicapped to a certain extent in this area because of a lack of hydrographic charts, and we put in new beacons when we received requests from local residents. As the responsibility for maintaining these beacons is that of the contractor who puts them in, we would appreciate it very much if the hon. member would let us know of any complaints where beacons go out of commission or disappear or are not maintained. We will be very glad to bring that matter immediately to the attention of the contractor and have the situation righted. Therefore we would appreciate any advice the hon. member can give us from any of the local residents if these beacons are not maintained properly.

Mr. Herridge: I thank the minister for the information he has given us, but when he says that the beacons are maintained by the contractor who puts them in, who is the contractor engaged to do that, because it must be local people?

Mr. Hees: I am sorry, I made a mistake. It is the buoys which are maintained by the contractor. We put in the beacons and maintain them ourselves.

Mr. Herridge: Has the minister information as to who is responsible for maintaining the buoys in the narrows between the upper and lower Arrow lakes at the present time?

Mr. Hees: I will have to get the name for the hon. member and I will give it to him.

Mr. Morris: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to say a word on this item about an area of the country which you, sir, as chairman, and my other colleague member for Halifax, and I both know well, and that is the generally overlooked island of Sable island. I do this because it is part of the federal constituency of Halifax, and there are a few short questions I would like to ask. On page 504, the details page of this item, I notice that the position of superintendent at Sable island is not to be included in the present year's estimates, and I wonder if the minister is in a position this evening to provide the committee with a brief description of the change in the administration which has taken place. I have in mind particularly the request that the committee be advised as to the continuation of the two lights. I do not wish to pursue the matter; I simply wish to be advised as to the status of the lights. There are two lights on the island, and I want to know the status of those lights.

Mr. Hees: I am advised that the marine life saving establishment is being discontinued, but the meteorological establishment is being continued and the lights are being maintained.

Mr. Morris: Are the lights manned or unmanned?

Mr. Hees: They are manned.

Mr. Morris: Both lights?

Mr. Hees: Yes.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, may I ask what the position is with reference to aids in navigation along the seaway? I know there was some discussion about this. The United States authorities wanted to handle them and I know we felt that the Department of Transport should do it. Who is doing it, where are the aids to navigation, and under what district does it fall?

Mr. Hees: The Department of Transport puts them in and maintains them, with the exception of the canal section, in which the seaway puts them and maintains them.

Mr. Chevrier: Where do you put the buoys?

Mr. Hees: At the Prescott agency.

Mr. Chevrier: Would the minister be good enough to tell us what international organizations are concerned in item 401?

Mr. Hees: Did the hon. member say "international organizations"?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes. The vote says:

—fees for membership in the international organizations listed in the details of the estimates—

But I am not able to find them on page 504, and I wondered what they were and what contributions Canada was making to them.

Mr. Hees: The first is the permanent navigational association of international congresses, $200. The contribution to the international association of lighthouse authorities is $462, and that is all.

Item agreed to.

402. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $5,132,100.

Mr. Chevrier: Would the minister give a general idea of what this $5 million vote is for?

Mr. Hees: This is the construction connected with marine agencies, that is the agencies themselves, lighthouses and houses connected with lighthouses. I have the breakdown here of the agencies if the hon. member would like it. The St. John's Newfoundland agency, $453,600; the Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island agency, $348,100; the Halifax, Nova Scotia agency, $654,500; the Saint John, New Brunswick agency, $1,124,500; the Quebec city agency, $1,505,200; the Sorel, Quebec agency, $171,500; the Prescott, Ontario agency, $535,350; the Parry Sound, Ontario agency, $191,000; the Selkirk, Manitoba sub-agency, $4,300; the Kenora, Ontario sub-agency, $5,600; the Victoria, British Columbia agency, $431,460; the Prince Rupert, British Columbia agency, $238,100 and the Fort Smith, Northwest Territories agency, $68,700.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, there is an item here I am unable to understand. Perhaps the minister could explain it to us. It seems to be different in 1959-60 than it was when I was the minister. At page 507 of the details there is a division as between the construction item of buildings and the construction of equipment; it totals $5,732,100. Then these words appear:

Less estimated amount by which actual expenditure on all projects may fall short of the total of amounts that may be required for each, $600,000.

How can you estimate in advance the amount by which an expenditure will fall short?

Mr. Hees: This is a request made by the treasury board to estimate in advance the unspent amount that we expect to have this year. I am advised it is a technique which was first developed in the estimates of the Department of National Defence.

Mr. Chevrier: Does it mean you cannot spend the $600,000?

Mr. Hees: That is right.

Mr. Chevrier: Then the vote, strictly speaking, is a vote of $5,132,100 less $600,000?

Mr. Hees: This is something which the treasury board insists that we do.

Mr. Chevrier: I appreciate that, but what is happening then is that parliament is voting $5,132,100 but you are not getting a vote of that amount?

Mr. Hees: They are in effect this year giving us a program of $5,732,100 but saying we can spend only $5,132,100.

Mr. Bourget: Can the minister inform the committee if there has been some discussion between himself and the Minister of Public Works regarding the transfer of the construction of buildings from his department to the Department of Public Works? The minister will recall that when the Minister of Public Works was sitting on this side of the house he was a great advocate of such a move. I am asking the minister if there have been talks about the transfer of the construction of public buildings to the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, the Department of Public Works does our main marine agency construction at the present time. That department also constructs our wharves for us and some of our northern housing.

Mr. Bourget: I am not particularly interested in wharves but as far as buildings are concerned I was wondering if the minister had discussed the question of transfer with the Minister of Public Works. I have always agreed with the Minister of Public Works that all buildings should be constructed by the Department of Public Works. It would be more in their line and I think the Minister of Transport would agree with me that it would also relieve his department of that kind of work.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister not answer? I know there is a reason why it should not be done.

Mr. Hees: I did not quite get the portent of the hon. member's question and I would ask him to repeat it if he would be so kind.

Mr. Bourget: The minister will recall that when the Minister of Public Works was on this side of the house he advocated each year that all government construction should come under the jurisdiction of the Department of Public Works. I am asking the minister if some progress has been made to that end?

Mr. Hees: I think the acting minister of public works feels that way now. We are very happy to have public works build for us structures about which we think they have the most knowledge. In the construction of air terminal buildings, lighthouses, radar stations and other structures of that kind, we feel we know more about it than they do and we like to do that ourselves.

Mr. Bourget: Surely there could be no objection to transferring from the Department of Transport to the Department of Public Works knowledgeable employees who could take charge of that kind of construction.

Mr. Chevrier: Did the minister make a lapsus linguae a moment ago when he mentioned the acting minister of public works? Who is he?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Public Works today is the acting minister of public works because he is the Secretary of State for External Affairs as well as the acting minister of public works.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, may I come back to the question raised by my friend the hon. member for Levis? Why will not the minister say that the reason is that the Department of Transport wants to keep its own construction work, as perhaps it should, and I presume that is the attitude in all other departments that do construction work. While the Department of Public Works has an efficient staff and I am sure can do much of this work, is it not a fact that the Department of Transport has now grown to such an extent that its construction work is even greater than that of the Department of Public Works and it would not want to give up lightly its jurisdiction over a matter of that kind?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I would think that the hon. member for Laurier has summed up the situation very well indeed. While I am on my feet, Mr. Chairman, I might be able to pass on some information that might be of some interest to the committee. It does not actually relate to this vote but I might be pardoned for doing so. I have just been advised that in the Ontario election the Conservatives are leading, an elected 50; the Liberals, an elected 14 and the C.C.F. an elected 7.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Order. The Chairman had anticipated that there might be an attempt to smuggle some such information into the committee in this fashion. Is it the wish of the committee to receive this information?

Item agreed to.

403. Nautical services, including Canada's share of the cost of the north Atlantic ice patrol; grants and contribution as detailed in the estimates; rewards for saving life from vessels in distress; subsidy to a salvage company; and the payment of expenses, including excepted expenses, incurred in respect of Canadian distressed seamen as defined in section 306 of the Canada Shipping Act, $557,221.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I presume that this is the vote under which we could ask the Minister of Transport a most important question and that is is he now in a position to express his views or those of the government on the establishment of a coastguard service for Canada? I ask that question because I and so many others well remember the long and oft repeated demands of the Conservatives when they sat on this side of the chamber to the effect that the government should undertake the establishment of a coastguard service in Canada. We would all like to know whether the Conservatives in changing sides have changed their position with regard to the establishment of a coastguard service. What are the views of the minister on this matter?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman first of all I think we must not be hypnotized by the word "coastguard". That is the word used to describe the service provided in the United States. Here in Canada although we have not such an ear-catching word the same kind of service is provided by various government departments. The Department of National Defence provides search and rescue service. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police provide coastal patrol. The Department of Transport, the Department of Fisheries and the navy provide ships which undertake sea rescue. With these various services combining, we believe the same service is provided as is provided by the United States coastguard.

There are very few services of any kind that cannot be improved, and I have been giving this matter considerable thought during the past few weeks and so has my colleague, the Minister of National Defence. We are actively studying it at this moment and so are our departments. It seems to me that improvements can be made in better co-ordination of the services and specialized training and equipment of those who will be actually performing the sea rescue task. I can assure the hon. member, and all the hon. members, that this matter is being very seriously studied right at this moment. During the next few weeks we hope to work out something that will be an improvement over the services that have been provided in the past, although I think those services have been pretty good. But, as I say, there are no services that cannot be improved, and we intend to improve this service just as much as we possibly can.

Mr. Winch: I certainly welcome the words of the minister. I must say—I cannot help saying it—that the tune has changed in a period of three years because the answer we have just been given by the minister was the self-same answer we received from the Liberals to which the Conservatives in opposition objected so strenuously and so much.

However, we certainly welcome the fact that the minister has such a great interest in it and that there will be improvements, as all the things he told us about just now were identical with those things we were told by the previous minister of a different party.

Can there be a speed-up in the matter of complete co-ordination of all services so that we do not have ever again the situation which developed only recently in the harbour of Vancouver where a ship caught fire after an explosion, sent out an S.O.S. and it was an hour and a half before any assistance got there. It is quite obvious that some arrangements must be made so that a situation of that kind cannot occur again.

Mr. Hees: As I say, we are working very hard at the present time along those lines.

Mr. McPhillips: On item 403, I see that the details on page 509 show a salvage subsidy payable, presumably, to Foundation Maritime Limited of Montreal, Quebec. The subsidy amounts to $75,000. Will the minister indicate where the salvage vessel is stationed and why it is necessary to pay this subsidy?

Mr. Hees: I am advised that on the west coast there are a number of tugs and barges which can perform this kind of work. On the east coast there are not nearly the same number and it has been found necessary to provide this subsidy in order to make sure that this type of work will be performed on the east coast as it is on the west coast.

Mr. McPhillips: Mr. Chairman, I want to know where the vessel is stationed.

Mr. Hees: At Halifax.

Mr. McPhillips: Mr. Chairman, it seems a little odd to me that, with the amount of shipping on the Atlantic coast, an organization that could have a salvage vessel would find it necessary to receive a subsidy when equivalent equipment on the west coast, although it could do with a subsidy, does not receive one. We have had some of those anomalies before between the east and west coasts. The fact remains, Mr. Chairman—and it is a very serious fact—that Canada is a maritime nation, and all maritime nations should make it a first principle that their shores have some type of protection for vessels coming to those shores, and goodness knows we want them to come, we want their trade.

Mention has been made of air-sea rescue. While that has been very effective in regard to what I would term small rescues, an airman down and perhaps floating around in a rubber boat, or some fishermen floating around in a dory, it is absolutely a joke when it comes to a big ocean-going vessel in distress, it can do nothing whatsoever. It is true an aircraft can spot a vessel and can hover over it and can send out messages, but there is no equipment at all unless reliance is placed upon commercial organizations that have the equipment and are willing to take virtually a gamble. Our shores are protected in that way, and yet year after year they may lose money on those vessels. It is not good enough, I submit, Mr. Chairman, that on the Atlantic coast there should be a subsidy paid for this purpose and not a subsidy paid on the west coast.

I would like to give an instance that occurred within the last while. Quite a sizable vessel got into difficulty off Carmanagh point which is adjacent to the area we term the graveyard of the Pacific where there have been a great many wrecks. This ship called air-sea rescue and an aircraft from Comox air base spotted her position and hovered around. All it could do was to call up the United States coastguard at Neah bay in the state of Washington and ask them to do what they could. The United States coastguard sent a cutter over and there were very high seas running. She got a line on to Malina—that is the name of the vessel—and got all the men off except two. They were then so close in to the rocky shore, and the combers were so huge that the United States coastguard cutter could not stand by any longer and got out; she had not enough power. What did she do? There was no Canadian government agency; no navy equipment or anything to call, so she called up the Island Tug and Barge Company of Victoria and asked them to send out their big tug Sudbury, and the Sudbury went out. She is a huge, powerful salvage tug. She was able to stand in close enough. She got a line aboard and saved the lives of the two men who were there. The next day the Sudbury pulled off the grounded ship and brought her to Victoria where she was repaired.

There is the situation. We are a maritime nation. These big vessels sometimes get into difficulty, and on the Pacific coast we have absolutely nothing to rely upon but these commercial concerns, which, as I say, are taking a gamble. They may make money one year and lose money for three years.

I am not a believer in a coastguard service; I think it is a lot of rot. The United States coastguard service is a misnomer. They deal in all kinds of things, smuggling and fisheries protection. We do not need that kind of thing. We do know, however, that Canada must have its own salvage vessels stationed at crucial points on our coasts or else the government of Canada should be willing to subsidize. I notice this is only $75,000. If another $75,000 was paid to the west coast it would be a total of only $150,000, a drop in the bucket compared with what a coastguard service would cost. I suggest that the department should consider this matter and that at least we should have equality in the matter of safety at sea on both coasts.

Item agreed to.

404. Pilotage service, including authority for temporary recoverable advances not exceeding $20,000, $1,177,065.

Mr. Chevrier: As the minister knows, the question of pilotage is, of course, one that is extremely important. A number of questions were asked on the orders of the day in connection with this matter and the minister went to Washington in order to see if agreement could be reached. Would the minister bring us up to date on the present position of negotiations with the Americans?

Mr. Hees: The passage of Bill No. S-3 through the House of Commons was suspended to enable me to undertake consultations with United States government with a view to ensuring, as far as practicable, that there would be effective co-ordination between Canada and the United States in regard to pilotage on the great lakes. Following my visit to Washington consultations have continued at the official level and at the present time both sides are giving consideration to the problems that would be involved in the establishment of a joint pilotage commission. Because of the many interests involved this problem requires more careful study and while some progress has been made no definite conclusions have yet been reached. If an agreement should be reached with the United States regarding the establishment of such a commission the amendments before the house would probably have to be revised and indeed might not be necessary. For this reason and particularly because of the importance of securing, if at all possible, a joint approach to this problem, I do not intend to proceed with these amendments during the present session.

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the minister for that statement on two counts. The first is that he has just stated that he thinks it is possible to work out a common agreement on pilotage. I commend him and his officers for what they have done in that direction and I hope they will be successful. I am glad the minister has come to the conclusion that that is the only way in which we can operate pilotage facilities on the St. Lawrence seaway. I am also very happy to learn that this means that the minister will not be proceeding with the bill now on the order paper and that we can forget about it for this session. If an agreement is reached I take it that at the next session of parliament a bill will be brought forward dealing with the pilotage aspects of the problem only.

Mr. Hees: Yes, that is correct.

Mr. Chevrier: May I go a step further and ask the minister if I can also conclude that since the bill which was before the house dealt with two things, pilotage on the great lakes and the Montreal, Quebec and Kingston pilotage districts, the new bill which the minister now envisages will deal only with the pilotage agreement with the United States and will not affect the pilots in the Montreal, Quebec and Kingston districts?

Mr. Hees: Not necessarily because the pilotage districts on the lower St. Lawrence are involved in some of the requests which the Americans have made to us, but it may not be necessary.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not want to delay the vote unduly but I do want to bring this particular point to the minister's attention. As the minister knows, the intention was to curtail and affect rather seriously the positions of the Quebec and Montreal pilots. When the matter came up for discussion I had not reached the point in my remarks of registering my protest and dealing with the problem as I would have liked to. But I do want to bring to the attention of the minister the fact that I think it would be a serious mistake if these men, whose ancestors have been pilots in these districts for over 200 years and in the case of many of whom the trade has been handed down from father to son, were affected in the way which was contemplated in the bill. I hope the minister will find it possible not to affect the present position of the Montreal and Quebec pilots.

Mr. Hees: If Bill No. S-3 had been proceeded with during this session we had planned an amendment to the clause to which the hon. member refers which I feel sure would have had his concurrence as a very desirable move in the direction he has mentioned and which would certainly be made effective if that clause has to be reintroduced.

Mr. Chevrier: I hope I had some little influence in convincing the minister.

Mr. Hees: Yes, as always the hon. member has a great deal of influence on my thinking in these matters.

Mr. Bourget: I should like to ask the minister if any final decision has been reached regarding the relocation of the pilotage station now at Father Point?

Mr. Hees: Not yet, Mr. Chairman.

Item agreed to.

Ship channel service—St. Lawrence and Saguenay rivers—

407. Administration, operation and maintenance, $1,521,804.

Mr. Chevrier: What is the present width of the ship channel?

Mr. Hees: Five hundred in some sections and up to 800 in others.

Mr. Chevrier: Is it the intention to widen it eventually to 800 throughout the whole length?

Mr. Hees: A committee is examining the whole matter to determine what should be done during the next three-year contract.

Item agreed to.

Railway and steamship services—

409. Repairs and expenses in connection with the operation and maintenance of official railway cars under the jurisdiction of the department, $59,800.

Mr. McGrath: On the general item I made reference to the Canadian National Railways Newfoundland hotel and the necessity, in the light of representations, for enlargement to provide extra facilities. I also made reference to consideration being given to the provision of Canadian National Express service on Bell island in St. John's East. Would the minister comment?

Mr. Hees: I will be very glad to take up that matter with Canadian National Railways.

Mr. Bourget: I should like to bring to the attention of the minister a matter involving some employees of the C.N.R. in the Levis division. I was informed this afternoon by telegram, and I suppose the minister has also received the same telegram, that it is the intention of the C.N.R. management to close the division office in Levis and that from the first of August the Levis, Riviere du Loup and Charny-Monk sections will become part of the maritime or Atlantic region. If the information I have received is well founded it will mean that many employees with their families will have to move to Moncton and it will probably also mean the laying off of other employees.

I feel sure that the minister realizes that this change will also affect the economy of the district concerned and cause a lot of inconvenience to the people involved. I should also like to point out, and I think this is a very important point, that most of the people living in that area are French speaking, and if the sections I have mentioned are transferred to the Atlantic regions these people will have to deal with the officers at Moncton. I hope the minister realizes the very disadvantageous position in which the people of these areas will be placed. I would ask the minister to convey to the management of the C.N.R. that if a change has to be made it would be more logical to extend the limits of the Quebec district and Levis division to the border of the province of New Brunswick instead of transferring the sections I have mentioned to the Atlantic region.

I hope that the minister, with his usual sympathy for the Canadian National employees, will draw this to the attention of the management. I recall that when he was sitting on this side he was always blaming the government whenever one Canadian National employee was dismissed. I would, therefore, ask him to convince the Canadian National management to have another look at this special question because this would provide time for public bodies to make the representations that they intend to make on that subject.

Mr. Hees: I shall be glad to draw the matter to the attention of the management of the Canadian National.

Mr. Nielsen: I understand that at this point in the estimates I can discuss the operation of Canadian National Telegraphs which is, by arrangement, operating the northern communications system along the Alaska highway into the Yukon.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): The item under discussion is for repairs and expenses in connection with the operation and maintenance of official railway cars under the jurisdiction of the department.

Mr. Nielsen: I understand that under item 409, railway and steamship services generally may be discussed. If it is not in order for me to discuss the Canadian National Telegraphs operation of the northern communications system under this item, I wonder if the chairman could indicate to me under what item in the estimates I can discuss this matter which comes under the direct jurisdiction of the minister's department?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): I am advised that item 430 would be the appropriate item. It deals with telecommunications.

Mr. Nielsen: Under the air services branch?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): If the hon. member will refer to page 76, item 430, I think he will find himself in order when that item is called.

Item agreed to.

410. Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminal, $1,741,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: What is the decrease?

Mr. Hees: Approximately $220,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, I can read, but why is there the decrease?

Mr. Hees: A small saving on operating expenses and a fair increase in operating revenues.

(Translation):

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Chairman, I would again unfortunately for him, call the minister's attention to a particular problem concerning commuters who, by the hundreds, use the national railways to go to their daily work in Montreal, from St. Hilaire, Otterburn, Beloeil, McMasterville, St. Basile, St. Bruno, St. Hubert, to mention only the people in my own riding.

(Text):

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Order; I believe the hon. member is speaking on the next item. Shall item 410 carry?

Item agreed to.

411. Newfoundland ferry and terminals, $4,738,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask the minister if his department is completely satisfied now with the operation of the William Carson, and if the terminal at Port aux Basques is satisfactory?

Mr. Hees: Yes, it appears to be working satisfactorily, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pickersgill: Has the result of the operation been that there is a very small backlog of freight at North Sydney?

Mr. Hees: I am not aware of the nature of the backlog of freight, but any time I have asked I have been advised by the management of Canadian National that the operation of this ferry is satisfactory.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister will note that there is a very considerable increase for this year. I am not complaining about that, but I just wondered what the reason was?

Mr. Johnson: May I revert to item 409?

Mr. Pickersgill: We are in the middle of a discussion; wait until we finish.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Apparently the hon. member wishes to speak on another item. We will complete the discussion of item 411 to keep the committee procedure orderly, then the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville may make his request of the Chair.

Mr. Hees: The answer to the hon. member's question is that there has been quite an increase in operating expenses.

Mr. Pickersgill: No corresponding increase in revenues?

Mr. Hees: Not as much.

Item agreed to.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): If the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville will state his case—

Mr. Johnson: I have to take exception to the use of the words "state his case", because I would have to incriminate a few of my friends around me. Because of private conversations, I did not have a chance—

Mr. Pickersgill: Before we decide about the hon. member's request, is it clearly understood that the same consideration will be given to every member of the opposition as is given to a supporter of the government in reverting to items?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): The Chair is not going to anticipate what the request is. Perhaps we should have the request first.

Mr. Johnson: May I carry on with my request?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): The Chair wishes to know what the hon. member's request is.

Mr. Drysdale: He wants to go back to item 409.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): The hon. member asks the consent of the committee to revert to item 409 which has been passed by the committee. Is it the pleasure of the committee to grant the hon. member this right?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

409. Repairs and expenses in connection with the operation and maintenance of official railway cars under the jurisdiction of the department, $59,800.

(Translation):

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Chairman, I was saying that the rates established for the transportation of those passengers are high enough today without those people being saddled with a further increase.

At this time, the rate increases are in abeyance, thanks to the timely intervention of this government, until the transport commissioners can consider the situation and reach a decision. But while waiting for their decision, I take the opportunity offered by the consideration of the minister's estimates to ask the Minister of Transport to give favourable consideration to requests from commuters who are opposed to any raise in railway rates.

In order to shorten this debate, I shall, at this point, support the remarks made this morning by the member for Vaudreuil-Soulanges, when he raised the problem facing the commuters.

I shall draw the minister's attention to a problem which is of interest to those who travel daily from Granby to Montreal via Marieville, Chambly, Brookline, Croydon and East Greenfield. Every morning a train leaves Granby and runs through Marieville and the other places I mentioned, i.e. Chambly, Brookline, Croydon and East Greenfield, at a time which would be convenient to daily commuters in the area, but the national railways, for some unknown reason, have this train running from Granby to Montreal through all those points, but picking up passengers only at Granby and Marieville.

I want to draw the minister's attention to the matter, and ask him whether it would not be possible to point out the situation to the relevant Canadian National Railways authorities, because it is of great importance for people travelling from the points I mentioned.

(Text):

Mr. Hees: Yes. I shall be glad to draw that to the attention of the management.

Item agreed to.

413. Enlargement of dock and terminal facilities at North Sidney, Nova Scotia, $14,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is one question I should like to ask the minister. There is no question about retaining North Sydney as the port for the ferry, is there? There has been some discussion about that matter.

Mr. Hees: There is no question about it at all.

Item agreed to.

415. Construction or acquisition of auto-ferry vessels and equipment as listed in the details of the estimates, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended upon individual listed projects, $1,130,000.

Mr. McGrath: Is it possible to get an indication as to when the Bell island ferry will be completed? When is it expected to go into service?

Mr. Hees: Next summer.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I make an appeal to the minister to consider naming the Bell island ferry the Point Pelee because it was my discovery that the government of Canada was subsidizing a ferry between Pelee island and Point Pelee that forced the minister to provide this ferry for Bell island.

Mr. McGrath: Why not call it the J. W. Pickersgill?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I should like to know when the hon. gentleman made that discovery?

Mr. Pickersgill: I can tell the minister that very well. It was a very sad day for me because it was at the last treasury board that I attended and it was unfortunately after June 10, 1957.

Item agreed to.

417. Yarmouth, Nova Scotia-Bar Harbour, Maine, U.S.A., ferry service—deficit, 1959, $131,000.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister give an idea of how this ferry service is operating? By that I mean how profitably is it operating?

Mr. Hees: For this year revenues are estimated at $1,115,000 and total expenses are estimated at $1,246,000, for a net deficit of $131,000. That is a slight improvement over last year.

Item agreed to.

420. To authorize the governor in council to grant to Canadian National Railway company a subsidy of $25,000 per mile, but not exceeding $7,450,000, towards the construction of the line of railway referred to in chapter 49 of the Statutes of Canada, 1953-54, as branch line number 1 (described approximately as a line of railway from St. Felicien to Chibougamau and from Chibougamau to Beattyville in the province of Quebec); such grant of subsidy to be made in such manner and in such amounts and subject to such conditions, if any, as the governor in council deems expedient; estimated requirement for the fiscal year 1959-60, $1,000,000.

Mr. Winch: Although item 420 deals with a specific subsidy for the construction of a railway, may I take the opportunity afforded by this vote to ask the minister whether any moneys have been paid or whether consideration is being given to the payment of a similar subsidy on a very expensive construction undertaken by British Columbia in extending the Pacific Great Eastern railway from Prince George to Fort St. John?

Mr. Hees: There is nothing current at the present time.

Mr. Winch: May I ask whether the government of British Columbia has made any request for that subsidy?

Mr. Hees: Yes, a request was made.

Mr. Winch: May I ask whether it is being considered?

Mr. Hees: Yes.

Mr. Winch: And favourably I hope.

Mr. Hees: No; that matter has not been finally disposed of.

Mr. Pickersgill: Since the hon. gentleman made a request that was slightly out of order, Mr. Chairman, may I also make one? Is any consideration being given to the application of the government of Manitoba for the extension of the railway north from Gypsumville to the Hudson Bay railway?

Mr. Hees: I am not aware of such a request.

Mr. Winch: I am now asking for information. After a railway has been constructed, is in operation, and has been in operation for some time how long does it take, as general rule, before a decision is reached as to whether a subsidy is going to be paid?

Mr. Hees: It all depends on the complexity of the issue. I understood that Mr. Bennett made some statements in the past—I think it was perhaps about the time of the last election out there—to the effect that this was a very successful operation, that it was paying its way and things of that kind.

Mr. Winch: You know Mr. Bennett. The taxpayers of British Columbia and the other people in Canada, with respect to railway construction, are entitled to a grant from the federal government. Not on behalf of Mr. Bennett but on behalf of the taxpayers of British Columbia we ask that favourable consideration be given to according us the same treatment as is accorded to everyone else.

Mr. Chevrier: What is the remaining amount to be paid for the construction of this half of the Chibougamau railway?

Mr. Hees: If we spend the full amount of $1,000,000 this year it will bring it very near to completion.

Mr. Chevrier: My recollection is that the line was to cost in the neighborhood of $37 million, about $17 million or $18 million or thereabouts for each half of the line. Is this the last million dollars that is going to be voted?

Mr. Hees: Yes. There will probably be a wind-up item next year but it will not be a big one.

Mr. Chevrier: What is the present position of the eastern half of the line?

Mr. Hees: Does the hon. member mean whether that section of the line is operational?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Hees: Yes. The eastern section is in service now.

Mr. Chevrier: Then is the whole line in service? The western section was built first.

Mr. Hees: The western section is completed. The eastern section is not completed.

Mr. Chevrier: That is what I thought. When will the eastern section be completed?

Mr. Hees: If the C.N.R. are able to spend this money this year they expect to have it completed by the end of this year. There seems to be some doubt that they can spend all this money, but if they can they will.

Mr. Broome: I wish to say a word with regard to the question posed by the hon. member for Vancouver East. I am rather interested in that point. I wonder whether the minister can tell us whether—I did not get this point quite clear—submissions had been received from the British Columbia government with regard to a subsidy? I thought a subsidy had been paid or offered to the British Columbia government and that it has been accepted. I was wondering whether the minister could bring the committee up to date on that matter.

Mr. Hees: That was in relation only to the forty miles extension directly north of Prince George and that was paid about a year and a half ago. Premier Bennett spoke to me about the possibility of a further subsidy and, as I have said, the matter is still under consideration.

Mr. Winch: The point on which I want to be extremely careful is this. It is my understanding that a subsidy was paid by the federal government on some phase of the construction from north Vancouver to Squamish and from Quesnel to Prince George but that on account of the expense involved the government were anticipating that they would receive a larger subsidy on that section of construction. I am not questioning at this time whether or not you have under consideration—although I hope you have—the granting of a greater subsidy on the heavy cost of construction from north Vancouver to Squamish and from Quesnel to Prince George. Basically my question was this. Is any consideration being given to the second phase of construction which was from the city of Prince George up to Dawson Creek and Fort St. John in the Peace river area of British Columbia? As I said before, I think the people are entitled to it. The expenditure was great. The cost has been met by the people of British Columbia. The railway opens up all that vast area in the north and the federal government is going to reap the benefit through the development of that country through the medium of this railway extension. I hope that not only is consideration being given to an additional subsidy on the first two sections but also to a continuation of subsidies on the northern section.

Mr. Broome: It also links up five points.

Mr. Winch: Premier Bennett boasts too much and keeps too many differing financial books.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, the answer to the hon. member's question is that in 1949 a subsidy was paid for the section from Quesnel to Prince George. Also there has been, as I have said, a subsidy paid on 40 miles north from Prince George but nothing on any other section.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, it seems logical having paid a subsidy on 40 miles north that they should also give consideration to extending it to Dawson Creek and Fort St. John.

Item agreed to.

Pensions and other benefits—

421. Amount required to pay pensions at the rate of $300 per annum to former pilots: Arthur Baquet; Adelard Delisle; Raoul Lachance; Jules Lamarre; Wilhelm Langlois; Auguste Santerre, $1,800.

Mr. Chevrier: One word on pensions generally. What is the position of the retired employees of the Canadian National Railways? The minister will remember how that matter was always discussed in the house, and I wonder if he would bring the committee up to date on the position of pensions concerning the retired employees of the Canadian National Railways, not only those who are now receiving the basic pension but others as well.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, this is quite a complicated matter. I have studied the memorandum which the C.N.R. sent to me, and—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Order. I think this question should properly be asked under item 422.

Item agreed to.

422. Railway employees' provident fund—to supplement pension allowances under the intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railway employees' Provident Fund Act so as to make the minimum allowance payable in the calendar year 1959 $30 per month instead of $20 per month as fixed by the said act, $9,400.

Mr. Hees: The C.N.R. have just brought in a new pension plan. As I say, it is quite a complicated one and deals with employees under certain categories going back quite a number of years. I would be very glad to let the hon. member have the memorandum, but I am afraid it is too lengthy and complicated to deal with here.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not want the memorandum; I just want the answers to two questions. First, I understand the new plan which the minister speaks of does not cover those who are entitled to the basic pension only, and I understand further that it does not cover a certain group of retired employees of the Canadian National Railways. Can the minister tell me what happens to the basic pension? Does it remain the same?

Mr. Hees: If the hon. member will permit, I would like to get that information for him and answer these two questions tomorrow.

Mr. Winch: Could I ask the minister, as he apparently has some interest in the retirement pensions of the old time employees of the C.N.R., if he has any authority or influence over the C.P.R., because I have a stack of files galore from old time pensioners of the C.P.R. They cannot make any headway with that outfit whatsoever in getting these old timers a square deal. Has the minister any information on that, or any influence or power there at all?

Mr. Hees: No, I am afraid not. As the hon. member knows that is a private company and I have no influence over it at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister draw to the attention of the C.P.R. the fact that there is a good deal of interest in this matter? One former member of parliament —I will not name him here—has himself drawn this to my attention. Probably the hon. member and I have the same gentleman in mind.

Mr. Hees: Yes; I would be very glad to draw it to the attention of the president of the C.P.R.

Item agreed to.

423. Supplemental pension allowances to former employees of Newfoundland railways, steamships and telecommunication services transferred to Canadian National Railways, $56,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: One word on this item. I had a good deal to do with this, and I am certainly not going to ask the minister to explain it because it is about the most complicated thing I have ever had to deal with, but is it working out satisfactorily?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, the answer is yes.

Item agreed to.

AIR SERVICES

Administrative branch—

425. Construction services administration, $2,809,785.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does this item cover all construction of every kind?

Mr. Hees: It is the administrative item for the construction branch which looks after air services as a whole.

Mr. Pickersgill: In other words, this is just overhead, is it?

Mr. Hees: Salaries, offices, and that sort of thing.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is a pretty large item for overhead, is it not?

Mr. Hees: It is salaries, office expenses, and so on.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is nearly $3 million.

Mr. Weichel: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to delay the Department of Transport estimates, but on behalf of the Waterloo-Wellington airport commission, my colleagues from Waterloo South, Wellington South and myself, may I extend to the Minister of Transport and his department our sincere thanks for the fine co-operation received in the authorizing of repairs to the taxi strip and the installation of a medium intensity lighting system in order to permit night flying from this airport. This is a move in the right direction. These improvements will assure the public that in this growing developing area of Canada these increased facilities are required, and will materially help the growth and development of the area which this airport serves.

Mr. Chairman, in connection with the air facilities program, first may I mention that the development of aviation in Canada is rapid and the government is doing what it can to facilitate the construction and provision of facilities in the way of runways, navigational aids, etc., that will permit a healthy aviation industry in Canada. Second, it is recognized that the government cannot in any one year finance the total assistance requested. Third, assistance is being given within the limitations of money available in some areas where improved services are most urgently required. Fourth, while all requests cannot be met during the present fiscal year, we hope that it will be the continuing policy of the government to assist and encourage various developing areas of Canada to improve their airport facilities in order that improved transportation so essential to development may be achieved.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I would like to join with the hon. member for Waterloo North in congratulating the minister on being present at the opening of what I think is the finest air terminal in Canada and the most modern and up to date, and one which I had a good deal of pleasure in having something to do with as a member of the former government. I refer to the terminal at St. John's, which I am sure the minister will agree is the finest one of its size and kind in Canada.

Mr. Brunsden: Mr. Chairman, may I redirect the attention of the minister, in view of the preceding remarks, to my own remarks this afternoon with respect to the deplorable situation at Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I call it ten o'clock?

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the house leader what the business of the house will be for tomorrow, and perhaps I could ask him to be so good as to project his mind into next week as far as he can.

Mr. Green: Tomorrow we shall continue with the transport estimates and then take those of the Department of Justice. On Monday we intend to take the different items standing in the name of the Minister of Finance. I cannot give the order in which they will be considered. We will also take the item in the name of the Minister of National Defence, and then a very non-contentious item, No. 2 on today's order paper, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. Winch: Stop right there.

Mr. Green: On Tuesday, hon. members should be prepared to consider the resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Public Works concerning the Prime Minister's Residence Act, and any of the items in the name of the Minister of Justice, with the exception of the act to amend the Combines Investigation Act. I am including the act to amend the Criminal Code but not the one concerning the Combines Investigation Act.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the house adjourns I wonder if I can make an appeal to the minister to appeal in turn to his colleagues to bring forward the legislation having to do with the implementation of the terms of union.

Mr. Green: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am hoping that practically all of the legislation will be on the order paper within the next few days.

Mr. Chevrier: Within when?

Mr. Green: Within the next few days.

It being three minutes after 10 o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

A—Department—

392. Departmental administration, $2,587,500.

411. Newfoundland ferry and terminals, $4,738,000.

412. Strait of Canso—causeway maintenance, $10,000.

413. Enlargement of dock and terminal facilities at North Sydney, Nova Scotia, $14,000.

414. Construction of new dock and terminal facilities at Port aux Basques, Newfoundland, $36,000.

415. Construction or acquisition of auto-ferry vessels and equipment as listed in the details of the estimates, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended upon individual listed projects, $1,130,000.

416. Newfoundland coastal services—construction or acquisition of passenger-cargo vessels and equipment, and harbour facilities, $3,090,000.

417. Yarmouth, Nova Scotia-Bar Harbour, Maine, U.S.A., ferry service—deficit, 1959, $131,000.

418. Degaussing Canadian-owned merchant ships, of 1,000 gross tons and over, of Canadian registry, or of United Kingdom registry if subject to retransfer to Canadian registry under special intergovernmental arrangement, $255,000.

419. Maritime Freight Rates Act—payment to the railway companies operating in the select territory designated by the act, of the difference occurring on account of the application of the act, between the tariff tolls and normal tolls under approved tariffs (estimated and certified to the Minister of Transport by the Canadian National Railway Company and approved by auditors of the said company respecting the eastern lines of the Canadian National Railways and in the case of the other railways by the board of transport commissioners for Canada) on all traffic moved during the calendar year 1959, $14,100,000.

420. To authorize the governor in council to grant to Canadian National Railway Company a subsidy of $25,000 per mile, but not exceeding $7,450,000, towards the construction of the line of railway referred to in chapter 49 of the statutes of Canada, 1953-54, as branch line number 1 (described approximately as a line of railway from St. Felicien to Chibougamau and from Chibougamau to Beattyville in the province of Quebec); such grant of subsidy to be made in such manner and in such amounts and subject to such conditions, if any, as the governor in council deems expedient; estimated requirement for the fiscal year 1959-60, $1,000,000.

Pensions and other benefits—

421. Amount required to pay pensions at the rate of $300 per annum to former pilots: Arthur Baquet; Adelard Delisle; Raoul Lachance; Jules Lamarre; Wilhelm Langlois; Auguste Santerre, $1,800.

422. Railway employees' provident fund—to supplement pension allowances under the intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railway Employees' Provident Fund Act so as to make the minimum allowance payable in the calendar year 1959 $30 per month instead of $20 per month as fixed by the said act, $9,400.

423. Supplemental pension allowances to former employees of Newfoundland railways, steamships and telecommunication services transferred to Canadian National Railways, $56,000.

Air services—

Administrative branch—

424. Air services administration, $1,342,652.

APPENDIX

MALTON AIRPORT—CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING LAND APPROPRIATION

(Copy)

5168-648

July 19, 1957.

John Pallett, Esq., M.P.,
R.R. No. 1,
Erindale, Ont.

Dear John:

I have now obtained further information on the veterans' properties near Malton which have been expropriated. You are, of course, more familiar with these cases than I, but I find that the main complaints are:

(1) Delay in approaching land owners after expropriation;

(2) Opinion of the land owners that departmental offers are inadequate;

(3) Loss by the land owners of the "conditional grants" under the Veterans' Land Act.

There certainly were some delays in approaching land owners after expropriation in 1954. Our small real estate staff in Toronto had a great number of cases to deal in Ontario with during that period and fell behind in their approaches to many people because the volume of work was too great. As regards the second complaint that our offers are not high enough, we not only had appraisals made by our own staff, but we employed an independent appraiser with particular reference to the Hatton test case which is now before the exchequer court, and we consulted fully with officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs who concurred in the view that our offers were fair and reasonable.

It is, of course, by no means abnormal to find a wide gap between an offer which we consider fair and reasonable and the value which may be placed upon property by the land owner. Where a gap is too great it is usually desirable to allow the matter to be settled by the court, and frequently one test case in an area gives the basis for direct settlement of others without court intervention.

As for the conditional grants, after reviewing the facts I do not see how we could take account of this in our offers. This conclusion has been reached after full consultation with the Department of Veterans Affairs, which I understand is in agreement with our view. The conditional grant is an extra credit which may be earned by the veteran if he stays in continuous residence for 10 years, but is related to other benefits which he gives up when he obtains this and which are re-established if he loses the conditional grant. In order to qualify for the conditional grant, I understand that the veteran must surrender his right to a re-establishment credit which is part of the war gratuity he is entitled to; but if he loses his right to the conditional grant, his right to the re-establishment credit is restored; or, alternatively, if he relocates under the V.L.A. his right to the conditional grant continues without a break. I think you will appreciate from this why we feel that this is a matter which must be handled within the orbit of the Department of Veterans Affairs because of these related factors which exist. This is the strong advice of our real estate and legal officials in consultation with D.V.A.

However, we recognize that this is a complicated matter and it is because of this fact, as well as because of the very high valuation placed upon their property by the veterans themselves, that we thought it would be fair to all concerned if the Hatton case could be settled by the exchequer court and establish a precedent which could be followed in the other settlements. Otherwise the veterans might feel that they had been unfairly treated; or, alternatively, the Department could be accused of being wasteful of the taxpayers' money by giving in to unreasonable demands.

I am anxious to help, and if it is the case that the veterans have retained the services of an independent appraiser and have obtained advice which differs materially from that available to us, we would be glad to arrange a further meeting to discuss the matter with all concerned, including officials of the V.L.A. I would not like to commit myself at this stage to arbitration in the sense of appointing an independent appraiser acceptable to both the veterans and ourselves until after this meeting takes place. However, I would certainly be prepared to consider this possibility further if the veterans were prepared to agree by contract in advance the report of such an independent appraiser was final and binding on them.

Perhaps you would let me have your views as to what further steps might usefully be taken. Meanwhile, since we have some preference for seeing the Hatton case decided as a means of establishing a basis for settlement of the other cases, we will ask the Department of Justice to request the exchequer court to give earnest consideration to setting an early hearing of the Hatton case.

Yours sincerely,

George Hees.

Dear George:

Re: Malton Airport Expropriation

I have had a meeting with the home owners who are being expropriated in the Malton area and they have agreed to the matter being arbitrated by a single arbitrator to be agreed upon between yourself and themselves.

I told them that I thought that the arbitrator in all probability could hear their individual cases in September. I believe there are a number of people who live in the county of Peel who could be qualified as arbitrator and if you wish, I would be pleased to submit a name for your consideration.

Kindest personal regards.

The Honourable George Hees,

Dear George:

Thank you for your recent long letter. Your interest is appreciated.

I had the advantage, however, of having on the spot information. I am sure that none of the residents will feel bound by the Hatton decision, and from the mood of the residents, there will be a number of exchequer court cases. This will of necessity be expensive to the department and to the residents.

An arbitration would satisfy the economy's requirement and would give the matter more expedition. I believe your officials will confirm that no additional cases can be heard in the exchequer court this year.

The previous administration failed to recognize the human element in many of its dealings and that is the reason for the sharp vote against it.

The number of individuals involved in this matter cannot all be wrong. It may be that there was some early misunderstanding between the evaluators and this group, which I am firmly convinced will not be improved by the arbitrary attitude at the present time to follow out previous methods.

A proper arbitration will not only save the government considerable legal cost, but will restore the much-needed confidence in the administration generally.

Kindest personal regards.

Yours sincerely,

John.

Dear Mr. Booth:

Further to my telephone conversation with you yesterday, I am pleased to enclose herewith a copy of the names of the people who are interested and agreeable in having an arbitrator or a new valuator, whose finding shall be binding upon both parties. In addition to this, I understand that some of the larger land holders will also consent to something of this nature in order to finalize it.

You will note that the total difference in the prices asked and the prices offered amounts to some $138,000. If each of these went to the exchequer court as individual cases, it would not take long to eat up the $138,000 (at least at the rate of cost in the recent Bagwell case).

I look forward to seeing you at the convention next week, and hope that something can be worked out so that these people will not have to wait any longer for their just entitlement.

Yours sincerely,

John Pallett, M.P.

Dear Mr. Pallett:

This is further to our telephone conversation of a couple of days ago relating to the matter of settlement of the claims of certain soldier settlers and some others in respect of expropriations for the airport at Malton.

Since talking to you, I have discussed with Mr. R. G. MacNeill of the treasury board staff your proposal for the disposition of these matters by arbitration. Mr. MacNeill feels that this course would be impracticable for a number of reasons including the following:

The Expropriation Act makes provision for dealing with expropriations and these claims must be dealt with in accordance with the act.

It would be contrary to the intention of the Expropriation Act for the government to agree in advance to be bound by the decision of an arbitrator in the manner suggested by you.

If arbitration were adopted in this case it would establish a precedent which could have extremely serious and dangerous consequences for the future.

As I indicated to you in our conversation I have discussed this question briefly with the deputy minister of justice who sees many practical difficulties which would arise and feels that if a "proper arbitration" were undertaken the formulation of the necessary procedures, safeguards, etc. together with the preparation of the several cases and representation before the arbitration tribunal would involve very considerable expense.

It is pointed out that while some of the other owners might not be willing to be bound by the decision of the exchequer court in the Hatton case the fact is that the court is better qualified than any arbitrator could be to come to a sound decision and that even if the others insisted as is their right to take their cases to the court it is extremely unlikely, assuming that the circumstances in most if not all of the other cases are very similar, if not identical, with the Hatton case that they would improve their position by doing so. On the other hand, if arbitration were adopted then each one of them would have to come forward with an expert valuation of his property and this inevitably would involve considerable expense to each of them both for the services of a valuator and also for counsel.

The foregoing is not intended to be exhaustive and I will be pleased to discuss this aspect of the matter with you in Banff.

Dealing with the suggestion I made to you regarding a further attempt to reach agreement, I respect that we would welcome an opportunity to meet with the owners in question for the purpose of discussing their valuations and the valuations which have already been made as indicated to you in the minister's letter of July 19. For such a meeting to be fruitful I think it would be necessary for the owners to be prepared to present their own valuations in detail, supported by such expert opinion as they see fit to secure. As I have already said I would arrange to attend such a meeting myself.

It is fully recognized that there are a number of unfortunate aspects to this matter which are extremely regrettable. These include the rather serious delays which have taken place; the fact that under the Expropriation Act we are bound by valuations as of the date of expropriation notwithstanding the fact that in some, if not all, cases the value of properties in the Malton area have risen considerably since that time; and also the fact that, apparently it would not be legally possible to take into account in fixing compensation the "conditional grants" under the V.L.A.

As I also mentioned to you, while we have received, I think in each case, a statement of the total sum which each owner would accept we have had no breakdown of these figures and it would be extremely helpful for our purposes if these could be provided.

We would appreciate receiving, in due course, the names of all the individuals on whose behalf you are intervening in this matter. I understand that you will be sending these to me.

Many thanks for your letter of August 27, just received with this information.

Yours very truly,

C. S. Booth.

Dear John:

This is further to our discussion of a couple of weeks ago regarding the settlement of the claims, as listed in your letter of August 27, to Mr. Booth, of certain soldier settlers and others at Malton.

My understanding of your proposal was that if new appraisals were made by a valuator acceptable to you, the owners in question would agree to be bound by his valuation.

Your proposal for a valuator was Mr. Earl Claire of Port Credit and I am happy to be able to tell you that we have now arranged for Mr. Claire to undertake this work. He has been in hospital but I understand he will begin his appraisals next week.

I would appreciate receiving from you, as soon as conveniently posible, the written undertakings of the owners to be bound by Mr. Claire's valuations. When these valuations are received, I will proceed along the lines indicated to you in our discussion.

Yours sincerely,

George Hees.

Dear George:

Re: Malton Airport Expropriations

I received your letter today, and would point out that the valuator's name is James Earl Scott Clare, and I am pleased that he is satisfactory to the members of your department.

This evening the forms are being delivered to the owners to obtain their signatures. In the forms that are to be signed, there is a provision that the vendors agree only to be bound by the valuation if the amount is paid within two months after the valuation is made. This latter provision is to help speed things along a little bit.

Kindest personal regards.

Dear John:

Thank you for your letter of October 3rd relating to the Malton expropriations.

As mentioned by Mr. Booth in his telephone conversation with you this morning the time limit of two months may be cutting it rather fine and we would much prefer to have two months after the owners have signed their respective options at the valuations in question.

However, I understand that some have already signed and it would be difficult for you to go back to them now. I also understand that the documents they have signed provide for payment within two months after the valuations have been submitted to me.

I have been advised that barring unforeseen difficulties we shall be able to complete the formalities within this time limit and under the circumstances I agree to proceeding in the manner you have arranged.

Dear George:

Re: Malton Airport Expropriations

I hate to bother you with such things, but I have had a telephone call and a telegram; Bill Beach has had telephone calls; and apparently Speers, the land agent in Toronto, has made the statement that he—and not the minister—is running the department in Toronto.

I have had a talk with Earl Clare, whom you appointed for the purpose of evaluating small holdings, and he tells me that Speers was in Ottawa today, apparently with some proposal to the deputy minister or assistant deputy minister that Clare be taken off the job.

Clare has already promoted the public relations of the Department of Transport more than the land agents have done in the last three and a half years. He has taken the time to examine each house and sit down and talk over the valuations which the owners want, with each owner. Needless to say, he will come to his own valuation.

I have known Clare for many many years and he is not going to be influenced by Speers or any home owners. You may or may not hear of this through your deputies but, if so, I suggest that they be told in no uncertain terms that Speers is to get off Clare's back and let him do the valuations in his own way; if not, it defeats the purpose of appointing him.

No answer is expected and this, I suggest, might be ripped up and thrown away.

FINANCE

TEXTILES—TABLING OF TARIFF BOARD REPORT ON SILK AND MAN-MADE FIBRES

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies in English and in French of a further report which I have received from the chairman of the tariff board relating to reference No. 125 on textiles. I am tabling also a transcript of the evidence presented to the board at its public hearings. This report relates to silk and its products and to man-made fibres and their products. As hon. members know, real silk has long since been reduced to a minor role as compared with synthetic fibres.

Two of the most important of the man-made fibres—viscose and acetate—are derivatives of wood pulp. Most of the others are true synthetics, based on petrochemicals or other hydrocarbons. The tariff board report traces the development of these man-made fibres and describes the increasingly important place which they have come to occupy in the textile industry. It finds that the share of the Canadian market filled by these fibres expanded very rapidly and without any serious interruption from the time of their introduction in the early 20's until 1951. It notes, however, that in the last seven or eight years the adoption of new processes and improved finishes in the cotton industry, coupled with a decline in the price of cotton and wool from the levels which prevailed in 1950, have tended to check the gains being made by synthetic fibres. The board also notes that new technological developments have been taking place at such a rapid pace within the synthetics industry that it may be described as one which is "constantly devouring its own young". The new "miracle fibre" of one day is superseded in public esteem and consumer acceptance by the newer one of tomorrow. This continuity of eclipse, born of invention and discovery, may have left some sections of the industry with excess or obsolescent capacity.

In this report the board has brought together a great deal of valuable information regarding the man-made fibre industry in Canada; its size, its location, its importance in the economy and the state of its financial health. The picture which emerges is one of diversity rather than uniformity. For this reason the board found it difficult to make unqualified generalizations about the industry. In the report, however, it points out that the industry faces much the same problems as were referred to at length in the report on cotton textiles which I tabled in this house on February 11 of this year, and it emphasizes the following features of the situation:

(1) There is evidence of world-wide overcapacity for the production and processing of man-made fibres; in the board's view, certain units within the Canadian industry are, by any realistic standard, overexpanded.

(2) The industry serves a highly selective market, which demands a wide variety in type, construction and finish of products. The efforts of Canadian mills to meet this demand result in shorter runs and higher unit costs than are typical in the United States, their main source of competition.

(3) In general, the Canadian tariff affords a higher level of protection to the synthetic textile industry than is accorded to the producers of corresponding forms of cotton or wool products. However, this protection varies widely from product to product.

(4) In recent years, at least, important sections of the industry have not been very profitable.

(5) None the less, the Canadian man-made fibre industry and the branch of the weaving industry based upon man-made fibres hold a larger share of the domestic market than does either the Canadian cotton industry or the Canadian wool industry.

The board after much deliberation has concluded that anything in the nature of a general increase in customs duties on man-made fibres and products thereof could not be justified. What recommendations it is prepared to make relate largely to proposed adjustments within the existing framework of tariff protection. The recommendations represent an attempt to achieve a more equitable distribution of the protection available within the present general level of duties, and to remove certain anomalies which now exist. The recommendations also provide for the introduction of a simpler and more logical arrangement of the tariff items.

I should now like to say a word about the main changes. One of these relates to acetate filament yarns. The board finds that the special situation which led to the introduction of reduced rates of duty on these yarns no longer exists, and recommends that they be made dutiable at the same rates as have all along been applicable to other yarns. The board takes the view that the existing rates on staple fibre—free under the B.P. tariff and 7½ per cent under the M.F.N. tariff—are illogical in the context in which they occur, and it recommends that these rates be increased to 5 per cent and 12½ per cent respectively.

The present rates on the main tariff item, 561, relating to fabrics made from synthetic fibre, are 22½ per cent, B.P. tariff and 25 per cent, plus 30 cents per pound, M.F.N. tariff. The board states that in its view no substantial change in the level of these rates would be justified, but that a rearrangement of the existing compound duty is desirable for two reasons.

First, the progressive trend to lightweight fabrics has meant that weavers of such fabrics have been receiving what might be regarded as less than their share of the protection given the industry. Second, in respect of very heavy fabrics, the additional specific duty of 30 cents per pound results in a total duty burden that is difficult to justify. The recommendation of the board is that the ad valorem component under the M.F.N. tariff be increased from 25 per cent to 30 per cent and that the specific duty thereunder be decreased from 30 cents to 20 cents per pound. No change is suggested in the B.P. rate.

With regard to wearing apparel and other made-up articles of synthetic fibre, the board recommended no change in the rates of duty now provided for under the main item concerned. These rates would remain 20 per cent under the B.P. tariff and 27½ per cent under the M.F.N. tariff. There are minor adjustments affecting some smaller items.

In formulating a revised schedule for natural silk and its products, the board has simplified and reduced the number of tariff classifications and states that in so doing it has been able to recommend decreases in rates which should be of assistance to the Canadian garment industry.

Before concluding, I should like to add a word about tariff negotiations affecting textiles. In my budget speech I said that we had taken steps to initiate negotiations on a number of textile items. Hon. members will be interested to know that at the session of the GATT which recently concluded at Geneva we sought, and have obtained, formal permission to proceed with such negotiations in respect of all the bound textile items under tariff board reference 125. These, of course, include cottons, synthetics and the wool items which remain to be negotiated. Accordingly the way is now clear for us to proceed with these negotiations. They may be expected, however, to occupy some time, since no fewer than 15 countries are involved. I shall, of course, be reporting to the house when the negotiations have been concluded.

GRAIN

REFERENCE OF REPORTS OF WHEAT BOARD AND GRAIN COMMISSION TO AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, if I have unanimous consent I move:

That the annual report of the Canadian wheat board for the crop year ended July 31, 1958, which was tabled on February 6, and the report of the board of grain commissioners for 1958, which was tabled on March 23, and the supplementary report of the Canadian wheat board on the 1957-58 pool accounts for wheat, oats and barley, tabled today, be referred to the standing committee on agriculture and colonization.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO ADJOURNMENT FOR OPENING OF SEAWAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister could inform the house if there is likely to be any adjustment in parliamentary business on June 25 and June 26 to permit members to attend the opening of the seaway?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, while I had no notice of this question, I was thinking of bringing this matter up myself. I feel that if the house should feel constrained to do so, and as I suggested earlier, we might adjourn either for both those days or for a portion of those days, depending upon the wishes of hon. members opposite. I do not want to suggest anything which might in any way be construed by them as an interference with the business of the house, but if there is general consent in that regard then I would certainly feel, under all the circumstances, that there could be no complaint on the part of anyone if the members of the house agreed on the need for an adjournment in order to permit them to participate as they would desire to do.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, if I may make a brief comment, if it is the wish of the Prime Minister to introduce such a motion the members of the C.C.F. party in this house will support the motion. However, we feel that in so far as is possible the house should devote itself to the public business which is before us, and so our suggestion is that the adjournment be for the minimum time necessary to allow members to attend the seaway celebrations.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I understand that invitations have been sent to some 4,000 or 5,000 persons for the opening on, I believe, June 26. While I do not want to do other than indicate what is in my mind at present, for what it is worth, it would seem to me that on that day at least perhaps parliament might rise and take part in these ceremonies wherever they may be. I understand some of them will be in Montreal and others elsewhere. Then again there is, as Your Honour knows, the Canadian-United States interparliamentary group which will be here for at least three days, one of those days being June 26, and so far as we on this side of the house are concerned it would seem that if the government feel that two days should be taken, that will be a matter for the government to determine. But it would strike me that at least the day on which Her Majesty the Queen and the President of the United States will be in Canada to inaugurate the seaway might well be an occasion for the adjournment of the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, it would not be a question of what the government would desire, but in view of what has been stated by the hon. member for Laurier and the hon. member for Assiniboia I take it the general feeling is that the adjournment should be for only one day. The government will be only too pleased to make the necessary motion. As a matter of fact, if I can take it the suggestion will be accepted, it might not be necessary to have the formality of a motion. I would simply refer to it on Monday, and with unanimous consent of the house, sir, the adjournment could be restricted to one day, the 26th. After all, we do not want to be placed in a position—and when I say "we" I mean the members of the house as a whole —of adjourning beyond that period which is absolutely necessary under all the circumstances.

THE MINISTRY

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps the Prime Minister, in the last few minutes, has been considering another matter about which I should like to ask him a question. Now that he has solved the problem of the appointment of a secretary of state for external affairs, would he inform the house when we might expect to hear about the appointment of parliamentary assistants?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): It is interesting to hear my hon. friend ask that question, because it was he who suggested there should be no appointments made at this session. However, when the government is in a position to make an announcement the house will be made fully aware, not only of the appointments but of the identity of the appointees.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Prime Minister, if no appointments are made before the end of the session, will the appointment of parliamentary assistants be made long ahead of the next session?

Mr. Diefenbaker: There will be no appointments made of parliamentary assistants. The position is parliamentary secretary.

[Later:]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if parliamentary secretaries are not appointed before the end of this session will they be appointed well ahead of the next session or near it or during the beginning of the next session of parliament?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that the hon. member might ask this question on the last day of the session. At the present time it is hypothetical.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, with great respect I do not believe it is hypothetical. The House of Commons has dealt with the matter; it has been dealt with elsewhere. All it requires now is assent, and we want to know whether the hon. gentlemen who are anxiously awaiting appointments are to be satisfied before the end of this session.

Mr. Churchill: What are you waiting for?

Mr. Speaker: I have heard the hon. member's point of order and I still think it is hypothetical.

Mr. Pearson: The appointments are hypothetical.

AIRPORTS

MALTON—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF JUDGMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister. May I ask the Prime Minister if he is now in a position to table the judgment of Mr. Justice Thorson in the Drew case?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not got it here. I think yesterday the hon. gentleman had it, or the Leader of the Opposition had it, and I would have no objection whatever to either of them tabling a copy of the judgment, since it is a public document.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask this supplementary question. The Prime Minister did undertake to table it—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, and I will.

Mr. Chevrier: While it is true that I had a copy, it is not an original. I think for the purposes of the house the original judgment should be tabled.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I shall be glad to do that. I cannot table the copy I have because I have marked it up, but on Monday I shall do so.

POLYMER CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO STRIKE SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): In the absence of the Minister of Labour I wonder if I could direct question to the Acting Minister of Labour. I wonder if the minister would care to comment on press reports that the long drawn out strike at Sarnia, at the Polymer Corporation, is approaching a settlement and that progress has been made in these negotiations?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Acting Minister of Labour): I do not think I should comment on that report. If the hon. member will wait until the Minister of Labour returns I am sure he is in possession of all the facts relevant to the matter.

HEALTH INSURANCE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—PROVISION OF OUTPATIENT OR CHRONIC HOSPITAL CARE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare a question. Is the minister in a position to report on what progress is being made toward providing British Columbia residents with either outpatient or chronic hospital care, as allowed for under the national health insurance act?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I should like to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his intention to ask this question. The British Columbia hospital insurance regulations provide for qualified persons to receive emergency services within 24 hours of being accidentally injured, or to receive minor surgery, both on an outpatient basis. A charge of $2 is made to such person in each instance. Provision is made for extending the 24 hour period relating to emergency outpatient services by the deputy minister of hospital insurance if he is satisfied that emergency services could not be obtained within 24 hours of the accident taking place.

British Columbia makes available insured benefits for the active treatment of chronic illness or disability when, in the opinion of the deputy minister of hospital insurance, the inpatient facilities of a general hospital are required. No proposals have been received from British Columbia to extend outpatient or chronic hospital care benefits.

Mr. Regier: I wonder if I might ask another question. Is our contention correct that hospital care on a general basis is not available to patients with chronic diseases in British Columbia because of reticence on the part of the federal government?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): No, I do not think that contention is correct at all.

NEW BRUNSWICK—INQUIRY AS TO INTENTION TO PARTICIPATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. McWilliam (Northumberland-Miramichi): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister anything further to add in reply to the question I asked him the other day with regard to the signing of an agreement between New Brunswick and the federal government concerning the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker.

SHIPPING

MONTREAL-KINGSTON—REPORTED STRIKE THREAT BY PILOTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. The news this morning carries the story that there are difficulties arising in connection with the Montreal-Kingston pilots who, because of unsatisfactory conditions, are threatening to strike. I wonder if the minister has any comment to make on that report.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. A number of points relating to pilotage in the Montreal harbour and between Montreal and Kingston have been brought forward for consideration and were in fact the subject of a special meeting with the pilots' representative yesterday.

Involved are such matters as facilities for waiting pilots at St. Lambert's lock; improved dispatching arrangements with regard to the canal itself; new rate schedules which have been approved by the pilotage authority and put into effect on a preliminary basis, but which have not yet been ratified by the governor in council; apprentice pilots in the Kingston district, and similar matters.

These are all being followed up by the pilotage officials, and while some may require continuing study the more important ones should be possible of rapid solution.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. H. Phillips (Prince): In view of the fact that a week has passed since I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare if he would consider tabling correspondence between Premier Matheson of Prince Edward Island and his department with regard to the province's proposed hospital insurance plan, is the minister now in a position to make this correspondence available?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker. Immediately following the request made by the hon. member a week ago today I wired the premier of Prince Edward Island, as is customary under the circumstances, asking permission to table the correspondence. As of this date I have received no reply.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if he is in a position today to comply with the order of the house made on March 25, in view of the fact that his estimates are coming up and that what was asked for is likely to be desired for reference purposes during consideration of his estimates.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I doubt if I can do it today. I know that progress has been made with the copying. I expect to be able to do it very shortly, and will endeavour to comply before my estimates are completed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the correspondence that voluminous?

Mr. Fulton: The correspondence is quite voluminous. As I told my hon. friend, correspondence both in support of the course taken and against has been received and in view of my hon. friend's careful selection of the correspondence it was necessary to go through quite a sorting process.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HARBOURS

VANCOUVER—INQUIRY AS TO PLANS FOR DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. Payne (Coast-Capilano): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, a copy of which has been forwarded to him. During the budget debate I brought to the minister's attention the urgent need for future planning in connection with Vancouver harbour. Since then I have had many discussions with the minister regarding this matter. Is the minister now in a position to say anything as to present and future planning to meet the needs of Canada's greatest year-round port?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the hon. member for Coast-Capilano, who has taken such a keen and continuing interest in this subject, will be happy to learn that I have approved in principle recommendations made by the national harbours board for a study of the present and future needs of Vancouver harbour. In general the study, which it is tentatively planned will be on an interdepartmental basis, will relate to review of harbour facilities, matters of channel dredging, the building of foreshore areas in the municipalities bordering the harbour, and the selection of new industrial sites. The matter of a terminal railway servicing the greater Vancouver industrial area and the problem of developing adequate approach roads to the main waterfront will also be studied.

I should like to add that such studies with regard to long range future development are in line with national harbours board policy in relation to the various harbours under the board's jurisdiction.

INDUSTRY

FORD COMPANY OF CANADA—REPORTED INTENTION TO INCREASE OWNERSHIP BY U.S. COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister; I was unable to send him notice. Can the Prime Minister say whether any study has been made of the report that the Ford Motor Company of the United States has made an offer to purchase up to 75 per cent of the equity stock of the Ford Motor Company of Canada? Has any study been given to the effect of this further control of Canadian industry by an outside corporation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am afraid the hon. member is asking a question about a matter which is beyond the administrative responsibility of the government. Surely this is a private transaction.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COLOMBO PLAN—STATEMENT ON NAMING OF CO-OPERATIVE EXPERT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker some time ago the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) inquired about a newspaper report to the effect that there had been a delay in assigning a Canadian co-operative expert to India under the Colombo plan.

The newspaper report is not entirely accurate. The request was for an expert to produce a series of films on co-operative activities in India. It was also suggested that we supply film equipment valued at $50,000, which would be required for the project. The suggestion is receiving the attention of our Colombo plan officials.

At no stage in our discussions with the Indian authorities has there been any reluctance about helping the co-operative movement, nor any question about the importance of co-operatives in India. Encouraging progress along co-operative lines is recognized as a reasonable objective of the Colombo plan program, and considerable assistance in this field has already been extended by Canada to a number of Colombo plan countries, including India. An expert on co-operatives was sent to advise the government of India from 1956 to 1958. A group of co-operative officers from seven countries, including India, is now visiting Canada under the Colombo plan to study the work being done in this country.

RUSH-BAGOT TREATY—TABLING OF EXCHANGE OF NOTES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in response to the request made yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition I am tabling the exchange of notes which took place earlier this year between Canada and the United States, indicating that a United States proposal to carry out a good-will cruise with 28 United States naval vessels in the great lakes is not inconsistent with the spirit of the Rush-Bagot agreement of 1817 as applied and interpreted by an exchange of notes in 1946.

In requesting that these notes be tabled the Leader of the Opposition suggested that this exchange of notes modified in some way the Rush-Bagot agreement of 1817 concerning naval forces on the great lakes. I should like to make it quite clear that this is not the case. An agreed application and interpretation of the Rush-Bagot agreement of 1817 formed the subject of an exchange of notes between Canada and the United States in 1946. This exchange is to be found in the Canadian treaty series of 1946, No. 40. As a matter of fact, each year Canada and the United States indicate to each other their respective intentions to carry out naval training exercises in the great lakes.

Perhaps the house would wish that these notes be printed in Hansard. If so there would be no objection to that being done.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that the exchange of notes be printed in Hansard as suggested?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[For text of notes referred to above, see appendix.]

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask a supplementary question. I thank the minister for the information he has given. Is it the case that this exchange of notes in 1946, with which I was familiar, permits the introduction into the great lakes of any number of United States warships in any circumstances?

Mr. Green: Oh, no, Mr. Speaker. As I understand it, it does not go that far; but there is a very significant phrase in the note from Canada in 1946 with which I am sure the Leader of the Opposition would heartily agree. The note reads in part as follows:

> It has been recognized by both our governments that the detailed provisions of the Rush-Bagot agreement are not applicable to present day conditions, but that as a symbol of friendly relations extending over a period of nearly 130 years the agreement possesses great historic importance. It is thus the spirit of the agreement rather than its detailed provisions which serves to guide our governments in matters relating to naval forces on the great lakes.

I think that is an outstanding statement, and it is in that spirit that the exchange of notes earlier this year took place.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to ask the minister a question. Has the government of the United States agreed to the request made by the seaway authority or the minister, I am not sure which, that these ships proceed through the seaway at the rate of two a day?

Mr. Green: Discussions are still going on between the two governments with respect to that question.

GRAIN

BOX CARS—INQUIRY AS TO ACTION ON REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister say whether the government is prepared to take any action on the royal commission recommendation with regard to box cars; in particular, has the minister received representations from the three prairie wheat pools in this regard?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the matter is under active consideration and I—

Mr. Chevrier: And has been for months.

Mr. Churchill: And has been for months. Of course this is a problem which is beyond the understanding of my hon. friend from Laurier, but it is very important to the people out in western Canada.

Mr. McIlraith: Grow up.

Mr. Chevrier: It took a year for the report; it is not beyond anybody else's understanding.

Mr. Churchill: If the hon. member wants to make a speech I will sit down and let him carry on.

Mr. Chevrier: Sure I will.

Mr. Churchill: He is quite vocal today, but he does not know very much about western Canada, and he has no representatives from there with him in this house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It will not be long before we will have them.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): The hon. member for Essex East is the agricultural representative.

Mr. Chevrier: You are a little embarrassed about box cars.

Mr. Churchill: I doubt whether the hon. member knows one end of a box car from another. Mr. Speaker, this matter is under consideration and before the house rises this summer I expect to have an announcement of interest not only to the house but to the farmers of western Canada.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister has been saying that for some months.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Pickersgill: No; I was going to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Argue: Can the minister say whether the government is considering any action in this regard which would affect the supply and distribution of box cars in the present crop year?

Mr. Churchill: I doubt very much whether any action in this regard will affect the distribution of box cars before July 31, but the box car situation is not a pressing one at the present time at all.

Mr. Argue: Does the minister not feel that action in this regard is necessary in order that quotas shall be equalized by the end of July?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Assiniboia, who argues from a persistent haze, has tried to indicate that there is something wrong with the quota system out in western Canada and has been very critical of the wheat board in charge of that quota system. But last year, before the conclusion of the crop year, all stations were on a 6 or 7-bushel quota. We are ahead this year in the quota situation, and I think before July 31 the same situation will prevail.

Mr. Argue: Can the minister say whether the quotas will be equalized?

Mr. Churchill: There again it is up to the Canadian wheat board to give us that information. I have not the information here, nor has the hon. member. The quotas were brought up to 6 and 7 bushels last year, and that was as close as they could come to exact equalization. I appreciate the fact that my hon. friend wants everybody to be exactly the same, no matter what the situation is.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder whether the minister can tell the house precisely what is the difference between one end of a box car and another?

Mr. Churchill: I expected a question like that from my prairie schooner friend.

AGRICULTURE

SASKATCHEWAN—INQUIRY AS TO ASSISTANCE IN DRY AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister advise the house of the situation in southern Saskatchewan in regard to pasture and hay? Has the government given consideration to instituting, in co-operation with the province, a scheme similar to that in operation last year to provide assistance in the movement of hay into dry areas and cattle out of them?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as I think most members of the house are aware, conditions have been very dry in southern Saskatchewan this year. Fortunately there have been some rains. I think about three days ago, on June 9, there were rains ranging down from something like two-thirds of an inch in Regina which has carried the situation forward for the next few days. However, it is apparent that there will be an extremely short hay crop even if we get good rains from now on. If there is reasonable moisture, of course, that deficiency can be made up by the planting of green feed, and thus I think it is a little early as yet to say what we should do in the way of an assistance program such as we had last year.

The minister of agriculture of Saskatchewan has been in touch with me in connection with this matter and I have told him that if the situation becomes worse we, of course, shall be prepared to go ahead on much the same basis as we did last year in assisting in the movement of hay into the dry areas and cattle out of those areas.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Air services—

425. Construction services administration, $2,809,785.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I had asked the minister a question last night about the component elements of this vote, and then there were some eulogistic statements made and the minister did not have a chance to answer me. Perhaps he will do so now.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I do not remember the question.

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall be very glad to assist the minister by repeating my question. This vote is for practically $3 million. The minister suggested that it was for overhead. It struck me as rather high from that point of view, and I wondered whether a little more thorough explanation should not be given.

Mr. Hees: The explanation of the vote is that it is for the salaries of 506 positions on the engineering, technical and clerical staff and the other office and field expenses of the air services construction branch, Ottawa headquarters and in six air services regions. This organization supervises the construction of and major repairs to various types of installations and equipment required in the maintenance of airways and is engaged from time to time in certain activities related to the housing of employees of the telecommunications and meteorological branches. This organization also supervises the construction of landing strips and facilities on behalf of the Department of National Defence. Treasury board in December, 1958 approved the absorption by transport of the salary costs of 100 positions formerly shown as recoverable from national defence.

Mr. Pickersgill: So, to put it very briefly, it is in fact purely overhead. No costs of construction as such are included.

Mr. Hees: We call it supervision, administration and engineering.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is a businessman and in business that is what would be called overhead.

Item agreed to.

Telecommunications branch—

Radio aids to air and marine navigation—

426. Administration, operation and maintenance, $16,628,508.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I should like to draw the minister's attention to one or two factors concerning the operation of Canadian National Telegraphs and their management of the northern communications system in the Yukon and British Columbia.

The Department of Transport and Canadian National Telegraphs constitute the second largest federal government employer in the Yukon, and questions relating to the welfare of personnel are very important. Certain unintentional, I am sure, discriminations exist in the northern allowance regulations in various sectors of the operations of Canadian National Telegraphs. I quite realize that Canadian National Telegraphs is a crown corporation and that any regulations concerning northern allowances must be arrived at as a result of discussion and agreement between Canadian National Railways and the telegraphers' union, and that any change in allowances can only be made as the result of negotiations between the management of the company and the union.

However, perhaps it might be suggested to the management of Canadian National that they take the initiative in bringing this matter to a head. C.N.T. employees in the north are required to live under the same conditions as other government employees, yet they are not given the same treatment extended to employees of the Department of Transport. Northern allowances are a factor which could be improved so far as employees of Canadian National Telegraphs in the Yukon are concerned.

Another matter which would bear some investigation is the question of housing for C.N.T. employees, particularly the standard of housing, the rents charged and the facilities offered in relation to the housing supplied to other federal government employees in the area. As I have said, I realize that Canadian National Telegraphs is a crown corporation and a separate entity, but again I urge the minister to consider action to place C.N.T. employees on a plane equal to that of other government employees in the area. This applies not only to housing and northern allowances but to all other benefits. As I view the matter, Mr. Chairman, the only way any effective action can be taken is for the minister to suggest to the management of the C.N.R. that they take the initiative in bringing about these improvements.

The other matter I wish to raise under this item is the question of communications between White Horse and north central and northern Yukon. I am referring now specifically to the implementation of land lines communications between these points.

Several years ago, under the previous administration, the capital of the Yukon was moved from Dawson City down to Whitehorse. The excuse given was that Dawson City lacked the communications necessary to support the capital, and the people there still remember this. Their argument was, why were the communications not brought up to that area? I have been urging for about two years now that the department implement land lines communications to Dawson City and the Mayo area, including Elsa, Calumet and Keno.

Apart from the essential services that communications themselves provide the people in those areas, it is of advantage from this point of view; that C.B.C. radio is possible on an economic basis only if land line facilities are available. Low power repeater transmitters can be installed to give coverage to these areas if land lines are established, but not otherwise. Favourable consideration of this submission in the near future could well result in favourable consideration by the C.B.C. of the application for extension of their radio service to this area.

Now, should the Canadian National decide to go ahead with the construction of land line facilities, I have one further point to make. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that Canadian National Telegraphs should not be undertaking the construction of new facilities in competition with private enterprise. I do not believe there would be any quarrel in so far as the maintenance of existing facilities of the crown corporation are concerned. However, when it comes to new construction I feel that a line should be drawn and the government should not enter into open competition with private enterprise. I refer now to the construction of the pole lines.

Should the minister and the Canadian National management feel that the construction of additional communication facilities is justified, I submit these new pole lines should be constructed by private enterprise under tender. The same remarks apply to the construction of new buildings. For many years the Canadian National has been constructing new buildings and has been contracting all the subtrades on a day labour basis. I feel that this is wrong. I feel that this type of construction should be done by public tender.

This would eliminate the undesirable practice which has existed for so long in the past of the government competing with private contractors. This is doubly important in a frontier area such as the Yukon where small contractors are struggling for existence and trying to build themselves up to a point where they can handle anything that comes along. The growth of small, independent contractors should be fostered and developed by wise government policies. I would suggest that one of these government policies should be the cessation of competition which is now being undertaken by government agencies, such as Canadian National Telegraphs, with private enterprise.

There are three questions I desire to ask, Mr. Chairman, but I do not suggest that the information could be supplied today. I should like to know the landed cost of poles used by Canadian National Telegraphs at Watson lake, at Whitehorse and at mile 1202. It is my belief that local timber and local labour could be used to supply these poles for construction work now being carried on in the Yukon, rather than the utilization of poles from outside sources. When I say "outside" I mean British Columbia or Alberta.

The other specific question, Mr. Chairman, refers to the profits of the northwest communications system during the last fiscal year. I should like to know what those profits were. In this connection I am wondering whether it is the intention of Canadian National Telegraphs to publish an annual report somewhat similar to that published by the Northern Transportation Company, Polymer and other crown corporations. It may be of advantage to have that information. These are the specific questions I have, Mr. Chairman, but as I say it is not essential that I have the information immediately. If it is supplied to me later on I will be quite happy.

Mr. Chevrier: This is a very large vote, as the minister knows. I wonder whether he would not give the committee some breakdown. We all agree that radio aids to air and marine navigation are extremely important to the telecommunications branch of the department, but vote 426 as well as the next one are extremely important. These votes together amount to almost $30 million, and I think in fairness to the committee we should not let these two items, which are so substantial, go through without a more detailed explanation from the minister. I wonder if he would not deal first with item 426?

Mr. Hees: Yes, I shall be glad to do so, Mr. Chairman. This appropriation provides for the administration, operation and maintenance of radio aids to air and marine navigation. Radio aids servicing aircraft extend from Newfoundland to the Yukon Territory along routes used by T.C.A., C.P.A., Maritime Central Airways, Pacific Western and other Canadian air lines as well as foreign air lines flying over Canadian territory, and Canadian and United States military aircraft.

Facilities comprise 136 air radio stations, including 97 LF radio ranges, 6 VHF radio ranges, 50 beacons, 10 fan markers, 28 ILS systems with 31 associated beacons, 7 messing establishments for employees at remote locations and 6 shops for servicing radio in departmental aircraft. The radio aids serving vessels may be divided into four groups; on the west coast, on the great lakes, and on the east coast; gulf of St. Lawrence, Hudson bay and straits, serving vessels of Canadian and foreign registry. The facilities comprise 95 marine radio stations including 34 coast stations, 56 beacons, 11 coast stations which also provide a direction finding service, 6 Loran stations, 174 lighthouse radiotelephone installation, 8 messing establishments for employees at remote locations, and facilities to maintain the radio equipment on 56 government vessels.

Mr. Chevrier: I wonder if I could inquire just what the position is with reference to new aids on additional routes. Has the department established new beams and new aids on additional routes in the far north or in the eastern Arctic?

Mr. Hees: There is a steady expansion right across the country and into the eastern Arctic as well. If the hon. member would like more details I will get them.

Mr. Chevrier: What I should like to know is this. There is an increase of $2,500,000 in this vote. First I should like to know whether instrument landing systems have been established at all the large airports or whether ground countrol is being substituted for them. Where are ground control approaches installed? Is the one at Gander operating satisfactorily?

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Chairman. That is the only one where ground control approach has been established.

Mr. Chevrier: Is it the intention to substitute ground control approach for the I.L.S. at other main airports of Canada?

Mr. Hees: Not to substitute them but to add them.

Mr. Chevrier: Can the minister give some indication as to where the ground control approaches, which I understand are superior to the I.L.S., will be installed?

Mr. Hees: No. This program is under study at the present time. There is nothing new in this year's estimates for it.

Mr. Chevrier: I note that in the minister's statement some mention is made of the Loran stations. I take it that these are stations which have been taken over from the United States in Newfoundland and perhaps in other parts of Canada where the United States was operating. Can the minister give us the location of these stations and what is the cost incidental to their operation?

Mr. Hees: Yes. Those are United States marine stations that date back to world war II. The locations are Newfoundland, Labrador and British Columbia.

Mr. Chevrier: What about the northwest staging route? Is provision for the air services for that route as well as the eastern passage contained in this vote?

Mr. Hees: Yes; all radio aids for airways are included in this vote.

The Chairman: Shall vote 426 carry?

Mr. Fisher: I wanted to raise one matter just to try to get a bit more information. It all revolves around the several tragic accidents that took place in connection with oil drilling rigs. Specifically, an accident took place in lake Erie in November, 1958 in which a number of lives were lost. The inquest did not make specifically clear where the blame lay. Subsequently there was some discussion as to the radio facilities that were available to the men on the rig and as to their adequacy.

I have checked with the officials of the department and they have satisfied me that in so far as the Department of Transport is concerned, there was no great responsibility; but the attorney general of Ontario had undertaken in the provincial legislative assembly —I have forgotten the date but I think it was February 3, 1959—to have an investigation into the matter. I just wondered whether the minister can inform me whether the case has been reopened in any way or whether further checks have been made to discover whether all reasonable precautions were taken in this particular case in so far as the Department of Transport is concerned. Can he give some idea as to whether, from the point of view of the Department of Transport, things have been tightened up for the future? There are more oil rigs out in the lake at the present time, and we would hate to see a repetition of that particular disaster.

Mr. Hees: I am advised that they had their own radio installation which was properly licensed, but that there is upon them no requirement to have a radio installation of this kind. They had one, however, and it was properly licensed.

Mr. Fisher: The story was that it was quite inadequate for the job and was not able to contact anyone in time or could not do so. As a matter of fact, according to one of the stories at the inquest it was not operating at the time. Since the lives of these men in such a position are in constant jeopardy in a lake such as this, I was just wondering whether the Department of Transport could not make a closer check or work more closely with the Canada labour relations board or whatever the authority is which has the responsibility from the point of view of safety.

Mr. Hees: I do not believe we have any jurisdiction in a case of this kind to require the company to operate any differently from the way in which they choose to operate. It is their responsibility.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, as I understand the matter neither the provincial government nor the federal government has accepted responsibility in this particular case, or at least it had not been defined. That was, in effect, the admission of the attorney general. Here you have a complicated situation where a provincial department of labour is involved and perhaps the federal Department of Labour. You have the whole question of something operating out in marine channels, a matter which surely comes under the Department of Transport. You have the question of the use of radio facilities, a matter which surely comes under the Department of Transport.

It would be a pity if we had a repetition of this kind of tragedy merely because somebody said, "It is not our responsibility to take the initiative". All I should like to know is whether you are showing any initiative in trying to make sure that this type of accident does not occur again. It does not seem to me that it is enough to say, "This is not our jurisdiction" inasmuch as it is partially your jurisdiction.

Mr. Hees: In view of what the hon. member has said, Mr. Chairman, and in view of the importance of this matter we shall be glad to look into it and see what can be done. We will give the hon. member a report later on.

The Chairman: Shall vote 426 carry?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I had a few observations to make with respect to radiotelephone equipment used by fishermen, but possibly that matter comes under item 428.

Item agreed to.

427. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $14,044,100.

Mr. Chevrier: This vote, which is again a very large one, has to do with the construction of works relative to the telecommunications branch. Will the minister not give the committee some idea of what is included in it.

Mr. Hees: I shall be very glad to do so, Mr. Chairman. The breakdown is as follows: the visual omni-range program, $582,000; instrument landing systems, $867,000; radar, $692,000; low and high frequency aids, $3,795,250; communications, $5,470,845; living accommodation, $1,913,500; miscellaneous aids to navigation, $2,012,650; construction or acquisition of equipment, $778,150.

Mr. Chevrier: Does that mean that we are still continuing to install I.L.S. stations at certain airports?

Mr. Hees: Yes, and we are expanding the system.

Mr. Chevrier: How do you find the I.L.S. working as opposed to the ground control approach system?

Mr. Hees: It is an improved international system which works well. The ground approach is a supplement.

Mr. Chevrier: I would think it is the other way around. I would think the I.L.S. is a good system but that it is gradually becoming obsolete and is being supplanted in international air service by the ground control approach which, of course, is far more expensive than the other systems. While I.L.S. is good up to a certain point, I wonder why more money is being spent on I.L.S. if, as I believe—and I may be wrong—the I.L.S. is becoming obsolete and will become obsolete in the not too distant future.

Mr. Hees: I am advised that I.L.S. is still the basic requirement and it is approved and recognized as such by the international civil aviation organization.

Mr. Chevrier: Why is it necessary to spend practically $4 million on low and high frequency facilities? Where would they be installed?

Mr. Hees: Airway beacons, marine beacons and a large variety of other installations. Does the hon. member want all the locations? I have them here.

Mr. Chevrier: No, but I would like an explanation as to why it is necessary to spend this substantial sum of money on high and low frequencies. Is it because there has been an increase in the services required?

Mr. Hees: Because these are still basic requirements for navigation, and this service is being steadily increased in the north and in other parts of the country.

Mr. Chevrier: Can the minister give some explanation of the visual omni-range facilities which are included in this vote?

Mr. Hees: This is a new system, Mr. Chairman, which covers a 360 degree range instead of the previous 4-track.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Port Arthur wishes to ask a question on item 428 but he has to be absent from the house for a few minutes. Is the committee agreeable to pass on to item 429 and then come back to item 428?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I want to speak on item 428.

The Chairman: Then we will proceed with 428.

Radio Act and regulations—

428. Administration, operation and maintenance, including Canada's share of the costs of the international radio, telegraph and telephone organizations listed in the details of the estimates, $2,645,708.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the fishermen of my constituency who are great users of radiotelephone equipment, which equipment is most essential to the operation of the fleet, I would like at this time to thank the Minister of Transport and his officials for the consideration and understanding they have shown to the fishermen over the past year and a half. I realize, and I think they realize now, that certain regulations are necessary and certain restrictions must be imposed in order that the use of this equipment will not interfere with commercial or other uses. All I am asking on their behalf is that the department exercise a little leniency and consideration in the changing or evolving of regulations which they deem necessary so that hardship will not be imposed on these fishermen. Many of the fishermen have purchased this equipment at considerable expense and sacrifice, and if they were asked in a quick changeover to purchase new equipment it would cause some considerable hardship. I am asking for this matter to be taken into account in consideration of this problem.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before the minister answers, if I understood correctly what the hon. member was saying I would like to join him in his appeal, because I do think this is an important matter. I understand why the department wants to do these things, and I am very sympathetic and I have found the department very sympathetic, I must say; but perhaps even a little more sympathy would be helpful.

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Chairman; I am very glad to accede to the very reasonable request of the two hon. members who have just spoken.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have been inclined to get my feet tangled between the Department of Transport and the C.B.C. when it comes to television and radio stations, but I understand I have now landed in the right spot in making my remarks on this particular item, 428. The minister knows that the southern interior of British Columbia has not enjoyed Canadian television to date and has been looking forward to it very much. There is some piped-in United States television in one or two of the smaller cities, but early last year their hopes were raised by the announcement of the C.B.C. that C.B.C. television was going to be provided to the Rossland-Trail area. I would like to quote briefly from an editorial in the Trail Times of June 28 in this respect, which reads in part as follows:

> The opportunity to view Canadian television will be welcomed by west Kootenay citizens. The stuff they have been accustomed to viewing from U.S. T.V. stations is pretty low grade entertainment, and in any event has no Canadian tradition or viewpoint, particularly news-wise.

I might say, Mr Chairman, that the Trail Times on this occasion expresses the viewpoint of the large majority of the people in the constituency I have the honour to represent. However, nothing happened. Then the Trail chamber of commerce got somewhat concerned about the matter and wrote the C.B.C. as to the delay. Of course there are always local rumours about sites being obtained and engineering studies being made, but nothing very concrete. Then Mr. J. A. Ouimet wrote to this effect to the president of the Trail chamber of commerce:

> Firstly, we have not yet been able to obtain a site to our satisfaction; secondly the estimate of time to establish network connection to such a station by the telephone company is 12 to 18 months; and in the third place, since the new legislation came into effect last November, it is necessary for us to make application to the Department of Transport for authority to establish the station.

Then he went on to say:

We expect that this application will be considered by the new board of broadcast governors at its March meeting. Consequently there is no chance of this station being established before the royal visit; in fact it would look as if it could not be in operation until about mid-1960—

I might point out here, Mr. Chairman, that the original announcement was that it was expected to be in operation by mid-1959. Now, Mr. Chairman, the people of the district are very anxious to have these facilities at the earliest possible date. I have answered various letters and made various inquiries, but I would appreciate it if the minister would inform the house as to the reasons for the delay and say when the people of the district can expect television service to be provided.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I am not clear as to the application that has been delayed. Is it an application to bring in C.B.C. television?

Mr. Herridge: Yes.

Mr. Hees: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am afraid the hon. member will have to take that up with the minister who answers for the C.B.C. in the house, the Minister of National Revenue. He deals with all C.B.C. matters.

Mr. Herridge: But Mr. Chairman, I am always getting involved between these two departments. Is not the minister's department responsible for the construction of the facilities and responsible for dealing with the telephone company which provides them?

Mr. Hees: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Herridge: Then I am wrong again. Does the same apply to the low power relay stations?

Mr. Hees: Yes.

Mr. Herridge: Well, I would like to get this cleared up once and for all. I have been wandering in a fog for years with respect to television.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. member sure it is not the minister?

Mr. Herridge: Would the minister inform the house what are the responsibilities of his department with respect to the provision of television and radio facilities in Canada? What part of these projects does his department undertake? I made a special inquiry about this and I was told I was right on the dot this morning, and I find once again I am off the beam.

Mr. Hees: We perform three functions. We allocate frequencies, we approve the technical plans of a company making an application, making sure they conform with engineering specifications, and we also issue licences on the recommendation of the board of broadcast governors.

Mr. Herridge: In this correspondance the C.B.C. write to the chamber of commerce and say, giving one reason for the delay, that it is necessary for them to make application to the Department of Transport for authority to establish a station. Has the Department of Transport given the C.B.C. authority to establish this station?

Mr. Hees: My officials are not aware of any application having been received. We will check that.

Mr. Chevrier: If I may just interpose here, may I say that I am interested, in what the hon. member for Kootenay West has brought to the committee's attention. My understanding of the whole matter is that when an application is made for either radio or television facilities it is made to the Department of Transport, and it is this department, referring the matter to its technical officers, which determines first of all whether there is an area in which a station can be established. Having determined whether that area, that frequency, exists or not, it is then up to the Minister of National Revenue, who is responsible for the C.B.C. to bring an application before the board of governors to determine whether or not the submission of the private individual or public body should be approved. If the answer is in the affirmative, the matter goes back to the Department of Transport which issues the licence.

The construction, if I understand this rightly, is to be done by the applicant, and I do not think either of the departments is concerned with it, save that it must be carried out in accordance with the specifications of the Department of Transport.

I think it is important that we have that procedure clearly established, because I agree with the hon. member for Kootenay West that there is a lack of clarity about the duties of the two ministers. One has to do with the operations of the broadcasting corporation and the other with radio facilities. Perhaps the minister would supplement what I have said; I think that might be helpful.

Mr. Hees: No, I think the hon. member for Laurier is quite correct and that what he has stated is, in essence, what I said earlier. One might summarize the functions of the two departments as follows. The Department of National Revenue, through the board of broadcast governors, deals with economic matters, and the Department of Transport deals with technical matters.

Mr. Herridge: Well, that has been cleared up to some extent, thanks to the hon. member for Laurier, who I think has helped us out considerably.

Now I come to another question which fogs me up and I know it fogs up other members, too. That is the question of piped-in television. There is piped-in television in the cities of Nelson and Trail. Apparently it is possible for local companies to get licences from the Department of Transport, but the department does not exercise any control with respect to the prices charged. When you go to the public utilities commission in Victoria they say, "We exercise no control over this; it is licensed by the Department of Transport". There has been considerable complaint in this respect, and I should like to ask the minister if something could not be done in consultation with the appropriate provincial authorities in order that proper responsibility may be accepted.

It seems to me that the department which issues the licences, should have some control over the tariff and fees charged by the licensee.

I do not want to have the minister getting up too frequently and tiring himself out too soon, so my second question is this. I have received correspondence from people who want to establish what they call reflector stations. We have one or two co-operative groups in my constituency, and I understand they want to put a reflector on top of a mountain and reflect signals from the United States down to their patrons in the valleys below. I understand that permission to do this has been refused, because it is against a regulation, or against the law, or something of that kind.

Would the minister mind explaining to the committee the difference in the regulations in so far as they concern these two types of television and second, would he tell us whether something cannot be done with respect to continuity between licensing and the various charges which are being imposed by the organizers of piped-in television, charges which in some cases are exorbitant. A man pays $150 to have the installation in his house. Then he leaves and a new tenant comes in, and this new tenant is required to pay all the installation charges all over again. Then, third, I should like the minister to tell us what is the distinction between piped-in television and reflected television. I understood some time ago that the department intended to investigate this system of reflected television and see what was to be done about it, but I am still as foggy as ever.

Mr. Hees: I tried as best I could to follow what the hon. member was saying. In the first place, we do not have any control over the tariffs which a company operating a piped-in television service can charge. That is a free enterprise operation and it is up to the municipality which will be served to decide whether or not the prices charger are fair and reasonable. If they are not, there is no obligation on anyone to subscribe to the service.

Mr. Herridge: I am glad the minister mentioned that. Does he know of any municipalities which regulate the charges with respect to piped-in television?

Mr. Hees: When I said "municipality" I had in mind the people in the municipality who are receiving the service. If they think the charge is too high they do not have to pay for it.

Mr. Herridge: Like the telephone; there is no regulation. What about the other question concerning this reflected television? Companies and small groups have made application for the right to instal what they call a reflector television station; they put reflectors on top of a mountain and reflect the program into the surrounding valleys. Rather that is what they would like to do, but they are not permitted to do it.

Mr. Hees: We issue licences for both piped-in television and reflector television, but we do not issue licences just to bring in United States programs of either type if a Canadian program is available. I think in the areas of which the hon. member is speaking there is a piped-in service from Lethbridge available and, as I understand it, he wants us to license a reflector system which would bring in United States programs. Is that correct?

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, there is piped-in television in the cities of Nelson and Trail, but there are vast expanses of my constituency where there is no television and where there will not be any television even when the C.B.C. transmitter is installed on the summit near Rossland. These people want the right to have some form of television. They got together and collected a certain amount of capital, and they have asked to be allowed to instal reflector equipment. I do not understand the mechanics of it.

Mr. Hees: I am advised we have received no application in respect of a United States program to serve areas to which Canadian television is not available. I do not know whether or not a licence would be issued—that would be a matter for the board of broadcast governors—but I suggest to the hon. member that he might propose to the company or group concerned with this reflector system in areas to which Canadian television is not available that they put in an application. I think there is a good chance that it would be approved, though of course that is a matter for the board.

Mr. Herridge: I want to inform the minister that an application has been made by one co-operative in my constituency to the Department of Transport, the appropriate department, and the application has been rejected twice.

Mr. Hees: To help me, will the hon. member identify the application and supply us with the company's name?

Mr. Herridge: It is the Crescent valley or Slocan valley community co-operative.

Mr. Hicks: I have exactly the same situation—

Mr. Hees: Could I just follow that up? Well, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member says the application is here it must be here, but my officials tell me they do not have any knowledge of it. However, they will certainly check on it right away and get in touch with the hon. member about it as soon as possible.

Mr. Herridge: Thank you.

Mr. Hicks: I have a case exactly the same as my hon. friend's; and it has to do with Boston Bar in the Fraser valley. They cannot get any television at all in their area and they have been talking of a proposition to put a reflector up on the mountain. They are very keen to get television in Boston Bar. I should like to know first where the authority lies and what action one must take to get television?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, my answer to the hon. member is that if an application is received and there is no other Canadian television service available, it would certainly receive, I believe, favourable consideration from the board of broadcast governors. I must remind my hon. friend and the hon. member for Kootenay West that that decision is up to the board of broadcast governors to make, and not my department. But I would suggest that those co-operatives or companies get their applications in right away. If the hon. member for Kootenay West says the application is in we will check on it right away.

Mr. Herridge: The matter was taken up, I think, two or three years ago. During the lunch hour I will look up the correspondence and let the minister have it so he will understand what I am talking about.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the item carries, I think my question is one which properly comes under the Minister of Transport. Can the minister tell us whether a site has been found and approved for a television transmitter, either a relay station or an independent transmitter, in the Gander-Grand Falls area which would serve the northern part of my riding? The question as to whether this would be done by the C.B.C. or by a private station I know is not within the minister's competence, but the question of whether one can be there at all, whether there is a channel and whether there is a site, is. I would like to know what progress has been made?

Mr. Hees: I am advised that an application was in but that it has been withdrawn.

Mr. Pickersgill: An application for what, precisely?

Mr. Hees: For television at Grand Falls.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have not made my position clear. What I wanted to know was whether the department had approved a site and a channel. I am not interested at this stage in the application, because that would go before the board of broadcast governors.

Mr. Hees: Yes, we did approve a site in this area.

Mr. Pickersgill: And a channel?

Mr. Hees: Yes, but the application was withdrawn.

Mr. McQuillan: I should like the minister to tell us whether the regulations permitting the erection of a reflector television station are under the jurisdiction of his department or under the jurisdiction of the C.B.C.?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, this is government policy designed to protect existing channels for Canadian broadcasting.

Mr. McQuillan: It seems rather strange that in the city of Vancouver they have the privilege of turning the dial and tuning in a United States station, while 100 miles up the coast we cannot get a reflector licence for a United States station. I do not know whether they are trying to keep that part of the country pure Canadian or what.

Mr. Hees: I would suggest to the hon. member that if he would speak to my officials about this particular case we will give it consideration.

Mr. Regnier: I should like to ask the minister whether the Department of Transport has jurisdiction over the allocation of channels, and whether the board of broadcast governors made recommendations in connection with satellite television stations.

Mr. Hees: The Department of Transport has jurisdiction over the allocation of channels, but before any licence would be issued the board of broadcast governors would have to pass on the application and then pass it back to us for signature.

Mr. Regnier: If the application is passed by the board of broadcast governors, is that final?

Mr. Hees: No; final authority is vested in the government, which means the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Pickersgill: Do those licences not have to be approved by the governor in council?

Mr. Hees: Yes, they do. They come to the Minister of Transport and he signs them; then they go forward to the governor in council for final approval.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thought, because of the way the minister put it, he rather suggested the governor in council was a rubber stamp. Some of us feel that under the present administration, he is.

Mr. Hees: No. I was going to say that in so far as the past government was concerned it might be true, but with respect to this government it is far from being true.

Mr. McFarlane: I certainly support the previous members and also the contentions they have raised relative to the reception of television programs. I may be able to add a little light to what the hon. member for Kootenay West had to say on this matter. I have had this matter under consideration with the Department of Transport and also with the board of broadcast governors. A firm in our area has already piped in television programs, but with the use of a multiplexor—these are rather technical terms—they have requested permission to add channel 4 at Spokane to improve our reception from a point on the microwave system to Moyie mountain.

They also presented a brief on the matter. It is not their intention to use any more frequencies or bands than they are now using, but it would definitely give us much better reception of United States programs. In view of the fact that a good many of our C.B.C. programs originate in the United States and that we have this complex microwave system going across Canada only a few miles away from our own area, this should be made available to us. The companies concerned are not asking the government to spend terrific sums of money to instal this multiplexor, but at the same time I feel we should have some consideration from the department so that we can get better television in our area.

We are situated right in the rocky mountains, and it is practically impossible for us to receive programs from Vancouver or from the east, although we do get fair reception from the Lethbridge station. Our programs are piped in by a private company. We have the support of all the chambers of commerce and the various public organizations in the east and also in the west Kootenays. I understand that the department have included the east and west Kootenay in a study as to the installation of a station, but at the same time I can see that it is going to be quite some time before this becomes a fact. Also there is the present system which does not include television or radio reception to remote areas. In our large district it is practically impossible to get reception that would be of benefit to all of east Kootenay. I should like to ask the minister whether he would give our request to let us tie in with our present microwave system some consideration.

Incidentally, I have a letter on my desk from the department saying that they do not see eye to eye with me. I may say this is not the first time we have not seen eye to eye, but I am going to look into some other angles of the question. At the present time we are within a very short distance of the microwave system, and in my opinion the policy originally laid down for radio and television is now obsolete and I think we should take a long look at it.

I would request the minister to reconsider his stand on the matter because I can see it will be some time before we get a television booster station. By allowing us to connect with the present microwave system we will be able to have better reception of Spokane and other United States programs which are available to many others parts of British Columbia situated to better advantage than we are in Kootenay East, where we are right in the centre of the Rocky mountains.

Mr. Hees: In view of what the hon. member has said I will be very glad to give further consideration to his representations.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Chairman, I regret that I have not had an opportunity to check the facts and I should like the minister to correct me if I am wrong with respect to the situation as to the use of radiotelephones. I have a tremendous number of fishermen in my area, and I have been receiving complaints on the basis that the Department of Transport requires a $50 deposit which I believe is to ensure the payment of charges for radiotelephone calls. This is the same amount that is required for deep sea vessels which range around the world. If the facts as I have stated them are correct, I would ask the minister to give consideration to having the deposit reduced to $10 or $15.

Mr. Hees: I am advised that the $50 is to cover the charges that are incurred during the year's operations, and the reason it is the same for big and small vessels is that the charges are the same irrespective of the size of the vessel. The charge is made for the service.

Mr. Drysdale: Could the minister indicate what type of charge the $50 covers?

Mr. Hees: It is for long distance telephone calls that the people who operate these radiotelephones put through our system.

Mr. Drysdale: I am glad to see my facts are correct, because that is the point these people are trying to make. All these long distance calls are billed to the fishermen's home. I think the situation is entirely different where you have deep sea vessels ranging around the world and you want to make sure that the calls are paid for. When the charge is made directly to the fishermen's home I do not see how that difficulty could arise, and because of that difference I would suggest that a charge of $10 or $15 would be reasonable.

Mr. Hees: I am advised that we are quite willing to let a group get together and make a community deposit. It is not our intention to require a deposit for any more than we think will be required to cover the charges made for the use of the service through our system.

Mr. Fisher: Yesterday I asked a question with regard to whether a person who is not a citizen can have a radiotelephone. The minister's answer is on page 4576 of Hansard, and is not too clear. To bring the matter a little more closely to his attention I will read this extract from Pierre Berton's column in the Toronto Star of March 4, 1959. He says:

> Oddly enough, the same day a young Danish immigrant, Mr. Earl Fich from Stouffville came to see me. He has a business which requires a telephone in his car. But he can't get a telephone in his car because he is not a British subject or a Canadian citizen. He could get one by forming a company but that would cost at least $250 in legal fees.
> I called the Department of Transport about this and was told that the law dated back before 1936 and had something to do with security—a word used these days to excuse any kind of foolishness. D.O.T. added, in defence of itself, that nobody had made a presentation urging the law be changed. Is it really necessary for Mr. Fich to send a lobby to Ottawa to get rid of an inane and outdated law?

Would the minister comment on that?

Mr. Hees: The Radio Act requires that the holder of a licence for a radiotelephone be a British subject, but a landed immigrant can be authorized to operate a radiotelephone.

Mr. Fisher: But he cannot own one in his own business.

Mr. Hees: That is right.

Mr. Fisher: Just take this case, for example. I cannot see why this particular chap could not produce some sort of bona fide to prove that he was a good security risk. Is it because of security that the licence will not be issued?

Mr. Hees: It is simply a matter of what the law says. The law requires that the holder of a radiotelephone licence shall be a British subject. It is not a question of our making regulations to make it easier for this particular person.

Mr. Fisher: Let us look at the anomaly here. A young man or young woman comes to this country and cannot become a citizen for five years. They establish themselves very quickly and they may get into a business where they can use a radiotelephone, but they have to circumnavigate the law. In his answer the minister has pointed out that they can circumnavigate it. It seems to me that the law should be changed. I would ask, as Mr. Berton has asked, whether it is necessary to send a lobby here in order to change the law.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact the hon. gentleman is a member of parliament like the rest of us, and he can introduce a bill to change the law. So can the minister, and I think it would be a good thing if the minister would do so, because it would have more chance of getting through. This law was passed in 1936 when I am sure radiotelephones in motor cars were not contemplated at all. It really applied to broadcasting stations and things of that sort. As the hon. member has said, it is an absolutely silly thing to apply it to radiotelephones in motor cars. I would suggest that the hon. member might appeal to the minister to bring in an amendment to the law during the next session. I do not think I would appeal to him to do it at this session.

Mr. Hees: We will be very glad to look into the matter further and see if anything can be done in this regard under the regulations.

Mr. Fisher: I have one other point. I also asked the minister a question about model apparatus, and his answer was to the effect that new radio regulations were promulgated on April 1, 1958 and are continuously under review, with simplification being the prime objective. I also have a letter from the minister dated May 12 stating in part as follows:

My officials are making a revision in the technical requirements for model control apparatus, which I feel sure will meet with the approval of the model enthusiasts.

I was hoping to have something a little more definite, and just to spur the minister on I should like to read a letter sent to me by a Mr. Moore, one of my constituents, which he received from Babcock Models, Inc., of Costa Mesa, California, one of the largest manufacturers in this field. It reads as follows:

Thank you, Mr. Moore, for your kind letter in reference to Babcock products. Since you used the term "too tough" in reference to the Canadian Department of Transport, I shall go along the same lines. Application for approval for all our new equipment has been made some time ago. We are now sitting tight and waiting for results. It must be remembered—

I should like the minister to listen to this.

—that when we did get approval of our old R/C equipment, the approval arrived approximately one year after we had discontinued these units.

It is from examples like this that the minister can see why I feel that maybe his department is not the best department, by any means. I should like to know why you have this situation across Canada. Someone could say that these people are faddists, but there are hundreds of people with these models who like to use radio controls. Surely we could follow the United States system of licensing, which is so simple and straightforward in comparison to ours. It seems to me this particular branch of the department is asleep at the switch.

I should like to ask, is there any way by which you could improve the licensing of these particular models and allow these enthusiasts to have radio equipment?

Mr. Hees: I am advised, Mr. Chairman, that this week notifications are going out advising of a reduction in the requirements for the use of this model control equipment.

Mr. Fisher: I appreciate having that information and I shall be glad to forward it to some of these enthusiasts.

I should like to bring up a constituency matter which also relates to television. We have a situation whereby our local television station, which is privately operated, is planning to switch its transmitter to a higher hill. The whole region is very anxious that this be done as quickly as possible in order that we find out what the range will be. I should like to say to the minister and his deputy that when the application comes in, will they get cracking on it? If it is in now, and it may be in now, will they please get it cleared right away; because I cannot think of anything which—unfortunately, I might add—has greater political significance in our area than the extension of television service.

Mr. Hees: This is not the kind of matter—we will get on with it as quickly as possible—that can be cleared immediately, because an increase in the height of a radio or television mast, or a change in location, has to be studied from the point of view of the danger it might cause to aviation. I am advised that in this particular case there apears to be a definite aviation problem. This matter will be studied as quickly as possible, there will be no time lost, and we will give the hon. member an answer as soon as we can.

Item agreed to.

429. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $405,000.

Mr. Fisher: Could the minister inform me how much is to be spent at the airport next year under this particular item?

Mr. Hees: I am advised that this has nothing to do with airports. This is the radio enforcement provision dealing with monitoring.

Item agreed to.

Telegraph and telephone service—

430. Administration, operation and maintenance, $264,867.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the minister tell the committee where the government, as opposed to Canadian National Telegraphs, now operates telephone and telegraph services? If it is a long list and if the minister would like to put it on Hansard I would not object.

Mr. Hees: The only places are in the Magdalen islands and on Cape Breton island. There are quite a number, but the Magdalen islands is the main system, and Cape Breton is quite small.

Mr. Pickersgill: The installations in Labrador are not included in that?

Mr. Hees: Those come under radio aids.

Mr. Nielsen: Is the Yukon considered in this?

Mr. Hees: No, Mr. Chairman.

Item agreed to.

431. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $510,500.

Mr. Pickersgill: Where is this construction being done?

Mr. Hees: The main item is for the rehabilitation of the line between Chatham and Escuminac, New Brunswick, at a cost of $287,000. The payment is to the New Brunswick Telephone Company for taking over and rehabilitation of the G.T.T.S. facilities and assumption of full responsibility for provision of adequate service in the Chatham-Escuminac and Richibucto-Point Sapin areas. The other items are Sydney, Antigonish, Pictou and a great many small items. If anybody wants them I can read them out.

Mr. Pickersgill: No. This construction is not, therefore, on the government's own lines?

Mr. Hees: Yes, it is.

Mr. Nielsen: Before we leave this item I have one specific question to ask, the answer to which can be given at some later time. The question is in connection with the purchase by Canadian National Telegraphs of the Yukon Telephone Company. I do not see where else I can bring up the matter except under this item. Would the minister inform me what profit or loss was obtained in connection with the operations of the Yukon Telephone Company under the management of Canadian National Telegraphs at the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. Hees: This matter would have to be referred to Canadian National Telegraphs. I would be glad to do so and ascertain what they say about releasing those figures.

Mr. Nielsen: When the minister is making that inquiry, I wonder if he would also inquire as to whether or not there might be a reduction in rates to commercial users in the near future?

Mr. Hees: Yes, I shall be glad to ask that question.

Item agreed to.

Meteorological branch—

432. Administration, operation and maintenance, including Canada's assessment for membership in the world meteorological organization, $12,299,325.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to make a very brief observation. Since the present government came into office there have been repeated complaints in Newfoundland that the weather has deteriorated very seriously. I am glad to blame the minister for this, but can he do something about it?

Mr. Hees: It will be given very serious consideration.

Mr. Drysdale: I should like to make a very short observation. The weather also bothers the people on the west coast, out in British Columbia. One of the difficulties the fishermen have related to me is that CBU, which is the station which provides excellent weather reports, unfortunately has a power of only some 10,000 watts. The radio station in the Vancouver area, CKWX, which has a power of 50,000 watts, apparently does not carry the same type of information which is so important to the fishermen.

I do not know exactly what the solution is, but I wonder if the department could perhaps give consideration to either providing more extensive weather reports to station CKWX, or speak to the Minister of National Revenue to see if he can increase the power of station CBU.

Mr. Hees: We are very glad to give the radio stations anything they ask for in the way of weather reports. It is up to the radio stations to decide whether or not they carry them.

Mr. Drysdale: Since we do not have very adequate coastguard facilities on the west coast—

Mr. Pickersgill: After two years?

Mr. Drysdale: —and it is particularly important that we have the weather reports broadcast to the fishermen, I was wondering if the department could take into consideration some monetary inducement to station CKWX to provide a detailed weather report?

Mr. Hees: If the fishermen are anxious to receive better weather reports then perhaps they should go in a body to the radio station and make that request. We will be glad to supply anything the radio station wants.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. McQuillan: For some time the forest industries of British Columbia have been asking for a meteorologist to be appointed for the special duty of forest fire weather forecasting. This matter is extremely important to British Columbia. After our experience of last year with our disastrous fires I am sure the minister will realize that anything that can be done to help minimize the danger would be appreciated. At present we have some service, but the long range forecasts used are those from the state of Washington, and they do not necessarily apply to the local areas of British Columbia. Consequently there is sometimes a good deal of time lost by using these forecasts and at other times work is carried on under particularly hazardous circumstances. I know the minister has had this matter under consideration, and I hope he will move it from the serious consideration basket to the action basket.

Mr. Pearson: I want to ask the minister a question or two about weather stations in the Arctic. In the period in which I was more familiar with administration than I am now, Canada had certain weather stations in the Arctic and the United States had certain weather stations by agreement with Canada, and there was a policy of transferring United States stations to Canadian administration and control as Canadian meteorologists became available. Then that procedure resulted in certain stations which are under joint administration and control. I should like to ask the minister how that transfer of United States stations to exclusive Canadian control is getting on.

Mr. Nielsen: Before the minister replies to that question, Mr. Chairman, may I say that I had intended to ask a similar one. I had raised this matter in the standing committee on mines, forests and waters. I would suggest that the practice now being followed, namely that of manning joint weather stations with Canadian and United States scientific personnel, could perhaps be looked at again with a view to manning these stations with 100 per cent Canadian scientific personnel.

Mr. Hees: The weather stations in the Arctic are all under Canadian control. Five of these stations are joint weather stations. There are about half a dozen purely Canadian stations. We are not taking over any of the five joint stations, but we are increasing the Canadian component in these weather stations.

Mr. Pearson: I take it that the objective, however, is to make these joint stations Canadian stations as soon as that procedure is technically feasible?

Mr. Hees: We have joint weather programs with the Americans. This is part of this whole program where they work with us in Canada and we work with them in the United States. We get along extremely well with them. As I say, these weather stations are all under Canadian control. The whole operation is working harmoniously and satisfactorily both here and in the United States.

Mr. Herridge: I just want to ask a question or two with regard to local weather observers. I presume that matter comes under this item.

Mr. Hees: Yes.

Mr. Herridge: We have a number of local weather observers throughout the district. I am going to suggest to the minister that owing to the tremendous development that is going on in a country like the south-eastern portion of British Columbia, there is a need for highly accurate weather records possibly on a more intensive scale than hitherto, or in other words for more observers. For instance, you have an observer at Nelson and some on the Arrow lakes, but I do not think there is an observer in the Lardeau district where there is a great difference in the snowfall, in the rainfall and in other weather conditions. Will the minister inform the house under what circumstances these local weather observers are appointed? What I mean is this. Do you try to have one observer for a certain number of square miles, or do you get them where you can, and that sort of thing?

Mr. Hees: We try to provide adequate service, sometimes by our own staff and sometimes by a local man in the area who does this work for us. The density of these weather observers depends fairly well on the weather problems involved. Some areas have more weather problems than others, and there would therefore be more observers in those areas. However, the number of weather observers is steadily increasing.

Mr. Herridge: I want to bring to the minister's attention an excellent weather observer at Deer Park, a person who has recorded the weather there for a long period of years most conscientiously. Deer Park is a dry belt country in Kootenay West. To my knowledge there is not one observer in the north Arrow lakes district which has quite a different climate and quite different winter conditions, and there is not a weather observer in the Lardeau country, which again is different. Because of the increasing industrial development in the country as a whole I suggest that we should have as many of these local weather observers as are necessary to give a true picture of the weather in the country as a whole.

Mr. Hees: I should be glad to look into that matter and see what can be done. Might I ask you, Mr. Chairman, whether it would be possible, when this item is completed, for us to go back and clean up the supplementary estimates to date? We missed out on doing that in the early stages of the examinations of these estimates. I think it could be a good idea if we brought those supplementary estimates up to date, and then as we go through each section clean up the supplementaries for that section. I suggest that procedure if it would be satisfactory to the members of the committee.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. MacEwan): Is it agreed that the supplementary estimates to date be taken after item 432?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Payne: Before this item carries, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say just a brief word in support of my colleague the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. I feel that very frequently the value of proper meteorological information to our forest industry is not appreciated. Realizing that many of the submissions made by the lumbermen across this dominion do not come to the attention of the minister of this department, I am most anxious to point out that in the committee on mines, forests and waters delegations from various areas throughout Canada have told of the great value in the saving of timber from fire destruction that could be achieved by minor adjustments to services and thus increase the information provided by the officials of your department.

Mr. Fisher: I would like to ask the minister what truth there is in several stories which have appeared in the press to the effect that there is a great turnover of meteorologists and the department has a hard time holding them. If this is the case, can the minister say what measures are being taken to stop the wastage? My second question deals with meteorologists who are also part time television stars, and I would like to know if there is any difficulty in obtaining funds from the particular authority who may hire them, whether a private station or the C.B.C., and what is their position. Is anything necessary to regularize that position?

Mr. Hees: I take it the hon. member is referring to Mr. Saltzman, who appears on the C.B.C. He seems to have a particular talent for doing that kind of work, and we have given him permission to do so and he earns additional money for performing the work he does.

Regarding the payment of meteorologists, that is a very real problem with the department. We have applied both to treasury board and to the civil service commission to pay these people more money, and we have pointed out the fact that we are losing them, particularly as teachers. We are continuing to press both treasury board and the civil service commission to get permission to pay these important people more money. So far I have not been able to do so, but we are ever hopeful. It is a real problem, as I say, with us.

Mr. Fisher: Could the minister explain to the committee why it is so hard to put this case to treasury board? What is the weakness in the case, and why has the minister been unable to convince treasury board of the merits of the case?

Mr. Hees: There is no weakness in the case we have put forward, I believe, Mr. Chairman. It is a reluctance on the part of the civil service commission and treasury board to grant these higher salaries, and why there is this reluctance I find it hard to explain. But I can assure the hon. member that we are just as anxious as he is to pay these people more money, and we are continuing to press our case vigorously.

Mr. Fisher: Would the minister agree that this is another example of the sort we have had in other departments, where there is a lack of sensitivity to the need for change on the part of the civil service commission and treasury board? For instance, we can think of income tax assessors and various other categories in other departments where there is a like problem, and despite strong representations from the departments it takes a long time to bring about any action. If you have this crucial problem and the teaching profession is pulling off the meteorologists, how do you as minister try to express the case for quicker action to these two authorities?

Mr. Hees: I can assure the hon. member that representations, and I might say strong representations, have been made to both treasury board and the civil service commission. As I say, we hope our representations are going to meet with sympathetic consideration in the very near future. We are disappointed that they have not been met with that kind of consideration so far.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, might I just ask if the minister has ever tried shouting at the Minister of Finance the way he did here yesterday?

Mr. Hees: The Minister of Finance is a pretty good shouter too.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Chairman, with regard to weather reports which the Department of Transport officials receive from the Saguenay-Lake St. Jean region, is the minister able to tell us if there is a meteorological station at Kenogami? I know it is a very localized question, and if the minister cannot answer me today perhaps he will give me the answer later.

Mr. Hees: There is no permanent station that we are aware of.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): I am not talking of a permanent station. I mean weather reports from Kenogami, the Price Brothers company.

Mr. Hees: I am advised that there is a climatological station in the area, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pearson: I hope the minister will forgive me if I pursue these Arctic weather stations a little further, because their significance is a little wider than meteorological. The minister has said that all the stations in our north country are under Canadian control, but that some of them are under joint occupation and the joint occupation by the United States and our own people is working very harmoniously. The minister also said there were similar stations in the United States jointly occupied by United States and Canadian meteorologists. I wonder if the minister could give us more details in that regard, and if that is the case might it not be desirable to bring back some of our Canadian meteorologists to Canada where there is a great shortage?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry if I misled the hon. member. They are not joint weather stations in the United States but joint research stations in which Canadians participate with Americans in this type of work.

Mr. Nielsen: I have a question following that, Mr. Chairman; I have been trying to catch your eye. Are the United States personnel in these Arctic stations paid by the United States government or the Canadian government, and are there any joint studies undertaken by United States and Canadian scientists with regard to ice as related to meteorology and other mobile Arctic scientific investigations under the minister's jurisdiction?

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Chairman. There are joint studies, as the hon. member has described, and the United States meteorologists are paid by the United States.

Mr. Pearson: Can the minister give us the number of United States and Canadian meteorologists in the Arctic territory?

Mr. Hees: In the five joint weather stations there are 23 Canadians and 23 Americans. In the purely Canadian stations there are approximately 105 Canadians.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. MacEwan): Shall item 432 carry?

Mr. Nielsen: Before we leave this item, Mr. Chairman, the matter I now raise may seem like an unimportant matter, but it is rather important to us. It concerns the question of Mr. Saltzman, who I had understood was a C.B.C. employee but I understand now is a meteorologist employed by the department. He appears, of course, on television programs where he describes the weather picture in Canada, or across Canada, or from coast to coast, or the Canadian weather picture; all these terms are used. But Mr. Saltzman very rarely, if at all, covers the weather picture in the Yukon or the Northwest Territories; and just to follow this point up, Mr. Chairman, the weather maps in the house, in the lobby and in the government elevators show more of the United States weather picture than the Canadian. This is a carry-over, perhaps, from the shortsightedness of the previous administration, but I would suggest that this vast area of the Canadian north is deserving of some consideration when you depict the weather picture of Canada as such.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. MacEwan): Shall the item carry?

Mr. Pearson: I take it the minister is not making any observation about the previous question?

Mr. Hees: I would be very glad to, but I did not think any comment was required. I think probably the reason Mr. Saltzman does not make too many comments about the weather in the Yukon or the Northwest Territories is that not too many of his listeners or viewers would be stationed there. I think that might be the reason. We can draw this to the attention of Mr. Saltzman, to see if he could mention those areas a little more frequently—

Mr. Pearson: I take it the minister is not worried about those maps? Could the minister give us some information about the exchange of meteorological information generally with the Soviet union on these matters?

Mr. Hees: There is a full exchange of meteorological data between the U.S.S.R. and Canada.

Item agreed to.

586. Operating deficit and capital requirement of canals and works entrusted to the St. Lawrence seaway authority — further amount required, $296,000.

Mr. Chevrier: I am prompted to rise at this point and draw to the attention of the minister a matter which on the face of it might not appear to be very important, but which is in fact important to a large number of people. It stems from a report which appeared in the New York Times concerning the Canadian rules governing small boats passing through the canals of the St. Lawrence seaway. I do not wish to hold up the estimates, but I should like to read two paragraphs of this article which appeared in the New York Times on Friday, June 12, 1959, as follows:

Thousands of owners of small pleasure boats have been dismayed to learn that their craft will not be permitted to travel the length of the St. Lawrence seaway.

As a result, many vacation plans must be changed. Several million dollars already spent for construction of marinas on the seaway may be a dubious investment.

Willis H. Crosswhite, the traffic services officer of the St. Lawrence seaway development corporation, said yesterday in Massena, N.Y., "Under existing regulations boats under 20 feet over-all or less than two tons dead weight cannot go through the Canadian locks."

"Therefore, with the Canadians controlling 13 of the 15 locks," he explained, the little boats can't make the whole trip. "In fact," he said, "the boats won't be allowed to travel more than 68 miles on water in the seaway, the distance, including approaches, serviced by the two United States locks."

As the minister knows, the two locks on the United States side—the Eisenhower and the Wiley-Dondero locks—permit the movement of these pleasure craft, and in the area which is affected, particularly the Thousand islands area, the Lachine section and the lake St. Francis section, there are a very large number of pleasure craft whose owners would wish to move them through the locks of the seaway.

I know there must be some reason for the attitude which has been taken here, and I presume that safety of navigation has a lot to do with it; but is it not, going to be a little embarrassing for Canada if the United States permits pleasure craft to go through while Canada does not? I thought I should bring this to the attention of the minister so he may have the opportunity to consult with his officials in order to ascertain if the regulations concerning the Canadian section cannot be changed with a view to having uniform navigation rules for both Canada and the United States.

Mr. Hees: I will be glad to discuss that question with the officials of the St. Lawrence seaway authority. The reasons for not allowing these very small craft through the locks are two in number. I should say right away that this regulation only applies to boats less than 20 feet in length, and I think we all realize that these are very small craft. It is considered that it is dangerous for these very small boats to be going through the very large locks of the St. Lawrence seaway. The second reason is that these boats can all be very easily transported by trailer behind a car. It is considered that they can be moved much more quickly and easily by trailer if their owners want to go, for instance, from New York to Georgian bay. But I will be glad to speak to the officials of the seaway authority about this matter and discuss it with them.

Mr. Pearson: Does the minister not think that if the Canadian seaway authority has one set of regulations governing this matter and the United States has another, this may be a fertile source of dispute and difference between the two authorities?

Mr. Hees: It might. I was not aware that the United States authorities were allowing these very small craft through their locks, and in view of what the hon. member for Laurier has said I will be glad to discuss the question with the officials of the seaway.

Item agreed to.

Marine services—

Marine service steamers—

587. Administration, operation and maintenance—further amount required, $2,878,600.

Mr. Drysdale: I wonder if I could get a little information from the minister concerning Prince Rupert and the floating drydock which I think the Department of Transport had there some years ago. I have received several inquiries from fishermen who are interested in a floating drydock, and I was wondering if the minister could indicate why it was removed in the first instance, and where it was removed to, and if there is any likelihood of the department providing a floating drydock in this area at the present time.

Mr. Hees: I was in Prince Rupert a few years ago and I discussed the question of this drydock at that time with the people there. I found there were very few users of the drydock. Efforts were made to find people to operate it, but without sucess. The real reason it has gone out of operation is that there just was not enough business to justify its presence.

Mr. Drysdale: In the light of the increased size of fishing boats necessary for deep sea fishing, if I could get an interested group together I presume the minister would be prepared to give this matter every consideration?

Mr. Hees: I am advised that the original drydock was sold, but if there is anyone who would be interested in operating a drydock he would find complete co-operation from the department. If the hon. member knows of someone who would be interested, and would let me know, I should be pleased to co-operate with him.

Mr. Chevrier: Before this item is passed I should like to point out that here is another $2,878,000 for marine service steamers, and the original vote was close to $16 million. Why has it been necessary to have a supplementary vote of almost $3 million, and what does it cover?

Mr. Hees: I am advised that the main part of this vote is to pay for the United States D.E.W. line supply to Baffin which we have just taken over this year. The money will be reimbursed to us at the end of the year, I am advised.

Mr. Pearson: Does this, then, cover services to be supplied to the United States government for the D.E.W. line, the money to be repaid to the Canadian government by the United States at the end of the year?

Mr. Hees: That is correct.

Item agreed to.

588. Pilotage service—further amount required, $891,925.

Mr. Fisher: Could the minister tell us the status of Captain Crawford?

Mr. Hees: I am advised that Captain Crawford was hired as one of our pilots on the great lakes and is now being employed as our dispatcher at the Welland canal.

Mr. Fisher: What salary differential does that give him now compared with the other pilots? Does his present post give him any authority in terms of being boss or controller over the other pilots?

Mr. Hees: He has no special authority. I am advised that there is probably no differential in wages, but I will be glad to check on that and let the hon. member know.

Mr. Fisher: Is there any difficulty at the present time in recruiting pilots for the great lakes service?

Mr. Hees: I am advised that at one stage there was some difficulty in recruiting, but that has been overcome and there is now no shortage of pilots.

Mr. Fisher: I presume, with many of the canalers coming off the lakes, there may be more and more competent officers available for this particular service. To me, Mr. Chairman, this whole pilotage matter has been a case where somehow the Department of Transport has not taken a very aggressive or enlightened line, and the very fact that we still are in a certain state of confusion, and that this confusion began away back last year—the minister shakes his head about confusion. I just mean this. We still do not have any arrangement worked out with the United States on a continuing basis—

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, if I might answer that I would like to say that this is not the fault of the Canadian government. We have tried in every way and for quite some period of time to reach an agreement with the United States regarding pilotage, and we are still trying. We are very anxious to work out an agreement with them. I assure the hon. member it is not because of any lack of desire on our part that an agreement has not been reached so far.

Mr. Fisher: It may not be lack of desire.

Mr. Hees: Or lack of effort.

Mr. Fisher: There is a fundamental difference in approach, and I think it all hinges on the different attitude toward safety. The United States has a different concept of safety and security precautions. It seems to me that has been one of the fundamental difficulties all along the line. I just want to tell the minister that the contacts I have had with the lake shipping people in our area, including men who have gone out and visited the foreign ships that have come in, indicate to me that they are convinced that on these ships the lack of knowledge of English, of the rules of the road on the Canadian lakes, and all the other complicated regulations that fit in to the marine picture are such that we should be much more likely to go toward the United States ideal of having a pilot on the boats at all times in the lakes.

I still think, Mr. Chairman, that is the fundamental difficulty in getting a rapprochement between the Canadian and United States governments. I do not expect an answer on that point from the minister, but I insist this is probably the fundamental weak spot in the negotiations. I would suggest to the minister that his department got the idea very early that somehow an extension of pilotage to the extent that the United States requested was going to put an unnecessary burden upon the foreign shipping using the lakes. This, it seems to me, overlooks two things; one, the factor that it could give them an unnecessary advantage over our own shipping; two, it ignores the safety and security factor that the United States seems to be more aware of than does the minister's own department.

Item agreed to.

Meteorological branch—

594. Administration, operation and maintenance—further amount required, $170,000.

Mr. Pearson: This is an additional amount for the meteorological branch. Since there is an increase in the main estimates for this branch of $1,562,000, and since I have learned that none of that increase is going toward the reclassification of the salaries of the meteorologists, can the minister explain this item and give reasons for this increase?

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The meteorological branch is responsible for all phases of meteorological service for civil and military purposes in Canada, for shipping in adjacent ocean areas or on the great lakes, and for international aviation over the Atlantic and Pacific oceans and polar and subpolar routes. Highlights of new and expanded services provided for in the 1959-60 estimates include:

1. A comprehensive ice observing and forecasting program in direct support of marine activity in the lower St. Lawrence, gulf of St. Lawrence, Hudson bay and sea supply lines to the far north. The major portion of the ice observing will be accomplished through aerial reconnaissance using chartered aircraft. The cost of that amounts to $400,000.

2. Extension of meteorological research particularly, in the fields of atmospheric ozone, radiation, turbulence, cloud physics and in the determination of the relationships of meteorological factors applicable to agriculture, forestry and so forth, $134,000.

3. Development of forecasting techniques and extension of services on a routine basis for high level jet aircraft operations, $100,000.

4. Development and testing of methods of preparing weather forecast charts at various levels of the atmosphere by purely numerical means using high-speed electronic computers, $90,000.

5. Replacement of departmentally owned radio communications facilities by commercial services for the collection and dissemination of meteorological information at such locations as White Horse, Churchill and Goose. Hitherto such commercial facilities have not been available. The cost of that is $216,000.

6. Establishment of two additional local forecast offices to serve aviation and industrial agencies and the general public in the Fredericton and Quebec city areas, $30,000.

7. Operation of surface observing stations at cape Dyer, Northwest Territories, and cape Parry, Northwest Territories, and of an upper air station at Goose, Labrador. These are now staffed by United States agencies; $140,000.

A continuing shortage of professional personnel continues to seriously restrict the capabilities of the branch in meeting the ever-increasing demands for service to continuously expanding fields of endeavour. All other items which have not been specified account for $327,000.

Mr. Pearson: The minister mentioned a figure of $400,000, I think, for aerial reconnaissance. Is that an increase or is that the total amount spent on that service?

Mr. Hees: That is an increase this year, Mr. Chairman, but this year we have taken over those operations from the Canadian and United States services which formerly carried it out.

Mr. Pearson: Can the minister explain the reason for taking it over from the air services of the two countries? Was it on grounds of economy or efficiency?

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Chairman; because they wished to withdraw from it.

Mr. Chevrier: There is a question I should like to ask the minister. Are the headquarters of the meteorological service still in the city of Toronto? Is it the intention of the department to keep the headquarters there? Has the difficulty which has arisen between certain groups of officers—I shall not say where—as to where the headquarters should finally be located been determined?

Mr. Hees: Well, I am proud and pleased to say that the answer to both the first two questions is yes, and I am advised that we do not know of any difficulty. If we do learn of any we shall of course, give it very sympathetic consideration.

433. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $1,400,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is any of this construction in Newfoundland?

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Chairman, there is a transmisometer, a daylightceilometer and a decca weather radar installation at Gander, Newfoundland, which will cost $60,500.

Mr. Pearson: Can the minister explain what these things are?

Mr. Hees: The answer is no, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, considering that we have more weather in Newfoundland than in any other province, except possibly British Columbia, this seems to be a very small share of the total amount.

Mr. Winch: It is a small island.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is a very large area, almost as large as British Columbia.

Item agreed to.

Civil aviation branch—

435. Airports and other ground services operations and maintenance, including authority for payment of grants, totalling not more than $299,000, subject to approval by the governor in council, to appropriate church authorities at Gander, Newfoundland, for the purpose of relocating and re-establishing church activities from the airport limits to Gander townsite and to provide, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act or any other act, that the treasury board may in the current and future years authorize arrangements to be made for the operation of hotel, bakery, restaurant, staff messing, staff accommodation and similar facilities at airports and authorize the disbursement of revenues derived therefrom and payment of deficits that may occur in the management and operation of these facilities, $18,878,041.

Mr. Winch: This item deals with airports and other ground services. I should like to ask the minister to bring us up to date on the government's policy respecting any action to relieve congestion at the Vancouver airport by the development of a secondary civilian airport. I know this matter has been in mind for a long time, and that first one location and then another has been suggested, but there never seems to be any action. I know what the minister has in mind as to policy with respect to the international airport on Sea island as a result of the conference a few weeks ago to which he kindly invited all the Vancouver members, but that is all in the future. I understand that the R.C.A.F. is determined to stay there, and I believe there is a great need for immediate action to establish a secondary airport for light civilian aircraft. Is it possible to waft away all the confusion with respect to this matter and state definitely whether or not the department is going to go ahead with a secondary airport?

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Chairman. We have spent a considerable period of time trying to find a satisfactory site, in fact it is a period of about six years. We found only two satisfactory sites, Pitt Meadows and Boundary bay. We consider Boundary bay to be the most satisfactory. We are waiting for the Department of National Defence to move out of Boundary bay, and as soon as they do we will be very glad to take it over and establish it as a satellite airport.

Mr. Winch: Have you any indication when that might be?

Mr. Hees: We are reminding the Department of National Defence that we are very anxious to move in, and we keep pressing them.

Mr. Winch: Do you think it would be a good idea to give the Minister of National Defence a nudge in that direction by asking him when his estimates are before us?

Mr. Hees: I do not think it would do any harm at all.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, because of the size of this vote I think the minister should give some indication of where the airports are and the amounts to be expended at each, but before he does that I am sorry I have to burden him again with some of the difficulties still plaguing Dorval airport. I am prompted to do so because of an article which has been published in the Montreal Star and which is seriously critical of the department's efforts. The article is by Mr. W. A. Wilson and is entitled, "Air Terminal Costs Spiral as Building Delays Continue." The article reads in part as follows:

> —costs have mounted along with the delays until they are now officially described as "way out of hand." The Department of Transport has refused to reveal the level estimated costs had reached last week when a drastic paring job began on them but one source said he understood the total had soared to $26 million and another described this figure as "probable".

The article goes on to give the various estimates that were made for the building, the first estimate in 1953 of $4 million, a later estimate raising the figure to between $8 million and $9 million, and still another last year raising the estimate to between $15 million and $16 million. I am glad the hon. member for Carleton is staring at me because this will probably recall certain incidents to him. In any event, the final estimate given by the minister yesterday was $15 million to $16 million which, excluding all the extra facilities required there, might well bring the ultimate cost to between $25 million and $30 million. I believe those were the figures he gave yesterday.

Mr. Hees: Could I answer that now?

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to finish and then I perhaps will not have to get up again. There is a very serious charge made in another part of the article, where it is indicated that in certain parts of the building practically no one is working. The minister shakes his head, but there is a man who has visited the place and says that some of the floors are completely empty with nobody working at all. The article goes on to say:

> While only about 100 men were working three days ago it could be estimated that 400 could easily have been employed on the main structure alone, excluding the hydrant fueling system, the apron, power plant, fingers and aeroquays for most of which contracts have not been let and for some of which plans are now being redrawn.

It goes on at great length and I am not going to pursue the matter unduly, but I do wish to reiterate what I said yesterday; that I think something more than an ordinary assurance by the minister that everything is being done to hurry construction is required in this case. I think the minister should give instructions to his officers to see to it that the building is completed at once. I said a moment ago that there was a great similarity between what is happening here and what happened at the printing bureau.

Mr. Hees: Oh, no.

Mr. Chevrier: The circumstances are very much alike. Mind you, I am not being critical of what was done, because I know that in the Department of Transport there are some officers who believe that contracts of this nature should be given out piecemeal, and I am not going to challenge that decision. It might well be an excellent decision and under certain circumstances the only decision that should be taken. It may well be that when you are dealing with an airport that is the only way to make progress.

The fact is that here you have a building which originally was to cost $4 million. The cost is now going to reach between $25 million and $30 million, it is not finished, and six years have gone by from the time the first announcement was made until the minister's announcement yesterday. So there is a great deal of resemblance between this situation and the investigation which was made of the printing bureau. I am not suggesting that an investigation should be made in this case, but I am saying that those who were so anxious to be critical of the previous administration because of what happened at the printing bureau find here, if they go into the matter carefully, circumstances that are very similar; first, with reference to the contracts being let separately and, second, with reference to the skyrocketing of the costs. Perhaps the minister might be good enough to answer the few questions I have asked.

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Part of this misunderstanding arises from the fact that the first estimates dealt with the building only and the final estimates deal with the whole complex which comprises a great deal more than the building. The hon. member was minister at the time, and he knows that the so-called first estimates in 1953 and 1954, which were between $4 million and $8 million, were no more than a guess. Then in the early stages of preparation, in 1955, the estimate rose as he says, under his government, from $4 million to $10 million, that is 2½ times. Then, still under the government of which he was a member, when the main plans were completed—I might point out that when he is talking to us about these delays that are supposed to be taking place today, it took three full years before the plans could be prepared under the former government. They were not prepared until 1956, and at that time the estimate rose to $12.5 million, which is several times what he says was the original estimate, which was just a guess.

Now, when the final plans have been completed, the estimate is between $15 million and $16 million, because there have been a number of things added amongst which was the air conditioning which was announced last year, costing an additional half million dollars. The estimated cost of the building alone is between $15 million and $16 million. Yesterday when I mentioned this subject in the house I gave a full statement of the additional items which brought the cost up to somewhere between $25 million and $30 million. These items were never included in any of the former estimates. I refer to such things as the fingers, the aeroquays, the main floor finishing, the furniture, the power plant, the heating plant, the apron, the ramp paving and the access road. These are all matters that were never included in the earlier estimates, and they bring the estimate today up to between $25 million and $30 million.

I am afraid, therefore, I cannot agree with the hon. member that there is anything out of the way. As I say, if we are talking about delays I wish he would just think back to those years between 1953 and 1956 when it took three full years to complete even the preliminary plans. During that three year period the estimate rose by over three times. I am not pointing the finger at him, but I do suggest he should not point the finger at me.

Mr. Chevrier: On the contrary, I am not pointing my finger at the minister at all. I am agreeing with what he has said. I am very glad he has said just what he has, because that is exactly what we were saying with reference to the printing bureau but nobody would pay any attention to us. We started off by saying that the first estimate was a guess and they said, "Well, that is just terrible; there is no sense to that". Then the minister rose and said that after two years' time they added something. Of course you did, and that is what increased the cost. I am not suggesting for a moment that the additions were not proper and were not required. That is exactly what happened in the other case.

Mr. Winch: Careful; you would not want to reopen that affair.

Mr. Chevrier: I am quite able to take care of myself in that respect. I believe the circumstances here are exactly the same as they were in the other case. I am pleased that the minister reiterated practically everything that was stated by us in the other committee. There is no doubt in my mind that if the estimate rose from $10 million to $16 million, and then from $16 million to $25 million, it was because of the aeroquays, the fingers, the air conditioning and the like. There are unquestionably reasons for the additions. I am glad the minister did make the statement he made. I have no fault to find with it, because I believe the circumstances are exactly the same as in the other case.

Mr. Pearson: The minister has shown a broad understanding of these difficulties of mounting costs, changed specifications, the requirements of air conditioning and all that sort of thing, which adds to the cost of a building.

Mr. Winch: Maybe we ought to investigate him, too.

Mr. Pickersgill: Go ahead.

Mr. Pearson: The minister also said the other day that in contrast to the situation a couple of years ago, the work is now really humming; that there is activity; that they are pushing along. However, that is not the information in this article. Perhaps one should not judge from casual, personal experience, but any of us who have been in and out of Dorval lately cannot help but be struck by the fact there is no sign of this humming, this pushing along. If the minister is satisfied—

Mr. Hees: I might say it is all inside, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pearson: Is the minister satisfied that everything is being done that can be done to bring this building to completion at the earliest possible date and at the lowest possible cost?

Mr. Hees: Yes. As I said yesterday when dealing with this matter there were delays recently, and I described them. There is a reference to it in the newspapers this morning. There had been some hold-ups at treasury board, and having been a member of a government for quite some time I think he, and any other member who has been a minister, knows just how annoying that can be. These have been overcome, I am glad to say. I think I have a sympathetic ear over there in the former minister. These delays have been overcome, and I feel confident that progress will be made.

Mr. Pearson: The minister used to be a heavyweight boxing champion, so why does he not do something about treasury board?

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister answer the first question I asked him?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that this vote covers 120 separate airports.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not want that, Mr. Chairman. Would the minister take the international airports, say Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver?

Mr. Hees: Do you want me to name them?

Mr. Chevrier: No, the amounts for these various international airports?

Mr. Drysdale: I do not know whether or not it would save repetition, but I have some specific questions for the minister on the Vancouver international airport. Does he want me to ask my questions and make my observations now?

Mr. Hees: Yes, go ahead.

Mr. Drysdale: First of all, Mr. Chairman, I wish to refer to the problem of the Vancouver international airport, because with the tremendous influx of jet planes—as a matter of fact I think they are expected to start in August of this year—the airport is more or less at the crossroads of its development. Although it is called the Vancouver international airport I might point out to the hon. member for Vancouver East and other members that it is located in Richmond, which is in my riding. Sea island, which is at the mouth of the Fraser river, covers some 4,000 acres.

I wish to put some of the items into perspective in discussing this particular matter. The city of Vancouver actually owns some 480 acres on Sea island for airport purposes, whereas the Department of Transport has some 2,310 acres and the Department of National Defence some 190 acres.

Mr. Pickersgill: Any trouble over expropriations?

Mr. Drysdale: There are at present some 1,200 acres in use. It is expected that by 1980 they will require some 3,450 acres. The minister indicated earlier in answer to my questions, as well as those by the hon. member for Vancouver South, that the government is prepared to acquire the airport should Vancouver decide to relinquish control. However, there has been a certain amount of confusion in the statement of facts, so I should like to direct two or three specific questions in order to put the matter in its correct perspective.

The first question I should like to ask—I do not know whether or not the minister would like me to ask each question and then have it answered?

Mr. Hees: I think that would be simpler.

Mr. Drysdale: The first question is, what is the equity of the federal government in Vancouver airport? I would appreciate a breakdown of the land, buildings, subsidies, etc.

Mr. Hees: Yes, I have that information, Mr. Chairman.

The equity which the federal government has in the Vancouver airport is $11,414,386. The breakdown is as follows: land purchases, $4,459,993; loans for construction of domestic terminal building, $305,701; construction of buildings, runway, et cetera, as at March 31, 1958, $6,061,759 and for the fiscal year, 1958-59, which is not final, $75,209; for a total so far of $10,902,663. The contributions which the federal government has made for airport development are as follows: 1937-38, $64,892; 1938-39, $76,563; 1939-40, $111,082; 1941-42, $9,998; 1957-58, $120,000; for a total of $382,535; operating subsidies paid to the Vancouver airport from the fiscal year 1948-49 to the fiscal year 1957-58, $129,188; or a grand total of $11,414,386.

Mr. Drysdale: I wonder whether the minister can now tell me what is the approximate equity of the city of Vancouver as represented in the 480 acres plus the buildings?

Mr. Hees: Yes; approximately $2 million.

Mr. Drysdale: I have a further question. The present problem of the city of Vancouver is the establishment of a terminal building which is estimated to cost some $13,700,000. I was wondering what amount the federal government would be prepared to give as a grant in aid on this building or as to how that figure would be computed by formula.

Mr. Hees: The amount of any federal government grant in aid toward a proposed passenger terminal to cost $13,700,000—that is the cost which the city quoted to us—would depend on the nature of the plans for the building, but normally the government might make a contribution related to 100 per cent of the cost of the space required for customs and excise plus 75 per cent of the cost for public waiting room accommodation, plus possibly some ramp and apron construction. Federal government grants usually amount to about 25 per cent to 30 per cent of the cost of the terminal building.

Mr. Drysdale: I have just one final question. As reported at page 4146 of Hansard of May 29 in answer to a question by the hon. member for Vancouver South who has also shown a great deal of interest in the Vancouver airport, the minister made certain statements as to the federal government's policy in this matter. However, on June 2, in the Vancouver Province there was a front page article by a Mr. Jim Fairley. The article is headed "Four Firms Seek Jet Terminal Job" and is to the effect that there are four private firms who have indicated that they are willing to put up the money for the airport. I should like to have the minister's comment on certain statements that were made in the particular article. It is stated as follows:

> Alderman Wilson also brought back a compromise offer from the federal government which he will present to city council today.
> Under this plan there would be a land switch but no sale of the airport, and the federal government would build a new passenger terminal which it would ask the city to manage on a percentage-of-profits basis.

The article states further:

> In the compromise deal, the city would turn over to the government the city-owned land in the centre of the airport where airport officials agree the new terminal should be located.
>
> In return, the federal government would turn over some of its land to the city for aviation industrial development.
> The city would continue to own and operate "100 per cent" this and the present industrial holdings, and would also run the government's big new passenger terminal on a percentage fee to be negotiated.

What I should like to ask the minister is this. In view of his statement made on May 29, which appears to be at variance with this article quoting Alderman Halford Wilson, can he give his opinion as to which statement should prevail?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, there has never at any time been any kind of compromise deal at all offered to the city of Vancouver in this matter.

Mr. Winch: That is not what you told us.

Mr. Hicks: The Pitt Meadows airport has been mentioned here this afternoon and I should like to say a few words about it. It is over two years ago since I understand certain private airplane owners asked to have an airport established at Pitt Meadows. During that time land was gradually secured, some expropriated and some purchased. When the government changed, this same policy seemed to continue. Quite a number of farms were taken over. Some of them, as I say, were expropriated, which meant, of course, that the owners of those farms could not go ahead and make improvements. A number of them are sitting there yet wondering what is going to happen to the Pitt Meadows airport. This is situated on the east side of the Pitt river and on the north side of the Fraser river. There has been considerable controversy as to the suitability of this airport, weather-wise. A large number of the farmers there want to have something definite settled about this airport and about these farm lands. I should like to ask the minister whether it is planned to continue with this airport and to make a success of it or what is the plan for the future.

Mr. Hees: As I have stated earlier, we prefer the Boundary bay site provided we can get it and we expect to do so. Provided that the Department of National Defence move out of it we are going to use Boundary bay. But at the present time we do not wish to abandon completely the idea of Pitt Meadows until we are absolutely sure of getting Boundary bay. That is about as clearly as I can state the position.

Mr. Hicks: I want to say a word or so also about another airport in my constituency, namely the Abbotsford airport. In the last few months we have heard a great deal about the millions of dollars being spent around Vancouver. I am a little bit inclined to think that the day is not too far away when Abbotsford will be almost the top, if not the top airport, for Vancouver. It is only about twenty miles out. When the highway is completed it is going to be really within reach. I tell you that Abbotsford airport is some day going to be an airport. I say that because they have absolutely ideal weather at Abbotsford. I do not know how many planes come in there from, we will say, November 1 until April when they again land at Vancouver. There are two alternatives. One is to go to Victoria. Of course, if you have passengers for Vancouver they might as well be taken to Hong Kong as to Victoria. The other alternative is just to turn your plane around and go and land at Abbotsford. You certainly can land at Abbotsford.

I think this airport should be developed, and I know it will be in a few years. But the point I want to make today is this, that we have taken over quite a number of small farms around the Abbotsford airport but there are still four farms on the east end of the flight. They are only small places and they are chicken ranches, and sometimes some of these great liners come in there and fly over homes and poultry houses, and I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, they really cause quite a disturbance, not only amongst the housewives but among the chickens as well. Some of the chickens have been known to lay two eggs in 24 hours!

Now, Mr. Chairman, seriously, I would like to ask the minister to consider taking over without any further delay the small properties owned by Rev. J. J. Stoffel—incidentally, he should not be afraid of airplanes going over—D. Logan, J. Rempel and C. Enns. They are on the Clearbrooke road at the east end of the flight and I certainly do not think it is any place for a person to have to live with these things coming over and making a great deal of noise.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I might answer the question of the hon. member for Laurier who asked for a breakdown of this vote. I am afraid I have not got it by main airports but I have it by districts. It reads as follows:

Headquarters	$1,354,255
Gander, Newfoundland ..	2,619,605
Moncton region	966,853
Montreal region	4,269,532
Toronto region	2,292,258
Winnipeg region	1,730,695
Edmonton region	4,282,915
Vancouver region	1,361,923

This, Mr. Chairman, makes a grand total of some $18,878,000.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to transport the minister for a moment from Abbotsford, where I am sure there will soon be a great and silent airport, to another part of Canada, and ask him if he could tell me what progress is being made with regard to an airfield for the most important, progressive and exciting new community in Canada? I refer, of course to Elliot Lake.

Mr. Hees: I am advised that we have made several surveys of the area, but unfortunately so far we have not been able to find a site which could be developed at anything but a very excessive cost and it would be some distance from the town. However, we are continuing to study the whole matter, and if the hon. member knows of any site that he thinks would be suitable we would appreciate it very much if he would draw it to our attention and we will be glad to investigate it.

Mr. Pearson: I will be very glad to do that, Mr. Chairman. I was up there the other day on government business—

Mr. Hees: Of course.

Mr. Pearson: —and I was taken by the chamber of commerce to a proposed site not far from Elliot Lake, which they thought could be suitable for the construction of an airport. However, I will get in touch with the minister in due course.

(Translation):

Mr. Belzile: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words with regard to the airport at Matane, county seat of my riding. I would like, also, to explain to this house the emergency which exists there. At present, the airport at Matane is used by two air transport companies, the Quebecair Incorporated and the Air Services Limited. Now in September 1958, Quebecair Incorporated acquired some heavier aircraft, so that just now the Matane airport, with airstrips that are too short, does not meet present requirements.

The Matane airport is located at a point of strategic importance, because it has to serve the Matapedia valley, Matane, Ste. Anne des Monts, and all parishes around the county seat.

On the south coast, workers who are employed either in the mines or on hydro and lumbering projects and have to travel between the south and north shores, use Quebecair craft, and those of the other company I mentioned a few moments ago, for the trip between the airports situated on the north shore, like Forestville, Baie Comeau, Schefferville and Seven Islands. The town council of Matane has spent fairly large amounts on the purchase of needed property. In fact, so far it has spent $25,000 for that purpose. It will easily be realized that great improvements are called for at this time, and I need not refer to the gist of the correspondence exchanged in the last 15 months or so between the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees), the officials of his department, the Matane city council, the Matane chamber of commerce and your humble servant. All that correspondence is of course in good hands, since it is filed with the department, for use in due course.

However, it is obvious that, by this year, the Department of Transport should not fail to consider the possibility of lengthening at least one of the airstrips by a few hundred feet, preferably strip number 0725, so that the larger Quebecair craft may land at Matane to let off or take on people who want to travel between various points in the area.

The people of Matane and I would be very glad if the hon. minister could take into consideration the present economic aspect and urgent need of development of our airport, so that we may get this year, if possible, at least the extension of the airstrip in question.

Furthermore, I would ask the minister to consider the possibility of including, in next year's estimates, the amounts required to put in the necessary improvements at that airport, so that it could adequately meet the needs of the population, especially with regard to traffic between the south and north shores of the St. Lawrence.

I imagine that the hon. minister, understanding as he is known to be, will take my remarks in good part and that, in the near future, we shall have the pleasure of noting that he has acted on our request.

(Text):

Mr. Slogan: I should like to ask the minister one or two questions about airfields in Manitoba, but before I do so may I say that I feel a good deal of sympathy with the hon. member who was talking about the plight of chickens in the Abbotsford airport area. But as long as the chicken are laying two eggs a day rather than one as a result of the disturbance of aircraft, the ranchers should not be too concerned. I recall that during the election campaign of 1953 we were campaigning by aeroplane and booming our message down by loudspeaker to the people below. Subsequently one of the farmers complained that one of his cows had miscarried. I am sure that cost me a few votes and contributed to my defeat.

I was wondering, in view of the increased activity at Winnipeg airport by commercial aircraft and the growing hazard at this airport from small aeroplanes, especially those not equipped with suitable radio communication facilities, whether the department has taken definite steps to establish a satellite airport north of Winnipeg and, if so, whether a site has been chosen. If a site has not been chosen, could the minister tell us when he expects to make an announcement regarding the choice of the site?

Mr. Hees: We have selected a site, but we have not been able to announce it yet because we have not received the necessary authorization to purchase the land. But as soon as we do get authorization we shall be making the announcement.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask the minister about the language of this item. I am particularly interested in the last ten lines or so. Perhaps I had better read them out.

—the treasury board may in the current and future years—

In other words, this legislation is not merely for one year but for all time—

—authorize arrangements to be made for the operation of hotel, bakery, restaurant, staff messing, staff accommodation and similar facilities at airports and authorize the disbursement of revenues received therefrom and payment of deficits that may occur in the management and operation of these facilities.

I am not criticizing that; quite the contrary. Perhaps I should have noticed this before I spoke yesterday. I am glad to hear that the minister is taking power under this item to build and operate a hotel at Gander if he cannot find anyone else to do it. I assume that that is what this authority means. I think, though, that the minister should tell us how it is planned to use this authority. In that context I have a practical suggestion to make to the minister about the best single inducement to hold out in order to get a hotel at Gander. I think the Department of Transport which, after all, is in the driver's seat at Gander, should say that no one gets a licence to sell beverages at Gander unless he undertakes to build a hotel. It would not be very long, then, before a hotel was provided. But I think we ought to know precisely what the minister has in mind, at least for this year. We do not expect to have information with regard to future years.

Mr. Hees: The hon. member has asked what this wording means. It is technical wording required, again, by the treasury board—they always seem to be the villains in the piece. This is technical wording required to enable us to use the revenues from the restaurant and bakery at Gander in a revolving account. Otherwise, we would not be able to make immediate purchases for our needs in that area. What was the other question?

Mr. Pickersgill: The suggestion I made to the minister was that if the government would say that in the new terminal whoever was licensed to sell beverages would have to provide a decent hotel, I do not think it would be very long before we got a hotel.

Mr. Hees: I am told that we are the licensee.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then I think it is up to you to build a hotel.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the minister what the policy is in the airports under the jurisdiction of the department concerning the sale of liquor? I understand that at Gander there is a licence. I also understand that in the new airport at Montreal provision has been made for a licence. Could the minister elaborate on that?

Mr. Hees: Yes. I understand that the licence at Gander has been in existence for some 20 years. Regarding the other airports no decision has been taken to make liquor available by sale.

Mr. Chevrier: What about the situation in the airport at Montreal? Provision was made for a liquor and beverage area.

Mr. Hees: No decision has been taken to make liquor available there.

Mr. Chevrier: That has not answered my question. Is the area in the Montreal airport which was provided as a liquor outlet still in existence?

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chevrier: But the policy of the department has not yet been determined with regard to the sale of liquor for all airports other than Gander. It is still under consideration. Is that the position?

Mr. Hees: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the minister tell me what are the relations of the department with commercial caterers at Gander?

Mr. Hees: They act as our management agents under contract.

Mr. Pickersgill: But you are the licencees, and you actually own the premises.

Mr. Hees: We own the premises and are financially responsible.

[Mr. Hees.]

Mr. Nielsen: I should like to speak on item 435 for a moment and draw the attention of the minister once again to the question of northern allowances for departmental employees in the Yukon, apart from Canadian National Telegraphs employees. At four locations, particularly in the Yukon, there is what appears to be a definite discrimination between this department's employees and others. These areas are Aishihik, Snag, Watson Lake and Teslin. At the last two places, Teslin, and Watson Lake, the married allowance is $1,140 and the single allowance is $720. In Whitehorse, which is not nearly as isolated, comparatively, as Teslin and Watson Lake, the married allowance is $1,550 and the single allowance $928. The situation at Aishihik and Snag is comparable, because there is a definite discrepancy compared with the allowances paid to other departmental employees.

The other question I wish to raise concerns seaplane docking facilities at Whitehorse. I am wondering what progress has been made with regard to the establishment of this very necessary facility in the light of the increasing air traffic in the north, particularly near this location.

Another matter in which I am interested is the relocation of the Dawson airport. I understand that some investigation may be authorized with regard to this in the very near future. I certainly hope so, because Dawson, like Mayo, has laboured under the burden of extremely heavy freight rates, rates which could be reduced if the airport facilities were such as would permit the landing of four-engined aircraft in these two areas. In the Mayo area I understand the department has already surveyed a site. If the site surveyed is acceptable and suitable for the construction of an airport which would be large enough to accommodate four-engined aircraft in the vicinity of the city, this would lead to freight rates being greatly reduced. In the light of the freight travelling to the northern part of the Yukon, to the oil fields in that area, this is becoming increasingly important, Mr. Chairman.

The other matter that I have to bring to the minister's attention concerns terminal facilities at Whitehorse. The existing terminal facilities have been with us for years now, and there is a growing need for expanding those facilities to cope with the greatly increased traffic which is travelling through Whitehorse to all areas north, to European points and to Asian points. The facilities are used not only by Canadian air lines but also United States air lines. There is a very pressing need to expand the existing terminal facilities at Whitehorse.

The one last matter that I have to bring to the minister's attention concerns employment practices in the department. This practice existed when the minister took over his present office. I have made no personal investigation into it; therefore, I cannot say whether the allegations I have received are correct or not, but it has been represented to me that there is a practice in Watson lake of a man and wife working for the department. The complaint that has been submitted to me was submitted to me shortly after this government took office, and it was directed toward the practice of hiring the wife of a departmental employee in a job which another man might have filled if endeavours were made to locate a qualified person to fill it. I think the job that the wife is holding down is that of a cook. It has been stated to me that there are male cooks in the Yukon without jobs who could be employed on this work. May I suggest to the minister that this situation be investigated. If there are unemployed cooks in the Yukon, I believe it to be wrong for the wife of an already employed individual with the department to be holding down that job.

Item agreed to.

437. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, including construction work on municipal airports and payments to municipalities as contributions towards construction done by those bodies, and amounts to be paid in settlement of claims for compensation by persons whose property is injuriously affected by the operation of a zoning regulation made under authority of paragraph (j) of subsection (1) of section 4 of the Aeronautics Act and including authority to contribute up to $250,000 in 1959-60 to the province of Nova Scotia towards the construction of a highway providing access to the new Halifax international airport, $63,000,000.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, really I cannot understand this vote. It comes to me as a great surprise. I hope the minister will not be able to reply—if he does I will have to take my seat—that a vote of this magnitude ever existed before. Certainly, I cannot remember it in the time that I was there; I cannot remember $63 million in one vote. I think it is just abnormal. The vote should be divided so that the committee will get some idea of what it is. After all, there is no sense in giving this wording:

Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, including construction work on municipal airports and payments to municipalities—

It includes everything that one can think of. There is more money being voted in one item here than in several other departments of government. Perhaps that goes to indicate some of the criticisms—constructive criticisms, I believe—that were directed against the department because of its size. Surely, something should be done about a vote of this magnitude. How can it be expected that the committee can give any serious consideration to a thing of this kind. I do not know what it means, and I have some comprehension of what goes on in the Department of Transport; but to ask for this tremendous amount and not give a greater breakdown than this I think certainly demands an explanation.

Mr. Hees: I think there is something in what the hon. member says. I think this could be broken down into smaller amounts and I will certainly see that that is done next year. If there are any specific questions the hon. member would like to have answered on this vote I should be glad to give him the answers.

Mr. Chevrier: I think the minister should break down the three or four items that are contained in the description of the estimate. First how much of this is for construction of buildings; how much is for municipal airports or contributions to municipalities; how much for zoning regulations and compensation in payment thereof; how much for the other airports contained in the last part of the vote.

Before the minister replies may I ask him this. Does he not think that this is the time to outline the policy of the government with reference to airports in general? By that I mean what is the policy with reference to municipalities; what is the policy with reference to far-flung areas in the country, and how much is contributed in that respect? What is the policy with reference to airports that do not fall within that category, such as small strips? I think now of those along the north shore of the St. Lawrence river. When it is established that additional services are required, does the department make contributions on each occasion? What is the reason for those contributions? Here we have a tremendous vote, and I think the minister should first of all outline what the policy is in connection with the various categories of airports falling under his department, and next give a breakdown of this $63 million under the headings which are mentioned in the vote.

Mr. Hees: The present arrangement under which the majority of airports are federally operated, particularly in the secondary field category, is the result of historical development and wartime growth. Basically speaking, however, the present policy is that the federal government encourages municipal operation of airports, and at mainline airports served by scheduled services may, if necessary, pay a subsidy to a municipal airport operator toward meeting operating deficits. If the municipality is not prepared to operate the field and if the field is a major airport required to carry out international commitments, the federal government would assume responsibility. In other cases, particularly requests for construction of a new airport, the federal government normally requires municipal participation giving as a minimum assurance it will provide the land for the airfield and agree to operate it after the federal government has constructed it. In the case of local airports, dollar for dollar participation may also be required. The granting of operating subsidies to meet municipal deficits are dealt with by special investigation, both technical and economical in each case and then a reference to treasury board for decision.

In this vote, Mr. Chairman, there are no zoning expenditures and no expenditures for grants. It is all construction of runways and buildings. I have here a complete list of all of the expenditures. I could give them all but it would take considerable time. If the committee would like me to do so I will give only those where amounts of over $100,000 are going to be spent.

Mr. Chevrier: Before the minister does that, there is a clear indication in the vote that it is for amounts paid in settlement of claims for compensation by persons whose property is affected by the operation of the zoning regulations passed by the house. Therefore a substantial portion of the vote must be in payment of compensation for that purpose.

Mr. Hees: I am advised that there is a token item of $500,000 which is an authorizing item for unknown claims that may be made. To break down the vote roughly, there is $25 million for buildings and the remainder is for runways, lighting, taxiways, etc. If it is satisfactory to the committee and the hon. member would like it—as I say I can give every item but there are a great many—I will give those items over $100,000.

Mr. Chevrier: Give the items over $1 million.

Mr. Hees: The first one is Halifax, Nova Scotia, air terminal building and incinerator, $2,450,000; Torbay, Newfoundland, extending runway to 7,000 feet, $1 million; Montreal, air terminal building, $6,500,000; Montreal, power and heating plant for new terminal building, including distribution tunnels, $1,300,000; Montreal, concrete parking apron, $1,800,000; Montreal, new parallel runway, 10,000 feet by 200 feet, $2,900,000; Sault Ste. Marie, development of airport, $2 million; Toronto, development of the island airport, $1,500,000; Toronto, air terminal building, $8 million; Winnipeg, air terminal building, $3 million.

Mr. Chevrier: Does the amount for Toronto complete Malton airport?

Mr. Hees: That is just the start. Edmonton, air terminal building, $1,500,000; Edmonton, airport development, $1 million. Those are all the items $1 million and over.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to make a suggestion to the minister. After listening to these almost astronomical figures it would seem that the Department of Public Works is a very small department compared with the Department of Transport but the Department of Public Works does list its various projects. Of course, they have a grab-all for items less than $25,000. Perhaps that is too small a sum in this field but does the minister not think it would be in the interests of informing parliament and the people of the country better if next year this item were broken down into sub-items and every separate project amounting to over $50,000 was listed separately? It is true, of course, that there is the question of transferability of funds but as long as it is all under one item that problem does not arise. In public works they cannot transfer from one province to another. I am not suggesting that we go that far but it does seem to me, as the hon. member for Laurier has said, that this is a tremendous sum of money to put in a vote without any kind of itemization or anything that enables us to compare the expenditures in one year with those in another year.

While I am on my feet, may I deal with something about which I particularly want to speak. I refer to the contribution toward the highway to the new Halifax international airport. I do not want the minister to think that I am criticizing this. I am a very strong exponent and belong to a political party which is a very strong exponent of doing more about highways in the Atlantic provinces to compensate for the railway building that is done with federal assistance in other parts of the country and which is not very suitable in the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Brooks: You have not done very much in your own province.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentleman will look at the vote for the Terra Nova national park, which is right on the trans-Canada highway and which was established largely, if I may say so without undue immodesty, on my initiative when we were in office, he will see that I can make some claims that are very well recognized in my constituency.

I thank the minister for reminding my constituents because I would have been too modest to mention it myself.

I want to come back to the question of the Halifax international airport. It is very necessary that there should be a new airport at Halifax. Everybody recognizes that and, of course, as the hon. member for Laurier has reminded me and as he is too modest to say it himself I will say it for him, he was the one who decided that. This airport is some little distance from Halifax and if it is to serve that great metropolitan community it is most important that there should be a good high speed road to the new airport.

But we have a situation in Newfoundland where we have an airport which, I am afraid, is no better than the existing Halifax airport, if indeed it is as good, as far as weather is concerned. We are now finally beginning to get a road between St. John's and Gander, and it does seem to me that there ought to be some principle upon which this assistance is based. I know that the distance to Gander from St. John's is about ten times the distance from Halifax to the international airport and naturally one could not expect the same mileage rate, but I would ask the minister if he does not think, in view of the number of times that aircraft bound for St. John's have to stop at Gander, that there should be some consideration given to treating Newfoundland and the Gander-St. John's situation on the same kind of basis as this treatment of Halifax. Perhaps the minister would tell us precisely what the formula is in the case of Halifax.

Mr. Hees: The formula in the case of Halifax is that we have contributed to the provincial government the amount of money we calculated it would cost us to build a road from the airport to the nearest highway.

Mr. Pickersgill: To the nearest highway?

Mr. Hees: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: How far is that?

Mr. Hees: Five to six miles.

Mr. Pickersgill: I must say that the minister has somewhat deflated my case. I know that before he became minister his department was giving some consideration to an alternative site to Torbay out at Topsail or somewhere in that area where the weather is quite different from what it is east of St. John's. Of course, another airport would be a very expensive item. If a suitable site can be found, everyone would agree that would be the best thing but if a suitable site cannot be found then, as an alternative, I suggest that some consideration might be given to some assistance to speeding up work on the trans-Canada highway in order to overcome some of the frightful disabilities existing at present because of the state of the road to Gander.

Mr. Hees: I will draw that to the attention of my colleague, the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Minister of Public Works, no; you will get nowhere doing that, if I may say so with respect. I suggest that the minister take it up himself and make the project his own. Then, in view of that grit and determination about which we have read in the public prints lately, we can hope something might happen.

Mr. Broome: I should like to draw the attention of the department to the question of specifying the products of western Canada for the construction of buildings in western Canada. I would request the incorporation of those products by name in the specifications. At the moment the specifications as developed by the Department of Transport are written with products manufactured in Montreal and in Toronto in view, to the extent of about 99 per cent. We think we are being discriminated against.

I should like to point out to the minister that this is exactly what happened to the 13 American colonies before 1776, because Britain tried to keep manufacturing there and did not allow any secondary industry in the 13 colonies. We, in British Columbia, have almost reached that point. The minister's officials have ways of ascertaining the different products which are available in other parts of the country, outside of Montreal and Toronto. I hope the minister will have his officials give active help to western manufacturers so that they will receive the same treatment as eastern manufacturers. I know something about specifications and the writing of specifications. This is not a hollow request. There is room for legitimate criticism of the way things are being handled now so far as our manufacturers on the west coast are concerned, and I suspect in Alberta as well.

Mr. Drysdale: I should like to raise a matter which is, I think, of considerable importance. I refer to the expropriation of property. I hope hon. members to the right will take it in the objective nature that it is being suggested. I raise this in connection with the Vancouver international airport. There were expropriations filed in 1954 and at that time the vast majority of the cases were settled.

What I wish to draw to the attention of the minister is that under the expropriation Act and also the Exchequer Court Act, unfortunately the valuation of the property has to be made at the date of expropriation. I feel that some consideration should be given to reviewing present expropriation procedures because, under conditions as we have them today, property valuations have been increasing over the years. However, under the present system of expropriation a person is entitled only to the valuation of the property on the date of expropriation which, in this particular instance, is 1954, plus possibly an allowance of 10 per cent for forcible taking.

I lay no blame on the Department of Transport or on the particular people involved, but sometimes these properties are expropriated with extremely long range plans in view. It has been the practice, very often, to allow the people to remain in possession of these properties, without any settlement being effected. The result has been that when the time for settlement comes around the settlement is made on the basis of 1954 valuations. I have had a great deal of difficulty, personally, explaining to these people why they cannot get the advantage of the increased value. I would suggest that the minister give consideration to a plan whereby, for example, if property has been expropriated and no settlement has been made within one year, some provision could be made so that the owner could take advantage of increased land values. If that is not possible, then perhaps the replacement value of the property could be used as a basis for settlement so the person could locate in a similar place under similar circumstances.

As a result of having been associated with some of these individuals I suspect the minister's answer might be that they could proceed in the exchequer court, but the attitude toward people involved in these expropriation proceedings has been to load the gun in favour of the department. The majority of these people with small holdings are unable to afford the cost of expropriation proceedings. I feel some consideration should be given to reviewing the Expropriation Act and the Exchequer Court Act to provide for some of these contingencies in the future.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): I read what the minister said yesterday with regard to the possibility of establishing a civilian airport in the vicinity of Jonquiere. He said, as reported on page 4576 of Hansard:

—I should like to answer the hon. member's question about airports. I recognize the problem in the Chibougamau area—

I am sure the minister was referring to the Chicoutimi area.

Mr. Hees: That is correct.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): He said:

We have reviewed the general area from the point of view of other locations for a field and have the matter under continuing study.

[Mr. Drysdale.]

I should like to ask the minister if, in the survey of the area which has been made by D.O.T. officials, they have considered a location within the boundaries of Lapointe county, which means Jonquiere, Arvida or Kenogami?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, if some municipality makes an approach to us with a proposal we will be very glad to look into it. So far, none has.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister mentioned a figure of $8 million, if I remember correctly, for Toronto. Was that for the new air terminal in Malton?

Mr. Hees: Yes, that is for the new air terminal. I am advised I said $8 million when I should have said $6 million.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the minister when the decision was taken about the establishment of the new air terminal at Malton, and where will it be located?

Mr. Hees: It is at the south end of the field, and I am advised the decision on that location was taken two or three years ago.

Mr. Chevrier: Are the plans and specifications ready?

Mr. Hees: No, not yet.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask who has prepared the plans and specifications?

Mr. Hees: The firm of John Parkin and Associates.

Mr. Chevrier: Can the minister give an idea of the present estimate of the cost of the new terminal?

Mr. Hees: The first stage will be the construction of a single aeroquay. The first estimate is somewhere in the vicinity of $13 million.

Mr. Chevrier: How many stages will there be in the terminal?

Mr. Hees: This will be determined as traffic grows. The first stage is a single aeroquay and, as traffic develops, other stages will be developed.

Mr. Chevrier: Have any contracts been given for the first stage?

Mr. Hees: Yes, the excavation only.

Mr. Chevrier: When is it expected the terminal will be completed?

Mr. Hees: The indication at the present time is somewhere between four and five years.

Mr. Chevrier: Can the minister give an idea of what the total cost of the terminal will be?

Mr. Hees: No, Mr. Chairman, the plans have not advanced sufficiently to be able to do so now.

Mr. Chevrier: Can the minister tell the house what kind of terminal it will be? By that, I mean, what is going to be contained in the terminal? The minister says the first stage will cost about $12 million. What is envisaged in the terminal? Is it a terminal, for instance, in the nature of La Guardia?

Mr. Hees: This is a circular terminal building which does not include any office space. That will be the next stage, namely to build an office building which is separate.

Mr. Chevrier: What will be done about the present terminal?

Mr. Hees: It will be used for other purposes.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. MacEwan): Shall the item carry?

Mr. Dumas: No, Mr. Chairman. As to the construction of terminal facilities at Val d'Or airport, can the minister tell the committee whether plans have been finalized and arrangements made with the municipality of Val d'Or?

Mr. Hees: This is an R.C.A.F. field. I wonder whether the hon. member can tell me specifically what he has in mind?

Mr. Dumas: Yes. What I have in mind is this. That may be an R.C.A.F. field but Trans-Canada Air Lines are operating from that airport. As to the facilities there, while I would not say that they are third class, I will say that they were built in 1950 when we had a small airport at that place. Now it has grown and it is congested. I understand that the municipality has been in contact with the Department of Transport in connection with the improvement of those facilities.

Mr. Hees: It is my understanding that the city runs the airport and that it is their responsibility. We have not any plans at the present time.

Mr. Dumas: Can the minister say whether the municipality has approached the department with regard to the construction of those facilities?

Mr. Hees: Not to our knowledge. They have approached us for road assistance, but that is all.

Mr. Broome: I have not had from the minister an answer to my question. I should like the minister to give me an assurance that his officials will give every active assistance to western manufacturers who are desirous of submitting their products for the purpose of obtaining acceptability to the department so that they in turn may quote on projects which are in our area?

Mr. Hees: Yes. Our policy wherever possible is to use local products.

Mr. Broome: I asked for active assistance in getting the products accepted for specification purposes.

Mr. Hees: Yes; if local manufacturers or builders or makers of products wish to have them accepted and come to see us they will receive co-operation.

Mr. Broome: That is exactly the point. They are obliged to travel 3,000 miles in order to see department officials whereas people from Toronto can come up here over night or people from Montreal can come up here in two hours. Much of these negotiations must be carried on by correspondence. The idea I am trying to put across is that departmental officials should actually help these manufacturers to get the same treatment as if they were located in Montreal and could could come up here at relatively small expense and see departmental officials. In other words, what I am asking for is willing co-operation along those lines.

Mr. Hees: We shall be very glad to co-operate. If they will contact us by letter and let us know what they have, we shall be very glad to co-operate with them.

Mr. McFarlane: I want to ask the minister whether in the present estimate any consideration has been given to the construction of a major airport in Kootenay East. I realize that several briefs have been submitted in the matter. I believe the department officials in their wisdom will settle on a good location for the airport. I think this has been a matter of correspondence for some time.

Mr. Hees: Can the hon. member tell me specifically what location he has in mind?

Mr. McFarlane: Several locations have been mentioned in Kootenay East for the airport. At the present time we have an air field at Wasa and one at Cranbrook. Representations or briefs have been submitted to the department for a major airport to be constructed at Creston. We feel that this matter should be considered by department officials.

Mr. Hees: We are studying that proposal but there is nothing in this year's estimates. However, we are studying the proposal to which the hon. member has referred.

Item agreed to.

439. Contributions to municipalities or public bodies for construction and improvements of airports on land acquired by such organizations including a contribution to an appropriate authority in respect of an airport at Lourdes-du-Blanc-Sablon, Quebec, $82,060.

Mr. Chevrier: On this item I am prompted to ask the minister a number of questions. I remember that at one time there was on foot a plan to operate a milk run from Toronto to Montreal with stops at Cornwall, Belleville, Brockville, Kingston, and Oshawa; T.C.A. had in mind the operation of that run. I wonder whether anything has been decided in so far as that matter is concerned.

Mr. Hees: T.C.A. has nothing under consideration at the present time but we understand another operator has been giving it some thought.

Mr. Chevrier: I see that the hon. member for Stormont is in the chamber. I am sure he will not mind my asking this question inasmuch as I was on the other side of the house when two surveys were made of an airport for Cornwall. I wonder what progress has been made in that respect.

Mr. Hees: I am advised that the matter has not been pursued any further by the city.

Mr. Herridge: Can the minister tell us what improvements have been made in and what expenditure is provided for in these estimates for the Castlegar airport this year?

Mr. Hees: I am advised that the present site is developed about as far as it is capable of being developed.

Item agreed to.

Air Transport Board—

442. Salaries and other expenses, including the Canadian delegation to the international civil aviation organization, $369,285.

Mr. Chevrier: As the minister knows this is perhaps one of the most important items there is in this department because under it can be considered and discussed the various rights and agreements affecting the air lines of Canada. I am prompted here to bring to the minister's attention again the changes that were made in the United Kingdom air agreement which he announced in the house the other day and which I should like to discuss briefly and about which I should like to ask a few questions.

As I understand that matter, when it was announced by the minister there was first a service that would in the future operate from Toronto to Hong Kong, originating in Toronto. As the minister knows, there is also a service from Vancouver to Hong Kong in connection with the bilateral agreement. Next there was announced a direct operation Vancouver-Winnipeg-Edmonton to London. I presume that on that basis the Canadian government will in due course have to designate the chosen instrument for those two routes. I do not know what the government is going to do but I think the minister should give some indication of what is likely to happen arising out of these rights. After all, they have been granted by the government of Canada. Whether C.P.A. will expect to get and be entitled to get the run from Toronto to Hong Kong is a matter to which I think consideration should be given, and the minister might well indicate what is the position. It may well be that T.C.A., because of its western services, will expect to get the run from western Canada direct to London because of the services which it already performs from the eastern part of Canada to the United Kingdom.

Then another announcement which was made by the minister had to do with furtherance rights: that is, fifth freedom rights from London to Brussels, Dusseldorf and Vienna. Of course, as has already been discussed, if B.O.A.C. now gets access to Toronto arising out of the air agreement, I think that since these matters fall to be determined partly by the air transport board and partly by the minister and the governor in council under the Aeronautics Act, a matter of this importance should get a little further consideration than was given on the occasion of the announcement made by the minister. So that I ask the minister this: What will the position of T.C.A. be in the face of this amended air agreement when it comes into force in 1960? Next, what will the position of C.P.A. be in so far as the additional rights are concerned?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, the allocation to any particular airline of these new air routes has not been made, and when it is it will be announced by the government.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister says the allocation has not been made and will be announced when it is made. How will the allocation of these routes be made?

Mr. Hees: In the most equitable way that the government can do it.

Mr. Chevrier: I am not satisfied with that answer. Will it be made by an application by the airlines to the air transport board, or will it be made by determination of the governor in council?

Mr. Hees: The allocation of an air route to any air carrier under an international agreement requires a government decision, not an order in council.

Mr. Chevrier: A government decision means that the decision is made by the governor in council.

Mr. Hees: Yes.

Mr. Chevrier: Then, may I ask the minister this. Since the governor in council, as I understand it, has not determined what the chosen instrument shall be in these various cases, what other airlines have made representations to the government for additional rights in Canada?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, it is not a question of airlines making applications. I have asked the air transport board to study the whole international picture and to submit a report to me with their recommendations.

Mr. Chevrier: Is that a report which is made under the Aeronautics Act?

Mr. Hees: It is the air transport board reporting in the normal course of its duty to the minister on what it recommends under this agreement with regard to the routes which should be allocated to a specific airline.

Mr. Chevrier: Under the Aeronautics Act, as I understand it, an application must be made before the matter can be brought to the attention of the air transport board. Has an application been made by any of these airlines for additional rights in Canada?

Mr. Hees: No formal application. There have been informal discussions.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the report the minister speaks of be available to the house?

Mr. Hees: No. This is a private report made by the air transport board to the minister.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman, under this item 442 dealing with the air transport board I should like to take a few minutes of the committee's time to refer to the recent order of the board which cut the city I represent, Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, from regular airline service as of last April 6. This was done, as the minister knows, when the board approved the application of Pacific Western Airlines to suspend operations in Moose Jaw. I want to draw the attention of the minister to the need for some policy that will assist cities which find themselves cut off from a regular scheduled flight although they possess very adequate airport facilities. In this regard I want to endorse the remarks of the hon. member for Medicine Hat, who made an appeal yesterday for greater attention to air service for the cities on the prairies. The minister knows of our efforts in Moose Jaw to obtain an air service in line with our position as a city of over 30,000 serving an area with a population of 100,000 people in a flat, open country which is very suitable for day and night flights, with ideal flying weather conditions.

I have here, Mr. Chairman, some correspondence from Moose Jaw officials to press our claims for greater consideration in future air services, and if I may I would like to put on record just a few excerpts from recent letters. This is part of a letter written by the mayor of Moose Jaw, and it says:

> The municipal air board, the chamber of commerce and the city of Moose Jaw are most concerned with the situation in which the city of Moose Jaw is now placed by being completely eliminated from the commercial air map.

Then again he says:

> The municipal airport has a double hangar under lease from the Department of Transport and is in a position to provide excellent facilties . . .
>
> The board has, since undertaking the responsibility of civilian commercial aviation in this district, expended some $53,000 in the hangar in order to provide a radio room, ticket offices, waiting room, maintenance shop and heated hangar storage if required. In addition, we have in the past six months installed two gasoline dispensing units capable of dispensing gasoline at the rate of 50 gallons per minute, thereby providing emergency gasoline service whenever required.
> Our hangar is located at the R.C.A.F. station which has one of the best airfields in Saskatchewan.

I might point out to the minister, Mr. Chairman, that some form of feeder line service linking prairie cities off the T.C.A. route would almost certainly increase T.C.A.'s passenger service. It has been estimated that Trans-Canada Air Lines now enjoys passenger fares from Moose Jaw of over $125,000 annually without providing any air facilities at all in the city. Passengers buy their tickets in Moose Jaw and provide their own transportation to Regina to board the plane. I think, Mr. Chairman, as do the people of Moose Jaw, that it would be good business to provide an air link to encourage this passenger traffic.

Moose Jaw has always been a very air-minded city, with almost a pioneer's record in the aviation field. We had one of the first flying fields in the west and one of the first flying clubs. We staged the first air show in the province in 1929, 30 years ago, when over 30,000 people saw one of the first exhibitions of formation and stunt flying, and the first exhibition of parachute jumping. The test flight before the official start of the old western Canada air mail service took off from the Moose Jaw flying field. I had the pleasure of being a passenger on that trial flight, in 30-degree-below temperature in the middle of winter and with the pilot, the well known northern flyer, Con Farrell, sitting in an open cockpit.

I am not speaking for Moose Jaw alone, Mr. Chairman. At a recent meeting of the sessional committee on railways, steamships and air lines it was indicated by Mr. Gordon McGregor, T.C.A. president, that by 1961 the T.C.A. will be operating an all turbine powered fleet, consisting of Viscounts for the shorter distance operations; Vanguards for the medium distances and DC-8's for the long-range flights.

T.C.A. flights 150 and 151, operating between Winnipeg and Calgary, using DC-3's, now touch down at Brandon, Yorkton, Regina, Swift Current, Medicine Hat and Lethbridge. Mr. McGregor's statement that all turbine powered aircraft will be operated by T.C.A. by 1961 indicates that there will be no DC-3's in operation by that time. Most of the smaller airports mentioned above have runways that cannot handle the larger planes. This means that these cities might also, like Moose Jaw, lose their regular scheduled air flight service. I am sure this matter is being given very serious study by air flight experts with the object of accommodating the points now on T.C.A. flight 150 and 151 schedules.

I wish again, Mr. Chairman, to emphasize to the minister, and through him to the air transport board the need to include Moose Jaw in such a service, and the claims of Moose Jaw to be included in such a service.

I wonder whether the minister would comment on the future policy with regard to prairie cities in the light of Canadian flight schedules after 1961?

Mr. Hees: This is, as I am sure the hon. member realizes, and as he has pointed out, a very difficult problem and a major problem and it is one which is under very serious study at the present time.

Mr. Fisher: Has the minister had any indication from the civil aeronautics board in the United States as to the position of North Central Airlines with regard to their wish to establish a line to the Canadian lakehead which would link up to Minneapolis?

Mr. Hees: Nothing has come through from the United States with regard to this matter.

Mr. Fisher: If the board in the United States does entertain this application from North Central Airlines, what part could be played by the local people in that area? We are very anxious to have this particular franchise established. And what part is played by the air transport board in relation to the Department of External Affairs in this matter?

Mr. Hees: The hon. member asked what the people of the lakehead could do to further this application, and the answer is that they could go to Washington and support the application when it comes before the air transport authority there. The hon. member asked what is the role of our air transport board here. It is to license the airline once a licence has been granted to the airline by the air transport authority in the United States.

Mr. Fisher: Is the minister now satisfied that the whole question of international air agreements can go much faster than a year ago when he said he was not able to make much progress in getting together with the United States authorities?

Mr. Hees: I regret to say that the answer is, no. We try on every possible opportunity to reach agreement with the United States on these matters but we find the going hard.

Mr. Fisher: In pilotage and then, again, in the air we seem to have repeated and consistent delays. The minister says, of course, that it is not the fault of his department. What seems to be the problem in the channel of communications?

Mr. Hees: There is no problem in communications but we find it is difficult in all these cases to get the United States authorities, first, to sit down and talk and, second, to agree to what we believe to be fair propositions. They are tough bargainers.

Mr. Fisher: Does this mean that they will not pay attention to Canadian interests because, perhaps, these are considered minor matters and there are more important matters with which the authorities in the United States want to deal, or is it because they want the highest possible rate, and the department has to struggle and struggle with them?

Mr. Hees: I do not think it would do international relations any good if I were to describe these things in intimate detail. All I will say is that we are doing our best to reach agreement with the United States. We have our propositions which are fair and reasonable, and I am sure they do, too, but we find it difficult to reach these agreements, though it is not for lack of trying on our part.

Mr. Fisher: One last question. Who replaced the member of the air transport board who died last year?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Paul Davoud who is the present chairman.

Mr. Fisher: Could the minister give us any idea of his background?

Mr. Hees: There is no secret about this. A press release was made, his background was given in great detail, and since it was in all the papers I am surprised the hon. member has not read it. We have not got the details of his background here, but I thought every hon. member was thoroughly familiar with them because this was an important appointment. I should have thought that the hon. member would have read the announcement.

Mr. Fisher: I did, but I was not able to discover anything about his political persuasion.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I am able to say that I have no idea what party he chooses to support.

Item agreed to.

Mr. Hanbidge: I wish to speak on item 443—

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to consideration of private and public bills, the former having precedence, in accordance with standing order No. 51.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

PROVISION OF MINIMUM RATE OF WAGES FOR EMPLOYEES

The house resumed, from Friday, February 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Peters for the second reading of Bill No. C-8, to provide for minimum wages for employees.

Mr. J. F. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, when the debate adjourned on February 27 I had just risen to make a few comments on this bill. Perhaps, to refresh our memories, I should refer to the explanatory note of the bill. It says:

The purpose of this bill is to establish a minimum rate of wages with respect to all employees in Canada who come under federal labour jurisdiction. This bill provides that such minimum rate of wages shall be $1.25 per hour. The bill also provides that its terms do not affect any employee whose rate of wages is higher than the minimum established by this legislation. However, any rate of wages less favourable to employees than $1.25 per hour is superseded by this bill.

The last time this was discussed I had expressed approval of the principle of a minimum wage law. I was about to differ with the principle of this bill, and I think that one of the main objections to it lies in the fact that it says that this bill can apply only to those who come under federal jurisdiction. I believe that to be a serious defect in the bill and I believe it would nullify the value that it would have otherwise. The second objection I take to it is that $1.25 an hour may be suitable in one part of the country; it may be too low in another part and it may be too high in still another part of the country.

I should like now to refer to one matter which the member for Timiskaming mentioned when he introduced the bill. He compared it with a previous minimum wage bill which had been introduced in 1935 and was actually enacted by the parliament of Canada. That bill, of course, did differ greatly from the present one inasmuch as its purpose was to apply to everyone in Canada, not only to those under federal jurisdiction. This is a matter that seems to come up quite often these days. When we come to enact legislation we find a conflict of jurisdiction between the federal and provincial governments.

I think nearly everybody who took part in the debate of that day did refer to the fact that this legislation had been referred to the Supreme Court of Canada which ruled it to be ultra vires. I must confess that at the time this was last discussed I felt that was the case myself. However, I have before me the page of the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada at that time and I believe this has a very important bearing on all of our labour legislation.

It has been suggested many times that we should have uniform labour legislation and, of course, the purpose of the bill in 1935 was to ratify one of the conventions of the international labour organization which had been set up pursuant to the treaty of Versailles and under the auspices of the League of Nations. We are still members of that international labour organization, and we have not been able to ratify many of the conventions of that organization because of this very conflict that arose over the jurisdiction of federal and provincial governments.

I should like to refer to the judgment of the supreme court at that time, because as it turns out the legislation was not found to be ultra vires by the supreme court. Three of the justices held that it was intra vires of the federal government and three justices held that it was ultra vires. As a result, it was referred it to privy council who then declared that it was ultra vires. Of course, we are not faced with that situation today. If the same decision had to be made over again it would be the Supreme Court of Canada who would have the decision to make and for that reason I think it is very interesting to look at the decision that was made by the supreme court at that time. I am just going to refer to it now.

I hold in my hand a book from the library of parliament entitled "Supreme Court and Privy Council Judgments Special Legislation—1934-1935". This is in the matter of a reference as to whether the parliament of Canada had legislative jurisdiction to enact the Weekly Rest in Industrial Undertakings Act, being chapter 14 of the Statutes of Canada, 1935; the Minimum Wages Act, being chapter 44 of the Statutes of Canada, 1935; and the Limitation of Hours of Work Act, being chapter 63 of the Statutes of Canada, 1935. There was a good deal of other social legislation enacted by the Bennett government at that time and the other acts that were passed at that time were ruled ultra vires by the supreme court. However, in this case, as I pointed out, there were three judges on each side. This is the head note:

> Held, per Duff C. J. and Davis and Kerwin J. J., that these acts are intra vires of the parliament of Canada; per Rinfret, Cannon and Crocket J. J., that they are ultra vires.

I should like to read a portion of the judgment of the three judges who held that it was intra vires of the federal government.

> From two main considerations, the conclusion follows that legislative authority in respect of international agreements is, as regards Canada, vested exclusively in the parliament of Canada. First, by virtue of section 132 of the British North America Act, jurisdiction, legislative and executive, for the purpose of giving effect to any treaty obligation imposed upon Canada, or any one of the provinces of Canada, by force of a treaty between the British Empire and a foreign country, is committed to the parliament and government of Canada. This jurisdiction of the dominion the privy council held, in the Aeronautics case and in the Radio case is exclusive; and consequently, under the British North America Act, the provinces have no power and never had power to legislate for the purpose of giving effect to an international agreement: that, as a subject of legislation, is excluded from the jurisdiction envisaged by section 92.
> Second, as a result of the constitutional development of the last 30 years, and more particularly of the last 20 years, Canada has acquired the status of an international unit, that is to say, she has been recognized by His Majesty the King, by the other nations of the British commonwealth of nations, and by the nations of the world, as possessing a status enabling her to enter into, on her own behalf, international arrangements, and to incur obligations under such arrangements. These arrangements may take various forms. They may take the form of treaties, in the strict sense, between heads of states, to which His Majesty the King is formally a party. They may take, inter alia, the form of agreements between governments, in which His Majesty does not formally appear, Canada being represented by the governor general in council or by a delegate or delegates authorized directly by him. Whatever the form of the agreement, it is now settled that, as regards Canada, it is the Canadian government acting on its own responsibility to the parliament of Canada which deals with the matter. If the international contract is in the form of a treaty between heads of states, His Majesty acts, as regards Canada, on the advice of his Canadian government.

It goes on with two or three further instances and I will refer to one particularly farther down the page. It says:

—in all these matters the authority of parliament in not merely paramount but exclusive.

The Minister of Labour was asked a question in the house a few days ago with respect to why we had not ratified some of the conventions of the international labour organization. I believe this is a matter worth pursuing and if we can find some way of enacting legislation that will apply to the whole country I think it would be very worth while. However, in view of the fact that the bill would only apply to those who come under federal jurisdiction, as it exists at the present time I am sure everyone will agree that the bill is not suitable.

The hon. member who introduced the bill placed on Hansard information as to the minimum wage provisions of the various provinces. We find that the amounts range from a low of 35 cents per hour in Newfoundland to a high of 75 cents per hour in British Columbia. It would seem to me to be absolutely ridiculous to have legislation providing for a minimum wage of $1.25 an hour which would apply to employees of federal organizations in a province and at the same time a provincial statute making provision for a minimum wage of only 35 cents an hour. It would be completely discriminatory in the case of firms that came under federal jurisdiction.

I think that emphasizes the other point I have made that from the range of minimum wage rates in the various provinces across Canada we can see that one minimum wage might not be suitable and if federal legislation were enacted applying to the whole country that would not mean that there would not have to be varying rates. Certainly that was taken into consideration in the original legislation enacted in 1935. Provision was made for varying rates across the country if that was found to be necessary, and I firmly believe that is the case. Therefore for the reasons I have mentioned I strongly suggest that this measure be rejected at the present time.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to say how very privileged I am to have the opportunity of speaking on such an important measure as minimum wages, the subject before the house at this time. I should also like to take this opportunity to commend most heartily the hon. member who has brought this legislation before the house because I feel that I am not alone and that in fact every hon. member of the house is against the possibility of any one Canadian or any group of Canadians, any one labourer or group of labourers, being exploited as a cheap labour source. This, sir, is intolerable. In fact, one of the principles of the bill is concerned with protecting people against such exploitation. As the hon. member who has just spoken has so well pointed out, our ability as a federal legislative body is limited with regard to minimum wages, but I believe that every member of the house is definitely against those conditions which permit the exploiting of a cheap labour source.

Before I go into the actual merits of the bill I want to touch very briefly on something I have noticed during private member's hours. There seems to be an attitude that once such bills are presented by hon. members opposite there is an attempt to talk them out. I do not want to go on the defensive or make excuses but I should like to state in the most forthright and sincere manner that invariably bills presented to the House of Commons during this hour are of a contentious or complicated nature and require sincere and close study by all members of the house. For my part I should simply like to state that I do not think there is political cowardice involved in any sense whatsoever when I say I am not prepared to vote on this bill at the present time.

I do not suggest that this legislation should be shelved but it needs objective study and I feel that the discussion during private members' hours helps to contribute to the gathering of material which in turn will help to contribute to good legislation that will stamp out the ability of any employer to exploit a cheap labour source. Let us look at clause three of the bill. As has been pointed out time and again by previous speakers, clause three provides as follows:

This act applies to and in respect of employment upon or in connection with any work, undertaking or business that is within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, including, but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing—

As has been pointed out, our ability to be very effective in a legislative way with regard to minimum wages is restricted here.

I say this because I think it is most important that after the debate is over no member of the House of Commons should try to go out and say to the public that what is involved is legislation to provide a minimum wage of $1.25 right across the board for all types of work in all areas of Canada from coast to coast. That is just not the case.

Before preparing my notes for this debate I talked at length with officials of the Department of Labour and I am sincerely satisfied that the question of minimum wage legislation—I know this is an often used expression—is receiving active and thorough consideration by the Department of Labour. I think that a definition of minimum wage is something that we should try to arrive at in our discussion of the subject. Historically the definition of minimum wage in by-gone days was a living wage. Later minimum wages were described in relation to varying standards of living. At the international labour organization conference in 1928 minimum wage was described as a suitable standard of living.

Within the provincial sphere we find that during the past years the provinces have tended to define a minimum wage as a wage sufficient to cover the cost of living. This has been arrived at by preparing a list of commodities necessary for a worker and his family to be able to live in a suitable manner. Herein lies a very important attempt to define exactly what we mean by a minimum wage. We know that a minimum wage for skilled labour is often arrived at by collective agreement brought about by union activity. This is done under the collective agreements act in the province of Quebec and, in the other provinces, under the industrial standards act. In fact I think it is most important that we point out right now that because of the conditions to which the hon. member who has just spoken referred, because of varying local conditions right across the nation, I feel it is important that union activity, not always but largely union activity, brings about the necessary minimum wage levels.

It is becoming increasingly apparent across the country that it is the unions who, by their responsible actions, are bringing about at least what we should call minimum wages for the workers under their jurisdiction. It was pointed out how difficult it is, even within a province, to arrive at uniform minimum wage legislation. Zones have to be set up between industrial and rural areas. As the hon. member who has just spoken pointed out, in most provinces the minimum wage is different from the amount that we are now discussing in this chamber.

Another thing that comes to my mind in looking over the proposed measure—I can be corrected if I am wrong—is that so far as I can ascertain this is the first time that the federal parliament has attempted to deal with the problem of minimum wages by statute. In the past it has seemed wiser not to deal with minimum wages per se by statute. Naturally, with the experience of the past before us I am led to wonder if certain risks are not involved in dealing with minimum wages by statute. We see that in those specific provinces which I have already mentioned there are minimum wages fixed by minimum wage boards.

Before closing, there is one thing that I do want to stress most emphatically, and it is this: We are not hiding anything, but this is definitely a matter of considerable importance to the labouring force. I believe the Progressive Conservative party has shown what its attitude toward the workers of this country is since we came to power. We have the contemplated amendments to the unemployment insurance legislation before us. The Minister of Labour has actively placed great emphasis on the national placement service of the Department of Labour. During the last session we saw the Minister of Labour introduce legislation to extend the unemployment insurance benefits. It is most important in my opinion that the problems of management and labour are approached with a high degree of forthrightness and statesmanship by the members of this house.

I personally feel that good management-labour and in turn good management-labour-government relations constitute the most important single domestic consideration before this House of Commons. I well remember, in my early college days, when the Liberal party called themselves the liberal compromise, middle of the road party. They told us that truth never lay at the extremes. What did that mean, Mr. Speaker? I shall tell you what it means. While the princes of privilege, with their grab-bag of fetishes forgot their stewardship and bowed before the throne of Mr. Howe, the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) was calling us the party of St. James and Bay streets. While the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) divided race from race, the hon. member for Essex East put party before national interest and invariably divided labour from management. Today, I think our party has shown time and time again that labour's interest is always the national interest. We do not divide and rule, but our party has established by its legislative commitments a good atmosphere in this field for co-operation between labour, management and government. I feel that the paramount consideration in the minds of members of parliament should be the keeping of this atmosphere intact because, as I say, this is the most important single domestic consideration that we have before us today.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to put a great many words on Hansard, but I do appreciate this opportunity of making a few remarks on Bill No. C-8 brought forward by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). The purpose of this bill has already been stated, but perhaps I should put it on the record again. As I understand it, the purpose of the bill is to establish minimum wages with respect to all employees who come under federal labour legislation. I shall deal later with the specific employees I have in mind.

The bill provides that such minimum rates of wages shall be $1.25 per hour. The bill would also provide that its terms will not affect any employee whose rate of wages is higher at the moment than the minimum that would be established by the bill, but any rate of wages less favourable to the worker than $1.25 per hour is superseded by the bill. I should like to remind the house, for the record, that in the memorandum presented to the cabinet on January 22 of this year by the Canadian Labour Congress, legislation of this nature was requested. I quote from the submission, the start of the second paragraph on page 28:

> We believe parliament should enact a national minimum wage of $1.25 an hour and a national maximum work week of 40 hours.

With this I fully agree, and I shall try to elaborate in a minor way why that is so. The previous speaker has said that unions were doing a good job, and that is quite true. It is also true to say that approximately 400,000 employees engaged in industry come under federal jurisdiction, about 70 per cent of whom are covered by collective agreements. However, there are still a large number who are not so covered, and I refer to the employees in our own national parks.

In Cape Breton, we have the beautiful Cape Breton Highlands national park. Despite recent increases, the labour rate paid at this park now is still only $1 per hour. In correspondence with the Department of Labour I am informed that in order to determine the rates of pay to recommend to employing departments for prevailing rates employees wage surveys are conducted by the labour department to ascertain the rates paid by private industry in the area for similar work. I am informed also that each survey is a personal survey, conducted by an officer of the department right in the field. Studies are also made of any collective agreements that have been sent in to the labour department at Ottawa and which affect wage rates in the area under review.

It is rather difficult for me to understand why such a low rate is paid in Cape Breton Highlands park. It must be rather difficult to make a proper survey of industry in the immediate area because, other than a small fish plant and a gypsum operation, no other industry exists in the county. I may say that the hourly rate that is paid in the gypsum operation is higher than that paid in the park.

Possibly one solution could be arrived at if the survey was made taking into consideration the industrial area of Cape Breton which is not too many miles distant. It is also my information that the aforementioned wage surveys and recommendations for any necessary revisions in the prevailing rates are made only when the labour department is requested to do so by the employing department. Because of these circumstances it is possible that a goodly period of time would go by before a new survey would be made, possibly because of an oversight on the part of the department concerned. I personally cannot see any justification for a wage earner to be paid the sum of $1 per hour doing the same work in this park while, for instance, in the Banff national park the hourly rate is $1.65.

For the information of the committee I should like to quote and put on the record the hourly rates paid at the various national parks throughout Canada. This is information which has been received from the department of northern affairs. Then hon. members will have an idea of what I am trying to get at. The rates are as follows:

Labour Rates in National Parks Across Canada
(Hourly Rates)

Ottawa	$1.30
Banff National Park	1.65
Jasper	1.60
Kootenay	1.65
Elk Island	1.25
Mount Revelstoke	1.65
Glacier	1.65
Prince Albert	1.35
Riding Mountain	1.25
Waterton	1.25
Yoho	1.65
Point Pelee	1.15
St. Lawrence Islands	1.20
Georgian Bay	1.15
Prince Edward Island	.85
Fundy	.95
Cape Breton Highlands	1.00
Terra Nova, Newfoundland	1.00

In view of these figures I have given, if for no other reason, I am sure all hon. members of this house will realize why I feel that the principle of this bill is most important. I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Timiskaming for bringing it into the house and to assure him of my support.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I had intended in any event to say a few brief words in support of this bill. But if I had any reluctance to do so, that reluctance has been removed by the juvenilia of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) for whom I have, as he knows, a great affection even though I find it somewhat difficult to follow his inconsistencies both in this house and before he came to this house when he embraced the Liberal party as one of its ardent advocates.

Mr. Martel: He finally saw the light.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says that he finally saw the light. It is quite apparent that many people in this country have seen the light as was indicated by the great increase in Liberal support in the results of yesterday's Ontario election.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I know that hon. gentlemen opposite are not too happy about what happened yesterday in the province of Ontario. It is significant that the combined opposition vote yesterday in Ontario is larger than the vote received by the Conservative party.

What I rose primarily to say was that this bill surely now is to be regarded as being in line with the responsible attitude taken now by most people with regard to the need for recognizing that in the complicated nature of the society in which we live increasing attention must be paid by the community to the problems and deprivations of so many people. This bill which seeks to provide for a minimum rate of wages with respect to all employees in Canada who come under federal labour jurisdiction arises out of a concept that prompted the promulgation in this country of wise and widespread social measures both on federal and provincial account, but particularly in recent years on federal account. Those of us who sit in this group do not need to take second place to anyone in this country or to any group in this country in our advocacy of measures seeking to provide desirable social measures for our people. In view of the fact that we belong to the party responsible for family allowances, old age pensions, disability pensions, blindness allowances, the national hospital insurance plan—

Mr. Monteith (Perth): What has this to do with the bill?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and for the veterans charter it is therefore consistent that we should, as we review the problems that face the people of Canada at this time, give as we do support to a measure of this kind.

The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi, in his penetrating analysis which I regrettably did not hear but about which I have been told, spoke knowingly about the problem of labour and management. He should be the first to realize that there is nothing unique in a member of this group in the opposition recognizing that not only is there a problem but also that there are rights and obligations for labour and that likewise there are rights and privileges for employers. We need not take second place to any group in this house because of what we have done over the years by way of seeing to it that the labour groups in this country were given the opportunity of enjoying the full advantage of the part which they themselves in such large measure have played in the building up of their own organizations and in the promoting of their own welfare.

My friend, the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi sought to convey the impression that because there were strong personalities in the preceding administration, we had thereby abandoned our advocacy and our championship of the rights of labour. Great historian that he is and penetrating student of political science that we all recognize him to be, my hon. friend knows, of course, that that is not the case. He knows that we have been consistent over the years, particularly since the days of one of the great figures of our time, one of the greatest men who ever sat in this house, a great prime minister in war and peace, Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, who will always be looked up to in this country by generations to come, not only because he was the first deputy minister of labour and not only because he was the first full time minister of labour but because he was, when it was not popular to be so, the great champion of labour's rights and was more responsible than anyone else in the political life of our country for the advances that were given to labour, which advances are imbedded in the international labour organization constitution and in such charters as the declaration of Philadelphia.

The Liberal party need not take occasions like this to affirm its convictions and to remind hon. members of this house—so many of whom are new, but it is a good thing for these new members to realize this—that at a time when the advocacy of social welfare measures was not popular and at a time when it was not regarded as respectable to fight for labour, hon. gentlemen opposite, who now intervene with these wholly meaningless interruptions, were among those who charged us with championing causes and taking positions which were said to be dangerous.

An hon. Member: Hospital insurance.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hospital insurance. Well do I recall, when we discussed hospital insurance in this house, being told by hon. members and some of the journals which strongly support hon. members opposite that we were embarking upon a program which was beyond the financial capacity of this nation, creating, it was argued, additional props to the so-called welfare state. These hon. gentlemen, having condemned this proposal of hospital insurance and having referred to it as one that would bankrupt this nation, now realizing its popularity, seek to claim authorship when we all know perfectly well that the present hospital insurance act was placed on the statute books by a Liberal government under the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): You were forced to do it by Frost.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says that we were forced to do it by Frost. I am glad that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith), who I regret to say in the time he has been minister has not shown too great an interest in hospital insurance, mentions that.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I regret to have to differ with my friend, but at the same time I think the record will show that we have developed hospital insurance much more quickly than it would have been developed under the previous administration.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is not unnatural for the minister to make that statement, but the records after the election of June 1957, and in the sessions of 1957, 1958, will show that on four distinct occasions I rose in my place and urged the minister to take advantage of the fact that there was a master agreement in existence prepared by the previous administration and awaiting concurrence.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): And we changed that over to—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —by those provinces which had not accepted the program—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a most interesting debate, but I would ask the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) whether he does not think that by now he has dealt fully with the irrelevance of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey). After all, he was only out of order for about two minutes, and the hon. member for Essex East has been out of order for at least fifteen minutes. Therefore, weighing one against the other, I think it might be advisable to return to the bill, which has to do with minimum wages.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, before the hon. gentleman resumes his speech, I think I have a question of privilege to raise about what was said by the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his ridiculous claim that the hand of the Liberal government was forced by Mr. Frost. Mr. Frost claimed that his hand was forced by the reporting of a speech which I made in the city of Kitchener.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Your Honour asked me a question, and I cannot say that I agree with what you have said. This is a bill that has to do with establishing minimum rates.

Mr. Speaker: If he does not agree perhaps the hon. member will indicate to me why he feels he should be allowed to continue?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am now about to do that. On a bill like this where one is discussing a particular measure of social welfare, one is certainly not precluded from discussing social welfare measures generally. After the provocation I have had from the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) who has made a most provocative and I was going to say almost a merciless attack on the hon. member for Essex East, surely that hon. member has the right in discussing this measure to rise and defend himself against the Goliath from Brome-Missisquoi. That is exactly what I am seeking to do. The hon. member has said—

Mr. Speaker: The question I asked the hon. member was whether he did not feel he had done that sufficiently and should now return to the point which is before the house?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If Your Honour is convinced that I have successfully dealt with the argument of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi, I would readily accede; but I can only conclude from some of the interventions of hon. gentlemen opposite that they are not fully convinced that I have completely demolished the hon. member's argument.

Mr. Speaker: I may say that I am satisfied.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Your Honour has said that he is satisfied and I could want no more authoritative imprimatur of my views and of my answer than that. I thank Your Honour and ask the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi to take serious note of the observations which Your Honour has just made.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this house will recognize that the increase in the standards of living of the people of this country warrant support for this measure. There are, of course, difficulties, as the hon. gentleman who has just spoken has indicated, but this bill will set standards which certainly are not excessive in the light of the standards of living which have been achieved by the Canadian people as a whole. We would want to see that our standards were kept at a proper level, and because this is one way in which in this parliament and jurisdiction we can achieve that object, I unhesitatingly rise and support the principle of this bill.

Mr. Morris: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would consent to my asking two questions which are not antagonistic at all?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would be very happy, antagonistic or otherwise.

Mr. Morris: This bill before us includes a provision for the fixing of minimum wage rates by statute. The hon. gentleman was himself a minister and had a great deal to do, as he has reminded us, with various matters. My question is this: In his judgment is this a useful procedure? I have in mind that in all the provinces a minimum wage machinery is established rather than a fixed rate under statute, so that a legislative amendment of the fixed rate is not required; it can be fixed by a board. I ask the hon. gentleman whether he thinks this is a useful way to set minimum wages, namely by statute rather than by creating machinery which is adaptable to change?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This, of course, does not mean that there cannot be further increases in the wage scale, but the use of the technique of legislative decision to establish minimum wages is not by any means a novel one. It exists in my own province with regard to particular groups, and if my hon. friend would read the report of the international labour office, I think for February, or at any rate for one month this year, he would find a review of minimum wage legislation in many countries. He will also find that this technique is one that is used, sometimes as the sole method of determining a minimum wage, and also in many jurisdictions as one of the supplementary methods. This does not preclude negotiation. It does not preclude the use of the processes of collective bargaining. It is one way in which we have in our limited sphere of jurisdiction the opportunity of indicating that we are not anxious to see the standards of living of our people reduced beyond certain minimum levels.

Mr. Morris: May I now be permitted a second question?

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I see the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Regnier) is anxious to speak and I do not think I should prevent him exercising the right which was his when the hon. member for Essex East sat down.

Mr. Laurier Regnier (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I, also, am pleased to support this bill although I think it is too limited in its scope and does not go far enough. I was expecting a great deal of light from the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) when he rose to speak on this measure, but instead of speaking about the principle of the bill or the bill itself he tried to show how good his party had been to labour generally. However, in 22 years in office they did not find time or show industry enough to get legislation of this kind on the statute books of Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member permit a question? Does he not remember those eloquent speeches he used to make about the attitude of the party to labour when he was a member of the Liberal party not so long ago?

Mr. Regnier: It could not very well have been on matters found on the statute books of Canada, because I have searched for a minimum wage act and could not find one. There may be some welfare legislation, but there is no labour legislation—

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Regnier: —unless we include the attempt made by Mr. R. B. Bennett in 1935 which was brought before the supreme court and the privy council, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne). I think the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway produced some very telling arguments with regard to this bill, as did the hon. member for Brome-Missiquoi (Mr. Grafftey), but the hon. member for Essex East only talked in general terms to put on a good front for his party, and submitted very little argument. As a matter of fact, I do not know whether he read the bill at all, because the explanatory note speaks about a minimum wage rate of $1.25 an hour, although the bill itself, in clause four, sub-clause one, reads as follows:

> Every full-time employee shall be paid by his employer in respect of the time such employee is required or permitted by his employer to work, or to be at his disposal, wages which are not less than wages calculated at the rate of $1 per hour.

So the bill itself calls not for $1.25 an hour but for $1 an hour. I do not think the explanation of a bill can go contrary to the terms of the bill itself, and I had expected the hon. member for Essex East to explain that part of it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We are anxious to have a vote. That is why I did not take too long.

Mr. Regnier: As I said before, I think the bill is too limited in its scope. Coming from the province of Manitoba, I notice that our minimum wage act has been replaced by the employment standard act which deals with general employment standards, minimum wages, conditions of work, definition of general holidays, notice of termination of employment, the safety of employees and hours and conditions of work in factories. It does not prescribe one set minimum for the province but is administered under regulations which can be made in accordance with the needs of particular localities or the needs in one industry as opposed to another. As the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Morris) has pointed out, the best way of drafting such a measure as this is not by fixing a minimum in the bill but by setting up machinery to devise reasonable regulations which could be changed from time to time without having to amend the act from year to year.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman tell the committee the date on which that statute was enacted?

Mr. Regnier: It was enacted in 1957. It is chapter 20, and it reads: "An act respecting wages, hours of work and standards and conditions of employment for persons employed in industry and business.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman happen to remember the political complexion of the government in Manitoba when that was put on the statute books?

Mr. Regnier: It was in 1957. It was a government which sometimes called itself Liberal and sometimes called itself something else; it was a coalition government.

Mr. Pickersgill: Liberal Progressive.

Mr. Regnier: The leader of the Manitoba government never admitted it was a Liberal government. As a matter of fact, in 1957 he would not be seen with the federal leader of the Liberal party, and that was one of the reasons why the people of Manitoba did not support the federal Liberal party—because their own premier would not be seen with workers for the federal Liberal party.

Mr. Pickersgill: That statement is not correct, and the hon. member knows it perfectly well. And he is out of order.

Mr. Regnier: I am sorry if I was out of order—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Niagara Falls is out of order in interrupting the speaker.

Mr. Regnier: I should like to say, before I conclude my remarks, that I agree in principle with this measure and feel it should be brought before a committee or discussed at a time when there is more than an hour in which to do so. I think that a full day's discussion would probably be necessary before the house could arrive at agreement on a bill which made sense.

May I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: I think that in fairness to the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Houck) who was not in the house, I should say that another member was in his seat; otherwise my remark might be taken as reflecting on him in some way.

The hour for consideration of public and private bills having expired, the house will revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

It being six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Board of transport commissioners for Canada—

443. Administration, operation and maintenance, $1,112,773.

Mr. Hanbidge: Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to hold up the minister in getting his estimates through the committee, but there is a very urgent matter that I wish to bring to his attention and to lay at the foot of the throne. Some three months ago, when the farm delegation was down here the mayor of Wilkie, Mr. Nat Freidman, and the mayor of Unity, Mr. Jim Dickson—both of these towns are in the north end of the best constituency in the west, the Kindersley constituency—told me that a rumour was abroad saying that the Canadian Pacific railway proposed to discontinue its passenger service on the line between Winnipeg and Edmonton. This is the line that goes through Saskatoon and also through the north end of the Kindersley constituency. It was only a few weeks later that the rumour became a fact and an application was made by the Canadian Pacific railway to the board of transport commissioners to permit them to discontinue the passenger service on that line.

Representations were made by the city of Saskatoon, by the town of Wilkie and others to the board of transport commissioners. If my good friend, the hon. member for the city of Saskatoon were here, I am quite sure that he would not let this item go through the committee without bringing this matter to the attention of the minister. In his absence, owing to the fact that he is on urgent public business outside the country—I believe across the Atlantic—I am going to refer briefly to the brief that was presented to the board of transport commissioners by the city of Saskatoon. This brief was prepared by Mr. S. L. Buckwold, mayor of the city of Saskatoon and Mr. C. T. Hazen, president of the Saskatoon board of trade. It is dated April 20 last. The first paragraph reads:

The Saskatoon city council and the Saskatoon board of trade note with concern that the Canadian Pacific railway has made application to the board of transport commissioners for permission to remove trains 41 and 42, presently providing passenger service between Winnipeg and Edmonton via Saskatoon. After due consideration the city and board of trade have gone on record as strongly opposed to the granting of this application.

I am not going to read the whole brief. One of the grounds referred to in it is that the discontinuance of that passenger service will affect the people living in many communities along the Canadian Pacific railway line as no other passenger service is available.

Reference is made to the reasons advanced by the Canadian Pacific railway for discontinuing the service, and then the brief goes on:

Important also in the elimination of the passenger service is the loss to be suffered by the people who have invested in the communities now being served by the C.P.R. Many of the people in these communities have invested their life savings in buildings and businesses and if through the cancellation of the passenger service the communities suffer loss of population, as they undoubtedly will, those remaining will have to bear heavier financial burdens to continue and maintain essential community services.

It is significant that the C.P.R. has not experimented with any substitute form of passenger service. It is proposing at one stroke to cancel a service extending over a distance of approximately 1,000 miles that has been in effect for 50 years.

Then, they go on to say:

Now the C.P.R. proposes to cancel what amounts to its only main line passenger service in northern Saskatchewan. Actually if the application were granted Saskatoon and northern Saskatchewan would be devoid of all C.P.R. passenger service.

The brief continues:

All organizations providing service for the public cannot expect to make a profit in all of their departments all of the time. Railways are no different in this respect from other businesses, where frequently goods or services are offered at a loss in order to attract patronage for other goods and services. This is notably true in the case of public utilities.

The brief concludes with these words:

Saskatoon city council and the board of trade earnestly request that you refuse permission to the C.P.R. to cancel its Winnipeg-Saskatoon-Edmonton passenger service.

So much for the Saskatoon brief; I have here also a letter from Mr. E. W. Edmundson, the assistant local chairman of the brotherhood of railroad trainmen. The letter is addressed to me and is dated April 24, 1959. Among other things he says this:

This is causing a great deal of concern in this area as it would mean—

That is, the application to discontinue the passenger service. I continue:

—there would be no passenger service of any kind on this Winnipeg-Edmonton line and it would have a very detrimental effect on all towns on the line.

Later in the letter he says this:

From Winnipeg to Edmonton and return there will be a total of 27 brotherhood of railway trainmen affected by such a move. In this area it could affect nine men who have established homes at Wilkie.

The C.P.R. has offered no alternative service whatsoever save to say that there would be improved freight service. The elimination of this train would mean that there would be no passenger service out of Wilkie whatsoever.

In addition to that letter, I received a copy of the brief that was sent to the board of transport commissioners by the town of Wilkie. This brief was prepared by Mr. Walter O. Smyth, Q.C., town solicitor. It is dated April 28, 1959 and it reads in part as follows:

The town of Wilkie and its chamber of commerce oppose the application made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Our stand is supported by the rural municipalities of Buffalo No. 409, Reford No. 379, and Tramping Lake No. 380 as well as the neighbouring villages and hamlets of Revenue, Tramping Lake, Leipzig, Handel, Cloan, Thackeray, Phippen, Adanac, Wolfe and Traynor, all of which would be adversely affected if the application were granted.

Further on in the brief they suggest that the real reason for the loss of business by the C.P.R. on this line is poor service. The brief concludes with these words:

Finally, we would draw the attention of the board to the fact that the company set out townsites along its line and sold lots to prospective settlers on at least an implied promise that railway service would be supplied. Now the company is in effect attempting to transfer its loss to the residents of these areas, because elimination of trains would reduce the capital value of property in the communities now served.

We have no copy of the agreement between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the dominion government, but are advised that it is a term of that agreement that the company would build a line from Winnipeg to Edmonton and maintain service thereon as a condition of obtaining land grants from the dominion government. If such is the case, it would seem to us that on this ground alone the application should be refused.

I am not personally acquainted with Mr. N. R. Crump, the president of the Canadian Pacific railway, but from all I hear he is a great Canadian, a great railroad man and, I believe, is the peer of any of those who preceded him in the office of president of the C.P.R. I have no doubt that while I am only a silent partner in his great organization—I think all that I own in the C.P.R. would probably cover the cost of a couple of rails and maybe a few ties—nevertheless as one of the silent partners I would urge him to continue the service on that line. I hope that the Minister of Transport will use some of the eloquence and persuasiveness—and he convinced me yesterday that he is both eloquent and persuasive—to persuade the C.P.R. to continue that service. I want to assure him right now that there are thousands of people in the north end of the constituency of Kindersley who will rise up and call his name blessed if he keeps that line open.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, trains No. 41 and 42 are the ones that the hon. member has been referring to. The application is now under investigation by the board's inspectors and I am advised that it will likely come to hearing in September. I shall be very glad to bring the representations of the hon. member to the attention of Mr. Crump.

Mr. Hanbidge: Thank you.

Mr. Chevrier: I was also tempted to interrupt when the hon. member mentioned trains 41 and 42 and ask him if they were on time. Here are two very substantial items having to do with the grade crossing fund and also the additional amount which has been voted now for at least two years. As the house knows, we had a very complete discussion last session of the railway grade crossing fund and the amount voted for the additional projects that the board of transport commissioners as well as the government have approved. In order not to delay the committee unduly I wonder whether the minister would report on the position of the grade crossing fund and the amounts that have been spent. I think that would serve my purpose.

Mr. Hees: The amount in the fund at April 1, 1959 was $25,059,606. This amount includes $2,500,000 of the $15 million for the fiscal year 1959-60. Outstanding commitments up to March 31, 1959 were $21,379,116. The balance available in the fund at April 1, 1959 was $3,680,490.

Mr. Peters: Has this item anything to do with the painting of box cars as a safety factor? I have not seen any box cars so far that have been painted and I am wondering how many have been done and what is the extent of the project.

Mr. Hees: The judgment directing the railways to carry this out was issued two months ago and there really has not been time to put it into operation yet but I am sure it will be soon.

Mr. Peters: I should like to point out that there is some urgency involved. Two or three weeks ago a car with a number of young people in it ran into the side of a freight train in my constituency and they were all very badly injured. The train was very long and they came up to the level crossing and did not see it. I should like to see this work proceeded with as quickly as possible because quite a number of such accidents are taking place, many of them fatal. I think this move would be of help in avoiding some of these accidents.

Mr. Hees: We are urging the railways to get on with the work as quickly as possible and we will keep right after them.

Mr. Peters: I understand there is some problem with respect to United States railway box cars. As a large number of United States box cars are hauled by Canadian railways, there is a question of what the result will be if the Canadian railways do it and the United States railways do not. I understood there was some discussion with relation to the use of United States box cars that might not be so protected.

Mr. Hees: As the hon. member probably knows, the railways objected to this but the board has ordered them to go ahead and paint these signs on all new cars and an equal number of old cars.

Mr. Winch: I understand that an order has been issued that all box cars produced and used in Canada must have these reflectors on them but has Canada any authority to demand that all United States box cars coming into Canada shall be equipped in the same manner?

Mr. Hees: All new box cars are having these reflectors put on them and all old box cars as they come into the shops.

Mr. Winch: I am sorry, the minister did not understand.

Mr. Hees: No, we do not have authority over United States cars coming into the country.

Mr. Herridge: That is an interesting point. Do you mean to tell me that the government of Canada cannot issue instructions that no foreign box car shall come on Canadian soil unless it complies with Canadian law, provided our act is amended?

Mr. Hees: I am advised we have no authority to do that.

Mr. Herridge: Well, we are not a sovereign state any longer.

Mr. Winch: In view of the fact that this order has been introduced for the safety of Canadian citizens, may I ask whether any approach has been or is being made to the United States railway companies to ask that a similar policy be followed there with respect to cars coming into Canada? Has any approach been made?

Mr. Hees: I am advised this would require legislation by the United States and that a number of bills have been introduced in congress in the past and none of them has passed yet.

Mr. Herridge: We have the authority to pass any legislation we wish in this chamber. If we amended the act would that not be sufficient to cause United States cars coming into Canada to be equipped in compliance with the law?

Mr. Hees: The main objection would be that this would completely interrupt trans-border trade. It would be very detrimental to trade across the border.

Mr. Winch: I understand the explanation of the minister but in view of the fact that it is now mandatory with respect to all Canadian box cars will the minister endeavour to have the Department of External Affairs make it known that this is now the law in Canada and ask whether it is possible for United States box cars to be so equipped so that they will comply with our Canadian law?

Mr. Hees: Yes, we will do that.

Item agreed to.

Canadian maritime commission—

445. Administration, $153,488.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the minister what is the present state of the Canadian ocean going fleet? I should like to know how many vessels were under the Canadian flag a year ago and how many are under the Canadian flag now.

Mr. Hees: I have that and I also have other information. As of March 31, 1958 ocean going ships in foreign trade numbered 17; as of March 31, 1959 the number was 13. As of March 31, 1958 ships in the coasting trade numbered 60 and as of the same date this year they numbered 61. Lakers and St. Lawrence canalers numbered 193 in 1958 and the same number this year. Upper lakers numbered 78 last year and 80 this year. To summarize, total ships as of March 31, 1958 numbered 348 and as of March 31, 1959, 347. I will also give ships under United Kingdom registry. As of March 31, 1958 there were 66 and on the same date this year there were the same number.

Mr. Chevrier: These are Canadian ships under United Kingdom registry.

Mr. Hees: Yes, Canadian owned ships.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask what action, if any, the minister or the government have taken in the last year to stem the decline of the Canadian merchant fleet?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, we have been no more able to stem the decline of the Canadian merchant fleet than was the former government. I have some figures here that I know will interest the hon. member and the committee. The total number of deep sea ships under Canadian registry in 1946 was 151. By 1956, when the former government was still in office, this number had shrunk to 26 and as of March 31 of this year, the number was 13. I think the hon. member and the committee will realize that this is a continuing process and that it appears no government is able to do very much about it.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister did not answer my question. I simply asked the minister what action the government has taken to stem the reduction. If he wants to make a comparison, he said himself that there were 151 in 1946 and this number had declined to 26. Now, this number has been cut in half. My question, which the minister did not answer when he said that no more was done than before, is, what has been done by the present administration to stem the decline of the Canadian merchant fleet?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, the decline has largely taken place as a result of the sale of old ships. There has been some replacement, but not very much.

Mr. Chevrier: Has the decline resulted from the sale of the Canadian National ships?

Mr. Hees: As the hon. member knows, being pretty good at arithmetic, the eight ships—

Mr. Chevrier: I am not nearly as good as the minister is.

Mr. Hees: The hon. member is pretty good; he knows quite well that there were eight Canadian National West Indies Steamships ships sold and therefore, of course, they would not be listed amongst the thirteen.

Mr. Chevrier: Has the minister or the government given any consideration to giving Canadians engaged in this field of enterprise any tax reductions such as was done by the introduction of legislation for depreciation two years ago, I believe?

Mr. Hees: Yes, that is under study at the present time and one branch of the industry is going to submit detailed proposals in the very near future.

Mr. Chevrier: There is another matter which I should like to bring to the minister's attention, and it is this: A large part of the present Canadian ocean-going fleet consists of vessels built during the war which are no longer competitive with vessels from other countries. For instance, this can be seen already with the opening of the seaway where many owners of Canadian vessels feel that they are going to have difficulty in competing with ships coming from countries where the cost of constructing a ship is about 50 per cent lower than in Canada and the cost of operating a ship about 40 per cent less than in this country. I am wondering if any consideration has been given to assisting in offsetting the disappearance of these non-competitive vessels?

Mr. Hees: Yes, as the hon. member knows, the vessel construction assistance act was brought in some years ago and amended last year. It has been of considerable assistance.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes. Has the minister given further consideration to this question of a subsidy? I understand that at one time there was consideration given in the Department of Transport to subsidizing a small number of ships which would compete, that is subsidizing them from the point of view of capital expenditures as well as from the point of view of operation?

Mr. Hees: No, that type of subsidy is not under consideration.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a final question? I am sure the minister has in mind the statements made by the Minister of Public Works not so many years ago in which he said positively that the moment his friends got into office there would be a merchant vessel on the oceans of the world which would compete.

Mr. Hees: I somehow remember those speeches.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is one question I should like to ask the minister before this item carries. Has he yet found the budget for the Canadian National steamships for this year?

Mr. Hees: Yes, I found it buried down in Halifax harbour.

Item agreed to.

446. Steamship subventions for coastal services, as detailed in the estimates, $5,553,500.

Mr. Chevrier: I wish to bring a matter to the attention of the minister, and it is one which would have been brought up by the hon. member for Levis, had he been here. It has to do with a steamship subsidy which was paid by the maritime commission under the jurisdiction of the department for a service operating between Isle aux Grues and Montmagny. It seems to be a most unfortunate situation because a ferry operator who had been running this service for a period of 30 years, and who had been receiving a subsidy for the last 10 years of $3,300 for summer service, $1,700 for winter service, plus $1,000 per year from the postal department, now finds himself without the subsidy at all. In other words, from the information the hon. member for Levis has given me and which I now have before me, it looks as if the department simply cut this man off without giving him the slightest notice. This action was taken with regard to a man who had been operating the service for 30 years.

I should like to put on the record a paragraph from the file that was left with me by the hon. member for Levis:

(Translation):

For close to 30 years, Mr. Gagne has been carrying mail between the Ile aux Grues and Montmagny. Last year, he received $1,000 for this service. In addition to his postal duties, Mr. Gagne operated a freight and passenger water transport service between those two points. The service has been subsidized for nearly 10 years by the Canadian Maritime Commission on the following basis: $3,300 for the summer service, $1,700 for the winter service. It was this grant that enabled him to carry the mail for a price of $1,000 a year.

On March 2, Mr. Gagne received from the Canadian Maritime Commission, a letter,—of which I enclose a copy—informing him that his grant would not be renewed, on the grounds that a bigger ship was required for that service. Never before that letter had the commission asked Mr. Gagne to operate a larger ship.

(Text):

I have a letter in my possession which was written by the director of steamship subvention service in answer to a letter from the operator, Mr. Gagne, dated December 30 and sent to him on March 2, almost three months later, saying that his contract had been cancelled and that he was simply out of luck. It seems to me that if these circumstances are correct it was a most unfair way in which to deal with a man who had been operating this service for 30 years. What is more, it seems to me that the first thing that should have been done at least should have been to offer to give this man an opportunity to perform the new service at the same or similar conditions which were available to other tenderers. Frankly, I feel, and the hon. member for Levis feels, very strongly about this. I think an injustice has been done to this man.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, the Mr. Gagne to whom the hon. member refers has been carrying on this service for a number of years with a small ship incapable of carrying automobiles or farm machinery. Early this year a Mr. Lavoie offered to undertake the service with a ship capable of carrying automobiles and tractors. On March 2 the maritime commission wrote to Mr. Gagne advising him of the situation and telling him that in view of the greater suitability of Mr. Lavoie's vessel his contract would not be renewed. This was two months before the commencement of the service. It is true that the delay was short. But the other offer had only been received recently and there was little time to examine it.

The commission has always tried to award these services locally when possible. In this case both the former contractor and the present contractor are from the area. On March 19, Mr. Gagne, the former contractor acknowledged the commission's letter, and although he expressed disappointment at the short notice and award of the contract to another, he made no mention of his ability to supply a larger vessel.

Mr. Chevrier: Why was he not given the opportunity to supply the ship, as it has been the practice of the maritime commission over a number of years?

Mr. Hees: If he had come forward with a ship of comparable size and performance with that of Mr. Lavoie undoubtedly he would have been given the contract. It was well known that he did not have such a ship, that he had only the one ship and was unable to perform the service. Therefore in the interests of the people who would be served by this ferry, the better and more capable ship was being used.

Mr. Chevrier: Why was he not given a chance to submit a tender on the newer ship?

Mr. Hees: This was no secret to his fellow islanders. They knew all about this. This matter was well known down there and was discussed by them.

Mr. Chevrier: Would the minister answer my question?

Mr. Hees: He had the opportunity. He knew two months before. If he had come forward with a comparable ship he certainly would have been given every opportunity to tender but he did not do so.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, those are not the facts. The facts are that when the time arrived for the new service to be entered upon this man was not given an opportunity to tender. The circumstances and the facts are to that effect. The minister confirms that situation in his reply now because it has been the practice of the maritime commission, when a service like this is brought to an end to give to the former operator an opportunity of tendering on the new appliances.

Mr. Hees: As I have said, it was well known that this gentleman, Mr. Gagne, did not have a suitable ship. If he had had a suitable ship he would certainly have had every opportunity. When he was notified two months before the termination of the contract, if he had come forward and said, "I can produce a better type of ship that can perform the service that is needed by the residents of this area", he would then, of course, have been given every opportunity to tender. But he did not do so. It was well known by all concerned that he did not have a ship. I do not think the hon. member would wish the people of the area to put up with inferior service when a far better service is available to them.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister is just a little bit too suave in this case to be able to get around the circumstances. I can tell the minister exactly what happened. The point is that the new incumbent is a strong supporter of the minister's administration.

Mr. Ricard: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Chevrier: There is this the matter with it. The other man should have been given an opportunity to submit a tender, particularly when he had been operating the service for 30 years.

An hon. Member: It serves him right.

Mr. Chevrier: I hear that interruption which came from down at the other end of the chamber and which was to the effect that it served him right. If that is the kind of policy we are going to have from hon. gentlemen opposite—"it serves them right because they voted Liberal"—it is a good thing to know and a good thing to have on the record. I submit here that this policy is not the kind of policy that should be followed by any department or by any government. A man who has been providing a service such as this should at least have been given the opportunity to tender on the new requirements for the service. Furthermore I am told that the population on the island has decreased somewhat and that therefore it may be quite doubtful whether a larger ship was required. I think the minister owes this committee an explanation.

Mr. Hees: I can say this very clearly. Political considerations had no effect whatsoever and did not come into this matter in the slightest degree. This man was given a contract on one basis and one basis only, namely that he could provide a far better service for the same subsidy. It seems to me to be a little bit strange that not so long ago in relation to some debate hon. members opposite were protesting or suggesting the waste of government money. Here, with the same subsidy, we can get for the people of that area a far superior ferry service. But the hon. member is suggesting that for the same subsidy that this government pays we should put up with inferior service.

Mr. Chevrier: I did not suggest that.

Mr. Hees: That is exactly what you are suggesting.

Mr. Chevrier: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I will not let the minister put those words in my mouth. I am not suggesting that at all. I am trying to get at the difficulty.

Mr. Hees: I have nothing to get at. There is no difficulty as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Chevrier: The point is this. You are talking about a new service.

An hon. Member: Address the Chair.

Mr. Chevrier: Why did you not give this man an opportunity to tender?

Mr. Hees: That man had every opportunity if he had had a sufficiently good ship to support his tender. He knew two months before the new operation started. He was not so shy or so backward as all that. If he had wanted to do so or felt that he had a ship that could perform the services required he could have written us and said, "I have a ship as good as that myself and for that subsidy I will provide as good a service", and of course he would have been given every opportunity. That is the way in which this government treats people; if they come forward with a reasonable proposition they are welcomed with open arms. What we are aiming at is to give the people in every constituency of Canada the very best value possible for their tax dollar and that is what we intend to do. We do not intend to force upon them an inferior service which perhaps had been done for quite some time by the former government because perhaps this man, Gagne, was a supporter of the former government.

Mr. Chevrier: You must have thought that he was fairly good because you carried him for two years after the former government left office. You must have thought his services were satisfactory. However, I want to draw to your attention the manner in which this contract was brought to an end. I should like to put on the record the letter which came from the director of subvention services. It is addressed to Mr. Gagne and is dated March 2, 1959, three months after the operator of this service had written to the director of subvention services. It reads as follows:

(Translation):

Dear Mr. Gagne,

I acknowledge your letter of February 21 concerning your application, dated December 30, 1958, for renewal of your subsidy contract.

I regret the delay that has occurred, but the commission has been conducting a general inquiry into representations it had received for the provision of a larger ship which would allow automobiles and self-propelled agricultural machinery to be transported to the island through the regular service at a reasonable cost, and would avoid the necessity of hiring a special ship for such purposes, at heavy expense.

The commission has reviewed all aspects of the matter and has decided that the . . .

The contract has been awarded to Captain Eugene Lavoie, who operates the—

Then again it is the name of the ship that I cannot make out. I think it is St. Jacques.

(Translation):

I regret this situation, which arises from the increasing number of machines and vehicles on the island, and from the necessity of providing for their transportation.

I therefore take this opportunity to thank you, on behalf of the commission, for your co-operation in the past years.

Yours sincerely, etc.,

(Text):

It is quite clearly set out here that the man had not the slighest opportunity to tender on these new services that the minister, now that his government is in office, wants to give to the people in the area. After all, it seems to me that the man who had been there for so long should at least have been given an opportunity. He was not given an opportunity because he was a Liberal.

Mr. Hees: That is not the case at all. If it was known that the man had a suitable ship he would have been given every opportunity. In communities like that everybody knows fairly well what everybody else has. It was well known that this man had one ship and not one of satisfactory size and capacity. If he had come forward and said, "I should like to have the privilege of tendering" he certainly would have been given it. We are simply carrying out in this instance our policy of providing the best services for the people in every riding in Canada at the lowest cost to the taxpayer.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister a question which I think I should have asked on the previous item, but I know I will be at least 51 per cent or more in order because it is related to ships' equipment. The people of Canada, at least those who are used to using our waters, are very interested in the design of a satisfactory lifesaving vest for use on small craft. I understand the minister called a conference in connection with this matter last year, and I wonder if he could report to the house what progress has been made by his department with respect to designing a satisfactory lifesaving vest for use by people in small watercraft.

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Chairman. We have had several meetings with the manufacturers and users. Improved designs have been submitted and are being examined at the present time, and we consider that satisfactory progress is being made toward this very desirable end.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I am intrigued by this peculiar approach that the Department of Transport has down in this locale where everybody knows everybody else. It seems to me that is a most peculiar basis for operating or changing any services. I know how distinguished these services are because the minister has reiterated a number of times that they give the best possible service at the lowest possible cost, and everybody knows everybody else. What is this principle of everybody knowing everybody else? Can the minister explain how large a community would get before you decide that everybody does not know everybody else and that maybe you could have a bid or a tender, or maybe a public announcement inviting tenders. I would like to know whether Port Arthur and Fort William are the sort of communities where everybody knows everybody else. How does the minister manage to appoint somebody up there who happens to be a brother-in-law of a local Conservative politician?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, to start off with, everybody is somebody or other's brother-in-law, and the fortunate ones have Conservatives as brothers-in-law. That shows they have good judgment and have married into the right kind of family. As to the size of communities where everybody knows everybody else, I would not think for a moment that in Fort William or Port Arthur people would, because they are very big, important and imposing cities and people do not know everybody else. That is the case in large and important cities such as those. But I had the privilege last fall of visiting Isle aux Grues and I visited a great many families there and found them extremely charming and delightful, and I can assure the hon. member that in a friendly community like Isle aux Grues everybody knows everybody else and they are very informed on matters of this kind.

Mr. McQuillan: Mr. Chairman, under the details of this item for steamship services on the west coast, the western local services, one of them is Vancouver and northern British Columbia ports, in the amount of $194,500, and the other is the Vancouver and west coast of Vancouver island service, $100,000. I wonder if the minister can tell me what companies are involved in these subsidies, what ships they provide for the service and the ports of call that they must make?

Mr. Hees: The company is the Northland Navigation Company and the ships are the Canadian Prince and the Tahsis Prince.

Mr. McQuillan: Which ship, Mr. Chairman, operates on the west coast of Vancouver island?

Mr. Hees: The Tahsis Prince.

Mr. McQuillan: I take it that is a new ship which has gone on that run?

Mr. Hees: Yes, that is correct.

Mr. McQuillan: I would like to make a suggestion, although I rather hesitate to do it, about the comparison between the British Columbia coast and the Atlantic coast and the amount of the subventions, because I think there is perhaps the possibility of saving a little money on the Pacific coast. I would like to ask the minister if he has ever given any consideration to initiating a service on the west coast to the island from Port Alberni? I believe it could be done and would give a much more frequent and better service for less money.

Mr. Hees: I am told this has been considered, Mr. Chairman, but it was considered impractical because nearly all the freight originates in Vancouver.

Mr. McQuillan: Mr. Chairman, that is hardly an answer. I happen to know that part of the country very well. Perhaps a great deal of it does originate in Vancouver, but it comes to Port Alberni and is transferred to ships already going down to the other end of Barkley sound so there would be no difficulty in transferring freight into ships going to Nootka and Kyuquot. I hope the minister will also take that out of his serious consideration basket and put it in his urgent basket.

Mr. Hees: Yes, I shall be glad to.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I would like to again bring to the attention of the minister the need of the people of Grand Manan for increased transportation facilities. I realize that is not the direct responsibility of the minister's department, but included in this item is an amount of $95,000 which is a subsidy paid annually to the Grand Manan ferry. Grand Manan is an island in the bay of Fundy, having a population of about 2,600 people, and I would like to put on record part of the brief submitted by the people of Grand Manan and the board of trade to the provincial government:

> As expressed in the text of this petition, the present service when inaugurated in 1946 was at the time classified as a service of temporary nature, subject to improvement when a more suitable vessel could be obtained, and this information would be on file in Ottawa.
> When the previous transportation system was set up in 1930 it consisted of a newly built ferry especially constructed to meet the requirements of this particular service, in which there was accommodation for 12 automobiles carried underdeck, a freight compartment adequate to service this area, and comfortable passenger accommodations for slightly over one hundred people.
> During the years 1930 and 1939 the tourist traffic to Grand Manan showed yearly increase, there was an increase in the number of inns catering to this trade, and expansion programs were undertaken by the already established hostelries.

This ferry service was taken over in 1939 and a converted private yacht put on in 1946. This yacht can only handle nine passenger cars and these are put on with a derrick and must remain on deck. There is a most inadequate freight service and the accommodation is limited to about 20 people. Now the island of Grand Manan, as members of this committee know, is essentially a fish producing area, but in order to ship the fish to the mainland and maintain supplies it must have adequate contact with the mainland by ferry. It is the wish of the people of the island that they be provided with a ferry capable of handling below deck 30 cars and having a reasonable accommodation for passengers. I suggest to the minister that he and the officials of his department should take another look at this question to see whether the subsidy paid by the federal treasury cannot be utilized to supply the people of this island with an adequate ferry service to keep them in contact with the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Item agreed to.

447. Advances to national harbours board, subject to the provisions of section 29 of the National Harbours Board Act, to meet expenditures applicable to the calendar year 1959 on any or all of the following accounts:

Reconstruction and capital expenditures—
Halifax	$ 933,500
Saint John	830,000
Chicoutimi	150,000
Quebec	2,770,000
Prescott	325,000
Churchill	25,000
Generally—Unforeseen and miscellaneous	200,000
	$5,233,500
Less—amount to be expended from replacement and other funds,	938,386
Total	4,295,114.

Mr. Winch: On this item, which I think is a very important item because it deals with the national harbours board, I wish to make one suggestion in particular to the minister, and though this board is, of course, of importance right across Canada, I wish to speak only of its operations as they affect a certain area in British Columbia.

I am sure that all hon. members from the lower mainland of British Columbia, irrespective of party, are keenly interested in and perhaps a little worried about the situation regarding the development on the Fraser river. To the best of my knowledge there are now in the Fraser river area two harbour commissions. We have a harbour commission in New Westminster and we have a harbour commission on the north Fraser.

The Fraser river has played a most important and integral part in the economy of British Columbia. The lower mainland has developed at a very rapid rate, and because of that I personally believe that we have now reached a point when a new look should be taken at the development of the Fraser river and an endeavour made to bring in not only the city of New Westminster but all the adjoining municipalities which have a vital interest in that area. I know from my own studies in the past that the harbour board in New Westminster has had a fairly free hand, but New Westminster as such is now pretty well developed with regard to harbour facilities, and with the growth on the Fraser river of the adjoining municipalities I would dare to guess that inside a very few years the adjoining municipalities will equal, if not surpass, the city of New Westminster in population. But up till now there has been very little interest, if any, in development on the other side of the river and in the upstream and downstream areas.

I know from my personal knowledge that a few years ago this was recognized by the harbour commission in New Westminster, and the commission endeavoured to work out a plan whereby they would have control. That plan failed. The result is that at the present time an endeavour is being made, perhaps without the knowledge of the minister, to tie in the north Fraser harbour commission with the commission in New Westminster. Who instigated this move, I do not know. I have received a great number of letters protesting any such idea. I do know from my own personal discussions with the Minister of Transport that he himself is not a party to this proposal. However, I would draw the attention of the Minister of Transport to the fact that this matter of harbour commissions on the Fraser river is one which I understand includes the activities of his own department, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Fisheries, the Department of Public Works and, I believe, one or two others. Honestly, I am afraid there has not been co-ordination and co-operation between the various departments of government relative to the development of the Fraser river as far as it is concerned as a navigable river up to a certain point and also involving the question of agriculture and of fisheries.

The Fraser river is, as I have said, a most important economic factor in the life of British Columbia, especially on the lower mainland where almost half of the population of British Columbia is concentrated. I firmly believe the time has come when there must be major planning to deal with the problems of the Fraser river and a co-ordinated effort by all the departments of government concerned. The Minister of Transport has, I believe, the major responsibility because the matter comes under his estimates. I should like to ask the minister if he will say whether there is any realization in his department and in the various departments themselves that the time has come to establish a Fraser river control board or commission so as to bring in all the rapidly growing municipalities, such as Burnaby, Port Coquitlam, Port Moody and the others up the river. I am certain that I am not breaking any confidence when I say that I discussed one angle with the minister relative to what is now the understanding by a great many people and organizations on the lower mainland that there is a drive to have the north Fraser harbour commission swallowed up by amalgamation with New Westminster.

Mr. Drysdale: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Winch: Would the hon. member mind if I finished and then I shall be glad to answer his question.

Mr. Drysdale: It is right on the particular point he is now making. The hon. member keeps referring to this proposed amalgamation. I was wondering whether he could inform us as to what is the basis of his information?

Mr. Winch: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I will be glad to. The basis of my information is the minutes of a recent meeting of the Burnaby council where the matter was discussed. The basis of my information is the number of letters that I have received from tugboat operators and other commercial firms operating on the north arm of the Fraser river. The basis of my statement is the statement made on June 5 in this House of Commons by the house leader, which is to be found at page 4386 of Hansard, in which the house leader said:

> The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam advocated the establishment of a Fraser river authority to supervise the development of that great river. An attempt is being made to further the co-operation of the different bodies involved with the river but at the moment there is no plan for an overriding authority. That may come eventually but there would be many difficulties to be ironed out before a movement of that kind could be made.

I say in answer to the question of my colleague from British Columbia that on the basis of my information from municipal councils in the lower mainland, my information from the statement of the house leader in the House of Commons and the letters I have received from such men as Captain Lowrey of the Bridge Towing Limited in British Columbia, and others, this matter very definitely is either under consideration or is rumoured as such.

I bring these matters to the attention of the minister not so much because of the possible abolition of the north Fraser harbour commission, though I would hate to see that at the present moment, but to ask the Minister of Transport whether he would do one of two things. Because of the fact so many departments are concerned—I understand that his own department, the Department of Public Works, the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Fisheries are concerned—can he say here, not so much for himself but for those who are so vitally interested in the lower mainland of British Columbia, and particularly those on the Fraser river—my own riding boundaries are about two miles from the Fraser river but I have a keen interest—can he give us a picture under this item as to what is the position as regards the north Fraser commission and its relationship to any possible amalgamation. As a matter of fact, I would forgive the minister if he did not answer those questions provided he would give us a picture on the development of the entire Fraser river and a possible tie-in with the proposed establishment of a new board under a new system but still on the same basis of a harbour commission under which all cities and municipalities and all those interested, namely agriculture, fishing, tugboats and shipping, could have what is now a basic requirement, namely an over-all Fraser river control board. I cannot think of any other term to use but to use a Fraser river control board. Under this, they could have the most efficient development, the most efficient operation from the mouth of the Fraser river up to the end of navigable waters.

Mr. Hees: Approaches were made to my department with those ideas in mind some time ago. We looked over the whole situation but we are not going ahead with any plans to carry this amalgamation that the hon. member mentioned into effect, and will not do so unless we are approached by the municipalities and the people concerned who express to us a real and considered desire that this should be done. If such a broad board of authority is suggested to us we will be very glad to discuss it with the people who would bring such an idea forward.

Mr. Winch: May I ask a supplementary question? Did I gather from what the minister said that, as far as his knowledge goes as minister in charge of the harbour commissions, there is no suggestion by himself or his department of an amalgamation of the north Fraser river, nor any wiping out of the present board; but if there is any need or request for a Fraser river control board it must come to him as a request from the municipalities concerned?

Mr. Hees: That is correct.

Mr. Winch: On both questions?

Mr. Hees: That is correct on both questions.

Mr. McLennan: Mr. Chairman, in the first place I think the hon. member for Vancouver East is maybe a year or a year and a half behind the times. In the second place—

Mr. Winch: I am sorry; one of our members made the suggestion two years ago.

Mr. McLennan: That is fine, two years ago. Right now you are a year and a half behind the times. In the second place, if the hon. member does not know any more about his own riding than he does about New Westminster I do not think he knows too much about it. He said that the boundaries of his constituency were two miles from the river. Those are the shortest two miles I have ever known in my life.

In the fourth place, there is another municipality bordering the river on the south side of the river, which is considerably larger than the city of New Westminster, and that is the municipality of Surrey.

Mr. Winch: I said that.

Mr. McLennan: The hon. member said "nearly as large". It is much larger than the city of New Westminster. I do not think for one minute that the city of New Westminster wants to control the Fraser river. We have the New Westminster harbour board. What the people in that valley want is progress. They want a Fraser river authority or a Fraser river harbours board; they are not interested in taking over the north Fraser harbour board. It is a different deal altogether.

Mr. Winch: Did the hon. member say "the Fraser river authority?"

Mr. McLennan: It is a different deal altogether, taking under control the whole navigable system of the Fraser river. The north arm is not navigable for deep sea ships and is mainly used for log storage and log towing. As far as the harbours board is concerned, or the Fraser river authority—whatever you want to call it—they are not interested. If the hon. member would stay on Burrard inlet and stay out of the Fraser river you would be a lot farther ahead.

Mr. Broome: I should like to say a few words on the national harbours board as its operations affect the harbour of Vancouver. I have been looking at the 1958 report and I notice that over the last five years receipts and shipments of grain at the port of Vancouver were 1,170 million bushels compared with 1,119 million bushels in the case of Montreal. Montreal, however, has storage capacity about 77 per cent in excess of that of Vancouver and other facilities to a much greater degree. If we look at the figures for 1958 and 1957 we see that in 1958 receipts and shipments at Montreal amounted to 249 million bushels while the figure for Vancouver was 275 million bushels. In 1957 the figures were 172 million bushels for Montreal and 282 million bushels for Vancouver.

Capital expenditures over the last year were $6 million in Vancouver and $17 million in Montreal. I understand from newspaper reports that there will be very heavy capital expenditures for the port of Montreal in the next year or so. I should like to suggest to the national harbours board that they should make a survey of the port of Vancouver to see whether the facilities are adequate to take care properly of the traffic passing through that port at the present time. I think there is need for an over-all look at what they have there because right now I think there should be in the planning stage a major expansion program with regard to facilities.

I should like them to consider an access road all around the harbour which would be of advantage for fire fighting if we had a major blaze in the harbour area. At the present time you cannot get to half of the sheds because they are cut off by railway tracks that parallel the harbour. I think the port of Vancouver has been neglected to a certain degree and that the national harbours board, which after all has been consistently netting at least $1 million and sometimes far more each year from the operation of the harbour, should take a good look at what the future program is to be in order to bring the facilities up to a level more or less equivalent to the facilities in Montreal.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, may I ask one question so that the attention will not all be on Vancouver?

Mr. Drysdale: It is the best port in the country.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I ask the minister how the survey into silting and mud in Saint John harbour, conducted in co-operation with the Department of Public Works and completed a short while ago, is coming along? We are looking forward to the results.

Mr. Hees: A report is being prepared but it has not been received yet.

Mr. Payne: Before the vote carries I want to say a brief word or two. I do not do so with any intention of embarrassing the hon. member for Vancouver South but on behalf of the people of my constituency, which circles the north shore of Burrard inlet, I want to express very sincere thanks to the chairman and vice-chairman for their excellent work and the co-operation they have shown throughout the year. I want to thank the minister for the splendid announcement which I am sure will meet the situation that is concerning the hon. member for Vancouver South and all other members from the lower mainland. In passing I should like to say to that righteous cavalier, the hon. member for Laurier, who appears before the house so gallantly as a Galahad these days, that at times I wish he were sitting over there and I was sitting where he is because I would dearly love to have him justify the neglect and careless action with regard to this great national port during the years of his stewardship.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to reply to the hon. member who has just spoken. I do not know to what years he was referring. I am sure he could not have been referring to the nine years I was over there because during that time the port of Vancouver certainly was not neglected. The minister made a statement in the house the other day dealing with the port development at Montreal and he announced the appointment of an interdepartmental committee to deal with harbour improvements in that port. Would the minister give the names of the members of the committee and the terms of reference?

Mr. Hees: We do not normally give the names of individuals in cases like this but the departments concerned on the committee are the harbours board, the Department of Transport, the St. Lawrence seaway authority and Canadian National Railways. There are representatives of these bodies.

Mr. Chevrier: Could I have the terms of reference, please?

Mr. Hees: The terms of reference simply are to report on the future development of the port.

Mr. Chevrier: Is there no further information that the minister can give the committee? I think the committee is entitled to this information.

Mr. Hees: They have simply been asked to study this matter and make a report and the report has not been made yet.

Mr. Chevrier: I am going to send over to the minister an article from the Montreal Star written by James Oastler. It gives the name of the chairman, the terms of reference, the work there is to be done and what they anticipate doing. I am sure he did not concoct the whole thing. I am not going to press the matter unduly but it seems to me in a matter of this importance the details should be given to the house first before they are given to the press. The details in the statement are so numerous and of such a nature that they appear to me to be pretty close to the facts, and I have some knowledge of what is happening.

Mr. Hees: I just do not happen to have the terms of reference of that particular committee here. I gave the general term of reference, the general purpose of the committee and what they are intending to do. I think that is what the hon. member is interested in. I gave him the departments concerned.

Mr. Chevrier: I think the committee should have had it before the press.

Mr. Hees: I am told that the chairman is Mr. Paul Kuhring, former head of the Department of Transport ship channel branch, and there are representatives from the other departments.

Mr. Chevrier: I am not going to press it.

Mr. Hees: There is nothing to be hidden here.

Mr. Chevrier: I am not suggesting there is. I am suggesting that here is an article containing the kind of information which should have been given to the house first.

Mr. Hees: The hon. member says it should have been given to the house. I did not give it to the press. I had no knowledge of it being given to the press. I do not know whether the press got it from somebody in the C.N.R., the harbours board or the St. Lawrence seaway authority.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister do me the courtesy of reading it?

Mr. Hees: Yes, I will be very glad to.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister do me the courtesy of reading it and then let him compare what is contained in that article with the statement he made in answer to the question by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George the other day?

Mr. Hees: Yes, I will be very glad to.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Chairman, we have been discussing the north Fraser harbour commission and the New Westminster harbour board and I do not feel I can let this item go by with the implication that those more immediately concerned in this particular area have been ignoring the situation. I point out that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, the hon. member for Vancouver South and the hon member for New Westminster, within whose ridings the New Westminster harbour board and the north Fraser harbour commission operate, have been well aware of the problem and are right on top of the situation.

Mr. Fisher: What about air passes?

Mr. Drysdale: I appreciate very much the fact that constituency matters do not occupy the hon. member for Vancouver East on a full-time basis, so he is able to take the time to come down into the Fraser river and tell us how to control things in our own particular constituencies.

Mr. Winch: If you don't raise them, I will.

Mr. Drysdale: I appreciate these extraneous remarks which are constantly injected into the debate. I just wish to put on the record the fact that the members who are more immediately concerned with these respective ridings have been spending far more time and effort, perhaps not in a verbal way but in a more practical way than the hon. member for Vancouver East, in trying to get something accomplished.

Mr. Winch: Leave it to me to raise the questions.

Mr. Peters: I do not know whether the matter I wish to raise comes under this particular item. We do not have a national harbours board, but we have a number of harbours that are under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport. These harbours are on the upper Ottawa lake and the upper Ottawa river area. I should like to inquire if there is any regulation of this area for which the minister is responsible which would prohibit a company from allowing logs to float free? I should like to know also if the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company is subsidized by the department in the operations they carry on in both the Ottawa river and lake Timiskaming?

Mr. Hees: The answer to the second question is no. The answer to the first question is that the problem of logs as they may affect navigation is one which the Department of Public Works and ourselves are trying to solve at the present time. I am advised that there is a special meeting scheduled with one of the private companies at Sturgeon Falls this month to deal with this very matter.

Mr. Peters: As the minister is probably aware, in lake Temagami, for instance, where a similar situation exists it is necessary for the logging companies to have their logs off by June 15. In the past the sweep of lake Timiskaming has been very haphazard, and although we have intervened a number of times with the company we get very little response. There is never a complete sweep of the lake. Is there a regulation covering lake Temagami which provides that the logs must be off by June 15, and would that regulation apply to lake Timiskaming and the Ottawa river?

Mr. Hees: There are no regulations that can deal with this problem. It can only be solved by co-operation or by legislation. As I say, the Department of Public Works and ourselves are studying the matter at the present time.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the minister if the jurisdiction of the national harbours board will be extended to cover the south shore opposite Montreal?

Mr. Hees: That is one of the matters being considered by the committee which we mentioned a few minutes ago.

Item agreed to.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. MacEwan): Item 482?

Mr. Hees: May I ask, Mr. Chairman, if we could take item 486, which deals with the harbours board as well, and which will be found under "Loans"? I should like to do this while the officials of the harbours board are still here.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. MacEwan): Shall item 486 carry?

Item agreed to.

Transport—

St. Lawrence seaway authority—

482. Loans to the St. Lawrence seaway authority in such manner and subject to such terms and conditions as the governor in council may approve, $30,000,000.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): This item deals with the St. Lawrence seaway and is for loans to the St. Lawrence seaway authority in such manner and subject to such terms and conditions as the governor in council may approve. I believe that due to its misconception and faulty construction this seaway will be like a bottomless pit into which we can sink untold sums of money. I believe that this seaway is obsolete before it is opened. I believe it imperative that before any more money is spent those who constructed it should get full credit for it and assume full responsibility. I believe that there should be a full appreciation of the difficulties which this government will encounter in inheriting the seaway and in trying to make it work.

Since Her Majesty has graciously consented to open the seaway I hope there will be no misunderstanding of what I am saying. I wish to inform the house how eagerly we in Stormont are anticipating the visit to Cornwall of Her Majesty and His Royal Highness on June 27 and how grateful we are to the Prime Minister for his sympathetic understanding of my efforts to include our area in the royal itinerary. Although not a compensation, this is a very gratifying recognition of all the dislocation suffered by the people of this historic seaway valley. It is particularly appropriate as no part of Canada is more loyal and devoted to the crown. In fact, many Stormont people have the unique distinction of belonging to the only civilized races that have never lived under any government but a monarchy. My French Canadian friends escaped the horrors of the French revolution and every Scot is a royalist to the core, especially those whose fathers followed Her Majesty's Stuart ancestors.

From the shores of the St. Lawrence we can still gaze south to the blue haze of the Adirondacks through which winds the Mohawk river on which our great great grandparents turned their backs because they were steadfast to their Tory and loyalist beliefs.

Mr. Winch: That was well read.

[Mr. Hees.]

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Whatever I, or anyone else, may say of the St. Lawrence seaway, I gladly proclaim that it is the most magnificent engineering feat of modern times. It is the greatest example today of co-operation between two countries which were formerly enemies. It is a symbol of Canada's growing industrial strength and it is, above all, the occasion which warrants the royal visit to our shores. But unfortunately we are so seduced by the idea of size in Canada that if a thing is big enough and costly enough it is unpatriotic or even sacrilegious to criticize it. I do not subscribe to this pagan heresy which is in the same category as Hitler's "big lie". The pyramids of Egypt were also a great engineering feat, but it is questionable whether the glorification of one man was worth all the labour and suffering involved in their construction.

The hundreds of millions of dollars squandered on the Arrow program was due to the megalomania of one man. Yet, think what this money would have done for Canada if it had been spent on the reduction of taxes or to increase old age pensions and family allowances. Think what this increased purchasing power would do to relieve unemployment. I wonder, Mr. Chairman, will the people of Canada have cause in the next 10 years to regard the St. Lawrence seaway as they now regard the Arrow. After the tumult and the shouting dies, after the captains and the Queen depart, I wonder will the whole of Canada awake as disillusioned as Cornwall with the whole seaway project.

In any realistic appraisal of the seaway there are certain basic factors that must be taken into account. The whole pattern of oceanic shipping is changing. The tramp steamer which was willing to pick up a miscellaneous cargo wherever it could be found is being superseded by the liner, either cargo or cargo-passenger, operating on regular schedule. Although a successful liner service is based on high grade traffic, it requires enough low grade bulky freight for ballast. To obtain this it can offer such attractive prices to the shipper that the tramp has difficulty in competing.

A second factor is that ships will have to operate between Montreal and the lake cities at about three-quarters of their normal rate of movement. In addition to the canal, there are about 67 miles of restricted channel in the St. Lawrence with the least width through the Thousand islands from lake Ontario to Chimney point being 500 feet, and about 150 miles of channel navigation from the head of navigation in lake Superior to the head of the St. Lawrence. The passage of each lock takes up to an hour and the river speed of, say 12 miles per hour, would have to be reduced to about four miles per hour in the canals and about eight miles per hour in the improved channels. In other words, a ship would take over 12 days to make the round trip from Montreal to Duluth, which trip could be performed in 9 days of unrestricted navigation.

Finally, the practical navigation season for ocean vessels is limited to about 6½ months. I know that the average duration of open navigation is 227 days. The average period is roughly from April 26 to December 9. But this is quite different from the practical shipping season. Boats leaving Montreal for Duluth or Chicago would or must return by the earliest possible closing date at Montreal. It would take 18 days to 20 days to make the trip to Chicago, load, and return. With the date of closing of navigation at Montreal coming sometimes as early as November 25, the last departure could not be later than November 5 or 6. Even this would be cutting it so fine that the insurance rates would naturally be increased substantially. The season for boats going only as far as Detroit would, of course, be about one week longer. This is no problem for the great lake freighters because they can winter in the upper or lower lakes, if necessary.

The economics institute of the Brookings institute, which is supported by the Carnegie trusts, as long ago as 1929 asked most of the major shipping companies of the world whether it would be feasible to operate ships on regular schedules over the St. Lawrence route during the summer months and then lay them up for the winter or shift them to regular services or place them in tramp service during the closed season provided, of course—and this is the biggest proviso—that there were adequate channels and harbour facilities with at least 33 feet draft. Without exception those companies replied that no ocean vessel could obtain sufficient revenue to lay up during the winter season. Deep-sea boats, of course, cannot be used as temporary grain storage elevators as can lakers.

The great majority also answered the later questions in the negative. They pointed out that during the winter months there is no general increase of overseas trade which would enable established trade routes to absorb this additional tonnage, and competition is too keen to let outside tonnage come in and take business away from established lines for part of the year only. Vessels could make a profitable trip to Europe in the same time that they could make the return trip from Montreal to the head of the lake. Regular lines would probably confine themselves to ports where they could combine cargo with passenger traffic and of course passengers would land and embark as near to the sea as possible rather than take a long, slow inland trip by water.

Most of the shippers also thought that the seaway traffic would not even prove profitable to tramp tonnage. If a tramp vessel contracts to go from Montreal to the head of the lakes for grain, involving a trip of 18 days, she runs the risk of losing a more favourable charter which she might obtain if not tied up with a long inland trip. A small boat of this size could not carry grain from the head of the lakes to Liverpool at a return comparable with that which shippers can obtain via the great lakes bulk freighters to Montreal and large 10,000-ton to 12,000-ton cargo vessels out of Montreal. This small tramp would be less efficient than your great lakes bulk freighters for the inland voyage and less efficient than a first-class cargo liner for the trans-Atlantic run.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to make the sober statement that the St. Lawrence seaway as a paying route for ocean vessels is obsolete before it is officially opened. This will sound incredible to many people, I know that the hon. member for Laurier, who conceived the seaway, will vigorously refute this statement. It will probably even be denied by the present Minister of Transport who is left holding the baby. But I make this statement in the firm belief that time and circumstances will prove its validity. It is very interesting, in fact, to note that this statement is substantiated by Mr. B. J. Roberts, Canadian president of the seaway authority who is reported in the Montreal Gazette of May 25, 1959, to have stated, when interviewed on his first tour through the seven locks of the seaway:

> From an economic standpoint the use of lakers for bulk cargo may, in the long run, prove to be the best thing for the seaway.

I continue to quote:

> The lakers with smaller crews and lower operating expenses can outdo ocean vessels on the seaway and I think they will supersede the larger ships.

He further declared that by running on a light tonnage instead of full capacity the salt water vessels may prove to be uneconomical. I think this is a masterpiece of understatement.

The main reason for this fiasco is the inadequate depth of the seaway for profitable ocean traffic. The question of the appropriate depth was considered by various United States congressional committee in 1951, 1952 and 1953. On February 29, 1952 the Hon. Charles

Sawyer, secretary of commerce, testifying before the senate committee on foreign relations stated as follows:

> While it is true that only about 10 per cent of the American merchant marine can operate fully loaded in 27 feet of water, the overwhelming part of our merchant fleet—at least 75 per cent—can use the seaway if laden to less than capacity.

It was also stated before the committee that the total additional costs of providing a channel depth of 30 feet upon the unit cost levels of December, 1950 would have been to the United States, $20,260,000 and to Canada, $23,465,000.

The only justification for the 27-foot depth to have been publicly advanced in Canada is to be found in the following single sentence spoken by the former minister of transport in the House of Commons on December 11, 1951, as reported in Hansard of 1951, second session, at page 1765:

> The canal is to be 27 feet deep and that will adequately take care of, I believe it is, very nearly 90 per cent of all the ocean going ships that are in existence at the present time.

In common charity, all that I can say is that the honourable minister, as he then was, must have been including Chinese junks, Portuguese fishing smacks, Jamaican rum schooners and all sorts of other vessels that trade in obscure corners of the world thousands of miles from the St. Lawrence. He must also have included those that could go through empty, but no money is made in that way.

When allowance is made for the lesser buoyance of fresh water and for the squat of a vessel due to forward motion under way, the maximum draft that can be permitted in the seaway is 25 feet. As of December 31, 1957, 978 of the 1,039 vessels in the British merchant fleet—the great proportion of them —are over 25 feet in draft. According to the data supplied by the Canadian maritime commission, which is published in the December, 1957 report of the royal commision on the coasting trade—appendix X, incidentally, pages 261 to 270—it is stated that of Canadian dry cargo vessels of 1,000 gross tons or over, only 10 vessels under Canadian registry and three under United Kingdom registry are under 25.5 feet in draft. The others, 8 under the Canadian flag and 84 under United Kingdom registry, are all over the 25.5 foot limit. Although I shall refrain from doing so, I could itemize the names, tonnages, and drafts of all the Canadian ships.

It must be remembered that the key to profitable shipping is the last two or three inches of cargo in the hold and that an ocean-going ship is a very expensive proposition. Apart from high insurance due to the traditional hazards of inland navigation an 8,000-ton deep sea vessel costs $1,500 a day to operate. In comparison, a laker, because of higher wages, costs $2,000 daily, but it is able to carry 25,000 tons of cargo as opposed to 8,000.

Much of this was pointed out by Dr. C. P. Wright in his excellent book in the St. Lawrence seaway authority, which was published as long ago as 1935, and again in a recent article in the Canadian Banker, which was reprinted in the Montreal Gazette of March 23, 1959, by Mr. Clayton Sinclair. Despite all the ballyhoo about the St. Lawrence seaway, it stands a poor eighth in the size of vessel it will handle in comparison with other great world canals. The Panama canal and the Amsterdam-Rhine canal are 41-feet deep, the Kiel canal is 37 feet, the Suez and Port Arthur, Texas-Beaumont canals, 34 feet, the Houston, Texas, canal 33 feet, and the Manchester ship canal 28 feet. The St. Lawrence seaway will merely be the continent's third largest shipping artery and will not give ocean shipping priority over inland boats like the other two.

Even more fantastic than building an ocean seaway which could not accommodate ocean ships was trying to enter ocean shipping into a Welland canal which was already taxed to capacity. Digging the seaway, while leaving the Welland canal unimproved, was like making a bigger bottle without enlarging the neck. The Montreal Gazette of June 1 of this year commented editorially on the fleet of ships which lay at anchor in lake Ontario waiting to enter the Welland canal as follows:

> It is, of course, true that the flow of foreign ships into the waterway is partly explained by novelty and experiment. But even when all the abnormal conditions are taken into consideration, it still remains doubtful whether the Welland canal is capable of handling any very remarkable addition to the number of ships it has handled in the past.

Last year it was possible for Canadian ships to pass through the Welland canal in nine hours. This year it is taking up to 58 hours. Not only are the costs of these delays being added to what Canadians must pay, but the level of tolls imposed with the opening of the waterways is yet another addition to the cost structure. The users of iron ore, coal and grain face delays in receiving their supplies—still another addition to costs. The Steel Company of Canada, for example, has already expressed its grave concern at having its supplies held up. If grain cannot be promptly and efficiently shipped through the Welland canal, then there is the possibility that part of the crop is left on the farms. Unless Canadian lake freighters are given priority in the Welland locks the Canadian economy will be seriously injured by the St. Lawrence waterway instead of being aided by it; and if Canadian lakers get the necessary priority, the waterway is no longer a seaway.

The hon. member for Laurier has recently published a most interesting book on the St. Lawrence seaway, and despite his modesty it is apparent from his book that more than anyone else in this country or in the United States he was responsible for the conception and the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway. He deserves full credit and full responsibility for this. As I have said, this is a delightful book—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): —and should make an excellent grade 12 civics text.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. MacEwan): Order. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has risen on a point of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, now that the hon. member has proved conclusively that the seaway could not be used, could not the minister withdraw the item?

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): May I continue? Despite the fact that it is such an excellent book, it is not the definitive work that we would expect from a man who took such a leading part in the seaway. Not only will the economists find little there of assistance to them, but even a novice member like myself finds it conspicuously lacking in answers to the questions that concern us here in this house. Why is there no explanation of the monumental disparity between estimated and actual costs? Why were the piers of the south channel bridge at Cornwall not founded on bedrock instead of floating on glacial till, especially when the specification called for them going down to bedrock in view of the fact that a former bridge had collapsed in the same place?

Finally, the whole reason that I am speaking here tonight is to ask, why was the seaway built at all, when it is of little use to ocean shipping? Why was not the old canal system merely enlarged to 22 feet draft, which would enable lake freighters to go down to Montreal, transship grain, pick up iron ore and take it to the head of the lakes? This could have been done for a fraction of the cost, and it would have served the same purpose. We would then have had a toll-free seaway, an all-Canadian seaway, and all the ships would still go by Cornwall as they have done for the last 100 years. Perhaps part of the answer is that the former minister was ill advised by some of his assistants such as Mr. R. A. C. Henry, who was connected with a company contracting with the Department of Transport while the same Mr. Henry was advising the department. I believe that the former minister of transport deserves full credit for his role on the seaway construction and I believe further that the present Minister of Transport deserves full sympathy for his unenviable task of trying to make the seaway work.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to the minister whose estimates are now before us. Is it the minister's intention to comment on the well read speech and charges made by the member for Stormont?

Mr. Hees: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I have no intention either of commenting on the speech which the hon. member for Stormont has made, but I am rising to deal with a matter as briefly as I can which was brought up earlier which comes under this head, and that is the construction of the south channel bridge at Cornwall. I do so with a great deal of detachment because the bridge was constructed after I had left the administration of the seaway, although I must admit that the contract was awarded shortly before I left. I desire to deal with it because of some of the statements which were made by the hon. member for Assiniboia, and I believe there are one or two things which have not been brought to the attention of the committee which I would like to deal with at the moment.

The first matter is that it is an international bridge; one-third of it is in Canada and two-thirds is in the United States. By an agreement with the St. Lawrence Seaway Corporation, that is the United States entity, it was agreed that Canada would build the substructure of that bridge and the United States would build the superstructure. It was also agreed that the engineers of the bridge would be Mr. D. B. Steinman, consulting engineer of New York city, who worked in association with Dr. Pratley, now deceased; but the plans and specifications were prepared by Mr. Steinman. The point I am trying to re-emphasize now is that the bridge is one which is located one-third in Canada and two-thirds in the United States.

The other point I am making is that the contract for the substructure was given to a Canadian corporation. Now the Foundation of Canada Engineering Corporation Limited was retained by the St. Lawrence seaway authority to ascertain what effects there were in the piers. It was reported one of the piers on the north side close to Cornwall island had shifted to some extent because it was not lying on glacial till although later this proved unfounded. It was, however, a short distance from glacial till; there was some sediment between the bottom of the concrete and the glacial till. After that had been discovered, remedial measures were effected and further examination was made. An independent board of consultants was appointed in order to investigate the measures, and the board of engineers was composed of two United States engineers and a member of the Foundation Company of Canada. And after they had examined the pier they found that the piers were adequate to safely sustain all dead and maximum live loads and that the remedial works which they had recommended had been completed.

The point I want to make is that this was first and foremost a joint Canadian-United States obligation in so far as the construction of the bridge was concerned. It was a purely United States operation in so far as the plans and specifications were concerned. It was a purely Canadian operation in so far as the substructure went, but I am sure that the United States development corporation would never have thought of placing on the substructure the weight of the superstructure unless they had been convinced, as the board of consultants so found, that the weight of the superstructure would be borne by the substructure.

Then there is also the point that this bridge operates between two countries. This bridge, in so far as the piers are concerned, is not unlike some installations of the seaway authority where the walls were placed on glacial till, and from what information I gained I am confident in my mind that there is absolutely nothing the matter with the bridge. I am sorry that the hon. member for Assiniboia, basing his contention on an anonymous informant, made the statement which he did. The statements which he made are serious and far-reaching because they are to the effect that the bridge is doomed. There is not the slightest evidence that the bridge is doomed. On the contrary, there is every evidence that the bridge is in excellent condition, and it seems to me in fairness to those with whom I was associated over a number of years—though I had nothing to do with the execution of the contract—that I should at the first opportunity make the statement that there is nothing wrong regarding the construction of this bridge.

Mr. Winch: Will you give me time to speak before ten o'clock?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, I will be through in just a moment. Then there is also the point that it is unfortunate that information such as this should be used in the committee when it is of an anonymous nature. If an hon. member feels that something has gone wrong with construction work and will name the engineer or name the person making the charge, or indicate that the person has a reputation with which he backs the charge, then I think those are conditions which should receive attention, but when a charge is made without foundation and without information of that character, and without sufficient grounds, based on information supplied by an anonymous person, then, I believe, no credence whatever should be given to it.

Mr. Winch: In view of the remarks which have been made by the hon. member for Laurier, I should like to ask whether he and the minister have seen the Toronto Telegram of June 12. I would call their attention to the front page, where it says: "Would go 40 Miles to Shun Bridge". The article, written by a staff reporter, says, and I quote:

> The former chief of the St. Lawrence seaway's inspection division says he would drive 40 miles to avoid going over the new Cornwall bridge and that he would not take his family across it under any circumstances.
> J. B. Stirling of Montreal offered to come to Ottawa and testify fully if a parliamentary inquiry or a judicial investigation is ordered by the government to study charges that the bridge is unsafe.

May I also draw the attention of the minister and the hon. member for Laurier to what appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of June 11, where it was reported:

> M. A. Hanson, divisional engineer on the St. Lawrence seaway, this morning said there was no foundation for reports that the south span of the Cornwall-Massena bridge was improperly constructed.

Since this latter statement is at variance with the information which was given in answer to the question I asked concerning the movement of the piers, and in the light of these reports which appear in the Citizen and in the Telegram, particularly the statement by the former chief of the seaway inspection division, I should like to ask the minister with regard to the statement he made, in all sincerity and honesty, that if he is prepared to have a meeting between the St. Lawrence authority and their engineers—everyone responsible—and those of us who have been asking questions on this matter here in Ottawa; that if his offer is not an offer of a secret or star chamber meeting but will be an open meeting, then we accept it. The hon. member for Laurier has seen what is in the papers, and the affidavits, according to our best information and our personal inspection, and I repeat that if the minister's offer means an open meeting we accept. I accept right now, and am authorized to do so on behalf of the hon. member for Assiniboia. But I do not accept it if the meeting is to be held as a star chamber meeting.

Mr. Hees: This talk of a star chamber is the kind of nonsense we have been accustomed to expect from that corner of the house, the kind of nonsense which was talked during the last provincial election, and the result showed what the people in the big province thought of that kind of talk.

I have offered to have the hon. member for Assiniboia and the hon. member for Vancouver East meet with any of our officials, and if they are interested in getting all the information they may ask questions freely and take all the time required to digest the information. If they are interested in getting information, that is the way to get it. Nothing will be withheld, and they will be given all the information they desire. If they are interested only in cheap publicity, which appears to be the case, then of course they will not be satisfied with that kind of meeting because at such a meeting the press will not be present; they will not be there really to get information to satisfy their curiosity as to whether this bridge was properly built. I would like to read a report which I have dealing with the bridge, which was given to me by the St. Lawrence seaway authority. It reads as follows:

> The design engineering of this bridge, both substructure and superstructure, was the work of D. B. Steinman, consulting engineer, New York, under contract with the corps of engineers, United States army, acting in its capacity as contracting agent for the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, and P. L. Pratley, deceased, consulting engineer of Montreal, retained by the St. Lawrence seaway authority as Canadian associate consultant, both as agreed to by the two seaway entities.
>
> The piers were designed for and are founded on extreme dense glacial till. The original test borings made at the sites of the main piers disclose dense glacial till overlying bed rock. Borings were taken into the rock. Standard penetration tests disclose material as being extremely dense with a weight of 145 pounds per cubic foot, as compared with 148 pounds for concrete. The glacial till required drilling and blasting to excavate. There has been no settlement from the time the piers were completed and prior to the erection of steel. The factor of safety is at least one and a half under the most extreme conditions of load.
> After the piers were erected test borings made in the normal course by seaway engineers revealed a lack of proper bonding between the base of the piers and the glacial till. This was remedied under expert supervision and an engineering board representing both Canadian and United States interests has certified that the piers and the soil on which they rest are now adequate to sufficiently sustain all dead and maximum live loads.

Mr. Winch: If I may, I should like to say I regret very much that the minister should say that I speak nonsense. He and I are very good friends, and I think sincere and honest friends. I do not speak nonsense in the house. I think it is the responsibility of a member—although I am not an engineer—that when he reads that a former chief of the St. Lawrence seaway inspection division makes a statement which appears on the front page of one of the largest circulating papers in the country to say something about it. You cannot say that because a member reads and quotes and uses such an article that he is speaking nonsense. I want to make that very clear because I have a great many friends on the other side, althought we differ in politics. I do not speak nonsense on the floor of the house. I try to take the information which comes to hand.

Am I to understand from the minister that in view of this he still feels that any meeting whatsoever must take place in private and that the public and the press are not to be entitled to know what perhaps a man like Sterling or others have to say? I am just asking, what is the position of the minister? Is he afraid of the public, or is he not?

Mr. Hees: If the hon. member wants information, and if he wants to take certain friends of his, Mr. Stirling and other people, to help him in his cross-examination of our engineers, I shall be very glad to have him do that. If this is just a press stunt, as I think it is, then I am not willing to have this thing turned into nothing but a circus, and that is what I think is intended. If the hon. member wants information, if he wants to take Mr. Grant or Mr. Stirling, if he wants to take a friend who is supposed to be an engineer, a friend of the hon. member for Assiniboia, then he can come along and talk to our engineers and find out everything that he wants to find out. They will hold back nothing; they will tell him the whole story and that I feel sure will satisfy him as a responsible member of parliament that this bridge was well constructed and is completely safe and will stand the test of time.

Item agreed to.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. MacEwan): This completes the estimates of the Department of Transport.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day, reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, we have had a pretty long siege with these estimates and I think the house leader will find that there has been a great deal of co-operation from all members in connection with the very long and sometimes intricate estimates of the Department of Transport. Will the house leader indicate what the business will be for Monday and the succeeding days, during the course of the week?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, on Monday we shall commence with item No. 18, the resolution concerning pensions for the R.C.M.P.; then item No. 15, the resolution concerning funds for the Canadian National Railways; then item No. 20, the resolution preceding amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act; then item No. 9, concerning a taxation convention between Canada and Finland; then, item No. 14, the resolution concerning defence services pensions; and item No. 2, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. On Tuesday we shall start off with item No. 19 concerning Harrington lake.

Mr. Pickersgill: That will be the first item on Tuesday?

Mr. Green: That will be the first item on Tuesday. Then, following the completion of the business I have listed for Monday, we would take item No. 10, the second reading of the act respecting the superannuation of members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police; then, item No. 3, amendments respecting the Royal Canadian Mounted Police; and item No. 11, second reading of an act to amend the Criminal Code. We would also like to get the bills through, following these different resolutions I have referred to.

The estimates for next week will be first those of the Department of Justice and then the Department of Finance.

Mr. Chevrier: Can the minister indicate what he expects we will be taking, on Wednesday?

Mr. Green: It will depend on the progress we make with the legislation. It will be either on Wednesday or Thursday.

Mr. Chevrier: May we have some indication of when the defence estimates will be brought forward?

Mr. Green: No, I am unable to do that, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Might I just take this opportunity to thank all those who have taken part in the examination of my estimates during the past three days for their co-operation, for the very useful suggestions and ideas they have put forward. I can assure them that all of the suggestions and ideas will be studied with care and attention. Thank you very much for your co-operation.

It being 12 minutes past ten o'clock, the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

DR. RICHARD S. MACNEISH—RECOMMENDATIONS AND CRITICISMS

Question No. 289—Mr. Argue:

1. Has the Minister or officers of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources ever received recommendations from any persons of the profession regarding Dr. Richard S. MacNeish's suitability for the positions he has held at the national museum of Canada?

2. If so, from what persons were they received, and what were their professional positions, on what dates were they received, and what was the nature of each recommendation?

3. Has the minister or officers of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources ever received communications from any person of his profession criticising Dr. MacNeish's competence in any way to maintain the positions he has held at the museum?

4. If so, from what persons were they received, on what date, and what was the nature of the criticism?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

Questions

1. Yes.

2. Dr. James B. Griffin; see return to motion for papers No. 70, tabled on March 25, 1959.

3. Yes.

4. From Mr. T. E. Lee on March 4, 1959 when he tendered his resignation. Mr Lee stated he was not prepared to serve under Dr. MacNeish whose professional competence he was not prepared to accept.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES—ORDER IN COUNCIL—TREASURY BOARD APPOINTMENTS

Question No. 396—Mr. Argue:

1. How many appointments to the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources have been made in each branch in each year since 1950 by order in council or treasury board minute?

2. What was the name of each person so appointed, the date of appointment, the position to which each was appointed, the duties for which each was responsible, and the authority under which each appointment was made?

3. In what country was each of these persons born, and what citizenship did each hold at the time of their appointment?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1. 1950, Nine; 1951, One; 1952, None; 1953, Six; 1954, One; 1955, Two; 1956, One; 1957, Twelve; 1958, Four; 1959, One

2.

NATIONAL MUSEUM—THOMAS E. LEE

Question No. 405—Mr. Argue:

1. Was a Mr. Thomas E. Lee ever employed at the national museum of Canada?
2. If so: (a) what positions has he held there, on what date did he take up each, and on what authority? (b) what was the nature of the duties Mr. Lee was responsible for in each of these positions?
3. Was a civil service competition held for any of these appointments?
4. If so, for which ones and what was the date of each competition?
5. Has Mr. Lee taken (a) the oath of allegiance; (b) the oath of office?
6. If so, on what date was this done?
7. If not, under what authority was Mr. Lee allowed to take a position under the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Act?
8. At what universities did Mr. Lee take his degrees, in what subjects did he specialize, and under whom did he study at each university?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1. Yes.

2. (a) Technical officer 1, (summer seasonal) June 15 - August 31, 1949 by civil service certificate. Technical officer 2, June 10, 1950, by civil service certificate; anthropologist 3, April 1, 1952, by civil service certificate; anthropologist 4, April 1, 1955, by civil service certificate; biologist 3, April 1, 1956, by civil service certificate.

(b) Technical officer 1 and 2, general archaeological duties, lectures in anthropology. Anthropologist 3, organizing, conducting field reconnaissance, intensive explorations and research in archaeology, lectures in anthropology. Anthropologist 4, same duties as anthropologist 3 with greater responsibility. Biologist 3, same duties as anthropologist 4.

3. Yes.

4. Technical officer 2, date of competition not known, temporary eligible list 83133-E1 established 24 February, 1950. Anthropologist 3, permanent eligible list 88267B89, oral interview June 13, 1952. Examined and authorized by the civil service commission, June 24, 1952.

5. There is no record of Mr. Lee having subscribed to the oath of allegiance or oath of office.

6. N/A.

7. Under section 20, subsection 2, of the Civil Service Act. Technically, under section 42 of the Civil Service Act, Mr. Lee should not have received salary until the oaths were taken. It is possible that the records may be defective and that the oaths were in fact taken. It is also possible that a failure in the normal documentation procedures may have occurred.

PAUL MCGOWAN, FORT WILLIAM—RADIO STATION LICENCE

Question No. 435—Mr. Badanai:

1. Was a radio licence awarded to Mr. Paul McGowan to operate a radio station in Fort William?
2. If so, on what basis?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. No.
2. See answer to No. 1.

NATIONAL MUSEUM—DR. R. S. MACNEISH

Question No. 440—Mr. Argue:

1. Is a Dr. R. A. MacNeish presently employed with the national museum of Canada?
2. If so, has Dr. MacNeish done any archaeological or other scientific work in Mexico since his appointment?
3. In what years has he done such work, between what dates of each year, who were the members of each expedition, what was their function, and with what organization were they conected professionally?
4. What was the purpose of each expedition, the places investigated, and the results of each?
5. What organizations sponsored this work each year?
6. Did Dr. MacNeish receive any money payment from any organization for this work?
7. If so, from what organization, in what year, what amount, and was this in addition to his salary from the national museum of Canada?
8. Did the national museum of Canada pay any part of the expenses of Dr. MacNeish's work in Mexico at any time, or that of any member of the party?
9. If so, what was the list of expenses submitted and paid by the museum in each year, and for whom and by whom were they submitted?
10. Of what interest to Canada and Canadian archaeology is the work which Dr. MacNeish is doing in Mexico?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1. Yes.
2. Yes.

3. Dr. MacNeish led various expeditions in order to renew investigations in Mexico at the request of the director of the Harvard University botanical museum and with the approval of the then chief curator of the national museum of Canada. The work was done in the years of 1953, 1954, 1955, 1956 and 1959. During the fiscal years of 1952-53, 1955-56 and 1958-59, work was done wholly on Dr. MacNeish's statutory leave time. Seventy-four days outside duty was granted in 1953-54 and 66 days in 1954-55 in addition to Dr. MacNeish's annual statutory leave. Over the years hundreds of local labourers were hired in the state of Tamaulipas. The department has no record of the persons employed as the expeditions were not organized by the national museum of Canada.

4. The purposes of the expeditions (which had started in 1945-46 and continued 1948-49) were, in general, to determine the prehistory in the state of Tamaulipas and adjacent parts of the state of Veracruz, Mexico. The specific purposes changed as information accrued. Notably after 1953, the purposes were to determine the origin, spread and the improvements in new world agriculture. The detailed purposes of each expedition, most of the places investigated and the results of expeditions will be found in the following publications by Dr. MacNeish:

5. In 1949 the expedition was sponsored by the Wenner-Gren foundation for anthropological research, New York city, which made a grant of $3,000, to launch the expedition; $2,000 were contributed personally by Dr. MacNeish, who borrowed another $1,000 while $350 was contributed by the International News Service.

Questions

In 1953 the botanical museum of Harvard University paid Dr. MacNeish's travelling expenses ($400) during his annual leave so that he might visit Mexico during that time and do the preliminary work for the ensuing year's expedition. This sum was matched by Dr. MacNeish with his personal funds.

In 1954 the following made grants toward an expedition in Mexico led by Dr. MacNeish:

American Philosophical Society, $2,000; American Academy of Arts and Sciences, $2,000; The Botanical Museum of Harvard University, $2,000; The De Kalb Seed Company, $1,000; Time Magazine Inc., $300.

Dr. MacNeish contributed somewhat over $2,000 toward the expenses of the expedition out of his personal funds.

In 1954 the following made grants for the completion of the expedition's work up to that date:

The Guggenheim Foundation, $5,000; The American Academy of Arts and Sciences, $900; The American Philosophical Society, $860.

Dr. MacNeish contributed slightly less than $1,000 toward these expenses out of his personal funds.

In 1959 the New World archaeological foundation of California paid directly the expenses of an expedition in Chiapas, Mexico, which was led by Dr. MacNeish.

Dr. MacNeish contributed over $800 out of his personal funds.

6. and 7. See answer to question 5.

8. No.

9. Not applicable.

10. The expeditions opened new avenues of knowledge as to the origins, spread and improvement of agriculture and domesticated plants in the New World. Much of this information is of use today to plant geneticists both in understanding the process of hybridization and in increasing agricultural productivity. This is of direct concern to Canada's agriculture. It is also of concern to Canada as a nation which not only wishes to improve its own standards of living but to contribute to the world fund of knowledge and to understand the past in its relation to the future.

APPENDIX

EXCHANGE OF NOTES RESPECTING U.S. NAVAL FORCES ON GREAT LAKES

No. 178

The ambassador of the United States of America presents his compliments to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and has the honour to refer to the Rush-Bagot treaty of 1817, which serves to guide Canada and the United States in matters relating to naval forces on the great lakes.

The ambassador wishes to state that the United States navy, in conjunction with the St. Lawrence seaway opening ceremonies and the Chicago international fair in July 1959, has proposed that its amphibious squadron eight (PHIBRON 8), with marines embarked conduct demonstration and training assault landings in the great lakes area. This project has been designated Operation Inland Sea. The location for the proposed landing area has not yet been determined.

The ambassador is authorized to extend an invitation for the Royal Canadian Navy to participate in this operation, thereby making it a combined Canadian-United States exercise, and to express the hope that the Canadian government will share the view of the United States government that this exercise would not be inconsistent with the intent of the Rush-Bagot treaty of 1817.

The ambassador would appreciate the consideration of the Canadian government with respect to this proposal.

Embassy of the United States of America,
Ottawa, February 13, 1959.

No. 207

The ambassador of the United States of America presents his compliments to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and has the honour to refer to the ambassador's Note No. 178 of February 13, 1959, concerning a proposal of the United States navy to have its amphibious squadron eight (PHIBRON 8), with marines embarked, conduct demonstration and training assault landings in the great lakes area.

In conjunction with this project, which has been designated Operation Inland Sea, the ambassador wishes to state that the United States navy proposes to send a task force consisting of about 28 ships including the heavy cruiser Macon on a tour of 24 United States ports in the great lakes area this summer. The cruise would begin shortly after June 26 and continue through July 27. Some of the ships would participate in the previously mentioned amphibious demonstration. The task force commander would be Rear Admiral E. B. Taylor commander of destroyer forces Atlantic fleet. The task force would be composed of two destroyer squadrons one amphibious squadron four submarines, the heavy cruiser Macon and the frigate Mitscher (DL-2).

The ambassador would be most appreciative if the Canadian government would find it possible at an early date to concur in the view of the United States government that this good-will cruise would not be inconsistent with the intent of the Rush-Bagot treaty of 1817. In the event that the Canadian government concurs in this view the United States navy would plan to issue a press release in the near future along the above lines.

Embassy of the United States of America,
Ottawa, March 9, 1959.

No. 68

The Secretary of State for External Affairs presents his compliments to the embassador of the United States of America and has the honour to refer to the ambassador's notes No. 178 of February 13, 1959 and No. 207 of March 9, 1959 relating to the Rush-Bagot agreement of 1817 and containing an invitation for Canadian naval units to participate in certain exercises being planned by the United States navy in the waters of the great lakes.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs notes that it is proposed that 28 ships of the United States navy carry out a good-will cruise of United States lake ports as well as demonstrations and training assault landing exercises in the United States waters of the great lakes.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has the pleasure to inform the ambassador that the government of Canada shares the view of the United States government that the naval movements required for these proposed operations would not be inconsistent with the intent of the Rush-Bagot agreement of 1817 whose application and interpretation are more fully elaborated in notes related thereto exchanged between the Canadian and United States governments on November 18, 1946 and December 5, 1946 respectively.

A further communication can be expected relating to the invitation, extended in the ambassador's note No. 178 of February 13, for Canadian naval units to participate in the proposed exercises.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, June 15, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION TO ADJOURN FOR OPENING OF SEAWAY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition asked the other day whether or not the house would be sitting on June 26, the date of the official opening of the St. Lawrence seaway. I said that if there was agreement I would move a motion today that the house do not sit on Friday, June 26. I find, however, that the motion is such that it is necessary to import into its wording the date when the house will sit.

I have heard it suggested, and I just place this before the house for the moment without comment, that following the opening of the waterway a large number of United States congressmen will be visiting Ottawa on Saturday, June 27. I am not in any way advancing this as a suggestion at the moment, but I know that hon. members are most desirous that every possible day be utilized for the business before us. It might be that later next week consideration may be given, after consultation with the various members of the house, to having the house sit on Saturday, the 27th. The house would then be in a position in which it would not be losing a day's work that week, and at the same time it would make it possible to receive the representatives of the United States congress.

Having said that, with the unanimous consent I move:

That when this house adjourns on Thursday, June 25, it stand adjourned until Monday, June 29.

Motion agreed to.

MALTON—TABLING OF JUDGMENT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as undertaken the other day I wish to table two copies of the reasons for judgment in the Exchequer Court of Canada in the proceedings between Aileen M. Drew, suppliant, and Her Majesty the Queen, respondent.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Prime Minister leave to table this document?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

ANNOUNCEMENT OF RESULTS OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH GRUMMAN AIRCRAFT

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce to the house details of the results of negotiations with the Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corporation of Bethpage, Long Island, New York, in connection with the supply of 10 SA16B aircraft, commonly known as the Albatross, for use by the R.C.A.F. search and rescue service.

The government has decided to award a contract for the supply of these aircraft to the Grumman corporation. The planes are urgently needed for the search and rescue operations of the R.C.A.F. and no other aircraft presently available has the same suitability for recovery at sea or on large water areas as the Albatross. These planes can also be effectively used for freight and supply in the northern areas of Canada, and should prove a valuable acquisition in this regard.

A full examination was made of the possibility of obtaining a licence for the manufacture of this aircraft in Canada, but such a transaction was found to be uneconomic since only 10 aircraft are to be ordered, and even if this quantity was doubled or tripled the cost of Canadian manufacture would still be prohibitive.

Special attention was then given to the working out of production-sharing arrangements, and as a result orders totalling approximately 40 to 50 per cent of the cost of the purchase of these planes will be placed with Canadian manufacturers. The engine which will be installed in the aircraft is the Wright R1820-82, which is being manufactured by Canadian Pratt and Whitney Aircraft Company, Longueuil, Quebec, for our S2F program. This engine can be accommodated in the Albatross aircraft by making a very small engineering change.

Numerous other items made in Canada, such as electronic and navigational items, will be incorporated in the Albatross aircraft, and a portion of the airframe is being subcontracted to Bristol-Aero Industries Limited in Manitoba.

In addition to these arrangements which have been made in connection with the supply of the Albatross aircraft, the Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corporation has agreed to let a subcontract in Canada to Enamel and Heating Products Limited, Amherst, Nova Scotia, in an amount of approximately $1 million for the supply of a substantial number of components for the S2F aircraft, which the Grumman company is building for the United States navy. The company has also agreed to consider letting additional subcontracts on other work for placement in Canada, but this is, of course, subject to their normal procurement cycle. I am hopeful that these additional orders will amount to a substantial sum over the next few years.

The details of this transaction have been worked out under the recently announced production sharing arrangements made between this government and the government of the United States.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Defence Production arising out of the statement he made a few moments ago. Is the minister in a position to tell the house if the Fort William plant of Canada Car is being considered for sharing in the production of the aircraft components he mentioned or whether he has other contracts in mind for that plant?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): No, Mr. Speaker, the plant at Fort William is not in the program I announced a moment ago. I have stated many times with respect to the plant at Fort William that in the production sharing program we have offered every facility to Canadian Car and Foundry to participate in any program we might have, but I have nothing to announce for the time being.

AGRICULTURE

REPEAL OF CANADIAN FARM LOAN ACT—PROVISION OF LONG TERM MORTGAGE CREDIT TO FARMERS

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the establishment of a system of long term mortgage credit to farmers, to incorporate therein the provisions of the Canadian Farm Loan Act, to add thereto a new type of supervised farm mortgage credit and to repeal the said Canadian Farm Loan Act.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. O'Hurley.]

MARITIME COAL PRODUCTION ASSISTANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS EXTENDING APPLICATION, INCREASING AMOUNTS OF LOANS, ETC.

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Maritime Coal Production Assistance Act to extend the application of the act to coal producers in all parts of Canada; to provide that the aggregate principal amount of loans made to coal producers under section 6 of the act shall be increased from ten to twenty million dollars and that the aggregate principal amount of loans made to any one coal producer under the same section shall be increased from seven and one-half to twelve million dollars; to extend the operation of the act from the 31st day of October, 1959 to the 31st day of October, 1964; and to authorize certain amendments to the agreement made under the act with the Dominion Coal Company Limited for the purpose of varying the terms of repayment of principal and interest as provided under section 4 thereof.

Motion agreed to.

MOTION FOR PAPERS

FERRY SERVICE, ST. JOSEPH DE LA RIVE-ST. BERNARD DE L'ÎLE-AUX-COUDRES

Motion No. 120—Mr. Brassard (Lapointe):

For a copy of all telegrams, correspondence, reports and other documents exchanged since August 1, 1958, between all persons or public bodies, and the Canadian maritime commission or the Department of Transport, regarding the ferry service operated by Rosario Harvey between St. Joseph de La Rive and St. Bernard de l'Ile aux Coudres, in the county of Charlevoix.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I understand the hon. member intends to ask permission to withdraw this motion, I would appreciate it if it could stand.

Motion stands.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

BOMARC MISSILE—REPORTED DOWNGRADING OF PROGRAM BY U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question which, in view of its importance and the fact that I have not been able to give him notice, he may prefer to take as notice. The question is this. In view of the apparent uncertainty in Washington regarding continental air defence, and in view of the downgrading of the Bomarc missile in the latest United States master plan for such defence, will the government consider suspending Canadian expenditures on Bomarc and Sage installations until this situation is cleared up?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the preliminary words in the preamble to that question in any way. I rise merely for the purpose of saying that I do not agree with the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition. In so far as the question in general is concerned respecting the Bomarc, I would suggest the Minister of National Defence is the proper minister to answer it.

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I may say that I anticipated a question on these lines.

The United States secretary of defence has recommended certain reductions in the number of surface to air missiles planned for use against manned bombers. Briefly, the program involves a reduction in the previously planned deployment of the Bomarc and Nike-Hercules missile batteries and a step-up in the program for the development of an anti-ballistic missile defence. It is not the intention to eliminate one system or the other, but rather to make the best use of both systems since they complement each other. The proposed changes have taken full account of the effective integration of Canadian and United States air defences. These proposed changes do not affect our own defence position or the planned construction and employment of the Bomarc bases in Canada. Only United States bases are affected.

This is a realistic and practical approach to the solution of the problem of the defence of this continent. It conforms with Canadian thinking in that it recognizes, as I have frequently stated, that while the threat from the manned bomber still exists it is a diminishing threat. Therefore expenditures upon any weapons system designed to meet the bomber threat only should be kept within reasonable bounds. The two Canadian Bomarc stations have an important role in the general pattern of continental defence.

We have at all times and at the various official levels been in close touch with the United States authorities. During the past few days I have spoken with Mr. McElroy, the secretary of defence, and his scientific adviser, Mr. Holaday, who made the presentation to the senate armed services committee. These conversations have confirmed our previous knowledge that the proposed redeployment program would not in any way prejudice or make less effective the plans for the defence of Canada that have been agreed upon by our two countries.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Can the minister state whether the press report that the reduction in expenditure recommended in this new defence plan for the Bomarc amounts to over $700 million is accurate?

Mr. Pearkes: There is a very considerable proposed reduction in the amounts to be spent on the Bomarc according to the original deployment plan; but as I have stated, the reductions which are planned will not affect in any way the defence of Canada.

FLOODS

MANITOBA—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN SEINE RIVER AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Laurier Regnier (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

In view of flood conditions existing along the Seine river, which have forced the evacuation of some 40 families and are causing extensive damage along its banks in the municipalities of Ste. Anne, Tache and Ritchot, will the minister inform the house regarding any compensations that may be paid to the farmers in the flooded area? Mr. C. Chaput, reeve of the municipality of Ste. Anne, informs me by telephone that the seeded acreage will be a total loss, as the fields are still covered with water.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his intention to ask this question. As far as loss of crops is concerned, awards under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act are payable to farmers in the spring wheat area who suffer loss of crop through flooding. In brief, the provision of the act in this regard is as follows. If one third or more of the total cultivated area of the land on six or more adjacent sections of land or river lots cannot be seeded, the farmers owning such land are entitled to an award of $4 per acre with respect to the flooded area. As long as there is an area of six adjacent sections or more, awards can be paid.

If the land has already been seeded it would come under the general provisions as far as loss of property through rain or drought or any other cause is concerned.

FINANCE

STATEMENT ON NEW ISSUE OF GOVERNMENT BONDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Could the minister inform the house whether he has authorized the Bank of Canada to invite subscriptions for a new bond issue today, and if so, would he give us particulars?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker; the wires went out last night and were delivered this morning in connection with a new issue of $200 million of government of Canada bonds.

The issue consists of two maturities, open as to amount in each maturity, and in each case it is a matter of the enlargement of an existing outstanding maturity. The first is a 2¾ per cent bond of the issue due on April 1, 1960, and the second is a 3 per cent bond maturing December 15, 1960.

The statement which accompanied the offering this morning indicates that this is the balance of the financing to meet the $500 million maturity bonds on July 1. If the house is interested I might show how this maturity is being met, according to the government's plans.

The recent sale of 12 month treasury bills produced $187 million in trade-in bonds. Then $75 million worth of the remaining maturity are held in the government securities investment account and will be allowed to run off on the due date without replacement. A further $38 million of the bonds are held by the Bank of Canada, which has agreed to exchange them for $19 million of each of the two new issues. Accordingly the offering is $200 million even.

Mr. Benidickson: May I ask a supplementary question. Has the minister, in approving of this offer, calculated the value to, say, a corporation or any other purchaser who has the benefit of capital gains, in the 50% tax rate bracket vis-à-vis buying another bond of similar term at a par price? Would the minister quarrel very much with me if I said that in my hasty calculation, on the 9 month 2¾ per cent issue a par issue would require an 8.2 per cent figure for the equivalent of what the minister has offered, or that the 3 per cent 15 month issue would require 8.4 per cent at par coupon value to equal what the minister has offered to the public on his present requirements?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I think to put figures before the house in the way the hon. gentleman has done is very misleading. These additions to outstanding maturities are priced quite close to the present market.

Mr. Benidickson: But my figures are correct.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. I wonder if the minister is aware that at the noon hour his 3 per cent issue was being offered to yield a return of 5.68 per cent, and is the government contemplating any action at all to protect the taxpayers of the Dominion of Canada?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the government has shown itself quite vigilant in protecting the interests of the taxpayers as well as with respect to the credit of Canada, and I invite the co-operation of hon. members opposite in doing what may lie within their power to assist us in that regard.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the minister how he is able to reconcile his earlier announcement concerning the 3 per cent coupons, when at the noon hour the offering yielded 5.68 per cent? How is the minister able to rationalize this as being realistic?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The price, Mr. Speaker, at which the 2¾ per cent bond due April 1, 1960 is offered is 98. The 3 per cent bond maturing December 15, 1960 is offered at 96.30. In both cases we have the assistance of knowing what the market is on these bonds because we are simply enlarging an outstanding issue in each case.

REPORTED INCREASE IN MONEY SUPPLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Finance would agree that the money supply and inflation are usually concomitants. I wonder if he has examined the last available weekly report of the Bank of Canada June 11th which indicates the largest increase, ($81 million), in the money supply shown for quite a long time. Would the minister indicate to the house today, or tomorrow after he has considered the matter, what relationship if any this has with the government's need for additional borrowings?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the matter to which the hon. gentleman refers—and I am making no comment confirmatory of his conclusion—has no bearing on the immediate borrowings of the government in the announcement which I made earlier today.

Mr. Benidickson: Oh, no.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I may say, Mr. Speaker, and I think it will be a matter of gratification to the house, that conditions in this country have shown the steady improvement to which reference was made on an earlier occasion, and our borrowing requirements this year are going to be substantially less than I indicated when I introduced the budget.

Mr. Benidickson: Tighter and tighter money.

TRANSPORTATION

ROYAL COMMISSION—REPORTED DELAY IN STAFF APPOINTMENT AND ITINERARY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Did the Prime Minister read the story appearing in this morning's Gazette entitled "Railway Commission Running Out of Time", in which it is stated that if the royal commission is to do its job in time it should move with dispatch? Can the Prime Minister state if as reported the commission, one month after its appointment, has not yet appointed its staff or drawn up an itinerary for its hearings?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I read the article in question. As I said at the time the commission was set up, every dispatch was expected on the part of this commission in bringing in its report at the earliest possible date. I have the assurance of the chairman that everything is getting under way and that the general target date set at the time the commission was constituted will be met.

CIVIL DEFENCE

TORONTO—REPORTED THREAT TO DISBAND COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister any comment to make on the statement made by the chairman of metropolitan Toronto that the metropolitan civil defence committee will disband on January 1 next unless further direction on the role of municipalities in civil defence has been given by the federal government?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his intention to ask this question. I think it has always been clear that it rests with the provincial authorities to determine how civil defence functions and responsibilities left with them shall be allocated as between the province itself and its municipal governments. The reorganized structure at the federal level does not affect this arrangement in any way.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Following the Prime Minister's statement in the house of March 23, giving details of the reorganization plans we had in mind, a civil defence conference was held on April 24. At this meeting there was full discussion of provincial-municipal responsibilities.

I appreciate the interest of the metropolitan Toronto civil defence committee in maintaining the co-operation of their workers. It seems reasonable that they should carry on their training programs on the existing basis, even though certain of these might in due course become the responsibility of the Department of National Defence. Discussions on the federal changes are now taking place, but things are still in the transitional stage. However, in the near future—as I have said, perhaps when my estimates are before the house—I hope to be able to give a statement on the type of leadership this government is prepared to give in civil defence.

We have encouraged the municipalities at least to maintain their present standards by increasing the federal contribution on municipal projects from 50 to 75 per cent, and I trust their active interest in this field will continue.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question. In view of my hon. friend's modest assertion of leadership in this field by the government, can he tell us whether or not that leadership is of such a character as to warrant the minister now giving us an unequivocal statement about the government's policy in the matters of shelter and evacuation?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I have answered that question many times, I think as recently as one day last week. I have said that the matter of evacuation and shelter policy is being given prior consideration, and I think I indicated at that time that I would be very pleased to discuss the matter when my estimates are before the house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In view of the situation in Toronto and elsewhere throughout the country, does the minister not think further indication of this leadership is required?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I have answered the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare on this same subject. Would the minister inform the house if provision is being made to assist fire brigades in unorganized communities that have been established for a good many years?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I did not quite get the question.

Mr. Herridge: Is provision being made to assist local fire brigades in unorganized communities that have been established for a good many years?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I think this question is being considered at the municipal and provincial level.

NATIONAL REVENUE

REFERENCE TO BLUE BOOK RESPECTING PENSION PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. I apologize for giving him such short notice. I was requested by two or three people shortly before coming into the house to ask the question because the subject is of general interest. Can the minister inform the house when the expurgated edition of the blue book of pension plans is likely to see the light of day.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): There is no expurgated edition of the blue book, because there never was an edition heretofore. A draft was prepared some three or four years ago but it never was published and never was used. I can tell my hon. friend that a draft has been prepared of the proposed blue book, and that it was handed to me last week. I have not had an opportunity to read it yet, but I hope to be able to do so within the next two or three days. In keeping with the assurance I gave the hon. member some weeks ago the tortoise will cross the blue line before the house rises, and I will be very happy to present a copy of the blue book to him.

Mr. Herridge: I wish to thank the minister. It will save me answering a lot of letters if it comes that way.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

FURTHER STATEMENT ON PASSAGE OF UNITED STATES NAVAL SHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, questions have been asked in the house during the last few days concerning the passage of United States naval vessels through the Welland canal for celebrations in the upper lakes in connection with the opening of the seaway. As hon. members know, the problem has been that commercial traffic has exceeded expectations and from time to time has been delayed.

For some days friendly discussions have been going on between the two governments, and I am glad to be able to announce that it has now been agreed that only two of these naval vessels per day will be put through the canal on June 22, 23 and 24, and only three each day thereafter up to and including July 1. Furthermore, in some cases where three vessels go through they will be of such dimensions that the lockage required would be the equivalent of that for two of the larger vessels. If it should be found that the locks are not required on any of these days for commercial traffic, the passage of naval vessels will be accelerated. I might add that there has been excellent co-operation from the United States in working out this change of schedule.

BROADCASTING

SUGGESTED CHANGE IN TERMS OF REFERENCE OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue if he will give consideration to proposing a change in the terms of reference of the committee on broadcasting in order to provide the premier of Ontario with an opportunity to air his grievance about his victory celebration.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am sure if the committee makes any recommendation it will receive the attention which it deserves.

COAL

DOMINION COAL BOARD—STATEMENT ON SUGGESTED USE AS SALES AGENCY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, on June 11 the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria asked the following question:

> Has the minister of mines given any consideration to the proposal by the united mine workers of America that the powers of the dominion coal board be enlarged so that it can act as a coal sales agency?

The answer is yes. This proposal was made to the chairman of the dominion coal board in writing and subsequently verbally by officers of the union. Subsequently the hon. members for Cape Breton North and Victoria and Cape Breton South waited upon me and urged that the government give this proposal most careful consideration. The government has considered the matter very carefully and cannot accept the suggestion for various reasons, including the following:

(a) Apparently the coal board would be expected to sell the total production of the Nova Scotia mines at such price as could be obtained, whereas the corporation would carry on the operation of the mines and the government would have to make up the difference between the sales price and the cost of operations.

(b) The government would have no control over the cost of operation.

(c) The intervention of the government into the field of private enterprise for the benefit of one corporation would be an unprecedented development which could not be justified.

(d) The corporation has a well established sales force which works very closely in co-operation with the dominion coal board.

AGRICULTURE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INQUIRY AS TO HANDLING OF 1959 RASPBERRY CROP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold Hicks (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, in view of an article in the Citizen of June 11 indicating that the Fraser valley of British Columbia is the largest single commercial raspberry production region in Canada, I should like to inquire from the Minister of Agriculture what the plans are to handle the 1959 crop which will soon be ready to harvest. I understand that the stabilization board has dropped the price of government owned berries. What effect will this have on the 1959 crop?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the present selling price for frozen raspberries held by the agricultural stabilization board is based on the price paid to growers plus processing charges for the 1958 production. The selling price should therefore not depress the market below the price at which berries were supported last year.

The preliminary estimate of raspberry production this year is somewhat lower than the 1958 production, and as yet there is no indication of the price levels at which the 1959 crop might be sold. Since any British Columbia production beyond domestic requirements usually moves to the United States market, developments in that country will have an important effect on the 1959 price level.

The stabilization board has not received any request to date for price support on the 1959 crop.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MEETING WITH WESTERN DELEGATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Prime Minister if, following his answer to the Leader of the Opposition on May 26 regarding the second delegation of western farmers, he is now, as head of the government, in a position to say whether or not the government has arrived at a policy pursuant to the request for deficiency payments on wheat, oats and barley made by the two delegations representing many thousands of farmers in western Canada?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there has been no decision made as yet with regard to this matter.

NATIONAL CAPITAL PLAN

REPORTED RESIGNATION OF CHAIRMAN OF COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, in view of news speculation over the week end concerning the chairman of the national capital commission, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he will advise the house whether or not the chairman has resigned.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, nor has he communicated any suggestion of resignation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—COMMUNICATIONS AND SUPPLY OF CANADIAN AIR SQUADRONS IN FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence whether the movement of United States NATO fighters and fighter bomber aircraft out of France would have any effect on the communications and supply problems of the Canadian air squadrons in that country.

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): The Canadian air squadrons receive the majority of their supplies through United States sources, but I understand that if—and this is still a hypothetical question —the United States fighters are moved out from France, the supply to Canadian fighter squadrons in France will still be assured.

PUBLIC SERVICE

CONTINUATION OF INCREASED PENSIONS FOR SUPERANNUATED CIVIL SERVANTS, ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL AND MOUNTED POLICE

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure respecting the adjustment of certain public service pensions to provide for increases, on a continuing basis, in certain pensions being paid to former civil servants, members of the armed forces, members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or their dependents; and to provide that the said increases shall be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Rea in the chair.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this resolution is to provide on a statutory basis for increases in certain pensions to be paid former civil servants, members of the armed forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or their dependants. Hon. members will recall that on July 28, 1958, I informed the house of the provision which the government proposed to recommend to parliament at the 1958 session to increase those pensions based on length of service where the recipients had been retired for a number of years. My review of the government's proposal can be found on pages 2757 to 2759 of 1958 Hansard. What I said on that occasion is equally applicable to the present resolution.

Subsequently increases effective July 1, 1958 in those pensions were authorized by vote No. 667 of Appropriation Act No. 5, 1958, which gave the governor in council the power to prescribe by regulation the terms and conditions under which those increases would be paid to the end of the fiscal year, March 31, 1959. While provision for those increases in respect of the fiscal year 1959-60 has been included in item 123 of the main estimates for the current fiscal year, yet, as indicated in the statement I made on July 28, 1958, the intention of the government was to introduce legislation at this session to provide continuing authority for those increases. As a result of order in council P.C. 1958-1366 of October 2, 1958, which was made pursuant to vote 667, increases in pensions have been paid in respect of the period since July 1, 1958.

During the fiscal year 1958-59 this measure benefited 15,425 cases in the groups of beneficiaries or their dependants which I mentioned earlier, to the extent of approximately $2,364,500.

I am pleased, Mr. Chairman, to say that the responses to the provision contained in the order in council have been very appreciative. I recall that the announcement which I had the honour of making on July 28, 1958 was well received in the house. The provisions of the bill to follow approval of this resolution are somewhat complicated, since they deal with pensions paid under several acts and involve these different pension formulae. As the bill goes into this matter in some detail, I shall not occupy the time of the house by elaborating further at this stage.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Mr. Chairman, I welcome this resolution introduced by the Minister of Finance. This house, I believe, will agree entirely with the measure which was taken last year to give some relief to civil servants who had retired on pensions based on salaries which were scaled lower than those which exist now. I was hoping, Mr. Chairman, that the bill which will be introduced would modify some of the provisions which were contained in the order in council of October 2, 1958, to provide moneys for increases in civil servants' pensions. It has been the feeling of this house over some years that if and when this measure was introduced the purpose would be to establish at least a floor for civil service pensions which would enable them to have a good common way of living. If this resolution covers only last year's regulations, it will not in many cases improve the lot of the retired civil servant to the point of bringing his living standard up to that which is general these days.

I am not criticizing the basis of the resolution. However, I hope the Minister of Finance is acting in the light of the experience of the last few months; and by "the past few months" I mean those since July 1, 1958. Having found that the total cost to date has been relatively small, and in view of the fact that this resolution covers only a number of civil servants up to a certain number of years, and it is not an increasing number, I think he should make some effort to improve upon these regulations so that a greater number could benefit, and that the basis should be increased.

As I see it, this resolution will improve the lot of only those civil servants who retired prior to 1953. I must confess that I was guilty of thinking along the same lines. If someone were to refer to some of my speeches on this matter in earlier years they would find that I was also under the impression that provision for those who had retired up to 1953 would just about cover everything. Having seen some of the figures I now realize that this resolution could be extended to cover civil servants having retired up to 1957 and even 1958. I am hoping that the bill may include some larger contribution and some greater benefits in the smaller pensions of retired civil servants.

This is only the resolution stage. Any information which may be required on the details I think can be obtained on the bill. Once again may I say that this is a welcome measure and that in this bill we hope the minister will do something more than was done last year.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I can say that we in this group also welcome the introduction of the resolution which indicates that there is to be some legislation which will have a beneficial bearing on certain of the previous employees of government in varying aspects. It is not our intention at this time to have to have a great deal to say.

As the minister has already pointed out, the bill to be introduced will deal with a number of acts which are at present on the statute books. The resolution foretells of dealings with former civil servants, members of the armed forces and members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or their dependants. However, as a result of the indication that such a resolution and bill were going to be introduced, we have been making some investigations in connection with this matter. All we want to say at this moment is that in our estimation there are in the existing acts a great number of discrepancies which need to be resolved, especially with regard to long time employees who have been long time pensioners, and their widows. In particular we feel that there are some discrepancies of a serious nature which must be cleared away with regard to widows of long time pensioners, and that the time is long past when some consideration should have been given to them.

That is all we are going to say at this time. We welcome the resolution and we are looking forward to the bill itself. After we see the bill in all its details and particulars we shall then have more to say.

Mr. McIlraith: The resolution reads as follows:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure respecting the adjustment of certain public service pensions to provide for increases, on a continuing basis, in certain pensions being paid to former civil servants, members of the armed forces, members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or their dependents; and to provide that the said increases shall be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund.

I take it that the whole point is that rather than provide for a change in what is being done for the pensioners at the moment the purpose of the resolution is to provide for it being done on a continuing basis rather than through the estimates. I am wholly in accord that provision be made on a continuing basis rather than on an annual basis.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I may say that is precisely the purpose of the legislation. That was the undertaking I gave to the house last year.

Mr. McIlraith: That is as I understood the situation. From the minister's opening remarks I take it that in the legislation substantial changes are not contemplated from the provision now being made through the estimates. I have some things to say on that point. As the subject is complicated and there are different phases, by the very nature of it, it requires some working out in each particular case. I for one should like to see the bill. I am disposed to let the resolution stage pass so we may see the bill and, in order not to duplicate my questions to reserve them until the committee stage of the bill. I think that would be a more satisfactory procedure. I have one or two questions that I want to ask the minister at this stage, but I will ask them after any others who care to make general remarks have done so.
